Foreword

In September 2000, an unprecedented number of heads of State and Government gathered at United Nations Headquarters in New York for the Millennium Summit. In adopting the Millennium Declaration, they reaffirmed the purposes and principles of the United Nations, pledged their collective responsibility to uphold the principles of human dignity and equality, and established a range of ambitious goals and targets for human progress in the twenty-first century.

Governments were not the only ones to seize the occasion of the millennium to set forth their views; civil society groups, parliamentarians and religious organizations each held landmark meetings during the year, seeking new levels of cooperation with each other and with the United Nations.

Throughout the year, however, we were reminded of the gap between the Declaration's aspirations and the deprivation and despair that characterize the lives of so much of humankind. Violence escalated in the Middle East, continued in Afghanistan and raged on in a number of countries in sub-Saharan Africa. Poverty and natural disasters blighted lives on all continents. The AIDS epidemic continued to spread rapidly, and with it the devastation it wreaks on families, communities and, indeed, entire countries.

This volume of the Yearbook of the United Nations provides a comprehensive review of the Organization's efforts throughout the year 2000 to address these and other challenges on the international agenda. It is intended as a tool for scholars, journalists, diplomats and others interested in the United Nations and international affairs. I hope it will serve as a contribution to the effort to create the wide-ranging partnerships and policies needed to address the global challenges of our times.

About the 2000 edition of the Yearbook

This volume of the YEARBOOK OF THE UNITED NATIONS continues the tradition of providing the most comprehensive coverage of the activities of the United Nations. It is an indispensable reference tool for the research community, diplomats, government officials and the general public seeking readily available information on the UN system and its related organizations.

Efforts by the Department of Public Information to achieve a more timely publication have resulted in having to rely on provisional documentation and other materials to prepare the relevant articles. Largely, Security Council resolutions and presidential statements, Economic and Social Council resolutions and some other texts in the present volume are provisional.

Structure and scope of articles

The Yearbook is subject-oriented and divided into six parts covering political and security questions; human rights issues; economic and social questions; legal questions; institutional, administrative and budgetary questions; and intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations. Chapters and topical headings present summaries of pertinent UN activities, including those of intergovernmental and expert bodies, major reports, Secretariat activities and, in selected cases, the views of States in written communications.

Activities of United Nations bodies. All resolutions, decisions and other major activities of the principal organs and, on a selective basis, those of subsidiary bodies are either reproduced or summarized in the appropriate chapter. The texts of all resolutions and decisions of substantive nature adopted in 2000 by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council are reproduced or summarized under the relevant topic. These texts are preceded by procedural details giving date of adoption, meeting number and vote totals (in favour-against-abstaining) if any; and an indication of their approval by a sessional or subsidiary body prior to final adoption. The texts are followed by details of any recorded or roll-call vote on the resolution/decision as a whole.

Major reports. Most reports of the Secretary-General, in 2000, along with selected reports from other UN sources, such as seminars and working groups, are summarized briefly.

Secretariat activities. The operational activities of the United Nations for development and humanitarian assistance are described under the relevant topics. For major activities financed outside the UN regular budget, selected information is given on contributions and expenditures.

Views of States. Written communications sent to the United Nations by Member States and circulated as documents of the principal organs have been summarized in selected cases, under the relevant topics. Substantive actions by the Security Council have been analysed and brief reviews of the Council's deliberations given, particularly in cases where an issue was taken up but no resolution was adopted.

Related organizations. The Yearbook also briefly describes the 2000 activities of the specialized agencies and other related organizations of the UN system.

Multilateral treaties. Information on signatories and parties to multilateral treaties and conventions is taken from Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General: Status as at 31 December 2000 (ST/LEG/SER.E/19 (vols. I & II)), Sales No. E.01.V.5.

Terminology

Formal titles of bodies, organizational units, conventions, declarations and officials are given in full on first mention in an article or sequence of articles. They are also used in resolution/decision texts, and in the SUBJECT INDEX under the key word of the title. Short titles may be used in subsequent references.

How to find information in the Yearbook

The user may locate information on the United Nations activities contained in this volume by the use of the Table of Contents, the Subject Index, the Index of Resolutions and Decisions and the Index of Security Council Presidential Statements. The volume also has five appendices: Appendix I comprises a roster of Member States; Appendix II reproduces the Charter of the United Nations, including the Statute of the International Court of Justice; Appendix III gives the structure of the principal organs of the United Nations; Appendix IV provides the agenda for each session of the principal organs in 2000; and Appendix V gives the addresses of the United Nations information centres and services worldwide.

EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS

References in square brackets in each chapter of Parts One to Five of this volume give the symbols of the main documents issued in 2000 on the topic. The following is a guide to the principal document symbols:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly, numbered in separate series by session. Thus, A/55/- refers to documents issued for consideration at the fifty-fifth session, beginning with A/55/1. Documents of special and emergency special sessions are identified as A/S- and A/ES-, followed by the session number.

A/C.- refers to documents of the Assembly's Main Committees, e.g. A/C.1/- is a document of the First Committee, A/C.6/-, a document of the Sixth Committee. A/BUR/- refers to documents of the General Committee. A/AC.- documents are those of the Assembly's ad hoc bodies and A/CN.-, of its commissions; e.g. A/AC.105/- identifies documents of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, A/CN.4/-, of its International Law Commission. Assembly resolutions and decisions since the thirty-first (1976) session have been identified by two arabic numerals; the first indicates the session of adoption; the second, the sequential number in the series. Resolutions are numbered consecutively from 1 at each session. Decisions of regular sessions are numbered consecutively, from 301 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 401 for all other decisions. Decisions of special and emergency special sessions are numbered consecutively, from 11 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 21 for all other decisions.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council, numbered in separate series by year. Thus, E/2000/- refers to documents issued for consideration by the Council at its 2000 sessions, beginning with E/2000/1. E/AC.-, E/C.- and E/CN.-, followed by identifying numbers, refer to documents of the Council's subsidiary ad hoc bodies, committees and commissions. For example, E/CN.5/- refers to documents of the Council's Commission for Social Development, E/C.2/-, to documents of its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations. E/ICEF/- documents are those of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Symbols for the Council's resolutions and decisions, since 1978, consist of two arabic numerals: the first indicates the year of adoption and the second, the sequential number in the series. There are two series: one for resolutions, beginning with 1 (resolution 2000/1); and one for decisions, beginning with 201 (decision 2000/201).

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council. Its resolutions are identified by consecutive numbers followed by the year of adoption in parentheses, beginning with resolution 1(1946).

ST/-, followed by symbols representing the issuing department or office, refers to documents of the United Nations Secretariat.

Documents of certain bodies bear special symbols, including the following:

ACC/-	Administrative Committee on Coordination
CD/-	Conference on Disarmament
CERD/-	Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination
DC/-	Disarmament Commission
DP/-	United Nations Development Programme
HS/-	Commission on Human Settlements
ITC/-	International Trade Centre
TD/-	United Nations Conference on Trade and Development
UNEP/-	United Nations Environment Programme

Many documents of the regional commissions bear special symbols. These are sometimes preceded by the following:

E/ECA/-	Economic Commission for Africa
E/ECE/-	Economic Commission for Europe
E/ECLAC/-	Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean
E/ESCAP/-	Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific
E/ESCWA/-	Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

"L" in a symbol refers to documents of limited distribution, such as draft resolutions; "CONF." to documents of a conference; "INF." to those of general information. Summary records are designated by "SR.", verbatim records by "PV.", each followed by the meeting number.

United Nations sales publications each carry a sales number with the following components separated by periods: a capital letter indicating the language(s) of the publication; two arabic numerals indicating the year; a Roman numeral indicating the subject category; a capital letter indicating a subdivision of the category, if any; and an arabic numeral indicating the number of the publication within the category. Examples: E.00.II.A.2; E/F/R.00.II.E.7; E.00.X.1.

Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization

Following is the Secretary-General's report on the work of the Organization, submitted to the fifty-fifth session of the General Assembly and dated 30 August 2000. The Assembly took note of it on 28 September (decision 55/404). On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item would remain for consideration during the resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458).

Introduction

1. The turn of the millennium provides a unique vantage point from which to view humanity's progress and challenges. In my report to the Millennium Summit, We the Peoples: The Role of the United Nations in the Twenty-first Century, I offered my own assessment, and suggested ways in which the entire international community can work together to better the lives of people still left behind.

2. The past year has reminded us that the international community is not yet close enough to meeting that goal. Since last September, new wars have erupted in several parts of the world, and many long-running conflicts have continued to defy the best efforts of mediators to end them. The devastation caused by natural disasters continued to increase, with drought, floods and earthquakes blighting the lives of millions. Demands on United Nations humanitarian agencies vastly exceeded worst-case predictions.

3. While living standards in much of the developing world continued to improve, in many of the least developed countries they remained in decline. This is particularly so in sub-Saharan Africa, where AIDS, violent conflict, and in some instances predatory behaviour by Governments and political factions have taken a heavy toll, while per capita economic assistance from the richer world has declined dramatically.

4. In Africa, AIDS is now killing at least four times as many people each year as the continent's numerous armed conflicts. In other parts of the world, the pandemic continues to spread with frightening rapidity. The gravity of the threat HIV/AIDS poses is at last being widely recognized, but this provides small comfort. What is needed is a stronger commitment to action.

5. During the year, the creation of three new peace missions resulted in a tripling of the numbers of authorized United Nations peacekeepers to 45,000, straining United Nations Headquarters resources to the very limits. United Nations operations in East Timor and in Kosovo, Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, are the most complex, and in some ways the most demanding, in the Organization's history. We are charged with nothing less than helping to rebuild shattered societies almost from scratch.

6. In 1999, in the wake of the war in Kosovo, the question how the international community should respond to gross violations of human rights was fiercely debated. For the Organization this had already been a critical issue for some time, not least because the inability of the international community to help prevent the genocide in Rwanda in 1994 or the massacre of thousands of unarmed men and boys from the United Nations "safe area" of Srebrenica in 1995 continued to weigh on our conscience.

7. Two United Nations reviews were conducted in 1999 to determine what had caused those failures—a Secretariat study on Srebrenica and an Independent Inquiry study of Rwanda. Both reviews revealed how lack of political will, inappropriate Security Council mandates and inadequate resources contributed to failure, together with doctrinal and institutional misjudgements and shortcomings on the part of the United Nations itself.

8. While both studies offered valuable recommendations, it was evident that a more comprehensive diagnosis was required of the deep-rooted problems that have plagued so many of our missions, and above all a prescription for avoiding such failures in the future. Therefore, in March 2000, I established a high-level panel, chaired by Lakhdar Brahimi, to undertake a major review and recommend ways of ensuring that future peace operations will be more effective.

9. The Panel's report has just been issued. It contains a frank and clear-sighted analysis of the problems we continue to face in mounting effective peace operations. The Panel's recommendations for change are realistic and cogently argued. They go to the very heart of the dilemmas that we confront in seeking to meet our commitment, under the Charter, "to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war". I trust that Member States will give them the most serious consideration, and join me in putting them into effect swiftly.

10. No objective observer could doubt that the current level of Secretariat support for peace operations is inadequate. The 12,000 troops currently serving in the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone, for example, are supported by just five people at Headquarters. No national Government would dream of deploying a comparably sized military mission overseas with such a minimal headquarters support unit.

11. Not surprisingly, therefore, some of the Panel's recommendations will require additional resources to implement. The international community must accept that these are indeed essential if we are to meet our international peace and security commitments. The estimated cost of all United Nations peacekeeping operations in 2000 amounts to less than one half of 1 per cent of the approximately $800 billion that Member States spend on national defence. The additional resources needed to implement the Panel's recommendations are very modest by comparison.

12. Security has not been the only contentious issue during the past year. The protests at the World Trade Organization meeting in Seattle indicated a growing potential backlash against globalization. Concern is by no means restricted to street demonstrators in the developed countries; albeit largely for different reasons, it is also evident in the capitals of many developing countries.

13. To some, globalization is imbued with great promise; to others it appears deeply threatening. Few deny that the economic and technological forces that drive it have the potential to lift the dreadful burdens of poverty and disease that still weigh on half the world's population. But in the face of persistent poverty, rising inequality and the volatility of global markets and financial flows many doubt that this potential will be realized. Others are concerned that open markets will threaten both the integrity of cultures and the sovereignty of States.

14. That there should be such disagreements is not surprising. Like other great changes in history, globalization creates losers as well as winners.

15. It is clear that no country has developed successfully by rejecting the opportunities offered by international trade and foreign direct investment. The developing countries that have become most effectively integrated into the global economy, notably those of East Asia, have not only grown faster than the rest, they have also been far more successful in reducing poverty levels. At the same time, engagement with the global economy alone is no panacea for rapid development, and additional measures, domestic as well as international, are necessary to make globalization work for all.

16. I firmly believe that thriving markets and human security go hand in hand. But if support for open markets and financial liberalization is to be sustained, globalization must be made more inclusive and its benefits must be spread more equitably. These goals cannot be achieved without more effective global institutions.

17. Here the international community confronts a major problem. The international economic institutions that were created in the aftermath of the Second World War were designed to manage a much less complex and fast-moving set of issues. Even more importantly, they were designed to manage the flow of international economic transactions. We have however moved into the era of global economic transactions.

18. Economic liberalization has unleashed extraordinary growth but, as the East Asia crisis of 1997-1998 reminded us, it has also reduced the ability of Governments to resist the influence of the global economic environment. There is a need for more effective global governance, by which I mean the cooperative management of global affairs.

19. In some instances, far-reaching institutional changes are called for, but governance does not have to involve formal institutions, regulations or mechanisms of enforcement. It can also be achieved through informal dialogue and cooperation. It can involve agreements with non-State actors as well as between and among Governments.

20. Indeed, during the past decade many informal coalitions have emerged to pursue cooperative solutions to common problems—not only among Governments but also encompassing international institutions, civil society organizations and sometimes the private sector. Such engagement does not threaten Governments. On the contrary, it increases their power by bringing them willing and able allies. All partners can gain in such coalitions, because each achieves through cooperation what none could achieve alone.

21. Sometimes called "coalitions for change", global policy networks transcend both geographical and political boundaries. They focus attention on specific issues, disseminate knowledge, set global agendas and mobilize people for change. Recent examples can be seen in the campaigns to reduce global warming, roll back malaria, ban landmines, create an international criminal court and provide debt relief for developing countries.

22. The United Nations, with its universality, legitimacy and broad mandates, has unique convening and consensus-building roles to play in such coalitions for change.

23. Much is already being done. In the past year the United Nations has forged global partnerships that would hardly have been conceivable even a decade ago. Last year, at the World Economic Forum in Davos, I proposed a Global Compact by which private corporations would commit themselves to observing, in their own corporate domains, good practices, as defined by the broader international community, in the areas of human rights, labour and the environment. In July 2000, in New York, I convened the inaugural meeting of the Compact partners, which was attended by representatives of the international trade union movement and major civil society organizations, as well as the leaders of some 50 multinational companies.

24. The Global Compact is not intended as a substitute for international agreements or effective action by Governments, but as a complement to them. The corporations that have joined it did so because the values that the Compact promotes will help to create the stable and secure environment that business needs if it is to flourish in the long term. Labour and civil society organizations have joined because the values that the Global Compact upholds are also their values, and because they recognize the importance of having corporations support them.

25. We are also working with business, philanthropic foundations and civil society organizations on an ever-increasing range of partnership projects at the country level. One will bring Internet-delivered medical information to developing countries, another will provide communications equipment and expertise for use in disasters and humanitarian emergencies, while a third seeks to significantly increase vaccine coverage among the world's children.

26. Other cooperative activities that the United Nations is pursuing with international organizations, the private sector and civil society organizations, and with individual Member States, are described in the body of this report.

27. In my report, We the Peoples, I review some of the major challenges confronting the international community in the twenty-first century, suggest a series of targets and actions for the Millennium Summit and Assembly to consider and call on Member States to renew their commitment to the United Nations.

28. I am gratified that my proposals have met with such a positive reception. I sincerely hope that Member States will use the opportunities presented by the Millennium Summit and Assembly to go beyond supportive sentiment, and commit themselves firmly to action.

Chapter I

Achieving peace and security

Introduction

29. Sustainable peace and security for all countries and peoples remains a central objective of the United Nations at the dawn of the twenty-first century, as it was when the Organization was founded over half a century ago. No issue commands more of our attention and resources, as the intense pace of work in the Security Council over the past year has again shown. The international community has sought to respond to complex crises in situations as diverse as those in Afghanistan, Burundi, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, East Timor, Eritrea-Ethiopia, Kosovo and Sierra Leone.

30. The demands made on the United Nations reflect a shift in the nature of the threats to peace and security since the end of the cold war: from inter-State conflict to intra-State conflict; from the violation of borders to a much greater emphasis on the violation of people. Where conflicts were once driven by the ideological divisions of a bipolar world, they are now fuelled by ethnic and religious intolerance, political ambition and greed, and are often exacerbated by the illicit traffic in arms, gems and drugs.

31. The demands we face also reflect a growing consensus that collective security can no longer be narrowly defined as the absence of armed conflict, be it between or within States. Gross abuses of human rights, the large-scale displacement of civilian populations, international terrorism, the AIDS pandemic, drug and arms trafficking and environmental disasters present a direct threat to human security, forcing us to adopt a much more coordinated approach to a range of issues. Such an approach, as I made clear in my report to the Millennium Assembly, is one that compels us to think creatively. It requires us, above all, to understand that the various elements that contribute to human security must be addressed in a comprehensive way if we are to sustain durable peace in the future.

32. That we are already embarked on this path is evidenced by changes in the way we manage our numerous and far-flung peace operations, where there is increasing readiness to work across administrative and institutional boundaries in pursuit of lasting solutions to complex problems.

33. United Nations peacemakers, peacekeepers and peace-builders around the world have begun to cooperate more closely than ever with Governments and other actors within the United Nations system, with regional bodies, with non-governmental organizations and with the private sector to help create the basis for good governance and the peaceable resolution of differences between parties. The activities now pursued are far more extensive and complex than those of traditional peacekeeping. They include providing emergency relief; demobilizing and reintegrating former combatants; assistance in clearing and destroying mines; constitutional and legal reform; providing advice on the enhancement of human rights; and the creation and reform of state institutions and electoral assistance. Traditional activities, such as monitoring ceasefires, continue to play a critical role in peacekeeping operations.

34. We have confronted major challenges during the past year and it is clear that there is no room for complacency. Both the United Nations and the Member States that determine its mandates and authorize the resources to accomplish them still have much to learn.

35. Three major studies issued in the past year have sought to promote a better understanding of the needs and the potential of United Nations peace operations. By commissioning reports on the tragedies that happened in Srebrenica and Rwanda, I hoped to clarify what went wrong—including within the United Nations—in order to suggest what we might do differently in the future. Certain clear lessons emerged from those two reports, which have since been reinforced by experience, particularly that of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone. Those lessons include the importance of joint action by Member States and the Secretariat to strengthen the instrument of peacekeeping; the need to understand clearly whether peacekeeping or enforcement is needed in a specific situation; the importance of providing adequate resources to meet mission needs and having, even within peacekeeping operations, a credible deterrent capacity; the importance of preparedness for “worst-case” scenarios; the requirement to improve information flows, both between Member States and the Secretariat and within the Secretariat; and the need for more effective and timely analysis of information from the field. Mutual respect by Member States and the Secretariat for each other’s roles and responsibilities, including arrangements of command and control in the field, is critical, as is the need for political commitment to initiate and sustain operations.

36. Those two reports also helped us to reflect on the difficult questions surrounding what, in my millennium report, I termed “the dilemma of intervention”. It is, of course, relatively easy for the international community to assert that the tragedies of Rwanda and Srebrenica should never be allowed to happen again. But if the reaction to my address last year to the General Assembly is any guide, I fear we may still prove unable to give a credible answer to the question of what happens next time we are faced with a comparable crime against humanity.

37. Recognition that many States have serious and legitimate concerns about intervention does not answer the question I posed in my report, namely, if humanitarian intervention is, indeed, an unacceptable assault on sovereignty, how should we respond to a Rwanda, to a Srebrenica—to gross and systematic violations of human rights that offend every precept of our common humanity? In essence the problem is one of responsibility: in circumstances in which universally accepted human rights are being violated on a massive scale we have a responsibility to act.

38. In recognition of the increasingly complex task faced by the United Nations as it seeks to prevent and resolve conflict, and to keep and build the peace, I requested a panel of experts led by the former Minister for Foreign Affairs of Algeria, Lakhdar Brahimi, to produce a report that would provide an overview of peace operations and suggest how they might be strengthened for the future. The report of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations has just been issued. I am gratified that the Panel’s recommendations, some of which I discuss in the introduction to the present report, parallel many of my own proposals, outlined below.

39. If we do not commit ourselves to these vital reforms, there is a real risk that we will continue to fail to meet the challenge of saving the innocent from the scourge of war. I urge Member States to join with me in acting upon the Panel’s key recommendations.

Conflict prevention and peacemaking

40. In recent years the international community has agreed that preventing armed conflict is critical to achieving lasting human security. Conflict prevention, as I put it in my millennium report, is where it all begins. Shifting from a culture of reaction to one of prevention is highly cost-effective both in human and in financial terms. In the early stages of a dispute, parties tend to be less polarized and more flexible and thus more inclined to settle their disputes peacefully than after violent conflict has become entrenched. Prevention also offers the best possible chance to address the root causes of a conflict, and not just its consequences, thus providing a real opportunity to sow the seeds of a durable peace.

41. Confronting new outbreaks of violent conflict around the world and recognizing the importance of acting proactively, I have continued to strengthen our early warning and conflict prevention capacities. My primary objective has been to make early warning and conflict prevention a day-to-day concern for United Nations staff, both at Headquarters and in the field.

42. In this context the Department of Political Affairs, serving as the focal point for conflict prevention within the United Nations system, has established a Prevention Team, which meets regularly to identify conflict situations that may offer potential for preventive action. Other departments and agencies have also strengthened their capacity in this area; once a developing crisis has been identified by a United Nations department or agency, consultations are held within the new interdepartmental Framework for Coordination. Meanwhile, the United Nations Staff College at Turin, Italy, in close cooperation with the Secretariat, has launched a conflict prevention training course, so far attended by more than 400 staff members from 22 departments, agencies, offices and programmes.

43. Experience shows that the success of the United Nations in helping to prevent conflicts will hinge upon close collaboration with Member States and a large number of other actors, including regional arrangements, non-governmental organizations and others. Following a high-level meeting held in New York in July 1998, we established a programme for coordination in conflict prevention with regional organizations, and have sought to improve our contacts with a variety of non-governmental actors. Such efforts should not obscure the fact that the primary responsibility for the prevention of conflict lies with Member States. Successful conflict prevention, under United Nations auspices, ultimately requires the political will to provide the necessary leadership and resources for action.

44. I therefore welcome the growing attention Member States have paid to conflict prevention. This was most vividly demonstrated in the general debate during the fifty-fourth session of the General Assembly, as well as in the groundbreaking open debates on conflict prevention held by the Security Council in November 1999 and July 2000 and the comprehensive action plan adopted by the Group of Eight in July. The far-reaching presidential statements adopted by the Security Council indicated the broad commitment of Member States to improving the capacity of the United Nations for effective preventive action. It is important that this momentum is maintained and I look forward to engaging with Member States directly on this issue in the coming months.

45. No region in the world illustrates the need to prevent conflict, and the costs of the failure to do so, more dramatically than Africa. The dreadful human cost inflicted by conflicts in Angola, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Eritrea-Ethiopia, Sierra Leone, the Sudan and elsewhere is self-evident. Tragically, despite the collective efforts of the international community to avert a resumption of hostilities between Eritrea and Ethiopia, including a visit to both countries by a delegation of the Security Council, fierce fighting resumed in May 2000, inflicting high levels of casualties and widespread destruction.

46. Assisting Eritrea and Ethiopia to resolve their conflict through support for the mediation efforts of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) has been a major preoccupation during the past year. I urged the leaders of the parties to pursue a peaceful settlement and asked my Special Envoy on Africa to assist OAU in this regard. On 18 June, an agreement on the cessation of hostilities was signed—a necessary first step towards the restoration of peace through a comprehensive peace settlement. The United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea will soon be deployed on the border between the two countries, and we will assist in implementing the agreement and providing support for the mediation efforts of OAU.

47. In Burundi, the designation of former President Nelson Mandela as the new facilitator of the peace process, after the death of former President Julius Nyerere in October 1999, brought new momentum to the Arusha process. United Nations assistance to the peace process increased with the provision of technical and conference service support, in addition to the assignment of a senior political adviser to the facilitator. I have also raised the profile of our involvement by designating a Special Representative for the Great Lakes region, with special emphasis on Burundi.

48. In the quest for peace in Somalia there have been many false dawns. The Government of Djibouti's peace initiative for Somalia is therefore something I have warmly welcomed. The Somali National Peace Conference, which opened at Arta, Djibouti, in May, has seen considerable success and secured the participation of a wide spectrum of Somalis. The extent of participation by a number of Somali groups and individuals remains mixed, however, "Somaliland", in particular, remaining firmly outside the peace process. Success will continue to depend on the extent of unity that Somalis can achieve in reaching agreement on future political arrangements for their country.

49. Meanwhile, the war in Angola, which resumed in October 1998, continues to cause terrible suffering. Almost 3.7 million people are internally displaced and hundreds of thousands more have been forced to flee their country. While the Government of Angola has weakened the military capabilities of UNITA, it is aware that military force alone will not bring peace to the country and has reiterated its commitment to the Lusaka Protocol. The United Nations is committed to working closely with the Government of Angola and all others concerned to help bring the war to an end and restore peace in the country. To this end, I have asked my Adviser for Special Assignments in Africa to pay particular attention to Angola.

50. It is encouraging to note that African States themselves are increasingly determined to work together to avert the outbreak of new conflicts and to promote peace in the region. This was demonstrated when a sudden and unconstitutional change of government occurred in Côte d'Ivoire in December 1999 and States of the region took the lead, with support from the United Nations, in seeking to help Côte d'Ivoire to restore constitutional order.

51. An area of renewed engagement of United Nations efforts in the last year—and one that has seen significant progress—is the Middle East. For 22 years, United Nations peacekeepers have served in southern Lebanon in one of our longest standing peacekeeping commitments anywhere in the world. Following several missions to the region by my Special Envoy, I reported to the Security Council on 16 June that Israeli forces had withdrawn from Lebanon in compliance with Council resolution 425(1978). Soon afterwards, I visited the countries of the region to encourage the parties and other regional leaders to support the efforts to consolidate the restoration of peace and stability in Lebanon. Notwithstanding the reservations of the Governments of Lebanon and Israel about the withdrawal line, they both confirmed that they would respect the line as identified by the United Nations. After Israel withdrew its forces, the Government of Lebanon began to reassert law and order functions throughout the area.

52. The United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon is being reinforced so that it may carry out its responsibilities under the resolution. I trust that the international community will be quick to assist Lebanon with the task of reconstructing the economy in the south and rebuilding its links with the rest of the country. In August 2000, I appointed a Personal Representative for Southern Lebanon to coordinate United Nations efforts and assist in bringing peace and stability to the region.

53. I have also been encouraged by the renewed bilateral and multilateral efforts in search of a just and comprehensive peace in the Middle East. At the Camp David summit hosted by President Clinton, the quest for a lasting peace between Israel and the Palestinians reached a crucial stage. I hope that the parties will persist in their efforts to bring the Israeli-Palestinian negotiations on the permanent status agreement to a successful conclusion.

54. Iraq's lack of compliance with various Security Council resolutions continues to be of grave concern. After lengthy negotiations, the Security Council adopted resolution 1284(1999) on 17 December 1999, replacing the United Nations Special Commission with a new inspection agency for Iraq, the United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission (UNMOVIC). I appointed an Executive Chairman of UNMOVIC and a College of Commissioners to act as an advisory body. Iraq, however, has not accepted the resolution.

55. There has been no United Nations presence in Iraq since December 1998 to ensure Iraq's compliance with Security Council resolutions concerning its programmes of weapons of mass destruction. In its resolution 1284(1999) the Security Council also reiterated Iraq's obligations to repatriate all Kuwaiti and third-country missing nationals and return all Kuwaiti property. Iraq has not agreed to cooperate with the high-level coordinator I appointed to deal with these issues, and the matter remains unresolved.

56. The challenge of bringing peace to Afghanistan, another of the world's intractable conflicts, remains daunting. The past year has seen scant progress, as the warring factions have evidenced little enthusiasm for a negotiated settlement. Meanwhile, there has been a continuing influx of war materiel from outside powers, in clear violation of General Assembly and Security Council resolutions and the Tashkent Declaration signed by the "six plus two" group of countries in July 1999. Since his appointment in February 2000 my Personal Representative and Head of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan has established an ongoing dialogue with Afghan leaders, including the Taliban and the United Front, as well as with other countries whose assistance will be essential if an overall settlement is to be achieved.

57. The fragility of the region remains evident in the continuing tensions between India and Pakistan. It is regrettable that the two countries, both of which tested nuclear devices two years ago, have not been able to resume their bilateral dialogue. In Kashmir the situation along the line of control remains precarious and the level of violence and insecurity has increased. This is unacceptable. In this context, proposals currently under discussion aimed at resolving the conflict should be encouraged. Meanwhile, the worsening of the internal conflict in Sri Lanka has increased the concern of the international community, which has offered its backing to Norway's facilitation efforts.

58. I have paid close attention to positive developments on the Korean peninsula, where the follow-up to the recent historic inter-Korean summit offers an opportunity to establish trust between the two parties and resolve a bitter conflict that has persisted for half a century. I attach particular importance to enhancing the United Nations humanitarian and development effort in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

59. On a very different scale are developments in Bougainville, Papua New Guinea, where the work of the United Nations Political Office illustrates how effectively a small presence can help to maintain the integrity of a peace process. The Office was instrumental in assisting the Government of Papua New Guinea and the Bougainville parties to arrive at the Loloata Understanding in March 2000 and the Gateway communiqué in June 2000, which laid the basis for further talks on a political settlement of the crisis in Bougainville.

60. In April 2000, I appointed a new Special Envoy for Myanmar. While I am not able to report substantive progress in our efforts, I am heartened to note that, with the agreement of the Government of Myanmar, the International Committee of the Red Cross began its humanitarian work in the country in 1999.

61. In Fiji, in response to the crisis precipitated by the detention of Prime Minister Mahendra Chaudhry and others, I immediately dispatched my Personal Envoy, who conveyed to the leaders of the political parties my deep concern about the use of violence against a democratically elected government. While I welcome the release of the hostages, much more needs to be done to return the country to normalcy. Sustainable peace, stability and the prosperity of Fiji can be assured only if the aspirations of all communities within Fijian society are taken into account and when all its citizens can play a meaningful role in the political and economic life of the country. I stand ready to work with the Commonwealth and the international community to this end. Recent setbacks in the democratic process in another Pacific country, Solomon Islands, have also caused deep concern.

62. In Europe, I have been encouraged by the continuing improvement in relations between Greece and Turkey. This evolution, bolstered by the Helsinki decision of the European Union regarding Turkey, should help to support efforts directed towards a comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus problem. A continuous process of proximity talks involving Glafcos Clerides and Rauf Denktaş is under way under my auspices. With the assistance of my Special Adviser, attempts are being made to develop a conceptual framework for future progress.

63. My Special Representative for Georgia has made a great effort to reinvigorate the Georgian/Abkhaz peace process, in particular by convening the Coordinating Council and by meeting regularly with the Russian Federation, in its capacity as facilitator, the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE). He has shifted attention back to the core issue of the conflict, the political status of Abkhazia, Georgia, while continuing to negotiate, with both sides, issues such as the return of refugees and internally displaced persons and economic rehabilitation. While some progress has been achieved, the parties still lack the necessary political will to move towards a comprehensive political settlement.

64. In Latin America, taking note of the growing international concern about the security and human rights situation in Colombia, I appointed a Special Adviser on International Assistance to Colombia in December 1999. He has established contact with a range of actors both within and outside the country and helped to heighten international awareness of the need for a settlement of the country's conflict.

Peacekeeping and peace-building

65. The efforts to gain a better understanding of the needs of United Nations peace operations, outlined in the introduction to this chapter, have been made in the context of extraordinarily rapid developments on the ground. Over the past year, there has been a dramatic increase in peacekeeping activities, and recognition of the critically important links between peacekeeping and peace-building is increasingly reflected in practice in the field. As the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations noted in its recently released report, peacekeepers and peace-builders are "inseparable partners", and the only ready exit for peacekeeping forces is sustainable peace.

66. The operation in Kosovo, Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, is now fully established; new operations were launched in East Timor and the Democratic Republic of the Congo during the year, and another is contemplated for Eritrea and Ethiopia; major changes have taken place or are envisaged for operations in Sierra Leone and southern Lebanon; and peacekeeping operations in the Central African Republic and Tajikistan have been successfully concluded and succeeded by smaller peace-building offices.

67. United Nations authorized deployment stands at approximately 45,000 uniformed personnel (troops, observers and civilian police) and a further 13,000 international and local civilian staff for peacekeeping operations mandated by the Security Council; the corresponding figures for this time last year were less than 17,000 uniformed personnel and less than 10,000 civilians. Operations broadly described as peace-building, and under the authority of the General Assembly, have 341 international personnel in the field, supported by 455 local staff, up from 203 and 244 respectively this time last year. However, these numbers in themselves do not indicate the extent of the challenges that increasingly confront peacekeeping operations. I have identified eight of these challenges below; many of them are echoed in the report of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations.

New types of tasks

68. Peacekeeping has become more complicated because peacekeepers must now undertake a greatly expanded range of tasks. Beyond interposition forces and multidisciplinary operations to assist the parties to implement agreements, peacekeepers over the past year have assumed responsibility for interim administrations in Kosovo and East Timor, balancing the competing and sometimes contradictory tasks of governing those territories, supporting the emergence of local institutions and maintaining law and order.

New types of personnel

69. The assumption of these new responsibilities has required that the United Nations expand and adapt the profile of peacekeepers in the field. Over a little more than a year, reflecting in particular the deployment of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo and the United Nations Transitional Authority in East Timor, the authorized deployment of police has jumped from approximately 2,500 to over 8,600, a more than threefold increase. In addition, these new missions have obliged the United Nations to recruit lawyers and judges; city administrators; and experts in customs, fiscal management, public utilities, health, education, sanitation and agriculture.

Deterrent capacity

70. This past year offered further evidence, in particular in Sierra Leone, of the precarious environments in which today's operations are deployed, environments that can threaten the effectiveness of operations and the security of peacekeepers. As the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations notes, these operational experiences have underlined the importance of the United Nations deploying credible deterrent capacity with "robust rules of engagement". There is also a clear need for further efforts in three areas: we need more and better equipped and trained troops; ongoing capacity-building efforts in developing countries, drawing upon bilateral and multilateral partnerships, to expand the pool of potential peacekeepers; and more effective use of United Nations standby capacities to provide equipment to peacekeeping troops in the field.

Readiness/rapid deployment

71. Events over the past year have demonstrated once again how important it is to be able to deploy forces rapidly, and have revealed the constraints in the critical areas of logistics, finance and human resources. Supplies of mission equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, are now largely depleted. Yet, as a result of additional and more complex mandates, we face increased demands on the same or fewer resources. In this context I am gratified that the Panel on Peace Operations recommends that the Secretary-General be allowed funds to start planning a mission before the Security Council approves it.

Timely and predictable financial support within peace processes

72. The effective disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants can be crucial to the success of a peace process, without some degree of predictability of funding for such operations, the entire enterprise risks failure. To avoid such an outcome I have urged Member States to consider a more flexible approach to the use of assessed funding in this area.

The role of economic incentives in perpetuating conflict

73. The United Nations experiences in Angola, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Sierra Leone and elsewhere have revealed what damage struggles for control over diamonds, timber, drugs, guns and other resources can do to a peace process. The importance of this issue was highlighted during the year by debates in the Security Council and by the report of the panel of experts on sanctions against UNITA in Angola. The report revealed the extent to which violations of sanctions, in the form of exports of illicitly mined diamonds, were sustaining the war in Angola.

Cooperation with regional organizations

74. Over the past year, cooperation with regional organizations and others in peace-building has proved fruitful on several occasions, but practical, political and organizational problems continue to make it a complicated undertaking. Those who will be responsible for implementing a peace agreement must be present during the negotiation phase to ensure that the operation is based on realistic assumptions. Furthermore, the lines of reporting and division of labour should be as unambiguous as possible; the Organization's relationships with OSCE and the European Union in Kosovo represent an important step in the right direction. Efforts to improve working arrangements with respect to peace-keeping, will continue, and the forthcoming high-level meeting between the United Nations and regional organizations will be dedicated to cooperation in peace-building.

Staffing at Headquarters

75. The past year's events have underlined the importance of adequate staffing at Headquarters, an issue which is dealt with in some depth by the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations. I am in complete agreement with the Panel's view that Headquarters support for peacekeeping should be funded primarily through the regular United Nations budget rather than via the current Support Account, which has to be justified on a post-by-post basis every year.

76. I welcomed the decision of the General Assembly in November 1999 to approve a number of posts within the Department of Peacekeeping Operations. However, the significant loss of personnel and expertise previously incurred through the departure of gratis personnel severely constrained the Secretariat's efforts to support new deployments, expansions and changes of mandate, as well as the liquidation of completed missions. The fact that so much was achieved with so few resources should be acknowledged as a major achievement of the Organization. Recognizing the extraordinary constraints under which the Secretariat has been required to operate and the impact those constraints have had on the planning and execution of missions, the Panel on Peace Operations has recommended an urgent increase in funding. In particular it urges the creation of a new information and analysis unit that will service all departments with peace and security responsibilities.

77. No two operations have demonstrated the extent of the challenges outlined above more comprehensively than those in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Sierra Leone. The conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Africa's third largest country, involves a number of regional States and continues to threaten the stability of the region as a whole. In accordance with my recommendations of 17 January 2000 for the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC), the Security Council authorized the deployment of a total of 5,537 officers and men. The task of that force was to provide secure logistics bases for the operations of up to 500 military observers charged with monitoring the implementation of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement.

78. MONUC has experienced serious problems from the outset, including persistent restrictions on its freedom of movement by the Government and other parties; repeated outbreaks of fighting, including major military offensives, in violation of the ceasefire; and logistical challenges arising from the degraded state of the infrastructure in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the huge size of the country. MONUC operations are continually constrained by the deep suspicion that exists between the parties and, from time to time, by hostility towards the United Nations itself.

79. The overall situation in Sierra Leone remains tense and critical. The successive and unprovoked attacks on, and detentions of, United Nations personnel by the Revolutionary United Front fighters, initiated in May 2000, have seriously undermined the prospects for peace in that country and continue to pose serious challenges to the operations of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone.

80. Despite the difficulties in implementation, I share the view reaffirmed by both the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) and the Security Council that the broad terms of the Lomé Peace Agreement reached in July 1999 remain important as a basis for moving towards durable peace. However, the determined and cohesive support of the neighbouring States and subregional organizations, particularly ECOWAS, and of troop contributors as well as the international community, remain vital if the Mission is to secure the credible military strength necessary to fulfil the broad objectives of the Peace Agreement.

81. Meanwhile, in Western Sahara, nine years have passed since the plan for the settlement of the conflict between Morocco and the Frente POLISARIO was agreed to, yet the settlement plan has still to be implemented and the situation remains delicate. In my recent report to the Security Council on the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO), I have included suggestions that may assist in resolving the multiple problems relating to the implementation of the settlement plan. The presence of MINURSO remains critical to prevent any worsening of the conflict.

82. Challenges of a different kind confront the United Nations in Kosovo and East Timor. In Kosovo, the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) has continued to work closely with the international security presence (KFOR) to create a safe and secure environment for all the residents of the province.

83. A particular challenge has been the development and implementation of the rule of law in Kosovo. In cooperation with OSCE, the Mission is pursuing a comprehensive strategy to rebuild and reform the judicial, police and penal systems. UNMIK has also made progress in ensuring the direct involvement of the local population in the administration of the province. This involvement will be further enhanced following municipal elections later this year. With the assistance of the European Union, good progress has been made in establishing a macroeconomic framework in Kosovo. On the humanitarian front, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and her staff in Kosovo, together with key partners in the United Nations system, the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies and non-governmental organizations, successfully met the challenges of the emergency relief needs of Kosovo throughout the winter. As a result, the humanitarian "pillar" of UNMIK was terminated at the end of June, and the Mission is now focusing on reconstruction and development.

84. The presence of the United Nations in Kosovo complements its long-standing engagement in the region, particularly through the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH), which continues to assist in the establishment of the rule of law as part of the implementation of the Dayton/Paris Peace Agreement. After lengthy efforts to overcome political obstruction, in June 2000, UNMIBH finally inaugurated the first unit of the new multi-ethnic State Border Service. This is the first and only executive law enforcement organ that is under the joint institutions of the State, rather than its ethnically based entities. Efforts to redress the ethnic imbalance in the police forces are, however, proceeding exceedingly slowly.

85. The past year has seen extraordinary developments in East Timor. The popular consultation in the territory on 30 August 1999 resulted in 78.5 per cent of voters rejecting the autonomy option offered by Indonesia, thereby expressing their preference for a transition towards independence under United Nations auspices. Unfortunately, that success was marred by the subsequent violence, destruction and forcible displacement of hundreds of thousands of East Timorese, a direct result of the failure of the Indonesian authorities to fulfil their security responsibilities under the agreements of 5 May 1999.

86. The speedy and resolute action of the Security Council in authorizing the deployment of the International Force, East Timor (INTERFET), led by Australia, and the subsequent establishment of UNTAET helped to bring to an end a long and sad chapter in East Timor's history. The complex and difficult task of rebuilding East Timor and preparing it for full independence is proceeding but faces formidable challenges. Political skill, patience and a high level of international and local-level cooperation and coordination are the necessary conditions for success, and cooperation between UNTAET and the East Timorese has proceeded with vigour and goodwill. UNTAET intends gradually to expand the participation of the East Timorese in the administration so as to ensure a seamless transition to independence. The positive disposition of the President of Indonesia, Abdurrahman Wahid, and the East Timorese leadership, particularly Xanana Gusmão, bodes well for good relations in the future.

87. While we have confronted major difficulties and resource constraints in mounting these operations, I am gratified to report that the past year has also seen a considerable reduction in the level of United Nations engagement in the Central African Republic and Tajikistan.

88. The United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic, which completed its work in February 2000, played a crucial role in restoring peace and security to the country. It also helped to create conditions conducive to holding national elections, restructuring the security forces, training the national police and gendarmerie and launching major economic and social reforms. I have since established, with the concurrence of the Security Council, the United Nations Peace-building Support Office. The new office will assist the Government and people of the Central African Republic in the peace process, and help to nurture democratic institutions and build socio-economic recovery and respect for human rights and the rule of law, demonstrating how much can be done to promote peace and national reconciliation when missions are conducted with a clear mandate, appropriate resources, the commitment of the parties and the sustained support of the international community.

89. As in the Central African Republic, our objective in Guinea-Bissau and Liberia, where United Nations peace-building offices are also in place, is not simply to deal with the immediate challenges of post-conflict stabilization, but also to promote sustainable peace in the longer term. Here and elsewhere the United Nations is working with local actors to address the root causes of conflict and thus minimize the chance that violence will reoccur.

90. The United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Tajikistan, which was established in May 2000, will provide the political framework and leadership for the peace-building activities of the United Nations system in that country. It builds on the success of more than seven years of United Nations peacemaking and peacekeeping efforts in Tajikistan. The United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan, working closely with regional guarantor States and international organizations, assisted the Tajik parties in overcoming many obstacles to peace, national reconciliation and development. However, the conflict in neighbouring Afghanistan and the complexities of domestic politics mean that renewed instability cannot be ruled out. Consequently, the continuing support of the international community in the post-conflict phase will be important for Tajikistan's ability to sustain and build on the achievements of the peace process.

91. Haiti presents another example of a country in which the United Nations presence has recently changed. In this case the shift came about after a series of peacekeeping missions deployed since 1995 came to an end, including the joint United Nations/Organization of American States International Civilian Mission in Haiti. Those multidimensional missions were not mandated to re-establish or maintain peace in the wake of an armed conflict, but rather to solve a serious internal crisis by re-establishing democracy, improving respect for human rights and reforming state institutions, particularly the police.

92. In order to consolidate the Mission's achievements I recommended to the General Assembly that it establish the International Civilian Support Mission in Haiti (MICAH), which has taken over the task of assisting the ongoing transition to democratic constitutional rule. MICAH has three substantive pillars of activity: human rights, police and justice.

93. The United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala remains the largest of the United Nations peace-building missions. It continues to provide good offices and advisory and public information functions to support the implementation of the peace agreements. Many substantive reforms remain incomplete, however. Although 2000 is the final year in the official implementation calendar, the parties to the agreements have proposed that the implementation timetable be extended. Consequently, I am conducting consultations on means of consolidating the peace-building process in order to allow me to make an appropriate recommendation to the General Assembly.

94. Peace-building in practice involves initiatives to help promote national reconciliation and justice, respect for human rights and the rule of law, and the organization of free and fair elections. It also includes measures to create propitious conditions for sustainable economic growth, a necessary condition for reconstruction. In pursuing these goals, our offices maintain regular contacts with relevant donor countries and with representatives of the international financial institutions.

95. United Nations peace-building activities have been strengthened by a closer working relationship between peace operations and the field offices of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights. Such field offices are currently in place in Bosnia, Burundi, Cambodia, Colombia, Croatia, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

96. Another far-reaching aspect of our peace-building work is that related to mine clearing. The Mine Action Service of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations works with its partners in missions all over the world to help locate and clear mines—a task that is growing as the number of mine-affected countries continues to rise and new mines are laid in countries previously cleared. These developments have further strained the limited resources that are available. Access to resources is only part of the problem, however, and once again I would like to stress the need to stigmatize the production, distribution and use of these indiscriminate weapons.

Electoral assistance

97. The United Nations provides assistance to electoral institutions for two reasons, namely, to enhance administrative capacity to hold credible, transparent and fair elections and to assist in the institutional consolidation required during the post-election period. Over the medium and long term such assistance aims to prevent the democratic breakdown and erosion that may sometimes occur after the first elections are held in societies in transition and to stabilize the electoral institutions themselves.

98. The provision of electoral assistance is a vital component of the United Nations system's overall peace-building and democratization strategies. Over the past eight years, the United Nations has experienced a significant increase in the number and complexity of requests for electoral assistance. Since its establishment in 1992, the Electoral Assistance Division has provided assistance in 150 electoral processes, ranging from the organization of elections to the provision of technical support. Particularly notable during the past year has been the United Nations participation in the electoral processes in Mexico and Nigeria.

Sanctions

99. Sanctions have had an uneven track record in encouraging compliance with Security Council resolutions and in recent years their efficacy has been increasingly questioned. In the case of comprehensive economic sanctions, concerns have been expressed about their negative effects on civilians and on neighbouring States, whose trading relations are harmed by sanctions but which receive no compensation for the harm suffered. The costs of sanctions have too often been borne by ordinary people, not by the authoritarian Governments against which they were directed. Paradoxically, the political élites that compose the regimes themselves have often benefited economically from the black markets that have sprung up to circumvent the sanctions intended to exert pressure upon them.

100. I therefore share the view, emerging as a consensus among Member States, that the design and implementation of Security Council sanctions need to be improved, and their administration enhanced, to allow a more prompt and effective response to present and future threats to international peace and security. Future sanctions regimes should be designed so as to maximize the chance of inducing the target to comply with Security Council resolutions while minimizing the negative effects of the sanctions on the civilian population and neighbouring and other affected States.

101. The debate on sanctions held in the Security Council in April and the subsequent establishment of an informal working group of the Council, with a mandate to draw up general recommendations on how to improve the effectiveness of sanctions, demonstrated the Council's readiness to consider practical steps to improve sanctions regimes. This is a welcome development that should help the Council to oversee the evolution of sanctions into a more potent instrument of deterrence and conflict prevention.

Disarmament

102. Disarmament is a critical element of the United Nations strategy for peace and security. Steps to reduce the level of arms and curb proliferation not only make the world a safer place by reducing the propensity for conflict but also lessen the temptation for States to embark on costly arms races. The latest figures indicate that global military expenditures increased in 1999 for the first time in the post-cold-war period, bringing total spending to approximately $780 billion, or 2.6 per cent of the world's gross national product.

103. Despite some progress in the reduction of nuclear weapons—in particular the Russian Federation's ratification of the second Treaty on the Reduction of Strategic Arms (START II)—there is deep concern within the international community at the continuing risk posed by such weapons. The results of the 2000 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons are therefore of considerable importance. The unequivocal undertaking by the nuclear-weapon States to accomplish the total elimination of their nuclear arsenals, a reinvigorated effort to halt the global spread of nuclear weapons and a strengthening of the standards governing the peaceful uses of nuclear energy—all issues crucial to the security of the peoples of the United Nations—provide grounds for encouragement. Much, however, remains to be done. The universalization of the Chemical Weapons Convention and the speedy negotiation of a protocol to strengthen the Biological Weapons Convention are achievable goals; I strongly urge their pursuit.

104. While the number of ratifications of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty has increased during the past year, the challenges that confront its entry into force persist, especially after the United States Senate's rejection of ratification in October 1999. It is essential that the Final Declaration of the Conference on facilitating the entry into force of the Treaty, held in October 1999, be implemented. I therefore reiterate my call to all States to ratify the Treaty, particularly those whose ratification is necessary for it to enter into force.

105. Last year, I drew attention to the dangers posed by the development and testing of long-range missiles. While that danger remains, there is also danger from another quarter, namely, the growing pressure to deploy national missile defences. Within the scientific community there is widespread scepticism that such systems could ever work effectively, and real concern that their deployment could lead to a new arms race, set back nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation policies, and create new incentives for missile proliferation. I trust that States will weigh these factors very carefully before embarking on a path that could jeopardize the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty and that may reduce, rather than enhance, global security.

106. With respect to conventional arms, preparations are being made for the United Nations Conference on the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects, scheduled for 2001. Since these are the weapons that kill most people in most wars, the outcome of the Conference is of crucial importance. We must reduce the risks to the people most threatened by those weapons, including the children who are often recruited as soldiers to use them. Some progress is already being made as States tighten their arms export legislation and collect and destroy surplus weapons. Innovative approaches such as "weapons for development" and "weapons for food" programmes are yielding concrete results as practical disarmament measures at the community level. This progress is due to close cooperation between States, the business sector, groups in civil society and the international community.

107. Although the United Nations is a global Organization, it recognizes that regional approaches to arms control and disarmament may also play a crucial role in enhancing security. The three United Nations regional centres for peace and disarmament have been revitalized but a chronic lack of resources unfortunately continues to limit their effectiveness.

108. During the 2000 Review Conference of the parties to the Non-Proliferation Treaty, non-governmental organizations working in the field of disarmament had an unprecedented opportunity to express their views to States parties at a meeting organized for that purpose. They also continued to play an unofficial but vital monitoring role under the Ottawa Convention, on anti-personnel mines. I trust that Member States will bear in mind the constructive contribution that civil society makes to disarmament when they decide how non-governmental organizations are to participate in the conference on small arms in 2001.

Chapter II

Meeting humanitarian commitments

109. The past year has been marked by humanitarian emergencies that far surpassed predicted worst-case scenarios. Protracted conflicts in Afghanistan, Angola, Colombia, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Somalia, Sri Lanka and the Sudan continued unabated. Crises escalated or erupted in the Republic of the Congo, Kosovo, East Timor and Chechnya, and between Ethiopia and Eritrea. The situation in Burundi deteriorated because of Government-led mass forced relocation programmes, and the outbreak of violence in Sierra Leone in May 2000 has had serious humanitarian consequences. Civilians continue to bear the brunt of these violent conflicts, as victims of direct attacks, indiscriminate bombings, rape and sexual torture, forced relocation, the denial or restriction of access to humanitarian assistance and numerous other human rights violations.

110. Apart from these complex emergencies, natural disasters have once again wrought devastation in many developing countries. Mongolia, Turkey, India, Venezuela and southern Africa, among others, were severely affected by the consequences of snowstorms, earthquakes, cyclones, mudslides and floods, while drought spread in the Horn of Africa and gained momentum in Central Asia. The number and scale of natural disasters are growing rapidly, demanding greater international cooperation for the provision of assistance to affected populations.

Coordinating humanitarian action

111. This past year, improved coordination of international humanitarian action has been characterized by the implementation of innovative approaches in major emergencies in Kosovo and East Timor, and by the challenges of providing protection to internally displaced persons and civilians in armed conflict. In response to the humanitarian crisis in the Balkans, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs seconded personnel to perform coordination functions in support of the lead role of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) in the region. They helped to create the Emergency Management Group in Albania, and later established an Inter-Agency Coordination Unit and a Humanitarian Community Information Centre in Kosovo.

112. In response to the East Timor crisis, a senior humanitarian coordinator was immediately deployed by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs to lead an inter-agency team of specialists. This deployment provided vital coordination services until the humanitarian component of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET) could be established. The Office also supported my Special Representative for East Timor in designing, staffing and providing initial funding for the humanitarian component of UNTAET.

113. An inter-agency response was developed to address the rapid growth of internally displaced persons in a number of countries, including Afghanistan, Angola, Burundi, Colombia and the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The Emergency Relief Coordinator and the members of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee also intensified their efforts to improve the coordination and delivery of programmes for internally displaced persons.

114. Since internally displaced persons remain by definition citizens of their own country, international responses to specific situations are designed in collaboration with Governments and local authorities in each affected country. It had been clear for some time that the international response mechanisms needed to be reviewed, and that clearer lines of responsibility and accountability had to be agreed upon. A series of reviews were undertaken and a policy paper on the protection of internally displaced persons has been produced. The central premise of the policy is that the responsibility for internally displaced persons lies first and foremost with their national Government, but it is recognized that the capacity and willingness of authorities to fulfil their responsibilities may be insufficient or lacking altogether in some conflict situations. The policy therefore urges humanitarian agencies to cooperate with national and local authorities and other relevant actors to support and supplement their efforts on behalf of the displaced. In adopting these guidelines, the Inter-Agency Standing Committee has sought to resolve some of the ambiguities that impede effective humanitarian action in crises.

115. The Committee also advocates strengthening the legal and physical protection of civilians caught in armed conflict. In September 1999, I presented to the Security Council my report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, which contained 40 recommendations aimed at reducing the threats to civilians in armed conflict. The report was transmitted to the General Assembly in November. The Security Council has adopted several resolutions supporting my recommendations, and has undertaken to give special emphasis to the protection and rights of children in armed conflict. Those resolutions constitute a significant milestone in the humanitarian community's long-standing efforts to ensure that the causes of humanitarian crises are addressed politically at the highest international level.

116. The response so far to the consolidated inter-agency appeals for the year 2000 has been disappointing. As at 30 June 2000, midway through the appeal cycle, just 34 per cent of the total requirements were available. This amount is lower, in percentage terms, than pledges made to the 1999 consolidated appeals by the same time last year, despite acknowledged improvements in the quality of the appeals. Further efforts are being made to strengthen the consolidated appeal process in the coming year and more innovative approaches are being considered to help mobilize resources for these "forgotten emergencies".

117. In the consolidated appeals for 2000, requests for funding to meet security needs were introduced for the first time, US$ 8.5 million being sought for security-related activities in 10 countries or regions. All future consolidated appeals will include a comprehensive review of security requirements.

118. Efforts to improve the United Nations response to the growing number of natural and environmental disasters include the appointment by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of regional natural disaster response advisers in Asia, Latin America and the Pacific. The advisers counsel and assist Governments and regional networks in natural disaster preparations. They also assist in the deployment of United Nations Disaster Assessment and Coordination teams from within the disaster region and elsewhere around the world.

119. In 1999, those teams were deployed on 12 occasions. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs also assisted the members of the International Search and Rescue Advisory Group in coordinating the international search and rescue teams that were deployed in response to earthquakes in three continents.

120. Member States recognized the achievements of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, and the need to continue disaster reduction activities under the leadership of the United Nations system, in Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/63 and General Assembly resolution 54/219, concerning future arrangements for natural disaster reduction. The new strategy helps communities to resist the effects of natural, technological and environmental hazards and reduce their social and economic costs. The initiative also seeks to integrate risk-prevention strategies into sustainable development activities. During the past year increasing emphasis has been placed on multidisciplinary approaches to disaster reduction. Priority is being given to using scientific and technological innovations relevant to disaster reduction and to engaging local decision makers and citizens' groups in developing sustainable long-term disaster reduction strategies at the regional and national levels. An inter-agency task force has been established to facilitate the new multidisciplinary approach. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) chairs a working group to develop measures to quantify risk, vulnerability and impact indicators; the United Nations Environment Programme chairs a working group on early warning systems; and the World Meteorological Organization chairs a working group on forecasting the socio-economic impacts of future occurrences of El Niño, climate change and variability.

Delivering humanitarian services

121. During the past year, areas receiving United Nations humanitarian assistance included Afghanistan, Angola, Burundi, Colombia, the Republic of the Congo, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, East Timor, Kosovo, Mozambique, Mongolia, the Russian Federation, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, Somalia, the Sudan, Tajikistan, Turkey, Uganda, Venezuela, and the Great Lakes region in Africa.

122. In 1999, the World Food Programme (WFP) provided food aid to nearly 89 million people worldwide, much of it in the form of emergency and recovery operations. The number of people assisted represented a 17 per cent increase over the 1998 total. Some 41 million of those assisted were victims of natural disasters. Approximately 18 million more vulnerable civilians caught in conflict situations, including internally displaced persons and refugees, were also assisted.

123. Seventy-five per cent of the people reached by WFP humanitarian activities in 1999 were women and children. In nearly all ongoing humanitarian operations, in compliance with the policies of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee and its own "commitments to women" policy, WFP and its partners have concentrated efforts to tackle the gender-related aspects and social dimensions of food insecurity, embedding gender concerns within humanitarian assistance programmes.

124. The response of WFP to rapid onset crises, like those in the Balkans and East Timor, demonstrated the Programme's ability to facilitate effective food aid coordination and provide logistic and telecommunication support to humanitarian partners from the very outset of such crises. WFP and its partners are now able to rapidly develop coordinated intervention strategies that target the needs of the most vulnerable.

125. As a consequence of its improved analytic and forecasting capabilities, WFP was one of the first agencies to detect signals of an impending, drought-related regional food crisis in the Horn of Africa late in 1999, and alert the international community to the severity of the situation. In response to that crisis, in March 2000 I appointed the Executive Director of WFP as my Special Representative for the Drought in the Horn of Africa.

126. Staff security continues to be of great concern to the World Food Programme. Seven staff members lost their lives in the field in 1999. WFP persists in its efforts to strengthen the Organization's capacity to protect its staff in the field and nearly all staff have now undergone security training.

127. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) provides early warning of impending food emergencies, produces information on crop and food supplies, assesses emergency needs in the agricultural sector, provides agricultural inputs so that people can grow their own food and reduce their dependence on food aid, assists Governments in coping with crises and gives technical advice to non-governmental organizations active in agriculture.

128. Thanks to donor funding, and United Nations system partners such as WFP, UNHCR and UNDP, FAO together with its non-governmental organization partners has been able to conduct major campaigns to provide agricultural inputs to internally displaced persons, returnees and refugees and to implement early rehabilitation programmes. FAO has also continued to work closely with WFP and UNHCR in assisting refugees, internally displaced persons, returnees and host populations to improve their food security situation. FAO has provided technical assistance for disaster mapping and for establishing integrated information management systems for disaster management.

129. Immunizations, nutrition, pharmaceuticals, controlling epidemics and mental health remain World Health Organization (WHO) priorities. This past year, WHO has called attention to such critical global health threats as malaria, poliomyelitis, HIV/AIDS and maternal mortality. Efforts to overcome these challenges have been complicated by the increased number of natural disasters and complex humanitarian emergencies. With the support of the Organization's central management bodies, intensified efforts have been made to enhance the readiness of WHO country offices and to assess and address the health needs of those affected by natural and human-induced disasters in a timely manner.

130. In the field, and with enhanced support from regional offices and headquarters, WHO has focused on health and nutritional surveillance, providing the data that is critical for coordinated planning and implementation of assistance, both in emergencies and post-crisis reconstruction.

131. In 1999-2000, special efforts have been made to eradicate polio, to control malaria, and to define new strategies for HIV/AIDS control and safe motherhood in complex emergencies. WHO has also continued to monitor the equitable distribution of commodities imported into Iraq under Security Council resolution 986(1995). Work continued in the Palestinian self-rule areas to reform health-care systems. Strengthening the dialogue and coordination between national and international health actors, and bridging the gap between recovery, rehabilitation and health development, have continued to be high priority issues for the Organization.

132. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), together with its United Nations and non-governmental organization partners, provided humanitarian aid and protection to more than 48 million children and women affected by man-made and natural disasters in the past year. In response to the resolution adopted in August 1999 by the Security Council, stressing the need for greater and more effective efforts to protect children caught in armed conflict, UNICEF developed a comprehensive package of programmes and interventions for children and mothers in emergency situations, including baby care, pre-school and primary education, recreational activities, and education about health and nutrition. UNICEF also increased its support for demobilization and reintegration programmes for children in Sierra Leone and the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and strengthened and expanded programmes in Angola, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Kosovo and East Timor supporting the reunification of families separated by conflict. Psycho-social support for children affected by conflict and displacement was provided in Albania, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Turkey. In Kosovo, East Timor and many other emergency situations, UNICEF support to basic education and schooling has helped to restore some normalcy to children's lives.

133. National Immunization Days were conducted throughout the year in an effort to eradicate polio in Afghanistan, Angola, Burundi, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Sudan and the United Republic of Tanzania. In pursuing these campaigns in countries embroiled in violent conflict, UNICEF worked with WHO to negotiate "days of tranquillity" to enable children to be immunized safely.

134. In 1999, UNICEF launched a Global Peace and Security Agenda to help guide international efforts on behalf of children and women in armed conflict. The set of goals, presented to the Security Council by the Executive Director, calls for an end to the use of children as soldiers; the protection of children from the effects of sanctions; the inclusion of specific provisions for children in peace-building; an end to impunity from war crimes—especially those committed against children; early warning and preventive action for children; and improvements in the safety of humanitarian workers.

135. During the past year my Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict has focused on engaging regional, intergovernmental and civil society organizations with the plight of children in armed conflict and advocating the application of relevant norms and standards; raising the age-limit for the recruitment and participation of young persons in armed conflict; addressing cross-border issues affecting children, with special attention to the West Africa region; seeking to bring those who have violated international human rights and humanitarian law to justice; working to ensure that children's rights are protected within the rules of evidence and procedure of the International Criminal Court; and encouraging the involvement of children and young people in peacemaking and peace-building efforts.

136. I am gratified that this year the Security Council, building on the more general resolution 1261(1999), has adopted another resolution (1314(2000)) on children affected by armed conflict, by which it puts in place a number of concrete provisions for the protection of war-affected children. I am also pleased to announce that these initiatives have led to commitments from the Governments of Burundi, Colombia, Rwanda, Sierra Leone and the Sudan to protect children.

137. The United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) combines humanitarian and developmental strategies in providing education, health and relief and social services to approximately 3.7 million refugees in its five fields of operation: Jordan, Lebanon, the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and the Syrian Arab Republic. In May 2000, the Agency commemorated 50 years of service in the field. The work of UNRWA, carried out principally by more than 20,000 dedicated local staff, has continued to produce impressive achievements, often under challenging circumstances including emergencies and conflict situations. However, serious shortfalls in funding the Agency's budget have inevitably had a negative impact on the level and standard of services. The voluntary donor contributions on which UNRWA depends must be secured and enhanced if the Agency is to meet the challenges it is sure to face in the years ahead.

138. In recognition of its unique role in promoting reproductive health and preventing sexual violence in emergency situations, the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) became a full member of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee in April 2000. Following an assessment of the extent of sexual violence towards Kosovar women, UNFPA set up an office in Kosovo to re-establish reproductive health care and to provide counselling and services to women and their families. The guidelines in the Inter-Agency Field Manual for Reproductive Health in Refugee Situations were updated and training was provided to staff from UNFPA, other United Nations bodies, non-governmental organizations and national agencies in the use of the guidelines and to sensitize them to the reproductive health needs of refugees. UNFPA also participated in discussions with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations on HIV prevention within peacekeeping missions. At its annual session in June 2000, the Executive Board of UNDP/UNFPA endorsed the use of up to $1 million from special UNFPA interregional programme funds as a leveraging base from which to build appeals for extrabudgetary resources to tackle this problem.

139. An integral component of the overall planning framework of UNDP is to reduce the incidence and impact of complex emergencies and disasters—natural, environmental and technological—and to accelerate the recovery process towards sustainable human development. The main objectives in disaster reduction and recovery are to achieve a sustainable reduction in disaster risks and the protection of development gains; reduce the loss of life and livelihood due to disasters, and ensure that disaster recovery serves to consolidate sustainable human development. To achieve these goals, UNDP works through its system of country-based resident representatives, regional bureaux and specialized programmes, such as the Division for Sustainable Energy and Environment, co-sponsorship of the Global Environment Fund and the Office to Combat Desertification and Drought. The UNDP Disaster Reduction Programme, a component of its Emergency Response Division, is the focal point for ensuring that disaster reduction concerns are integrated into development strategies. A central objective of the Division is to strengthen, at all levels, the capacity of institutions to manage disasters more effectively and to promote and develop disaster reduction strategies.

140. UNICEF continued to promote the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction, and to advocate its universal ratification. As at 21 August 2000, the Convention has been signed by 133 countries, and ratified by 101. UNDP, in close collaboration with the Mine Action Service of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, is responsible for supporting national and local capacity-building, and addressing the socio-economic consequences of landmines. With 12 active UNDP programmes, and 5 new initiatives, the UNDP Mine Action Team, which is an advisory element of the Emergency Response Division, is responsible for policy development, policy guidance, and operational support for UNDP mine action programmes.

141. Since the phases of relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development often overlap in post-conflict situations, UNDP has adopted a comprehensive and integrated approach to countries in and emerging from crisis. Humanitarian and development strategies that focus on preventing crises, mitigating their consequences and promoting sustainable recovery must be carried out in concert if they are to be effective. In order to achieve this goal, capacity-building, infrastructure rehabilitation, promotion of the rule of law, and reintegration programmes which assist displaced as well as local communities have become an integral part of UNDP activities in post-conflict situations.

142. In all countries, UNDP works through the resident coordinator system, emphasizing joint planning, demand-driven rather than agency-driven assessments of needs and local capacities, the importance of a clearly agreed division of labour through inter-agency collaboration, and the need for more flexible financing systems for transitional programming. Every effort is made to support the central role of national authorities in the management of these processes and to engage all international actors in a common, inclusive and participatory approach.

143. Since the end of 1996 the "oil-for-food" programme, established by the Security Council and administered by the Office of the Iraq Programme, has provided a means for Iraq to sell its oil and use two thirds of the revenue to purchase, with sanctions Committee approval, humanitarian supplies and, more recently, spare parts and equipment for damaged infrastructure including the oil industry. Thirty per cent is used by the United Nations Compensation Commission in Geneva for war reparations. Tight limits on the value of oil sold in each 180-day phase were eased in 1998 and then lifted completely in 1999. As at the end of July 2000, Iraq had sold $32 billion worth of oil and received $8 billion worth of supplies, with another $5 billion approved and en route. Nevertheless, the people of Iraq continue to suffer from the effects of sanctions.

Protecting and assisting refugees

144. Although in global terms there was relatively little change in the number of refugees and persons of concern to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees between the beginning and the end of 1999 (21.5 million as against 22.3 million), it was, nevertheless, a year of major challenges. Conflicts in Kosovo, East Timor and Chechnya, Russian Federation, dominated the media and absorbed a large share of UNHCR resources, but there were many other humanitarian crises around the world, especially in Africa, that received less media attention. These disparate situations posed dilemmas and difficult decisions, not only for the United Nations refugee agency but also for the wider humanitarian community.

145. In Kosovo, the massive emergency that erupted late in March 1999, leading to the exodus of over 800,000 people, was followed 10 weeks later by one of the most spectacular reverse population movements in contemporary history, obliging humanitarian agencies to shift gears from a large-scale emergency operation to one supporting return and reintegration. The continuation of ethnic violence in Kosovo, primarily by ethnic Albanians against the Serb and Roma minorities, has frustrated one of the declared purposes of international action, namely, to preserve a multi-ethnic society in Kosovo. Against this troubled background, UNHCR is attempting to ensure a smooth transition to longer-term reconstruction, and has handed over its responsibility as head of the humanitarian "pillar" of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo to the civil administration and economic reconstruction pillars. Elsewhere in the region, the first half of 2000 has witnessed encouraging signs of minority communities returning to their homes in Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia.

146. The bitter conflict in East Timor led to the displacement of more than 75 per cent of the population, many of whom crossed into West Timor. Following the deployment of the Australian-led multinational force in October, thousands of refugees began to return home. UNHCR and its partners provided protection and assistance to some 160,000 refugees, including extensive reconstruction of housing in East Timor. Continuing intimidation of refugees in the camps in West Timor has required ongoing humanitarian assistance in the region.

147. The situation around Chechnya deteriorated sharply in the second half of 1999, and led to over 200,000 people fleeing into neighbouring republics, several thousand more into Georgia and others further afield to Kazakhstan. Working closely with its partners in the United Nations system, the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies and non-governmental organizations, UNHCR has continued to assist these internally displaced persons and refugees, despite severe operating constraints. Limited aid is also being provided to those returning to Chechnya on a voluntary basis.

148. The intensification of the war between Eritrea and Ethiopia that marked the early months of 2000 forced close to 100,000 refugees to flee from Eritrea into the Sudan, while hundreds of thousands more have been internally displaced. Since the beginning of this conflict more than two years ago, over 1 million people have abandoned their homes in both countries. With the ceasefire brokered by the Organization of African Unity in June 2000, there were hopes for lasting peace and solutions for the victims. An appeal to meet the needs of those returning was launched by UNHCR in July 2000. Meanwhile, plans are under way to resume the repatriation of other Eritrean refugees who had been residing in the Sudan for many years. The programme had been suspended owing to the renewed conflict.

149. Many other refugee movements have occurred away from the glare of the media, and the international response, particularly in support of peace, has been slow, timid and piecemeal. In the Great Lakes region, continued fighting between Government and rebel forces in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, despite the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement of July 1999, caused over 136,000 people to flee into neighbouring countries, with thousands of new arrivals in Zambia and the United Republic of Tanzania. Heightened rebel activity in Burundi caused new movements into the United Republic of Tanzania, bringing the number of refugees from Burundi there to nearly half a million. Although the situation in the Republic of the Congo improved slightly, a further 49,000 Congolese fled to the neighbouring Democratic Republic of the Congo. Gabon was also confronted with the sudden arrival of more than 12,000 refugees from the Republic of the Congo. The list of these and other ongoing refugee situations, many of them protracted, is depressingly long. In West Africa more than 15,000 Sierra Leoneans and 8,000 Liberians fled to Guinea during 1999, bringing the total number of refugees in the country to well over 460,000. This has led to large-scale demand for humanitarian assistance with little prospect of voluntary repatriation despite the Lomé Peace Agreement of May 1999.

150. The escalation of the armed conflict in Sri Lanka since March 2000 has meant that the number of internally displaced persons in the Jaffna Peninsula climbed to 170,000, giving rise to concern for the fate of civilians trapped in the conflict areas. Together with the International Committee of the Red Cross, UNHCR and its partners continue to provide emergency relief aid to those in need.

151. The most severe drought in 30 years has struck south-western Afghanistan and adjacent areas in Pakistan and the Islamic Republic of Iran, further complicating the provision of assistance to refugee populations, many of whom have been awaiting an opportunity to return home for many years. On a more positive note, a joint programme with the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran for the voluntary repatriation of Afghan refugees has been launched, allowing the return of some 29,000 persons since April 2000. The programme has now been suspended largely because of circumstances linked to the drought.

152. The challenges for the coming year remain daunting. Among the most serious of these remains the plight of internally displaced persons. The growing tendency to deny humanitarian agencies access to war-affected areas for long periods, thus exacerbating the suffering of civilian victims, is an issue of particular concern. Security poses further major challenges including the protection of refugees and refugee operations; the security of refugee-populated areas;

the safety of States jeopardized by mass population movements; and the well-being of humanitarian staff. UNHCR has made a series of proposals to address these issues comprehensively, including a strategy aimed at improving security in refugee-populated areas, camps or settlements. The emphasis is increasingly on prevention. To this end, UNHCR is in the process of establishing standby arrangements with a number of Governments for the provision of public security experts to be deployed as an integral component of UNHCR emergency response teams at the beginning of a refugee crisis. In addition, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations has indicated its willingness, within the limits of available resources, to evaluate situations of insecurity that pose a threat to regional peace and security, and recommend an appropriate response.

153. Another major undertaking in respect of the international protection of refugees is the reaffirmation of the 1951 Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees as the universal foundation of refugee protection. The fiftieth anniversary of the Convention falls next year, following that of UNHCR in December 2000. To strengthen refugee protection policies, UNHCR will soon initiate a process of global consultations with senior government representatives and refugee protection experts. A central aim will be to clarify the provisions for refugee protection in situations not fully covered by the Convention.

Chapter III

Cooperating for development

Development in a globalizing world

154. As we confront the complex and profound changes being wrought by globalization, the most important development goal of the United Nations must continue to be the elimination of poverty worldwide. The most important means to this end is the promotion of sustainable and equitable growth, which in turn requires open markets and the stable legal and regulatory institutions that markets need in order to flourish. Adequate levels of development finance are also critical; for the poorest countries that find it difficult to attract private capital, this means continued reliance on official development assistance. Effective social development policies in the areas of health, education and welfare, which are important United Nations goals in their own right, also support the growth process.

155. As we enter the new millennium, arguments over the costs and benefits of globalization have intensified. The controversies surrounding this issue were manifested by the violent protests at the World Trade Organization (WTO) meeting in Seattle at the end of 1999 and by subsequent demonstrations against the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund (IMF) in Washington. The disquiet is evident not only in the streets, however. Concerns about the consequences of globalization pervade much of the developing world. The tenth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) in February reflected many of these concerns. The Conference examined a range of issues central to the globalization debate and urged that the benefits of globalization be more widely shared both within and among countries.

156. During the past year I have been engaged in an intensive process of reflection on the institutional and policy implications of globalization. At a meeting held with the executive heads of key United Nations agencies last April, two challenges clearly emerged. First, how can we ensure the effective participation of all countries in the global trading system? Second, how do we integrate the advancement of our social and environmental objectives with our economic and financial strategies?

157. These critical challenges have resonated throughout the United Nations system during the past year. The Economic and Social Council, for example, has devoted priority attention to the relationship between globalization and the eradication of poverty. The special high-level meeting of the Council with the Bretton Woods institutions, held in April 2000, focused on strengthening financial arrangements as well as eradicating poverty. The easing of the economic and financial crises of the late 1990s has provided a window of opportunity to consider reforms, including the reform of elements of the international financial architecture. System-wide discussion of these issues is continuing.

158. In the course of the July session of the Economic and Social Council, the need to integrate development, finance, trade and social policies more effectively was stressed, as was the need for better coordination among the United Nations system, the Bretton Woods institutions and WTO. Achieving greater policy coherence and consistency in the decisions taken by different intergovernmental forums remains a daunting task, however.

159. The discussions in the Economic and Social Council were held in the context of a global recovery from the economic crises of the previous two years. The World Economic and Social Survey 2000, produced by the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, highlights the prospect of solid global economic growth continuing for some years to come. The global financial system remains vulnerable to disruption, however, and many of the problems that caused or exacerbated the Asian crisis of 1997 remain unresolved. There is no room for complacency and a continuing need for reform.

Development finance

160. The high-level event on financing for development planned for 2001 will provide an opportunity to advance a range of policies to promote financial stability and crisis prevention. I attach great importance to the work of the Preparatory Committee for that meeting, which will be the first ever to involve the world's finance, trade and development organizations in a global consultation on issues of common concern. It is encouraging that the Preparatory Committee has already agreed on a broad agenda that includes the mobilization of domestic and international resources for development, trade, development assistance and debt relief.

The need for reliable statistics

161. Effective development policies require reliable statistical data, but the diverse and often inadequate statistical capacities of different countries make the task of developing standardized statistical indicators daunting. Responding to this need, the Economic and Social Council has called on international organizations to improve coordination of the production and dissemination of statistical indicators. It has also urged the need for increased statistical capacity-building at the national level. Enhancing the quality of information available to policy makers also emerged from the fifteenth meeting of the Group of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance, held in May 2000, as a fundamental prerequisite for addressing the challenges of globalization.

162. In response to these requests, the United Nations is supporting capacity-building in national statistical offices, in particular in census-taking. We are also helping to strengthen statistical capacity in several subregions, including those of the Caribbean Community (CARICOM) and the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN).

Engaging with other actors

163. During recent years the United Nations has engaged in a regular dialogue with a diverse range of actors involved in the development process, particularly civil society organizations and, increasingly, the private sector. In the past year, we have pursued a number of major initiatives with the private sector. The Global Alliance for Vaccines and Immunization, supported by the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, and the agreement with major drug companies to provide HIV/AIDS drug treatments at reduced cost to developing countries are two prominent examples. The Global Compact, whose partners met for the first time late in July, is but the latest demonstration of the increasing cooperation between the United Nations, the private sector and civil society.

Improving operational performance

164. Building on my reform programme launched in 1997, the United Nations system is making steady progress in improving the coherence and effectiveness of its operations, particularly at the country level. Since May 1999, 17 countries have participated in the United Nations Development Assistance Framework and 38 more will take part before the end of the year. To date 37 common country assessments of national development needs have been finalized and 55 more are being prepared. Another 19 assessments are in the planning phase.

Eradication of poverty

165. While there has been considerable progress in addressing the challenges of poverty during the last decade, particular success being achieved in Asia, half of the world's population still must try to survive on less than $2 a day. Some 1.2 billion subsist on less than $1 a day. The five-year review of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development committed the international community to halving the proportion of people living on $1 a day by 2015. This commitment must now be translated into effective action. The 2015 target must be central to our collective development efforts and I call on the Millennium Assembly to endorse it and to commit the resources necessary to achieve it.

166. In July 2000, a report entitled A Better World for All: Progress towards the International Development Goals was submitted to the Group of Eight industrialized countries at their summit meeting in Okinawa. Produced at the request of the G-8, the report was the result of an unprecedented collaboration between the United Nations, the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), the World Bank and IMF. It charts the progress made towards achieving seven interrelated international development goals set by United Nations conferences in the 1990s.

167. The report shows that, while some countries and regions have made progress, others continue to fall behind. In my letter to the G-8 forwarding the report, I called for a commitment to ensure financial stability; for policies that promote sustainable economic growth that favours the poor; for greater investment in health, education and welfare services; for greater openness to trade; for better access to markets, and for more effective dissemination of technology, together with the knowledge and the capacity to use it.

168. Greater access to resources coupled with appropriate policies ensuring that those resources are deployed to maximum effect are critical to promoting development. Above all we need a new commitment on the part of developing and industrialized countries to transform paper targets into concrete achievements.

169. External aid will continue to play an important part in supporting development, particularly in those countries that have not succeeded in attracting private capital. I have urged the G-8 countries to recommit themselves to reversing the decline in aid and to meeting the globally agreed targets of 0.7 per cent of GNP, with 0.15 per cent going to the least developed countries. I have also urged that greater efforts be made on all sides to enact the debt relief commitments already made.

170. Poverty eradication is a complex and difficult task. To help clarify what our priorities should be, a working group of the United Nations Development Group, chaired by UNDP, has prepared a proposal for a system-wide poverty reduction strategy. Practical options for country teams to implement the strategy are currently being developed.

Education

171. Girls' education is a critical factor in the eradication of poverty, as I stressed in my millennium report. At my request, the United Nations Development Group has established an informal task force, chaired by UNICEF, to design a 10-year initiative on girls' education. I launched this initiative at the World Education Forum at Dakar in April.

172. The initiative puts into place a set of five strategic objectives, and will bring greater coherence to the efforts undertaken within the United Nations system to promote girls' education. It is intended primarily to support those Governments that are committed to ending the gender gap in the school system.

Health

173. Protecting and improving health standards, particularly of the poor and vulnerable, is crucial to social and economic development. Societies cannot prosper unless their people are healthy. Children cannot learn and adults cannot earn if they succumb to illness. Households are devastated when breadwinners fall ill or die prematurely. Protecting and improving health is a development issue, and is recognized as such by the World Health Organization's strategic framework on health and poverty reduction, centred on collaborative efforts with partner agencies.

174. A number of significant health initiatives are now under way, involving partnerships between United Nations agencies, the private sector and civil society. These include the Roll Back Malaria and Stop Tuberculosis campaigns, a programme to reduce maternal mortality through increased availability and use of emergency obstetric care in developing countries, and the Global Alliance for Vaccines and Immunization.

Urbanization

175. Over the course of the next two decades, the global urban population will double, from 2.5 billion to 5 billion people. Almost all of the increase will be in developing countries. Understanding and managing the dynamics of urbanization and addressing issues of secure land tenure are also critical elements in any comprehensive poverty reduction policy. Two initiatives, the Global Campaign for Good Urban Governance and the Global Campaign for Secure Tenure, have been launched by the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) to address these issues. The World Bank and Habitat are building a global alliance of cities and their development programme includes the Cities without Slums action plan, whose patron is President Nelson Mandela. The aim of the programme is to improve the living conditions of 100 million slum-dwellers in the developing countries by 2020.

Working together more effectively

176. With the introduction of the poverty reduction strategy papers by the World Bank and IMF, the United Nations system as a whole is increasing its assistance to Governments that are committed to strengthening their own poverty reduction strategies. By drawing on United Nations presence and experience, and by using such tools as the common country assessment and United Nations Development Assistance Framework, we can assist national Governments to improve the effectiveness of development assistance. The United Nations, the World Bank and IMF have agreed to jointly monitor the progress made in this area in 14 countries, a number expected to increase to more than 20 in the near future.

Sustainable development

177. The overriding aim of sustainable development is twofold: to meet the economic needs of the present generation without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their needs also, and to protect the environment in the process. We are, unfortunately, far from meeting these goals.

178. The challenges of achieving sustainability are complex and multifaceted. As countries have struggled to work themselves out of financial crises, to restore growth and raise incomes, environmental concerns have become less salient. Our efforts are frustrated by growing environmental degradation, pollution, delays in reducing the increase in greenhouse gas emissions, the depletion of resources and the threats to biodiversity that are exacerbated by unsustainable levels of consumption in the developed world, and by poverty-induced environmental stresses in the developing world.

179. These challenges are compounded by the burden that continuing population growth is placing on the planet's physical resources. The medium scenario, long-range world population projection issued in December 1999 by the Population Division of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs indicates that population is likely to increase from 6 billion in 1999 to 9.7 billion in 2150, before stabilizing at just above 10 billion. Virtually all world population growth between now and 2030 will be absorbed by the urban areas of the less developed regions.

180. Within the United Nations, the Commission on Sustainable Development has been the main high-level intergovernmental forum for promoting integrated and cross-cutting proposals to achieve sustainable development. Since its establishment, and through its recent policy debates with stakeholders, the Commission has been a key forum for enhancing policy dialogue and for monitoring progress in sustainable development.

181. Of the various programme activities undertaken under the auspices of the Commission, the work of the Intergovernmental Forum on Forests is particularly noteworthy. The Forum, which successfully concluded its fourth session in February 2000, focuses on forest issues from the perspective of sustainable forest management, looking not only at the underlying causes of deforestation but also at the trade in forest products and the use of economic instruments for forest conservation. Looking ahead, the Forum has proposed that new international arrangements, including a United Nations Forum on Forests, be established with a view to promoting the implementation of internationally agreed actions on forests and to providing a coherent, transparent and participatory global framework for sustainable forest management.

182. The Commission on Sustainable Development at its eighth session in April and May 2000 considered a range of agricultural issues and the question of integrated planning and management of land resources. At high-level meetings, ministers of agriculture, environment, trade, economics, and development cooperation conducted a candid and in-depth dialogue on land resource problems, sustainable agriculture, trade, economic growth and globalization. These multi-stakeholder dialogues also enable representative civil society organizations and private companies to make known to government officials their perspectives on both problems and possible solutions.

183. The Commission also discussed the upcoming 10-year review of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (Rio de Janeiro, 1992), stressing the need for early and effective preparations. It recommended that the General Assembly consider convening a summit-level review conference in 2002, preferably in a developing country. The 10-year review provides an important opportunity to reassess what progress has or has not been made towards meeting the ambitious targets established by the Conference. It is imperative that the international community take advantage of this event to reinvigorate the global partnerships needed to achieve sustainable development goals.

184. The inaugural Global Ministerial Environment Forum—the sixth special session of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP)—was held in Sweden in May 2000. The resulting Malmö Ministerial Declaration spelled out the major environmental challenges of the twenty-first century, and the role and responsibility of the private sector and of civil society in meeting those challenges in an increasingly globalized world.

185. With regard to multilateral environmental agreements, a major milestone was the successful negotiation of the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety to the Convention on Biological Diversity. The Protocol was adopted by more than 130 countries at Montreal in January 2000. This is the first global treaty that reaffirms, incorporates and operationalizes the precautionary principle enunciated in the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development. It outlines procedures to deal with issues arising from the transboundary movement, transit, handling and use of genetically modified organisms that may adversely affect the conservation and sustainable use of biological diversity, or pose risks to human health and the environment. The Protocol was opened for signature at the fifth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention, held at Nairobi in May 2000, and was signed by 68 Governments.

186. Progress has also been made towards creating a global treaty to reduce and eliminate the use of certain persistent organic pollutants. The Protocol on Liability and Compensation to the Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and Their Disposal was adopted in December 1999. Further steps have been taken with regard to the implementation of the Global Programme of Action for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities and the Global International Waters Assessment. With respect to the former, a clearing house was launched at the special session of the General Assembly on small island developing States, held in September 1999, which will facilitate access to information on the issue. A strategic action plan on municipal wastewater has been developed in close collaboration with WHO, Habitat and the Water Supply and Sanitation Collaborative Council.

187. Efforts continue to be made to improve Member States' understanding of the interlinkages and complementarities between environment, trade and development issues. UNEP and UNCTAD, for example, have established a task force to increase national capacity to develop mutually supportive environment and trade policies.

188. The United Nations Environment Programme has taken a leadership role in developing the environment components of the Global Compact, building on its long-standing relationship with the private sector. With the help of a grant from the United Nations Foundation, UNEP, in partnership with the Coalition for Environmentally Responsible Economics, the World Business Council for Sustainable Development, the Association of Chartered Accountants, the Stockholm Environment Institute and Imperial College, London, is working to promote sustainability reporting guidelines, prepared under the Global Reporting Initiative.

189. At the regional level, a number of initiatives have been successfully implemented. For example, the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) has four major areas of activity, namely, the negotiation and adoption of international legal instruments at the regional level; the Ministerial Conference "Environment for Europe"; the promotion of sustainable quality of life in human settlements; and environmental performance reviews.

190. Instruments adopted include the Protocol to Abate Acidification, Eutrophication and Ground-level Ozone to the Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution (November 1999); the Convention on the Transboundary Effects of Industrial Accidents, which entered into force in April 2000; and a protocol on water and health to the Convention on the Protection and Use of Transboundary Watercourses and International Lakes.

191. The environmental performance reviews help to foster effective environmental management policies in countries with economies in transition. During the year, initial reviews of Armenia, Kazakhstan and Kyrgyzstan were undertaken, as were a second review of Bulgaria and follow-up reviews of Latvia, Lithuania, the Republic of Moldova and Slovenia. Reviews are also being scheduled for Romania and Uzbekistan.

192. In Latin America, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, together with UNEP, UNDP, the World Bank and the Inter-American Development Bank, is supporting the work of the Forum of Ministers of the Environment, established to help implement regional environmental priorities.

193. A new, joint initiative of UNDP and the European Commission on Poverty and Environment outlines a set of concrete policy options for reducing poverty while at the same time protecting the natural resource base on which the poor depend for their livelihoods.

194. Achieving sustainable development will continue to require commitment, enhanced policy dialogue, more effective cooperation within the United Nations system, and innovative and practical solutions in the field.

Social development and the advancement of women

195. In June 2000 the General Assembly held special sessions, at Geneva and New York, to conduct five-year reviews of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development (Copenhagen, March 1995) and the Fourth World Conference on Women (Beijing, September 1995), during which it reiterated the commitment to put people at the centre of development efforts.

Five-year review of the Copenhagen Summit

196. The outcome of the special session of the General Assembly held at Geneva to review the World Summit for Social Development, demonstrated that agreements can be reached on sensitive social development issues. The General Assembly supported a wide array of initiatives to reduce poverty, spur the growth of employment and promote greater inclusiveness in the decision-making process, and issued an agreement spelling out specific targets and strategies.

197. Prominent among the special session's achievements were commitments to launch a global campaign against poverty; implement debt relief arrangements; empower the poor via access to microcredit schemes; ensure access to social services even during times of financial crisis; seek new and innovative sources of development finance; encourage corporate social responsibility and combat corruption, bribery, money-laundering and the illegal transfer of funds; attack the use of tax shelters that undermine national tax systems; promote dialogue between government, labour and employer groups to achieve broad-based social progress, and promote an international strategy to increase access to employment.

198. To address problems of social exclusion and deprivation more effectively, it is vital that the resolutions adopted by United Nations conferences be followed up at the country level. National policy must benefit from the evolving international consensus on better ways of promoting human development. I recognize the importance of supporting Member States in the follow-up process, and I look forward to seeing, for example, how the Administrative Committee on Coordination Inter-Agency Task Force on basic social services for all, chaired by UNFPA, will take up this challenge in its new guidelines for country teams.

Five-year review of the Beijing Conference

199. At the special session held in New York, entitled "Women 2000: Gender Equality, Development and Peace for the Twenty-first Century", the outcome document on the review of the Fourth World Conference on Women was adopted by consensus by the General Assembly. We are gratified that the Beijing Platform for Action has been strengthened by sharpening its focus in some areas, and by encompassing new issues that have emerged or become more salient during the last five years. Notable progress was made with regard to promoting the human rights of women, the issue of violence against women, and that of trafficking in women and girls. All these issues are now being addressed in a more holistic manner. The outcome document requests changes in legislation to remove any discriminatory provisions by 2005, and to eliminate legislative gaps that leave women and girls without effective legal protection or recourse against gender-based discrimination. It also urges Member States to sign and ratify the 1999 Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, one of the greatest legislative achievements in the area of women's rights.

200. Throughout the United Nations system consistent efforts are being made to incorporate a gender perspective into the substantive work of the Organization, particularly through the Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality. At the country level, United Nations teams under the leadership of the resident coordinators continue to work with national partners to address gender issues, with support from the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM). Initiatives in over 100 countries work to support women's economic empowerment, leadership and participation in peacemaking, as well as to promote women's human rights and eliminate gender-based violence. More than half of the United Nations country teams around the world are working on joint programmes and projects on gender. Some 30 countries reported on gender advocacy initiatives. Furthermore, 17 country teams reported developing gender initiatives within the United Nations system itself.

Coping with ageing and disability

201. One of the most complex social development problems that increasing numbers of States confront is the problem of ageing populations. The International Year of Older Persons (1999) helped to advance our understanding of ageing, and its theme, "A society for all ages", was illustrated by a range of activities that focused on the situation of older persons, multigenerational relationships, and the interplay between ageing and development. During the special plenary meetings on the follow-up to the Year, held during the fifty-fourth session of the General Assembly, many Member States noted that the commemoration of the Year provided a unique opportunity both to evaluate the impact of the demographic revolution in different societies and to develop appropriate strategies to meet the challenges presented by that revolution.

202. Promoting equal opportunities for disabled persons continues to be a high priority. During the past year, our primary concerns in this area were accessibility; employment and sustainable livelihoods; and social services and social safety nets. A number of activities were organized to explore the role of technological progress in facilitating access, especially to information, as a resource for persons with disabilities.

Drug control and crime prevention

203. The Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention, which consists of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the Centre for International Crime Prevention, has been leading the Organization's efforts to fight the spread of illicit drug cultivation and production, trafficking and abuse, transnational organized crime, trafficking in human beings, and corruption and money-laundering.

204. The Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention has assisted in the design and realization of innovative strategies for reducing illicit drug cultivation and abuse, including the elaboration of the first ever convention against transnational organized crime and the launching of initiatives to counter money-laundering, corruption and trafficking in human beings.

205. The United Nations International Drug Control Programme is assisting several Andean countries to implement a set of national plans for reducing drug production and trafficking, including direct assistance to provide poor farmers with economically viable alternatives to illicit crop cultivation. The Programme is working increasingly in partnership with the World Bank and bilateral donors in these projects. In Asia, the Programme has helped to develop a regional plan of action for reducing drug production, as well as country-specific initiatives in Afghanistan, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Myanmar.

206. During the past year, the activities of the Centre for International Crime Prevention included supporting the negotiation process on the draft United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and its three protocols, on trafficking in persons, migrants and firearms. It is expected that the text will be submitted to the General Assembly for adoption during its millennium session, and heads of State are invited to join the United Nations in celebrating the first ever convention against transnational organized crime at a special signing in December, hosted at Palermo by the Government of Italy. The Centre also worked closely with the United Nations Interregional Crime and Research Institute and other international organizations to generate improved data and knowledge on transnational organized crime, trafficking in human beings and corruption, and to promote appropriate responses by the international community to those problems. In March 2000, the United Nations Offshore Forum was launched. The Forum seeks to obtain global commitments to internationally accepted anti-money-laundering standards, and to provide technical assistance where necessary to assist jurisdictions in meeting them.

HIV/AIDS

207. The HIV/AIDS epidemic has become a serious development crisis. The pandemic is destroying the economic and social fabric in the countries most affected, reversing years of declining death rates and causing dramatic rises in mortality among young adults. At the end of 1999, it is estimated that 34.3 million adults and children around the world were living with HIV/AIDS, and that 18.8 million people have died since the beginning of the epidemic. According to the latest Report on the Global HIV/AIDS Epidemic, released by UNAIDS in June 2000, there were 5.4 million new infections in 1999, while the number of children orphaned by AIDS reached 13.2 million.

208. Africa south of the Sahara is the most affected region, with a total of 24.5 million people living with HIV/AIDS. In that region, AIDS is now the leading cause of mortality. HIV prevalence rates among those aged 15 to 49 have already reached or exceeded 10 per cent in 16 countries, all in sub-Saharan Africa. In Eastern Europe and in South and East Asia a rapid increase in the number of HIV infections is cause for serious concern. In the Caribbean, several island States have worse epidemics than any other countries outside sub-Saharan Africa.

209. In the last year, the United Nations has made significant efforts to help countries address these daunting challenges. In an unprecedented move, the Security Council addressed the impact of the epidemic on Africa in January 2000. Following the debate in the Council, a reference group was established by the Inter-Agency Standing Committee Working Group to examine the relationship between war and civil strife and the spread of HIV/AIDS.

210. In June 1999, the international community responded to the epidemic by setting a new development target. The General Assembly, in its five-year review of the International Conference on Population and Development, called for reductions in new infections by 25 per cent among 15 to 24-year-olds in the most affected countries by 2005. Twenty-four of these countries are in Africa. I call on the Millennium Summit to adopt this as a goal, and also to support the goal of ensuring that at least 90 per cent of young people have access to the necessary information, education and services to protect themselves against HIV infection by 2005, and at least 95 per cent by 2010.

211. System-wide efforts have been made to deal with the gender and drug aspects of HIV/AIDS. In an attempt to integrate gender awareness into HIV/AIDS policy and direct gender-focused research, advocacy and responses at the national and local levels, pilot programmes in nine developing countries were implemented by an inter-agency partnership between UNIFEM, UNAIDS and UNFPA. HIV/AIDS prevention activities have been increased by the United Nations International Drug Control Programme as part of its worldwide drug abuse prevention programmes.

212. In collaboration with the UNAIDS secretariat and other co-sponsors, WHO is developing a global health sector strategy for improving the response of health systems to HIV/AIDS. A United Nations inter-agency task force chaired by WHO has developed a strategy for improving the access of AIDS victims to anti-AIDS drugs.

213. UNAIDS and its co-sponsors have established a close dialogue with pharmaceutical companies. As a result five companies have agreed to discuss reductions in the prices of AIDS drugs for Africa and other poor regions. This is a most welcome step, but not sufficient. As well as increasing overall drug supplies to affected regions, there is an urgent need to strengthen the capacity of weak and overburdened health-care systems in developing countries. To help realize this goal, WHO is developing a strategy for comprehensive care and support for people living with HIV/AIDS.

214. Major challenges in the fight against AIDS remain. There is a critical need for additional financial resources and development assistance. UNAIDS estimates that, to fight AIDS effectively in Africa alone, a minimum of $3 billion per year is needed. Money is by no means the only problem. In many countries official reluctance to speak out against the risks that HIV/AIDS poses is still causing unnecessary death and suffering.

Bridging the digital divide

215. Information and communication technologies provide unique opportunities to help advance economic and social development goals and to reduce poverty. As only 5 per cent of the world's population has access to the Internet, however, the vast majority of the world's peoples are denied the economic and social benefits that the information and communication technology revolution can offer. Bridging the "digital divide" between rich and poor has become an increasingly important development goal.

216. The Ministerial Declaration adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its July session makes a forceful call for concerted action at national, regional and international levels to bridge the digital divide and put information and communication technologies at the service of development for all. It stresses the need to involve all relevant stakeholders in mobilizing those technologies for development. The Council's session brought together ministers, representatives of civil society and an unprecedented number of major private sector companies from the information and communication technology sector to discuss how the digital divide might be bridged.

217. National programmes for promoting information and communication technologies should be an integral part of development strategies. Connecting poor communities to the Internet will give people access to telemedicine, distance learning and many other valuable social development resources; but achieving connectivity will require major investments in infrastructure, education and capacity-building.

218. The provision of hardware is of little use, however, unless the necessary human resources are available to install, service and repair the equipment. Such expertise is often lacking in developing countries and it was for this reason that I announced the creation of the United Nations Information Technology Service (UNITes) in my millennium report. UNITes, a high-tech volunteer corps, will help train communities in the developing world in the use of information technologies. Content is also a critical issue, as 80 per cent of the Internet is in English, a language which less than 30 per cent of the world speaks.

219. The commitment to bridging the digital divide is evident right across the United Nations system. In 1999, UNDP adopted a comprehensive strategy to guide its support to national partners. The key elements of the strategy are the promotion of awareness about the knowledge revolution; advocacy and policy formulation; helping to build connectivity to secure universal and affordable access to telecommunications infrastructure; developing national and human capacities; strengthening national language content; and fostering creative solutions to problems.

220. At the regional level, the Internet Initiative for Africa focuses on assisting 15 sub-Saharan countries to develop Internet connectivity and build the capacities required for their operation. In Asia and the Pacific, the Asia-Pacific Development Information Programme helped to establish connectivity for several countries, including Bhutan, East Timor, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Tuvalu. UNDP, through its Sustainable Development Networking Programme and partnerships with the private sector, has promoted the use of open-source and public software and made available information on sustainable development in numerous languages.

221. The Sustainable Cities Programme, managed by Habitat, builds resources for computer hardware and software into the budget of every city demonstration project it undertakes. Habitat has also developed an Internet-based networking system that electronically connects over 1,000 municipalities and 1,500 community-based organizations in Latin America.

222. In its policy and advocacy work, through training and seminars, UNCTAD has vigorously promoted e-commerce as a development tool. The UNCTAD Reference Service, for example, has created an "e-bookshelf" on trade and development issues with material obtained from a large number of sources worldwide, and it is currently creating a virtual library of its own documents and publications.

223. UNCTAD also continued to implement its Automated System for Customs Data, which uses information technologies to modernize and simplify customs procedures, to increase government revenue and to improve the transparency of customs administrations. Used by over 80 countries, this system has become the de facto international standard for customs modernization, and is available to developing countries and countries with economies in transition at a fraction of the cost of alternative systems.

224. The regional commissions actively promoted information and communication technologies in their regions in 1999. The Economic Commission for Europe, in collaboration with the European Electronic Messaging Association, held a two-day Forum on E-Commerce for Transition Economies in the Digital Age at Geneva in June 2000. The ECE Committee for Trade, Industry and Enterprise Development will establish a team of specialists on Internet enterprise development to promote the free flow of information and exploit the business potential of new technologies. ECE and UNCTAD are collaborating on a programme to promote electronic commerce for the transition economies.

225. The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific has undertaken analyses of recent trends in the development and application of information technologies and their impact on the social and economic development of countries in the region.

226. The theme of the first African Development Forum, organized by the Economic Commission for Africa and held at Addis Ababa in October 1999, was "The challenge to Africa of globalization and the information age". Programmes initiated by the participants at that conference include NGOnet Africa (an action group to engage civil society in the promotion of information and communication technology for African development), a telecentre network, a programme to harness the digital African diaspora for African information technology development, and the formation of the Alliance for African Business, which aims to promote the development of information and communication infrastructure in Africa.

227. Information technologies can also assist the United Nations in its advocacy activities for development. The launch of NetAid in 1999 was the largest syndicated Internet broadcast ever. The NetAid web site has received more than 40 million hits and helped raise support for a number of poverty reduction projects. Initial grants for Africa and Kosovo have reached $1.7 million.

Africa

228. Africa continues to face a range of complex and extraordinarily difficult economic, health and security challenges. These are now being addressed as a matter of priority by the Security Council and the General Assembly, as well as by United Nations programmes and agencies.

229. The political, economic and social challenges faced by Africa were spelled out in detail in my 1998 report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa. Adoption of the recommendations in that report was widely recognized as being essential if sub-Saharan Africa were to overcome the challenges it confronted and realize its extraordinary potential. In December 1998, the General Assembly established an open-ended ad hoc Working Group to monitor the implementation of those recommendations. In February 2000, the mandate of the Working Group was altered and it will now focus its work on a number of priority areas. These include poverty eradication, development finance, debt relief, HIV/AIDS, refugees and internally displaced persons and support to countries in post-conflict situations.

230. A review conducted by the Working Group reveals that major obstacles to progress remain—lack of political will, weak governance in a number of countries, armed conflict, difficulty in mobilizing financial resources, lack of adequate human resource capacity, public health issues—notably HIV/AIDS and malaria—the inappropriate structure of some economies, and limited access to technology.

231. The breadth and depth of United Nations involvement in Africa is extraordinary. It includes preventive diplomacy, peacekeeping, electoral assistance, humanitarian and emergency relief, post-conflict reconstruction, environmental advice, support for Internet connectivity and economic and social development assistance.

232. The World Food Programme assisted 22 million people in Africa over the past year. Of these, 15.7 million were refugees, internally displaced persons and other persons affected by natural disasters in some 26 countries. Some 6.3 million people benefited from WFP development assistance. A total of 44 per cent of WFP operational expenditures were for sub-Saharan Africa. WFP also provided some $37.1 million in support of human resource development through basic education (early childhood development, primary education and literacy), nutrition, health and training. Together with the World Bank and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), WFP is assisting 15 countries in Africa that have signed country-specific action plans to increase primary school enrolment.

233. One of Africa's greatest challenges is to protect and nurture its children. Yet the gap between what is being done and what needs to be done is widening; the variety of interventions required is increasing. In war-torn countries like Burundi, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Sierra Leone and the Sudan, for instance, UNICEF advocacy has focused attention on the special needs of children in the delivery of humanitarian assistance. In natural disasters, in Madagascar and Mozambique, UNICEF was able to combine immediate relief with the longer term reopening of schools, to create the normalcy children need most in putting such sudden disruptions behind them.

234. High priority has been given to the survival of children and improvements in child and maternal health, centred on the revitalization of health systems. Efforts to improve children's access to good quality basic education, especially for girls, continue to be pursued.

235. The WHO Roll Back Malaria initiative, which was launched in Africa, is committed to halving the malaria burden by 2010. A summit of over 50 African heads of State, G-8 heads of State, development agencies and OECD health ministers, held at Abuja in April 2000, focused on the means of combating Africa's malaria problem. The initiative is a joint venture of WHO with UNICEF, UNDP, the World Bank and development groups, private agencies and Governments. The WHO Kick Polio out of Africa campaign, with African political support, aims to eradicate polio from Africa in this year.

236. The earlier discussion of the HIV/AIDS pandemic indicated what an extraordinary threat it poses not just to individuals in Africa but to the continent's overall development prospects. Sub-Saharan Africa accounts for only one tenth of the global population, but it carries the burden of more than 80 per cent of AIDS-related deaths worldwide. It is in this tragic context that the Economic Commission for Africa has decided that the theme of the African Development Forum 2000 will be "AIDS: the greatest leadership challenge for Africa". The Forum, which will be held at Addis Ababa in October 2000, is being organized in collaboration with UNAIDS, the World Bank, UNICEF and UNDP.

237. The International Partnership against AIDS in Africa, a major, multi-agency endeavour, is charged with intensifying efforts and mobilizing additional resources for the battle against AIDS. Six countries—Burkina Faso, Ethiopia, Ghana, Malawi, Mozambique and the United Republic of Tanzania—have been selected for intensified action.

238. Prevention is critical to the containment of AIDS; in Africa, UNFPA is providing adolescents with greater access to youth-friendly reproductive health information, counselling and services. UNICEF has also geared many of its country programmes, particularly in eastern and southern Africa, to giving high priority to the control of HIV/AIDS.

239. The United Nations Environment Programme is working with African Governments to provide policy support and capacity-building for international negotiations. A major goal is the revitalization of the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment as the main African policy forum in the field of the environment. UNEP also hosted expert and ministerial-level consultations to facilitate the development of a common African position on the issues of desertification, climate change, biosafety, and forest protection.

240. The United Nations Environment Programme continues to support the strengthening of Africa's human, managerial and institutional capacity to address the immense environmental challenges facing the continent as well as undertaking a number of programme initiatives to protect its land, water and biological resources. UNEP is working with Habitat, for example, to implement the new Managing Water for African Cities programme, which will assist major cities to improve water supply and management.

241. Trade is critical to Africa's future. In 1999, UNCTAD continued its cooperation with WTO and the International Trade Centre, acting as lead agency in promoting trade access for African countries. UNCTAD has also strengthened its programme of technical assistance and advisory services for debt management and negotiations for African countries during the past year, extending assistance to 18 African countries. The total long-term foreign debt of those 18 African countries stood at $95 billion at the end of 1998.

Chapter IV

The international legal order and human rights

Human rights development

242. In the field of human rights, the past year has been one of consolidation, progress and challenge, both within the United Nations system and at the State level. Our capacity to uphold a code of human rights continues to develop internationally and nationally. Strategies developed by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to promote co-operation with regional and subregional organizations and the international financial institutions have been key to this progress. The Office of the High Commissioner has strengthened its relations with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, improving the effectiveness of United Nations field operations by integrating the promotion and protection of human rights with peacemaking, peacekeeping and peacebuilding initiatives. Other organizations also promoted programmes centred on human rights in 1999 and 2000. The United Nations Population Fund has followed a rights-based approach in advocating for the protection of the sexual and reproductive rights of women and girls, and the United Nations Development Programme devoted its Human Development Report 2000 to human rights and human development.

New developments

243. The Economic and Social Council, at its substantive session of 2000, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights, decided to establish a Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues as a subsidiary organ of the Council. The Permanent Forum will serve as an advisory body to the Council on a range of issues of concern to indigenous peoples.

244. In April 2000, the Commission on Human Rights adopted two ground-breaking resolutions, on good governance and women's rights to land. In the first, the Commission identifies the key components of good governance as transparency, responsibility, accountability, participation and responsiveness to the needs and as-ance to an environment conducive to the enjoyment of human rights and the promotion of growth and sustainable human development. In the second resolution the Commission affirms that discrimination in law against women with respect to acquiring and securing land, property and housing, as well as the related financing, constitutes a violation of women's human rights.

245. The Commission on Human Rights also decided to appoint two new special rapporteurs and an independent expert, and requested the Secretary-General to appoint a special representative. The special rapporteurs will serve for a three-year period. One will focus on adequate housing as a component of the right to an adequate standard of living, while the other will address the right to food. Combining two old mandates, the Commission appointed an independent expert to examine the effects of structural adjustment policies and foreign debt on the full enjoyment of all human rights, particularly economic, social and cultural rights. The Commission, further, recommended the appointment of a special representative of the Secretary-General to report on the situation of human rights defenders. The Economic and Social Council approved the new mandates on 16 June 2000.

246. In April 2000, the Commission on Human Rights held a special debate on poverty and the enjoyment of human rights. The United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, representatives of United Nations organizations and experts led the special debate with statements on poverty and human rights issues. The Commission endorsed a human-rights-based approach to poverty alleviation and development.

247. On the occasion of the third Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights urged the World Trade Organization to review international trade and investment policies and rules to ensure that they were consistent with the promotion and protection of human rights. The Committee recognized the wealth-generating potential of trade liberalization, but noted that liberalization in trade, investment and finance do not necessarily create a favourable environment for the realization of economic, social and cultural rights. The Committee stated that trade liberalization is not an end in itself, but should promote human well-being within the context of existing international human rights instruments.

248. In October 1999, the General Assembly adopted the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women. The Optional Protocol, once ratified by 10 Member States, establishes a mechanism whereby individuals or groups of individuals may submit communications, claiming to be victims of violations of rights protected under the Convention, to the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women. As at 21 August 2000, there were 43 signatories and 5 ratifications. In May 2000, the General Assembly also adopted two Optional Protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child. The first concerns the involvement of children in armed conflict and prohibits the compulsory recruitment or use in hostilities of persons under 18 by Governments or non-governmental armed groups. The second Optional Protocol relates to the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography and reflects the General Assembly's concern about the widespread and increasing traffic in children and the continuing practice of sex tourism.

Challenges ahead

249. In spite of the positive developments in the promotion and protection of human rights over the past year, gross violations of human rights are still too common. The trafficking of women and children is a matter of grave concern. Similarly, the rights of migrants, minorities and indigenous peoples are often vulnerable to abuse, while racism and xenophobia continue to threaten the dignity, peace and security of many. In September 2001, the issues of discrimination on the grounds of race, colour or ethnic origin will be addressed at the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, to be held in South Africa.

250. The year 2000 marks the halfway point in the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, a process critical to ensuring the promotion and protection of human rights throughout the world. It is vital that the momentum and progress towards the respect for human rights and the promotion of human well-being generated over the last five years be augmented and secured in the remainder of the decade.

The International Criminal Court

251. The Preparatory Commission for the International Criminal Court held its fourth session in March 2000 and its fifth session in June 2000. A sixth session will be held in November-December 2000.

252. In June 2000, the Preparatory Commission adopted the final draft texts of two instruments that are essential for the functioning of the Court: the Rules of Procedure and Evidence and the Elements of Crimes. These draft instruments are the result of extensive negotiations held during the first five sessions of the Preparatory Commission in 1999 and 2000. They still have to be adopted by the Assembly of States Parties to the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court.

253. The Rules of Procedure and Evidence regulate the composition and administration of the Court, jurisdiction and admissibility, disclosure, trial procedure, evidence and other important aspects of the Rome Statute. Special attention has been paid to rules relating to the protection of victims and witnesses.

254. The Elements of Crimes assist the Court in the interpretation and application of the definitions of the crime of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes that are contained in articles 6, 7 and 8 of the Rome Statute. They contain a detailed description of the acts that constitute the most heinous crimes and represent a major contribution to the field of international criminal law.

255. At its next session, the Preparatory Commission will continue to consider the definition of the crime of aggression and how the Court shall exercise jurisdiction with respect to that crime. The Preparatory Commission will also begin considering three of the remaining items within its mandate: the draft relationship agreement between the United Nations and the Court; draft financial regulations and rules; and a draft agreement on the privileges and immunities of the Court.

256. As at 24 August 2000, 98 States had signed the Rome Statute, while 15 had ratified it. These figures are encouraging. They are, however, far short of the 60 ratifications that are needed to bring the Statute into force and enable the Court to operate.

257. By adopting the Rome Statute, States took a decisive step, showing their determination to take concrete measures to enforce the rules of international humanitarian law that have been developed over the course of the last 100 years. They displayed their resolve that those whose deeds offend the conscience of humankind should no longer go unpunished. They made known their conviction that, in the affairs of men and women of all nations, the rule of law should finally prevail. I encourage States, in that same spirit, to establish their consent to be bound by the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court as soon as possible.

The International Tribunals

258. In November 1999, the group of independent experts I had appointed, at the request of the General Assembly, to review all aspects of the operation and functioning of the Tribunals for Rwanda and the former Yugoslavia submitted its report. The Expert Group concluded that the operations and functioning of the Tribunals were reasonably effective, but made some 46 recommendations with a view to improving them. The experts cautioned however that, in view of the fundamental constraints encountered by the two Tribunals, proceedings would continue to be lengthy. In March and April 2000, the Tribunals reported that they had implemented, or were implementing, the great majority of the recommendations of the Expert Group.

International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia

259. Several landmark events occurred in the past year, including the arrest in April 2000 of Momcilo Krajisnik, former President of the Bosnian Serb Assembly and the highest ranking political figure apprehended to date. Another was the trial of General Radoslav Krstic, which began in March 2000. General Krstic is alleged to be responsible for the worst massacre of civilians in Europe since the Second World War, following the fall of Srebrenica.

260. The Tribunal experienced a significant increase in the rate of arrests of indicted suspects; 10 people have been apprehended and transferred to the Tribunal's detention unit in the past year. As at August 2000, there were 37 detainees in the detention unit. Three other accused were provisionally released, pending the commencement of their trial.

261. Proceedings commenced or continued in the pre-trial, trial and appeal stages of 20 cases, involving a total of 39 accused. The Tribunal handed down decisions in four cases, involving eight accused. It convicted seven of these and handed down sentences of imprisonment ranging from 6 to 45 years—the latter being the longest sentence that the Tribunal has pronounced to date. It also found one accused not guilty of the charge against him and ordered his release.

262. The Appeals Chamber handed down decisions in two cases, rejecting the appeals of the accused in both cases and, in one case, finding the accused guilty on nine additional counts. It varied sentences pronounced by the Trial Chambers in both cases. Negotiations are under way for the transfer of the convicted persons to States which will undertake the enforcement of their sentences. The total number of States that have concluded agreements to enforce the Tribunal's sentences increased to seven: France and Spain signed agreements in February and March 2000, respectively.

263. Following the cessation of the NATO air campaign, the Prosecutor undertook intensive investigations in Kosovo, the scale and pace of which were unprecedented. With the assistance of specialist forensic teams seconded by 14 Member States, the Prosecutor reported to the Security Council that work had been completed at 159 of 529 identified grave sites and that 2,108 bodies had been exhumed by November 1999. A second forensic programme began in April 2000 and will continue throughout the year. The Prosecutor's Office is also pursuing approximately 24 further investigations, involving crimes in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and Kosovo, Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

264. The Tribunal established regional outreach offices at Zagreb and Banja Luka, which provide accurate and timely information in local languages on the Tribunal's work so as to counter misinformation and promote understanding of the Tribunal in the region.

International Tribunal for Rwanda

265. The Tribunal continued to consolidate and expand on its achievements. The Trial Chambers handed down judgements in three cases, the Appeals Chamber in one. To date, the Tribunal has, in seven judgements, convicted a total of eight individuals. These verdicts remain the first for the crime of genocide by an international court, and set important precedents for other jurisdictions.

266. In December 1999, Trial Chamber I handed down its verdict in The Prosecutor v. Georges Rutaganda. It found the accused, a businessman and national vice-president of the Interahamwe militia, guilty of genocide and crimes against humanity and sentenced him to life imprisonment. In January and June 2000, the Tribunal convicted two more individuals of genocide and crimes against humanity and of incitement to genocide, respectively. The June trial involved the first non-Rwandan convicted by the Tribunal.

267. In another trial—that of a former mayor, who was also charged with genocide and crimes against humanity—the judges visited and inspected the sites of certain of the massacres in which the accused allegedly participated. This was the first visit to Rwanda to be made by the judges acting in their judicial capacity. Several further trials are scheduled to begin in the second half of 2000.

268. In its first judgement on appeal in a case completed by a Trial Chamber, the Appeals Chamber in February 2000 dismissed the appeal of a local leader of the Interahamwe militia, who had pleaded guilty to the charges against him, and confirmed the sentence of 15 years' imprisonment handed down by Trial Chamber I.

269. As of August 2000, the Tribunal's detention facility in Arusha held a total of 43 detainees. Over the course of the past year, there were a number of arrests of individuals subject to warrants issued by the Tribunal. Belgium, France, the United Republic of Tanzania and the United States of America transferred a total of five accused to Arusha.

270. The Tribunal implements a vigorous outreach programme in Rwanda, designed to bring its work closer to the Rwandan people and so facilitate long-term reconciliation. Its relations with the Government and people of Rwanda have greatly improved as its effectiveness in bringing to justice high-level planners and perpetrators of the 1994 genocide has become increasingly recognized.

Other tribunals

271. The Office of Legal Affairs played a central role in the discussions between the United Nations and the Government of Cambodia on the establishment and operation of a special court to prosecute leaders of the Khmer Rouge. In particular, it advised the Government on drafting the necessary national legislation, and led negotiations on the conclusion of an agreement setting out the mutual obligations of the parties.

272. The Office of Legal Affairs has been entrusted with the responsibility of implementing Security Council resolution 1315(2000) of 14 August 2000 on the establishment of an independent special court for Sierra Leone. Its jurisdiction will include, notably, crimes against humanity, war crimes and other serious violations of international humanitarian law, as well as crimes under relevant Sierra Leonean law committed in the territory of Sierra Leone. The special court will have personal jurisdiction over those most responsible for such crimes. The Office of Legal Affairs is preparing the legal instruments to implement the resolution, and discussions are under way with representatives of the Government of Sierra Leone in this regard and with Member States on the financing of the court.

Enhancing the rule of law

273. The new millennium is an appropriate occasion to reaffirm the primary objectives of our Organization and focus on them anew. Establishing the rule of law in international affairs is a central priority.

274. Treaties are one of the two main sources of international law, and I have decided to launch a campaign during the Millennium Summit to promote the signature and ratification of, and accession to, treaties of which I am the depositary. In May 2000, I wrote to all heads of State and Government inviting them to use the opportunity of the Millennium Summit to sign and ratify, or accede to, those treaties. I encouraged them to pay special attention to a core group of 25 multilateral treaties that are representative of the objectives of the Charter of the United Nations and reflect the Organization's key values. A booklet, entitled Millennium Summit—Multilateral Treaty Framework: An Invitation to Universal Participation, containing that letter and a list of the core treaties that are the focus of this campaign is available. I am pleased to report that, as at 25 August 2000, 69 States have responded to my request to ratify those treaties.

275. As of August 2000, I am the depositary of 517 treaties. Many of them have a profound impact on the lives and livelihood of individuals, as they relate to questions such as human rights, refugees and stateless persons, international criminal law, commodities, trade, transportation, the sea, disarmament and the environment. Some of those treaties have been open for signature, ratification or accession for a number of years but have not yet succeeded in attracting universal participation.

276. I would remind Member States that the third objective proclaimed in the preamble to the Charter of the United Nations is to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained. One of our most important tasks is to entrench the application of the rules set out in those treaties and help to sustain and enhance the values that underpin them.

277. It is not enough for States simply to give their consent to be bound by treaties. If the peoples of all nations are to participate in the emerging global legal order and enjoy its benefits, States must also respect and implement the obligations that the treaties in question embody. Realizing the promise of the framework of global norms developed by the international community is of critical importance. Without such a commitment the rule of law in international affairs will remain little more than a remote abstraction.

278. Much remains to be done; all too often, individuals and corporations find that they are denied the rights and benefits that international law and treaties provide for. Sometimes, national authorities refuse to recognize and respect their obligations under international law, even where the State has voluntarily subscribed to the relevant treaties. More often, though, such authorities simply lack the necessary expertise or resources to ensure that their obligations are properly implemented and applied—to draft and adopt the needed legislation, to put in place the necessary procedure and administrative arrangements, to train those involved in the application of such legislation, procedure and arrangements and to familiarize them with the international rules they are designed to implement. To support efforts to implement international treaty commitments we already provide Governments, on request, with assistance in drafting national laws and running training programmes in particular aspects of international law for those involved in its application, such as law enforcement officers, prison officers, social workers and immigration officers.

279. In order to build national capacities to implement treaties more effectively, I have requested every office, department, programme, fund and agency of the United Nations to review its current activities and to consider what else it might do, within its existing mandate and given existing resources, to promote the application of international law, and to provide technical assistance to help Governments implement their commitments under the treaties to which they are or might wish to become parties.

280. More generally, I have also requested all United Nations entities, not simply those immediately involved with legal issues, to indicate how they might help to increase awareness of international law, both among the public and among those involved in the application of the law, particularly legal practitioners and judges. I would also encourage the wider teaching of international law at universities and other institutions of higher education. To this end, the Legal Counsel has written to the deans of law schools throughout the world and enlisted the assistance of a team of prominent academic lawyers to provide universities with assistance in developing suitable curricula and identifying relevant teaching materials.

281. As international law develops and affects ever greater areas of daily life and business, it will also increasingly affect the laws of each country. This reality imposes a special responsibility on lawyers and on those who educate and train them. International law can no longer—if it ever could—be considered an optional extra, in which lawyers may or may not be trained. To satisfy the demands of the rule of law, lawyers need to be familiar with international law, to be schooled in its methods and know how to research it when the occasion demands.

Chapter V

Managing change

Enhancing communication

282. Broad-based, global support for the United Nations depends on timely and effective communication. In 2000, the Department of Public Information implemented a range of innovations that will increase the breadth and depth of communication about who we are, what we do and why we do it. One such initiative has been the system-wide "UN works" campaign, which explains how the Organization is addressing the main challenges of the twenty-first century, in particular those relating to economic and social development. Driving these efforts is a commitment to embrace new communications technology as a means of enhancing the impact of our activities and the productivity of our staff.

283. Use of the United Nations web site continues to increase at an extraordinary rate, the number of hits on the site now exceeding 400 million a year. Significant improvements in the web site's content and design were made in the past year and several new features in all six official languages were introduced, including live webcasts of major events. The redesign currently under way will present the same look and feel to all users in all official languages. Meeting the General Assembly's requirement to maintain the web site in all six official languages has proved a real challenge, despite the modest increase in resources allocated for web site development.

284. The Millennium Summit and Assembly provide a major opportunity for the Department to mobilize public interest in the Organization and its global role through a worldwide promotional campaign. Unprecedented media coverage has already been generated for the Summit with the publication of my millennium report and the series of teleconferenced briefings to journalists around the world that promoted it. The Department also widely promoted the Secretary-General's multilateral treaty signing initiative in connection with the Summit. In May, the Millennium Forum of civil society organizations featured simultaneous coverage by United Nations television, videoconferencing and webcasting.

285. As the number and scope of United Nations peace operations continue to rise, the need for public information and outreach in the field has risen with them. In Kosovo and East Timor, the role of public information has been critical and in new missions such as those in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Ethiopia/Eritrea and Sierra Leone, the Department has been fully involved from the outset. The introduction of rapid-deployment information teams on new peace missions will further strengthen the capacity of the Department to achieve its goals in the field.

286. Initiatives to build partnerships with other entities of the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations, educational institutions and the business community continue to develop through the co-sponsorship of conferences, briefings, exhibits, and events such as the World Television Forum and World AIDS Day. Contact with the 1,600 non-governmental organizations associated with the Department has been dramatically enhanced through the use of videoconferencing and live webcasting.

287. The programme for broadcasters and journalists from developing countries, now in its twentieth year, and the programme for Palestinian journalists continue to provide training while raising awareness of the work of the United Nations in the developing world. Other media outreach programmes took 12 senior editors and broadcasters from developing countries to Geneva for intensive briefings on human rights in December 1999, and brought 15 senior African editors and broadcasters to Headquarters in June for a week to familiarize them with the United Nations role and activities in Africa. Direct e-mail links to journalists around the world are part of another innovative project that will provide electronic alerts of breaking news from the United Nations system almost as it happens.

288. The advent of a 24-hour global news cycle has generated a number of new initiatives to increase the reporting of United Nations activities. Information and other materials are now available in real time to regional media through the web-based United Nations News Centre. Established nearly a year ago, the Centre provides United Nations news updates throughout the day. The Department's ultimate goal is the development of a fully integrated, multimedia United Nations news service, delivering news directly to media worldwide.

289. A pilot project is under way that will enable United Nations Radio to produce and deliver daily 15-minute news bulletins, in all six official languages, to radio stations around the globe. By the end of the year, the Department expects to have all United Nations Radio outputs on the United Nations web site, enabling broadcasters from around the world with Internet access to use the material at any time. The radio initiative will be replicated by the television service: news packages highlighting United Nations system-wide developments will be disseminated daily for use by television broadcasters in 2001.

290. These are major developments, but their success will be entirely dependent on the Secretariat being able to meet the challenge of adapting to the digital revolution. The goal is to create an information technology infrastructure capable of instantaneously transmitting text, image and voice messages from the Organization to almost anywhere in the world. Major investment, including by other departments, will be needed if the United Nations is to avoid becoming marginalized in the new information environment. Investment is also needed to replace the crumbling communication infrastructure at Headquarters, much of which is 50 years old. Total failure of this communication system, which carries television and radio materials from Headquarters to the world's media, is a real threat.

291. The United Nations information centres are instrumental in bringing the United Nations messages and concerns to communities all over the world. They are the Organization's direct link with media representatives, non-governmental organizations and the public at large, and draw the attention of local communities to the work of the United Nations. Staff of the centres lead the development of national information strategies for United Nations country teams, helping to ensure that the Organization speaks with a consistent voice. Thirty-four centres already have separate web sites; others are in the planning stage.

292. The Dag Hammarskjöld Library continues to focus on delivering electronic information; outreach to depository libraries; training mission, Secretariat and non-governmental organization staff in documentation and Internet use; and supporting multilingualism. The Library's web pages had 1.5 million hits in 1999, while its major databases are now installed on a web platform as UNBISNET. The programme to digitize and add to the optical disk data storage system documents of all major United Nations bodies from the Library's microfiche collection continues apace.

293. Technological change has enhanced the range and reach of one of the most traditional areas of activity, publications, and related client-specific services. The first half-century of the Yearbook of the United Nations will shortly be placed in electronic format as a readily retrievable resource of the Organization's history. Development Business, which focuses on business procurement opportunities in developing countries, has been revitalized by a process of constructive collaboration between the Organization and the World Bank, leading to the launch of an active, revenue-generating electronic edition of the journal. Both print and web site editions of the UN Chronicle have been revitalized—while continuing to draw eminent contributors. Africa Recovery, a journal that seeks to enhance the prospects for development and the achievement of peace and security on the continent, appeals to a broad readership, and has received increasing recognition in African media and government circles during the past year. Sales of United Nations publications have increased, with the United Nations publications web site providing a solid platform for expanding global sales.

294. The Cartographic Section plays a critical role in supporting the substantive activities of the Organization. The technical services of our cartographers are used almost daily by the Security Council, and provide crucial information for peacemaking and peacekeeping activities. In March 2000, a Geographic Information Working Group was formally established, bringing together on a regular basis all cartographic and geographic specialists across the United Nations system.

Reaching out

295. One of the most fundamental challenges facing the United Nations is coping with increased workloads without a compensatory increase in resources. Our ongoing reform programme seeks to address the resource challenge through increases in efficiency, not least through greater reliance on information technologies.

296. We have made considerable progress over the past three years in this regard, but our commitments still remain greater than the resources available to meet them and our financial difficulties are compounded by the non-payment of dues. We can do more with less, but only up to a point. It is in this context that the generosity of individual Member States, the private sector and philanthropic foundations assumes particular importance.

297. Over the years generous assistance from individual Member States has enabled United Nations bodies to embark on innovative programmes in conflict prevention, peace-building and development that would otherwise never have been funded.

298. More recent is the burgeoning cooperation between the United Nations and the private sector that I discuss earlier in the present report. The United Nations increasingly benefits from the ideas, expertise and resources that the private sector can provide. The private sector, in turn, benefits from a stronger United Nations that promotes international norms and standards, the "soft infrastructure" on which global commerce increasingly depends.

299. To ensure that public-private co-operation conforms to the priorities and rules of the United Nations, I have issued guidelines on United Nations partnerships with the business community, which may be reviewed as our experience in this area accumulates.

300. While philanthropic foundations have always given generous support to our activities, it is only in the last three years that the United Nations has benefited from a major partnership through a generous gift from Ted Turner. This has supported work on United Nations projects as diverse as the prevention of mother-to-child transmission of HIV/AIDS, the creation of electricity from biomass in India and biodiversity conservation in the Galapagos. The precedent created by that donation has already encouraged others to assist the United Nations as it addresses the world's pressing problems.

301. The United Nations Fund for International Partnerships, created to serve as the distribution channel for Mr. Turner's gift and to promote other new partnerships, is entering its third year of operations. To date the Fund has programmed funds totalling $310 million in 112 countries, in four specific areas: children's health, women and population, environment and peace, and security and human rights. Its work in coming years will continue to focus on these areas and on priorities spelled out in my millennium report.

302. The United Nations system's own in-house research network, much of which is part of the United Nations University (UNU), produces policy-relevant research across a broad range of disciplines and subjects. At the UNU institute in Helsinki, for example, United Nations researchers are examining the relationship between information technology, poverty and economic growth; in Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, the focus is on water security for the developing world; in Geneva, on restricting the proliferation of small arms; in Legon, Ghana, on natural resource management in Africa; in Reykjavik, on geothermal energy; and in Tokyo, on sustainable development and on humanitarian intervention.

303. In my reform plan of 1997, I stressed the need for the Organization to develop research and utilize its results more effectively. Since then significant efforts have been made to increase communication between those who do research in UNU and other research institutions, on the one hand, and those who use the research in the United Nations Secretariat, programmes and agencies, on the other. Making research more relevant and useful to those who create and implement policy, and making policy makers more aware of what the United Nations research community has to offer, is critically important. Furthering such a dialogue is a fundamental rationale for the annual Geneva research and policy dialogue that was inaugurated in 2000.

304. Over the past decade, civil society organizations have played an increasingly important role in helping to formulate, implement and deliver United Nations programmes, and as advocates of change. Thanks to the global reach of the Internet, which has become a powerful tool for advocacy as well as an extraordinary source of information and analysis, civil society organizations are now better placed than ever to form coalitions, organize and mobilize on a global scale.

305. During the past year civil society organizations played a vital role in the regional hearings preparatory to the Millennium Assembly. The Millennium Forum held at United Nations Headquarters in May brought together representatives from more than 1,000 civil society organizations from more than 100 countries to discuss how the United Nations should be strengthened to meet the challenges of the twenty-first century. Even greater numbers attended the special sessions of the General Assembly held in June in New York, to review progress since the Fourth World Conference on Women, and at Geneva, to review progress since the World Summit for Social Development.

306. The term civil society is a broad one and encompasses more than activist and advocacy groups. Some extraordinary civil society meetings are being held in the run-up to the Millennium Summit. They include a round table to launch the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations, convened by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization with the support of the President of the Islamic Republic of Iran, S. M. Khatami; the annual Department of Public Information/Non-Governmental Organization Conference; a three-day conference organized by the Inter-Parliamentary Union which will bring presiding officers of parliaments from all over the world to the United Nations; and a summit of religious and spiritual leaders representing some 75 different faiths.

Administration and management

307. I am pleased to note that considerable progress has been made during the past year towards achieving my goal of creating an "organizational culture that is responsive and results-oriented". Important developments were the drafting of a human resources reform package, an information technology policy and a capital master plan. I commend these proposals to the Member States for their approval. Their implementation will greatly enhance the effectiveness of the Organization.

Human resources reform

308. As the United Nations evolves from a Headquarters-based organization into one with a stronger field presence, the Secretariat needs to be increasingly flexible in using its human resources. The goal of the reform proposals is to modernize human resource management, to have empowered, responsible and accountable managers, and skilled, competent and well-motivated staff.

309. The reform package consists of nine building blocks, which rest on the principles of transparency, simplicity and timeliness. It proposes fundamental changes in four main areas, namely, accountability; mobility; recruitment, placement and promotion; and contractual mechanisms. Other reforms will include improvements in the use of human resource planning and performance management, the streamlining of rules and procedure, the enhancement of skills and competency development, better conditions of service, and strengthening the administration of justice.

Information technology policy

310. To ensure that the Organization keeps up with the rapid developments in information and communication technology, a United Nations information technology policy has been developed. Using in-house expertise, the policy will address both the introduction and management of new information technologies and their use as vehicles for the distribution and management of information.

311. Once the policy is implemented, senior managers will benefit from timely access to comprehensive information on policy, administrative and operational matters and from the greater overall productivity this access will generate. Member States will also benefit from enhanced support and services.

312. The information technology policy will also allow for more effective dissemination of greater amounts of information within the United Nations. Our external partners will also benefit from these changes. The United Nations broader goal of "bridging the digital divide" between the developed and the developing world will be facilitated by a Secretariat that can take greater advantage of the information and communication technology revolution.

313. In this context, the Integrated Management Information System is playing an increasingly important role in the Organization's central administrative operations, and is proving to be a powerful management tool. It will be deployed at all other major duty stations from September 2000.

314. The Integrated Management Information System has allowed significant re-engineering and standardization of administrative processes throughout the Organization. Owing to the system's internal controls and monitoring capabilities, responsibility for managing programmes has been firmly placed back in the hands of programme managers. Currently, seven organizations make use of the system, which has been implemented at 11 different sites around the world.

Capital master plan

315. The United Nations Headquarters complex in New York, despite its superb design and construction, is ageing and requires major repairs and refurbishment. The present ad hoc and reactive approach to maintenance cannot sustain our buildings in the long term and may also pose serious financial problems if costs for repair and maintenance accelerate. In the long-term capital master plan, I put forward a number of possible solutions, and propose various financing options. The plan demonstrates quite clearly that, while the costs of a major upgrade of the complex are high, they are considerably less than the resources that will have to be expended—particularly on energy—if we continue to pursue the current reactive maintenance policy.

Other challenges

316. I remain committed to improving the productivity of the Organization—that is to continuous improvement in the quality, impact and cost-effectiveness of United Nations programmes. Making staff productivity the responsibility of each manager is central to this goal.

317. Efficiency and transparency in the procurement process has increased, thanks to Internet technology that now allows a variety of procurement information to be placed in the public domain on the Procurement Division's home page.

318. The process of simplifying and streamlining the rules and procedure of the Organization has continued throughout the past year. The first phase will be completed by the end of the year and will improve management performance and accountability throughout the United Nations. We expect that rules and procedure will be applied more consistently as information about them is transmitted more efficiently through electronic means.

319. Preparations to shift to results-based budgeting, with widespread use of performance indicators, are continuing. My programme budget for the biennium 2000-2001 was the beginning of that process and included statements of expected accomplishments for all substantive areas. This new budgetary concept will be the last element to link the various components that comprise my plan to create a more results-oriented management system.

320. The greatest challenge to improving management and productivity over the last three biennia continues to be financial constraint. While the funding available to the Organization has become more stable, the level of unpaid assessments, particularly for peacekeeping activities, remains unacceptably high.

Legal affairs

321. The past year has been one of quiet accomplishment in the field of legal affairs. The United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) made good progress towards finalizing a draft convention on assignment in receivables financing. This will facilitate financing based on receivables and allow access by commercial entities to credit at lower rates. UNCITRAL also made progress on unifying rules on electronic signatures. In July 2000, the Commission adopted a Legislative Guide on Privately Financed Infrastructure Projects, designed to assist Governments to establish appropriate legislation to attract investment where private parties construct and operate public infrastructure facilities under a public licensing system.

322. The International Law Commission continued its work on a set of draft articles on State responsibility, with a view to their final adoption in 2001. It also reviewed the question of the jurisdictional immunities of States and their property, revisiting issues arising out of its previous work on the topic. Member States have given a very positive reception to the draft articles on nationality of natural persons in relation to the succession of States, which the Commission adopted in July 1999. The draft articles are currently before the Sixth Committee, which is considering adopting them as a declaration of the General Assembly.

323. In December 1999, the General Assembly adopted the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism—the latest in a series of related conventions in this field. As at 25 August 2000, 22 States had signed the Convention, which will enter into force once ratified by 22 States. I call upon Member States to sign and ratify this very important legal instrument. Since adopting the Convention, the Ad Hoc Committee and the Sixth Committee have focused on another important instrument in this field—a convention intended to suppress acts of nuclear terrorism.

324. The General Assembly in December 1999 established a consultative process to facilitate its annual review of developments relating to the oceans and the law of the sea. The first meeting, held early in June 2000, offered an opportunity to examine this issue in some depth and to seek pragmatic solutions to the remaining problems. The General Assembly will consider the recommendations of this consultation at its fifty-fifth session.

325. The Office of Legal Affairs was also responsible for developing the legislative mechanisms for the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo and the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor, the first of the Organization's peacekeeping missions to exercise legislative and executive authority. The Office also drafted the basic legal framework under which those missions were to operate and administer the territories placed under their charge. The Office has provided legal support and advice to the missions from the time of their establishment, as well as to other United Nations peacekeeping missions. The Office provided particularly valuable assistance to the Secretary-General's Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process on the implementation of Security Council resolution 425(1978) and the withdrawal by Israel of its forces from Lebanon.

326. The Office of Legal Affairs successfully defended the Organization in complex arbitration proceedings involving a $50 million claim; assisted in developing comprehensive guidelines for the Organization's cooperation with the business community; aided in negotiating and drafting agreements with the private sector; supported the successful prosecution of former staff members in cases of fraud against the Organization and helped recover its assets; prevented, before United States courts, an attempt by a private entity to attach the assets in a United Nations escrow account of the "oil-for-food" programme; advised on the implementation of the oil-for-food programme; and helped to draft a new set of financial regulations for the United Nations Development Programme. The Office also continued to seek Malaysia's implementation of the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice, of 29 April 1999, confirming the immunity from legal process of a Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights.

Project services

327. The only completely self-financing entity in the Organization, the United Nations Office for Project Services works on a fee-for-service basis for United Nations bodies and other organizations around the world. Since its services may be requested on a voluntary basis, the Office must compete for business in the open services market. In 1999, it acquired new business valued at more than $1.2 billion and delivered a record $560 million in project services. These included purchasing equipment and goods, hiring consultants, contracting for services and works, and administering training. In addition, the disbursement of $196 million in loans was authorized for projects that the Office is supervising on behalf of the International Fund for Agricultural Development.

328. As the proportion of new projects funded from UNDP regular resources continued to decline, the volume of services requested by non-development-oriented entities within the United Nations system increased substantially. The Department of Political Affairs, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, all of which used the services of the Office for Project Services for the first time in 1998, increased their use by 22 per cent in 1999. Demand for service from more traditional sources of business, such as the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and associated United Nations organizations based in Vienna, almost tripled during the year.

329. Responding to these new demands, the Office for Project Services has expanded its management expertise into fields beyond the development arena. In Kosovo, for example, its mine action services provided rapid support for mine clearance and related services, at the request of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, and the Office will work with UNDP to provide housing and electrification in the province. Responding to an initiative of member organizations of the United Nations Development Group, the Office also formulated an UNMIK programme to build up local management capacities, both public and private.

330. An agreement with the United Nations Institute for Training and Research has enabled the Office for Project Services to assist local authorities in both developing and donor countries to strengthen their capacities; and it will provide specialized procurement services to UNTAET under an operational agreement currently under discussion.

331. The Office for Project Services is also developing specialized management services in support of democratization, and now has experience in over a dozen countries in this area. Acting on behalf of the Department of Political Affairs, and with funding from the European Commission, it assembled an electoral observation team in Nigeria in less than four weeks in 1999. The team monitored voting in locations right across the country.

332. To backstop project personnel in areas of concentrated demand, substantive management support units are being established. One such unit operates through the Geneva office and is focusing on the design, monitoring and evaluation of programmes fostering social and economic development at the local level, with particular emphasis on rehabilitation in post-conflict societies. A similar substantive unit focusing on public sector reform is being developed.

333. The pursuit of operational partnerships with the private sector is another new initiative of the Office for Project Services. In the spring of 2000, 12 such partnerships between the United Nations and the business sector were launched. These joint projects range from developing local economic development in Guatemala and Mozambique to stemming the spread of HIV/AIDS in Asia and making high-tech satellite imagery more affordable and accessible to United Nations agencies and others working in post-conflict rehabilitation and natural disaster prevention.

334. In a further attempt to combine private sector practices with United Nations goals, the Office for Project Services has created new contracting mechanisms for the procurement of goods and services, generating innovative partnership agreements with non-governmental organizations and developing new tools and instruments for public-private partnerships that will expand the impact of the work of the United Nations.

Accountability and oversight

335. The Office of Internal Oversight Services provides United Nations entities with reviews of their performance and guidance on their methods of work. It has become an important agent for change within the Organization, particularly with regard to strengthening internal controls and improving management performance. More and more managers within the system are seeking its advice. The independence of the Office is assured by the fact that the Under-Secretary-General for Internal Oversight

Services serves for a single, non-renewable, five-year term.

336. The work of the Office has had a positive impact on the whole Organization. Internal oversight bodies in the specialized agencies and separately administered funds and programmes, as well as the Secretariat, are increasingly working together, sharing experiences, and benefiting from lessons learned.

Audit and management consulting

337. Last year, the Audit and Management Consulting Division placed special emphasis on peacekeeping operations, humanitarian and related activities, human resources management, procurement, problems associated with establishing new bodies, and information technology management. In addition to monetary savings, the audits resulted in improvements in the overall administration and management of the Secretariat as well as strengthening the internal control environment.

338. Audits were also conducted in the Department of Peacekeeping Operations in New York and in most peacekeeping missions in the field. They focused on the staffing of peacekeeping missions, managing air operations and other logistical support functions, and planning and executing the liquidation of missions.

339. In response to a request from the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Office of Internal Oversight Services conducted comprehensive audits of human rights field operations in Burundi and Rwanda and followed up with audits at the headquarters of the Office of the High Commissioner. Recommendations were made aimed at improving the Office of the High Commissioner's management of field operations and strengthening its internal control systems.

340. The Audit Section of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees at Geneva, with resident auditors at Nairobi and Abidjan, audited UNHCR field operations in 22 countries, with a focus on operations in Africa. At UNHCR headquarters, the Office of Internal Oversight Services audited support services. UNHCR implementing partners were also assessed.

Investigations

341. Work continued to ensure that the Organization's resources and staff are being used properly. For example, an important case involving the misdirection of Member States' contributions to the United Nations Environment Programme was resolved. The misappropriated funds, totalling over $700,000, were restored, and the individual responsible is facing criminal proceedings.

342. The Office of Internal Oversight Services also worked with law enforcement authorities in the criminal prosecution of a former staff member accused of defrauding the Organization of $800,000. The individual concerned was tried, convicted and sentenced to 41 months in prison, but only $110,000 of the funds stolen has been repaid to the Organization to date. Further repayments are expected, as ordered by the court.

Central Monitoring and Inspection Unit

343. The Central Monitoring and Inspection Unit prepared my report on the programme performance of the United Nations for the biennium 1998-1999, which was discussed by the Committee for Programme and Coordination in the spring of 2000. A qualitative assessment of programme performance found a programme implementation rate of 88 per cent, the highest this decade, which was attributed to the Organization's determination to promote managerial efficiency and accountability. In particular, the use of electronic monitoring and reporting systems was found to reduce reliance on paper-based reports, to strengthen intra-departmental discipline in performance monitoring, and to facilitate the flow of management information.

344. An inspection of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs concluded that streamlining and reorganization had enhanced its capabilities to respond to emerging humanitarian crises and strengthened its coordination role. Follow-up inspections of the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), UNEP and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) were undertaken. The Office reported that ECA had undergone profound change, with a marked improvement in the quality of its products, and a revitalized relevance to its constituents, partners (especially the Organization of African Unity) and host country. The Office of Internal Oversight Services concluded that UNEP had addressed the recommendations of my 1998 task force on UNEP and that Habitat had recaptured the confidence of its stakeholders and was moving in the right direction. In Habitat, the Office of Internal Oversight Services found a new culture emerging, one that prioritized initiative, creativity and flexibility. A backlog of unresolved problems in financial and personnel management has, however, delayed the implementation of administrative reforms.

Central Evaluation Unit

345. Two in-depth evaluations were conducted by the Central Evaluation Unit. The first examined the Department for Disarmament Affairs and found that Member States were, in general, satisfied with the support that the Department provided to multilateral disarmament bodies. An evaluation of the electoral assistance programme revealed that valuable electoral assistance was provided to a total of 68 Member States during the period 1992-1998. The Unit also conducted triennial reviews of the implementation of the recommendations made in 1996 by the Committee for Programme and Coordination on the Department of Public Information and the termination phase of peacekeeping operations.

Millennium Summit

United Nations Headquarters, New York

The world did celebrate as the clock struck midnight on New Year's Eve, in one time zone after another, from Kiribati and Fiji westward around the globe to Samoa. People of all cultures joined in—not only those for whom the millennium might be thought to have a special significance. The Great Wall of China and the Pyramids of Giza were lit as brightly as Manger Square in Bethlehem and St. Peter's Square in Rome. Tokyo, Jakarta and New Delhi joined Sydney, Moscow, Paris, New York, Rio de Janeiro and hundreds of other cities in hosting millennial festivities. Children's faces reflected the candlelight from Spitsbergen in Norway to Robben Island in South Africa. For 24 hours the human family celebrated its unity through an unprecedented display of its rich diversity.

The Millennium Summit of the United Nations General Assembly

Largest gathering of world leaders. For three days (6-8 September), the largest-ever gathering of world leaders, representing the 189 United Nations Member States, met at Headquarters in New York to mark the advent of the new millennium and to set the course for the United Nations in the new era. Convened in response to General Assembly resolution 53/202 [YUN 1998, p. 598], by which the Assembly decided to designate its fifty-fifth (2000) session as the Millennium Assembly and to convene as part of the Assembly a Millennium Summit, the Summit was organized around six plenary meetings and four interactive round-table sessions. During those three days, speeches were heard from 99 heads of State, 3 Crown Princes and 47 heads of Government on the theme "The United Nations in the twenty-first century" and its sub-topics (peace and security, including disarmament; development, including poverty eradication; human rights; and strengthening the United Nations), as well as the world drug problem, as requested by the Economic and Social Council (resolution 2000/16). World leaders also met on 7 September [S/2000/772] in a special session of the Security Council to consider the topic "Ensuring an effective role of the Security Council in the maintenance of international peace and security, particularly in Africa" as a contribution towards achieving the major purpose of the Millennium Summit.

Also before the Summit for consideration was the Ministerial Declaration "Development and international cooperation in the twenty-first century: the role of information technology in the context of a knowledge-based global economy" (see p. 799), which the high-level segment of the 2000 substantive session of the Economic and Social Council had recommended for endorsement by the Summit.

To assist the Summit in its deliberations, the Secretary-General submitted a report entitled "We the peoples: the role of the United Nations in the twenty-first century" [A/54/2000], in which he set out his recommendations to the Summit (see p. 55).

Charting a new course for the future. The Millennium Summit was opened on the morning of 6 September by Tarja Halonen, President of Finland and Co-Chairperson of the Summit, who told the gathering that "we meet today at the United Nations to celebrate the new millennium and declare our vision for the future .... Our task is threefold: we need to meet the demands of the outside world, we need to clarify the role of the United Nations in world affairs and we need to change the United Nations to be a modern, effective organization .... The Millennium Summit is the moment to reflect on the future of the United Nations. The United Nations is often the only one in the field to assist, to advise and to build institutions .... We cannot expect the United Nations to accomplish everything alone. To be successful and credible, it must act in partnership with other organizations and with the civil society. We must make the Organization reflect the world as it is today."

The President of Namibia and Co-Chairperson of the Summit, Sam Nujoma, in his opening address, said that "peoples of the world have high expectations for social change; determination to put things right; to put men and women on the same footing before the law; to conquer fear, poverty and alienation in society; and to use the benefits of science and technology for peace, human security, empowerment of the poor, poverty eradication and sustainable development .... We are here because we believe in the United Nations, in its Charter and in the common objectives and principles for which our indispensable Organization stands."

United States President William Jefferson Clinton, in his address to the Summit as the host country

President, said "We come together not just at a remarkable moment on our calendar, but at the dawn of a new era in human affairs, when globalization and the revolution in information technology have brought us closer together than ever before .... Fifty-five years ago the United Nations was formed to 'save succeeding generations from the scourge of war' .... We find today fewer wars between nations, but more wars within them .... We must work as well to prevent conflict; to get more children in school; to relieve more debt in developing countries; to do more to fight malaria, tuberculosis and AIDS ...; to do more to promote prevention and to stimulate the development of and affordable access to drugs and vaccines; and to do more to curb the trade in items that generate money that make conflict more profitable than peace, whether diamonds in Africa or drugs in Colombia. All these things come with a price tag, and all nations, including the United States, must pay it. The price must be fairly apportioned, and the United Nations structure of finances must be fairly reformed so that the Organization can do its job . . . . The leaders here assembled can rewrite human history in the new millennium. If we have learned the lessons of the past, we can leave a very different legacy for our children."

At the end of the three days of statements, debate, frank and free exchange of views in the round-table sessions (see p. 57), consultations and negotiations, the General Assembly, on 8 September, adopted the draft United Nations Millennium Declaration, contained in the annex to resolution 54/282 of 5 September, which was referred to it by the Assembly's fifty-fourth session. By that Declaration, world leaders renewed their commitment to the principles and purposes of the United Nations and set out their vision for the future course of the Organization.

United Nations Millennium Declaration

An eight-part United Nations Millennium Declaration, set out in resolution 55/2 [draft: A/55/L.2], was adopted by the General Assembly on 8 September [meeting 8] without vote [agenda item 60 (b)].

1. Values and principles

1. We, heads of State and Government, have gathered at United Nations Headquarters in New York from 6 to 8 September 2000, at the dawn of a new millennium, to reaffirm our faith in the Organization and its Charter as indispensable foundations of a more peaceful, prosperous and just world.

2. We recognize that, in addition to our separate responsibilities to our individual societies, we have a collective responsibility to uphold the principles of human dignity, equality and equity at the global level. As leaders we have a duty therefore to all the world's people, especially the most vulnerable and, in particular, the children of the world, to whom the future belongs.

3. We reaffirm our commitment to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, which have proved timeless and universal. Indeed, their relevance and capacity to inspire have increased, as nations and peoples have become increasingly interconnected and interdependent.

4. We are determined to establish a just and lasting peace all over the world in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter. We rededicate ourselves to support all efforts to uphold the sovereign equality of all States, respect for their territorial integrity and political independence, resolution of disputes by peaceful means and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, the right to self-determination of peoples which remain under colonial domination and foreign occupation, non-interference in the internal affairs of States, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, respect for the equal rights of all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion and international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character.

5. We believe that the central challenge we face today is to ensure that globalization becomes a positive force for all the world's people. For while globalization offers great opportunities, at present its benefits are very unevenly shared, while its costs are unevenly distributed. We recognize that developing countries and countries with economies in transition face special difficulties in responding to this central challenge. Thus, only through broad and sustained efforts to create a shared future, based upon our common humanity in all its diversity, can globalization be made fully inclusive and equitable. These efforts must include policies and measures, at the global level, which correspond to the needs of developing countries and economies in transition and are formulated and implemented with their effective participation.

6. We consider certain fundamental values to be essential to international relations in the twenty-first century. These include:

- Freedom. Men and women have the right to live their lives and raise their children in dignity, free from hunger and from the fear of violence, oppression or injustice. Democratic and participatory governance based on the will of the people best assures these rights.
- Equality. No individual and no nation must be denied the opportunity to benefit from development. The equal rights and opportunities of women and men must be assured.
- Solidarity. Global challenges must be managed in a way that distributes the costs and burdens fairly in accordance with basic principles of equity and social justice. Those who suffer or who benefit least deserve help from those who benefit most.
- Tolerance. Human beings must respect one other, in all their diversity of belief, culture and language. Differences within and between societies should be neither feared nor repressed, but cherished as a precious asset of humanity. A culture of peace and dialogue among all civilizations should be actively promoted.
- Respect for nature. Prudence must be shown in the management of all living species and natural resources, in accordance with the precepts of sustainable development. Only in this way can the immeasurable riches provided to us by nature be preserved and passed on to our descendants. The current unsustainable patterns of production and consumption must be changed in the interest of our future welfare and that of our descendants.
- Shared responsibility. Responsibility for managing worldwide economic and social development, as well as threats to international peace and security, must be shared among the nations of the world and should be exercised multilaterally. As the most universal and most representative organization in the world, the United Nations must play the central role.

7. In order to translate these shared values into actions, we have identified key objectives to which we assign special significance.

II. Peace, security and disarmament

8. We will spare no effort to free our peoples from the scourge of war, whether within or between States, which has claimed more than 5 million lives in the past decade. We will also seek to eliminate the dangers posed by weapons of mass destruction.

9. We resolve therefore:

- To strengthen respect for the rule of law in international as in national affairs and, in particular, to ensure compliance by Member States with the decisions of the International Court of Justice, in compliance with the Charter of the United Nations, in cases to which they are parties.
- To make the United Nations more effective in maintaining peace and security by giving it the resources and tools it needs for conflict prevention, peaceful resolution of disputes, peacekeeping, post-conflict peace-building and reconstruction. In this context, we take note of the report of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations, and request the General Assembly to consider its recommendations expeditiously.
- To strengthen cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations, in accordance with the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter.
- To ensure the implementation, by States Parties, of treaties in areas such as arms control and disarmament and of international humanitarian law and human rights law, and call upon all States to consider signing and ratifying the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court.
- To take concerted action against international terrorism, and to accede as soon as possible to all the relevant international conventions.
- To redouble our efforts to implement our commitment to counter the world drug problem.
- To intensify our efforts to fight transnational crime in all its dimensions, including trafficking as well as smuggling in human beings and money laundering.

- To minimize the adverse effects of United Nations economic sanctions on innocent populations, to subject such sanctions regimes to regular reviews and to eliminate the adverse effects of sanctions on third parties.
- To strive for the elimination of weapons of mass destruction, particularly nuclear weapons, and to keep all options open for achieving this aim, including the possibility of convening an international conference to identify ways of eliminating nuclear dangers.
- To take concerted action to end illicit traffic in small arms and light weapons, especially by making arms transfers more transparent and supporting regional disarmament measures, taking account of all the recommendations of the forthcoming United Nations Conference on Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons.
- To call on all States to consider acceding to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction, as well as the amended mines protocol to the Convention on conventional weapons.

10. We urge Member States to observe the Olympic Truce, individually and collectively, now and in the future, and to support the International Olympic Committee in its efforts to promote peace and human understanding through sport and the Olympic Ideal.

III. Development and poverty eradication

11. We will spare no effort to free our fellow men, women and children from the abject and dehumanizing conditions of extreme poverty, to which more than a billion of them are currently subjected. We are committed to making the right to development a reality for everyone and to freeing the entire human race from want.

12. We resolve therefore to create an environment—at the national and global levels alike—which is conducive to development and to the elimination of poverty:

13. Success in meeting these objectives depends, inter alia, on good governance within each country. It also depends on good governance at the international level and on transparency in the financial, monetary and trading systems. We are committed to an open, equitable, rule-based, predictable and non-discriminatory multilateral trading and financial system.

14. We are concerned about the obstacles developing countries face in mobilizing the resources needed to finance their sustained development. We will therefore make every effort to ensure the success of the high-level international intergovernmental event on financing for development, to be held in 2001.

15. We also undertake to address the special needs of the least developed countries. In this context, we welcome the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries to be held in May 2001 and will endeavour to ensure its success. We call on the industrialized countries:

- To adopt, preferably by the time of that Conference, a policy of duty- and quota-free access for essentially all exports from the least developed countries;
- To implement the enhanced programme of debt relief for the heavily indebted poor countries without further delay and to agree to cancel all official bilateral debts of those countries in return for their making demonstrable commitments to poverty reduction; and
- To grant more generous development assistance, especially to countries that are genuinely making an effort to apply their resources to poverty reduction.

16. We are also determined to deal comprehensively and effectively with the debt problems of low- and middle-income developing countries, through various national and international measures designed to make their debt sustainable in the long term.

17. We also resolve to address the special needs of small island developing States, by implementing the Barbados Programme of Action and the outcome of the twenty-second special session of the General Assembly rapidly and in full. We urge the international community to ensure that, in the development of a vulnerability index, the special needs of small island developing States are taken into account.

18. We recognize the special needs and problems of the landlocked developing countries, and urge both bilateral and multilateral donors to increase financial and technical assistance to this group of countries to meet their special development needs and to help them overcome the impediments of geography by improving their transit transport systems.

19. We resolve further:

- To halve, by the year 2015, the proportion of the world's people whose income is less than one dollar a day and the proportion of people who suffer from hunger and, by the same date, to halve the proportion of people who are unable to reach or to afford safe drinking water.
- To ensure that, by the same date, children everywhere, boys and girls alike, will be able to complete a full course of primary schooling and that girls and boys will have equal access to all levels of education.
- By the same date, to have reduced maternal mortality by three quarters, and under-five child mortality by two thirds, of their current rates.
- To have, by then, halted, and begun to reverse, the spread of HIV/AIDS, the scourge of malaria and other major diseases that afflict humanity.
- To provide special assistance to children orphaned by HIV/AIDS.
- By 2020, to have achieved a significant improvement in the lives of at least 100 million slum dwellers as proposed in the "Cities Without Slums" initiative.

20. We also resolve:

- To promote gender equality and the empowerment of women as effective ways to combat poverty, hunger and disease and to stimulate development that is truly sustainable.
- To develop and implement strategies that give young people everywhere a real chance to find decent and productive work.
- To encourage the pharmaceutical industry to make essential drugs more widely available and affordable by all who need them in developing countries.
- To develop strong partnerships with the private sector and with civil society organizations in pursuit of development and poverty eradication.
- To ensure that the benefits of new technologies, especially information and communication technologies, in conformity with recommendations contained in the Economic and Social Council 2000 Ministerial Declaration, are available to all.

IV. Protecting our common environment

21. We must spare no effort to free all of humanity, and above all our children and grandchildren, from the threat of living on a planet irredeemably spoilt by human activities, and whose resources would no longer be sufficient for their needs.

22. We reaffirm our support for the principles of sustainable development, including those set out in Agenda 21, agreed upon at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

23. We resolve therefore to adopt in all our environmental actions a new ethic of conservation and stewardship and, as first steps, we resolve:

- To make every effort to ensure the entry into force of the Kyoto Protocol, preferably by the tenth anniversary of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 2002, and to embark on the required reduction in emissions of greenhouse gases.
- To intensify our collective efforts for the management, conservation and sustainable development of all types of forests.
- To press for the full implementation of the Convention on Biological Diversity and the Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa.

- To stop the unsustainable exploitation of water resources by developing water management strategies at the regional, national and local levels, which promote both equitable access and adequate supplies.
- To intensify cooperation to reduce the number and effects of natural and man-made disasters.
- To ensure free access to information on the human genome sequence.

V. Human rights, democracy and good governance

24. We will spare no effort to promote democracy and strengthen the rule of law, as well as respect for all internationally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development.

25. We resolve therefore:

- To respect fully and uphold the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.
- To strive for the full protection and promotion in all our countries of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights for all.
- To strengthen the capacity of all our countries to implement the principles and practices of democracy and respect for human rights, including minority rights.
- To combat all forms of violence against women and to implement the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.
- To take measures to ensure respect for and protection of the human rights of migrants, migrant workers and their families, to eliminate the increasing acts of racism and xenophobia in many societies and to promote greater harmony and tolerance in all societies.
- To work collectively for more inclusive political processes, allowing genuine participation by all citizens in all our countries.
- To ensure the freedom of the media to perform their essential role and the right of the public to have access to information.

VI. Protecting the vulnerable

26. We will spare no effort to ensure that children and all civilian populations that suffer disproportionately the consequences of natural disasters, genocide, armed conflicts and other humanitarian emergencies are given every assistance and protection so that they can resume normal life as soon as possible.

We resolve therefore:

- To expand and strengthen the protection of civilians in complex emergencies, in conformity with international humanitarian law.
- To strengthen international cooperation, including burden sharing in, and the coordination of humanitarian assistance to, countries hosting refugees and to help all refugees and displaced persons to return voluntarily to their homes, in safety and dignity and to be smoothly reintegrated into their societies.
- To encourage the ratification and full implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and its optional protocols on the involvement of children in armed conflict and on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography.

VII. Meeting the special needs of Africa

27. We will support the consolidation of democracy in Africa and assist Africans in their struggle for lasting peace, poverty eradication and sustainable development, thereby bringing Africa into the mainstream of the world economy.

28. We resolve therefore:

- To give full support to the political and institutional structures of emerging democracies in Africa.

- To encourage and sustain regional and subregional mechanisms for preventing conflict and promoting political stability, and to ensure a reliable flow of resources for peacekeeping operations on the continent.
- To take special measures to address the challenges of poverty eradication and sustainable development in Africa, including debt cancellation, improved market access, enhanced Official Development Assistance and increased flows of Foreign Direct Investment, as well as transfers of technology.
- To help Africa build up its capacity to tackle the spread of the HIV/AIDS pandemic and other infectious diseases.

VIII. Strengthening the United Nations

29. We will spare no effort to make the United Nations a more effective instrument for pursuing all of these priorities: the fight for development for all the peoples of the world, the fight against poverty, ignorance and disease; the fight against injustice; the fight against violence, terror and crime; and the fight against the degradation and destruction of our common home.

30. We resolve therefore:

- To reaffirm the central position of the General Assembly as the chief deliberative, policy-making and representative organ of the United Nations, and to enable it to play that role effectively.
- To intensify our efforts to achieve a comprehensive reform of the Security Council in all its aspects.
- To strengthen further the Economic and Social Council, building on its recent achievements, to help it fulfil the role ascribed to it in the Charter.
- To strengthen the International Court of Justice, in order to ensure justice and the rule of law in international affairs.
- To encourage regular consultations and coordination among the principal organs of the United Nations in pursuit of their functions.
- To ensure that the Organization is provided on a timely and predictable basis with the resources it needs to carry out its mandates.
- To urge the Secretariat to make the best use of those resources, in accordance with clear rules and procedures agreed by the General Assembly, in the interests of all Member States, by adopting the best management practices and technologies available and by concentrating on those tasks that reflect the agreed priorities of Member States.
- To promote adherence to the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel.
- To ensure greater policy coherence and better cooperation between the United Nations, its agencies, the Bretton Woods Institutions and the World Trade Organization, as well as other multilateral bodies, with a view to achieving a fully coordinated approach to the problems of peace and development.
- To strengthen further cooperation between the United Nations and national parliaments through their world organization, the Inter-Parliamentary Union, in various fields, including peace and security, economic and social development, international law and human rights and democracy and gender issues.
- To give greater opportunities to the private sector, non-governmental organizations and civil society, in general, to contribute to the realization of the Organization's goals and programmes.

31. We request the General Assembly to review on a regular basis the progress made in implementing the provisions of this Declaration, and ask the Secretary-General to issue periodic reports for consideration by the General Assembly and as a basis for further action.

32. We solemnly reaffirm, on this historic occasion, that the United Nations is the indispensable common house of the entire human family, through which we will seek to realize our universal aspirations for peace, cooperation and development. We therefore pledge our unstinting support for these common objectives and our determination to achieve them.

“We the peoples: the role of the United Nations in the twenty-first century”

To chart the new course for the Organization, the Secretary-General, in his report to the General Assembly entitled “We the peoples: the role of the United Nations in the twenty-first century” [A/54/2000], proposed action the Organization could take to make its work more relevant to the changing times.

He said that the Assembly had convened the gathering of heads of State and Government to address the role of the United Nations in the twenty-first century. Both the occasion and the subject required a broader, longer-term view of the state of the world and the challenges it posed for the Organization.

According to the Secretary-General, there was much to be grateful for. Most people could expect to live longer than their parents. They were better nourished, enjoyed better health, were better educated, and on the whole faced more favourable economic prospects. However, there were also many things to deplore, and to correct. The century just ended was disfigured, time and again, by ruthless conflict. Grinding poverty and striking inequality persisted within and among countries even amidst unprecedented wealth. Diseases, old and new, threatened to undo painstaking progress and nature’s life-sustaining services were being seriously disrupted and degraded.

The United Nations could succeed in helping to meet those challenges only if all felt a renewed sense of mission. Clear answers were necessary to energize and focus the Organization’s work in the decades ahead, and it was those answers that the Millennium Summit had to provide. The Summit offered an unparalleled opportunity to reshape the United Nations well into the twenty-first century, enabling it to make a real and measurable difference to people’s lives.

The Secretary-General said that his report identified some of the pressing challenges faced by the world’s people that fell within the UN ambit. It proposed a number of priorities for Member States to consider, and recommended several immediate steps that the Summit itself could take. All those proposals were set in the context of globalization, which was transforming the world as it entered the twenty-first century. Globalization offered great opportunities, but its benefits were unevenly distributed while its costs were borne by all. The central challenge, therefore, was to ensure that globalization became a positive force for all the world’s people. Inclusive globalization should be built on market forces, as well as on a broader effort to create a shared future, based upon our common humanity and diversity.

Secretary-General’s charge to the Summit

The Secretary-General declared that the values of freedom, equity and solidarity, tolerance, non-violence, respect for nature and shared responsibility, which reflected the spirit of the UN Charter and were shared by all nations, were of particular importance for the age we were entering. In applying those values to the new century, our priorities had to be clear.

First, no effort should be spared to free our fellow men and women from the abject and dehumanizing poverty in which more than 1 billion of them were currently confined. He urged the Summit to resolve: to halve, by the time the century was 15 years old, the proportion of the world’s people (currently 22 per cent) whose income was less than one dollar a day, and the proportion of people (currently 20 per cent) unable to reach, or to afford, safe drinking water; that by the same date all children everywhere would be able to complete a full course of primary schooling, and girls and boys would have equal access to all levels of education; and that by then the spread of HIV/AIDS would have been halted, and begun to reverse. By 2020, the lives of at least 100 million slum-dwellers around the world would be significantly improved; strategies developed to give young people everywhere the chance of finding decent work; the benefits of new technology, especially information technology, made available to all; and every Government committed to national policies and programmes to reduce poverty.

At the international level, the more fortunate countries owed a duty of solidarity to the less fortunate. In that regard, the Secretary-General urged leaders to: grant free access to their markets for goods produced in poor countries, and, as a first step, be prepared, at the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries in May 2001, to adopt a policy of duty-free and quota-free access for essentially all exports from the least developed countries; remove the shackles of debt that currently kept many of the poorest countries imprisoned in their poverty, and, as first steps, implement the expansion of the debt relief programme for heavily indebted poor countries [YUN 1999, p. 895] without further delay and be prepared to cancel all official debts of those countries, in return for them making demonstrable commitments to poverty reduction; grant more generous development assistance, particularly to those countries that were genuinely applying their resources to poverty reduction; and work with the pharmaceutical industry and other partners to develop an effective and affordable vaccine against HIV, and make HIV-related drugs more widely accessible in developing countries.

At both the national and international levels, private investment had an indispensable role to play. Countries should develop strong partnerships with the private sector to combat poverty in all its aspects. Extreme poverty in sub-Saharan Africa affected a higher proportion of the population than in any other region. It was compounded by a higher incidence of conflict, HIV/AIDS and many other ills. Special provision should be made for the needs of Africa, and full support given to Africans in their struggle to overcome the continent's problems.

The Secretary-General drew attention to the four new initiatives he had proposed in the report: a Health InterNetwork, to provide hospitals and clinics in developing countries with access to up-to-date medical information; a United Nations Information Technology Service, to train groups in developing countries in the uses and opportunities of information technology; a disaster response initiative, "First on the Ground", which would provide uninterrupted communications access to areas affected by natural disasters and emergencies; and a global policy network to explore viable new approaches to the problem of youth employment.

Second, no effort should be spared to free our fellow men and women from the scourge of war, as required by the Charter, and especially from the violence of civil conflict and the fear of weapons of mass destruction, two great sources of terror in the current age. The Secretary-General urged States therefore to strengthen respect for law, in international as in national affairs, in particular the agreed provisions of treaties on the control of armaments, and international humanitarian and human rights law. All Governments that had not done so should sign and ratify the various conventions, covenants and treaties that formed the central corpus of international law. He also urged States to make the United Nations more effective in its work of maintaining peace and security, notably by strengthening its capacity to conduct peace operations, and adopt measures to make economic sanctions adopted by the Security Council less harsh on innocent populations and more effective in penalizing delinquent rulers.

States should take action to curb the illegal traffic in small arms by: creating greater transparency in arms transfers; supporting regional disarmament measures, such as the moratorium on the importing, exporting or manufacturing of light weapons in West Africa; and extending to other areas, especially post-conflict situations, the "weapons for goods" programmes that had worked well in Albania, El Salvador, Mozambique and Panama. They should also examine the possibility of convening a major international conference to identify ways of eliminating nuclear dangers.

Third, no effort should be spared to free our fellow men and women, and above all our children and grandchildren, from the danger of living on a planet irredeemably spoilt by human activities, and whose resources could no longer provide for their needs. The Secretary-General urged leaders to adopt a new ethic of conservation and stewardship, and, as first steps: to adopt and ratify the Kyoto Protocol to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [YUN 1997, p. 1048], so that it could enter into force by 2002, and to ensure that its goals were met, as a step towards reducing emissions of greenhouse gases; to consider seriously incorporating the UN system of "green accounting" into national accounts; and to provide financial support for, and become actively engaged in, the Millennium Ecosystem Assessment (see p. 977).

Finally, no effort should be spared to make the United Nations a more effective instrument in the hands of the world's peoples for pursuing those three priorities: the fight against poverty, ignorance and disease; the fight against violence and terror; and the fight against the degradation and destruction of our common home. Leaders should therefore: reform the Security Council so that it could carry out its responsibilities more effectively and give it greater legitimacy; ensure that the Organization was given the necessary resources to carry out its mandates and that the Secretariat made best use of those resources in the interests of all Member States, by allowing it to adopt the best management practices and technologies available, and to concentrate on those tasks that reflected the current priorities of Member States; and give full opportunities to non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and other non-state actors to make their contributions to the Organization's work.

Further documentation

Other documents before the Summit included the report of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations (the Brahimi report) [A/55/305-S/2000/809] (see p. 80); a Secretariat note [A/54/959] transmitting the final document of the Millennium Forum of NGOs and civil society actors (see p. 65); the Declaration of the Council of Presidents of the General Assembly on the occasion of the Millennium Summit [A/55/372]; the Declaration of the Heads of State of the Commonwealth of Independent States [A/55/330]; messages from Turkmenistan [A/55/309] and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia [A/55/362-S/2000/855] to the Millennium Summit; and a position paper by China [A/54/882].

Round-table sessions

More open and informal discussions of the Summit's theme and the Secretary-General's report took place, for the first time in UN history, in four interactive round-table sessions, each of which was chaired by a head of State or Government. Each regional grouping (Africa, Asia, Eastern Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean, and Western European and other States) was represented in the round tables, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 54/261 of 10 May (see p. 1366).

During the concluding plenary of the Millennium Summit, the Chairpersons of the four round tables, in accordance with Assembly resolution 54/281 of 11 August (see p. 1367), made oral presentations on the deliberations of their respective groups.

Round Table 1. The Chairperson of the first round table, Prime Minister Goh Chok Tong of Singapore, said that all the leaders felt that globalization was a reality that had to be faced, but while there were enormous benefits for those who could take advantage of it, those who lacked the capacity to do so would find themselves falling further and further behind in the economic race. The negative effects of globalization had therefore to be moderated. One key point was that, while individual countries had national institutions to regulate the domestic market and moderate its social impact, there were no international institutions to regulate the global market and check the adverse effects of globalization on countries.

On the "digital divide", many leaders felt that bridging it would help close the widening income gulf, but others felt that they needed first to deal with more fundamental problems, such as the lack of basic education and reliable electricity and water supplies. Several leaders argued that the rules of the international financial institutions were written to favour strong, rich countries. Undemocratic decision-making at the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Trade Organization (WTO) was cited. The decision-making procedures of WTO, IMF and the World Bank should be made more democratic, consultative, inclusive and transparent, and take into account the different social and economic needs of various countries.

Many said that a basic problem impeding their country's development was their debt burden, and urged debt relief.

The leaders offered several solutions to the problems they had identified, such as the importance of development assistance in capacity-building so that countries could benefit from globalization, and training in international trade negotiations. They said that the United Nations had to be given the resources to run such programmes and Member States should show their political will and sincerity in wanting to help the poorer countries by paying their UN dues.

To raise resources, an international tax or some other fiscal measure was suggested to help in finding a solution to the problems created by globalization. Other proposals included: the creation of an economic security council within the United Nations, with the same binding authority as the political Security Council, to monitor the global market and make recommendations to deal with economic developments that threatened the security of countries; and an international anti-trust law to combat price-fixing and the abuse of power by monopolies, cartels and large companies.

There was discussion on whether new institutions should be created to deal with the new challenges of the era, or old ones reformed. Some participants cautioned that it would be hard to find resources for new institutions, as the cost of participating in existing ones was already a great burden for small countries. Moreover, it was pointless to establish new institutions unless the decision-making process was made more democratic.

As to follow-up action on the round-table discussion, participants proposed that the Millennium Declaration be used as a plan of action to be implemented and monitored at both the national and United Nations levels.

The Chairperson said that he had suggested that a round table for leaders every few years should be built into the UN process to allow interactive discussion among leaders in an informal setting. Such a format could give rise to fresh, useful and innovative ideas and foster closer friendship and understanding between leaders and hence warmer relations among nations.

Round Table 2. President Aleksander Kwasniewski of Poland, Chairperson of the second round table, said that participants shared the same view concerning the nature of the challenges facing the world in the twenty-first century: security risks and local conflicts, poverty, development gaps, endemic illnesses and environmental hazards, among others. The discussion offered some new ideas and new approaches to solving those problems. There was common agreement that the United Nations should play a crucial role in defining the right answers to those problems and in implementing them.

They considered that the main challenge ahead was the development and equal distribution of the benefits resulting from globalization. It was broadly agreed that its benefits should be more evenly and universally spread. Technology offered a great chance, but the fundamental needs of peoples, including food, health and education, had to be satisfied first. Globalization should become human and better managed. At the institutional level, it meant reform of the international financial and trading systems to make them more equitable. It should also address the risks posed by the new "digital divide". Negative aspects, such as drug trafficking, money-laundering, the illicit arms trade and transnational crime, needed to be addressed as well. The process of globalization had to be based on moral principles and values, the most important being solidarity, especially with Africa. A strong plea was made to recognize the special circumstances of that continent and for the international community to undertake a concerted effort to address the plight the continent faced: poverty, conflicts and HIV/AIDS. A new partnership for Africa was called for. That "new deal" would require a fundamental change of attitude, based on independent thinking and active participation by Africans themselves, a non-parochial, forthcoming and comprehensive approach by their partners, a rejection of a welfare approach and an emphasis on the root causes of the problems.

The most pressing challenge was the fight against poverty, which was often the root cause of instability, conflicts, social tensions and environmental threats. Several participants stressed the need to elaborate workable mechanisms at all levels to alleviate poverty and close the gap between rich and poor, and to intensify international cooperation towards that goal. Leaders reaffirmed their commitment to achieving the goal of halving the proportion of people living in extreme poverty by 2015 and suggested that a coordinated UN global action plan for poverty eradication should be elaborated.

Among the priorities for action, participants mentioned debt relief and increasing official development assistance. It was suggested that some means to mediate between creditors and debtors might be helpful to better meet the needs and interests of both sides. Debt reduction for the poorest nations would enable them to address the most acute problems of social development.

Grave concern was expressed over HIV/AIDS, malaria and other pandemic diseases as a major threat to the achievement of development goals. To control those diseases, access to treatment and medical drugs at affordable prices should be assured, particularly for developing countries. There was a call to launch global programmes with the participation of all stakeholders, including the United Nations, Governments, NGOs and the pharmaceutical industry. In that regard, there was widespread support for the proposals contained in the Secretary-General's report to the Summit [A/54/2000].

The importance of investing in education and the promotion of the rights of children and youth were also stressed. Many participants underlined that stable development was not possible without effective protection of human rights and strong democracy. The conditions for democracy needed to be addressed in both developed and developing countries.

The leaders stressed the link between poverty alleviation and environmental protection, emphasizing that environment be placed high on the global agenda. Ratification of legally binding international instruments, such as the Kyoto Protocol to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [YUN 1997, p. 1048], was also called for.

Ensuring security, preventing deadly conflicts and maintaining peace were still among the priority tasks of the United Nations. There was an urgent need to adapt peacekeeping operations to the new circumstances, and to pay increased attention to conflict prevention, peace-making and peace-building. If the capacity of the United Nations quickly to deploy robust operations was not strengthened, if Member States failed to provide on time the necessary resources and personnel and if the Organization failed to improve the planning and management of those operations, the United Nations might lose its credibility. There was widespread support for the report of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations and for its recommendations [A/55/305-S/2000/809] (see p. 80).

The call for reform of the Security Council was reiterated. Support was expressed for the early establishment of the International Criminal Court and some participants pointed out the need to assess critically the instrument of sanctions.

There was a commonly shared view that the United Nations should be strengthened and it should adapt to the changing international environment. The Organization was seen as an important vehicle to manage globalization. Several participants drew attention to the need to ensure democracy in international relations, and hence coherence and coordination among international organizations, both at the global and the regional levels.

Round Table 3. President Hugo Rafael Chávez Frías of Venezuela, Chairperson of the third round table, reported that the group's first recommendation was for continuity, frequency and institutionalization of the round tables as a way of reclaiming the ethical nature of participation and of restoring the ethical character of the dialogue and creativity. As to meeting the goals of reducing poverty by half by 2015 and ensuring that by 2015 all boys and girls received a complete education of good quality, leaders agreed with Round Table 1 on the establishment of an independent development council to confront the enormous challenge of reducing poverty levels and raising living standards, particularly of the poorest and most backward countries. They also proposed the establishment of a development council in the United Nations with great authority and strong decision-making powers, representative and democratic.

Secondly, the leaders proposed institutionalizing and reinforcing regional groups that would meet frequently, table recommendations and offer avenues to resolve the many tragedies before existing UN bodies. Thirdly, they agreed with almost all the round tables, as an urgent matter, to reactivate the South-South dialogue and re-establish a North-South dialogue.

Round Table 4. The Chairperson of the fourth round table, President Abdelaziz Bouteflika of Algeria, said that the fourth round table was an excellent opportunity to exchange views on the crucial issues of globalization, peace and security and the role of the United Nations.

In today's new world, national interests needed to be defined in broader terms. Globalization, while offering enormous opportunities, ran the risk of exclusion and marginalization. Rules needed to be established to steer globalization. The United Nations had a crucial role to play in that regard in order to transform it into a positive force.

At the national level, leaders said that they needed to give priority to education, to take advantage of fresh opportunities and to reduce the gap between poor and rich. At the regional level, they should develop strategies for common action to open up more our economic spaces, to reduce conflicts and to make real progress together in education. At the global level, they needed to open up markets more to the commodities of the developing countries; to create a world compact with the private sector to increase investments in African and other low-income countries; and to provide debt relief and increase official development assistance to stimulate growth in the poor countries. They hoped that the process launched in the United Nations on financing for development would offer an opportunity to make great progress.

In order to combat poverty, national efforts were necessary, but the consistent support of the international community was also crucial to mainstream the human and environmental dimensions into the globalization process. A consistent, global approach in the economic, social and environmental protection areas should be developed, and the question of the relationship between trade, the environment and social standards should be dealt with. Health, nutrition, employment, respect for cultural identity and, in particular, education were all essential areas. Education had to be central to international concerns.

The development of strategies for debt relief in Africa had been proposed but the continent was still awaiting the results. African countries definitely needed investment in manufactured goods and intermediate goods. To that end, it was essential that national infrastructures be built to attract private investment. A proposal was made to analyse the debts of the indebted countries to understand how the debt was accumulated. That might be done in a South-South framework, in which the United Nations could be involved as a partner.

Africa had to create wider economic spaces, which were essential for the success of its industrial development. Participants said that they were in favour of a conference of the countries of the South, the theme of which would be "Revisiting globalization". They also deplored the fact that the new international economic order, which was debated in the United Nations in the 1960s and 1970s, was no longer relevant.

IMF, in the view of the round table, should be reformed. Attention was drawn to the current discussion in the countries of the North about the new role of that institution. However, the South was not a participant and that situation had to be redressed.

Concerning peace and security, troop-contributing countries should be more involved in the negotiations and in the follow-up work in the Security Council. Harmonizing regional mechanisms with the work of the Security Council should be guaranteed. As was the case in the other round tables, participants stressed the fact that the composition of the current Council no longer reflected today's realities. While much of the work of the Council concerned the situation in Africa, the continent had no permanent seat on that body.

On the subject of terrorism, no one in the interactive dialogue challenged the idea that there was interaction between democracy and the concept of terrorism. There could be no democracy as long as there was terrorism. The eradication of terrorism was a condition for the establishment and the strengthening of the democratic process. Terrorism was a worldwide scourge and it should be discussed by the entire world community. It was disquieting that terrorism was acquiring increasingly internationalized forms and that it had particular links with organized crime, including drug trafficking. The General Assembly needed to remain actively involved in that question and to consider ways to combat that scourge. The leaders particularly recommended to the Secretary-General that a fund be established, or a way be found, for the United Nations to finance a study or studies on terrorism and on its sources of financing, particularly countries that were bridgeheads for terrorist activities in the world.

The need to strengthen the United Nations in the area of peacekeeping was reaffirmed, and the recommendations contained in the Brahimi report (see p. 80) were welcomed. Everyone agreed to recommend the reform of the Security Council, IMF, the Bretton Woods agreements and all post-Second World War institutions.

Closing session

During its closing session on 8 September, the Millennium Summit also heard statements by the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States, the President of the European Commission, the Secretary-General of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the Secretary-General of the Commonwealth Secretariat, the Secretary-General of the Economic Cooperation Organization, the President of the International Committee of the Red Cross, the Grand Chancellor of the Sovereign Military Order of Malta, the President of the Conference of Presiding Officers of National Parliaments (see p. 67) and the Co-Chairperson of the NGO Millennium Forum (see p. 65).

Secretary-General's closing statement

The Secretary-General of the United Nations, in his closing remarks, said that he was struck by the noteworthy convergence of views expressed concerning the challenge before the international community and by the urgency of the appeal for action. He declared:

"You have said that your first priority is the eradication of extreme poverty. You have set specific targets to that goal, and you have prescribed measures for achieving them. If the measures are really taken, we all know the targets can be reached. Many of you have said that you understand the potential benefits of globalization but that your peoples have yet to feel them. You have acknowledged that part of the solution lies in the hands of sovereign States, which must give priority to needs of their people, especially the poorest. We all know that States alone cannot solve the problems of globalization. They need to work in partnership with the private sector and with civil society in the broadest sense.

"You have also called for a more equitable world economy in which all countries have a fair chance to compete and in which those who have more will do more for those who have less. Speaker after speaker has stressed the urgent need to release poor countries from their burden of debt. You expressed interest in finding new approaches to this problem, including a system of arbitration or mediation, which would balance the interests of creditors with those of sovereign debtors. I will give further thought to this idea and suggest ways in which it could be done.

"You have said that it is intolerable, as we enter a new century, that millions of innocent people, especially women and children, should still fall victim to brutal conflict. We all know that in this area the United Nations has fallen short of the world's expectations. We must strengthen our capacity and improve our performance so that vulnerable communities feel able to count on us in their hour of need. That is why so many of you have welcomed the report of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations and promised to act quickly on its recommendations.

"You have reaffirmed the vital importance of international law, which is the common language of our global community. Over 80 of you have taken action during this Summit to adhere to international legal instruments that are central to the spirit of our Charter [see p. 68]. Most of these actions concerned protocols that seek to protect children from abuses that bring shame to all humankind. Your action is a welcome sign that humankind is coming together at last to put an end to them.

"You have called for higher priority to be given to the special needs of Africa, where poverty and all its attendant ills seem most intractable.

"You have said that we need more effective international institutions, starting with the United Nations. In your minds, clearly, the reform we began together three years ago is not complete. I agree and look forward to working with you to take it further. Almost every one of you has called for a comprehensive reform of the Security Council. That surely must give new impetus to the search for consensus on this thorny but unavoidable issue. You are rightly concerned with the effectiveness of this Organization. You want action and, above all, you want results. You are right, and I look forward to working with you over the coming year to ensure that the United Nations of the twenty-first century can deliver real improvements in the life of the world's peoples.

"Excellencies, you have sketched out clear directions for adapting this Organization to its role in the new century. But ultimately, you are yourselves the United Nations. It lies in your power, and therefore it is your responsibility, to reach the goals that you have defined. Only you can determine whether the United Nations rises to the challenge. For my part, I hereby rededicate myself as from today to carrying out your mandate. I know that the whole staff of the United Nations does the same."

Millennium Summit follow-up

In order to effect an integrated, coordinated, comprehensive and balanced approach in the implementation of the Millennium Declaration, Algeria, Finland, Namibia, Poland, Singapore and Venezuela requested, on 6 October [A/55/235], that the fifty-fifth regular session of the General Assembly consider the follow-up to the outcome of the Millennium Summit. They said that there was no shortage of challenges to the United Nations. Thus, what was important were the implementation and follow-up of the Millennium Declaration and the maintenance of the momentum created by the Summit.

The General Assembly, on 14 December [meeting 85], adopted without vote resolution 55/162 [draft: A/55/L.56/Rev.1], which called on relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to be involved in the follow-up to the Summit [agenda item 182].

Follow-up to the outcome of the Millennium Summit

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 55/2 of 8 September 2000,

Having considered the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Expressing satisfaction that, for the first time in history, so many heads of State and Government gathered at a summit in New York, which reached a successful conclusion with the adoption of the Millennium Declaration,

Stressing the need for maintaining the political will and momentum of the Millennium Summit at the national, regional and international levels in order to translate commitments into concrete action,

Recognizing the necessity for creating a framework for the implementation of the Millennium Declaration,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Stressing the importance of a comprehensive and balanced approach in implementation and follow-up,

1. Calls for an integrated, coordinated, comprehensive and balanced approach in the implementation of the United Nations Millennium Declaration at the national, regional and international levels;

2. Recognizes that Governments bear the main responsibility, individually and collectively, for action and implementation of the Millennium Declaration;

3. Calls upon the entire United Nations system to assist Member States in every way possible in the implementation of the Millennium Declaration;

4. Decides to use existing structures and mechanisms and upcoming events and special sessions of the General Assembly, as well as related conferences and events, to the maximum extent possible in the implementation of the Millennium Declaration, and requests the President of the General Assembly to follow up these processes;

5. Requests the Main Committees of the General Assembly to ensure that the outcome of the Millennium Summit is taken into account in their work;

6. Calls upon all relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to become involved in the follow-up to the Summit, and invites specialized agencies and related organizations of the United Nations system to strengthen and adjust their activities, programmes and medium-term strategies, as appropriate, to take into account the follow-up to the Summit;

7. Invites the regional commissions, in cooperation with regional intergovernmental organizations and regional development banks, to review progress made towards implementing the Millennium Declaration;

8. Requests the United Nations system to take action to meet the special needs of Africa and to strengthen the broad range of its engagement in Africa, with a view to intensifying support for poverty eradication and sustainable development, for combating diseases and pandemics and for the process of conflict prevention and the consolidation of democracy;

9. Recognizes that the implementation of the Millennium Declaration will require resources and adequate financing at the national, regional and international levels and that additional financial resources are needed, in particular in Africa and the least developed countries, landlocked developing countries and small island developing States;

10. Requests the appropriate bodies to consider urgently how the implementation of the Millennium Declaration should relate to the biennial budget process and the medium-term plan;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure system-wide coordination to assist with the implementation of the Millennium Declaration, and invites him to identify, within the framework of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, innovative ways of enhancing cooperation and coherence throughout the United Nations system;

12. Invites the Bretton Woods institutions to become involved actively in the implementation of and follow-up to the Summit and to enhance their cooperation with other parts of the United Nations system for coherent implementation of the Millennium Declaration;

13. Invites the World Trade Organization to contribute to the implementation of the Millennium Declaration;

14. Calls for enhanced partnership and cooperation with national parliaments as well as civil society, including non-governmental organizations and the private sector, as set out in the Millennium Declaration, to ensure their contribution to the implementation of the Declaration;

15. Requests the specialized agencies, the Bretton Woods institutions and the World Trade Organization to keep the General Assembly informed about how they contribute to the implementation of the Millennium Declaration;

16. Requests that the events and conferences referred to in paragraph 4 above keep the General Assembly informed about how they contribute to the implementation of the Millennium Declaration;

17. Reiterates the call to assess, on a regular basis, progress towards implementing the Millennium Declaration;

18. Requests the Secretary-General urgently to prepare a long-term "road map" towards the implementation of the Millennium Declaration within the United Nations system and to submit it to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session;

19. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive report every five years, supplemented by an annual report on progress achieved towards implementing the Millennium Declaration, taking into account the following:

- (a) The annual reports should reflect the broad array of specific goals and commitments enunciated in the Millennium Declaration, though each could explore in greater depth one or two areas covered in the Declaration;
- (b) All reports should focus, in this respect, on the results and benchmarks achieved, identify gaps in implementation and strategies for reducing them, and highlight in particular cross-sectoral issues and cross-cutting themes on development and peace and security;
- (c) Reports should draw on the work of the entire United Nations system, including the Bretton

Woods institutions and the World Trade Organization;

- (d) The reporting system should be appraised with a view to strengthening its coherence and integration;

20. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Follow-up to the outcome of the Millennium Summit".

The Assembly, by decision 55/458 of 23 December, decided that the item "Follow-up to the outcome of the Millennium Summit" would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session.

High-level Security Council meeting

The Security Council

As part of the Millennium Summit, the Security Council met on 7 September for the second time in its history, the first being in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 33], at the level of heads of State and Government to discuss ways of ensuring an effective role of the Security Council in the maintenance of international peace. The meeting was attended by 9 Presidents (Argentina, China, France, Mali, Namibia, the Russian Federation, Tunisia, Ukraine and the United States), 5 Prime Ministers (Bangladesh, Canada, Jamaica, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom) and the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Malaysia of the Council's 15 members.

The Council President (Mali) told the meeting that the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) indicators had shown how far we were from eliminating poverty and creating the conditions for a better life for all. Conflicts had not ceased but had become internal, particularly in the form of civil wars. The Organization had made progress but there had been some failures over the last 10 years, which in some ways had affected its credibility, as Africa had unfortunately illustrated. The tragic events that took place in Sierra Leone, the need to better protect communities and individuals, including UN and humanitarian personnel, and the need to better meet the new security challenges were not in conflict with the shared determination to fine-tune the actions of the Council to enhance its ability to prevent crises and to respond to them in an appropriate fashion. At a time when the world was scrutinizing the UN's role in the twenty-first century, we needed more than ever to send strong clear signals to peoples and States of the determination and ability of the United Nations to carry out effective peacekeeping operations.

The Secretary-General said that the Council and the Organization were facing a crisis of credibility in discharging their responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security. Too many vulnerable communities in too many regions now hesitated to look to the United Nations to assist them in their hour of need. Only determined action could restore the reputation of the United Nations as a credible force for peace and justice. However, the United Nations and its peacekeepers could not be the answer to every crisis, conflict or threat to human life, nor could it be a substitute for the political will of the parties to achieve a peaceful settlement, but where it was the answer, it should be given the means to make the difference between life and death. The Secretary-General said that he was already committed to implementing those changes recommended by the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations (see p. 80), which he had appointed in March to provide frank and realistic recommendations to assist the Council and the larger membership in fulfilling its mission of peace.

Security Council declaration

Following statements by all the Council members, the Council's action came in the form of a declaration on ensuring an effective role for the Security Council in the maintenance of international peace and security, particularly in Africa, adopted unanimously on 7 September [meeting 4194] and annexed to resolution 1318(2000). The draft [S/2000/845] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council

Decides to adopt the attached declaration on ensuring an effective role for the Security Council in the maintenance of international peace and security, particularly in Africa.

ANNEX

The Security Council,

Meeting at the level of heads of State and Government in the course of the Millennium Summit to discuss the need to ensure an effective role for the Security Council in the maintenance of international peace and security, particularly in Africa,

I Pledges to uphold the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, reaffirms its commitment to the principles of sovereign equality, national sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of all States, and underlines the need for respect for human rights and the rule of law;

Reaffirms the importance of adhering to the principles of the non-threat or non-use of force in international relations in any manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations, and the peaceful settlement of international disputes;

Recalls its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, and resolves to strengthen the central role of the United Nations in peacekeeping and to ensure the effective functioning of the collective security system established by the Charter;

II Pledges to enhance the effectiveness of the United Nations in addressing conflict at all stages from prevention to settlement to post-conflict peace-building;

Reaffirms its determination to give equal priority to the maintenance of international peace and security in every region of the world and, in view of the particular needs of Africa, to give special attention to the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, and to the specific characteristics of African conflicts;

III Strongly encourages the development within the United Nations system and more widely of comprehensive and integrated strategies to address the root causes of conflicts, including their economic and social dimensions;

Affirms its determination to strengthen United Nations peacekeeping operations by:

- Adopting clearly defined, credible, achievable and appropriate mandates;
- Including in those mandates effective measures for the security and safety of United Nations personnel and, wherever feasible, for the protection of the civilian population;
- Taking steps to assist the United Nations to obtain trained and properly equipped personnel for peacekeeping operations;
- Strengthening consultations with troop-contributing countries when deciding on such operations;

Agrees to support:

- The upgrading of United Nations capacity for planning, establishing, deploying and conducting peacekeeping operations;

- The provision of a more up-to-date and sounder foundation for financing peacekeeping operations;

Underlines the importance of enhancing the United Nations capacity for rapid deployment of peacekeeping operations, and urges Member States to provide sufficient and timely resources;

IV Welcomes the report of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations of 17 August 2000, and decides to consider expeditiously the recommendations that fall within its area of responsibility;

V Stresses the critical importance of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants, and emphasizes that such programmes should normally be integrated into the mandates of peacekeeping operations;

VI Calls for effective international action to prevent the illegal flow of small arms into areas of conflict;

Decides to continue to take resolute action in areas where the illegal exploitation and trafficking of high-value commodities contributes to the escalation or continuation of conflicts;

Stresses that the perpetrators of crimes against humanity, crimes of genocide, war crimes, and other serious violations of international humanitarian law should be brought to justice;

Emphasizes its determination to continue to sensitize peacekeeping personnel in the prevention and control of HIV/AIDS in all operations;

VII Calls for the strengthening of cooperation and communication between the United Nations and regional or subregional organizations or arrangements, in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter, and in particular in respect of peacekeeping operations;

Emphasizes the importance of continued cooperation and effective coordination between the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity and African subregional organizations in addressing conflicts in Africa, and of enhanced support for the Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution of the Organization of African Unity;

VIII Underlines the fact that the ultimate responsibility for resolving disputes and conflicts lies with the parties themselves and that peacekeeping operations aimed at helping to implement a peace accord can succeed only to the extent that there is a genuine and lasting commitment to peace by all parties concerned;

Calls upon all States to intensify efforts to secure a world free of the scourge of war.

Other millennium gatherings

The occasion of the Millennium Summit was also the opportunity for several other bodies to gather so that their views and proposals could be taken into account by the heads of State and Government during their deliberations and in the finalization of the Summit's final document. Those gatherings included the Women Leaders Summit, bringing together women heads of State and Government, past and present, and women heads of UN agencies, funds and programmes; the Millennium World Peace Summit of Religious and Spiritual Leaders; the Interreligious and International Federation for World Peace Assembly 2000; and the Conference of Presiding Officers of National Parliaments. Earlier in the year, the Millennium Forum of non-governmental and civil society organizations took place in New York.

Also, regional hearings in preparation for the Millennium Assembly had been organized in 1999 by the Economic Commission for Africa [YUN 1999, p. 914], the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific [ibid., p. 934], the Economic Commission for Europe [ibid., p. 941], the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean [ibid., p. 948] and the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia [ibid., p. 957].

NGO Millennium Forum

As a contribution to the Millennium Summit activities, the Millennium Forum, which was held at UN Headquarters from 22 to 26 May, brought together NGOs and other civil society actors. The Forum was attended by representatives of over 1,000 NGOs and other civil society organizations from more than 100 countries. Their objective was to build upon the common vision and the work begun at civil society conferences and the UN world conferences during the 1990s, to draw the attention of Governments to the urgency of implementing the commitments they had made and to channel their collective energies by reclaiming globalization for and by the people.

The final document of the Forum [A/54/959], entitled "We the Peoples Millennium Forum Declaration and Agenda for Action: strengthening the United Nations in the twenty-first century", outlined a vision of a world that was human-centred and genuinely democratic, just, sustainable and peaceful, guided by the universal principles of democracy, equality, inclusion, voluntarism and non-discrimination; and a world where peace and human security replaced armaments, violent conflicts and wars, and where everyone lived in a clean environment with a fair distribution of the Earth's resources. The vision also included a special role for the dynamism of young people and the experience of the elderly and reaffirmed the universality of all human rights. The Forum identified the challenges facing the new millennium, including rising violence and armed conflicts, widespread violations of human rights and unacceptably large numbers of people who were denied the means for a minimal human existence. At the same time, new and emerging diseases, such as HIV/AIDS, threatened to devastate entire societies. Globalization and advances in technology created significant opportunities for people to connect, share and learn from each other. At the same time, corporate-driven globalization increased inequalities between and within countries, undermined local traditions and cultures and escalated disparities between rich and poor, marginalizing large numbers of people in urban and rural areas. The Forum proposed action to strengthen cooperation among all actors at the international, regional, national and local levels to make its vision a reality. The Agenda for Action included steps that should be taken by civil society, Governments and the United Nations in the eradication of poverty; peace, security and disarmament; facing the challenge of globalization: equity, justice and diversity; human rights; sustainable development and the environment; and strengthening and democratizing the United Nations and international organizations.

Speaking before the General Assembly's Millennium Summit on 8 September, the Co-Chairperson of the Millennium Forum, Techeste Ahderom, declared that, after listening to the speeches over the preceding three days, the Forum's vision and plan of action were consonant with much of what had been said. Civil society stood ready to work with the leaders and their Governments in a strong new partnership to create a new world. At the same time, it stood ready to hold leaders to their commitments if they did not deliver on their words. The Forum asked that leaders review carefully the Millennium Forum Declaration, which was simply calling on Governments to live up to the commitments and the principles that they had agreed to in the global conferences of the 1990s. It was also seeking increased access for NGOs to the General Assembly and its Main Committees.

World Peace Assembly 2000

Two weeks before the Millennium Summit (17-19 August), the Interreligious and International Federation for World Peace (IIFWP) Assembly 2000: Renewing the United Nations and Building a Culture of Peace was held in New York at UN Headquarters and the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. Sponsored by IIFWP and the Permanent Missions to the United Nations of Indonesia, Mongolia and Uganda, the conference was attended by dignitaries from over 100 nations, including former heads of State and Government, and religious and parliamentary leaders, as well as academic, business and media leaders. The conference was chaired by Makarim Wibisono, Indonesia's Permanent Representative to the United Nations. The conference discussed religion and politics as partners for peace, the quest for economic justice, UN reform and renewal, conflict resolution and religion's role, the global importance of the family, and globalization and sustainable development. Assembly 2000 hoped to convey to the world's religious and political leaders substantial recommendations and conclusions as to how best to create a culture of peace. Among the recommendations endorsed in the statement of affirmation adopted at the end of the conference was that an assembly of religious representatives be formed within the UN structure, a UN council consisting of respected spiritual leaders appointed by Member States. That council would especially advocate a universal, transnational ideal of peace. Those persons would be considered global ambassadors of the United Nations.

Millennium World Peace Summit

For the first time in history, religious and spiritual leaders of the world's diverse faith traditions came together in a Millennium World Peace Summit of Religious and Spiritual Leaders, which was held at Headquarters on 28 and 29 August and continued in working sessions at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel on 30 and 31 August. Attended by over 1,000 religious leaders, activists, scholars and observers, the Summit sought to identify ways that the worldwide religious and spiritual communities could work together as interfaith allies with the United Nations on specific peace, poverty and environmental initiatives. Religious leaders could work together to support the United Nations.

In his address to the Summit, the Secretary-General called on the spiritual leaders to set an example of interfaith dialogue and communication and help bridge the chasms of ignorance, fear and misunderstanding. He suggested that the Summit presented an opportunity for religious, spiritual and political leaders to consider what they could do to promote justice, equality, reconciliation and peace, and to inspire people to new levels of commitment and public service. Their presence at the United Nations signified their commitment to its global mission of tolerance, development and peace.

The main document emerging from the Summit was the statement Commitment to Global Peace, in which the religious and spiritual leaders condemned all violence in the name of religion and appealed to all religious, ethnic and national groups to respect the right to freedom of religion. The Commitment pledged collaboration with the United Nations in the pursuit of peace, in promoting the eradication of poverty and assuming a shared responsibility for expanding education, health care and an opportunity to achieve a secure and sustainable livelihood. Signatories to the Commitment also pledged to educate their communities to make environment a priority. Religious leaders agreed to form a Steering Committee to explore ways to bring about future collaboration with the United Nations, identify specific mechanisms to further that process and present a plan as soon as possible. Another initiative was an agreement of the women delegates to form their own international religious council.

Conference of Presiding Officers of National Parliaments

The Inter-Parliamentary Union (IPU) held its first Conference of Presiding Officers of National Parliaments at Headquarters from 30 August to 1 September. Reporting to the Millennium Summit during its closing plenary on 8 September, the President of the Conference, Najma Heptulla, said that the Conference, attended by 148 Presidents of chambers from 140 countries, represented the commitment of the parliaments to work closely with the United Nations to ensure that the twenty-first century was a century without fear, without deprivation and want, a century that allowed for the fullest development of the inherent potential of each and every human being that would represent the real globalization. The Conference unanimously adopted a declaration encapsulating the participants' parliamentary vision for international cooperation at the dawn of the third millennium and setting out the main challenges facing societies and expressing their political resolve to successfully overcome them through international cooperation. It also contained recommendations on the role of parliaments in a reformed multilateral cooperation system.

The President declared that parliaments stood firmly behind the United Nations and that support was both political and practical. They were committed to offering the necessary political backing to the United Nations as the cornerstone of the international cooperation system, and to allocating the resources that the United Nations and the other intergovernmental institutions needed to accomplish their noble mission.

Participants were unanimous in identifying a democratic deficit in the United Nations and the intergovernmental regime at large. They declared that, if UN decisions were to interpret the concerns and aspirations of the peoples and if international agreements were to effectively find their way to national reality, parliament, as the institution that legitimately represented society in its diversity and was accountable to it, should have a better say in the international cooperation process.

They noted that the Millennium Declaration (see p. 49) called for a strengthening of cooperation between the United Nations and national parliaments through IPU. They were determined to see that the necessary work was done at the national level, and especially within national parliaments, so that the parliamentary dimension of international cooperation could be developed. To create that new partnership, parliaments intended to act in close consultation with Governments and with intergovernmental organizations.

Because it was a unique instrument for relaying the views of parliaments, IPU looked forward to identifying with the General Assembly a status for the organization that was commensurate with the constitutional status of parliaments and with IPU's mission, instead of the current classification as an NGO.

Women Leaders Summit

On 5 September, the day before the Millennium Summit of the General Assembly, women heads of State and Government gathered at Headquarters to focus on issues arising from the Millennium Summit's theme, "The role of the United Nations in the twenty-first century", that affected women.

Organized by the Council of Women Leaders, located at the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University (Cambridge, Massachusetts, United States), the Women Leaders Summit made recommendations in areas the leaders considered critical to the advancement of women: peace, security and disarmament, development and poverty eradication, protecting the environment, good governance, democracy and human rights, protecting vulnerable groups and strengthening the United Nations.

They called on the United Nations, among other things, to: ensure greater participation of women in peacekeeping operations and peace-negotiating tables and acknowledge and promote their participation in the identification of solutions to prevent conflicts; focus on developing enabling conditions for women to combat poverty, including by guaranteeing their equal access to education, credit and information and by providing affordable health care; reaffirm its commitment to gender-sensitive development and support women's role in sustainable, ecologically sound consumption and production patterns; support their advancement in government; ensure the prevention and punishment of discrimination and violence against women, including in conflict situations; adopt policies to protect and promote the human rights of indigenous women; and improve women's representation at all levels within the UN system.

The meeting was also attended by eight women heads of UN agencies, funds and programmes, the wife of the United Nations Secretary-General, the Secretary-General of the Council of Women Leaders and the United States Secretary of State. It was chaired by Mary Robinson, United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and former President of Ireland.

Treaty-signing ceremony

During the Summit, an exceptional response was generated to the Secretary-General's invitation of 15 May to all heads of State and Government to use the unique opportunity afforded by the convening of the Millennium Summit to rededicate themselves to the international legal framework by becoming parties to the core group of multilateral treaties that reflected the key policy goals of the United Nations and the spirit of its Charter. In an unprecedented treaty-signing ceremony held throughout the three-day Summit, some 40 instruments of international law were signed, ratified or acceded to by 84 countries (59 at the level of heads of State or Government). A total of 273 treaty actions took place during that time (187 signatures and 86 ratifications), ranging from human rights treaties to conventions on refugees and stateless persons, international criminal matters, disarmament and the environment. The treaties that attracted the most attention were the Optional Protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict (59 signatures and 2 ratifications) and on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography (57 signatures and 1 ratification), adopted by General Assembly resolution 54/263 (see p. 615); the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (18 signatures and 4 ratifications), adopted by Assembly resolution 54/4 [YUN 1999, p. 1100]; the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court (12 signatures and 4 ratifications) [YUN 1998, p. 1209]; the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism (10 signatures and 2 ratifications), adopted by Assembly resolution 54/109 [YUN 1999, p. 1232]; and the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel (7 ratifications and accessions), adopted by Assembly resolution 49/59 [YUN 1994, p. 1289].

As a result of the success of the event, it was proposed to make similar appeals prior to each annual session of the General Assembly, inviting heads of State and Government to sign and ratify those treaties deposited with the Secretary-General to which their States were not yet party.

Chapter I

International peace and security

In 2000, the United Nations took action to reform its peacekeeping activities by laying secure and adequate foundations for an effective peacekeeping structure, while providing daily direction and support to the operations in the field. In March, the Secretary-General established a high-level panel to undertake a major review of UN peace and security activities and recommend ways to ensure that future peacekeeping operations were more effective. The panel's recommendations, contained in what was known as the "Brahimi report", after the panel's chairman, Lakhdar Brahimi, were endorsed by the General Assembly in December. In October, the Secretary-General presented a number of practical measures, including resource requirements, to support the broad objectives identified by the panel.

Equally important for the Organization were the growing concerns for the prevention of conflicts and the effectiveness of UN efforts towards post-conflict peace-building. In July, the Security Council held an open debate on conflict prevention during which Member States indicated their broad commitment to improving UN capacity for effective preventive action. In that regard, it took action to prevent the trade in illicit diamonds that were fuelling conflict in Africa. The Council also reviewed the role of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants in enhancing the effectiveness of UN peacekeeping and peace-building activities. Moreover, the Council, recognizing that wars and conflicts contributed to the spread of HIV/AIDS, discussed ways to incorporate HIV/AIDS prevention awareness skills and advice in UN peacekeeping operations.

During the year, the United Nations deployed 18 peacekeeping operations worldwide, with some 37,719 military personnel and civilian police serving under UN command as at 31 December 2000. The year began with 17 operations in place. Three missions ended during the year, one each in Africa, the Americas and Europe, and one new one was established in Africa. The total number of missions in place at the end of the year stood at 15.

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, the body responsible for reviewing UN peacekeeping operations in all their aspects, and its open-ended working group made proposals and recommendations to guide the principles, definitions and implementation of mandates and to enhance the capacity of the United Nations for peacekeeping and cooperation with regional groups, particularly in Africa.

The cost of UN peacekeeping operations amounted to $1,756.8 million for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, compared to $837.8 million during the previous 12-month period, while unpaid assessed contributions for peacekeeping operations amounted to $2,128.9 million as at 30 June 2000, compared to $1,687.6 million in 1999.

The Assembly considered various aspects of peacekeeping financing, financial performance and proposed budgets, the peacekeeping support account and the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund. It changed the procedure for apportioning the expenses of peacekeeping operations among States and reviewed the new procedure for the reimbursement of contingent-owned equipment and the management of peacekeeping assets, including the operation of the United Nations Logistics Base in Brindisi, Italy.

In addition to its peacekeeping operations, the United Nations addressed peace-building and other conflict situations through a number of political and human rights missions and the deployment of the Secretary-General's Special Representatives in Afghanistan, Angola, Burundi, the Central African Republic, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Guatemala, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia, Papua New Guinea, Somalia and Tajikistan.

Maintenance of international peace and security

Heads of State and Government Security Council Summit

In a 4 August statement to the media (S/2000/772), the Security Council President indicated the Council's intention, as a contribution to the General Assembly's Millennium Summit (see p. 47), to meet on 7 September at the level of heads of State and Government to consider the topic "Ensuring an effective role of the Security Council in the maintenance of international peace and security, particularly in Africa”.

At that meeting, which was attended by the Presidents of Argentina, China, France, Mali, Namibia, the Russian Federation, Tunisia, Ukraine and the United States, the Prime Ministers of Bangladesh, Canada, Jamaica, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom, and the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Malaysia, the Council, by resolution 1318(2000) (see p. 64), adopted the Millennium Summit declaration in which it resolved to strengthen the United Nations role in peace-keeping and pledged to enhance its effectiveness in addressing conflict at all stages from prevention to settlement to post-conflict peace-building.

Conflict prevention and peace-building

Preventive diplomacy and peacemaking

In a March report “We the peoples: the role of the United Nations in the twenty-first century” [A/54/2000], the Secretary-General said that there was near-universal agreement that prevention was preferable to cure, and that prevention strategies had to address the root causes of conflicts, not simply their violent symptoms. Consensus was not always matched by practical actions, however. Political leaders found it hard to sell prevention policies abroad to their public at home, because the costs were palpable and immediate, while the benefits were more difficult for the leaders to convey and the public to grasp. Thus, prevention was, first, a challenge of political leadership. To be successful at preventing deadly conflicts, there had to be a clear understanding of their causes, but no single strategy would be universally effective.

Noting that the majority of current wars were among the poor, the Secretary-General stated that every step taken towards reducing poverty and achieving broad-based economic growth was a step towards conflict prevention. All those engaged in conflict prevention and development, therefore—the United Nations, the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund), Governments and civil society organizations—should address those challenges in a more integrated fashion.

The Secretary-General further observed that in many poor countries at war, poverty was coupled with sharp ethnic or religious cleavages; the rights of subordinate groups were insufficiently respected, the institutions of government were insufficiently inclusive and the allocation of resources favoured the dominant faction over others. The solution was clear, even if difficult to achieve: promote human rights, protect minority rights and institute political arrangements in which all groups were represented.

Some armed conflicts, however, were driven by greed, not grievance. Often, the control over natural resources was at stake, drugs were often involved, the conflicts were abetted by opportunistic neighbours, and private sector actors were complicit—buying ill-gotten gains, helping to launder funds and feeding a steady flow of weapons into the conflict zone. The best preventive strategy in that context was transparency: “naming and shaming”. Civil society actors had an enormous role to play in that regard, but Governments and the Security Council should exercise their responsibility. Greater social responsibility on the part of global companies, including banks, was also essential.

Successful strategies for prevention required that old conflicts did not start up again, and that support was provided for post-conflict peace-building. However, it had to be recognized that even the best preventive and deterrence strategies could fail. Other measures, therefore, might be called for, including strengthening the commitment to protecting vulnerable people.

Security Council consideration. Speaking before the Security Council on 20 July [S/PV.4174], during its consideration of the agenda item on the role of the Security Council in conflict prevention, the Secretary-General stated that it was high time that prevention was given primacy in all the Organization's work. However, he observed that no two wars were alike and no single prevention strategy would be effective everywhere. There was no panacea. Prevention was multidimensional and effective prevention had to address the structural faults that predisposed a society to conflict. The best form of long-term conflict prevention was healthy and balanced economic development and the United Nations had a special role to play in that regard. The Department of Political Affairs, the designated focal point for conflict prevention within the UN system, had set up a Prevention Team to identify situations where UN preventive action could help, and other UN departments and agencies had taken similar measures to strengthen their preventive capacity. The Secretary-General had established a Framework for Coordination to improve interdepartmental and inter-agency links, and the Organization was working more closely with regional organizations. In addition, more than 400 staff system-wide had been trained in prevention and early warning at the United Nations Staff College in Turin, Italy.

The Secretary-General intended to continue to strengthen the Secretariat's information-gathering and analysis capacity and looked forward to a systhematic exchange with Council members on ways to do that. He recalled his earlier suggestions on steps the Council could take with regard to prevention, including making greater use of fact-finding missions, encouraging States to bring potential conflicts to the Council's attention and setting up an informal working group or a subsidiary organ to study early warning and prevention. He further suggested that some of the UN Charter's provisions relating to prevention had been underutilized and proposed that the Council hold periodic meetings at the Foreign Minister level, as provided for in Article 28, to discuss thematic or actual prevention issues; work more closely with the other principal UN organs; and place prevention issues on the agenda of the monthly meeting between the Presidents of the General Assembly and the Council. The Council could also obtain useful information and other assistance from the Economic and Social Council, as envisaged in Article 65; request under Article 96 an advisory opinion on any legal question from the International Court of Justice; and examine ways to interact more closely with non-State actors with expertise in prevention or that could make a difference to it. Civil society, including the corporate sector, also had a vital role to play in defusing or avoiding conflicts.

The Secretary-General believed that the time had come to review all those proposals and those put forward by Council members, and to agree on the most practical ideas for action. He thanked those Governments that had contributed a total of $7.4 million to the Trust Fund for Preventive Action. He believed that, although prevention cost money, intervention, relief and rebuilding broken societies and lives cost far more. Leaders would have to acknowledge that the international community could play a constructive role in internal situations and that that could strengthen sovereignty rather than weaken it. States would also have to give prevention institutions the backing they so urgently needed. Conflict prevention should become the cornerstone of collective security in the twenty-first century.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 July [meeting 4174], following the Security Council's discussion of its role in the prevention of armed conflicts and consultations among Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/25 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls the statements by its President of 16 and 24 September and 30 November 1998, 30 November 1999 and 23 March 2000, and recalls also resolutions 1196(1998) of 16 September 1998, 1197(1998) of 18 September 1998, and 1208

(1998) and 1209(1998) of 19 November 1998. Bearing in mind its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security, it reaffirms its role in taking appropriate steps aimed at the prevention of armed conflicts. It affirms its commitment to the principles of the political independence, sovereign equality and territorial integrity of all States. The Council also affirms the need for respect for human rights and the rule of law.

The Council stresses the need for the maintenance of regional and international peace and stability and friendly relations among all States, and underlines the overriding humanitarian and moral imperative as well as the economic advantages of preventing the outbreak and escalation of conflicts. It highlights, in this regard, the need to create a culture of prevention. The Council reaffirms its belief that early warning, preventive diplomacy, preventive deployment, preventive disarmament and post-conflict peace-building are interdependent and complementary components of a comprehensive conflict-prevention strategy. The Council emphasizes its continuing commitment to addressing the prevention of armed conflicts in all regions of the world.

The Council recognizes that peace is not only the absence of conflict, but that it requires a positive, dynamic, participatory process where dialogue is encouraged and conflicts are resolved in a spirit of mutual understanding and cooperation. Bearing in mind that causes of conflict are often nurtured in the minds of human beings, the Council calls upon Member States, relevant bodies of the United Nations system and other relevant organizations to promote a culture of peace. It recognizes the importance of appropriate implementation of the Declaration and Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace, adopted by the General Assembly on 13 September 1999, for preventing violence and conflicts as well as strengthening efforts aimed at the creation of conditions of peace, and consolidation thereof through post-conflict peace-building.

The Council recalls its important role in the peaceful settlement of disputes under Chapter VI of the Charter. It reaffirms the importance of its consideration of all situations that might deteriorate into armed conflicts, and of considering follow-up action, as appropriate. In this regard, it expresses continued willingness to consider the use of Council missions, with the consent of host countries, in order to determine whether any dispute, or any situation that might lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute, is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, and to make recommendations for action by the Council, as appropriate.

The Council highlights the importance of the full support of all States for the efforts of the Council and other relevant United Nations organs and agencies in developing and implementing appropriate strategies for the prevention of armed conflicts in accordance with the provisions of the Charter. The Council underlines the importance of the peaceful settlement of disputes and recalls the obligation of parties to disputes to seek actively a peaceful solution in accordance with the provisions of Chapter VI of the Charter. The Council also recalls the obligation of all Member States to accept and carry out its decisions, including those for the prevention of armed conflicts.

The Council also stresses the importance of a coordinated international response to economic, social, cultural and humanitarian problems, which are often the root causes of armed conflicts.

The Council recalls the essential role of the Secretary-General in the prevention of armed conflicts, in accordance with Article 99 of the Charter, and expresses its willingness to take appropriate preventive action in response to matters brought to its attention by States or the Secretary-General, which it deems likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security. The Council encourages the ongoing efforts within the United Nations system to enhance its early warning capacity, and notes in this regard the importance of drawing on information from a variety of sources, given the multiple factors that contribute to conflict. It invites the Secretary-General to make recommendations to the Council, taking into account the views of Member States and, in the light of past experience, on the most effective and appropriate early warning strategies, bearing in mind the need to link early warning with early response. The Council invites the Secretary-General to submit to the Council reports on such disputes, including, as appropriate, early warning and proposals for preventive measures.

The Council recognizes the important role regional organizations and arrangements play in the prevention of armed conflicts, including through the development of confidence- and security-building measures, and re-emphasizes the need for effective and sustained cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and such regional organizations and arrangements in the prevention of armed conflict, in accordance with the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter. It expresses its willingness, within its responsibilities, to support the efforts of the Secretary-General in collaborating with the leadership of regional organizations and arrangements in order to develop strategies and programmes to be employed at the regional level. In this regard, it encourages the strengthening of the modalities of cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations and arrangements, including in early warning and the mutual exchange of information. It recognizes the need to enhance the capacity of the Organization of African Unity, in particular, its Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution.

The Council recognizes the importance of effective post-conflict peace-building strategies in preventing the re-emergence of conflicts. In this context, it recognizes also the need for close cooperation among bodies of the United Nations system and with other organizations and arrangements in the area of post-conflict peace-building, and expresses its willingness to consider ways to improve such cooperation. It also stresses that the design of peacekeeping mandates that fully take into account operational military requirements and other relevant situations on the ground could help to prevent the re-emergence of conflicts. The Council highlights the importance of strengthening its cooperation with the Economic and Social Council, in accordance with Article 65 of the Charter, in the area of the prevention of armed conflicts, including in addressing the economic, social, cultural and humanitarian problems that are often the root causes of conflicts. It underlines the fact that economic rehabilitation and reconstruction constitute important elements in the long-term development of post-conflict societies and the maintenance of lasting peace, and stresses the importance of international assistance in this regard.

The Council highlights the importance of preventive deployment in armed conflicts, and reiterates its willingness to consider the deployment, with the consent of the host country, of preventive missions in appropriate circumstances.

The Council recalls the emphasis it placed in its statement of 23 March 2000 on the process of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, which can be vital in stabilizing post-conflict situations, reducing the likelihood of renewed violence and facilitating the transition from conflict to normalcy and development. The Council will take appropriate measures, with the consent of the State concerned, aimed at preventing the recurrence of armed conflicts, by, inter alia, developing adequate programmes for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants, including child soldiers.

The Council recognizes the important role of women in the prevention and resolution of conflicts and in peace-building. It stresses the importance of their increased participation in all aspects of the conflict prevention and resolution process.

The Council recognizes the fact that the illegal exploitation of and trade in natural resources, particularly diamonds, can contribute to the escalation of conflicts. The Council is particularly concerned that the proceeds from the illegal exploitation of and trade in high value commodities such as diamonds are providing funds for arms purchases, thus aggravating conflicts and humanitarian crises, in particular in Africa. It therefore expresses its willingness to seek the cooperation of Member States and the business community in curbing the illegal exploitation of and trade in these resources, particularly diamonds, and in effectively implementing the measures imposed by its relevant resolutions aimed at curbing illicit diamond flows.

The Council, while fully conscious of the responsibilities of other United Nations organs, emphasizes the crucial importance of disarmament and the non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and the means of their delivery for the maintenance of international peace and security.

The Council highlights, in particular, the importance of preventive disarmament in averting armed conflicts, and expresses concern that the proliferation and excessive and destabilizing accumulation and circulation of small arms and light weapons in many parts of the world have contributed to the intensity and duration of armed conflicts and pose a threat to peace and security. It calls upon States, international organizations and the business community to increase their efforts aimed at the prevention of illicit trafficking in small arms and light weapons.

The Council also emphasizes the importance of continued coordinated regional and international action with regard to small arms and welcomes initiatives such as the Inter-American Convention against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Ammunition, Explosives and other Related Materials, adopted by the General Assembly of the Organization of American States at its twenty-fourth special session, held in Washington D.C. on 13 and 14 November 1997, the Regional Action Programme for Tackling Arms Trafficking in Southern Africa, ratified in November 1998 by the European Union/Southern African Development Community ministerial meeting, and the Moratorium on the Importation, Exportation and Manufacture of Small Arms and Light Weapons in West Africa, adopted in Abuja on 31 October 1998 by the heads of State and Government of the Economic Community of West African States. It welcomes and encourages efforts to prevent and combat the excessive and destabilizing accumulation of and the illicit trafficking in small arms.

The Council underlines the vital importance of effective national regulations and controls on small arms transfers. The Council encourages Governments to exercise the highest degree of responsibility in these transactions. It calls for complementary supply- and demand-side measures, including those against illegal diversion and re-export. It underlines the obligation of all States to enforce existing arms interdiction measures. The Council emphasizes that the prevention of illicit trafficking is of immediate concern in the global search for ways and means to curb the excessive and destabilizing accumulation of small arms, especially in regions of conflict.

The Council recognizes the importance of adequate, stable and predictable resources for preventive action. The Council also recognizes the importance of consistent funding for long-term preventive activities. The Council encourages consideration of conflict prevention in development assistance strategies and recognition of the need to ensure a smooth transition from emergency humanitarian assistance to development in the post-conflict stage.

The Council acknowledges the important activities supported by the Trust Fund for Preventive Action, and encourages Member States to contribute to the Fund.

The Council recognizes the increasing demand for civilian police as a critical element in peacekeeping operations, as part of the general approach to conflict prevention. It calls upon Member States to explore ways to meet this demand in a timely and effective way. The Council invites the Secretary-General to include his recommendations in this respect in the report on conflict prevention requested below.

The Council underlines the need for continued in-depth consideration of this issue and, in this regard, invites the Secretary-General to submit to the Council, by May 2001, a report containing an analysis, and recommendations on initiatives within the United Nations, taking into account previous experience and the views and considerations expressed by Member States on the prevention of armed conflict.

The Council affirms that a reformed, strengthened and effective United Nations remains central to the maintenance of peace and security, of which prevention is a key component, and underlines the importance of enhancing the capacity of the Organization in preventive action, peacekeeping and peace-building.

The Council recalls the statement by its President of 30 November 1999, and reaffirms its willingness to consider the possibility of a meeting at the level of Ministers for Foreign Affairs on the issue of the prevention of armed conflicts during the Millennium Assembly.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Miyazaki Initiatives for Conflict Prevention.

By an 18 July letter [A/55/161-S/2000/714], Japan transmitted to the Secretary-General the G-8 Miyazaki Initiatives for Conflict Prevention, adopted by the Foreign Ministers of the Group of Eight major industrialized countries at their meeting in Miyazaki, Japan, on 13 July. The Ministers outlined a basic conceptual framework for conflict prevention efforts and identified initiatives in the areas of small arms and light weapons, conflict and development, illicit trade in diamonds, children in armed conflict and international civilian police.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in his report on the work of the Organization [A/55/1] (see p. 3), said that shifting from a culture of reaction to one of prevention was highly cost-effective in human and financial terms, offering the best possible chance to address the root causes of a conflict and providing a real opportunity to sow the seeds of a durable peace. However, the primary responsibility for conflict prevention lay with Member States, and successful conflict prevention, under UN auspices, required the political will to provide the necessary leadership and resources for action. The Secretary-General welcomed the growing attention Member States were paying to conflict prevention. The far-reaching presidential statements adopted by the Security Council and the G-8 action plan (see above) indicated their broad commitment to improving UN capacity for effective preventive action and it was important that the momentum be maintained. He noted that no region in the world illustrated the need to prevent conflict, and the cost of the failure to do so, more dramatically than Africa.

Conflict diamonds

The United Nations, since 1998, had recognized the link between the illegal exploitation of and trade in diamonds and the escalation of conflicts in Africa. In that year, the Security Council, by resolution 1173(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 108], prohibited the import from Angola of all diamonds that were not controlled through the certificate-of-origin regime of the Government of Angola, as part of its sanctions regime imposed on the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA). Following the failure of that regime to work effectively, the Council, by resolution 1237(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 112], established an independent Panel of Experts to investigate violations of its sanctions, including the diamond trade.

The Panel of Experts, in its final report submitted in March 2000 [S/2000/203], concluded that UNITA's ability to sell diamonds was based on its access to diamond-rich territories, its easy and protected access to external locations where diamond deals could be transacted and the ease with which illegal diamonds could be sold and traded on major diamond markets, particularly in Antwerp, Belgium, the largest diamond market. The lax controls and regulations governing the Antwerp diamond market facilitated and perhaps encouraged illegal trading activity, while lax controls in Angola facilitated diamond smuggling in that country.

The Panel made recommendations to discourage diamond smuggling and sanctions busting, including the convening of a conference of experts to determine a system of controls that would allow for increased transparency and accountability from the source or origin to the bourses; and the development of a mechanism for identifying diamonds entering diamond centres without a customs declaration, including the establishment of a comprehensive database on diamond characteristics and trends (see also p. 154).

The World Diamond Congress adopted a July resolution in support of the objectives of the measures contained in resolution 1173(1998), which led to the creation of the World Diamond Council.

In a 16 October note verbale [S/2000/998], Angola transmitted to the Security Council President its strategy against conflict diamonds and trade in illicit diamonds.

With regard to Sierra Leone, the Security Council, following the breakdown of the Lomé Peace Agreement [YUN 1999, p. 159], in July placed a mandatory prohibition on the purchase of diamonds from Sierra Leone that were not certified by the Government (resolution 1306(2000)) (see p. 201). It also encouraged the International Diamond Manufacturers Association, the World Federation of Diamond Bourses, the Diamond High Council and other representatives of the diamond industry to help develop methods and working practices to facilitate the effective implementation of that prohibition. In statement S/PRST/2000/25 of 20 July (see p. 73), the Council expressed its willingness to seek the cooperation of Member States and the business community in curbing the illegal exploitation of and trade in diamonds, and in effectively implementing the measures imposed by its relevant resolutions aimed at curbing illicit diamond flows.

In July [S/2000/662], India transmitted to the Security Council President a resolution on conflict diamonds adopted by the Gems and Jewellery Export Promotion Council of India on 2 May. India also expressed its support for the rules of the diamond industry with respect to stopping all trade in conflict diamonds and for the relevant UN resolutions on the issue.

The Kimberley Process. The Kimberley Process, initiated in May 2000 in Kimberley, South Africa, with subsequent meetings in Luanda (Angola), London and Windhoek (Namibia), evolved out of an inclusive approach by Governments, industry and civil society in the diamond exporting, processing and importing States to find solutions to the problem of conflict diamonds.

Within that framework, a ministerial meeting was held (Pretoria, South Africa, 21 September) [A/55/638], at the invitation of African diamond-producing countries, of Ministers and representatives of the world's leading diamond exporting, processing and importing States. In a statement adopted at that meeting, the Ministers expressed concern that the trade in conflict diamonds was prolonging wars in parts of Africa, frustrating development efforts and causing immense suffering. Conflict diamonds were understood to be rough diamonds that were illicitly traded by rebel movements to finance their attempts to overthrow legitimate Governments. The Ministers resolved to work together to deny those conflict diamonds access to world markets, while recognizing the difficulty of devising and enforcing measures to prevent their smuggling.

The Ministers welcomed important progress made, including the role of the Security Council in addressing the problem; the initiative of the G-8 summit meeting (Okinawa, Japan, 21-23 July) [A/55/257-S/2000/766] to support practical approaches, including consideration of an international agreement on certification of rough diamonds; national initiatives, especially by Angola (see above) and Sierra Leone, to put in place effective certification schemes, as well as the efforts by trading and marketing centres in Belgium, India and Israel to strengthen regulation of and transparency in the trade; and the proposed steps by the industry, including the resolution agreed at the World Diamond Congress to address the problem (see above).

The Ministers agreed that a comprehensive approach should be explored to deal with the causes and drivers of conflict. The establishment of an intergovernmental body to monitor compliance with the certification system should be investigated, including the relationship between such a body and the World Diamond Council. They expressed their resolve to maintain the momentum of the Kimberley Process by moving ahead into an intergovernmental process to design a workable international certification scheme for rough diamonds, favouring a simple and effective scheme that did not place undue burden on Governments and industry, particularly smaller producers. The Ministers welcomed the convening of an intergovernmental conference in London to bring together other interested States and to take the multilateral process forward.

London intergovernmental meeting. Representatives of 36 Governments, representing the world's leading rough diamond exporting, processing and importing States, the European Commission and the World Diamond Council met in London on 25 and 26 October to build on the momentum of the Kimberley Process [A/55/628]. They welcomed the Kimberley joint ministerial statement (see p. 76) and the action taken by the Security Council to address the problem of conflict diamonds. Participants emphasized the urgency of curbing the trade in conflict diamonds and underlined the need to devise effective and pragmatic measures to address the problem that complied with international law and that would not impede the legitimate diamond industry or impose undue burden on Governments or industry. Participants welcomed the start of a broader process to address the problem, consideration of the key elements of which would include: the creation and implementation of a simple and workable international certification scheme for rough diamonds, based primarily on national certification schemes; the need for national practices to meet internationally agreed minimum standards; securing the widest possible participation; the need for diamond exporting, processing and importing States to act in concert; appropriate arrangements to help secure compliance; and transparency. Participants agreed that the General Assembly debate was an important opportunity to further negotiations on an international rough diamonds certification scheme and agreed to work to ensure that the momentum of the Kimberley Process was maintained and strengthened.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 79], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/56 [draft: A/55/L.52 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 175].

The role of diamonds in fuelling conflict: breaking the link between the illicit transaction of rough diamonds and armed conflict as a contribution to prevention and settlement of conflicts

The General Assembly,

Expressing its concern over the problem of conflict diamonds fuelling conflicts in a number of countries and the devastating impact of these conflicts on peace, safety and security for people in affected countries,

Understanding conflict diamonds to be rough diamonds which are used by rebel movements to finance their military activities, including attempts to undermine or overthrow legitimate Governments,

Recognizing that the vast majority of rough diamonds produced in the world are from legitimate sources,

Recognizing also that the legitimate trade in diamonds makes a critical contribution to economic development in many countries worldwide,

Acknowledging that the problem of conflict diamonds is of serious international concern, and that measures to address the problem should involve all concerned parties, including producing, processing, exporting and importing countries, as well as the diamond industry,

Recognizing the need to address the problem of rough diamonds originating from territories of diamond-producing countries under military occupation by another country,

Emphasizing that these measures should be effective and pragmatic, consistent with international law, including relevant trade provisions and commitments, and should not impede the current legitimate trade in diamonds or impose an undue burden on Governments or industry, particularly smaller producers, and not hinder the development of the diamond industry,

Recalling all the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, including its resolutions 1173(1998) of 12 June 1998, 1295(2000) of 18 April 2000 and 1306(2000) of 5 July 2000, as well as resolution 1304(2000) of 16 June 2000,

Highlighting the additional important initiatives already taken to address this problem, in particular by the Governments of Angola and Sierra Leone and by other key producing, processing, exporting and importing countries, as well as by the diamond industry and civil society, including the creation by the industry of the World Diamond Council,

Welcoming with appreciation the initiative by the African diamond-producing countries to launch an inclusive consultation process of Governments, industry and civil society, referred to as the Kimberley Process, to deal with the issue,

Taking note of the ministerial statement issued at the conclusion of the meeting on diamonds held in Pretoria on 21 September 2000,

Also taking note of the communiqué issued by the London Intergovernmental Meeting on Conflict Diamonds, held on 25 and 26 October 2000,

1. Calls upon all States to implement fully Security Council measures targeting the link between the trade in conflict diamonds and the supply to rebel movements of weapons, fuel or other prohibited materiel;

2. Urges all States to support efforts of the diamond producing, processing, exporting and importing countries and the diamond industry to find ways to break the link between conflict diamonds and armed conflict, and encourages other appropriate initiatives to this end, including improved international cooperation on law enforcement;

3. Expresses the need to give urgent and careful consideration to devising effective and pragmatic measures to address the problem of conflict diamonds, the elements of which would include:

(a) The creation and implementation of a simple and workable international certification scheme for rough diamonds;

(b) Basing the scheme primarily on national certification schemes;

(c) The need for national practices to meet internationally agreed minimum standards;

(d) The aim of securing the widest possible participation;

(e) The need for diamond processing, exporting and importing States to act in concert;

(f) The need for appropriate arrangements to help to ensure compliance, acting with respect for the sovereignty of States;

(g) The need for transparency;

4. Welcomes the offer by the Government of Namibia to convene a workshop of the world's leading diamond processing, exporting and importing countries, continuing the momentum of the Kimberley Process to consider technical aspects pertaining to the envisaged international certification scheme for rough diamonds;

5. Encourages the countries participating in the Kimberley Process to consider expanding the membership of the Process in order to allow all key States with a significant interest in the world diamond industry to participate in further meetings, and to move ahead with the intergovernmental negotiating process to develop detailed proposals for the envisaged international certification scheme for rough diamonds, in close collaboration with the diamond industry and taking into account the views of the relevant elements of civil society;

6. Requests the countries participating in the Kimberley Process to submit to the General Assembly, no later than at its fifty-sixth session, a report on progress made;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "The role of diamonds in fuelling conflict".

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item "The role of diamonds in fuelling conflict" would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458).

Post-conflict peace-building

The Secretary-General, in his report on the role of the United Nations in the twenty-first century [A/54/2000] (see p. 55), said that while traditional peacekeeping had focused mainly on monitoring ceasefires, the objective of the current complex peace operations of the United Nations was to assist the parties engaged in conflict to pursue their interests through political channels instead. To that end, the Organization helped to create and strengthen political institutions and to broaden their base. It worked alongside Governments, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and local citizens' groups to provide emergency relief, demobilize former fighters and reintegrate them into society, clear mines, organize and conduct elections, and promote sustainable development practices.

International assistance to rebuild the economy was an essential complement to that work, as people would quickly become disillusioned with fledgling institutions, and even the peace process itself, if they saw no prospect for any material improvement in their condition. Post-conflict peace-building had helped to prevent the breakdown of numerous peace agreements and to build the foundations for sustainable peace.

Review of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration

As requested in Security Council statement S/PRST/1999/21 [YUN 1999, p. 50], the Secretary-General submitted a February report on the role of United Nations peacekeeping in disarmament, demobilization and reintegration [S/2000/101]. The report reviewed the evolution of UN involvement in the area, identified key elements that favoured the success of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process, highlighted ways in which peacekeeping operations had assisted in the past and suggested ways in which the Organization could better support future efforts.

The report noted that, in civil conflicts of the post-cold-war era, a process of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration had repeatedly proved to be vital in stabilizing a post-conflict situation, reducing the likelihood of renewed violence and facilitating a society's transition from conflict to normalcy and development, as well as contributing to strengthening confidence between former factions and enhancing the momentum towards stability. The success of the process depended on the political will of the parties to commit themselves to peace, political leaders building working relationships through commitment to reconciliation and undertaking necessary institutional reforms, and the widespread support and engagement of civil society. However, the complexity and fragility of that process often required the assistance of the international community. An impartial UN peacekeeping operation could play an essential role by helping to create an environment where the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process could ultimately be successful, including paying special attention to the needs of child soldiers.

Although the engagement of UN operations in the process was relatively recent, it had rapidly become a well-established feature of post-cold-war peacekeeping. The first operation to be involved in the process was the United Nations Observer Group in Central America in 1989, which was followed by other UN operations with key responsibilities for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration: in Angola, Cambodia, Croatia, El Salvador, Guatemala, Liberia, Sierra Leone and Tajikistan. In others, such as the Central African Republic and Somalia, the Organization had assumed responsibility for only some elements.

The report observed that a UN operation might bring key advantages of impartiality, legitimacy, security, political momentum and resources to a disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process and had the unique ability to coordinate simultaneous efforts in many different areas. It went on to suggest a number of measures for a peacekeeping operation to advance the process: the basis for it should be provided for in a peace agreement, and the international community's advocacy might be essential in ensuring its inclusion; and expertise and resources should be provided to a peacekeeping operation that allowed it to offer incentives to combatants, to undertake the destruction of weapons and to monitor and help control regional arms traffic. It might also be necessary for the international community to focus on the economic dimension of arms flows. With regard to demobilization, a review of past experience showed the importance of a strong political role and ample resources for peacekeeping operations, including at times a deterrent capacity. A peacekeeping operation might make direct contributions to reintegration and assist in fostering an appropriate political and socio-economic framework. However, further efforts were necessary to enhance UN access to the skills and resources required. The ability of peacekeeping operations to advance reintegration could also be strengthened through enhancement of institutional coordination within the international community. The international community could respond to the needs of children in the conflict area by promoting the inclusion of child protection in peace agreements and integrating it into the staffing and mandates of UN peacekeeping operations. However, donors should adopt a holistic and long-term view of the demobilization and reintegration of child soldiers, which also embraced social healing and economic development. Given the significant staffing and resource implications of those measures, real progress would require sustained political, moral and financial support by the Secretariat and Member States.

The ultimate success of a disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process might require efforts long after the withdrawal of a peacekeeping operation, including the deployment of a follow-on mission. Such missions might take the form of police or political missions, but it remained crucial that such operations should have a sufficiently broad mandate to make a difference, together with the resources and personnel to achieve that goal. The international community's key role in post-conflict disarmament, demobilization and reintegration was to provide clear, consistent and determined support to an overall peace process and to offer long-term assistance with development.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 March [meetings 4118 & 4119], following the Security Council's consideration of the Secretary-General's report on the role of the United Nations in disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and consultations among its members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/10 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls the statement of its President of 8 July 1999 and welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the role of United Nations peacekeeping in disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of 11 February 2000. The Council recalls its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security and reaffirms its commitment to the principles of the political independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States in conducting all peacekeeping and peace-building activities and the need for States to comply with their obligations under international law.

The Council has considered the matter of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants in a peacekeeping environment as part of its overall and continuing effort to contribute to enhancing the effectiveness of United Nations peacekeeping and peace-building activities in conflict situations around the world.

The Council underlines that disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants are mutually supportive and that the success of the process is dependent on the success of each of its steps. The Council stresses that the political commitment of the parties involved in a peace process is a precondition for the success of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes. The Council reaffirms that disarmament and demobilization must take place in a secure and safe environment, which will give ex-combatants the confidence to lay down their arms, and underlines the importance of international assistance for long-term economic and social development to facilitate successful reintegration. In this regard, the Council notes that disarmament, demobilization and reintegration must be addressed comprehensively so as to facilitate a smooth transition from peacekeeping to peacebuilding.

The Council recognizes that the mandates of peacekeeping missions increasingly include oversight of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration as one of their functions. The Council further recognizes the importance of incorporating, as appropriate, within specific peace agreements, with the consent of the parties, and on a case-by-case basis within United Nations peacekeeping mandates, clear terms for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants, including the safe and timely collection and disposal of arms and ammunition. The Council emphasizes that the advocacy of the international community is essential in this regard. The Council also underlines the necessity of a clear definition of tasks and division of responsibilities among all actors involved in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process, including United Nations agencies and programmes, and that this should be reflected, where relevant, in the mandates of peacekeeping operations.

The Council recognizes that effective action to curb the illegal flow of small arms and light weapons into areas of conflict can contribute to the success of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes, and encourages further efforts and co-operation at the national, subregional, regional and global levels to this end.

The Council underlines in particular the importance of disarming, demobilizing and reintegrating child soldiers, as well as taking into account the problems faced by war-affected children in mission areas. It is therefore imperative that child soldiers be fully included in disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes, and that programmes also be designed to address the special needs of all war-affected children, taking into account differences in sex and age, and their differing experiences in the course of armed conflict, with particular attention to girls. In this regard, the Council requests the Secretary-General to consult relevant United Nations agencies, including the United Nations Children's Fund, the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, and other relevant organizations with expertise in the field with a view to the development of appropriate programmes, and underlines the importance of coordination in this regard.

The Council welcomes the initiative of the Secretary-General to include within all peacekeeping operations personnel with appropriate training in international, humanitarian, human rights and refugee law, including child- and gender-related provisions. In this regard, the Council welcomes the inclusion of a child protection adviser in some of the recent peacekeeping operations, and encourages the Secretary-General to include such personnel in future operations as appropriate. The Council stresses the importance of addressing, in particular, the needs of women ex-combatants, notes the role of women in conflict resolution and peace-building and requests the Secretary-General to take that into account.

The Council recognizes that adequate and timely funding for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration is critical to the successful implementation of a peace process, and calls for coordination of voluntary and assessed funding to that end, including among all elements of the United Nations system. The Council welcomes the increasing involvement of the World Bank in disarmament, demobilization and reintegration processes and stresses the imporance of support of Member States for its activities in this area. The Council further encourages other international financial institutions to become involved.

The Council stresses that training of peacekeepers in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants continues to be an important asset in the implementation of these activities in mission areas. In that regard, the Council notes that the review by the Secretary-General of lessons learned from disarmament, demobilization and reintegration experiences may assist Member States and others in their training efforts. The Council encourages the Secretary-General to explore avenues of cooperation with existing and new peacekeeping training centres in the implementation of such training programmes.

The Council takes note that the ultimate success of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process may require efforts long after the withdrawal of multidisciplinary peacekeeping operations. In this regard, the post-conflict United Nations presence, including the deployment, as appropriate, of a follow-on mission, may help support the advances made and further make progress on the matter.

The Council encourages the Secretary-General to continue to address this issue on a regular basis and to draw to its attention any new developments in this area.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Recommendations of the Panel on UN Peace Operations

The Panel on United Nations Peace Operations (see p. 83), in its August report [A/55/305-S/2000/809], said that peace-building support offices or United Nations political offices might be established as follow-ons to other peace operations, as in Haiti or Tajikistan, or as independent initiatives, as in Guatemala or Guinea-Bissau. They helped to support the consolidation of peace in post-conflict countries, working with Governments and non-governmental parties and complementing ongoing UN development activities. Effective peace-building required active, multidimensional engagements with local parties. Free and fair elections should be part of broader efforts to strengthen governance institutions, and UN civilian police should be tasked to reform, train and restructure local police forces according to international standards. Where required, international judicial experts, penal experts and human rights specialists, as well as civilian police, should be available in sufficient numbers to strengthen rule of law institutions, and be authorized to further the work of apprehension and prosecution of persons indicted for war crimes in support of UN tribunals. The human rights component of a peacekeeping operation was critical to effective peace-building, especially in helping to implement a comprehensive programme for national reconciliation, and the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants was an area in which peace-building made a direct contribution to public security and law and order.

The Panel's recommendations included that the Executive Committee on Peace and Security should propose a plan to strengthen UN capacity to develop peace-building strategies and to implement accompanying support programmes.

In October [A/55/502], the Secretary-General reported that he had instructed the Executive Committee to formulate such a plan by the end of March 2001 to help identify ways in which different parts of the UN system might properly work together to devise country-specific peace-building strategies and to implement them together in the context of the country team.

Other action

The Security Council, in statement S/PRST/2000/7 of 9 March (see p. 855), recognized the importance of the humanitarian dimension to the maintenance of international peace and security and that full and timely support for humanitarian components could be critical in ensuring and enhancing the sustainability of any peace agreement and post-conflict peace-building.

In July [A/55/138-S/2000/693], Namibia transmitted to the General Assembly and the Council the Windhoek Declaration and the Namibia Plan of Action on Mainstreaming a Gender Perspective in Multidimensional Peace Support Operations, adopted at a seminar (Windhoek, 29-31 May) organized by the Lessons Learned Unit of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) and the Office of the Special Adviser on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women.

In resolution 1325(2000) of 31 October (see p. 1113), the Council recognized that an understanding of the impact of armed conflict on women and girls, effective institutional arrangements to guarantee their protection and full participation in the peace process could significantly contribute to the maintenance and promotion of peace and security. It urged the increased representation of women at all decision-making levels in national, regional and international institutions and mechanisms for the prevention, management and resolution of conflict.

Impact of AIDS on peace and security

On 10 January [S/PV.4087], the Security Council considered the agenda item entitled "The situation in Africa", focusing on the impact of AIDS on peace and security. The Executive Director of the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) told the meeting that war was one of the instruments of AIDS, as rape was one of the instruments of war. Conflict and the resulting movements of people fuelled the epidemic. Refugee men, and particularly women, became vulnerable to HIV infection. Humanitarian aid workers and military and police forces that were well trained in HIV prevention and behaviour change could be a tremendous force for prevention if that was made one of their priorities.

In a 31 January letter [S/2000/75], the Council President informed the General Assembly President that, as a result of those discussions and following further consultations, members of the Council recognized the negative impact of AIDS on peace and security in Africa and worldwide and considered that the United Nations should elaborate a comprehensive and effective agenda for action against the HIV/AIDS epidemic. The Council suggested that the Assembly review the problem in all its aspects and consider proposing new strategies, methods, practical activities and specific measures to strengthen international co-operation (see p. 1166).

On 17 July, the Council continued consideration of HIV/AIDS and international peacekeeping operations in the context of its responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security. It had before it a 5 July letter from the Secretary-General [S/2000/657], transmitting a note from UNAIDS, which summarized actions taken as a follow-up to the Council's 10 January meeting on HIV/AIDS in Africa. They included the endorsement by the Inter-Agency Standing Committee of a plan to integrate HIV/AIDS into humanitarian action, focusing on the role of the military and peacekeeping forces in the prevention and spread of HIV, the epidemic's potential to contribute to social instability and emergency situations, and the need for a set of basic measures to ensure minimum standards of prevention and care before, during and immediately after conflicts or disasters occurred. The UNAIDS secretariat would implement the plan.

Discussions had been held with DPKO and the Civil Military Alliance, a UNAIDS collaborating centre, focusing on ways in which conflict and humanitarian situations sometimes brought about an elevated risk of HIV transmission for refugees and host communities, as well as for UN and NGO personnel. The goal was to promote responsible and safe behaviour among staff providing humanitarian aid and peacekeeping troops and to ensure they were aware of preventive measures to protect themselves. Specific follow-up actions included the development of a UN medical policy on HIV/AIDS for personnel associated with UN missions. The UNAIDS secretariat would work closely with the World Health Organization, the United Nations Population Fund and DPKO on the issue. In addition, the Framework for Action of the International Partnership against AIDS in Africa, comprising a set of agreed principles, goals and targets, was completed and endorsed by the Conference of African Ministers of Health (Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, May) and the UNAIDS Programme Coordinating Board. It brought together, under the leadership of African Governments, the UN system, donor Governments, the private sector and the community sector. The note also summarized progress made at the country level.

Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations (11 February–10 March) [A/54/839] recognized the concerns of Member States regarding medical aspects of peacekeeping operations, including the high risk of transmission and contraction of HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases facing UN peacekeeping and other personnel in the field. It requested DPKO to incorporate language into the “Guidelines for Military and CIVPOL Participation in Peacekeeping Operations” manuals, to raise peacekeepers’ awareness of those diseases, and the Training Unit to promote that awareness through the train-the-trainers programme.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 17 July [meeting 4172], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1308(2000). The draft text [S/2000/696] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Deeply concerned by the extent of the HIV/AIDS pandemic worldwide, and by the severity of the crisis in Africa in particular,

Recalling its meeting of 10 January 2000 on “The situation in Africa: the impact of AIDS on peace and security in Africa”, taking note of the note of 5 July 2000 from the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS, which summarizes follow-up actions taken to date, and recalling also the letter dated 31 January 2000 from the President of the Security Council addressed to the President of the General Assembly,

Emphasizing the important roles of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in addressing HIV/AIDS,

Stressing the need for coordinated efforts of all relevant United Nations organizations to address the HIV/AIDS pandemic in line with their respective mandates and to assist, wherever possible, in global efforts against the pandemic,

Commending the efforts of the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS to coordinate and intensify efforts to address HIV/AIDS in all appropriate forums,

Recalling the special meeting of the Economic and Social Council of 28 February 2000, held in partnership with the President of the Security Council, on the development aspects of the HIV/AIDS pandemic,

Welcoming the decision by the General Assembly to include in the agenda of its fifty-fourth session an additional item of an urgent and important character entitled “Review of the problem of human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) in all its aspects”, and encouraging further action to address the problem of HIV/AIDS,

Recognizing that the spread of HIV/AIDS can have a uniquely devastating impact on all sectors and levels of society,

Reaffirming the importance of a coordinated international response to the HIV/AIDS pandemic, given its possible growing impact on social instability and emergency situations,

Recognizing that the HIV/AIDS pandemic is also exacerbated by conditions of violence and instability, which increase the risk of exposure to the disease through large movements of people, widespread uncertainty over conditions and reduced access to medical care,

Stressing that the HIV/AIDS pandemic, if unchecked, may pose a risk to stability and security,

Recognizing the need to incorporate HIV/AIDS prevention awareness skills and advice in aspects of the training provided to peacekeeping personnel by the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat, and welcoming the report of the United Nations Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations of 20 March 2000, which affirmed this need and the efforts already made by the Secretariat in this regard,

Taking note of the call by the Secretary-General, in his report to the Millennium Assembly, for coordinated and intensified international action to reduce HIV infection rates in persons between 15 and 24 years of age by 25 per cent by the year 2010,

Noting with satisfaction the thirteenth International AIDS Conference, held from 9 to 14 July 2000 in Durban, South Africa, which was the first conference of this type to be held in a developing country and drew significant attention to the magnitude of the HIV/AIDS pandemic in sub-Saharan Africa, and noting that the conference was an important opportunity for leaders and scientists to discuss the epidemiology of HIV/AIDS and estimates of resources needed to address HIV/AIDS, as well as issues related to access to care, mother-to-child transmission, prevention, and development of vaccines,

Bearing in mind the primary responsibility of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security,

1. Expresses concern at the potentially damaging impact of HIV/AIDS on the health of international peacekeeping personnel, including support personnel;

2. Recognizes the efforts of those Member States that have acknowledged the problem of HIV/AIDS and, where applicable, have developed national programmes, and encourages all interested Member States that have not already done so to consider developing, in cooperation with the international community and the Joint United Nations Programme on

HIV/AIDS, where appropriate, effective long-term strategies for HIV/AIDS education, prevention, voluntary and confidential testing and counselling, and treatment of their personnel, as an important part of their preparation for participation in peacekeeping operations;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to take further steps towards the provision of training for peacekeeping personnel on issues related to preventing the spread of HIV/AIDS and to continue the further development of pre-deployment orientation and ongoing training for all peacekeeping personnel on these issues;

4. Encourages interested Member States to increase international cooperation among their relevant national bodies to assist with the creation and execution of policies for HIV/AIDS prevention, voluntary and confidential testing and counselling, and treatment for personnel to be deployed in international peacekeeping operations;

5. Encourages, in this context, the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS to continue to strengthen its cooperation with interested Member States to further develop its country profiles in order to reflect best practices in and country policies on HIV/AIDS prevention education, testing, counselling and treatment;

6. Expresses keen interest in additional discussion among relevant United Nations bodies, Member States, industry and relevant organizations to make progress, inter alia, on the question of access to treatment and care, and on prevention.

Peacekeeping operations

In recognition of the increasingly complex task faced by the United Nations as it sought to prevent and resolve conflict, and to keep and build the peace, the Secretary-General established a panel of experts led by the former Minister for Foreign Affairs of Algeria, Lakhdar Brahimi, to produce a report that would provide an overview of peace operations and suggest how they might be strengthened. That report—the Brahimi report—was considered by the Security Council and the General Assembly.

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, whose mandate was to review the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects, held a general debate on 11, 14 and 15 February [A/54/839] and, at an extraordinary session in November [A/C.4/55/6], created an open-ended working group to examine the Brahimi report's recommendations.

Report of Panel on UN Peace Operations

On 21 August [A/55/305-S/2000/809], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Presidents of the General Assembly and the Security Council the report of the Chairman of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations (the Brahimi report). The Panel, which the Secretary-General appointed in March to assess the shortcomings of the existing system and to make specific and realistic recommendations for change, comprised individuals experienced in various aspects of conflict prevention, peacekeeping and peace-building and was headed by Lakhdar Brahimi (Algeria). It examined the need for change, the doctrine, strategy and decision-making for peace operations, UN capacities to deploy operations rapidly and effectively, Headquarters resources and structure for planning and supporting peacekeeping, adapting peace operations to the information age and challenges to implementation.

The Panel endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendations with respect to conflict prevention contained in the Millennium Report [A/54/2000] (see p. 55) and in his remarks before the Security Council's July meeting on conflict prevention (see p. 72), in particular his appeal that all those engaged in conflict prevention and development should address those challenges in a more integrated fashion. It also supported the Secretary-General's more frequent use of fact-finding missions and stressed Member States' obligations under the Charter to give "every assistance" to such UN activities.

In terms of a peace-building strategy, the Panel recommended: that a small percentage of a mission's first-year budget should be used to fund quick-impact projects; a doctrinal shift in the use of civilian police, other rule of law elements and human rights experts in complex peace operations to reflect an increased focus on strengthening rule of law institutions and improving respect for human rights in post-conflict environments; that demobilization and reintegration programmes should be consolidated into the assessed budgets of complex peace operations in their first phase to facilitate the rapid disassembly of fighting factions and reduce the likelihood of resumed conflict; and that the Executive Committee on Peace and Security (ECPS) should recommend to the Secretary-General a plan to strengthen the permanent UN capacity to develop peace-building strategies and implement supporting programmes.

With regard to doctrine and strategy, the Panel stated that UN peacekeepers should be able to carry out their mandates professionally and successfully. In order to be able to defend themselves and the mission's mandate against those who would renege on their commitments to a peace accord, they should be provided with robust rules of engagement. As to mandates, the Security Council should assure that ceasefire or peace agreements with a UN-led peacekeeping operation met threshold conditions, such as consistency with international human rights standards and practicability of specified tasks and timeliness, and should leave authorizing resolutions in draft form until the Secretary-General had firm commitments of troops and other critical mission support elements from Member States. "Rapid and effective deployment capacities" should be defined as the ability to fully deploy traditional peacekeeping operations within 30 days of the adoption of a Council resolution and within 90 days in the case of complex peacekeeping operations. The Council's resolutions should meet the requirements of peacekeeping operations deployed into potentially dangerous situations, especially the need for a clear chain of command and unity of effort. Troop contributors should have access to Secretariat briefings to the Council on matters affecting the safety and security of their personnel, especially those meetings with implications for a mission's use of force.

Concerning information and analysis, the Secretary-General should establish the ECPS Information and Strategic Analysis Secretariat (EISAS) to support the information and analysis needs of all members of ECPS, administered by and reporting jointly to the Department of Political Affairs (DPA) and the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO).

In connection with transitional civil administration, the Panel recommended that the Secretary-General invite a panel of international legal experts to evaluate the feasibility of developing an interim criminal code for use pending the re-establishment of local rule of law and local law enforcement capacity.

Regarding mission leadership, the Secretary-General should systematize the method of selecting mission leaders, and the entire leadership of a mission should be selected and assembled at Headquarters as early as possible to enable their participation in key aspects of the mission planning process. The Secretariat should routinely provide the mission leadership with strategic guidance and plans for anticipating and overcoming challenges to mandate implementation.

As for military personnel, Member States should enter into partnerships with one another, within the context of the United Nations standby arrangements system (UNSAS), to form several brigade-size forces for rapid and effective deployment. The Secretary-General should be given the authority to canvass Member States to contribute troops to a potential operation once it appeared likely that a ceasefire accord or agreement envisaging an implementing role for the Organization might be reached. The Secretariat should confirm the preparedness of each potential troop contributor to meet the provisions of the memorandums of understanding on the requisite training and equipment requirements prior to deployment. A revolving "on-call list" of about 100 military officers should be created in UNSAS to be available on seven days' notice to augment the nuclei of DPKO planners with teams trained to create a mission headquarters for a new peacekeeping operation.

Concerning civilian police personnel, the Panel encouraged Member States to establish a national pool of civilian police officers for deployment to UN peace operations on short notice, within the context of UNSAS; to enter into regional training partnerships for civilian police in the respective national pools to promote a common level of preparedness; and to designate a single point of contact within their governmental structures for the provision of civilian police to UN peace operations. It recommended that a revolving on-call list of about 100 police officers and related experts be created in UNSAS to be available on seven days' notice to train incoming personnel and give the component greater coherence at an early date. Parallel arrangements should be established for judicial, penal, human rights and other relevant specialists.

As to civilian specialists, the Secretariat should establish a central Internet/Intranet-based roster of pre-selected civilian candidates available to deploy to peace operations on short notice, and field missions should be delegated the authority to recruit candidates from it. The Field Service category of personnel should be reformed, especially at the mid- to senior levels in the administrative and logistics areas, and conditions of service for externally recruited civilian staff should be revised to attract the most highly qualified candidates and to offer greater career prospects. DPKO should formulate a comprehensive staffing strategy for peace operations.

The Panel suggested that additional resources should be devoted in mission budgets to public information and associated personnel and for information technology. The Secretariat should prepare a global logistics support strategy to enable rapid and effective mission deployment within proposed timeliness and planning assumptions. The General Assembly should approve the maintenance of at least five mission start-up kits at the UN Logistics Base in Brindisi, Italy, to be routinely replenished from the assessed contributions to operations drawing on them. The Secretary-General should be given authority to draw up to $50 million from the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund, once an operation was likely to be established, with the approval of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) but prior to the adoption of a Security Council resolution. The Secretariat should review procurement policies and procedures and those governing the management of financial resources in the field missions to provide such missions with greater flexibility in the management of their budgets. The level of procurement authority delegated to the field missions should be increased from $200,000 to as much as $1 million for local goods and services not covered under systems contracts or standing commercial services contracts.

The Panel recommended a substantial increase in resources for Headquarters support of peacekeeping operations, and urged the Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly his requirements in full. Headquarters support for peacekeeping should be treated as a core activity of the United Nations and funded through the regular biennial programme budget. Pending the preparation of the next regular budget, the Secretary-General should request from the Assembly an emergency supplemental increase to the peacekeeping support account to allow immediate recruitment of additional personnel, particularly in DPKO.

Integrated mission task forces should be the standard vehicle for mission-specific planning and support, serving as the first point of contact for all such support. Other structural adjustments in DPKO should include the restructuring of the Military and Civilian Police Division, moving the Civilian Police Unit out of the military reporting chain; the upgrading of the rank and level of the Civilian Police Adviser; the restructuring of the Military Adviser's Office to correspond more closely to that of the military field headquarters; the establishment of a new unit to provide advice on criminal law issues that were critical to the effective use of civilian police in UN peace operations; the delegation by the Under-Secretary-General for Management of authority and responsibility for peacekeeping-related budgeting and procurement functions to the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations for a two-year trial period; the enhancement of the Lessons Learned Unit, which should be moved into a revamped DPKO Office of Operations; consideration given to increasing the number of Assistant Secretaries-General in DPKO from two to three, with one of the three designated as the "Principal Assistant Secretary-General" and functioning as the deputy to the Under-Secretary-General; and the establishment of a unit for operational planning and support of public information in peace operations.

With regard to peace-building, the Panel supported the Secretariat's effort to create a pilot Peace-building Unit within DPA and suggested that regular budgetary support for that unit be revisited if the programme worked well. That programme should be evaluated and, if considered the best available option, it should be presented to the Secretary-General as part of the plan to strengthen the Organization's permanent peace-building capacity. The Panel also recommended that regular budget resources for Electoral Assistance Division programmatic expenses be increased to meet the growing demand for its services, in lieu of voluntary contributions, and that procurement, logistics, staff recruitment and other support services for smaller, non-military field missions be provided by the UN Office for Project Services (UNOPS).

The Panel recommended that the field mission planning and preparation capacity of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights be enhanced, with funding partly from the regular budget and partly from peace operations mission budgets.

In the context of the information age, the Panel said that Headquarters peace and security departments needed a responsibility centre to devise and oversee the implementation of common information technology strategy and training for peace operations. EISAS, in cooperation with the Information Technology Services Division, should implement an enhanced peace operations element on the current UN Intranet and link it to the missions through a Peace Operations Extranet.

The Security Council, in resolution 1318(2000) of 7 September (see p. 64), welcomed the Panel's report and decided to consider the recommendations that fell within its responsibility expeditiously. The heads of State and Government attending the Millennium Summit, in resolution 55/2 of 8 September (see p. 49), took note of the Panel's report and requested the General Assembly to consider its recommendations expeditiously.

Implementation of the Panel's report

Report of Secretary-General. In October, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly [A/55/502] and the Security Council [S/2000/1081] his report on the implementation of the report of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations. He stated that he had already implemented the Panel's recommendation to designate a senior official to oversee the report's implementation, by assigning the Deputy Secretary-General that responsibility. The Secretary-General's initial proposals for implementing the recommendations were in the areas of enhancing the effectiveness of key peace and security instruments; new mechanisms for improving system-wide integration; enhancing rapid and effective deployment capacities; funding of Headquarters support to peacekeeping operations; the proposed restructuring of DPKO; strengthening other parts of the UN system; and information technology and knowledge management.

With regard to conflict prevention, the Secretary-General said that he would submit, in response to Security Council presidential statement S/PRST/2000/25 (see p. 73), a report on conflict prevention in May 2001. He had also asked the Executive Committees on Peace and Security and on Humanitarian Affairs to explore, together with the Bretton Woods institutions, additional initiatives on conflict prevention, in addition to those he had described in his 2000 annual report on the work of the Organization (see p. 7). He also proposed that the United Nations serve as the focal point for various inter-agency coordinating mechanisms for the formulation of conflict prevention strategies.

In the area of peace-building, the Secretary-General had instructed ECPS to formulate a plan to address stronger measures to reduce poverty and promote economic growth as important dimensions of peace-building, and intended to seek legislative approval for a percentage of a mission's first-year budget to fund quick-impact projects. He also intended to include comprehensive disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes in plans for future peacekeeping operations so that they could be included in the operations' mandates. Future concepts of operations and missions budgets would spell out more clearly what the UN system could collectively do to help strengthen the rule of law and human rights institutions.

As to transitional administration, work on developing an interim criminal code for use by UN operations with transitional administrative mandates had begun and the first draft of interim rules of criminal law and procedure was expected by July 2001.

With regard to peacekeeping operations themselves, the Secretary-General outlined measures that the Secretariat could take to help peacekeepers carry out their mandates and requested an increase in resources for the Military Division (including for the Training Unit) and the Lessons Learned Unit of DPKO.

In order to improve system-wide integration, the Secretary-General proposed creating the ECPS Information and Strategic Analysis Secretariat by January 2001 by consolidating resources of various departments and offices. In addition to providing secretariat services for the Executive Committee and serving as the focal point for cross-cutting strategies and information technology, EISAS would be assigned the role of coordinating the formulation of system-wide peace-building strategies. In that connection, the Secretary-General intended to establish a Peacebuilding Unit, within EISAS, to be financed from extrabudgetary resources. Further details on the structure and required resources of EISAS would be presented in the report on resource requirements (see p. 91). Concerning the institution of integrated mission task forces, the Secretary-General indicated his intention to do so for the planning and initial deployment phases of all new multidisciplinary operations, as well as in support of peacemaking efforts. The Bretton Woods institutions would also participate in the integrated task force structure during peacemaking and mission planning stages.

Additional resources would be requested to allow DPKO and DPA to perform their coordinating roles effectively.

With regard to enhancing rapid deployment capacities, the Secretary-General said he had asked relevant parts of the Secretariat to use the timelines proposed by the Panel as a basis for evaluating the capacity of existing systems to provide field missions with the human, material, financial and information assets that they required, in quantitative and qualitative terms. As for the selection process for mission leaders, the Secretary-General had decided to form a senior appointments group to oversee the formulation of recommendations. That group, as from February 2001, would, among other functions, expand and centralize the existing senior appointment roster system by consolidating one roster for all senior appointments to peace operations. It would also be asked to recommend training/briefing procedures, to be made standard practice. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the United Nations Development Group would be asked to make recommendations by March 2001 on improving the selection, training and support of resident coordinators sent to posts with strong prevention and peace-building demands, as well as on procedures for reviewing those currently serving in such posts. Training teams from Headquarters would also deploy in field missions to conduct training in situ, and training cells would be established in each mission to train mission personnel at all levels. Provision would be made in the budgets of peace operations for such training. In addition, the Office of Human Resources Management (OHRM) Learning Service, together with the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, would develop a systematic approach for briefing and debriefing Special Representatives. Annual seminars, the first of which would be held in 2001, would be organized as a forum for sharing experiences and discussion with Headquarters personnel.

In connection with military personnel, the Secretary-General invited participants in UNSAS to inform DPKO by 1 December 2000 if the assets they had listed in the system were in fact available for immediate deployment. He noted that it would be preferable to have a much smaller number of assets listed than having a large figure that was unrealistic. He also invited participants to indicate at the end of each month any changes to the status of availability of assets. He added that he had asked DPKO to institute procedures to contact UNSAS participants regarding the availability of assets in a mission-specific context and maintain statistics on response rates. To better manage the system, he would be requesting additional resources. Regarding civilian police and related personnel, work had already begun to assist Member States to identify civilian police for peace operations. DPKO had developed "Principles and guidelines for United Nations civilian police operations", which would be published in February 2001, and additional resources were being sought to strengthen the Civilian Police Unit.

In terms of logistics support and expenditure management, the Secretary-General had asked the DPKO Field Administration and Logistics Division, supported by the Department of Management, to address all the issues raised by the Panel that related to that area and to prepare a set of detailed proposals, along with financial implications, for presentation to the General Assembly. To allow the Division to complete the work, he was requesting additional resources, in particular for the Logistics and Communications Service. Concerning the funding of Headquarters support to peacekeeping operations, he was requesting, on an emergency basis, additional resources through the Support Account for 2000-2001. Proposals were also being developed to properly define a predictable baseline level and funding mechanism for Headquarters support to peacekeeping and for temporary increases in activity. He would also be initiating the review called for by the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations (see p. 90).

The Secretary-General also proposed strengthening and extensively restructuring the Military Division and agreed to establish a distinct unit in the DPKO Office of Operations responsible for operational planning and support of public information components in peace operations.

Report of Security Council Working Group. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1318

(2000) (see p. 64), the Council established the Working Group on the Report of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations on 3 October to undertake a comprehensive review of the recommendations of the Panel that fell within the purview of the Council, in particular peacekeeping operations.

The Working Group discussed ways to ensure clear, credible and achievable mandates and procedures for handling Council resolutions; mechanisms and procedures for strengthening consultations with troop contributors; benchmarks for ensuring consistency of peacekeeping operations with international human rights conventions; means of ensuring the rapid deployment of adequately equipped missions and ensuring a clear, unified chain of command; and ways to ensure that the rules of engagement were clearly understood. Also discussed were systems to enhance the provision of accurate, timely and comprehensive information, possibilities for involving the Council during peace negotiations and modalities for its involvement in conflict prevention and post-conflict peace-building. The results of those discussions were contained in a draft resolution attached to the Group's report [S/2000/1084].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 13 November [meeting 4220], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1327 (2000). The draft text [S/2000/1085] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 1318(2000) of 7 September 2000, adopted at its meeting at the level of heads of State and Government in the course of the Millennium Summit,

Reaffirming its determination to strengthen United Nations peacekeeping operations,

Stressing that peacekeeping operations should strictly observe the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Having welcomed the report of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations, and welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on its implementation,

Having considered the recommendations in the report of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations which fall within its area of responsibility,

1. Agrees to adopt the decisions and recommendations contained in the annex to the present resolution;
2. Decides to review periodically the implementation of the provisions contained in the annex;
3. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

ANNEX

The Security Council,

I

Resolves to give peacekeeping operations clear, credible and achievable mandates;

Recognizes the critical importance of peacekeeping operations having, where appropriate and within their mandates, a credible deterrent capability;

Urges the parties to prospective peace agreements, including regional and subregional organizations and arrangements, to coordinate and cooperate fully with the United Nations from an early stage in negotiations, bearing in mind the need for any provisions for a peacekeeping operation to meet minimum conditions, including the need for a clear political objective, the practicability of the designated tasks and timeliness, and compliance with the rules and principles of international law, in particular international humanitarian, human rights and refugee law;

Requests the Secretary-General, in this regard, to make necessary arrangements for the appropriate involvement of the United Nations in peace negotiations that are likely to provide for the deployment of United Nations peacekeepers;

Also requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly and fully informed of the progress in such negotiations with his analysis, assessment and recommendations, and to report to the Council, upon the conclusion of any such peace agreement, as to whether it meets the minimum conditions for United Nations peacekeeping operations;

Requests the Secretariat to continue to provide comprehensive political briefings on relevant issues before the Council;

Requests regular military briefings from the Secretariat, including by the Military Adviser, the Force Commander or the Force Commander-designate, both prior to the establishment of a peacekeeping operation and in the implementation phase, and requests that those briefings report on key military factors such as, where appropriate, the chain of command, force structure, unity and cohesion of the force, training and equipment, risk assessment and rules of engagement;

Also requests regular civilian police briefings from the Secretariat in a similar vein, both prior to the establishment and in the implementation phase of peacekeeping operations with significant civilian police components;

Requests the Secretariat to provide the Council with regular, comprehensive humanitarian briefings for countries where there are United Nations peacekeeping operations;

Encourages the Secretary-General, during the planning and preparation of a peacekeeping operation, to take all possible measures at his disposal to facilitate rapid deployment, and agrees to assist the Secretary-General, wherever appropriate, with specific planning mandates, requesting him to take the necessary administrative steps to prepare the rapid deployment of a mission;

Undertakes, when establishing or enlarging a peacekeeping operation, to request formally that the Secretary-General proceed to the implementation phase of the mandate upon receipt of firm commitments to provide sufficient numbers of adequately trained and equipped troops and other critical mission support elements;

Encourages the Secretary-General to begin his consultations with potential troop contributors well in advance of the establishment of peacekeeping operations, and requests him to report on his consultations during the consideration of new mandates;

Recognizes that the problem of the commitment gap with regard to personnel and equipment for peacekeeping operations requires the assumption by all Member States of the shared responsibility to support United Nations peacekeeping;

Emphasizes the importance of Member States taking the necessary and appropriate steps to ensure the capability of their peacekeepers to fulfil the mandates assigned to them, underlines the importance of international cooperation in this regard, including the training of peacekeepers, and invites Member States to incorporate HIV/AIDS awareness training into their national programmes in preparation for deployment;

Underlines the importance of an improved system of consultations among the troop-contributing countries, the Secretary-General and the Security Council, in order to foster a common understanding of the situation on the ground, of the mandate of the mission and of its implementation;

Agrees, in this regard, to strengthen significantly the existing system of consultations through the holding of private meetings with troop-contributing countries, including at their request and without prejudice to the provisional rules of procedure of the Security Council, in particular when the Secretary-General has identified potential troop-contributing countries for a new or ongoing peacekeeping operation, during the implementation phase of an operation, when considering a change in, or renewal or completion of a peacekeeping mandate, or when a rapid deterioration in the situation on the ground threatens the safety and security of United Nations peacekeepers;

II

Undertakes to ensure that the mandated tasks of peacekeeping operations are appropriate to the situation on the ground, including such factors as the prospects for success, the potential need to protect civilians and the possibility that some parties may seek to undermine peace through violence;

Emphasizes that the rules of engagement for United Nations peacekeeping forces should be fully consistent with the legal basis of the operation and any relevant Security Council resolutions and clearly set out the circumstances in which force may be used to protect all mission components and personnel, military or civilian, and that the rules of engagement should support the accomplishment of the mandate of the mission;

Requests the Secretary-General, following full consultations with the United Nations membership, in particular troop-contributing countries, to prepare a comprehensive operational doctrine for the military component of United Nations peacekeeping operations and submit it to the Security Council and the General Assembly;

III

Stresses the need to improve the information gathering and analysis capacity of the Secretariat, with a view to improving the quality of advice to both the Secretary-General and the Security Council, and welcomes, in this regard, the clarification provided by the Secretary-General in his implementation report on plans for the establishment of the Executive Committee on Peace and Security Information and Strategic Analysis Secretariat;

IV

Stresses the importance of the United Nations being able to respond and deploy a peacekeeping operation rapidly upon the adoption by the Security Council of a resolution establishing its mandate, and notes that rapid deployment is a comprehensive concept that will require improvements in a number of areas;

Calls upon all relevant parties to work towards the objective of meeting the timeliness for United Nations peacekeeping operations, that is, deploying a traditional peacekeeping operation within thirty days and a complex operation within ninety days of the adoption of a Security Council resolution establishing its mandate;

Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to use these timelines as the basis for evaluating the capacity of existing systems to provide field missions with the human, material, financial and information assets that they require;

Welcomes also the proposal of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations to create integrated mission task forces, and urges the Secretary-General to pursue this or any other related capabilities that would improve United Nations planning and support capacities;

Emphasizes the need for the Secretariat to provide the leadership of a peacekeeping operation with strategic guidance and plans for anticipating and overcoming any challenges to the implementation of a mandate, and stresses that such guidance should be formulated in cooperation with the leadership of the mission;

Welcomes the proposals of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations for improving the capacity of the United Nations to deploy military, civilian police and other personnel rapidly, including through the United Nations standby arrangements system, and urges the Secretary-General to consult current and potential troop-contributing countries on how best to achieve this important objective;

Undertakes to consider the possibility of using the Military Staff Committee as one of the means of enhancing the United Nations peacekeeping capacity;

V

Emphasizes that the greatest deterrent to violent conflict is addressing the root causes of conflict, including through the promotion of sustainable development and a democratic society based on a strong rule of law and civic institutions, as well as adherence to all human rights—civil, political, economic, social and cultural;

Concurs with the Secretary-General that every step taken towards reducing poverty and achieving broad-based economic growth is a step towards conflict prevention;

Stresses the important role of the Secretary-General in the prevention of armed conflicts, and looks forward to his report on that issue, which is to be submitted to Member States by May 2001;

Expresses its continued willingness to consider the use of Security Council missions, with the consent of host countries, in order to determine whether any dispute, or situation that might lead to international tension or give rise to a dispute, is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, and to make recommendations for action by the Council where appropriate;

Recalls the statements by its President of 30 November 1999 and 20 July 2000 on the prevention of armed conflict, and welcomes, in this context, the intention of the Secretary-General to send fact-finding missions to areas of tension more frequently;

Recalls also resolution 1296(2000) of 19 April 2000 on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, and looks forward to receiving the follow-up report of the Secretary-General in this context;

Reaffirms the important role of women in the prevention and resolution of conflicts and in post-conflict peace-building, and fully endorses the urgent need to mainstream a gender perspective into peacekeeping operations;

Calls for the full implementation of its resolution 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000;

VI

Welcomes the decision by the Secretary-General to instruct the Executive Committee on Peace and Security to formulate a plan on the strengthening of the United Nations capacity to develop peace-building strategies and to implement programmes in support thereof, and requests the Secretary-General to submit recommendations to the Security Council and the General Assembly on the basis of that plan;

Recognizes that stronger measures to reduce poverty and promote economic growth are important for the success of peace-building;

Emphasizes, in this regard, the need for more effective coordination of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes, and reaffirms that adequate and timely funding for these programmes is critical to the success of peace processes;

Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to spell out more clearly, when submitting future concepts of operations, what the United Nations system can do to help to strengthen local rule of law and human rights institutions, drawing on existing civilian police, human rights, gender and judicial expertise;

VII

Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to conduct a needs assessment of the areas in which it would be feasible and useful to draft a simple, common set of interim rules of criminal procedure.

Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations convened in November in an extraordinary session [A/C.4/55/6] and created an open-ended working group to examine the recommendations of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations, in the light of the Secretary-General's implementation plan (see p. 85).

The Special Committee supported, endorsed or noted most of the Secretary-General's proposals for implementing the Panel's recommendations. It specifically stated that, if the proposal for funding quick-impact projects were implemented, it should be done following consultations with local authorities in an impartial and transparent manner. Details of such projects should be reflected in the relevant reports of the Secretary-General. The Special Committee recommended that, when mandated by the Security Council as part of a peacekeeping operation, programmes for disarmament, demobilization and integration should be provided with adequate and timely resources. It urged that those programmes be brought into assessed budgets of relevant peacekeeping operations and that their funding be reviewed during examination of the mission's budget.

The Special Committee emphasized the need for clear, credible and achievable mandates and the necessity for strengthening and formalizing the consultation process between the Security Council and troop contributors, especially during the implementation phase of an operation. Concerning the safety and security of personnel, the Special Committee urged that Secretariat briefings to troop-contributing countries should be timely, comprehensive and professional and be accompanied by written briefs.

The Secretariat was urged to work towards deploying peacekeeping operations within 30 days of the adoption of a mandate and within 90 days for a complex operation. Those time frames would require political will and more effective operational capabilities, including an efficient standby arrangements system. The Special Committee recommended that, in the selection of mission leadership, due regard be given to contributions by countries providing troops and civilian police; the expenses of candidates called for interview should be borne by the United Nations, and all concerned permanent missions should be informed of the outcome of the selection process.

The Committee reiterated its request for an expeditious and comprehensive review of the management, structure, recruitment processes and interrelationships of relevant elements within the Secretariat that played a role in peacekeeping operations. That review would be essential for the thorough consideration of DPKO's resource requirements and those of other departments backstopping peacekeeping operations. Pending that review, additional resources should be made available on an emergency basis for staffing DPKO. The Special Committee stressed that approved increases in DPKO's staff should be carried out in an open and transparent manner and requested the Secretary-General to submit a report on the subject for consideration by the relevant bodies of the General Assembly. The Special Committee recognized the need to restructure DPKO's Military and Civilian Planning Division, including separating the Civilian Police Unit from the Division. It requested the Secretariat to clarify, at its next regular session, its intention to develop a "military doctrine", a term that was open to several interpretations, thus causing concern to the Special Committee.

The Special Committee expressed deep concern at the delay in reimbursing troop contributors. It encouraged the Secretariat to continue to expedite the processing of all claims and asked the Secretary-General to present a progress report in that regard to the Committee's next regular session. It underlined the need to explore the possibilities for improving the safety and security of UN and associated personnel working in peacekeeping operations.

The Special Committee said it would resume consideration of the Panel's report and the implementation plan at its next session, after completion of the comprehensive review, and requested the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Special Committee's special session at that time.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee [A/55/572], adopted resolution 55/135 without vote [agenda item 86].

Comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2006(XIX) of 18 February 1965 and all other relevant resolutions,

Recalling in particular its resolution 54/81 B of 25 May 2000,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization, the report of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations and the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the report of the Panel,

1. Welcomes the report of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations;

2. Endorses the proposals, recommendations and conclusions of the Special Committee, contained in its report;

3. Urges Member States, the Secretariat and relevant organs of the United Nations to take all necessary steps to implement the proposals, recommendations and conclusions of the Special Committee;

4. Decides that the Special Committee, in accordance with its mandate, shall continue its efforts for a comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects and shall review the implementation of its previous proposals and consider any new proposals so as to enhance the capacity of the United Nations to fulfil its responsibilities in this field;

5. Requests the Special Committee to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

6. Decides to keep open during its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects".

Resource requirements

Report of Secretary-General. In October [A/55/507 & Add.1], the Secretary-General outlined the resource requirements of his proposals to implement the recommendations of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations. He requested $14,675,600, including an increase of 214 posts, on an emergency basis through the support account for the 2000-2001 biennium, and $7,527,300, including an increase of 35 posts, under the regular budget for the same biennium.

Requirements for the 2002-2003 biennium would total $71.4 million, of which $12 million would relate to the regular budget and $59.4 million to the support account.

Report of ACABQ. In December [A/55/676], ACABQ said that although the Secretary-General described his resource estimates as emergency requests, not all of his proposals could be so classified. It also noted that some of the Panel's recommendations required further study and their financial implications would be submitted to the General Assembly in 2001. In addition, the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations had requested a comprehensive review of DPKO's management structure, recruitment processes and interrelationships. ACABQ had also considered the report of the Special Committee and Security Council resolution 1327(2000) (see p. 87).

ACABQ recommended that the Assembly appropriate an additional amount of $363,000 under section 3, Political affairs, $37,200 under section 27, Management and central support services, and $19,200 under section 32, Staff assessment, of the 2000-2001 programme budget. It also recommended that the Assembly finance an additional amount of $9,190,200 under the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001.

ACABQ recommended acceptance of 93 of the 214 posts requested under the support account and the deferral of consideration of 117. Of the 35 posts requested under the regular budget in the 2000-2001 biennium, ACABQ recommended acceptance of 2 and deferred consideration of 33.

The Assembly, on 23 December, in resolution 55/238 (see p. 1300), approved ACABQ's recommendations.

General aspects

Standby arrangements and rapid deployment

The Secretary-General, in a January report [A/54/670] on the implementation of the 1999 recommendations of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [YUN 1999, p. 51], said that further expansion of the standby arrangements system might be of assistance in enhancing access to expertise in such areas as law, public information and engineering. It was essential that the Secretariat and Member States continue to explore ways to improve the ability to tap such expertise. The two mission start-up kits, held at the UN Logistics Base in Brindisi, Italy, had amply proved their value by facilitating the rapid deployment in support of recent major missions, and the Secretariat was working on their urgent replenishment. The Secretariat was also working to identify staff serving in existing field missions who could be deployed at short notice to provide start-up support. In addition, personnel from the Military and Civilian Police Division had been used in the start-up phase of a mission. However, that at times imposed an unmanageable burden on staff at Headquarters, particularly where the Secretariat had to explore start-up of more than one mission concurrently. The Secretariat had been unable to obtain full staffing for the rapidly deployable mission headquarters. Filling the six additional posts through re-deployment proved to be impossible in view of other immediate demands on staff time. The Secretariat intended to explore other options through which that could be achieved. It also considered that the concept of linking the standby arrangements system with procedures for contingent-owned equipment merited further consideration.

At its 2000 session [A/54/839], the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, noting that contingent-owned equipment was an indispensable element in an effective rapid deployment capability, urged the Secretariat to expedite its work to link such equipment to the standby arrangements system in order to realize its full potential for rapid deployment capability. Where critical start-up materiel and services were subject to extended procurement lead time, the Secretariat should maintain a minimum stock of such items on hand. Appropriate General Assembly bodies should explore additional contracting authority mechanisms to permit accelerated procurement of such items, and formulate a mechanism to facilitate third-party loans of operational equipment to Member States participating in peacekeeping operations within the context of the contingent-owned equipment concept.

Expressing dissatisfaction over the lack of progress in implementing further the concept of the rapidly deployable mission headquarters, the Special Committee regretted that the remaining six mission headquarters military positions had not been established. It recommended that they be established and filled as quickly as possible, and that the rapidly deployable mission headquarters requirement be incorporated into the structural review of the management of peacekeeping operations requested by the Special Committee. The Special Committee called on the Secretariat to recommend measures, particularly with regard to the ability of missions to accept and deploy civilian police personnel, to overcome the problem of delays caused by the lack of suitable accommodation, in consultation with troop-contributing States, as part of the mission start-up kit concept.

The Special Committee reiterated its support for funding to permit immediate replenishment of the mission start-up kits at the Logistics Base so as to restore that element of rapid deployment capacity to its full effectiveness. It encouraged the Secretariat to review the role and function of the Base to promote its potential as a forward logistics and materiel staging area for peacekeeping operations.

Consultations with troop contributors

In its March report [A/54/839], the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations emphasized that the planning process within DPKO should be more transparent and effective and troop-contributing countries should be consulted at the earliest stages of mission planning. Consultations between the Security Council and troop-contributing countries should be used to their fullest extent in the elaboration, change and extension of UN peacekeeping mandates and, when authorizing force, the Council should, in all cases, adhere to the relevant provisions of the Charter.

The Special Committee reiterated its request that copies of the Secretary-General's reports to the Council be provided to troop-contributing countries in a timely manner prior to the convening of troop and police contributor meetings. It regretted that progress reports did not reflect the Secretary-General's undertaking to ensure that the Special Committee was consulted in the development of policy and issues affecting peacekeeping personnel and reiterated the request that it be consulted prior to the finalization of all such policies and issues.

The Special Committee recommended that Member States concerned be fully consulted and provided on a timely basis with a copy of all UN internal investigations or inquiries into incidents, including the final outcome reached, which involved the death or injury of personnel from Member States or loss/theft of property of Member States. Consultation with Member States was also necessary when mission authorities took any action, including repatriation or investigation in the event of misconduct by peacekeeping personnel. In that context, the Special Committee emphasized that the national contingent commanders had the sole authority for any disciplinary action in respect of misconduct by a member of their contingent. The Special Committee noted the difficulties experienced by Member States in prosecuting personnel repatriated from mission areas who were accused of having committed serious crimes. It recommended that, in cases of gross misconduct, Member States concerned be invited to take part in the investigation, including through representation in the force-level international military police unit, bearing in mind the need to maintain discipline in the mission area and the desirability of justice being done in all such cases.

Civilian police

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/54/839] recognized that the increased role of civilian police components in UN peacekeeping operations should be adequately reflected in DPKO structures and stressed the need further to strengthen the Civilian Police Unit and enhance the Civilian Police Adviser's role. Care should be taken that police and military tasks were clearly defined and differentiated. The Secretariat should urgently develop, in consultation with Member States, a comprehensive set of policies on civilian police activities to be articulated through the guidelines for civilian police that the Special Committee had asked the Secretariat to prepare. The development of those guidelines should be finalized as soon as possible and should include procedures and standards for the selection, training and deployment of civilian police, as well as for the effective coordination of civilian police matters at Headquarters and the conduct of operations in the field. Where UN peacekeeping operations were mandated to develop a domestic police service, activities such as recruitment, selection and training of local police officers should be undertaken at an early stage in the operation. In that regard, mission budgets should contain sufficient resources for the establishment of local police academies.

The Special Committee viewed with concern the inability of the international community to meet the requirements for UN civilian police and requested the Secretariat to explore alternatives for meeting the increasing demand, including the use of qualified non-active service personnel. Noting that the use of English as the only accepted language of work in most UN civilian police operations denied the participation of many non-English-speaking countries, it recommended that the Secretariat expand ways to ensure wider participation by Member States, keeping in mind the need to maintain safe, secure, efficient and effective field missions. The Special Committee also recommended that the modalities of the Selection Assistance Team concept be clarified and incorporated into the civilian police guidelines and that operationally effective Selection Assistance Team testing standards be developed. Rules of engagement for UN civilian police personnel mandated to carry arms should be formulated and the development, finalization and implementation of rules of engagement should be undertaken in all cases in consultation with Member States.

Safety and security

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/54/839] emphasized that appropriate protection and security measures should be included in the design and planning of peacekeeping operations, that initial mission cost estimates should provide for personnel safety, that missions should be provided with the necessary logistics support, that personnel safety and security should be stressed in pre-deployment training standards and that status-of-forces agreements/status-of-mission agreements should include measures to enhance personnel safety, based on the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel [YUN 1994, p. 1289]. The Special Committee urged DPKO to complete as soon as possible a general and comprehensive review of security arrangements and encouraged the Secretariat to convene a seminar on the safety and security of UN personnel in peacekeeping operations to facilitate the review. DPKO's Air Safety Unit should also be considered a part of the Secretary-General's comprehensive review. All peacekeeping personnel should receive security briefings upon arrival in the mission area, be briefed on major potential threats associated with the environment and given specific guidance to avoid hazardous situations. The Special Committee requested that a reference to the need to strictly observe mandatory air safety requirements of Member States be incorporated in the Operations Manual and specific provisions to that effect included in Secretariat contracts with commercial carriers for night flying operations.

The Special Committee reiterated the role that UN public information, especially radio, could play in enhancing personnel safety and security in peacekeeping operations. It expressed support for the Secretariat's efforts to address public information requirements in the planning and start-up of peacekeeping operations and for close cooperation between DPKO and the Department of Public Information.

The Security Council, in statement S/PRST/2000/4 of 9 February, encouraged the Secretary-General to complete a general and comprehensive review of security in peacekeeping operations with a view to elaborating and undertaking further specific and practical measures to increase the safety of UN and associated personnel (see p. 1345).

Protection of civilians in armed conflict

On 14 February [S/2000/119], the Security Council President informed the General Assembly President of the request of the Council's informal working group on the protection of civilians in armed conflict that the Assembly's Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations consider four of the recommendations contained in the Secretary-General's 1999 report on the subject [YUN 1999, p. 648]. The recommendations related to taking steps to strengthen the Organization's capacity to plan and deploy rapidly, including enhancing participation in the UN standby arrangements system; support for a public ombudsman to be attached to all peacekeeping operations to deal with complaints from the public about the behaviour of UN peacekeepers and the establishment of an ad hoc fact-finding commission to examine reports on alleged breaches of international humanitarian and human rights law committed by members of UN forces; requesting deploying Member States to report to the United Nations on measures taken to prosecute members of their armed forces who violated those laws while in the service of the United Nations; and mobilizing international support for national security forces, from logistical and operational assistance to technical advice, training and supervision.

On 7 April [S/2000/298], the Assembly President transmitted to the Council President a letter of 1 April from the Chairman of the Special Committee that drew attention to the paragraphs of the Special Committee's report addressing the issues of rapid deployment and planning capacity and troop-contributing countries reporting to the United Nations on measures taken to prosecute those of its members violating international humanitarian and human rights law. The letter stated that the Special Committee's schedule did not allow for substantive consideration of the establishment of a public ombudsman or mobilizing international support for national security forces. Those issues would be taken up in 2001.

The Council, in resolution 1296(2000) of 19 April (see p. 667), welcomed the Special Committee's work and encouraged the General Assembly to continue consideration of protection of civilians in armed conflict.

The Secretary-General, in his July report on children and armed conflict [A/55/163-S/2000/712], said that, in recognition of the critical roles peacekeeping missions played in protecting children, the Security Council, in resolutions 1260(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 161] and 1279(1999) [ibid., p. 92] had incorporated the protection of children into the mandates of the missions in Sierra Leone and in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and had adopted the proposal that senior child protection officers be deployed with peacekeeping operations. DPKO, the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), in collaboration with other UN agencies, had finalized the terms of reference for child protection advisers. Two peacekeeping operations currently had senior child protection advisers on the ground; two were seconded from UNICEF and a third was previously with a UN peacekeeping operation. The United Nations, in keeping with the affirmation in Council resolution 1296(2000) that peacekeeping operations should include a mass media component to disseminate information about child protection, was working with radio stations in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cambodia, the Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Liberia to ensure responsible broadcasting practices and programmes. Entities such as UNICEF, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and UNDP often worked with local and international broadcasters to produce radio material that addressed key themes, such as the rights of children and their protection.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Council ensure that the mandates of all relevant UN peacekeeping operations included monitoring and reporting on the protection of children, and that Member States ensure the appropriate training and education of all civilian, military, police and humanitarian personnel involved in UN peacekeeping operations on international humanitarian, human rights and refugee law, especially on the rights and protection of children and women. Such training should be provided in advance of deploying troops to UN operations.

The Council, in resolution 1314(2000) of 11 August (see p. 723), reaffirmed its readiness to continue to include child protection advisers in future peacekeeping operations.

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/54/839] expressed disappointment that the compendium of instances in which the Organization was due restitution, as a result of non-compliance with status-of-forces agreements or other agreements, was still not completed, and reiterated the need for the Secretary-General to fulfil ACABQ's 1996 request [YUN 1996, p. 36] that the compendium be provided and that claims submitted by Member States be withheld until the matter of expenditures was resolved. It concurred with the requirement for flexible application of the model status-of-forces agreement to accommodate changing developments in peacekeeping practice and welcomed the inclusion in future agreements of provisions regarding the responsibility of host Governments in respect of the safety and security of UN and associated personnel.

The Special Committee attached the same importance to status-of-mission agreements as it did to status-of-forces agreements and requested the Secretariat to report to it on the possibility of developing a model status-of-mission agreement, in consultation with Member States.

Training

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/54/839] stressed the importance of participants in peacekeeping operations being given, prior to deployment, specific training that addressed local cultural sensitivities, including gender-sensitivity training, and encouraged the Secretariat, as well as Member States, to include and develop that aspect in their efforts to promote training norms for UN peacekeeping personnel. It expressed concern that the shortfall in staff in DPKO's Training Unit would have a negative effect on its work and recommended that it be corrected.

The Special Committee noted the Secretariat's efforts to provide training materials in all UN official languages and asked the Secretary-General for an update on the issue, including measures taken to secure funding. It recommended that the United Nations Training and Assistance Team concept be broadened to include additional functional areas of peacekeeping, such as communications, finances, personnel administration, engineering and other more specific areas of general logistics.

The Special Committee encouraged the Secretariat to continue to provide assistance for the conduct of regional training programmes, and to continue to pay attention to gender-sensitivity training. It requested that consideration be given to including a member of the Training Unit in the pre-mission technical survey team to assess the unique training requirements for each mission. The Special Committee emphasized that activities of the Training Unit should take into account the increased requirements of civilian police in peacekeeping operations and called for enhanced cooperation between Member States in training civilian police personnel for UN peacekeeping operations, pursuant to UN training standards.

Comprehensive review of peacekeeping

Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 54/81 A [YUN 1999, p. 56], the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations continued its comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects [A/54/839]. In response to the Committee's request, the Secretary-General submitted in January a report on the implementation of its recommendations [A/54/670].

The Special Committee held an organizational meeting on 11 February and a general debate on 11, 14 and 15 February; the informal open-ended working group met from 16 February to 10 March. The Special Committee held a special session in November to consider the report of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations (see p. 83).

The Special Committee, noting that during the preceding year there had been a sudden surge in UN peacekeeping efforts in different parts of the world, considered it essential for the Organization to be in an effective position to maintain international peace and security, including by improving the capacity to assess conflict situations, by effective planning and management of peacekeeping operations and by responding quickly and effectively to any Security Council mandate. The Special Committee, taking note that the Council had recently mandated peacekeeping operations that, in addition to the traditional tasks of monitoring and reporting, included a number of other mandated activities, stressed the importance of an effective DPKO that was structured efficiently and staffed adequately. It stressed the importance of consistently applying the principles and standards it had set forth for the establishment and conduct of peacekeeping operations and emphasized the need to continue to consider those principles, as well as peacekeeping definitions, in a systematic fashion. New proposals or conditions concerning peacekeeping operations should be discussed in the Special Committee.

The Special Committee stressed the importance of a correctly staffed and flexible DPKO, capable of responding swiftly and effectively to the increased demands placed on it by the planning and deployment of missions, and the need for a comprehensive and coordinated management of peacekeeping operations, at Headquarters and in the field. It reinforced the need to ensure that DPKO's structure and staffing contained an effective and efficient medical planning and support capacity.

The Special Committee encouraged the Secretariat to continue using coordination mechanisms within the Secretariat to avoid duplication and overlap and to maintain contact with UN agencies and regional organizations. It noted that the increasing complexity of peacekeeping operations placed additional demands on the Special Representatives of the Secretary-General in discharging that critical coordination function in the field and stressed that they be granted the authority and resources to fulfil their responsibilities efficiently and effectively.

The Special Committee reiterated the importance of transparency in selecting troop contributors, particularly in the use of the UN standby arrangements system, welcomed increased contributions of Member States to the system, and encouraged Member States that had not already done so to join it. The Secretariat was encouraged to consult first with contributors to the system and also with other Member States regarding capabilities to overcome the deficiencies referred to by the Secretary-General in his 1999 report [YUN 1999, p. 52].

The Special Committee stressed the importance of timely, efficient, transparent and cost-effective procurement of goods and services in support of peacekeeping operations, and invited the Secretariat to explore ways to enhance the logistics readiness of the Organization, in particular through a broader use of the United Nations Logistics Base in Brindisi, reserve stocks and a reassessment of the start-up kits, including their scope and number. The Secretariat was asked for a status report on procurement from developing countries and countries with economies in transition. The Special Committee requested the Secretary-General to undertake a comprehensive review of the procurement and requisitioning process, to include in his annual report on procurement reform a detailed section addressing field procurement, with particular emphasis on a more flexible and timely contracting mechanism for new missions, including local procurement, and to address, in detail, peacekeeping procurement in his next report to the Special Committee.

The Committee, while noting progress made in developing the Operational Support Manual, recommended that it be harmonized with other related mission support manuals. It emphasized the urgent need to develop an overarching logistics concept to guide the efficient coordination between planning and management, establish a cost-effective use of resources, integrate support to civilian, military and civilian police staff in the field and produce an up-to-date set of contractual and procurement regulations. The Special Committee expressed the hope that its recommendations would be further considered by the contingent-owned equipment post-Phase V Working Group (see p. 108) in 2001. In that regard, Member States were asked to submit the data required. The Special Committee welcomed the circulation of the revised Manual on Policies and Procedures concerning Reimbursement and Control of Contingent-owned Equipment of Troop-contributing Countries Participating in Peacekeeping Missions (the COE Manual-2000) for comments by Member States and requested the Secretariat to update the Manual and to make it available at the earliest opportunity in all UN official languages.

The Special Committee recommended that the Lessons Learned Unit convene a meeting of interested Member States to develop mechanisms for validating lessons learned at the field level, that the Secretary-General include an update on that issue in his next report, and that experience derived from past peacekeeping operations be incorporated into peacekeeping policy and planning to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of future missions. The Secretary-General was asked to address the need for full commitment and additional resources to be given to the conduct of peacekeeping operations in Africa in his next progress report to the Special Committee.

The Special Committee encouraged the Secretariat to formalize a mechanism for retaining lessons learned from disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes and recommended that those programmes be provided with adequate resources. To promote compliance with the objectives of those programmes within a peacekeeping operation, mission planners should ensure that the security of disarmed soldiers was an integral part of any programme. Mission planning for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration aspects of peacekeeping operations should accommodate the special needs of women and children in such programmes.

The Special Committee emphasized the need to differentiate between peacekeeping operations and humanitarian assistance. However, if protection of humanitarian assistance was a mandated task of a UN peacekeeping operation, both should be coordinated to ensure that they were not working at cross purposes and that humanitarian assistance was impartial.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 May [meeting 97], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/54/577/Add.1], adopted resolution 54/81 B without vote [agenda item 90].

Comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2006(XIX) of 18 February 1965 and all other relevant resolutions,

Recalling in particular its resolution 54/81 A of 6 December 1999,

Affirming that the efforts of the United Nations in the peaceful settlement of disputes, including through its peacekeeping operations, are indispensable,

Convinced of the need for the United Nations to continue to improve its capabilities in the field of peacekeeping and to enhance the effective and efficient deployment of its peacekeeping operations,

Considering the contribution that all States Members of the Organization make to peacekeeping,

Noting the widespread interest in contributing to the work of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations expressed by many Member States, in particular troop-contributing countries,

Bearing in mind the continuous necessity of preserving the efficiency and strengthening the effectiveness of the work of the Special Committee,

1. Welcomes the report of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations;

2. Endorses the proposals, recommendations and conclusions of the Special Committee, contained in paragraphs 46 to 171 of its report;

3. Urges Member States, the Secretariat and relevant organs of the United Nations to take all necessary steps to implement the proposals, recommendations and conclusions of the Special Committee;

4. Reiterates that those Member States that become personnel contributors to United Nations peacekeeping operations in years to come or participate in the future in the Special Committee for three consecutive years as observers shall, upon request in writing to the Chairman of the Special Committee, become members at the following session of the Special Committee;

5. Decides that the Special Committee, in accordance with its mandate, shall continue its efforts for a comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects and shall review the implementation of its previous proposals and consider any new proposals so as to enhance the capacity of the United Nations to fulfil its responsibilities in this field;

6. Requests the Special Committee to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects".

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item "Comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects" would remain for consideration during the resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458).

Exit strategy in peacekeeping operations

In a 6 November letter [S/2000/1072], the Netherlands informed the Secretary-General of its intention to organize an open debate in the Security Council on the Council's decision-making in respect of mission closure and mission transition. The Netherlands said that the Council often had to decide whether to extend, modify or terminate the mandate of a particular operation, and there had been cases in which the Council decided to end a mission or to reduce significantly its military component, only to have those situations remain unstable or, worse, descend again into violence and chaos soon thereafter. That seemed to contradict the Council's mandate, as contained in the Charter, to facilitate the establishment of a self-sustaining peace, or at least a durable absence of violence.

In a paper annexed to its letter, the Netherlands further explained that the use of the term "exit strategy" to refer to the withdrawal or termination phase of a peacekeeping operation was misleading because it did not link the end of a mission to the mission's objectives. What was required, rather, was an overall strategy: a long-term plan designed to lead to a self-sustaining peace in the conflict area. "Exit" should be based on the successful fulfilment of a mission mandate as signified by the achievement of a lasting peace, which in turn rendered a continued mission presence unnecessary. That could be the result of a transition from one type of peace operation to another, reflecting the changing nature and intensity of a conflict. Such an approach would entail more careful consideration of the objectives to be pursued by the proposed mission and the resources required to achieve them. When such a strategy was not viable, an alternative might be to provide a stabilizing presence in the conflict area. In such cases, however, the Council would have to acknowledge the long-term commitment involved. The Council should also ponder whether a prolonged presence would be beneficial to peace efforts. It should therefore engage in more realistic and frank debates and negotiations regarding the true nature of the situation under consideration and the desired outcome.

The Netherlands used the examples of UN experiences in Haiti, Liberia and Mozambique as case studies to support its argument.

On 15 November [meeting 4223], the Security Council discussed the letter from the Netherlands.

By a 30 November letter [S/2000/1141], the Council President informed the Secretary-General that the Council considered its debate a useful input on an issue that merited further study and requested him to submit by April 2001 a report on the issue, including an analysis and recommendations, taking into account the responsibilities of different organs of the UN system and the views expressed during the debate. In that regard, the Council invited Member States to facilitate the preparation of the report, which should be made available also as a document of the General Assembly.

Operations in 2000

On 1 January, 17 UN peacekeeping operations were in place—3 in Africa, 1 in the Americas, 5 in Asia, 5 in Europe and 3 in the Middle East. During the year, 3 operations ended and 1 was launched. The total number of operations deployed in 2000 was 18; the number in place at the end of the year was 15.

Africa

In Africa, the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic (MINURCA) ended in February. On 31 July, the Security Council established the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea to put into operation the mechanism for verifying the cessation of hostilities between the two countries and to prepare for the establishment of the Military Coordination Commission provided for in the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities. In February, the Council expanded the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL) and the strength of its military component to ensure that the provisions of the 1999 Lomé Peace Agreement [YUN 1999, p. 159] were implemented in full. The Council extended UNAMSIL several times during the year; in December it extended the Mission to 31 March 2001. The United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) continued to help implement the 1999 Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement [ibid., p. 87]. Its mandate, which the Council expanded in February to monitor implementation of the Ceasefire Agreement and investigate violations of its implementation, was extended until 15 June 2001. The United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) continued to monitor the ceasefire and otherwise conduct peace-keeping tasks. In October, the Council extended its mandate until 28 February 2001. (See next chapter.)

The Americas

In the Americas, the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti (MIPONUH) ended in March (see p. 250).

Asia

In Asia, the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM) continued to monitor the demilitarized zone along the border between the two countries. In May, the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT) ended.

Elsewhere in Asia, the United Nations Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan (UNMOGIP) remained in place to monitor the ceasefire in Jammu and Kashmir (see p. 319). The United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET), responsible for the Territory's overall administration, remained in place (see p. 278).

Europe

The Security Council extended the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH), which included the International Police Task Force (IPTF), until 21 June 2001. It also extended the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG) until 31 January 2001; and the mandate of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka (UNMOP) until 15 January 2001. The United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK), Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, remained in place. In the Mediterranean, the mandate of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) was extended until 15 June 2001. (See PART ONE, Chapter V.)

Middle East

In the Middle East, the mandates of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) were extended until 31 January 2001 and 31 May 2001, respectively. The United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO) continued to assist both peacekeeping operations in their tasks.

Other missions

In addition to peacekeeping, the United Nations supported a number of political and human rights missions worldwide. In Africa, the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Guinea-Bissau continued to assist in the transition from conflict management to post-conflict peace-building and reconstruction. The Security Council extended the mandate of the United Nations Office in Angola until October to assist in capacity-building, humanitarian assistance and the promotion of human rights. The Organization continued to support the United Nations Political Office for Somalia, located in Nairobi, Kenya, the United Nations Office in Burundi and the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Liberia. In February, the Council welcomed the Secretary-General's decision to establish, until 15 February 2001, the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in the Central African Republic to support efforts to consolidate peace and national reconciliation, as well as national reconstruction and economic recovery.

In the Americas, the General Assembly extended the mandate of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala until 31 December 2001, while the International Civilian Support Mission in Haiti continued to assist in that country's economic rehabilitation and reconstruction.

In Asia and the Pacific, the United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission, established by Security Council resolution 1284(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 230] to monitor Iraq's compliance with Council resolutions on its disarmament, had not been deployed. The United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan continued its efforts to facilitate a political process aimed at achieving a lasting political settlement of the internal conflict there. In June, the Secretary-General established the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Tajikistan to provide a political framework and leadership for post-conflict peace-building. In Papua New Guinea, the United Nations Political Office in Bougainville continued to assist in the promotion of political dialogue among parties to the 1998 Lincoln Agreement [YUN 1998, p. 319]. In the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the United Nations Command continued in 2000 to implement the maintenance of the 1953 Armistice Agreement [YUN 1953, p. 136]. In November, the Council supported the Townsville Peace Agreement for the cessation of hostilities in Solomon Islands and welcomed the establishment of the International Peace Monitoring Team composed of unarmed military personnel and civilian police from Australia and New Zealand.

Financial and administrative aspects of peacekeeping operations

General aspects

Expenditures for peacekeeping activities amounted to $1,756.8 million for the period

1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, compared to $837.8 million during the previous 12-month period.

The financial situation of UN peacekeeping operations continued to be affected by serious cash shortages, necessitating borrowing from and among peacekeeping funds, while substantial amounts of obligations for reimbursement to Member States for troop costs and contingent-owned equipment remained unpaid.

As at 30 June 2000, the total unpaid assessed contributions for peacekeeping operations amounted to $2,128.9 million, compared to $1,687.6 million in 1999. Available cash for all operations totalled $787 million, while total liabilities were more than twice as much, at $1,942.5 million.

Notes of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 49/233 A [YUN 1994, p. 1338], the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee a January note [A/C.5/54/48] updating the budgetary information on requirements for all peacekeeping operations from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 and reflecting the appropriations provided to date by the Assembly for those operations for that period, inclusive of support account requirements. The updated level of requirements totalled $1.4 billion gross, compared to the initial estimate of $644,199,100.

In May [A/C.5/54/61], the Secretary-General submitted proposed budgetary requirements for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 of $2,072,562,000, including $782,316,600 for military personnel costs and $767,109,300 for civilian personnel costs.

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item "Administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of the United Nations peacekeeping operations" would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458) and that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider it at that session (decision 55/455).

Review exercise

In its March report [A/54/839], the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations stressed that all Member States should pay their assessed contributions in full, on time and without conditions. The Committee remained concerned at the delay in reimbursements to troop contributors. It encouraged the Secretariat to continue to expedite the processing of all claims and to sensitize all departments involved to resolve current delays as soon as funds were available.

The Special Committee noted the conditions governing the operation of UN trust funds and requested the Secretariat to provide a regular update during the Assembly's next regular session on their impact on applicable peacekeeping operations, advise on steps taken or contemplated to ensure timely and efficient disbursement of funds from those trust funds, and undertake to keep the Committee informed of the terms of any future peacekeeping trust fund established. The Special Committee urged the Secretariat to accelerate the verification and claims payment process for injured peacekeepers, as well as for the families of those who had died in the service of the United Nations. In that regard, it urged the Secretary-General to ensure the completion of the process of disbursement of death compensation to the families of the victims of the UN flights that crashed in Angola in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 120] and 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 103]. The Secretary-General should provide an update on the issue in his next report.

Apportionment of costs

In 2000, the General Assembly again considered the question of the placement of Member States into groups for the apportionment of peacekeeping expenses. First specified in resolution 3101(XXVIII) [YUN 1973, p. 222], the groups were subsequently adjusted several times, most recently by resolution 52/230 [YUN 1998, p. 49]. The original four groups were: (A) permanent members of the Security Council; (B) specifically named economically developed Member States not permanent members of the Council; (C) economically less developed Member States; and (D) economically less developed Member States that were specifically named.

The Assembly, by decision 54/486 of 15 June, deferred until its fifty-fifth session a decision on the question of reallocating South Africa to the group of Member States (economically less developed) set out in paragraph 3 (c) of Assembly resolution 43/232 [YUN 1989, p. 793].

In December, by resolution 55/235, the Assembly changed the procedure for apportioning the expenses of peacekeeping operations among States, establishing 10 categories of countries (A to J). The new levels of contribution would go into effect as from 1 July 2001.

Communications. In a 13 April letter [A/C.5/54/55] addressed to the Chairman of the Fifth Committee, the United States said that the current ad hoc system for apportioning peacekeeping expenses, which concentrated the responsibility for peacekeeping finance in a small group of Member States and did not take into account changes in Members' financial circumstances or the addition of new Member States, was outmoded and in need of review and revision. It proposed that the General Assembly conduct such a review to create a more up-to-date scale of assessment, which would provide a stronger foundation for financing peacekeeping operations. That request was supported by 38 other Member States, which requested on 30 June [A/55/14] & A/55/224] that the Assembly include the item in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session.

By a 20 October note verbale [A/C.5/55/16], Cambodia requested reallocation from group C to group D. It stated that it had been placed in group C since 1973. However, after three decades of conflicts, unrest and economic crisis, Cambodia had been categorized as one of the least developed countries, with an average per capita gross national product of $260 per annum, lower than that of a number of countries in group D.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 89], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/55/712], adopted resolution 55/235 without vote [agenda item 169].

Scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of United Nations peacekeeping operations

The General Assembly,

I

Reaffirming the principles set out in its resolutions 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963 and 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973,

1. Reaffirms the following general principles underlying the financing of United Nations peacekeeping operations:

(a) The financing of such operations is the collective responsibility of all States Members of the United Nations and, accordingly, the costs of peacekeeping operations are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations;

(b) In order to meet the expenditures caused by such operations, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures under the regular budget of the United Nations;

(c) Whereas the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions to peacekeeping operations, the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peacekeeping operations involving heavy expenditures;

(d) The special responsibilities of the permanent members of the Security Council for the maintenance of peace and security should be borne in mind in connection with their contributions to the financing of peace and security operations;

(e) Where circumstances warrant, the General Assembly should give special consideration to the situation of any Member States which are victims of, and those which are otherwise involved in, the events or actions leading to a peacekeeping operation;

2. Recognizes the need to reform the current methodology for apportioning the expenses of peacekeeping operations;

3. Notes with appreciation voluntary contributions made to peacekeeping operations and, without prejudice to the principle of collective responsibility, invites Member States to consider making such contributions;

II

4. Decides that assessment rates for the financing of peacekeeping operations should be based on the scale of assessments for the regular budget of the United Nations, with an appropriate and transparent system of adjustments based on levels of Member States, consistent with the principles outlined above;

5. Decides also that the permanent members of the Security Council should form a separate level and that, consistent with their special responsibilities for the maintenance of peace and security, they should be assessed at a higher rate than for the regular budget;

6. Decides further that all discounts resulting from adjustments to the regular budget assessment rates of Member States in levels C through J shall be borne on a pro rata basis by the permanent members of the Security Council;

7. Decides that the least developed countries should be placed in a separate level and receive the highest rate of discount available under the scale;

8. Decides also that the statistical data used for setting the rates of assessment for peacekeeping should be the same as the data used in preparing the regular budget scale of assessments, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

9. Decides further to create levels of discount to facilitate automatic, predictable movement between categories on the basis of the per capita gross national product of Member States;

10. Decides that, as from 1 July 2001, the rates of assessment for peacekeeping should be based on the ten levels of contribution and parameters set forth in the table below:

Peacekeeping scale levels based on average per capita gross national product (PCGNP) of all Member States

Level	Threshold	Thresholds in United States dollars (2001-2003)	Target discount (Percentage)	Transition period for new contributors (2001-2003 scale)
A	Permanent members of the Security Council		Premium
B	All Member States (except level A contributors)	N/A	0	3 years
C	N/A	N/A	7.5	3 years
D	Below 2X average PCGNP of all Member States (except level A contributors)	Under 9,594	20	3 years
E	Below 1.8X average PCGNP of all Member States (except level A contributors)	Under 8,634	40	2 years

F	Below 1.6X average PCGNP of all Member States (except level A contributors)	Under 7,675	60	N/A
G	Below 1.4X average PCGNP of all Member States (except level A contributors)	Under 6,715	70	N/A
H	Below 1.2X average PCGNP of all Member States (except level A contributors)	Under 5,756	80 (or 70 on a voluntary basis)	N/A
I	Below average PCGNP of all Member States	Under 4,797	80	N/A
J	Least developed countries (except level A contributors)		90	N/A

11. Decides also that Member States will be assigned to the lowest level of contribution with the highest discount for which they are eligible, unless they indicate a decision to move to a higher level;

12. Decides further that for purposes of determining the eligibility of Member States for contribution in particular levels during the 2001-2003 scale period, the average per capita gross national product of all Member States will be 4,797 United States dollars and the per capita gross national product of Member States will be the average of 1993 to 1998 figures;

13. Decides that transitions as specified above will occur in equal increments over the transition period as designated above;

14. Decides also that after 2001-2003, transition periods of two years will apply to countries moving up by two levels, and that transition periods of three years will apply to countries moving up by three levels or more without prejudice to paragraph 11 above;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to update the composition of the levels described above on a triennial basis, in conjunction with the regular budget scale of assessment reviews, in accordance with the criteria established above, and to report thereon to the General Assembly;

16. Decides that the structure of levels to be implemented from 1 July 2001 shall be reviewed after nine years;

17. Decides also that Member States may agree upon adjustments to their assessment rates under the ad hoc scale in the light of the special transitional circumstances applying during the period 1 January to 30 June 2001;

III

18. Decides that, as an ad hoc arrangement until 30 June 2001, in respect of the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of its resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by subsequent relevant resolutions and decisions, for the apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations, Tuvalu should be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (d) of resolution 43/232 and that its contributions to peacekeeping operations should be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the relevant resolutions adopted and to be adopted by the General Assembly regarding the scale of assessments;

19. Decides also that, as an ad hoc arrangement until 30 June 2001, in respect of the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of its resolution 43/232, as adjusted by subsequent relevant resolutions and decisions, for the apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia should be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (c) of resolution 43/232 and that its contributions to peacekeeping operations should be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the relevant resolutions adopted and to be adopted by the General Assembly regarding the scale of assessments;

20. Decides further that, as an ad hoc arrangement until 30 June 2001, in respect of the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of its resolution 43/232, as adjusted by subsequent relevant resolutions and decisions, for the apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations, as from 1 January 2001, South Africa should be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (c) of resolution 43/232 and that its contributions to peacekeeping operations should be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the relevant resolutions adopted and to be adopted by the General Assembly regarding the scale of assessments;

21. Decides that, as an ad hoc arrangement until 30 June 2001, in respect of the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of its resolution 43/232, as adjusted by subsequent relevant resolutions and decisions, for the apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations, as from 1 January 2001, Cambodia should be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (d) of resolution 43/232 and that its contributions to peacekeeping operations should be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the relevant resolutions adopted and to be adopted by the General Assembly regarding the scale of assessments;

22. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to assess the share of the Republic of Korea, which currently belongs to Group C, in the costs of peacekeeping operations in the following manner: 36 per cent of the regular budget assessment beginning on 1 July 2001, 52 per cent in 2002, 68 per cent in 2003, 84 per cent in 2004 and 100 per cent in 2005.

Voluntary movements in connection with the apportionment of the expenses of United Nations peacekeeping operations

Recalling its resolution 55/235 of 23 December 2000,

1. Welcomes with appreciation the commitment of certain Member States to undertake voluntarily to contribute to peacekeeping operations at a rate higher than required by their per capita income;

2. Welcomes the voluntary decision made by Estonia and Israel to be reclassified for the purpose of the apportionment of the expenses of United Nations peacekeeping operations;

3. Decides that, as an ad hoc arrangement until 30 June 2001, in respect of the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of its resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by subsequent relevant resolutions and decisions, for the apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations, from 1 January 2001 Estonia should be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (b) of resolution 43/232, and that its contributions to peacekeeping operations should be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the relevant resolutions adopted and to be adopted by the General Assembly regarding the scale of assessments;

4. Decides also that, as an ad hoc arrangement until 30 June 2001, in respect of the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of its resolution 43/232, as adjusted by subsequent relevant resolutions and decisions, for the apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations, from 1 January 2001 Israel should be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (b) of resolution 43/232, and that its contributions to peacekeeping operations should be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the relevant resolutions adopted and to be adopted by the General Assembly regarding the scale of assessments;

5. Welcomes the following voluntary commitments:

Bulgaria: from Level I to Level H;

Czech Republic: from Level I to Level H;

Estonia: to move to Level B immediately upon the effective date of the new scale, forgoing its transition time;

Hungary: from Level I to Level B, with a transition time of five years, starting from 1 July 2001 as follows: from Level I to Level H from 1 July 2001; from Level H to Level F from 1 July 2002; from Level F to Level E from 1 July 2003; from Level E to Level D from 1 July 2004; and from Level D to Level B from 1 July 2005;

Israel: to move to Level B immediately upon the effective date of the new scale, forgoing its transition time;

Latvia: from Level I to Level H;

Lithuania: from Level I to Level H;

Malta: from Level E to Level B;

Philippines: from Level I to Level H;

Poland: from Level I to Level H;

Romania: from Level I to Level H;

Slovakia: from Level I to Level H;

Slovenia: from Level E to Level B immediately upon the effective date of the new scale, forgoing its transition time;

Turkey: from Level I to Level H from the effective date of the new scale until 2002, and from Level H to Level F for the remainder of the scale period;

6. Decides that, at any time during the scale period, a Member State may make a voluntary commitment to contribute at a rate higher than its current rate by informing the General Assembly through the Secretary-General, and the Assembly may take note of that decision.

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item "Scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of United Nations peacekeeping operations" would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458) and that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider it at that session (decision 55/455).

Financial performance and proposed budgets

In April [A/54/841], ACABQ considered the financial performance reports for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 and the proposed budgets for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 of UNDOF, UNIFIL, UNIKOM, UNFICYP, UNOMIG, UNMIBH, MINURSO and the United Nations Logistics Base in Brindisi. It also considered the financial performance reports for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 for MIPONUH, UNMOT, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP) and the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone (UNOMSIL). In addition, ACABQ considered the financial performance report for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 and the revised budget for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 for the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola (MONUA); the revised budget for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 and the proposed budget for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 for UNOMSIL and UNAMSIL; the financial report for the United Nations Mission in East Timor (UNAMET) from 5 May to 30 November 1999 and the request for additional appropriation; and the estimates for UNTAET from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000. ACABQ further considered, on a preliminary basis, the proposed budget for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 for UNMIK and the Secretary-General's request for authority to enter into commitments in an amount not exceeding $200 million to meet the most immediate anticipated requirements of MONUC. It also considered the report on losses of UN property in peacekeeping operations (see p. 111).

ACABQ welcomed the enhancements in the information contained in the performance reports and refinements in the additional complementary information on budget implementation. However, in some cases, the information given needed to be more accurate. Information on steps taken to manage authorized funds more effectively and on economy measures taken should be included in the performance reports. ACABQ intended to monitor the variations in expenditures to ascertain whether the frequency of unbudgeted expenditures resulted from unforeseen circumstances or reflected weaknesses in the methods used to identify requirements. It was concerned at the number of voluntary contributions for which no value was given and which failed to comply with the requirement for full-cost budgeting. Recalling the draft technical guidelines for voluntary contributions [YUN 1998, p. 53], ACABQ trusted that that deficiency would be remedied in future budget submissions. It requested that, in future budget presentations, organizational charts indicating personnel proposed for each mission's organizational unit be provided to facilitate a comprehensive analysis of the budget proposals for various missions.

ACABQ continued to be concerned about the screening, selection and deployment of police personnel and was of the view that a more effective selection process and better management of those personnel could result in savings. The organizational set-up and the role and capacity of the DPKO Civilian Police Unit needed to be examined, and the structure of the Military and Civilian Police Division monitored to ensure organizational efficiency.

ACABQ recommended that an analysis be undertaken to determine the effect of continuing high vacancy rates on mission operations, as well as the impact that inter-mission loans of personnel and equipment might have on mission implementation. That analysis should also address measures to increase mobility between missions and from headquarters duty stations to the field and to improve recruitment. It encouraged the practice of converting international General Service posts to local posts and believed that in new missions the number of National Professional Officers should be increased. ACABQ called for greater involvement of the Office of Human Resources Management in developing job descriptions and classifying posts to ensure the overall uniformity of peacekeeping post levels with respect to the rest of the Secretariat. The Secretary-General should analyse the problems of attracting and retaining qualified personnel for peacekeeping operations. Efforts should be made to increase the number of United Nations Volunteers and local staff and a study should be made of the potential for wider use of Volunteers to meet the requirements of peacekeeping operations.

ACABQ requested that the criteria for setting training priorities be stated in a more transparent manner, and training areas and costs be more clearly stated in budget reports. The number of personnel to be trained and institutions and facilities to be used for training should also be given.

ACABQ considered that there was a need for a comprehensive system-wide approach, under the aegis of the United Nations, of the costs and related policy issues of civilian security in the field to avoid the potential for conflict in policy, activities and guidelines that endangered the security and safety of UN personnel and family members. The report on the issue should be expedited.

ACABQ requested that information be given indicating the mechanisms for coordination and the various roles and functions of partners. In relation to coordination with funding partners, it was of the view that the establishment, financing and expenditure of trust funds and other extra-budgetary funds to implement mission mandates needed to be more transparent. The costs for environmental activities in peacekeeping operations should also be studied, as well as experience in field missions to identify lessons learned for wide application and for establishing the best method for dealing with the environmental consequences of the activities and operations of UN forces in the field. The Secretariat should collect and evaluate data on incidents giving rise to high insurance premiums to determine the best way for management to deal with them.

Accounts and auditing

At its resumed fifty-fourth session, the General Assembly considered the financial report and audited financial statements for UN peacekeeping operations for the 12-month period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 [A/54/5, vol. II & Corr.1], the Secretary-General's February report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors [A/54/748] and the related report of ACABQ [A/54/801].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 June [meeting 98], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/506/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/13 C without vote [agenda item I17].

Financial reports and audited financial statements, and reports of the Board of Auditors

The General Assembly,

Having considered the financial report and audited financial statements for the twelve-month period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 and the report of the Board of Auditors on United Nations peacekeeping operations, the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors concerning United Nations peacekeeping operations for the period ending 30 June 1999,

1. Accepts the audited financial statements and the report of the Board of Auditors on United Nations peacekeeping operations;

2. Approves all the recommendations and conclusions contained in the report of the Board of Auditors, and endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

3. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors concerning United Nations peacekeeping operations for the period ending 30 June 1999.

Peacekeeping support account

The Secretary-General, in March [A/54/797], submitted the financial performance report of the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999. Of the $34,400,000 for post and non-post requirements authorized by the General Assembly in resolution 52/248 [YUN 1998, p. 51], expenditures amounted to $32,821,600, resulting in an unutilized balance of $1,578,400.

In response to General Assembly resolutions 53/12 B [YUN 1999, p. 64] and 54/243 A [ibid., p. 66], the Secretary-General submitted, also in March [A/54/800], resource requirements for the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, estimated at $51,736,600, which provided for a staffing establishment of 471 posts, including 4 new ones.

In April [A/54/832], ACABQ recommended that the Assembly approve total staffing and non-staffing requirements of $50,699,900 gross ($43,237,900 net) for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, and that the unencumbered balance of $2,179,400 from the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 be applied to the resources required for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 June [meeting 98], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/684/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/243 B without vote [agenda item 151 (a)].

Support account for peacekeeping operations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/258 of 3 May 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 48/226 A of 23 December 1993, 48/226 B of 5 April 1994, 48/226 C of 29 July 1994, 49/250 of 20 July 1995, 50/11 of 2 November 1995, 50/221 A of 11 April 1996, 50/221 B of 7 June 1996, 51/226 of 3 April 1997, 51/239 A of 17 June 1997, 51/239 B and 51/243 of 15 September 1997, 52/220 of 22 December 1997, 52/234 and 52/248 of 26 June 1998, 53/12 A of 26 October 1998, 53/208 B of 18 December 1998, 53/12 B of 8 June 1999 and 54/243 A of 23 December 1999 and its decisions 48/489 of 8 July 1994, 49/469 of 23 December 1994 and 50/473 of 23 December 1995,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the support account for peacekeeping operations, the performance report on the use of support account resources for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Reaffirming the need to continue to improve the administrative and financial management of peacekeeping operations,

Recognizing the need for adequate support during all phases of peacekeeping operations, including the liquidation and termination phases,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the support account for peacekeeping operations and the separate performance report on the use of support account resources in respect of the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999;

2. Recognizes the importance of the United Nations being able to respond and deploy rapidly a peacekeeping operation upon the adoption of a Security Council mandate;

3. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

4. Affirms the need for adequate funding for the backstopping of peacekeeping operations;

5. Reaffirms that the expenses of the Organization, including the backstopping of peacekeeping operations, shall be borne by Member States and, to that effect, that the Secretary-General should request adequate funding to maintain the capacity of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat;

6. Decides to maintain for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 the funding mechanism for the support account used in the current period, from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, as approved in paragraph 3 of its resolution 50/221 B;

7. Approves the establishment of four hundred and sixty-nine support account-funded temporary posts, including one P-3 and one General Service post for the Training Unit of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations;

8. Notes the importance of the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General to develop a comprehensive concept of the United Nations rapid deployment capability, invites, in this regard, the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations to review the concept of the Rapid Deployment Management Unit, including its compatibility with the rapidly deployable mission headquarters, in accordance with paragraph 24 of the report of the Advisory Committee, and requests the Secretary-General to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to take into account the mandate of relevant committees before requesting any human or financial resources;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General timeously to inform Member States of all job vacancies in the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and in field missions;

11. Reiterates its requests to the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to avoid duplication and overlapping among departments of the Secretariat related to backstopping peacekeeping activities, and requests him, in this regard, to keep the General Assembly informed about concrete measures taken;

12. Reaffirms the need for the Secretary-General to ensure that delegation of authority to the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and field missions is in strict compliance with relevant resolutions and decisions, as well as relevant rules and procedures of the General Assembly on this matter;

13. Approves the support account post and non-post requirements in the amount of 50,699,900 United States dollars gross (43,237,900 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001;

14. Decides to apply the unencumbered balance of 2,179,000 dollars from the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, inclusive of 601,000 dollars in miscellaneous and interest income, and to prorate the balance of 48,520,900 dollars gross (41,058,900 dollars net) among the individual active peacekeeping operation budgets, to meet the resources required for the support account for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001;

15. Stresses the importance of providing detailed and comprehensive information on activities related to training, including information on how it serves the interests of the United Nations.

The Secretary-General, in an October report on the resource requirements for the implementation of the recommendations of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations [A/55/507 & Add.1] (see p. 91), requested support account funding for 214 posts in an amount of $14,675,600 for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001.

ACABQ, in December [A/55/676], recommended that the Assembly finance 93 posts in an additional amount of $9,190,200 under the support account for the period 1 July 2000 to 31 June 2001.

By resolution 55/238 of 23 December, the Assembly approved ACABQ's recommendation.

Reimbursement issues

Troops

Responding to the General Assembly's request in resolution 51/218 E, section V [YUN 1997, p. 54], that he carry out a new survey of troop-contributing States, the Secretary-General submitted a February review of the rates of reimbursement to the Governments of troop-contributing States [A/54/763]. For the purpose of the survey, cost information based on military salary scales in effect as at December 1996 was requested from 64 Member States providing troops and military observers to UN peacekeeping operations at that time. Cost information was made available by 26 Member States providing troops and 11 providing military observers.

The Secretary-General observed that, regarding the consideration that the rates of reimbursement should compensate all troop-contributing States for at least the actual overseas allowance paid to their troops, the data showed that 15 of the 26 States were not being fully reimbursed for overseas allowance. The overall average allowance (excluding salary) amounted to $1,416, compared with the current average UN reimbursement for troop costs (including basic pay and supplementary allowance for some specialists) of $1,028. As to the consideration that no Government should receive a higher reimbursement than its actual cost, the Secretary-General noted that only 11 of the 26 Governments recovered their expenses in full or more. Based on the cost information provided, the overall average absorption factor for 1996 was 53.9 per cent, reflecting an increase of 21.1 per cent above the average absorption factor of 32.8 per cent reported in 1991. The Secretary-General suggested that the Assembly might wish to decide whether an upward adjustment to the current rates was warranted.

ACABQ, commenting on the Secretary-General's report in May [A/54/859], said that some of the Organization's expenses, such as direct per diem payments and leave allowance to military personnel, had not been reflected. The results of the analysis would also have been significantly affected if an approximation of the average cost of services provided by UN peacekeeping missions per member of a contingent had been included. ACABQ was of the opinion that it was appropriate to adjust the current methodology of calculating the standard rates of reimbursement to include those payments and there was a strong argument in favour of deducting those amounts from the reimbursements to troop-contributing States. There also appeared to be a number of inconsistencies in the data provided by troop-contributing States, making a comparative analysis difficult. ACABQ invited the General Assembly to provide further guidelines with a view to refining the methodology to ensure that more timely and comprehensive data were provided to establish whether a change in the standard rates of reimbursement to troop-contributing States was warranted.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 June, the General Assembly, by decision 54/485, took note of the Secretary-General's review of the rates of reimbursement and decided to postpone consideration of the question to the main part of its fifty-fifth session.

On 23 December [meeting 89], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/55/534], adopted resolution 55/229 without vote [agenda item 153 (a)].

Review of the rates of reimbursement to the Governments of troop-contributing States

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the review of the rates of reimbursement to the Governments of troop-contributing States and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the review of the rates of reimbursement to the Governments of troop-contributing States and of the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Decides to request the post-Phase V Working Group on reform procedures for determining reimbursement of contingent-owned equipment to consider the current methodology underlying the calculations of standard rates of reimbursement to troop-contributing States, including ways to produce timely and more representative data;

3. Requests the post-Phase V Working Group to report on the results of the review to the General Assembly at its resumed fifty-fifth session through the Advisory Committee.

Equipment

The Secretary-General, in a March note on reform of the procedure for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment [A/54/795], summarized the proposals and recommendations contained in the report of the Phase V Working Group on reform procedures [A/C.5/54/49], established by General Assembly decision 53/480 [YUN 1999, p. 67]. The Working Group, which met from 24 to 28 January, reviewed and updated the Phase II and Phase III standards and rates of major equipment and self-sustainment categories, in accordance with Assembly resolution 49/233 A [YUN 1994, p. 1338]. It also reviewed levels of medical support and established rates of reimbursement.

The Secretary-General said the Group had proposed a methodology for the periodic revision of the rates in major equipment, self-sustainment and special cases, recommended improvements with regard to some performance standards and reimbursement procedures and adopted, with amendments, the Secretariat's proposal on medical support services. Owing to time constraints and the unavailability of sufficient data from troop contributors, the Working Group was unable to develop new rates for major equipment and self-sustainment categories. It recommended that the Assembly convene a post-Phase V Working Group to validate a methodology by which revised rates would be recommended to the Assembly for approval. That Group would meet for 10 working days in early 2001 and would be open to all Member States.

The Secretary-General said that the enhanced procedures developed for major equipment, self-sustainment and medical support services and the progress made on developing a methodology for the systematic review of standards and rates would greatly facilitate the Secretariat's work in reimbursing troop-contributing countries for their contingent-owned equipment in peacekeeping operations. He recommended that the Assembly adopt the triennial review of rates using indices for generic categories to be applied to all major equipment and self-sustainment categories listed in the contingent-owned equipment manual; approve the subcategories and changes with respect to major equipment; amend the performance standards for catering, furniture and welfare; include in the soldier's kit a basic flak jacket; approve the medical support services proposal; convene an expert group to review and specify the rates for medical support services; convene a meeting of experts to review pre-deployment immunization and post-repatriation medical examination costs for peacekeeping personnel; and convene a post-Phase V Working Group to complete the mandate of the Phase V Working Group in January 2001.

ACABQ, in April [A/54/826], said that the convening of a post-Phase V Working Group should be contingent upon the receipt of sufficient data from Member States and recommended that the Secretariat collect data from Member States and report to the Assembly on its success in that regard. The Assembly could then convene the Working Group. ACABQ also recommended that the 1995 rates continue to be used until sufficient replies and data were received for a review to be conducted. The Manual on Policies and Procedures concerning Reimbursement and Control of Contingent-owned Equipment of Troop-contributing Countries Participating in Peacekeeping Missions (the COE Manual) should be revised immediately after the Assembly had taken action on the Phase V Working Group's recommendations and be translated into the UN working languages.

OIOS report

In February [A/54/765 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the audit of contingent-owned equipment (COE) procedures and payments to troop-contributing countries. OIOS, recalling the adoption by the Assembly in resolution 50/222 [YUN 1996, p. 35] of revised procedures for reimbursing troop-contributing countries for equipment used in peacekeeping missions, found that those procedures had resulted in greater economy and efficiency. However, improvements were needed in several areas to fully realize the cost savings and efficiency gains anticipated when the revised procedures were introduced.

OIOS made nine recommendations, including measures for enhancing the process of negotiating memorandums of understanding, improving DPKO's administrative arrangements for reimbursing troop contributors, strengthening procedures to reimburse Member States for equipment preparation and inland transport costs, and simplifying COE reporting procedures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 June [meeting 98], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/684/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/19 B without vote [agenda item 151 (a)].

Reformed procedures for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/233 A of 23 December 1994, 50/222 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 E of 17 June 1997 and 54/19 A of 29 October 1999,

Recalling also its decision 53/480 of 8 June 1999, by which the Secretary-General was requested to convene the Phase V Working Group,

Recalling further the report of the Secretary-General and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on the reform of the procedure for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment,

Having considered the report of the Phase V Working Group on reform procedures for determining reimbursement of contingent-owned equipment, as transmitted by the Chairman of the Working Group to the Chairman of the Fifth Committee and the note by the Secretary-General and the related report of the Advisory Committee on the reform of the procedure for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment,

Having considered also the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the audit of contingent-owned equipment procedures and payments to troop-contributing countries,

1. Endorses the recommendations of the Phase V Working Group on reform procedures for determining reimbursement of contingent-owned equipment;
2. Requests the Secretary-General to collect the data from Member States referred to in the recommendations made by the Phase V Working Group in paragraphs 44 and 45 of its report concerning the cost of painting and repainting major equipment;

3. Takes note of the views of the Secretariat regarding replacement of the term "force-wide" with the term "force level", the inclusion of climatic and environmental changes under inland transportation costs, and the medical equipment threshold of 1,500 United States dollars, and invites the post-Phase V Working Group to reconsider these issues;

4. Endorses the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

5. Decides to convene, for not less than ten working days, in accordance with annex IX to the report of the Phase V Working Group, a post-Phase V Working Group in January/February 2001, to review rates for major equipment, self-sustainment and medical support services, and to include, within the post-Phase V Working Group, appropriate expertise to conduct the vaccination cost review recommended by the Phase V Working Group in paragraph 87 (a) (iii) of its report;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that adequate and sufficient conference facilities are provided for the post-Phase V Working Group, taking duly into consideration the structure and needs of the Working Group;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to collect data from Member States and to report to the General Assembly on the extent of his success;

8. Urges Member States, in this regard, to provide the data pertaining to major equipment and self-sustainment to the Secretariat by 31 October 2000 at the latest, in order for the Secretariat to report to the General Assembly in November 2000 on the adequacy of the data, with a view to ascertaining whether the data are available for holding the meeting of the post-Phase V Working Group in January/February 2001;

9. Emphasizes that the Secretary-General should strictly ensure that in future, when the reports of the Office of Internal Oversight Services are transmitted, a reference to General Assembly resolution 54/244 of 23 December 1999 is included in addition to a reference to Assembly resolution 48/218 B of 29 July 1994, and issue a corrigendum to the current report;

10. Decides to keep this matter under review at its fifty-fifth session.

Responding to the Assembly's request to collect data pertaining to major equipment and self-sustainment from Member States, the Secretary-General, in a November note [A/55/650], reported that the Secretariat had received data from 30 troop contributors, which it considered sufficient for the post-Phase V Working Group to be able to conduct a further analysis. The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly convene a post-Phase V Working Group meeting from 15 to 26 January 2001.

On 23 December, the Assembly, by decision 55/452, took note of the Secretary-General's note and decided to convene the post-Phase V meeting on the dates recommended.

Management of peacekeeping assets

Liquidation

The Secretary-General, in his report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/54/670], said that concerted efforts had been made to complete liquidation of missions closed prior to December 1997, and that that exercise was expected to be finalized in the current fiscal year (2000/01). As for missions closed after January 1998, procedures had been instituted to allow for the preparation of their liquidation well before termination of the mandates. As a result, it had been possible to conduct the liquidation of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES) and the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP) within the initial liquidation time frame. The Secretariat would continue to pursue that approach in dealing with missions that were scheduled for liquidation so as to ensure that that was carried out in a timely manner.

The General Assembly, by decision 54/462 B of 15 June, deferred consideration of the OIOS report on the audit of the liquidation of peacekeeping missions [YUN 1999, p. 69].

Procurement and inventory

The General Assembly, by resolution 54/257 of 7 April, took note of the 1998 OIOS report on the inquiry into allegations of insufficient use of expertise in procurement planning of aviation services in peacekeeping missions [YUN 1998, p. 59].

By decision 54/462 B of 15 June, the Assembly deferred to its fifty-fifth (2000) session consideration of the 1999 OIOS reports on the investigation into the award of a fresh-rations contract in a UN peacekeeping mission and on the audit of the management of service and ration contracts on peacekeeping missions [YUN 1999, p. 70].

ACABQ, in an April report [A/54/841], stressed the need for further information on the impact of the decentralization of procurement and of the increase in the threshold of procurement handled by field missions under delegated authority on the staffing and other resources at Headquarters. Resources released as a result of such decentralization could be used to increase further the capacity for procurement planning at Headquarters to reduce the lead time for mission needs. That and the issue of procurement levels and executing units at Headquarters, in the field and in regional areas, in terms of value and the number of procurement actions, should be examined. Reserve stock for peacekeeping missions, including alternative methods of maintaining standby arrangements, should be reviewed and the results reported to ACABQ in the next review of the 2001/02 budgets. An enhanced role for the Logistics Base in Brindisi to increase the capacity for procurement for peacekeeping operations and start-up of new or expanded peacekeeping missions needed to be examined. The efficiency of the procedure for recouping the costs for the work done at the Base should be reviewed and the full cost of those activities disclosed in the next budget presentations. ACABQ endorsed the view of the UN Board of Auditors that the cost-effectiveness of any proposed transfer of assets should be properly evaluated in all missions under liquidation.

With respect to the use of new technology in peacekeeping missions, ACABQ acknowledged the need to provide missions with additional capacity, such as data processing and communications. However, it cautioned against the tendency to automatically requisition state-of-the-art equipment in all cases. The current replacement cycles for various inventory items should be made more transparent and the reasons for replacement provided. Given the new surge in peacekeeping operations and the high inventory values involved, ACABQ reiterated that all stages of the field assets control system should be implemented within the shortest possible time, a progress report on the implementation of its initial stage should be submitted to the Assembly's fifty-fifth session and summary reports of inventory should be readily available.

Improving procurement in the field

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/17 A [YUN 1999, p. 117], the Secretary-General submitted a May report on measures taken to improve procurement activities in the field [A/54/866]. The report provided observations on the outcome of procurement audits in Angola [YUN 1998, p. 123 & YUN 1999, p. 117] and summarized ongoing efforts by the Administration to strengthen procurement activities in the field.

The Secretary-General said that the sharp increase in the number and complexity of peacekeeping operations in the early 1990s had caught the UN procurement system unprepared to meet the new challenges in terms of its organizational structure and human resources capacity. Also, the expansion of peacekeeping operations was accompanied by an increase in the complexity of mandates. Those factors, coupled with an outdated procurement system, contributed to the problems experienced in Angola. While the audits and investigations did not reveal any severe misconduct in the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM), the Secretariat recognized the importance of addressing procedural and systemic weaknesses to prevent any opportunity for misuse of UN resources. Therefore, much had been done to make the procurement system more responsive to the requirements of peacekeeping operations and to ensure transparency and accountability at all stages of the process. Among the measures implemented were the introduction of procurement planning on the basis of the annual budget cycle, the initiation of preparatory processes in advance of commitment authority, which enhanced procurement authority, and new arrangements governing contingent-owned equipment and self-sustainment, reducing the amount of direct support provided by the United Nations. A particularly effective measure was the introduction of start-up kits for new missions as a first-line procurement support mechanism at the United Nations Logistics Base in Brindisi (see below). The Secretariat had also tried to consolidate most of its generic requirements under system contracts at Headquarters and in the field, resulting in reductions in procurement price and lead times, as well as the number of ex post facto cases submitted to the Committee on Contracts. In that context, the Secretariat was increasing the practice of sharing systems contracts with other UN agencies and programmes as part of the Secretary-General's common services initiative. The Secretariat was also designing a comprehensive procurement training programme targeting field procurement and contract administration personnel. Staff from the DPKO Field Administration and Logistics Division were more frequently deployed to missions at short notice during the start-up phase.

The General Assembly, by decision 54/462 B of 15 June, deferred consideration of the Secretary-General's report until its fifty-fifth session.

Property losses

ACABQ, in its April report [A/54/841], considered the Secretary-General's 1999 report on losses of UN property in peacekeeping operations [YUN 1999, p. 71]. It requested that the issue of the definition of loss due to negligence, in particular what constituted gross carelessness in the definition of negligence and the relationship between that definition and the threshold of gross negligence, be clarified in the next report. It said that further progress needed to be made in the methods of collecting, classifying and analysing the data presented in the report, including statistics on recovery and loss over the same time period. The causes of loss should also be analysed, with particular emphasis on the distinction between negligence and gross negligence.

The General Assembly, on 15 June, took note of the Secretary-General's report and concurred with ACABQ's observations and recommendations thereon (decision 54/484).

UN Logistics Base

In a January report [A/54/711], the Secretary-General submitted the financial performance report of the United Nations Logistics Base in Brindisi for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999. Expenditures for the period totalled $6,690,000, against approved cost estimates of $7,141,800, resulting in an unencumbered balance of $451,800. The Secretary-General recommended that that amount, as well as interest income of $114,000 and miscellaneous income of

In February [A/54/733], the Secretary-General presented the proposed budget for the maintenance of the Base for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 in the amount of $9,317,400 gross ($8,481,300 net), representing a 25 per cent increase in resources over the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000. The increase reflected a 6 per cent increase in civilian personnel costs, a 24.1 per cent increase in operational costs and a 7.5 per cent increase under other programmes. The budget provided for a staffing establishment of 23 international and 83 local staff.

In relation to the financial performance report, ACABQ, in April [A/54/841/Add.8], recommended acceptance of the Secretary-General's proposal regarding the unencumbered balance. It welcomed the trend of procurement by the Base on behalf of other entities and recommended that the potential capacity for its wider use be explored. It requested that the related workload be monitored and appropriate reimbursement sought for those services. ACABQ recommended that the potential of the Base for use as a regional procurement centre be explored with the missions in the area. It was of the opinion that, regardless of the funding source, there was a need for more transparency regarding the total cost of the operation of the Base. It recommended that the efficiency of the procedure for accounting and settlement of the cost for work done at the Base be reviewed and that the full cost of those activities be disclosed in the next budget presentation.

ACABQ recommended approval of the proposed 2000/01 budget, including the staffing arrangements. It welcomed the proposed review of the Base's operations by DPKO in 2000-2001, the results of which and the changes proposed would be reflected in the next budget proposal.

In June [A/C.5/54/63], the Secretary-General submitted to the Fifth Committee a note on the amounts to be apportioned in respect of each peacekeeping mission, including the prorated share of the support account and of the Logistics Base.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 June [meeting 98], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/684/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/278 without vote [agenda item 151 (a)].

Financing of the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy

The General Assembly,

Recalling section XIV of its resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994,

Recalling also its decision 50/500 of 17 September 1996 on the financing of the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 53/236 of 8 June 1999,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the Logistics Base and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Reiterating the importance of establishing an accurate inventory of assets,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy;

2. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

3. Welcomes, in this regard, the recent positive developments in the utilization of the Logistics Base, especially the contribution of crucial logistical support to the launching of large new missions;

4. Reiterates the need to implement, as a matter of priority, an effective inventory management standard, especially in respect of peacekeeping operations involving high inventory value;

5. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to review the concept of the operations of the Logistics Base, and requests him, as part of that review, to consider fully the observations and recommendations of the Advisory Committee and report thereon to the General Assembly as soon as possible during its fifty-fifth session;

6. Approves the cost estimates for the Logistics Base amounting to 9,317,400 United States dollars gross (8,481,300 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001;

7. Decides to apply the unencumbered balance of 451,800 dollars in respect of the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, the interest income of 114,000 dollars and miscellaneous income of 1,166,000 dollars (1,731,800 dollars in total) to the resources required for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001;

8. Decides also to prorate the balance of 7,585,600 dollars gross (6,479,500 dollars net) among the individual active peacekeeping operation budgets to meet the financing requirements of the Logistics Base for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001;

9. Authorizes the Secretary-General to provide for a civilian establishment consisting of ten Professional, thirteen Field Service and eighty-three locally recruited staff;

10. Decides to consider during its fifty-fifth session the question of the financing of the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi.

In December [A/55/714], the Secretary-General presented the financial performance report for the Base for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, which showed expenditures totalling $7,026,000, resulting in an unencumbered balance of $430,500. The Secretary-General requested that that amount, as well as interest income of $289,000 and miscellaneous income of $340,000 ($1,059,500 in total), be applied to resources for 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002.

Personnel matters

Death and disability benefits

In January [A/C.5/54/47], the Secretary-General submitted his tenth quarterly report showing that, of the original backlog of 564 death and disability claims awaiting processing as at 19 May 1997, only 19 remained (9 for Austria, 9 for Bangladesh and 1 for the Russian Federation), most of which had already been certified for settlement. In the circumstances, the Secretary-General recommended that the tenth quarterly report be the last such report to be submitted.

ACABQ, in March [A/54/782], said that, while there was no need to continue reporting on the backlog of cases, annual reports should be submitted. ACABQ was of the opinion that the information provided should be more complete and recommended that information on incidents should distinguish between accidents, injuries and deaths, and include the total number of claims, those being processed and the number settled, as well as the dollar amounts involved. Some assessment could be given regarding which incidents were likely to lead to claims.

The General Assembly, by decision 54/459 B of 7 April, took note of the Secretary-General's report and the related report of ACABQ. It concurred with ACABQ's observations and recommendations and decided that annual reports should be submitted on the status of all death and disability claims, commencing with the period ending 31 December 2000.

Cooperation with regional arrangements

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/54/839] urged the strengthening of cooperation between the United Nations and relevant regional arrangements and agencies to enhance the capabilities of the international community in the maintenance of international peace and security. It encouraged the Secretary-General to take steps towards that end, but recognized that such cooperation posed considerable challenges. The Special Committee recommended that the Secretary-General elaborate in his next progress report on how those challenges could best be tackled. It was of the view that efforts to enhance the capacity of African countries in various aspects of peacekeeping were complementary to the obligations of Member States under the Charter and were not intended to replace or reduce engagement of non-African countries in peacekeeping operations in the continent. International efforts to strengthen the collective capacity of African countries to participate in peacekeeping operations should focus on enhancing the institutional capacity of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and, in particular, its Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution, through the provision of financial and technical assistance. In that connection, the Special Committee urged Member States to contribute to the OAU Peace Fund. It also encouraged partnerships between States and with OAU and subregional organizations in training, logistics, equipment and financial support. The United Nations should play an active role, especially in coordinating those efforts. Member States were urged to contribute to the Trust Fund established by the Secretary-General for that purpose and to provide financial and other support to the current study of peacekeeping operations conducted by African subregional organizations. The Special Committee looked forward to the establishment of a group on the enhancement of African peacekeeping capacity and urged the Secretariat to continue its consultations on the terms of reference of the group with a view to establishing it in a timely manner. It urged, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 54/94 [YUN 1999, p. 191], that discussion on the exchange of staff between the United Nations and OAU secretariats be concluded at the earliest opportunity. The Special Committee welcomed Secretariat efforts in subregional peacekeeping training and seminars conducted with the Southern African Development Community and the Economic Community of West African States, and encouraged the Secretariat to extend those efforts to all other African subregional organizations.

Chapter II

Africa

Armed conflict and political discord continued to trouble a number of African countries in 2000, most seriously in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), Eritrea, Ethiopia and Sierra Leone. Africa's political and security challenges were complicated by the pervasive problems of economic stagnation and the rapid spread of HIV/AIDS, both of which had consequences for peace in the continent.

In 2000, the Security Council and the General Assembly considered ways to implement the Secretary-General's 1998 recommendations on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa. A working group established by the Assembly reported in July on those recommendations, covering areas such as conflict prevention and maintenance of peace, and strengthening peacekeeping capabilities. The Council, under the presidency of the United States, devoted the month of January to discussing the problems of Africa.

The war in the DRC continued to dominate events in the Great Lakes region where the situation remained unstable and the conflict continued between the DRC Government, supported by Angola, Namibia and Zimbabwe, and various rebel groups, loosely allied with the neighbouring countries of Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda. Among other diplomatic efforts to seek a solution, a Security Council mission visited the country in mid-May when a ceasefire was briefly in effect. However, the situation deteriorated rapidly in June with heavy fighting in and around the city of Kisangani, and the DRC forces encountered opposition there from the armies of Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda as well as from armed groups. By the end of the year, the situation had improved; Rwandan and Ugandan troops withdrew from Kisangani and the fighting diminished and shifted to other parts of the country.

In Burundi, efforts to end the ethnic conflict were spearheaded by the Facilitator of that process, former President Nelson Mandela of South Africa. The Arusha Agreement on Peace and Reconciliation, a framework for political reform, was signed by 19 political parties, but some of the main combatant rebel forces were not parties to it. By the end of the year, armed groups continued to carry out attacks against government forces and civilians. Burundi accused certain neighbouring countries of supporting the rebel groups.

In contrast to other Great Lakes countries, the security situation in Rwanda improved and the Government began laying the foundation for the transition to democracy. Steps were made to draw up a new constitution, overhaul the justice system and promote the observance of human rights. In April, the Security Council considered the 1999 report of the Independent Inquiry it had commissioned to evaluate the UN role during the 1994 genocide in Rwanda.

The situation in Sierra Leone reached a new crisis point in May and June when rebel groups detained hundreds of peacekeepers of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL) and seized their weapons. By the end of July, most of the UN troops had either been rescued during UN operations or released by their captors, but nine UN peacekeepers were reported killed and others were missing. Despite those developments, UNAMSIL continued its efforts to bring peace to the country under the terms of the 1999 Lomé Peace Agreement, signed by the Government and the main opposition force. Following the attacks on UN personnel, the Security Council increased the size of the Mission from 6,000 to 13,000 peacekeepers and expanded its mandate. The Council also took action to restrict the capacity of rebel groups to wage war by prohibiting the importation of rough diamonds from Sierra Leone without official certification of their origin and by strengthening the arms embargo against those groups. The Council was also considering a proposal to establish a special court in order to bring to justice those responsible for serious crimes and atrocities against the people of Sierra Leone and UNAMSIL peacekeepers. UNAMSIL and the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) continued their efforts to mediate with the parties. On 10 November, the Government and the main rebel group reached a ceasefire agreement, agreeing that UNAMSIL would supervise and monitor the ceasefire. Opposition forces displayed reluctance to fulfil their commitments under the new agreement; however, the situation was relatively calm, but tense, at the end of the year.

The instability in Sierra Leone and the activities of rebel groups there affected other countries in West Africa. In December, the Council condemned recent incursions into Guinea by rebel groups from Liberia and Sierra Leone along the length of Guinea's border. ECOWAS was also active in efforts to consolidate peace in the sub-region, participating in the summit meeting of Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone that dealt with shared political, security and socio-economic concerns. In December, the three countries agreed that an ECOWAS interposition force be sent to the border areas.

In Liberia, where the internal situation remained fragile, the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in Liberia (UNOL) continued to work towards the consolidation of peace and democracy in cooperation with the Government and ECOWAS. The Secretary-General reported that, despite the transition from civil conflict to an elected Government in 1997, Liberia was beset with governance problems and inadequate external support for its reconstruction programme.

Guinea-Bissau was also in the early stages of a new, democratically elected Government. In January, it held the second and final round of presidential elections in accordance with the 1998 Abuja Peace Accord that ended the civil conflict there. The military establishment continued to interfere in the establishment of democratic institutions and, in November, led an attempted coup d'état. By the end of the year, the situation was relatively calm, but tense.

Angola continued to be one of the most unstable countries in Africa in 2000. Implementation of the 1994 Lusaka Protocol, by which the Government and the opposition guerrilla group agreed to the extension of the State administration, remained at a standstill. In April, the Security Council reiterated that the primary cause of the crisis was the refusal of the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA) to comply with the Lusaka Protocol. The Government continued its offensive against the UNITA guerrilla forces and was able to re-establish its authority in several UNITA strongholds. Military operations in southern and south-eastern border areas spilled into neighbouring Namibia and Zambia, where bombing and shelling incidents were reported and refugee flows occurred. The Expert Panel established by the Security Council in 1999 to investigate sanctions against UNITA determined that the sanctions were ineffective. Angola approved the status of the United Nations Office in Angola (UNOA), which had replaced the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola (MONUA) in 1999, and agreed that the Office should aim to build the country's capacity in humanitarian assistance and human rights.

The border war between Eritrea and Ethiopia intensified in May despite the fact that both parties had agreed to abide by the terms of the Framework Agreement drawn up by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) in 1998. Under OAU auspices, the two Governments resumed proximity talks and signed a ceasefire agreement on 18 June. By its terms, they agreed to seek a UN peacekeeping mission under OAU auspices, to re-deploy troops to their positions before the war, and to establish a temporary security zone between the two sides. To monitor that plan, the Security Council decided on 31 July to establish the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE) with a deployment of up to 4,200 personnel. The ceasefire agreement was followed by the signing of a Peace Agreement in December.

In Somalia, new steps were made in the peace process under the proposals suggested by the President of Djibouti. Preparatory meetings organized by Djibouti in early 2000 brought together representatives of most of Somalia's numerous clans, and during the year agreement was reached on a Transitional National Charter, the election of a Transitional National Assembly and the election of a president to head the transitional Government. Following his inauguration, the President made efforts to bring Somaliland and Puntland, two factions that had boycotted the peace conference, into the peace process. In June, the Security Council urged representatives of all forces in Somalia to participate in the peace process. By the end of the year, the new transitional Government had only limited control of the country and banditry and lawlessness prevailed.

Following the establishment of a new democratically elected Government in the Central African Republic in 1999, the United Nations withdrew its mission from that country in February 2000 and replaced it with the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office (BONUCA). The situation in 2000 was dominated by the confrontational approach between the ruling party and the numerous opposition parties.

The United Nations pursued its goal of holding a referendum in Western Sahara for the self-determination of its people, as agreed in 1990 by Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (POLISARIO), but progress remained elusive. Direct meetings between Morocco and POLISARIO in May, July and September, organized by the Secretary-General's Personal Envoy, failed to make progress on the main issues. The Secretary-General concluded that further meetings of the parties to seek a political solution could not succeed unless Morocco, as administrative Power, was prepared to support some genuine devolution of governmental authority for all inhabitants and former inhabitants of the Territory.

A number of regional organizations sought to lift the Security Council sanctions against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, which were suspended in 1999 but not completely removed. It was argued that removal was called for since the two Libyan suspects charged with the 1988 bombing of Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, were currently being tried by a Scottish court sitting in the Netherlands.

Promotion of peace in Africa

During 2000, the General Assembly and the Security Council continued to consider ways to implement the recommendations made by the Secretary-General in his 1998 report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa [YUN 1998, p. 66]. In that report, the Secretary-General had highlighted three areas to which Africa should devote particular attention: it should demonstrate the political will to rely on political rather than military responses to problems; it should take good governance seriously; and it should meet and adhere to reforms needed to promote economic growth. In addition, the international community should summon the political will to intervene where it could have an impact and invest where resources were needed, the Secretary-General had stated.

In order to follow up on the Secretary-General's recommendations, the General Assembly had established an open-ended working group, which issued its report in July 2000. Covering such areas as conflict prevention and maintenance of peace, refugees, strengthening peace-keeping capacities and arms sanctions, the report outlined where progress had been made and areas where obstacles remained. It also made proposals for further action and called for continued monitoring. In December, the Assembly endorsed those proposals, and extended the mandate of the working group for a year so that it could continue to monitor progress in implementing the Secretary-General's recommendations.

The United States, as President of the Security Council, declared January 2000 the "month of Africa". The Council discussed African issues at six open Council meetings and in four informal consultations. Particular attention was paid to AIDS (see p. 81) and the situation of refugees and internally displaced persons (see p. 1154).

Report of Working Group. The Open-ended Ad Hoc Working Group on the Causes of Conflict and the Promotion of Durable Peace and Sustainable Development in Africa, established by the General Assembly in resolution 53/92 [YUN 1998, p. 77] to monitor the Secretary-General's recommendations, issued a report in July [A/55/45] covering progress made in implementing the recommendations, obstacles encountered and modalities for further action. The Working Group held three sessions during the year (7 and 13-15 March, 15-19 May and 17-21 July), as well as a number of informal meetings.

In the area of peacemaking and peacekeeping, the Working Group noted that progress made was described in a report submitted by the Secretary-General to the Security Council in September 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 78]. Peacemaking activities included such measures as the Secretary-General's appointment of special envoys and representatives to help resolve conflicts in a number of countries and coordinating mediation efforts with other organizations involved in the process. Progress had also been made in post-conflict peace-building to promote the transition from relief to development, financing recovery, coordinating political, human rights, humanitarian and development activities, promotion of human rights, elimination of discrimination against women, social development, food security, debt relief and opening international markets.

However, the Working Group identified a number of obstacles that remained, including insufficient political will on the part of some African countries and the international community, inadequate financial resources and human resource capacity, deficiencies in governance in some African countries, the persistence of armed conflict, limited access to technology, poor public health and the major threat of HIV/AIDS, a weak private sector and economic structure and coordination difficulties. The Working Group presented a list of modalities for further action, at both the national and international levels, towards further implementation, and stated that there was a need for regular monitoring in order to ensure effective implementation. It made specific proposals in the areas of poverty eradication, debt relief, financing for development, HIV/AIDS and malaria, conflict prevention and post-conflict peace-building, refugees and internally displaced persons, coordination and follow-up.

With regard to finding solutions to the ongoing armed conflicts in Africa, the Working Group welcomed the efforts of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) to strengthen its mechanism for conflict prevention and resolution and to promote peace and stability, while emphasizing that further efforts were needed to prevent violent conflicts at their earliest stages. It recognized the need to strengthen the early warning capacity of the United Nations, OAU and African subregional organizations to respond to conflict situations. The Group also supported the Conference on Security, Stability, Development and Cooperation in Africa process initiated by Africa and called on the Secretary-General to explore ways to provide support to that initiative. It proposed that the Economic and Social Council create an ad hoc advisory group on countries emerging from conflict, with a view to assessing their economic needs and elaborating a long-term programme of support beginning with the integration of relief into development. It further proposed that greater financial support be given for demobilization, demilitarization and reintegration programmes, with funding provided through peacekeeping operations' budgets as a solution to the shortfall in resources. Post-conflict peace-building should include assisting the reintegration of demobilized soldiers and other war-affected groups, including child soldiers.

The Working Group recommended that the Secretary-General, in consultation with the President of the World Bank, strengthen coordination mechanisms, including the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative on Africa and the Comprehensive Development Framework of the World Bank, with a view to streamlining them and creating complementarity and synergy.

The Working Group emphasized that the General Assembly had primary responsibility for monitoring progress in implementing the Secretary-General's recommendations, with due regard being given to the competences of the other main UN organs. The review had revealed a need for continued monitoring in all areas included in the Secretary-General's report. It therefore proposed: that its mandate be extended; that applicable benchmarks be developed to assess impact and measure performance; and that thematic working groups be established to make specific proposals on issues that had not yet been covered in the Working Group's sessions.

In a September note [A/55/431], the Secretary-General informed the Assembly that the Secretariat had provided assistance and information to the Working Group for the preparation of its report. In view of that, he did not see the need to submit another report to the Assembly on the same subject.

Security Council consideration. The United States, as President of the Security Council, declared January the "month of Africa". The Council discussed African issues at six open meetings, some of which were attended by heads of State, and four informal consultations. Two presidential statements were issued, one on the situation of refugees in Africa (S/PRST/2000/1), in which the Council underlined the importance of taking measures aimed at conflict prevention and resolution in Africa in order to avoid circumstances that led to internal displacement and the outflow of refugees (see p. 1154), and the other on support for the peace agreement in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (S/PRST/2000/2) (see p. 121). A resolution on support for the Burundi peace process was also adopted (resolution 1286(2000)) (see p. 144). Also in January, the Council held an open debate to discuss the devastating impact of AIDS in Africa and its consequences for regional peace and security (see p. 81), Angola (see p. 149) and Sierra Leone (see p. 189).

On 4 August [S/2000/772], the Council decided to meet on 7 September, during the Millennium Summit, at the level of heads of State and Government, to consider the topic "Ensuring an effective role of the Security Council in the maintenance of international peace and security, particularly in Africa". At the 7 September meeting [S/PV.4194], the Council adopted resolution 1318(2000) on the topic (see p. 64).

Adviser for Special Assignments. On 7 November [S/2000/1082], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his decision to extend the appointment of Ibrahim Gambari as his Adviser for Special Assignments in Africa until 28 February 2002. Mr. Gambari had pursued the peaceful resolution of conflicts in Africa with particular attention to Angola (see p. 149). The Council took note of the decision on 10 November [S/2000/1083].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/217 [draft: A/55/L.37/Rev.1 & Corr.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 50].

Causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 53/92 of 7 December 1998 and 54/234 of 22 December 1999 on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa,

Having considered the report of the Open-ended Ad Hoc Working Group on the Causes of Conflict and the Promotion of Durable Peace and Sustainable Development in Africa, as well as the note by the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 54/234,

Recalling its resolution 46/151 of 18 December 1991, the annex to which contains the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, its resolutions 48/214 of 23 December 1993, 49/142 of 23 December 1994 and 51/32 of 6 December 1996, on the mid-term review of the New Agenda, as well as its resolution 53/90 of 7 December 1998 on the implementation of the New Agenda, as well as chapter VII of the United Nations Millennium Declaration, Reaffirming the close linkage between peace, security and sustainable development and the need for a comprehensive implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General,

Expressing deep concern about the obstacles to the effective implementation of the recommendations of the Secretary-General, including the lack of financial and technical resources for development in Africa,

Emphasizing the need to strengthen further the political will that is indispensable for the successful implementation of the recommendations of the Secretary-General and the proposals of the Working Group,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Open-ended Ad Hoc Working Group on the Causes of Conflict and the Promotion of Durable Peace and Sustainable Development in Africa;

2. Endorses the proposals of the Working Group contained in paragraphs 25 to 57 of chapter IV of its report, entitled "Modalities for further action", and the follow-up action proposed in paragraph 60 of the report;

3. Encourages Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system and other relevant international and regional institutions, within their respective mandates, to take necessary measures to implement fully the proposals made by the Working Group in its report;

4. Decides to extend the mandate of the Working Group until the fifty-sixth session of the General Assembly, to enable it to continue to monitor the implementation of all of the recommendations made by the Secretary-General in his report;

5. Requests the Working Group, in devising the modalities for its work, to consider the need for a comprehensive follow-up to the recommendations of the Secretary-General and the necessity of ensuring efficiency by focusing on selected thematic areas;

6. Invites the Security Council to pursue its consideration of the follow-up to the recommendations in the areas of peace and security, with a view to ensuring coordinated and integrated implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

7. Requests the Economic and Social Council, at its substantive session of 2001, to consider the proposals of the Working Group contained in chapter IV of its report, including the creation of an ad hoc advisory group on countries emerging from conflict, with a view to assessing their humanitarian and economic needs and elaborating a long-term programme of support for implementation that begins with the integration of relief into development;

8. Requests that, where applicable, benchmarks be developed by the Secretary-General to assess the impact of and measure performance in the implementation of the recommendations contained in his report and that he submit them to the Working Group for its consideration;

9. Requests the Working Group to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session a progress report on the implementation of the recommendations contained in his report.

In other action related to the maintenance of peace in Africa, the Assembly, in resolution 55/56, called on States to implement Security Council measures aimed at breaking the link between the illicit trade in rough diamonds and the supply to rebel movements of weapons, fuel or other prohibited materiel (see p. 77). In resolution 55/77, the Assembly expressed its particular concern about the impact of large-scale refugee populations on the security, socio-economic situation and environment of African countries of asylum (see p. 1158).

By decision 55/458 of 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session.

Great Lakes region

In the Great Lakes region of Africa, the situation remained tense and unpredictable in 2000, particularly in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), where the conflict showed no sign of ending, despite the efforts of both the United Nations and OAU. Fighting in the DRC, which had been engulfed in war since the beginning of the armed rebellion in August 1998, had resulted in the death of hundreds of civilians and caused massive harm to an already fragile economy. Insecurity and the lack of serious commitment to the peace process by the various warring parties and their supporters from several neighbouring countries continued to hamper the full deployment of UN peacekeepers and military observers.

Optimism was generated by efforts to implement the 1999 Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement on the DRC [YUN 1999, p. 87] and to pursue the Arusha peace process on Burundi, but that gave way later to caution and some scepticism. The breakdown of mediation efforts in the DRC further reduced the likelihood of a constructive dialogue between the Government and the warring factions. In Burundi, despite some progress to achieve a settlement, concrete results remained elusive. The situation in Rwanda was marked by increasing tension, particularly in the north-west of the country.

Communications. The Secretary-General, on 21 September [S/2000/907], informed the Security Council of his intention to extend until the end of December 2001 the mandate of his Special Representative for the Great Lakes Region, Berhanu Dinka, whom he had appointed in December 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 81]. In that capacity, Mr. Dinka had been sounding out the views of countries in the region regarding the proposed organization of an international conference on the Great Lakes; representing the Secretary-General at meetings under the Arusha peace process on Burundi; and addressing the regional dimensions of the conflict in the DRC through, among other steps, close interaction with his Special Representative in that country. With respect to Burundi (see p. 143), the signing of the Arusha peace agreement on 28 August 2000 had created a momentum towards a comprehensive agreement to which all parties subscribed. It was therefore desirable for Mr. Dinka to stay engaged in the efforts to address the political and humanitarian situation in Burundi and its regional dimensions. On 26 September [S/2000/908], the Council took note of the Secretary-General's intention.

Uganda, on 26 January, transmitted to the Council a document by President Yoweri Kaguta Museveni, which described the historical background to the conflicts in the Great Lakes region [S/2000/73].

On 13 December [S/2000/1186], Rwanda requested the Council to support Zambia in disarming and repatriating the ex-Rwandese Armed Forces and Interahamwe forces currently on Zambian territory who had fled the DRC after having provoked fighting there. Rwanda's main concern was that, if allowed to return to the DRC, they would fuel more war in the region.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

In 2000, the United Nations continued its efforts to support the implementation of the 1999 Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement, which was signed by the Government of the DRC, one of the two main rebel movements and five regional States. The Agreement provided for a ceasefire to be monitored by the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC), OAU and Zambia; withdrawal of foreign forces from the country; and re-establishment of State administration throughout the country. Although some progress was made in implementation, such as the positioning of UN military liaison officers in the DRC and agreement on a disengagement plan, obstacles encountered included lack of cooperation on the part of the DRC Government and other parties to facilitate deployment of MONUC, continued fighting between the parties, especially in eastern DRC, and the DRC's refusal to meet with the neutral Facilitator appointed by the Secretary-General.

Throughout the year, the DRC remained in the throes of a crisis that continued to elude attempts to solve it. Since 1998 the country had been the scene of a conflict involving seven neighbouring countries and numerous rebel groups that threatened to destabilize the Central African region and exacerbated the already dire socio-economic and political situation of the country. The protagonists in the war were the country's neighbours to the east—Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda—in a loose alliance with various rebel factions, and the DRC Government, supported, at its request, by Angola, Namibia and Zimbabwe, member countries of the Southern African Development Community. A number of diplomatic missions were undertaken to the DRC during the year to try to maintain momentum for peace, but they made little headway. They included a Security Council mission in mid-May, which reported that the ceasefire was holding at that time. However, the agreements were subsequently subjected to many major breaches caused by fighting between government forces and rebels, as well as forces from neighbouring countries.

Some of the heaviest fighting occurred in and around the city of Kisangani in June, when clashes took place between Ugandan and Rwandan troops and their affiliated rebel groups. The conflict between the Government and the Rassemblement congolais pour la démocratie (RCD) flared up in August, when the DRC encountered opposition from the armies of Burundi, Rwanda, Uganda and RCD-Goma and other armed groups. For its part, the Government relied on counter-rebel militias for its defence. The DRC complained that the Burundian and Rwandan armies, as well as RCD, had carried out attacks on the civilian population. By the end of the year, Rwandan and Ugandan troops had withdrawn from Kisangani to a distance of 100 kilometres from the city, although rebel groups remained there. The scene of the fighting shifted at that time to other areas of the country in the north, south and east.

The Security Council responded to the crisis in February by authorizing the expansion of MONUC from a force of 90 to over 5,500 military personnel, with a mandate to facilitate the implementation of the Agreement and liaise with the parties' forces. However, largely due to the lack of cooperation on the part of the parties, particularly the Government, further deployment of troops remained blocked and by the end of the year the strength of the Mission remained at just over 200.

The Secretary-General's Special Representative for the DRC, Kamel Morjane (Tunisia), was based in Kinshasa throughout the year.

Implementation of Lusaka Peace Agreement

Report of Secretary-General (January). The Secretary-General reported on 17 January [S/2000/30] on MONUC, as requested by the Security Council in resolution 1279(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 92]. MONUC, which comprised UN military liaison personnel, together with civilian, political, humanitarian and administrative staff, was established by the Council under resolution 1258(1999) [ibid., p. 89] to assist in developing modalities for implementing the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement [ibid., p. 87]. By the Agreement, a Joint Military Commission (JMC) was established which, together with the United Nations and OAU, would be responsible for executing peacekeeping operations until the deployment of the UN peacekeeping force. In late 1999, JMC began work on a number of issues [ibid., p. 93], including the question of the stationing of UN liaison officers in the DRC.

The military and security situation in the DRC deteriorated in late 1999 [ibid., p. 94] and early 2000, with fighting reported between government troops and rebel forces in several areas and alleged atrocities against women and children.

The Secretary-General stated that MONUC, in its preliminary deployment in the DRC, was able to position officers at eight locations (Gbadolite, Goma, Kananga, Kindu, Gemena, Isiro, Lisala and Boende), although it continued to encounter difficulties in positioning military liaison officers at the rear military headquarters of the belligerents and other key locations. At the time of the report, 79 UN military liaison officers were deployed in the DRC and in the capitals of the belligerent parties and elsewhere in the subregion. MONUC was prepared to deploy additional military officers to assist JMC to assume its tasks under the Lusaka Agreement.

Implementation of the Lusaka Agreement required close cooperation between the United Nations, the parties to the conflict, JMC and OAU, said the Secretary-General. The United Nations, at Headquarters and through MONUC, continued to develop that cooperation through such efforts as deploying two military liaison officers at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, to improve links with OAU, providing training to OAU observers deployed by JMC and providing assistance for JMC deployment. While progress had been made in implementing the Agreement, some setbacks had been registered, particularly the fighting in some parts of the country and obstacles and delays encountered in receiving the necessary clearances to position personnel, thus prohibiting MONUC from performing all its tasks.

The Secretary-General was of the view that the deployment of additional UN military personnel would contribute to restoring momentum for the implementation of the Agreement. The signatories bore a crucial responsibility for ensuring implementation. In that context, no military offensives should be launched, the security and freedom of movement of UN personnel should be guaranteed, and the spreading of hostile propaganda, especially incitements to attack unarmed civilians, should cease.

In view of its essential role, JMC needed to be established on a permanent basis and be able to react swiftly to events. The inter-Congolese dialogue to be conducted under the auspices of the neutral Facilitator, Sir Ketumile Masire, former President of Botswana, with OAU assistance, was an indispensable step towards national reconciliation.

Subject to the parties' agreement to taking those steps, the Secretary-General recommended the expansion of MONUC to 3,400 troops, as follows: deployment of four reinforced protected infantry battalion groups, accompanied by up to 500 military observers; two marine companies (for river patrol) with supporting military personnel and equipment; and the additional civilian personnel required. Its main tasks would be: to liaise with all the parties' military forces and with JMC; to assist the parties in developing modalities for implementing the Agreement; to monitor the ceasefire; in cooperation with JMC, to investigate violations of the ceasefire; and to verify the disengagement of forces. Other tasks would include facilitating the release of prisoners of war and humanitarian operations, supervising the redeployment of the parties' forces to defensive positions or administrative assembly areas and preparing for the next phase of UN deployment. Until the full deployment of a UN force, the role of JMC remained crucial and the Secretary-General appealed to donors to provide it with the resources to support its operations.

SADC summit (January)

The Southern African Development Community (SADC) held an extraordinary summit meeting in Maputo, Mozambique, on 16 January, at the invitation of President Joaquim Alberto Chissano in his capacity as Chairman of SADC. The objective of the summit, as stated in the final communiqué transmitted to the Security Council on 18 January [S/2000/36], was to evaluate the degree of implementation of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement and to review the work of the commissions set up by the Agreement on the modalities and mechanisms of implementation, with a view to the adoption of appropriate measures for the rapid normalization of the DRC situation.

While applauding the appointment of Sir Ketumile Masire by the Congolese parties as the Facilitator of the national dialogue between the political forces in the DRC, the summit noted with concern the lack of progress in implementing the Agreement. The summit urged the signatories to cooperate more actively in the implementation and called on the Security Council to send urgently a full peacekeeping force to the DRC and to provide the logistical means for its operation. It also appealed to the international community to provide humanitarian assistance to refugees and displaced populations and to provide resources for national reconstruction.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 24 and 26 January [meeting 4092], the Security Council discussed the situation in the DRC. The meeting, at which the United States Secretary of State presided, was attended by the heads of State of Angola, the DRC, Mozambique, Rwanda, Uganda, Zambia and Zimbabwe and at the ministerial level by Belgium, Burundi, Canada, France, Mali, Namibia, South Africa and the United Kingdom. The OAU Secretary-General and the Facilitator of the inter-Congolese dialogue also addressed the Council.

On 26 January, the Council President made statement S/PRST/2000/2 on behalf of the members:

The Security Council expresses its appreciation to the heads of State of Angola, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Mozambique, Rwanda, Uganda, Zambia and Zimbabwe, and to the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Burundi, Canada, Namibia, South Africa and the United States of America, the Vice-Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs of Belgium, the Minister Delegate for Co-operation and Francophonie of France, the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Minister of the Armed Forces of Mali, who participated in its meeting of 24 January 2000 on the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The Council also expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity, the representative of the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, and the Facilitator of the Inter-Congolese Dialogue nominated by the Organization of African Unity. Their presence and their statements attest to their renewed commitment to the Ceasefire Agreement signed at Lusaka on 10 July 1999 and to the search for a durable peace in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the region. Their presence in New York also reinforces the progress made at the summit of the Southern African Development Community, held in Maputo on 16 January 2000, and the meeting of the Political Committee for the implementation of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement, held in Harare on 18 January 2000. The Council expects that this progress will continue at the next Political Committee meeting and summit of the signatories to the Agreement.

The Council urges all the parties to the Ceasefire Agreement to build on the momentum of those meetings in order to create and sustain the climate necessary for the full implementation of the Agreement. It underlines the importance of a revised implementation calendar for the full and effective implementation of the tasks set forth in the Agreement.

The Council reaffirms the territorial integrity and national sovereignty of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including over its natural resources, in accordance with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the Charter of the Organization of African Unity. In this regard, it reiterates its call for the immediate cessation of hostilities and the orderly withdrawal of all foreign forces from the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in accordance with the Ceasefire Agreement. The Council reaffirms its support for the Agreement, and also reaffirms its resolutions 1234(1999) of 9 April 1999, 1258(1999) of 6 August 1999, 1273(1999) of 5 November 1999 and 1279(1999) of 30 November 1999.

The Council welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 17 January 2000. The Council expresses its determination to support the implementation of the Ceasefire Agreement. Accordingly, it has now begun consideration of a draft resolution authorizing the expansion of the present mandate of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo along the lines recommended by the Secretary-General in that report. It expresses its intention to act promptly on this basis. It expresses its intention also to consider at the appropriate time preparations for an additional phase of United Nations deployment and further action. It welcomes the statements by the heads of State and delegation in support of the proposals of the Secretary-General. The Council welcomes the arrival of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, expresses its support for his efforts, and urges all parties to provide him with the assistance and cooperation he will require to carry out his functions.

The Council supports the establishment of a co-ordinated Mission and Joint Military Commission structure with co-located headquarters and joint support arrangements. The Council believes this is a vital step in enhancing the ability of the United Nations to support the Ceasefire Agreement. In this regard, the Council urges Member States and donor organizations to continue to provide assistance to the Commission.

The Council underlines the absolute necessity of security and access for United Nations personnel deployed in support of the Lusaka process, and stresses that such a climate of cooperation is an essential prerequisite for the successful implementation of the mandate of the Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The Council calls upon all signatories to the Ceasefire Agreement to provide assurances of safety, security and freedom of movement of United Nations and associated personnel, and, in this regard, attaches importance to the statement by the President of the Democratic Republic of the Congo on the security of the Mission and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General.

The Council stresses the importance of the national dialogue as called for in the Ceasefire Agreement, and affirms that it must be an open, inclusive and democratic process conducted independently by the Congolese people under the established facilitation. It affirms that the national dialogue is the best means for all Congolese parties to address the political future of the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council strongly supports the designation of the former President of Botswana, Sir Ketumile Masire, as the Facilitator of the Inter-Congolese Dialogue as provided for by the Ceasefire Agreement, and calls upon Member States to provide full financial and other support for his efforts and the process as a whole. The Council welcomes the declared readiness of the President of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to begin the national dialogue, and to guarantee the security of all participants.

The Council stresses the need for the continued operation by the United Nations and other agencies of humanitarian relief operations and the promotion and monitoring of human rights, under acceptable conditions of security, freedom of movement and access to affected areas. The Council expresses its serious concern at the humanitarian situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo as well as the shortfall in responses to the United Nations consolidated humanitarian appeal. It therefore urges Member States and donor organizations to make available the necessary funds to carry out urgent humanitarian operations in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council expresses its concern that the presence in the Democratic Republic of the Congo of non-signatory armed groups that have yet to be demobilized constitutes a threat to the Lusaka process. The Council recognizes that disarmament, demobilization, resettlement and reintegration are among the fundamental objectives of the Ceasefire Agreement. The Council underlines the fact that a credible plan for disarmament, demobilization, resettlement and reintegration must be based on an agreed and comprehensive set of principles.

The Council expresses deep concern at the illicit flow of arms into the region, and calls upon all concerned to halt such flows.

The Council values the continuing leadership of the peace process by the President of Zambia and the vital contribution of the Southern African Development Community through its Chairman, the President of Mozambique. It expresses its appreciation to the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, President of Algeria, and to the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity for the vital role of that organization in the Lusaka process. It urges them to continue their essential efforts in close cooperation with the Council and the Secretary-General.

Communications (January/February). On 31 January [S/2000/81], South Africa requested the Security Council to adopt a resolution authorizing the expansion of MONUC and providing for disarmament, demobilization, reintegration and resettlement of all armed groups. It believed that no conditionalities should be attached to the deployment of MONUC, such as linkage to the need for progress in the national dialogue.

The DRC, in letters to the Council, reported new outbreaks of violence in north-eastern parts of the country, stating that Ugandan forces were involved in the fighting. Uganda responded to allegations against it. On 28 January [S/2000/67], the DRC said that massacres were taking place in the Blukwa district, which was occupied by Ugandan forces. The DRC urged the Council to adopt binding measures for the immediate withdrawal of the occupying forces. Uganda, on 3 February [S/2000/89], rejected allegations of genocide and urged the Council to condemn the DRC's attempts to disrupt the Lusaka peace process by inflammatory language against the other signatories of the Agreement.

On 11 February [S/2000/122], the DRC claimed that as a result of massacres and atrocities committed by Ugandan armed forces, backed by RCD, there was a humanitarian catastrophe in Blukwa district, near the Ugandan border. The DRC called on the international community to condemn the aggression, order all uninvited foreign forces to withdraw from DRC territory and dispatch an international commission of inquiry to investigate. MONUC was requested to ensure the opening of a humanitarian corridor to the affected population. On 24 February [S/2000/147], Uganda denied that it had ever been involved in any human rights abuse on DRC territory and stated that it welcomed impartial investigations into the causes of those massacres. The clashes between ethnic groups in Blukwa district had nothing to do with the presence of Ugandan defence forces, which were in the area to counter Ugandan rebels there. Uganda was ready to cooperate with JMC and the United Nations to provide security and humanitarian relief to the affected communities.

Expansion of MONUC

The January report of the Secretary-General on MONUC (see p. 120) was considered by the Security Council on 24 February. The Council expanded the size of MONUC to up to 5,537 military personnel and authorized it to establish a joint structure with JMC.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

On 24 February [meeting 4104], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1291 (2000). The draft [S/2000/143] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1234(1999) of 9 April 1999, 1258(1999) of 6 August 1999, 1273(1999) of 5 November 1999, 1279(1999) of 30 November 1999, and other relevant resolutions, and the statements by its President of 13 July, 31 August and 11 December 1998, 24 June 1999 and 26 January 2000,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the primary responsibility of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security, and the obligation of all States to refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations,

Reaffirming also the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and all States in the region,

Reaffirming further the sovereignty of the Democratic Republic of the Congo over its natural resources, and noting with concern reports of the illegal exploitation of the assets of that country and the potential consequences of these actions on security conditions and the continuation of hostilities,

Expressing its strong support for the Ceasefire Agreement signed at Lusaka on 10 July 1999, which represents the most viable basis for the peaceful resolution of the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Reiterating its call for the orderly withdrawal of all foreign forces from the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in accordance with the Ceasefire Agreement,

Noting the commitment of all parties to the Ceasefire Agreement to locate, identify, disarm and assemble all members of all armed groups in the Democratic Republic of the Congo referred to in chapter 9.1 of annex A to the Ceasefire Agreement and the commitment of all countries of origin of those armed groups to take the steps necessary for their repatriation, and noting also that these tasks must be conducted by the parties in accordance with the Agreement,

Endorsing the selection by the Congolese parties, with the assistance of the Organization of African Unity, of the Facilitator of the Inter-Congolese Dia- logue provided for in the Ceasefire Agreement, and calling upon all Member States to provide political, financial and material support to the facilitation,

Recalling the report of the Secretary-General of 17 January 2000,

Stressing its commitment to work with the parties to implement fully the Ceasefire Agreement, while underlining the fact that its successful implementation rests first and foremost on the will of all parties to the Agreement,

Stressing also the importance of the re-establishment of state administration throughout the national territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, as called for in the Ceasefire Agreement,

Stressing further the importance of the Joint Military Commission, and urging all States to continue to provide it with assistance,

Emphasizing that phase II of the deployment of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo should be based on the following considerations:

(a) That the parties respect and uphold the Ceasefire Agreement and the relevant Council resolutions,

(b) That a valid plan is developed for the disengagement of the forces of the parties and their redeployment to positions approved by the Joint Military Commission,

(c) That the parties provide firm and credible assurances, prior to the deployment of the forces of the Mission, for the security and freedom of movement of United Nations and related personnel,

Recalling the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel of 9 December 1994 and the statement by the President of the Security Council of 10 February 2000,

Welcoming and encouraging efforts by the United Nations to sensitize peacekeeping personnel in the prevention and control of HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases in all its peacekeeping operations,

Expressing its serious concern at the humanitarian situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and encouraging donors to respond to the United Nations consolidated humanitarian appeal,

Stressing the importance to the effectiveness of such humanitarian assistance and other international operations in the Democratic Republic of the Congo of favourable conditions for local procurement and recruitment by international organizations and agencies,

Expressing its deep concern at all violations and abuses of human rights and international humanitarian law, in particular those alleged violations referred to in the report of the Secretary-General,

Expressing its deep concern also at the limited access of humanitarian workers to refugees and internally displaced persons in some areas of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and stressing the need for the continued operation by the United Nations and other agencies of relief operations as well as the promotion and monitoring of human rights, under acceptable conditions of security, freedom of movement and access to affected areas,

Determining that the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo constitutes a threat to international peace and security in the region,

1. Calls upon all parties to fulfil their obligations under the Ceasefire Agreement signed at Lusaka;

2. Reiterates its strong support for the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and his overall authority over United Nations activities in that country, and calls upon all parties to cooperate fully with him;

3. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo until 31 August 2000;

4. Authorizes the expansion of the Mission to consist of up to 5,537 military personnel, including up to 500 observers, or more, provided that the Secretary-General determines that there is a need and that it can be accommodated within the overall size and structure of the force, and appropriate civilian support staff in the areas of, inter alia, human rights, humanitarian affairs, public information, child protection, political affairs, medical support and administrative support, and requests the Secretary-General to recommend immediately any additional force requirements that might become necessary to enhance force protection;

5. Decides that the phased deployment of personnel referred to in paragraph 4 above will be carried out as and if the Secretary-General determines that Mission personnel will be able to deploy to their assigned locations and carry out their functions as described in paragraph 7 below, in conditions of adequate security and with the cooperation of the parties, and that he has received firm and credible assurances from the parties to the Ceasefire Agreement to that effect, and requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council informed in this regard;

6. Decides also that the Mission will establish, under the overall authority of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, a joint structure with the Joint Military Commission that will ensure close coordination during the period of deployment of the Mission, with co-located headquarters and joint support and administrative structures;

7. Decides further that the Mission, in cooperation with the Joint Military Commission, shall have the following mandate:

(a) To monitor the implementation of the Ceasefire Agreement and investigate violations of the ceasefire;

(b) To establish and maintain continuous liaison with the field headquarters of the military forces of all the parties;

(c) To develop, within forty-five days of adoption of the present resolution, an action plan for the overall implementation of the Ceasefire Agreement by all concerned, with particular emphasis on the following key objectives: the collection and verification of military information on the forces of the parties, the maintenance of the cessation of hostilities and the disengagement and redeployment of the parties' forces, the comprehensive disarmament, demobilization, resettlement and reintegration of all members of all armed groups referred to in chapter 9.1 of annex A to the Agreement and the orderly withdrawal of all foreign forces;

(d) To work with the parties to obtain the release of all prisoners of war, military captives and remains, in cooperation with international humanitarian agencies;

(e) To supervise and verify the disengagement and redeployment of the forces of the parties;

(f) Within its capabilities and areas of deployment, to monitor compliance with the provisions of the Ceasefire Agreement on the supply of ammunition, weaponry and other war-related materiel to the field, including to all armed groups referred to in chapter 9.1 of annex A;

(g) To facilitate humanitarian assistance and human rights monitoring, with particular attention to vulnerable groups including women, children and demobilized child soldiers, as the Mission deems within its capabilities and under acceptable security conditions, in close cooperation with other United Nations agencies, related organizations and non-governmental organizations;

(h) To cooperate closely with the Facilitator of the Inter-Congolese Dialogue, provide support and technical assistance to him, and coordinate the activities of other United Nations agencies to this effect;

(i) To deploy mine action experts to assess the scope of the mine and unexploded ordnance problems, coordinate the initiation of mine action activities, develop a mine action plan, and carry out emergency mine action activities as required in support of its mandate;

8. Decides, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, that the Mission may take the necessary action, in the areas of deployment of its infantry battalions and as it deems within its capabilities, to protect United Nations and co-located Joint Military Commission personnel, facilities, installations and equipment, ensure the security and freedom of movement of its personnel, and protect civilians under imminent threat of physical violence;

9. Calls upon the parties to the Ceasefire Agreement to support actively the deployment of the Mission to the areas of operations deemed necessary by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, including through the provision of assurances of security and freedom of movement as well as the active participation of liaison personnel;

10. Requests the Governments of the States in the region to conclude, as necessary, status-of-forces agreements with the Secretary-General within thirty days of adoption of the present resolution, and recalls that pending the conclusion of such agreements the model status-of-forces agreement dated 9 October 1990 should apply provisionally;

11. Requests the Secretary-General, on the basis of concrete and observed military and political progress in the implementation of the Ceasefire Agreement and relevant Council resolutions, to continue to plan for any additional United Nations deployments in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and to make recommendations for further action by the Council;

12. Calls upon all parties to ensure the safe and unhindered access of relief personnel to all those in need, and recalls that the parties must also provide guarantees for the safety, security and freedom of movement for United Nations and associated humanitarian relief personnel;

13. Also calls upon all parties to cooperate with the International Committee of the Red Cross to enable it to carry out its mandates as well as the tasks entrusted to it under the Ceasefire Agreement;

14. Condemns all massacres carried out in and around the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and urges that an international investigation into all such events be carried out with a view to bringing to justice those responsible;

15. Calls upon all parties to the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to protect human rights and respect international humanitarian law and the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide of 9 December 1948, and calls upon all parties to refrain from or cease any support to, or association with, those suspected of involvement in the crime of genocide, crimes against humanity or war crimes, and to bring to justice those responsible and facilitate measures in accordance with international law to ensure accountability for violations of international humanitarian law;

16. Expresses its deep concern at the illicit flow of arms into the region, calls upon all concerned to halt such flows, and expresses its intention to consider this issue further;

17. Expresses its serious concern at reports of illegal exploitation of the natural resources and other forms of wealth of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including in violation of the sovereignty of that country, calls for an end to such activities, expresses its intention to consider the matter further, and requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council within ninety days on ways to achieve this goal;

18. Reaffirms the importance of holding, at the appropriate time, an international conference on peace, security, democracy and development in the Great Lakes region under the auspices of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, with the participation of all the Governments of the region and all others concerned;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to provide a report every sixty days to the Council on progress in the implementation of the Ceasefire Agreement and the present resolution;

20. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

By a 28 February letter [S/2000/172], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint Major-General Mountaga Diallo (Senegal) as Force Commander of MONUC. The Council took note of the decision on 2 March [S/2000/173].

Political and military developments

Communications. On 17 March [S/2000/229], the DRC stated that Rwandan Patriotic Army troops had entered two Congolese towns on 14 March, thereby demonstrating that Rwanda was trying to prevent further MONUC deployment. The DRC called on the Security Council to condemn the attack by the armed coalition of Uganda, Rwanda and Burundi on the DRC, which began on 2 August 1998; demand that Rwanda comply with the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement; and demand the disengagement of the regular Rwandan troops and their redeployment to the positions they occupied prior to 1 March 2000.

Responding on 22 March [S/2000/239], Uganda rejected allegations and insinuations of Ugandan involvement and affirmed its commitment to the Lusaka Agreement. Rwanda, on 21 March [S/2000/234], complained of violations of the Agreement by the "Kabila forces" over the previous three days in the northern Katanga region. It identified those forces as DRC troops, ex-Rwandese Armed Forces (ex-FAR), the Interahamwe and Burundi rebels. On 31 March [S/2000/273], the DRC charged that Rwandan and Ugandan regular armies were currently reinforcing their positions around the town of Kisangani. Such deployments could provoke a new clash between their armies in the DRC, and the DRC urged the Council to call for their withdrawal from DRC territory.

The OAU Chairman, in a communiqué of 24 March [A/54/814-S/2000/254], expressed deep concern at the resumption of armed conflict in the DRC, in violation of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement, which jeopardized the security and stability of the region. He called on the parties to respect the ceasefire and cooperate with the United Nations and JMC in order to establish the conditions required for implementation of the Agreement.

On 3 March [S/2000/187], Portugal transmitted to the Secretary-General a European Union (EU) statement of 29 February expressing concern that Archbishop Emmanuel Kataliko had been prevented from returning to his archdiocese in Bukavu to resume his work. It appealed to RCD leaders, in accordance with their verbal undertaking, and the Rwandan Government to ensure that the Archbishop could return. The EU Presidency issued a 12 April statement [S/2000/317] expressing concern at the continuing tension in the DRC and reiterating support for the Lusaka Agreement. It stressed that responsibility for implementation rested with the parties themselves, including the assurance that conditions were in place to enable early MONUC deployment.

In a 17 April letter [S/2000/333], the DRC provided the Security Council with a list of violations of the Lusaka Agreement by the rebels and their allies that had occurred between 10 July 1999 and 7 March 2000. It requested Sir Ketumile Masire to continue his work and to organize the inter-Congolese dialogue as soon as possible, in Kinshasa, and urged the speedy deployment of MONUC with a view to securing the withdrawal of aggressor forces.

Report of Secretary-General (April). On 18 April, the Secretary-General, as requested in Security Council resolution 1291(2000), submitted his second report on MONUC [S/2000/330 & Corr.1]. He reported that the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations had visited the DRC and the other belligerent States and rebel movements in March. He had stressed to DRC officials the need for MONUC to enjoy freedom of movement within the country. Authorities in several cases had refused or delayed clearances for MONUC aircraft to leave Kinshasa airport. Despite affirmations of cooperation with MONUC and adherence to the Lusaka Peace Agreement, the authorities continued to limit MONUC flights and access to certain parts of the country. Flights were further hampered by explosions on 14 April that devastated Kinshasa airport.

JMC met in Kampala, Uganda, on 4 April to discuss a draft plan for the disengagement from confrontation lines of belligerent forces and their redeployment to designated assembly points under MONUC monitoring. The plan, drawn up by MONUC and adopted by the Political Committee on 8 April, set a date for cessation of hostilities (14 April) and a schedule for disengagement. It provided for the withdrawal of all forces to a distance of 15 kilometres from the confrontation line and the creation of a 30-kilometre zone of disengagement. All parties undertook to provide a secure environment in the areas under their control and to facilitate the access of UN personnel and guarantee their freedom of movement. The plan also called for the deployment of MONUC phase II between mid-May and mid-September.

The Secretary-General reported that, during February, fighting continued around Mbandaka, where government troops and troops of the Movement for the Liberation of the Congo were reportedly engaged in clashes; around Ikela, where Zimbabwean, Namibian and Congolese troops relieved the encirclement of an allied force; and in the east, where clashes between armed groups and Rwandan and rebel forces were reported. The Secretariat had also received reports of fighting between the Lendu and Hema communities in the north-east. Unrest was also reported from Goma and Bukavu, where the local population conducted strikes against the RCD authorities. The disturbances were accompanied by the re-emergence of Radio patriotique, which had broadcast anti-Tutsi messages in August 1998 inciting massacres of Tutsis. In March, RCD-Goma reportedly launched an offensive in central DRC. Such military activities raised questions about the commitment of the parties to the ceasefire.

The inter-Congolese dialogue had not advanced, according to the report, despite the discussions with some of the parties held by the neutral Facilitator, Sir Ketumile Masire. There was increasing awareness that a peaceful solution of the conflict might not be possible in the absence of progress in the national dialogue. Furthermore, the human rights situation remained grave (see p. 736) and humanitarian needs had attained massive proportions, with some 1.3 million internally displaced persons and 300,000 refugees, and a further estimated 14 million in need of humanitarian assistance.

Overall, the Secretary-General observed that there had been a number of recent indications of progress in the Lusaka process, including, in particular, the undertakings of cooperation made by the leaders of the DRC and the other signatory States during the visit of the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations; the decision of the Political Committee on 8 April to adopt the disengagement and redeployment plan; the communiqué issued by the allied Presidents the following day calling for the speedy deployment of MONUC military observers; and the outcome of the special cabinet meeting of the DRC on 10 April. However, the Secretary-General was disturbed at the resumed fighting, ethnic violence and evidence that some of the parties could be preparing for new military activities. Delays continued to arise in the granting of flight clearances for MONUC but it was hoped that the deployment of military liaison officers to Bukavu, Kabalo, Kabinda, Kalemie, Mbandaka and Mbuji Mayi would be completed in a short period of time.

The Security Council held a private meeting on 25 April [meeting 4132] to consider the situation in the DRC, at which it was briefed by Sir Ketumile Masire.

Communications. On 1 May [A/54/853-S/2000/369], Algeria forwarded a communiqué issued by the OAU summit on the DRC situation (Algiers, 30 April), in which the heads of State called on the parties concerned to respect the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement and expressed support for the disengagement plan adopted by the Political Committee. They appealed to the parties to organize and convene the inter-Congolese dialogue.

On 5 May [S/2000/386], the DRC said that fighting had resumed that day between troops of the regular armies of Rwanda and Uganda in the Congolese city of Kisangani, which had been under the control of those armies since 1998. The clashes were taking place under the same circumstances as those in which the same protagonists clashed in August 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 90] in the same city. According to the DRC, the fighting, which was taking place during a ceasefire and shortly before a Security Council mission was to visit the area (see p. 127), was the result of Uganda's determination to regain control over the diamond trade in the region. The DRC called on the Council to condemn the aggression by Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda and to put an end to the illegal exploitation of DRC riches (see p. 128), which had motivated the war of aggression.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 5 May [meeting 4135], following consultations among Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/15 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses its grave concern at renewed fighting between Ugandan and Rwandan forces in Kisangani, Democratic Republic of the Congo, which began on 5 May 2000. The Council endorses the statement made by its mission to the Democratic Republic of the Congo, on 5 May 2000, in Kinshasa, calling for an immediate halt to the fighting.

The Council condemns unreservedly the outbreak of military hostilities in Kisangani. This renewed fighting is, once more, threatening the implementation of the Ceasefire Agreement signed at Lusaka on 10 July 1999. The Council is also concerned at reports of the killing of innocent Congolese civilians.

The Council demands that these latest hostilities cease immediately and that those involved in the fighting at Kisangani reaffirm their commitment to the Lusaka process and comply with all relevant Council resolutions. The Council reaffirms its commitment to the national sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council considers that this violent action directly violates the Ceasefire Agreement, the Kampala Disengagement Plan of 8 April 2000, the ceasefire of 14 April 2000, the subsequent written instructions to field commanders to abide by this ceasefire, and relevant Council resolutions.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council mission to DRC

The Security Council informed the Secretary-General on 24 April [S/2000/344] that it had decided to send a mission to the DRC, from 2 to 8 May. The terms of reference of the mission were annexed to the letter. Concerned by developments since the signing of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement, the mission would attempt to facilitate the parties' agreement on concrete ways to ensure its implementation. It would focus on the conditions necessary for the full deployment of MONUC, including adherence to the ceasefire, an adequate status-of-forces agreement, guarantees of security and freedom of movement for UN personnel, the relocation of JMC to Kinshasa and its establishment as a permanent body, and the need for progress on the disengagement of forces.

The mission, which comprised seven Council members and was headed by United States Ambassador Richard Holbrooke, visited the DRC, Zambia, Zimbabwe, Rwanda and Uganda. It met with the heads of State of those countries, the leaders of the two factions of RCD (RCD-Goma and RCD-Kisangani), representatives of Congolese civil society and political parties, the Political Committee and JMC. DRC President Laurent-Désiré Kabila, expressing concern over the fragility of the ceasefire, called for the speedy deployment of the second phase of MONUC. He said that his Government would interpose no obstacle to that deployment and would continue to facilitate humanitarian access as long as prior notification was received. During the visit, the status-of-forces agreement was signed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the DRC Foreign Minister, reflecting an improvement in relations between MONUC and the DRC.

In its report to the Council [S/2000/416], the mission stated that the ceasefire agreed by the parties as part of the disengagement plan of 8 April largely continued to hold during the visit; however, there were serious outbreaks of fighting at Kisangani between Rwandan and Ugandan troops. Approximately 100 Congolese civilians had reportedly been killed or injured in that fighting. The acceptance by President Paul Kagame of Rwanda and President Yoweri Kaguta Museveni of Uganda of a proposal to withdraw their forces from Kisangani in a balanced manner under UN supervision, and for the rapid deployment of MONUC units in the city, had helped to ease a source of tension that had hampered the Lusaka peace process and caused many deaths of civilians and property damage. The mission accepted that the disarmament, demobilization, reintegration and resettlement of the armed groups, including ex-FAR and Interahamwe militia, was an essential element in restoring confidence in eastern DRC. Unless it was resolved, it would be very difficult to restore the rule of law or ensure the security of borders. Much more needed to be done to address that question.

In regard to the inter-Congolese dialogue, the mission noted the reservations expressed by President Kabila that the facilitation programme had been drawn up without adequate consultation and reference to the timetable contained in the Ceasefire Agreement. The mission believed that progress in the dialogue, in conjunction with the deployment of MONUC and implementation of the other military aspects of the Agreement, represented the path to lasting security in the country.

The mission reported that the ceasefire of 8 April, though fragile, was a basis for future peacemaking. While the Kisangani incident and other violations were deplorable, they did not represent breakdowns between the parties. Interim measures were needed since deployment of an enlarged MONUC would take more time. The requirement for ceasefire monitoring and verification as mandated by resolution 1291(2000) was evident; however, the mission cautioned that MONUC would face risks, noting that lessons could be learned from the Sierra Leone tragedy (see p. 189) about the deployment of peacekeepers before a conflict had run its course. At the same time, the Sierra Leone situation should not be allowed to cloud the international community's responsibility in the DRC.

The mission recommended that the Secretary-General, before making his final decision on deployment, should seek the commitment of each party to the Agreement to assist in deploying phase II of MONUC. In the event of a positive decision, it was essential for the Lusaka and UN processes to interact effectively. As stated in resolution 1291(2000), MONUC and JMC had to work jointly from a co-located headquarters, whose location should be decided by those concerned on the ground.

Noting the agreement of 8 May signed in Kampala by Rwanda and Uganda on the demilitarization of Kisangani, the mission said that implementation was the only true test, and reports of fresh shelling and troop movements had already been received. The mission urged the Special Representative to explore whether a demilitarized Kisangani, under the temporary authority of MONUC in the early stages of its deployment, could provide the parties with secure, neutral facilities for future political and military exchanges.

The mission remained convinced of the importance of establishing a national dialogue on the future of the DRC. Sir Ketumile Masire's facilitation needed immediate access to funds and the support of all the Lusaka signatories. It was hoped that he would address the question of the venue for the first stages of dialogue with renewed vigour. While Kinshasa was the natural eventual home of the political process, the mission recommended that an interim solution, with the venue possibly at Kisangani, could be explored and Kinshasa re-examined at a later date when confidence between the parties had grown. The issue of a disarmament, demobilization, re-integration and resettlement programme had been broached by the mission with the parties, and the issue should be taken forward in New York in June, with prior preparation by the parties and by MONUC. At the mission's instigation, particular parties offered to take steps to exchange prisoners of war. In the mission's view, the Council should urge the International Committee of the Red Cross to renew its approaches to turn the expressed willingness into practical results.

The Security Council discussed the results of its mission on 17 May [S/PV.4143].

Exploitation of natural resources

The Secretary-General, referring to Security Council resolution 1291(2000) (see p. 123), which expressed concern at reports of illegal exploitation of natural resources in the DRC, suggested, in an 18 April letter [S/2000/334], that the Council consider creating a panel of experts to undertake a preliminary investigation into the situation and to revert to the Council with recommendations. The panel, which would be financed from the regular UN budget, would be organizationally separate from MONUC, although it could request logistical support. Members would be selected for their expertise and the panel would be based at the UN Office in Nairobi. The DRC made a similar proposal on 26 April [S/2000/350].

The Council, in a 28 April reply [S/2000/362], stated that it would make a decision on an expert panel expeditiously, taking into account the conclusions of the Council's mission to the DRC. During that mission (see above), President Kabila accused Rwanda, Uganda and Burundi of paying for weapons with diamonds taken from his country and said that it was up to the Council to put a stop to that activity through peaceful means. The mission recommended the early establishment of an expert panel to take the matter forward.

On 1 June [S/2000/515], the DRC welcomed the mission's recommendation.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 2 June [meeting 4151], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/20 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls the letter dated 18 April 2000 from the Secretary-General and the letter dated 28 April 2000 from the President of the Council. The Council also recalls the letters dated 26 April 2000 and 1 June 2000 from the Permanent Representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Council.

The Council welcomes the recommendation made by its mission to the Democratic Republic of the Congo, contained in paragraph 77 of its report of 11 May 2000, to proceed with the early establishment of an expert panel on the illegal exploitation of the natural resources and other forms of wealth of the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to establish this panel, for a period of six months, with the following mandate:

- To follow up on reports and collect information on all activities of illegal exploitation of the natural resources and other forms of wealth of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including those in violation of the sovereignty of that country;

- To research and analyse the links between the exploitation of the natural resources and other forms of wealth of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the continuation of the conflict;

- To revert to the Council with recommendations.

The Council stresses that in order to implement its mandate, the expert panel, which will be based at the United Nations Office at Nairobi, may receive logistical support from the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and make visits to various countries of the region, making contact during its visits with diplomatic missions in the capitals concerned, and, if necessary, to other relevant countries.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to appoint the members of the panel, in consultation with the Council, on the basis of the professional expertise and impartiality of the candidates, and their knowledge of the subregion. The Council stresses that the Chairman of the panel should be an eminent personality with the necessary experience, and decides that the panel will consist of five members, including its Chairman. The Council underlines the fact that the panel might call upon the technical expertise of the Secretariat and of the United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies, as required. Voluntary contributions to support the panel would be welcomed.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to report to it on the steps taken to establish the expert panel. The Council requests also that the expert panel, once established, submit to the Council, through the Secretary-General, a preliminary report with initial findings after three months and a final report, with recommendations, at the end of its mandate.

The Secretary-General informed the Council on 31 July [S/2000/796] of his intention to appoint as Chairperson of the five-member expert panel Safiatou Ba-N'Daw (Côte d'Ivoire), former Minister of Energy and former senior World Bank official. The other proposed members were François Ekoko (Cameroon), Moustapha Tall (Senegal), Henri Maire (Switzerland) and Mel Holt (United States). The Council took note of the Secretary-General's intention and proposal on 14 August [S/2000/797]. The panel, established in Nairobi on 18 September following briefings at UN Headquarters [S/2001/49], undertook consultations with the parties and visits within the region.

The DRC, by a 17 August letter [S/2000/810], forwarded to the Council a report of the non-governmental organization (NGO) Observatoire Gouvernance-Transparence on the alleged systematic trafficking by Rwanda and Uganda of the mineral, agricultural and forestry resources of the DRC provinces under their control.

Further developments

Communications. In May and June, the DRC, in letters to the Security Council, protested military activity by foreign troops in the eastern part of the country, called for an international investigation and requested the rapid deployment of MONUC. On 18 May [S/2000/453], it alleged that troops of the Rwandan Patriotic Army had murdered some 30 inhabitants of a village in South Kivu province. It called on the Council to condemn Rwanda, which it said was responsible for the massacre [S/2000/468]. On the same date [S/2000/452], the DRC asked the Council to demand that Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda withdraw their troops from DRC territory, and that those forces not be redeployed to other fronts and conflict zones within the country. A similar appeal was made to the international community on 19 May [S/2000/466]. On 7 June [S/2000/548], the DRC reported fighting in Kisangani between Rwandan and Ugandan forces, which had claimed the lives of some 100 civilians and caused material damage, and it called on the Council to impose sanctions on those two countries.

Referring to the hostilities in Kisangani on 5 May, Uganda and Rwanda put forward their assessments of the situation in letters to the Council. Uganda, on 8 May [S/2000/397], said that Rwandan troops had fired on Ugandan troops. On 17 and 26 May [S/2000/442, S/2000/503], Uganda stated that the Presidents of the two countries, at a meeting in Mwanza, United Republic of Tanzania, on 14 May, had reaffirmed their commitment to the 8 May declaration on the demilitarization of Kisangani. Rwanda, on 17 May [S/2000/445], forwarded a joint statement signed by both countries on 15 May, in which they agreed to withdraw their forces 100 kilometres from Kisangani, among other things. However, on 5 June [S/2000/537 & Corr.1], Rwanda complained that Ugandan troops had attacked its troops in Kisangani, and Uganda, on 9 June [S/2000/558], claimed that Rwanda had repeatedly violated the ceasefire in that city. Uganda added that it remained committed to the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement and the demilitarization of Kisangani.

On 10 June [S/2000/559], Rwanda said that heavy fighting had been going on between Ugandan and Rwandan forces for six days. The conflict was sparked off when Ugandan troops attacked Rwandan forces who were withdrawing from Kisangani. A series of ceasefire agreements, largely negotiated through MONUC, had failed to hold owing to the intransigence of Ugandan commanders on the ground. Large numbers of Congolese civilians had been killed and property destroyed. Rwanda announced it would effect a unilateral withdrawal from Kisanangani. Uganda, on 12 June [S/2000/562], claimed that Rwandan forces were not interested in a ceasefire, but Uganda would withdraw from positions it held on 5 June in order to minimize the loss of lives and destruction of property in Kisanangani.

The EU, on 9 June [S/2000/584], expressed its concern at the renewed fighting between Rwandan and Ugandan forces in Kisanangani, which had resulted in the deaths of civilians and damage to property and had put the safety of UN personnel at risk. It urged Rwanda and Uganda to cease hostilities, to implement the ceasefire and the demilitarization plan previously agreed by them, and to withdraw from Kisanangani.

Presidents Kagame of Rwanda and Museveni of Uganda held a meeting in Entebbe, Uganda, on 2 July at which they agreed to work towards the implementation of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement and reaffirmed their commitment to the demilitarization of Kisanangani [S/2000/648].

Uganda, by a letter of 16 June to the Council [S/2000/605], transmitted a press statement by the Chairman of the Political Committee on the Implementation of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement issued at the conclusion of a joint session with the Security Council (New York, 15-16 June). The Committee informed the Council that although the Agreement had suffered violations, it had generally held. Uganda and Rwanda had confirmed that the fighting had stopped and that the withdrawal of their forces from Kisanangani had commenced that day. The Council was urged to expedite MONUC's deployment in order to enhance the security situation. On the issue of national dialogue, the Political Committee informed the Council of the Facilitator's efforts to start them, including a recent preparatory meeting in Cotonou, Benin.

Report of Secretary-General (June). In his third report on MONUC, issued on 12 June [S/2000/566 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General stated that persistent outbreaks of heavy fighting between the belligerents—the Rwandan Patriotic Army (RPA) and the Ugandan People's Defence Force (UPDF)—in Kisanangani had caused an estimated 150 civilian deaths and more than 1,000 casualties, as well as severe property damage. Following the visit of the Security Council mission in May, the fighting eased briefly with the signing of a MONUC-brokered agreement, but resumed on 5 June with heavy fighting resulting in serious damage to the power station, the hydroelectric dam and a hospital, and the disruption of electricity and water supplies. On 12 June, Ugandan forces had reportedly withdrawn northwards and a ceasefire was in place. Fighting was also reported in Equateur province between the Movement for the Liberation of the Congo (MLC) and DRC troops, and along the central eastern border in North and South Kivu provinces, where clashes between armed groups and Rwandan troops, as well as attacks on civilians and inter-ethnic clashes, had taken place. RCD and its allies, who were nominally responsible for security there, seemed unable to prevent killings by the ex-FAR and Rwandan and Burundi rebel groups, including the Interahamwe.

In May, the Facilitator of the inter-Congolese dialogue, Sir Ketumile Masire, met with representatives of the parties to discuss the planning and preparations for the dialogue. A planning meeting was held in Cotonou on 6 June. However, the DRC Government did not attend and prevented representatives of civil society and the unarmed opposition from leaving Kinshasa. The dialogue itself was scheduled to commence no later than 3 July and to last 45 days. On 9 June, the DRC released a statement criticizing the Facilitator for remaining silent in the face of renewed fighting in Kisanangani and announced it was withdrawing its confidence in him. It called on OAU to propose a new neutral Facilitator.

As at 12 June, MONUC had a total of 228 military observers and military liaison officers deployed in and around the DRC, 200 of whom were stationed at 12 sites in the country and 28 in the capitals of surrounding countries.

The Secretary-General concluded that the fighting in certain locations had cast into doubt the implementation of the 8 April ceasefire agreement despite widespread adherence to that agreement elsewhere in the country. The Government's decision not to participate in the preparatory meeting for the inter-Congolese dialogue, its blocking of the participation of the unarmed opposition in Kinshasa and the chronic shortages and delays in the provision of resources for the Facilitator's operations raised serious doubts about the future course of the dialogue. Furthermore, the fighting and the difficulties encountered in the inter-Congolese dialogue augured ill for the deployment of the second phase of MONUC. Despite the signing of the status-of-forces agreement, MONUC operations were denied full freedom of movement. Once the signatories of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement had demonstrated commitment to its terms, the United Nations could proceed with the deployment of the second phase of MONUC, provided the necessary facilities were made available and the military units were fully equipped.

Communication (15 June). On 15 June [S/2000/596], Uganda transmitted to the Security Council a chronology of events and ceasefire violations in Kisangani by RPA, rejected allegations levelled at UPDF and affirmed its commitment to the Lusaka peace process.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 16 June [meeting 4159], the Security Council, having met in private with the members of the Political Committee for the Implementation of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement [S/PV.4157, S/PV.4158], unanimously adopted resolution 1304(2000). The draft [S/2000/587] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1234(1999) of 9 April 1999, 1258(1999) of 6 August 1999, 1265(1999) of 17 September 1999, 1273(1999) of 5 November 1999, 1279(1999) of 30 November 1999, 1291(2000) of 24 February 2000 and 1296(2000) of 19 April 2000, and the statements by its President of 13 July, 31 August and 11 December 1998, 24 June 1999, 26 January, 5 May and 2 June 2000,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the primary responsibility of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Reaffirming also the obligation of all States to refrain from the use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations,

Reaffirming further the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and all States in the region,

Reaffirming the sovereignty of the Democratic Republic of the Congo over its natural resources, and noting with concern reports of the illegal exploitation of the assets of that country and the potential consequences of these actions on security conditions and the continuation of hostilities,

Calling, in this regard, upon all the parties to the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and others concerned to cooperate fully with the expert panel on the illegal exploitation of the natural resources and other forms of wealth of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in its investigation and visits in the region,

Expressing its deep concern at the continuation of the hostilities in the country,

Expressing in particular its outrage at renewed fighting between Ugandan and Rwandan forces in Kisangani, Democratic Republic of the Congo, which began on 5 June 2000, and at the failure of Uganda and Rwanda to comply with their commitment to cease hostilities and withdraw from Kisangani, made in their joint statements of 8 May and 15 May 2000, and deploring the loss of civilian lives, the threat to the civilian population and the damage to property inflicted by the forces of Uganda and Rwanda on the Congolese population,

Recalling its strong support for the Ceasefire Agreement signed at Lusaka on 10 July 1999, and insisting that all parties honour their obligations under that Agreement,

Deploing the delays in the implementation of the Ceasefire Agreement and the Kampala Disengagement Plan of 8 April 2000, and stressing the need for new momentum to ensure progress in the peace process,

Expressing its deep concern at the lack of cooperation of the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo with the Facilitator of the Inter-Congolese Dialogue designated with the assistance of the Organization of African Unity, including the fact that the delegates were prevented from attending the preparatory meeting held in Cotonou on 6 June 2000,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 12 June 2000,

Recalling the responsibility of all parties to the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo for ensuring the safety and security of United Nations and associated personnel throughout the country,

Welcoming the participation in its meetings, held on 15 and 16 June 2000, of the members of the Political Committee for the implementation of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement,

Expressing its serious concern at the humanitarian situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo resulting mainly from the conflict, and stressing the need for substantial humanitarian assistance to the Congolese population,

Expressing its alarm at the dire consequences of the prolonged conflict for the security of the civilian population throughout the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and its deep concern at all violations and abuses of human rights and international humanitarian law, in particular in the eastern part of the country, especially in North Kivu and South Kivu, and Kisangani,

Determining that the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Calls upon all parties to cease hostilities throughout the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and to fulfil their obligations under the Ceasefire Agreement signed at Lusaka and the relevant provisions of the Kampala Disengagement Plan;

2. Reiterates its unreserved condemnation of the fighting between Ugandan and Rwandan forces in Kisangani in violation of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and demands that these forces and those allied to them desist from further fighting;

3. Demands that Ugandan and Rwandan forces as well as forces of the Congolese armed opposition and other armed groups immediately and completely withdraw from Kisangani, and calls upon all parties to the Ceasefire Agreement to respect the demilitarization of the city and its environs;

4. Demands also:

(a) That Uganda and Rwanda, which have violated the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, withdraw all their forces from the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo without further delay, in conformity with the timetable of the Ceasefire Agreement and the Kampala Disengagement Plan;

(b) That each phase of withdrawal completed by Ugandan and Rwandan forces be reciprocated by the other parties, in conformity with the same timetable;

(c) That all other foreign military presence and activity, direct and indirect, in the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo be brought to an end, in conformity with the provisions of the Ceasefire Agreement;

5. Demands, in this context, that all parties abstain from any offensive action during the process of disengagement and of withdrawal of foreign forces;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to keep under review the arrangements for the deployment of the personnel of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, as authorized and in conditions defined by resolution 1291(2000), to monitor the cessation of hostilities, disengagement of forces and withdrawal of foreign forces as described in paragraphs 1 to 5 above and to assist in the planning of these tasks, and also requests the Secretary-General to recommend any adjustment that may become necessary in this regard;

7. Calls upon all parties, in complying with paragraphs 1 to 5 above, to cooperate with the efforts of the Mission to monitor the cessation of hostilities, disengagement of forces and withdrawal of foreign forces;

8. Demands that the parties to the Ceasefire Agreement cooperate with the deployment of the Mission to the areas of operation deemed necessary by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including by lifting restrictions on the freedom of movement of Mission personnel and by ensuring their security;

9. Calls upon all the Congolese parties to engage fully in the national dialogue process as provided for in the Ceasefire Agreement, and calls in particular on the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to reaffirm its full commitment to the dialogue, to honour its obligations in this respect and to cooperate with the Facilitator of the Inter-Congolese Dialogue designated with the assistance of the Organization of African Unity and to allow for the full participation of political opposition and civil society groups in the dialogue;

10. Demands that all parties cease all forms of assistance and cooperation with the armed groups referred to in chapter 9.1 of annex A to the Ceasefire Agreement;

11. Welcomes efforts made by the parties to engage in a dialogue on the question of disarmament, demobilization, resettlement and reintegration of members of all armed groups referred to in chapter 9.1 of annex A to the Ceasefire Agreement, and urges the parties, in particular the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Government of Rwanda, to continue these efforts in full cooperation;

12. Demands that all parties comply in particular with the provisions of chapter 12 of annex A to the Ceasefire Agreement relating to the normalization of the security situation along the borders between the Democratic Republic of the Congo and its neighbours;

13. Condemns all massacres and other atrocities carried out in the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and urges that an international investigation into all such events be carried out with a view to bringing to justice those responsible;

14. Expresses the view that the Governments of Uganda and Rwanda should make reparations for the loss of life and the property damage they have inflicted on the civilian population in Kisangani, and requests the Secretary-General to submit an assessment of the damage as a basis for such reparations;

15. Calls upon all parties to the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to protect human rights and respect international humanitarian law;

16. Also calls upon all parties to ensure the safe and unhindered access of relief personnel to all those in need, and recalls that the parties must also provide guarantees for the safety, security and freedom of movement of United Nations and associated humanitarian relief personnel;

17. Further calls upon all parties to cooperate with the International Committee of the Red Cross to enable it to carry out its mandate as well as the tasks entrusted to it under the Ceasefire Agreement;

18. Reaffirms the importance of holding, at the appropriate time, an international conference on peace, security, democracy and development in the Great Lakes region under the auspices of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, with the participation of all the Governments of the region and all others concerned;

19. Expresses its readiness to consider possible measures that could be imposed in accordance with its responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations in case of failure by the parties to comply fully with the present resolution;

20. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

ICJ case. The International Court of Justice (ICJ), by a 1 July letter [S/2000/654], informed the Secretary-General that it had rendered its order on the request for the indication of provisional measures submitted on 19 June 2000 by the DRC in the case concerning Armed activities on the territory of the Congo (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Uganda) (see p. 1217). Pending a decision, the Court ordered both parties to refrain from action that might prejudice the rights of the other party in respect of any ICJ judgment, or which might aggravate the dispute. The parties were also ordered to comply with their obligations under international law and to respect fundamental human rights in the zone of conflict.

On 4 July [S/2000/649], the DRC welcomed the ICJ provisional orders and pointed out that the Council was responsible for seeing that ICJ decisions were respected.

Communications (June-August). On 22 June [S/2000/616], Uganda affirmed that its forces had been withdrawn from Kisangani under the supervision of MONUC, while some forces remained in other parts of the DRC in accordance with the Lusaka Agreement.

Botswana, in a press release of 17 June [S/2000/606], expressed concern about reports that the DRC had demanded the withdrawal of former President Sir Ketumile Masire from his assignment as Facilitator for the inter-Congolese dialogue, which it described as a serious setback to the peace process.

The DRC continued to complain of serious violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law perpetrated by Ugandan, Burundian and Rwandan forces against civilians in the eastern part of the DRC. On 6 July [S/2000/658], the DRC said that attacks continued even though Ugandan and Rwandan troops had moved away from the centre of Kisangani and that more than 104,000 people had been forced to flee their homes. The DRC called on the Security Council to take action that would cause those three countries to abide strictly by the Lusaka Agreement. A similar request was made on 21 July [S/2000/725], when the DRC complained of fresh large-scale massacres against the civilian population that had left several hundred dead. On 1 August [S/2000/767], the DRC forwarded eyewitness accounts of massacres allegedly perpetrated by the armies of Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda. On 21 August [S/2000/817], the DRC said that regular Ugandan troops were preparing a large-scale offensive in Equateur province. The DRC outlined its position on the Lusaka Agreement and its support for MONUC deployment in a 29 August letter [S/2000/837], noting that it had made its position known at the SADC summit in Lusaka on 14 and 15 August. It affirmed that repeated violations of the Lusaka Agreement by the other parties were to blame for the failure of the Agreement, which it said should be revised. The DRC believed that the war of aggression waged by Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda must be separated out from the political conflict between the Government and a number of armed Congolese factions.

Rwanda, on 21 July [S/2000/740], denied reports of recent RPA movements, adding that its army had fully respected the Lusaka Agreement. On 8 August [S/2000/782], Rwanda forwarded a proposal for a disengagement plan as a move towards implementation of the Lusaka Agreement, which, in its view, the DRC had thwarted, and full deployment of MONUC. Rwanda said it would begin to disengage from certain positions on the front line in order to provide a 200-kilometre-wide zone that could be secured by MONUC.

Extension of MONUC mandate

The Secretary-General, in a letter of 14 August [S/2000/799], alerted the Council to the adverse climate that had so far prevented full MONUC deployment. He described the situation as characterized by persistent large-scale fighting in many parts of the country, severe restrictions imposed by the Government and other parties on the Mission's freedom of movement, the refusal of the Government to permit the deployment of UN armed troops, and a sustained campaign of vilification conducted against MONUC and individual members of its staff, which had created risks to their security. The Lusaka peace process was currently undergoing an extremely challenging phase that required substantial re-evaluation. In particular, he warned, the role MONUC could play under current circumstances remained unclear. At the same time, other developments needed to be studied before recommendations could be made; therefore, the Secretary-General requested that the Council consider an interim extension of MONUC's mandate until 30 September.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

On 23 August [meeting 4189], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1316(2000). The draft text [S/2000/823] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1273(1999) of 5 November 1999, 1291(2000) of 24 February 2000 and 1304(2000) of 16 June 2000, and all other resolutions and statements by its President on the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Taking note of the letter dated 14 August 2000 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council,

Reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and all States in the region,

Reaffirming its commitment to assisting in the implementation of the Ceasefire Agreement signed at Lusaka on 10 July 1999, and noting the results of the summit of the Southern African Development Community, held on 6 and 7 August 2000, and the second summit of parties to the Ceasefire Agreement in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, held on 14 August 2000,

Noting with concern that the lack of adequate conditions of access, security and cooperation has restricted the ability of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to deploy up to its authorized strength,

Reaffirming its will to work with the parties to the Ceasefire Agreement and other interested parties, including potential troop contributors, in order to create the conditions necessary for deployment as authorized under resolution 1291(2000),

Expressing its appreciation to all States that have declared their willingness to provide the military units required for the deployment of phase II of the Mission,

Calling upon the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and other parties to lift all obstacles to the full deployment and operation of the Mission,

Recalling the responsibility of all parties to the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo for ensuring the safety and security of United Nations and associated personnel throughout the country,

Commending the outstanding work of Mission personnel in challenging conditions, and noting the strong leadership of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo until 15 October 2000;

2. Emphasizes that this technical extension of the mandate of the Mission is designed to allow time for further diplomatic activities in support of the Ceasefire Agreement signed at Lusaka and for reflection by the Council on the future mandate of the Mission and possible adjustments thereto;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council, by 21 September 2000, on progress in the implementation of the Ceasefire Agreement and relevant Council resolutions and to make recommendations for further action by the Council;

4. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

General Assembly consideration. The DRC, on 21 August [A/54/969], requested the Secretary-General to include in the agenda of the fifty-fifth session of the General Assembly the item entitled "Armed aggression against the Democratic Republic of the Congo". The DRC wished the item to be considered in plenary meeting, without reference to a Main Committee.

On 5 September, the Assembly decided to include that item in the fifty-fifth session's agenda (decision 54/502). By decision 55/458 of 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session.

Assessment mission to Kisangani

The Secretary-General, in response to Security Council resolution 1304(2000) (see p. 131), sent an inter-agency mission to the DRC from 13 to 24 August to assess the loss of life and property damage inflicted on Kisangani as a result of the fighting between Uganda and Rwanda in June. The report of the mission [S/2000/1153] described the team's findings concerning the events in Kisangani and its effects on the population and infrastructure. It also described the immediate reaction of the international community. According to the report, over 760 civilians were killed and an estimated 1,700 wounded in six days of indiscriminate shelling. More than 4,000 houses were partially damaged, destroyed or made uninhabitable, 69 schools were shelled and other public buildings were badly damaged. Medical facilities and the cathedral were also damaged during the shelling, and 65,000 residents were forced to flee and seek refuge in nearby forests.

The team noted that the recent war in the DRC, which was preceded by decades of political and economic mismanagement that had resulted in widespread poverty, poor infrastructure and ineffective governmental institutions, involved seven neighbouring countries and was intensifying the country's already critical socio-economic and political situation. The major humanitarian crisis currently affected over 20 million people, including 1.8 million internally displaced people and over 400,000 refugees. The city of Kisangani was one of the worst casualties. The latest conflict there erupted on 5 June between the occupying forces of Uganda and Rwanda. Those forces and their affiliated rebel groups were vying for control of the lucrative diamond industry centred in the city.

The international humanitarian community responded by sending over 240 tons of relief supplies. At the time of the report, there were some signs that normal life was resuming in the city, although large-scale reconstruction of homes and public buildings was needed. However, it was the uncertain security environment that remained the main obstacle to people resettling into their communities. The mission recommended that urgent efforts be made to strengthen field security in order to provide a safer working environment for all UN and international humanitarian workers on the ground. The United Nations needed to pursue the international dialogue with the current and potential donors on peace-building initiatives within the country. It should draw up a country strategy in collaboration with civil society and NGOs, aimed at rehabilitation and promoting peace and reconciliation. The mission also recommended that MONUC continue to facilitate the delivery of humanitarian assistance and help to create an environment conducive to the provision of rehabilitation support to war-affected communities. It suggested that the United Nations field a follow-up technical mission to Kisangani to obtain costs of the actual damage to buildings and infrastructure and called for increased funding for humanitarian assistance by the international donor community.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 7 September [meeting 4194], following a discussion on ensuring an effective role of the Security Council in the maintenance of international peace and security, particularly in Africa, and the adoption of resolution 1318(2000) (see p. 64), the President of the Council made statement S/PRST/2000/28 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council is deeply concerned at the continuation of hostilities in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, at the dire consequences of the conflict for the humanitarian situation and at reports of abuses of human rights and of illegal exploitation of the natural resources of that country.

The Council reaffirms the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and all States in the region.

The Council calls upon all parties to the conflict to cease hostilities and to fulfil their obligations under the Ceasefire Agreement signed at Lusaka on 10 July 1999 and the relevant resolutions of the Council.

The Council takes note in this context of the statements issued by Uganda and Rwanda relating to measures towards disengagement and withdrawal of their forces which are present in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It calls for the accelerated withdrawal of Ugandan and Rwandan forces and of all other foreign forces from the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in full compliance with resolution 1304(2000) of 16 June 2000.

The Council calls upon all parties to respect human rights and international humanitarian law, and provide access for humanitarian relief personnel.

The Council calls upon all the Congolese parties, in particular on the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, to engage fully in the national dialogue process as provided for in the Ceasefire Agreement and to support, in this regard, the efforts of the facilitation.

The Council calls on the parties to the Ceasefire Agreement to engage in a sincere dialogue to implement that Agreement and to agree upon ways to give a new momentum to the peace process. It expresses its support for the efforts of Mr. Frederick J. T. Chiluba, President of Zambia, and other leaders of the region to this end.

The Council is ready to assist in the peace process, in particular through the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in accordance with resolution 1291(2000) of 24 February 2000. It deplores the fact that the continuation of the hostilities and the lack of co-operation by the parties have prevented the full deployment of the Mission. The Council takes note of the commitments made by the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to support the deployment of the Mission and urges it to honour its particular responsibilities as the host Government of the Mission. It calls upon the parties to demonstrate their will to move the peace process forward and to cooperate effectively with the Mission in order to allow its deployment.

Report of Secretary-General (September). In response to Security Council resolution 1316 (2000) (see p. 133), the Secretary-General submitted on 21 September his fourth report on MONUC [S/2000/888]. He noted that, despite the efforts of all concerned, the peace process remained at an impasse. Following a 28 July meeting of the Political Committee, an SADC summit on the issue was convened in Windhoek, Namibia, on 7 August. Subsequently, President Chiluba of Zambia convened a summit of the parties to the Lusaka Agreement and SADC countries in Lusaka on 14 August, which also failed to make progress, principally because of the DRC's reluctance to allow the deployment of MONUC troops to government-controlled territory and to accept Sir Ketumile Masire as the neutral Facilitator.

The Secretary-General maintained contacts with regional leaders and appointed General Abdulsalami Abubakar, former head of State of Nigeria, as his Special Envoy. General Abubakar travelled to the region from 20 to 24 August. He requested the Government to cease all hostilities, extend full freedom of movement to MONUC, comply with the status-of-forces agreement and proceed with the inter-Congolese dialogue. President Kabila maintained that the obstacles to implementation were not caused by the Government but by the "aggressors".

The DRC, which had withdrawn its support for Sir Ketumile as Facilitator and requested OAU to propose a new one, closed his Kinshasa office on 20 June. The absence of President Kabila at the thirty-sixth ordinary session of the OAU summit (Lomé, Togo, 10-12 July) frustrated efforts to address the issue at the highest level. The Government announced on 25 July that the newly established Constituent Assembly was the appropriate forum for a national dialogue. The Assembly, whose 300 members were appointed by presidential decree, was inaugurated on 21 August with the mandate to examine the draft constitution, elaborate laws on political institutions and oversee government activities. A special parliamentary commission was established for the inter-Congolese dialogue on 13 September.

Since the Secretary-General's June report, the parties had continued to conduct significant military operations, particularly in Equateur province, and there were indications of intensive military preparations. The military and security situation in the eastern part of the country remained highly volatile. RCD had complained that pro-government armed groups continued to launch attacks in North and South Kivu. With regard to Kisangani, Rwanda and Uganda withdrew their forces to a distance of 100 kilometres from the centre of the city, although military and political elements of RCD maintained control over it. Uganda began withdrawing its troops from the DRC on 22 June, and Rwanda announced the return of 1,000 of its troops from the DRC and a proposal for its troops to disengage from certain positions on the front line on 8 August [S/2000/782], redeploying them 200 kilometres away.

At a meeting of the Political Committee in July, the DRC representative contended that Council resolution 1304(2000) recognized that his country was being occupied by foreign armed forces and that his Government would therefore seek revisions to the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement and the mandate of MONUC. In response, the RCD and MLC movements stated their support for the Agreement.

As at 15 September, MONUC had a total of 258 liaison officers and military observers. Within the DRC, teams of military liaison officers were deployed at the headquarters of the rebel movements and the four regional joint military commissions, in addition to Kinshasa. Military observer teams were also stationed in six other locations, and 24 liaison officers were stationed in the capitals of neighbouring countries. MONUC's plans for new sites for military observer teams met with limited success because of the severe restrictions imposed on the Mission's movement.

The Secretary-General concluded that the lack of progress in implementing the Lusaka Agreement and the intensified fighting between government and rebel and UPDF forces not only had imperilled the peace process, but also had spilled over into the Republic of the Congo and the Central African Republic. At the same time, the volatile environment in the Kivus, marked by clashes between the RCD/RPA troops and the armed groups, was of serious concern. During the reporting period, recruitment of troops and the purchase of weapons continued, as did attempts by rebel movements to achieve a united front against the DRC Government. Further uncertainty remained over the Government's refusal to deal with the Facilitator and its request to revise the Lusaka Agreement. The deteriorating humanitarian and human rights situation was another cause for grave concern, particularly since the fighting had hindered access by humanitarian agencies to many areas.

In view of the situation, the Secretary-General recommended that the Council extend MONUC's mandate for two months, giving the United Nations time to make plans for further deployment and signalling UN determination to remain committed to the peace process. A lack of progress would make it difficult to justify not only further deployment but also the continued presence of MONUC in the DRC.

Communication. On 25 September [S/2000/917], France forwarded an EU statement of 22 September that expressed alarm at proposals to suspend application of the Lusaka Agreement. The EU appealed to the DRC Government and other signatories to respect the ceasefire, implement the withdrawal of forces and guarantee security and freedom of movement for MONUC.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 13 October [meeting 4207], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1323(2000). The draft [S/2000/979] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1291(2000) of 24 February 2000, 1304(2000) of 16 June 2000 and 1316(2000) of 23 August 2000, the statement adopted at its meeting of 7 September 2000, held at the level of heads of State and Government, and all previous resolutions and statements by its President relating to the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and all States of the region,

Deploing the continuation of hostilities in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the lack of cooperation with the United Nations, and the lack of progress on the national dialogue,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 21 September 2000 and the recommendations therein, as well as the observations contained in paragraphs 82 and 85,

Reaffirming its readiness to assist in the peace process, in particular through the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in accordance with resolution 1291(2000),

Expressing its deep concern at the dire consequences of the conflict for the humanitarian and human rights situations, as well as at reports of the illegal exploitation of the natural resources of the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo until 15 December 2000;

2. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications (October). The DRC described the effects of the war on women, children and civilians in two letters of 20 October [S/2000/1008, S/2000/1009]. By the first, it transmitted a document by prominent Congolese women denouncing the violence committed in their country, including the burial of 15 women alive by RCD and other barbarous acts. The second letter contained a statement by women parliamentarians aimed at drawing the international community's attention to the pernicious effects of war on women.

On 25 October [S/2000/1045], Rwanda denounced violations of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement by DRC forces and their allies in attacks against RCD and RPA positions.

Regional mediation efforts

In late 2000, a number of diplomatic efforts were made by regional leaders to encourage the disengagement of forces in the DRC.

A mini-summit on the situation in the DRC (Maputo, Mozambique, 16 October) addressed disengagement issues and the security concerns of the participants in the conflict [S/2000/1017]. The Presidents of the DRC, Mozambique, Namibia, Rwanda, South Africa, Uganda and Zimbabwe participated in the meeting, at which it was agreed that all the armed forces in the DRC would immediately start disengaging to positions set out in the Kampala disengagement plan adopted by the Political Committee on 8 April (see p. 126). Rwanda and Uganda undertook voluntarily to move even further than the agreed lines. The other parties agreed that once MONUC had verified that process of further disengagement, they would reciprocate. It was also agreed that President Chiluba should continue to address all other issues arising from the Lusaka Agreement, especially the urgent matter of the internal political process in the DRC. Any proposal on possible adjustments to the Lusaka Agreement would also be addressed through that process.

The Summit Meeting of the Heads of State of Central Africa (Kinshasa, DRC, 27 October) [S/2000/1050] welcomed the new dynamic that had emerged from the Maputo summit meeting and appealed for a stronger commitment by the United Nations and OAU to resolving the Congolese crisis. The meeting, attended by the Presidents of Angola, the Congo, the DRC and Gabon, and the Prime Ministers of the Central African Republic and Equatorial Guinea, demanded the unconditional withdrawal of the aggressors from the DRC and suggested the deployment of neutral intervention troops on the common frontier of protagonist States as a solution to the security concerns expressed by Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda. To follow up on their decisions, the heads of State established an ad hoc ministerial committee.

A mini-summit of parties to the conflict in the DRC (7-8 November, Tripoli, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya) was convened at the invitation of Colonel Muammar Qaddafi and attended by the Presidents of Mali, Rwanda, Uganda and Zimbabwe, and by representatives of Angola, the DRC, Namibia and South Africa [S/2000/1079]. The participants agreed on the deployment of a neutral African force in the DRC to guarantee the security of the borders of Rwanda and Uganda and to assess the size and strength of the armed groups in the DRC with the objective of disarming, disbanding and resettling them. They also agreed that Ugandan and Rwandan forces should withdraw from the DRC in accordance with the Lusaka Agreement, followed by the withdrawal of all other foreign forces.

On 9 November, Colonel Qaddafi suggested to the Secretary-General that Egypt, Libya, Nigeria and South Africa should participate in the neutral force and proposed that the United Nations should undertake the leadership, funding and supervision of those forces.

The heads of State of the DRC, Mozambique, Rwanda, South Africa and Zimbabwe and representatives of Angola and Namibia met to discuss the situation in the DRC (Maputo, 27 November). They agreed to reaffirm the Kampala disengagement plan of 8 April, confirmed the role of MONUC in monitoring the disengagement of forces, and confirmed that the DRC Government was responsible for the timely resolution of the remaining difficulties hindering the deployment of MONUC. The DRC confirmed that MONUC flights need not be routed through Kinshasa and agreed in principle to the deployment of armed UN troops at Kinshasa airport. No agreement was reached on the disarmament and demobilization of armed groups and the withdrawal of foreign forces from DRC territory.

At its 29 November meeting in Lusaka, the Political Committee established by the Lusaka Agreement adopted disengagement sub-plans, which were signed by the military chiefs of staff of all the parties except one (MLC) at Harare, Zimbabwe, on 6 December. They drew up detailed sub-plans for disengagement and redeployment. Subsequently, MONUC received notification from Angola, the DRC, Namibia, Rwanda, Uganda and Zimbabwe that executive orders had been issued to their military forces to begin the disengagement process. No notification was received from the rebel movements. The Harare disengagement plan stipulated that the military forces would undertake a 15-kilometre disengagement over a two-week period starting 21 January 2001.

Communications (November). On 8 November [S/2000/1076], Zimbabwe dismissed Rwandan allegations of violations of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement by SADC allied forces, adding that its forces were not deployed anywhere near the theatre of operations as claimed by Rwanda. The SADC forces were fulfilling their obligations under the Lusaka Agreement and subsequent agreements.

On 1 November [S/2000/1062], Rwanda said that DRC forces and their allies, including Namibian and Zimbabwean forces, continued to attack RCD and RPA positions and had intensified their military offensive in Katanga province. Rwanda requested the Security Council and MONUC to verify those violations. Namibia, on 7 November [S/2000/1074], denied those allegations.

Security Council consideration. On 28 November [S/PV.4237], the Security Council was briefed by the Emergency Relief Coordinator of the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs on the humanitarian situation in the DRC.

Report of Secretary-General (December). On 6 December [S/2000/1156], the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council for the fifth time on MONUC. He described diplomatic efforts to pursue implementation of the Lusaka Cease-fire Agreement, in particular the subregional summits (see p. 137), noting that the rebel movements had not been invited to any of them. Efforts were also made by his Special Representative, who met with the OAU Chairman to discuss the difficulties encountered by JMC and the process of the inter-Congolese dialogue. The Chairman acknowledged the need for better coordination of diplomatic initiatives and said he was attempting to establish contacts between President Kabila and the rebel movements. On 7 November, the Secretary-General met with SADC ambassadors who expressed disappointment at the lack of progress in the peace process and their concern that it might lead to MONUC's termination.

Despite the DRC Government's continued rejection of the neutral Facilitator of the inter-Congolese dialogue, the Facilitator renewed his efforts to revive the dialogue process and maintained that he would remain in that position since only one party to the Lusaka Agreement opposed him. The DRC, in discussions with the Special Representative, said it recognized the need for political negotiations among the Congolese parties. In the Government's view, the purpose of those negotiations was not to achieve transitional power-sharing arrangements but to agree on a new constitution and an electoral commission. In contrast, the rebel movements supported the inter-Congolese dialogue, as provided by the Lusaka Agreement, and Sir Ketumile Masire as the neutral Facilitator.

Recent fighting had complicated and imperilled ongoing peace efforts and threatened to spill over into the Republic of the Congo and the Central African Republic to the north and into Zambia to the south. The main military activity during the reporting period, which included aerial bombing raids against rebel-held locations causing civilian casualties, took place in Equateur province (north), in Katanga province (south) and in the east of the country. The situation in Kisangani remained generally calm. Rwanda and Uganda continued to limit their forces to a distance of 100 kilometres from the city, but RCD troops and other rebel groups remained there. Fighting appeared to abate in late November but there were reports of bombing attacks at Kalemie in early December. Heavy fighting was also reported near Pweto, which drove some 60,000 people across the border into Zambia.

As at 1 December, MONUC had a total of 224 liaison officers and military observers deployed at various locations in the country, including 23 liaison officers stationed in the capitals of surrounding countries. MONUC continued to plan sites for the sector headquarters required for implementing the Kampala disengagement plan of 8 April. The most serious threat facing MONUC personnel was the volatile confrontations between the belligerent parties. An inflammatory propaganda campaign conducted in some pro-Government media against MONUC had abated following protests from the United Nations. Although the Government continued to restrict MONUC flights through advance notification requirements, there had been a more positive attitude and a relaxation in regard to other restrictions. MONUC and government officials had been meeting since 30 September in order to assess the Government's compliance with the status-of-forces agreement and had achieved some positive results, in particular with regard to customs clearances, exemption of taxes, authorization for telecommunications, facilities at Kinshasa airport and joint reconnaissance missions. In field locations, MONUC military observers had encountered some limitations on their freedom of movement imposed by local commanders.

The Secretary-General welcomed the agreements reached at Maputo on 27 November, which, he said, represented forward movement, and the recent improvements in the Government's attitude towards MONUC deployment. With some exceptions, the security guarantees provided by the parties at the time of the deployment of UN liaison officers had been honoured, and it had been possible to keep the liaison officers and military observers in the field supplied, despite the serious restrictions placed on the Mission's freedom of movement. For that reason, the Secretariat had developed plans to monitor actions taken by the parties in compliance with the Kampala disengagement plan, including local ceasefire arrangements and disengagement movements and eventual withdrawal from DRC territory, through the use of unarmed military observers in static and mobile teams. They would also monitor the continuing demilitarization of Kisangani, investigate ceasefire violations and maintain contact with the parties.

While welcoming the restoration of calm around Kisangani after the June fighting, the Secretary-General said that the terms of the Lusaka Agreement and other demands made on the parties under resolution 1304(2000), such as co-operation with the deployment of MONUC and full engagement in the national dialogue process, had yet to be implemented. Therefore, he recommended that the Council extend the mandate of MONUC for another six months, until 15 June 2001. During that period, MONUC should deploy additional military observers, accompanied by the necessary medical, air, riverine and logistical support units. Broader agreement needed to be reached on key unresolved questions, and that could be approached through building on the recent diplomatic initiatives. Those questions included the withdrawal of foreign forces, the disarmament and demobilization of armed groups, the security of the borders of Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda with the DRC, the return of refugees in safety, the inter-Congolese dialogue and regional economic reconstruction and cooperation.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 14 December [meeting 4247], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1332 (2000). The draft [S/2000/1182], which was orally amended, was prepared in consultations with Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1234(1999) of 9 April 1999, 1258(1999) of 6 August 1999, 1265(1999) of 17 September 1999, 1273(1999) of 5 November 1999, 1279(1999) of 30 November 1999, 1291(2000) of 24 February 2000, 1296(2000) of 19 April 2000, 1304(2000) of 16 June 2000 and 1323(2000) of 13 October 2000, and the statements by its President of 13 July, 31 August and 11 December 1998, 24 June 1999, 26 January, 5 May, 2 June and 7 September 2000,

Reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and all States in the region,

Reaffirming also the obligation of all States to refrain from the use of force against the territorial integrity and political independence of any State or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations,

Reaffirming further the sovereignty of the Democratic Republic of the Congo over its natural resources, and noting with concern reports of the illegal exploitation of the assets of that country and the potential consequences of these actions on security conditions and the continuation of hostilities,

Deploring the continuation of hostilities in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the numerous ceasefire violations and the lack of progress on the inter-Congolese dialogue,

Reaffirming its support for the Ceasefire Agreement signed at Lusaka on 10 July 1999,

Welcoming the agreements reached at Maputo, on 27 November 2000, concerning the disengagement of forces, as well as the signing, on 6 December 2000, of the Harare Agreement, pursuant to the Kampala Disengagement Plan of 8 April 2000,

Taking note of recent statements, assurances and actions of the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo supporting the deployment of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and expressing the hope that the practical measures necessary to facilitate the full deployment of the Mission will be taken accordingly,

Recalling the responsibilities of all parties to cooperate in the full deployment of the Mission,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General of 6 December 2000 and the recommendations therein,

Recalling the responsibility of all parties to the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo for ensuring the safety and security of United Nations military and civilian staff and associated personnel throughout the country,

Expressing its serious concern at the humanitarian situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo resulting mainly from the conflict, and stressing the need for increased humanitarian assistance to the Congolese population,

Expressing its serious concern also at the severe political, economic and humanitarian consequences of the conflict on the neighbouring countries,

Expressing its alarm at the dire consequences of the prolonged conflict for the civilian population throughout the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and its deep concern at all violations and abuses of human rights and international humanitarian law, including atrocities against civilian populations, especially in the eastern provinces,

Deeply concerned at the increased rate of HIV/AIDS infection, in particular amongst women and girls, as a result of the conflict,

Gravely concerned by the continued recruitment and use of child soldiers by armed forces and groups, including cross-border recruitment and abduction of children,

Expressing serious concern at the difficulties, including those created by continued hostilities, faced by humanitarian agencies in delivering assistance to a large number of refugees and internally displaced persons,

Commending the outstanding work of Mission personnel in challenging conditions, and noting the strong leadership of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Welcoming the diplomatic initiatives by African leaders, and stressing the need for a coordinated approach involving the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity to create new momentum for further progress in the peace process,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo until 15 June 2001;

2. Calls upon all parties to the Ceasefire Agreement signed at Lusaka to cease hostilities and to continue to intensify their dialogue to implement the Agreement, as well as the Kampala, Maputo and Harare agreements, and to take additional steps, within the framework of these agreements, to accelerate the peace process;

3. Also calls upon all parties, and in particular the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, to continue to cooperate in the deployment and operations of the Mission, including through the full implementation of the provisions of the status-of-forces agreement;

4. Endorses the proposal made by the Secretary-General to deploy, as soon as he considers that conditions will allow it and in accordance with the relevant provisions of resolution 1291(2000), additional military observers, in order to monitor and verify the implementation by the parties of the ceasefire and disengagement plans adopted in Lusaka and Maputo;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to consult the Organization of African Unity and all parties concerned with regard to the possibility of organizing, in February 2001, a follow-up meeting between the signatories of the Ceasefire Agreement and the members of the Security Council;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in that connection, to submit to the Council, prior to the convening of the meeting suggested in paragraph 5 above, a review of the implementation of the current mandate of the Mission, including an assessment of the implementation by the parties of the ceasefire and disengagement plans and elements for an updated concept of operation;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit in that report proposals to the Council on ways to address the situation in the eastern provinces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including in the areas bordering Rwanda, Uganda and Burundi;

8. Expresses its readiness to support the Secretary-General, as soon as he considers that conditions allow it, in the deployment of infantry units in support of the military observers in Kisangani and Mbandaka in due course and, subject to the proposals submitted by him under paragraph 7 above, to other areas he may deem necessary, including possibly to Goma or Bukavu;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council, in consultation with all parties concerned, detailed proposals concerning the establishment of a permanent follow-up mechanism that could address, in consultation with existing mechanisms in an integrated and coordinated manner, the issues of the full withdrawal of foreign forces, the disarmament and demobilization of armed groups, the security of the borders of the Democratic Republic of the Congo with Rwanda, Uganda and Burundi, the return of refugees and internally displaced persons in safety, the inter-Congolese dialogue and regional economic reconstruction and cooperation;

10. Calls for the withdrawal of Ugandan and Rwandan forces, and all other foreign forces, from the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in compliance with resolution 1304(2000) and the Ceasefire Agreement, and urges the forces to take urgent steps to accelerate this withdrawal;

11. Calls upon all parties to the conflict to cooperate in moving forward the disarmament, demobilization, repatriation/resettlement and reintegration of all armed groups referred to in chapter 9.1 of annex A to the Ceasefire Agreement, in particular the Forces for the Defence of Democracy of Burundi, the ex-

Rwandese Armed Forces, Interahamwe, and the Allied Democratic Forces;

12. Calls upon all Congolese parties concerned to cooperate fully in the inter-Congolese dialogue as called for in the Ceasefire Agreement;

13. Reiterates its call on all parties to the conflict, including all armed groups referred to in chapter 9.1 of annex A to the Ceasefire Agreement, to take immediate steps to prevent human rights abuses and violations of international humanitarian law and to ensure safe and unhindered access for humanitarian personnel providing assistance to all those in need, including the refugees and internally displaced persons;

14. Calls upon all armed forces and groups immediately to cease all campaigns for the recruitment, abduction, cross-border deportation and use of children, and demands immediate steps for the demobilization, disarmament, return and rehabilitation of all such children, with the assistance of relevant United Nations and other agencies and organizations;

15. Stresses the need to strengthen the human rights component of the Mission, and requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate measures to that end, including through active cooperation and coordination with the Commission on Human Rights in a country-wide effort;

16. Calls once again upon all parties to the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and others concerned to cooperate fully with the expert panel on the illegal exploitation of the natural resources and other forms of wealth of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in its investigation and visits in the region;

17. Calls upon all parties fully to implement their commitments under the Ceasefire Agreement;

18. Expresses again its readiness to consider possible measures that could be imposed in accordance with its responsibility and obligations under the Charter of the United Nations, in case of failure by the parties to comply fully with the present resolution;

19. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications (December). On 13 December [S/2000/1186], Rwanda called on the Council to support Zambia in disarming and repatriating ex-FAR and Interahamwe forces currently on Zambian territory. Those forces were not bona fide refugees and should be disarmed, demobilized and repatriated to Rwanda. If allowed to return to the DRC, they could fuel the war there, Rwanda said.

The DRC, on 26 December [S/2000/1237], complained to the Council of the resurgence of military activities in the DRC, which were the result, it said, of offensives led by RPA forces in Katanga province, leading to a major influx of Congolese refugees into Zambia, and by Ugandan forces in Equateur province. The DRC called on the Council to impose an international embargo on the delivery, sale or transfer of arms to Rwanda and Uganda; an economic, trade and financial blockade against them; and the freezing of diplomatic relations between UN Member States and those two Governments. On 28 December [S/2000/1245], the DRC stated that a brigade of RPA, supported by National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA) forces, had launched attacks on Katanga province from Zambian territory. That claim was later denied by Rwanda [S/2001/4], and Zambia denied the claim that it had granted use of its territory to launch attacks against the DRC [S/2001/77].

Rwanda, on 28 December [S/2000/1244], accused President Kabila and his allies of conducting a campaign of misinformation against it. Rwanda reiterated its commitment to withdraw its forces 200 kilometres, a distance much further than the Kampala disengagement plan of 15 kilometres. It had already pulled back in Kasai province, but had been attacked by the Congolese Armed Forces (FAC). In similar circumstances, RPA and RCD forces were preparing to disengage in Katanga when they were attacked by Kabila forces and Interahamwe militias, forcing RPA to withdraw to Pweto. Rwanda said it would withdraw from Pweto if MONUC deployed there. Rwanda urged the Council fully to deploy MONUC without delay. The next day [S/2000/1256], Rwanda warned of continued fighting, and urged the United Nations to play its part in the situation, in particular the deployment of MONUC forces to oversee the withdrawal of troops.

Uganda, on 29 December [S/2000/1257], denied that its troops were involved in an offensive in Equateur province. It said that it remained ready to withdraw its troops in accordance with the Kampala disengagement plan and subsequent agreements.

Situation at year's end. In December [S/2001/128], over 5,000 combatants and refugees fled into Zambia to escape fighting in Katanga; some 3,000 FAC and 200 Zimbabwean soldiers were disarmed and escorted back to the DRC. Fighting was also reported in Equateur province and the security situation in parts of the eastern areas remained volatile. Rwanda and Uganda continued to keep their forces some 100 kilometres from Kisangani; however, RCD elements remained in the city.

MONUC financing

Following the Security Council's 24 February decision in resolution 1291(2000) to expand the size of MONUC to up to 5,537 military personnel, the Secretary-General, on 23 March [A/54/808], provided an estimate of the required resources in the amount of $200 million, inclusive of the $41 million commitment authority granted previously by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) for MONUC's preliminary deployment. ACABQ, in its 28 March report [A/54/813], noted the amount and recommended that efforts be made to use locally available expertise as much as possible.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (April)

On 7 April [meeting 95], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/54/830], adopted resolution 54/260 A without vote [agenda item 175].

Financing of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 1258(1999) of 6 August 1999 and 1279(1999) of 30 November 1999 regarding, respectively, the deployment to the Congo region of military liaison personnel and the establishment of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and Security Council resolution 1291(2000) of 24 February 2000, by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission until 31 August 2000,

Recognizing that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing also that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Trust Fund to Support the Peace Process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

2. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo in full and on time;

3. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

4. Emphasizes that all existing and future peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

5. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Mission, and for this purpose requests the Secretary-General to speed up the implementation of the asset management system at all peacekeeping missions in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/1 of 15 October 1997;

7. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to employ locally recruited staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

10. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the Mission for the period from 6 August 1999 to 30 June 2000 in an amount not exceeding 200 million United States dollars gross (199,760,000 dollars net), inclusive of the amount of 41,011,200 dollars gross (40,771,200 dollars net) previously authorized by the Advisory Committee, and requests the Secretary-General to establish a special account for the Mission;

11. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 200 million dollars gross (199,760,000 dollars net) among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, 50/451 B of 23 December 1995 and 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1999 and 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999;

12. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 11 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 240,000 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 6 August 1999 to 30 June 2000;

13. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

14. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Mission;

15. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, in September 2000, a comprehensive report on the financing of the Mission, including full budget estimates and information on the utilization of resources until the time of the submission of the report, to enable the Assembly to take action on it at the main part of its fifty-fifth session;

17. Notes the intention of the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, during the second part of its resumed fifty-fourth session, a preliminary expenditure report for the Mission for the period from 6 August 1999 to 30 June 2000;

18. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo".

In response to that resolution, the Secretary-General, on 19 May [A/54/872], prepared a preliminary expenditure report for MONUC covering 6 August 1999 to 30 June 2000. He revised the requirements for the Mission for that period from $200 million to $58,681,000 gross ($58,441,000 net), to cover the costs of preliminary deployment of military and civilian personnel to the Congo region, the immediate initial requirements for the establishment of MONUC, as well as resources for vehicles, communications and data-processing equipment required for up to 500 UN military observers and 100 civilian support staff. The amount of $141,319,000 gross, representing the balance of the commitment authority of $200 million gross granted by the Assembly for 1999-2000 would be carried over and used for 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

On 15 June [meeting 98], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/830/Add.1], adopted resolution 54/260 B without vote [agenda item 175].

Financing of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the related oral report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1291(2000) of 24 February 2000 concerning the extension of the mandate of the Mission,

1. Notes that, by 30 June 2000, only 500 United Nations military observers and 100 civilian support staff out of up to 5,537 military personnel, including up to 500 military observers, as indicated by the Secretary-General in his report, will have been deployed to the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures with a view to ensuring the deployment of military personnel and the provision of adequate resources to the Mission without any unnecessary delay;

3. Decides to reduce the commitment authority provided for in its resolution 54/260 A of 7 April 2000, totalling 200 million United States dollars gross (199,760,000 dollars net) for the operation of the Mission for the period from 6 August 1999 to 30 June 2000, to the amount of 58,681,000 dollars gross (58,441,000 dollars net);

4. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the operation of the Mission for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 in an amount not exceeding 141,319,000 dollars gross (140,827,100 dollars net), which represents the difference between the commitment authority provided for in its resolution 54/260 A for the period from 6 August 1999 to 30 June 2000 and the reduced commitment authority provided for in paragraph 3 above;

5. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, in September 2000, a comprehensive report on the financing of the Mission, including full budget estimates and information on the utilization of resources up to the time of the submission of the report, to enable the Assembly to take action on it at the main part of its fifty-fifth session.

The Assembly, on 23 December, decided that the agenda item on MONUC financing would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458). By decision 55/455 of the same date, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee would continue to consider the item.

In other action, the Assembly, in resolution 55/166 on special assistance for the economic recovery and reconstruction of the DRC, invited Governments to continue to provide support (see p. 878). In resolution 55/117, the Assembly addressed the human rights situation in the DRC (see p. 738).

Burundi

Former President Nelson Mandela of South Africa, appointed in late 1999 as Facilitator of the Burundi peace process, undertook mediation efforts to move that process forward in 2000. At the beginning of the year, Burundi faced ongoing violence, in particular by rebel groups who refused to participate in the peace process, and mounting tension as the two main ethnic groups remained hostile to each other. Coordinated mediation efforts were carried out not only by the Facilitator, but also at the regional level through a series of summits and by representatives of the Secretary-General.

Those efforts resulted in significant progress on 28 August with the signing of the Arusha Agreement on Peace and Reconciliation, a framework for political reform, which was eventually signed by 19 political parties. Some of the main combatant rebel forces, however, were not parties to the Agreement although they had joined the negotiations. The Security Council and the Facilitator called on the parties that remained outside the peace process to cease hostilities and to participate in the process. At the end of the year, armed groups continued to carry out attacks against government forces and on civilians. Burundi claimed that certain neighbouring countries were fuelling the war by supporting the rebel groups. As a result of the uncertain situation and the monitoring role foreseen for the United Nations under the Arusha Agreement, the Secretary-General recommended that the mandate of the United Nations Office in Burundi be extended until the end of the year, to which the Security Council agreed.

Political situation

The Secretary-General, at a 19 January meeting of the Security Council [S/PV.4091], warned that the situation in Burundi remained tense, with two ethnic groups remaining hostile to one another, a steadily escalating spiral of violence and killing and a faltering peace process in which the different parties paid lip service at best. Some progress had been achieved in the peace process but disagreements remained on key issues, such as the future composition of the army, the electoral system and the transition period, while others, such as guarantees for the minority community and the question of reconciliation versus impunity, had yet to be seriously addressed. There was also the larger volatile regional context of wars in neighbouring countries and the fluid refugee situation. The Burundian refugee population was estimated at 500,000 and more than 800,000 were internally displaced, many of them as a result of a government policy of forcibly relocating civilians.

The Facilitator of the Burundi peace process, Nelson Mandela, said that progress had been made in the past 18 months in the Arusha (United Republic of Tanzania) peace process, named for the series of regional summits on Burundi that began in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 81]. The four committees had achieved progress. Two—those dealing with the nature of the conflict and the issue of genocide and with reconstruction and development—had nearly completed their work. The major outstanding issues were, respectively, the appropriate mechanism for dealing with the past and the recovery of property by returning refugees. The other two committees were dealing with democracy and good governance and with peace and security. Most of the parties were agreed on the principle of universal franchise, but differences remained on whether the parliament should be balanced in ethnic, gender or other terms. With regard to peace and security, the parties had agreed on principles for the organization of the defence and security forces, but they failed to agree on reform of the existing security forces or on the integration of armed groups into the security forces. Mr. Mandela, who had met with Burundian political parties and role players in Arusha on 16 January, noted the importance of making the process inclusive by inviting all groups to join.

Also addressing the Council, Burundi said that the security situation had significantly improved compared to 1995 and 1996 and the overall situation was under control. Only 4 provinces out of 17 still suffered from a lack of security. With respect to rural Bujumbura province, the Government had been obliged to establish regroupment camps for the protection of the people and to prevent destabilization of the capital through terrorist acts. Rejecting claims that the camps were an ethnic cleansing system, Burundi said it intended to close about 10 of the 50 camps within two weeks and the remainder once security was restored. It elaborated on those plans in a 17 January statement [S/2000/33]. Burundi appealed to the international community to provide Burundi with support in view of its dire socioeconomic situation.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 19 January [meeting 4091], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1286(2000). The draft [S/2000/29] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions and the statements by its President on the situation in Burundi,

Expressing concern at the dire economic, humanitarian and social conditions in Burundi,

Expressing deep concern at the ongoing violence and insecurity in Burundi marked by increased attacks by armed groups on the civilian population in and around the capital,

Noting with concern the implications of the situation in Burundi for the region as well as the consequences for Burundi of continued regional instability,

Recognizing the important role of the States of the region, in particular the United Republic of Tanzania, which is host to hundreds of thousands of Burundian refugees and home to the Julius Nyerere Foundation, which has provided outstanding support to the talks,

Noting that the United Nations agencies and regional and non-governmental organizations, in co-operation with host Governments, are making use of the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement, inter alia, in Africa,

Welcoming the human rights programme undertaken by the United Nations and the cooperation afforded to it by the Government of Burundi and political parties in Burundi,

Reaffirming that the renewed Arusha peace process represents the most viable basis for a resolution of the conflict, together with the continued efforts to build an internal political partnership in Burundi,

1. Warmly endorses and strongly supports the designation by the Eighth Arusha Regional Summit, on 1 December 1999, of Nelson Mandela, former President of the Republic of South Africa, as the new Facilitator of the Arusha peace process, successor to the late Mwalimu Julius Nyerere, expresses its strongest support for his efforts to achieve a peaceful solution to the conflict in Burundi, and welcomes the successful meeting in Arusha, on 16 January 2000, launching his initiative;

2. Reiterates its strong support for the renewed Arusha peace process, endorses the call at the Eighth Arusha Regional Summit for all parties to the conflict in Burundi to extend maximum cooperation to the new Facilitator of the peace process, and calls for increased efforts to build an internal political partnership in Burundi;

3. Endorses efforts by the Secretary-General to enhance the role of the United Nations in Burundi, in particular the continued work of his Special Representative for the Great Lakes region;

4. Commends those Burundian parties, including the Government, that have demonstrated their commitment to continue negotiations, and calls upon all parties that remain outside the Arusha peace process to cease hostilities and to participate fully in that process;

5. Expresses appreciation for international donor support, and appeals for increased assistance for the Arusha peace process;

6. Condemns continuing violence perpetrated by all parties, in particular by those non-State actors that refuse to participate in the Arusha peace process, and strongly urges all parties to end the ongoing armed conflict and to resolve their differences peacefully;

7. Condemns also attacks against civilians in Burundi, and calls for an immediate end to these criminal acts;

8. Strongly condemns the murder of United Nations Children's Fund and World Food Programme personnel and Burundian civilians in Rutana province, in October 1999, and urges that the perpetrators be effectively brought to justice;

9. Calls for all parties to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian assistance to those in need in Burundi, and to guarantee fully the safety, security and freedom of movement of United Nations and associated personnel;

10. Calls also for the immediate, full, safe and unhindered access of humanitarian workers and human rights observers to all regroupment camps, and calls further for internees to have access to their livelihoods outside these camps;

11. Encourages further progress between the United Nations and the Government of Burundi and political parties in Burundi in establishing appropriate security guarantees for United Nations humanitarian agencies to resume field operations;

12. Calls upon neighbouring States, where appropriate, to take measures to halt cross-border insurgent activity and the illicit flow of arms and ammunition, and to ensure the neutrality, security and civilian character of refugee camps;

13. Calls for donors to provide humanitarian and human rights assistance to Burundi and to resume substantial economic and development assistance with due regard to security conditions;

14. Urges the international community to examine the economic development needs of Burundi, with a view to establishing stable long-term conditions for the well-being of the Burundian people and the return of refugees;

Arusha Summit (February). On 21 February, the Presidents of Burundi, Mozambique, Rwanda, South Africa, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania and the Vice-President of Kenya met in Arusha to discuss the political and security situation in Burundi and the peace negotiations [S/2000/165].

The Arusha Summit noted with regret that the security situation was deteriorating as fighting continued, claiming innocent lives and destroying property. It further noted the Government's announcement that it had disbanded 11 regroupment camps. It recalled, however, that the decision of the Eighth Arusha Regional Summit (December 1999) was to immediately disband all of them and called on the Government of Burundi to take appropriate measures accordingly.

Communications (February/March). In a 4 February statement [S/2000/97], the EU Presidency said that the resumption of the Arusha process and the subsequent Council discussion on Burundi marked a new phase that it hoped would give a fresh impetus to the peace process. The EU, however, remained concerned at the ongoing violence and insecurity in Burundi, as well as the increasing flow of refugees and internally displaced people. It called on the Government to proceed with the dismantling of the regroupment camps. Concerned over cross-border insurgent activity, the EU welcomed the agreement between Burundi and the United Republic of Tanzania to hold consultations on border issues.

In a 24 March statement [S/2000/275], the EU expressed concern about the assassination in November 1999 of Gabriel Gisabwamana, a Burundian member of parliament who was engaged in inter-Burundian talks.

Political reforms. Burundi, in a 5 May letter to the Security Council President [S/2000/406], responded to concerns expressed with regard to the functioning of political parties, certain detainees regarded as political prisoners, assembly sites and freedom of the press. It said that there were 14 registered political parties that participated in the political life of the country. They were governed by the Transitional Constitution and the law on political parties. With regard to the so-called political prisoners, Burundi made the point that all prisoners whose cases had been raised by certain politicians had in fact been detained for ordinary crimes, including assassination attempts, massacres, participation in armed gangs or terrorist attacks, and arming themselves against the State authority. It acknowledged that the prison population had increased from 4,500 in 1993 to 10,200 at the start of 1999, as a result of the recent crisis, and the Burundian judicial system was not prepared to handle such a workload. Since 1999, the Government had taken specific measures to reduce overcrowding in the prisons, including the release of prisoners not held on serious charges, more expeditious trials and conditional release, thereby reducing the prison population to 8,700. The situation of protected sites in rural Bujumbura province was not a result of a policy of concentrating the population but rather of a situation of insecurity. It was adopted to protect the population from acts of violence on the part of the armed bands and to prevent people from being caught in the crossfire between government troops and rebels. Since the security situation had improved, the Government had begun dismantling the sites in February 2000, releasing nearly 100,000 persons, with the remainder to be released within the next two months. Public and private media were operating in Burundi and Burundians could express their views through the national and some foreign media. The public press was regulated by national law. The supposed restraints on the media were false, Burundi said.

Appointments. The Secretary-General informed the Security Council on 11 May [S/2000/423] of his intention to appoint Jean Arnault (France) as his Representative and Head of the United Nations Office in Burundi as of 1 June. The Council took note of that decision on the same day [S/2000/424].

On 30 June [S/2000/650], the Secretary-General said that the Arusha peace process relating to the Burundi peace negotiations had just entered a crucial phase, and the possibility could not be ruled out that a peace agreement would be reached by the end of the year. Therefore, he had decided to extend until 31 October 2000 the appointment of Ayité Jean-Claude Kpakpo (Benin), Senior United Nations Adviser to the Facilitator, which expired on 30 June. By a letter of 5 July [S/2000/651], the Council took note of the decision.

Regional summit (July). The Eleventh Arusha Regional Consultative Summit on Burundi (19 July) issued a press communiqué [S/2000/836] in which it noted with satisfaction that the negotiations under the Facilitator had reached a very advanced and encouraging stage. In that regard, the Summit commended the Facilitator, members of the facilitation team and the Burundian negotiating parties whose efforts had made the progress possible. The Summit met separately with leaders of the Burundian negotiating parties and called on them to redouble their efforts and commitment to the negotiations in a spirit of give and take so as to resolve all outstanding differences. The Summit was attended by the Presidents of Burundi, Kenya, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia, the Prime Minister of Ethiopia and a minister representing the President of Rwanda.

Arusha Agreement

The peace process moved forward significantly on 28 August with the signing of the Arusha Agreement on Peace and Reconciliation in Burundi. The Secretary-General, addressing the Security Council on 29 September [S/PV.4201], described it as a comprehensive blueprint for the reform of Burundian society, which addressed the root causes of the conflict, such as exclusion and genocide, as well as the tragic consequences of the war, such as the plight of hundreds of thousands of refugees and internally displaced people. He noted, however, that before that ambitious programme could be fully implemented, a number of obstacles needed to be overcome.

The draft compromise proposal had been based on the inputs received by the facilitation team led by Mr. Mandela. A majority of participating parties signed the document drafted by the team, and a number of parties that did not sign on 28 August subsequently did so. The Facilitator informed the Council that the significance of the Agreement was that the 19 political parties represented a united forum that could deal with the remaining issues and with the combatant forces that were not yet part of the process.

One of the most crucial issues—the integration of a Burundi national defence force—was settled. Both Hutu and Tutsi leaders had agreed that 50 per cent of the defence force would be from the Hutu community and 50 per cent from the Tutsi community, with accommodation being made for the Twa community as well. It was further agreed that a body of respected persons, independent from the defence force, would oversee that process.

The political agreement was not yet the final and comprehensive agreement, Mr. Mandela said, as some of the main combatant rebel forces were not parties to the signed agreement. However, they had been invited to join the Arusha process. He called on the rebel groups to announce a ceasefire to halt the slaughter of innocent civilians. As to the regroupment camps, President Buyoya had given his assurances that they had been closed but that some inmates refused to leave because of the security situation inside the country, which Mr. Mandela had no reason to doubt.

In a letter to the Security Council [S/2000/1096], the Secretary-General said that the Arusha Agreement called for the establishment of the Implementation Monitoring Committee, to be chaired by the United Nations, which would supervise the implementation of the Agreement; ensure respect for the implementation timetable and accurate interpretation of the Agreement; arbitrate on disputes that might arise among the signatories; give guidance to and coordinate the commissions and subcommissions set up to implement the Agreement; and assist the transitional Government in mobilizing the resources required for implementation.

In a 19 September statement [S/2000/890], the EU welcomed the mediator's decision to hold a further session of negotiations in Nairobi on 20 September with the participation of the Burundian Government, representatives of the rebel movements and those parties that had not yet signed the Agreement but had undertaken to do so at the Nairobi meeting. Pointing to the urgency of finalizing a peace accord that had the agreement of all parties, the EU called for an immediate general ceasefire.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 29 September [meeting 4201], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/29 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses its warm appreciation to former President Nelson Mandela, in his capacity as Facilitator of the Burundi peace process in Arusha, for his briefing to the Council on 29 September 2000. It commends him for his tireless efforts in the cause of peace in Burundi, and encourages him to continue his efforts.

The Council welcomes the signature, on 28 August 2000, of the Arusha Peace Accord, as well as the signatures added to that Accord at a regional summit, held on 20 September 2000, in Nairobi. It commends those Burundian parties, including the Government of Burundi, that have demonstrated their commitment to continued negotiations.

The Council stresses that the key to achieving a lasting peace agreement in Burundi lies with the Burundian parties. It is convinced that compromise is the only means to reach such an agreement, and to this end urges all parties to work towards resolving any remaining differences over the Peace Accord, and to proceed to its implementation.

The Council reiterates its call, in resolution 1286(2000) of 19 January 2000, on all parties that remain outside the peace process to cease hostilities and to participate fully in that process. In this regard, it supports the call of the Facilitator to the rebel groups to clarify their positions by 20 October 2000.

The Council is encouraged by the engagement of regional States. It urges them to continue their efforts and, especially, to use their influence to draw the armed groups firmly into the peace process.

The Council condemns all attacks on civilians populations. It remains deeply concerned at the continuing level of violence in Burundi, in particular at acts perpetrated by rebel groups, despite the call made to them to hold direct negotiations with the Burundian Government to secure a lasting ceasefire agreement.

The Council remains deeply concerned at the dire economic, humanitarian and social conditions in Burundi, and calls upon all parties to cooperate fully with non-governmental organizations and international organizations involved in the implementation of the Peace Accord. It urges all concerned to ensure that former camp inhabitants are protected, respected and enabled to return voluntarily and in safety and dignity to their homes.

The Council notes the holding of a meeting of donor countries in Brussels on 15 September 2000. It welcomes the call made at that meeting for progressive resumption of assistance to Burundi, including development aid, to alleviate its urgent humanitarian and economic problems as it makes progress in its internal peace negotiations. In this regard, it also welcomes the plan to hold a donor conference in Paris in due course.

The Council stands ready to consider practical ways in which it can best support the peace process. To this end, the Council requests the Secretary-General urgently to report to it on specific actions the United Nations can undertake in the consolidation of peace and economic recovery in Burundi.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Following the issuance of the statement, the Council held a private meeting, at which it held an exchange of views with Mr. Mandela [S/PV.4202]. On 20 October [S/2000/1014], Burundi requested the Council to alter misleading wording in the French translation of the 29 September presidential statement and urged it to commend the total dismantling of the regroupment camps in Burundi.

Situation at year's end. In the months following the signing of the Arusha Agreement, the situation remained unclear. In a 20 October statement [S/2000/1059], the EU Presidency expressed concern at the scale and intensity of attacks by armed groups in Burundi and at the effects of clashes between those groups and government forces on the population. Disquieted by the risks that such violence entailed for the peace process, the EU reaffirmed its support for Mr. Mandela's efforts and those of the signatories to consolidate the Arusha Agreement. It condemned the use of force to settle disputes and urged the armed groups to respond to the calls made at the Thirteenth Regional Summit on Burundi (Nairobi, Kenya, 20 September) for an unconditional suspension of hostilities and for the urgent resumption of negotiations to flesh out and implement the Arusha Agreement. It called on countries able to influence the armed groups, in particular the DRC, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zimbabwe, to urge those groups to choose the path of peace and negotiation without delay.

Burundi, on 20 December [S/2000/1220], urged the Council to publicly condemn the rebels who continued to commit acts of violence against the population, and to use its full authority to persuade those groups to end the violence and come to the negotiating table so that a ceasefire could be reached. Burundi charged that certain neighbouring countries were fuelling the war in Burundi. It said that the Council should help to disarm, arrest and repatriate to Burundi the rebels of two groups that had taken refuge in Zambia. Burundi thanked the Council for mobilizing the donor community to resume cooperation and assistance to Burundi with a view to supporting the Arusha Agreement and alleviating the suffering of the population caused by a war that had lasted seven years. A donors' conference was held in Paris on 11 and 12 December. President Buyoya's statement to that conference was annexed to Burundi's 20 December letter.

Extension of UNOB mandate

The Secretary-General, in a 10 November letter [S/2000/1096], noted that under the Arusha Agreement, the United Nations was requested to chair the Implementation Monitoring Committee (see p. 146). For the range of activities required, it would be necessary to adjust the current political mandate and strengthen UN capacity in Burundi. Further study was required to determine what was expected of the United Nations in that role but, in the meantime, he recommended that the Security Council extend the mandate of the United Nations Office in Burundi (UNOB) until 31 December 2001. On 15 November [S/2000/1097], the Council took note of the information and agreed with the recommendation.

Appointment extended. On 9 November [S/2000/1098], the Secretary-General, noting that several issues remained to be negotiated after the signing of the Arusha Agreement, informed the Security Council of his decision to extend the appointment of Mr. Kpakpo, Senior Adviser to the Facilitator, until 31 January 2001. The Council took note of the decision on 15 November [S/2000/1099].

Rwanda

Rwanda carried out fundamental changes in several areas in 2000: decentralization of government and the transition to democracy, moves to draw up a new constitution, overhauling of the justice system and the introduction of gacaca, a traditional system of justice, and the promotion of a culture of human rights, unity and reconciliation. With those steps, Rwanda began moving out of the shadow of the 1994 genocide and laying the foundation for the transition to democracy. The regional crisis remained relevant as the ongoing conflicts (see under the DRC, above) created a feeling of insecurity and fear among the population and blocked efforts towards reconciliation. In general, however, the security situation continued to improve in 2000, resulting in a corresponding decline in alleged abuses by the Rwandan armed forces, despite some incidents of infiltration and related violence in March. The drought and food shortages in the eastern part of the country led to population movements. Meanwhile, some 45,000 Rwandan refugees returned from the DRC between January and May and some 60,000 more were expected later in the year.

Inquiry into UN response to 1994 genocide

The Security Council, on 14 April [S/PV.4127], considered the 1999 report of the Independent Inquiry into the actions of the United Nations during the 1994 genocide in Rwanda [S/1999/1257]. Addressing the Council, the Chairman of the Inquiry, Ingvar Carlsson, said that the purpose of the report was to establish the facts related to the UN role during the genocide and to make recommendations for the future. Summarizing the Inquiry's findings [YUN 1999, p. 95], Mr. Carlsson stated that the overriding failure of the United Nations was lack of resources and the lack of political will to act. He further summarized a number of recommendations made by the Inquiry for future peacekeeping efforts [ibid., p. 96], key among them the need to improve UN peacekeeping capacity.

The representative of Rwanda said the report clearly showed that the world had failed his country. The victims of the genocide were still suffering from physical, psychological and post-trauma hardships. What the country currently needed was a mini-Marshall plan as Rwanda struggled to rebuild itself.

Having heard speakers from 16 countries, the Council concluded the current stage of its consideration of the agenda item on the situation concerning Rwanda.

In a 17 August letter [S/2000/818], Bangladesh, referring to the Inquiry's report, said that some of the remarks made about the Bangladesh contingent lacked clarity, objectivity and factual accuracy or were seriously misleading.

Throughout the year, the International Tribunal for Rwanda continued to try a number of persons accused of the crime of genocide and/or crimes against humanity committed during the 1994 conflict (see PART FOUR, Chapter II).

Arms embargo

On 20 December [S/2000/1227], the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 918(1994) concerning the arms embargo against Rwanda [YUN 1994, p. 285] submitted to the Council a report on its 2000 activities. The Committee was mandated to seek information regarding the implementation of the arms embargo. It recalled that it had no specific monitoring mechanism to ensure implementation of the embargo and relied solely on the cooperation of States and organizations in a position to provide pertinent information. During the year, no violations were brought to the Committee's attention.

Financing of UNAMIR

The General Assembly, by decision 54/500 of 5 September, included in the draft agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item on financing of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR). The military component of UNAMIR had been withdrawn from Rwanda in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 62] and the liquidation process was begun at that time. On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458); it decided that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the item (decision 55/455).

Angola

In 2000, the overall situation in Angola remained unstable and guerrilla activities by the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA) exacerbated an already alarming humanitarian situation. The Government continued its successful offensive, re-establishing its authority in the central, northern and eastern regions in a number of UNITA strongholds and capturing areas in the south and south-eastern parts of the country. Military operations on the southern and eastern Angolan borders spilled into neighbouring Namibia and Zambia, where, in addition to the refugee influx, bombing and shelling incidents were reported. By year's end, the number of persons internally displaced due to the conflict had increased to more than 2.7 million. The Secretary-General, concerned that the situation appeared to be entering a new phase of political and military impasse, said that if the current trend continued, security and humanitarian problems, especially in the border regions of neighbouring Namibia and Zambia, could worsen and further threaten the peace and security of the entire subregion.

Implementation of the 1994 Lusaka Protocol [YUN 1994, p. 348], by which the two sides agreed that the State administration would be extended, remained at a standstill. In July, the Government stated that UNITA should return to the peace process to complete its outstanding tasks under the Protocol as the Government had already concluded its part of the agreement. On the other hand, UNITA's leader, Jonas Savimbi, had said it was the Government's prerogative to initiate talks with UNITA, which had earlier in the year reiterated its readiness to hold talks with the Angolan Government, noting that it did not object to an all-inclusive national dialogue to end the conflict. President José Eduardo dos Santos stressed that the Lusaka Protocol was still a valid basis for the peace process and outlined a programme of action expected to culminate in legislative and presidential elections. However, the Government maintained it did not consider Mr. Savimbi a credible partner for dialogue, but it permitted his supporters who surrendered to government forces to carry out political activities.

During the year, the Panel of Experts established by Security Council resolution 1237(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 112] to investigate violations of Council sanctions against UNITA stated in its final report that it was clear that the sanctions were ineffective. UNITA could still procure its needs for war and sell its diamonds, its officials travelled with little restriction and UNITA continued to be active in international capitals through "unofficial" offices and representatives.

In April, the Council reiterated that the primary cause of the crisis in Angola was UNITA's refusal to comply with its obligations under the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Council resolutions. It demanded that UNITA comply immediately and without condition and stressed the obligation of all Member States to comply fully with the measures imposed against UNITA, emphasizing that non-compliance constituted a violation of the provisions of the UN Charter.

Also during the year, the Government of Angola approved the status-of-mission agreement for the United Nations Office in Angola (UNOA), noting that the new Office, which replaced the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola (MONUA) in 1999, should aim to strengthen and build the country's capacity in the areas of humanitarian assistance and human rights and serve as a liaison between the Government and the Secretary-General.

Political and military developments

The Government of Angola continued to gain ground in 2000, reinforcing its military action and campaign for the political isolation of UNITA. In Luanda and some provincial capitals, the UNITA Restoration Committee continued to call for an end to the conflict by Jonas Savimbi's group, in accordance with the provisions of the 1994 Lusaka Protocol [YUN 1994, p. 348]. That agreement covered, among other matters, the withdrawal, quartering and demilitarization of all UNITA forces; the disarming of civilians; integration of forces into a national military; police functions; the electoral process; and national reconciliation. A number of political parties and church groups also appealed for resumed national dialogue and cessation of hostilities, and some civic organizations emphasized the need for a general amnesty law and for holding an all-inclusive national conference to discuss the country's problems. President dos Santos announced that general elections would be held in 2001 and it was promised that all political parties would be consulted prior to fixing an election date. While opposition parties welcomed the announcement of elections, they questioned the timeliness of the initiative because of the continuing civil war.

In February, Angola approved the status-of-mission agreement for UNOA, which the Government expected would assist in capacity-building in the areas of human rights and humanitarian assistance.

Report of Secretary-General (January). The Secretary-General, in a January report [S/2000/23] submitted in response to Security Council resolution 1268(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 109], described developments in Angola since October 1999 [ibid., p. 110]. He stated that, following the Government's successful military campaign, State authority had been re-established in the vast territory previously occupied by UNITA. However, hostilities continued and the escalation of fighting into Namibia caused concern.

Meanwhile, the Government continued to reinforce its military action and campaign for political isolation of UNITA. In Luanda and some provincial capitals, the UNITA Restoration Committee continued calling for an end to the conflict by Mr. Savimbi's group. A number of political parties and church groups also appealed for resumed national dialogue and cessation of hostilities.

The report noted that the expert panel of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 256] visited Angola and other countries in Southern Africa in October 1999 to discuss ways to improve implementation of measures imposed against UNITA. In January, the Committee's Chairman consulted with Angolan authorities on the impact of those sanctions and to discuss additional measures to strengthen their implementation.

The intensified military operations and precarious security conditions throughout Angola had reportedly been accompanied by human rights abuses. The United Nations had been unable to verify such information because it lacked access to most of Angola, but it appeared that various military elements, including UNITA, were responsible for looting of crops and destruction of property. The intensification of the conflict and re-establishment of the Government in areas previously held by UNITA also sparked debate on the country's democratization process. Since relocation of its personnel to Luanda in early 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 106], MONUA's Human Rights Division discontinued its activities outside the Angolan capital, except in Benguela province, where it set up human rights centres. It also carried out assessment missions and identified new projects for expanded operations in several other provinces. The Government had identified six provinces for priority human rights activities in 2000.

The humanitarian situation in the country remained precarious, with the war-affected population estimated at 3.7 million persons, of whom nearly 2 million were internally displaced. Forty-two per cent of children under 5 years were underweight, and agricultural production for 2000 was projected to be unsatisfactory for the population. Moreover, the humanitarian status of one third of the population living in inaccessible areas remained unknown. Landmine incidents had also increased, with 409 civilians, mainly women, falling victim to landmines between January and November 1999. The Secretary-General hoped the donor community would respond to the funding requirement of the 2000 UN consolidated inter-agency appeal for Angola amounting to $258 million [YUN 1999, p. 832].

The Secretary-General observed that UNITA, through its refusal to comply with obligations under the Lusaka Protocol, bore the primary responsibility for the current state of affairs in Angola. Welcoming the indication by the Angolan authorities that the Lusaka Protocol remained a valid basis for the peace process, the Secretary-General urged UNITA to demonstrate its preparedness to fulfil its commitments under the Protocol for genuine national reconciliation.

Communication (January). In a 17 January declaration on the situation in Angola [S/2000/32], the EU Presidency urged UNITA to cease immediately its military activities and appealed for its compliance with the Lusaka Protocol. The EU encouraged the Angolan Government to create the appropriate political, social and economic environment for democracy and rule of law to flourish, and called for an end to mine-laying activities by the Government and UNITA. It also stated its readiness to consider assistance for the Government of Angola in rebuilding and reconstruction in a democratic environment.

Report of Secretary-General (April). In an 11 April report on UNOA [S/2000/304 & Corr.1], submitted pursuant to resolution 1268(1999), the Secretary-General covered political developments, the military situation, human rights aspects, humanitarian aspects and the socio-economic situation of Angola since January. He stated that the Government continued to call on the followers of UNITA to abandon Mr. Savimbi, and President dos Santos expressed his readiness to forgive all those who renounced the use of force to attain political power. A number of civic organizations had underlined the need for a general amnesty law and for holding an all-inclusive national conference to discuss the country's problems. The President had announced that general elections would be held in 2001, and the Secretary-General of the ruling Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA) had promised that all political parties would be consulted prior to fixing a date for the elections. Consultations had begun on a draft constitution proposed by the MPLA members of Parliament. In the meantime, while opposition parties welcomed the announcement of elections, they questioned the prematurity of the initiative because of the continuing civil war.

The Secretary-General reported that the Government reiterated its rejection of any negotiation with Mr. Savimbi, and a recent offer of mediation by the Government of South Africa for a negotiated end of the conflict had been rejected by the Angolan Government, which had justified the rejection on the grounds that, among other factors, South Africa was a member of the Southern African Development Community, which had declared Mr. Savimbi a war criminal and an invalid interlocutor in the Angolan peace process. In March, the UNITA Secretary-General stated that it was the Government's prerogative to initiate discussions with UNITA to end the fighting. He said UNITA had written to the Secretary-General seeking a change in the composition of the three observer States of the Lusaka peace process (Portugal, the Russian Federation and the United States), as the neutrality of the three countries was compromised by their national interests. He reiterated UNITA's readiness to hold talks with the Angolan Government, noting that it did not object to an all-inclusive national dialogue to end the conflict.

The security situation along the border with Zambia had reportedly improved, and Zambia had agreed to increase efforts to tighten UN sanctions against UNITA. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees was also able, with the cooperation of Zambian authorities, to complete the transfer of the last group of Angolan refugees further inland. The Angolan Government had been undertaking diplomatic initiatives to explain its position on the war and the new political dispensation it planned leading to elections, as well as to continue efforts to further isolate Mr. Savimbi.

In March, the report of the Panel of Experts on violations of Security Council sanctions against UNITA was issued and considered by the Council (see p. 154). A number of Governments and corporations announced that they would be taking measures to comply with the sanctions. UNITA dismissed allegations in the sanctions report on the grounds that they were based on statements made by defectors.

Regarding the general military situation, reports indicated that in spite of military clashes in several regions in the country, government forces continued to be effective in further reducing the conventional war capability of UNITA, forcing it to resort to guerrilla attacks. Military developments continued to exacerbate the deplorable humanitarian situation affecting the civilian population and to cause instability in much of the country and along the border with Namibia and Zambia. Government forces effectively controlled the major cities, but the continuous influx of internally displaced persons fleeing the countryside, where fighting, road ambushes and mine incidents were common, concerned relief organizations.

The Secretary-General referred to allegations of grave human rights violations that had surfaced against both government and UNITA forces, noting that UNOA addressed mainly capacity-building initiatives designed to overcome structural problems in areas not affected directly by the conflict. UNOA continued to promote gradual acceptance by the Government of the existence of serious human rights problems and had been supporting the Office of the Prosecutor-General with training and material to develop a computerized case-tracking system, expected to be fully operational in Luanda, Benguela and Huila provinces by the end of March. A workshop was organized to address recognized deficiencies in Angola's fulfilment of its international obligations when producing required reports for 6 of the 20 international human rights treaties to which it was signatory. UNOA identified three basic human rights issues that required attention in Angola: the need to ensure respect for the human rights of internally displaced persons; the lack of the necessary government structures to ensure respect for human rights in areas recently captured from UNITA forces; and the continuing decline of basic socio-economic benefits for a substantial majority of the population.

Of a total population estimated at 12.6 million, 3.7 million were affected by the war, of which 1.6 million were internally displaced. Owing to increased guerrilla warfare activities at the beginning of 2000, internally displaced population numbers began increasing. The lack of security for humanitarian relief operations continued to constrain the work of the international community, confining the scope of humanitarian activities to areas inside and around the provincial capitals. Mine clearance, which had been curtailed since the conflict reignited, was important for any safe resumption of agricultural and commercial activities and for the eventual return of internally displaced persons to their homes in rural areas. In March, at the request of the Secretary-General, a delegation travelled to the provinces of Bié, Huambo and Uíge to determine challenges posed by internally displaced persons and the capacity of relief agencies to respond, and to assess gaps in the humanitarian response. Other needs assessment missions were also planned to review short-term requirements of vulnerable populations, the capacity of agencies to respond and additional resources needed in accessible locations. The Secretary-General noted that 25 per cent of the required $258 million for the 2000 inter-agency consolidated appeal for Angola was covered, but the majority of aid received was for food, while complementary sectors of intervention remained underfunded. Despite the constraints of the war situation, which obliged UN operational agencies to review their programmes and intervention strategies, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) continued to assist the Government to address the humanitarian and development crisis. Among other activities, UNDP, in March, organized a conference to define a national policy for social assistance.

The Secretary-General reiterated that UNITA clearly bore the primary responsibility for Angola's state of affairs. He observed that the Government had announced plans to re-establish political and military stability, confine the war to controlled areas and complete the extension of State administration throughout Angolan territory. It also planned to institute monetary stability, further economic development and establish humanitarian and social service assistance programmes for the civilian population. The United Nations would continue humanitarian relief and assistance in human rights capacity-building activities in Angola. The Secretary-General announced his intention to designate the head of UNOA and recommended that the Security Council continue the Office's activities for a further six-month period.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

On 13 April [meeting 4126], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1294(2000). The draft [S/2000/307] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 696(1991) of 30 May 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 1268(1999) of 15 October 1999,

Reaffirming also its view that a continued presence of the United Nations in Angola can contribute greatly to the promotion of peace, national reconciliation, human rights and regional security,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 11 April 2000,

1. Endorses the decision contained in paragraph 51 of the report of the Secretary-General to extend the mandate of the United Nations Office in Angola for a period of six months until 15 October 2000;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to implement the tasks of the United Nations Office in Angola as outlined in resolution 1268(1999);

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to provide every three months a report on developments in Angola, including his recommendations about additional measures the Council might consider to promote the peace process in Angola;

4. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (July). In a 12 July report [S/2000/678], submitted pursuant to resolution 1294(2000), the Secretary-General stated that despite the Government's efforts to consolidate its authority throughout Angola, the absence of dialogue continued to create an unstable political and military situation. UNITA continued its guerrilla activities, impeding people's movement in certain areas and causing an increase in the total numbers of internally displaced persons and refugees. In addition to an influx of refugees into neighbouring countries, particularly Namibia and Zambia, and the accompanying adverse socio-economic consequences, the conflict also caused an increase in tensions between Angola and Zambia. However, on 1 July, it was announced that the two countries had agreed to investigate charges of border violations and to create a permanent communication link between their regional military commanders and security chiefs in Moxico and Cuando Cubango provinces in Angola and in the north-western and western provinces in Zambia.

Internal efforts to promote dialogue for peace continued and, in April, a coalition of Angolan opposition political parties presented a list of proposals, "Agenda for Peace", to the Government. In May, the Secretary-General's Adviser for Special Assignments in Africa, Ibrahim Gambari (Nigeria), visited Angola to discuss the prospects for peace and the terms of reference of UNOA. With regard to the military situation, the report noted that government forces continued to be effective in reducing the conventional war capability of UNITA, which pursued guerrilla activities, particularly along the border with Zambia.

While the human rights situation remained grave, the Government had indicated it was prepared to recognize the existence of abuses and to develop regular procedures to redress them with the support of the international community and members of Angolan society. Meanwhile, the plight of children was particularly acute after the long years of conflict, and the Secretary-General suggested that, to increase the level of child protection, greater efforts should be made to refrain from targeting civilians, to secure access to vulnerable populations comprising women and children and to ensure the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former child combatants. The special needs of children who were victims of mine injuries and of internally displaced women and children should also be stressed. In addition, UNOA should continue its efforts to include child protection advisers as an integral part of its operations.

The humanitarian situation remained precarious, with more than 1 million persons relying on food distributions to survive and about 2.5 million receiving humanitarian assistance. The World Food Programme (WFP) was facing a possible breakdown in the food pipeline from the end of August and it was forced to cut the number of its beneficiaries. In other developments, a detailed plan of action for implementing the rapid assessment of critical needs was drafted and was expected to form the framework for humanitarian interventions during the second half of the year. It was also reported that humanitarian access to populations at risk increased as new locations came under government administration.

The Secretary-General again stated that UNITA was primarily responsible for the return to war in Angola because it refused to comply with key provisions of the Lusaka Protocol, in particular its failure to demilitarize its forces and to allow State administration to be extended throughout the country. Expressing deep concern regarding the protracted conflicts and absence of any meaningful attempt to reach a political settlement, the Secretary-General said his Adviser for Special Assignments in Africa would hold further talks with Angolan authorities. He announced that the UNOA head had been selected and he would inform the Council shortly of the appointment.

Communications (July/August). On 31 July [S/2000/760], the Secretary-General informed the Council that he had appointed Mussagy Jeichande (Mozambique) to be his Representative and Head of UNOA. On 2 August [S/2000/761], the Council President informed the Secretary-General that Council members took note of his decision.

Report of Secretary-General (October). In an October report [S/2000/977], submitted pursuant to Council resolution 1294(2000), the Secretary-General provided an update of developments in Angola, stating that the overall situation remained unstable. UNITA's continued guerrilla activities were exacerbating the already alarming humanitarian situation. In August, President dos Santos announced that he had been informed that some 10,000 UNITA soldiers had so far surrendered to the Government. Also in August, the Secretary-General's Adviser for Special Assignments in Africa visited Namibia and Zambia to consult with senior officials and UN offices there to ascertain the extent of the security, socio-economic and humanitarian problems arising from the Angolan war on the two neighbouring countries and make recommendations for responding to those problems. Debate continued on whether dialogue between the Government and UNITA should be resumed. It was felt that the Government was not heeding appeals from civil society, particularly the Church, for a dialogue that would include UNITA. In July, the Government indicated that UNITA should return to the peace process to complete its outstanding tasks under the Lusaka Protocol as the Government had already concluded its part of the agreement.

In July, the Angolan National Assembly approved the ratification of the 1997 Ottawa Convention [YUN 1997, p. 503] banning the production and use of landmines. In addition, the Government invited the United Nations to contribute to its efforts to meet its legal obligations to respect the human rights of all its citizens. In a related development, UNOA helped extend the work of Angola's first public interest litigation group to four provinces, in addition to Luanda.

The Secretary-General reported that the humanitarian situation in Angola remained serious and, as in previous months, conflict-related displacement continued with new movements occurring in 13 provinces. The total number of internally displaced persons had increased to more than 2.7 million persons by the end of August. Inflationary pressures in the economy and fluctuations in local labour and agricultural markets led to increasing destitution. However, in a positive development, the Government was relocating populations living in unsustainable camps and transit centres to new resettlement sites. Also, a large number of internally displaced persons living in sub-standard shelters were relocated to more suitable areas. Although the pace of resettlement initiatives increased during the reporting period, the majority of displaced populations did not yet have access to adequate agricultural land. In July and August, a campaign to distribute agricultural inputs for internally displaced persons with land was organized in keeping with the new WFP strategy, which aimed to improve targeting of the most vulnerable and to support transition activities through food-for-work and other programmes. In spite of other coordinated activities by the Ministry of Agriculture and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, food security of war-affected populations continued to be at risk because of persistent insecurity and displacement. To improve humanitarian coverage, other initiatives included the identification by the United Nations of newly administered areas in 13 provinces where security assessments were expected to be conducted during the upcoming months. The Government also finalized a national Plan of Emergency Action with UN agencies and NGOs, which included a new nationwide water and sanitation emergency programme and a multifaceted programme for protection of vulnerable groups.

The Secretary-General, concerned that the situation appeared to be entering a new phase of political and military impasse, said if the current trend continued the situation in Angola could worsen the security and humanitarian problems, especially in the border regions of Namibia and Zambia, and further threaten the peace and security of the entire subregion. He suggested that the quest for national reconciliation should be broad-based and seek to overcome the enmity and mistrust reinforced by hostility and violence. A genuine process of national reconciliation could be initiated and enhanced by building and developing, in partnership with civil society, the Government's institutional capacities for promoting and protecting human rights, providing justice and security, and improving the living conditions of the Angolan people.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend the mandate of UNOA for a further six-month period, until 15 April 2001.

Communications (October/November). On 13 October [S/2000/987], the Security Council President informed the Secretary-General that the Council had considered his report and concurred with the recommendation to extend UNOA's mandate until 15 April 2001.

By a 16 October note verbale [S/2000/998], Angola transmitted to the Council President a document entitled "The strategy of the Angolan Government against conflict diamonds and trade in illicit diamonds", in which it was stated that the Government believed that, as a result of measures already taken, "conflict diamonds" were no longer to be found in Angola.

On 7 November [S/2000/1082], the Secretary-General informed the Council President that he had decided to extend the appointment of Ibrahim Gambari as his Adviser for Special Assignments in Africa until 28 February 2002. Mr. Gambari's efforts with regard to Angola had led to improvements in the relationship between the Angolan Government and the United Nations.

Later developments. In late 2000 [S/2001/351], the Government of Angola was reported to be consolidating its military advantage over UNITA, while continuing to reaffirm the validity of the Lusaka Protocol. On 10 November, President dos Santos announced a general amnesty and declared that the war no longer constituted an obstacle to Angola's development. He subsequently announced the establishment of the Fund for Peace and National Reconciliation, intended to facilitate the social reintegration of those who abandoned war. On 31 December, he indicated that general elections would be held during the second half of 2002, provided that there was security, a new constitution and a new electoral law and the displaced population was resettled to permit an electoral census. UNITA reacted negatively to the amnesty proclamation and vowed to prevent the elections from taking place. On 13 November, its secretary-general stated that the Government had no legitimacy to grant the amnesty. Some opposition political parties and individual UNITA parliamentarians also agreed that there was a need to address the root causes of the conflict.

Sanctions

In February, the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 256] to monitor sanctions against UNITA submitted its annual report covering January to December 1999 [S/2000/83]. It noted that public awareness of the sanctions increased in 1999, and they seemed to have been more effective. The work of the Panel of Experts, established pursuant to resolution 1237(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 112], should render the sanctions more effective and further hamper UNITA from conducting military activities.

Report of Panel of Experts. In its final report [S/2000/203], the Panel of Experts on violations of Security Council sanctions against UNITA stated that it was clear to all concerned that the sanctions were ineffective. UNITA could still procure its war needs and sell its diamonds, its officials still travelled with little restriction and it continued to be active in international capitals through "unofficial" offices and representatives. Panel members had visited almost 30 countries and met with government officials, members of the diplomatic community, NGOs, police and intelligence sources, industry associations and commercial companies, journalists and others. They also conducted interviews with UNITA defectors during a visit to Luanda in January, when they received a large amount of detailed and valuable information. The Panel made recommendations with regard to preventing sanctions busting on arms and military equipment, petroleum and petroleum products, diamonds, UNITA finances and assets, and UNITA representation and travel abroad.

On 8 March [S/2000/200], Uganda transmitted to the Council President the record of a meeting held between Panel members and Ugandan government representatives regarding allegations that Uganda was collaborating with UNITA in contravention of the UN sanctions. In a 15 March letter [S/2000/225], Gabon requested further information on allegations that 150,000 litres of fuel were delivered to UNITA from Libreville. Also on 15 March [S/2000/228], Belgium discussed the omission from the Panel's report of action taken by Belgium in response to allegations of its involvement in illegal diamond trading. On 17 March [S/2000/230], Portugal objected to the reference in the report that it was regarded as a key country for UNITA in mobilizing political support, and a source of commercial and logistical support. A 22 March note verbale from Bulgaria [S/2000/240] informed the Council that it had established a special interdepartmental commission to investigate allegations against it. The commission's findings were conveyed to the Council in July [S/2000/680] and a decree was adopted on implementation of the sanctions [S/2000/721]. Burkina Faso informed the Council on 24 March [S/2000/249] that it had established an inter-ministerial committee to investigate allegations contained in the report. In addition, its security services had been instructed to take steps to strengthen existing measures for implementing the sanctions. In June, it presented a report on its review of measures taken to address the situation [S/2000/607]. The Government of Togo also established a commission of inquiry to consider allegations made against it and requested all information used by the Panel in its review [S/2000/256]; the report on its findings was presented to the Council in April [S/2000/326]. On 24 March [S/2000/252], Uganda denied allegations in the report, noting that it had only one international airport that was open to and used by many aircraft, making it impossible to conduct secret flights and refuelling exercises without being noticed. Rwanda, on 29 March [S/2000/283], transmitted its comments on the Panel's report.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

On 18 April [meeting 4129], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1295(2000). The draft [S/2000/323] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 864(1993) of 15 September 1993 and all subsequent relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 1127(1997) of 28 August 1997, 1173(1998) of 12 June 1998 and 1237(1999) of 7 May 1999,

Reaffirming also its commitment to preserve the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola,

Expressing its alarm at the impact of the continuing civil war on the civilian population of Angola,

Reiterating that the primary cause of the present crisis in Angola is the refusal of the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola, under the leadership of Mr. Jonas Savimbi, to comply with its obligations under the "Accordos de Paz", the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Security Council resolutions, and reiterating its demand that the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola comply immediately and without condition with those obligations, in particular the complete demilitarization of its forces and full co-operation in the immediate and unconditional extension of State administration throughout the territory of Angola,

Noting that the measures against the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola are intended to promote a political settlement to the conflict in Angola by requiring the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola to comply with the obligations that it undertook under the "Accordos de Paz" and the Lusaka Protocol, and by curtailing the ability of the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola to pursue its objectives by military means,

Emphasizing its concern at violations of the measures concerning arms and related materiel, petroleum and petroleum products, diamonds, funds and financial assets and travel and representation, imposed against the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola, contained in resolutions 864(1993), 1127(1997) and 1173(1998),

Recalling the provisions of resolution 864(1993), and expressing its concern at the reports of supply to the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola of military assistance, including weapons-related training and advice, and at the presence of foreign mercenaries,

Expressing its appreciation and strong support for the efforts of the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993) aimed at improving the effectiveness of the measures imposed against the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola,

Noting with appreciation the decisions taken by the Organization of African Unity and the Southern African Development Community in support of the implementation of the measures imposed against the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola,

Recalling the Final Communiqué of the meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held in New York on 23 September 1999, and noting the Final Document adopted by the Thirteenth Ministerial Conference of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Cartagena, Colombia, on 8 and 9 April 2000, in support of the implementation of the measures imposed against the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola,

A

Determining that the situation in Angola constitutes a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Stresses the obligation of all Member States to comply fully with the measures imposed against the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola contained in resolutions 864(1993), 1127(1997) and 1173(1998), and emphasizes that non-compliance with those measures constitutes a violation of the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Welcomes the report of the Panel of Experts established pursuant to resolution 1237(1999), and takes note of the conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to establish a monitoring mechanism composed of up to five experts, for a period of six months from its effective entry into operation, to collect additional relevant information and investigate relevant leads relating to any allegations of violations of the measures contained in resolutions 864(1993), 1127(1997) and 1173(1998), including any relevant leads initiated by the Panel of Experts, including through visits to relevant countries, and to report periodically to the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993), including by providing a written report by 18 October 2000, with a view to improving the implementation of the measures imposed against the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola, and further requests the Secretary-General, within thirty days of adoption of the present resolution and acting in consultation with the Committee, to appoint experts to serve on the monitoring mechanism;

4. Calls upon all States to cooperate with the monitoring mechanism in the discharge of its mandate;

5. Expresses its intention to review the situation regarding the implementation of the measures contained in resolutions 864(1993), 1127(1997) and 1173(1998) on the basis of information provided, inter alia, by the Panel of Experts, by States, including in particular any that are mentioned in the report of the Panel of Experts, and by the monitoring mechanism established by the present resolution, expresses its readiness, on the basis of the results of this review, to consider appropriate action in accordance with the Charter in relation to States it determines to have violated the measures contained in those resolutions, and establishes 18 November 2000 as the deadline for an initial decision in this regard;

6. Undertakes to consider, by 18 November 2000, the application of additional measures against the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola under Article 41 of the Charter and the development of additional tools to render more effective the existing measures imposed against the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola;

7. Welcomes the decision of several of the States referred to in the report of the Panel of Experts to establish interdepartmental commissions and other mechanisms to investigate the allegations contained in the report, invites those States to keep the Committee informed of the results of such investigations, invites other States referred to in the report to consider the allegations contained therein, takes note of the information provided to the Security Council by States in response to the conclusions and recommendations of the Panel of Experts, and requests the Committee to consider fully all such information, including, where appropriate, through discussion with representatives of the States concerned, and to invite the submission of additional information where appropriate;

B

With regard to the trade in arms,

8. Encourages all States to exercise all due diligence, in order to prevent the diversion or trans-shipment of weapons to unauthorized end-users or unauthorized destinations where such diversion or trans-shipment risks resulting in the violation of the measures contained in resolution 864(1993), including by requiring end-use documentation or equivalent measures before exports from their territories are allowed, and further encourages all States to ensure effective monitoring and regulation in the export of weapons, including by private arms brokers, where they do not already do so;

9. Invites States to consider the proposal to convene one or more conferences of representatives of countries that are manufacturers and, in particular, exporters of weapons for the purpose of developing proposals to stem the illicit flow of arms into Angola, calls for the provision of necessary financial support for such conferences by States, and urges that representatives of the States members of the Southern African Development Community be invited to participate in any such conference or conferences;

C

With regard to the trade in petroleum and petroleum products,

10. Encourages the convening of a conference of experts to devise a regime for curbing the illegal supply of petroleum and petroleum products into areas controlled by the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola, including physical inspection as well as the broader monitoring of petroleum supply in the area, and further encourages any such conference to focus on the role and capacity of the Southern African Development Community in the implementation of such a regime;

11. Invites the Southern African Development Community to consider the establishment of monitoring activities in the border areas adjacent to Angola for the purpose of reducing the opportunities for the smuggling of petroleum and petroleum products into areas under the control of the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola, including through the monitoring of fuel supplies and transfers thereof;

12. Also invites the Southern African Development Community to take the lead in establishing an information-exchange mechanism involving petroleum companies and governments to facilitate the flow of information regarding possible illegal diversions of fuel to the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola;

13. Further invites the Southern African Development Community to take the lead in carrying out chemical analysis of fuel samples obtained from petroleum suppliers in the region of the Community and, using the results, to create a database for the purpose of determining the sources of fuel obtained or captured from the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola;

14. Calls upon the Government of Angola to implement additional internal controls and inspection procedures with respect to the distribution of petroleum and petroleum products, for the purpose of enhancing the effectiveness of the measures contained in resolution 864(1993), and invites the Government of Angola to inform the Committee of the steps taken in this regard;

15. Calls upon all States to enforce strictly safety and control regulations relating to the transportation by air of fuel and other hazardous commodities, in particular in the area around Angola, urges States to develop such regulations where they do not exist already, and, in this regard, requests all States to provide relevant information to the International Air Transport Association, the International Civil Aviation Organization and the Committee;

D

With regard to the trade in diamonds,

16. Expresses its concern that illicit trade in diamonds constitutes a principal source of funding for the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola, encourages States hosting diamond markets to impose significant penalties for the possessing of rough diamonds imported in contravention of the measures contained in resolution 1173(1998), emphasizes, in this connection, that the implementation of the measures contained in that resolution requires an effective certificate-of-origin regime, welcomes the introduction by the Government of Angola of new control arrangements involving redesigned and reconcilable certificates of origin, and invites the Government of Angola to provide Member States with full details of the certificate-of-origin scheme and to brief the Committee on this scheme;

17. Welcomes the steps announced by the Government of Belgium, on 3 March 2000, in support of the more effective implementation of the measures contained in resolution 1173(1998), welcomes also the establishment by the Government of Belgium of an inter-ministerial task force to curb sanctions violations, further welcomes the measures taken by the Diamond High Council, in conjunction with the Government of Angola, to render sanctions more effective, invites the Government of Belgium and the Diamond High Council to continue to cooperate with the Committee to devise practical measures to limit access by the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola to the legitimate diamond market and welcomes their public affirmations in this regard, and further invites other States hosting diamond markets, as well as other States closely involved with the diamond industry, also to cooperate with the Committee to devise practical measures to the same end and to inform the Committee of measures taken in this regard;

18. Welcomes also the proposal that a meeting of experts be convened for the purpose of devising a system of controls to facilitate the implementation of the measures contained in resolution 1173(1998), including arrangements that would allow for increased transparency and accountability in the control of diamonds from their point of origin to the bourses, emphasizes that it is important that, in devising such controls, every effort be made to avoid inflicting collateral damage on the legitimate diamond trade, and welcomes the intention of the Republic of South Africa to host a relevant conference this year;

19. Calls upon relevant States to cooperate with the diamond industry to develop and implement more effective arrangements to ensure that members of the diamond industry worldwide abide by the measures contained in resolution 1173(1998), and to inform the Committee regarding progress in this regard;

E

With regard to funds and financial measures,

20. Encourages States to convene a conference of experts to explore possibilities to strengthen the implementation of the financial measures imposed against the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola contained in resolution 1173(1998);

21. Calls upon all States to work with financial institutions on their territory to develop procedures to facilitate the identification of funds and financial assets that may be subject to the measures contained in resolution 1173(1998) and the freezing of such assets;

F

With regard to measures relating to travel and representation,

22. Emphasizes the importance of States acting to prevent the circumvention on or from their territory of the measures contained in resolutions 864(1993), 1127(1997) and 1173(1998), and invites States to review the status of officials and representatives of the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola, as well as all adult members of their families, designated by the Committee pursuant to resolution 1127(1997) and believed to be residing on their territory, with a view to suspending or cancelling their travel documents, visas and residence permits in conformity with that resolution;

23. Calls upon States that have issued passports to officials of the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola and adult members of their families designated by the Committee pursuant to resolution 1127(1997) to cancel those passports in conformity with paragraph 4 (b) of that resolution and to report to the Committee on the status of their efforts in this regard;

24. Requests the Committee, in consultation with the Government of Angola, to update the list of officials of the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola and adult members of their immediate families who are subject to travel restrictions and to expand the information contained in that list, including date and place of birth and any known addresses, and further requests the Committee to consult relevant States, including the Government of Angola, regarding the possible expansion of that list, drawing on the information set out in paragraphs 140 to 154 of the report of the Panel of Experts;

G

With regard to additional steps,

25. Invites the Southern African Development Community to consider the introduction of measures to strengthen air traffic control systems in the sub-region for the purpose of detecting illegal flight activities across national borders, and further invites the Community to liaise with the International Civil Aviation Organization to consider the establishment of an air traffic regime for the control of regional air space;

26. Urges all States to make available to the Committee any information on the violation of the measures contained in resolutions 864(1993), 1127(1997) and 1173(1998);

27. Also urges all States, including those geographically close to Angola, to take immediate steps to enforce, strengthen or enact legislation making it a criminal offence under domestic law for their nationals or other individuals operating on their territory to violate the measures imposed by the Council against the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola, where they have not already done so, and to inform the Committee of the adoption of such measures, and invites States to report the results of all related investigations or prosecutions to the Committee;

28. Encourages States to inform the relevant professional associations and certification bodies of the measures contained in resolutions 864(1993), 1127(1997) and 1173(1998), to seek action by those bodies where those measures are violated, and to consult with such bodies with a view to improving the implementation of those measures;

29. Invites the Secretary-General to strengthen collaboration between the United Nations and regional and international organizations, including Interpol, that may be involved in monitoring or enforcing the implementation of the measures contained in resolutions 864(1993), 1127(1997) and 1173(1998);

30. Also invites the Secretary-General to develop an information package and media campaign designed to educate the public at large on the measures contained in resolutions 864(1993), 1127(1997) and 1173(1998);

31. Welcomes the appeal by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its seventieth ordinary session, held in Algiers from 8 to 10 July 1999, to all States members of the Organization of African Unity to work strenuously for the implementation of all Security Council resolutions, especially those relating to measures imposed against the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola, undertakes to convey the report of the Panel of Experts to the Chairman of the Organization of African Unity, and requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to transmit the report to the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity;

32. Underlines the important role played by the Southern African Development Community in the implementation of the measures contained in resolutions 864(1993), 1127(1997) and 1173(1998) and its determination to strengthen the implementation of the measures against the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola, invites the Community to make known to the Committee what assistance the Community requires in implementing the present and previous relevant resolutions, expresses its intention to initiate a dialogue with the Community with regard to the implementation of activities contained in the present resolution, strongly urges States and international organizations to consider the provision of financial and technical assistance to the Community in this regard, recalls the Final Communiqué of the Summit of the Heads of State or Government of the Southern African Development Community adopted at Grand Baie, Mauritius, on 14 September 1998, relating to the application of measures imposed against the União Nacional Para a Independência Total de Angola, undertakes to convey the report of the Panel of Experts to the Chairman of the Southern African Development Community, and requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to transmit the report to the Executive Secretary of the Southern African Development Community;

33. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications (May-July). Côte d'Ivoire, in a 3 May letter to the Security Council President [S/2000/379], said that it had long served as an intermediary to facilitate contacts between UNITA and the Angolan Government. However, following the signing of the Lusaka Protocol and the failure of UNITA to respect its provisions, Côte d'Ivoire had decided to freeze its relations with UNITA. The letter also contested allegations against Côte d'Ivoire contained in the Panel of Experts' report.

On 24 May [S/2000/480], Togo informed the Council that, as of 18 May, 56 Angolan nationals connected with UNITA had left Togo's territory, on instructions from its President. A subsequent note verbale from Angola [S/2000/484] stressed that the action taken by the Togolese Government clearly confirmed accounts in the report of Togolese involvement with UNITA. The action was therefore insufficient for Togo's redemption considering the degree of its involvement in the Angolan conflict.

Namibia, by a 27 July letter to the Council [S/2000/752], discussed allegations that significant quantities of UNITA diamonds were marketed through the country. On investigation, it had become obvious that Namibia had been used by certain individuals who had violated the sanctions without the Government's knowledge. Investigations into the matter would continue.

Monitoring mechanism. On 11 July [S/2000/677], the Secretary-General, referring to resolution 1295(2000), informed the Security Council of the appointment of five experts to serve on a monitoring mechanism for six months to collect additional relevant information and investigate leads relating to allegations of violations of the sanctions against UNITA.

A 25 October interim report of the Monitoring Mechanism on Angola Sanctions [S/2000/1026] stated that members had visited a number of African and European countries and had attended the World Diamond Congress in Belgium and the Southern African Regional Police Chiefs Cooperation Organization meeting in Malawi. The information it had received on the military situation suggested a weakening of UNITA's operational capabilities and it was generally accepted that the sanctions, combined with military factors, were hampering UNITA's capacity. During the second stage of its work, the Mechanism intended to concentrate on whether the cooperation it initially received could be translated into effective action to diminish UNITA's military capability. It would also develop proposals to enable strengthening of the sanctions and encourage a more targeted and focused approach for strategic monitoring.

In its final report [S/2000/1225 & Corr.1,2], the Mechanism described its approach and presented findings on several issues, including sanctions-busting on arms and military equipment in Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Romania, Togo, Ukraine and Zaire; UNITA representation and travel and residence of senior UNITA officials and their adult family members; the role of transport in the violation of the sanctions; and sanctions on diamond trading and financial assets. It also made recommendations on those issues and for maintaining the effectiveness of sanctions. Annexed to the report were lists of confiscated military materiel and equipment and of senior UNITA officials and immediate family members.

Report of Sanctions Committee. In its annual report covering the period from January to 28 December 2000 [S/2000/1255], the Sanctions Committee summarized its activities and noted that the Chairman had briefed the Council on 18 January on his visit to Angola earlier in the month. The purpose of that visit was to consult with the Government on worldwide application of the UNITA sanctions, to visit the areas and see the military equipment recently captured from UNITA and to meet with UNITA defectors or supporters who had been captured in the fighting. The report also provided Member States' responses to the Expert Panel's report and a summary of activities of the Monitoring Mechanism, and discussed implementation of resolution 1295(2000). The Committee stated that in 2000 it was clear that the measures against UNITA were successful in preventing it from pursuing its objectives through military means.

Financing of UN missions

In March [A/54/809], the Secretary-General presented the financial performance report of MONUA for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999. Expenditures for the period totalled $132,949,580 gross ($129,664,280 net), as compared with an appropriation of $133,099,080 gross ($128,876,680 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $149,000 gross ($787,600 net). The unencumbered balance resulted from reduced requirements under all categories of expenditure, due to the expiration of the mandate of MONUA on 26 February 1999, repatriation of military and civilian personnel and commencement of its technical liquidation. Unutilized resources were used to absorb unbudgeted additional requirements arising from implementation of the new contingent-owned equipment reimbursement procedures of eight troop contributors in the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM).

Also in March [A/54/812], the Secretary-General presented the revised liquidation budget of MONUA for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 and the cost estimates for continuing liquidation activities at United Nations Headquarters afterwards. The revised budget for the period amounted to $15,049,440 gross ($14,306,540 net), representing an increase of $7,607,900 gross, compared with the initial budget of MONUA for the same period. The increase was mainly attributable to the retention of military and civilian personnel in the mission area because liquidation activities were extended beyond the originally envisaged deadline. For the 2000/01 period, $143,500 gross ($130,500 net) was requested for eight work-months of staff activities at Headquarters.

In an April report [A/54/831], ACABQ recommended that the General Assembly take note of the unencumbered balance of $149,500 gross and additional requirements of $787,600 net for MONUA for 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, but defer action until the review of the final performance information of UNAVEM and MONUA was completed.

Procurement procedures

In regard to General Assembly resolution 54/17 A [YUN 1999, p. 117], the Secretary-General submitted a May report [A/54/866] containing additional information on measures being taken to improve procurement activities in the field and commenting on the outcome of the procurement audits in Angola [YUN 1998, p. 123]. The Secretary-General stated that the sharp increase in the number and complexity of peacekeeping operations in the early 1990s, which caught the UN procurement system unprepared to meet the new challenges, coupled with a procurement system designed in the early days of the Organization, had contributed to the problems experienced in Angola. While the audits and investigations did not reveal severe misconduct as was originally feared, the Secretariat recognized the importance of addressing procedural and systemic weaknesses to prevent misuse of UN resources.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 June [meeting 98], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/504/Add.1], adopted resolution 54/17 B without vote [agenda item 129].

Financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission and the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Having considered also the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the investigation into the 6.9 million United States dollars procurement of quartering area goods in the United Nations Angola Verification Mission,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 626 (1988) of 20 December 1988, by which the Council established the United Nations Angola Verification Mission, 696(1991) of 30 May 1991, by which the Council decided to entrust a new mandate to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (thenceforth called the United Nations Angola Verification Mission II), 976(1995) of 8 February 1995, by which the Council authorized the establishment of a peacekeeping operation (thenceforth called the United Nations Angola Verification Mission III), 1118(1997) of 30 June 1997, by which the Council decided to establish, as from 1 July 1997, the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola, and its subsequent resolutions, the latest of which was resolution 1229(1999) of 26 February 1999,

Recalling its resolution 43/231 of 16 February 1989 on the financing of the Verification Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, and resolution 53/228 of 8 June 1999 on the financing of the Observer Mission,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observer Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observer Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Observer Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observer Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to meet its outstanding liabilities,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission and the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola as at 30 April 2000, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 90.6 million United States dollars, representing 7 per cent of the total assessed contributions, notes that some 40 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Verification Mission and the Observer Mission in full and on time;

5. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

6. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

7. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

8. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

9. Takes note of the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the investigation into the 6.9 million dollars procurement of quartering area goods in the United Nations Angola Verification Mission;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the liquidation of the Observer Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

11. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola the amount of 7,607,900 dollars gross (7,222,700 dollars net) for the liquidation of the Observer Mission for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, in addition to the amount of 7,441,540 dollars gross (7,083,840 dollars net) already appropriated under the terms of General Assembly resolution 53/228 and inclusive of the amount of 5,274,800 dollars gross (4,875,100 dollars net) authorized by the Advisory Committee under the terms of section IV of Assembly resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994;

12. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, taking into account the amount of 7,441,540 dollars gross (7,083,840 dollars net) already apportioned under the terms of its resolution 53/228, to apportion among Member States the additional amount of 7,607,900 dollars gross (7,222,700 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, 50/451 B of 23 December 1995 and 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999;

their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated additional staff assessment income of 385,200 dollars approved for the Observer Mission for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000;

14. Decides to appropriate the amount of 151,916 dollars gross (137,671 dollars net) for the liquidation of the Observer Mission for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, inclusive of the amount of 7,278 dollars gross (6,159 dollars net) for the support account for peacekeeping operations and the amount of 1,138 dollars gross (1,012 dollars net) for the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, and decides also that no action shall be taken on the apportionment of the said amounts at this stage;

15. Takes note of the unencumbered balance of 149,500 dollars gross and of the additional requirements of 787,600 dollars net in respect of the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, and decides to defer action thereon until its review of the final performance information on the Verification Mission and the Observer Mission;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to present a more detailed explanation of the amounts required for reimbursement of contingent-owned equipment, including the impact of the retroactive application of the new procedures for contingent-owned equipment for the Verification Mission and the Observer Mission, to be provided no later than at its resumed fifty-fifth session;

17. Decides to keep under review the amounts budgeted for provision for reimbursement of contingent-owned equipment;

18. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

19. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission and the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola".

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the financing of UNAVEM and MONUA remained for consideration at its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458) and that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the item at that session (decision 55/455).

Central African Republic

The United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic (MINURCA) concluded successfully in February 2000. Established in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 134], the Mission had contributed much towards the restoration of peace and security in the Central African Republic and the creation of conditions conducive to holding national legislative and presidential elections, restructuring the security forces, training the national police and launching major economic and social reforms. In order to remain involved in addressing the challenges facing the new Government, the United Nations established the Peace-Building Support Office (BONUCA) to take over from MINURCA. With UN support, the Government of the Central African Republic continued its efforts to implement the 1997 Bangui Agreements [YUN 1997, p. 91], an arrangement to end a crisis stemming from a 1996 army rebellion that had resulted in ex-rebels and militia retaining a large supply of weapons. The Bangui Agreements were followed by and supplemented with the 1998 National Reconciliation Pact [YUN 1998, p. 133].

The Secretary-General described the situation in the Central African Republic as dominated by the confrontational approach between the ruling party and the numerous opposition parties. In addition to the lack of dialogue, the Government was faced with dire economic circumstances already strained by the oil crisis and inflation.

Political situation and MINURCA withdrawal

Political developments in late 1999 and early 2000 were dominated by the investiture of President Ange-Félix Patassé to a second term as the head of State [YUN 1999, p. 125] and by the formation of the new Government under the reappointed Prime Minister, Anicet Georges Dologuélé.

Report of Secretary-General. As requested in Security Council resolution 1271 (1999) [YUN 1999, p. 127], the Secretary-General on 14 January reported on MINURCA [S/2000/24], his ninth report on the Mission. Following the presidential election of 19 September 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 125], the Government took steps towards reintegrating some ex-mutineers into the Armed Forces, as called for in the Bangui Agreements. Other elements of the Agreements, such as the modification of some procedures under the Penal Code, the regulation of access to the University of Bangui, the revision of certain articles in the Constitution and the negotiation of a social pact with the trade unions, had not yet been implemented. A number of provisions of the National Reconciliation Pact had been implemented, including the independence of the judiciary and the privatization of some public services (energy and water supply and banking).

The military and security situation in Bangui and the environs remained relatively calm at the beginning of 2000. MINURCA, which as at 6 January comprised 815 troops and civilian police observers, was in the process of a phased withdrawal and was making the transition from peacekeeping to the post-conflict peace-building phase to be taken over by BONUCA. The Mission coordinated its withdrawal action with the Central African authorities in order to ensure a progressive transfer of its security functions to government security and police forces, and the Central African gendarmerie, police and armed forces began to take over those duties. Four long-awaited bills on the restructuring of the Armed Forces were promulgated and the Government began to take measures for their implementation. With regard to the statutory functions of the Special Force for the Defence of the Republican Institutions (FORSDIR), a decree was issued indicating that the Force would be constituted by drawing from various sections of the Armed Forces and would be restricted to the defence of republican institutions; its command would remain within the purview of the Chief of Staff of the Central African Armed Forces. Additional steps were needed in order that FORSDIR be truly restricted to the duties ascribed to the security forces under the Constitution.

The Secretary-General observed that, by successfully conducting two national elections and the ongoing reforms, the people and Government of the Central African Republic had demonstrated their commitment to democracy and peaceful development. What remained to be done was the restructuring of the security and armed forces. The sizeable number of Central African police and gendarmes who had been trained by MINURCA still lacked the resources to ensure security in the country. At the same time, the Central African Republic remained vulnerable to the volatile situation in the subregion, in particular the neighbouring DRC (see p. 119). Security concerns in Bangui had decreased somewhat following the voluntary repatriation of military elements from the DRC and the relocation of refugees to rural sites. Some 50,000 refugees from neighbouring States remained in the Central African Republic and required international support. As the Government had emphasized, the crisis in the Central African Republic was rooted, to a considerable extent, in the poverty and economic deterioration of the country.

Communication. The President of Chad, on 22 February [S/2000/145], informed the Security Council of his concern at the withdrawal of MINURCA. While welcoming the return of peace to the Central African Republic, he warned that certain institutions important to ensuring peace, security and stability had not been put in place, particularly the army, which had not been restructured. For that reason, African regional and subregional organizations felt the withdrawal was premature, particularly as instability existed in the subregion, characterized by the continuing war in the DRC and in southern Sudan, and the fragility of the political situation in the Republic of the Congo, all neighbouring countries of the Central African Republic. In his threefold capacity as President of the UN Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa, President of the Central African Economic and Monetary Community and President of the Community of Sahelo-Saharan States, he requested the Council to review the political and security situation in the Central African Republic with a view to extending the MINURCA mandate.

Establishment of BONUCA

MINURCA gradually withdrew from the Central African Republic during the last month of 1999 and the first months of 2000. The United Nations Peace-Building Support Office in the Central African Republic (BONUCA) took over from MINURCA on 15 February to provide assistance in the peace-building effort. The establishment of the Office had been proposed by the Secretary-General in December 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 128].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 10 February [meeting 4101], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/5 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 14 January 2000 submitted in accordance with resolution 1271 (1999) of 22 October 1999.

The Council commends the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the contribution they have made to the restoration of peace and security in the Central African Republic, and for their important and tangible support for the holding of free and fair legislative and presidential elections, the restructuring of the security forces, the training of the police force and the launching of vital reforms in the political, social and economic fields in the Central African Republic. The Council expresses its thanks to all the countries that took part in and contributed to the success of the Mission, particularly the troop-contributing countries.

The Council recognizes the significant progress made by the Government of the Central African Republic in implementing the Bangui Agreements and the National Reconciliation Pact, which are the foundations of peace and stability in the country.

The Council strongly encourages the Government of the Central African Republic to do all it can to build on the progress made while the Inter-African Mission to Monitor the Implementation of the Bangui Agreements and the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic were present in the country, and to work with determination to strengthen democratic institutions, broaden the scope of reconciliation and national unity and promote economic reform and recovery. The Council urges the Government of the Central African Republic to continue to conform to the requirements of the programmes for economic reform and financial consolidation agreed upon with the international financial institutions. The Council calls upon the members of the international community and upon bilateral and multilateral donors in particular to give their active support to the efforts being made to this end by the Government of the Central African Republic. The Council wishes to stress the importance of providing international assistance to the refugees and displaced persons in the Central African Republic and the other countries of the region in order to contribute to regional stability.

The Council welcomes the promulgation by the Central African authorities of three laws on the restructuring of the armed forces and the decrees issued by the Government so that these laws can be implemented. The Council encourages the Central African authorities actively to prepare and to submit, with the help of the United Nations, specific plans for the holding of a meeting in New York to mobilize the financial and other resources necessary for the effective implementation of the programme for the restructuring of the Central African Armed Forces, and the demobilization and reintegration programme. The Council calls upon the members of the international community to support these programmes.

The Council welcomes in particular the decision by the Government of the Central African Republic to disband the Special Force for the Defence of the Republican Institutions, and notes with satisfaction that the Force will be replaced by a unit fully integrated in the national security forces, under the command of the Chief of Staff of the Central African Armed Forces, and that its mission will be strictly limited to protecting State authorities at the highest level.

The Council also welcomes the decision by the Secretary-General, which has been accepted by the Government of the Central African Republic, to establish, for an initial period of one year, beginning on 15 February 2000, the United Nations Peace-Building Support Office in the Central African Republic, headed by a representative of the Secretary-General, and encourages the Central African authorities and the Office to work closely together. The Council notes with satisfaction that the principal mission of the Office will be to support the efforts of the Government to consolidate peace and national reconciliation, strengthen democratic institutions and facilitate the mobilization at the international level of political support and resources for national reconstruction and economic recovery in the Central African Republic, and that the Office is also tasked with monitoring developments in, and promoting public awareness of, human rights issues.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep it regularly informed of the activities of the Office, the situation in the Central African Republic and, in particular, the progress achieved in political, social and economic reforms, and to submit a report to the Council by 30 June 2000 and every six months thereafter.

The Secretary-General informed the Security Council on 26 April [S/2000/366] that BONUCA was established on 15 February with an initial mandate of one year and operational under an officer-in-charge. Following consultations with the Government of the Central African Republic, he intended to appoint Cheikh Tidiane Sy (Senegal), currently his Representative in Burundi, as his Representative in the Central African Republic and head of BONUCA. The Council took note of the Secretary-General's intention on 1 May [S/2000/367].

Report of Secretary-General. In response to the Council's request (see above), the Secretary-General reported on 29 June on the situation in the Central African Republic and on BONUCA activities [S/2000/639]. The primary purpose of the Office was to support the Government's efforts to consolidate peace and national reconciliation, strengthen democratic institutions and facilitate the mobilization of international political support and resources for national reconstruction and economic recovery. The Office was also expected to promote public awareness of human rights issues and monitor developments in that field.

The political situation had been dominated by the challenge to the Government of Prime Minister Dologuélé. The ruling Movement for the Liberation of the Central African People (MLPC) expressed its dissatisfaction to President Patassé at the distribution of cabinet posts and particularly objected to the selection of Mr. Dologuélé as Prime Minister. The Government was also involved in major financial scandals. The political situation appeared to improve with the nomination of additional MLPC members to the Cabinet and the launching of a government investigation into the financial scandals. However, the suspended jail sentences and financial penalties imposed on two journalists revived tensions between the Government and the opposition.

During his visit to the Central African Republic on 30 April and 1 May, the Secretary-General met with President Patassé, Prime Minister Dologuélé and members of the Government, as well as with members of the Bureau of the National Assembly.

Implementation of the Bangui Agreements and the National Reconciliation Pact was facilitated during the reporting period: two ex-mutineers were rehabilitated and appointed to key government positions; the revision of the Electoral Code was completed; the Electoral Independent and Mixed Commission was strengthened with a control organ to further assure its transparency and credibility; and the Government institutionalized the payment of pension allowances to former heads of State, as provided under the Bangui Agreements. It was agreed that a general amnesty would be granted to people who had been identified by a parliamentary audit as having embezzled public funds and who were recommended for appropriate sanctions.

A disquieting development was the increase in reports of extrajudicial killings and summary executions. In May, a special anti-crime police squad reportedly executed eight alleged armed robbery suspects without due process. The Secretary-General suggested that an accelerated rehabilitation of local prisons and rejuvenation of a credible judicial system to permit secure detention of criminals awaiting arraignment could help eliminate the recourse to summary executions and arbitrary detentions. A short training session, co-sponsored by BONUCA and the Ministry of Defence, was held for 50 police officers, 50 gendarmes and 50 armed forces officers, to acquaint them with ways to uphold international human rights law (Bangui, 3-19 May).

The military and security situation in the Central African Republic had remained relatively calm since the transfer of security functions from MINURCA to the Government. As part of the military reforms, FORSDIR was dissolved and replaced by a Special Unit in charge of Presidential Security (UPS), under the authority of the Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces. Due to lack of resources, UPS had been called on to undertake law-and-order tasks that would normally fall outside the scope of its mandate. An increasingly dangerous situation was being caused by armed bandits' attacks, which disrupted the movement of people and goods both within the country and on roads to neighbouring countries. Scores of people had been killed by such bandits.

With regard to the economic situation, improvements had taken place in the area of revenue generation, which showed an increase of almost 20 per cent over the previous year, largely attributable to the Government's fiscal reforms. A joint IMF/World Bank mission visited the Central African Republic in February/March to assess the country's economic performance since an earlier visit in November 1999. Salaries had been paid to civil servants without interruption since March 1999. However, there was a need for the Government to control expenditures. Following recent scandals in State corporations, the Government had stressed its commitment to fight corruption and mismanagement. At the same time, the Government was facing new difficulties with an unforeseen fuel supply problem. The United Nations organized a donors' conference (New York, 15-16 May) to mobilize funds to assist the Government in security and development projects; pledges totalling $38 million were made.

Extension of BONUCA mandate. Following consultations with the Government of the Central African Republic, the Secretary-General proposed to the Security Council on 28 September [S/2000/943] that the mandate of BONUCA be extended until 31 December 2001. The initial mandate was due to expire on 14 February 2001. In the light of the difficult situation in the country and the climate of instability in the subregion, the extension would allow the Office to continue to support the efforts of the Government to consolidate peace and national reconciliation and to strengthen democratic institutions and the rule of law. The Council, on 3 October [S/2000/944], took note of the Secretary-General's proposal.

Later developments. The political situation in the Central African Republic in late 2000 was dominated by tension between the ruling party and the opposition [S/2001/35]. The Government had not engaged in a dialogue with the opposition, and the opposition tended to adopt a confrontational approach in its activities and was attempting to seize the power it was unable to win through the ballot box. Dissension within the ruling MLPC also had a negative impact on the political landscape. The situation was aggravated by a strike of civil service workers that the opposition was trying to exploit for political ends. In June, President Patassé agreed in principle to hold a meeting with political stakeholders and other key national players; however, he did not do so during the year, stating that no constructive dialogue was possible with political opponents who were calling for his resignation. Meanwhile, the opposition, with the exception of former President David Dacko, rejected the notion of a national conference or a new forum, claiming that the conclusions of any such event would not be implemented. On 19 December, the 15 opposition parties attempted to hold a public rally in an outdoor stadium in Bangui, in defiance of a government ban announced the previous evening because of the tense social climate. When the organizers went ahead with the rally, security forces dispersed the crowd and detained 73 persons. Following that incident, the opposition deputies boycotted parliament meetings until its closure on 29 December.

The social situation, already strained by the oil crisis, was aggravated by unpaid arrears of wages (up to 30 months). Civil servants had frequently been on strike since October. As a result, the 2000/01 school year had not begun by the end of 2000. The human rights situation showed some improvement with a reduction in summary and extrajudicial executions. BONUCA and the Government collaborated in training 300 law enforcement officers in human rights and humanitarian law, and a training workshop was organized in December for NGOs for the promotion of human rights. However, another form of human rights violation had appeared in the Central African Republic—"neighbourhood justice". That type of popular justice had become commonplace, particularly in Bangui, where victims were often beaten to death. Concerns were also raised about the conditions of prisoners.

The security situation was relatively calm. Since the murder on 20 August of the Ambassador of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya by a group of armed individuals, no further acts of a serious nature had been reported. Incidents of hold-ups, armed robbery and illegal roadblocks were reported, especially in the countryside. In order to strengthen law enforcement capacities, BONUCA organized civilian police training courses. Disarmament efforts continued and, by the end of the year, 95 per cent of the heavy weapons that had been in circulation since the mutinies of 1996 and 1997 had been recovered, as well as 65 per cent of light weapons. Illicit circulation of new weapons remained a concern. The process of restructuring the defence and security forces was continuing, but due to lack of financial resources only limited progress had been made in the demobilization and reintegration programme.

The overall economic situation worsened as a result of the continuing fuel crisis, and inflation surged while internal and external debt accumulated. A joint World Bank/IMF mission visited the country in October to undertake another assessment of the economy. Later, the World Bank approved a partial waiver of the conditions attached to the release of the $5 million second tranche of the fiscal consolidation credit.

Within the region, fighting in the DRC had caused a large number of refugees to flee to border towns in the Central African Republic. The number of refugees, most of them in makeshift camps, reached a peak of 10,000 in July and August, but declined to approximately 8,000 by December.

In the light of the situation, the Secretary-General sent Amara Essy, the former Foreign Minister of Côte d'Ivoire, as his Special Envoy to assess the multidimensional impact of the conflict in the DRC on the Central African Republic and the Republic of the Congo, in particular its humanitarian, economic, social and security implications. It was clear, however, that a solution to instability in the subregion depended on the restoration of peace in the DRC.

Financing of MINURCA and BONUCA

In April, the Secretary-General presented the financial performance report of MINURCA for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 [A/54/851]. The General Assembly, by resolution 53/238 [YUN 1999, p. 129], had appropriated $63,415,650 gross ($62,230,050 net) for that period, excluding voluntary contributions in kind. Expenditure for the period totalled $60,221,750 gross ($58,991,550 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $3,193,900 gross ($3,238,500 net). The unencumbered balance resulted mainly from the lower deployment levels of military and civilian personnel and reduced operational requirements under premises/accommodation, air operations and other equipment.

In a May report on MINURCA financing [A/54/857], the Secretary-General presented the revised budget for 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, including requirements for the Mission's liquidation and the cost estimates for the continuation of the liquidation activities in New York thereafter. The revised 1999-2000 budget amounted to $41,098,075 gross ($40,069,275 net), exclusive of budgeted voluntary contributions in kind of $736,300, and represented an increase of $7,730,200 in gross terms compared with the initial budget. The increase was attributable to additional requirements for the extension of the Mission's mandate until 15 February 2000 and the consequential retention of military and civilian personnel and logistical support beyond the original deadlines. Of the total revised budget, personnel costs accounted for 75 per cent of the budget. With regard to the 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 period, provision of $115,800 gross ($102,800 net) was requested for six work-months of staff activities at UN Headquarters and for the liquidation audit. The report proposed that the Assembly appropriate and assess the additional amount of $7,730,200 gross for the 1999/2000 period, inclusive of the commitment authority of $6,701,900 granted by ACABQ. It also suggested that the Assembly appropriate and assess the amount of $115,800 gross for the 2000/01 period.

Having considered the Secretary-General's two reports on MINURCA financing, ACABQ, in a May report [A/54/865], recommended that the unencumbered balance for the 1998/99 period ($3,193,900 gross ($3,238,500 net)) be credited to Member States in a manner to be decided by the Assembly. Regarding the revised budget for the 1999/2000 period, it recommended that the Assembly appropriate and assess the additional amount of $7,730,200 gross ($7,496,600 net), inclusive of the commitment authority already granted. ACABQ also recommended that the Assembly appropriate $115,800 gross ($102,800 net) for the 2000/01 period. Due to the cash position of the Mission account, the Committee did not believe that an assessment in that case was necessary at that time.

The Secretary-General, in a March report to the Fifth Committee [A/C.5/54/52], responded to an Assembly request made in resolution 54/250 A [YUN 1999, p. 1303] dealing with a budget for special political missions. The report contained proposed resource requirements of two political missions whose mandates were recently approved, one of which was BONUCA. The estimated requirements for BONUCA from 15 February 2000 to 14 February 2001 totalled $3,431,300.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 June [meeting 98], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/908], adopted resolution 54/277 without vote [agenda item 149].

Financing of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1159(1998) of 27 March 1998, by which the Council decided to establish the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission, the latest of which was resolution 1271(1999) of 22 October 1999,

Recalling its resolution 52/249 of 26 June 1998 on the financing of the Mission and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 53/238 of 8 June 1999,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the account of the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to meet its outstanding liabilities,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic as at 30 April 2000, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 36.6 million United States dollars, representing 32 per cent of the total assessed contributions, notes that some 41 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

5. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

6. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

7. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

8. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the liquidation of the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

10. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic the amount of 7,730,200 dollars gross (7,496,600 dollars net) for the maintenance and liquidation of the Mission for the period ending 30 June 2000, in addition to the amount of 33,367,875 dollars gross (32,572,675 dollars net) already appropriated under the terms of General Assembly resolution 53/238 and inclusive of an amount of 6,701,900 dollars gross and net authorized by the Advisory Committee under the terms of section IV of Assembly resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994;

ber 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, 50/451 B of 23 December 1995 and 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999;

12. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 11 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated additional staff assessment income of 233,600 dollars approved for the Mission for the period ending 30 June 2000;

13. Decides to appropriate the amount of 119,726 dollars gross (106,147 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, for the continuation of activities relating to the liquidation of the Mission, inclusive of the amount of 3,396 dollars gross (2,874 dollars net) for the support account for peacekeeping operations and the amount of 530 dollars gross (473 dollars net) for the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, and decides also that no action be taken on the apportionment of the said amount at this stage;

14. Decides also that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, there shall be set off against their apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 11 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 3,193,900 dollars gross (3,238,500 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1999;

15. Decides further that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 3,193,900 dollars gross (3,238,500 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1999 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

16. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic".

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on MINURCA financing would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458) and that the Fifth Committee would continue to consider the item at that session (decision 55/455).

the year ended on a more hopeful note when the two countries signed a Peace Agreement that allowed the expansion of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE), which was established in July.

In 1999, Eritrea and Ethiopia had agreed to settle their conflict through restoration of the status quo ante as of 6 May 1998, when hostilities broke out, and delimitation and demarcation of their entire border with the help of the United Nations; they had also agreed on the sequence of mutual withdrawal from occupied territories in order to return to the status quo ante. Ethiopia had accepted those proposals, which were contained in the Framework Agreement put forward by OAU in November 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 149], and Eritrea indicated its acceptance of the terms in February 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 134]. However, the text remained unsigned and OAU continued its mediation efforts in 2000.

By the end of May 2000, Ethiopian forces had made major advances and the Security Council called for an arms embargo against both countries. The two Governments resumed proximity talks under OAU auspices. A ceasefire agreement was signed on 18 June, by which the two countries committed themselves to seeking a UN peacekeeping mission to monitor the ceasefire, the re-deployment of Ethiopian forces to their earlier positions and the establishment of a temporary security zone between the two sides. Having received requests from Ethiopia and Eritrea, the Council, on 31 July, established UNMEE in anticipation of a future peacekeeping operation. The Secretary-General, in August, put forward proposals for a peacekeeping operation with up to 4,200 personnel, and the Council authorized the expansion of the Mission to that size on 15 September.

On 12 December, Eritrea and Ethiopia signed a Peace Agreement in Algiers that provided for the two parties to terminate hostilities, respect the provisions of the earlier agreement and release prisoners of war. They also agreed to an investigation to determine the origins of the conflict and to establish a neutral boundary commission to demarcate the border. By the end of the year, the agreement appeared to be holding and the United Nations began accelerating the expansion of the peacekeeping mission.

Eritrea-Ethiopia

The border dispute between Eritrea and Ethiopia increased in intensity in May with the resumption of large-scale hostilities. However,

Border dispute

The border dispute between Eritrea and Ethiopia, which began in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 145] and flared into a full-scale war in 1999, continued in early 2000. By May, large-scale hostilities were taking place along the border. Peace initiatives were carried out by the Secretary-General and his representatives, the current OAU Chairman, President Abdelaziz Bouteflika of Algeria, and others. OAU held proximity talks with the two parties based on the Framework Agreement and the Modalities for Implementation, and work continued on a third document, the Technical Arrangements.

Communications. In early 2000, Eritrea and Ethiopia, in letters to the Security Council, exchanged charges of aggression and of insincerity and intransigence in mediation efforts. Ethiopia, in letters of 6 and 22 March, 7 and 27 April and 11 and 12 May [S/2000/185, S/2000/241, S/2000/296, S/2000/356, S/2000/422, S/2000/421], claimed that Eritrea was committing aggression against it, while Ethiopia was committed to the peace process. Ethiopia had accepted the Framework Agreement and the modalities for its implementation, but had found some problems with the implementation plan's Technical Arrangements; meanwhile, Eritrea was engaged in posturing and in a game of brinkmanship. In Ethiopia's view, the peace process was in trouble due to the intransigence of the Eritrean regime and its reluctance to return to the status quo ante. The issue, according to Ethiopia, was not a border dispute but a question of aggression by Eritrea against another country. Ethiopia reviewed the events of the dispute and said that its bottom line for peace was the restoration of the status quo ante; it called on the Council to assist in stopping the war. Eritrea denied the allegations of aggression and put forward its position on 23 March and 5 May [S/2000/247, S/2000/389]. Regarding the status of the OAU negotiations, Eritrea claimed that the Ethiopian ruling party was blocking progress by refusing to agree to the Technical Arrangements. Annexed to the 5 May letter were Eritrea's proposals submitted to OAU for the April/May proximity talks (see below).

Eritrea, on 23 February [A/54/770-S/2000/161], transmitted to the Secretary-General copies of the case and supplemental application it had made to the International Court of Justice concerning the dispute with Ethiopia.

Germany, on 13 April [S/2000/312], warned of a pending tragedy in the Horn of Africa due to the looming natural disaster compounded by long-standing armed conflicts. It suggested that the Security Council appeal to Ethiopia and Eritrea to avoid any military conflict and request all countries to end the sale of arms in the region.

Mediation efforts

OAU proximity talks

The OAU proximity talks held in Algiers from 29 April to 5 May concluded unsuccessfully, owing to disagreements between the parties over whether the Framework Agreement, the Modalities for Implementation and a ceasefire agreement should be signed prior to the finalization of consolidated technical arrangements. In a 5 May communiqué on the talks [A/54/863, S/2000/394], the OAU Chairman, Abdelaziz Bouteflika, stated that the aim of the indirect talks was to enable the two parties to reach an agreement on consolidated technical arrangements that would lead to the implementation of the plan for a settlement as contained in the Framework Agreement and the Modalities accepted by the two parties and endorsed by the OAU summit in July 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 136]. Recapitulating the events prior to the talks, the communiqué outlined the points of convergence and said that substantive talks could not take place because Eritrea called for the prior signing of the Framework Agreement, the Modalities and a ceasefire agreement, while Ethiopia maintained its July 1999 position, namely, that those documents could not be signed until the technical arrangements had been finalized. All efforts by the Special Envoy of the OAU Chairman, with the support of the representatives of the United States and the EU, failed to change those positions. As a result, the talks ended in an impasse.

The EU Presidency, in a 10 May statement [S/2000/437], expressed support for the OAU efforts and called on the Governments of Ethiopia and Eritrea to enter immediately and without preconditions into further negotiations and to refrain from military action.

Security Council mission

Concerned by the ongoing conflict between Eritrea and Ethiopia, the Security Council, on 7 May [S/2000/392], authorized its special mission to the DRC (see p. 127) to visit those two countries on 9 and 10 May.

The special mission to Eritrea and Ethiopia, in a report to the Council [S/2000/413], warned that the two sides were on the verge of resuming a senseless war, despite progress achieved over time by the OAU negotiations. Those negotiations had produced agreements and drafts on a ceasefire, withdrawal, interim arrangements and arbitration and final demarcation of the disputed territory. The final elements of the technical arrangements to be agreed upon represented a small proportion of the whole and could be resolved by negotiations. However, Ethiopia continued to accuse Eritrea of stringing out negotiations to avoid redressing its offensive of May 1998, while Eritrea accused Ethiopia of actively holding to the option of resuming the conflict while negotiations continued.

The special mission tried to find a mechanism to get past that blockage without going into the details of the OAU negotiations. That mechanism took the form of a draft Security Council resolution calling for proximity talks to resume and insisting that the parties refrain from the use of force.

Renewed hostilities

Eritrea, in a 12 May letter to the Council [S/2000/420], stated that Ethiopia had resumed its war of aggression against Eritrea by launching a large-scale offensive. Eritrea claimed that Ethiopia had frustrated the peace process by reneging on its commitments and rejecting the technical arrangements after seven months of stalling. Ethiopia's resort to force was in violation of the OAU Framework Agreement and Modalities. Therefore, Eritrea called on the Council to condemn Ethiopia's resumption of the war and support Eritrea's right to self-defence.

Also on 12 May [A/54/867-S/2000/427], the OAU Chairman forwarded to the Secretary-General and the Security Council a communiqué expressing concern at the resumption of fighting between Ethiopia and Eritrea. At that time, the two parties' acceptance of the Framework Agreement and the Modalities had aroused hope that there would be a settlement of the dispute, he said. Although those documents had not been implemented, there were points of convergence between the two parties as to the process for implementing the peace plan. Despite an appeal to both sides to show restraint and to continue the talks, the use of force had replaced dialogue and negotiation. In view of those developments, the Chairman appealed to the two Governments to end the hostilities immediately and unconditionally and to the international community to urge an immediate cessation of the fighting so that OAU could pursue its peace effort.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 12 May [meeting 442], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1297(2000). The draft [S/2000/419] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1177(1998) of 26 June 1998, 1226(1999) of 29 January 1999 and 1227(1999) of 10 February 1999,

Deeply disturbed by the outbreak of renewed fighting between Eritrea and Ethiopia,

Stressing the need for both parties to achieve a peaceful resolution of the conflict,

Reaffirming the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Eritrea and Ethiopia,

Expressing its strong support for the efforts of the Organization of African Unity to achieve a peaceful resolution of the conflict,

Welcoming the efforts of its Mission to the region and its report of 11 May 2000,

Convinced of the need for further and immediate diplomatic efforts,

Noting with concern that the renewed fighting has serious humanitarian implications for the civilian population of the two countries,

Stressing that the situation between Eritrea and Ethiopia constitutes a threat to peace and security,

Stressing also that renewed hostilities constitute an even greater threat to the stability, security and economic development of the subregion,

1. Strongly condemns the renewed fighting between Eritrea and Ethiopia;

2. Demands that both parties cease immediately all military action and refrain from the further use of force;

3. Also demands the earliest possible reconvening, without preconditions, of substantive peace talks, under the auspices of the Organization of African Unity, on the basis of the Framework Agreement approved on 17 December 1998 and the Modalities for Implementation and of the work conducted by the Organization of African Unity as recorded in the communiqué issued by its current Chairman on 5 May 2000;

4. Resolves to meet again within seventy-two hours of the adoption of the present resolution to take immediate steps to ensure compliance with the present resolution in the event that hostilities continue;

5. Reaffirms its full support for the continuing efforts of the Organization of African Unity, of Algeria, its current Chairman, and of other interested parties to achieve a peaceful resolution of the conflict;

6. Endorses the Framework Agreement and the Modalities for Implementation as the basis for the peaceful resolution of the dispute between the two parties;

7. Also endorses the communiqué of 5 May 2000 issued by the current Chairman of the Organization of African Unity, which records the achievements of the Organization of African Unity-led negotiations up to that point, including the areas of convergence already established between the two parties;

8. Calls upon both parties to ensure the safety of civilian populations and fully to respect human rights and international humanitarian law;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council fully and regularly informed on the situation;

10. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Communications. Referring to resolution 1297(2000), Ethiopia, on 15 May [S/2000/430], said that the call for reconvening peace talks without preconditions under OAU auspices could not be directed to Ethiopia because Ethiopia was not responsible for the collapse of the latest talks, but was prepared to proceed to the proximity talks and commence from where it had left off in Algiers on 5 May.

The Central Organ of the OAU Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution, at an ambassadorial-level meeting in Addis Ababa on 14 May, issued a communiqué [S/2000/435] in which it expressed concern at the resumption of hostilities between Ethiopia and Eritrea and the consequences for both countries and for security in the region. Appealing for the resumption of the proximity talks under OAU auspices, it took note of the Ethiopian statement on its readiness to resume talks and the Eritrean statement that both parties were expected to respond to the OAU appeal.

On 17 May [S/2000/444], Eritrea complained of Ethiopia's latest aggression, which had resulted in its occupation of western Eritrea; consequently, over 500,000 Eritreans were fleeing from the invading army. Eritrea called on the United Nations to fulfil its duties by preventing the annihilation of Eritrean independence or the dismemberment of its territory through collective security measures. On the same day [S/2000/454], the EU Presidency issued a statement condemning the resumption of hostilities between the two countries and welcoming Council resolution 1297(2000). On 18 May, the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD) appealed to the two parties to show restraint and promote the proximity talks [S/2000/479].

Arms embargo

On 17 May [meeting 4144], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1298(2000). The draft text [S/2000/440] was submitted by Bangladesh, Canada, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1177(1998) of 26 June 1998, 1226(1999) of 29 January 1999, 1227(1999) of 10 February 1999 and 1297(2000) of 12 May 2000,

Recalling in particular its urging of all States in its resolution 1227(1999) to end all sales of arms and munitions to Eritrea and Ethiopia,

Deeply disturbed by the continuation of fighting between Eritrea and Ethiopia,

Deploring the loss of human life resulting from the fighting, and strongly regretting the negative impact the diversion of resources to the conflict continues to have on efforts to address the ongoing humanitarian food crisis in the region,

Stressing the need for both parties to achieve a peaceful resolution of the conflict,

Reaffirming the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Eritrea and Ethiopia,

Expressing its strong support for the efforts of the Organization of African Unity to achieve a peaceful resolution of the conflict,

Noting that the proximity talks held in Algiers from 29 April to 5 May 2000 and reported in the Organization of African Unity communiqué of 5 May 2000 were intended to assist the two parties to arrive at a final detailed peace implementation plan acceptable to each of them, which would lead to the peaceful resolution of the conflict,

Recalling the efforts of the Security Council, including through its Mission to the region, to achieve a peaceful resolution of the situation,

Convinced of the need for further and immediate diplomatic efforts,

Noting with concern that the fighting has serious humanitarian implications for the civilian population of the two States,

Stressing that the hostilities constitute an increasing threat to the stability, security and economic development of the subregion,

Determining that the situation between Eritrea and Ethiopia constitutes a threat to regional peace and security,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Strongly condemns the continued fighting between Eritrea and Ethiopia;

2. Demands that both parties cease immediately all military action and refrain from the further use of force;

3. Demands also that both parties withdraw their forces from military engagement and take no action that would aggravate tensions;

4. Demands further the earliest possible reconvening, without preconditions, of substantive peace talks, under the auspices of the Organization of African Unity, on the basis of the Framework Agreement approved on 17 December 1998 and the Modalities for Implementation and of the work conducted by the Organization of African Unity as recorded in the communiqué issued by its current Chairman on 5 May 2000, which would conclude a peaceful, definitive settlement of the conflict;

5. Requests that the current Chairman of the Organization of African Unity consider dispatching urgently his Personal Envoy to the region to seek immediate cessation of hostilities and resumption of the peace talks;

6. Decides that all States shall prevent:

(a) The sale or supply to Eritrea and Ethiopia, by their nationals or from their territories, or using their flag vessels or aircraft, of arms and related materiel of all types, including weapons and ammunition, military vehicles and equipment, paramilitary equipment and spare parts for the aforementioned, whether or not originating in their territory;

(b) Any provision to Eritrea and Ethiopia, by their nationals or from their territories, of technical assistance or training related to the provision, manufacture, maintenance or use of the items in (a) above;

7. Decides also that the measures imposed by paragraph 6 above shall not apply to supplies of non-lethal military equipment intended solely for humanitarian use, as approved in advance by the committee established by paragraph 8 below;

8. Decides further to establish, in accordance with rule 28 of its provisional rules of procedure, a committee of the Security Council consisting of all the members of the Council, to undertake the following tasks and to report on its work to the Council with its observations and recommendations:

(a) To seek from all States further information regarding the action taken by them with a view to implementing effectively the measures imposed by paragraph 6 above, and thereafter to request from them whatever further information it may consider necessary;

(b) To consider information brought to its attention by States concerning violations of the measures imposed by paragraph 6 above and to recommend appropriate measures in response thereto;

(c) To make periodic reports to the Council on information submitted to it regarding alleged violations of the measures imposed by paragraph 6 above, identifying where possible persons or entities, including vessels and aircraft, reported to be engaged in such violations;

(d) To promulgate such guidelines as may be necessary to facilitate the implementation of the measures imposed by paragraph 6 above;

(e) To give consideration to, and decide upon, requests for the exceptions set out in paragraph 7 above;

(f) To examine the reports submitted pursuant to paragraphs 11 and 12 below;

9. Calls upon all States and all international and regional organizations to act strictly in conformity with this resolution, notwithstanding the existence of any rights granted or obligations conferred or imposed by any international agreement or of any contract entered into or any licence or permit granted prior to the entry into force of the measures imposed by paragraph 6 above;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Committee established by paragraph 8 above and to make the necessary arrangements in the Secretariat for this purpose;

11. Requests States to report in detail to the Secretary-General within thirty days of the date of adoption of the present resolution on the specific steps they have taken to give effect to the measures imposed by paragraph 6 above;

12. Requests all States, relevant United Nations bodies and, as appropriate, other organizations and interested parties to report information on possible violations of the measures imposed by paragraph 6 above to the Committee established by paragraph 8 above;

13. Requests the Committee established by paragraph 8 above to make information it considers relevant publicly available through appropriate media, including through the improved use of information technology;

14. Requests the Governments of Eritrea and Ethiopia and other concerned parties to establish appropriate arrangements for the provision of humanitarian assistance and to endeavour to ensure that such assistance responds to local needs and is safely delivered to, and used by, its intended recipients;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to submit an initial report to the Council within fifteen days of the date of adoption of the present resolution on compliance with paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 above, and thereafter every sixty days after the date of adoption of the present resolution on its implementation and on the humanitarian situation in Eritrea and Ethiopia;

16. Decides that the measures imposed by paragraph 6 above are established for twelve months and that, at the end of this period, the Council will decide whether the Governments of Eritrea and Ethiopia have complied with paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 above and, accordingly, whether to extend these measures for a further period with the same conditions;

17. Decides also that the measures imposed by paragraph 6 above shall be terminated immediately if the Secretary-General reports that a peaceful, definitive settlement of the conflict has been concluded;

18. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Communications. Both Ethiopia and Eritrea responded to the Security Council's imposition of an arms embargo in letters to the President. Ethiopia, on 18 May [S/2000/448], said that, although the arms embargo was ostensibly aimed at both countries, the intent and objective of the initiators of the text were obviously focused on Ethiopia. The United Kingdom and the United States, which had wanted a harsher punishment of Ethiopia, did not succeed. On 19 May [S/2000/464], Eritrea said that it had complied with the demand to halt military action while Ethiopia had not. Eritrea objected to the arms embargo on the grounds that it punished equally Eritrea and Ethiopia, thus depriving Eritrea of its legitimate right to defend itself against Ethiopia's invasion and occupation of Eritrean territory.

Further military and mediation developments

Communications. On 19 May [A/54/876-S/2000/456], the OAU Chairman, President Bouteflika, appealed to the two parties for an immediate ceasefire and invited them to participate in a new round of proximity talks. Declaring his readiness to organize such indirect talks immediately, the Chairman stated that he would await positive reactions from the parties. He later informed the Secretary-General that he had dispatched his Special Envoy, Ahmed Ouyahia, to the region from 21 to 24 May [A/54/885].

On 24 May, the OAU Chairman issued a communiqué [S/2000/477] regarding Mr. Ouyahia's diplomatic efforts to encourage Eritrea and Ethiopia to take steps to de-escalate the conflict. On the same day [S/2000/481], Eritrea announced that, in response to that communiqué, it had decided to redeploy its forces to positions held before 6 May 1998 and would begin redeployment on 25 May in the Zalanbessa area. Eritrea also expressed readiness to finalize consolidated technical arrangements and to attend the Algiers proximity talks.

On 25 May, Ethiopia announced that its forces had recaptured the town of Zalanbessa [S/2000/483]. Ethiopia stated that the Eritrean announcement of withdrawal had come as its forces were being evicted from the Mereb-Zalanbessa-Alitena front and that fighting was continuing in areas on that front. It also claimed that large areas of territory in the eastern and north-eastern part of Ethiopia were still occupied by Eritrea. Ethiopia said it had no desire to remain in Eritrean territory that it held temporarily for the purpose of military expediency. It also reaffirmed its commitment to the peace process under OAU auspices.

In a communiqué of 26 May [A/54/886-S/2000/495], the OAU Chairman identified the following points on which the two parties were committed: to redeploy their respective forces to positions held prior to 6 May 1998; to resolve their border dispute in conformity with the Framework Agreement and the Modalities; and to pursue negotiations under OAU auspices with a view to finalizing the consolidated technical arrangements. The communiqué also noted that the OAU Chairman had invited the two parties to resume the proximity talks on 29 May. The Chairman considered that the Eritrean initiative to withdraw would lead to the rapid cessation of fighting.

In letters to the Secretary-General of 27 May [S/2000/498] and 29 May [S/2000/499], Eritrea accused Ethiopia of continuing military action against Eritrea even after Eritrea's full compliance with the OAU proposal for redeployment of troops to positions prior to 6 May 1998. It called on the Council to lift the sanctions against Eritrea. However, in a statement of 30 May [S/2000/505], Ethiopia claimed that, while Eritrean troops had fled Bure, it had not been verified that they had vacated Badda on the north-east frontier; Ethiopia was taking measures to verify if indeed Eritrean troops had withdrawn from all occupied territories in the area.

In a 2 June letter to the Security Council [S/2000/523], the Foreign Minister of Ethiopia announced that the Government had verified that all its territories had been cleared of Eritrean troops and that the war was over as far as Ethiopia was concerned. He acknowledged that the Ethiopian army was in Eritrean territories on the Zalanbessa front and declared that whether Ethiopia would redeploy to the 6 May 1998 positions would depend on what the international community would provide by way of security guarantees.

Report of Secretary-General (June). In accordance with resolution 1298(2000), the Secretary-General submitted a 2 June report on Eritrea and Ethiopia [S/2000/530]. He stated that Eritrea and Ethiopia had resumed proximity talks on 30 May. He described the military and diplomatic developments since the adoption of resolution 1298(2000) and noted that progress had been made towards meeting the requirements of paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 of the resolution, mainly through OAU diplomatic efforts. The Secretary-General observed that the Secretariat's capacity to monitor and report on the military situation between Eritrea and Ethiopia was extremely limited as there were no UN observers on the ground. Nevertheless, the broad outline of developments seemed sufficiently clear from official statements by both Eritrea and Ethiopia.

Since Ethiopia's declaration of the end of the war on 31 May, no major combat had been reported. However, reports of some fighting had been received and the parties continued to accuse each other of attacks. Noting that proximity talks under OAU auspices were under way, the Secretary-General urged both parties to cooperate fully with OAU and other members of the international community to continue to support OAU efforts to achieve a definitive, peaceful resolution of the conflict without further delay.

Resumed OAU proximity talks

The diplomatic efforts to find a solution to the border dispute, in particular the resumed proximity talks in Algiers (30 May–10 June), were described by OAU in communiqués of 1, 9 and 12 June [S/2000/535, S/2000/557, A/54/913-S/2000/560]. OAU announced that Eritrea had accepted its proposal for an immediate cessation of hostilities. The OAU proposal also provided for the withdrawal of Ethiopian troops from Eritrean territory, after the deployment of "a peacekeeping mission deployed by the United Nations under the auspices of OAU". The mandate of the mission would extend until the demarcation of the border between the two countries. Eritrea, which had earlier redeployed its troops to the positions they held before the outbreak of the conflict and from additional areas on the basis of an OAU appeal, asked that Ethiopia follow suit. Ethiopia, however, presented preconditions for redeployment, namely, the provision by the international community of "security guarantees". Although Eritrea initially rejected the Ethiopian position as unjustified, it decided to respond positively to OAU's appeal. Eritrea called on the international community to take strong action against Ethiopia in the event that it rejected the OAU proposal or pretended to accept while continuing its war against Eritrea. The border dispute would be settled in conformity with the Framework Agreement and the Modalities, on the basis of the relevant colonial treaties and of applicable international law, through delimitation and demarcation with UN assistance and, if necessary, through arbitration. A security zone in Eritrea would be designed to separate the forces of the two countries following the withdrawal of Ethiopian troops to the 6 May 1998 line. Despite agreement on those points, there was still disagreement on two points, namely, the exact definition of the security zone between the two forces, and certain aspects of the composition and functioning of the international peacekeeping force.

During the period when proximity talks were taking place in Algiers, both Eritrea [S/2000/532, S/2000/554] and Ethiopia [S/2000/534] complained of attacks by the other party.

Human rights violations

Eritrea and Ethiopia accused each other of committing human rights violations against their nationals. Eritrea complained that Ethiopia was committing acts of violence against civilians in the occupied Eritrean territories [A/54/912-S/2000/561, A/54/922-S/2000/592, A/54/923-S/2000/593, S/2000/610, A/55/438-S/2000/931] and against ethnic Eritreans in Ethiopia [A/54/965-S/2000/816, A/54/962-S/2000/812]. Ethiopia protested about the human rights violations suffered by Ethiopian nationals residing in Eritrea, including acts of extrajudicial killings, abductions, detentions and torture [S/2000/542, A/54/898, S/2000/568, S/2000/619, S/2000/793, S/2000/811]. Eritrea denied those claims [A/54/970-S/2000/838, A/55/630-S/2000/1101].

Ceasefire agreement

By letters of 14 and 15 June, respectively, Ethiopia [S/2000/576] and Eritrea [S/2000/579] indicated to the Security Council their acceptance of the OAU proposal for a cessation of hostilities. The EU, on 14 June [S/2000/585], welcomed the outcome of the proximity talks and confirmed its commitment to support the implementation of the peace settlement, in particular the deployment of a peacekeeping mission, the demarcation of the common border, mine clearance and efforts to support refugees and displaced persons. On 20 June [S/2000/612], Eritrea requested the United Nations to take the measures necessary to assist the parties in implementing the cessation of hostilities. On 26 June [S/2000/627], Ethiopia addressed a similar request to the Organization.

Report of Secretary-General (June). The OAU proximity talks, which culminated in the signing on 18 June of the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities between Ethiopia and Eritrea by the Foreign Ministers of both countries, were highlighted by the Secretary-General in his 30 June report on Ethiopia and Eritrea [S/2000/643]. Although under OAU auspices, the talks also had the assistance of representatives of the EU and the United States. Under the Agreement, which was circulated on 19 June as a document of the Security Council [S/2000/601] and the General Assembly [A/54/925], the parties agreed to a cessation of hostilities and reaffirmed their acceptance of the OAU Framework Agreement and the modalities for its implementation. They called on the United Nations, in cooperation with OAU, to deploy a peacekeeping mission to assist in implementing the Agreement and guaranteed to ensure free movement and access for the mission and its supplies and to respect its members, installations and equipment.

As stipulated in the Agreement, Ethiopia would submit to the peacekeeping mission redeployment plans for its troops from positions taken after 6 February 1999 that were not under Ethiopian administration before 6 May 1998. For its part, Eritrea would maintain its forces 25 kilometres (artillery range) from positions to which the Ethiopian forces would redeploy. That zone of separation would be called the "temporary security zone". The United Nations and OAU would establish a Military Coordination Commission to coordinate and resolve issues relating to implementation of the mission's mandate. In particular, the peacekeeping mission was mandated to: monitor the cessation of hostilities; monitor and ensure the redeployment of Ethiopian forces; ensure the observance of the security commitments agreed to by the two parties; and monitor the temporary security zone. The Agreement also called on the Security Council to adopt "appropriate measures" should one or both parties violate the commitments. Other provisions concerned demining activities with UN technical assistance and the return of civilian administration and of the population. The mandate of the peacekeeping operation would terminate when the delimitation/demarcation process was completed.

The Secretary-General described the Agreement as the first but an extremely vital step towards restoring peace between Ethiopia and Eritrea. The protracted conflict had compounded the effects of the drought in the two countries. It was estimated that 1.2 million people, 70 per cent of them women, children and the elderly, had been displaced by the war. Many of them lived without shelter, proper sanitation or regular access to food and water. Many thousands had fled across the border into the Sudan. In order to facilitate the implementation of the Agreement, the Secretary-General intended to send a reconnaissance mission to the region to make recommendations on a UN mission. He also would send liaison officers to each capital to liaise with the parties and OAU, to be followed by the deployment of a military observer group of up to 100 members, pending the establishment of a mission.

On 7 July [S/2000/676], the Security Council endorsed the Secretary-General's decision to dispatch reconnaissance and liaison teams to the region to expedite planning and coordination activities to start up a possible peacekeeping mission.

Communications. By a 21 July letter [S/2000/726], Eritrea requested the Council to investigate the violation of the Agreement on 17 July by three Ethiopian aircraft that flew deep into Eritrean airspace. Two of the fighter planes were hit as they attacked Eritrean defence installations. Ethiopia was also demolishing homes and villages in southern Eritrea. Ethiopia rejected the charges as totally false [S/2000/704].

Establishment of UNMEE

Having considered the Secretary-General's report on Ethiopia and Eritrea following the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities, the Security Council, in July, established the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE) as requested by the two countries and recommended by the Secretary-General. The Mission would consist initially of up to 100 military observers. In September, the Council authorized the deployment of up to 4,200 troops until 15 March 2001.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 31 July [meeting 4181], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1312(2000). The draft [S/2000/729] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1298(2000) of 17 May 2000 and 1308(2000) of 17 July 2000 and all its resolutions and statements by its President pertaining to the Ethiopia-Eritrea conflict,

Commending the Organization of African Unity for successfully facilitating the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities between the Government of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia and the Government of the State of Eritrea, signed in Algiers on 18 June 2000,

Recalling the official communications by the Governments of Eritrea and Ethiopia dated 20 and 26 June 2000 respectively to the Secretary-General requesting United Nations assistance in implementing the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities,

Recalling also the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel of 9 December 1994,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 30 June 2000, and recalling the letter of its President dated 7 July 2000 endorsing the decision of the Secretary-General to dispatch reconnaissance and liaison teams to the region,

1. Decides to establish the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea consisting of up to one hundred military observers and the necessary civilian support staff until 31 January 2001, in anticipation of a peacekeeping operation subject to future Security Council authorization, and to undertake the following mandate:

(a) To establish and maintain liaison with the parties;

(b) To visit the military headquarters and other units of the parties in all areas of operation of the mission deemed necessary by the Secretary-General;

(c) To establish and put into operation the mechanism for verifying the cessation of hostilities;

(d) To prepare for the establishment of the Military Coordination Commission provided for in the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities;

(e) To assist in planning for a future peacekeeping operation as necessary;

2. Welcomes the discussions between the secretariats of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity on cooperation in the implementation of the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities;

3. Calls upon the parties to provide the Mission with the access, assistance, support and protection required for the performance of its duties;

4. Requests the parties to facilitate the deployment of mine action experts and assets under the United Nations Mine Action Service to assess further the mine and unexploded ordnance problem and to provide technical assistance to the parties to carry out emergency mine action required;

5. Decides that the measures imposed by paragraph 6 of its resolution 1298(2000) shall not apply to the sale or supply of equipment and related materiel for the use of the United Nations Mine Action Service, or to the provision of related technical assistance and training by that Service;

6. Stresses the importance of the rapid delimitation and demarcation of the common border between the parties in accordance with the Organization of African Unity Framework Agreement approved on 17 December 1998 and the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue planning for a peacekeeping operation and to begin to take the administrative measures for assembling such a mission, which would be subject to future Council authorization;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to provide periodic reports, as necessary, on the establishment and work of the Mission;

9. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (August). As requested by the Council in resolution 1312(2000), the Secretary-General submitted a 9 August report on Ethiopia and Eritrea [S/2000/785], which paid particular attention to plans for UNMEE. He noted that OAU was continuing to encourage the two parties to resolve their outstanding differences. During the latest round of proximity talks (Washington, D.C., 3, 5 and 6 July), the parties discussed modalities for the delimitation and demarcation of the border and the issue of compensation. The Secretary-General also described the humanitarian situation in the two countries. In Eritrea, the number of internally displaced persons and other war-affected persons was more than 1.1 million in June, and another 94,000 Eritreans had sought refuge in the Sudan. Since the conclusion of the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities, refugees had begun repatriating voluntarily. A revised country appeal called for $87.3 million to address humanitarian needs for 1.1 million Eritreans. In Ethiopia, the severe drought had caused significant migrations, increased malnutrition, livestock losses and a higher incidence of diseases. As of early July, Ethiopia estimated that over 10 million people were in need of emergency food assistance.

With regard to UNMEE, liaison officers had been deployed to each capital and were consulting the parties' military headquarters and OAU to prepare for the Mission's deployment. A reconnaissance mission visited the region from 4 to 18 July to assess needs for the political, military, public information, mine action and administrative components. UNMEE's area of operations would be the temporary security zone and areas adjacent to it. The Mission would be headed by the Secretary-General's special representative, who, with the force commander, would maintain offices at Asmara and Addis Ababa. The main support base would be located in Asmara, given its proximity to the area of operations and its transport facilities.

The political component of the Mission would assist the special representative in liaison with the parties, address any political issues in implementing the Mission's mandate, keep abreast of political developments, and assist in coordinating UN activities. The military component, headed by a force commander, would monitor observance of the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities, confirm the redeployment of Ethiopian troops and supervise the temporary security zone. UNMEE would chair and provide the secretariat for the Military Coordination Commission, which would be one of the main instruments for addressing the military concerns of the parties. The Secretary-General estimated that UNMEE would require a total military strength of up to 4,200 personnel, including 220 military observers, three infantry battalions and the necessary support units. The military observers would liaise with the parties' military headquarters, investigate incidents and patrol, and the battalions would maintain static checkpoints and provide security for the Military Coordination Commission. The Mission would also require an engineering company, military police, an administration company, a medical unit and a transport unit. The Mission would also require significant air assets, including rotary and fixed-wing aircraft.

Given the presence of landmines and unexploded ordnance in the conflict area, the United Nations Mine Action Service (UNMAS) was preparing a programme with two objectives—to support operational needs of the peacekeeping force, mainly inside the temporary security zone, including technical advice and monitoring of the Ethiopian and Eritrean mine-clearance activities, and to facilitate international mine action assistance in support of humanitarian relief efforts, including the repatriation of refugees and internally displaced persons. If requested by the parties, the mine action component would prepare national mine action assistance programmes. An initial activity would be to carry out a mine survey of the temporary security zone.

The public information component would disseminate information on the activities and mandate of the Mission and on progress in implementing the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities. An office of communications and public information would be established, headed by a chief of information/spokesperson, who would conduct press briefings and advise the Mission on media policy. Adequate airtime on television and radio stations in both countries should be provided to UNMEE free of charge.

Coordination with OAU was necessary to carry out the tasks under the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities and discussions were held by the reconnaissance mission and OAU in that regard. Three OAU liaison officers would be stationed in each capital during the initial stage of UNMEE, pending full deployment. UNMEE would provide logistic assistance and security for OAU participation in joint activities.

The Secretary-General noted that the parties were expected to cooperate with UNMEE in the establishment of the temporary security zone and in providing information and personnel necessary for mine action activities. So far, the parties had shown commitment to ensure the implementation of the Agreement.

Security Council consideration (August). On 14 August [meeting 4187], the Security Council considered the Secretary-General's report and the representatives of Eritrea and Ethiopia gave their views on the situation. Eritrea, while welcoming the report's recommendations, considered significant the omission of mention of the 71,000 Eritreans and Ethiopians of Eritrean origin who had been expelled from Ethiopia, of civilian casualties and of the destruction of economic and social infrastructure by the Ethiopian army. Also welcoming the recommendations, Ethiopia said that while it was upholding the Agreement, Eritrea continued to deport Ethiopians under inhumane conditions.

Troop contributors. On 29 August [S/2000/841], the Secretary-General proposed that 19 countries be included in the initial list of Member States contributing military personnel to UN-MEE. The Security Council took note of that proposal on 31 August [S/2000/842]. On 20 October [S/2000/1018], the Secretary-General proposed that another 23 countries be added to the list of troop contributors. The Council took note of that proposal on 24 October [S/2000/1019].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 15 September [meeting 4197], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1320 (2000). The draft [S/2000/867] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1298(2000) of 17 May 2000 and 1308(2000) of 17 July 2000, and all resolutions and statements by its President pertaining to the Ethiopia-Eritrea conflict,

Reaffirming the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Ethiopia and Eritrea,

Reaffirming also the need for both parties to fulfil all their obligations under international humanitarian, human rights and refugee law,

Recalling the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 49/59 of 9 December 1994,

Expressing its strong support for the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities between the Government of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia and the Government of the State of Eritrea, signed on 18 June 2000 in Algiers, and the official communications by each Government requesting United Nations assistance in the implementation of this Agreement,

Stressing its commitment to work in coordination with the Organization of African Unity and the parties to implement fully the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities, while underlining that its successful implementation rests first and foremost on the will of the parties to the Agreement,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 9 August 2000,

Recalling its resolution 1312(2000) of 31 July 2000, which established the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea,

1. Calls upon the parties to fulfil all their obligations under international law, including the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities;

2. Authorizes the deployment within the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea of up to 4,200 troops, including up to 220 military observers, until 15 March 2001, with a mandate to:

(a) Monitor the cessation of hostilities;

(b) Assist, as appropriate, in ensuring the observance of the security commitments agreed upon by the parties;

(c) Monitor and verify the redeployment of Ethiopian troops from positions taken after 6 February 1999 that were not under Ethiopian administration before 6 May 1998;

(d) Monitor the positions of Ethiopian forces once redeployed;

(e) Simultaneously, monitor the positions of Eritrean forces that are to redeploy in order to remain at a distance of 25 kilometres from positions to which Ethiopian forces shall redeploy;

(f) Monitor the temporary security zone to assist in ensuring compliance with the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities;

(g) Chair the Military Coordination Commission to be established by the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity in accordance with the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities;

(h) Coordinate and provide technical assistance for humanitarian mine action activities in the temporary security zone and areas adjacent to it;

(i) Coordinate the activities of the Mission in the temporary security zone and areas adjacent to it with humanitarian and human rights activities of the United Nations and other organizations in those areas;

3. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to appoint a special representative who will be responsible for all aspects of the United Nations work in fulfilment of the mandate of the Mission;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to coordinate with the Organization of African Unity in the implementation of the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities;

5. Calls upon the parties to take whatever action may be necessary to ensure the access, safety and freedom of movement of the Mission, and to provide the assistance, support and protection required for the performance of its mandate in all areas of its operation deemed necessary by the Secretary-General;

6. Requests the Governments of Ethiopia and Eritrea to conclude, as necessary, status-of-forces agreements with the Secretary-General within thirty days of adoption of the present resolution, and recalls that pending the conclusion of such agreements, the model status-of-forces agreement of 9 October 1990 should apply provisionally;

7. Urges the parties to proceed immediately with demining, in order to ensure safe access of United Nations and associated personnel to the areas being monitored, drawing on United Nations technical assistance as needed;

8. Calls upon the parties to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel to all those in need;

9. Calls upon all parties to cooperate with the International Committee of the Red Cross;

10. Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations and further to the provisions of paragraph 5 of its resolution 1312(2000), decides that the measures imposed by paragraph 6 of its resolution 1298(2000) shall not apply to the sale and supply of:

(a) Arms and related materiel for the sole use in Ethiopia or Eritrea of the United Nations, and

(b) Equipment and related materiel, including technical assistance and training, for use solely for demining within Ethiopia or Eritrea under the auspices of the United Nations Mine Action Service;

11. Encourages all States and international organizations to assist and participate in the longer-term tasks of reconstruction and development, as well as in the economic and social recovery of Ethiopia and Eritrea;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council closely and regularly informed of progress towards the implementation of the present resolution;

13. Emphasizes that the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities links the termination of the United Nations peacekeeping mission with the completion of the process of delimitation and demarcation of the Ethiopian-Eritrean border, and requests the Secretary-General to provide regular updates on the status of this issue;

14. Calls upon the parties to continue negotiations and conclude without delay a comprehensive and final peace settlement;

15. Decides that the Council, in considering the renewal of the mandate of the Mission, will take into account whether the parties have made adequate progress as called for in paragraphs 13 and 14 above;

16. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (September). On 18 September, the Secretary-General reported on Ethiopia and Eritrea [S/2000/879], as requested by the Council in resolution 1298(2000). He stated that under the 18 June Agreement, implementation of the plan would begin with the withdrawal of Ethiopian forces from positions taken by them since 6 February 1999 and end with the settlement of the border dispute through delimitation and demarcation and, if necessary, through arbitration. However, at Ethiopia's request and with Eritrea's consent, it had been agreed to first finalize a cessation of hostilities agreement and then negotiate and finalize a second agreement on the other outstanding issues.

On the humanitarian front, Ethiopia and the UN country team estimated that nearly 350,000 people had been displaced as a result of the conflict in the northern regions of Tigray and Afar. While most of those were accommodated in host communities, local basic infrastructure was insufficient to support their presence. Since the signing of the Agreement, 30 per cent had started rebuilding their lives in their home towns and needed assistance. The continuing drought had left over 10 million people in Ethiopia in need of emergency food assistance. In Eritrea, some 400,000 internally displaced persons had returned to their areas of origin bordering Ethiopia. Of 94,000 Eritrean refugees in the Sudan, 23,881 had returned under the UNHCR repatriation plan and an estimated 25,000 had returned spontaneously. There were still over 200,000 internally displaced persons in camps and other settlements who required a wide array of humanitarian services, including food assistance, health services and shelter.

Since the establishment of UNMEE, preparations had continued for the deployment of both the first group of 100 military observers and the civilian support staff to Ethiopia and Eritrea. The first group of military liaison officers had undertaken field visits to military positions of Ethiopia and Eritrea and had completed a survey of potential deployment areas in both countries. A deployment timetable for military observers had been prepared. Logistical build-up continued, with the arrival of supplies and equipment from the UN Logistics Base in Brindisi, Italy. The mine action component of the Mission was established and a landmine/unexploded ordnance survey, conducted by a British NGO, the Halo Trust, was under way and was expected to be completed by mid-December.

The Secretary-General reported that Ethiopia and Eritrea had shown commitment to implementing the Agreement signed in June. He counted on them to continue to cooperate with the Mission, in particular in the establishment of the temporary security zone and the early start of mine clearance. He urged Member States to provide the Mission with the necessary military personnel, equipment and other resources. He was concerned by the continuing mutual accusations of human rights abuses by the two countries, even after the signing of the Agreement, and he intended to establish a component within the Mission to follow human rights issues.

Appointments. On 21 September [S/2000/909], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to extend the appointment of his Special Adviser, Mohamed Sahnoun, until 31 December 2001. Mr. Sahnoun had been engaged in efforts to resolve the Eritrea-Ethiopia conflict and had also been following developments in other countries in the Horn of Africa subregion, especially Somalia and the Sudan.

On 29 September [S/2000/947], the Secretary-General announced his intention to appoint, with immediate effect, Legwaila Joseph Legwaila (Botswana) as his Special Representative for Ethiopia and Eritrea. The Council took note of that decision on 3 October [S/2000/948].

Similarly, on 25 October [S/2000/1037], the Secretary-General, following the usual consultations, announced his intention to appoint Brigadier General Patrick C. Cammaert (Netherlands) as Force Commander of UNMEE, with effect from 1 November. He was expected to arrive in the Mission area during the first half of November.

The Council took note of that intention on 27 October [S/2000/1038].

Situation update (November). The Security Council, on 17 November [meeting 4227], considered the situation between Eritrea and Ethiopia. Addressing the Council, the Secretary-General said that UNMEE deployment was proceeding on schedule and was expected to be completed by early 2001. The situation on the ground appeared to have stabilized in recent weeks and the ceasefire was holding. However, humanitarian conditions remained a source of serious concern. More than 300,000 persons were internally displaced in Eritrea and some 350,000 in Ethiopia. The most critical obstacle to their return was the presence of landmines and unexploded ordnance along the border. UNMEE had begun to conduct demining surveys and both Governments had established national commissions for demining. Both sides had agreed to open the first land access route for UNMEE convoys and other uses on 28 November. One step that could contribute to maintaining peace was the establishment of the Military Coordination Commission, as called for in the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities.

The Council President (Netherlands), having visited the area, proposed five confidence-building measures to reduce the level of mistrust between the two Governments. Those measures were incorporated in his statement of 21 November.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 21 November [meeting 4230], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/34 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council reaffirms its resolutions regarding the situation in Ethiopia and Eritrea, in particular resolutions 1298(2000) of 17 May 2000, 1312(2000) of 31 July 2000 and 1320(2000) of 15 September 2000, which established the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea.

The Council reaffirms the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Ethiopia and Eritrea.

The Council notes with appreciation the commitment of both parties towards a final and comprehensive peace settlement. The Council also notes with appreciation the rounds of proximity talks that have taken place and, pursuant to paragraph 14 of resolution 1320(2000), calls upon the parties to continue negotiations and to conclude without delay a final and comprehensive peace settlement. The Council emphasizes that the deployment of the Mission should contribute to a positive climate for negotiations and that it does not replace the need for such a peace settlement.

The Council reiterates its strong support for the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities between the Government of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia and the Government of the State of Eritrea signed in Algiers on 18 June 2000.

The Council underlines the important role that confidence-building measures could play in dispelling the remaining distrust between Ethiopia and Eritrea, and encourages both States to agree on a package of such measures. In particular, the Council encourages the parties to agree on the immediate release and voluntary and orderly return of interned civilians, under the auspices of the International Committee of the Red Cross, the opening of land and air corridors for the Mission, an exchange of maps showing mined areas, the prompt release of prisoners of war and their return under the auspices of the International Committee of the Red Cross and a moratorium on expulsions.

The Council reaffirms the need for both parties to fulfil all their obligations under international humanitarian, human rights and refugee law. The Council calls upon the parties to cooperate with the Mission in this regard.

The Council expresses its continuing support for the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy, the Organization of African Unity, the President of Algeria and his Special Envoy, and concerned Member States to find a peaceful and lasting solution to the conflict.

The Council underlines the importance of the full compliance of Member States with the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1298(2000).

The Council remains actively seized of the matter.

Communications (November). In a 21 November statement [S/2000/1146], the EU welcomed the establishment of UNMEE and urged both parties to intensify the peace process under the aegis of OAU, supported by the EU and the United States, in order to reach a comprehensive and sustainable peace settlement.

Ethiopia, on 29 November [A/55/669-S/2000/1157], welcomed the confidence-building measures proposed by the Council and said that it had assisted in the opening of a land corridor for UNMEE to use. It had also begun demobilizing its army and called on Eritrea to do the same.

Financing of UNMEE

Following the Security Council's establishment of UNMEE in July and its expansion in September, the Secretary-General, on 4 December, presented the proposed budget for the establishment and operation of the Mission for the period from 31 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 [A/55/666]. The suggested budget amounted to $199,075,800 gross ($196,313,700 net), inclusive of the commitment authority of $50 million gross ($49,715,100 net) granted by ACABQ to meet initial requirements and the costs related to dispatching reconnaissance and liaison teams in July. The estimates provided for the deployment of up to 4,200 military personnel, including 220 military observers, supported by 619 civilian staff (282 international, 322 local and 15 United Nations Volunteers). Of the total budget, operational costs accounted for 50.2 per cent, military personnel costs reflected 36.1 per cent, civilian personnel costs amounted to 11.1 per cent, staff assessment comprised 1.4 per cent and 1.2 per cent of total resources were related to other programmes.

ACABQ issued its comments on the Secretary-General's proposed budget on 13 December [A/55/688]. It had several areas of concern, especially with respect to how the concept of operations affected and could justify the proposed structure of the Mission. Under the circumstances and given the timing of the report's submission, ACABQ intended to resume consideration of the report in 2001. Pending its review, it recommended that the General Assembly authorize commitment authority of $150 million gross.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 89], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/55/711], adopted resolution 55/237 without vote [agenda item 176].

Financing of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1312(2000) of 31 July 2000 regarding the establishment of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea,

Recognizing that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing also that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such operations,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

2. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea in full and on time;

3. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

4. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

5. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to make the full possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Mission, and for this purpose requests the Secretary-General to speed up the implementation of the asset management system at all peacekeeping missions in accordance with its resolution 52/1 A of 15 October 1997;

7. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to recruit local staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

10. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the establishment and operation of the Mission for the period from 31 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 in an amount not exceeding 150 million United States dollars gross (148,220,200 dollars net), inclusive of the amount of 50 million dollars gross (49,715,100 dollars net) authorized by the Advisory Committee under the terms of section IV of General Assembly resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994, and of the costs related to the dispatch of reconnaissance and liaison teams to the Mission area, and requests the Secretary-General to establish a special account for the Mission;

11. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion among Member States the amount of 102,192,982 dollars gross (100,980,428 dollars net) for the period from 31 July 2000 to 15 March 2001, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of its resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996, 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and 55/236 of 23 December 2000 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, 50/451 B of 23 December 1995 and 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999, the scale of assessments for 2000 to be applied against a portion thereof, that is,

68,421,052 dollars gross (67,609,214 dollars net), which is the amount pertaining to the period ending 31 December 2000, and the scale of assessments for 2001 to be applied against the balance, that is, 33,771,930 dollars gross (33,371,214 dollars net) for the period from 1 January to 15 March 2001;

12. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 11 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,212,554 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 31 July 2000 to 15 March 2001, 811,838 dollars being the amount pertaining to the period ending 31 December 2000 and the balance, that is, 400,716 dollars, pertaining to the period from 1 January to 15 March 2001;

13. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion among Member States the amount of 47,807,018 dollars gross (47,239,772 dollars net) for the period from 16 March to 30 June 2001 at a monthly rate of 13,596,491 dollars gross (13,435,164 dollars net), in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2001, subject to any decision by the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission beyond 15 March 2001;

14. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 13 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 567,246 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 16 March to 30 June 2001;

15. Decides also to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea the additional amount of 9,190,200 dollars gross (8,741,600 dollars net) for the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, to be apportioned, as an ad hoc arrangement, among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution, the scale of assessments for the year 2000 to be applied against a portion thereof, that is 4,595,100 dollars gross (4,370,800 dollars net), which is the amount pertaining to the period ending 31 December 2000, and the scale of assessments for the year 2001 to be applied against the balance, that is, 4,595,100 dollars gross (4,370,800 dollars net) for the period from 1 January to 30 June 2001;

16. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 15 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 448,600 dollars approved for the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, 224,300 dollars being the amount pertaining to the period ending 31 December 2000 and the balance, that is, 224,300 dollars, pertaining to the period from 1 January to 30 June 2001;

17. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

18. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Mission;

19. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

20. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea".

Also on 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the financing of UNMEE would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458). On the same day, it decided that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the item at that session (decision 55/455).

Peace Agreement

Following negotiations led by President Bouteflika, President Isaias Afwerki of Eritrea and Prime Minister Meles Zenawi of Ethiopia signed the Peace Agreement between the two countries on 12 December in Algiers.

On 6 December [A/55/673-S/2000/1162], the Presidency of Algeria issued a communiqué announcing the forthcoming event, which was the result of efforts led by Mr. Bouteflika under the OAU mandate, with the support of the United States and in consultation with the EU, OAU and the United Nations.

The text of the Agreement was transmitted to the United Nations by Algeria on 12 December [A/55/686-S/2000/1183]. By that document, the Governments agreed to permanently terminate military hostilities between them, refrain from the threat or use of force and repatriate all prisoners of war. They agreed that an independent body under OAU auspices would carry out an investigation to determine the origins of the conflict. The Agreement also envisaged a neutral Boundary Commission that would delimit and demarcate the border based on pertinent colonial treaties (1900, 1902 and 1908) and international law, with the UN Cartographer serving as Secretary to the Commission. A neutral Claims Commission would be established to arbitrate claims for loss, damage or injury by one Government against the other, and by nationals of one party against the Government of the other.

On 14 December [S/2000/1194], the Secretary-General, in a letter to the Security Council, said that the 12 December Agreement marked an important victory for peace between the two countries and a major achievement for the African continent as a whole. In welcoming the historic document, he said the United Nations was prepared to work closely with the Eritrean and Ethiopian authorities, OAU and all other parties concerned to ensure the early implementation of the Agreements of 18 June and 12 December.

Also welcoming the Peace Agreement, the EU Presidency, in a 12 December statement [S/2000/1207], said the event might represent a turning point towards peace and development in the region and affirmed its commitment to supporting action to implement the peace settlement.

By letters of 19 and 21 December, Ethiopia [S/2000/1213] and Eritrea [S/2000/1230], respectively, informed the Council of their intention to release prisoners of war. Ethiopia said it had begun releasing 390 wounded Eritreans under arrangements made with the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC). Eritrea said it would begin repatriating Ethiopians in a few days' time under ICRC auspices and noted that it had unilaterally released 71 Ethiopian prisoners of war during the early phase of the conflict.

Later developments. The first meeting of the Military Coordination Commission (MCC), established in accordance with the ceasefire Agreement of 18 June, was held in Nairobi on 2 December under the chairmanship of the UNMEE Force Commander, with the participation of representatives of the two parties and of OAU [S/2001/45]. At the meeting, the Eritrean and Ethiopian authorities confirmed their agreement to open two additional land access routes on 7 December, following the opening of the first such route on 28 November, to enable UNMEE convoys to cross the front lines in all of its three deployment sectors. The parties also agreed to submit to the Force Commander their redeployment plans by 12 December, and to provide UNMEE by 14 December with information on known and suspected minefields. The Mission received some information from Ethiopia and was awaiting a response from Eritrea. There was also an agreement on the removal of bodies of those killed in action on the Manda-Assab road. As planned, 20 bodies were recovered and returned in solemn ceremonies on 6 and 14 December.

MCC reconvened in Nairobi on 28 December. At that meeting, the parties agreed to develop protocols to improve the freedom of movement of UNMEE aircraft in the Mission area. However, the parties could not reach an agreement on the redeployment of Ethiopian forces and repositioning of Eritrean forces, and maintained differing views over which areas were or were not under Ethiopian administration before 6 May 1998. MCC decided therefore that the matter be referred to the Secretary-General's Special Representative. Ethiopia submitted its redeployment plans to UNMEE on 12 December. Four cross-border land access routes were opened by the end of the month, and the Mine Action Coordination Centre of the Mission organized the clearance of mines and unexploded ordnance from those routes.

Although several incidents involving small exchanges of fire between Eritrean and Ethiopian forces on or near the front lines were reported, UNMEE concluded that they did not constitute deliberate breaches of the ceasefire by either side.

The release of prisoners of war, detainees and internees was begun in late 2000. On 28 November, 836 persons of Ethiopian origin were repatriated from Eritrea with the assistance of ICRC, and another 3,500 Ethiopians were repatriated in December. On 23 and 24 December, ICRC undertook the first repatriation of 360 Ethiopian and 359 Eritrean soldiers.

Other developments

Arms embargo

The Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1298(2000) concerning the situation between Eritrea and Ethiopia was established in May (see p. 170). By that resolution, the Council decided that all States would prevent the sale or supply to Eritrea and Ethiopia of arms and related materiel of all types and the provision to Eritrea and Ethiopia of technical assistance or training related to the prohibited items. In a report forwarded to the Council on 29 December [S/2000/1259], the Chairman said that the Secretary-General had sent to all States a note verbale asking about specific steps they had taken to give effect to the measures imposed by that resolution. The Committee did not have any specific monitoring mechanism to ensure the implementation of the arms embargo and relied on the cooperation of States and organizations to provide pertinent information. As of 8 December, replies had been received from 40 States [S/2001/39].

Guinea

In December, the Security Council condemned recent incursions into Guinea by rebel groups from Liberia and Sierra Leone that had affected villages and towns along the entire length of Guinea's border. The Government had affirmed that 350 people were killed.

Border incursions

The Secretary-General discussed the border situation of Guinea in his seventh report on the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL) of 7 November [S/2000/1055]. That report, which covered regional aspects of the situation in several West African countries, stated that in September and October there had been at least 15 attacks against Guinean border villages by armed insurgents, reportedly operating from Liberia and Sierra Leone. Guinea reported that 350 people were killed and it accused Liberia and Burkina Faso of complicity in the attacks. Both Governments denied any involvement. The violence in the border areas caused the internal displacement of an estimated 40,000 Guineans. In October, the Mediation and Security Council of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) called for the deployment of ECOWAS military observers along the common borders of Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone.

In his eighth UNAMSIL report of 15 December [S/2000/1199], the Secretary-General again noted that several cross-border incursions had occurred in southern Guinea and fighting had resulted in heavy civilian casualties and large-scale displacement of people. Guinea accused Liberia and rebel groups in Sierra Leone of being responsible for those attacks, while Liberia accused Guinea of supporting Liberian dissidents. Both Governments denied the other's accusations.

The heads of State and Government of ECOWAS countries, at a meeting held in Bamako, Mali, on 15 and 16 December [S/2000/1201], issued a final communiqué stating, among other things, that they had held in-depth discussions on the deterioration in the climate of peace and security among Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone. The meeting took due note of the undertaking by each of those three countries: to ensure that its national territory was not used by national or foreign armed individuals to attack neighbouring countries; to disarm any irregular armed groups present in its territory; and to refrain from acts or statements that might appear hostile to the other parties. The heads of State and Government agreed to the immediate deployment of interposition forces along the borders between the three countries and called for an urgent meeting of heads of State of the three countries under the auspices of ECOWAS and OAU. The proposed mandate of an interposition force of 1,796 troops would include monitoring the border areas; neutralizing irregular armed groups; facilitating the movement of persons, goods and services; ensuring the security of refugees and displaced persons; and creating a conducive environment for humanitarian assistance.

A Security Council mission to Sierra Leone visited the region in October and also addressed the question of the Guinean border (see p. 207).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 4252], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/41 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses its deep concern at developments on the border that Guinea shares with Liberia and Sierra Leone.

The Council condemns in the strongest terms the recent incursions into Guinea by rebel groups coming from Liberia and Sierra Leone that have affected villages and towns along the entire length of Guinea's border, including in Guékédou on 6 December 2000 and in Kissidougou on 10 December 2000. The Council deplores the fact that these attacks claimed many lives, in particular the lives of civilians, and caused an exodus of local inhabitants and refugees, further exacerbating an already grave humanitarian situation. The Council also condemns the recent looting of the facilities of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other humanitarian organizations. The Council demands an immediate halt to all acts of violence, especially those directed against civilians, as well as the infiltration of displaced persons camps by armed elements, and demands that those responsible for the violations of international humanitarian law be brought to justice.

The Council reaffirms its commitment to the sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity of Guinea. It expresses its serious concern, in this regard, over reports that external military support is being provided to those rebel groups. It calls upon all States, particularly Liberia, to refrain from providing any such military support and from any act that might contribute to further destabilization of the situation on the borders between Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone. The Council further calls upon all States in the region to prevent armed individuals from using their national territory to prepare and commit attacks in neighbouring countries.

The Council notes with interest the common undertakings assumed by Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone at the twenty-fourth ordinary session of the Authority of Heads of State and Government of the Economic Community of West African States held in Bamako on 15 and 16 December 2000 and calls upon them to implement those undertakings fully and without delay. It again pays tribute to the current Chairman of the Economic Community of West African States and to that organization for the important role they play towards restoring peace and security to the three countries of the Mano River Union. The Council requests the Secretary-General to consider what support the international community, and in particular the United Nations, might provide to the Economic Community of West African States in order to ensure security on the border that Guinea shares with Liberia and Sierra Leone, and to report in that connection to the Council as soon as possible. The Council supports the appeal made by the heads of State and Government of the Economic Community of West African States for an urgent meeting of the heads of State of Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone under the auspices of the Community and the Organization of African Unity.

The Council expresses its deep appreciation to the Government of Guinea for hosting a large number of refugees. The Council is concerned by the growing hostile attitude among the local population towards refugees, and urges the Government of Guinea to take urgent measures to discourage the propagation of such anti-refugee feelings.

The Council expresses its deep concern over the fate of all those who continue to live in a state of insecurity, especially the local populations and the tens of thousands of refugees and displaced persons. It urges all the competent organizations to ensure that humanitarian relief continues, and it underlines the importance of integrated action by the United Nations agencies, acting in coordination with the Government of Guinea and with the support of the Economic Community of West African States. The Council believes that humanitarian assistance in secure locations must be made available not only to displaced refugees and Guineans, but also to those refugees returning to Sierra Leone. The Council calls on the Secretary-General and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to ensure that suitable programmes of reintegration and assistance exist and are enhanced where security permits in Sierra Leone. It also recognizes the important role of the international community and the competent non-governmental organizations in providing the humanitarian relief that the local populations, the refugees and the displaced persons so sorely need. The Council is concerned over the security of humanitarian personnel working in Sierra Leone and Guinea. It calls upon all the parties concerned to facilitate the work of the humanitarian organizations. It urges the parties to guarantee the security of refugees and displaced persons, and the security of the staff of the United Nations and humanitarian organizations. The Council also reaffirms the need to respect the civilian character of refugee camps.

The Council welcomes the proposed inter-agency multidisciplinary mission to West Africa, supports its earliest possible departure to the region and looks forward to its report and recommendations.

Guinea-Bissau

On 16 January, the second round of presidential elections in Guinea-Bissau was held, thus completing the formation of a new Government and bringing to a close the transitional Government established in accordance with the Abuja Peace Accord of 1 November 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 153]. That agreement had ended an armed conflict between forces supporting President João

Bernardo Vieira and his former Army Chief of Staff, General Ansoumane Mane. The elections led to the swearing in of President Kumba Yala, under whom the new Government focused on establishing democratic institutions in the face of continued interference from the military establishment, culminating in an attempted coup d'état by General Mane on 20 November. General Mane was killed in a shoot-out with the army following that attempt.

Internal friction was not the only cause for concern as tensions along the Guinea-Bissau/Senegal border were reported and the threat of military intervention remained ever present. In view of those dangers, the mandate of the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Guinea-Bissau (UNOGBIS), established in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 140], was extended. Despite the troubling climate of tension, Guinea-Bissau continued its efforts to consolidate its fragile democratization process.

Formation of new Government

Report of Secretary-General (March). The Secretary-General, in response to Security Council resolution 1233(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 140], submitted a 24 March report on developments in Guinea-Bissau [S/2000/250], updating the Council on events since his previous report in December 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 144].

The second round of presidential elections, held on 16 January as the result of inconclusive results in the first round on 28 November 1999, brought an end to the post-conflict transitional period in Guinea-Bissau. President Kumba Yala, who obtained 72 per cent of the vote, was invested on 17 February, following which a new Government was formed and the new pluralist National Assembly was inaugurated. In view of the new political situation, the revised mandate of UNOGBIS was approved by the Council on 10 March (see p. 187). Among the priorities identified by the new Government were the consolidation of the country's nascent democracy, the depoliticization of the military, the demobilization and reintegration of retired military personnel, the revitalization of State institutions and the relaunching of the economy. In a move to promote national reconciliation, the Chief of Staff and a member of the former military junta was appointed as Defence Minister; however, under pressure from the military establishment the Minister resigned. Negotiations were under way with the former military junta to identify a replacement and to redefine the role of the military in a new, democratic Guinea-Bissau. Those negotiations were led by a group of mediators from civil society, including the Bishop of Bissau. The Secretary-General's Representative, Samuel Nana-Sinkam, was also providing his good offices as needed.

Despite the restoration of constitutional rule, the military continued to maintain a high public posture and to perform police functions, even as the presence of police units increased. The maintenance of public law and order was severely constrained by a lack of appropriate training and poor logistic support for the police. In the Secretary-General's view, that situation underscored the need for the international community to assist in that regard. The continuing circulation of large quantities of small arms in civilian communities compounded the security situation. In that connection, efforts continued, under the coordination of UNOGBIS and with the support of the World Food Programme and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, to develop a package of incentives to encourage civilians to surrender their weapons. Relations with neighbouring countries continued to improve. Bilateral cooperation to resolve concerns over border security issues, especially along the border with Guinea (see p. 181), was evolving in the right direction.

The trials of those detained following the events of May 1999 began in late February 2000. From the original 385 detained, 50 remained in detention, some having been released for lack of evidence or pending further investigation. UNOGBIS provided assistance to the new justice system by training 37 new judges in order to increase the capacity of the judiciary to speed up trial proceedings.

The humanitarian situation in the country improved significantly, as more and more Bissau Guinean refugees and internally displaced persons returned to their homes in different parts of the country. The return of refugees and displaced persons had put additional pressure on the demand for social services, in particular water and electricity. To meet that demand, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and NGOs had begun digging wells and rehabilitating small water refilling systems in Bissau and in the countryside. UNICEF was also active in repairing damaged hospitals, restarting inoculation projects and distributing medicines.

Addressing the Council on 29 March [meeting 4121] when it considered the Secretary-General's report, Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, Kieran Prendergast, said that the overall situation was peaceful and the humanitarian situation had improved, but the economic situation remained worrying. He warned of the difficulties encountered in redefining the relationship between the new Government and the military establishment in the post-electoral period. However, it was encouraging, he said, that negotiations between the Government and the former military junta were continuing, led by the Bishop of Bissau and a group of mediators from civil society. In view of the situation, the Secretary-General had urged the international community to provide urgent assistance for the Government's 100-day transitional programme, which was critical for the credibility of the new Government as it faced pressures from ordinary citizens who were demanding basic services such as water and electricity.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 29 March [meeting 4122], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/11 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 24 March 2000 on developments in Guinea-Bissau.

The Council pays tribute to the people of Guinea-Bissau for the success of the transitional process that has led to the organization of free, fair and transparent elections. It congratulates the Representative of the Secretary-General, the staff of the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Guinea-Bissau and the States Members of the United Nations for all they have done to assist the people of Guinea-Bissau in this task. The Council also thanks the Economic Community of West African States, the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries, Member States that contributed to the Trust Fund established to support the activities of the Support Office and the Friends of the Secretary-General for Guinea-Bissau for their contributions to consolidating peace and stability in Guinea-Bissau.

The Council welcomes the swearing in of President Kumba Yala on 17 February 2000 and the return to constitutional and democratic order in Guinea-Bissau following the holding of free and fair presidential and legislative elections. The Council affirms that all concerned, particularly the former military junta, are obligated to recognize and uphold the results of these elections, as part of the Abuja Accord.

The Council encourages all concerned in Guinea-Bissau to work together closely in a spirit of tolerance to strengthen democratic values, protect the rule of law, depoliticize the army and safeguard human rights. The Council supports the efforts made by the Government of Guinea-Bissau to redefine the role of the military in Guinea-Bissau in accordance with the rule of law and democracy.

The Council expresses its support for the newly elected Government of Guinea-Bissau and encourages the new authorities to develop and to implement programmes devised to consolidate peace and national reconciliation. The Council calls upon the international community to support the three-month transitional programme of the Government of Guinea-Bissau pending the organization of a new round-table conference. The Council agrees with the comment made by the Secretary-General, in paragraph 24 of his report, to the effect that sustained support of the international community is crucial for the consolidation of the progress achieved so far, and for helping Guinea-Bissau lay a durable foundation for a better life for its people.

Communication. In a 19 May statement [S/2000/487], the EU expressed concern at the ongoing climate of tension and insecurity in Guinea-Bissau and at reports of indiscipline in some sectors of the armed forces. It urged all in Guinea-Bissau, in particular the military, to continue to take forward the positive developments of the previous year and stressed the need for a full return to civil rule, effective functioning of democratic institutions and a peaceful environment as prerequisites for the continuation of foreign investments and financial and economic aid.

Report of Secretary-General (June). The Secretary-General, in a 28 June report on developments in Guinea-Bissau and on UNOGBIS activities [S/2000/632], said that while important progress had been made on the ground since his last report, many challenges remained as Guinea-Bissau sought to restore lasting peace, stability and sustainable development and to improve the living standards of its people. During the period under review, the Government of President Yala had focused on consolidating the authority of the newly established democratic institutions in the face of continued interference from the military establishment, following protracted consultations with a wide spectrum of actors. The continued high profile of the former military junta on the political scene and the lack of a constitution anchored in democratic principles presented difficult challenges. Some progress was reported in discussions mediated by civil society leaders under the leadership of the Bishop of Bissau and facilitated by the Secretary-General's Representative, aimed at redefining the role of the military. The National Assembly had established a Commission of Good Offices to bridge differences between the Government and the military establishment.

The appointment on 7 April of a new Attorney-General and a civilian as Minister of Defence and the decision of the military establishment not to challenge the President's decree replacing the Chief of Naval Staff further strengthened the authority of the constitutional order. In June, the military reaffirmed its intention to resume its traditional role and to subordinate itself to the civilian authorities.

On 15 May, ECOWAS sent a Special Envoy to Guinea-Bissau to discuss with the authorities and other parties the latest developments. At a summit meeting on 28 and 29 May, the ECOWAS members expressed concern over continuing tensions between the President and the former military junta.

A worrying development concerned religious and ethnic tensions in some northern parts of the country between the Fula and Felupe communities and in the east between the Fula and Mandingo communities.

In an effort to restore the economy, the National Assembly approved the Government's four-year programme of work and the 2000 budget. In order to strengthen the democratic process, the Supreme Court of Justice set up a commission to review the current constitution. The authorities announced plans to hold municipal elections in 2000.

The security situation along the Guinea-Bissau/Senegal border, which had deteriorated in April, was significantly improved by the visit to Bissau on 29 April of newly elected President Wade of Senegal. The leaders of the two countries agreed to de-escalate tensions and discussed cooperative strategies for securing their common border. The Secretary-General's Representative, during meetings with President Wade and Senegalese officials in Dakar in early May, discussed ways to sustain the initiatives on border security generated during the President's visit to Bissau.

Internally, there was a rise in armed criminality and banditry attributable, in part, to the prevailing difficult economic situation, the weak police force and uncontrolled circulation of weapons. Another security issue was the presence of landmines throughout the country. With support from UNDP, a demining project was scheduled to begin in July. The Government also prepared a demobilization and reintegration programme. Endemic poverty remained the single most debilitating social and economic problem. The unemployment level remained high and the Government experienced persistent difficulties in paying the civil servants who constituted the bulk of all formally employed Bissau Guinean citizens.

The Secretary-General said that the restructuring of the armed forces was crucial for the democratization process and remained one of the Government's priorities. However, in the absence of adequate resources, that remained a daunting and potentially problematic challenge. He therefore appealed to the international community to provide the necessary financial and material support to enable the Government to address that issue effectively, to strengthen its institutional ca-capacity and to implement its rehabilitation, reconstruction and development priorities.

Report of Secretary-General (September). On 29 September, the Secretary-General submitted a further report on developments in Guinea-Bissau and UNOGBIS activities [S/2000/920], in which he said that the country had continued to make progress towards consolidating its democratization process; however, the overall situation remained worrying. The threat of military intervention, the precarious border situation and chronic poverty continued to confront the Government, which had neither the means nor the capacity to address them on its own.

In early September, President Yala dismissed five ministers belonging to the rival Guinea-Bissau Resistance Party from the coalition Government, but later reinstated them following peaceful negotiations. The Secretary-General's Representative played a facilitation role in that matter. Another positive development was the normal functioning of the National Assembly. The Assembly, in collaboration with UNOGBIS, conducted in June a five-day seminar on democratic ethics and parliamentary protocols and procedures for parliamentarians.

Internal friction and tensions in the border area with Senegal continued to cause concern. The temporary closure of border crossings on the Senegalese side led to steep price increases in Guinea-Bissau for imported fuel and goods, while segments of the military were trying to capitalize on the instability to increase their visibility in the political process. The leaders of Guinea-Bissau and Senegal continued to work to defuse the tensions, and a bilateral commission met in Senegal to discuss border issues. On 7 September, the Prime Ministers of the two countries met in Dakar and signed a document that called on the international community, through the United Nations, to institute mechanisms to complement their joint military patrolling of the border. Following that meeting, the borders were reopened.

In a related development, President Yala, in a letter to the Secretary-General of 5 September, formally requested that an international military observer force be established to serve along with contingents from the two countries.

The institutional and logistical weakness of the national police continued to hamper its ability to deal with the rising incidence of banditry. A mine-clearance programme was begun in the capital, with support from UNOGBIS, NGOs and other donors. Out of the 378 political and military prisoners detained since the events of 7 May 1999, only four were still being held by the time of the report. A number of released detainees had already been tried, while others were awaiting trial.

With assistance from UN agencies, the Government finalized an interim poverty reduction strategic paper to be submitted to the World Bank. Meanwhile, the World Bank had made available some $25 million to allow the Government to meet its budgetary obligations. An increase in the harvest of cashew nuts, the country's most important cash crop and its principal source of revenue, and proceeds from offshore oil drilling were expected to boost the country's revenue base.

Addressing the Security Council on 29 November [meeting 4238], the Secretary-General reported an armed showdown during the previous week between the head of the former military junta, General Ansoumane Mane, who was killed following the attempted coup d'état, and the elected President, which nearly plunged the country back into turmoil, underscoring the precariousness of the stability of the country. Post-conflict peace-building would require measures to prevent a relapse into a cycle of conflict and instability and needed to address the root causes of conflict, which included weak State institutions, a disgruntled and highly politicized army, endemic poverty, a crippling debt and an insecure internal and external environment. Addressing such a range of causes required, on the part of the Government and the international community, a long-term commitment and was a multidimensional process.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 29 November [meeting 4239], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/37 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council reiterates its support for the democratically elected Government of Guinea-Bissau, and underlines the fact that all parties concerned, especially the members of the former military junta, must continue to uphold the results of the elections and the principles of democracy, the rule of law and respect for human rights and civilian rule in the country.

The Council welcomes the return to peace, democracy and constitutional order in Guinea-Bissau, and urges all parties to work towards the consolidation of peace in a spirit of cooperation and reconciliation.

The Council notes with satisfaction the political progress made so far in Guinea-Bissau, and stresses the importance of continued cooperation by all parties towards the consolidation of sustainable peace in Guinea-Bissau. The Council calls upon the members of the former military junta to subordinate themselves fully to the civilian institutions and to withdraw from the political process. The Council underlines the fact that the primary responsibility for the consolidation of peace lies with all the parties and the people of Guinea-Bissau, and is concerned that renewed political unrest may be harmful to the consolidation of peace and the commitment of donors to support the reconstruction of Guinea-Bissau.

In this connection, the Council underlines the importance of an energetic continuation of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process and the need for an urgent and accurate census of all military forces. It recalls the statement by its President of 23 March 2000, and underlines the fact that timely funding for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration is a critical factor in the successful implementation of the peace process in Guinea-Bissau. The Council commends the support provided by the Bretton Woods institutions to the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process in Guinea-Bissau, and stresses the importance of the coordinated support of Member States for these activities.

The Council recalls the statement by its President of 29 December 1998, and recognizes that the challenges of the post-conflict situation in Guinea-Bissau require an integrated and consolidated approach by all actors to support the Government of Guinea-Bissau, inter alia, the United Nations system, the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, as well as bilateral donors. In this regard, the Council once again underlines the importance of ensuring a smooth transition from conflict management to post-conflict peace-building and reconstruction, which can be greatly enhanced through adequate coordination of the efforts of all. The Council stresses the special position of the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Guinea-Bissau in this regard.

The Council recognizes and commends the important role played by the Support Office towards helping to consolidate peace, democracy and the rule of law, including the strengthening of democratic institutions, and expresses its appreciation for the activities of the Office. In order to optimize the efforts of the Office, some degree of flexibility on the part of donors and financial institutions is required concerning issues such as debt relief, trade policies and internal budget constraints.

The Council reiterates that economic rehabilitation and reconstruction constitutes one of the major tasks facing Guinea-Bissau as it emerges from conflict, and that significant international assistance is indispensable for promoting sustainable development there. The Council underlines the fact that an integrated and coordinated approach is required for Guinea-Bissau, combining sustainable post-conflict peace-building and economic and development issues.

The Council calls upon Member States to provide generous support at the next round table scheduled for February 2001 in Geneva.

The Council acknowledges the relevance of the regional dimension. It welcomes the initiatives that the President of Guinea-Bissau and the President of Senegal have taken towards stabilization of their common border region. The Council encourages both Governments to explore further possibilities to achieve peace and stability along the regional borders. It commends the Economic Community of West African States and the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries for their continuing contributions towards the return of peace and democracy to Guinea-Bissau.

The Council expresses its intention to keep the situation in Guinea-Bissau under regular review and to coordinate with all actors in the post-conflict peace-building process.

Communication. In a 29 November statement [S/2000/1148], the EU Presidency expressed its pleasure that Guinea-Bissau's constitution had been upheld, despite the recent attempt at destabilization and the clashes that had cast a shadow over the country. It also expressed support for the legitimate authorities in their efforts to bring about national reconciliation and consolidate democracy, as well as concern that the programme of demobilization and restructuring of the armed forces should be brought to a successful conclusion. The EU reaffirmed its readiness to assist in the national reconstruction effort and called on the international community to join in that task.

Extension of UNOGBIS mandate

The Secretary-General, at the request of President Yala, extended the mandate of the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Guinea-Bissau (UNOGBIS) twice in 2000.

On 3 March [S/2000/201], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that Mr. Yala, while President-elect, had requested that the UNOGBIS mandate be extended for at least two years to help his Government cope with the post-electoral challenges. After a review of the request, the Secretary-General proposed that the mandate be extended for one year after the current one expired on 31 March 2000. The revised mandate would be: to support national efforts to maintain peace, democracy and the rule of law and towards reconciliation and tolerance; to encourage initiatives aimed at building confidence and maintaining friendly relations with its neighbours; to seek a programme of voluntary arms collection; to provide the political framework and leadership for harmonizing UN activities in the country; and to facilitate the mobilization of international political support and resources for rehabilitation, reconstruction and development. The Council, on 10 March [S/2000/202], took note of the Secretary-General's proposal.

In a report of 20 March to the Fifth Committee [A/C.5/54/52], the Secretary-General provided estimates for two political missions in the context of actions taken by the Security Council regarding good offices, preventive diplomacy and post-conflict missions. One of those missions was UNOGBIS, for which the proposed resource requirement was $2,723,300, to be charged against the programme budget for the 2000-2001 biennium.

The Secretary-General, in a 28 September letter to the Security Council [S/2000/941], proposed that the UNOGBIS mandate be extended again until the end of 2001 in the light of events in Guinea-Bissau and the situation in the entire subregion that continued to require the United Nations to play a constructive role in the consolidation of peace. The Council, on 3 October [S/2000/942], took note of the proposal.

Liberia

The United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Liberia (UNOL) continued in 2000 to work towards the consolidation of peace and democracy in cooperation with the Government and ECOWAS. In a June report on assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia [A/55/90-E/2000/81] (see p. 862), the Secretary-General said that the inauguration of an elected Government headed by President Charles G. Taylor in August 1997 had constituted a significant landmark in Liberia's transition from civil conflict to peace and resumption of normal development activities; however, two and a half years later, the path to sustainable peace and recovery remained uncertain, owing mainly to residual governance problems and inadequate external support to the country's reconstruction programme. The restoration of peace had not brought sustainable social and economic recovery, despite programmes initiated by the Government aimed at reconstruction, and supported by ECOWAS, the UN system and other donors.

The political and security situation was susceptible to subregional events, especially in neighbouring Sierra Leone, where significant progress in the peace process had been difficult to achieve and relations between members of the Revolutionary United Front, the defunct Armed Forces Revolutionary Council and some officials in the Liberian Government had been a source of regional tensions. ECOWAS intensified its efforts to help consolidate peace in the subregion, including support for the meeting of the heads of State of Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone (Bamako, Mali, 2 March), and that of their Foreign Ministers (Monrovia, Liberia, 18 March). The decision to revitalize the Mano River Union (MRU) institutions to deal with political, security and socio-economic concerns between the three States was among the outcomes.

Extension of UNOL

The Secretary-General, in a 28 September letter to the Security Council [S/2000/945], proposed that UNOL's mandate be extended for one year, until 31 December 2001. The proposal was made following his consultations with the Liberian Government, which was faced with a difficult political situation and instability in the subregion. An extension, he said, would enable UNOL to support the Government's efforts to consolidate democracy and promote national reconciliation and the rule of law, including the protection of human rights, and would allow UNOL to contribute to subregional efforts to normalize relations between Liberia and its neighbours. On 3 October [S/2000/946], the Council took note of his proposal.

Sanctions committee

The Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 985(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 355] to monitor sanctions against Liberia issued a report on 22 December covering its activities in 2000 [S/2000/1233]. The arms embargo was imposed by the Council by resolution 788(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 192].

The Committee said that Ugandan customs officials had informed it that they had seized a consignment of arms that were believed to have been destined for Monrovia in violation of the sanctions. The Committee noted that it did not have any specific monitoring mechanism to ensure the implementation of the arms embargo; therefore, it urged Member States and organizations to provide information pertinent to the arms embargo to the Committee.

Border incursions

In a 28 August letter to the Secretary-General [S/2000/844], the Liberian President complained of repeated violations of its territorial integrity by armed insurgents from the area of the Guinea-Sierra Leone borders (see also under "Sierra Leone"), including a recent attack emanating from Guinea, which was ongoing. Liberia called for a UN presence at those borders to monitor all crossing points.

At its fourth ministerial meeting (Abuja, Nigeria, 4 October), the ECOWAS Mediation and Security Council decided to deploy an ECOWAS observer mission on the border between Guinea and Liberia. Mali, informing the Security Council of that decision on 11 December [S/2000/1191], requested, on behalf of ECOWAS, UN assistance in the deployment of the mission, which could make a useful contribution towards ensuring security and stability in the West African sub-region.

Financing of UNOMIL

By decision 54/499 of 5 September, the General Assembly decided to include in the draft agenda of its fifty-fifth (2000) session the item on financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia, whose mandate ended in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 123]. On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458) and that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the item at that session (decision 55/455).

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

Following the Security Council's 1999 suspension of the sanctions imposed on the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya under resolution 748(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 55] and strengthened under resolution 883(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 101], a number of regional organizations sought in 2000 to have those sanctions completely lifted. The organizations proposed that action in view of the fact that the two Libyan suspects charged with the 1988 bombing of Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, were being tried under a Scottish court sitting in the Netherlands. The sanctions covered air links with, provision of military supplies to, restrictions on diplomatic and consular personnel of, and restrictions on suspected terrorist nationals of Libya.

Trial of Pan Am 103 bombing suspects

In 2000, the trial of two Libyan nationals suspected of the 1988 bombing of Pan Am flight 103 began in the Scottish court sitting in the Netherlands. Arrangements for the trial had been approved by the Security Council in resolution 1192(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 161]. The Secretary-General, in a letter of 25 April to the Council [S/2000/349], listed five international observers he had nominated to attend the trial, all of whom represented entities that had demonstrated an interest in the matter.

Suspension of sanctions

Libya, by an 8 March letter [S/2000/243], transmitted to the Security Council a report concerning the damage, in both material and human terms, that was caused by the sanctions imposed by the Council in resolutions 748(1992) and 883(1993) and maintained from 15 April 1992 until suspended on 5 April 1999. The report covered alleged damage sustained by the Libyan people in the areas of health, agriculture, livestock, communications, transport, industry, finance, trade and energy. Total financial losses were estimated at $33.6 billion.

In further letters to the Council, Libya transmitted a decision adopted by the OAU heads of State and Government (Lomé, Togo, 10-12 July) [S/2000/770] and a resolution adopted by the Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, 27-30 June) [S/2000/773], both calling for the total and final lifting of the sanctions against Libya. On 11 September [S/2000/864], Algeria, Egypt, Libya, Mauritania, Morocco, the Syrian Arab Republic and Tunisia transmitted a resolution adopted by the Council of the League of Arab States also calling for the lifting of the sanctions and urging the United States to engage in direct dialogue with Libya to resolve issues that might be preventing normalization of relations between them. In a 13 September letter [S/2000/881], Cameroon, Ghana, Tunisia, Uganda and Zimbabwe, as the five-member committee entrusted by OAU to follow up the question of Lockerbie, called on the Council to lift the sanctions immediately and irrevocably. Burkina Faso, Cuba, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, South Africa and Zimbabwe, as the Committee of Six of the Non-Aligned Movement, on 15 September [S/2000/906] expressed disappointment at the Council's failure to lift the sanctions and urged it to do so.

1986 attack against Libya

The General Assembly, by decision 55/430 of 14 December, deferred consideration of the item "Declaration of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity on the aerial and naval military attack against the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya by the present United States Administration in April 1986" and included it in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth (2001) session.

Sierra Leone

Throughout most of 2000, the situation in Sierra Leone was tense and critical until a ceasefire agreement was signed by the Government and the rebel group, the Revolutionary United Front (RUF), in November. Throughout the year, the United Nations attempted to assist in implementing the Lomé Peace Agreement, signed by the Government and RUF on 7 July 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 159].

At the beginning of the year, the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL) had an authorized force of 6,000 military personnel, with a mandate to work together with the forces of the ECOWAS Monitoring Group (ECOMOG) in implementing the Lomé Peace Agreement, to assist the Government in implementing its disarmament plan, to ensure freedom of movement of UN personnel, to monitor the ceasefire and to facilitate the delivery of humanitarian aid. As ECOMOG began to withdraw, the Security Council in February authorized an expansion of UNAMSIL to a maximum of 11,100 military personnel, subject to periodic review in the light of conditions on the ground and progress made in the peace process. UNAMSIL was later expanded again to 13,000 troops.

The situation deteriorated rapidly in May when RUF forces stepped up attacks against government forces and UNAMSIL and held hundreds of UNAMSIL personnel hostage. For months, RUF continued to attack UN peacekeepers and pro-Government forces and to detain UN personnel. By the end of July, nine peacekeepers had been killed and others were missing. During that month, the Council took action to limit the capacity of rebel groups to wage war by prohibiting the importation of rough diamonds from Sierra Leone, except those with a certificate of origin issued by the Government, and by strengthening the arms embargo to non-government forces. In August, the Council strengthened the UNAMSIL mandate to include new tasks of countering the threat of RUF attacks by responding robustly to hostile actions or threats of force, deploying at key strategic locations and main population centres, assisting the Government to extend State authority, and providing protection to civilians in areas of deployment.

Also in August, the Council proposed that a special court on Sierra Leone be established in order to bring to justice those responsible for serious crimes and atrocities against the people of Sierra Leone and UNAMSIL peacekeepers. The Secretary-General drew up proposals for such a court, which the Council was reviewing at the end of the year.

By the ceasefire agreement signed by the Government and RUF on 10 November, the two parties agreed that UNAMSIL would supervise and monitor the ceasefire and report any violations.

Initially, RUF displayed reluctance to follow through with its commitments, and the security situation remained precarious, but relatively calm, at the end of the year.

The Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Sierra Leone was Oluyemi Adeniji (Nigeria).

UNAMSIL

In response to resolution 1270(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 165], the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council every 45 days on UNAMSIL and on developments in Sierra Leone, including the status of the peace process. The UNAMSIL Force Commander until October was Major-General Vijay Kumar Jetley (India). He was succeeded by Lieutenant-General Daniel Ishmael Opande (Kenya).

Expansion of mission

Report of Secretary-General (January). In an 11 January report [S/2000/13], the second on UNAMSIL, the Secretary-General said that the situation in Sierra Leone had gone through a difficult period over the preceding two weeks as ECOMOG continued its withdrawal from several key locations in the provinces and the RUF Party (RUF) challenged the implementation of some of the aspects of the peace process. The resulting tensions subsided somewhat with the deployment of UNAMSIL troops to areas under RUF control. A rising level of lawlessness and banditry was reported, especially in and around Freetown and in Lungi and Port Loko, and security deteriorated in several disarmament centres. Cease-fire violations and incidents were apparently committed by former Sierra Leonean army elements based in the Occra Hills region.

Progress in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme had been very slow and was compounded by unrest among the 6,000 ex-combatants in the disarmament centres. Discharge from the camps had been delayed due to logistical problems. With ECOMOG's decision to repatriate its forces [YUN 1999, p. 167], the only alternative was to expand UNAMSIL in order to keep the peace process on track. In addition to its current mandate, the Secretary-General said, UNAMSIL would need to assume tasks that had been assigned to ECOMOG, such as guarding weapons and ammunition retrieved during the disarmament process and assisting in their destruction. The expanded force would also contribute to the free circulation of people and goods and delivery of humanitarian assistance along selected roads. In accordance with its current mandate as stipulated in resolution 1270(1999), the Mission would continue, within its capabilities, to afford protection to civilians under imminent threat of physical violence. In addition to its current mandate, the Secretary-General proposed that UNAMSIL operations should include: establishing a presence at key locations, in particular in Freetown, important intersections and major airports; providing additional security at disarmament, demobilization and reintegration sites and guarding weapons collected from ex-combatants; conducting mobile patrols and, if necessary, providing armed escorts to ensure the free flow of people, goods and humanitarian assistance along main thoroughfares; affirming, when necessary, through rapid deployment, UN commitment to the peace process; maintaining adequate reserves to ensure flexibility and reaction capabilities and reinforcing its positions or patrols when necessary; and maintaining close coordination with the Sierra Leonean law enforcement authorities.

The expanded force would require up to 11,100 military personnel, including 260 military observers, 12 infantry battalions, force and sector headquarters personnel, two military engineer companies, medical personnel, communications and transport units and an aviation element. The engineering companies would engage in demining and repair of roads and bridges. The new tasks falling to UNAMSIL would require robust rules of engagement for the entire force. Up to 60 UN civilian police advisers would assist the Government and local police in the restructuring and training of the Sierra Leonean police forces. They would assist in maintaining law and order at disarmament, demobilization and reintegration sites to make up for the role ECOMOG had played in that regard.

Overall, the situation remained difficult and progress in the implementation of the Lomé Agreement had been very slow. In addition, members of some armed groups continued to attack, rob and rape civilians in parts of the country, while humanitarian workers were denied access to large sections of the population. After more than eight years of brutal conflict, the Secretary-General stated, building trust and confidence would take time. It was crucial that the Government take the lead in developing a comprehensive plan for the restructuring of the police and armed forces so that they could safeguard the stability and security of the country once UNAMSIL began its withdrawal following the elections in 2001.

In a 21 January addendum [S/2000/13/Add.1] to his report, the Secretary-General outlined the financial implications of the recommended UNAMSIL expansion. For the period 15 February to 30 June 2000, additional requirements would be $110.8 million, based on the assumption of a phased induction of an additional 5,100 troops, 54 civilian police and 170 civilian international and local staff. On that basis, the total estimated cost of the UN peacekeeping operations in Sierra Leone from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 was projected at $310.8 million, inclusive of $200 million already appropriated by General Assembly resolution 54/241 A [YUN 1999, p. 168].

Sierra Leone, on 17 January [S/2000/31], endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendations, in particular the expansion of UNAMSIL.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

On 7 February [meeting 4099], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1289(2000). The draft [S/2000/34] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1171(1998) of 5 June 1998, 1181(1998) of 13 July 1998, 1231(1999) of 11 March 1999, 1260(1999) of 20 August 1999, 1265(1999) of 17 September 1999 and 1270(1999) of 22 October 1999 and other relevant resolutions and the statement by its President of 15 May 1999,

Affirming the commitment of all States to respect the sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity of Sierra Leone,

Recalling the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel of 9 December 1994,

Welcoming and encouraging efforts by the United Nations to sensitize peacekeeping personnel in the prevention and control of HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases in all its peacekeeping operations,

Taking note of the letter dated 17 January 2000 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs and International Cooperation of Sierra Leone to the President of the Security Council,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General of 23 September and 6 December 1999 and 11 January 2000 and the letter dated 23 December 1999 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council,

Determining that the situation in Sierra Leone continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

1. Notes that the deployment of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone as established by resolution 1270(1999) is in the process of completion;

2. Welcomes the efforts made by the Government of Sierra Leone, the leadership of the Revolutionary United Front Party of Sierra Leone, the Monitoring Group of the Economic Community of West African States and the Mission towards the implementation of the Peace Agreement signed in Lomé on 7 July 1999;

3. Reiterates its call upon the parties to fulfil all their commitments under the Peace Agreement to facilitate the restoration of peace, stability, national reconciliation and development in Sierra Leone, and stresses that the responsibility for the success of the peace process ultimately lies with the people and leaders of Sierra Leone;

4. Notes with concern that, despite the progress that has been made, the peace process thus far has been marred by the limited and sporadic participation in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, by the lack of progress on the release of abductees and child soldiers and by continued hostage-taking and attacks on humanitarian personnel, and expresses its conviction that the expansion of the Mission as provided for in paragraphs 9 to 12 below will create conditions under which all parties can work to ensure that the provisions of the Peace Agreement are implemented in full;

5. Also notes with concern the continuing human rights violations against the civilian population of Sierra Leone, and emphasizes that the amnesty extended under the Peace Agreement does not extend to such violations committed after the date of its signing;

6. Calls upon the parties and all others involved to take steps to ensure that the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme is fully implemented throughout the country, and in particular urges the Revolutionary United Front, the Civil Defence Force, the former Sierra Leone Armed Forces/Armed Forces Revolutionary Council and all other armed groups to participate fully in the programme and cooperate with all those responsible for its implementation;

7. Takes note of the decision of the Governments of Nigeria, Guinea and Ghana to withdraw their remaining Monitoring Group contingents from Sierra Leone, as reported in the letter from the Secretary-General dated 23 December 1999;

8. Expresses its appreciation to the Monitoring Group for its indispensable contribution towards the restoration of democracy and the maintenance of peace, security and stability in Sierra Leone, commends highly the forces and the Governments of its contributing States for their courage and sacrifice, and encourages all States to assist the contributing States further in meeting the costs they have incurred in making possible the deployment of the Monitoring Group forces in Sierra Leone;

9. Decides that the military component of the Mission shall be expanded to a maximum of 11,100 military personnel, including the 260 military observers already deployed, subject to periodic review in the light of conditions on the ground and progress made in the peace process, in particular in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, and takes note of paragraph 33 of the report of the Secretary-General of 11 January 2000;

10. Also decides, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, that the mandate of the Mission shall be revised to include the following additional tasks, to be performed by the Mission within its capabilities and areas of deployment, and in the light of conditions on the ground:

(a) To provide security at key locations and Government buildings, in particular in Freetown, and at important intersections and major airports, including the Lungi airport;

(b) To facilitate the free flow of people, goods and humanitarian assistance along specified thoroughfares;

(c) To provide security in and at all sites of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme;

(d) To coordinate with and assist, in common areas of deployment, the Sierra Leone law enforcement authorities in the discharge of their responsibilities;

(e) To guard weapons, ammunition and other military equipment collected from ex-combatants and to assist in their subsequent disposal or destruction; authorizes the Mission to take the necessary action to fulfil the additional tasks set out above, and affirms that, in the discharge of its mandate, the Mission may take the necessary action to ensure the security and freedom of movement of its personnel and, within its capabilities and areas of deployment, afford protection to civilians under imminent threat of physical violence, taking into account the responsibilities of the Government of Sierra Leone;

11. Decides further that the mandate of the Mission, as revised, shall be extended for a period of six months from the date of adoption of the present resolution;

12. Authorizes the increases in the civil affairs, civilian police, administrative and technical personnel of the Mission proposed by the Secretary-General in his report of 11 January 2000;

13. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General, as indicated in his report of 11 January 2000, to establish within the Mission a landmine action office responsible for awareness training of Mission personnel and for the coordination of mine action activities of non-governmental organizations and humanitarian agencies operating in Sierra Leone;

14. Stresses the importance of a smooth transition between the Monitoring Group and the Mission for the successful implementation of the Peace Agreement and the stability of Sierra Leone, and in that regard urges all those concerned to consult over the timing of troop movements and withdrawals;

15. Reiterates the importance of the safety, security and freedom of movement of United Nations and associated personnel, notes that the Government of Sierra Leone and the Revolutionary United Front have agreed in the Peace Agreement to provide guarantees in this regard, and calls upon all parties in Sierra Leone to respect fully the status of United Nations and associated personnel;

16. Reiterates its request to the Government of Sierra Leone to conclude a status-of-forces agreement with the Secretary-General within thirty days of the adoption of the present resolution, and recalls that pending the conclusion of such an agreement the model status-of-forces agreement dated 9 October 1990 should apply provisionally;

17. Reiterates the continued need to promote peace and national reconciliation and to foster accountability and respect for human rights in Sierra Leone, and urges the Government of Sierra Leone, specialized agencies, other multilateral organizations, civil society and Member States to accelerate their efforts to establish the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, the Human Rights Commission and the Commission for the Consolidation of Peace as fully-functioning and effective institutions, as provided for under the Peace Agreement;

18. Emphasizes the importance of the exercise by the Government of Sierra Leone of full control over the exploitation of gold, diamonds and other resources for the benefit of the people of the country and in accordance with article VII, paragraph 6, of the Peace Agreement, and, to that end, calls for the early and effective operation of the Commission of the Management of Strategic Resources, National Reconstruction and Development;

19. Welcomes the contributions that have been made to the multi-donor trust fund established by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development to finance the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process, and urges all States and international and other organizations that have not yet done so to contribute generously to the fund so that the process is adequately financed and the provisions of the Peace Agreement can be fully implemented;

20. Underlines the ultimate responsibility of the Government of Sierra Leone for the provision of adequate security forces in the country, calls upon it, in that regard, to take urgent steps towards the establishment of professional and accountable national police and armed forces, and stresses the importance to this objective of generous support and assistance from the international community;

21. Reiterates the continued need for urgent and substantial assistance for the people of Sierra Leone, as well as for sustained and generous assistance for the longer-term tasks of peace-building, reconstruction, economic and social recovery and development in Sierra Leone, and urges all States and international and other organizations to provide such assistance as a priority;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to report to the Council every forty-five days to provide, inter alia, assessments of security conditions on the ground so that troop levels and the tasks to be performed by the Mission can be kept under review, as indicated in the report of the Secretary-General of 11 January 2000;

23. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (March). In his third report on UNAMSIL, issued on 7 March [S/2000/186], the Secretary-General said that progress had been made in the establishment and functioning of the various bodies envisaged in the Lomé Peace Agreement. The Commission for the Consolidation of Peace, an implementation organ, under the chairmanship of Lieutenant Colonel Johnny Paul Koroma, had set up its offices. The 16-member Constitutional Review Committee had also begun its work and was expected to report to President Ahmad Tejan Kabbah in the near future. Parliament had begun confirmation hearings for nominees to serve on other commissions. Mr. Koroma, leader of the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC), had resigned from the Sierra Leone Army, but remained leader of his party. However, his faction would be dissolved on the reinstatement of ex-Sierra Leone Army elements into the current armed forces. The Ministry of Defence was preparing a military reintegration plan that would screen ex-combatants to decide whether they would be accepted into the new army or would enter the demobilization programme.

On 24 January, the ECOWAS Chairman convened the second meeting of the Joint Implementation Committee. The Government of Sierra Leone was represented by the Attorney-General while RUF was represented by its Secretary-General, Momoh Rogers. Mr. Koroma attended in his capacity as Chairman of the Commission for the Consolidation of Peace. The Committee adopted recommendations aimed at accelerating the implementation of the Lomé Agreement, especially regarding the disarmament process, the ceasefire agreement and unhindered humanitarian access. It demanded that UN troops be allowed to carry out their mandate without restrictions and that the weapons confiscated from some of the contingents by the armed groups be returned. Progress in disarmament had been slow, particularly in the northern and eastern parts of the country, and rebel groups continued to interfere with humanitarian activities and UNAMSIL patrols and to harass the civilian population in those areas. During the reporting period, RUF, including its leader, Foday Sankoh, made hostile public statements about UNAMSIL.

The security situation remained tense and volatile, although there were some improvements, particularly in the Lungi area where UNAMSIL was patrolling extensively. In other areas, such as the Occra Hills and the Northern and Eastern Provinces, ceasefire violations included ambushes against civilians, illegal roadblocks, RUF troop movements and obstruction of peacekeeping operations. There were serious incidents involving UNAMSIL and former rebel elements or combatants, including RUF elements seizing weapons and vehicles from a convoy of Guinean troops, ex-army combatants seizing weapons, and RUF fighters stopping a convoy and blocking a UN landing strip.

The strength of UNAMSIL reached 7,391 military personnel as at 1 March. With the deployment of UNAMSIL military units, access for humanitarian aid had improved, but delays in disarmament and continuing RUF resistance to the deployment of UN troops continued to slow humanitarian access to 2.6 million war-affected Sierra Leoneans in the Northern and Eastern Provinces. The human rights situation remained a cause for serious concern, in particular in the Port Loko area where looting, house burnings, harassment and abduction of civilians, rape and sexual abuse continued, mostly perpetrated by ex-army elements from the surrounding Occra Hills.

The Secretary-General stated that one of the Mission's main priorities remained the speedy establishment of a credible peacekeeping presence throughout the country to create the necessary climate of confidence and security conditions for the implementation of the peace process. The Sierra Leonean parties, in particular RUF, needed to cooperate with UNAMSIL and provide unrestricted access to all parts of the country. The main steps ahead in the peace process were in four areas—the early disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of all ex-combatants; the extension of State authority, including law enforcement, throughout the country; national reconciliation and democratization; and the improvement of Sierra Leone's capacity to ensure its own security. Progress would require commitment by the Government, RUF and other Sierra Leonean parties, and on the part of the international community.

The Secretary-General noted that serious doubts remained about the commitment of RUF to the peace process and expressed concern about the often negative and confusing approach taken by Mr. Sankoh to key elements of the peace process and the role entrusted to the United Nations. Also, the continuing ceasefire violations perpetrated against civilians and peacekeepers could not be tolerated by the international community, and the obstruction of UNAMSIL patrols and deployments was unacceptable.

Attacks against UNAMSIL

The situation in Sierra Leone erupted in a new crisis on 1 May and the peace process suffered a very serious setback as the result of unprovoked armed attacks on UN peacekeepers by RUF fighters, the detention of several hundred UN personnel (the great majority of them Zambians), and the destruction of disarmament and demobilization camps by RUF fighters. UNAMSIL increased in strength to 9,495 (over a third contributed by Nigeria), replacing ECOMOG completely by mid-May.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (4 May)

On 4 May [meeting 4134], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/14 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses its grave concern at the outbreak of violence in Sierra Leone in recent days. It condemns in the strongest terms the armed attacks perpetrated by the Revolutionary United Front against the forces of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone, and its continued detention of a large number of United Nations and other international personnel. The Council expresses its outrage at the killing of a number of United Nations peacekeepers from the Kenyan battalion and its deep concern for the troops of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone who have been wounded or remain unaccounted for.

The Council demands that the Revolutionary United Front end its hostile actions, release immediately and unharmed all detained United Nations and other international personnel, cooperate in establishing the whereabouts of those unaccounted for and comply fully with the terms of the Peace Agreement signed in Lomé on 7 July 1999.

The Council considers Mr. Foday Sankoh, as leader of the Revolutionary United Front, to be responsible for those actions, which are unacceptable and in clear violation of their obligations under the Peace Agreement. The Council condemns the fact that Mr. Sankoh has deliberately failed to fulfil his responsibility to cooperate with the Mission in bringing these incidents to an end. The Council believes that he must be held accountable, together with the perpetrators, for their actions.

The Council commends the forces of the Mission and the Force Commander for the courage, resolve and sacrifice they have shown in attempting to bring this situation under control. It expresses its full support for their continued efforts to this end, and for the overall fulfilment of their mandate. It calls upon all States in a position to do so to assist the Mission in this regard. The Council also expresses its support for the regional and other international efforts under way to resolve the crisis, including by the Economic Community of West African States.

The Council will continue to monitor the situation closely, and consider further action, as necessary.

On 10 May [S/2000/408], the Group of African States requested an open emergency meeting of the Council to address the situation in Sierra Leone. That request, forwarded by Eritrea, was supported by separate requests on the next day by Mali [S/2000/409] and Namibia [S/2000/410].

The Council held an open meeting on 11 May [meeting 4139] at which members and other States expressed their views on expanding UNAMSIL and revising its mandate. Kenya [S/2000/418] and South Africa [S/2000/417] forwarded statements that they had intended to make at that meeting but were unable to do so.

The Secretary-General informed the Council on 17 May [S/2000/446] that the UNAMSIL authorized strength of 11,100 would be exceeded in the following several days as reinforcements arrived. He suggested that the Council consider authorizing the interim expansion of the Mission pending his report and recommendations regarding the situation in Sierra Leone.

Report of Secretary-General (May). The Secretary-General stated in his fourth (19 May) report on UNAMSIL [S/2000/455] that the attacks on UN peacekeepers overshadowed the limited progress achieved in the implementation of the Lomé Peace Agreement through a series of meetings of the parties and international stakeholders. Among those meetings was one convened by President Kabbah on 9 March, at which all faction leaders agreed to grant UNAMSIL access to all parts of the country; to relinquish territory they occupied and allow the Government to have full control; and to allow disarmament to take place. Despite some movement towards those goals, RUF fighters continued to obstruct UNAMSIL deployment in the Kono District, the number of RUF ex-combatants reporting for disarmament remained very low and some checkpoints operated by rebel forces remained in place. A donors' conference was convened in London on 27 March to affirm political support for the peace process and mobilize resources. New pledges totalling $70 million were made. The conference called on the rebels to end human rights abuses, to disarm their combatants, to release women and children still detained, and to allow access for humanitarian assistance to all areas of the country. Speaking before the Sierra Leone Parliament on 15 March, Mr. Sankoh said that he was committed to the peace process and claimed he was ready to work with Parliament.

During the reporting period, there were unconfirmed reports of the formation of a new faction by a former RUF commander, Sam Bockarie, who was said to be engaged in recruiting and training of rebels in Liberia. Liberia denied those reports. On 22 March, Sierra Leone arrested 16 persons suspected of organizing a group of dissidents to invade Liberia.

Prior to the serious attacks on UN peacekeepers which erupted on 1 May, the overall security situation had improved gradually; however, in the areas controlled by rebel groups, particularly RUF and AFRC/ex-army strongholds, the security situation remained precarious and there were several serious incidents, some involving UN peacekeepers. Those attacks included firing by RUF and ex-army forces on the Kenyan and Ghanaian battalions of UNAMSIL. A soldier of the Nigerian contingent was shot and seriously wounded when he refused to surrender his weapon to a large group of men (presumably ex-army personnel).

The Secretary-General noted some progress towards the objectives he had outlined in his previous report. The disarmament and demobilization process, which had been making slow but steady progress, came to a standstill after hostilities erupted early in May. As at 15 May, some 24,042 ex-combatants had been disarmed: 4,949 from RUF, 10,055 from AFRC/ex-army and 9,038 from the Civil Defence Forces. The number (10,840) and quality of weapons surrendered remained an issue of concern. On 17 April, the four disarmament, demobilization and reintegration camps became operational. An effort towards democratization was made on 20 March when the National Electoral Commission was sworn into office and subsequently began work. Although there was some improvement in the functioning of the police force, the restructuring process was proceeding slowly.

The situation reached a crisis point on 1 May when RUF ex-combatants approached the disarmament centre in Makeni, made threatening demands and detained seven UNAMSIL members. At Magburaka, armed RUF ex-combatants surrounded the UNAMSIL team site. The next day, when RUF tried to disarm UNAMSIL troops at Magburaka, the troops resisted. The exchange of fire, which lasted all day, resulted in three soldiers of the Kenyan battalion being injured. RUF also destroyed and looted the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration facilities at Magburaka and Makeni. Also on 2 May, a UN helicopter and its crew were detained by RUF, as was a 23-man unit of the Indian battalion. Some 400 UN troops were believed to have fallen into the hands of RUF within the next few days. From 2 May, several clashes took place between RUF and UNAMSIL troops, as well as elements of the Sierra Leone Army and the Civil Defence Forces at several locations. On 9 May, the Indian quick reaction company and a Kenyan company, which had been surrounded at Magburaka, broke through RUF lines and managed to reach UN positions at Mile 91. On the same day, the remaining troops of the Kenyan battalion broke out of Makeni and managed to reach areas controlled by the ex-army at Kabala and Bumbuna. Through negotiations, other detainees were released and, as at 15 May, RUF held 352 UN staff, comprising 297 Zambian soldiers, 29 Kenyans, 23 Indians and 3 military observers. Fifteen UN soldiers remained missing.

A pivotal factor in restoring stability was the arrival of United Kingdom troops on 7 May and of a substantial British naval presence offshore a week later. The deployment of British troops at Lungi airport and in Freetown had as its objective the evacuation of United Kingdom nationals but it also enabled UNAMSIL to redeploy troops east of Freetown; an additional stabilizing factor was the arrival on 12 May of 300 Jordanian troops.

Following the outbreak of hostilities, the Secretary-General contacted leaders in the region to seek their assistance. Representatives of several Governments were in touch with Mr. Sankoh to secure the release of the detainees. The Special Representative also met with Mr. Sankoh and demanded the release of all detained UNAMSIL troops. On 8 May, a crowd gathered outside Mr. Sankoh's house to protest the RUF attacks. After violence broke out and several people were killed, Mr. Sankoh disappeared with some of his body guards but was apprehended on 17 May.

On 9 May, a summit meeting of the ECOWAS Committee on Sierra Leone, consisting of Burkina Faso, Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, Guinea, Liberia, Mali, Nigeria and Togo, met in Abuja, Nigeria. The summit condemned RUF, called for the release of the detainees, and warned RUF leaders that they could be tried for war crimes if they continued to flout the Lomé Peace Agreement. A meeting of the Joint Implementation Committee was held in Freetown on 13 May [S/2000/494], chaired by the Foreign Minister of Mali and attended by representatives of several countries, OAU and UNAMSIL. Mr. Koroma attended but RUF was not represented. It was agreed that a dual approach would be pursued, namely, by exerting diplomatic pressure on RUF and displaying military strength by enhancing UNAMSIL capabilities. The meeting condemned the taking of UNAMSIL hostages by RUF and the murder of some UNAMSIL personnel and of innocent civilians by RUF.

As at 15 May, there had been few indications that RUF leaders were willing to change their course of action, although some individual members had conveyed their willingness to disarm. At the same time, RUF continued to detain hundreds of UNAMSIL personnel and also to attack UNAMSIL and Sierra Leonean troops at various locations in the country.

The Secretary-General made a number of recommendations for immediate measures. Stressing the need to maintain political pressure on RUF, as well as a strong military posture, including on the part of the United Nations, to deter RUF from pursuing the military option, he called for the immediate reinforcement of UNAMSIL. In particular, the Mission should enhance its capability to defend its positions at Lungi airport, on the Freetown peninsula and other locations in the western and southern parts of the country. The immediate reinforcement would bring the military strength of UNAMSIL from its current strength of 9,250 to 13,000, including 260 military observers. The Mission should be further expanded in order to stabilize the situation in the country. The first priority would be the consolidation of UNAMSIL units at strong positions and strategic locations to ensure the protection of the civilian population in Freetown and the security of government institutions, as well as maintaining a sufficient strength in the areas under government control to deter and, if necessary, repel further attacks by RUF. UNAMSIL would then seek to stabilize the situation and assist the Government to restore law and order in the areas outside RUF control. Once strengthened, UNAMSIL would begin to gradually deploy forward to secure strategic locations in the western and southern parts of the country. To achieve that goal, UNAMSIL would need additional battalions and logistics, with a total military strength of up to 16,500 military personnel and an increase in the civilian administrative staff. To ensure proper control and unity of command, the Secretary-General believed that all international forces in Sierra Leone, with the exception of those sent for a brief period for strictly national purposes, should be integrated into UNAMSIL. He also suggested that UNAMSIL should establish a countrywide public information campaign and set up its own radio station.

Of immediate concern were the safe return of all UN personnel being detained by RUF, an end to the hostile acts of the RUF fighters, and their cooperation in retrieving the dead, wounded and missing. In addition, the Secretary-General suggested that the Security Council consider strengthening the sanctions regime, including measures to prevent RUF commanders from reaping the benefits of their illegal exploitation of mineral resources, in particular diamonds. The international community should hold Mr. Sankoh accountable for his actions and those of RUF, and for the safety and well-being of those detained. Political efforts and humanitarian aid to assist the people should be supplemented by credible military force. Ultimately, a lasting resolution of the crisis could be found only through political means; it could not be imposed by military force alone, nor could a solution be the result of international involvement alone.

The United Nations needed to draw lessons from its experiences in Sierra Leone, the Secretary-General stated. Deployed as a peace-keeping force, it was forced into actual combat with one of the parties that had pledged to cooperate with it. In the course of the ensuing events, problems emerged within the Mission, including with regard to command and control, cohesiveness of the force, the flow of information, equipment and preparedness of troops, and coordination between and within UNAMSIL components.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (19 May)

On 19 May [meeting 4145], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1299(2000). The draft [S/2000/449] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions and the statements by its President on the situation in Sierra Leone,

Having considered the letter dated 17 May 2000 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council, and awaiting his next report,

Convinced that the deterioration in security conditions on the ground necessitates the rapid reinforcement of the military component of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone to provide the mission with additional resources to fulfil its mandate,

1. Decides that the military component of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone shall be expanded to a maximum of 13,000 military personnel, including the 260 military observers already deployed;

2. Expresses its appreciation to all States which, in order to expedite the rapid reinforcement of the Mission, have accelerated the deployment of their troops to the Mission, made available additional personnel and offered logistical, technical and other forms of military assistance, and calls upon all those in a position to do so to provide further support;

3. Decides, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, that the restrictions set out in paragraph 2 of its resolution 1171(1998) of 5 June 1998 do not apply to the sale or supply of arms and related materiel for the sole use in Sierra Leone of those Member States cooperating with the Mission and the Government of Sierra Leone;

4. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications (May). In May, Sierra Leone expressed its views on the situation in a series of letters to the Security Council [S/2000/373, S/2000/380, S/2000/391, S/2000/401, S/2000/433, S/2000/434, S/2000/469, S/2000/470]. Warning on 2 May that violence perpetrated by ex-combatants against peacekeepers was causing concern, Sierra Leone reminded the Council of UNAMSIL's mandate to protect the people of Sierra Leone if and when they were under threat of physical violence. The national Parliament, on 4 May, issued a resolution in which it, among other things, called on UNAMSIL to disarm all combatants unwilling to hand in their weapons. On 8 May, President Kabbah issued an appeal to the people of his country to desist from violence; on 14 May he appealed to RUF fighters to lay down their arms. Sierra Leone issued its comments on the meeting of the Joint Implementation Committee on the Lomé Peace Agreement (Freetown, 13 May), in which it criticized the assault on UN peacekeepers and put forward proposals for returning to the peace process. On 19 May, the Government confirmed that it had custody of Mr. Sankoh and it issued a list of conditions that needed to be met by RUF in order for the Lomé Agreement to continue to be implemented. A government statement of 23 May denied claims by Liberia that Sierra Leone forces were attacking RUF positions inside Liberia.

Some regional organizations transmitted letters criticizing the attacks against UNAMSIL. On 5 May [S/2000/404], the EU Presidency, condemning actions by RUF and expressing its concern at reports of the killing of UNAMSIL personnel, called on RUF, in particular its leader, Mr. Sankoh, to cease all such attacks, to release all detainees and to implement their commitments under the Lomé Peace Agreement. On 9 May [S/2000/441], Mali transmitted the communiqué of the summit of the ECOWAS heads of State members of the Committee on Sierra Leone of the Lomé Peace Agreement (Abuja, 9 May). The Committee condemned the action of the RUF fighters who had taken UNAMSIL soldiers hostage. They approved the mandate given by the ECOWAS Chairman and by the heads of State of the Mano River Union to the President of Liberia, Charles Taylor, to seek the release of the hostages and the resumption of the peace process. Algeria, on 26 May [S/2000/492], forwarded a communiqué issued by the OAU Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution, in which it condemned the RUF action, called for the transformation of UNAMSIL's mandate from peacekeeping to peace enforcement, and expressed support for the Secretary-General's proposal to broaden the sanctions against RUF, including measures to counter the illegal trade in diamonds from Sierra Leone.

On 5 May [S/2000/400], Burkina Faso expressed its indignation and concern at the developments in Sierra Leone, particularly the attacks on UN peacekeeping forces that had resulted in the death of several UNAMSIL peacekeepers and the abduction of many more.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 21 June [meeting 4163], the Security Council held a private meeting with a delegation of the ECOWAS Mediation and Security Council Committee of Six on Sierra Leone. In an official communiqué issued after the meeting, Council members and the ECOWAS Committee condemned the continued detention by RUF of UN peacekeepers of the Indian contingent of UNAMSIL and the denial of freedom of movement to UN personnel in the east of the country. They demanded the immediate and unconditional release of all UN personnel detained or surrounded, and recalled the ECOWAS mandate given to the President of Liberia to obtain the release of the remaining hostages. They expressed concern about the humanitarian situation in Sierra Leone and called on all parties to ensure unhindered access of humanitarian assistance to those in need. Council members informed ECOWAS of ongoing discussions within the Council on draft resolutions concerning the strengthening of UNAMSIL, the control of diamond exports and arms imports and on the provision of justice.

Communications. In June and July, Sierra Leone submitted four letters to the Security Council. In a government statement of 1 June [S/2000/524], it expressed pleasure at the release of all the abducted UN peacekeepers by RUF and acknowledged the role played by Liberian President Taylor in achieving that objective. The Government continued to demand that RUF return all the weapons and equipment seized from the peacekeepers and release all abducted Sierra Leoneans. In July, however, the Secretary-General reported that hundreds of UNAMSIL peacekeepers were still held hostage by RUF (see above). On 17 July [S/2000/698], Sierra Leone welcomed the rescue of UN peacekeepers who had been held by RUF in Kailahun.

President Kabbah, in a statement of 22 June [S/2000/620 & Corr.1], criticized RUF for not abiding by the Lomé Agreement and mounting attacks against the Government. Although the Government in principle remained committed to the Agreement, it reserved the right not to be bound by all its provisions in view of the RUF action; it would set its own priorities regarding implementation, with security and humanitarian provisions of primary concern.

Another statement by the President [S/2000/727] was made on 22 July at the ceremony marking the completion of a training session for Sierra Leone armed forces under the United Kingdom short-term training programme.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 17 July [meeting 4173], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/24 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses its full support for the decision taken by the Secretary-General to mount a military operation by the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone to relieve its surrounded peacekeepers and military observers at Kailahun. It expresses its satisfaction at the successful outcome of the operation, with the minimum of casualties among United Nations personnel. The Council expresses its admiration for the professionalism, determination and robustness displayed by all the Mission forces involved in this difficult and dangerous operation, and for the leadership and skill of the Force Commander, General Jetley, under whose personal command it was carried out.

The Council believes that the hostile stance taken by the Revolutionary United Front towards Mission personnel at Kailahun had become intolerable. It fully concurs with the assessment of the Secretary-General in this regard. It is firmly of the view that, after the denial of freedom of movement by the Front for over two months, the exhaustion of intensive diplomatic and political efforts and the recent decision by the Front to impede the resupply to Kailahun, the Force Commander, under those circumstances, had no choice but to take resolute action to restore the security and freedom of movement of Mission personnel, as authorized under the mandate of the Mission.

The Council pays tribute to the forces of the Indian contingent of the Mission, which took the lead in the execution of the operation. The Council expresses its profound condolences to the family of the Indian sergeant, Krishna Kumar, who gave his life in the cause of peace. It also expresses its sympathies to those who were wounded. The Council commends equally the critical role played by the Nigerian and Ghanaian contingents that provided essential flank and rear support, without which the operation would not have been possible, as well as the contribution of the force as a whole. The Council also expresses its appreciation to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the valuable logistical support provided. The cooperation, coherence and sense of common purpose displayed by all concerned should be considered an example of the very best in United Nations multilateral peace-keeping.

The Council believes that there is now a firm foundation on which the Mission can build as it continues to implement its mandate and work towards a lasting peaceful settlement to the conflict in Sierra Leone. While noting these positive developments, the Council recognizes that there is still much to be done, and expresses its full support to the Mission in its efforts to implement its mandate.

Report of Secretary-General (July). In response to Security Council resolution 1289 (2000), the Secretary-General on 31 July issued his fifth report on UNAMSIL [S/2000/751]. Since his previous report of 19 May, the situation in Sierra Leone had remained tense and volatile under conditions that resembled civil war. RUF continued to attack UN peacekeepers and pro-Government forces and, until recently, to detain and surround UN personnel. During the reporting period, nine peacekeepers, seven from Nigeria, one from India and one from Jordan, were killed, and another eight soldiers were still missing. The programme for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration came to a standstill as various pro-Government groups rearmed and formed an alliance to fight RUF. President Kabbah announced in June that his Government intended to pursue a two-track approach, based on both military and political action, to end the hostilities, and would apply the terms of the Lomé Agreement selectively. The civil society of Sierra Leone and the Commission for the Consolidation of Peace, headed by Johnny Paul Koroma, were also engaged in exploring ways to restart the peace process. The various groups within RUF reportedly lacked unanimity of views on its strategy and leadership. Owing to the resumption of hostilities, no further progress was made in efforts to restore civil authority throughout the country.

On 12 June, President Kabbah requested UN assistance to establish a special court to try Foday Sankoh and other senior RUF members for crimes against the people of Sierra Leone and for taking UN peacekeepers as hostages. The UN Office of Legal Affairs was researching the request to assess the needs and requirements of the local justice system.

ECOWAS remained engaged in seeking a solution to the crisis. At a summit (Abuja, 28-29 May), it established a six-member committee to facilitate a cessation of hostilities and to insist on a return by the parties to positions they held at the signing of the Lomé Agreement. Additional troops from ECOWAS States would be made available to participate in UNAMSIL, whose mandate, as recommended by ECOWAS, should be revised to include peace-enforcement elements. On 21 June, a Committee delegation met with the Security Council and submitted an eight-point plan to resolve the crisis [S/2000/631] (see above). A meeting of the ECOWAS Defence and Security Commission (Accra, Ghana, 19-20 July) discussed modalities for deploying additional troops for UNAMSIL and commended UNAMSIL for extracting its troops surrounded by RUF at Kailahun and called on those countries that had promised to do so to equip troops from ECOWAS countries serving in UNAMSIL. The ongoing hostilities aggravated tensions between Sierra Leone and Liberia, which alleged that Sierra Leone was supporting Liberian dissidents and accused Guinea of supporting the recent incursion by dissidents into northern Liberia. Guinea denied those accusations. For its part, Sierra Leone alleged that Liberia was supporting and arming RUF.

The volatile security situation was marked by continuing RUF attacks on UNAMSIL and on an alliance of pro-Government forces, which consisted of the Sierra Leone Army (SLA), the Civil Defence Force and some of the forces loyal to AFRC/ex-SLA. In the Freetown and Lungi peninsulas, the situation was relatively stable owing to the deployment of UNAMSIL, pro-Government forces and the troops deployed by the United Kingdom at Lungi. There were, however, a few serious incidents in Freetown and other locations during which UN peacekeepers were killed and injured. On 22 July, UNAMSIL launched a successful military operation to remove illegal checkpoints and to clear the Occra Hills area of armed groups. Efforts were made at all levels to seek the release of UN personnel, resulting in the release of 461 UN peacekeepers who were held by RUF in Kono district. Liberian President Taylor played an important role in the release of those peacekeepers. A UNAMSIL military operation on 15 and 16 July, conducted by troops from the Indian contingent with support provided by units from Ghana and Nigeria and logistical support by the United Kingdom, successfully removed the UN personnel from Kailahun. One Indian soldier was killed during the operation. The troop strength of UNAMSIL was 12,428 as at 22 July.

The disarmament and demobilization process remained at a standstill. Two demobilization centres were destroyed by RUF rebels and operations were suspended at four of the remaining seven centres.

Following the resumption of hostilities in Sierra Leone, more than 150,000 new internally displaced persons were registered by aid agencies, bringing the total number to 310,000. More than 1.5 million war-affected individuals were also in need of assistance, 1 million of whom were in inaccessible areas.

As the Secretary-General had recommended, the UNAMSIL public information unit was strengthened, with Radio UNAMSIL continuing as the focal point of the Mission's public information strategy.

The Secretary-General sent an assessment team to Sierra Leone to review UNAMSIL operations (2-8 June). The team found a lack of cohesion within the Mission and other shortcomings; in particular, it found that there was no commonly shared understanding of the mandate and rules of engagement, as well as other problems in command and control. There were also serious problems related to internal communication and coordination between the civilian and military components, as well as within each component. The team noted a lack of integrated planning and logistic support as well as insufficient coordination and sharing of information with UN agencies and others. Some military units showed a lack of training and others had shortfalls in equipment. Public information efforts and relations with the public could be improved. Many of those problems had since been addressed.

The Secretary-General reported that the threat posed by RUF remained a matter of grave concern as it had shown no credible sign that it was ready to resume the peace process and had continued to attack UNAMSIL and pro-Government forces. To achieve the goals of a durable peace, the restoration of government authority throughout the country, the establishment of national institutions, and democratic elections and respect for human rights, efforts should be focused on a political solution based on a robust and credible international military presence. The Secretary-General recommended, therefore, that the UNAMSIL mandate, due to expire on 7 August, be extended for another six months.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

On 4 August [meeting 4184], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1313(2000). The draft [S/2000/764] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the situation in Sierra Leone,

Condemning in the strongest terms the armed attacks against and the detention of the personnel of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone, and commending the Mission and the Force Commander for the recent resolute action taken in response to the continuing threat to the mission from the Revolutionary United Front and other armed elements in Sierra Leone,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General of 19 May 2000 and 31 July 2000,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone until 8 September 2000;

2. Considers that the widespread and serious violations of the Peace Agreement signed in Lomé on 7 July 1999 by the Revolutionary United Front since early May 2000 constitute a breakdown of the prior, generally permissive environment based on the Peace Agreement and predicated on the cooperation of the parties, that until security conditions have been established allowing progress towards the peaceful resolution of the conflict in Sierra Leone there will continue to be a threat to the Mission and the security of the State of Sierra Leone, and that in order to counter that threat, the structure, capability, resources and mandate of the Mission require appropriate strengthening;

3. Expresses its intention, in this context, taking into account the views of the Government of Sierra Leone, the Economic Community of West African States and the troop-contributing countries, to strengthen the mandate of the Mission as established in resolutions 1270(1999) of 22 October 1999 and 1289(2000) of 7 February 2000 with the following priority tasks:

(a) To maintain the security of the Lungi and Freetown peninsulas, and their major approach routes;

(b) To deter and, where necessary, decisively counter the threat of attack by the Revolutionary United Front by responding robustly to any hostile actions or threat of imminent and direct use of force;

(c) To deploy progressively in a coherent operational structure and in sufficient numbers and density at key strategic locations and main population centres and, in coordination with the Government of Sierra Leone, to assist, through its presence and within the framework of its mandate, the efforts of the Government of Sierra Leone to extend state authority, restore law and order and further stabilize the situation progressively throughout the entire country, and, within its capabilities and areas of deployment, to afford protection to civilians under threat of imminent physical violence;

(d) To patrol actively on strategic lines of communication, specifically main access routes to the capital in order to dominate ground, ensure freedom of movement and facilitate the provision of humanitarian assistance;

(e) To assist in the promotion of the political process leading, inter alia, to a renewed disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, where possible;

4. Considers that, in order to allow the restructuring of the force and provide the additional capability required for the achievement of the priority tasks set out in paragraph 3 above, the military component of the Mission should be reinforced through accelerated troop rotations, as appropriate, and with, inter alia, further aviation and maritime assets, a strengthened force reserve, upgraded communications and specialist combat and logistic support assets;

5. Recognizes that the offensive by the Revolutionary United Front against the Mission since May 2000 revealed serious inherent weaknesses in the structure, command and control and resources of the Mission, as referred to in paragraph 54 of the report of the Secretary-General of 31 July 2000, reflecting the findings of the United Nations assessment mission that visited Sierra Leone from 2 to 8 June 2000, welcomes the recommendations made and action already taken to address those deficiencies, and requests the Secretary-General to take further urgent steps to implement those recommendations, to improve the performance and capacity of the mission;

6. Stresses that the successful achievement of the objectives of the mission, including the priority tasks set out in paragraph 3 above, will depend on the provision to the Mission of fully equipped, complete units, with the required capabilities, effective command and control structure and capacity, a single chain of command, adequate resources and the commitment to implement the mandate of the mission in full as authorized by the Council;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, after further consultations with troop-contributing countries, to provide a further report to the Council as soon as possible on the proposals in paragraphs 2 to 6 above, with recommendations for the restructuring and strengthening of the Mission, and expresses its intention to take a decision on those recommendations expeditiously;

8. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Sanctions and justice system

As the internal conflict in Sierra Leone continued in mid-2000, the Security Council took action to control the illicit trade in diamonds from the country, which was considered to be linked to trade in arms and related materiel in violation of Council sanctions. The Council's arms sanctions against non-governmental forces in Sierra Leone, imposed by resolution 1132(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 135] and revised by resolution 1171(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 169], remained in force. The EU Presidency, however, in a 7 June statement [S/2000/583], questioned the effectiveness of the arms embargo, stating that fighting between the Government and RUF continued as a result of the continuing supplies of arms from outside.

In August, the Council requested the Secretary-General to negotiate an agreement with Sierra Leone to create an independent court to bring to justice those responsible for committing serious crimes against the people of Sierra Leone.

Role of diamonds in conflict

Sierra Leone forwarded to the Security Council a 28 June memorandum [S/2000/641] on the role of diamonds in the conflict in Sierra Leone and the establishment of a certificate-of-origin regime for the export of rough diamonds from Sierra Leone. The Government, being of the view that the illicit export of Sierra Leone diamonds, especially through Liberia, was a major cause of the conflict in Sierra Leone and constituted the most formidable impediment to a peaceful resolution of the conflict, concurred with the idea that the export of diamonds should be temporarily prohibited until such time that a certificate-of-origin scheme was in full operation. That concurrence was based on the understanding that the temporary prohibition and the process of assessment by the Council's Sanctions Committee and endorsement by the Council would not be prolonged.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 5 July [meeting 4168], the Security Council adopted resolution 1306(2000) by vote (14-0-1). The draft [S/2000/635] was submitted by the United Kingdom.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the situation in Sierra Leone, in particular resolutions 1132(1997) of 8 October 1997, 1171(1998) of 5 June 1998 and 1299(2000) of 19 May 2000,

Affirming the commitment of all States to respect the sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity of Sierra Leone,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 19 May 2000, in particular paragraph 94 thereof,

Determining that the situation in Sierra Leone continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

A

Expressing its concern at the role played by the illicit trade in diamonds in fuelling the conflict in Sierra Leone, and at reports that such diamonds transit neighbouring countries, including the territory of Liberia,

Welcoming ongoing efforts by interested States, the International Diamond Manufacturers Association, the World Federation of Diamond Bourses, the Diamond High Council, other representatives of the diamond industry and non-governmental experts to improve the transparency of the international diamond trade, and encouraging further action in this regard,

Emphasizing that the legitimate diamond trade is of great economic importance for many States and can make a positive contribution to prosperity and stability and to the reconstruction of countries emerging from conflict, and emphasizing also that nothing in the present resolution is intended to undermine the legitimate diamond trade or to diminish confidence in the integrity of the legitimate diamond industry,

Welcoming the decision taken by States members of the Economic Community of West African States at their Abuja summit on 28 and 29 May 2000 to undertake a regional inquiry into the illegal trade in diamonds,

Taking note of the letter dated 29 June 2000 from the Permanent Representative of Sierra Leone to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council and its enclosure,

1. Decides that all States shall take the necessary measures to prohibit the direct or indirect import of all rough diamonds from Sierra Leone to their territory;

2. Requests the Government of Sierra Leone to ensure, as a matter of urgency, that an effective certificate-of-origin regime for trade in diamonds is in operation in Sierra Leone;

3. Requests States, relevant international organizations and other bodies in a position to do so to offer assistance to the Government of Sierra Leone to facilitate the full operation of an effective certificate-of-origin regime for Sierra Leone rough diamonds;

4. Requests the Government of Sierra Leone to notify the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1132(1997) of the details of such a certificate-of-origin regime when it is fully in operation;

5. Decides that rough diamonds controlled by the Government of Sierra Leone through the certificate-of-origin regime shall be exempt from the measures imposed in paragraph 1 above when the Security Council Committee has reported to the Council, taking into account expert advice obtained at the request of the Committee through the Secretary-General, that an effective regime is fully in operation;

6. Decides also that the measures referred to in paragraph 1 above are established for an initial period of eighteen months, and affirms that, at the end of that period, it will review the situation in Sierra Leone, including the extent of the Government's authority over the diamond-producing areas, in order to decide whether to extend those measures for a further period and, if necessary, to modify them or adopt further measures;

7. Decides further that the Security Council Committee shall also undertake the following tasks:

(a) To seek from all States further information regarding the action taken by them with a view to implementing effectively the measures imposed by paragraph 1 above;

(b) To consider information brought to its attention concerning violations of the measures imposed by paragraph 1 above, identifying where possible persons or entities, including vessels, reported to be engaged in such violations;

(c) To make periodic reports to the Council on information submitted to it regarding alleged violations of the measures imposed by paragraph 1 above, identifying where possible persons or entities, including vessels, reported to be engaged in such violations;

(d) To promulgate such guidelines as may be necessary to facilitate the implementation of the measures imposed by paragraph 1 above;

(e) To continue its cooperation with other relevant sanctions committees, in particular that established pursuant to resolution 985(1995) of 13 April 1995 concerning the situation in Liberia and that established pursuant to resolution 864(1993) of 15 September 1993 concerning the situation in Angola;

8. Requests all States to report to the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1132(1997), within thirty days of the adoption of the present resolution, on the actions they have taken to implement the measures imposed by paragraph 1 above;

9. Calls upon all States, in particular those through which rough diamonds from Sierra Leone are known to transit, and all relevant international and regional organizations to act strictly in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution, notwithstanding the existence of any rights or obligations conferred or imposed by any international agreement or any contract entered into or any licence or permit granted prior to the date of adoption of the present resolution;

10. Encourages the International Diamond Manufacturers Association, the World Federation of Diamond Bourses, the Diamond High Council and all other representatives of the diamond industry to work with the Government of Sierra Leone and the Security Council Committee to develop methods and working practices to facilitate the effective implementation of the present resolution;

11. Invites States, international organizations, members of the diamond industry and other relevant entities in a position to do so to offer assistance to the Government of Sierra Leone to contribute to the further development of a well-structured and well-regulated diamond industry that provides for the identification of the provenance of rough diamonds;

12. Requests the Security Council Committee to hold an exploratory hearing in New York, no later than 31 July 2000, to assess the role of diamonds in the Sierra Leone conflict and the link between trade in Sierra Leone diamonds and trade in arms and related materiel in violation of resolution 1171(1998), involving representatives of interested States and regional organizations, the diamond industry and other relevant experts, requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary resources, and further requests the Committee to report on the hearing to the Council;

13. Welcomes the commitments made by certain members of the diamond industry not to trade in diamonds originating from conflict zones, including in Sierra Leone, urges all other companies and individuals involved in trading in rough diamonds to make similar declarations in respect of Sierra Leone diamonds, and underlines the importance of relevant financial institutions encouraging such companies to do so;

14. Stresses the need for the extension of government authority to the diamond-producing areas for a durable solution to the problem of illegal exploitation of diamonds in Sierra Leone;

15. Decides to conduct a first review on the measures imposed by paragraph 1 above, no later than 15 September 2000, and further reviews every six months following the date of adoption of the present resolution, and to consider at those times what further measures may be necessary;

16. Urges all States, relevant United Nations bodies and, as appropriate, other organizations and interested parties to report to the Security Council Committee information on possible violations of the measures imposed by paragraph 1 above;

B

Stressing the need to ensure effective implementation of the measures concerning arms and related materiel imposed by paragraph 2 of resolution 1171(1998),

Stressing also the obligation of all Member States, including those neighbouring Sierra Leone, to comply fully with the measures imposed by the Council,

Recalling the Moratorium on the Importation, Exportation and Manufacture of Light Weapons in West Africa adopted in Abuja on 31 October 1998 by the heads of State and Government of the Economic Community of West African States,

17. Reminds States of their obligation to implement fully the measures imposed by resolution 1171(1998), and calls upon them, where they have not already done so, to enforce, strengthen or enact, as appropriate, legislation making it a criminal offence under domestic law for their nationals or other persons operating on their territory to act in violation of the measures imposed by paragraph 2 of that resolution, and to report to the Security Council Committee no later than 31 July 2000 on the implementation of those measures;

18. Urges all States, relevant United Nations bodies and, as appropriate, other organizations and interested parties to report to the Security Council Committee information on possible violations of the measures imposed by the Council;

19. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Security Council Committee, to establish a panel of experts, for an initial period of four months, consisting of no more than five members:

(a) To collect information on possible violations of the measures imposed by paragraph 2 of resolution 1171(1998) and the link between trade in diamonds and trade in arms and related materiel, including through visits to Sierra Leone and other States, as appropriate, and making contact with those they consider appropriate, including diplomatic missions;

(b) To consider the adequacy, for the purpose of detecting flights by aircraft suspected of carrying arms and related materiel across national borders in violation of the measures imposed by paragraph 2 of resolution 1171(1998), of air traffic control systems in the region;

(c) To participate, if possible, in the hearing referred to in paragraph 12 above;

(d) To report to the Council through the Security Council Committee with observations and recommendations on strengthening the implementation of the measures imposed by paragraph 2 of resolution 1171(1998), and those imposed by paragraph 1 above, no later than 31 October 2000;

and also requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary resources;

20. Expresses its readiness, on the basis, inter alia, of the report produced pursuant to paragraph 19 (d) above, to consider appropriate action in relation to States that it determines to have violated the measures imposed by paragraph 2 of resolution 1171(1998) and paragraph 1 above;

21. Urges all States to cooperate with the panel in the discharge of its mandate, and underlines, in this regard, the importance of the cooperation and technical expertise of the Secretariat and other parts of the United Nations system;

22. Requests the Security Council Committee to strengthen existing contacts with regional organizations, in particular the Economic Community of West African States and the Organization of African Unity, and relevant international organizations, including Interpol, with a view to identifying ways to improve effective implementation of the measures imposed by paragraph 2 of resolution 1171(1998);

23. Also requests the Security Council Committee to make information it considers relevant publicly available through appropriate media, including through the improved use of information technology;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to publicize the provisions of the present resolution and the obligations imposed thereby;

25. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

VOTE ON RESOLUTION 1306(2000):

In favour: Argentina, Bangladesh, Canada, China, France, Jamaica, Malaysia, Namibia, Netherlands, Russian Federation, Tunisia, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Mali.

Before the vote, Mali, as Chairman of ECOWAS, explained that the draft's open accusation of an ECOWAS member State, whose President had played a constructive role in the Sierra Leone peace process, was unacceptable.

Sanctions Committee

The Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1132(1997) concerning Sierra Leone reported to the Council several times in 2000 on the arms embargo and the ban on the export of rough diamonds. In four July letters [S/2000/659, S/2000/660, S/2000/730, S/2000/739], the Chairman notified the Council that the United Kingdom had informed it of exports of military goods to the Government of Sierra Leone for use by its army and for use by the Ghanaian contingent of UNAMSIL. In November [S/2000/1127], the United Kingdom reported that it had again sent military equipment for use by UNAMSIL forces.

The Committee held public hearings on 31 July and 1 August to assess the role of diamonds in the Sierra Leone conflict and the link between trade in Sierra Leone diamonds and trade in arms. The discussions, involving representatives of interested States and regional organizations, the diamond industry and other relevant experts, were summarized in a December report [S/2000/1150]. Recommendations included ways and means to develop a sustainable and well regulated diamond industry in Sierra Leone. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on 4 August [S/2000/771], rejected allegations made by the United States at those hearings that Libya was involved in the smuggling of arms to RUF. Libya gave examples of its efforts to promote national reconciliation in Sierra Leone.

The Chairman of the Sanctions Committee reported that, as at 4 December [S/2000/861 & Add.1], 21 countries had replied to the Council's request for information on any legislation on the arms embargo. The Chairman also reported that, as at 4 December [S/2000/862 & Add.1], 36 countries had replied to the Council's request for information on legislation pertaining to the ban on import of rough diamonds from Sierra Leone.

On 6 October [S/2000/966], the Chairman stated that the Government of Sierra Leone had submitted to the Committee a new mining, export and monitoring regime for rough and uncut diamonds from Sierra Leone, together with a draft new forgery-proof certificate-of-origin document and a copy of the Mines and Minerals (Amendments) Act of 1999. The Committee had no objection to the new procedures; therefore, rough diamonds controlled by the Government through the new certification regime would be exempt from the import ban on rough diamonds from Sierra Leone. Details of the new regime were transmitted to the Council on 4 December [S/2000/1151].

The Chairman, on 26 December [S/2000/1238], transmitted to the Council a report on the Committee's activities since the beginning of 2000. During the year, it held seven meetings. The Committee granted exemptions to the travel ban on officials of Sierra Leone opposition groups and on the export to Sierra Leone of arms. In addition to the hearings on conflict diamonds, the Committee reviewed Sierra Leone's proposed certification process and information regarding alleged violations of sanctions. Since the Committee had no specific monitoring mechanism to ensure implementation of the sanctions, it urged all Member States and organizations to provide it with pertinent information. In particular, reports from UNAMSIL and ECOWAS could assist the Committee.

In December, the General Assembly took action on the role of diamonds in fuelling conflict: breaking the link between the illicit transaction of rough diamonds and armed conflict as a contribution to prevention and settlement of conflicts (resolution 55/56) (see p. 77).

Panel of experts on diamonds and arms

In response to resolution 1306(2000), the Secretary-General, on 2 August [S/2000/756], informed the Security Council that he had established a panel of five experts to collect information on possible violations of the arms embargo and the ban on rough diamond exports, and to consider the adequacy of air traffic control systems in the region. Liberia, in a 13 December letter to the Secretary-General [S/2000/1192], welcomed the concept and the mandate of the panel, but noted that some Council members had mounted pressure on panel members in order to undermine the objectivity of the panel's report; therefore, Liberia was concerned that the report might lack objectivity and fairness.

The report of the Panel of Experts on Sierra Leone Diamonds and Arms was submitted to the Council on 20 December [S/2000/1195]. Estimates of the volume of RUF diamonds varied from $25 million to $125 million per annum. It represented a major primary source of income for RUF and was more than enough to sustain its military activities. The bulk of the RUF diamonds left Sierra Leone through Liberia. Such trade could not be conducted without the permission and the involvement of Liberian government officials at the highest level. Regarding Sierra Leone's new certification system, the report said it was largely irrelevant where RUF's conflict diamonds were concerned. As long as there were no controls in neighbouring countries, RUF would continue to move its diamonds out with impunity. For that reason, a standardized global certification scheme was necessary. A large volume of diamonds entering Europe was disguised as Liberian, Guinean and Gambian in order to evade taxation and launder money, and there was much fraudulent commercial reporting, flagrant examples of which in Belgium were provided.

In the absence of a global system, it was recommended that certification systems similar to that adopted by Sierra Leone be required of all diamond-exporting countries in West Africa, with special and immediate reference to Côte d'Ivoire and Guinea, to protect their indigenous industries and prevent their exposure to conflict diamonds. The Panel further recommended a complete embargo on all diamonds from Liberia until it stopped the trafficking of arms to, or diamonds from, Sierra Leone. Special attention was required to imports from a number of other African States, in particular by the importing countries, including India, Israel, South Africa, Switzerland, the United Kingdom and the United States. Those major trading centres plus Belgium needed to reach agreement on the recording and documentation of rough diamond imports that was consistent and that designated the country of origin in addition to country of provenance (last exporting country). An annual statistical production report should be compiled by each exporting country and gathered into a central annual report.

In addition to the numerous specific recommendations dealing with diamonds, the Panel made recommendations on weapons and the use of aircraft for sanctions-busting and the movement of illicit weapons. Many of those recommendations and the problems they addressed were related to the primary support of RUF, namely Liberia—its President, its Government and the individuals and companies it did business with. Liberia was actively breaking the Council embargoes regarding weapons imports into its own territory and into Sierra Leone. It was being assisted actively by Burkina Faso and tacitly by countries allowing weapons to pass through or over their territory without question, and by those countries that provided a base for the aircraft used in such operations. The report gave technical details on the adequacy of air traffic control and surveillance systems within the region.

The Panel noted with concern that Council resolutions on diamonds and weapons were being broken with impunity. It recommended that a travel ban similar to that already imposed on senior Liberian officials and diplomats by the United States be considered by all UN Member States until Liberia ended its support to RUF. The principals in Liberia's timber industry were also involved in a variety of illicit activities, and large amounts of the proceeds were used to pay for weapons, among other things. Consideration should be given to a temporary embargo on Liberian timber exports until Liberia demonstrated that it was no longer involved in the trafficking of arms to, or diamonds from, Sierra Leone. It was further suggested that consideration should be given to creating capacity within the Secretariat to carry out ongoing monitoring of Council sanctions and embargoes.

Switzerland, on 21 December [S/2000/1232], said that it had been singled out with regard to customs warehouses. Switzerland would study the report's recommendations. However, it had already taken measures to strengthen controls on the transit of diamonds that had not been reflected in the report. The Gambia, on 28 December [S/2001/8], said that while it was likely that diamonds might be transiting through the Gambia, the Government had neither condoned nor involved itself in such transactions and did not derive any revenue from that trade.

Proposal for special court

President Kabbah, in a 12 June letter to the Security Council, forwarded on 9 August [S/2000/786], called on the United Nations to set up a special court for Sierra Leone in order to try and bring to justice those RUF members and others responsible for committing crimes against the people of Sierra Leone and for taking UN peacekeepers as hostages. Mr. Kabbah also requested the Council's assistance in establishing a court to meet the objectives of bringing justice and ensuring lasting peace. Under the Lomé Agreement, amnesty had been granted to the RUF leadership, but it had since reneged on that Agreement and had resumed atrocities, including murder, amputation and the use of women and girls as sex slaves. Its members had abducted over 500 UN peacekeepers and seized their arms, and killed some of the peacekeepers. In order to expedite the establishment of a special court, Mr. Kabbah invited the Council to send a team of inquiry to assess the needs and concerns regarding Sierra Leone's ability to provide justice. With regard to the magnitude and extent of the crimes committed, Sierra Leone did not have the resources or expertise to conduct trials for such crimes. Annexed to the letter was a suggested framework for the proposed special court.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

On 14 August [meeting 4186], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1315(2000). The draft [S/2000/789] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Deeply concerned at the very serious crimes committed within the territory of Sierra Leone against the people of Sierra Leone and United Nations and associated personnel and at the prevailing situation of impunity,

Commending the efforts of the Government of Sierra Leone and the Economic Community of West African States to bring lasting peace to Sierra Leone,

Noting that the heads of State and Government of the Economic Community of West African States agreed at the twenty-third summit of that organization, held in Abuja on 28 and 29 May 2000, to dispatch a regional investigation of the resumption of hostilities,

Noting also the steps taken by the Government of Sierra Leone in creating a national truth and reconciliation process, as required by article XXVI of the Peace Agreement signed in Lomé on 7 July 1999 to contribute to the promotion of the rule of law,

Recalling that the Special Representative of the Secretary-General appended to his signature of the Peace Agreement a statement that the United Nations holds the understanding that the amnesty provisions of the Agreement shall not apply to international crimes of genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and other serious violations of international humanitarian law,

Reaffirming the importance of compliance with international humanitarian law, and reaffirming also that persons who commit or authorize serious violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible and accountable for those violations and that the international community will exert every effort to bring those responsible to justice in accordance with international standards of justice, fairness and due process of law,

Recognizing that, in the particular circumstances of Sierra Leone, a credible system of justice and accountability for the very serious crimes committed there would end impunity and would contribute to the process of national reconciliation and to the restoration and maintenance of peace,

Taking note in this regard of the letter dated 12 June 2000 from the President of Sierra Leone to the Secretary-General and the suggested framework transmitted therewith,

Recognizing the desire of the Government of Sierra Leone for assistance from the United Nations in establishing a strong and credible court that will meet the objectives of bringing justice and ensuring lasting peace,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 31 July 2000, and, in particular, taking note with appreciation of the steps already taken by the Secretary-General in response to the request by the Government of Sierra Leone to assist it in establishing a special court,

Noting the negative impact of the security situation on the administration of justice in Sierra Leone and the pressing need for international cooperation to assist in strengthening the judicial system of Sierra Leone,

Acknowledging the important contribution that can be made to that effort by qualified persons from West African States, the Commonwealth, other States Members of the United Nations and international organizations, to expedite the process of bringing justice and reconciliation to Sierra Leone and the region,

Reiterating that the situation in Sierra Leone continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to negotiate an agreement with the Government of Sierra Leone to create an independent special court consistent with the present resolution, and expresses its readiness to take further steps expeditiously upon receiving and reviewing the report of the Secretary-General referred to in paragraph 6 below;

2. Recommends that the subject matter jurisdiction of the special court should include notably crimes against humanity, war crimes and other serious violations of international humanitarian law, as well as crimes under relevant Sierra Leonean law committed within the territory of Sierra Leone;

3. Recommends also that the special court should have personal jurisdiction over persons who bear the greatest responsibility for the commission of the crimes referred to in paragraph 2 above, including those leaders who, in committing such crimes, have threatened the establishment and implementation of the peace process in Sierra Leone;

4. Emphasizes the importance of ensuring the impartiality, independence and credibility of the process, in particular with regard to the status of the judges and the prosecutors;

5. Requests, in this connection, that the Secretary-General, if necessary, send a team of experts to Sierra Leone as may be required to prepare the report referred to in paragraph 6 below;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Security Council on the implementation of the present resolution, in particular on his consultations and negotiations with the Government of Sierra Leone concerning the establishment of the special court, including recommendations, no later than thirty days from the date of the present resolution;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to address in his report the questions of the temporal jurisdiction of the special court, an appeals process, including the advisability, feasibility, and appropriateness of an appeals chamber in the special court or of sharing the Appeals Chamber of the International Tribunals for the Former Yugoslavia and Rwanda or other effective options, and a possible alternative host State, should it be necessary to convene the special court outside the seat of the court in Sierra Leone, if circumstances so require;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to include recommendations on the following:

(a) Any additional agreements that may be required for the provision of the international assistance that will be necessary for the establishment and functioning of the special court;

(b) The level of participation, support and technical assistance of qualified persons from States Members of the United Nations, including, in particular, States members of the Economic Community of West African States and the Commonwealth, and from the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone that will be necessary for the efficient, independent and impartial functioning of the special court;

(c) The amount of voluntary contributions, as appropriate, of funds, equipment and services to the special court, including through the offer of expert personnel that may be needed from States, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations;

(d) Whether the special court could receive, as necessary and feasible, expertise and advice from the International Tribunals for the Former Yugoslavia and Rwanda;

9. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Sierra Leone, on 14 August [S/2000/803], welcomed the Council's firm commitment to establish an independent special court, which, it said, went beyond the mere expression of abhorrence at the atrocities committed against the people of Sierra Leone and sent a message to the perpetrators that collective action was currently being taken to end impunity in the country.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to resolution 1315(2000), the Secretary-General, on 4 October, reported on the establishment of a special court for Sierra Leone [S/2000/915]. He examined and analysed the nature and specificity of the Special Court, its jurisdiction (subject matter, temporal and personal), the organizational structure (the Chambers and the nature of the appeals process, the Prosecutor's Office and the Registry), enforcement of sentences in third States and the choice of the alternative seat. It also dealt with the practical arrangements for the Court's operation and the financial mechanism envisaged. Annexed to the report were the draft Agreement between the United Nations and the Government of Sierra Leone on the Establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone and a draft Statute of the Court. The Secretary-General also recommended that a broad public information and education campaign be undertaken as part of the Court's activities.

Noting that a credible system of justice for the serious crimes committed in Sierra Leone would end impunity and contribute to the process of national reconciliation and to the restoration and maintenance of peace, the Secretary-General stated that the Council should bear in mind the expectations that had been created and the state of urgency that permeated all discussions of the problem of impunity in Sierra Leone.

The Council reviewed the Secretary-General's report and issued its comments in a 22 December letter [S/2000/1234]. Reaffirming its support for resolution 1315(2000), the Council suggested that the draft Agreement and the proposed Statute be amended to incorporate the Council's suggestions in regard to personal jurisdiction, funding and court size.

Later developments

Report of Secretary-General (August). The Secretary-General issued his sixth report on UNAMSIL on 24 August [S/2000/832], as requested by the Council in resolution 1313(2000). Reviewing the strengthened mandate of the force under that resolution, the Secretary-General said that the main objectives would be to assist the Government's efforts to extend State authority, restore law and order and stabilize the situation progressively throughout the country, and to assist in the promotion of the political process, leading to a renewed disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme where possible. The key elements of a political process included the restoration of civil authority throughout the country, the establishment and/or strengthening of national institutions, including democratically accountable armed forces and a national police force, free and fair elections, national reconciliation and respect for human rights and provision of emergency relief assistance. Achieving those objectives would require a robust military presence by the international community for the foreseeable future in order to maintain a level of security. In due course, the Government would have to assume full responsibility for its own security; therefore, the military training assistance provided to the armed forces of Sierra Leone by the United Kingdom and other Member States and the assistance provided by the Commonwealth for the training of the police force were welcomed. Offers of further assistance to improve Sierra Leone's operational capacity would be of significant value.

In reviewing UNAMSIL's strength, account had to be taken of the precarious security situation, the RUF threat and the regional dimension of the conflict. In addition, the country's infrastructure had suffered tremendous damage. In many cases, resupply of troops could be provided only by air. The dense vegetation was favourable to guerrilla tactics such as ambushes and concealed movement. On 21 August, RUF announced it had designated Issa Sesay as its interim leader to replace Foday Sankoh, following diplomatic efforts by ECOWAS leaders. Nevertheless, it continued its forcible recruitment of new fighters and the RUF threat against the general population, government forces and UNAMSIL remained real. The forces fighting for the Government, mainly SLA and the Civil Defence Force, were still in the process of training, and they continued to experience problems with command and control and logistical support. The United Kingdom was providing training to the new SLA. The most urgent tasks for UNAMSIL were restructuring the force, strengthening its headquarters, equipping its battalions and strengthening deployment in areas close to RUF positions, to the extent that its authorized strength of 13,000 military personnel allowed.

To achieve its objectives, UNAMSIL would be required to deploy progressively to strategic positions throughout the country in an operational structure and in sufficient numbers and density. The Secretary-General outlined a plan for phased deployment, to be accompanied by coordinated political steps, involving the Government of Sierra Leone, ECOWAS and the United Nations, as well as a public information campaign. Such efforts would be aimed at seeking the compliance of rebel groups with the peace process and encouraging them to join the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme. In order to deploy fully as outlined by the Secretary-General, the total strength of the force would need to be 20,500, and subsequent deployment to key areas not currently under government control would require additional resources. In addition to expanding UNAMSIL's strength, the Secretary-General recommended that the Council authorize an extension of its mandate, due to expire on 8 September, for another six months.

The report's addendum [S/2000/832/Add.1] indicated that the expansion of the Mission would entail an additional expense of $305.5 million for the 2000-2001 financial period.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 5 September [meeting 4193], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1317 (2000). The draft [S/2000/846] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1270(1999) of 22 October 1999, 1289(2000) of 7 February 2000 and 1313(2000) of 4 August 2000 and all other relevant resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the situation in Sierra Leone,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone until 20 September 2000;

2. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

On 20 September [meeting 4199], the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1321(2000). The draft [S/2000/882] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1270(1999) of 22 October 1999, 1289(2000) of 7 February 2000, 1313(2000) of 4 August 2000, 1317(2000) of 5 September 2000 and all other relevant resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the situation in Sierra Leone,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone until 31 December 2000;

2. Decides also to review the situation no later than 31 October 2000;

3. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

The Security Council, on 20 September [S/2000/886], informed the Secretary-General of its decision to send a mission to Sierra Leone from 7 to 14 October. The mission's terms of reference were: to consider ways to ensure the full application of the Council's resolutions on Sierra Leone and the implementation of measures taken by the Secretary-General to enhance UNAMSIL's effectiveness; to support the Government's efforts and review with it progress made in implementing the Lomé Peace Agreement; to consider the regional dimensions of the crisis, including its humanitarian aspects, and, in particular, to work with the leaders of neighbouring States and ECOWAS to promote a solution to the conflict; and to follow up the report of the Secretary-General on the establishment of a special court for Sierra Leone as envisaged in Council resolution 1315(2000) (see p. 205).

On 26 September [S/2000/903], the Council informed the Secretary-General of the composition of the 10-member mission (later expanded to 11 members) and requested that arrangements be made for its support.

Report of Security Council mission. The Security Council's mission to Sierra Leone issued its report on 16 October [S/2000/992] after an eight-day visit to the region (Guinea, Sierra Leone, Mali, Nigeria and Liberia). It found that UNAMSIL had begun to make progress after the setbacks and pressures caused by RUF attacks against peacekeepers and renewed fighting in May. It noted, however, that different contingents had different perceptions of UNAMSIL's mandate and tasks. Since the visit of an assessment team from 31 May to 8 June, progress had been made with regard to communication and coordination within UNAMSIL, as well as with UN agencies and NGOs; however, key areas that still needed to be addressed were full integration with headquarters, better coordination of logistics and arrangements for contingent-owned equipment. The planned withdrawal of the Indian contingent in November constituted a serious loss for UNAMSIL and the civilian component of the Mission was understaffed. It was generally agreed that the strength of the force needed to be increased in order to deploy in strength throughout Sierra Leone, including the border with Liberia and the diamond-producing areas. Nigeria had indicated its readiness to contribute either to UNAMSIL or to a mission authorized by ECOWAS, but needed equipment to bring its units to the required levels.

The mission concluded that the highest priority should be given to the coordination of a comprehensive strategy with clear objectives. Its first recommendation, therefore, was for the establishment of a UN-based mechanism for overall coordination. It also suggested military measures to enhance security in the country and on its borders. The current tentative indications of RUF interest in dialogue should be thoroughly explored, and the Secretary-General's Special Representative might give priority to the coordination of contacts, liaising in particular, beyond UNAMSIL itself, with the Presidents of Sierra Leone, Guinea, Mali, Nigeria and Liberia.

Regarding the peace process, the fundamental principles of the Lomé Peace Agreement remained valid. The conclusion of a ceasefire and the withdrawal of RUF forces from key areas of the country, in particular the diamond fields, should remain prime objectives. Renewed dialogue with both RUF leadership and with commanders at the local level should be pursued and the process should also include the return of all seized UNAMSIL weapons and equipment and the opening up of humanitarian and other access in the north and east of the country. The peace process should also focus on disarmament, demobilization and reintegration. In that context, the Security Council and the Sierra Leonean authorities would need to reflect before taking any final decisions on the scope of the Special Court. A balance had to be struck between the requirements of justice and the need to minimize any potential disincentive to entering the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process that the threat of prosecution might represent, especially to child combatants.

The military track remained an indispensable element of the peace process to maintain pressure on RUF and create incentives for dialogue and disarmament. To meet those demands, UNAMSIL needed to be strengthened in terms of numbers, effectiveness and capability, as recommended by the Secretary-General, taking advantage of the offers of further troops from, among others, ECOWAS countries.

Instability in the West African region, in particular in the Mano River Union (MRU) countries, also needed to be addressed. Regional leaders believed that the relationship of President Taylor of Liberia with RUF was a key to the situation in Sierra Leone. Illicit trafficking in diamonds and arms, the proliferation and encouragement of militias and armed groups, and the massive flows of refugees and internally displaced persons resulting from their activities had to be addressed directly. The region, through ECOWAS, was showing willingness to take the lead, under its current Chairman, in undertaking specific action in those areas. The Council and individual Governments should consider support for the ECOWAS decision to deploy an observer force on the borders of the three MRU countries, in coordination with UNAMSIL. Guinea, in particular, needed support to provide access and protection for humanitarian personnel and aid.

The disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme needed to be reoriented, and the Council should decide on a proper balance of responsibilities in the programme among the Government, the World Bank, UNAMSIL and bilateral agencies. The primary responsibility for the resolution of the conflict rested with the Government, Parliament and people of Sierra Leone, and the Government needed to communicate its vision for taking the peace process forward as well as for development. Advice and financial help on a communications and public awareness strategy would be useful. The mission recommended that UNAMSIL and ECOWAS explore with RUF the possibility of access under conditions of security for a needs assessment to be conducted in areas under its control, and for safe access for the delivery of humanitarian assistance. The vacant UNAMSIL human rights posts should be filled as soon as possible and the proposed Human Rights Commission should be established at an early date.

As to coordination, the mission stated that, at a minimum, the Security Council and the Secretariat, ECOWAS, UNAMSIL troop-contributing countries and the Government of Sierra Leone needed to consult through some form of continuous structure. As a first step, the mission recommended international assistance to help the ECOWAS secretariat to develop its capacity, including the placing of UNAMSIL liaison staff at ECOWAS headquarters.

Report of Secretary-General (October). The Secretary-General, in his seventh report on UNAMSIL dated 31 October and reissued on 7 November [S/2000/1055], said that the situation in Sierra Leone had been at a political and military standstill since the events of May/June. Since 24 August, the efforts of UNAMSIL and ECOWAS had been focused on creating a political and security environment conducive to resuming the peace process. In spite of the designation of a new interim RUF leader, Issa Sesay, which was facilitated by the Presidents of Mali and Nigeria, there had been no progress towards establishing a political dialogue and possible ceasefire. There were reports that some RUF field commanders were reluctant to recognize Mr. Sesay's authority. The designation of Mr. Sesay as interim leader had enabled UNAMSIL to establish limited informal contacts with RUF, focusing on the return of weapons and equipment seized from UNAMSIL and on humanitarian access to areas under RUF control. UNAMSIL received reports that RUF was preparing for military operations in Guinea and some RUF commanders refused to disarm or give up diamond-mining areas under their control. At the same time, the Government continued military operations against RUF.

During the reporting period, relative calm had prevailed although the security situation remained unpredictable and precarious, and was marked by the increase in cross-border attacks along the border area of Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone (see above, under "Guinea"). Within Sierra Leone, there was no change in the areas controlled by either RUF or pro-Government forces. RUF largely maintained a defensive posture, but also continued to mobilize its forces in its strongholds and to dig craters on major roads. There were several attacks on UNAMSIL by RUF and by ex-SLA/AFRC, known as the West Side group, the leadership of which had been taken over by Foday Kallay. On 25 August, 11 British military personnel, involved in training the Sierra Leone Army, and one Sierra Leone Army officer were taken hostage by the West Side group. A successful rescue mission dislodged the group from its Occra Hills base. The group lost most of its fighting capability and Kallay and other key combatants were captured. The training programme, led by United Kingdom soldiers, continued, but the Sierra Leone Army suffered from lack of leadership and logistics.

UNAMSIL military strength stood at 12,510 as at 30 October; peacekeepers conducted patrols and cordon and search operations and provided humanitarian assistance to the local population in their areas of operation. The disarmament, demobilization and reintegration activities were limited due to ongoing hostilities. A total of 706 ex-combatants joined the programme during the period from 8 May to 13 October. Civilian police advisers focused on the promotion of community policy in Freetown and in the south, where the effectiveness of the Sierra Leone Police Force was gradually being restored. Civil affairs activities included further contacts with local leaders and surveys to identify areas needing immediate assistance. The public information section produced regular radio broadcasts, press briefings and printed materials.

With regard to human rights, the Secretary-General expressed the view that the establishment of the Special Court for Sierra Leone and the Truth and Reconciliation Commission could contribute to ending impunity and developing respect for the rule of law, and bring closure to victims of human rights abuses. The Government had approved the establishment of a commission for war-affected children. The humanitarian situation continued to deteriorate with lack of access severely restricting humanitarian operations inside the country. Since the resumption of hostilities in May, approximately 300,000 Sierra Leoneans had been displaced, bringing the total number of internally displaced persons in the country to 500,000.

In an effort to expand UNAMSIL to its full strength, the United Nations had held discussions with possible troop-contributing countries. India and Jordan announced their decisions to withdraw from the Mission. That and other troop movements would put a heavy strain on the Mission's logistic capabilities.

The Secretary-General supported the comprehensive approach suggested by the Security Council's mission to Sierra Leone (see p. 208), based on the continued provision of security by UNAMSIL in key areas. That would require an increase in the force's strength to 20,500, as he had recommended earlier. He appealed to Member States, in particular those with large and well-equipped armed forces, to participate in UNAMSIL so that the credibility of the international community's military presence in Sierra Leone was not undermined. In the meantime, the implementation of the Mission's mandate, in particular its deployment on the ground, would have to be adjusted in the light of the available resources. In the final analysis, the Secretary-General said, no lasting progress could be made in Sierra Leone without comprehensive action being taken to tackle the instability in the West African region, particularly the MRU countries.

Appointment. On 30 October [S/2000/1060], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint Lieutenant-General Daniel Ishmael Opande (Kenya) as Force Commander of UNAMSIL. The Council took note of the decision on 2 November [S/2000/1061].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 3 November [meeting 4216], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/31 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses its concern at the continued fragile situation in Sierra Leone and the related instability in the wider subregion. It condemns the continued cross-border attacks along the border area of Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone. The Council stresses that only through a comprehensive regional approach can security and stability be restored. In this regard, it expresses its support for the efforts undertaken by the Economic Community of West African States to address the situation, and calls upon Member States to provide support.

In this context, and following the return of its mission to Sierra Leone, the Council welcomes the recommendations made in the report of the mission. It expresses its support in particular for the establishment of a continuous, United Nations-based process for overall strategic coordination on Sierra Leone, bringing together members of the Council, the Secretariat, the Economic Community of West African States, countries contributing troops to the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone and the Government of Sierra Leone. The Council notes the support of the Secretary-General for this proposal in his report of 31 October 2000 and encourages him to take early steps to put such a process into effect.

The Council underlines that such a coordinated strategy for lasting peace in Sierra Leone must combine both political and military elements. The Council fully supports efforts to strengthen the State institutions of Sierra Leone and to maintain the principles of democratic accountability and the rule of law. It also places emphasis on the humanitarian and human rights aspects. It welcomes the current efforts of the Economic Community of West African States to explore the possibilities for dialogue towards peace, but stresses that this should be pursued only under terms acceptable to the Government of Sierra Leone. In this context, the Council underlines the importance of the Revolutionary United Front relinquishing control of the diamond-producing areas, full freedom of movement for the Mission leading to its deployment throughout the country, proper provision for the disarmament and demobilization of all non-governmental forces, full and secure humanitarian access and the extension of the authority of the Government throughout its territory. The Council also calls upon those armed groups responsible for continuing human rights abuses to put an immediate end to such activities.

The Council is convinced that the continuation of a credible military presence of the international community in Sierra Leone remains an indispensable element of the peace process. The Council concurs with the view of the Secretary-General that a key aspect of the overall approach on Sierra Leone is continued provision of security by the Mission in key areas of the country. The Council reiterates its view that to achieve this, the Mission requires strengthening. The Council also underlines the importance of continued action to improve the effectiveness of the Mission through the full implementation of the recommendations of the May assessment mission. The Council notes the decisions by the Governments of India and Jordan to end participation by their troops in the Mission and expresses its appreciation for the important contribution made by these two contingents. It also warmly welcomes the new commitments made by Bangladesh and Ghana of additional battalions, by Ukraine of equipment and support personnel and by Slovakia of equipment to enhance force capability. The Council urges both departing and incoming contingents to display all possible flexibility to ensure that force capability is maintained as the Mission moves into this period of transition.

The Council supports the appeal by the Secretary-General to Member States, as set out in paragraph 55 of his report, urgently to consider participating in the Mission or otherwise contributing to its reinforcement, and encourages him to intensify his consultations to this end. The Council reiterates its firm intention to take action to strengthen the Mission at the appropriate time, taking into account the readiness of troop-contributing countries to provide sufficient forces to this end.

Abuja ceasefire agreement

On 10 November, the Government of Sierra Leone and RUF, at a meeting in Abuja, signed the Agreement on the Ceasefire and Cessation of Hostilities. By that text, forwarded to the Security Council by Mali on 13 November [S/2000/1091], the two parties agreed to a ceasefire to be supervised and monitored by UNAMSIL. UNAMSIL would report any violations to a committee comprising the ECOWAS Committee of Six on Sierra Leone, the ECOWAS secretariat, the United Nations, the Government of Sierra Leone and RUF.

The parties agreed that UNAMSIL would have full liberty to deploy its troops and other personnel throughout Sierra Leone, including the diamond-producing areas. They undertook to ensure free movement of persons and goods, and unimpeded movement of humanitarian agencies and of refugees and displaced persons. They agreed to recommence immediately the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme. RUF committed itself to return all weapons and other equipment it had seized. Implementation of the agreement would be reviewed after 30 days.

Report of Secretary-General (December). On 15 December, the Secretary-General issued his eighth report on UNAMSIL [S/2000/1199]. During the period under review, UNAMSIL attempted to follow up on its monitoring role in the light of the ceasefire agreement reached on 10 November. However, after an initial approach, efforts to contact the RUF leader were ignored until 8 December, and there were conflicting signals emanating from RUF about its intentions. The media quoted RUF officials as saying that the group was divided over the ceasefire and that the majority of combatants were no longer taking orders from Issa Sesay, a report that was later denied. On 8 December, the Force Commander met with RUF leader Sesay who pledged to cooperate with UNAMSIL and to uphold the ceasefire agreement; subsequently, UNAMSIL worked on modalities for monitoring the agreement. On 13 December, RUF returned 11 armoured vehicles, but they were stripped of all mounted weapons and equipment. No personal weapons were surrendered. The following day, as announced in a statement attributed to RUF, UNAMSIL was barred from entering RUF-controlled territory until certain "non-negotiable" conditions, including the release of Foday Sankoh, were met.

A meeting of the United Nations, ECOWAS and the Government of Sierra Leone Coordination Mechanism (Abuja, 8-9 November) discussed the ceasefire negotiations with RUF and ways to reactivate the peace process. The Coordination Mechanism agreed that RUF should be prevailed upon to accelerate the process of returning all remaining UN equipment and called on Member States and organizations concerned to facilitate the establishment of the ECOWAS commissions of investigation into the resumption of hostilities and into the illegal trade in Sierra Leonean diamonds. While endorsing the recommendations of the Security Council mission relating to ECOWAS, the meeting also agreed to seek further clarifications on some of the issues. Regarding the recommendation to establish a mechanism for the overall coordination of a comprehensive strategy for Sierra Leone, the Secretary-General's Special Representative had established a contact group in Freetown, which consisted of the representatives of ECOWAS countries, members of the Security Council represented in Sierra Leone and major troop contributors.

The Secretary-General visited Sierra Leone on 2 and 3 December to assess UN operations and met with President Kabbah and other personalities to consider the way forward. He noted that, on the one hand, UNAMSIL had made progress in recovering from the May crisis and that significant efforts had been made to implement the recommendations of the assessment mission as well as those of the Security Council mission; on the other hand, the challenges confronting Sierra Leone were still daunting. UNAMSIL needed to strike a balance between its limited presence and the need to be proactive. Large areas of the country remained outside government control and were not accessible to humanitarian agencies. Furthermore, the regional dimension of the conflict needed to be addressed. If UNAMSIL was to assume new responsibilities in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme as proposed, such as the provision of managerial, logistical and coordination support to demobilization camps and disarmament/reception sites, there would be significant implications for the Mission's mandate as well as its additional financial, human and other resources. The military strength, for example, would need to be expanded well beyond its current size of 12,455.

The security situation had remained relatively stable, with the exception of the border area with Guinea. Elsewhere, the ceasefire appeared to be holding. The Government continued to face considerable constraints in its efforts to restore its authority, even in those areas already under its control, due to lack of financial and logistical resources and, in some cases, security concerns. The human rights situation was exacerbated by the cross-border attacks against Guinea, allegedly by RUF, and reported human rights abuses committed by RUF in its harassment of civilians persisted, as did forcible recruitment of adults and children for fighting as well as forced labour. The humanitarian situation continued to deteriorate as Sierra Leonean refugees fleeing violence in neighbouring Guinea began returning home. Since early September, the Government of Sierra Leone had assisted in repatriating more than 20,000 Sierra Leonean refugees from Guinea by boat and an additional 11,500 refugees moved over land to the Lungi areas where they were receiving community-based assistance.

In general, despite some positive developments, the situation remained precarious. The fighting along the borders with Guinea and Liberia further complicated the situation. The reported involvement of RUF in those incursions raised serious questions about the sincerity of their commitment to disarmament and the peace process. The signing of the ceasefire agreement constituted a first step towards creating an environment conducive to the reactivation of the peace process. However, RUF needed to demonstrate its good faith by opening roads in areas it controlled so that the United Nations had access, and by returning to UNAMSIL all weapons seized from peacekeepers and proceeding with the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of its combatants. Should RUF comply with the 10 November ceasefire agreement, UNAMSIL would be able to deploy forward gradually in the discharge of its mandate. However, that might require the Mission to expand beyond its authorized strength. The Secretary-General therefore urged all militarily capable countries to consider contributing equipped contingents to the Mission, and reiterated his recommendation to increase the strength to 20,500 personnel. In the meantime, he recommended the extension of UNAMSIL's mandate for another three months, to allow the Mission to respond to the requirements of the Abuja ceasefire agreement. The challenges confronting the country remained daunting and required the active support of the international community, he concluded.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 22 December [meeting 4253], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1334 (2000). The draft [S/2000/1224] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1270(1999) of 22 October 1999, 1289(2000) of 7 February 2000, 1313(2000) of 4 August 2000, 1317(2000) of 5 September 2000, 1321(2000) of 20 September 2000, the statement by its President of 3 November 2000, and all other relevant resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the situation in Sierra Leone,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 15 December 2000,

1. Expresses its continued concern at the continuing fragile situation in Sierra Leone and neighbouring States;

2. Takes note of the Agreement on the Ceasefire and Cessation of Hostilities between the Government of the Republic of Sierra Leone and the Revolutionary United Front, signed in Abuja on 10 November 2000, expresses its concern at the failure of the Front fully to meet its obligations under the agreement, and calls upon it to give a more convincing demonstration of commitment to the ceasefire and the peace process;

3. Recalls that the main objectives of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone, as set out in resolution 1313(2000) and confirmed in the concept of operations proposed by the Secretary-General in his report of 24

August 2000, remain to assist the efforts of the Government of Sierra Leone to extend State authority, restore law and order and further stabilize the situation progressively throughout the entire country and to assist in the promotion of the political process, leading to a renewed disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme where possible, and reiterates that, to that end, the structure, capability, resources and mandate of the Mission require appropriate strengthening;

4. Commends the continued efforts of the Secretary-General in that regard to seek further firm commitments of troops for the Mission, strongly urges all States in a position to do so seriously to consider contributing peacekeeping forces for Sierra Leone, and expresses its appreciation to those States which have already made such offers;

5. Expresses its intention, in that context, following consultations with troop-contributing countries, to respond promptly to any additional specific recommendations made by the Secretary-General in the next period on the force strength and tasks of the Mission;

6. Decides to extend the present mandate of the Mission until 31 March 2001;

7. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

UNOMSIL/UNAMSIL financing

The Secretary-General, in March [A/54/778], presented to the General Assembly the financial performance report of the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone (UNOMSIL), the mission that preceded UNAMSIL, for the period from its inception on 13 July 1998 to 30 June 1999. The Assembly had appropriated $22 million gross ($21,279,800 net) for that period, from which $16,167,100 gross ($15,706,550 net) had been assessed on Member States. Expenditures for the period totalled $12,883,800 gross ($12,397,000 net), resulting in an unutilized balance of $9,116,200 gross ($8,882,800 net). The unutilized balance of assessments amounted to $3,283,300 gross ($3,309,550 net). The unutilized balance of appropriations was attributable to the scaling back of UNOMSIL following the outbreak of hostilities in Freetown in mid-December 1998 and early January 1999. The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly reduce the appropriation for UNOMSIL from $22 million gross to $16,167,100 gross, corresponding to the amount actually assessed on Member States, and make a decision on the treatment of the unutilized balance of $3,283,300.

In April [A/54/820], the Secretary-General reported on the revised budget for the operation of UNAMSIL for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, as well as the proposed budget for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001. The 1999/2000 budget was revised after the Security Council, by resolution 1289(2000), expanded UNAMSIL's military strength to 11,100 personnel. The revised 1999/2000 budget amounted to $265,789,000 gross ($264,371,600 net) and represented an increase of some 33 per cent in gross terms over resources already appropriated for UNAMSIL by the Assembly in resolution 54/241 A [YUN 1999, p. 168]. The proposed budget for 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 amounted to $476,726,400 gross ($472,965,600 net).

The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly appropriate and assess the additional amount of $65,789,000 gross ($66,606,500 net) for the maintenance of UNAMSIL from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000. He also recommended that it appropriate $476,726,400 gross ($472,965,600 net) to cover the following 12 months. Assessments in the amount of $47,672,640 gross ($47,296,560 net) were suggested for UNAMSIL maintenance from 1 July to 6 August 2000, as were assessments of $429,053,760 gross ($425,669,040 net) for the period from 7 August 2000 to 30 June 2001, at the monthly rate of $39,727,200 gross ($39,413,800 net), subject to the Council's extension of the UNAMSIL mandate.

ACABQ considered the Secretary-General's reports on UNOMSIL's financial performance and UNAMSIL's revised budget and, in May [A/54/858], recommended that the Assembly approve the proposal to reduce the appropriation for the establishment and operation of UNOMSIL as suggested, and that the unutilized balance be credited to Member States. It also recommended the approval of the request for the appropriation and assessment of the additional amount of $65,789,000 gross ($66,606,500 net) for the maintenance of UNAMSIL for the 1999/2000 period, and the appropriation and assessment of $476,726,400 gross ($472,965,600 net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the 2000/01 period.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 June [meeting 98], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/686/Add.1], adopted resolution 54/241 B without vote [agenda items 150 and 172].

Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone and financing of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone and the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 1181(1998) of 13 July 1998, by which the Council established the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone, 1270(1999) of 22 October 1999, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone, and 1289(2000) of 7 February 2000, by which the Council revised and extended the mandate of the Mission,

Recalling its resolutions 53/29 of 20 November 1998 and 54/241 A of 23 December 1999 on the financing of the Observer Mission and the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone as at 30 April 2000, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 83.7 million United States dollars, representing 39 per cent of the total assessed contributions, notes that some 18 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

5. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

6. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

7. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

8. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi,

Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Mission, and for this purpose requests the Secretary-General to speed up the implementation of the asset management system at all peacekeeping missions in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/1 A of 15 October 1997;

9. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

12. Decides to reduce the appropriation authorized for the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone in respect of the period from 13 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 under the terms of General Assembly resolution 53/29 from the amount of 22 million dollars gross (21,279,800 dollars net) to the amount of 16,167,100 dollars gross (15,706,550 dollars net), equal to the amount apportioned among Member States in respect of the period from 13 July 1998 to 13 March 1999, and to extend the period covered by the apportionment until 30 June 1999;

13. Decides also to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone the amount of 65,789,000 dollars gross (66,606,500 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, in addition to the amount of 200 million dollars gross (197,765,100 dollars net) already appropriated under the terms of General Assembly resolution 54/241 A;

14. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, taking into account the amount of 200 million dollars gross (197,765,100 dollars net) already apportioned under the terms of General Assembly resolution 54/241 A, to apportion among Member States the additional amount of 65,789,000 dollars gross (66,606,500 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, 50/451 B of 23 December 1995 and 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999;

15. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 14 above, shall take into consideration the decrease in their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of

817,500 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000;

16. Decides also to appropriate the amount of 504,399,051 dollars gross (496,545,461 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, inclusive of the amount of 23,931,281 dollars gross (20,250,873 dollars net) for the support account for peacekeeping operations and the amount of 3,741,370 dollars gross (3,328,988 dollars net) for the United Nations Logistics Base;

17. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion among Member States the amount of 50,168,723 dollars gross (49,387,586 dollars net) for the period from 1 July to 6 August 2000, in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution and the scale of assessments for the year 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A and 54/237 A;

18. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 17 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 781,137 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 July to 6 August 2000;

19. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion among Member States the amount of 454,230,328 dollars gross (447,157,875 dollars net) for the period from 7 August 2000 to 30 June 2001 at a monthly rate of 42,033,254 dollars gross (41,378,788 dollars net), in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution and the scale of assessments for the year 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A and 54/237 A, and for the year 2001, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission beyond 6 August 2000;

20. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 19 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 7,072,453 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 7 August 2000 to 30 June 2001;

21. Decides that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 14 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 3,283,300 dollars gross (3,309,550 dollars net) in respect of the period from 13 July 1998 to 30 June 1999;

22. Decides also that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 3,283,300 dollars gross (3,309,550 dollars net) in respect of the period from 13 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

23. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

24. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Mission;

25. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

26. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone".

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on UNAMSIL financing would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458) and that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the item at that session (decision 55/455).

Somalia

The quest for peace in Somalia took a step forward in 2000 as the international community and Somali leaders worked together to implement the Djibouti initiative for peace in Somalia, which the President of Djibouti, Ismail Omar Guelleh, had presented to the General Assembly in 1999.

Preparatory meetings organized by Djibouti in the early part of the year were followed by the Somali National Peace Conference in May and June in Arta, Djibouti. The Conference was attended by 810 delegates representing most of Somalia's clans and from all parts of the country. The initiative progressed further following the Conference with the approval of a Transitional National Charter, the election of a Transitional National Assembly, and the election in August of a President (Abdikassim Salad Hassan) to head Somalia's Transitional National Government. Following his inauguration, President Hassan made determined efforts to bring Somaliland and Puntland, two factions that boycotted the Conference, into the peace process. The Secretary-General's Special Representative also assisted in the effort towards reconciliation.

The United Nations Political Office in Somalia (UNPOS) continued to monitor the political situation and to encourage Somali leaders and the international community to work together to restore peace; UN agencies continued to provide support and technical assistance.

However, even with the Transitional National Government in place, banditry and other criminal acts remained rampant, as the Government had only limited control. Several local and international aid workers and non-governmental staff lost their lives in 2000.

In June, the Security Council urged representatives of all social and political forces in Somalia to participate actively and constructively in the peace process and urged the warlords and faction leaders to desist from obstructing and undermining peace efforts.

In December, the General Assembly, in resolution 55/168, called on the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize international humanitarian, rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance for Somalia.

Peace process

Communication. On 5 April [S/2000/287], Djibouti transmitted to the Security Council President the final communiqué of the Technical Consultative Symposium on the Somali Peace Process (Djibouti, 21-30 March). The Symposium, the first inclusive civil society-based peace initiative of its kind, was opened by the President of Djibouti, and attended by over 60 intellectuals and peace activists from Somalia and the diaspora. The participants recommended that the upcoming National Peace Conference be open to all Somalis who wanted to bring peace, progress and speedy reconstruction to the country and stated that there was a need to consider an extension of the Conference's time frame to allow Somalis to fully prepare for it.

National Peace Conference. The first phase of the Somali National Peace Conference, a meeting of 810 traditional and clan leaders, took place in Arta, Djibouti, from 2 May to 13 June. The Conference focused on the issue of reconciliation among the clans and prepared for the second phase (15 June-15 July) by drawing up an agenda.

Somaliland and Puntland had withdrawn their support, in February and March respectively, for the Djibouti initiative, and rejected the outcome of the Somali peace process.

The Conference approved the Transitional National Charter, which provided for governance in a transition phase of three years, culminating in elections; regional autonomy; structures for executive, legislative and judicial powers; and the rights of individuals. For the first time in Somali history, there was a specific requirement that 25 seats in parliament be set aside for women. In addition 24 seats were allotted for minority clans. The Charter, which would be the supreme law until a definitive federal constitution for Somalia was adopted, also provided for the election of a 225-person Transitional National Assembly. The Assembly was selected in August. However, due to serious differences about the number of seats allotted to each clan, the Somali National Peace Conference later gave President Guelleh the right to use his own discretion to select a further 20 parliamentarians. The Assembly met for the first time on 13 August.

Transitional Government. The presidential elections for the Transitional National Government were won by Abdikassim Salad Hassan. President Hassan, who was inaugurated in Arta on 27 August, was the first Somali leader since 1991 to be readmitted to Somalia's seat in the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD). Acceptance of the Transitional National Government by Somalia's immediate neighbours represented an important development in the country's return to the community of nations.

By October, appointments were made to the Transitional National Government and priorities, such as security, demobilization and disarmament, were established. In a move towards reconciliation, President Hassan, with the aid of the Government of Italy, met twice with some faction leaders from Mogadishu.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 June [S/PV.4166], the Security Council was briefed on the situation in Somalia by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs. He observed that the most serious obstacle to the peace process was the absence of the leaders of the self-styled Somaliland and "Puntland". He noted that Djibouti was continuing its efforts to persuade certain faction leaders, particularly the Hawiye clan in the Mogadishu area, to revise their hostile attitude towards the Somali National Peace Conference. The Under-Secretary-General described the serious humanitarian situation in Somalia, noting that 750,000 people across the country were highly vulnerable following three consecutive years of below-normal rainfall (see also p. 859). Personal safety and security remained part of the risk of humanitarian assistance delivery in Somalia and the lives of humanitarian staff continued to be lost or put at risk.

The Permanent Representative of Djibouti also addressed the Council, providing details of the Peace Conference.

Also on 29 June [meeting 4167], following consultations among Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/22 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council reaffirms its commitment to a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the situation in Somalia, consistent with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, bearing in mind respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and unity of Somalia. It reiterates that full responsibility for achieving national reconciliation and peace rests with the Somali people themselves.

The Council expresses its full support for the efforts exerted by the Intergovernmental Authority on Development to find a political solution to the crisis in Somalia. It welcomes and fully supports the initiative of the President of Djibouti aimed at restoring peace and stability in Somalia, and urges States and international organizations, in a position to do so, to give these efforts political support and to provide financial and technical assistance to the Government of Djibouti to this end.

The Council expresses its deep concern at the ongoing abuse of human rights and grave deterioration of the humanitarian situation in Somalia, which has led to death, displacement and the outbreak of diseases among the civilian population, particularly among children and other vulnerable groups. It expresses appreciation for the efforts of all United Nations agencies, other organizations and individuals carrying out humanitarian activities in Somalia. The Council strongly condemns attacks by armed groups on innocent civilians and all humanitarian personnel. It strongly urges the Somali factions to respect international humanitarian and human rights law, ensure the safety and freedom of movement of all humanitarian personnel and facilitate the delivery of humanitarian relief to all those in need.

The Council underlines the importance of the widest participation by representatives of all parts of Somali society in an effort to rehabilitate Somalia. The Council strongly urges representatives of all social and political forces of Somali society to participate actively and in a constructive spirit in the work of the Somali National Peace and Reconciliation Conference in Arta, Djibouti. In this regard, it urges the warlords and faction leaders to desist from obstructing and undermining efforts to achieve peace. The Council expresses its readiness to consider taking appropriate steps regarding the warlords and faction leaders who engage in such activities. It also urges all States to stop providing those individuals with the means to carry on their destructive activities.

The Council reminds all States of their obligation to comply with the measures imposed by resolution 733(1992) of 23 January 1992, and urges them to take all necessary steps to ensure full implementation and enforcement of the arms embargo. The Council further urges all States, the United Nations and other international organizations and entities to report to the Committee established pursuant to resolution 751(1992) of 24 April 1992 any information on possible violations of the arms embargo.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Communication. On 13 July [S/2000/691], Djibouti transmitted to the Security Council a decision on Somalia adopted by the seventy-second ordinary session of the OAU Council of Ministers, and subsequently endorsed by the Summit of the Heads of State and Government of OAU. The Council welcomed and fully supported the Djibouti initiative on Somalia and the resulting National Peace Conference; urged all warlords and other leaders not involved in the Conference to join and participate; called on the international community to exert pressure on those who engaged in hostile activities towards undermining and obstructing the peace process; and appealed to the international community to provide assistance to the potential national transitional administration in Somalia, particularly reconstruction and development assistance and rebuilding of institutions.

Security Council consideration. On 14 September, the Security Council held a private meeting to consider the situation in Somalia [S/PV.4196], at which it was briefed by President Ismail Omar Guelleh of Djibouti. Among other things, President Guelleh requested the Council to give serious consideration to a UN post-conflict peace-building mission in Somalia. Members of the Council posed questions, to which President Guelleh responded.

Further communications. On 8 September [S/2000/916], the EU indicated its willingness to enter into dialogue with the new Somali authorities and to support their efforts to rebuild the country. It called on the authorities in Somaliland and Puntland to establish constructive relations with the institutions that emerged from the Arta process, and urged the future Transitional Government to establish a constructive dialogue with the aforementioned authorities for the purpose of re-establishing national unity in peace.

By a 22 September communiqué [S/2000/923], the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya stated that President Hassan of Somalia visited Libya (20-22 September) and had met with Colonel Muammar Qadhafi with whom he discussed the national reconciliation process in Somalia and the need for support in order to achieve security, stability and development. Mr. Hassan also met with the leaders of the Somali National Alliance, present in Libya at that time. The two parties expressed an understanding of the need for dispatch in taking the necessary measures to build the executive institutions established by the Peace Conference.

By a communiqué [S/2000/1126], Ethiopia informed the Security Council that President Hassan had paid a three-day visit to Ethiopia starting on 15 November when he met with Prime Minister Meles Zenawi and Foreign Minister Seyoum Mesfin. The Ethiopian Government was encouraged by President Hassan's assurance that the Somali Transitional Government would do everything possible to remove all elements using Somali territory as a springboard to threaten regional peace and stability; and by his conviction of the need to bring into the peace process the other Somali parties that had not participated in the Arta Conference. Ethiopia affirmed that that Conference constituted a major achievement in the Somali peace process.

Report of Secretary-General. In a 19 December report [S/2000/1211], submitted in response to a request contained in Security Council statement S/PRST/1999/16 [YUN 1999, p. 171], the Secretary-General described events in Somalia since his August 1999 report [ibid., p. 172], particularly the Djibouti President's peace initiative and the Arta Peace Conference and its follow-up (see above). He also described activities of the Transitional National Assembly and the Transitional National Government, including President Hassan's efforts to reconcile the Somali factions that had stayed away from the peace process.

With regard to the UN role, the Secretary-General stated that UNPOS continued to monitor the political situation in Somalia and to encourage Somali leaders and the international community to work together to restore peace. The Secretary-General's Special Representative for Somalia, David Stephen, had travelled to Djibouti in February to assist and support Djibouti's efforts and remained there until the conclusion of the process. Mr. Stephen made several attempts to engage the "Somaliland administration" and succeeded in establishing direct talks between President Guelleh and Mohamed Ibrahim Egal, a Somaliland leader. Nevertheless, the Egal administration did not participate in the Arta Conference. In September, he tried to encourage dialogue between Mr. Egal and President Hassan but Mr. Egal stated that he would not talk to Mr. Hassan as long as the latter claimed to be President of all of Somalia.

The security situation in north-western and north-eastern Somalia remained relatively calm, with occasional incidents of banditry and other criminal acts. In the central and southern parts of the country, the situation was uncertain and sometimes extremely tense. Extended parts of coastal areas were not under the control of any effective regional authority and continued to be dominated by pirates. The risk for the personal safety of international staff was very high. Banditry was rampant in Mogadishu where there was no single authority for the maintenance of law and order. Significant parts of the city continued to be under the control of different militias, including the seaport and the airport, which remained closed, the former government blocks and the main city market. The Transitional National Government had only limited control of the Greater Mogadishu area. Several Somali aid workers had lost their lives during the period under review and there had been killings and kidnappings of foreign nationals.

With regard to humanitarian conditions, the Secretary-General stated that there had been favourable environmental conditions since June. Thus, humanitarian needs had decreased significantly across most of Somalia. In response, UN agencies were developing assistance strategies to promote the mid-term recovery of the livelihood of poor and displaced populations. While humanitarian concerns had lessened on the national level, pockets of vulnerability remained. As of October, field reports indicated that the bumper harvest might provide only temporary respite for many communities in southern Somalia and, without further improvements in their livelihood, many communities would face more food and water insecurity.

The Secretary-General observed that the Transitional National Government, currently located in Mogadishu, had begun the process of establishing itself on Somali soil and expanding the areas under its influence. It had three years in which to prepare for the installation of permanent governance arrangements, during which basic political, economic and development challenges would have to be addressed.

Arms embargo

On 20 December, the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 751(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 202] concerning Somalia submitted to the Council a report covering the Committee's activities in 2000 [S/2000/1226]. The Committee had been established to monitor the military and weapons embargo against Somalia imposed by resolution 733(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 199].

On 8 March, the Committee reviewed measures for enhancing the effective implementation of the arms embargo, with a view to curbing the continued flow of arms to Somalia. Towards that end, the Committee decided to seek the assistance of OAU and IGAD and, in letters of 20 March, appealed to both organizations to provide the Committee with any information they might have relating to violations or suspected violations of the embargo.

On 22 March, the Committee addressed a note verbale to all Permanent Representatives/Permanent Observers to the United Nations, reminding them of their obligations under resolutions 733(1992) and 954(1994) [YUN 1994, p. 325], and requesting their assistance towards the effective implementation of the arms embargo.

The Committee reiterated that it did not have any specific monitoring mechanism to ensure the effective implementation of the arms embargo, and that it relied solely on the cooperation of States and organizations in a position to provide information on violations.

UNOSOM II financing

The United Nations Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM), established by Security Council resolution 751(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 202], was withdrawn from Somalia in March 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 400].

On 5 September, the General Assembly decided to include in the draft agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Operation in Somalia II" (decision 54/496).

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458). On the same date, it decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the item at that session (decision 55/455).

Sudan

In 2000, the Sudan made serious efforts to cooperate with the international community. In order to improve relations and mend any rifts, the Sudan brokered many agreements with its neighbours through joint ministerial meetings. It also acceded to international conventions against terrorism.

Given its concerted efforts to discharge its obligations under various Security Council resolutions, the Sudan requested that the Council lift the sanctions imposed against it in 1996.

Despite improved international relations, the Sudan remained entangled in internal conflict. It informed the Council and the General Assembly that the Sudanese People's Liberation Movement/Army (SPLM/A) was in frequent violation of the ceasefire agreement between it and the Government. Although the Sudan remained committed to the ceasefire, it affirmed its right to respond to aggression.

In December, the Sudan held presidential elections, which were considered by an observer team of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD) to have been conducted in a satisfactory manner and in a conducive atmosphere.

Sanctions

On 1 June [S/2000/513], the Sudan informed the Security Council that it had taken practical and concrete measures to fully discharge its obligations under Council resolutions 1044(1996) [YUN 1996, p. 129], 1054(1996) [ibid., p. 130] and 1070(1996) [ibid., p. 131], and on that basis requested that the sanctions imposed in 1996 be lifted. Those sanctions called for States to reduce the level of diplomatic staff in the Sudan and restrict travel of Sudanese government officials and armed forces into or through their territories, and to deny Sudanese aircraft the right to use other countries' airspace.

Describing the actions taken, the Sudan stated that on the issue of the surrender of the three persons suspected in the attempt to assassinate President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt in 1995, in Addis Ababa [YUN 1995, p. 412], its inquiries showed no trace of the suspects in the Sudan. The findings were shared with Egypt and Ethiopia, the two parties concerned, which expressed satisfaction with the honest efforts made by the Sudan and signed security agreements or memorandums of understanding with the Sudan with a view to promoting future cooperation in that area.

With regard to desisting from engaging in any terrorist activities, the Sudan expressed its desire to cooperate with the international community in combating terrorism. Putting words into deeds, the Sudan, in March, enacted legislation for the suppression of terrorist offences, and, in May, it acceded to or signed all of the international conventions for the elimination of international terrorism. It was also a party to regional agreements, had participated in regional programmes for the suppression and elimination of terrorism in the African continent, and had taken measures regarding the regulation of entry into the country.

The Sudan also took steps to improve relations with its neighbours, as exemplified by the conclusion of different agreements by joint ministerial committees convened to discuss political, economic and social interests; it also made sustained efforts to mend any rifts in the country's foreign relations at the inter-African and inter-Arab levels, demonstrating its political will to cooperate.

The Sudan's request that the sanctions be lifted drew letters of endorsement from the League of Arab States [S/2000/517, S/2000/863], from the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries [S/2000/521] and from the African Group at the United Nations [S/2000/533].

Internal conflict

Communications. In a 28 March letter [S/2000/288], the President of IGAD communicated to the Security Council the Authority's concern that if the Council took up the question of peace in the Sudan, it could have a negative impact on the peace process being guided by IGAD. Although IGAD fully recognized that the Council had primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, IGAD hoped that the Council would give it the opportunity to resolve the conflict in the Sudan.

In 5 May [S/2000/402] and 30 June [S/2000/656] statements, the EU welcomed the Sudan's announcement that it had ordered the cessation of aerial bombings of targets in southern Sudan; reiterated its commitment to the renewed political dialogue; expressed concern regarding the offensive launched by SPLM/A in the region of Bahr al-Ghazal; and appealed to the Government of the Sudan and SPLM/A to decide on a comprehensive cessation of hostilities and to advance the ongoing IGAD peace process. It also called for the humanitarian ceasefire commitments given to be respected and expressed the hope that a global and unlimited ceasefire might be proclaimed as soon as possible.

On 27 June [A/54/933], the Sudan informed the Secretary-General that SPLM/A had resumed its attacks in various areas on 20 and 21 June, in a breach of the ceasefire it had declared on 8 May. The Sudan called on the world community, IGAD member countries, the IGAD partners forum and all the forces supporting the rebel movement to condemn the irresponsible behaviour of SPLM/A, and reiterated that it reserved the right to repulse attacks launched by the rebel movement, without affecting its commitment to the ceasefire and its pledge to strive for peace.

In follow-up letters of 30 June [A/54/934], 19 July [A/54/943] and 2 August [A/54/956], the Sudan informed the Secretary-General that the continuous attacks by SPLM/A had resulted in the seizure of the town of Gogrial in the Bahr al-Ghazal region and in the injury of a staff member of the United Nations Children's Fund aboard a UN boat. The Sudan confirmed its commitment to the ceasefire, renewed its call for agreement on a comprehensive ceasefire and reaffirmed its right to respond to aggression.

Elections

The Sudan held presidential elections from 5 to 23 December. On 29 December [A/55/722], OAU informed the Secretary-General that, at the invitation of the General Elections Authority of the Sudan, it had dispatched a nine-member team to observe the elections.

The team witnessed various aspects of the electoral process, including administrative arrangements, campaigns and polling activities, and held discussions with all five presidential candidates and other parties, including those who boycotted the elections, and noted their concerns. Although some major political parties boycotted the elections, the leaders from all sides expressed their readiness and commitment to embark on a dialogue after the elections.

The OAU team commended the General Elections Authority for making arrangements to allow the Sudanese people, including those outside the country, to freely exercise their democratic rights and noted that the exercise, an important step towards democratization, was conducted in a satisfactory manner and in a conducive atmosphere.

Sudan-Uganda

On 8 November [S/2000/1086], Uganda informed the Security Council of a meeting it had hosted (Kampala, 26-27 September) to discuss relations between it and the Sudan. The participants were the Foreign Ministers of Egypt, the Sudan and Uganda and the Minister of African Unity of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

Uganda and the Sudan reiterated their commitment to refrain from interfering in each other's internal affairs and from doing anything that would undermine the security and stability of the other.

Sudan-United States

On 28 November [A/55/651-S/2000/1135], the Sudan informed the Secretary-General of a breach of its sovereignty on 19 and 20 November by a United States official and accompanying delegation, who entered the country without visas and without the permission of the Sudanese Government, thereby violating the domestic laws and international norms governing the movement of persons between States.

The Sudan asked the Secretary-General to draw the attention of the United States to the fact that it had taken steps incompatible with the UN Charter and to alert the Security Council to the incident.

Western Sahara

---

In 2000, the United Nations continued efforts to hold a referendum to enable the people of Western Sahara to make a choice between independence or integration with Morocco, in accordance with a settlement plan approved by the Security Council in resolution 658(1990) [YUN 1990, p. 920]. The plan, agreed to by both Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (POLISARIO), established the conditions for the referendum.

The United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) was established by Council resolution 690(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 794] to implement the plan.

In January, the second round of the appeals process was launched by the Identification Commission. The second part of the provisional list of applicants eligible to vote contained the names of 2,135 applicants out of 51,220 interviewed from tribal groupings H41, H61 and J51/52. Together with the 84,251 eligible applicants in the first part of the provisional list, issued in July 1999, the number of those eligible to vote totalled 86,386. In accordance with the MINURSO appeals procedures, all those excluded from the provisional voter list had the right to appeal, while those found eligible could also challenge the inclusion of others.

At the suggestion of the Secretary-General's Personal Envoy, James A. Baker III, and following preliminary discussions with the two parties and two neighbouring countries, Algeria and Mauritania, a meeting was held between the parties in London in May to consider the problems in implementing the settlement plan and the 1997 Houston agreements [YUN 1997, p. 149], as well as other possible approaches. However, despite that meeting and subsequent meetings in London, Geneva and Berlin, a resolution of the parties' dispute had still not been achieved. While POLISARIO reiterated its commitment to the settlement plan and to the holding of the referendum as the only solution to the conflict, Morocco said that it was willing, within the framework of respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Morocco, to respond positively to the Security Council's request pursuant to resolution 1309(2000) to search for a political solution to the situation in Western Sahara.

At the end of the year, the Secretary-General observed that further meetings to seek a political solution could not succeed unless the Government of Morocco was prepared to offer or support some devolution of governmental authority for all inhabitants and former inhabitants of the Territory that was genuine, substantial and in keeping with international norms. If Morocco could not agree on that issue, MINURSO should begin expeditiously hearing the pending appeals from the identification process.

MINURSO's mandate was extended several times during the year; in October, the Council extended the mandate until 28 February 2001.

Report of Secretary-General (February). In response to Security Council resolution 1282(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 186], the Secretary-General submitted a 17 February progress report [S/2000/131] on the implementation of the 1990 settlement plan. He stated that his Special Representative, William Eagleton, had consulted with Moroccan and POLISARIO representatives on moving the process forward, particularly with respect to the new round of appeals following the issuance of the second part of the provisional voter list on 17 January and the preparatory work for repatriation of Saharan refugees. POLISARIO continued to express concern over delays resulting from the large number of appeals expected from the second part of the provisional voter list. Meanwhile, the Moroccan authorities reiterated the right of every applicant to appeal by presenting witnesses who could provide new information to support his or her inclusion in the list. Following the release of the second part of the provisional list, the Moroccan authorities, surprised at the small number of applicants found to be eligible, emphasized the importance of an appeals process in which all Saharans rejected by the MINURSO Identification Commission were given the opportunity to restate their case. Moroccan officials again questioned the impartiality and objectivity of the Identification Commission and warned that the referendum would not be held if any person originating from the Sahara were denied the right to participate. At the same time, POLISARIO warned against any attempt to delay the referendum and called for the speedy implementation of the settlement plan. POLISARIO officials expressed the view that if the process were delayed much longer, the presence of MINURSO would become irrelevant and there could be a return to armed hostilities.

MINURSO had opened appeal centres in the Territory, in the Tindouf area of Algeria, in Morocco and in Mauritania to receive appeals from tribal groupings H41, H61 and J51/52. As at 11 February, 29,690 appeals had been received. The Identification Commission had almost completed the processing of the 79,000 appeals received from the first part of the provisional voter list.

On 26 January, the Government of Morocco informed the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) that it was prepared to receive all Moroccan prisoners of war whose names had been submitted to the Secretary-General's Special Representative in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 186]. ICRC subsequently informed the Special Representative that it was proceeding with the necessary arrangements in consultation with the parties.

As at 17 February, the strength of MINURSO's military component, which continued to monitor the ceasefire between the Royal Moroccan Army and the POLISARIO forces, was 230. The strength of the civilian police component, which had been assisting at appeal centres since 17 January, stood at 81.

During the reporting period, UNHCR continued preparations for the repatriation of Saharan refugees, consolidating its presence in the mission area by assigning additional personnel to Laayoune and Tindouf. It completed its pre-registration exercise to ascertain the refugees' willingness to repatriate and to determine their final destinations in the Territory. The total number of pre-registered refugees reached 107,149. The Special Representative and UNHCR initiated cross-border confidence-building measures, including family visits. However, no progress was made because POLISARIO continued to be concerned about the absence of security guarantees in the area of the Territory west of the berm and, although initially welcoming the proposed measures, the refugees in the Tindouf camps also remained concerned for their safety and security.

The Secretary-General noted that the developments during the nine years since MINURSO's establishment, and particularly those in recent months, raised doubts about the possibility of achieving a smooth and consensual implementation of the settlement plan and agreements adopted by the parties, despite the support given by the international community. Furthermore, even assuming that a referendum were held pursuant to the settlement plan and agreements of the parties, should the results not be recognized and accepted by one party, no enforcement mechanism was envisioned by the settlement plan nor was one likely to be proposed, calling for the use of military means to effect enforcement. The Secretary-General felt that it would be wise to review the situation and he intended to ask his Personal Envoy to consult with the parties and to explore ways to achieve an early, durable and agreed resolution of their dispute. The Secretary-General therefore recommended that the Council extend MINURSO's mandate for a three-month period, until 31 May.

Communication. In a 24 February letter to the Council [S/2000/148], Morocco conveyed its views on the implementation of the settlement plan, the progress of the identification process and prospects for implementing the appeals procedure.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

On 29 February [meeting 4106], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1292 (2000). The draft [S/2000/149] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its resolutions on the question of Western Sahara, in particular resolution 1108(1997) of 22 May 1997,

Recalling also the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel of 9 December 1994,

Welcoming and encouraging efforts by the United Nations to sensitize peacekeeping personnel in the prevention and control of HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases in all its peacekeeping operations,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 17 February 2000 and the observations and recommendations contained therein,

Reiterating its full support for the continued efforts exerted by the Secretary-General, his Personal Envoy, his Special Representative and the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara to implement the settlement plan and agreements adopted by the parties, to hold a free, fair and impartial referendum for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara,

Noting the concern expressed in the report about the possibility of achieving a smooth and consensual implementation of the settlement plan and agreements adopted by the parties, despite the support given by the international community, and urging the parties to cooperate so as to achieve a lasting solution,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 31 May 2000;

2. Supports the intention of the Secretary-General, as stated, inter alia, in his report, to ask his Personal Envoy to consult the parties and, taking into account existing and potential obstacles, to explore ways and means to achieve an early, durable and agreed resolution of their dispute;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to provide an assessment of the situation before the end of the present mandate of the Mission;

4. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Communication. On 7 March [A/55/58-S/2000/197], Namibia transmitted a memorandum from POLISARIO to the General Assembly and the Security Council that stated that a new problem was hindering the implementation of the settlement plan, namely the large number of appeals in the identification process lodged by Morocco. POLISARIO was of the view that the new problem could be resolved through implementation of the May 1999 protocols, concluded in conformity with Council resolutions 1238(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 181] and 1263(1999) [ibid., p. 185]. Those instruments warned that the appeals process should not turn into a new identification operation.

Report of Secretary General (May). In accordance with Security Council resolution 1292 (2000), the Secretary-General submitted a 22 May report [S/2000/461], in which he provided an assessment of the situation concerning Western Sahara. He said his Personal Envoy visited the region from 8 to 11 April for preliminary discussions with the two parties and the two neighbouring countries, Algeria and Mauritania. Following those contacts, the Personal Envoy thought it necessary to convene a meeting between the parties to consider the problems in implementing the settlement plan and the 1997 Houston agreements, as well as other possible approaches. The high-level face-to-face discussions between the parties (London, 14 May), at which observer delegations from the two neighbouring countries were also present, were inconclusive. At the close of those discussions, the Personal Envoy proposed another meeting, possibly in June, to discuss other ways to achieve resolution of the dispute.

As at 16 May, the strength of MINURSO's military component stood at 230 and the civilian police component numbered 80. Progress continued to be made in implementing the military agreements between MINURSO and the two parties on the marking and disposal of mines and unexploded ordnance and the related exchange of detailed information. The Royal Moroccan Army and POLISARIO forces conducted 21 operations for disposing of explosives and ammunition.

UNHCR continued the refugee pre-registration exercise for repatriation in Tindouf of those refugees who were away from the camps during the earlier registration phase. By May, 119,698 refugees and their immediate family members had been pre-registered from the MINURSO provisional lists of voters since the exercise started in August 1997. Efforts by the Special Representative and UNHCR to initiate cross-border confidence-building measures could not overcome the parties' reservations to implementing such measures. POLISARIO, in particular, continued to express security concerns about the Territory west of the berm.

The Secretary-General hoped that, as requested by his Personal Envoy, the parties would come forward with concrete proposals at the proposed June meeting. As they had been unable to bridge their recurrent differences over the years and taking into account that no enforcement mechanism was envisaged in the settlement plan, it was essential for the parties to offer specific solutions to the problems related to implementing the plan or, alternatively, be prepared to consider other ways to achieve an early, durable and agreed resolution of their dispute over Western Sahara. The Secretary-General therefore recommended that the Council extend MINURSO's mandate for a further two months, until 31 July.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 31 May [meeting 4149], the Security Council adopted by vote (12-1-2) resolution 1301(2000).

The draft [S/2000/500] was submitted by France, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its resolutions on the question of Western Sahara, in particular resolution 1108(1997) of 22 May 1997 and resolution 1292(2000) of 29 February 2000,

Recalling also the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel of 9 December 1994,

Welcoming and encouraging efforts by the United Nations to sensitize peacekeeping personnel in the prevention and control of HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases in all its peacekeeping operations,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 22 May 2000 and the efforts of his Personal Envoy in his mission as outlined therein, and endorsing the observations and recommendations contained therein,

Reiterating its full support for the continued efforts exerted by the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara to implement the settlement plan and agreements adopted by the parties to hold a free, fair and impartial referendum for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara, noting that fundamental differences between the parties over the interpretation of the main provisions remain to be resolved,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 31 July 2000, with the expectation that the parties will offer the Personal Envoy of the Secretary-General specific and concrete proposals that can be agreed to, in order to resolve the multiple problems relating to the implementation of the settlement plan and explore all ways and means to achieve an early, durable and agreed resolution to their dispute over Western Sahara;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide an assessment of the situation before the end of the present mandate of the Mission;

3. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

VOTE ON RESOLUTION 1301(2000):

In favour: Argentina, Bangladesh, Canada, China, France, Malaysia, Netherlands, Russian Federation, Tunisia, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: Namibia.

Abstaining: Jamaica, Mali.

Speaking before the vote, Namibia said that, although it fully supported the extension of MINURSO's mandate, it could not endorse observations in the Secretary-General's report that sought to diverge from the implementation of the settlement plan. Jamaica and Mali could not support the final phrase of operative paragraph 1.

Communication. Namibia transmitted to the Council a 31 May letter [S/2000/545] from POLISARIO referring to the fourth preambular and first operative paragraphs of resolution 1301(2000). POLISARIO considered that the only valid framework for a just and final settlement of the question of Western Sahara was the settlement plan, agreed to by the two parties and approved by the Council. Any approach other than implementation of the settlement plan could not achieve that objective and would undermine the international community's efforts to enable the Saharan people to express itself freely concerning its future. POLISARIO therefore could not support such an approach.

Report of Secretary-General (July). In response to resolution 1301(2000), the Secretary-General submitted a 12 July report [S/2000/683] on the situation concerning Western Sahara. The second meeting of the parties, under the auspices of the Secretary-General's Personal Envoy, took place in London on 28 June. There had been a frank and full exchange of views during which POLISARIO identified two areas of difficulty: the conduct of the appeals process and the repatriation of refugees. POLISARIO reiterated its willingness to cooperate with the United Nations to resolve all problems encountered in implementing the settlement plan and examine any proposals aimed at launching the appeals process, and reconfirmed its commitment to continue cooperating with UNHCR in carrying out its mission according to normal practices and principles concerning repatriation. It reiterated its promise to respect the results of the referendum of self-determination, hoping that Morocco would do the same. POLISARIO, however, did not offer specific proposals to resolve the multiple problems of the settlement plan to which the parties could agree.

Morocco identified four areas that it felt were impeding implementation of the settlement plan: the conduct of the appeals process; the reversal of the identification results for 7,000 applicants, which, in Morocco's view, should be reinstated; the repatriation of Saharan refugees; and the issue of Saharans who had reached voting age after December 1993, but had been excluded from the identification process. Those individuals should be identified or at least permitted to lodge appeals so all Saharans could participate in the referendum. Morocco would not participate in a referendum where Saharans who were entitled to vote were not allowed to do so. While promising to remain a partner with the United Nations in search of a solution to the question of Western Sahara, Morocco did not present any proposals to resolve the issue.

The Secretary-General's Personal Envoy indicated that other issues also remained unresolved: enforcement of the referendum's results; release of prisoners of war and Saharan political detainees; and possible problems related to the implementation of the code of conduct for the referendum campaign. He was also concerned about the high level of animosity between the parties. Indeed, he felt that the meeting, instead of resolving problems, had moved things backwards as it had deepened differences between the parties. The Personal Envoy appealed to the parties not to return to violence as an acceptable alternative, and suggested that they should meet again to arrive at a political solution. Options relevant to that solution could be a negotiated agreement for full integration of Western Sahara with Morocco, or for full independence, although, in his view, neither prospect appeared likely. Alternatively, a negotiated agreement could produce a solution somewhere between the two results. Another political solution could be agreement that would permit successful implementation of the settlement plan. He reiterated to the two parties that if they should agree to discuss a political solution other than the settlement plan, they would not prejudice their final positions, as according to the rules of the consultations, nothing would be agreed to until agreement could be reached on every issue. The Personal Envoy requested the parties to participate in expert-level meetings in Geneva to discuss the appeals process, prisoners of war and refugees. A meeting was scheduled for the end of July with participation of the Secretary-General's Special Representative, the Deputy to the Personal Envoy and representatives of ICRC, UNHCR and the parties.

During the reporting period, the Special Representative and the Chairman of the Identification Commission maintained contact with the parties in Rabat and Tindouf to ensure follow-up on the implementation of Security Council resolution 1301(2000). The Secretary-General himself visited Morocco on 17 June where he met with King Mohammed VI and Prince Moulay Rachid.

Concerning the appeals process, the Secretary-General stated that the Identification Commission had almost completed its work on data processing and analysis of the files received during the first round of appeals. It also completed a family research programme with a view to ascertaining the claims of the appellants regarding the existence of immediate family members included in the provisional voter lists. Other achievements included the finalization of a training manual and a training programme for all Commission staff.

As at 3 July, the military component of MINURSO stood at the authorized strength of 230 personnel; the civilian police component totalled 46 officers, down from 80 in May. During the reporting period, 278 mines and unexploded ordnance were marked and 124 destroyed on the Moroccan side, while 488 were marked and 177 destroyed on the POLISARIO side.

Regarding preparatory work for repatriating Saharan refugees, consultations continued between UNHCR and the parties. However, it was noted that certain activities, such as the cross-border confidence-building measures, could start only after the parties and refugees had agreed to the modalities for implementation.

The Secretary-General observed that, following the June meeting between the parties, it was obvious that arriving at a political solution was preferable to a breakdown of the process that could lead to a return to hostilities, which had to be avoided. He therefore suggested that the Council reflect on the problem of ensuring that the results of the referendum, should one be held, were respected by both parties. In that regard, he recalled that there was no enforcement mechanism provided in the settlement plan, nor was one likely to be proposed, calling for the use of military means to effect enforcement. He hoped that progress could be achieved during the forthcoming expert-level meetings in Geneva and expected his Personal Envoy, following those consultations, to meet with the parties, in the presence of the two observer countries, to try once again to resolve the problems relating to the settlement plan. Meanwhile, he was recommending that the Council extend MINURSO's mandate for a further three months, until 31 October.

Communication. In a 17 July letter [S/2000/699], Morocco pointed out to the Secretary-General that his 12 July report did not accurately reflect Morocco's position on the question of the review of the identification results. It explained that it was not calling for the reversal of the identification results. Rather, it had requested that candidates whose names had been included by the identification centres in official lists, but subsequently withdrawn by the review commission, be reinstated and included once again on the list of eligible persons. The report should be amended to reflect accurately Morocco's position on the issue.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 25 July [meeting 4175], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1309(2000). The draft [S/2000/728] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its resolutions on the question of Western Sahara, in particular resolutions 1108(1997) of 22 May 1997, 1292(2000) of 29 February 2000 and 1301(2000) of 31 May 2000, as well as its resolution 1308(2000) of 17 July 2000,

Recalling the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel of 9 December 1994,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 12 July 2000 and the observations and recommendations contained therein, and expressing full support for the role and work of his Personal Envoy,

Reiterating its full support for the continued efforts exerted by the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara to implement the settlement plan and agreements adopted by the parties to hold a free, fair and impartial referendum for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara,

Noting that fundamental differences between the parties over the interpretation of the main provisions of the settlement plan remain to be resolved,

Regretting that there was no progress made during the meeting held in London on 28 June 2000 between the parties,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 31 October 2000, with the expectation that the parties will meet in direct talks under the auspices of the Personal Envoy of the Secretary-General to try to resolve the multiple problems relating to the implementation of the settlement plan and to try to agree upon a mutually acceptable political solution to their dispute over Western Sahara;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide an assessment of the situation before the end of the present mandate of the Mission;

3. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Communications. By a 12 September letter [A/55/384-S/2000/870], Namibia transmitted to the Security Council and General Assembly a POLISARIO memorandum alluding to what POLISARIO perceived as Morocco's obstructionist attitude to the identification process and accusing Morocco of presenting obstacles to the repatriation of Saharawi refugees. POLISARIO stated that the undeclared objective of the Moroccan side was to sabotage the referendum process or at least to delay the time frame. As a result, MINURSO's civil activity had been reduced to a minimum since the completion in December 1999 of the process of identification of the tribes whose inclusion in the list had been challenged. Faced with that situation, neither the Secretary-General nor the Council continued to show the same determination to compel Morocco to honour its commitments and to cooperate loyally with MINURSO. POLISARIO observed that, since December 1999, the Secretary-General's reports had negatively evaluated implementation of the settlement plan; the considerable progress achieved in the settlement process was either being ignored or minimized. Indeed the Secretary-General's July report suggested searching for a new path towards settling the conflict outside the settlement plan and the referendum. Within the Council, efforts to abandon the settlement plan had also been gaining ground since December 1999. Attempts were being made to abandon the referendum process in favour of a political solution to be negotiated between Morocco and POLISARIO that would ignore the right to self-determination of the people of Western Sahara. Those efforts had led to division among Council members.

The memorandum stated that throughout the direct consultations in May and July, POLISARIO reiterated its commitment to the settlement plan and to the holding of the referendum as the only solution to the conflict in Western Sahara and cautioned that it could not support any other approach that ignored the inalienable right of the people of Western Sahara.

In letters of 9 October to the Council and the Secretary-General [A/55/468-S/2000/975], Algeria stated that it was convinced that the settlement plan remained the only framework for settling the conflict between Morocco and POLISARIO and supported the efforts of the Secretary-General, his Personal Envoy and his Special Representative to organize, in cooperation with OAU, a referendum for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara.

By a 17 October letter to the Secretary-General [A/55/500-S/2000/1000], Namibia transmitted a letter from POLISARIO outlining its position on the latest developments and reaffirming its commitment to the settlement plan.

In 19 October letters to the Secretary-General and the Council President [S/2000/1003], Morocco recalled that the Sahara was an integral part of its territory and that, as a gesture of goodwill, it had initiated the referendum process to end the artificial dispute that had been created over its territorial integrity. The letter listed a number of proposals that Morocco had made in response to resolution 1309(2000). Morocco was convinced that the other parties involved wanted a specially contrived referendum, excluding the majority of Saharans from the referendum consultation and taking no account of the consequences of such a position. It shared the assessment of the Secretary-General regarding the near impossibility of finding compromise solutions concerning implementation of the settlement plan. That explained Morocco's readiness to respond positively to the Council's request for the search for a political solution in the framework of respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Morocco.

Report of Secretary-General (October). The Secretary-General's 25 October report on the situation concerning Western Sahara [S/2000/1029] included an account of the expert-level technical meetings of the parties (Geneva, 20-21 July). Separate meetings were held between the United Nations and the two parties on the first day concerning the 1,686 Moroccan prisoners of war still held by POLISARIO and the list of 207 presumed political detainees compiled and submitted by the independent jurist to the Government of Morocco in 1998. POLISARIO indicated that it was not in a position to discuss the release of prisoners of war while refugees in the Tindouf camps were living under unacceptable conditions. The fate of the prisoners of war was raised by the Moroccan delegation, which also provided a general account of the current status of Saharans whose names had been provided by the independent jurist, and reported that only one among those listed was still detained in Morocco. Separate meetings were also held on practical steps for implementing confidence-building measures and both parties agreed in principle to allow exchanges of family visits between the Laayoune and the Tindouf refugee camps under the auspices of UNHCR and MINURSO. On 21 July, the Moroccan delegation said it was not authorized to discuss the appeals process because problems regarding that issue were political and not technical. At the end of the meeting, POLISARIO accepted the draft proposal by the United Nations, while the Moroccan delegation undertook to obtain its Government's endorsement or suggested amendments. However, later discussions failed to produce a set of operational points acceptable to the Moroccan party.

The report also covered the third meeting of the parties under the auspices of the Personal Envoy (Berlin, 28 September). The two neighbouring countries, Algeria and Mauritania, were again invited to attend as observers. A member of the Personal Envoy's delegation reviewed outstanding issues impeding implementation of the settlement plan and the Special Representative reviewed the results of the July expert-level technical meetings. It was noted that the failure of the parties to agree on implementation of the pilot project on confidence-building family visits proposed at the July meeting was yet another example of the difficulties still lying ahead. Both parties also reiterated their positions on implementation of the settlement plan. POLISARIO felt remaining obstacles could be overcome with the cooperation of the parties and expressed its willingness to discuss implementation of the appeals procedures immediately. Regarding other issues, such as the prisoners of war, POLISARIO stated they should be dealt with in the framework of the settlement plan. The Moroccan delegation believed that the difficulties connected with the settlement plan were not merely technical, but were errors and distortions in implementing the plan which could not satisfy the thousands of rejected applicants. Morocco was of the opinion that, despite all good will, the difficulties faced in the implementation of the plan could not be overcome.

Concerning the proposed confidence-building measures on family visits, the Personal Envoy asked both parties to accept a compromise and suggested various formulations for selecting candidates for such visits. POLISARIO eventually accepted the proposed formulations. However, the Moroccan delegation stated that the issue had become almost irrelevant given the current atmosphere, which was not conducive to considering the issue. Morocco suggested that the matter be put on hold until better conditions prevailed. The Personal Envoy felt that there was no political will on either side; under such circumstances, he was unsure as to the next steps and whether there would be another meeting. Reiterating that there were many ways of achieving self-determination, he asked the parties whether they would be willing to try to reach agreement, as had been done by parties to other disputes, without abandoning the settlement plan. POLISARIO restated its commitment to the plan and its readiness to discuss the appeals process, and Morocco, while also committed to the plan, observed that the way in which it was being implemented meant that two thirds of the Saharan population would be excluded from the referendum. The Personal Envoy then suggested that since POLISARIO had expressed interest in discussing the appeals process and the Security Council had also requested that the parties try to agree on a mutually acceptable political solution, the two parties should explore ways to move the appeals process forward and simultaneously search for a political solution. Morocco pointed out that the appeals question was exhausted and the issue deadlocked. Meanwhile, the Moroccan delegation wished to explore other ways to settle the conflict with the assistance of the Personal Envoy and reaffirmed its willingness to engage in such dialogue within the next few weeks, as long as the country's national sovereignty and territorial integrity were respected. Rejecting the Moroccan proposal, POLISARIO reiterated that it would cooperate and adhere to any dialogue within the framework of the settlement plan. The Personal Envoy indicated that the plan was not being abandoned. Also, Morocco had expressed readiness for the first time to engage in direct dialogue. The Secretary-General noted that both Morocco and POLISARIO had indicated to him in writing that they accepted his Personal Envoy's Berlin proposals on implementation of the confidence-building measures.

As at 24 October, the military component of MINURSO stood at the authorized strength of 230. The civilian police component was 47.

During the period under review, UNHCR completed the pre-registration and needs assessment of the refugees in the Tindouf camps, using MINURSO's provisional voter lists. UNHCR was also finalizing the electronic data processing of information gathered on all pre-registered refugees.

The Secretary-General regretted that he could not report any progress in implementing the settlement plan. He shared the view of his Personal Envoy that further meetings of the parties to seek a political solution could not succeed, and that if the Government of Morocco was not prepared to offer or support some devolution of governmental authority that could be discussed at a meeting of the parties during the next extension of MINURSO's mandate, then the Mission should begin hearing the pending appeals from the identification process expeditiously without regard as to how long it might be expected to take to complete them. The Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend the mandate of MINURSO for four more months, until 28 February 2001.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 30 October [meeting 4211], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1324 (2000). The draft [S/2000/1040] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its resolutions on the question of Western Sahara, in particular resolutions 1108(1997) of 22 May 1997, 1292(2000) of 29 February 2000, 1301(2000) of 31 May 2000 and 1309(2000) of 25 July 2000, as well as its resolution 1308(2000) of 17 July 2000,

Recalling the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel of 9 December 1994,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 26 October 2000, and the observations and recommendations contained therein, and expressing its full support for the role and work of the Personal Envoy,

Reiterating its full support for the continued efforts exerted by the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara to implement the settlement plan and agreements adopted by the parties to hold a free, fair and impartial referendum for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara,

Noting that fundamental differences between the parties over the interpretation of the main provisions of the settlement plan remain to be resolved,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 28 February 2001, with the expectation that the parties, under the auspices of the Personal Envoy of the Secretary-General, will continue to try to resolve the multiple problems relating to the implementation of the settlement plan and try to agree upon a mutually acceptable political solution to their dispute over Western Sahara;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide an assessment of the situation before the end of the present mandate of the Mission;

3. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's report [A/55/303] summarizing developments from 1 September 1999 to 31 August 2000, on the recommendation of the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee [A/55/578], adopted resolution 55/141 without vote [agenda item 18].

Question of Western Sahara

The General Assembly,

Having considered in depth the question of Western Sahara,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of all peoples to self-determination and independence, in accordance with the principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 54/87 of 6 December 1999,

Recalling also the agreement in principle given on 30 August 1988 by the Kingdom of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro to the proposals of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity in the context of their joint mission of good offices,

Recalling further Security Council resolutions 658(1990) of 27 June 1990 and 690(1991) of 29 April 1991, by which the Council approved the settlement plan for Western Sahara,

Recalling all the Security Council and General Assembly resolutions relating to the question of Western Sahara,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the United Nations towards the people of Western Sahara, as provided for in the settlement plan,

Noting with satisfaction the entry into force of the ceasefire in accordance with the proposal of the Secretary-General, and stressing the importance it attaches to the maintenance of the ceasefire as an integral part of the settlement plan,

Noting also with satisfaction the agreements reached by the two parties during their private direct talks aimed at the implementation of the settlement plan, and stressing the importance it attaches to a full, fair and faithful implementation of the settlement plan and the agreements aimed at its implementation,

Noting that, despite the progress achieved, difficulties remain in the implementation of the settlement plan which must be overcome,

Taking note of the Security Council resolutions relating to the question, including resolutions 1301(2000) of 31 May 2000 and 1309(2000) of 25 July 2000,

Welcoming the acceptance by the two parties of the detailed modalities for the implementation of the Secretary-General's package of measures relating to the identification of voters and the appeals process,

Having examined the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Having also examined the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Commends the Secretary-General and his Personal Envoy for their outstanding efforts and the two parties for the spirit of cooperation they have shown in the support they provided for those efforts;
3. Takes note of the agreements reached between the Kingdom of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro for the implementation of the settlement plan during their private direct talks under the auspices of James Baker III, the Personal Envoy of the Secretary-General, and urges the parties to implement those agreements fully and in good faith;
4. Urges the two parties to continue their cooperation with the Secretary-General and his Personal Envoy, as well as with his Special Representative, and to refrain from undertaking anything that would undermine the implementation of the settlement plan and the agreements reached for its implementation as well as the continued efforts of the Secretary-General and his Personal Envoy;
5. Calls upon the two parties to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General, his Personal Envoy and his Special Representative in implementing the various phases of the settlement plan and in overcoming the difficulties that remain despite the progress so far achieved;
6. Urges the two parties to implement faithfully and loyally the Secretary-General's package of measures relating to the identification of voters and the appeals process;
7. Reaffirms the responsibility of the United Nations towards the people of Western Sahara, as provided for in the settlement plan;
8. Reiterates its support for further efforts of the Secretary-General for the organization and the supervision by the United Nations, in cooperation with the Organization of African Unity, of a referendum for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara that is impartial and free of all constraints, in conformity with Security Council resolutions 658(1990) and 690(1991), by which the Council approved the settlement plan for Western Sahara;
9. Takes note of the relevant Security Council resolutions, including resolutions 1301(2000) and 1309(2000);
10. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to consider the situation in Western Sahara, bearing in mind the positive ongoing implementation of the settlement plan, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session;
11. Invites the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Further developments. On 14 December, 201 of the Moroccan prisoners held by POLISARIO, more than half of whom had been held for more than 20 years, were repatriated to Morocco under ICRC auspices.

UN Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara

The United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) reported that the situation remained calm during 2000 and there had been no indications that either side intended to resume hostilities in the near future. Under the command of General Claude Buze (Belgium), the MINURSO military component continued to monitor the ceasefire between the Royal Moroccan Army and the POLISARIO military forces which came into effect on 6 September 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 796]. The Mission's military component remained at the authorized strength of 230 throughout the year. The civilian police, under the command of Inspector-General Om Prakash Rathor (India), fell from 81 officers in January to 47 officers at the end of the year. The civilian police continued to protect files and sensitive material at the Identification Commission centres at Laayoune and Tindouf, and to undertake training and planning for possible future activities.

Financing of MINURSO

In March [A/54/780], the Secretary-General reported on MINURSO's financial performance for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999. Expenditures totalled $44,607,700 gross ($42,398,200 net), resulting in an unutilized balance of appropriation of $15,392,300 gross ($13,520,600 net). The unutilized balance of assessments amounted to $1,423,377 gross ($603,627 net). The unutilized balance resulted primarily from the early repatriation of the military engineering support unit, a higher than projected vacancy rate for international civilian staff and reduced operational requirements due to the suspension of identification activities.

Also in March [A/54/785], the Secretary-General presented the proposed budget to maintain MINURSO from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, which amounted to $46,611,600 gross ($42,772,800 net). In an April report [A/54/841/Add.7], ACABQ recommended that the General Assembly assess the requested amount at a monthly rate of $3,884,300 gross ($3,564,400 net) should the Security Council decide to extend MINURSO's mandate beyond 31 May 2000.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 June [meeting 98], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/899], adopted resolution 54/268 without vote [agenda item 131].

Financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 690(1991) of 29 April 1991, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission, the latest of which was resolution 1301(2000) of 31 May 2000,

Recalling its resolution 45/266 of 17 May 1991 on the financing of the Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 53/18 B of 8 June 1999,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara as at 30 April 2000, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 77.2 million United States dollars, representing 19 per cent of the total assessed contributions, notes that some 3 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

5. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

6. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

7. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

8. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Mission, and for this purpose requests the Secretary-General to speed up the implementation of the asset management system at all peacekeeping missions in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/1 A of 15 October 1997;

9. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

12. Decides to reduce the appropriation authorized for the Mission in respect of the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 under the terms of General Assembly resolutions 52/228 B of 26 June 1998 and 53/18 A of 2 November 1998 from the amount of 60 million dollars gross (55,918,800 dollars net) to the amount of 46,031,077 dollars gross (43,001,827 dollars net), equal to the amount apportioned among Member States in respect of the period from 1 July 1998 to 31 March 1999, and to extend the period covered by the apportionment until 30 June 1999;

13. Decides also to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara the amount of 49,317,037 dollars gross (45,078,102 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, inclusive of the amount of 2,339,659 dollars gross (1,979,841 dollars net) for the support account for peacekeeping operations and the amount of 365,778 dollars gross (325,461 dollars net) for the United Nations Logistics Base, to be apportioned, as an ad hoc arrangement, among Member States at a monthly rate of 4,109,753 dollars gross (3,756,509 dollars net), in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, 50/451 B of 23 December 1995 and 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999, and for the year 2001, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission beyond 31 July 2000;

14. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 13 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 4,238,935 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001;

15. Decides that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, there shall be set off against their apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 13 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 1,423,377 dollars gross (603,627 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999;

16. Decides also that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 1,423,377 dollars gross (603,627 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

17. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

18. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Mission;

19. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

20. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara".

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on MINURSO financing would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458) and that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item at that session (decision 55/455).

Other questions

Côte d'Ivoire

In a letter to the Secretary-General [A/55/825], Côte d'Ivoire explained the situation in that country following the coup d'état in December 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 190]. A difficult transition period culminated in the swearing in of a new President on 26 October 2000. Since then, a Government had been in place and had been functioning normally. The letter gave a historical background of the country in an effort to show its political and social inclusiveness and cited some legislative actions taken by the new President. It also stated that Côte d'Ivoire was a democratic State that respected human and citizens' rights. It hoped to reconcile itself with the international community and wished to be able to count on the understanding and contribution of its friends and donors.

Djibouti

By a letter dated 22 February [S/2000/153], Portugal, on behalf of the EU, informed the Secretary-General of the framework agreement signed on 7 February between the armed Front for the Restoration of Unity and Democracy and the Government of Djibouti. The agreement envisaged the suspension of hostilities between the two sides and the liberation of prisoners.

Mozambique

In accordance with decision 54/465 [YUN 1999, p. 190], the General Assembly retained for consideration at its resumed fifty-fourth (2000) session the item "Financing of the United Nations Operation in Mozambique" (ONUMOZ). ONUMOZ began operations in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 196] and was liquidated in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 368].

On 5 September 2000, the Assembly included the item in the draft agenda of its fifty-fifth session (decision 54/497).

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item should remain for consideration at the resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458) and that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the item at that session (decision 55/455).

Cooperation between OAU and the UN system

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/94 [YUN 1999, p. 191], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/55/498] on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU).

At a meeting in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, on 10 and 11 April, the two organizations reviewed and assessed the activities undertaken as a result of the two-year programme of cooperation they adopted in 1998. They also discussed ways and means to enhance their work and adopted an action-oriented programme for the period 2000-2002.

The Secretary-General outlined the collaborative work undertaken in the areas of peace and security involving the Departments of Political Affairs and of Peacekeeping Operations of the UN Secretariat and African subregional organizations, such as the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) and the Southern African Development Community (SADC), and in the area of human rights, involving the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights. The report also described cooperative activities in economic and social development involving the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. Other UN agencies and programmes involved in the programme of co-operation were the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Population Fund and the Economic Commission for Africa.

On 3 August [A/55/286], Ghana transmitted to the Secretary-General the decisions adopted by the OAU Council of Ministers at its seventy-second ordinary session (Lomé, Togo, 6-8 July), and the declarations and decisions adopted by the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government at its thirty-sixth ordinary session (Lomé, 10-12 July).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/218 [draft: A/55/L.67, orally revised] without vote [agenda item 27].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Recalling the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations and the agreement on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, as well as all its resolutions on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, including resolution 54/94 of 8 December 1999,

Taking note of the declarations and decisions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-sixth ordinary session, held in Lomé from 10 to 12 July 2000, in particular the decision relating to the adoption of the Constitutive Act of the African Union and the declaration on the Conference on Security, Stability, Development and Cooperation in Africa,

Mindful of the need for continued and closer co-operation between the United Nations and its specialized agencies and the Organization of African Unity in the peace and security, political, economic, social, technical, cultural and administrative fields,

Acknowledging the contribution of the United Nations Liaison Office in strengthening coordination and cooperation between the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations since its establishment in Addis Ababa in April 1998,

Emphasizing the importance of the effective implementation of the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and welcoming in this regard the commitments of Member States to respond to the special needs of Africa,

Noting the efforts being made by the Organization of African Unity and its member States in the area of economic integration and the need to accelerate the process of implementation of the Treaty establishing the African Economic Community,

Noting also the progress made by the Organization of African Unity in developing the capacity of its Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution, including with the assistance of the United Nations and the international community,

Stressing the urgent need to address the plight of refugees and internally displaced persons in Africa, and noting in this context the efforts made to implement the recommendations of the Organization of African Unity Ministerial Meeting on Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Africa, held in Khartoum on 13 and 14 December 1998, as well as the endorsement by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity, at its seventy-second session, of the Comprehensive Implementation Plan adopted at the special meeting of governmental and non-governmental technical experts organized by the Organization of African Unity and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees at Conakry from 27 to 29 March 2000,

Recognizing the importance of developing and maintaining a culture of peace, tolerance and harmonious relationships based on the promotion of economic development, democratic principles, good governance, the rule of law, human rights, social justice and international cooperation,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Encourages the Secretary-General to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations Liaison Office with the Organization of African Unity;

3. Welcomes the continuing participation in and constructive contribution of the Organization of African Unity to the work of the United Nations, its organs and specialized agencies, and calls upon the two organizations to enhance the involvement of the Organization of African Unity in all United Nations activities concerning Africa;

4. Calls upon the Secretary-General closely to involve the Organization of African Unity in the implementation of the commitments contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, especially those that relate to meeting the special needs of Africa;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to implement the recommendations of the annual meeting of the two organizations held in Addis Ababa on 10 and 11 April 2000, in particular those relating to priority programmes of the Organization of African Unity as specified in section III of the report of the Secretary-General;

6. Requests the United Nations to intensify its assistance to the Organization of African Unity in strengthening the institutional and operational capacity of its Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution, in particular in the following areas:

(a) Development of its early warning system;

(b) Technical assistance and training of civilian and military personnel, including a staff exchange programme;

(c) Exchange and coordination of information, including between the early warning systems of the two organizations;

(d) Logistical support, including in the area of mine clearance;

(e) Mobilization of financial support, including through the trust funds of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity;

7. Urges the United Nations to encourage donor countries, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, to contribute to adequate funding, training and logistical support for African countries in their efforts to enhance their peacekeeping capabilities, with a view to enabling those countries to participate actively in peacekeeping operations within the framework of the United Nations;

8. Requests the agencies of the United Nations system working in Africa to include in their programmes at the national, subregional and regional levels activities to support African countries in their efforts to enhance regional economic cooperation and integration;

9. Calls upon the United Nations agencies to intensify the coordination of their regional programmes in Africa to ensure the effective harmonization of their programmes with those of the African regional and subregional economic organizations and contribute to creating a positive environment for economic development and investment;

10. Calls upon the international community to support and enhance the capacity of African countries to take advantage of the opportunities offered by globalization and to overcome the challenges it poses, as a means of ensuring sustained economic growth and sustainable development;

11. Calls upon the United Nations to support actively the efforts of the Organization of African Unity in urging the donor community and, where appropriate, multilateral institutions to strive to meet the agreed target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance, to implement fully, speedily and effectively the enhanced programme of debt relief for the heavily indebted poor countries, and to achieve the goal of securing debt relief in a comprehensive and effective manner in favour of African countries through various national and international measures designed to make their debt sustainable in the long term;

12. Calls upon all Member States and regional and international organizations, in particular those of the United Nations system, as well as non-governmental organizations, to provide additional assistance to the Organization of African Unity and those Governments in Africa concerned with the problems of refugees, returnees and displaced persons;

13. Calls upon the relevant organizations of the United Nations system to ensure the effective and equitable representation of African men and women at senior and policy levels at their respective headquarters and in their regional field of operations;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Cooperation between the UN and ECCAS

On 6 September [A/55/233], Equatorial Guinea transmitted to the Secretary-General an explanatory memorandum from its President, in his capacity as Chairman of the Economic Community of Central African States (ECCAS), with the request that an item on cooperation between the United Nations and ECCAS be included in the agenda of the fifty-fifth session of the General Assembly. The memorandum stated that, since the Community's establishment in 1983, the heads of State of the ECCAS member countries had sought to show their resolve to join forces to achieve subregional integration as a means of better ensuring the well-being of their peoples. The President was convinced of the need to establish an institutional framework to enable the States of the Central African subregion to continue to benefit from the rich experience of the United Nations in such areas as preventive diplomacy, peacekeeping and peace-building, democratic institution-building, human rights and support for economic development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 November [meeting 58], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/22 [draft: A/55/L.6/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 180].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Community of Central African States

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the charter establishing the Economic Community of Central African States, by which the Central African countries have agreed to work for the economic development of their subregion, to promote economic cooperation and to establish a Common Market of Central Africa,

Welcoming the establishment by the Secretary-General, at the initiative of the States members of the Economic Community of Central African States, of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa on 28 May 1992, pursuant to resolution 46/37 B of 6 December 1991, and recalling its subsequent resolutions on the programme of work of the Committee,

Bearing in mind the report of the Secretary-General on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa and resolutions 1196(1998) and 1197(1998) pertaining thereto, adopted by the Security Council on 16 and 18 September 1998 respectively,

Noting that, at the ninth regular session of the Economic Community of Central African States, held in

Malabo on 24 June 1999, the heads of State and Government of the member States decided to resume the activities of the Community, inter alia, by providing it with sufficient financial and human resources to enable it to become a real tool for the integration of their economies and to foster the development of co-operation between their peoples, with the ultimate aim of making it one of the five pillars of the African Economic Community and of helping Central Africa to meet the challenges of globalization,

Welcoming the fact that, in their desire to instil a climate of peace and security and to strengthen democratic institutions and practice, together with respect for the rule of law and human rights in their subregion, the States of the Economic Community of Central African States have established the Council for Peace and Security in Central Africa and have decided to set up an early warning mechanism in Central Africa as a tool for preventing armed conflicts, a subregional parliament and a subregional centre for human rights and democracy in Central Africa to promote democratic values and experience and human rights,

Bearing in mind the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted on 8 September 2000 by the heads of State and Government at the Millennium Summit of the United Nations, and especially chapter VII thereof,

Aware of the importance of the support of the United Nations system and the international community, which is essential to ensuring that the members of the Economic Community of Central African States are successful in promoting economic development and integration and in consolidating peace, democracy and human rights in their subregion,

1. Recognizes that the purposes and objectives of the Economic Community of Central African States are in conformity with the principles and ideals embodied in the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take the appropriate steps to establish cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Community of Central African States;

3. Welcomes the support provided by the Secretary-General to the States members of the Economic Community of Central African States in strengthening confidence-building measures at the subregional level and promoting human rights, the rule of law and democratic institutions, in implementation of the programme of work of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue this support and, within the existing United Nations budget, extend it to all the fields to be covered in the framework of cooperation between the United Nations system and the Economic Community of Central African States, especially the reinforcement of the structures of the Community and the attainment of its objectives in favour of peace and security, democracy and human rights, so as to facilitate the operation of the early warning mechanism in Central Africa as a tool for preventing armed conflicts and to establish a subregional parliament and a subregional centre for human rights and democracy in Central Africa to promote democratic values and experience and human rights;

5. Emphasizes the importance of appropriate coordination between the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, and the Economic Community of Central African States;

6. Urges all Member States and the international community to contribute to the efforts of the Economic Community of Central African States to achieve economic integration and development, promote democracy and human rights and consolidate peace and security in Central Africa;

7. Welcomes and calls for the continuation of the efforts made by a number of States, notably in the form of multinational exercises, to enhance the peacekeeping capacities of the States members of the Economic Community of Central African States, so as to enable them to play a larger part in United Nations operations;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Community of Central African States".

Regional cooperation

By an 18 February letter [A/54/760], Gabon transmitted to the Secretary-General the Declaration on the Economic and Social Agenda for Africa at the Dawn of the Third Millennium, adopted at the Summit of African Heads of State and Government (Libreville, 18-19 January).

On 25 April [A/55/70-S/2000/364], Japan transmitted the summary report on the International Symposium on the Roles of Subregional and Non-Governmental Organizations in Conflict Prevention and Peace Initiatives in Sub-Saharan Africa (Tokyo, 28-29 March). The symposium discussed the recognition of conflicts in Africa as matters of serious international concern; the need for cooperation and collaboration among a variety of actors; efforts made by subregional organizations to enhance their capacities and concrete measures for improvements; and the roles and functions of NGOs and the need for further participation.

On 1 June [S/2000/522], Mali transmitted to the Security Council the final communiqué of the twenty-third summit meeting of heads of State and Government of ECOWAS (Abuja, Nigeria, 28-29 May).

By an 8 August letter [A/55/287], Namibia transmitted the final communiqué of the Summit of Heads of State or Government of SADC (Windhoek, Namibia, 6-7 August).

On 19 December [A/55/726-S/2001/3], the Sudan transmitted to the Secretary-General the Khartoum Declaration issued by the Eighth Summit of Heads of State and Government of IGAD (Khartoum, 23 November).

Chapter III

Americas

During 2000, the United Nations continued to assist countries in the Americas region in the attainment of political stability, security, economic and social development, judicial reform and respect for human rights. Although there was an increase in the level of crime in some countries of Central America, progress was made in consolidating democracy in the subregion.

The United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala (MINUGUA), established in 1994, continued to fulfil its mandate of verifying compliance with the peace accords signed in 1996 between the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca. In December, the General Assembly extended MINUGUA's mandate until 31 December 2001. After four years, a number of commitments on the peace agenda still had not been implemented or were in the process of implementation. The Commission to Follow Up the Implementation of the Peace Agreements rescheduled the pending commitments in an implementation timetable for 2000-2004. The new Government of President Alfonso Portillo took office in January.

In Haiti, the political and institutional crisis continued to worsen throughout the year, stalling the implementation of much-needed structural reforms and further polarizing political and civil society. Parliamentary and local elections were held on 21 May amid a climate of violence. A flawed method of electoral calculation allotted all but one of the contested Senate seats to the ruling Fanmi Lavalas party, headed by former President Jean-Bertrand Aristide. Based on those elections, a new Parliament was installed on 28 August, despite calls for rectification of the results by the international community. Haiti's main bilateral donors suspended all forms of international assistance, deciding to channel their technical support through non-governmental organizations (NGOs). Elections for President and a third of the remaining Senate seats were held on 26 November but were boycotted by the opposition parties. Mr. Aristide was elected President and Fanmi Lavalas won all the contested Senate seats. The International Civilian Support Mission in Haiti (MICAH) was launched on 16 March in order to consolidate the results already achieved by the United Nations Civilian Police

Mission in Haiti and the International Civilian Mission to Haiti. The Security Council had extended the mandates of those two Missions in November 1999 to ensure a phased transition to MICAH by 15 March. By mid-October, the three pillars of MICAH—justice, police and human rights—had deployed a total of 68 advisers in Haiti. In November, due to the political turmoil and instability in the country, the Secretary-General recommended that the Mission be terminated at the end of its mandate on 6 February 2001 and called for a new programme of assistance for the Haitian people that was commensurate with the country's political realities.

In November, the General Assembly again called on States to refrain from promulgating laws and measures such as the ongoing United States economic embargo against Cuba. It also adopted resolutions on strengthening cooperation with the Organization of American States and the Caribbean Community.

Central America

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/118 [YUN 1999, p. 197], the Secretary-General submitted an October report on the situation in Central America [A/55/465], describing progress achieved by Central American countries in the areas of peace, freedom, democracy and development since September 1999. The report focused on the five signatories to the Esquipulas II process [YUN 1987, p. 188] (Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua).

The Secretary-General said that a new Government took office in Guatemala on 14 January, following the first general election (November/December 1999) [YUN 1999, p. 194] held since the signing of the 1996 Agreement on a Firm and Lasting Peace [YUN 1996, p. 168]. Ongoing verification of political rights by MINUGUA had exposed the need to deepen electoral reforms to increase voter participation and improve conditions for the free exercise of political rights. To that end, the approval by Congress of the Political Parties and Electoral Law was crucial.

Congressional and municipal elections took place in El Salvador on 12 March and voting proceeded without incident. Both the peaceful fashion in which the polling unfolded and the voting patterns exhibited were signs that the rancour of the past had been replaced by a new political maturity. However, 62 per cent of the nation's 3 million voters chose not to vote. Implementation of the 1995 electoral reforms would encourage greater participation.

In Nicaragua, municipal elections were scheduled to take place on 5 November under new electoral rules. The strengthening of citizen participation throughout Central America in electoral and other political processes, in particular by women and indigenous people, was assuming greater urgency. It was hoped that reformed electoral regulations would foster increasingly democratic and pluralistic processes. In that regard, democratic governance was fundamental to ongoing efforts to achieve regional stability.

The region's deteriorating public security situation was a major threat to the enjoyment of fundamental rights. The rise in common crime and social violence was linked to the inability to investigate and punish crimes and human rights violations. Regional and international criminal networks posed an additional challenge to fragile public security structures. The trafficking in firearms was a constant threat to security. Irregularities and long delays in processing accused persons undermined public confidence in the judicial process. Prison reform was urgently needed, in particular the approval of new legislation, the training of personnel and upgrading of the infrastructure. Acts of so-called social cleansing, as well as lynching, continued. In addition, domestic violence and violence against women remained a problem.

The establishment in El Salvador and Guatemala of the National Civil Police, bringing public security forces under civilian control, represented one of the most important achievements of the peace agreements and a key element of the democratization process in the region. In Guatemala, Congress approved legislation allowing for joint patrols by the police and the army. Similar joint patrols were conducted in rural parts of El Salvador. The Secretary-General said that the need to address the population's feeling of insecurity should not be made at the cost of remilitarizing public security. The participation of police officers in criminal acts and human rights violations seriously undermined the credibility of the security forces. Salvadoran authorities had established a special commission to strengthen discipline and internal control mechanisms. Similar functions were fulfilled in Guatemala by the Office of Professional Responsibility within the National Civil Police. Criminal investigative capacity was still deficient throughout the region, giving rise to numerous due process violations and lack of confidence in the administration of justice. The adoption in Guatemala of the Career Judicial Service Act, together with the setting up of the ad hoc commission on the strengthening of the justice system, should strengthen the rule of law, while inadequacy of the national penitentiary system was being addressed by means of new legislation and increasing budgetary allocations. However, serious deficiencies in infrastructure, trained personnel and prison security persisted, leading to overcrowding and deplorable living conditions for the inmates. Lengthy periods of pre-trial detention remained a problem throughout the region.

Meeting for the twelfth time in March, Central American ombudsmen made a collective call to Central American Governments to ensure that globalization would not negatively impact the enjoyment of social, economic, cultural and political rights. They recommended a cautious approach towards privatizing basic services such as health, education, housing and communications, in order to avoid increasing extreme poverty. At the national level, the ombudsmen played a central role in the defence of democracy and the rule of law by ensuring public accountability of government actions. For that reason, it was important that the independence of those institutions be strengthened and that problems related to the lack of leadership and proper funding be adequately addressed. The establishment in Nicaragua of the Ombudsman's Office represented an important development.

Hurricane Mitch, which devastated parts of Central America in October 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 876], revealed the region's extreme social and ecological vulnerability. After the May 1999 meeting of the Consultative Group for the Reconstruction and Transformation of Central America and the adoption of the Stockholm Declaration [YUN 1999, p. 195], national follow-up meetings were held for Costa Rica, Honduras and El Salvador in February 2000. The national meetings recognized significant progress in the process of reconstruction in all the countries examined. It was also recognized that the agenda of transformation, including the strengthening of democratic governance, transparency, environmental protection and poverty reduction, should become the focus of national efforts with the support of the international community.

According to the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), the gross national product for the Central American region grew by 3.4 per cent in 1999 compared to 4.4 per cent in 1998. That drop mirrored similar stagnation throughout Latin America and the Caribbean. The gross domestic product (GDP) growth rates ranged from a high of 7.5 per cent in Costa Rica to a low of 2 per cent in Honduras. The major factor in that contraction was the devastation caused by hurricane Mitch. Overall, however, the 1990s brought significant economic growth to Central America. Advances had been made in the area of structural economic reform, though the capacity of Governments to transform and create sustainable economic growth depended largely on reducing the burden of external debt. In July, the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank agreed to support a comprehensive debt reduction package for Honduras under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative. As a sign of increasing trade and cooperation within and outside the region, El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras, in May, signed a free trade agreement with Mexico, which committed those countries to pursuing regional trade liberalization to further economic integration in the western hemisphere. In the same month, the United States extended the benefits of the Caribbean Basin Initiative to a number of Central American countries, ensuring their increased duty-free access to the United States market. In addition, cooperation continued or was projected with the European Union (EU), the Andean Community (Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Venezuela) and Canada.

On 15 and 16 May, Colombia hosted the fourteenth Summit Meeting of Heads of State and Government of the Rio Group, which served as a mechanism for political coordination. For the first time, Central American countries participated in the Summit, with heads of State from Latin America and the Caribbean. The role of the United Nations, personal and environmental safety and the reform of the international financial system dominated the agenda. Ministers of Trade from six Central American countries met in Panama in March to continue discussions on a regional free trade agreement. At that meeting, ministers from Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua began talks with Panama on a comprehensive trade pact.

Closer regional integration remained the key to consolidating peace and fostering development throughout the isthmus. The secretariat of the Central American Integration System (SICA) continued to work towards the execution and coordination of the mandates established at the summits of the Central American Presidents, as well as the decisions of the Council of Ministers of External Relations. On 2 May, the Presidents of El Salvador, Guatemala and Nicaragua signed an integration pact, the Declaración Trinacional para el siglo XXI, containing economic and political proposals to accelerate the integration process (see p. 237). Furthermore, at a meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs from Central American States in Panama that same month, ways to advance the goal of regional integration established by SICA were explored.

The Ministers of External Relations of the Central American countries attended the thirtieth regular session of the General Assembly of the Organization of American States (OAS) (Windsor, Canada, 4-6 June). The session focused on democracy and human security, adopting various resolutions on Central America, and, in particular, reaffirming the need to continue joint efforts between the OAS and SICA secretariats. It also adopted a resolution for the continued support of the mine-clearing programme in Central America, as well as the Special Programme of Support for Guatemala. Finally, the Assembly resolved to establish a permanent fund for the peaceful resolution of territorial disputes among member States.

OAS played a leading role in reducing tensions and seeking a political solution to border disputes, such as in the case of the dispute between Honduras and Nicaragua that flared up in late 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 208]. Under the auspices of the OAS Secretary-General, Costa Rica and Nicaragua reached an understanding on the San Juan River [ibid.].

The United Nations continued to support the process of peace-building and development in Central America. In El Salvador, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) followed up on the implementation of outstanding commitments of the 1992 Peace Agreement [YUN 1992, p. 222] and was assisting the Government to that end. The Secretary-General said that much remained to be done to implement the recommendations of the Commission on the Truth [YUN 1993, p. 314]. Also outstanding was the enactment of an agrarian code. Other concerns included the non-fulfilment by the authorities of their obligation to provide benefits to handicapped combatants and the dependants of combatants killed during the conflict; the deteriorating public security situation; and the failure to strengthen the role of the ombudsman.

In Guatemala, the United Nations continued to verify compliance with the 1996 Agreement on a Firm and Lasting Peace [YUN 1996, p. 168]. The Secretary-General was encouraged by the fact that, upon taking office in January, President Alfonso Portillo embraced the accords as an obligation of the State and pledged to reinvestigate the peace process by promoting social policies based on the accords. Equally important was the commitment shown by the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca (URNG) to fully implement the peace agenda. However, the Secretary-General expressed concern about signs of a qualitative deterioration in the human rights situation.

UNDP was elaborating a regional strategy, within the framework of the 1999 Stockholm Declaration [YUN 1999, p. 195], on the effects of hurricane Mitch. The strategy would focus on democratic governance, poverty and equality, protection of the environment and reduction of the region's vulnerability to natural disasters. A regional strategy for reducing disasters, which included the five Central American countries plus Belize and Panama, had been drawn up. With regard to other operational activities, Guatemalan civil society and, in particular, women's and indigenous organizations, had contributed policy proposals related to the peace accords with the support of UNDP and bilateral donors. UNDP had supported the Nicaraguan Government in creating national forums for the discussion of public policy and in drafting an environmental curriculum. It had also assisted Nicaragua and Honduras in preparing national reconstruction plans and monitoring their implementation and in preparing the poverty reduction strategy papers required by the World Bank in order to enter into relief programmes for highly indebted countries. In El Salvador and Guatemala, UNDP supported the modernization of the justice sector by focusing on institutional strengthening, law reforms and personnel training. In Guatemala and Nicaragua, UNDP was supporting initiatives to increase the access of excluded populations to the justice system.

The Secretary-General observed that nearly two decades after the United Nations first became involved in the region, it seemed clear that the success of the peacekeeping operations was due to the comprehensive peace-building strategy put in place by Central American countries and civil societies. Furthermore, the international community had consistently supported, through political and economic means, the exemplary engagement of local actors. As a result of that multifaceted effort, Central America was a region transformed. However, the effective completion of the peace-building stage, such as greater regional integration, continued to be a challenge for the consolidation of democracy.

Communication. On 4 May [A/54/862], El Salvador, Guatemala and Nicaragua transmitted to the Secretary-General three documents they had signed on 2 May on ways to facilitate political and economic integration and cooperation in Central America.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 86], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/178 [draft: A/55/L.42/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 43].

The situation in Central America: procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace and progress in fashioning a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development

The General Assembly,

Considering the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, particularly resolution 637(1989) of 27 July 1989, and its own resolutions, particularly resolution 43/24 of 15 November 1988, in which it requests the Secretary-General to continue his good offices and to afford the fullest possible support to the Central American Governments in their efforts to achieve the objectives of peace, reconciliation, democracy, development and justice established in the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America" of 7 August 1987,

Reaffirming its resolutions in which it recognizes and stresses the importance of international economic, financial and technical cooperation and assistance, both bilateral and multilateral, aimed at promoting economic and social development in the region with a view to furthering and supplementing the efforts of the Central American peoples and Governments to achieve peace and democratization, particularly resolution 52/169 G of 16 December 1997, concerning international assistance to and cooperation with the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America, as well as its resolution 53/1 C of 2 November 1998, concerning emergency assistance to Central America, owing to the destruction caused by hurricane Mitch,

Emphasizing the importance of the development of the Central American Integration System, which has as its main objective the promotion of the integration process, the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America as the integrated programme for national and regional development, which contains the commitments and priorities of the countries of the area for the promotion of sustainable development, the establishment of the subsystem and of the regional social policy, the model of democratic Central American security, and the implementation of other agreements adopted at the presidential summit meetings, which taken together constitute the global frame of reference for consolidating peace, freedom, democracy and development and the basis for the promotion of mutually advantageous relations between Central America and the international community,

Recognizing the considerable success achieved in the fulfilment of the commitments contained in the Guatemala Peace Agreements, implementation of which is being verified by the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala,

Noting at the same time the delays in the fulfilment of some of the commitments contained in the Guatemala Peace Agreements, which has led the Commission to Follow up the Implementation of the Peace Agreements to reschedule its fulfilment for the period 2001-2004, and having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala and the recommendations contained therein aimed at ensuring that the Mission is able to respond adequately to the demands of the peace process until December 2001,

Taking note with satisfaction of the successful implementation of the Peace Agreements and the continuous consolidation of the process of democratization in El Salvador, as a result of the efforts of its people and Government,

Recognizing with satisfaction the role played by the peacekeeping operations and observer and monitoring missions of the United Nations, which carried out successfully their mandate in Central America pursuant to the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly, respectively,

Recognizing with satisfaction also the organization and holding of general elections in Guatemala at the end of 1999, of municipal and parliamentary elections in El Salvador in March 2000 and of municipal elections in Nicaragua in November 2000,

Emphasizing the importance of the end of a critical period in Central American history and the start of a new phase free from armed conflict, with freely elected Governments in each country and with political, economic, social and other changes which are creating a climate conducive to the promotion of economic growth and further progress towards the consolidation and further development of democratic, just and equitable societies,

Noting with gratification that the Third Meeting of the States Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction will be held in Nicaragua in September 2001,

Reaffirming that the consolidation and establishment of firm and lasting peace and democracy in Central America is a dynamic and ongoing process that faces serious structural challenges,

Stressing the importance of progress in human development, especially the alleviation of extreme poverty, the promotion of economic and social justice, judicial reform, the safeguarding of human rights and fundamental freedoms, respect for minorities and the satisfaction of the basic needs of the most vulnerable groups among the peoples in the region, issues which have been a primary source of tension and conflict and which deserve to be discussed with the same urgency and dedication as was the case in the settlement of armed conflicts,

Considering with concern that it has not yet been possible to overcome the devastating effects of hurricanes Mitch and Keith on sectors of Central American countries and which are causing setbacks in the efforts of the peoples and the Governments of Central America,

Emphasizing the solidarity of the international community with the victims of hurricane Mitch, as demonstrated by the Stockholm Declaration, the subsequent meetings of the Consultative Group for the Reconstruction and Transformation of Central America and the next meeting of the Group in Madrid in January 2001,

Bearing in mind the efforts made by the Central American Governments to reduce the risks and mitigate the consequences of natural disasters in the region, as demonstrated by the adoption, by the Presidents of the isthmus, of the Declaration of Guatemala II of 19 October 1999, the subsequent adoption of the Strategic Framework for the Reduction of Vulnerability and Disasters in Central America, as well as the adoption of the Central American Five-Year Plan for the Reduction of Vulnerability to and the Impact of Disasters, 2000 to 2004,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Commends the efforts of the peoples and the Governments of the Central American countries to re-establish peace and democracy throughout the region and promote sustainable development by implementing the commitments adopted at the summit meetings in the region, and supports the decision of the Presidents that Central America should become a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development;

3. Reaffirms the need to continue to improve the electoral processes that have been taking place in Central America, which are conducive to the consolidation of democracy in the region, and encourages greater participation of citizens in elections;

4. Recognizes the need to continue to follow closely the situation in Central America according to the objectives and principles established in the Stockholm Declaration in order to support national and regional efforts to overcome the underlying causes that have led to armed conflicts, avoid setbacks and consolidate peace and democratization in the area and promote the objectives of the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America;

5. Stresses the importance of lending support to the meeting of the Consultative Group for the Reconstruction and Transformation of Central America, which will be held in Madrid in January 2001, in order to continue to help to consolidate the modernization and improvement of the principal structures of the region in accordance with the model established by the Alliance for Sustainable Development;

6. Welcomes the Declaration of Guatemala II which provides for the necessary measures to prevent vulnerability to and mitigate the effects of natural disasters;

7. Also welcomes the progress achieved in implementing the Guatemala Peace Agreements, calls upon all parties to take further measures to implement the commitments in the Peace Agreements, and urges all sectors of society to combine efforts and work with courage and determination to consolidate peace;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, the bodies and programmes of the United Nations system and the international community to continue to support and verify in Guatemala the implementation of all the peace agreements signed under United Nations auspices, compliance with which is an essential condition for a firm and lasting peace in that country, and to consider the implementation of the Peace Agreements as the framework for their technical and financial assistance programmes and projects, stressing the importance of constant and close cooperation among them in the context of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework for Guatemala;

9. Expresses its appreciation with satisfaction to the people and the Government of El Salvador for their efforts to fulfil the commitments set forth in the Peace Agreements, which has made a substantial contribution to the strengthening of the process of democratization in that country;

10. Recognizes the importance of the Central American Integration System as the body set up to coordinate and harmonize efforts to achieve integration, and calls upon the international community, the United Nations system and other international organizations, both governmental and non-governmental, to extend generous and effective cooperation with a view to improving the competence and efficiency of the Integration System in the fulfilment of its mandate;

11. Underlines the efforts carried out in the Central American region towards integration, such as the Tri-national Declaration between Guatemala, El Salvador and Nicaragua, as well as the Customs Union between those countries, as means for promoting integration while respecting different stages of development, through a pragmatic mechanism open to the participation of the other countries of the region;

12. Encourages the Central American Governments to continue to carry out their historic responsibilities by fully implementing the commitments they have assumed under national, regional or international agreements, especially the commitments to implement the social programme to overcome poverty and unemployment, establish a more just and equitable society, improve public safety, strengthen the judiciary, consolidate a modern and transparent public administration and eliminate corruption, impunity, acts of terrorism and drug and arms trafficking, all of which are necessary and urgent measures for establishing a firm and lasting peace in the region;

13. Reiterates its deep appreciation to the Secretary-General, his special representatives, the groups of countries for the peace processes in El Salvador (Colombia, Mexico, Spain, United States of America and Venezuela), and Guatemala (Colombia, Mexico, Norway, Spain, United States of America and Venezuela), to the Support Group for Nicaragua (Canada, Mexico, Netherlands, Spain and Sweden), to the European Union and to other countries that have contributed significantly and to the international community in general for its support and solidarity in the building of peace, democracy and development in Central America;

14. Reaffirms the importance of international cooperation, in particular cooperation with the bodies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and the donor community in the new stage of consolidating firm and lasting peace and democracy in Central America, and urges them to continue to support Central American efforts to achieve those goals;

15. Notes with satisfaction the determination of the Central American Governments to settle their disputes through peaceful means, thereby avoiding any setback in the efforts to consolidate firm and lasting peace in the region;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to lend his full support to the initiatives and activities of the Central American Governments, particularly their efforts to consolidate peace and democracy through the promotion of integration and the implementation of the comprehensive sustainable development programme, emphasizing, inter alia, the potential repercussions of natural disasters, in particular the persist-ing effects of hurricane Mitch, for the peace processes and the vulnerable economies of the region, and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "The situation in Central America: procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace and progress in fashioning a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development".

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the situation in Central America would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458).

Guatemala

In 2000, the peace process in Guatemala continued to be implemented, although its impact on the lives of the people was marginal, a situation that was affecting governance and the process itself. There was a marked deterioration in public security, reflected in, among other things, an increase in crime and actions by armed criminal groups.

The United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala (MINUGUA) continued to verify the implementation of the 1996 Agreement on a Firm and Lasting Peace [YUN 1996, p. 168] and the Agreement on the Implementation, Compliance and Verification Timetable for the Peace Agreements (the Timetable Agreement) [YUN 1997, p. 176], signed by the Government of Guatemala and URNG. After four years, a number of commitments were still in the process of implementation or had not been implemented. The Commission to Follow Up the Implementation of the Peace Agreements therefore completely rescheduled pending commitments in an implementation timetable for 2000-2004. The Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly reports by the MINUGUA Director covering the Mission's activities throughout 2000. The Assembly renewed the Mission's mandate until 31 December 2001.

MINUGUA

The mandate of MINUGUA, which was extended to 31 December 2000 by General Assembly resolution 54/99 [YUN 1999, p. 205], included verification of all agreements signed by the Government of Guatemala and URNG covering human rights, the parties' compliance with the ceasefire, separation and concentration of the respective forces, and disarmament and demobilization of former URNG combatants. The Mission's functions also comprised good offices, advisory and support services and public information. The parties to the agreements had re-requested that the duration of MINUGUA's mandate be the same as that of the implementation timetable, namely four years, up to 31 December 2000.

By a 28 July letter [A/54/950], the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly of his decision to appoint Gerd D. Merrem (Germany) as his Special Representative in Guatemala and Head of MINUGUA, succeeding Jean Arnault (France). The appointment would take effect on 1 August 2000.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 54/99, the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/55/389] covering the state of implementation of the peace agreements (see below) and the structure and staffing of MINUGUA. He noted that March 2000 marked the tenth anniversary of direct UN involvement in the Guatemalan peace process. Citing the relevance and extent of the outstanding agenda, the parties to the peace agreements had requested the United Nations to continue to support the consolidation of the process until 2003, although the duration of MINUGUA's mandate had been the same as that of the implementation timetable, namely four years, up to 31 December 2000. A considerable number of commitments remained to be fully accomplished in the third and last phase (1998-2000), which would necessitate monitoring the further implementation of the agreements, with a special focus on socio-economic issues, rural development, strengthening of civilian power and various forms of increased citizen participation. The implementation of the agreements was to be based on a revised calendar that was being considered by the Commission to Follow Up the Implementation of the Peace Agreements (Follow-up Commission), which was expected to reschedule pending commitments and establish time-lines for items that were not initially included in the agreements.

For the 2001-2003 period, the Secretary-General planned to scale down the Mission's operation, starting with an important reduction in staffing, which would ensure substantive savings in 2001. The achievements already registered in the implementation of the peace process formed the basis for an important restructuring of personnel. Regional offices and sub-offices would be redeployed without sacrificing geographical coverage. In order to ensure a steady transition through the three-year period towards a nationally driven process, the Mission's functions were being refocused with the aim of strengthening national actors, both governmental and non-governmental. MINUGUA would continue to assist the parties in providing good offices, verification, assistance in specific fields and public information. In 2001, the Mission was expected to have a total of six regional offices (reduced from eight), four sub-offices (reduced from five) and five mobile offices (increased from three). The number of political affairs officers would be reduced by approximately 45 per cent. An 80 per cent reduction of military and police observers was also envisaged, as well as corresponding reductions of 40 per cent in international and national administrative support staff. That would result in an overall 45 per cent decrease in Mission staff. The structure of the Mission's headquarters would continue to consist of four substantive areas, namely: human rights; juridical affairs; socio-economic affairs, resettlement and incorporation; and public security and military affairs. The Public Information Office would remain unchanged. The offices of the Military and Police Advisers would merge under public security and military affairs. With a view to enhancing cooperation within the UN system, MINUGUA would begin a gradual transfer of projects, funded by an existing trust fund for peace in Guatemala, to relevant UN agencies. The Mission would, however, continue to guide core projects to ensure their timely implementation and coherence with the overall MINUGUA strategy and the priorities established by the Follow-up Commission. The Mission would provide, with the parties' consent, specific technical support to other entities, such as NGOs and State structures involved in the implementation of the peace process. The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly authorize the renewal of MINUGUA's mandate for a further period of one year, until 31 December 2001.

Verification of compliance

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/99, the Secretary-General, in July, submitted his fifth report [A/55/175] on the verification of compliance with the agreements signed by the Government of Guatemala and URNG [YUN 1996, p. 168].

The implementation of the commitments entered into by the two parties was governed by the Timetable Agreement [YUN 1997, p. 176], which divided the period from 1997 to 2000 into three phases. The report covered part of the third phase (1998-2000), from 1 November 1999 to 30 June 2000, and focused on the priority areas identified in 1999 by the Follow-up Commission [YUN 1999, p. 201].

The Secretary-General said that there was a need to implement the outstanding agenda, which included commitments such as the implementation of fiscal reforms, the expansion of judicial reforms, the reform of the electoral system and the armed forces, and critical aspects related to public security. At the same time, the labour and housing situations, the sustainable reintegration of the uprooted and demobilized population and the problems of compensation and national reconciliation remained outstanding and the failure to solve them was affecting both the peace process and governance. The challenge was to ensure the sustainability of the progress achieved, to make adequate provision for the multicultural and multi-ethnic characteristics of Guatemala society in all areas of national life, and to extend the benefits of peace to the areas of the country where the social debt remained greatest.

Noting that Alfonso Portillo had taken office as President on 15 January, the Secretary-General recalled that he had expressed his satisfaction at President Portillo's strong reaffirmation, in his inaugural speech, of the validity of the peace process and his recognition that its full implementation was a State commitment. In late January, President Portillo presented his proposal for a democratic governance pact, intended as a mechanism for reaching consensus among State representatives and political and social leaders on a national agenda, based on the peace agreements, that would be submitted to local authorities for discussion in order to secure broad consensus throughout the country. The President specifically requested the help of the UN system and MINUGUA.

In March, the Chairman of the Presidential Commission for Coordinating Executive Policy in the Field of Human Rights set out the policy adopted by the Government in the area of human rights. The proposed measures included ratification of international human rights instruments and acknowledgement of the State's responsibility in cases submitted to the Inter-American Court of Human Rights. In May, the Peace Secretariat (SEPAZ) presented its Strategic Guidelines for the Implementation of the Peace Agreements, 2000-2004, which envisaged a renewed effort to implement the agreements and the strengthening of institutions set out under the peace process.

MINUGUA reported that, in the early months of the new Government, a number of bodies had been created and mechanisms set in motion that, in some cases, paralleled or duplicated the institutions derived from or provided for in the agreements. Lack of coordination among government agencies responsible for the broad strategic outlines of the peace agenda could hamper their ability to carry out their mandates properly, and that could weaken both the institutions created by the peace process and the State's organizational capacity to implement the agreements. SEPAZ announced that priority would be given to allocating resources and building State institutions in areas of the country hardest hit by the internal armed conflict, where a significant percentage of the uprooted and demobilized population were living. MINUGUA believed that SEPAZ's approach would promote reconciliation in those areas, though it should not take the place of fulfilling the commitments undertaken towards the resettlement of population groups uprooted by the civil war and the integration of former combatants. The delay in fulfilling those commitments was undermining legal certainty as to land tenure and the economic self-sufficiency of the intended beneficiaries.

While the Mission noted the urgent need to overcome the population's feelings of insecurity, it was deeply concerned that measures were being adopted that were not conducive to the demilitarization of public security or to the strengthening of civilian authority. Despite the perception that the National Civil Police (PNC) was given to excesses, no serious effort had been made to improve its operational, technical and training capacities. The Secretary-General had recommended that the Government should fulfil its commitments under the peace agreements with regard to public security, namely: to set up the Advisory Council on Security; to implement the judicial reform in order to combat impunity; to increase the capacity of the new PNC in all its aspects; and to adopt a comprehensive public security policy as soon as possible.

The Secretary-General reiterated his deep satisfaction at the signing of the Fiscal Pact for a Future with Peace and Development, the outcome of an extensive process of national consultation to define a long-term fiscal policy [YUN 1999, p. 202]. That process, which was supported by MINUGUA as part of its good offices and technical assistance mandate, was without precedent in Guatemala's history and involved the participation of broad sectors of society.

As to the 1994 Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights [YUN 1994, p. 407], MINUGUA had observed substantial delays in implementing the 1999 National Programme of Compensation for and/or Assistance to the Victims of Human Rights Violations during the Armed Conflict [YUN 1999, p. 201]. SEPAZ had identified the readjustment of that programme as a priority in its strategic guidelines. MINUGUA monitored the execution of two pilot programmes of assistance to victims of human rights violations, which covered the areas of health, education, housing, infrastructure, exhumation and restoration of dignity to the victims. The purpose of the pilot projects was to provide information to help finalize the design of the national compensation and assistance programme. The Mission had found that communities in which some of those projects had been carried out were pleased with them. The beneficiaries saw the projects as a reparation for the losses suffered during the armed conflict, but did not associate them with forgiveness and reconciliation. The Secretary-General noted that in reformulating the national compensation programme, it would be important to incorporate those missing dimensions. A national programme of reconciliation had to be launched as a matter of urgency and its technical and financial sustainability ensured as part of a long-term effort to fulfil the State's legal and moral obligation to the victims.

The Follow-up Commission submitted to the Guatemalan Congress the preliminary draft of a bill setting up a commission for peace and harmony, the text of which was based on a draft prepared by the Multi-institutional Forum for Peace and Harmony, a group of civil society organizations formed in 1999 to advance the implementation of the Commission for Historical Clarification recommendations [YUN 1999, p. 199]. In April 2000, the Congressional Committee for Peace and Mine Clearance issued a new, unfavourable ruling on the draft bill, which had still to be submitted to the full Congress. MINUGUA considered it important for the national reconciliation process that the bill be debated and approved in the Congress as soon as possible. The establishment of a commission for peace and harmony, as provided for in SEPAP strategic guidelines, would make it easier to address such critical issues as comprehensive policies on the search for the disappeared and on exhumations.

Regarding compliance with the 1994 Agreement on Resettlement of the Population Groups Uprooted by the Armed Conflict [YUN 1994, p. 407], the Secretary-General said that the implementation of a comprehensive, long-term rural development policy was essential for consolidating the bases for sustainable productive integration, and thereby ensuring the definitive reintegration of the uprooted population in conditions of dignity. It was important to move ahead in fulfilling a number of commitments made with regard to rural development, land management plans, the promotion of public investment in rural areas and the allocation of specific resources to the competent institutions. At the same time, the formulation of long-term social development policies should include: the allocation of resources and the identification of institutional mechanisms that would facilitate the integration of the uprooted population and allow for the incorporation of elements of the special education plan into the official educational system; reaffirmation in the new public health policy of the priority accorded to 13 specific projects, to help ensure that the goal of bringing comprehensive health care to 100 per cent of the uprooted population was attained by the end of 2001; and disbursement of the fund of 200 million quetzales (approximately $25 million) announced by the Government in order to provide housing for uprooted and demobilized populations. Access to land and legal security of tenure continued to be priority issues for the uprooted population. The purchase of agricultural estates for Communities in Resistance had been completed, but resources had yet to be earmarked for ensuring that the process of socio-economic reintegration was sustainable. For the internally displaced population, only two more estates were acquired in addition to the two previously purchased. The Land Trust Fund (FONTIERRAS) did not have sufficient funds to purchase the remaining 19 estates needed to reach the target of 23 estates pledged in 1999. Moreover, for the estates already purchased, no specific funds had been allocated for moving in the new owners or providing basic services. FONTIERRAS had also assumed responsibility for completing the process of regularizing title to public lands awarded to the uprooted population. Little had been accomplished in terms of sustainable productive integration. The Trust Fund of the Consultative Assembly of Uprooted Population Groups/Ministry of Agriculture, Livestock and Food was still at the negotiation stage. Congress adopted a decree that fulfilled the commitment to provide the uprooted population with personal documentation, although there had been constraints on its implementation.

Under the 1995 Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples [YUN 1995, p. 432], a number of ministries were carrying out decentralization projects based on new social participation structures, chiefly in the areas of health and education. In some cases, that process overlooked existing forms of participation, notably those of indigenous communities and their traditional authorities. MINUGUA recommended that the recognition of the legal personality of indigenous communities should be made effective and reiterated the importance of the commitment to create consultation mechanisms allowing indigenous people to participate in decision-making on public matters that concerned them. The Permanent National Commission for the Official Recognition of Indigenous Languages and the Academy of Mayan Languages of Guatemala had prepared a preliminary draft of a bill on languages, but lack of funds had prevented it from being submitted to the linguistic communities for endorsement. The Joint Commission on Reform and Participation proposed amendments to the Municipal Code and the Development Councils Act, but discussions on both proposals were at a standstill pending the formulation of a decentralization strategy. The Government and SEPAZ were refocusing the Commission's work towards broader proposals covering issues of decentralization, participation and governance. MINUGUA trusted that the intention of broadening the opportunities for debate with other social actors would respect the nature of that Commission, which had been judged an important mechanism for participation and consensus-building between the Government and indigenous peoples. The Mission welcomed the appointment of members of the Maya people to high-level political posts, though the number of such appointments was still very small. The Joint Commission on Rights relating to Indigenous Peoples' Land continued its work, although it faced difficulties owing to the turnover of its membership and the absence of technical, logistical and economic support. The Mission noted that the commitments concerning land and natural resources were a key issue that transcended the economic use of land, was highly sensitive and offered considerable potential for social conflict. It was therefore urgent that the commitments relating to land contained in the peace agreements should be addressed comprehensively, especially those relating to the recognition and regulation of indigenous communities' land tenure. The proposal submitted by the Joint Commission on Educational Reform, which envisaged an intercultural, bilingual education system in keeping with Guatemala's cultural and linguistic diversity, was welcomed by the Advisory Commission of the Ministry of Education. MINUGUA noted with satisfaction the increase in the number of studies on indigenous customary law carried out by educational institutions and research centres, but expressed concern that the Guatemalan Government had committed limited resources to the funding of the Office for the Defence of Indigenous Women's Rights.

Under the 1996 Agreement on Social and Economic Aspects and the Agrarian Situation [YUN 1996, p. 165], the Fiscal Pact for a Future with Peace and Development was signed on 25 May by over 130 organizations representing a broad spectrum of society. The Pact set forth the principles and commitments that should guide fiscal policy in the coming decade. On 20 June, representatives of civil society and business signed the Political Agreement for Funding Peace, Development and Democracy in Guatemala, which set forth measures for beginning the tax and administrative changes needed to build a new fiscal system. On 28 June, the signatories to that Agreement and representatives of the executive branch and the Congress completed negotiations on a set of fiscal measures to be implemented beginning in July and, progressively, throughout the rest of the year.

Crucial commitments concerning the agrarian situation remained to be implemented, including the establishment of an agrarian and environmental jurisdiction and the promulgation of a land registry act. The agricultural policy for 2000-2004 presented by the Ministry of Agriculture, Livestock and Food included guidelines for assisting small farmers but lacked specific investment plans for promoting their development.

MINUGUA noted that there was a glaring disproportion between the magnitude and complexity of the country's labour problems and the human and material resources allocated by the State to overcome them. It also noted that labour issues played a secondary role in political decision-making. On the other hand, the Mission welcomed the increase in the minimum wage and in the bonuses decreed in early 2000, as well as the bill sent by the President to Congress containing amendments to the Labour Code that would bring national legislation into line with the standards set by International Labour Organization (ILO) conventions.

Progress in fulfilling the commitments on social development encountered serious obstacles. Public investment in the social sphere was delayed and an almost 20-per-cent cut in the approved budget, except for health, education and security, affected the State's physical and financial investment capacity. The budget cuts affected not only public investment in the country's poorest areas, but also the funding of many commitments scheduled for implementation in 2000. As a result, in the first six months of the year, very little progress was made in meeting targets for social investment and for coverage and quality of social services. The social sector budget for 2000 was approximately $500.6 million, but only 31 per cent of that amount had been disbursed as at 31 May. The Ministry of Education announced the implementation of a national literacy programme that it hoped would reduce the illiteracy rate to around 15 per cent within four years and would benefit 2.8 million people.

The 2000 budget for the health sector amounted to $263.6 million, of which only 29.2 per cent had been disbursed by May. The basic objectives of the National Health Plan 2000-2004 included plans for promoting women's health, such as adequate access to prenatal care and childbirth services. The 2000 budget for the housing sector amounted to $38.4 million, none of which was distributed due to, among other things, the suspension of the activities of the Guatemalan Housing Fund.

With regard to social participation and consultation, the development councils had made progress as forums for allocating the budget of the Solidarity Fund for Community Development and for approving municipal projects. However, civil society organizations were still not participating in the councils as fully as they should. MINUGUA welcomed the establishment of the Presidential Secretariat for Women as an advisory and public policy coordinating body for promoting the advancement of Guatemalan women and the development of a culture of democracy.

Under the 1996 Agreement on the Strengthening of Civilian Power and on the Role of the Armed Forces in a Democratic Society [YUN 1996, p. 167], an important landmark in the administration of justice was achieved with the entry into force of the Career Judicial Service Act. In January, the National Commission for Monitoring and Supporting the Strengthening of the Justice System, responsible for advising on and supporting the modernization and reform of the judicial system, took up its functions. It had since prepared a five-year strategic plan. In May, judges' and magistrates' representatives were elected to the Career Judicial Service Council. MINUGUA noted with concern, however, that the commitment to amend the Penal Code was still unfulfilled and scant progress was made in strengthening the Public Prosecutor's Office. Guatemalan prisons continued to experience serious deficiencies in infrastructure and trained personnel.

During the period under review, the public perception of heightened insecurity and criminal violence continued to grow. Frequent changes in the PNC command structure created the feeling that the institution was unstable. A number of reforms in police rules and regulations were introduced, including the creation of an anti-kidnapping squad as a specialized unit for preventing, investigating and prosecuting the crimes of abduction or kidnapping and extortion. In that connection, MINUGUA expressed its concern at the withholding of the identity of investigators and operatives for a 10-year period, a provision that could undermine the principles of accusatory criminal proceedings in force in Guatemala. PNC was deployed in all 22 of the country's departments and covered 307 of its 331 municipalities, with a force of 16,205 members, of whom 1,692 were women. The number of indigenous people who applied and were selected, trained and deployed remained low. The Mission noted that, in general, the PNC regime of confinement to barracks was affecting police morale and preventing better public service and the development of a relationship with the community. The Police Academy had continued to train new police recruits and had completed the retraining process of former police members. The Mission stressed the need to recruit throughout the country, particularly in indigenous areas, and to strengthen police training at all levels. It reiterated its concern at the lack of development of the PNC information and criminal investigation services. Three years after its creation, the Criminal Investigation Service was deployed in only 14 departments and its staff had not increased significantly. Notwithstanding efforts to modernize the disciplinary section and the PNC Office of Professional Accountability, MINUGUA considered it essential to create higher oversight mechanisms to monitor the overall functioning of the police. With the change of government, progress had been made in ensuring that the Strategic Analysis Secretariat was made up of civilian personnel. In June, the Secretariat submitted a plan of work, which included the restructuring and functional rethinking of State intelligence mechanisms. The plan indicated that the Secretariat's mission was to advise the President on the creation of democratic institutions by providing information and forward-looking analysis for decision-making purposes.

With regard to the reduction of the armed forces budget as provided for in the peace agreements, the sum allocated—approximately $118.6 million—failed to meet the agreed reduction target. Some progress in the redeployment of governmental troops from areas they had occupied during the armed conflict took place following the inauguration of the new Government. The proposed doctrinal manual of the armed forces, submitted in late 1999, did not meet expectations of fulfilling the commitment on the formulation of a new doctrine. The new Government expressed its willingness to include more sectors in its discussions of the manual. It also made some progress towards disbanding the Presidential General Staff by including that commitment in its draft amendments to the Act establishing the armed forces. The Mission was extremely concerned at the potential impact of the recently adopted Support for the Civil Security Forces Act. The Act provided for the participation of the armed forces in public security tasks, and thus was a major setback for the process of demilitarizing public security pursuant to the peace agreements. Moreover, in MINUGUA's view, the Act contained legal ambiguities and reflected a public security policy that did not include the strengthening of PNC.

As to the 1996 Agreement on Constitutional Reforms and the Electoral Regime [YUN 1997, p. 178], the draft amendments to the Elections and Political Parties Act were discussed in the Electoral Affairs Committee of the Congress. The Committee had launched a broad debate on the amendments and was receiving proposals on that issue from women's organizations and civic committees.

During the period under review, the Mission observed that the unease that demobilized population groups were feeling at implementation delays had evolved into a perception that compliance with the 1996 Agreement on the Basis for the Legal Integration of URNG [YUN 1996, p. 169] was at a standstill. However, implementation of the programme of production projects began after a delay of over a year. It was hoped that the programme would benefit nearly 1,500 demobilized combatants—approximately half of the total demobilized population. The integration of demobilized women faced additional difficulties since no specific measures had been envisaged to facilitate their access to production projects. A comprehensive programme for disabled former combatants and civilians had been completed. Also, 891 housing units were being built for uprooted and demobilized population groups. The Secretary-General reiterated his recommendation that the Guillermo Toriello Foundation be strengthened and called on Governments to provide it with the support it needed to perform its tasks in the integration process.

The Secretary-General observed that the increased mobilization of national resources that would result from the tax measures agreed within the framework of the Fiscal Pact would give the State the capacity to finance adequately a large number of commitments whose fulfilment had been affected by lack of resources and budget cuts. The depth and extent of poverty and social exclusion in rural areas required a comprehensive rural development strategy. The commitments relating to redeployment and to the elaboration of a new doctrine of the armed forces had to be complied with fully, while military intelligence had to be transformed and the Presidential Military Staff disbanded. At the same time, there was a need to continue the professionalization of PNC. The new educational policy should aim to establish new models for democratic pluralism and promote technical and scientific progress. In order to overcome the historical exclusion of large population groups from Guatemala's political life, priority should be given to reforming the electoral system. There was also a need to put in place a public policy of fostering collective bargaining that would promote the development of consensus methods of dealing with labour disputes. The Secretary-General said that in order to attain the goals of decentralization specified in the agreements, it was essential for the Government to define its strategy with regard to functional and territorial decentralization. Defining that strategy would allow the proposed reforms to the Development Council Acts and the Municipal Code to be taken into account by the Congress. The process of building national unity required the full integration of indigenous people and women in the political, economic and cultural life of the country.

In a later report [A/55/973], the Secretary-General said that, in December, the Follow-up Commission rescheduled pending commitments in an implementation timetable for 2000-2004, to which the Government pledged its support. The execution of public spending for 2000 on items related to the peace process was generally satisfactory. However, actual spending by key ministries, such as the Ministry of Agriculture, Livestock and Food, the Ministry of Communications, Infrastructure and Housing and the Ministry of Labour and Social Security, was unsatisfactory. With regard to revenues, the estimated tax burden at the end of 2000 was 9.44 per cent of GDP; if that situation continued, it would be impossible to reach the 12-per-cent target rescheduled for 2002 in the Fiscal Pact. The draft General Budget of State Revenues and Expenditures, which the executive branch transmitted to the Congress in September, gave priority to spending for peace. However, it underwent significant cuts in the course of its approval by Parliament. The Government requested the suspension of the Consultative Group on Reconstruction and Transformation meeting that had been scheduled to take place before the end of 2000, due to delays in fulfilling pending commitments, the difficulties in increasing tax collection and the rescheduling carried out by the Follow-up Commission. In November, a further one-year extension of the Special Temporary Act on Personal Documentation was approved because some internally displaced persons and women still did not have documentation and were therefore unable to obtain credit, land, housing and other social benefits.

Human rights

In July [A/55/174], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the MINUGUA Head's eleventh report on human rights, which described the Mission's activities between 1 December 1999 and 30 June 2000.

In March, the new Government announced that it intended to ratify certain international human rights treaties and that it was prepared to recognize the State's responsibility in 52 cases of human rights violations that were before the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights. The State also acknowledged its responsibility in the cases of Myrna Mack (an anthropologist who was killed in Guatemala City in 1990), the 1982 Dos Erres massacre and the 1994 death of street child Marcos Fidel Quisquinay. The new Government also condemned the fact that the files on the investigation of high-profile cases, such as the assassination of Monsignor Juan José Gerardi Conedera [YUN 1998, p. 219] and Myrna Mack, were missing and that some confidential files in the possession of the Strategic Affairs Secretariat in the Office of the President had been partially destroyed. The general perception of an increase in criminal activity and lack of public security was heightened by the discovery of a large number of corpses of alleged criminals bearing signs of torture, possibly as part of so-called social cleansing between individuals or criminal gangs. Also filed were complaints of death threats and selective searches and robberies at the headquarters of social organizations. Those acts of intimidation were aimed mainly at social, human rights and victims' organizations, and judges, prosecutors and journalists involved in the criminal trials of State agents or investigations into the activities of the intelligence services. Notwithstanding the Government's new human rights policy and its clear willingness to move forward with the implementation of its commitments under the 1994 Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights [YUN 1994, p. 407], the human rights situation in Guatemala was deteriorating.

During the period under review, the Mission admitted 285 complaints, compared with 316 during the previous reporting period [YUN 1999, p. 204]. There was a slight increase in the number of alleged violations of the rights accorded priority under the Comprehensive Agreement, as well as in the number of confirmed violations. The comprehensive analysis by category of right showed an increase in confirmed violations of the right to freedom of association and assembly and of political rights. In the case of political rights, nearly all the violations were connected with the general election. There was also an increase in violations of the right to individual liberty and security of person. The number of violations of the right to life decreased, though there was an increase in the involvement of PNC members in such violations. As for the right to integrity of person, 91 confirmed violations were reported—63 from the period under review and 28 from previous periods. Confirmed violations of due process of law totalled 2,991, of which 1,639 corresponded to complaints submitted during the period under review.

The persistent and widespread failure of the State to fulfil its obligation to prevent, investigate and punish crimes and human rights violations and to enforce the guarantees that constituted due process of law was one of the main factors contributing to the situation of impunity prevailing in Guatemala. Major progress had been made in February with the ratification of the Inter-American Convention on Forced Disappearances of Persons, even though that was marred by the attachment of a reservation to the effect that the extradition to or from the country of Guatemalans alleged to be responsible for enforced disappearances would not be facilitated. Illegal security forces and clandestine groups continued to be active and the Government had not devised a policy to combat them. The operational capacity of those groups, their links with public officials at the local and national level and the impunity that prevailed for most of their actions were all factors that contributed to the people's perception of insecurity.

In order to strengthen the mechanisms to ensure effective exercise of human rights, it was particularly important to deal with legal provisions, such as the reform of the Elections and Political Parties Act, the characterization of discrimination and sexual harassment as offences, the law which regulated the civil service and the law on arms and munitions. The State also had to bring domestic legislation into line with the precepts of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, annexed to General Assembly resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 561].

MINUGUA noted that, despite legal and infrastructural constraints, there had been considerable improvement in the management of the Supreme Electoral Tribunal during the electoral process in 1999. In order to surmount the exclusion of broad sectors of society from political life and to approve the reforms of the Elections and Political Parties Act, the Mission recommended that the Tribunal should consider sectoral voter registration campaigns, particularly for women and indigenous people, and ensure that officials working to register voters in the interior were familiar with Mayan languages.

PNC, which bore primary responsibility for human rights violations during the period under review, had to adopt without delay a democratic policy that was respectful of the rule of law and consistent with human rights and the concept of public service. Some of the violations committed by police officers could be prevented by redoubling efforts to enhance police training, particularly as regards arrest procedures, treatment of those detained and proportional use of force. In addition, in order for the State to fulfil its duty to investigate and punish human rights violations, priority had to be given to dealing with the inadequacies and interferences that prevented the Public Prosecutor's Office from playing its role in criminal investigations and the fight against impunity. Prosecutors, like judges, had to be free from pressure and threats, and the judiciary had to be reformed and modernized. The Government had to separate military intelligence agencies from civil matters and particularly from judicial investigations. It also had to put a stop to lynchings and so-called social cleansing and establish the Advisory Council on Security, which was provided for in the peace agreements.

In a later report [A/56/273], MINUGUA stated that, in September, Guatemala signed the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by General Assembly resolution 54/4 [YUN 1999, p. 1100], and the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on involvement of children in armed conflict, adopted by Assembly resolution 54/263 (see p. 615). In October, it ratified the Additional Protocol to the American Convention on Human Rights in the Area of Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and in November it ratified the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted by Assembly resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 423]. Lynchings and acts of mob violence, both spontaneous and premeditated, continued, undermining governance in various municipalities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 86], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/177 [draft: A/55/L.33/Rev.I & Add.I] without vote [agenda item 43].

United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 54/99 of 8 December 1999, in which it decided to authorize the renewal of the mandate of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala from 1 January to 31 December 2000,

Taking into account that, for the first time since the signing of the peace agreements, Guatemala held general elections during the period from November to December 1999 and that the peaceful transfer of power signals significant progress towards the consolidation of an inclusive and democratic political system,

Underlining the fact that substantive aspects of the agenda of the peace agreements are yet to be implemented and that their implementation requires a revised calendar prepared by the Commission to Follow Up the Implementation of the Peace Agreements,

Taking into account that the parties have requested the United Nations to support the consolidation of the peace-building process until 2003,

Taking into account also the tenth and eleventh reports of the Mission on human rights,

Taking into account further the fourth and fifth reports of the Secretary-General on the verification of compliance with the peace agreements,

Taking into account the report of the Commission for Historical Clarification,

Stressing the positive role played by the Mission in support of the Guatemala peace process, and emphasizing the need for the Mission to continue to enjoy the full support of all parties concerned,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Mission,

1. Welcomes the tenth and eleventh reports of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala on human rights;

2. Also welcomes the fourth and fifth reports of the Secretary-General on the verification of compliance with the peace agreements;

3. Recalls the report of the Commission for Historical Clarification and the recommendations contained therein;

4. Welcomes the commitment made by the new Government of Guatemala in January 2000 to the implementation of the peace agreements and to reinvigorating the peace process through the adoption of social policies anchored to the agreements;

5. Takes note of the agreement reached by the parties regarding the importance of the continuing presence of the Mission in Guatemala until 2003;

6. Also takes note of the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General which are aimed at ensuring that the Mission can respond adequately to the demands of the peace process until 31 December 2001, as well as of his proposals relating to the changes in the structure and staffing of the Mission for the period 2001-2003;

7. Notes with satisfaction the progress made in the implementation of the peace agreements, in particular the process towards the finalization of the Fiscal Pact for a Future with Peace and Development which establishes the basis for increased public spending on the peace agenda and paves the way for the modernization of the economic system, the reinforcement of the operational capacities and training of the National Civil Police and the establishment by decree of the Women's Secretariat;

8. Welcomes the rescheduling of pending commitments by the Commission to Follow Up the Implementation of the Peace Agreements and the inclusion of commitments not initially scheduled in a revised calendar for implementation, and urges the rapid approval of the new timetable;

9. Notes that the consolidation of the peace-building process remains a significant challenge that requires the strengthening of achievements to date and the completion of the outstanding agenda;

10. Underlines with concern that key reforms envisaged in the peace agreements remain outstanding, including the fiscal, judicial, military, electoral and land reforms, as well as decentralization and rural development, and therefore urges the finalization of the Fiscal Pact, notes the need to strengthen the institutions established under the agreements, and stresses the importance of continued compliance with the peace agreements;

11. Notes that the present Government has assigned priority to national and international human rights obligations;

12. Encourages the Government to implement the recommendations contained in the reports of the Mission on human rights, in particular in view of the persistent shortcomings in the overall human rights situation and the troubling increase in incidents directed at people working on such issues;

13. Underlines the importance of implementing fully the Agreement on identity and rights of indigenous peoples as a key to achieving peace in Guatemala, and highlights the need to implement fully the Agreement on Social and Economic Aspects and the Agrarian Situation as a means of addressing the root causes of the armed conflict;

14. Calls upon the Government to follow up the recommendations of the Commission for Historical Clarification, with a view to promoting national reconciliation, upholding the right to truth and providing redress, in accordance with Guatemalan law, for the victims of human rights abuses and violence committed during the thirty-six-year conflict, and calls upon Congress to establish the Commission for Peace and Harmony;

15. Encourages the parties and all sectors of Guatemalan society to intensify their efforts to achieve the goals of the peace agreements, in particular the observance of human rights, including the rights of indigenous peoples, equitable development, participation and national reconciliation;

16. Invites the international community and, in particular, the agencies, programmes and funds of the United Nations, to continue to support the consolidation of the peace-building process and to consider the implementation of the peace agreements as the framework for their technical and financial assistance programmes and projects, and stresses the continued importance of close cooperation among them in the context of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework for Guatemala;

17. Urges the international community to support financially the strengthening of the capacities of the United Nations agencies and programmes as they assume a more active role in working in a closely coordinated relationship with the Mission in order to ensure the consolidation of the peace process in Guatemala;

18. Stresses that the Mission has a key role to play in promoting the consolidation of peace and the observance of human rights and in verifying compliance with the newly approved timetable for the implementation of pending commitments under the peace agreements;

19. Decides to authorize the renewal of the mandate of the Mission from 1 January to 31 December 2001;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, as early as possible, an updated report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, together with his recommendations regarding the continuation of the peace-building phase after 31 December 2001;

21. Also requests the Secretary-General to keep the General Assembly fully informed of the implementation of the present resolution.

Financing of Military Observer Group

The MINUGUA Military Observer Group was deployed for three months—from 3 March to 27 May 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 172]—to verify the Agreement on the Definitive Ceasefire of 4 December 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 168] between the Government of Guatemala and URNG.

On 23 December, the General Assembly decided that the item on the financing of the Military Observer Group would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458) and that the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee should continue to consider the item at that session (decision 55/455).

Nicaragua

In a report on international assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Nicaragua [YUN 1999, p. 207], the Secretary-General noted that, at the Consultative Group meeting for Nicaragua (Washington, D.C., 23-24 May 2000), the country's sound economic performance during the 1998-1999 biennium, with economic growth and decreasing inflation, was emphasized. There was general agreement that combating poverty was the most important development goal for Nicaragua. The Government was commended for the progress achieved in the preparation of a comprehensive poverty reduction strategy. President Arnoldo Alemán underlined the importance of governance as an indispensable precondition for confronting poverty and creating the structures for stable development. The international community stressed the importance of transparency in public spending and urged the Nicaraguan authorities to apply the new instruments at their disposition in order to resolve cases of corruption.

The most important political event was the agreement achieved by the two political parties, the Partido Liberal Constitucionalista and Frente Sandinista de Liberación Nacional, around issues of constitutional reform, which were approved in January. Among the reforms were the automatic membership in parliament of former Presidents, the increased number of judges for the Supreme Court and the replacement of judges in the Supreme Electoral Council. An additional element of the agreement became the new Electoral Law, criticized by international experts on the grounds that it made political participation unduly difficult, with numerous requirements that appeared to serve no purpose other than imposing a bipartisan model for Nicaragua. At the beginning of May, the National Assembly approved the Law for the Creation of the Public Ministry as the entity for opening criminal proceedings, a major step in the consolidation of the rule of law.

During 2000, Haiti's three-year-old political and institutional crisis deepened, further eroding the moral, economic and social fabric of the country. After repeated delays, the first round of parliamentary and local elections was held on 21 May. Although election day went unexpectedly well, with a higher than usual turnout and little violence, the electoral process unfolded in a climate of violence and intimidation and fell short of the desired goal. A flawed method of calculating percentages in the Senate race wrongly gave front-runners, all of whom belonged to the ruling Fanmi Lavalas party headed by former President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, an absolute majority in the first round. Despite calls by the international community for rectification of the methods of calculation of the Senate results, a new Parliament was seated on 28 August. That decision compelled all main bilateral donors to cut direct international assistance to the Haitian Government and to channel aid through NGOs. Despite the failure to correct the error, Haitian authorities held elections for President and a third of the Senate on 26 November. Since the opposition parties boycotted the elections in protest over the 21 May results, Mr. Aristide won the presidential race and Fanmi Lavalas took all the Senate seats up for contest. In response to the electoral and political crisis, and after intensive examination of Haiti's Provisional Electoral Council (CEP) and its practices, the United Nations withdrew a technical team of electoral experts in mid-October.

The International Civilian Support Mission in Haiti (MICAH), which was launched on 16 March, was expected to consolidate and develop the results already achieved by the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti (MIPONUH) and the OAS/UN International Civilian Mission to Haiti (MICIVIH) with regard to respect for human rights and reinforcement of the institutional effectiveness of the Haitian police and judiciary. The MIPONUH and MICIVIH mandates had been extended in November 1999 by Security Council resolution 1277(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 215] in order to ensure a phased transition to MICAH by 15 March. Despite initial budgetary shortfalls, the first MICAH advisers arrived in Haiti in mid-June. By mid-October, a total of 68 advisers were in place. However, due to the political turmoil and instability in Haiti, the Secretary-General recommended in November that MICAH be terminated on 6 February 2001 and that new forms of technical assistance be devised in order to allow the UN system to continue supporting the Haitian people.

Civilian Police Mission

Report of Secretary-General. On 25 February [S/2000/150], the Secretary-General updated the activities of MIPONUH and developments in its mission area since his November 1999 report [YUN 1999, p. 213]. The Mission had been established by Security Council resolution 1141(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 193] to assist the Government of Haiti by supporting and contributing to the professionalization of the Haitian National Police (HNP) in close cooperation with MICIVIH.

The Secretary-General said that during the reporting period, the security situation in Haiti was characterized by frequent demonstrations and by incidents of violence and robbery. The political climate had been dominated by pre-electoral activities. Despite some election-related disturbances and organizational delays, CEP had proceeded with the implementation of its electoral timetable. It was hoped that the process would culminate in the holding of legislative and local elections as scheduled on 19 March. On 4 January, CEP held a conference with the political parties to obtain their commitment to an electoral code of ethics binding them to pursue their electoral objectives by non-violent means. Numerous parties, including Fanmi Lavalas, signed the code. The voter registration campaign was launched on 24 January. Despite reported irregularities, delays and protests, more than 3 million voters had registered by the middle of February.

As at 21 February, MIPONUH was composed of 219 civilian police officers from 10 countries, including a 110-strong special police unit. The police continued to be deployed in all of Haiti's nine departments, while the special police unit remained in the capital. The curriculum of training courses designed by MIPONUH in cooperation with HNP had been taught comprehensively and had met all the objectives established by HNP. Civilian police officers continued to discharge their mentoring (accompagnement) responsibilities at the Offices of the Director-General and Inspector-General of HNP, as well as alongside the departmental directors of the police force. The emphasis remained on community policing, the maintenance of law and order, the fight against capital crimes and drug trafficking, and the reinforcement of police administration and logistics. A disengagement plan had been established to ensure the progressive withdrawal of MIPONUH civilian police personnel. The special police unit was scheduled to be withdrawn on 16 March.

While the security situation in Haiti remained of concern, HNP had been able to work with increased efficiency during the period under review. In fact, HNP had undertaken several successful operations in the fight against delinquency and drug trafficking and, in most cases, had provided adequate security during election-related events.

In the context of the transition to MICAHA, both MIPONUH and MICIVIH held a series of coordination meetings with a view to harmonizing their activities and preparing the transition. In February, meetings were conducted by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice with the Secretary-General's Representative, the UNDP representative and bilateral donors to prepare the assistance to judicial reform in the context of MICAHA. The joint working groups composed of Haitian officials and international experts established in 1999 by the Minister of Justice [YUN 1999, p. 214] continued to work on the drafting of legal texts in order to promote the judicial reform process.

The UN system continued to implement and support development activities (see also p. 815), such as the launching of a United Nations Capital Development Fund programme to strengthen governance for the environment, and the organization by the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and MICIVIH of a national workshop for the preparation of the first report on the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, annexed to General Assembly resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 561].

By early February, the withdrawal plans for MIPONUH's civilian police personnel were finalized and their repatriation was expected to be concluded by 15 March. The Mission had earmarked some assets to be retained by MICAHA. The liquidation phase was expected to be completed by 30 June. The recruitment of police advisers for MICAHA was under way. The advisers were expected to provide continued training and mentoring support to HNP decision makers, who still did not have all the necessary experience to command and administer their young police force. Concerning the new Mission, the UN Secretariat had identified and recommended candidates for the majority of the positions to be financed under the regular budget. Those positions would need to be complemented by personnel that would be financed by extrabudgetary means.

The Secretary-General observed that, by deciding to establish MICAHA, the international community had confirmed that it was committed to continuing to assist the Haitian Government in reinforcing the country's democratic institutions. MICAHA was expected to consolidate and develop the results already achieved by MIPONUH and MICIVIH as regards respect for human rights and reinforcement of the institutional effectiveness of the police and the judiciary, and to coordinate and facilitate the international community's dialogue with political and social actors in Haiti. Subject to the availability of resources, MICAHA's relatively short-term objectives would be situated in the longer-term perspective of facilitating the passage from security to development priorities. The Secretary-General called on Member States to assist in the transition from peacekeeping to peace-building and to contribute to the Trust Fund established for MICAHA. The Fund would allow for the recruitment of over 100 advisers in the areas of police, justice and human rights.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 15 March [meeting 4112], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/8 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General dated 25 February 2000 submitted in accordance with resolution 1277(1999) of 30 November 1999.

The Council commends the Representative of the Secretary-General, the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti, the International Civilian Mission in Haiti and all previous missions deployed in Haiti for assisting the Haitian Government in supporting the professionalization of the Haitian National Police force, consolidating the system of justice and other national institutions of Haiti, and promoting human rights. The Council expresses its thanks to all the countries that took part in, and contributed to the success of, the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti, the International Civilian Mission in Haiti and all previous missions deployed in Haiti, particularly the troop-contributing countries.

The Council recognizes that the people and the Government of Haiti bear the ultimate responsibility for national reconciliation, the maintenance of a secure and stable environment, the administration of justice and the reconstruction of their country, and that the Government of Haiti bears particular responsibility for the further strengthening and effective functioning of the Haitian National Police and the justice system. The Council considers that timely, free and fair elections are crucial to democracy and all aspects of Haiti's development, and strongly urges the Haitian authorities to work cooperatively together in order to finalize arrangements for holding credible elections as rapidly as possible so as to restore, promptly and fully, the lapsed parliament and independent local governments.

The Council commends the Secretary-General for ensuring a phased transition to the International Civilian Support Mission in Haiti and recognizes that economic rehabilitation and reconstruction constitute a major task facing the Government and people of Haiti and that significant international assistance is indispensable for the sustainable development of Haiti.

The Council recognizes the success of cooperative efforts in bringing about the mandate for this new mission in Haiti, and notes with satisfaction the contributions made by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in this regard. The Council welcomes the initiative of the Economic and Social Council to develop a strategic framework and a comprehensive approach for a long-term United Nations programme of support for Haiti, and underlines the vital link between national stability and economic and social development.

The Council expects the Secretary-General to keep it informed, as appropriate, of the situation in Haiti and, in particular, the progress achieved in the electoral process.

Communications. On 15 March [A/54/806-S/2000/232], the EU Presidency noted the postponement of legislative and local elections in Haiti and the new dates (9 April–21 May 2000) proposed by CEP. The EU expressed regret that, 14 months after Parliament was officially prorogued and one year after CEP was appointed, the Haitian authorities were, despite large-scale international aid, unable to fulfil all the conditions necessary for the holding of fair and transparent elections.

On 31 March [A/54/819], the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly President that no contributions had been received for the MICAH Trust Fund. As a result, MICAH began its mandate on 16 March with only core staff. In the light of the lack of financial resources, the Assembly might wish to consider whether the Mission should be closed and its substantive activities transferred to UNDP.

International Civilian Support Mission

On 17 July [A/55/154], the Secretary-General submitted the first report on the activities of the International Civilian Support Mission in Haiti (MICAH), covering the period since the Mission's inception on 16 March. MICAH had been established by General Assembly resolution 54/193 [YUN 1999, p. 218] to consolidate the results achieved by MICIVIH, MIPONUH and previous UN missions.

The Secretary-General said that although parliamentary and local elections were held in Haiti, the electoral process, which unfolded in a climate of violence, intimidation and unpredictability, fell short of the desired goal. A dispute over the method used to calculate the Senate results remained unresolved. While the first round of elections was originally set for 28 November 1999, the polling was rescheduled three additional times and finally held on 21 May 2000. The delay was due in part to the unexpectedly high number of citizens seeking voter identity cards. Concern about the repeated postponements was raised by the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General for Haiti (Argentina, Canada, Chile, France, the United States and Venezuela) and other envoys in several meetings with President René Préal and Prime Minister Jacques-Édouard Alexis. In a 15 March letter to President Préal, the Secretary-General stated that the prompt holding of free and transparent elections was an essential step towards the consolidation of democracy. Three days of violent protests against early elections by members of pro-Fanmi Lavalas groups (popular organizations) in Port-au-Prince from 27 to 29 March caused additional disquiet. According to the OAS Electoral Observation Mission (EOM), more than 70 acts of violence were committed in the three-month run-up to the May elections. In the department of Grand'Anse, elections were postponed to a later date due to an internal political dispute.

The election itself went unexpectedly well, with a turnout of over 50 per cent, little violence and a visible, disciplined police presence throughout the country. However, signs of electoral mismanagement abounded, including inadequate planning for the receipt of voting urns, which meant that ballots were mixed up, mislaid or even scattered in the street, rendering any recount impossible. The major opposition parties asserted that there had been massive fraud and refused to participate in any second round. More than 30 opposition candidates and activists were arrested on 23 May on the grounds that they had staged violent protests. EOM's initial evaluation did not support the opposition's claim of systematic fraud, although it acknowledged many minor irregularities and a few serious ones, but those irregularities were isolated and did not affect the overall credibility of the elections. A similar assessment was issued by the Conseil National d'Observation Electorale, the umbrella organization of several thousand Haitian electoral observers. On close examination, it was discovered that CEP's Senate results had not been calculated according to the electoral law. All 17 of the Senate contests held on 21 May were won in the first round (16 of them by Fanmi Lavalas and one by an independent). If properly calculated, however, a run-off would have been required for eight of those seats, for which no candidate obtained an absolute majority of all votes cast, as required by the electoral law. In the view of EOM, the credibility of the entire electoral process would be jeopardized if that serious error were not corrected. Haitian officials strongly rejected suggestions that the results be recalculated, justifying the decision in part because it obviated the need for costly run-offs. Fanmi Lavalas called on its supporters to defend its election victory, resulting in two days of aggressive demonstrations by hundreds of protesters outside embassies and offices of the international community in Port-au-Prince. On 14 June, the Secretary-General expressed his expectation that the electoral authorities would calculate the final results in accordance with the electoral law. Statements were also issued by OAS and other international organizations. Meanwhile, the nine-member CEP came under conflicting pressure, forcing two members to resign. The CEP President fled the country and subsequently announced that he had been under pressure, from the Government in particular, to confirm the provisional Senate results. After continued violence and demonstration on the part of Fanmi Lavalas supporters, the six remaining CEP members issued final results for the Senate elections, using the same disputed system of calculation and confirming the first-round victory of the 16 Fanmi Lavalas candidates and one independent. According to CEP's final results for the first round of the Chamber of Deputies elections, in which the percentages appeared to have been calculated correctly, Fanmi Lavalas won about a third of the seats outright and was front-runner in run-offs for most of the other seats. Fanmi Lavalas also won most municipal councils overwhelmingly.

On 28 June, a delegation of the Caribbean Community (CARICOM) arrived in Haiti and submitted a proposal for resolving the Senate results issue to former President Aristide, head of Fanmi Lavalas. In order to pre-empt that effort, President Préval issued a decree fixing the second round for 9 July. The second round was held on that day, with run-offs being held only for the lower Chamber of Deputies. EOM did not observe the second round on the grounds that the unrevised Senate results could not be the basis for a credible electoral process. It also reported that, since 21 May, the electoral process had become increasingly flawed by such irregularities as the inaccurate transmission of results, the arbitrary treatment of challenges filed by candidates and political parties, and other irregularities. On 6 July, the Security Council President issued a statement to the press expressing the Council's concern about the violence and desire that Haitian authorities address electoral irregularities. On 10 July, the Secretary-General also expressed his regret that Haitian authorities had chosen to proceed to hold run-off elections without having resolved outstanding issues related to the first round. The delayed elections in Grand'Anse on 11 June were marred by the theft of counted ballots and tally sheets, as a result of which polling had to be reheld in two places. The theft of voting urns from several polling stations also disrupted the polling when it was reheld on 6 July. According to CEP provisional results for Grand'Anse, the department's two Senate seats were also won in the first round by Fanmi Lavalas, giving it a total of 18 out of 19 Senate seats.

Sufficient voluntary contributions had been received to allow for recruitment of MICAH's justice, human rights and police advisers. The first advisers arrived in Haiti in mid-June 2000. Discussions had been held with government authorities, UN agencies and representatives of NGOs and civil society in order to define the advisers' specific activities and responsibilities and to clarify the kind of support they could bring to development and institutional strengthening.

The resignation in April of the Inspector-General, Luc Eucher Joseph, raised new concerns about the politicization of HNP; Mr. Joseph's departure had been among the demands of Fanmi Lavalas supporters. Evidence of politicization was also seen in the passivity of the police in the face of the often violent protests by Fanmi Lavalas supporters at various stages of the electoral process between late March and mid-June, compared with resolute police interventions against opposition protests in late May. It was also alleged that certain elements of the police participated in the theft of ballots and the falsification of vote tallies after the 21 May election. As the technical assistance to be provided by the MICAH police pillar was different from the work of preceding missions, a new framework for its activities had to be created. By mid-June, 26 of the projected 34 advisers had been selected and several had arrived in the Mission area, where they were assigned to posts throughout the nine departments.

At the outset of MICAH, senior staff of the human rights pillar crafted a programme of human rights capacity-building and monitoring to be implemented by its 31 advisers, the first of whom arrived in June. Activities likely to have a long-term impact, such as work with human rights trainers, were identified as priorities. Teams deployed in the capital and the interior would develop a programme of monitoring activities to focus on the human rights aspects of the electoral process.

During the reporting period, the Ministry of Justice drafted a series of laws to be submitted to Parliament that reinforced the independence of the judiciary. MICAHA's justice pillar had been providing technical assistance to the Ministry of Justice and had held discussions with bilateral donors and within the UN system in order to ensure that justice sector work would be coordinated, complementary and sustainable. Other activities envisaged by the justice pillar included support for legal aid programmes and training of court clerks and prison staff.

Among development programmes, UNDP, the World Health Organization, the World Food Programme (WFP) and UNICEF helped prepare the first national plan for risk and disaster prevention and management, while the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) launched a public information campaign on HIV/AIDS in 10 major cities. UNICEF supported the Ministry of Health in a measles immunization campaign.

The Secretary-General observed that the 21 May elections had led to a deepening of the political crisis, increased tension and violence and the possible installation of a Senate that—if the crucial calculation question was not addressed—would cast a shadow over the Parliament's democratic legitimacy, thereby threatening the resumption of international financial assistance. Although EOM's initial assessment of the elections did not support the claim of widespread systematic fraud, the decision of the electoral authorities, supported by the Government and the ruling Fanmi Lavalas party, to stand by the erroneous Senate results was cause for serious concern.

The rule of law had suffered as a result of the passivity or even complicity of some police and judicial authorities in the face of violent demonstrations by members of so-called popular organizations, which targeted opposition parties, journalists and the general population. The Secretary-General said it was regrettable that political leaders had not consistently and publicly urged their supporters to refrain from such activity. The reliance on street violence to impose objectives at every crucial juncture in the political process had set dangerous precedents that bode ill for the future. Developments related to HNP were also cause for increasing concern; events in the aftermath of the 21 May election suggested that some Haitian political leaders sought to use the police for their own ends.

MICAHA's capacity to support Haiti's fledgling democratic institutions risked being jeopardized by a climate of political turmoil and intolerance, which could place significant constraints on the ability of its advisers to do their work. Strong, independent justice sector institutions were the best guarantors of the rule of law. MICAHA's support hinged on the existence of credible interlocutors in Haiti who enjoyed the support of their people as well as of the international community. Canada, Norway and the United States had contributed to MICAHA's Trust Fund, while the Friends of the Secretary-General for Haiti had played a supportive role during the transition from MIPONU/MICIVIH to MICAHA.

On 9 November [A/55/618], the Secretary-General described MICAHA's activities and developments in the Mission area since July. He said that Haiti's political and electoral crisis had again deepened, polarizing its political class and civil society, jeopardizing its international relations and sapping an already declining economy. Disregarding all calls for rectification of the calculation method of the Senate results and other irregularities in the 21 May elections, and with the opposition maintaining its boycott, the authorities completed the drawn-out electoral process, promulgated the final results and seated a new Parliament. Former President Aristide's Fanmi Lavalas party took 18 of the 19 contested Senate seats and 72 of the 83 seats in the Chamber of Deputies. Without consulting the opposition, President Préval named three new CEP members to replace its President, who fled the country in June, and two opposition representatives who had resigned. He then empowered CEP to organize elections for President and the remaining one third of the Senate seats on 26 November. Most of the opposition, grouped in a tactical alliance known as the Democratic Convergence, adhered, throughout the period under review, to the position that the 21 May elections were so fraudulent that they should be annulled and held again under a new CEP, but only after President Préval had stood down and been replaced by a provisional government. In the meantime, the opposition ruled out any participation in the November elections. While not backing the opposition call for the complete annulment of the elections, civil society organizations urged the authorities to address the electoral irregularities in order to avoid exacerbating the political crisis and jeopardizing international assistance.

The international community always held that the errors of the 21 May elections could be rectified, although its appeals to that end at every stage in the process had no effect. After an OAS mission in mid-August and several visits by envoys of CARICOM and the United States had failed to stop the seating of the new Parliament on 28 August, Haiti's main bilateral donors announced that they would not finance the November elections or any electoral observer mission, would not recognize the new Parliament, and would henceforth provide little or no assistance to the Government of Haiti, channelling it all through NGOs. The United States Administration also stated that it would consider opposing Haitian loan requests from international financial institutions. All that was to stay in effect until an independent and credible CEP was established; accommodations were made with regard to the 21 May elections, especially the contested Senate seats; and a dialogue was started with the opposition on ways to strengthen Haitian democracy. At a ministerial-level meeting (New York, 13 September), the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General for Haiti voiced disappointment and concern at the failure of the Haitian authorities to rectify the flaws of the 21 May elections. The United Nations decided that it was not in a position to continue its technical assistance to CEP in its preparations for the November elections, given the fact that it did not meet required standards. The UN technical assistance team—deployed under the auspices of UNDP—left the country on 15 October.

The deepening political crisis and the continued suspension of much financial assistance by international financial institutions precipitated a fall in the Haitian currency (gourde). Since July, there had also been an increase in violent crime, with allegations of police involvement in robbery, extortion and abduction, as well as drug trafficking. Political pressures on HNP had contributed to the demoralization of the police force and had eroded its operational capacity and credibility.

By mid-October, MICAHA's three pillars—justice, police and human rights—had a total of 68 advisers assigned to the Ministry of Justice, HNP, the Prison Authority, the Judges School and the Office of the Ombudsman, as well as to MICAHA regional offices, a human rights verification unit and units working with civil society partners. MICAHA worked with UNDP and bilateral donors to identify short-term projects that would best be undertaken by the Mission and took part in discussions with all United Nations agencies on the common country assessment conducted throughout June.

MICAHA's justice pillar, which had 17 advisers by mid-October, provided logistical and organizational support for a process of discussion and revision of five newly prepared draft laws concerning the organization and independence of the judiciary, drug trafficking and money-laundering. Two landmark trials were held in the fight against impunity: one of a group of police officers accused of carrying out executions in 1999; and the other of a group of former army officers, soldiers and civilians accused of a 1994 massacre. Building on the work of UNDP, the justice pillar helped to organize the Prison Authority and attempted to address problems in prison conditions.

The police section of MICAHA had 24 advisers by mid-October. The equipment and materiel necessary for the police to operate were found to be in extremely short supply in most units. After the installation of the new Parliament, several Fanmi Lavalas senators embarked on a campaign of almost daily criticism of the police, accusing the service of incompetence and inactivity in the face of soaring crime and of having corrupted elements within its ranks.

MICAHA's human rights section had 27 advisers by the start of October. A training programme was developed for human rights instructors at the Police Academy and for prison guard recruits, in order to reinforce their knowledge of human rights. MICAHA organized a number of activities to raise public awareness of human rights, such as International Peace Day (19 September), which was used as a vehicle to promote the values of a culture of peace through the media, meetings and other activities organized jointly with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO). The human rights section also began carrying out verification activities, following up incidents of violence that could be of a political nature. Respect of the rights to individual liberty and a fair trial within a reasonable time limit continued to be the most frequent human rights violations (see also p. 628).

The UN system was engaged in formulating a United Nations Development Assistance Framework for Haiti, which was expected to be finalized in January 2001. Other UN activities included the launching of a justice programme by UNDP, aimed at, among other things, promoting the participation of civil society in the debate on judicial reform, and a special assistance drive by WFP to stabilize the food security situation in drought-stricken northern and north-eastern regions.

The Secretary-General observed that the political polarization of Haiti was highlighted by the Inter-American Commission of Human Rights, which visited Port-au-Prince from 21 to 25 August. The Commission stated that the most critical and worrying aspect of the human rights situation in Haiti was the deterioration of the political climate to such a point that no consensus seemed to exist about the ways in which to consolidate the country's fledgling democracy. A disturbing element of that polarization was the widely held perception among opponents of Fanmi Lavalas that the party might establish a dictatorial and repressive regime if, as was widely expected, Mr. Aristide regained the presidency. On the other hand, it was evident that Mr. Aristide enjoyed the loyalty of broad sectors of the urban and rural poor. The disinclination of the parties to work towards a compromise was a fundamental cause of the polarization. Many in the opposition seemed to hope that, under the pressure of international isolation and internal unrest, Fanmi Lavalas would somehow disintegrate and that compromise was therefore unnecessary. The consequences of that attitude could be seen in Haiti's political stalemate, soon to enter its fourth year.

In the absence of any solution to the crisis, popular discontent seemed likely to mount in response to the rising prices and increasing poverty. A combination of rampant crime, violent street protests and incidents of violence targeted at the international community could severely limit MICAHA's ability to fulfil its mandate. In that climate of political turmoil and instability, and with national counterparts often lacking or distracted by political concerns, it would be necessary to devise new forms of technical assistance that might better allow the UN system to continue supporting the Haitian people. The Secretary-General expressed the view that, in the light of the conditions in Haiti, a renewal of MICAHA's mandate was not advisable, and recommended, with regret, that the Mission be terminated at the end of its mandate on 6 February 2001. In preparation, discussions had already commenced among UNDP, MICAHA and the Friends of the Secretary-General for Haiti, in consultation with other members of the UN system, with the aim of designing a programme of assistance to the Haitian people that was commensurate with the country's political realities and absorption capacity.

In a later report [A/55/905], the Secretary-General detailed, among other things, developments in the Mission area during the last two months of 2000. Elections for President and a third of the Senate were held on 26 November, despite the absence of an accord between Fanmi Lavalas and opposition parties to resolve the irregularities of the 21 May elections. The opposition boycotted the electoral process and former President Aristide faced no serious opposition candidates. As a result, Mr. Aristide won the presidential race with 92 per cent of the vote, while Fanmi Lavalas took all nine Senate seats up for election, giving it a total of 26 of the Senate's 27 seats.

EOM's final report on the 21 May elections, published in December, noted that there should have been run-offs for eight Senate seats where a flawed method of calculating percentages wrongly gave front-runners an absolute majority in the first round. In addition, vote tally discrepancies indicated that run-offs should also have been held for at least one other Senate seat and perhaps as many as three Deputy seats. The report cited many other irregularities, including the mishandling of challenges and irregular complementary elections in several districts.

Mr. Aristide's offer, after the 26 November election, to include persons from outside Fanmi Lavalas in his Government was rejected by the opposition parties. The only negotiations that took place were between Mr. Aristide and two United States envoys. They resulted in an eight-point accord contained in a 27 December letter to the President of the United States, William J. Clinton, in which Mr. Aristide pledged to: hold run-offs for the disputed Senate seats (or rectify the 21 May election problems by other credible means); create a credible new electoral council in consultation with the opposition; endeavour to form a broad-based government; and request a semi-permanent OAS commission to facilitate dialogue and reinforce democratic institutions. The accord also contained commitments on drug trafficking, money-laundering, illegal migration, reinforcement of the police and economic reforms. Though rejected by the opposition as insufficient and insincere, action was taken by the authorities to implement some of the points. In mid-December, the opposition parties announced their intention to form a provisional government to fill what they considered a constitutional void that would be left at the end of President Préval's term. Although the leaders of the Democratic Convergence gave private assurances that they had no intention of trying to install their alternative government by force, their public statements sometimes created a different impression. Haitian authorities responded with a series of critical and implicitly threatening statements and urged the popular organizations to mobilize against what they viewed as a coup d'état.

A second national forum on judicial reform was organized jointly by the Ministry of Justice and MICAHA from 4 to 8 December. Four draft laws were debated, including a code of ethics for the judiciary and legislation regulating the Judicial Inspectorate, the Judicial Police and legal aid. MICAHA supported the drafting of a series of judicial reform bills, which included legislation to combat drug trafficking and money-laundering.

UNAIDS supported several activities for World AIDS Day on 1 December, in particular a mobilization and sensitization campaign throughout the country. Following heavy floods in northern Haiti in early November, the United Nations Disaster Management Team reacted swiftly, coordinated immediate assistance and formulated a joint integrated proposal for local risk and disaster management.

On 23 December, the General Assembly decided that the item on the situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458).

Financing of missions

In February [A/54/757], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly MIPONUH's financial performance report for the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999. Expenditures for the period totalled $26,261,000 gross ($25,101,100 net), excluding budgeted voluntary contributions in kind of $1,788,000, resulting in an unencumbered balance of $3,707,700 gross ($3,435,600 net).

In April [A/54/825], ACABQ suggested that the Assembly might consider crediting the unencumbered balance to Member States or to MICAH's Trust Fund.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 June [meeting 98], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/907], adopted resolution 54/276 without vote [agenda item 147].

Financing of the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti, the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti and the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 1063(1996) of 28 June 1996, by which the Council established the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti, and 1086(1996) of 5 December 1996, by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission until 31 July 1997,

Bearing in mind also Security Council resolution 1123(1997) of 30 July 1997, by which the Council established the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti for a single four-month period,

Bearing in mind further Security Council resolutions 1141(1997) of 28 November 1997, by which the Council established the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti, and 1277(1999) of 30 November 1999, by which the Council continued the Mission until 15 March 2000,

Recalling its resolution 51/15 A of 4 November 1996 on the financing of the Support Mission and its subsequent decisions and resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 53/222 B of 8 June 1999,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Missions are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Missions, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to continue to provide the account of the Missions with the necessary financial resources to enable them to meet their outstanding liabilities,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti, the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti and the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti as at 30 April 2000, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 23 million United States dollars, representing 24 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Support Mission to the period ending 30 June 2000, notes that some 29 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding contributions;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti in full;

5. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

6. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

7. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

8. Takes note of the observations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

9. Decides that Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Civilian Police Mission shall be credited their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 3,707,700 dollars gross (3,435,600 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1999;

10. Decides also that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their obligations to the Civilian Police Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 3,707,700 dollars gross (3,435,600 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1999 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

11. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti, the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti and the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti".

On 5 September, the Assembly decided to include in the draft agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission in Haiti" (decision 54/498).

In December [A/55/667], the Secretary-General submitted a report on the final disposition of the assets of the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti (UNSMIH), which ended in July 1997, the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti (UNTMIH), which terminated in November 1997, and MIPONUH, which terminated on 15 March 2000. The inventory value of the Missions' assets as at 15 March amounted to some $27.2 million, 46 per cent of which had been transferred to other peacekeeping operations or to the United Nations Logistics Base in Brindisi, Italy, for temporary storage. The disposal of the assets had been guided by the principles endorsed by the Assembly in section VII of resolution 49/233 A [YUN 1994, p. 1340].

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the items on the financing of the United Nations Mission in Haiti and of UNSMIH, UNTMIH and MIPONUH would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458), and that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of those items at that session (decision 55/455).

Other questions

Cuba–United States

In July [A/55/172], the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 54/21 [YUN 1999, p. 222], submitted information received from 54 States, the EU and 10 UN bodies on the implementation of the resolution, by which the Assembly had called on States to refrain from unilateral application of economic and trade measures against States, and urged them to repeal or invalidate such measures. The preamble to resolution 54/21 had made particular reference to the Helms-Burton Act, promulgated by the United States in 1996, which had strengthened sanctions against Cuba. In a September report [A/55/172/Add.1], the Secretary-General submitted information received from six States and one UN body.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 November [meeting 56], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/20 [draft: A/55/L.7] by recorded vote (167-3-4) [agenda item 35].

Necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States of America against Cuba

The General Assembly,

Determined to encourage strict compliance with the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming, among other principles, the sovereign equality of States, non-intervention and non-interference in their internal affairs and freedom of international trade and navigation, which are also enshrined in many international legal instruments,

Recalling the statements of the heads of State or Government at the Ibero-American Summits concerning the need to eliminate the unilateral application of economic and trade measures by one State against another that affect the free flow of international trade,

Concerned about the continued promulgation and application by Member States of laws and regulations, such as that promulgated on 12 March 1996 known as the "Helms-Burton Act", the extraterritorial effects of which affect the sovereignty of other States, the legitimate interests of entities or persons under their jurisdiction and the freedom of trade and navigation,

Taking note of declarations and resolutions of different intergovernmental forums, bodies and Governments that express the rejection by the international community and public opinion of the promulgation and application of regulations of the kind referred to above,

Recalling its resolutions 47/19 of 24 November 1992, 48/16 of 3 November 1993, 49/9 of 26 October 1994, 50/10 of 2 November 1995, 51/17 of 12 November 1996, 52/10 of 5 November 1997, 53/4 of 14 October 1998 and 54/21 of 9 November 1999,

Concerned that, since the adoption of its resolutions 47/19, 48/16, 49/9, 50/10, 51/17, 52/10, 53/4 and 54/21, further measures of that nature aimed at strengthening and extending the economic, commercial and financial embargo against Cuba continue to be promulgated and applied, and concerned also about the adverse effects of such measures on the Cuban people and on Cuban nationals living in other countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 54/21;

2. Reiterates its call on all States to refrain from promulgating and applying laws and measures of the kind referred to in the preamble to the present resolution in conformity with their obligations under the Charter of the United Nations and international law, which, inter alia, reaffirm the freedom of trade and navigation;

3. Once again urges States that have and continue to apply such laws and measures to take the necessary steps to repeal or invalidate them as soon as possible in accordance with their legal regime;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the appropriate organs and agencies of the United Nations system, to prepare a report on the implementation of the present resolution in the light of the purposes and principles of the Charter and international law and to submit it to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States of America against Cuba".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 55/20:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nauru, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, Marshall Islands, United States.

Abstaining: El Salvador, Latvia, Morocco, Nicaragua.

Communications. On 14 January [A/54/715-S/2000/44], Cuba informed the Secretary-General that on 1 January an aircraft from the United States violated Cuban airspace by flying at a low altitude over the capital city of Havana.

On 20 June [A/55/316], Cuba transmitted to the Secretary-General a submission from the Cuban people to the Government of the United States for economic damage to Cuba.

Panama-United States

On 15 September [A/55/392-S/2000/874], Panama transmitted to the Secretary-General a note concerning the contamination of several thousand hectares of Panamanian territory with materials, explosives and toxic waste left behind by the armed forces of the United States after the closure of United States military bases in Panama and the transfer of the Panama Canal to exclusive Panamanian control on 31 December 1999. Panama said that when the 1977 Panama Canal Treaties were signed [YUN 1978, p. 160], it was agreed that the United States had a broad responsibility without any time limit for the decontamination of the areas used by it for target and bombing practice. According to Panama, the United States was reluctant to meet its obligations, claiming that it could not improve on the clean-up operations already performed. Panama requested the United Nations to investigate that alleged United States breach of its obligations.

Cooperation with OAS

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/9 [YUN 1998, p. 237], the Secretary-General submitted a July report on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States (OAS) [A/55/184]. The report reviewed their joint participation in the International Civilian Mission to Haiti (see p. 249), described consultations and information exchange on matters of mutual interest, and provided information on collaborative activities undertaken with OAS by the UN Secretariat, ECLAC, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the United Nations International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP), ILO, UNESCO, the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), the World Bank, the International Maritime Organization (IMO) and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO).

In June, the United Nations was represented at the thirtieth session of the General Assembly of OAS, at which a resolution was adopted requesting the OAS Secretary-General to continue to strengthen cooperation between the two organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 November [meeting 51], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/15 [draft: A/55/L.21 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 21].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/9 of 22 October 1998 relating to the promotion of cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States,

Recalling that the purposes of the United Nations are, inter alia, to achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and to be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends,

Recalling also that the Charter of the Organization of American States reaffirms these purposes and principles and provides that that organization is a regional agency under the terms of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling further its resolutions 47/20 A of 24 November 1992, 47/20 B of 20 April 1993, 48/27 B of 8 July 1994, 49/5 of 21 October 1994, 49/27 B of 12 July 1995, 50/86 B of 3 April 1996, 51/4 of 24 October 1996 and 53/9 of 22 October 1998,

Welcoming the upcoming Summit of the Americas to be held in Quebec City, Canada, from 20 to 22 April 2001,

Welcoming also resolution AG/RES.1733(XXX-O/00), adopted by the General Assembly of the Organization of American States at its thirtieth regular session, by which it declared 2001 as the Inter-American Year of the Child and the Adolescent, and related efforts in the Americas to address emerging issues for children in the twenty-first century, during lead-up to the special session of the General Assembly of the United Nations in 2001 for follow-up to the World Summit for Children,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States and his efforts to strengthen that cooperation;

2. Also takes note with satisfaction of the exchanges of information between the United Nations and the Organization of American States in the context of the work of the International Civilian Support Mission in Haiti and of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala;

3. Recognizes the work of the Organization of American States towards the promotion of democracy in the Americas, in the field of regional cooperation and in connection with its task of coordination with the United Nations;

4. Welcomes the efforts of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean to strengthen cooperation with inter-American institutions in various fields, including hemispheric integration, statistics and women and development;

5. Recommends that a general meeting of representatives of the United Nations system and of the Organization of American States be held in 2001 for the continued review and appraisal of cooperation programmes and of other matters to be mutually decided upon;

6. Expresses its satisfaction at the exchange with the Organization of American States of information and substantive reports on the advancement in the status of women, on matters relating to youth and on the eradication of poverty;

7. Emphasizes that the cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States should be undertaken in accordance with their respective mandates, scope and composition and be suited to each specific situation, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States".

Cooperation with CARICOM

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/17 [YUN 1998, p. 238], the Secretary-General submitted an August report on cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community (CARICOM) [A/55/215]. He described consultations and information exchange between the two organizations and provided information on collaborative activities undertaken with CARICOM by the UN Secretariat, ECLAC, UNCTAD, UNDP, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Population Fund, UNHCR, UNDCP, ILO, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, UNESCO, ICAO, the World Bank, the Universal Postal Union, IMO and UNIDO.

The second general meeting between representatives of CARICOM and its associated institutions and the UN system (Nassau, Bahamas, 27-28 March) recognized existing collaboration between the United Nations and CARICOM and welcomed new areas of possible cooperation, which, it was agreed, should be further explored and developed, subject to financial and human resources. At the invitation of CARICOM, the United Nations was represented by the UNDP Resident Representative in Trinidad and Tobago and Barbados at the twentieth and twenty-first Conferences of Heads of State and Government of CARICOM, held in Trinidad and Tobago in July 1999 and in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines in July 2000.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 November [meeting 54], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/17 [draft: A/55/L.24/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 23].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/8 of 16 October 1991, 49/141 of 20 December 1994, 51/16 of 11 November 1996 and 53/17 of 29 October 1998,

Noting with satisfaction the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community,

Bearing in mind the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations on the existence of regional arrangements or agencies for dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action and other activities consistent with the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind also the assistance given by the United Nations towards the maintenance of peace and security in the Caribbean region,

Noting with satisfaction that the first general meeting between representatives of the Caribbean Community and its associated institutions and of the United Nations system was held in New York on 27 and 28 May 1997, and that the second general meeting was held in Nassau on 27 and 28 March 2000,

Bearing in mind that, in its resolution 54/225 of 22 December 1999, it recognized the importance of adopting an integrated management approach to the Caribbean Sea area in the context of sustainable development,

Bearing in mind also that in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted by resolution 55/2 of 8 September 2000, heads of State and Government resolved to address the special needs of small island developing States by implementing the Barbados Programme of Action and the outcome of the twenty-second special session of the General Assembly rapidly and in full,

Affirming the need to strengthen the cooperation that already exists between entities of the United Nations system and the Caribbean Community in the areas of economic and social development, as well as of political and humanitarian affairs,

Convinced of the need for the coordinated utilization of available resources to promote the common objectives of the two organizations,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community, as well as efforts to strengthen that cooperation;

2. Welcomes the signing on 27 May 1997 by the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Caribbean Community of a cooperation agreement between the secretariats of the two organizations;

3. Calls upon the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the Caribbean Community, to continue to assist in furthering the development and maintenance of peace and security within the Caribbean region;

4. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to promote and expand cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community in order to increase the capacity of the two organizations to attain their objectives;

5. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to cooperate with the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Caribbean Community in order to initiate, maintain and increase consultations and programmes with the Caribbean Community and its associated institutions in the attainment of their objectives, with special attention to the areas and issues identified at the second general meeting, as set out in the report of the Secretary-General, as well as resolutions 54/225 and 55/2;

6. Welcomes the initiatives of Member States in assisting in the cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community;

7. Recommends that the third general meeting between representatives of the Caribbean Community and its associated institutions and of the United Nations system be held in 2002 in New York in order to review and appraise progress in the implementation of the agreed areas and issues and to hold consultations on such additional measures and procedures as may be required to facilitate and strengthen cooperation between the two organizations;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community".

Chapter IV

Asia and the Pacific

In 2000, the United Nations continued to face challenges to regional security and peace in Asia and the Pacific, mainly in Afghanistan, East Timor, Iraq and Tajikistan.

In Afghanistan, the military confrontation between the Taliban and the United Front continued. In October, however, the two warring factions agreed to enter into a dialogue under UN auspices. The prolonged civil conflict, combined with the worst drought in 30 years and gross human rights violations, especially against women and girls, exacerbated the already tenuous living conditions of the Afghan population. On 19 December, the Security Council imposed new sanctions against the Taliban regime for its failure, among other things, to turn over Osama bin Laden—a Saudi Arabian national indicted by the United States for terrorist activities—to appropriate authorities to face trial. The Council also called on the Taliban authorities to close all terrorist camps operating in their territory and decided that all States should close immediately all Taliban offices in their territories and freeze funds and other financial assets. The United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan continued to promote political dialogue and deployed a Civil Affairs Unit inside Afghanistan.

In East Timor, progress was made in the transition towards independence and the attainment of peace and security, despite continued militia-led violence and the displacement of thousands of people. The United Nations was confronted with the task of rebuilding, managing and governing a territory for the first time in its history when, in February, the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor replaced the International Force in East Timor as the sole legitimate governing and military body. Following the killing of three UN humanitarian staff by a militia-led mob, the Council, which closely monitored the situation in East Timor throughout the year, called on Indonesia to disband the militia groups and to ensure the safety of refugees and humanitarian workers. A Council mission visited East Timor and Indonesia in November.

In Iraq, UN activities to verify Baghdad's compliance with its weapons-related obligations under Council resolution 687(1991), which brought a formal ceasefire to the 1991 Gulf war, continued to be stalled following the withdrawal in December 1998 of the United Nations Special Commission (UNSCOM) and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) from Iraq. UNSCOM's monitoring and verification activities were assumed by the United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission, which began operations in March 2000. The United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission continued to carry out its surveillance functions in the demilitarized zone between the two countries. The Council extended the humanitarian programme, based on an oil-for-food formula, twice during the year, each time for another 180 days.

In Tajikistan, the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan completed its mandate and withdrew from the country on 15 May. In view of the fact that armed elements continued to operate outside the Government's control, and in order to sustain and build upon the achievements of the peace process, the United Nations Tajikistan Office of Peace-building was established on 1 June, with the aim of providing the political framework and leadership for UN post-conflict peace-building activities. In spite of serious problems and shortcomings, the first multiparty and pluralistic parliamentary elections were held on 27 February, for the lower house, and on 23 March, for the upper house.

Other matters brought to the attention of the United Nations were the long-standing dispute between India and Pakistan over Jammu and Kashmir, violations reported by Iran and Iraq of their 1988 ceasefire agreement and of the area of separation between them, as well as the continued occupation by Iran of Greater Tunb, Lesser Tunb and Abu Musa, three islands claimed by the United Arab Emirates. The Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) and the Republic of Korea held their first summit meeting since the division of the peninsula in 1945 and produced a joint declaration based on the principles of independence, peaceful reunification and national unity. IAEA continued to maintain an inspector presence in the DPRK to monitor the freeze of its graphite moderated reactors and related facilities. The United Nations continued to discuss with Cambodia the establishment of a court to try top Khmer Rouge leaders for crimes committed during the period of Democratic Kampuchea. The United Nations Political Office in Bougainville (UNPOB) in Papua New Guinea continued to monitor and report on the implementation of the 1998 Lincoln Agreement on Peace, Security and Development on Bougainville by the parties to that Agreement, as well as by the Peace Monitoring Group composed of Australia, Fiji, New Zealand and Vanuatu. At the request of the Government, the Secretary-General, with the concurrence of the Security Council, extended UNPOB's mandate for a further 12-month period to 31 December 2001. In Solomon Islands, the Council supported a peace agreement, concluded in October 2000, for the cessation of hostilities between two rival militia groups following an attempt to overthrow the legitimate Government in June.

Afghanistan

Developments in Afghanistan throughout 2000 gave little ground for optimism. It was an exceptionally difficult year for most Afghans as the country faced a combination of war, with its consequent displacement and suffering of civilians, widespread poverty exacerbated by the worst drought in 30 years, continued gross violations of human rights, particularly against women and girls, and the destruction and criminalization of the economy. However, the November agreement by the two warring factions—the Taliban and the United Front (UF)—to enter into a dialogue under UN auspices provided a glimmer of hope.

The conditions under which humanitarian assistance was provided became progressively more complicated as the year progressed. The Taliban instituted a firman (edict), banning the employment of women by the United Nations and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), with the exception of the health sector, and issued a statute containing regulations governing the activities of UN agencies and programmes. Taliban forces also made forced entries into UN premises and intimidated UN staff. In addition, funding for the consolidated appeal for Afghanistan for 2000 reached only 50 per cent of the amount needed.

During the year, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) assisted in the voluntary repatriation of 210,170 Afghans; however, reports showed that the returnees faced enormous difficulties. The onset of the harsh winter, extremely precarious food security and the massive displacement inside Afghanistan temporarily halted the repatriation programme.

The role and presence of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan (UNAMA) were strengthened on the ground. Francesc Vendrell (Spain) was appointed Personal Representative of the Secretary-General and Head of Mission, and UNAMA's Civil Affairs Unit was in place and functioning. Topics raised by the Personal Representative during his talks with senior Taliban and UF officials included the Security Council's repeated demands for an immediate ceasefire; the non-targeting of civilians; other humanitarian and human rights matters; issues of terrorism and poppy cultivation; and the possibility of establishing a broadly based, multi-ethnic and representative government. Discussions also touched on relations with third countries, in which connection each side complained of persistent outside interference in support of the other.

In April, the Security Council again demanded that the Taliban turn over indicted terrorist Osama bin Laden to appropriate authorities. It also stressed the need for the Taliban to comply without delay with the Council's repeated demands to conclude a ceasefire and resume negotiations. In December, the Council imposed further sanctions on Afghanistan, including a decision that all States should close immediately all Taliban offices and Ariana Afghan Airlines offices in their territories and freeze funds and other financial assets of Osama bin Laden and individuals and entities associated with him. In the light of that action, the Taliban said that they no longer accepted the United Nations as an impartial broker in the dialogue that they had agreed to pursue with the UF.

Situation in Afghanistan

The situation in Afghanistan during 2000 was described by the Secretary-General in four progress reports, submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 54/189 A [YUN 1999, p. 258]. The first three were quarterly, issued on 10 March [A/54/791-S/2000/205], 16 June [A/54/918-S/2000/581] and 18 September [A/55/393-S/2000/875]; the fourth was an annual report issued in the last quarter of the year (see p. 269). The reports gave accounts of the political and military developments in the country; the peacemaking activities of the Secretary-General's Personal Representative, of UNAMA and at UN Headquarters in New York; UN assistance and programmes to alleviate the progressively deteriorating humanitarian and human rights situations of the war victims; and UN efforts to curb terrorism within and from Afghanistan, as well as to reduce the illicit cultivation, production and trafficking of drugs.

Report of Secretary-General (March). In his 10 March report [A/54/791-S/2000/205], the Secretary-General noted that he had appointed Francesc Vendrell as his Personal Representative and Head of UNSMA; Mr. Vendrell had taken up his appointment on 1 February. From 3 to 23 February, he visited senior officials of both sides in Afghanistan and neighbouring countries in the region and beyond, including some members of the "six plus two" group—the countries bordering Afghanistan (China, Iran, Pakistan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan) plus the Russian Federation and the United States. He had earlier visited Washington, D.C.

The two Afghan parties stated their readiness to cooperate with Mr. Vendrell in the search for a political solution to the Afghan conflict and both expressed their opposition to terrorism and their commitment to progressively eradicate drug cultivation. Regarding the Security Council demand that the Taliban turn over Osama bin Laden, Mullah Mohammad Rabbani, Chairman of the Taliban Council of Ministers, reminded the Personal Representative that Mr. bin Laden had taken up residence when Afghanistan was under the control of the previous regime and maintained that there was not sufficient evidence to link him to the 1998 terrorist bombings of United States embassies in Nairobi, Kenya, and Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania [YUN 1998, 1218]. He further stated that Mr. bin Laden was no longer able to carry out activities from Afghan territory.

In discussions with the Personal Representative, Governments of the "six plus two" group expressed concern at the absence of a political solution to the Afghan conflict; shared the view that international terrorism, illicit drug production and trafficking, and extremism emanating from the country posed a serious threat to the stability of the region; reaffirmed their commitment to work with the United Nations; and conveyed their interest in strengthening the role of the group as a means of bringing the parties to the negotiating table and assisting in the search for a lasting political settlement. In that connection, the group held a meeting (New York, 28 February) at which it focused on the issue of illicit drugs.

Under the auspices of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC), talks involving the Taliban and the UF took place in Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, from 7 to 9 March. The sides agreed to hold another round of indirect talks after the hajj season.

As to the military situation, the Secretary-General noted that the fighting, although at a low ebb during the winter months and the holy month of Ramadan, had never completely halted. Most recently, Taliban forces on 1 March initiated fresh fighting in the province of Kunduz and the Shomali Plains and continued their attacks in the province of Samangan in the Dara-e-Souf area where the UF renewed efforts to resist. Although the Taliban initially achieved significant progress, the UF succeeded in recapturing ground lost in Kunduz and claimed to have recaptured towns taken by the Taliban in other conflict areas.

In view of the impact of the continued fighting on the Afghan population and reports indicating that a major offensive was being prepared for the spring, the Secretary-General asked his Personal Representative to concentrate his efforts to persuade the parties to enter into a process of dialogue that might lead to a stable and verifiable ceasefire and, eventually, to an agreement on the establishment of a broadly based, multi-ethnic and fully representative government.

Communication. In identical letters of 15 March [A/54/798-S/2000/218] to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President, Afghanistan's representative to the United Nations reported on alleged Pakistani-Taliban military operations in Government-held territories.

Security Council consideration. On 7 April [meeting 4124], the Security Council was briefed by a Department of Political Affairs (DPA) official on the situation in Afghanistan. Having reviewed the events covered in the Secretary-General's 10 March report, the official described later developments. With regard to the humanitarian situation, he noted that the Organization was worried by the situation in Kandahar, where searches of UN premises and intimidation of staff in recent days had caused the withdrawal of all international staff from the area. As to the situation of women and girls, he recalled that the abhorrent measures imposed on them by the Taliban had been repeatedly deplored by the Secretary-General and had been condemned by the Council, the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on the Status of Women (see also pp. 750 and 1120). While there had been limited progress with regard to the Taliban's position on the access of women to health services, education and employment opportunities, the overall situation remained unacceptable and required the continuous and sustained attention of the international community.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 7 April [meeting 4125], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/12 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 10 March 2000 concerning the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security.

The Council reiterates its grave concern at the continued Afghan conflict, which is a serious and growing threat to regional and international peace and security. It strongly condemns the Taliban for the launching of new offensives, most notably that of 1 March 2000. The Council expresses its deep concern at the reports that both parties to the conflict are preparing for renewed large-scale fighting and recalls its repeated demands that the Afghan parties cease fighting. These events add to the enormous suffering of the civilian population of Afghanistan.

The Council reiterates that there is no military solution to the conflict in Afghanistan and that only a negotiated political settlement aimed at the establishment of a broad-based, multi-ethnic and fully representative government acceptable to all Afghans can lead to peace and national reconciliation. It notes that the United Front of Afghanistan is willing to talk with the Taliban and recalls its demand that the parties, in particular the Taliban, resume negotiations under the auspices of the United Nations without delay or preconditions in full compliance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Council.

The Council calls upon all Afghan parties to comply with their obligations under international humanitarian law and to ensure the full and unhindered access of international humanitarian assistance and personnel to all those in need. It expresses its grave concern at the further deterioration of the humanitarian situation in Afghanistan as a result of ongoing hostilities. The Taliban has the primary responsibility for this.

The Council strongly condemns the Taliban for the repeated forced entries on 26, 27 and 29 March 2000 by its armed groups into, and their searches of, the United Nations premises in Kandahar and for the intimidation of the United Nations personnel. It stresses that responsibility for the subsequent withdrawal of all international staff from Kandahar and suspension of humanitarian assistance activities in southern Afghanistan rests solely with the Taliban. The Council demands that the Taliban stop these unacceptable practices and ensure the safety and security of all United Nations and associated personnel and humanitarian personnel working in Afghanistan in accordance with international law.

The Council stresses its grave concern at the human rights situation in Afghanistan, which is unacceptable. It expresses particular alarm at the continuing disregard by the Taliban of the concerns expressed by the international community. The Council strongly condemns the forced displacement of the civilian population, notably that conducted by the Taliban in 1999, the deliberate targeting of civilians and the destruction of their assets and means of survival, summary executions, arbitrary detention of civilians and forced labour of those in detention, the separation of men from their families, indiscriminate bombing and other violations of human rights and international humanitarian law. It calls upon all Afghan parties, especially the Taliban, to put an end to such practices and to ensure the protection of civilians.

The Council reaffirms the principle of non-refoulement of refugees, as provided for in relevant instruments of international law, welcomes recent efforts of countries neighbouring Afghanistan to support the voluntary repatriation of Afghan refugees in safety and dignity, and urges those host States to continue to provide international protection to Afghan refugees in need of it. It encourages the international community to provide the necessary assistance in this regard.

The Council condemns the continuing grave violations of the human rights of women and girls, including all forms of discrimination against them, in all areas of Afghanistan, particularly in areas under the control of the Taliban. It remains deeply concerned about continued restrictions on their access to health care, to education and to employment outside the home, and about restrictions on their freedom of movement and freedom from intimidation, harassment and violence. The Council notes the recent reports of modest progress regarding the access of women and girls to certain services, but considers that such incremental improvements, while welcome, still fall far short of the minimum expectations of the international community, and calls upon all parties, particularly the Taliban, to take measures to end all violations of human rights of women and girls.

The Council reiterates that outside interference in the internal affairs of Afghanistan, including the involvement of foreign combatants and military personnel and the supply of weapons and other materials used in the conflict, should cease immediately. It calls upon all States to take resolute measures to prohibit their military personnel from planning and participating in combat operations in Afghanistan, and immediately to withdraw their personnel and to assure that the supply of ammunition and other war-making materials is halted. The Council expresses its deep concern at the continuing involvement in the fighting in Afghanistan, on the side of the Taliban forces, of thousands of non-Afghan nationals.

The Council reiterates its position that the United Nations must continue to play its central and impartial role in international efforts towards a peaceful resolution of the Afghan conflict. It welcomes the appointment of a new Personal Representative of the Secretary-General and the activities of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan to facilitate a political process aimed at achieving a lasting political settlement to the conflict. The Council supports the phased deployment of the Civil Affairs Unit of the Mission inside Afghanistan, as the security conditions permit.

The Council welcomes the renewed commitment of members of the "six plus two" group to contribute to a peaceful resolution of the Afghan conflict in support of the efforts of the United Nations, and urges the members of the group and the Afghan parties to implement the Tashkent Declaration on Fundamental Principles for a Peaceful Settlement of the Conflict in Afghanistan, particularly the agreement of members of the group not to provide military support to any Afghan party and to prevent the use of their territories for such purposes.

The Council expresses its appreciation for the efforts undertaken by the Organization of the Islamic Conference, in support of and in coordination with the United Nations, to facilitate the convening of negotiations between the two Afghan parties. It encourages the process launched in Rome to convene a loya jirga in Afghanistan and acknowledges other recent efforts to promote peace in Afghanistan, such as those of the groups meeting in Cyprus and in Tokyo.

The Council strongly condemns the continuing use of Afghan territory, especially areas controlled by the Taliban, for the sheltering and training of terrorists and planning of terrorist acts, and reaffirms its conviction that the suppression of international terrorism is essential for the maintenance of international peace and security. It insists that the Taliban cease the provision of sanctuary and training for international terrorists and their organizations, take effective measures to ensure that the territory under its control is not used for terrorist installations and camps or for the preparation or organization of terrorist acts against other States or their citizens, and cooperate with efforts to bring indicted terrorists to justice.

The Council demands once again that the Taliban turn over indicted terrorist Osama bin Laden to appropriate authorities as set out in resolution 1267(1999) of 15 October 1999. It stresses that the continued failure of the Taliban to comply with this demand is unacceptable. The Council will ensure effective implementation of the measures imposed by that resolution. It condemns the recent attacks and planned attacks by terrorists affiliated with Osama bin Laden, which constitute a continuing threat to the international community.

The Council reiterates that the capture by the Taliban of the Consulate-General of the Islamic Republic of Iran and the murder of Iranian diplomats and a journalist in Mazar-e-Sharif as well as the murders of United Nations personnel constitute flagrant violations of international law. It expresses its concern at the failure of the Taliban effectively to bring to justice those responsible for these crimes. The Council reiterates its demand that the Taliban cooperate fully with the United Nations in this regard.

The Council is deeply disturbed by an alarming increase in the cultivation, production and trafficking of drugs in Afghanistan, especially in areas controlled by the Taliban, and by its consequences for the continuation of the conflict. It demands that the Taliban, as well as others, halt all illegal drug activities. The Council encourages the initiative of the "six plus two" group to address the drug-related issues in a coordinated manner with the support of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention. It also encourages Member States and others concerned to increase their support for the efforts aimed at strengthening the drug control capacities of countries bordering Afghanistan.

The Council stresses the need for prompt and effective implementation by all Member States of the measures imposed by resolution 1267(1999), and reminds Member States of their obligations under that resolution, including assisting in the identification of Taliban assets and aircraft. It underlines the fact that sanctions are not aimed at the Afghan people, but are imposed against the Taliban because of its non-compliance with that resolution. The Council reaffirms its decision to assess the impact, including the humanitarian implications, of the measures imposed by that resolution. It encourages the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) to report in this respect as soon as practicable.

The Council holds the leadership of the Taliban responsible for not taking measures to comply with the demands made in its resolutions, especially to conclude a ceasefire and to resume negotiations, and stresses the need for the Taliban to comply with these demands without delay.

In this context, the Council reaffirms its readiness to consider the imposition of further targeted measures, in accordance with its responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations, with the aim of achieving the full implementation of all its relevant resolutions.

Reports of Secretary-General (June and September). In his 16 June report [A/54/918-S/2000/581], the Secretary-General observed that the situation of the Afghan people remained deplorable. The country remained in a state of acute crisis with its resources depleted, its intelligentsia in exile, its people disfranchised, its traditional political structures shattered and its human development indices among the lowest in the world.

In his 18 September report [A/55/393-S/2000/875], the Secretary-General again updated the Afghan situation, stating that it was hard not to be repetitive when commenting on the continuing tragedy. Fighting between the two warring parties had taken place throughout the summer, with the regular seasonal offensive, and the drought, the worst for over 30 years, was having a devastating effect on the population.

Communications. By a 19 June letter [A/55/86-S/2000/604], Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan transmitted an appeal to the Secretary-General in which they expressed concern about the escalation of military and political confrontation in Afghanistan, which continued to cause enormous suffering, destruction and senseless sacrifices. They appealed to the United Nations, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), OIC and the States permanent members of the Security Council to use their influence and authority and all the resources available to them to bring about a speedy and just settlement of the Afghan conflict with a view to putting a stop to the sufferings of the people of Afghanistan and maintaining regional and international security.

On 20 July [A/54/945-S/2000/723], Afghanistan submitted information on the renewed summer offensive allegedly launched by the Taliban-Pakistan-bin Laden axis; incriminating remarks by the Pakistani Chief Executive; and heightened Pakistani-Taliban terrorist activities, their perilous impact on the safety and security of the Afghan people and implications for regional peace and stability. The letter also discussed the option of convening a loya jirga (grand assembly) as a political solution to the conflict in Afghanistan.

The European Union (EU), in a 14 July statement [A/55/223-S/2000/762], condemned the resumption of wide-scale hostilities in Afghanistan and expressed concern that the military operations were impeding humanitarian assistance. It urged the various factions to stop fighting and work, with UN help, on a political process to restore peace. It reiterated its call to Afghanistan's neighbours to desist from interfering in the conflict.

By a 25 August letter [A/55/326-S/2000/834], the heads of State of Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan and the Special Representative of the President of the Russian Federation submitted to the Secretary-General a statement adopted at their meeting (Bishkek, Kyrgyzstan, 20 August). They expressed concern about Central Asia in relation to the terrorist activities of international gangs and appealed to the Security Council, OSCE, OIC and all States not only to condemn international terrorism and extremism but also to move beyond declarations to devise practical coordinated measures designed to eradicate that global threat.

In an 11 October statement [A/55/533-S/2000/1054], the heads of State of Armenia, Belarus, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation and Tajikistan expressed concern about the increasing manifestations of international terrorism and extremism in Central Asia. The basic source of instability in the region, they stated, was the ongoing conflict in Afghanistan, and they urged the international community to expedite a settlement of the situation. They also proposed that a special Security Council meeting be convened to elaborate specific measures for the settlement of the Afghan problem, with the participation of all sides involved in the conflict.

By identical letters of 8 November [A/55/548-S/2000/1077], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Presidents of the General Assembly and the Security Council letters dated 30 October from the two Afghan warring parties expressing their agreement to a process of dialogue under the good offices of the Secretary-General, aimed at bringing about an end to the armed conflict in Afghanistan through political means.

Further report of Secretary-General (November). The Secretary-General's fourth progress report, dated 20 November [A/55/633-S/2000/1106] (see p. 269), summarized developments since the issuance of his 16 November 1999 annual report [YUN 1999, p. 261].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 86], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/174 A [draft: A/55/L.62/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda items 20 (d) & 46].

The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 51/195 B of 17 December 1996, 52/211 B of 19 December 1997, 53/203 A of 18 December 1998 and 54/189 A of 17 December 1999,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 1193 (1998) of 28 August 1998, 1214(1998) of 8 December 1998 and 1267(1999) of 15 October 1999 and all statements by the President of the Council on the situation in Afghanistan,

Noting all recent declarations by participants of regional international meetings and by international organizations on the situation in Afghanistan,

Reaffirming its continued strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan, and respecting its multi-cultural, multi-ethnic and historical heritage,

Reiterating that the United Nations, as a universally recognized and impartial intermediary, must continue to play its central role in international efforts towards a peaceful resolution of the Afghan conflict, and expressing its appreciation and strong support for the ongoing efforts made in this regard by the Secretary-General, by his Personal Representative and by the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan,

Convinced that there is no military solution to the Afghan conflict and that only a political settlement aimed at the establishment of a broad-based, multi-ethnic and fully representative government acceptable to the Afghan people can lead to peace and reconciliation,

Stressing the importance of non-intervention and non-interference in the internal affairs of Afghanistan, and deeply concerned at all forms of continued external support, which is causing the prolongation and intensification of the conflict,

Expressing its grave concern at the failure of all Afghan parties, in particular the Taliban, to put an end to the conflict, which seriously threatens stability and peace in the region, despite the repeated demands by the Security Council to the warring sides to desist from fighting,

Strongly condemning the resumption of major offensives by the Taliban in summer 2000, especially in the Taloqan area, and the resulting negative humanitarian consequences, including the loss of human life, the deliberate abuse, indiscriminate bombing and arbitrary detention of civilians, refugee flows, the recruitment of children for use in armed conflict, harassment, the forcible displacement of innocent civilians, in particular of women and children, in the Shomali Plains and north-eastern Afghanistan, and the indiscriminate destruction of their homes and agricultural land, thereby eliminating their source of income,

Expressing its grave concern at persistent violations of human rights and at breaches of international humanitarian law in Afghanistan as well as at the continuing and substantiated reports of systematic human rights violations against women and girls, including all forms of discrimination against them, notably in areas under the control of the Taliban,

Expressing concern at the growing spread of the Afghan conflict beyond its borders and at actions undermining the security of States' frontiers,

Deeply disturbed by the continuing use of Afghan territory in areas controlled by the Taliban for the recruitment, sheltering and training of terrorists, including international terrorists, and the planning of terrorist acts within and outside Afghanistan,

Deeply disturbed also by the continuing use of Afghan territory, especially areas controlled by the Taliban, for the continuing cultivation, production and trafficking of narcotic drugs, which contribute to the war-making capabilities of the Afghans and have dangerous repercussions reaching Afghanistan's neighbours and far beyond,

Welcoming the written agreement communicated by the Taliban and the United Front in separate letters dated 30 October 2000 to enter into a process of dialogue, without preconditions and under the good offices of the Secretary-General or his Personal Representative, aimed at achieving a political solution to the conflict in Afghanistan,

Stressing that a lasting cessation of hostilities is essential for meaningful dialogue, and welcoming in particular the stated commitment of the two sides to negotiate with serious intent and in good faith and not to abandon the process unilaterally until the negotiating agenda is exhausted,

Welcoming the high-level meetings of the "six plus two" group, held at United Nations Headquarters in September and November 2000, and the active role played by the group, leading, inter alia, to the adoption of a regional action plan aimed at eliminating illicit drug production and trafficking in Afghanistan,

Welcoming also the contacts between the Special Mission and various non-warring Afghan parties and personalities, and supporting calls by these independent Afghans for an end to the fighting and any proposals that might advance the cause of peace, including the efforts of independent Afghan personalities, many of whom support the proposal of the former King of Afghanistan, Zahir Shah, for the convening of a loya jirga to promote a political settlement,

Expressing its appreciation for the efforts undertaken by the Organization of the Islamic Conference, in support of and in coordination with the United Nations, to facilitate the convening of talks between the two Afghan parties, held in Jeddah in March and May 2000,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Stresses that the main responsibility for finding a political solution to the conflict lies with the Afghan parties, and urges all of them to respond to the repeated calls for peace by the United Nations;
3. Reiterates its position that the United Nations must continue to play its central and impartial role in international efforts towards a peaceful resolution of the Afghan conflict, and reaffirms its full support for the efforts of the United Nations in facilitating the political process towards the goal of national reconciliation and a lasting political settlement with the participation of all parties to the conflict and all segments of Afghan society;

4. Urges the Taliban and the United Front to honour the written agreement communicated to the Personal Representative of the Secretary-General in separate letters dated 30 October 2000 to enter into a process of dialogue, without preconditions and under the good offices of the Secretary-General or his Personal Representative, aimed at achieving a political solution to the conflict in Afghanistan;

5. Calls upon the Afghan parties, in particular the Taliban, to cease immediately all armed hostilities, to renounce the use of force and to pursue without delay the political dialogue under United Nations auspices aimed at achieving a lasting political settlement of the conflict, leading to the establishment of a broad-based, multi-ethnic and fully representative government which would protect the rights of all Afghans and observe the international obligations of Afghanistan;

6. Strongly urges the Taliban and other Afghan parties to refrain from all acts of violence against civilians, in particular women and children;

7. Strongly condemns the resumption of major hostilities by the Taliban starting in July 2000, and strongly calls upon all Afghan parties to end all armed hostilities and not to pursue a military solution to the conflict in Afghanistan;

8. Notes with alarm reports indicating that a significant number of non-Afghan personnel, mainly on the side of the Taliban forces and largely from religious schools, are actively involved in various military activities;

9. Strongly condemns the fact that foreign military support to the Afghan parties continued unabated through 2000, and calls upon all States to refrain strictly from any outside interference and to end immediately the supply of arms, ammunition, military equipment, training or any other military support to all parties to the conflict in Afghanistan;

10. Calls upon all States to take resolute measures to prohibit their military personnel from planning and participating in combat operations in Afghanistan and immediately to withdraw their personnel, and to assure that the supply of ammunition and other war-making materials is halted;

11. Supports the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan with a view to assuring its primary role in United Nations peacemaking activities in Afghanistan, especially by the resumption of a dialogue between the Afghan parties through a negotiating process based on a comprehensive agenda to be agreed by the two sides that addresses the core problems of the Afghan situation and leads to a durable ceasefire and the formation of a broad-based, multi-ethnic and fully representative government;

12. Also supports the continuing cooperation of the Special Mission with all countries that are willing to help find a peaceful solution to the Afghan conflict, in particular with the members of the "six plus two" group, while continuing to monitor closely and to encourage the various peace initiatives of non-warring Afghan parties and personalities;

13. Welcomes the deployment of the Civil Affairs Unit of the Special Mission to Faizabad, Herat, Jalalabad, Kabul, Kandahar and Mazar-e-Sharif and its ongoing dialogue on political and human rights issues with high-ranking representatives of the local and regional authorities of both Afghan sides, and supports the intention of the Secretary-General to strengthen the political capacity of the Special Mission and increase the number of military advisers from two to four;

14. Supports the activities of groups of interested States to coordinate their efforts as well as the activities of international organizations, in particular the Organization of the Islamic Conference, and encourages these organizations and States, in particular the "six plus two" group, to use their influence in a constructive manner in support of and in close coordination with the United Nations to promote peace in Afghanistan;

15. Encourages the international community to support the Afghan people in their right to express themselves on their main needs and their future through democratic or traditional means by developing a framework for institution- and capacity-building that could lead to the eventual structure for a broad-based government;

16. Calls upon all signatories to the Tashkent Declaration on Fundamental Principles for a Peaceful Settlement of the Conflict in Afghanistan and the Afghan parties to implement the principles contained in that Declaration in support of the efforts of the United Nations towards a peaceful resolution of the Afghan conflict, in particular the agreement not to provide military support to any Afghan party and to prevent the use of their territories for such purposes, and recalls their appeal to the international community to take identical measures to prevent the delivery of weapons to Afghanistan;

17. Strongly condemns the armed attacks on and the killing of United Nations and other humanitarian personnel, strongly calls upon the Taliban to fulfil their stated commitment to cooperate in urgent investigations of these heinous crimes with a view to bringing those responsible to justice, and urges all Afghan parties to demonstrate their full commitment to the safety and security of all United Nations and other humanitarian personnel so as to facilitate their continued work in support of the affected population;

18. Reiterates its strong condemnation of the killing of the diplomatic and consular staff of the Consulate-General of the Islamic Republic of Iran in Mazar-e-Sharif and the correspondent of the Islamic Republic News Agency in August 1998, stresses that these unacceptable acts which constitute flagrant violations of established international law must not go unpunished, expresses deep concern at the lack of progress in the Taliban investigation of the murders, and once again urges the Taliban to carry out, without further delay, a credible investigation with a view to prosecuting the guilty parties and to inform the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran and the United Nations about the results thereof;

19. Strongly condemns the widespread violations and abuses of human rights, including summary executions and an alleged mass killing of detainees in Samangan in May 2000, and strongly urges all Afghan parties to recognize, protect and promote all human rights and freedoms, including the right to life, liberty and security of persons, regardless of gender, ethnicity or religion;

20. Calls upon all Afghan parties, in particular the Taliban, to bring an end without delay to all violations of human rights and discriminatory policies against women and girls and to recognize, protect and promote the equal rights and dignity of men and women, especially in the fields of education, work and equal health care;

21. Condemns the continuing widespread violations of international humanitarian law in Afghanistan, and urgently calls upon all Afghan parties to respect strictly all its provisions that provide essential protection for the civilian population in armed conflicts;

22. Reiterates its concern that the continuing conflict in Afghanistan poses a growing risk to peace and stability in the region;

23. Condemns the acts of terrorists based in Afghanistan, including those in support of extremist groups operating against the interests of Member States and against their citizens, and strongly demands that in particular the Taliban refrain from providing safe haven to international terrorists and their organizations, cease the recruitment of terrorists, close down terrorist training camps inside Afghanistan, take effective measures to ensure that the territory under its control is not used to sponsor international terrorist operations and take the necessary steps to cooperate with efforts to bring indicted terrorists to justice without delay;

24. Strongly urges the Taliban to comply without preconditions and without further delay with its obligations under Security Council resolution 1267(1999) and other relevant resolutions;

25. Reiterates its call to all Afghan parties, in particular the Taliban, to halt all illegal drug activities and to support international efforts to ban illicit drug production and trafficking, and calls upon all Member States and all parties concerned to undertake concerted measures to stop the trafficking of illegal drugs from Afghanistan;

26. Notes with interest in this regard the decree issued by the Taliban in July 2000 imposing a total ban on opium poppy cultivation, and calls upon the Taliban to implement fully this decree;

27. Notes the severe impact of illicit drug production and trafficking on Afghanistan's immediate neighbours, and calls for further international cooperation in support of the efforts of the neighbouring States to stop the trafficking of illegal drugs from Afghanistan and to cope with its adverse social and economic consequences;

28. Requests the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to continue its crop monitoring work inside Afghanistan, within the context of the United Nations common programme and, with particular regard to assessing the impact of the July 2000 decree, to consider enlarging its alternative development work there should the assessment show significant implementation of the decree, and further to develop international measures against drug trafficking;

29. Calls upon the international community to continue providing financial resources to the United Nations International Drug Control Programme for the implementation of the above activities;

30. Reiterates that the cultural and historic relics and monuments of Afghanistan belong to the common heritage of humankind, calls upon all Afghan parties to protect the cultural and historic relics and monuments of Afghanistan from acts of vandalism, damage and theft, and requests all Member States to take appropriate measures to prevent the looting of cultural artefacts and to ensure their return to Afghanistan;

31. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly every four months during its fifty-fifth session on the progress of the Special Mission and to report to the Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

32. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security".

Also on 19 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 55/174 B on emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan (see p. 864).

By decision 55/458 of 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session.

Military and political developments

In his 20 November report [A/55/633-S/2000/1106], the Secretary-General stated that the fighting season in 2000 had started earlier than usual. The Taliban, with superiority in numbers and logistics, took the initiative from the outset. The intensity of the fighting indicated that the flow of arms and other war-making materiel into the country continued unabated, and even rose to new levels during the last few months of the year.

The season's full-scale fighting started in the north of Kabul with major offensives by the Taliban on 1 and 9 July. In September and October, they secured wider areas around Taloqan and, to the north, captured the districts of Khwajaghar, Dashti Archi and Emam Saheb in Takhar province. At that point, Badakhshan was the sole province left entirely under UF control. The UF recaptured the districts in a counter-attack launched on 14 October. However, after 10 days of progress, the UF counter-offensive ebbed and the Taliban pushed the attacking forces back. As at 5 November, the confrontation lines were more or less the same as at 13 October and a stalemate had developed.

The year's military setback put the UF under intense pressure. Meetings were hurriedly convened in an effort to save the alliance from disintegrating and to invite non-UF commanders to join the fight against the Taliban. It was agreed that the UF leaders would establish a new military council, to include themselves and other key alliance commanders.

The political situation was marked by the increasing impact that the conflict in Afghanistan was having in Central and South Asia. Afghanistan's neighbours and countries farther afield were worried about spillover effects from the ongoing fighting. The Central Asian States held two meetings (April and August) at the presidential level to discuss the Afghan conflict (see p. 266).

After holding separate talks under OIC auspices in March and May, the two warring parties agreed on a comprehensive exchange of prisoners of war, to be conducted through the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC). They further agreed to respect their existing commitments not to target the civilian population and to allow the unimpeded passage of humanitarian convoys to the civilian population on both sides of the front lines. The Personal Representative attended both rounds of talks as an observer. Although the prisoner exchange process was interrupted by the fighting in July, the two sides continued with an informal exchange of smaller groups of prisoners.

In mid-May, Taliban Interior Minister Mullah Abdur Razzaq paid an official visit to Islamabad to hold discussions with Pakistani authorities on the extradition of criminals, terrorism and drug trafficking and on the Afghanistan Transit Trade Agreement.

The United States and the Russian Federation held two rounds of high-level talks (Washington D.C., August, and Moscow, October) on the situation in Afghanistan, and it was reported that the two countries agreed to put international pressure on the Taliban. In March, United States President William J. Clinton, on a visit to Islamabad, had discussed the question of terrorism and the continued presence in Afghanistan of Osama bin Laden.

In September, the President of the Russian Federation, Vladimir Putin, dispatched a Special Envoy to Islamabad for discussions on Afghanistan with senior Pakistani officials. During a visit to India in October, President Putin agreed with Prime Minister Atal Behari Vajpayee to coordinate efforts to counter terrorism in the region, in particular that emanating from Afghanistan. An Indian and Russian working group was formed in that regard.

In other developments, the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of Italy, Ugo Intini, visited the two warring factions in September in an attempt to create a "humanitarian corridor" between the war-divided territories of Afghanistan. Supporters of the loya jirga initiative [YUN 1999, p. 262], led by former King Zahir Shah, the so-called Rome process, dispatched delegations to UN Headquarters, Washington, D.C., Paris, Berlin, London, Islamabad and Kandahar to explain their activities and to seek support. A representative of a parallel initiative, known as the Cyprus process, visited New York to explain its activities and, at its fourth meeting (Cyprus, 15 September), discussed the mechanism to convene a grand national assembly inside Afghanistan. Although the United Nations and a number of Member States attended as observers, both the UF and the Taliban declined their invitations. The Council for Peace and National Unity of Afghanistan, a group with links to the Rome process, held a meeting (Bonn, Germany, 4-6 October) to discuss practical ways to accelerate the convening of an emergency loya jirga. OIC launched a diplomatic initiative in February and invited the UF and the Taliban to Jeddah for two rounds of talks (7-9 March and 8-10 May).

UN activities

"Six plus two" group

The "six plus two" group met several times during 2000, starting with a February meeting at which it focused on the issue of illicit drugs (see p. 272). The Secretary-General's Personal Representative convened a "six plus two" meeting in Islamabad on 22 May, which was followed on 30 May, also in Islamabad, by a meeting of the "group of 21"—a larger group of Governments with influence in Afghanistan. That group had not met since 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 300].

Taking advantage of the presence of Ministers for Foreign Affairs in New York for the General Assembly session, the Secretary-General convened a meeting of the "six plus two" group on 15 September at the ministerial level of Foreign Ministers at which his Personal Representative gave a briefing on the latest developments in Afghanistan and on his peacemaking efforts. In the concluding statement of the meeting, which was annexed to the Secretary-General's September report [A/55/393-S/2000/875], the group expressed concern about the intensification of fighting in Afghanistan and its negative humanitarian consequences. Emphasizing that there could be no military solution to the conflict, the Ministers requested the Personal Representative to enter into contact with all relevant Afghan parties and report back on the outcome.

On 3 November, another meeting of the "six plus two" group took place in New York, as agreed by the Foreign Ministers in September, to consider the Personal Representative's report on his contacts. The group welcomed the written agreement by the two sides to enter into a dialogue without preconditions (see p. 266) and requested the Personal Representative to report to the group by 1 February 2001 on progress achieved in the dialogue process. The statement of the group's meeting was annexed to the Secretary-General's November report [A/55/633-S/2000/1106].

Personal Representative of the Secretary-General

By identical letters of 12 January to the General Assembly and Security Council Presidents [A/54/706-S/2000/20], the Secretary-General, referring to his 1999 decision to freeze the activities of his Special Envoy for Afghanistan, Lakhdar Brahimi [YUN 1999, p. 262], stated that he remained convinced of the need to strengthen UNSMA, which was playing the primary role in conducting UN peacemaking activities in Afghanistan. He had therefore decided to appoint Mr. Vendrell as his Personal Representative and Head of UNSMA. On 14 January [S/2000/21], the Council members took note of his decision.

In his 20 November report [A/55/633-S/2000/1106], the Secretary-General described the work of his Personal Representative during the year. He noted that, soon after taking up his appointment on 1 February, Mr. Vendrell met with the UF, the Taliban supreme leader, and the Governments of the "six plus two" group, which were also the signatories of the Tashkent Declaration on Fundamental Principles for a Peaceful Settlement of the Conflict in Afghanistan [YUN 1999, p. 256].

In November, the Personal Representative was successful in securing letters of agreement from the two warring factions to initiate a process of dialogue, in an effort to end the armed conflict in Afghanistan through political means, utilizing the Secretary-General's good offices. However, by December, the Taliban stated that, in view of the imminent adoption of new sanctions by the Security Council (see p. 274), the United Nations would no longer be accepted as an impartial broker and that, while they were willing to pursue a dialogue with the UF, they were not willing to do so under UN auspices.

Mr. Vendrell met with the former King of Afghanistan, Zahir Shah, in June and October for discussions on the situation in Afghanistan and the king's ideas on how a loya jirga could be convened inside Afghanistan.

UN Special Mission to Afghanistan

In his November report [A/55/633-S/2000/1106], the Secretary-General stated that the role and political presence of UNSMA in Afghanistan and the region had been strengthened. With its full complement of political officers on board, it had opened a liaison office in Tehran and re-established its political presence in Kabul.

In the first quarter of the year, the Civil Affairs Unit, which comprised a Coordinator and seven Civil Affairs Officers, became operational. By year's end, it had offices in the six major urban centres of Faizabad, Herat, Jalalabad, Kabul, Kandahar and Mazar-e-Sharif. The Unit also wished to open an office in Bamyan in the central highlands and had deployed missions to the Hazarajat and Ghor regions in that area.

With its mandate defined by Security Council resolution 1214(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 297], the Civil Affairs Unit spent its first full year laying the foundations for deeper involvement with the Afghan people. It was attempting to build and strengthen an ongoing persuasive dialogue with Afghan authorities at both the regional and local levels, in areas such as administration, law enforcement, the judiciary and the media, with a view to fostering human rights awareness among those key groups. The Unit monitored and reported on political, social, economic and cultural trends, including highlights on the human rights situation in the country, and studied such areas as administration, judiciary, legislature, constitution, media and economic activities, in order to better map the current and future situation of Afghanistan and to respond to the needs of the people.

UNSMIA's military component succeeded in establishing solid contacts with the military authorities of both warring factions and had provided reliable and informative support to the Head of Mission. The Secretary-General stated that, in view of the fruitful interaction between the political and military components, he would increase the number of military advisers from two to four.

As Head of Mission, Mr. Vendrell maintained close contact with Afghanistan's neighbours (Iran, Pakistan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan) and held several meetings with their leaders. The focus of discussions on the Afghan situation remained, among other things, the implications for regional and international security, the prospects for peace, the means of achieving a lasting settlement and the question of human rights.

Humanitarian assistance

The Secretary-General observed that the conditions under which assistance was provided in Afghanistan became more complicated as the year progressed [A/55/633-S/2000/1106]. The UN country team and its NGO partners continued their efforts to alleviate the problems faced by the Afghan people and to provide assistance to improve the dire humanitarian situation. However, funding for the consolidated appeal for 2000, and specifically for the drought appeal, had reached less than 50 per cent of the amount needed (see p. 864). Implementation of assistance programmes in some parts of the country had been hampered by restrictions on access to those in need of humanitarian assistance and constrained by high levels of insecurity. However, security conditions away from the front lines and zones of conflict had been adequate for the implementation of humanitarian programmes, although volatility remained. Early in the year, UNHCR successfully negotiated an agreement with Iran for the repatriation of Afghan refugees. Since the implementation of the joint programme in April, forcible return of Afghan refugees from Iran had decreased drastically to several thousands (from 70,000 in 1999) and contributed significantly to increased protection of the refugees who were unable or unwilling to return. On the other hand, the number of Afghan refugees who returned voluntarily from Pakistan and Iran, with the assistance of UNHCR, the World Food Programme (WFP) and the International Organization for Migration, had doubled compared to 1999, with 170,000 returnees by September. Initial reintegration assistance in the form of transport, individual household support, potable water and emergency shelter construction, in addition to programmes of education, health and income generation, was provided on a continual basis throughout the year.

The UN specialized agencies, along with NGO partners, conducted priority health activities, including human resource development, integrated disease control activities and safe motherhood and water and sanitation programmes. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the World Health Organization (WHO) and a wide range of NGOs supported the national immunization days during May, June, October and November. During the spring round, about 5.3 million children under 5 were vaccinated against polio, the highest coverage since 1994. WHO also carried out malaria and tuberculosis control programmes. The Poverty Eradication and Community Empowerment Programme of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) successfully established and strengthened over 2,000 multi-ethnic, community-based organizations and interest groups that formed sustainable linkages in terms of reconciliation, peace-building, good governance and refugee reintegration. Implementing projects through the United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), the programme contributed substantially to the international aid community's collective efforts in food security, access to basic social services and livelihood opportunities.

Afghanistan continued to rank as one of the most severely landmine-contaminated countries in the world, with 720 square kilometres of land containing mines. Since its inception in 1989 and as at October, the Mine Action Programme for Afghanistan had cleared 518 square kilometres of mined and battlefield areas, with 79 square kilometres being cleared in 2000 alone. Significant inroads in the survey of mine and battlefield areas had been made with over 619 square kilometres covered. Mine-awareness training and materials had been provided to over 6.8 million Afghans. Funding for the programme decreased substantially in 2000, with a shortfall of $3.5 million for activities for the period from September through December. The Programme cleared only 64 per cent of the sites targeted for the year.

Human rights violations

During the year, Afghans continued to suffer a wide range of deprivations, violations, policies and practices that severely restricted or denied their human rights (see also p. 750). The situation of women and girls in particular remained dismal due to the unconscionable policies of the Taliban and the general socio-economic decline. In July, the firman (decree) imposed by the Taliban banned the employment of women in UN and NGO programmes, except in the health sector. A clear violation of the right to work, the firman constituted an unacceptable precedent and undermined the ability of aid agencies to reach those who were most vulnerable and marginalized in Afghan society.

The Secretary-General expressed regret that Taliban authorities continued to deny access to the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan.

Drug control

The Secretary-General stated in November [A/55/633-S/2000/1106] that the United Nations International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP), in its annual opium poppy survey in Afghanistan, showed a slight decline in the area under cultivation of 10 per cent, from 91,000 hectares in 1999 to around 82,000 hectares in 2000. That figure, however, did not live up to the Taliban decree of September 1999 to reduce opium poppy cultivation by one third in the 1999/2000 planting season. The year's opium harvest had fallen by 28 per cent from a record of 4,581 tons in 1999 to 3,275 tons in 2000, mainly due to the severe drought.

The Secretary-General noted the success of UNDCP's alternative development pilot programme, which had reduced the opium harvest by 50 per cent in Ghorak, Khakrez and Maiwand districts. He stated that it demonstrated that alternative development was the right strategy for illicit crop reduction in the Afghan context, but that lack of funds might lead to a lack of credibility in the future and jeopardize the sustainability of the poppy reduction achieved in the target districts in 2000. He added that, with the increase in drug trafficking from Afghanistan posing a serious threat, UNDCP had initiated a drug law enforcement programme in the countries around Afghanistan, a "security belt", aimed at containing at the regional level a problem having its source in Afghanistan.

The "six plus two" group held a high-level meeting (New York, 28 February) to address the problem of illicit drugs in the country. The Security Council President subsequently encouraged the group to address drug-related issues in a co-ordinated manner with UNDCP, and urged Member States to help strengthen the drug control capacities of countries bordering Afghanistan (S/PRST/2000/12). In May, UNDCP, the "six plus two" group and donor countries met in Vienna to endorse the formulation of a regional action plan to promote an exchange of information, the interdiction of cross-border drug shipments and control of chemicals used to produce drugs, as well as the elimination of illicit crops in Afghanistan and subsequent alternative development activities. The regional action plan was approved by the "six plus two" group on 13 September.

Meanwhile, in July, the Taliban supreme leader, Mullah Omar, issued a decree imposing for the first time a total ban on opium poppy cultivation in Afghanistan.

Sanctions

Security Council consideration. At informal consultations on 13 December, Security Council members were briefed by the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 265] (see p. 276) on the humanitarian aspects of the sanctions against Afghanistan, which had been imposed under that resolution.

Communications. By a 19 December letter [A/55/704-S/2000/1214], Pakistan forwarded to the Secretary-General the text of a statement by its Foreign Minister regarding the disastrous humanitarian consequences that would result from the adoption of the draft resolution being considered by the Security Council (see below). Pakistan said that millions of innocent Afghans, already stricken by famine, would be exposed to starvation as UN aid agencies and NGOs withdrew their personnel, warning that the sanctions would make their task difficult, if not impossible. Aid agencies and relief organizations operating inside Afghanistan were unanimously of the view that the additional sanctions would further aggravate the humanitarian crisis and as many as 1 million people would face starvation during Afghanistan's bitter winter and unprecedented drought conditions.

Also on 19 December [S/2000/1212], Kazakhstan forwarded to the Council a position paper on the situation in Afghanistan, in which it noted that Afghanistan had been turned into a major world centre for drug production and exportation and that its territory, where an enormous amount of weapons had accumulated and where terrorist training centres had been established, had become a springboard for spreading extremism and international terrorism in Central Asia. Although Kazakhstan gave a generally positive assessment of the work of the Sanctions Committee, it also called for a balanced approach to the adoption of further measures. It was important to ensure that, before taking additional measures, the Council should weigh the effects of the sanctions on all aspects of the settlement of the situation in Afghanistan and their possible unintended implications for the civilian population.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 4251], the Security Council adopted resolution 1333(2000) by vote (13-0-2). The draft [S/2000/1202] was submitted by India, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation, Tajikistan and the United States.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions, in particular resolution 1267(1999) of 15 October 1999 and the statements by its President on the situation in Afghanistan,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan, and its respect for the cultural and historical heritage of Afghanistan,

Recognizing the critical humanitarian needs of the Afghan people,

Supporting the efforts of the Personal Representative of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan to advance a peace process through political negotiations between the Afghan parties aimed at the establishment of a broad-based, multi-ethnic, and fully representative government, and calling for the warring factions to cooperate fully with those efforts to conclude a ceasefire and begin discussions leading to a political settlement, by moving forward promptly in the process of dialogue to which they have committed themselves,

Taking note of the seventh meeting of the Afghan Support Group, held in Montreux, Switzerland, on 7 and 8 December 2000, which emphasized that the situation in Afghanistan is a complex one that requires a comprehensive, integrated approach to a peace process and issues of narcotics trafficking, terrorism, human rights and international humanitarian and development aid,

Recalling the relevant international counter-terrorism conventions and in particular the obligations of parties to those conventions to extradite or prosecute terrorists,

Strongly condemning the continuing use of the areas of Afghanistan under the control of the Afghan faction known as Taliban, which also calls itself the Islamic Emirate of Afghanistan (hereinafter known as the Taliban), for the sheltering and training of terrorists and planning of terrorist acts, and reaffirming its conviction that the suppression of international terrorism is essential for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Noting the importance of the Taliban acting in accordance with the 1961 Single Convention, the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances, and the 1988 United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances, and the commitments made at the twentieth special session of the General Assembly on narcotic drugs held in 1998, including the commitment to work closely with the United Nations Drug Control Programme,

Noting also that the Taliban benefits directly from the cultivation of illicit opium by imposing a tax on its production and indirectly benefits from the processing and trafficking of such opium, and recognizing that these substantial resources strengthen the capacity of the Taliban to harbour terrorists,

Deploing the fact that the Taliban continues to provide safe haven to Osama bin Laden and to allow him and others associated with him to operate a network of terrorist training camps from Taliban-controlled territory and to use Afghanistan as a base from which to sponsor international terrorist operations,

Noting the indictment of Osama bin Laden and his associates by the United States of America for, inter alia, the bombings on 7 August 1998 of the United States embassies in Nairobi and Dar es Salaam, and for conspiring to kill American nationals outside the United States, and noting also the request of the United States to the Taliban to surrender them for trial,

Reiterating its deep concern over the continuing violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights, particularly discrimination against women and girls, and over the significant rise in the illicit production of opium,

Stressing that the capture by the Taliban of the Consulate-General of the Islamic Republic of Iran and the murder of Iranian diplomats and a journalist in Mazar-e-Sharif constituted flagrant violations of established international law,

Determining that the failure of the Taliban authorities to respond to the demands in paragraph 13 of resolution 1214(1998) of 8 December 1998 and paragraph 2 of resolution 1267(1999) constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

Stressing its determination to ensure respect for its resolutions,

Reaffirming the necessity for sanctions to contain adequate and effective exemptions to avoid adverse humanitarian consequences for the people of Afghanistan, and that they should be structured in a way that would not impede, thwart or delay the work of international humanitarian assistance organizations or governmental relief agencies providing humanitarian assistance to the civilian population in the country,

Underlining the responsibility of the Taliban for the well-being of the population in the areas of Afghanistan under its control, and in this context calling upon the Taliban to ensure the safe and unhindered access of relief personnel and aid to all those in need in the territory under its control,

Recalling the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 49/59 of 9 December 1994,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Demands that the Taliban comply with resolution 1267(1999) and, in particular, cease the provision of sanctuary and training for international terrorists and their organizations, take appropriate effective measures to ensure that the territory under its control is not used for terrorist installations and camps or for the preparation or organization of terrorist acts against other States or their citizens, and cooperate with international efforts to bring indicted terrorists to justice;

2. Demands also that the Taliban comply without further delay with the demand of the Security Council in paragraph 2 of resolution 1267(1999) that requires the Taliban to turn over Osama bin Laden to appropriate authorities in a country where he has been indicted, or to appropriate authorities in a country where he will be returned to such a country, or to appropriate authorities in a country where he will be arrested and effectively brought to justice;

3. Demands further that the Taliban act swiftly to close all camps where terrorists are trained within the territory under its control, and calls for the confirmation of such closures by the United Nations, inter alia, through information made available to the United Nations by Member States in accordance with paragraph 19 below and through such other means as are necessary to assure compliance with the present resolution;

4. Reminds all States of their obligation to implement strictly the measures imposed by paragraph 4 of resolution 1267(1999);

5. Decides that all States shall:

(a) Prevent the direct or indirect supply, sale and transfer to the territory of Afghanistan under Taliban control as designated by the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999), hereinafter known as the Committee, by their nationals or from their territories, or using their flag vessels or aircraft, of arms and related materiel of all types including weapons and ammunition, military vehicles and equipment, paramilitary equipment, and spare parts for the aforementioned;

(b) Prevent the direct or indirect sale, supply and transfer to the territory of Afghanistan under Taliban control, as designated by the Committee, by their nationals or from their territories, of technical advice, assistance, or training related to the military activities of the armed personnel under the control of the Taliban;

(c) Withdraw any of their officials, agents, advisers, and military personnel employed by contract or other arrangement present in Afghanistan to advise the Taliban on military or related security matters, and in this context urge other nationals to leave the country;

6. Decides that the measures imposed by paragraph 5 above shall not apply to supplies of non-lethal military equipment intended solely for humanitarian or protective use and related technical assistance or training, as approved in advance by the Committee, and affirms that the measures imposed by paragraph 5 above do not apply to protective clothing, including flak jackets and military helmets, exported to Afghanistan by United Nations personnel, representatives of the media, and humanitarian workers for their personal use only;

7. Urges all States that maintain diplomatic relations with the Taliban to reduce significantly the number and level of the staff at Taliban missions and posts and restrict or control the movement within their territory of all such staff who remain; in the case of Taliban missions to international organizations, the host State may, as it deems necessary, consult the organization concerned on the measures required to implement this paragraph;

8. Decides that all States shall take further measures:

(a) To close immediately and completely all Taliban offices in their territories;

(b) To close immediately all offices of Ariana Afghan Airlines in their territories;

(c) To freeze without delay funds and other financial assets of Osama bin Laden and individuals and entities associated with him as designated by the Committee, including those in al-Qa'idah, and including funds derived or generated by property owned or controlled directly or indirectly by Osama bin Laden and individuals and entities associated with him, and to ensure that neither they nor any other funds or financial resources are made available, by their nationals or by any persons within their territory, directly or indirectly for the benefit of Osama bin Laden, his associates or any entities owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by Osama bin Laden or individuals and entities associated with him, including al-Qa'idah, and requests the Committee to maintain an updated list, based on information provided by States and regional organizations, of the individuals and entities designated as being associated with Osama bin Laden, including those in al-Qa'idah;

9. Demands that the Taliban, as well as others, halt all illegal drug activities and work to virtually eliminate the illicit cultivation of opium poppy, the proceeds of which finance Taliban terrorist activities;

10. Decides that all States shall prevent the sale, supply or transfer, by their nationals or from their territories, of the chemical acetic anhydride to any person in the territory of Afghanistan under Taliban control as designated by the Committee, or to any person for the purpose of any activity carried on in, or operated from, the territory under Taliban control as designated by the Committee;

11. Decides also that all States are required to deny any aircraft permission to take off from, land in or over-fly their territories if that aircraft has taken off from, or is destined to land at, a place in the territory of Afghanistan designated by the Committee as being under Taliban control, unless the particular flight has been approved in advance by the Committee on the grounds of humanitarian need, including religious obligations such as the performance of the Hajj, or on the grounds that the flight promotes discussion of a peaceful resolution of the conflict in Afghanistan, or is likely to promote Taliban compliance with the present resolution or with resolution 1267(1999);

12. Decides further that the Committee shall maintain a list of approved organizations and governmental relief agencies that are providing humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan, including the United Nations and its agencies, governmental relief agencies providing humanitarian assistance, the International Committee of the Red Cross and non-governmental organizations as appropriate, that the prohibition imposed by paragraph 11 above shall not apply to humanitarian flights operated by, or on behalf of, organizations and governmental relief agencies on the list approved by the Committee, that the Committee shall keep the list under regular review, adding new organizations and governmental relief agencies as appropriate, and that the Committee shall remove organizations and governmental agencies from the list if it decides that they are operating, or are likely to operate, flights for other than humanitarian purposes, and shall notify such organizations and governmental agencies immediately that any flights operated by them, or on their behalf, are thereby subject to the provisions of paragraph 11 above;

13. Calls upon the Taliban to ensure the safe and unhindered access of relief personnel and aid to all those in need in the territory under its control, and underlines the fact that the Taliban must provide guarantees for the safety, security and freedom of movement of United Nations and associated humanitarian relief personnel;

14. Urges States to take steps to restrict the entry into or transit through their territory of all senior officials of the rank of Deputy Minister or higher in the Taliban, the equivalent rank of armed personnel under the control of the Taliban, and other senior advisers and dignitaries of the Taliban, unless those officials are travelling for humanitarian purposes, including religious obligation such as the performance of the Hajj, or where the travel promotes discussion of a peaceful resolution of the conflict in Afghanistan or involves compliance with the present resolution or resolution 1267(1999);

15. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Committee:

(a) To appoint a committee of experts to make recommendations to the Council within sixty days of the adoption of the present resolution regarding ways in which the arms embargo and the closure of terrorist training camps demanded in paragraphs 3 and 5 above can be monitored, including, inter alia, the use of information obtained by Member States through their national means and provided by them to the Secretary-General;

(b) To consult with relevant Member States to put into effect the measures imposed by the present resolution and resolution 1267(1999) and report the results of such consultations to the Council;

(c) To report on the implementation of the existing measures, assess problems involved in enforcing these measures, make recommendations for strengthening enforcement, and evaluate actions of the Taliban to come into compliance;

(d) To review the humanitarian implications of the measures imposed by the present resolution and resolution 1267(1999), and report back to the Council within ninety days of the adoption of the present resolution with an assessment and recommendations, to report at regular intervals thereafter on any humanitarian implications, and to present a comprehensive report on this issue and any recommendations no later than thirty days prior to the expiration of those measures;

16. Requests the Committee to fulfil its mandate by undertaking the following tasks in addition to those set out in resolution 1267(1999):

(a) To establish and maintain updated lists, based on information provided by States, and international and regional organizations, of all points of entry and landing-areas for aircraft within the territory of Afghanistan under Taliban control, and to notify Member States of the contents of such lists;

(b) To establish and maintain updated lists, based on information provided by States and regional organizations, of individuals and entities designated as being associated with Osama bin Laden, in accordance with paragraph 8 (c) above;

(c) To give consideration to, and decide upon, requests for the exceptions set out in paragraphs 6 and 11 above;

(d) To establish no later than one month after the adoption of the present resolution, and maintain an updated list of approved organizations and governmental relief agencies that are providing humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan, in accordance with paragraph 12 above;

(e) To make relevant information regarding implementation of these measures publicly available through appropriate media, including through improved use of information technology;

(f) To consider, where and when appropriate, a visit to countries in the region by the Chairman of the Committee and such other members as may be required to enhance the full and effective implementation of the measures imposed by the present resolution and resolution 1267(1999) with a view to urging States to comply with relevant Council resolutions;

(g) To make periodic reports to the Council on information submitted to it regarding the present resolution and resolution 1267(1999), including possible violations of the measures reported to the Committee and recommendations for strengthening the effectiveness of those measures;

17. Calls upon all States and all international and regional organizations, including the United Nations and the specialized agencies, to act strictly in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution, notwithstanding the existence of any rights or obligations conferred or imposed by any international agreement or any contract entered into or any licence or permit granted prior to the date of coming into force of the measures imposed by paragraphs 5, 8, 10 and 11 above;

18. Calls upon States to bring proceedings against persons and entities within their jurisdiction that violate the measures imposed by paragraphs 5, 8, 10 and 11 above and to impose appropriate penalties;

19. Calls upon all States to cooperate fully with the Committee in the fulfilment of its tasks, including supplying such information as may be required by the Committee in pursuance of the present resolution;

20. Requests all States to report to the Committee within thirty days of the coming into force of the measures imposed by paragraphs 5, 8, 10 and 11 above on the steps they have taken with a view to effectively implementing the present resolution;

21. Requests the Secretariat to submit for consideration by the Committee information received from Governments and public sources on possible violations of the measures imposed by paragraphs 5, 8, 10 and 11 above;

22. Decides that the measures imposed by paragraphs 5, 8, 10 and 11 above shall come into force at 0001 hours, eastern standard time, one month after the adoption of the present resolution;

23. Also decides that the measures imposed by paragraphs 5, 8, 10 and 11 above are established for twelve months and that, at the end of this period, the Council shall decide whether the Taliban has complied with paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 above, and, accordingly, whether to extend these measures for a further period with the same conditions;

24. Further decides that, if the Taliban complies with the conditions of paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 above, before the twelve-month period has elapsed, the Council shall terminate the measures imposed by paragraphs 5, 8, 10 and 11 above;

25. Expresses its readiness to consider the imposition of further measures, in accordance with its responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations, with the aim of achieving full implementation of the present resolution and resolution 1267(1999), inter alia, taking into account the impact assessment referred to in paragraph 15 (d) with a view to enhancing the effectiveness of sanctions and avoiding humanitarian consequences;

26. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

VOTE ON RESOLUTION 1333(3000):

In favour: Argentina, Bangladesh, Canada, France, Jamaica, Mali, Namibia, Netherlands, Russian Federation, Tunisia, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: None.

Abstaining: China, Malaysia.

Afghanistan's representative to the United Nations stated before the vote that the Pakistan/Taliban/bin Laden alliance had categorically refused to cooperate with the international community or to put an end to the training and haven it provided to international terrorists. Afghanistan was grateful to Council members for having included in the draft resolution clear and explicit provision for the implementation of sanctions in such a way that they would not hamper the provision of humanitarian assistance to the Afghan population.

Malaysia, while condemning terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, intended to abstain on the draft resolution as the imposition of additional sanctions might lead to the deterioration of the humanitarian operational environment in the Taliban-controlled areas, especially if the Taliban were to withhold its cooperation with the international humanitarian agencies there. In addition, every care should have been taken to ensure that the sanctions regime against the Taliban was not politicized.

Speaking after the vote, China stated that it had abstained as the Afghan people could not cope with the effects of any measures that could lead to the further deterioration of the humanitarian situation in the country. China also felt that a new round of sanctions would have a negative impact on the peace process.

Sanctions Committee activities

The Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 265] (the Afghanistan Sanctions Committee) submitted a report [S/2000/1254] covering its activities from 15 October 1999 to 28 December 2000. During that period, the Committee held two meetings and 13 informal consultations at the expert level.

On 14 November 1999, the Security Council had imposed a flight ban on any aircraft owned, leased or operated by or on behalf of the Taliban, as well as the freezing of funds directly or indirectly owned or controlled by the Taliban. The sanctions went into effect when the Taliban failed to meet the Council's demand, made in the same resolution, that the Taliban turn over Osama bin Laden to appropriate authorities.

On 22 December 1999, the Committee issued a list of aircraft owned, leased or operated by or on behalf of the Taliban and, on 10 February 2000, it added an additional aircraft to the list. The Committee stated that the list would be revised as necessary and encouraged Member States to bring to its attention any information they might have concerning aircraft that did not appear on the list.

On 4 April [S/2000/282], the Chairman transmitted to the Council a list of 51 Member States that had responded to his request to provide information regarding the measures imposed against the Taliban. On 31 August [S/2000/282/Add.1], the Chairman transmitted a list of a further 18 Member States.

On 12 April, the Committee, by a note verbale to all States, designated the funds and other financial resources to be frozen, in accordance with resolution 1267(1999). On 24 October and 20 November, the Committee issued press releases identifying additional financial entities.

On 14 April, the Chairman circulated a Secretariat note containing recommendations for improving the monitoring of the implementation of the measures imposed for the Committee's consideration and action. In that connection, the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) and the International Air Transport Association (IATA) expressed their willingness to undertake technical missions with a view to assisting the Committee.

On 12 December, the Afghanistan Sanctions Committee held informal consultations with representatives of the UN Department of Political Affairs (on behalf of UNSMA) and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, to assess the humanitarian impact of the sanctions. On 13 December, the Chairman of the Committee briefed the Security Council on the subject.

During the reporting period, the Committee approved all 11 humanitarian flights requested. It also approved requests by the Taliban for 90 return trips for Ariana Afghan Airlines to transport 12,000 Afghan pilgrims to perform the hajj; 10 return trips for Air Gulf Falcon of Sharjah, United Arab Emirates (operating on behalf of Ariana Afghan Airlines), to transport additional Afghan pilgrims to perform the hajj; and a return flight of a hijacked Ariana Afghan Airlines aeroplane from London to Kabul.

On 5 December, the Committee granted an exemption to the measures in respect of payment by IATA to the aeronautical authority of Afghanistan, on behalf of international airlines for air traffic control services. The authorization was subject to representatives of IATA and ICAO conducting a survey of the facilities of the Ministry of Civil Aviation and Tourism every two months and reporting back to the Committee, including copies of financial transactions between escrow accounts, and the Ministry providing the Committee, through IATA, with a report on the uses to which the funds had been put.

On 15 December, the Committee authorized ICAO's request for an exemption to unfreeze a specific amount of funds from the Civil Aviation Purchasing Service account for Afghanistan with ICAO, and additional funds to be transferred from the overflight charges collected by IATA on behalf of the Ministry of Civil Aviation and Tourism, for aeronautical communications equipment, back-up communications equipment, certain air traffic control tower equipment and aviation security equipment. ICAO would report to the Committee on the delivery and the installation of the equipment.

On 28 December, the Sanctions Committee issued a note verbale requesting all States to submit lists of organizations and governmental relief agencies providing humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan pursuant to resolution 1333 (2000). It also issued a press release stating that it was compiling a list of organizations and governmental relief agencies providing humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan that would be exempt from the prohibition imposed by paragraph 11 of that resolution.

East Timor

Despite setbacks during 2000, including continued militia-led violence, the security situation in East Timor was stable, and the territory was well advanced in the transition to independence.

In February, the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET) assumed full responsibility for military security and overall administration of the territory from the Australian-led International Force, East Timor. UNTAET, which was entrusted with a governance operation, compelled the United Nations to confront pressures that it had never before faced in the field, starting with the complete administrative, political, judicial, military and socio-economic reconstruction of the territory. Great progress was made in the transition towards self-government with the establishment of an East Timor National Council, as an interim step towards a democratic legislative institution, as well as the appointment of a joint United Nations-Timorese cabinet to increase local participation in the administration of the territory.

The Security Council held nine open meetings during the year to discuss the situation in East Timor [meetings, 4097, 4133, 4147, 4165, 4180, 4182, 4191, 4203, 4236]; at those meetings it was briefed on developments in the territory by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and Transitional Administrator in East Timor, Sergio Vieira de Mello, and the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Hédi Annabi. The Council issued two presidential statements, which called for, among other things, a timetable and mechanisms for a constitution and elections in the territory. Following the killing on 6 September of three UN humanitarian staff by a militia-led mob in West Timor, the Council unanimously adopted a resolution calling on Indonesia to disarm and disband the militia, restore law and order in West Timor and ensure the safety and security of refugees and humanitarian workers. A Council mission visited East Timor and Indonesia from 9 to 17 November. The Secretary-General also visited East Timor and Indonesia in February.

In December, the General Assembly, by resolution 55/172 (see p. 867), called on the international community to continue to address the remaining humanitarian relief needs of East Timor and to support the transition from relief and rehabilitation to development in preparation for independence.

Withdrawal of INTERFET

In accordance with Security Council resolution 1264(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 290], Australia submitted to the Council, through the Secretary-General, the last two periodic reports of the International Force, East Timor (INTERFET). The sixth report [S/2000/92], which covered the period from 10 December 1999 to 31 January 2000, stated that INTERFET had fulfilled its mandate under resolution 1264(1999) to restore peace and security to all parts of East Timor, except some areas of the border region of the Oecussi enclave. It had succeeded in establishing a credible deterrent security presence in all parts of the territory; preventing armed violence by any group in East Timor, including militia groups; developing, in cooperation with Indonesia, agreed procedures for border management along the East Timor-West Timor border; and creating conditions and providing escort support for large numbers of displaced persons to return to their homes in East Timor. INTERFET's mandate to support wider UN operations and humanitarian assistance programmes had also been met through the continued facilitation of the transition from the United Nations Mission in East Timor (UNAMET) to UNTAET; and the facilitation of the conduct of humanitarian operations across East Timor. In addition, INTERFET undertook national reconstruction tasks, governance and administration, policing and law and order functions, as well as investigations into possible crimes against humanity.

Militia groups operating from West Timor continued to pose an unacceptable threat to peace and security in some parts of the border regions of the Oecussi enclave. Also, the future of the Armed Forces for the National Liberation of East Timor (FALINTIL), the former pro-independence guerrilla force, remained an unresolved issue. Although the objective of disarming FALINTIL proved unachievable, arrangements to secure FALINTIL within its cantonment in Aileu had been effective.

Border management protocols established under the memorandum signed between the Indonesian armed forces (TNI) and INTERFET in November 1999 (the so-called Holbrooke agreement) [YUN 1999, p. 295] had worked well and had been important in rapidly and effectively resolving low-level incidents on the border. The border management framework was formalized on 13 January 2000 with the signing of a memorandum of understanding between INTERFET, UNTAET and TNI, which outlined an agreed border for East Timor operations, in the hope of further reducing border incidents, and established a number of junction points on the Oecussi and West Timor-East Timor borders, some of which would be staffed by UN military observers to facilitate refugee return. An agreement had also been reached that gave refugees unhindered personal passage across the border, and provided that TNI and INTERFET would disarm individuals not authorized to carry firearms and non-traditional weapons.

The transition from INTERFET to a UN peacekeeping operation, which commenced on 1 February, was to be completed by the end of the month. Several countries participating in INTERFET had begun to withdraw their troops and assets from East Timor.

The seventh report [S/2000/236], which covered activities from 1 to 23 February, noted that on 23 February INTERFET formally transferred full responsibility for military security in all parts of East Timor to UNTAET. INTERFET's experience demonstrated the advantages of selecting a coalition leader from the immediate region, which included proximity to the crisis zone and the ability to respond quickly to a crisis, commensurate with a knowledge of the conditions surrounding the intervention. INTERFET also benefited from having a clear UN mandate and operational end state; resolution 1264(1999) provided INTERFET with an unambiguous mission statement, while resolution 1272(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 293] gave it a clear end state and identified the preconditions necessary to transfer military responsibility to UNTAET, vital factors in the implementation of military plans for the operation and transition. In addition, INTERFET's ability under Chapter VIII of the UN Charter to deliver appropriate force decisively and quickly was critical to success and the prevention of widespread loss of life. The transition arrangements also proved very effective, with INTERFET and UNTAET executing a progressive transition, rather than the traditional comprehensive, single-step transition. That approach enabled the embryonic UNTAET peacekeeping operation headquarters to accept responsibility in a phased manner commensurate with its developing capability.

UN Transitional Administration for East Timor

In February, UNTAET, established under Security Council resolution 1272(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 293], assumed overall responsibility from INTERFET for the administration of East Timor. Its responsibilities included the maintenance of law and order, assistance in the development of civil and social services, coordination and delivery of humanitarian assistance and capacity-building support for self-government.

On 25 January [S/2000/62], the Secretary-General proposed that the military component of UNTAET be composed of 32 countries, which he listed. On 28 January [S/2000/63], the Security Council took note of the Secretary-General's proposal.

On 7 July [S/2000/671], the Secretary-General informed the Council of his intention to appoint Lieutenant General Boonsrang Niumpradit (Thailand) as the new Force Commander of UNTAET with effect from 19 July. Lieutenant General Jaime de los Santos (Philippines), who had served as Force Commander since January 2000, would relinquish his post on 21 July. On 10 July [S/2000/672], the Council took note of the Secretary-General's intention.

Reports of Secretary-General (January and July). In response to resolution 1272(1999), the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report [S/2000/53 & Add.1] covering UNTAET activities and developments in East Timor between 25 October and 31 December 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 294] and the first three weeks of 2000. The report noted that humanitarian assistance had brought some relief to the East Timorese, but conditions were very difficult owing to the extent of destruction, lack of opportunity to earn a living and high prices. Crime was on the rise, especially in Dili and other urban sectors, mainly due to the large number of unemployed. From the beginning of January, there were a number of violent clashes in Baucau and Dili between groups of East Timorese, many of whom were armed with machetes, stones and sticks and some reportedly with firearms. There were also a number of border incidents between West and East Timor, including exchanges of fire between TNI and INTERFET. As at 24 January, 185 military observers were deployed in the mission area.

With regard to governance and public administration, an independent Public Service Commission was established on 21 January to oversee the selection and recruitment of a new, leaner East Timorese civil service and the setting up of administrative support arrangements, such as a payroll and payment system. The Transitional Judicial Service Commission, established on 5 January, proceeded to select an initial corps of 10 judges and prosecutors and suggested a list of 6 defence lawyers from among 20 East Timorese who participated in a 1999 judicial training programme. Training of judges, prosecutors and lawyers nevertheless remained an urgent requirement. In mid-January, INTERFET handed over its functions related to arrest and detention to the UN civilian police and the East Timorese judiciary. The Police Commissioner assumed his position on 7 January. Some 400 civilian police personnel had been dispatched to the mission area from 29 countries.

On 3 January, the Indonesian commercial airline Merpati conducted a test flight to Dili; regular flights were expected to begin in February. Those on board included the Governor of West Timor, a senior official from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, a member of the Indonesian parliament and other officials. That was the first official Indonesian delegation to visit East Timor since the departure of Indonesian troops.

As at 24 January, 991 civilian staff were in the mission area, while 391 additional international staff were in the process of recruitment. However, there was a shortage of experts in the fields of electricity; water; public health; education; telecommunications; road maintenance; post; airport, port and harbour management; procurement; treasury; budgeting; and prison management.

In accordance with resolution 1272(1999), the Secretary-General submitted a report [S/2000/738] on the activities of UNTAET and developments in East Timor covering the period from 27 January to 26 July.

The 15-member National Consultative Council [YUN 1999, p. 294], which served as the primary mechanism through which the East Timorese participated in UNTAET's decision-making, was replaced on 14 July by the National Council (NC). The new Council would be composed of 33 members, all Timorese, appointed by the Transitional Administrator. Consultations were under way regarding their selection. At the same time, UNTAET reorganized itself to resemble more closely the future government and to increase the direct participation of the Timorese, who thus assumed a greater share of political responsibility. Eight portfolios were created: internal administration, infrastructure, economic affairs, social affairs, finance, justice, police and emergency services, and political affairs. The first four had been entrusted to East Timorese, and the other four to senior UNTAET staff members. The eight officials formed a Cabinet chaired by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, Sergio Vieira de Mello, and were responsible for formulating policies and recommending regulations and directives for consideration by the NC. The Special Representative retained full responsibility as Transitional Administrator in accordance with Council resolution 1272(1999).

The report noted that when UNTAET was established, there was no history of open and democratic political activity in East Timor. Since then, the National Council of Timorese Resistance (CNRT) and its component parties had been active, and new political organizations had emerged. However, there had been cases of intimidation against groups and parties not under the CNRT umbrella. Ethnic and religious minorities had also been the targets of harassment. In order to counter those tendencies and to prepare the population for democratic elections, UNTAET had launched a programme to promote civic education, constitutional development, the rule of law and political education. It had also disseminated information on human rights and was working with local community leaders to develop a culture of tolerance. In addition, UNTAET had promoted the free flow of information by supporting local media and through its own radio, limited television broadcasts and fortnightly newsletters.

The normalization of relations between Indonesia and East Timor had progressed well. On the occasion of Indonesian President Wahid's visit to Dili on 29 February, various trade and communications agreements were signed. On 6 April, Indonesia and UNTAET concluded a memorandum of understanding on cooperation in legal, judicial and human rights matters. In accordance with the memorandum, UNTAET assisted Indonesian authorities in their efforts to identify and prosecute those responsible for human rights violations in East Timor in 1999. To that end, UNTAET had located and interviewed witnesses and provided the results to Indonesian investigators. On 5 July, agreement was reached on the establishment of a Joint Border Committee, which was responsible for managing all cross-border matters. UNTAET established offices in Jakarta, Indonesia, and Kupang, West Timor, while Indonesia had a mission in East Timor. The office in Kupang helped coordinate UNTAET's assistance to flood victims on both sides of the border between East and West Timor in May. It had also been closely involved with UNHCR in initiatives designed to encourage reconciliation and the return of refugees who remained in West Timor and Java.

More than 167,000 refugees had returned from Indonesia, primarily from West Timor. The repatriation effort was coordinated by UNHCR; the International Organization for Migration arranged their movement to their destinations. That activity had proceeded with few incidents and the reintegration of the refugees into their original communities was conducted without any major problem. UNTAET supported UNHCR's work at the political level by promoting reconciliation and preparing the communities in East Timor for the return of those refugees who had opposed independence. Despite those efforts, an estimated 85,000 to 120,000 refugees remained in camps in West Timor, where militias opposed to independence continued to exercise great influence and impeded UNHCR's work by intimidation and violence. As a result, an important UNHCR effort to register refugees and determine whether they wished to return or to be resettled was repeatedly delayed and had to be postponed indefinitely in July, when militia members attacked UNHCR workers. UNHCR had increased its efforts to persuade the Indonesian authorities to assume their obligations and act on commitments made, which included free and unhindered access to the refugees and ensuring the safety of humanitarian workers.

UNTAET continued to build the foundations of governance, including a legal framework, a central financial capacity and a civil service structure, in order to transfer administrative functions to a sustainable East Timorese administration. The Civil Service Academy was inaugurated in May and UNDP, in cooperation with UNTAET, was preparing a comprehensive project for capacity-building in governance and public administration. During the reporting period, UNTAET established the Central Fiscal Authority and the Central Payments Office. The Treasury had been formed within the Central Fiscal Authority, responsible for the execution of the budget. Disbursements on public spending from the UNTAET Trust Fund totalled over $3 million, and a further $7.9 million had been committed. The collapse of both the public and private sectors following the wave of violence in 1999, in conjunction with large-scale destruction, had a devastating effect on the economy. The gross domestic product (GDP) was estimated to have shrunk in 1999 by as much as 38 per cent. Unemployment soared, while the price of fuel and other basic goods rose steeply. To provide relief and launch the repair of the infrastructure, quick-impact projects had been carried out throughout the country. Business activity had expanded on a moderate scale, and the agricultural sector saw a fairly strong recovery in the first half of 2000, owing to a good coffee crop and strong domestic demand.

Although the vast majority of schoolchildren and teachers were back in school by the end of April, the conditions they faced remained very difficult. Supplies were insufficient and many schools were structurally unsound. A $13.9 million project had been agreed between UNTAET and the World Bank for a rehabilitation programme. Owing to the collapse of the public health-care system, NGOs had become the main health service providers.

The Secretary-General noted that there had been a notable increase in low-level personal and property crime. Since January, UNTAET's civilian police grew from 400 to 1,270 officers. UNTAET's Border Control Unit maintained operations at Dili's port and airport and at two crossings points on the border with West Timor. The Unit's main functions were the control and monitoring of customs, immigration and quarantine, and the establishment and training of the Border Service of East Timor. As at 21 July, UNTAET had 2,684 civilian staff, of whom 1,886 were recruited locally and 798 internationally.

A phased transfer of responsibility from INTERFET, which began deployment in September 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 291], to UNTAET's military component took place in February. Since then, UNTAET's force had conducted security operations throughout the country and had supported the activities of other components, notably the police, helped with the delivery of relief goods in remote areas, and provided medical care to civilians. The security situation was generally stable, though there was a period from late February to mid-March during which UNTAET's military positions near the border came under fire and four significant cross-border incursions were carried out by militia groups operating from West Timor. Following those attacks, UNTAET and Indonesian officials met and, on 11 April, UNTAET's Force Commander and the commander of the Indonesian forces in West Timor signed a memorandum of understanding regarding tactical cooperation in the border area. Thereafter, the situation along the border was quieter. However, a grenade attack against an UNTAET post on 28 May injured an Australian soldier, while on 24 July a New Zealand soldier was killed during an attack against an UNTAET patrol. Since October 1999, FALINTIL's troops had been cantoned in the Aileu district. Difficult living conditions, lack of supplies and lack of clarity about their future role had led to concerns over discipline and morale. UNTAET had allocated $100,000 from the consolidated budget of East Timor to provide food for two months to FALINTIL personnel and their dependants.

In planning for UNTAET's military component in 1999, the aim was to create a sufficiently robust force so as not to invite challenges after it took over from INTERFET. It was envisaged that the strength of the force could be reduced if the situation remained stable. Since that had turned out to be the case, especially in the eastern sector, and given also the improved capacity of the police, the Secretary-General intended to effect a reduction in that sector from 1,850 to a battalion-size force of 500 by the end of January 2001. The military observers would be reduced to 150 and a further reduction was being considered. CNRT, in a reversal of its initial position, advocated the establishment of a national security force as a necessary element in the transition to independence. With financial support from the United Kingdom, a team organized by King's College, London, was undertaking a study of East Timor's future defence and security needs and their practical and financial implications.

The Secretary-General observed that the first six months of 2000 had made it clear how daunting the UN task was in East Timor. The United Nations had never before attempted to build and manage a State. Nor did it have an opportunity to prepare for that assignment; the team in East Timor had to be assembled ad hoc and still lacked important expertise in a number of fields. The relationship between UNTAET and the East Timorese was crucial for the attainment of the mandate. While Council resolution 1272(1999) had given the United Nations exclusive authority, the Special Representative had chosen to proceed only in the closest possible consultation with the East Timorese and with their full consent. During his visit to East Timor in February, the Secretary-General asked the Special Representative to establish benchmarks to guide the activities of the mission towards achieving minimum goals that would provide the population with a sound platform for governing their country when independence was achieved. The key areas were: to ensure security during the transitional period and arrangements for East Timor's security once it was independent; to establish a credible system of justice in which fundamental human rights were respected; to achieve a reasonable level of reconstruction of public services and infrastructure; to establish an administration that was financially sustainable; and to manage a political transition to independence, culminating in the adoption of a constitution and democratic elections. The last objective was the most important, since it entailed the establishment of a political system that was responsive to the citizens and a political leadership that was responsible in its decisions.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 3 August [meeting 4182], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/26 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls its previous resolutions and the statements by its President on the situation in East Timor. It welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 26 July 2000 on the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor. It takes note with warm appreciation of the progress made by the Transitional Administration and pays tribute to the leadership of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General. The Council also welcomes the significant progress made in building healthy relations between East Timor and Indonesia. The Council acknowledges in this regard the co-operation shown by the Government of Indonesia, the Transitional Administration and the people of East Timor.

The Council strongly supports the steps taken by the Transitional Administration to strengthen the involvement and direct participation of the East Timorese people in the administration of their territory, in particular the establishment, on 14 July 2000, of the National Council and the reorganization of the Transitional Administration, with a view to building capacity in the territory in the run up to independence. The Council invites the Secretary-General to report at an early date, on the basis of close consultations with the East Timorese, on the process for adopting a constitution and holding democratic elections.

The Council notes that the National Council of Timorese Resistance is advocating the creation of a national security force. In this regard, it welcomes work being done on the future defence and security needs of East Timor and their practical and financial implications. It urges the East Timorese people to conduct a broad discussion of these issues. The Council welcomes the humanitarian relief given by the Transitional Administration to the cantoned troops of the Armed Forces for the National Liberation of East Timor and encourages further assistance in this regard.

The Council condemns the murder on 24 July 2000 of a New Zealand soldier serving with the Transitional Administration and expresses its sympathy to the Government and people of New Zealand and to the family of the murdered peacekeeper. The Council is determined to ensure the safety and security of United Nations personnel in East Timor. In this regard, it requests the Secretary-General to inform the Council as soon as possible on the outcome of his investigation into the incident. It welcomes the establishment, on 31 July 2000, of a joint investigation by the Transitional Administration and the Government of Indonesia and welcomes also the co-operation of the Government of Indonesia to bring the perpetrators to justice.

The Council expresses its profound concern at the continuing presence of large numbers of refugees from East Timor in camps in West Timor, at the continuing presence of militia in the camps and at their intimidation of staff of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. It expresses particular concern that this intimidation reached such a level that the Office of the High Commissioner was forced to postpone indefinitely its important effort to register refugees and determine whether they wished to return to East Timor or to be resettled, a task that should be completed as soon as possible given the impending rainy season. The Council calls for a more determined involvement in this problem by the Government of Indonesia, including implementation of the memorandum of understanding with the Office of the High Commissioner of 14 October 1999 and of a recent security agreement concluded between local authorities and the Office of the High Commissioner. The Council calls upon the Government of Indonesia to take effective steps to restore law and order, to establish conditions of security for refugees and international humanitarian personnel, to allow free access by such personnel to the camps, to separate the former military personnel, police and civil servants from the refugees and to arrest those militia extremists who are attempting to sabotage the resettlement process.

The Council acknowledges that the Government of Indonesia has approached these challenges with an attitude of cooperation, manifested, inter alia, by the signing of such important agreements with the Transitional Administration as the memorandum of understanding of 6 April 2000 on legal, judicial and human rights matters, and the memorandum of understanding of 11 April 2000 on Tactical Coordination, and the establishment, on 5 July 2000, of a joint border commission. The Council regrets, however, that serious problems persist and looks forward to these agreements being translated into concrete progress on the ground. It also calls upon the Government of Indonesia to cooperate more closely with the Transitional Administration in the field to end cross-border incursions from West Timor, to disarm and disband the militias and to bring to justice those militia members guilty of crimes.

The Council takes note of the intention of the Secretary-General to reduce the size of the military component of the Transitional Administration in the eastern sector of East Timor to a battalion-size force of 500 by the end of January 2001, in the light of the situation on the ground.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to keep it closely informed of the situation in East Timor, including through provision of a military assessment of the security situation and its implications for the structure of the military component of the Transitional Administration. It also requests the Secretary-General to continue to report to it in line with the requirements set out in resolution 1272 (1999) of 25 October 1999. It further requests the Secretary-General to submit to it, in his next regular report, detailed plans on the transition to independence for East Timor, which should be drawn up in close consultation with the East Timorese people.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Attack on UNHCR office

On 8 September, the Security Council received briefings by the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on an attack against the UNHCR office in the vicinity of Atambua, West Timor, in which three international staff members were killed and three others wounded.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 8 September [meeting 4195], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1319

(2000). The draft [S/2000/853] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions and the statements by its President on the situation in East Timor, in particular the statement of 3 August 2000, in which it expressed profound concern at the continuing presence of large numbers of refugees from East Timor in camps in West Timor, at the continuing presence of militia in the camps and at their intimidation of refugees and staff of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Appalled by the brutal murder of three United Nations personnel killed, on 6 September 2000, by a militia-led mob, and supporting the statement on this subject made by the Secretary-General at the outset of the Millennium Summit and the expressions of concern by several heads of State and Government during the Summit proceedings,

Condemning this outrageous and contemptible act against unarmed international staff who were in West Timor to help the refugees, and reiterating its condemnation of the murder of two peacekeepers of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor and attacks on the United Nations presence in East Timor,

Recalling that the declaration of the Millennium Summit included specific reference to the need for effective measures for the safety and security of United Nations personnel,

Expressing its outrage at the reported attacks in Betun, West Timor, on 7 September 2000, in which a number of refugees reportedly were killed,

Welcoming the letter of the President of Indonesia to the Secretary-General on 7 September 2000, in which he expressed outrage at the killing of the staff of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and stated his intention to conduct a full-scale investigation and to take firm measures against those found guilty,

1. Insists that the Government of Indonesia take immediate additional steps, in fulfilment of its responsibilities, to disarm and disband the militia immediately, restore law and order in the affected areas in West Timor, ensure safety and security in the refugee camps and for humanitarian workers, and prevent cross-border incursions into East Timor;

2. Stresses that those responsible for the attacks on international personnel in West and East Timor must be brought to justice;

3. Recalls, in this regard, the letter of 18 February 2000 from the President of the Security Council to the Secretary-General, in which it was noted that grave violations of international humanitarian and human rights law had been committed and that those responsible for these violations should be brought to justice, and reiterates its belief that the United Nations has a role to play in the process in order to safeguard the rights of the people of East Timor;

4. Calls upon the Indonesian authorities to take immediate and effective measures to ensure the safe return of refugees who choose to go back to East Timor, and stresses the need for parallel programmes to resettle individuals who choose not to return;

5. Notes that the Government of Indonesia has decided to deploy additional troops to West Timor to improve the serious security situation, but stresses that workers of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees cannot return to West Timor until there is a credible security guarantee, including real progress towards disarming and disbanding the militias;

6. Underlines that the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor should respond robustly to the militia threat in East Timor, consistent with its resolution 1272(1999) of 22 October 1999;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council within one week of the adoption of the present resolution on the situation on the ground;

8. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

The Council, on 19 September [meeting 4198], held a private meeting with the Special Envoy of Indonesia. A frank and constructive discussion took place on the need for early and full implementation of resolution 1319(2000).

Communications from Indonesia (25 September–4 October). In two letters to the Security Council President, dated 25 September [S/2000/899] and 26 September [S/2000/901], Indonesia provided information regarding the follow-up to the briefing given by its Special Envoy to the Council on 19 September. It recalled that the Special Envoy had conveyed the urgent need for achieving a comprehensive resolution of the problems concerning the situation in West Timor through the attainment of four objectives: investigation of the 6 September incident and bringing the perpetrators to justice; disarming the militias; reaching a lasting solution to the refugee question; and promoting reconciliation among the East Timorese of all political persuasions. The disarming process had commenced, and Indonesia had extended the period for the voluntary surrender of weapons from 25 to 27 September, in order to ensure an orderly and complete transfer of those arms by the militias. Beyond that date, strict enforcement measures would be taken against those found in possession of weapons. In the humanitarian field, Indonesia would continue to meet its responsibilities to render aid to the refugees.

In identical letters to the Security Council and the Secretary-General, dated 29 September [S/2000/922] and 3 October [A/55/446], respectively, Indonesia provided information on its response to resolution 1319(2000) on the question of East Timorese refugees in West Timor. Among other things, Indonesia noted that it had questioned individuals suspected of involvement in the attack against the UNHCR Atambua office and that investigations were ongoing. It also welcomed the establishment of a Joint Border Committee with UNTAET on 14 September, which would provide a mechanism and institutionalized processes to address border-related issues. Indonesia said that it was necessary to approach the Atambua incident within the wider context of the important progress that had been achieved over the past year in dealing with residual issues arising from the transfer of authority over East Timor. The best guarantee against a repeat of that incident was by addressing the root causes of all the outstanding issues, in particular the question of refugees.

On 3 October [S/2000/949], Indonesia informed the Council of the latest developments concerning the process of disarming the militias in Atambua.

By a 4 October letter [S/2000/955], Indonesia provided information on developments regarding the situation in West Timor.

Security Council mission

On 25 October [S/2000/1030], the Security Council President informed the Secretary-General that the Council members had agreed to dispatch a mission to East Timor and Indonesia in November. The composition and terms of reference of the mission were included.

On 21 November [S/2000/1105], the mission (9-17 November) reported on its findings and recommendations to the Council. The report also included the texts of statements made by Indonesia's Foreign Minister on the mission's visit to Indonesia and by Ambassador Martin Andjaba (Namibia), leader of the mission.

With regard to the implementation of resolution 1272(1999), the mission said that the overall security situation in East Timor was relatively stable, with remarkably little general crime. Civilian police had been deployed to all districts and to all but 10 subdistricts. Training of the local police force continued, but budgetary constraints meant that the requisite force of 3,000 would not be realized until 2006. Consequently, it was likely that there would be a need for the international civilian police to remain beyond the date of independence.

The establishment of a fully functioning judicial system had proved challenging in the light of the total absence of local capacity in that area and other priorities placed on UNTAET at the beginning of its operations. The judicial sector remained seriously under-resourced and thus could not process those suspects already in detention. It was therefore particularly important for UNTAET to consider all available ways of attracting the necessary resources and that decisions on handling serious crimes investigations should reflect East Timorese expectations. The Special Representative intended to conduct a review of the justice sector. The mission welcomed the initiative and urged the Council to give it priority consideration. UNTAET had made substantial progress in addressing the security threat posed by militia infiltration from West Timor. As with the police, however, it seemed likely that East Timor would require an international military presence in some form for some time after independence.

The humanitarian situation had passed its most pressing phase. However, East Timor would need continued resources as people re-established their livelihoods and as long as the prospect of large additional refugee returns remained. UNTAET had put in place the necessary contingency plans to cope with a significant refugee influx. The mission noted that it was important that that readiness should be maintained as a component of UNTAET's refugee return strategy.

A particularly positive and important development in fulfilment of UNTAET's mandate of capacity-building for self-governance had been the acceleration of the Timorization of the administration. A number of Timorese District or Deputy District Administrators had been appointed, while legislative responsibility was exercised through the all-Timorese NC and executive powers by a Transitional Cabinet comprising five Timorese and four internationals, under the chairmanship of the Transitional Administrator. The mission endorsed UNTAET's efforts and emphasized the need for capacity-building among the East Timorese.

There had been major rehabilitation of public buildings and utilities in Dili. The mission was told that the education system was functioning throughout East Timor, together with a basic level of health care in many areas. Nevertheless, implementation of projects had been slow due to lack of resources. The mission recommended that consideration be given to increased flexibility in the use of assessed resources allocated to complex peacekeeping operations such as UNTAET.

The mission recognized that in all likelihood there would be a need for a strong international commitment to East Timor after independence through the provision of financial, technical and security assistance, if the aspirations of the East Timorese were to be fully realized.

With regard to the implementation of resolution 1319(2000), Ambassador Andjaba welcomed Indonesia's efforts to address the situation in West Timor, although much remained to be done. In East Timor, over 170,000 refugees had returned, and the process of reconciliation was beginning. However, information from refugees returning to East Timor indicated that intimidation was still present in the camps in West Timor. The mission took note of the request of the Indonesian Attorney-General for international assistance to ensure adequate expertise in bringing to justice those responsible for human rights violations. It also welcomed the passage of human rights law and awaited the establishment of ad hoc courts.

There was agreement on the high priority of resuming international assistance to the refugees to supplement Indonesia's efforts. For that to happen, the security of international humanitarian workers would need to be assured. Indonesia would be discussing with UN offices in Jakarta arrangements to facilitate an assessment by UN security experts of the situation in West Timor, in cooperation with the police, TNI and other responsible authorities.

The mission underscored the importance of internationally observed registration of refugees, a view shared by Indonesia. Fair treatment and support had to be provided to those refugees who wanted to stay in Indonesia and those who wanted to return to East Timor. The mission encouraged Indonesia to promulgate a detailed plan for registration, return and resettlement. It also believed that ad hoc returns could be an important factor in helping to create the conditions necessary for resolving the issue. In that context, it welcomed plans for the return of the ex-TNI reservists from East Timor.

The mission welcomed the statements by East Timorese leaders that they were anxious to welcome the refugees back and to pursue reconciliation. It also stressed the need for continued talks between Indonesia and UNTAET on residual issues that would arise during the transition period.

Communications from Indonesia (13-27 November). On 13 November, in identical letters to the Secretary-General and the Council President [A/55/626-S/2000/1090], Indonesia reported on developments in East Nusa Tenggara, a region on the border with East Timor. Indonesia planned to dispatch an additional company of marines to patrol the waters in the border area. In addition, Indonesia reported that the refugee situation had improved and approximately 500 East Timorese had decided to return to East Timor.

On 27 November [S/2000/1125], Indonesia transmitted to the Council a document entitled "The visit of the mission of the Security Council to Indonesia: Indonesia's constructive response to Security Council resolution 1319(2000)". Indonesia welcomed the visit as an expression of the existing positive line of communication with the United Nations. It also reaffirmed that, through concrete actions and deeds, it had endeavoured to create a conducive atmosphere for East Timor during the transition phase. A prosperous, peaceful, stable and democratic East Timor was in Indonesia's national interest.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 6 December [meeting 4244], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/39 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the report of the Security Council mission to East Timor and Indonesia of 21 November 2000, and endorses the recommendations that it contains. It notes in particular the view of the mission that a strong international presence will be required in East Timor after independence, inter alia for the provision of financial, technical and security assistance, and agrees that planning for such a presence should begin as soon as possible. It requests the Secretary-General to report on this matter in his next regular report to the Council.

The Council pays tribute to the work of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor. It welcomes in particular the creation of the National Council in East Timor, and stresses the importance of further work on the transition to independence, including a timetable and mechanisms for a constitution and elections. It stresses that urgent consideration should be given to expediting the training of the Timor Lorosae Police Service and to attracting sufficient resources to develop the judicial system. It notes the views of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on the need to use assessed funding more flexibly.

The Council emphasizes that urgent action is necessary to resolve the problem of the East Timorese refugees in West Timor. While acknowledging the efforts of the Government of Indonesia so far, the Council expresses its belief that a number of further steps must be taken, including:

- (i) Decisive action to disarm and disband the militia and put an end to their activities, including by the separation of militia leaders from the refugees in West Timor and the expeditious prosecution of those responsible for criminal acts. The Council welcomes the steps already taken by the Government of Indonesia and urges it to make further progress on eradicating intimidation in the camps;
- (ii) Action to allow the international relief agencies to return to West Timor, which will in turn require that the security of their staff be guaranteed. The Council looks forward, in this context, to discussions between the Government of Indonesia and the United Nations on arrangements to facilitate an expert assessment of the security situation in West Timor. This should be in accordance with the usual modalities employed by the Office of the United Nations Security Coordinator;
- (iii) Action to improve the flow of information to the refugees. The Council urges the Government of Indonesia, the Transitional Administration and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to work together to develop an information strategy that will allow the refugees to make an informed decision about their future;
- (iv) Credible, apolitical and internationally observed registration of the refugees, carried out in close cooperation with United Nations agencies and other relevant actors.

The Council emphasizes the need for measures to address shortcomings in the implementation of justice in East Timor. The Council welcomes the adoption of Indonesian legislation for the establishment of ad hoc human rights tribunals. Also, it underlines the need to bring to justice those responsible for violent attacks in East and West Timor, including attacks on United Nations personnel and in particular the murder of three humanitarian workers and two United Nations peacekeepers. The Council regrets that those responsible for the murder of the peacekeepers have not been arrested, and calls for action in this regard and for an early start to the trials of those accused of killing the humanitarian workers.

The Council highlights the importance of the bilateral relationship between the Transitional Administration and the Government of Indonesia. The Council underlines the need to resolve the outstanding issues of payment of pensions to former civil servants and the proposed transit arrangements between the Oecussi enclave and the remainder of East Timor. It encourages in this regard further progress in the dialogue between the Government of Indonesia and the Transitional Administration.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Further report of Secretary-General. In a later report [S/2001/42], the Secretary-General reported on UNTAET's activities and developments in East Timor during the latter part of 2000. One of the main political developments was the emergence of a growing consensus among the Timorese people to seek independence by the end of 2001. On 12 December, the NC endorsed the outlines of a political calendar proposed by Xanana Gusmão in his capacity as CNRT president. Broad public consultations on the proposed calendar resulted in agreement on the following sequence of steps. Phase one included nationwide consultation and decisions regarding the electoral modalities and the composition of the Constituent Assembly. In phase two, the Assembly would draft a constitution. The modalities for its adoption, whether by the Assembly itself or by referendum, were still under discussion. That would be followed by the establishment of a government. If a presidential form of government was adopted, elections might be held. It was anticipated that under the shortest possible time frame, elections could be held in the summer of 2001 and independence declared late in the year. UNTAET would be fully responsible for the conduct of the elections. The UN Secretariat carried out an initial need-assessment mission in August and an electoral pre-planning session in Canberra, Australia, in September. It also dispatched an electoral system education team in October and an advance planning and design team had been in East Timor since mid-November. The establishment of the NC on 23 October significantly enhanced the participation of the Timorese in the political decision-making process. At its first session, Mr. Gusmão was elected Speaker. On 19 October, José Ramos-Horta was sworn in as cabinet member for foreign affairs, so that East Timorese held five of the nine cabinet portfolios; the others were held by international staff, who would be gradually replaced by East Timorese.

During the summer, the situation in the western districts gave cause for concern, as a result of a relatively high level of activity by militia groups that had infiltrated from West Timor. The activities of the militias, which caused the temporary displacement of more than 3,000 persons, decreased towards the end of September, following the launching of operations by UNTAET that put pressure on the militias. In the light of that situation, UNTAET suspended a planned reduction of the military component, brought in an additional rifle company and strengthened its surveillance and information capacity as well as its civil-military affairs elements.

No tangible progress was made in the disbanding of the militias entrenched inside refugee camps in West Timor and, thus, the refugees were not yet free to decide whether to return to their homes or to resettle in Indonesia. Following the killing of three UNHCR staff members on 6 September in Atambua, all UN international staff were withdrawn from West Timor. The Security Council's mission to East Timor and Indonesia in November found that despite the collection of some arms, resolution 1319(2000), which called on Indonesia to disarm and disband the militia and ensure safety in the refugee camps, remained largely unfulfilled. On 22 December, Indonesia convened a meeting with the UN resident coordinator in Jakarta to discuss the question of a mission to assess security conditions in West Timor, as called for by the Council in statement S/PRST/2000/39. There had been no further developments on that matter so far.

The East Timor Transitional Administration was established on 7 August to integrate East Timorese into all major decision-making areas and the Department of Foreign Affairs was created in October. Relations with Indonesia continued to be affected by the problem of the militias and refugees in West Timor.

Based on a study coordinated by King's College, London (see p. 281), the Cabinet decided in September to establish the East Timor Defence Force (ETDF) as a light infantry force of 1,500 regular soldiers and 1,500 reservists, drawn initially from FALINTIL. In November, UNTAET met with representatives of a number of interested Governments to discuss how the new force might best be set up. Training, infrastructure and equipment for ETDF depended on voluntary contributions, while personnel, operating and maintenance costs would be borne by the Government of East Timor.

The justice system was investigating more than 180 cases. The Serious Crimes Investigation Unit focused on cases to be tried under the Indonesian penal code and prosecuting suspects accused of crimes against humanity. Public safety had improved. During the second half of 2000, civilian police deployment had risen to 1,439 officers. The police had set up a special unit to prepare for security during the electoral process.

More than 820 schools were operating with about 200,000 students enrolled at the primary and secondary levels. The National University of East Timor opened in November, with an enrolment of over 4,000 students. Three hospitals were functioning, as well as 71 community health centres at the district and subdistrict levels.

Efforts to promote economic activity, including foreign investment, continued. However, unemployment was very high, and the needs far exceeded the available resources and capacity. Agriculture was the single largest contributor to GDP. Efforts to increase crop productivity with the aim of ensuring food self-sufficiency and food security had been increased. The humanitarian situation improved during the second half of 2000. However, some communities remained vulnerable, and recovery from the widespread destruction of September 1999 had moved forward slowly.

As at 31 December, the strength of the UNTAET military component was 7,886 all ranks, including 120 military observers, from 31 countries. The international civilian police comprised 1,402 officers from 38 countries and included two rapid response units of 120 each from Jordan and Portugal. UNTAET comprised 2,668 civilian staff, 877 of whom were internationally recruited and 1,791 locally recruited. In addition, the mission was supported by 513 UN Volunteers.

The Secretary-General observed that during the period under review there had been a concerted effort to accelerate the transfer of authority to the Timorese. While the United Nations retained overall responsibility, he envisaged the further progressive delegation of authority, until authority was finally transferred to the Government of the independent State. That was an innovative approach, which required understanding and flexibility from all involved. Another innovation was the involvement of UNTAET in the creation of ETDF as a consequence of its responsibility to prepare East Timor for independence. The establishment of that force was coordinated by the East Timor Transitional Administration, but depended entirely on the support of the Governments that had expressed their readiness to assist. The question of security remained a matter of concern; although infiltration by militia groups from West Timor had decreased, the threat was bound to remain as long as the Government of Indonesia did not disband those groups. That was also an essential step towards the overdue solution of the problem of the refugees in West Timor.

By decision 55/435 of 19 December, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the item "The situation in East Timor during its transition to independence" and included it in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth (2001) session.

Financing of UN operations

During 2000, the General Assembly considered the financing of two UN missions in East Timor—UNAMET and UNTAET. UNAMET was established by Security Council resolution 1246 (1999) [YUN 1999, p. 283] to conduct the 1999 popular consultation on East Timor's autonomy [ibid., p. 288]; its mandate was extended until 30 November 1999 by resolution 1262(1999) [ibid., p. 287]. UNTAET was established by Council resolution 1272(1999) [ibid., p. 293] to administer East Timor during its transition to independence.

UNAMET

The General Assembly had before it the Secretary-General's March report on UNAMET's financing [A/54/775], which requested an additional appropriation of $26,913,800 gross ($26,499,800 net), representing the difference between expenditures and the initial appropriation, and assessment in the amount of $23,241,600 gross ($22,827,600 net). The Assembly also considered a related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) [A/54/802], which concurred with the Secretary-General's request.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 April [meeting 95], on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/54/505/Add.1], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/20 B without vote [agenda item 169].

Financing of the United Nations Mission in East Timor

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in East Timor and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Mission in East Timor an additional amount of 26,913,800 United States dollars gross (26,499,800 dollars net);

3. Also decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 23,241,600 dollars gross (22,827,600 dollars net) among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, 50/451 B of 23 December 1995 and 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1999, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999.

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the financing of UNAMET would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458) and that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the item at that session (decision 55/455).

UNTAET

On 7 March [A/54/769], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report on the financing of UNTAET, which contained the proposed budget for the period from 1 December 1999 to 30 June 2000 for the maintenance of the mission, which amounted to $386,341,400 gross ($377,425,700 net).

On 17 March [A/54/804], ACABQ recommended that the Assembly appropriate for the establishment and maintenance of UNTAET an amount of $350 million for the period from 1 December 1999 to 30 June 2000, inclusive of the amount of $200 million authorized by the Assembly in resolution 54/246 A [YUN 1999, p. 297]. In addition, ACABQ recommended that the Assembly authorize the assessment of $150 million for the period from 1 December 1999 to 30 June 2000, taking into account the $200 million already assessed on Member States in accordance with resolution 54/246 A. ACABQ recommended that the UN Secretariat submit the budget for the mission for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 in September 2000, taking fully into account the results of the review referred to in the Secretary-General's January 2000 report on UNTAET (see p. 279). ACABQ trusted that the Secretariat would be able to gain performance experience and estimate more accurately UNTAET's requirements for the next financial period. Should the Secretary-General require additional resources for the maintenance of UNTAET from 1 July to the time the Assembly authorized the budget for 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, ACABQ recommended that the Secretariat submit a progress report in May 2000 indicating such additional requirements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 April [meeting 95], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/687/Add.1], adopted resolution 54/246 B without vote [agenda item 173].

Financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1272(1999) of 25 October 1999 regarding the establishment of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor,

Recalling its resolution 54/246 A of 23 December 1999,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Transitional Administration are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Transitional Administration, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the trust fund for the multinational force,

Noting also with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Trust Fund for the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor, and inviting further such contributions to the Fund,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Transitional Administration with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor as at 24 March 2000, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 130.8 million United States dollars, representing 65 per cent of the total assessed contributions, notes that some 18 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Transitional Administration in full and on time;

5. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

6. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

7. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

8. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Transitional Administration, and for this purpose requests the Secretary-General to speed up the implementation of the asset management system at all peacekeeping missions in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/1 A of 15 October 1997;

9. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Transitional Administration is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to employ locally recruited staff for the Transitional Administration against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Transitional Administration;

12. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor the amount of 350 million dollars gross (341,084,300 dollars net) for the establishment and maintenance of the Transitional Administration for the period from 1 December 1999 to 30 June 2000, inclusive of the amount of 200 million dollars authorized by the General Assembly in its resolution 54/246 A;

13. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 150 million dollars gross (141,084,300 dollars net) for the period from 1 December 1999 to 30 June 2000, taking into account the amount of 200 million dollars already apportioned among Member States in accordance with General Assembly resolution 54/246 A and in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21

December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, 50/451 B of 23 December 1995 and 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1999 and 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999;

14. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 13 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 8,915,700 dollars approved for the Transitional Administration for the period from 1 December 1999 to 30 June 2000;

15. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

16. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Transitional Administration;

17. Invites voluntary contributions to the Transitional Administration in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

18. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor".

On 10 March [A/54/769/Add.1], the Secretary-General submitted a report containing the first full 12-month proposed budget for UNTAET's maintenance from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, which amounted to $584,138,100 gross ($567,377,100 net).

On 19 May [A/54/875], ACABQ drew attention to a 5 May letter on the financing of UNTAET from the UN Controller to ACABQ's Chairman. The Controller said that the comprehensive review of UNTAET's requirements commenced during the third week of April and that it was expected to be finalized in late June. ACABQ recommended that the Assembly authorize commitment authority of $292,069,000 gross ($283,688,500 net) and that it also authorize assessment of $200 million. In addition, it recommended that the funding be granted without prejudice to recommendations that might be made to the Assembly in the autumn of 2000.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 June [meeting 98], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/687/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/246 C without vote [agenda item 173].

Financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1272(1999) of 25 October 1999 regarding the establishment of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor,

Recalling its resolutions 54/246 A of 23 December 1999 and 54/246 B of 7 April 2000 on the financing of the Transitional Administration,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Transitional Administration are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Transitional Administration, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the trust fund for the multinational force,

Noting with appreciation also that voluntary contributions have been made to the Trust Fund for the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor, and inviting further such contributions to the Fund,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Transitional Administration with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor as at 30 April 2000, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 217.2 million United States dollars, representing some 63 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Transitional Administration to the period ending 30 June 2000, notes that some 2 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Transitional Administration in full and on time;

5. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

6. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

7. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

8. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Transitional Administration, and for this purpose requests the Secretary-General to speed up the implementation of the asset management system at all peacekeeping missions in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/1 A of 15 October 1997;

9. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Transitional Administration is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Transitional Administration against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Transitional Administration;

12. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments in an amount not exceeding 292,069,000 dollars gross (283,688,500 dollars net) for the operation of the Transitional Administration for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2000;

13. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 200 million dollars gross (194,261,300 dollars net) for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2000 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, 50/451 B of 23 December 1995 and 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999;

14. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 13 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 5,738,700 dollars approved for the Transitional Administration for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2000;

15. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

16. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Transitional Administration;

17. Invites voluntary contributions to the Transitional Administration in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

On 3 October [A/55/443 & Corr.1-3], the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly a report on the financing of UNTAET that contained the proposed budget for the 12-month period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 and which superseded the budget submission contained in his 10 March report (see above). The new proposed budget amounted to $592,306,800 gross ($574,466,400 net).

On 30 October [A/55/531], ACABQ recommended that the Assembly appropriate for the maintenance of UNTAET an amount of $563 million for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, reflecting a reduction of approximately 5 per cent from the amount proposed by the Secretary-General. It further recommended that the Assembly approve the assessment of $363 million and that the unencumbered balance of $48,973,500 as at 30 June 2000 be credited among Member States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 89], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/55/664], adopted resolution 55/228 A without vote [agenda item 134].

Financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1272 (1999) of 25 October 1999 regarding the establishment of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor,

Recalling its resolution 54/246 A of 23 December 1999 on the financing of the Transitional Administration and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 54/246 C of 15 June 2000,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Transitional Administration are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

9. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

10. Decides to retain the post of the Chief of Staff to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General at the level of Assistant Secretary-General;

11. Requests the Secretary-General, in future budget proposals and pending further guidance by the Advisory Committee, to consider using United Nations Volunteers for the fourteen posts mentioned in paragraph 60 of his report, taking into account the opinion of the Advisory Committee in paragraph 38 of its report, and bearing in mind the need of the Transitional Administration for human rights officers in the light of the evolution of the situation in the territory;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Transitional Administration is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

13. Further requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Transitional Administration against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Transitional Administration;

14. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor the amount of 563 million dollars gross (546,051,600 dollars net) for the operation of the Transitional Administration for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, inclusive of the amount of 292,069,000 dollars gross (283,688,500 dollars net) authorized by the General Assembly in its resolution 54/246 C;

15. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement and taking into account the amount of 200 million dollars gross (194,261,300 dollars net) already apportioned in accordance with General Assembly resolution 54/246 C for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2000, to apportion the additional amount of 128,416,670 dollars gross (124,268,800 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 2000 to 31 January 2001 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of its resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996, 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and 55/236 of 23 December 2000 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, 50/451 B of 23 December 1995 and 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999, the scale of assessments for the year 2000 to be applied against a portion thereof, that is, 81.5 million dollars gross (78,764,500 dollars net), which is the amount pertaining to the period ending 31 December 2000, and the scale of assessments for the year 2001 to be applied against the balance, that is, 46,916,670 dollars gross (45,504,300 dollars net) for the period from 1 to 31 January 2001;

16. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 15 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated additional staff assessment income of 4,147,870 dollars approved for the Transitional Administration for the period from 1 July 2000 to 31 January 2001, 2,735,500 dollars being the amount pertaining to the period ending 31 December 2000, and the balance, that is, 1,412,370 dollars, for the period from 1 to 31 January 2001;

17. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion among Member States the amount of 234,583,330 dollars gross (227,521,500 dollars net) for the period from 1 February to 30 June 2001, at a monthly rate of 46,916,666 dollars gross (45,504,300 dollars net), in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2001, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Transitional Administration beyond 31 January 2001;

18. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 17 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 7,061,830 dollars approved for the Transitional Administration for the period from 1 February to 30 June 2001;

19. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

20. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Transitional Administration;

21. Invites voluntary contributions to the Transitional Administration in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

22. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor".

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the financing of UNTAET would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458) and that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item at that session (decision 55/455).

Iraq

During 2000, relations between the Security Council and Iraq continued to be overshadowed by the stalemate precipitated by the withdrawal in December 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 262] of the United Nations Special Commission (UNSCOM) and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)—both mandated by the Council's ceasefire resolution 687(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 172] to disarm Iraq of its weapons of mass destruction and to ensure that it did not reconstitute or reacquire them. UNSCOM's monitoring and verification responsibilities were assumed by the United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission (UNMOVIC), which was established by Council resolution 1284(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 230] and began operations on 1 March 2000. However, since Iraq refused to accept resolution 1284(1999), UNMOVIC was not able to carry out its work inside Iraqi territory. In February 2000, the Secretary-General appointed Hans Blix as Executive Chairman of UNMOVIC and in March he nominated 16 UNMOVIC Commissioners. UNMOVIC submitted to the Council three quarterly reports, while IAEA submitted biannual reports on its activities. In January, IAEA inspectors were able to verify the presence of known nuclear material under safeguards during an inspection carried out in Iraq.

The Secretary-General transmitted three reports on the repatriation or return of all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals from Iraq, and on the return of all Kuwaiti property seized by Iraq during its 1990 invasion and occupation of Kuwait [YUN 1990, p. 189]. Yuli M. Vorontsov was appointed as the high-level Coordinator for compliance by Iraq with its obligations regarding the repatriation of Kuwaiti nationals and return of Kuwaiti property.

The United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM) continued to carry out its functions of surveillance, control and investigation in the demilitarized zone between Kuwait and Iraq, and maintained liaison with authorities from both countries. The Council, on the Secretary-General's recommendation, decided to maintain UNIKOM and to review its functions in 2001.

In the context of the continuing sanctions against Iraq, the temporary arrangements for the humanitarian programme for the Iraqi people, based on an oil-for-food formula, was extended twice during the year, each time for another 180 days. The Council, based on the recommendations of a group of experts that visited Iraq in January, decided to increase Iraqi spending on oil equipment and spare parts, in order to sustain production levels and to offset permanent damage to oil-bearing structures.

By decisions 55/431 and 55/432 of 14 December, the General Assembly deferred consideration of, respectively, Israel's armed aggression against Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system on the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security; and the consequences of Iraq's occupation of and aggression against Kuwait. It included both items in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth (2001) session.

UN Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission and IAEA activities

UNMOVIC

In 2000, UNMOVIC assumed UNSCOM's responsibilities connected with verifying Iraq's compliance with its weapons-related obligations under resolution 687(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 172] and other relevant resolutions, established and operated a reinforced ongoing monitoring and verification (OMV) system and addressed unresolved disarmament issues within that framework. UNMOVIC was established on 17 December 1999 by Security Council resolution 1284(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 230] as a successor body to UNSCOM.

On 26 January [S/2000/60], the Secretary-General recommended that Hans Blix (Sweden) be appointed Executive Chairman of UNMOVIC. On 27 January [S/2000/61], the Council approved the appointment. The Council had earlier considered Rolf Ekéus but did not reach a consensus on his nomination.

On 7 February [S/2000/90], the Secretary-General said that he had appointed Mr. Blix as the Executive Chairman effective 1 March. On 10 March [S/2000/207], the Secretary-General appointed 16 UNMOVIC Commissioners, who would review the implementation of resolution 1284(1999) and other relevant resolutions and provide advice and guidance to the Executive Chairman. Mr. Blix would chair meetings of the College of Commissioners.

Organizational plan

On 6 April [S/2000/292 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council the organizational plan for UNMOVIC, as called for in paragraph 6 of resolution 1284(1999). The plan, which was prepared by the Executive Chairman, described the Commission's management and organizational structure, staffing and responsibilities as well as Iraq's obligations. On 13 April [S/2000/311], the Council approved the plan and looked forward to consultations on its implementation.

By a 14 April letter to the Secretary-General [S/2000/321], the Russian Federation said that UNMOVIC's organizational plan did not clearly prescribe procedures for conducting inspections, taking samples or aerial monitoring and failed to mention anything about the need to reach agreement on those procedures with Baghdad. It was in connection with those questions, Russia asserted, that many serious problems arose during the period in which UNSCOM was operating in Iraq. The practical aspects of the new Commission's activities required substantial revision.

Reports of UNMOVIC (June, August, December). As called for by Security Council resolution 1284(1999), UNMOVIC submitted to the Council, through the Secretary-General, three quarterly reports, on 1 June [S/2000/516], 28 August [S/2000/835] and 1 December [S/2000/1134]. The June report, covering the period from 1 March to 31 May, noted that the first meeting of the UNMOVIC College of Commissioners took place on 23 and 24 May. Representatives of IAEA and the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW) also attended. The Commissioners discussed, among other matters, possible operational procedures for UNMOVIC, the recruitment and training of personnel and the Joint Unit for Export/Import Monitoring. The Joint Unit continued to receive notifications from States and international organizations of exports to Iraq of dual-use goods subject to the provisions of Council resolution 1051(1996) [YUN 1996, p. 218]. Despite its obligations under that resolution, Iraq had not provided UNMOVIC with any notifications during the review period. A technical and cultural training programme had been created to establish a sufficient pool of experts for work related to inspection and monitoring in Iraq on behalf of the United Nations.

The August report, which covered the period from 1 June to 31 August, stated that the second meeting of the College of Commissioners took place on 23 and 24 August. Observers from IAEA and OPCW attended. The Executive Chairman reported on the results of the first UNMOVIC training course and on recruitment, and introduced discussion papers on operating procedures under a reinforced OMV system and on a draft action plan for the resumption of activities in Iraq. The Commissioners had before them an informal paper on the experience of UNSCOM in respect to modalities for the inspection of sensitive sites. They also discussed procedures applied, and to be applied, for the operations in the field, in particular for sensitive sites. The recruitment and training of staff continued, with the first UNMOVIC training programme being held from 11 July to 10 August. UNMOVIC's staff began a systematic review of the Commission's databases with a view to creating a single, secure, central system, which would also be capable of being accessed from the Commission's premises in Baghdad. The staff had also started examining inspection procedures in order to define appropriate operational procedures to be applied under the reinforced OMV system. Iraq failed to provide the Export/Import Joint Unit with any notifications or other mandated declarations during the period under review.

The December report covered the period from 1 September to 30 November. The principal issue discussed at the third meeting of the College of Commissioners (27-29 November) was preparations for the commencement of work by UNMOVIC in Iraq. The Commissioners were consulted on and supported principles for sampling and analysis, which would form the basis of detailed guidelines for such activities in Iraq. The College was also briefed on the oil-for-food programme by the Office of the Iraq Programme (OIP). The Executive Chairman continued his practice of providing monthly briefings to the President of the Security Council. The Commission was preparing a web site and had distributed a first newsletter to all experts who had undergone UNMOVIC training. The second month-long training course commenced on 7 November and would conclude on 8 December. The Commission continued to revise and update the lists of dual-use items and materials to which the export/import monitoring mechanism applied. Work on the elaboration of inspection guidelines and procedures for use in the field continued.

IAEA

IAEA reports (April and October). In accordance with Security Council resolution 1051 (1996), IAEA submitted to the Security Council, through the Secretary-General, two consolidated six-monthly reports, on 11 April [S/2000/300] and on 11 October [S/2000/983], on the Agency's verification activities in Iraq. The Agency had not been in a position, since its withdrawal from Iraq on 16 December 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 267], to implement its mandate in Iraq. It was thus unable to provide any measure of assurance with regard to Iraq's compliance with its obligations under relevant Council resolutions. In that context, IAEA had not received from Iraq the semi-annual declarations required by the Agency's OMV plan. Those declarations were the principal means for Iraq to provide information regarding the use and any changes in the use of certain facilities, installations and sites and regarding the inventory and location of certain materials, equipment and isotopes. The most recent declarations were submitted in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 265].

In the April report, IAEA noted that, in keeping with the safeguards agreement between Iraq and IAEA pursuant to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2373(XXII) [YUN 1968, p. 17], a five-person IAEA team carried out a physical inventory verification of the nuclear material in Iraq between 22 and 25 January 2000. The Agency inspectors were able to verify the presence of known nuclear material subject to safeguards, consisting of low enriched, natural and depleted uranium. Iraq provided the necessary cooperation for the inspection team to perform its activities effectively and efficiently, even though the inspection, planned for December 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 228], could take place only in January because of Iraq's delay in providing the necessary visas. The inspection had the limited objective of verifying the nuclear material in question and was not intended, nor could it serve, as a substitute for IAEA's activities under the relevant Council resolutions.

In October, IAEA noted that in May it had been able to complete the destruction, in Jordan, of a filament-winding machine and its associated spare parts and raw materials owned by Iraq. Procurement of that equipment and material had been initiated by Iraq in mid-1990 for use in its clandestine uranium enrichment gas centrifuge programme. IAEA coordinated its efforts with UNMOVIC. The Agency had refined the structure and content of its information system in the areas of computer support to inspections and analytical tools. An enhanced analysis of the available original Iraqi documentation had also continued, as well as an assessment of the results accumulated through the past inspection process. Those activities had confirmed the validity of the Agency's technically coherent picture of Iraq's past clandestine nuclear programme.

Iraq-Kuwait

POWs and Kuwaiti property

On 10 February [S/2000/112], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that, in accordance with resolution 1284(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 230], he had appointed Yuli M. Vorontsov (Russian Federation) as the high-level Coordinator for compliance by Iraq with its obligations regarding the repatriation or return of all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals or their remains, as well as the return of all Kuwaiti property. The Council took note of the appointment on 14 February [S/2000/113].

Reports of Secretary-General (April, June, December). Pursuant to Council resolution 1284(1999), the Secretary-General submitted reports in April [S/2000/347 & Corr.1], June [S/2000/575] and December [S/2000/1197] on compliance by Iraq with its obligations regarding the repatriation or return of all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals or their remains, and on the return of all Kuwaiti property, including archives, seized by Iraq.

In April, the Secretary-General said the high-level Coordinator, at the initial stage of his efforts, would have the task of determining the factual up-to-date situation with the repatriation of Kuwaiti and third-country nationals and establishing working contacts with the whole range of parties that had dealt with the issue, while taking into account the recommendations of the 1999 panel on prisoners of war (POWs) and Kuwaiti property (the Amorim panel) [YUN 1999, p. 235]. The Coordinator's ultimate goal was to assist in closing the largest possible number of files.

The Coordinator, upon his arrival in New York in late March, held numerous meetings with various representatives of parties concerned with his mandated activities. He subsequently visited the headquarters of ICRC in Geneva, the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC) in Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, and the League of Arab States (LAS) in Cairo, Egypt. He also held high-level meetings with authorities in Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and Egypt, during which he emphasized the fact that the work of ascertaining the fate of the missing military personnel and civilians had been assigned to the Tripartite Commission. Established in 1991 under ICRC auspices, the Commission dealt with the question of persons still unaccounted for, and was made up of representatives of France, Iraq, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, the United Kingdom and the United States. A Technical Subcommittee was established in 1994 to expedite the search for all persons for whom inquiry files had been opened. However, at the end of 1998, Iraq had decided not to participate in the Commission's work, arguing that it no longer held captive Kuwaiti prisoners in its territory and, thus, the issue had become one of missing persons, not POWs.

The activities of the Tripartite Commission and its Technical Subcommittee had resulted in the repatriation, with Iraq's participation, of some 6,000 Kuwaiti POWs through ICRC and other channels, but a significant number of people still remained unaccounted for. Though Iraq had not provided any information since 1998, it had submitted to ICRC requests to ascertain the fate and whereabouts of more than 1,000 Iraqis not accounted for after the withdrawal of Iraqi forces from Kuwait. In that connection, the Kuwaiti authorities informed the Coordinator that they had no Iraqi POWs on their territory except several common criminals of Iraqi origin. They also stated that they were prepared to allow Iraqi representatives, accompanied by ICRC and in the presence of observers from international organizations, to conduct search and identification operations inside Kuwait.

The Secretary-General observed that ICRC's independent dialogue with Iraq needed to proceed uninterrupted and that its principle of independence and confidentiality should be respected. Iraq's response to the issue of missing persons, as a purely humanitarian one, would become a yardstick by which the international community would measure Iraq's position on other outstanding problems. The Coordinator would continue to motivate the parties to cooperate in the framework of different existing mechanisms, taking into account the fact that the resolution of humanitarian issues could not wait for political movement on other outstanding matters.

In June, the Secretary-General described action taken by the United Nations since the end of the Gulf war on the return of Kuwaiti property, including archives, seized by Iraq. In 2000, the Coordinator, guided by the recommendations of the Amorim panel, conducted consultations with Kuwaiti officials, as well as with Security Council members, LAS and OIC. He noted, in particular, attention paid to the issue in the final document adopted by the Thirteenth Ministerial Conference of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (Cartagena, Colombia, 8-9 April) [A/54/917-S/2000/580]. The Secretary-General, in a meeting with Iraq's Minister for Foreign Affairs (Havana, Cuba, 13 April), urged Iraq, among other things, to cooperate on the return of Kuwaiti property and archives. The Iraqi interlocutors reconfirmed that the issue should be addressed under Council resolution 687(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 172].

On the basis of information provided by his contacts, the Coordinator concluded that Iraq had returned a substantial quantity of property over a nine-year period of time, though there remained many items that Iraq was under obligation to return to Kuwait. He also noted that it might never be possible to verify, with complete certainty, that all items in Iraq's possession had been returned, and that the continuing absence of a credible explanation from Iraq with regard to the missing property delayed the closure of the property issue.

The Secretary-General observed that, in order to minimize costs, he would consider asking the Commander of UNIKOM to assign an existing international staff member to help to facilitate the return of property.

In December, the Secretary-General, reporting on activities related to the repatriation of all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals or their remains, and the return of Kuwaiti property, said that in his meetings with dignitaries attending the UN Millennium Summit in September (see p. 47) he repeatedly raised the issue and requested that all necessary assistance and co-operation be extended to the Coordinator. Iraq's Minister for Foreign Affairs reiterated that his country would not cooperate with anyone affiliated with Council resolution 1284(1999), which continued to be rejected by Iraq. However, before the Secretary-General attended the OIC summit meeting (Doha, Qatar, 12-13 November), the Permanent Representative of Iraq to the United Nations welcomed a comprehensive dialogue with the United Nations. At the OIC summit, the Secretary-General had several high-level exchanges on the issue of Kuwaiti missing persons. Many interlocutors referred to the meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the Gulf Cooperation Council (Jeddah, September), when they urged the Iraqi Government to respond to and cooperate with Council resolution 1284(1999), in particular on the issue of repatriation and return of Kuwaiti and Saudi nationals, as well as Kuwaiti property. In their final communiqué, participants in the summit called for the prompt resolution of the issue of Kuwaiti prisoners and missing persons, as well as the nationals of other countries, in collaboration with ICRC. They also called for cooperation on Iraq's proposals concerning missing Iraqi nationals under the auspices of ICRC.

The Secretary-General addressed the issue of missing persons during a meeting in New York on 31 August with the Speaker of the Kuwaiti Parliament. The Speaker stressed that his country considered that issue as entirely humanitarian, and therefore it should be separated from any other disputes relating to Iraq-Kuwait relations.

On the margins of the Millennium Summit, the high-level Coordinator had numerous discussions on the issue of Kuwaiti missing persons and property with a view to exploring new venues of cooperation. During the period under review, he also visited Kuwait and ICRC headquarters in Geneva. Despite numerous bilateral contacts between ICRC and the parties concerned, there had been no significant progress, except in the case of a missing Saudi pilot, whose remains had been retrieved by a joint Iraqi-Saudi operation. The Coordinator drew to ICRC's attention the fact that Iraqi officials had received assistance from UNIKOM in locating and accessing grave sites of Iraqi soldiers within the demilitarized zone.

Briefing the Security Council on 17 August, the Coordinator pointed to the intense exchanges on the issue of the missing persons between Kuwait and Iraq. In that context, some Council members observed that the international community should not be selective and that all missing persons, whether Kuwaitis, Iraqis or others, should be taken into account. The Coordinator, on that occasion, reiterated that his mandate was limited to Kuwaiti and third-country nationals. The Coordinator also maintained contacts with LAS and OIC, and visited the United Nations Compensation Commission (UNCC). He was informed that UNCC could do nothing for claimants seeking an order compelling the return of irreplaceable objects and other tangible properties stolen by Iraq during its 1990 occupation of Kuwait, since UNCC's mandate was to award monetary compensation for losses; it had no mechanism for requiring or enforcing specific performance. UNCC was also not in a position to consider claims for compensation for the families of the missing persons.

The Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights, having held discussions with Iraqi and Kuwaiti officials on the issue of missing persons, noted that Iraq was willing to extend its cooperation to ICRC and to have bilateral meetings with Kuwaiti representatives.

Regarding the return of Kuwaiti property, Iraq continued to maintain that it had returned a large part of the property found in Iraq and had expressed its readiness to return what it might find in the future. Kuwait maintained that there had been no progress on the priority issues, such as the return of the national archives, military equipment and museum items.

The Secretary-General observed that the Iraqi authorities continued to refuse cooperation with the Coordinator. However, he welcomed the fact that ICRC was continuing efforts to gather information on all missing persons through direct contacts with all parties. As Iraq claimed to seek a resolution to the issue of its own missing nationals, it was essential that it exercised an appropriate understanding of the position held by Kuwait and other countries concerned.

Communications. On 23 May [S/2000/478], Kuwait transmitted to the Secretary-General and the Security Council an OIC position paper concerning the issue of the Kuwaiti and third-country prisoners and missing persons in Iraq. The OIC Secretary-General, since assuming office in 1997, had called for sustained action to remedy the consequences of Iraq's invasion of Kuwait, foremost among them the matter of the Kuwaiti POWs and missing persons. All of the final communiqués and decisions adopted by successive ministerial conferences had called for the return of the Kuwaiti POWs and missing persons to their homeland and their families. OIC would continue to cooperate with the United Nations and to support the high-level Coordinator.

On 26 May [S/2000/502], in identical letters to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President, Iraq said that, as a State member of OIC, it was unaware of the position paper that Kuwait claimed originated with OIC. In fact, Iraq stated that the submission by Kuwait of that unofficial and illegal paper represented a selective attempt to politicize the missing persons issue.

In identical letters of 21 June to the Secretary-General and the Council President [S/2000/622], Iraq submitted a 19 June letter from its Minister for Foreign Affairs to the OIC Secretary-General, seeking clarification of the facts concerning the alleged position paper transmitted by Kuwait. Iraq noted that OIC had provided verbal assurances that the paper was a set of talking points drawn up by an official of the OIC secretariat in connection with a visit by the OIC Secretary-General to Kuwait and that it had no official or legal standing. Iraq added that Kuwait's letter damaged the credibility of OIC, which was required to adopt a position of neutrality on issues that arose between two of its members.

In identical letters of 12 July to the Secretary-General and the Council President [S/2000/686], Kuwait transmitted the text of a resolution adopted by the Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers at its twenty-seventh session (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, 27-30 June) entitled "The consequences of Iraqi aggression against the State of Kuwait and the necessity for Iraq to implement all the relevant Security Council resolutions". Kuwait claimed that the resolution was cogent proof of the falsehood of Iraq's allegations, as it confirmed that OIC was in full accord with all the points made in the position paper that Kuwait had circulated. The resolution, among other things, called on Iraq to resume full and effective cooperation with ICRC and with the Tripartite Commission in the context of discharging its obligations under Council resolution 1284(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 230] and reaffirmed the need for compliance with resolutions 686(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 171] and 687(1991) [ibid., p. 172] concerning the release of Kuwaiti and third-country POWs and the return of Kuwaiti property. It also emphasized that Iraq had to respect the security, territorial integrity and political independence of Kuwait.

In identical letters of 22 July to the Secretary-General and the Council President [S/2000/732], Iraq said that Kuwait's 12 July letter failed to mention the reservations expressed by certain OIC members, as well as the written reservations to the OIC resolution that Iraq asked to be included in the documents of the meeting. Iraq insisted that all POWs had been repatriated and that all Kuwaiti property in its possession had been returned. Iraq also highlighted a number of the resolution's provisions that affirmed respect for Iraq's sovereignty and expressed sympathy for its people.

Related communications. In communications addressed to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President on 13 June [S/2000/569], 31 August [S/2000/847] and 4 October [S/2000/952], Kuwait detailed infiltrations by Iraqi citizens into Kuwaiti territory, movements in the demilitarized zone by Iraqi naval units and the assembly of 500 Iraqis near the border with Kuwait. On 9 August [S/2000/791], 18 September [S/2000/876] and 27 September [S/2000/918], Kuwait informed the Secretary-General and the Council President that senior Iraqi officials had made threatening statements against Kuwait and other countries in the region.

In 11 October [S/2000/982] and 27 October [S/2000/1047] letters to the Secretary-General, Iraq responded to Kuwait's allegations.

UN Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

The United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM), established by Security Council resolution 687(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 172], continued in 2000 to discharge its functions in accordance with its terms of reference, as expanded by resolution 806(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 406].

UNIKOM operations involved surveillance, control, investigation and liaison. Surveillance of the demilitarized zone (DMZ), an area about 200 to 240 kilometres long and extending 10 kilometres into Iraq and 5 kilometres into Kuwait, was based on ground and air patrols and observation points. Control operations included static checkpoints, random checks and maintenance of a mobile reserve force. For operational purposes, the DMZ was divided into the northern and southern sectors, with 10 and 7 patrol/observation bases, respectively. Investigation teams were stationed in those sectors and at UNIKOM headquarters. Continuous liaison was maintained with Iraqi and Kuwaiti authorities at all levels.

The military observers were responsible for patrol, observation, investigation and liaison activities. The infantry battalion, deployed at Camp Khor, Kuwait, at a company camp in Al-Abdali, at platoon camps in two DMZ sectors, and in the easternmost patrol/observation base on the DMZ's Iraqi side, conducted armed patrols within those areas and manned checkpoints at border-crossing sites, making random checks in co-operation with Iraqi and Kuwaiti liaison officers. It also provided security for UNIKOM personnel and installations.

UNIKOM maintained headquarters at Umm Qasr in Iraq, liaison offices in Baghdad and Kuwait City and a support centre at Camp Khor.

Reports of Secretary-General (March and September). UNIKOM's activities were described in two reports by the Secretary-General, covering the period 24 September 1999 to 30 March 2000 [S/2000/269] and 31 March to 21 September 2000 [S/2000/914].

The reports noted that the situation in the DMZ remained generally calm. However, there had been no UNIKOM flights over the Iraqi side of the DMZ since they were suspended in December 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 262], when Iraqi authorities informed UNIKOM that they could not guarantee the safety of such flights due to Iraq's conflict with the United States and the United Kingdom regarding the no-fly zones.

DMZ violations increased to 77 during the first period but dropped to 42 during the second period. Most of the ground violations occurred when Iraqi vehicles using the only hard-surface road along the border crossed in and out of Kuwaiti territory, while the maritime violations involved Iraqi boats observed in Kuwaiti territorial waters. The weapons violations consisted of incidents of single gunshots fired during the night. Most of the air violations were by aircraft generally flying too high to be identified. During the two reporting periods, UNIKOM received twelve official complaints, eight from Kuwait and four from Iraq. Following a lengthy period of preparation, the Khwar 'Abd Allah Waterway Monitoring Project commenced operation on 15 February, under the command of the Force Commander. Its area of responsibility covered the waterways and the land area patrolled by UNIKOM from a patrol and observation base on the Al Faw peninsula. It also had operational and logistical responsibility for three patrol and observation bases. UNIKOM continued to provide security and logistical support for ICRC's humanitarian activities.

The Secretary-General observed that UNIKOM received the cooperation of the Iraqi and Kuwaiti authorities in the performance of its tasks and recommended that it be maintained in view of its continued contribution to the maintenance of calm and stability in the DMZ.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council informed the Secretary-General on 5 April [S/2000/286] and on 5 October [S/2000/960] that, in the light of his reports, it concurred with his recommendation that UNIKOM be maintained. The Council would review the question again by 6 April 2001.

Composition

As at 31 August, UNIKOM, under the command of Major-General John A. Vize (Ireland), had an overall strength of 1,309, comprising 195 military observers from 32 Member States; an infantry battalion of 775 from Bangladesh; 133 support personnel, including a 50-member engineering unit and a 34-member logistic unit from Argentina, a helicopter unit of 35 from Bangladesh and a medical unit of 14 from Germany; plus a civilian staff of 206, of whom 52 were recruited internationally.

Financing

On 15 June [meeting 98], the General Assembly considered the Secretary-General's reports on the financial performance of UNIKOM for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 [A/54/709] and its proposed budget for 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 [A/54/736], together with related report of ACABQ [A/54/841/Add.3]. On the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/510/Add.1], the Assembly adopted resolution 54/18 B without vote [agenda item 130 (a)].

Financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991 and 689(1991) of 9 April 1991, by which the Council decided to establish the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission and to review the question of its termination or continuation every six months,

Recalling also its resolution 45/260 of 3 May 1991 on the financing of the Observation Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 53/229 of 8 June 1999,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observation Mission that are not covered by voluntary contributions are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observation Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Expressing its appreciation for the substantial voluntary contributions made to the Observation Mission by the Government of Kuwait and the contributions of other Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observation Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission as at 30 April 2000, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 13.8 million United States dollars, representing some 5 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission to the period ending 30 June 2000, notes that some 4 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its continued appreciation of the decision of the Government of Kuwait to defray two thirds of the cost of the Observation Mission, effective 1 November 1993;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

5. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Observation Mission in full and on time;

6. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

7. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

8. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Observation Mission, and for this purpose requests the Secretary-General to speed up the implementation of the asset management system at all peacekeeping missions in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/1 A of 15 October 1997;

10. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Observation Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Observation Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

13. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

the amount of 52,710,270 dollars gross (50,287,503 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Observation Mission for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, inclusive of the amount of 2,501,232 dollars gross (2,116,566 dollars net) for the support account for peacekeeping operations and the amount of 391,038 dollars gross (347,937 dollars net) for the United Nations Logistics Base, a two-thirds share of this amount, equivalent to 33,525,000 dollars, to be funded through voluntary contributions from the Government of Kuwait, subject to the review by the Security Council with regard to the question of termination or continuation of the Mission;

14. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, taking into consideration the funding through voluntary contributions from the Government of Kuwait of the two-thirds share of the cost of the Observation Mission, equivalent to 33,525,000 dollars, to apportion among Member States the amount of 19,185,270 dollars gross (16,762,503 dollars net), representing one third of the cost of the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, the said amount to be apportioned at a monthly rate of 1,598,773 dollars gross (1,396,875 dollars net), in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, 50/451 B of 23 December 1995 and 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999, and for the year 2001, subject to the review by the Security Council with regard to the question of termination or continuation of the Mission;

15. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 14 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 2,422,767 dollars approved for the Observation Mission for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001;

16. Decides that, taking into consideration the funding through voluntary contributions from the Government of Kuwait of the two-thirds share of the cost of the Observation Mission, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 14 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 894,967 dollars gross (643,967 dollars net), representing one third of the unencumbered balance of 2,182,900 dollars gross (1,931,900 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999;

17. Decides also that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Observation Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 894,967 dollars gross (643,967 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

18. Decides further that two thirds of the net unencumbered balance of 1,931,900 dollars, equivalent to 1,287,933 dollars, shall be returned to the Government of Kuwait;

19. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

20. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Observation Mission;

21. Invites voluntary contributions to the Observation Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

22. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session, under the item entitled "Financing of the activities arising from Security Council resolution 687(1991)", the sub-item entitled "United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission".

At its resumed fifty-fourth session, the Assembly also considered the Secretary-General's report on the results of efforts to recover overpayment of mission subsistence allowance in UNIKOM [A/54/873], submitted in response to resolution 54/18 A [YUN 1999, p. 240], together with the Board of Auditors' report on the special audit of UNIKOM [A/54/869]. On the Fifth Committee's recommendation [A/54/510/Add.1], and having heard the related oral report of ACABQ's Chairman, the Assembly, on 15 June, decided to revert to the question of the payment of mission subsistence allowance in UNIKOM during the main part of its fifty-fifth session (decision 54/483).

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the financing of the activities arising from Security Council resolution 687(1991) would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458) and that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item at that session (decision 55/455).

Arms and related sanctions

The Security Council's reviews of the sanctions provisions against Iraq for the purposes of determining whether to reduce or lift the prohibitions against it imposed under resolution 687(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 172] remained suspended in 2000, in accordance with resolution 1194(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 257]. As it later reaffirmed in resolution 1205(1998) [ibid., p. 258], the Council would act in accordance with the relevant provisions of resolution 687(1991) on the duration of the prohibitions referred to in that resolution.

Sanctions Committee activities

The Security Council Committee established by resolution 661(1990) [YUN 1990, p. 192] (Sanctions Committee for Iraq), in its annual report [S/2001/738], described its activities from 21 November 1999 to 30 November 2000. In addition to its implementation activities under Council resolutions 986(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475] and 1175(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 274] relating to the humanitarian programme for the Iraqi people (see p. 302), the Committee processed 5,257 notifications and applications from States and international organizations to send humanitarian goods to Iraq under resolutions 661(1990) and 687(1991). Some 2,052 of those requests, with an estimated value of $6,494,407,577 were approved; 288, valued at $681,654,599, were placed on hold for further information or clarification; 2,733, valued at $13,157,809,466, were blocked; and 24, valued at $11,926,797, were withdrawn or annulled.

Pursuant to resolution 1284(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 230], the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council some proposed arrangements concerning financial procedures to facilitate the participation of Iraqi pilgrims in the hajj. Those arrangements were discussed and agreed by the Council, but no agreement was reached with Iraq.

The Committee considered a request from Jordan to authorize regular flights to Baghdad, but was not able to reach a consensus on granting approval. It agreed, however, that it would not refrain from considering ad hoc flights requests separately. The Committee also held a number of consultations at the expert level to discuss proposals by France and the United States on flight-related issues. The Chairman decided that he would continue to circulate communications on flights under the no-objection procedure pending an agreement on new procedures.

With regard to financial matters, the Committee discussed a request from LAS pertaining to the release of frozen funds and decided to gather further information on the matter. It did not reach consensus on an Indian request to establish a line of credit to Iraq. Concerning a request for the release of funds of a Jordanian company, the Committee responded that it was not in a position to agree to the request since investments in Iraq were prohibited, as were the release of frozen Iraqi funds. In connection with the proceeds of illegal Iraqi oil exports that had not been transferred to the UN escrow account under resolution 778(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 320], the Committee sent a letter to all Gulf States reminding them of their responsibilities. The Committee also decided that the UN Treasurer was authorized to open a UN Iraq account in euros, and requested an in-depth report within three months, including the possible costs and benefits for the oil-for-food programme and other financial and administrative implications of the payment for Iraqi oil in euros.

Following a request by Qatar to introduce a ferry service to transport pilgrims, the Committee decided to ask Qatar for further information. It also noted that it was not in a position to approve a request by the United Arab Emirates to transport passenger cars to Iraq. The Committee discussed a report by the independent inspection agents (Cotecna) who had observed that cargo was being transported to Iraq on a United Arab Emirates passenger ferry, and agreed to send a letter to the United Arab Emirates as well as to Bahrain.

The Committee did not grant Turkey's request, first introduced in 1996, to resume the import of petroleum and petroleum products from Iraq for domestic purposes. At an inter-agency meeting (New York, October), UN agencies briefed the Committee on their activities in Iraq. The Committee agreed in principle to the 2000 aerial pesticide campaign of FAO, provided the campaign complied with procedures established for that purpose and the related dual-use items to be shipped to Iraq were submitted for the Committee's consideration on a case-by-case basis.

In addition, the Committee considered a communication from the United States concerning alleged illicit export of petroleum and petroleum-derived products by Iraq through the Persian Gulf. However, no consensus emerged on how to proceed with the issue. It also decided to keep the issue of oil smuggling under review after it had received notification, by the Coordinator of the Multinational Interception Force, that there had been an increase in smuggling activities in the Gulf region during the previous year. The Committee sent letters to the Gulf States, soliciting their assistance in the prevention of further smuggling activities. After receiving a briefing from the OIP Executive Director on monitoring arrangements under the oil-for-food programme, the Committee stressed the need to improve those arrangements and called for a qualitative and quantitative increase in monitoring in the hope that such action would help reduce the number of holds placed on humanitarian supplies to Iraq.

During the year, the Committee issued four reports on the implementation of the arms and related sanctions against Iraq, in accordance with the guidelines approved by Council resolution 700(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 198] for facilitating full international implementation of resolution 687 (1991). The reports were transmitted to the Council on 31 January [S/2000/72], 28 April [S/2000/365], 27 July [S/2000/748] and 25 October [S/2000/1033]. Each report indicated that no State had brought to the Committee's attention any information relating to possible violations of the arms and related sanctions against Iraq committed by other States or foreign nationals; no State or international organization had consulted the Committee on whether certain items fell within the provisions of paragraph 24 of resolution 687(1991), or on cases relating to dual-use or multiple-use items; and no international organization had reported any relevant information requested under the guidelines.

Oil-for-food programme

Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1284(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 230], the Secretary-General reported in January and March on the implementation of certain provisions of that resolution, which dealt with, among other things, the sale and export of petroleum and petroleum products by Iraq.

In accordance with Council resolutions 1281(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 250] and 1302(2000) (see p. 307), each extending for a 180-day period the provisions of resolution 986(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475], which authorized States to import Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products as a temporary measure to finance a humanitarian programme to alleviate the adverse consequence of the sanctions regime on the Iraqi people (also known as the oil-for-food programme) [YUN 1996, p. 225], the Secretary-General and the Sanctions Committee for Iraq separately submitted a report 90 days after entry into force of each resolution and again before the end of the next 90 days. The 180-day periods under the first and second resolutions were extended, respectively, from 12 December 1999 to 8 June 2000 (phase VII) and from 9 June to 5 December (phase VIII).

The reports described progress in implementing the arrangements specified by the resolutions, taking account of the provisions of the 1996 Memorandum of Understanding between the UN Secretariat and the Government of Iraq [YUN 1996, p. 226] and the procedures established by the Sanctions Committee for the resolutions' implementation [ibid., p. 228]. They also described the distribution of humanitarian relief, on behalf of the Government, in the three northern governorates of Erbil, Dahuk and Sulaymaniyah under the United Nations Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme, to complement government distribution in central and southern Iraq, thereby ensuring equitable distribution to all segments of the Iraqi population.

The provisions of resolution 986(1995) were extended for a further 180-day period beginning on 6 December by resolution 1330(2000) (see p. 310), inaugurating phase IX of the programme.

Report of Secretary-General (January). In response to resolution 1284(1999), the Secretary-General reported on the implementation of certain provisions of that resolution [S/2000/22]. In particular, he reviewed the sale and export of petroleum and petroleum products by Iraq; the UN accounts pertaining to the Iraq programme; the processing and approval of applications for contracts; observation and monitoring mechanisms; steps taken to maximize the effectiveness of the arrangements set out in resolution 986(1995); and progress on meeting the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi population.

Due to the numerous reports on the implementation of the humanitarian programme in Iraq that were being submitted to the Council and its Sanctions Committee within short time frames, the Secretary-General recommended a review in order to rationalize the number of reports. Accordingly, taking into account the number and schedule of the reports requested by resolution 1284(1999), the Secretary-General proposed to consolidate a number of reporting requirements under that resolution into one report to be submitted on 10 March.

On 28 January [S/2000/64], the Security Council endorsed the Secretary-General's proposal.

Hajj

Pursuant to resolution 1284(1999), the Secretary-General, in a 24 February letter to the Security Council President [S/2000/166], proposed arrangements to provide for reasonable expenses related to the hajj to be met by funds in the escrow account established by resolution 986(1995). According to Iraq, under the quota for the hajj established by OIC, the total number of pilgrims was 24,700. As Iraq indicated that $2,000 was required per pilgrim, the total amount needed to cover the hajj for Iraq would be $49.4 million. On 1 March [S/2000/167], the Council authorized the Secretary-General to proceed with the arrangements outlined in his letter.

By a 2 March letter to the Council President [S/2000/175], the Secretary-General submitted copies of correspondence between the OIP Executive Director and the Permanent Representative of Iraq to the United Nations pertaining to the hajj. Iraq said that the response to its request came after a considerable delay and there was no longer any time to study any proposal. The pilgrimage season had in fact already begun, and the few Iraqi pilgrims with material means had already arrived at the Holy Place in Saudi Arabia.

Programme review

On 10 March [S/2000/208], the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on progress made in meeting the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people and on the revenues necessary to meet those needs, including recommendations on necessary additions to the allocations for oil spare parts and equipment, on the basis of a comprehensive survey of the condition of the Iraqi oil production sector. In preparing the report, OIP undertook an inter-agency review of the humanitarian programme established by Council resolution 986(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475]. It also reviewed the system of contracting, application processing, obtaining approval by the Sanctions Committee, procurement and shipment, as well as the timely distribution of humanitarian supplies within Iraq—a complex, interdependent chain of activities involving the Sanctions Committee, the Government of Iraq and other Member States, the UN Secretariat and the agencies and programmes concerned, as well as private firms and financial institutions. In addition, the report examined the extent to which the recommendations contained in the Secretary-General's 1998 supplementary report [YUN 1998, p. 270] had been implemented. It also identified additional measures aimed at increasing the effectiveness of the programme, with a view to achieving substantial improvement in both the health and nutritional status of the population and to address the deterioration of the social services infrastructure.

The six-part report also included the results of a comprehensive survey by a group of experts on Iraq's existing oil production and export capacity (see p. 304), as requested in Council resolution 1284(1999), and a 90-day report of phase VII (see p. 305), pursuant to Council resolution 1281(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 250]. The Council had endorsed the Secretary-General's proposal to consolidate a number of reporting requirements under those resolutions into one report (see p. 302).

The Secretary-General observed that, despite difficulties and shortcomings, the programme had provided substantial assistance in all sectors to address pressing humanitarian needs affecting the lives of the Iraqi people. However, improvements in the humanitarian situation had been below expectations. The effectiveness of the programme had suffered considerably, not only because of shortfalls in the funding level, but also because of the very large number of applications placed on hold, in particular those concerning electricity, water and sanitation, transport and telecommunications, which impacted all sectors. The total value of applications placed on hold as at 31 January 2000 was over $1.5 billion. The Secretary-General said that a determined effort had to be made by all parties to collaborate effectively with a view to making further improvements in the programme's implementation. In that regard, he had directed OIP to review further the information requirements of the Sanctions Committee in respect of applications placed on hold. He also directed OIP to identify ways in which the observation mechanism could more effectively track and enhance observation procedures for items of special interest to the Committee.

The Secretary-General noted that some recommendations contained in his 1998 supplementary report remained to be addressed and called on Iraq to take action in that regard. Furthermore, he recommended that the Sanctions Committee should further improve its procedures with a view to expediting the approval of applications; identify with greater clarity the reasons for which applications had been placed on hold so that OIP could provide all available information to facilitate the lifting of such holds; streamline the processes by which such holds could be lifted; renew its efforts to reach consensus on the proposal submitted by OIP in 1999 to improve the current reimbursement system [YUN 1999, p. 242]; review further the options contained in OIP's 1999 paper concerning payment clauses for the 53 per cent account (the account for the 15 central and southern governorates); and address the difficulties encountered in the appointment of additional oil overseers. The Secretary-General also expressed the hope that the Council would find a way to overcome the impediments that continued to prevent Iraqi pilgrims from performing the hajj.

Allocation for oil-production equipment

Communication from Secretary-General. In response to resolution 1281(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 250], the Secretary-General submitted to the Council on 14 January a detailed list of parts and equipment needed to enable Iraq to increase the export of petroleum and petroleum products [S/2000/26]. An expert from Saybolt Nederland BV visited Iraq from 15 to 21 December 1999 to review the situation on the ground and, in consultation with the Government, to prepare the list of spare parts and equipment.

The Secretary-General noted that there had been continuing deterioration of the oil facilities in Iraq, which had been adversely affecting the safety of workers in the oil fields and causing serious environmental damage, as well as damaging oil wells. The deterioration could also cause a breakdown in Iraq's oil production and export capacity, which would have serious repercussions on the implementation of the humanitarian programme. Accordingly, he reiterated his October 1999 recommendation [YUN 1999, p. 248] that the Council approve Iraq's request to increase by $300 million the allocation for oil spare parts and equipment, bringing the total allocation to $600 million under phase VI. The Secretary-General also noted that the funds for such an increase were available.

For phase VII, Iraq had proposed an allocation of $600 million for oil spare parts and equipment, which was twice the amount approved by the Council in resolution 1281 (1999). According to the Saybolt expert, the proposed allocation was a reasonable one. The Secretary-General would keep the matter under review and await the report of the group of six experts that he was dispatching to Iraq from 16 to 31 January to survey the conditions of the Iraqi oil production sector.

Report of Secretary-General (March). As requested in Security Council resolution 1284 (1999), the Secretary-General formed a six-member group of experts, including oil industry experts, to report on Iraq's existing petroleum production and export capacity and on the options for involving foreign oil companies in Iraq's oil sector, including investments. On 10 March, the Secretary-General submitted a report on the group's findings and made recommendations to the Council on necessary additions to the allocation for oil spare parts and equipment [S/2000/208]. The report also reviewed humanitarian needs (see p. 303).

The group, which visited Iraq from 16 to 31 January, said that the Iraqi oil industry continued to be in a lamentable state. It was apparent that the decline in the condition of all sectors of the industry continued, and was accelerating in some cases. That trend would continue, and the ability of the Iraqi oil industry to sustain the current reduced production levels would be seriously compromised unless effective action was taken immediately to reverse the situation. Exports had declined from the 2.2 million barrels per day achieved in phase VI and would probably be sustained at a level of only 1.9 million barrels per day in phase VII. The group of experts estimated that a further production (and therefore export) decline of 5 to 15 per cent would occur unless the delivery of spare parts and equipment was accelerated, and that the spare parts and equipment that had arrived were insufficient to sustain production. The value of investment required to repair the Iraqi oil industry was much greater than the value of investments discussed under phases IV to VII, and would inevitably increase if essential repairs and maintenance were further delayed.

Taking into account the production required for local consumption needs from 1991 to 1996 and production since 1996 under the humanitarian programme, the Iraqi oil industry had produced some 5,000 million barrels of oil with virtually no investment in infrastructure repairs or maintenance. The result had been a massive decline in the condition, effectiveness and efficiency of that infrastructure, coupled with appalling safety conditions and significant environmental damage. In the ensuing period, oil-bearing structures in Iraq had suffered short-term damage, which was considered to be repairable, subject to the expeditious arrival of the necessary spare parts and equipment. Increasingly, however, damage to those structures had become more long-term in nature, resulting in irreversible damage to oilfields and the permanent loss of production and export capacity. Since the initiation of the oil spare parts and equipment programme in phase IV (at a level based on the need to maximize the funds for the humanitarian programme), the price of oil had more than doubled. The increase in income could therefore continue to support the current level of humanitarian programmes, or indeed an increased level, while concurrently allowing a greater allocation for spare parts and equipment, which was needed to support the export of crude oil on which the humanitarian programme depended. In the view of the expert group, it was a logical investment, especially given the volatility of oil prices. At the very least, therefore, the allocation of funds under phases VI and VII at the level of $600 million per phase was urgently required if production levels were to be sustained at, or even near, current levels and in order to offset permanent damage to oil-bearing structures in Iraq.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council approve his 14 January request (see p. 303) to increase the allocations for phases VI and VII to $600 million each. Raising the level of allocations alone was not sufficient, however. A special effort had to be made to approve most expeditiously the applications for oil spare parts and equipment. The total value of applications placed on hold as at 31 January 2000 was $291 million, more than half of the total of $506 million approved.

Security Council consideration. The Security Council, on 24 March, discussed the situation between Iraq and Kuwait [meeting 4120]. Reporting on the humanitarian programme, the Secretary-General said that the rise in the price of oil had greatly increased the value of oil exports, with the result that a much larger income was available for the programme. However, Iraq's oil industry was hampered by a lack of spare parts and equipment. He had therefore recommended a significant increase in the allocation of resources for the purchase of spare parts. He also noted that many of the holds on contract applications imposed by the Sanctions Committee had a negative impact on the programme and on efforts to rehabilitate Iraq's infrastructure. Consequently, there was a need for a mechanism to review those holds. The Secretary-General observed that the humanitarian situation in Iraq posed a serious moral dilemma for the United Nations, which was in danger of losing the argument about who was responsible for the situation: President Saddam Hussein or the United Nations. Even if the oil-for-food programme was implemented perfectly, it might still prove insufficient to satisfy the population's needs.

The Russian Federation said that a significant improvement in the humanitarian and socio-economic situation was impossible under the sanctions regime. The solution was to suspend sanctions in conjunction with a resumption of disarmament monitoring.

The United States insisted that sanctions were essential as long as there remained unanswered questions about Iraq's nuclear, chemical and biological weapons and the missiles to deliver them. The oil-for-food programme would never supplant the responsibilities of the Government of Iraq to provide for the needs of its people.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 March [meeting 4123], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1293(2000). The draft [S/2000/266] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 986(1995) of 14 April 1995, 1111(1997) of 4 June 1997, 1129(1997) of 12 September 1997, 1143(1997) of 4 December 1997, 1153(1998) of 20 February 1998, 1175(1998) of 19 June 1998, 1210(1998) of 24 November 1998, 1242(1999) of 21 May 1999, 1266(1999) of 4 October 1999, 1275(1999) of 19 November 1999, 1280(1999) of 3 December 1999, 1281(1999) of 10 December 1999, and 1284(1999) of 17 December 1999,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 10 March 2000, in particular his recommendation on additions to the current allocation for oil spare parts and equipment pursuant to paragraph 28 of resolution 1284(1999),

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides, pursuant to paragraphs 28 and 29 of resolution 1284(1999), that from the funds in the escrow account produced pursuant to resolutions 1242(1999) and 1281(1999) up to a total of 600 million

United States dollars may be used to meet any reasonable expenses, other than expenses payable in Iraq, that follow directly from the contracts approved in accordance with paragraph 2 of resolution 1175(1998), and expresses its intention to consider favourably the renewal of this provision;

2. Expresses its willingness to consider expeditiously other recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General of 10 March 2000, and the provisions of section C of resolution 1284(1999);

3. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Phase VII

On 12 January [S/2000/18], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that he had approved the distribution plan for the purchase of humanitarian supplies during phase VII. The plan, submitted by Iraq, proposed spending over $3.5 billion dollars on food, medicine, education and infrastructure and included $600 million on oil industry spare parts and equipment. Approval was given on the understanding that the implementation would be governed by Council resolutions 986(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475], 1281(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 250] and 1284(1999) [ibid., p. 230] and the 1996 Memorandum of Understanding between the UN Secretariat and Iraq [YUN 1996, p. 226], and would be without prejudice to the Sanctions Committee procedures.

By a 12 June letter [S/2000/565], the Secretary-General informed the Council President that he had approved the proposals made by Iraq for the inclusion of a housing sector as part IX of the distribution plans for phases VI and VII.

Reports of Secretary-General (March and June). Pursuant to resolution 1281(1999), the Secretary-General issued two progress reports covering the two 90-day periods under phase VII, which began on 12 December 1999. The reports, issued on 10 March (see p. 304) and 1 June [S/2000/520], provided information on all implementation aspects up to 31 January and 30 April, respectively.

Both reports reviewed revenue generation and status of the oil industry; monitoring activities; and the effectiveness, equitability and adequacy of the programme implementation in central and southern Iraq, as well as in the three northern governorates of Dahuk, Erbil and Sulaymaniyah, by focusing on food, health, agriculture, water and sanitation, education, electricity and telecommunications investments and projects.

In his March report, the Secretary-General recommended a series of actions for Iraq and the Sanctions Committee. He also recommended to the Council that it consider forgoing the requirement for a 90-day report on the implementation of the programme, given the amount of weekly and monthly status reports submitted to the Sanctions Committee and the Council.

In his June report, the Secretary-General welcomed steps taken by Iraq in requesting increased food basket items, and noted that it was essential that applications for contracts relating to distribution systems be approved by the Sanctions Committee most expeditiously. Also, the contracts aimed at the rehabilitation of the infrastructure in the electricity, water and sanitation sectors had to be approved without delay. In addition, he recommended that Iraq should increase the level of resources allocated to the education sector. The Secretary-General welcomed ongoing efforts by the Sanctions Committee to improve its procedures and define more specifically its information requirements, which had allowed for a significant number of contracts previously on hold to be approved.

The Secretary-General noted that the Sanctions Committee, as called for in resolution 1284(1999), had endorsed the appointment of a group of experts to approve speedily contracts for oil spare parts and equipment, according to lists of parts and equipment approved by the Committee for each individual project. He urged the Committee to approve most expeditiously the lists of oil spare parts and equipment to be submitted by OIP to the Committee for approval in the first week of June, in order to allow the group of experts to start its work as soon as possible. He also noted that the number of applications on hold remained excessive; as at 31 May 2000 they had reached 582, with a total value of $341 million. The Secretary-General recommended that the Council consider adding a further $300 million to the allocation for oil spare parts and equipment for phase VIII, following the $300 million allocation for phases VI and VII by resolution 1293(2000) (see p. 305). He also recommended that the Council consider authorizing the Committee to review and approve OIP requests for the use of funds in excess of requirements in earlier phases to fund humanitarian requirements under subsequent phases, in order to achieve greater utilization of available resources. The Secretary-General expressed concern over the restrictive practices imposed by Iraq on the allocation of travel permits and escorts, which had affected the unrestricted freedom of movement of UN observers. He requested Iraq to make the necessary adjustments.

The total amount of funds made available for the implementation and operation of the programme from December 1996 to 30 April 2000 was $16.676 billion. The total value of supplies that had been delivered to Iraq was $8.071 billion—including over 14 million of tons of food basket items valued at $4.8 billion and health supplies worth just under $900 million. Additional approved supplies with a total value of $2.7 billion were awaiting delivery. Annex I to the report, which gave the status of the UN Iraq Account established under resolution 986(1995), recorded that, by 30 April, $4,606.1 million had been deposited into the account for phase VII, bringing the total oil sale since the inception of the programme to $25,341.9 million.

Communication from Secretary-General. On 30 June [S/2000/645], the Secretary-General informed the Council that, although phases I and II of the humanitarian programme were closed, $5.1 million and $2 million, respectively, remained available for the purchase of humanitarian supplies. Those funds could address phases IV and V, for which there was a revenue shortfall of $0.5 billion. Accordingly, he requested to know whether the Council would consider authorizing the Sanctions Committee to review and approve OIP requests for the use of funds in excess of requirements in earlier phases to fund humanitarian supplies under subsequent phases, as he had recommended in his June report (see above).

On 10 July [S/2000/663], the Council informed the Secretary-General that it concurred with his recommendation.

Communication. Commenting on the Secretary-General's June report, Iraq, in a 9 July letter [S/2000/668], said that it lacked, among other things, an objective approach to evaluating the repercussions of the implementation of the oil-for-food programme on the humanitarian situation in Iraq. It also ignored the cumulative impact of the sanctions on all the economic, social, cultural, educational and even psychological aspects of life for the Iraqi people.

Sanctions Committee reports (March and June). The Sanctions Committee reports for the first and second 90-day periods of phase VII were transmitted to the Council on 22 March [S/2000/242] and 5 June [S/2000/536], respectively. They noted that the export of petroleum from Iraq had proceeded smoothly, with excellent co-operation among the oil overseer, the independent inspection agents (contracted through Saybolt Nederland BV), Iraq's State Oil Marketing Organization and the national oil purchasers. The overseer continued to advise the Committee on oil pricing mechanisms, oil contract approval and modification, management of the revenue objective and other pertinent questions related to export and monitoring. The overseer also continued to work closely with the Saybolt inspection agents to ensure the effective monitoring of the relevant oil installations and oil liftings. For the fourth consecutive year, the overseer and the inspection agents had received Iraq's full co-operation. The reports noted that, since 1 July 1999, there had been only one oil overseer and that the Committee was committed to finding a viable solution to that matter as soon as possible.

Applications received as at 31 May for the export of humanitarian supplies to Iraq totalled 1,853. Of the 1,620 circulated to the Committee, 1,215 were found eligible for payment from the UN Iraq Account, in the amount of approximately $2.24 billion. Consignments of humanitarian supplies from previous phases confirmed as having arrived in Iraq in total or in partial shipments totalled 4,360 in the first half of phase VII and 5,621 in the second half.

Since the Council's authorization for export to Iraq of oil-production parts and equipment by resolution 1175(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 274] up to 31 May 2000, the number of applications to ship such items had reached 2,526, with a value of $1,378.3 million. Of those, 199 were returned for clarification, 69 were cancelled, 8 were under review by customs experts and 2,184 were circulated to the Committee. Of the latter, 1,651, valued at $832.9 million, were approved; 517, valued at $315.6 million, were placed on hold; and 16 were pending under the no-objection procedure. As at 25 May, 627 full or partial shipments of parts and equipment, worth $287.2 million, had arrived in Iraq.

Issues considered by the Committee included the humanitarian situation in Iraq, the monitoring undertaken by Saybolt and the UN observation mechanism, as well as the matter of applications placed on hold. It also received briefings from representatives of WHO, FAO, the UN Compensation Commission and the UN Department of Management. An appendix to the June report detailed the procedures to be employed for the implementation of paragraph 18 of resolution 1284(1999), which called for the appointment of a group of experts, including independent inspection agents appointed by the Secretary-General, to approve contracts for the parts and equipment necessary to enable Iraq to increase its exports of petroleum and petroleum products.

Communications. A number of communications on various subjects were received from Iraq during phase VII. In letters between 4 January and 28 April [S/2000/2, S/2000/35, S/2000/142, S/2000/360], Iraq alleged that the United States, with United Kingdom support, was obstructing implementation of the 1996 Memorandum of Understanding and the oil-for-food programme by using a number of illegal stratagems, including abuse of its membership of the Sanctions Committee, thus placing on hold contracts for the export to Iraq of humanitarian goods.

In letters addressed to the Security Council President, dated 5 January [S/2000/7] and 10 April [S/2000/302], Iraq, in order to meet the payment of the arrears in its contribution to international organizations, requested the Council to approve the allocation of $24 million from the Iraq Account, and specifically the 53 per cent and 13 per cent (for the three northern governorates) accounts, and/or from the 2.2 per cent account allocated to the administrative and operational expenses of the Iraq programme.

By a 22 May letter to the Secretary-General [S/2000/467], Iraq requested that the sum of $10 million be allocated for the purchase of equipment for the printing of Iraqi currency under the procurement and distribution plans for phases V, VI and VII, and noted that the UN Secretariat was continuing to ignore that request.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 8 June [meeting 4152], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1302(2000). The draft [S/2000/544] was submitted by France and the United Kingdom.

The Security Council,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 986(1995) of 14 April 1995, 1111(1997) of 4 June 1997, 1129(1997) of 12 September 1997, 1143(1997) of 4 December 1997, 1153(1998) of 20 February 1998, 1175(1998) of 19 June 1998, 1210(1998) of 24 November 1998, 1242(1999) of 21 May 1999, 1266(1999) of 4 October 1999, 1275(1999) of 19 November 1999, 1280(1999) of 3 December 1999, 1281(1999) of 10 December 1999, 1284(1999) of 17 December 1999 and 1293(2000) of 31 March 2000,

Convinced of the need as a temporary measure to continue to provide for the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people until the fulfilment by the Government of Iraq of the relevant resolutions, including notably resolution 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, allows the Council to take further action with regard to the prohibitions referred to in resolution 661(1990) of 6 August 1990, in accordance with the provisions of those resolutions,

Convinced also of the need for equitable distribution of humanitarian supplies to all segments of the Iraqi population throughout the country,

Determined to improve the humanitarian situation in Iraq,

Reaffirming the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Iraq,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the provisions of resolution 986 (1995), except those contained in paragraphs 4, 11 and 12 and subject to paragraph 15 of resolution 1284 (1999), shall remain in force for a new period of 180 days beginning at 0001 hours eastern daylight time on 9 June 2000;

2. Decides also that from the sum produced from the import by States of petroleum and petroleum products originating in Iraq, including financial and other essential transactions related thereto, in the 180-day period referred to in paragraph 1 above, the amounts recommended by the Secretary-General in his report of 1 February 1998 for the food/nutrition and health sectors should continue to be allocated on a priority basis in the context of the activities of the Secretariat, of which 13 per cent of the sum produced in the period referred to above shall be used for the purposes referred to in paragraph 8 (b) of resolution 986(1995);

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take the actions necessary to ensure the effective and efficient implementation of the present resolution, and to continue to enhance as necessary the United Nations observation process in Iraq in such a way as to provide the required assurances to the Council that the goods produced in accordance with this resolution are distributed equitably and that all supplies authorized for procurement, including dual usage items and spare parts, are utilized for the purpose for which they have been authorized;

4. Decides to conduct a thorough review of all aspects of the implementation of the present resolution 90 days after the entry into force of paragraph 1 above and again prior to the end of the 180-day period, and expresses its intention, prior to the end of that period, to consider favourably renewal of the provisions of the present resolution as appropriate, provided that the reviews indicate that those provisions are being satisfactorily implemented;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council 90 days after the entry into force of the present resolution on its implementation, and further requests the Secretary-General to report prior to the end of the 180-day period, on the basis of observations of United Nations personnel in Iraq, and of consultations with the Government of Iraq, on whether Iraq has ensured the equitable distribution of medicine, health supplies, foodstuffs, and materials and supplies for essential civilian needs, financed in accordance with paragraph 8 (a) of resolution 986(1995), including in his briefing and report any observations he may have on the adequacy of the revenues to meet the humanitarian needs of Iraq;

6. Requests the Security Council Committee established by resolution 661(1990), in close coordination with the Secretary-General, to report to the Council after the entry into force of paragraph 1 above and prior to the end of the 180-day period on the implementation of the arrangements in paragraphs 1, 2, 6, 8, 9 and 10 of resolution 986(1995);

7. Requests the Secretary-General to appoint, in consultation with the Committee established by resolution 661(1990), no later than 10 August 2000, the additional overseers necessary to approve petroleum and petroleum product export contracts in accordance with paragraph 1 of resolution 986(1995) and the procedures of the Committee established by resolution 661(1990);

8. Requests the Committee established by resolution 661(1990) to approve, after 30 days, on the basis of proposals from the Secretary-General, lists of basic water and sanitation supplies, decides, notwithstanding paragraph 3 of resolution 661(1990) and paragraph 20 of resolution 687(1991), that supplies of these items will not be submitted for approval of that Committee, except for items subject to the provisions of resolution 1051(1996) of 27 March 1996, and will be notified to the Secretary-General and financed in accordance with the provisions of paragraphs 8 (a) and 8 (b) of resolution 986(1995), and requests the Secretary-General to inform the Committee in a timely manner of all such notifications received and actions taken;

9. Decides that from the funds produced pursuant to the present resolution in the escrow account established by paragraph 7 of resolution 986(1995), up to a total of 600 million United States dollars may be used to meet any reasonable expenses, other than expenses payable in Iraq, that follow directly from the contracts approved in accordance with paragraph 2 of resolution 1175(1998) and paragraph 18 of resolution 1284(1999), and expresses its intention to consider favourably the renewal of this measure;

10. Decides also that the funds in the escrow account resulting from the suspension in accordance with paragraph 20 of resolution 1284(1999) shall be used for the purposes set out in paragraph 8 (a) of resolution 986(1995), and decides further that paragraph 20 of resolution 1284(1999) shall remain in force and shall apply to the new 180-day period referred to in paragraph 1 above and shall not be subject to further renewal;

11. Welcomes the efforts of the Committee established by resolution 661(1990) to review applications expeditiously, and encourages the Committee to make further efforts in that regard;

12. Calls upon the Government of Iraq to take all additional steps necessary to implement paragraph 27 of resolution 1284(1999), and further requests the Secretary-General regularly to review and report on the implementation of these measures;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee established by resolution 661(1990) recommendations regarding the implementation of paragraphs 1 (a) and 6 of resolution 986(1995) to minimize the delay in the payment of the full amount of each purchase of Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products into the escrow account established by paragraph 7 of resolution 986(1995);

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee established by resolution 661(1990) recommendations regarding the utilization of excess funds drawn from the account created by paragraph 8 (d) of resolution 986(1995), in particular for the purposes set out in paragraphs 8 (a) and 8 (b) of that resolution;

15. Urges all States, and in particular the Government of Iraq, to provide their full cooperation in the effective implementation of the present resolution;

16. Appeals to all States to continue to cooperate in the timely submission of applications and the expeditious issue of export licences, facilitating the transit of humanitarian supplies authorized by the Committee established by resolution 661(1990), and to take all other appropriate measures within their competence in order to ensure that urgently needed humanitarian supplies reach the Iraqi people as rapidly as possible;

17. Stresses the need to continue to ensure respect for the security and safety of all persons directly involved in the implementation of the present resolution in Iraq;

18. Invites the Secretary-General to appoint independent experts to prepare by 26 November 2000 a comprehensive report and analysis of the humanitarian situation in Iraq, including the current humanitarian needs arising from that situation and recommendations to meet those needs, within the framework of the existing resolutions;

19. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Council a 21 June exchange of letters [S/2000/618] between the UN Secretariat and Iraq extending, in the light of resolution 1302(2000), the provisions of the 1996 Memorandum of Understanding between them on the implementation of resolution 986(1995) for a new 180-day period.

On 10 August [S/2000/790], the Secretary-General informed the Council that he had appointed Michel Tellings (Netherlands) and Morten Buur-Jensen (Denmark) as oil overseers for the United Nations.

Phase VIII

Pursuant to paragraph I of Council resolution 1302(2000), the new 180-day extension (phase VIII) of the humanitarian programme established by resolution 986(1995) began on 9 June. The corresponding distribution plan was approved by the Secretary-General on 25 July [S/2000/733], on the understanding that its implementation would be governed by resolutions 986(1995), 1284(1999) and 1302(2000) and the 1996 Memorandum of Understanding between the UN Secretariat and Iraq, and without prejudice to Sanctions Committee procedures. The accompanying list of supplies and goods was made available to that Committee, which concluded that, based on the information provided in the annexes, no prohibited items could be identified.

Report of Secretary-General (September). On 8 September [S/2000/857], the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report on the first 90-day period of phase VIII.

He observed that in many sectors, infrastructure remained heavily incapacitated despite the ordering by Iraq of essential inputs. Complementary items had been kept on hold long after the central items with which they were intended to be used had been delivered. That situation rendered the distribution of humanitarian aid and the amelioration of the overall situation more difficult and placed an additional strain on the already burdened population by delaying the arrival and use of many key supplies and equipment essential to all sectors. Despite commendable efforts to bring about a reduction in the number of contracts on hold, 647 contracts for humanitarian supplies, worth $1.5 billion, and 504 contracts for oil and spare parts, worth $279 million, remained on hold as at 28 August. While the programme allowed for the importation of goods for infrastructure repair, it did not allow for financial investments in infrastructural rehabilitation projects. Hence, the impact of the imported goods under resolution 986(1995) was limited.

The Secretary-General welcomed measures taken by the Council to improve procedures to expedite notification of applications in the agriculture, food, nutrition, health, education, and water and sanitation sectors, as well as approval of contracts for oil and spare parts. He urged the expansion and extension of the lists and procedures involved to all remaining sectors in the distribution plan. A decision by the Sanctions Committee on the use of $52 million in unencumbered funds, available for alternative allocation, would be of significant assistance. He also welcomed the increases by Iraq in the allocation of funds in the distribution plan for food and health. The safety and security of UN personnel serving in Iraq was also of primary concern to the Secretary-General. He expressed deep concern at the killing of two FAO staff members and the injuring of eight others, including four UN staff, within the premises of the FAO office in Baghdad.

Communication from Secretary-General. On 3 October [S/2000/950], the Secretary-General expressed his concern that the total value of holds placed on applications for contracts submitted under the humanitarian programme exceeded $2 billion as at 27 September, involving a total of 1,204 applications. Furthermore, the list of oil spare parts and equipment related to phase VIII projects and the list of additional items for the agriculture sector, which were submitted by the UN Secretariat for approval to the Sanctions Committee on 8 August and 8 September, respectively, had been placed on hold. The Secretariat had also received an excessive number of applications that were either incomplete or awaiting additional technical information from the suppliers.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In a 29 November report on the second 90-day period of phase VIII [S/2000/1132], the Secretary-General gave an account of implementation activities up to 31 October. He stated that a total of $22.7 billion had been made available for the implementation of the programme—$18.7 billion for the centre and south and $4.4 billion for the three governorates, Dahuk, Erbil and Sulaymaniyah, where the United Nations implemented the programme on behalf of Iraq. Of the $16.22 billion worth of applications for contracts approved for the centre and south, supplies with a total value of $8.834 billion had been delivered. Additional quantities of supplies under approved applications, with an estimated value of $7.386 billion, were in the production and delivery pipeline.

Although locally produced food items had become increasingly available throughout the country, most Iraqis did not have the necessary purchasing power to buy them. The monthly food rations represented the largest proportion of their household income and, thus, they were obliged to either barter or sell items from the food basket in order to meet other essential needs. That was one of the factors that partly explained why the nutritional situation had not improved in line with the enhanced food basket. Moreover, the absence of normal economic activity had given rise to deep-seated poverty. The Secretary-General urged the Government of Iraq to ensure the distribution of the full food ration and to respond to the needs of internally displaced persons, particularly in the three northern governorates. Consideration could also be given to including in the next distribution plan provision of supplies in support of activities to meet the more specific needs of the poorest among the poor within the population.

The Secretary-General said that, with increasing funding for the humanitarian component of the programme, the time had come to review the validity of applying procedures and practices originally designed to cover food and medicine to a vastly more complex array of infrastructure and equipment. He had therefore directed the OIP Executive Director to initiate consultations with the Sanctions Committee in order to streamline and improve procedures governing the submission, processing and approval of applications. Despite all commendable efforts made, the volume of holds placed on applications had risen to $2.31 billion as at 31 October. That was one of the major factors impeding programme delivery in the centre and south. The Secretary-General also expressed concern regarding the large volume of incomplete or non-compliant applications submitted to the Secretariat, totalling over $850 million, which could not be processed until receipt of the information requested either from the suppliers or Iraq. In addition, he appealed to Iraq to expedite its contracting procedures and to ensure the timely submission of applications by its suppliers. He noted with concern that the project-based list of phase VIII oil spare parts and equipment submitted by the Secretariat to the Sanctions Committee on 8 August had remained on hold. Moreover, the absence of an appropriate cash component had increasingly hampered the implementation of the programme. The Secretary-General had directed the OIP Executive Director, together with the UN Humanitarian Coordinator for Iraq, to intensify efforts towards finding an appropriate mechanism acceptable to all concerned. He also appealed to the Council to direct its Sanctions Committee to review its work and procedures in order to avoid inordinate delays in resolving matters brought to its attention for action.

Communications. During phase VIII, a number of communications on various subjects were received from Iraq. In letters to the Secretary-General dated between 11 June and 7 November [S/2000/563, S/2000/1048, S/2000/1073], Iraq alleged that the United Kingdom and the United States, among other things, were obstructing the implementation of the oil-for-food programme and placing on hold contracts for the export to Iraq of humanitarian goods.

On 6 August [S/2000/781], Iraq noted that there had been no agreement among Security Council members on Iraq's proposal for paying its arrears in contributions to international organizations (see p. 307). The lack of agreement was due to United States opposition to the proposal.

On 7 August [S/2000/780], Iraq transmitted to the Council President the text of a resolution adopted on 7 June by the Council of Arab Economic Unity (Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Palestine, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen) at its seventy-first session in Cairo. The Council called for the lifting of the embargo imposed on Iraq, affirmed its rejection of the no-flight zones imposed on parts of Iraq, condemned military incursions into Iraq's territory and urged the Arab States to expand their trade with Iraq.

Phase IX

On 5 December [meeting 4241], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1330 (2000). The draft [S/2000/1149] was submitted by the United Kingdom.

The Security Council,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 986(1995) of 14 April 1995, 1111(1997) of 4 June 1997, 1129(1997) of 12 September 1997, 1143(1997) of 4 December 1997, 1153(1998) of 20 February 1998, 1175(1998) of 19 June 1998, 1210(1998) of 24 November 1998, 1242(1999) of 21 May 1999, 1266(1999) of 4 October 1999, 1275(1999) of 19 November 1999, 1280(1999) of 3 December 1999, 1281(1999) of 10 December 1999, 1284(1999) of 17 December 1999, 1293(2000) of 31 March 2000 and 1302(2000) of 8 June 2000,

Convinced of the need as a temporary measure to continue to provide for the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people until the fulfilment by the Government of Iraq of the relevant resolutions, including notably resolution 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, allows the Council to take further action with regard to the prohibitions referred to in resolution 661 (1990) of 6 August 1990, in accordance with the provisions of those resolutions,

Convinced also of the need for equitable distribution of humanitarian supplies to all segments of the Iraqi population throughout the country,

Determined to improve the humanitarian situation in Iraq,

Reaffirming the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Iraq,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the provisions of resolution 986(1995), except those contained in paragraphs 4, 11 and 12 and subject to paragraph 15 of resolution 1284(1999), shall remain in force for a new period of 180 days beginning at 0001 hours eastern standard time on 6 December 2000;

2. Decides also that from the sum produced from the import by States of petroleum and petroleum products originating in Iraq, including financial and other essential transactions related thereto, in the 180-day period referred to in paragraph 1 above, the amounts recommended by the Secretary-General in his report of 1 February 1998 [S/1998/90] for the food/nutrition and health sectors should continue to be allocated on a priority basis in the context of the activities of the Secretariat, of which 13 per cent of the sum produced in the period referred to above shall be used for the purposes referred to in paragraph 8 (b) of resolution 986(1995);

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take the actions necessary to ensure the effective and efficient implementation of this resolution, and to continue to enhance as necessary the United Nations observation process in Iraq including, within 90 days of the adoption of the present resolution, to complete the recruitment and placement in Iraq of a sufficient number of observers, in particular the recruitment of the number of observers agreed between the Secretary-General and the Government of Iraq, in such a way as to provide the required assurance to the Council that the goods produced in accordance with the present resolution are distributed equitably and that all supplies authorized for procurement, including dual usage items and spare parts, are utilized for the purpose for which they have been authorized, including in the housing sector and related infrastructure development;

4. Decides to conduct a thorough review of all aspects of the implementation of the present resolution 90 days after the entry into force of paragraph 1 above and again prior to the end of the 180-day period, and expresses its intention, prior to the end of the 180-day period, to consider favourably renewal of the provisions of the present resolution as appropriate, provided that the reports referred to in paragraphs 5 and 6 below indicate that those provisions are being satisfactorily implemented;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide a comprehensive report to the Council 90 days after the date of entry into force of the present resolution on its implementation and again at least one week prior to the end of the 180-day period, on the basis of observations of United Nations personnel in Iraq, and of consultations with the Government of Iraq, on whether Iraq has ensured the equitable distribution of medicine, health supplies, foodstuffs, and materials and supplies for essential civilian needs, financed in accordance with paragraph 8 (a) of resolution 986(1995), including in his reports any observations he may have on the adequacy of the revenues to meet the humanitarian needs of Iraq;

6. Requests the Security Council Committee established by resolution 661(1990), in close consultation with the Secretary-General, to report to the Council 90 days after the entry into force of paragraph 1 above and prior to the end of the 180-day period on the implementation of the arrangements in paragraphs 1, 2, 6, 8, 9 and 10 of resolution 986(1995);

7. Decides that from the funds produced pursuant to this resolution in the escrow account established by paragraph 7 of resolution 986(1995), up to a total of 600 million United States dollars may be used to meet any reasonable expenses, other than expenses payable in Iraq, which follow directly from the contracts approved in accordance with paragraph 2 of resolution 1175(1998) and paragraph 18 of resolution 1284(1999), and expresses its intention to consider favourably the renewal of this measure;

8. Expresses its readiness to consider, in the light of the cooperation of the Government of Iraq in implementing all the resolutions of the Council, allowing a sum of 15 million United States dollars drawn from the escrow account to be used for the payment of the arrears in the contribution of Iraq to the budget of the United Nations, and considers that this sum should be transferred from the account created pursuant to paragraph 8 (d) of resolution 986(1995);

9. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to transfer the excess funds drawn from the account created pursuant to paragraph 8 (d) of resolution 986(1995) for the purposes set out in paragraph 8 (a) of resolution 986(1995) in order to increase the funds available for humanitarian purchases, including as appropriate the purposes referred to in paragraph 24 of resolution 1284(1999);

10. Directs the Committee established by resolution 661(1990) to approve, on the basis of proposals from the Secretary-General, lists of basic electricity and housing supplies consistent with the priority given to the most vulnerable groups in Iraq, decides, notwithstanding paragraph 3 of resolution 661(1990) and paragraph 20 of resolution 687(1991), that supplies of these items will not be submitted for approval of that Committee, except for items subject to the provisions of resolution 1051(1996) of 27 March 1996, and will be notified to the Secretary-General and financed in accordance with the provisions of paragraphs 8 (a) and 8 (b) of resolution 986(1995), requests the Secretary-General to inform the Committee in a timely manner of all such notifications received and actions taken, and expresses its readiness to consider such action with regard to lists of further supplies, in particular in the transport and telecommunications sectors;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to expand and update, within 30 days of the adoption of the present resolution, the lists of humanitarian items submitted in accordance with paragraph 17 of resolution 1284(1999) and paragraph 8 of resolution 1302(2000), directs the Committee established by resolution 661(1990) to approve expeditiously the expanded lists, decides that supplies of these items will not be submitted for approval of the Committee established by resolution 661(1990), except for items subject to the provisions of resolution 1051(1996), and will be notified to the Secretary-General and financed in accordance with the provisions of paragraphs 8 (a) and 8 (b) of resolution 986(1995), and requests the Secretary-General to inform the Committee in a timely manner of all such notifications received and actions taken;

12. Decides that the effective deduction rate of the funds deposited in the escrow account established by resolution 986(1995) to be transferred to the Compensation Fund in the 180-day period shall be 25 per cent, decides further that the additional funds resulting from this decision will be deposited into the account established under paragraph 8 (a) of resolution 986(1995) to be used for strictly humanitarian projects to address the needs of the most vulnerable groups in Iraq as referred to in paragraph 126 of the report of the Secretary-General of 29 November 2000, requests the Secretary-General to report on the use of these funds in his reports referred to in paragraph 5 above, and expresses its intention to establish a mechanism to review, before the end of the 180-day period, the effective deduction rate of the funds deposited in the escrow account to be transferred to the Compensation Fund in future phases, taking into account the key elements of the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people;

13. Urges the Committee established by resolution 661(1990) to review applications in an expeditious manner, to decrease the level of applications on hold and to continue to improve the approval process of applications, and, in this regard, stresses the importance of the full implementation of paragraph 3 above;

14. Urges all States submitting applications, all financial institutions, including the Central Bank of Iraq, and the Secretariat, to take steps to minimize the problems identified in the report of the Secretary-General of 29 November 2000 pursuant to paragraph 5 of resolution 1302(2000);

15. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements, subject to the approval of the Council, to allow funds deposited in the escrow account established by resolution 986(1995) to be used for the purchase of locally produced goods and to meet the local cost for essential civilian needs, which have been funded in accordance with the provisions of resolution 986(1995) and related resolutions, including, where appropriate, the cost of installation and training services, and further requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements, subject to the approval of the Council, to allow funds up to 600 million euros deposited in the escrow account established by resolution 986(1995) to be used for the cost of installation and maintenance, including training services, of the equipment and spare parts for the oil industry, which have been funded in accordance with the provisions of resolution 986(1995) and related resolutions, and calls upon the Government of Iraq to cooperate in the implementation of all such arrangements;

16. Urges all States, and in particular the Government of Iraq, to provide their full cooperation in the effective implementation of the present resolution;

17. Calls upon the Government of Iraq to take the remaining steps necessary to implement paragraph 27 of resolution 1284(1999), and further requests the Secretary-General to include in his reports under paragraph 5 above a review of the progress made by the Government of Iraq in the implementation of these measures;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report as expeditiously as possible but no later than 31 March 2001 for the Committee established by resolution 661(1990) containing proposals for the use of additional export routes for petroleum and petroleum products, under appropriate conditions otherwise consistent with the purpose and provisions of resolution 986(1995) and related resolutions, and particularly addressing the possible pipelines that might be utilized as additional export routes;

19. Reiterates its request in paragraph 8 of resolution 1284(1999) to the Executive Chairman of the United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission and to the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency to complete by the end of this period the revision and updating of the lists of items and technology to which the import/export mechanism approved by resolution 1051(1996) applies;

20. Stresses the need to continue to ensure respect for the security and safety of all persons directly involved in the implementation of this resolution in Iraq, and calls upon the Government of Iraq to complete its investigation into the death of employees of the Food and Agriculture Organization and to forward it to the Council;

21. Appeals to all States to continue to cooperate in the timely submission of applications and the expeditious issue of export licences, facilitating the transit of humanitarian supplies authorized by the Committee established by resolution 661(1990), and to take all other appropriate measures within their competence in order to ensure that urgently needed humanitarian supplies reach the Iraqi people as rapidly as possible;

22. Decides to remain seized of the matter

In the light of the new 180-day extension of the humanitarian programme (phase IX) from 6 December, the UN Secretariat and Iraq, by a 6 December exchange of letters [S/2000/1178], agreed to extend for the same period the provisions of the 1996 Memorandum of Understanding between them on the implementation of Council resolution 986(1995).

Communications. On 7 December [S/2000/1166], Iraq brought to the attention of the Secretary-General the actions of UN agencies and offices involved in the electricity sector in Iraq's three northern governorates, which had approved economically and environmentally inappropriate projects in the area without consultation with Iraqi authorities.

By a 10 December letter to the Secretary-General [S/2000/1175], Iraq said, among other things, that resolution 1330(2000) clearly showed that some members of the Council wanted to maintain the embargo imposed on Iraq, instead of easing the restrictions on Iraq's right to dispose of its financial resources so as to use them in the interests of its people.

On 16 December [S/2000/1204], Iraq requested that all of the banking operations relating to revenues under the Memorandum of Understanding should be performed by more than one bank.

Bahrain transmitted to the Secretary-General the final communiqué adopted by the Supreme Council of the Gulf Cooperation Council at its twenty-first session (Manama, Bahrain, 30-31 December) [A/55/727-S/2001/5], as well as the Manama Declaration 2000. The Supreme Council, among other things, called on Iraq to discharge all of its obligations under the relevant Security Council resolutions and to resume cooperation with the United Nations in order to bring the outstanding issues relating to weapons of mass destruction and monitoring systems to a conclusion.

UN Compensation Commission and Fund

The United Nations Compensation Commission, established in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 195] for the resolution and payment through the United Nations Compensation Fund, established at the same time, of claims against Iraq for losses and damage resulting from its 1990 invasion and occupation of Kuwait [YUN 1990, p. 189], continued in 2000 to expedite the prompt settlement of claims. The Commission was headquartered in Geneva, where its Governing Council held all of its sessions.

Governing Council. The Commission's Governing Council held four regular sessions during the year—the thirty-fifth (13-15 March) [S/2000/396], thirty-sixth (13-15 and 30 June) [S/2000/703], thirty-seventh (26-28 September) [S/2000/1057] and thirty-eighth (5-7 December) [S/2000/1249]—at which it considered the reports and recommendations of the Panels of Commissioners appointed to review specific instalments of various categories of claims. Each report described in detail the measures taken by the Panel to determine whether a given claim fell within the Commission's jurisdiction, to verify its validity, to evaluate compensable losses and to arrive at the compensation amounts to be recommended. The Governing Council also acted on the Executive Secretary's report submitted at each session, which, in addition to providing a summary of the previous period's activities, covered corrections to approved claim awards, claim withdrawals, the processing and payment of approved claims, the appointment of Commissioners, the 2000 progress report on the Commission's 1997-2003 work programme, and the review of the Commission's procedures.

In March, the Council considered Panel reports on specific instalments of corporate claims under category E, grouped as follows: one on oil sector claims (E1), one on non-Kuwaiti corporate claims (E2), three on non-Kuwaiti construction and engineering claims (E3), and four on Kuwaiti private sector claims (E4). Also discussed were several issues relating to the processing and payment of claims, including the mechanism for the third phase of payment. The Council recommended that a drafting group be established to prepare a draft decision concerning the details of the third phase of payment. In addition, it continued its consideration of the request of Yemen to accept the late filing of a category F government claim, in the light of further information provided by the Government of Yemen and the secretariat. While expressing sympathy for Yemen's circumstances, the Council was unable to accept the request for late filing.

Considered at the June session were four reports and recommendations made by the Panels in the D (individual claims for damages above $100,000), E1 (oil sector claims) and F1 (claims by Governments for losses related to departure and evacuation costs, and damage to physical property) categories. The Council approved the reports and recommendations concerning the D and F1 claims, and adjourned further consideration of the E1 claims until 30 June. On that date, the Council decided to postpone further consideration of the report until its thirty-seventh session, in an effort to reach consensus on its decision. The Council also adopted a decision concerning the priority of payment and payment mechanism for the third phase of payment. It decided that successful claimants in categories D, E and F would receive an initial amount of $5 million and subsequent payments of $10 million, in the order in which the claims had been approved. Newly approved claims would have priority in initial payment over subsequent payments to previously approved claims. Successful environmental monitoring and assessment claims were also accorded priority of payment in the above-mentioned amounts.

The September session examined seven reports and recommendations made by the Panels in the E1, E2, E3 and E4 categories of claims. It also considered a special report of the D1 Panel concerning 223 individual category A claims for departure from Iraq or Kuwait. With regard to the report on category E1 claims, which had been the subject of extensive discussions, the September session culminated in an agreement on three points, which allowed the Governing Council to proceed with the approval of the report and the recommendations by consensus. The Governing Council also examined the issue of overlapping business loss claims filed in categories C (damages up to $100,000), D and E4 by nationals of Jordan and Kuwait, and considered a request for the nullification of a previous withdrawal of a claim in category E. The Council decided that a withdrawn claim could not be reinstated or refiled. In the light of the Security Council agreement that required the review of the Compensation Commission's procedures, the Governing Council agreed to carry out such review before the end of the year.

The December session considered six reports and recommendations made by the Panels in the D and F2 (claims from the Government of Saudi Arabia) categories. The Council also reviewed the Commission's procedures and agreed by consensus on a number of conclusions and recommendations. The conclusions addressed the time allowed for the review of panels' reports, the transmission of claims files to Iraq and oral proceedings. It also considered the issue of providing technical assistance to Iraq and stated that it would consider further various proposals relating to such assistance, noting that some Council members indicated that such proposals should not relate to claims other than the F4 claims. The Council considered the issue of overlapping business loss claims filed in categories C, D and E4 by nationals of various countries, and heard a presentation on the status of the review of the F4 environmental claims. It also decided that a request by Iran for the late filing of category A claims could not be accepted.

Communications from Iraq. On 13 June [S/2000/572], Iraq drew the Secretary-General's attention to the fact that the Compensation Commission had deliberately concealed from Iraq documentation relating to claims, in violation of the proper legal procedures. Further, on 20 and 29 June [S/2000/609, S/2000/646], Iraq stated that the Commission had not provided details of claims for compensation from Turkey and the Syrian Arab Republic, respectively.

Other issues

Iraqi complaints

Reaffirming its absolute rejection of the northern and southern air exclusion (no-fly) zones imposed by the United States, Iraq reported regularly to the Secretary-General and the Security Council throughout 2000 on it. Iraq also alleged wanton military attacks by United States and British aircraft which had caused civilian deaths and injuries, as well as destruction of private and public property [S/2000/144, S/2000/159, S/2000/226, S/2000/260, S/2000/309, S/2000/473, S/2000/474, S/2000/806, S/2000/825, S/2000/1058]. In an October letter [S/2000/981], Iraq said that the United States and the United Kingdom and the countries that provided the logistic facilities for their aggression, namely Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and Turkey, should be made to bear full international responsibility, including for the payment of compensation to Iraq.

During the year, Iraq also alleged violations of its territorial waters by Kuwait [S/2000/217, S/2000/340, S/2000/346, S/2000/355, S/2000/358, S/2000/405, S/2000/567, S/2000/570, S/2000/667, S/2000/798, S/2000/808, S/2000/1117], whose patrols increasingly subjected Iraqi fishing boats to armed aggressions. In a series of replies [S/2000/368, S/2000/556, S/2000/720, S/2000/972, S/2001/46], Kuwait described those allegations as fabrications. Iraq also alleged violations of its territorial waters and interceptions of Iraqi vessels by the United States [S/2000/354, S/2000/382, S/2000/1022, S/2000/1110].

On 2 April [S/2000/278], Iraq claimed that a Saudi patrol had fired a number of rounds at an Iraqi border observation post, which was denied by Saudi Arabia [S/2000/510].

Iraq submitted several reports [S/2000/327, S/2000/608, S/2000/840, S/2000/1013, S/2000/1203] concerning the finding and disposal of unexploded ordnance—left behind by what it called the 1991 30-Power aggression against it—which continued to be found in large quantities in the country.

Iraq also protested, throughout 2000, increasing land and air incursions and armed aggression in its northern territory by Turkey [S/2000/306, S/2000/353, S/2000/475, S/2000/546, S/2000/736, S/2000/750, S/2000/833].

In other communications, Iraq protested the illegal entry into northern Iraq, through Turkey, of a United States official accompanied by a Turkish delegation [S/2000/182]; provided documentation confirming the involvement of the United States in the financing of terrorist activities aimed at overthrowing the national regime in Iraq [S/2000/168, S/2000/687]; and submitted allegations of war crimes committed against Iraqi forces by the United States armed forces in 1991 [S/2000/669].

Tajikistan

Having completed its mandate, the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT) withdrew from the country on 15 May, as scheduled. In their first multiparty elections, the people of Tajikistan went to the polls in February to fill the 63 seats in the Assembly of Representatives (lower house) and again in March to fill the 33 seats in the National Assembly (upper house). Presidential elections had taken place in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 273].

The Joint Electoral Observation Mission (JEOM), which the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) deployed to Tajikistan to observe the elections, concluded that the February elections had not met minimum standards. On 27 April, Tajikistan's newly formed bicameral parliament convened its first joint session.

On 1 June, the Security Council noted the Secretary-General's intention to establish, for a limited time, a UN peace-building support office in Tajikistan to pursue the objectives of post-conflict peace-building and consolidation of peace.

UN Mission of Observers in Tajikistan

UNMOT, established by Security Council resolution 968(1994) [YUN 1994, p. 596], continued its work to promote peace and national reconciliation and to assist in the implementation of the 1997 General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan [YUN 1997, p. 264] until 15 May, when its mandate ended.

It also assisted JEOM by providing communications back-up and liaison with the local authorities on security matters.

In preparation for its withdrawal from Tajikistan, UNMOT closed all of its field stations and withdrew its personnel and equipment to Dushanbe by the end of April.

Composition

UNMOT continued to be headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Tajikistan, Ivo Petrov (Bulgaria); its military component continued under the command of the Chief Military Observer, Brigadier-General John Hvidegaard (Denmark). During the first few months of the year, the Mission was gradually withdrawn. The number of military observers, which stood at 37 in October 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 267], totalled 17 as at 30 April 2000.

Activities

During the year, the Secretary-General, in response to Security Council resolution 1274(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 274], submitted two reports updating the developments in Tajikistan and the activities of UNMOT.

Report of Secretary-General (March). In his 14 March report [S/2000/214], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the UN/OSCE JEOM, as recommended by the joint UN/OSCE assessment mission [YUN 1999, p. 274], arrived in Tajikistan in January and February to observe the country's first multiparty election. A total of 331 candidates were registered to contest the 63 seats in the Assembly of Representatives. On polling day (27 February), JEOM deployed 86 short-term observers to some 300 of the 2,761 polling stations and also observed the counting of the votes and tabulation of the results. The following day, JEOM issued its preliminary findings and conclusions; it noted that the election had not met minimum standards and cited many weaknesses in the electoral legislation.

The Central Commission on Elections and Referenda (CCER), in the preliminary results of the first round of the election, announced that the ruling People's Democratic Party had won 33 seats, the Communist Party 7 and the Islamic Revival Party 2. Independent candidates won in eight constituencies, but two were declared invalid, requiring a new vote to be held at the end of April. In 12 constituencies where no candidate received a majority of the vote, a run-off election was held on 12 March. CCER announced that the ruling People's Democratic Party won in seven constituencies; in the remaining five, three went to independents and the results of the other two were unavailable at the time of the report.

Between 16 November 1999 and 5 February 2000, UNMOT carried out 34 visits to reintegrated units of former opposition fighters, either independently or together with members of the Commission on National Reconciliation (CNR) military subcommission and representatives of the Ministry of Defence, Ministry of the Interior or the State Border Protection Committee. Many units complained of non-payment of salaries, lack of food and equipment (including uniforms) and inadequate accommodation. They also complained that they had received no instructions, training or visits from their superior headquarters. Work in the job creation projects for former fighters in the Karategin valley, which was interrupted in November by the onset of winter, would be resumed in the spring.

The Secretary-General observed that after years of fighting, the Tajik parties had managed to overcome obstacles and put their country on the path to national reconciliation and democracy by holding the first multiparty parliamentary elections. He noted the important role that the United Nations played in the country's significant achievement. However, although there was cause for satisfaction at the overall success, there was no doubt that much remained to be done. He urged the international community to stay engaged and continue to provide assistance. He indicated his intention to withdraw UNMOT when its mandate expired in May, and promised to keep the Council informed about his consultations with Tajikistan about the possible future

UN role in the country's post-conflict, peace-building and consolidation period.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 21 March [meeting 4116], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/9 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 14 March 2000 on the situation in Tajikistan, submitted pursuant to paragraph 12 of resolution 1274(1999) of 12 November 1999.

The Council welcomes decisive progress in the implementation of the General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, signed in Moscow on 27 June 1997, achieved due to sequential and persistent efforts by the President of the Republic of Tajikistan and the leadership of the Commission on National Reconciliation.

The Council welcomes, in particular, the holding, on 27 February 2000, of the first multiparty and pluralistic parliamentary election in Tajikistan, in spite of serious problems and shortcomings, as noted by the Joint Electoral Observation Mission for Tajikistan. It notes that with the holding of these elections the transition period envisaged in the General Agreement is coming to a close. The Council acknowledges the significant achievement of the Tajik parties, which have managed to overcome many obstacles and to put their country on the path to peace, national reconciliation and democracy. It urges the Government and the Parliament of Tajikistan to work towards elections in the future that meet fully acceptable standards, as a means to consolidate peace.

The Council notes with satisfaction that the United Nations has played an important role in this success. It welcomes the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan, supported by the Contact Group of Guarantor States and International Organizations, the Mission of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and the collective peacekeeping forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States, being instrumental in assisting the parties in the implementation of the General Agreement.

The Council supports the intention of the Secretary-General to withdraw the Mission of Observers when its mandate expires on 15 May 2000. The Council expects that the Secretary-General will inform it of the outcome of his current consultations with the Government of Tajikistan on a role for the United Nations in the period of post-conflict peace-building and consolidation.

Report of Secretary-General (May). In his 5 May report [S/2000/387], the Secretary-General stated that the election to the 33-seat National Assembly was held on 23 March and, in accordance with the Constitution, 25 deputies were elected by local assemblies and 8 were appointed by the President. The by-elections for the remaining two seats in the Assembly of Representatives had still not taken place. On 27 April, the newly formed bicameral parliament convened its first joint session. CNR held its final session on 26 March, with both sides agreeing that its unfinished business would be addressed by appropriate government bodies. The Commission was formally dissolved by presidential decree as from 1 April.

Having held more than 130 meetings since it was established in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 273], the Contact Group of Guarantor States and International Organizations—Afghanistan, Iran, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Pakistan, the Russian Federation, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan, OSCE and the Organization of the Islamic Conference—concluded its work of monitoring the implementation of the General Agreement [YUN 1997, p. 264] and providing expertise, consultation and good offices. In an 18 April statement, the Contact Group expressed its readiness to continue to support Tajikistan in its further efforts.

Since he was submitting his final report on UN-MOT, the Secretary-General reviewed the UN efforts relating to the situation in Tajikistan since 1993, when the Mission was established as a small political office in Dushanbe [YUN 1993, p. 514]. He stated that UN involvement in the peace process in Tajikistan had several characteristics that contributed to its overall positive outcome: early intervention by the United Nations in the conflict; sustained political support of the Security Council and interested Member States in the region; cooperation with other organizations, notably OSCE; effective crisis management; and, above all, the clear will of the Tajik people to end the war and pursue a political solution.

The Secretary-General stated that the reintegration of the opposition into the political life of Tajikistan was a big step along the path to peace and national reconciliation. Although the recent parliamentary elections had advanced the democratic process, they were, in the view of international observers, seriously flawed. Also, armed elements continued to operate outside the Government's control, contributing to insecurity, and daunting economic and social problems had to be addressed as a priority. The continued support of the international community in the post-conflict phase would be important for Tajikistan's ability to sustain, and build on, the achievements of the peace process. The Secretary-General intended to write to the Security Council shortly about the possible establishment of a post-conflict peace-building office.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 12 May [meeting 4141], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/17 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 5 May 2000 on the situation in Tajikistan.

The Council welcomes the success achieved in the peace process in Tajikistan with the completion of implementation of the main provisions of the General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, signed in Moscow on 27 June 1997, under the auspices of the United Nations. It expresses its appreciation for the sequential and persistent efforts of the President of the Republic of Tajikistan and the leadership of the Commission on National Reconciliation in this regard. The Council acknowledges the significant achievement of the Tajik parties, which have managed to overcome many obstacles and to put their country on the path to peace, national reconciliation and democracy. It joins the Secretary-General in hoping that these achievements will be consolidated in the further strengthening of the institutions in the country, with a view to the democratic, economic and social development of Tajik society.

The Council notes with satisfaction that the United Nations has played a successful and important role in the peace process. It highly appreciates the efforts of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan, supported by the Contact Group of Guarantor States and International Organizations, the Mission of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and the collective peacekeeping forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States, in assisting the parties in the implementation of the General Agreement.

The Council expresses its appreciation to the Russian Federation, the Islamic Republic of Iran and other interested Member States for their sustained political support for the peace efforts of the United Nations in Tajikistan, and for assisting the parties to maintain political dialogue and to overcome the crises in the peace process. It encourages the members of the former Contact Group to continue to support Tajikistan in its further efforts to consolidate peace, stability and democracy in the country.

The Council notes with satisfaction that the Mission of Observers maintained excellent relations with the collective peacekeeping forces and the Russian border forces, which contributed to the success of the Mission and helped to support the political process on the ground.

The Council reiterates its support for the intention of the Secretary-General to withdraw the Mission of Observers when its mandate expires on 15 May 2000. It pays tribute to all those who served in the Mission for the sake of peace in Tajikistan, and especially to those members of the Mission who gave their lives in the cause of peace.

The Council emphasizes that the continued support of the international community in the post-conflict phase will be crucial in allowing Tajikistan to sustain and build on the achievements of the peace process, and in helping it to lay a durable foundation for a better life for its people.

In this regard, the Council expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his intention to inform the Council of the modalities of the establishment and functioning of a United Nations post-conflict peace-building office in Tajikistan, in order to consolidate peace and promote democracy. It encourages close cooperation between that office and the Mission of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, and other international agencies in Tajikistan. The Council also encourages Member States and others concerned to make voluntary contributions to support projects aimed at the social and economic rehabilitation of this country.

Financing

On 15 June [meeting 98], the General Assembly considered the Secretary-General's January report on UNMOT's financial performance from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 [A/54/705], together with ACABQ's related reports [A/54/822, A/54/841]. On the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/903], the Assembly adopted resolution 54/272 without vote [agenda item 141].

Financing of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 968(1994) of 16 December 1994, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission of Observers, the latest of which was resolution 1274(1999) of 12 November 1999,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 1138(1997) of 14 November 1997, by which the Council authorized the Secretary-General to expand the size of the Mission of Observers,

Recalling further its resolution 49/240 of 31 March 1995 on the financing of the Mission of Observers and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 53/19 B of 8 June 1999,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission of Observers are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission of Observers, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission of Observers,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the account of the Mission of Observers with the necessary financial resources to enable it to meet its outstanding liabilities,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan as at 30 April 2000, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 4.5 million United States dollars, representing some 6.5 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission of Observers to the period ending 15 May 2000, notes that some 34 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission of Observers in full;

5. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

6. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

7. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

8. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

9. Decides that Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission of Observers shall be credited their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 3,639,400 dollars gross (3,213,100 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999;

10. Decides also that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission of Observers, their share of the unencumbered balance of 3,639,400 dollars gross (3,213,100 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

11. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

12. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Mission of Observers;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan".

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on the financing of UNMOT would remain for consideration at the resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458) and that the Fifth Committee would continue its consideration of the item at that session (decision 55/455).

UN Tajikistan Office of Peace-building

In a 26 May letter to the Security Council President [S/2000/518], the Secretary-General stated that, although the peace process in Tajikistan had brought about a restoration of normalcy to a large degree, the deep-seated roots of the civil conflict had not been fully addressed and the potential for renewed upheaval remained, owing to domestic factors and in view of the unstable situation in the region, notably in Afghanistan. As Tajikistan required continued support from the international community, the Secretary-General proposed that a UN peace-building support office be established, for a limited time, to pursue the objectives of post-conflict peace-building and consolidation of peace.

The office's mandate would be: to provide the political framework and leadership for post-conflict peace-building activities of the UN system in the country, including supporting the efforts of the Resident Coordinator and the UN system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, in promoting an integrated approach to the development and implementation of post-conflict peace-building programmes aimed at national reconstruction, economic recovery, poverty alleviation and good governance; to mobilize, in close cooperation with the UN country team, international support for the implementation of targeted programmes aimed at strengthening the rule of law, demobilization, voluntary arms collection and employment creation for former irregular fighters; to help in creating an enabling environment for consolidating peace, democracy and the rule of law; and to liaise with the Government, political parties and other representatives of civil society in broadening national consensus and reconciliation.

The Secretary-General recommended that the support office be headed by a representative of the Secretary-General and that it be established for an initial period of one year from 1 June.

On 1 June [S/2000/519], the Security Council informed the Secretary-General that his proposal to establish the office in Tajikistan had been brought to the attention of Council members, who took note of it with appreciation.

The United Nations Tajikistan Office of Peace-building (UNTOP) was established on 1 June. Ivo Petrov, the Secretary-General's former Special Representative for Tajikistan, was appointed as the Secretary-General's Representative in the country and as Head of UNTOP.

In resolution 55/45 on emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and rehabilitation in Tajikistan, the General Assembly welcomed the establishment of UNTOP.

Other issues

On 21 June [S/2000/630], the Council of Heads of State of the Commonwealth of Independent States adopted a decision to end the operations of the collective peacekeeping forces in Tajikistan, as requested by that country's President.

Other matters

Cambodia

During 2000, the United Nations continued its assistance to Cambodia with regard to establishing a court to try top Khmer Rouge leaders for crimes committed during the period of Democratic Kampuchea, including suggesting amendments to a draft law on the establishment of extraordinary chambers in the courts of Cambodia. At the end of the year, the draft law had not been adopted by the National Assembly.

(For the situation of human rights in Cambodia, see p. 624.)

Trial of Khmer Rouge leaders

In March and July, the United Nations Under-Secretary-General for Legal Affairs visited Cambodia to discuss with the Cambodian Task Force the draft articles of cooperation between the United Nations and the Government of Cambodia in the prosecution under Cambodian law of crimes committed during the period of Democratic Kampuchea. In 1999, the Cambodian Government had decided to bring the top Khmer Rouge leaders to justice before its own courts, rather than before an international court to be established for the purpose, as had been recommended by a Group of Experts that the Secretary-General had sent to Cambodia in 1998 [YUN 1999, p. 278]. The UN Secretariat team suggested amendments to the draft law on the establishment of extraordinary chambers in the courts of Cambodia for the prosecution of crimes committed during the period of Democratic Kampuchea, in order to ensure its conformity with the articles of cooperation. By the end of the year, the draft law had not been adopted by the National Assembly.

In resolution 55/95, the General Assembly welcomed the successful conclusion of talks between the Government of Cambodia and the UN Secretariat on the question of the trial of the Khmer Rouge leaders most responsible for the most serious human rights violations, appealed strongly to the Government to ensure, including by facilitating the expedited completion of the necessary legislative process as soon as possible, that those leaders were brought to account in accordance with international standards of justice, fairness and due process of law, encouraged the Government to continue to cooperate with the United Nations on the issue, and welcomed the efforts of the Secretariat and the international community in assisting the Government to that end.

UNTAC financing and liquidation

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the financing and liquidation of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC), which terminated in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 371], would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458) and that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item at that session (decision 55/455).

India-Pakistan

The United Nations Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan (UNMOGIP) continued in 2000 to monitor the situation in Jammu and Kashmir. As at 31 December, UNMOGIP had a strength of 46 military observers. UNMOGIP headquarters alternated between Srinagar, Kashmir, in the summer and Rawalpindi, Pakistan, in the winter. On 12 June [S/2000/573], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint Major-General Manuel Saavedra (Uruguay) as Chief Military Observer of UNMOGIP, replacing Major-General Jozsef Bali (Hungary) who served in that position until 3 March. The Council took note of the Secretary-General's intention on 14 June [S/2000/574].

Communications. On 24 January [A/54/720-S/2000/49], Pakistan informed the Secretary-General that Indian forces had launched a premeditated attack against a small Pakistani post on the Pakistan side of the line of control. Two Pakistani soldiers lost their lives and five remained missing. In view of the increasingly dangerous situation, Pakistan sought the Secretary-

General's intercession in urging India to desist from provocative acts.

On 28 February [A/54/771-S/2000/162], Pakistan drew the Secretary-General's attention to a massacre of 14 civilians by Indian security forces in the Kotli sector of Azad Jammu and Kashmir. Pakistan stated that the assailants, dressed in military uniforms, had crossed the line of control from Indian-occupied Kashmir. Maintaining that it remained committed to a peaceful resolution of the core dispute of Jammu and Kashmir in accordance with the wishes of the Kashmiri people, Pakistan called on the international community to urge India to desist from such provocative acts.

On 4 May [S/2000/384], Pakistan apprised the Secretary-General of an artillery bombardment by the Indian army across the line of control that had resulted in the death of at least nine civilians.

On 4 December [A/55/670-S/2000/1158], Pakistan informed the Secretary-General of its new initiative to reduce tension along the line of control and promote a meaningful dialogue with India for the peaceful settlement of the Jammu and Kashmir dispute, with the participation of Kashmiris. The main elements were: with immediate effect, Pakistan's armed forces deployed along the line of control in Jammu and Kashmir would observe maximum restraint in order to strengthen and stabilize the ceasefire already being unilaterally implemented by Pakistan; Pakistan was prepared to enter into a meaningful dialogue with India to address the Jammu and Kashmir dispute; to enable the representatives of the Kashmiri people to participate in the dialogue, Pakistan had extended an invitation to the Executive Committee of the All Parties Hurriyat Conference for consultations to prepare the ground for a tripartite process of negotiations for a peaceful settlement of the dispute. Pakistan stated that India's announced suspension of military operations against the Kashmiri freedom fighters would be meaningful only if combined with a purposeful dialogue for the peaceful settlement of Jammu and Kashmir.

On 8 December, the EU welcomed India's decision to declare a unilateral ceasefire in Kashmir throughout Ramadan. It was also pleased to note Pakistan's statement that it would exercise maximum restraint along the line of control.

Iran-Iraq

Throughout 2000, Iran and Iraq continued to inform the Secretary-General of alleged repeated violations of their 1988 ceasefire agreement [YUN 1988, p. 193] and 1991 Tehran agreements [YUN 1991, p. 163] concerning the area of separation between them. They also alleged cross-border attacks and terrorist activities in each other's territory.

In a series of notes verbales from 23 January to 22 November [S/2000/127, S/2000/128, S/2000/129, S/2000/164, S/2000/216, S/2000/271, S/2000/411, S/2000/912, S/2000/1036, S/2000/1170], and in a series of letters covering the period 16 August 1999 to 16 May 2000 [S/2000/361, S/2000/426, S/2000/589, S/2000/784, S/2000/1169, S/2001/28], Iran informed the Secretary-General of alleged ceasefire violations by Iraq and attacks by the alleged Iraq-based terrorist group known as Mujahedin Khalq Organization.

Between 7 February and 31 December, Iraq transmitted to the Secretary-General communications on alleged ceasefire violations by Iran [S/2000/93, S/2000/141, S/2000/258, S/2000/285, S/2000/328, S/2000/398, S/2000/528, S/2000/705, S/2000/896, S/2000/996, S/2000/1080, S/2001/12].

On 20 August [S/2000/821], Iraq drew the Secretary-General's attention to a press statement quoting officials of Iran and Kuwait implying their intention to reach an understanding on the delimitation of the continental shelf between the two countries. Iraq stated that any such delimitation should be agreed upon by all the States, including Iraq, that had political rights over the shelf for prospecting and exploiting natural resources.

Iran, on 26 December [S/2000/1243], stated that Iraq's assertion that agreement on delimitation should be made by all the States lacked legal basis.

Korea question

In June 2000, the two leaders of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) and the Republic of Korea held the inter-Korean summit in Pyongyang, DPRK, the first such meeting since the division of the peninsula in 1945. The summit produced a joint declaration based on three principles: independence, peaceful reunification and national unity.

The United States, on behalf of the Unified Command established pursuant to Security Council resolution 84(1950) [YUN 1950, p. 230], submitted to the Council on 6 November the report of the United Nations Command [YUN 1999, p. 276] concerning the maintenance in 1998 of the 1953 Armistice Agreement contained in General Assembly resolution 725(VIII) [YUN 1953, p. 136].

The DPRK's cooperation with IAEA in respect of its obligations under the nuclear safeguards agreement remained limited.

Summit meeting

The leaders of the DPRK and the Republic of Korea held an inter-Korean summit meeting in Pyongyang from 13 to 15 June. That historic meeting, the first of its kind since Korea's division, produced a joint declaration, the main elements of which dealt with reconciliation and eventual reunification; easing of tensions; reunion of divided families; exchanges in economic, social, cultural and other fields; and the establishment of liaison offices in each other's country.

On 1 August [A/55/219-S/2000/758], Japan forwarded to the Secretary-General a statement on the Korean peninsula that was adopted at the Kyushu-Okinawa summit meeting (Okinawa, 21-23 July) of the Group of Eight industrialized countries. The G-8 welcomed the inter-Korean summit; expressed the hope that the implementation of the joint declaration would usher in a new era in inter-Korean relations and reduce the tensions in the Korean peninsula. The G-8 strongly supported the Republic of Korea's engagement policy and welcomed the constructive attitude shown by the DPRK and took note of the reconfirmation of its moratorium on missile-launch.

On 6 September, the Co-Chairpersons of the Millennium Summit (see p. 47) issued a statement in which they welcomed the June summit meeting between the leaders of the DPRK and the Republic of Korea and their joint declaration as a major breakthrough in bringing peace, stability and reunification to the Korean peninsula. They encouraged the two parties to advance the dialogue so that it might eventually lead to the peaceful reunification of the peninsula, while contributing to the peace and security of the region and beyond [A/55/PV.4].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In accordance with a 6 October request from a group of Member States [A/55/236 & Add.1], the item "Peace, security and reunification on the Korean peninsula" was included in the agenda of the General Assembly's fifty-fifth session.

On 31 October [meeting 45], the Assembly adopted resolution 55/11 [draft: A/55/L.14 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 183].

Peace, security and reunification on the Korean peninsula

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations regarding the maintenance of international peace and security,

Convinced that inter-Korean dialogue and co-operation are essential for consolidating peace and security on the Korean peninsula and also contribute to peace and stability in the region and beyond, in conformity with the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter,

Recognizing that the historic summit meeting, held in Pyongyang from 13 to 15 June 2000, between the leaders of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea and their joint declaration represent a major breakthrough in inter-Korean relations and in realizing eventual peaceful reunification,

Commending the positive developments on the Korean peninsula taking place in the wake of the inter-Korean summit,

Recalling the statement welcoming the inter-Korean summit and the follow-up measures made on 6 September 2000 by the Co-Chairpersons of the Millennium Summit of the United Nations,

1. Welcomes and supports the inter-Korean summit and the joint declaration adopted on 15 June 2000 by the two leaders of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea;

2. Encourages the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea to continue to implement fully and in good faith the joint declaration and other agreements reached between the two sides, thereby consolidating peace on the Korean peninsula and laying a solid foundation for peaceful reunification;

3. Invites Member States to support and assist, as appropriate, the process of inter-Korean dialogue, reconciliation and reunification so that it may contribute to peace and security on the Korean peninsula and in the world as a whole.

IAEA safeguards inspections

Pursuant to the agreement between IAEA and the DPRK for the application of safeguards in connection with the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2373(XXII) [YUN 1968, p.17], which remained binding and in force since 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 73], IAEA continued to maintain an inspector presence in Nyongbyon to monitor the freeze of the DPRK's graphite moderated reactors instituted in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 442]. The DPRK continued to accept IAEA's activities in that regard solely within the context of the 1994 Agreed Framework agreement between it and the United States [ibid.] and not under its safeguards agreement with the Agency [S/2001/107].

With regard to the preservation of information, IAEA inspectors had had access since February 2000 to records at facilities subject to and not subject to the freeze in order to identify, list and describe their contents. Although work on establishing a baseline of records continued, there was no progress on the preservation of information other than records, or on the methods to be used to preserve information.

Following the last round of technical talks in November, IAEA stated that the verification process would take three to four years to complete, reiterating that it would require the full co-operation of the DPRK.

In a 22 September resolution, the IAEA General Conference urged the DPRK to comply with its safeguards agreement, to cooperate fully and promptly with IAEA and to take all steps the Agency might deem necessary to preserve all information relevant to verifying the accuracy and completeness of the DPRK's initial report on the inventory of nuclear material subject to safeguards.

Papua New Guinea

During 2000, Bougainville, a province of Papua New Guinea, continued to implement the 1998 Lincoln Agreement on Peace, Security and Development on Bougainville (the Lincoln Agreement) [YUN 1998, p. 319] concluded between the Government of Papua New Guinea and the four Bougainville parties involved in the nine-year conflict that ended in the 1997 Burnham Truce [ibid.].

A UN presence in the form of the United Nations Political Office in Bougainville (UNPOB), requested under the terms of the Lincoln Agreement, continued to monitor and report on the Agreement's implementation by the parties and by the Peace Monitoring Group (Australia, Fiji, New Zealand and Vanuatu), which was also requested under the Agreement.

On 22 November [S/2000/1139], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that he had received a note verbale from Papua New Guinea requesting that UNPOB's mandate, which was due to expire on 31 December, be extended by a further 12 months. The Bougainville parties to the Lincoln Agreement concurred with the request. Encouraged by the steady progress in the Bougainville peace process, the facilitating role of UNPOB and its contribution to a constructive engagement of the parties, the Secretary-General expressed his intention to extend the mandate for a further 12 months, so that UNPOB could continue to assist in the promotion of political dialogue among the parties, in an effort to move the peace process further, and plan and implement peace-building activities.

On 30 November [S/2000/1140], the Council took note of the Secretary-General's intention.

Communication. On 28 March [A/2000/265], Papua New Guinea transmitted to the Security Council the text of the Loloata Understanding on the Bougainville issue, which, at a historic meeting of all key leaders of Bougainville (Loloata Island and Port Moresby, 17-23 March), was signed by the Government of Papua New Guinea and the Bougainville leaders, in the presence of the head of UNPOB and Ewan MacMillan, Chief Negotiator of the Peace Monitoring Group.

Under the terms of the Understanding, the parties: agreed to establish the Bougainville Interim Provincial Government afforded by laws of the National Court; noted that the Greenhouse Memorandum of 23 December 1999 provided for cooperation between the Bougainville Interim Provincial Government and the Bougainville People's Congress and Councils of Elders; stated that arrangements for an autonomous Bougainville Government would be provided within the Papua New Guinea Constitution; and the National Government of Papua New Guinea acknowledged the aspirations for a binding referendum on independence as called for by the Bougainville leaders.

Solomon Islands

In 2000, ethnic conflict in Solomon Islands reached a crisis point when an armed militia, the Malaita Eagle Force/Paramilitary Joint Operation, took control of the Government armoury on 5 June. That group then declared war against another militia, the Isatabu Freedom Movement, and placed the Prime Minister, Bartholomew Ulufa'alu, under house arrest. The Prime Minister subsequently resigned (28 June).

Communications. On 6 June [S/2000/578], the EU condemned the attempt to overthrow the Government, called for the release of Prime Minister Ulufa'alu and others and advocated strict respect for the democratic norms and procedures of the constitution.

On 10 November [S/2000/1088], Solomon Islands, having pursued a quest for a peaceful resolution to the crisis, forwarded to the Security Council President the Townsville Peace Agreement, concluded between the warring factions and the Solomon Islands Government (Townsville, Australia, 15 October).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 November [meeting 4224], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/33 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council strongly supports the Townsville Peace Agreement, concluded on 15 October 2000, for the cessation of hostilities between the Malaita Eagle Force and the Isatabu Freedom Movement and for the restoration of peace and ethnic harmony in Solomon Islands.

The Council encourages all parties to cooperate in promoting reconciliation, so that the objectives of the Townsville Peace Agreement can be met, and urges all parties to continue to cooperate in accordance with the Peace Agreement, namely, to restore and maintain peace and ethnic harmony, to renounce the use of armed force and violence, to settle their differences through consultation and peaceful negotiation and to confirm their respect for human rights and the rule of law.

The Council commends those countries in the region that have supported the resolution of the conflict, and welcomes the establishment, as outlined in the Townsville Peace Agreement, of the International Peace Monitoring Team composed of unarmed military personnel and civilian police from Australia and New Zealand, the mandate of which is based on annex II to the said Peace Agreement and agreed by the parties. It also encourages other nations, in particular those in the region, to participate and assist in the implementation of the Agreement.

United Arab Emirates–Iran

Greater Tunb, Lesser Tunb and Abu Musa

The Council of the League of Arab States, at two regular sessions (Beirut, Lebanon, 11-12 March; Cairo, Egypt, 3-4 September), adopted resolutions on Iran's occupation of the Arabian Gulf islands of Greater Tunb, Lesser Tunb and Abu Musa belonging to the United Arab Emirates [S/2000/281, S/2000/900]. The Council condemned Iran's violation of the sovereignty of the United Arab Emirates and called on the Iranian Government to put an end to its occupation of the three islands.

In a 7 September letter to the Secretary-General [A/55/365], Iran stated that the claims made against its territorial integrity were baseless and unacceptable.

The United Arab Emirates, on 20 December [S/2000/1222], requested that the Security Council retain on its 2001 agenda the item entitled "Letter dated 2 December 1971 from the Permanent Representatives of Algeria, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen and Iraq to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council" concerning the occupation by Iran of the three islands [YUN 1971, p. 209].

Chapter V

Europe and the Mediterranean

In 2000, prospects for achieving peace and security in Europe and the Mediterranean were not very encouraging as most of the major conflicts affecting the region were no nearer to a solution, particularly in the Balkans, which continued to defy the peacemaking efforts of the United Nations and the international community. However, there was hope that a new climate had been created with the election in September of the new President of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY), Vojislav Kostunica, replacing Slobodan Milosevic, and the establishment of a new Government in Croatia. The election of the new President in FRY also raised hopes that the long-standing dispute regarding issues of succession related to the break-up of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia would soon be resolved. A first step in that regard was the admission of FRY to United Nations membership on 1 November.

Despite their declared willingness to resolve their dispute over the Prevlaka peninsula through bilateral negotiations, Croatia and FRY made no real progress in that regard. The fifth meeting on bilateral negotiations did not take place, with both sides continuing to blame each other for the delay. However, the Secretary-General observed that the political changes in the two countries might lead to the resumption of negotiations on Prevlaka.

In Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Peace Implementation Council, which continued to oversee and facilitate implementation of the 1995 General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina (also known as the Peace Agreement), noted the slow pace of implementation and, in order to accelerate it, set key strategic targets for the consolidation of State institutions, economic reform and refugee return. Municipal elections were held in April and a general election took place in November. The United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina elaborated a comprehensive mandate implementation plan aimed at completing its core mandate by December 2002.

In 2000, the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) made significant progress in implementing the provisions of Security Council resolution 1244(1999) on the development of provisional institutions for democratic and autonomous self-government in the Kosovo province of FRY and in promoting the return of the territory to a viable administrative structure and economic and social recovery and reconstruction. As a first step towards a return to normalcy, municipal elections were successfully held on 28 October, paving the way for the establishment of functioning municipal assemblies in Kosovo. The political changes in Belgrade renewed hope for the constructive political dialogue on the future of Kosovo. Despite those positive developments, the Security Council remained concerned over the post-election violence, particularly the potentially explosive situation in the ground safety zone between Kosovo and Serbia proper. In a 19 December statement, the Council condemned the violence by Albanian extremist groups in southern Serbia and called for their dissolution. It called on UNMIK and the international security presence to continue to take all necessary efforts to address the problem.

With regard to Georgia, the Council, in November, noted with concern the continued failure of the parties to achieve a comprehensive settlement, including the political status of Abkhazia within the State of Georgia, and called on them to take immediate measures to move beyond the impasse. Efforts to reach a settlement of the armed conflict between Armenia and Azerbaijan over the Nagorny Karabakh region in Azerbaijan were also fruitless.

In the Mediterranean, despite the momentum generated by five rounds of proximity talks to resolve the Cyprus problem, meaningful negotiations on a permanent solution had yet to begin.

The former Yugoslavia

UN operations

The United Nations continued to work towards restoring peace and stability in the territories of the former Yugoslavia through its peace-keeping missions: the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH); the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka (UNMOP), which continued to monitor the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula; and the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in the FRY province of Kosovo (UNMIK), established to oversee the development of provisional democratic self-governing institutions. The Security Council extended UNMIBH's mandate, which included the International Police Task Force, until 21 June 2001, and that of UNMOP to 15 January 2001.

Financing

In March [A/54/803], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly the financial performance report of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR), which ended in 1999, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia (UNCRO), which ended in 1996, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP)—known collectively as the United Nations Peace Forces (UNPF)—and UNPF headquarters (UNPF-HQ).

Requirements to meet the shortfall in resources for reimbursement of contingent-owned equipment totalled $138.5 million. In addition, funds were needed to settle outstanding government claims for which no obligations existed, as well as for death and disability claims, since all such obligated funds had been exhausted. Amounts owed to Governments in respect of all claims totalled $179.9 million. Since all those requirements could be met from unencumbered appropriations, the Secretary-General sought the Assembly's concurrence to retain that amount from the total appropriations balance of $304.2 million gross ($304.9 million net).

The recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) on the Secretary-General's report were contained in an April report [A/54/835].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 June [meeting 98], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/54/900], adopted resolution 54/269 without vote [agenda item 133].

Financing of the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 727(1992) of 8 January 1992 and 740(1992) of 7 February 1992, in which the Council endorsed the sending of a group of military liaison officers to Yugoslavia to promote maintenance of the ceasefire,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 743(1992) of 21 February 1992, by which the Council established the United Nations Protection Force, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended and expanded its mandate,

Reaffirming that the costs of the combined Forces are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the combined Forces, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the combined Forces by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the combined Forces with the necessary financial resources to enable them to meet their outstanding liabilities,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the combined Forces as at 30 April 2000, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 622.7 million United States dollars, representing 13 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the United Nations Protection Force to the period ending 30 June 1997, notes that some 49 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the combined Forces in full;

5. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

6. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

7. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

8. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

9. Authorizes the Secretary-General to retain an amount of 1,193,000 dollars gross (963,300 dollars net) from the amount of 1,199,200 dollars gross (1,070,300 dollars net) concurred in by the Advisory Committee from the unencumbered balance of 3,467,200 dollars gross (4,094,200 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 to meet the cost of completing the liquidation of the mission;

10. Also authorizes the Secretary-General to retain an amount of 179,899,700 dollars gross and net from the balance of appropriations of 304,179,027 dollars gross (304,955,370 dollars net) to meet the cost of outstanding Government claims;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to present a more detailed explanation of the amounts required for reimbursement of contingent-owned equipment, including the impact of the retroactive application of the new procedures for contingent-owned equipment, in the context of the final report on the combined Forces, and to reconsider the question at its fifty-fifth session;

12. Decides to keep under review the amounts budgeted for reimbursement of contingent-owned equipment;

13. Decides also to suspend for the immediate future the provisions of regulations 4.3, 4.4 and 5.2 (d) of the financial regulations of the United Nations in respect of the remaining surplus of 124,279,327 dollars gross (125,055,670 dollars net) in order to allow for reimbursements to troop contributors and in the light of the cash shortage of the combined Forces, and requests the Secretary-General to provide an updated report in one year;

14. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters".

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on the financing of UNPROFOR, UNCRO, UNPREDEP and UNPF-HQ would remain for consideration at the resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458) and that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the item at that session (decision 55/455).

(Details on the financing of the respective peacekeeping operations in the former Yugoslavia are described in the relevant sections below.)

UNTAES and UN Civilian Police Support Group

On 17 January, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly the financial performance report of the Civilian Police Support Group from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 [A/54/713]. Having terminated the mandate of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES) on 15 January 1998 by resolution 1120(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 324], the Security Council, by resolution 1145(1997) [ibid., p. 332], established the Civilian Police Support Group for a single nine-month period ending on 15 October 1998.

Expenditures for the period covered totalled $6.6 million gross ($6.1 million net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $877,160 gross ($894,960 net), which resulted mainly from staff vacancies, early repatriation of civilian police, the availability of some supplies from the UNTAES stock and the use of the mission's vehicles to transport equipment to the United Nations Logistics Base in Brindisi, Italy. The cost of completing the liquidation of UNTAES, as well as the final audit, could be met from the unencumbered balance, resulting in an adjusted unencumbered balance of $263,160 gross ($359,960 net).

On 3 April [A/54/823], ACABQ commented on the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 June [meeting 98], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee

[A/54/905], adopted resolution 54/274 without vote [agenda item 145].

Financing of the Civilian Police Support Group

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the Civilian Police Support Group and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1037(1996) of 15 January 1996, by which the Council established the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium for an initial period of twelve months, and resolution 1145(1997) of 19 December 1997, in which the Council noted the termination of the Transitional Administration on 15 January 1998 and established, with effect from 16 January 1998, the Civilian Police Support Group for a single period of up to nine months,

Recalling also its decision 50/481 of 11 April 1996 on the financing of the Transitional Administration and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 53/234 of 8 June 1999,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Transitional Administration and the Support Group are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Transitional Administration and the Support Group, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Transitional Administration,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the account of the missions with the necessary financial resources to enable them to meet their outstanding liabilities,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium and the Civilian Police Support Group as at 30 April 2000, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 29.8 million United States dollars, representing 7 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Transitional Administration to the period ending 30 June 1999, notes that some 29 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the missions in full;

5. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

6. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

7. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

8. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

9. Decides that Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Transitional Administration and the Support Group shall be credited their respective share of the remaining unencumbered balance of 601,200 dollars gross (541,500 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1998 and of the unencumbered balance of 263,160 dollars gross (359,960 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1999;

10. Decides also that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their obligations to the Transitional Administration and the Support Group, their share of the remaining unencumbered balance of 601,200 dollars gross (541,500 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1998 and of the unencumbered balance of 263,160 dollars gross (359,960 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1999 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

11. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium and the Civilian Police Support Group".

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on the financing of UNTAES and the Civilian Police Support Group would remain for consideration at the resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458) and that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the item at that session (decision 55/455).

UNPREDEP

On 7 February, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly the financial performance report of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP) covering 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 [A/54/740]. The mandate of UNPREDEP, which operated within the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM), terminated on 28 February 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 370]. Expenditures for the period totalled $41.9 million gross ($40.9 million net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $1.2 million gross ($1.1 million net), resulting mainly from lower costs of troop rotation and rapid liquidation of the mission during the period from March to June 1999. However, an amount of $904,000, which was not obligated for troop rotation, was still required.

On 3 April [A/54/824], ACABQ commented on the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 June [meeting 98], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/906], adopted resolution 54/275 without vote [agenda item 146].

Financing of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 983(1995) of 31 March 1995, by which the Council decided that the United Nations Protection Force within the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia should be known as the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force, and 1186(1998) of 21 July 1998, by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force until 28 February 1999,

Recalling also its decision 50/481 of 11 April 1996 on the financing of the Force and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 53/20 B of 8 June 1999,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Force are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Force, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Force by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the account of the Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to meet its outstanding liabilities,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force as at 30 April 2000, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 10.8 million United States dollars, representing 8 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Force to the period ending 30 June 1999, notes that some 42 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Force in full;

5. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

6. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

7. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

8. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

9. Authorizes the Secretary-General to retain the amount of 904,000 dollars from the unencumbered balance of 1,161,700 dollars gross (1,104,300 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 to cover the costs of outstanding claims from a Government for the rotation of its troops during the prior period;

10. Decides that Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Force shall be credited their respective share of the remaining unencumbered balance of 257,700 dollars gross (200,300 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1999;

11. Decides also that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their obligations to the Force, their share of the remaining unencumbered balance of 257,700 dollars gross (200,300 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1999 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

12. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force".

In September [A/55/390], the Secretary-General submitted details of the final disposition of UNPREDEP's assets, with an inventory value as at 1 March of some $20.2 million, 46 per cent of which had been transferred to other peace-keeping operations or to the United Nations Logistics Base.

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on the financing of UNPREDEP would remain for consideration at the resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458) and that the Fifth Committee would continue to consider the item at that session (decision 55/455).

State succession issues

On 3 February [A/54/742], four of the five successor States of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (SFRY) (Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Slovenia and FYROM) drew the attention of the General Assembly President to the draft resolution [A/54/L.62] on the issue of succession [YUN 1999, p. 306], consideration of which had been postponed pending further consultations. The four States stated that they would continue to work with interested delegations to ensure full implementation of relevant Assembly resolutions, in particular resolution 47/1 [YUN 1992, p. 139], and underlined the importance of the principle of equality of all five successor States to SFRY.

In a 10 February letter [S/2000/109] to the Security Council President, the four States reconfirmed their readiness, in view of the expressed readiness of FRY, to resume negotiations to solve promptly the issue on the basis of the equality of all five successor States. The four States affirmed that settlement of the issue would contribute to political stabilization, economic cooperation and the improvement of relations.

On 25 April [S/2000/348], FRY transmitted to the Council President a copy of a letter from the head of its delegation to the negotiations of the Peace Implementation Council (PIC) (see p. 331) to the Negotiations Mediator, Sir Arthur Watts. The head of the delegation indicated that he had been informed that, at the PIC meeting (Sarajevo, Bosnia and Herzegovina, 4 April), discussion of the continuation of work on succession issues was avoided. Despite the fact that all involved were interested in negotiations, PIC had demonstrated a surprising lack of interest and had blocked the negotiations for more than a year without any explanation, taking upon itself prerogatives that it was not entitled to per se, nor were they established by the agreement. The only rational explanation for such conduct was that succession issues had assumed a political character, with all its implications at the current juncture of international relations. Although he could not advise as to the current position of the Yugoslav Government on the standstill in the negotiations, he was certain that it insisted on the continuation of the negotiations on the basis of the Mediator's last proposal.

On 24 May [A/54/881], FRY said that statements made by Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and Slovenia in the Assembly's Fifth Committee concerning FRY's status in the United Nations were unfounded and tendentious. FRY repeated its previous arguments in connection with the issue [YUN 1999, p. 305] and stated that the contention that FRY's status in the United Nations was linked with, and contingent upon, the solution of the succession issues of the former SFRY was unfounded and aimed at confusing Member States. FRY's status should be resolved in accordance with the Charter and relevant UN rules, while the succession issues of the division of assets and liabilities of the former SFRY were subject to negotiations between it and the other former Yugoslav republics based on international law, leading to solutions acceptable by all.

The Presidents of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Slovenia and FYROM, in a joint statement forwarded to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President on 21 September [A/55/41, S/2000/897], said that, at a meeting held during the course of the Millennium Summit (see p. 47), they had discussed the succession to the former SFRY and had confirmed their common position in that regard. They underlined the importance of the consistent implementation of all the international community's decisions related to the succession that confirmed the legal equality of all the successors, and agreed that the existing illegal practice in the United Nations be discontinued. The four States would continue to ensure equal treatment of all of the successor States in international organizations and emphasized that FRY had to complete the procedure for admission to those organizations, as the others had done. They agreed to seek the support of the European Union (EU), the United States and other UN Member States to achieve their aims in relation to succession. The Presidents also agreed that, following democratic changes in FRY, they would advocate the lifting of sanctions and the swift admission of FRY to the United Nations and other international organizations, when and if that State so requested.

On 24 September, Vojislav Kostunica was elected President of FRY, replacing Slobodan Milosevic. The new Government dropped any claim to being the sole successor State to SFRY and was recognized by the international community.

On 27 October [A/55/528-S/2000/1043], FRY submitted to the Secretary-General its application for admission to membership of the United Nations. On 1 November (resolution 55/12), the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Security Council, admitted FRY to UN membership (see p. 1365).

Prevlaka peninsula

The United Nations continued in 2000 to assist Croatia and FRY in their efforts to arrive at a permanent solution to the disputed issue of the Prevlaka peninsula. The United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka (UNMOP) continued to monitor the demilitarization of the peninsula and neighbouring areas in Croatia and FRY. The Security Council renewed its mandate until 15 January 2001.

During the year, despite the declared willingness of Croatia and FRY to resolve their dispute through bilateral negotiations, in accordance with the Agreement on Normalization of Relations between them, signed in Belgrade in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 340], no progress was made in that regard. Their positions regarding the options for confidence-building, proposed by the Secretariat in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 312], remained far apart. The fifth meeting on bilateral negotiations did not take place, and both sides continued to blame each other for the delay in restarting those negotiations. However, in December, the Secretary-General observed that the change in the FRY Presidency and elections to the Serbian Parliament, as well as the establishment of the new Government in Croatia, gave hope that a climate conducive to the resumption of negotiations was being created.

On the ground, the Secretary-General reported that the situation in the UN-controlled zones remained calm and free from any significant incidents.

Bilateral negotiations

On 10 January [S/2000/8], Croatia, in a letter to the Security Council President, summarized its position, contained in earlier submissions to the Council, on the disputed issue of the Prevlaka peninsula. It indicated that, as long as the Yugoslav side refused to honour its obligations and persisted in its quest to alter existing international borders between Croatia and FRY, Croatia had no justifiable basis on which to proceed with bilateral negotiations on a permanent solution of the security issue of Prevlaka. Croatia stood ready to engage in serious negotiations on the future bilateral security regime for Prevlaka and the neighbouring areas of Dubrovnik and the Bay of Kotor, starting from full respect for the existing, internationally recognized Croatian border. Croatia noted that the absence of the Montenegrin representatives from the Yugoslav delegation rendered the legitimacy of any outcome doubtful. Moreover, several policy and legal measures taken by the international community against high-level Yugoslav federal officials in the past months compounded the problems in case of the resumption of bilateral negotiations.

On 8 February [S/2000/95], FRY forwarded to the Council President a memorandum on the facts, testifying that the Prevlaka peninsula was an integral part of FRY. Croatia rejected that assertion on 3 March [S/2000/180].

On 6 March [S/2000/268], FRY proposed that negotiations should continue based on a mutually agreed agenda, which could include the presentation of their respective positions concerning the arguments on which both sides based their perceptions of the extension of the State border, including the questions of the 1992 map, signed by the then FRY President and the Head of the General Staff of the Yugoslav Army, and the authenticity of the signatures of those individuals.

Reporting on 29 March [S/2000/268] on the status of bilateral negotiations between FRY and Croatia, as requested by Security Council resolution 1285(2000) of 13 January (see p. 332), FRY said that no meeting had taken place since March 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 307], as Croatia had failed to convene the fifth meeting. FRY reiterated its readiness to resume negotiations and engage in substantive discussions of the arguments the two sides had exchanged after four rounds of negotiations and referred to its 6 March proposals (see above). FRY was of the opinion that serious negotiations could be possible only through direct dialogue during meetings of delegations rather than by letters.

Referring to the special emphasis placed on confidence-building measures in resolution 1258(2000) and in the Secretary-General's last report on UNMOP [YUN 1999, p. 312], FRY considered them unacceptable in the Blue Zone (UN-controlled zone). The measures would amount to a revision of the concept of the Blue Zone, which did not allow the authorities and citizens of the two sides in the Zone, would imply movement of civilians in the Zone and the legalization of the border crossing at Kobila, and would legalize the presence of Croats in the Zone and exonerate Croatia from the continued violation of the Blue Zone regime. There were no civilians who for "legitimate business" should be allowed in the Zone pending a solution of the disputed issue of Prevlaka. The two parties had committed themselves, in the Agreement on Normalization of Relations between them [YUN 1996, p. 340], to respect the existing regime established through UN monitoring, pending an agreement on Prevlaka, so that any unilateral request to change that provision constituted a violation of it.

Croatia responded on 5 April [S/2000/289] that confirmation of the authenticity of the 1992 map and signatures by UN officials involved in negotiations at the time could avert FRY from its ongoing insistence on framing the Prevlaka issue as a territorial dispute and would jump-start the negotiations. Croatia reiterated its request that the United Nations make inquiries with its former officials and confirm the authenticity of the map and signatures. Croatia stated that FRY's rejection of the Secretary-General's confidence-building measures had not come as a surprise, since FRY had continuously avoided the 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 343] and 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 340] agreements, particularly those parts relating to normalizing traffic and establishing joint customs controls at the border crossing points. The Secretary-General's proposal to allow limited civilian access to the Blue Zone served as a reminder of the mutually assumed legal obligations of the two countries. It was Croatia's view that the Secretary-General's recognition of the legitimate interests of the local population might contribute to the stability and normalization of the area.

The Secretary-General, reporting to the Security Council on UNMOP [S/2000/647], said that, on 10 April, Croatia invited representatives of FRY to attend a fifth round of discussions in Croatia at a date to be determined.

FRY, on 16 June [S/2000/602], in response to Croatia's 5 April letter, contended that there were differences in the interpretation of the rule of uti possidetis, which both sides had accepted, manifested in their separate perception of the extension of the border in the disputed area. The Croatian side invoked geographic maps as the sole piece of evidence, while the Yugoslav side invoked the federal laws of SFRY and republican laws, which delineated the exercise of authority in the disputed area. FRY annexed to the communication an 8 June letter from the head of its delegation to the negotiations, in which he acknowledged receipt of Croatia's confirmation of the holding of the fifth meeting at a date to be agreed through diplomatic channels and proposed the agenda item "Manner of the establishment of the border considering the application of the rule uti possidetis".

In a further communication [S/2000/954] submitted to the Secretary-General in October, FRY stated that the situation regarding bilateral negotiations remained unchanged as the Croatian side, for a year and a half, had persisted in its refusal to convene the fifth meeting. The FRY head of delegation had pointed out in August that the negotiations between the two delegations could not be substituted for correspondence and the Yugoslav side could not accept an agenda for the next meeting, proposed by the head of the Croatian delegation in July, that prejudged the solution of the disputed issue of Prevlaka to the detriment of the Yugoslav side. FRY had proposed that the method for establishing the border be considered at the next meeting in view of the application of the rule of uti possidetis on which both sides had agreed. There were, however, differences in the perception of the application of that rule that needed to be resolved by negotiations. The agenda proposed by the Yugoslav side did not prejudge the outcome of the negotiations. Its basic positions on the solution of the issue remained the same and it reiterated its readiness to continue the bilateral negotiations.

The Secretary-General, in a December report on UNMOP [S/2000/1251], observed that regional developments and a movement towards stabilization of the political situation, in particular in FRY, had given rise to the hope that a climate conducive to the resumption of negotiations was being created. In FRY, the change in the Presidency was followed by elections to the Serbian Parliament and the new leadership was consolidating its position. In Croatia, the Government sworn into office a year earlier was well established. In the light of those developments and his meetings with the Croatian President and the Yugoslav Foreign Minister, the Secretary-General trusted that both sides would be able to resume negotiations in the near future and find ways to bridge their differences on the disputed Prevlaka issue.

UN Mission of Observers in Prevlaka (UNMOP)

The United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka, which became a separate mission in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 330], continued in 2000 to monitor the demilitarization of the disputed Prevlaka peninsula and the neighbouring areas in Croatia and FRY. The Mission, which comprised 27 military observers under the command of Chief Military Observer Colonel Graeme Williams (New Zealand), also held regular meetings with local authorities and maintained contact with authorities in Belgrade and Zagreb. UNMOP's area of responsibility consisted of two UN-designated zones: a demilitarized zone (DMZ) (Yellow Zone) and a UN-controlled zone (Blue Zone).

The Security Council twice extended UNMOP's mandate during the year, to 15 July 2000 and to 15 January 2001.

Although an independent mission, UNMOP was treated for administrative and budgetary purposes as part of UNMIBH. (For details on the financing of UNMOP, see p. 346.)

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 13 January [meeting 4088], the Security Council, having considered the Secretary-General's December 1999 report on UNMOP [YUN 1999, p. 312], unanimously adopted resolution 1285(2000). The draft [S/2000/10] was submitted by Canada, France, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 779(1992) of 6 October 1992, 981(1995) of 31 March 1995, 1147(1998) of 13 January 1998, 1183(1998) of 15 July 1998, 1222(1999) of 15 January 1999 and 1252(1999) of 15 July 1999,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 31 December 1999 on the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka,

Recalling the letter dated 24 December 1999 from the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of the Permanent Mission of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia addressed to the Secretary-General and the letter dated 10 January 2000 from the Permanent Representative of Croatia to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council, concerning the disputed issue of Prevlaka,

Reaffirming once again its commitment to the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia within its internationally recognized borders,

Noting once again the Joint Declaration signed at Geneva on 30 September 1992 by the Presidents of the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, in particular articles 1 and 3, the latter reaffirming their agreement concerning the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula,

Reiterating its concern about violations of the demilitarization regime, including limitations placed on the free movement of United Nations military observers, while noting some positive development in those fields as outlined in the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting with satisfaction that the opening of crossing points between Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Montenegro) in the demilitarized zone continues to facilitate civilian and commercial traffic in both directions without security incidents and continues to represent a significant confidence-building measure in the normalization of relations between the two parties, and urging the parties to utilize these openings as a basis for further confidence-building measures to achieve the normalization of relations between them,

Reiterating its serious concerns about the lack of substantive progress towards a settlement of the disputed issue of Prevlaka in the continuing bilateral negotiations between the parties pursuant to the Agreement on Normalization of Relations between the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia of 23 August 1996, and calling for the resumption of discussions,

Reiterating its call upon the parties urgently to put in place a comprehensive demining programme,

Commending the role played by the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka, and noting that the presence of the United Nations military observers continues to be essential to maintain conditions that are conducive to a negotiated settlement of the disputed issue of Prevlaka,

1. Authorizes the United Nations military observers to continue monitoring the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula, in accordance with resolutions 779(1992) and 981(1995) and paragraphs 19 and 20 of the report of the Secretary-General of 13 December 1995, until 15 July 2000;

2. Reiterates its calls upon the parties to cease all violations of the demilitarization regime in the United Nations designated zones, to take steps further to reduce tension and to improve safety and security in the area, to cooperate fully with the United Nations military observers and to ensure their safety and full and unrestricted freedom of movement;

3. Notes with satisfaction that, pursuant to its request in resolution 1252(1999), the parties have been provided with recommendations and options to develop confidence-building measures, encourages the parties to take concrete steps to implement such recommendations and options with a view to, inter alia, further facilitating the freedom of movement of the civilian population, and requests the Secretary-General to report on the matter by 15 April 2000;

4. Urges once again that the parties abide by their mutual commitments and implement fully the Agreement on Normalization of Relations between the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, and stresses in particular the urgent need for them to fulfil rapidly and in good faith their commitment to reach a negotiated resolution of the disputed issue of Prevlaka in accordance with article 4 of the Agreement;

5. Requests the parties to continue to report at least bimonthly to the Secretary-General on the status of their bilateral negotiations;

6. Requests the United Nations military observers and the multinational Stabilization Force authorized by the Council in resolution 1088(1996) of 12 December 1996 and extended by resolution 1247(1999) of 18 June 1999 to cooperate fully with each other;

7. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (April). The Secretary-General, in an April report on UNMOP [S/2000/305], stated that the situation remained stable and calm, with both sides continuing to respect the DMZ. However, on 7 March, elements of the newly formed Montenegrin Special Police were observed conducting training exercises within the zone. They remained there, bolstering the Border Police presence. In the UN-controlled zone, the long-standing violations of the security regime remained unchanged with police from both sides maintaining positions there. On two occasions, Croatian buses carrying local schoolchildren were observed in the zone. In January, in the context of the Croatian presidential election campaign, several senior Croatian political figures entered the zone.

Concerning the confidence-building measures conveyed to the parties by the Secretariat in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 312], preliminary consultations on the options presented continued, including on the commencement of demarcation of the border, the regularization of the crossing point at Debeli Brijeg, the introduction of a limited access regime for local civilians in the UN-controlled zone and the replacement of the crossing point at Cape Kobila by alternative arrangements worked out under the controlled access regime. The parties favoured some elements of the options package but rejected others, reflecting their overall views in the dispute. Their positions on the package remained far apart.

Communications. On 16 June [S/2000/602], FRY advised the Security Council President of a number of long-standing violations of the security regime in the Blue Zone by Croatia, including the installation of a telephone booth at Cape Kobila border crossing, which it demanded be removed and the border crossing closed until a solution to the disputed issue of Prevlaka was found. Noting that the Council, in resolution 1285(2000), had called for an end to the violations of the demilitarization regime in the Blue Zone, while the Secretary-General had described the presence of civilians there as a violation of the agreed security regime, FRY called for strict implementation of the decisions and positions of the Council and the Secretary-General.

On 30 June [S/2000/642], the Foreign Ministers of Croatia and the FRY Republic of Montenegro, in a joint communiqué, expressed their continued support for full demilitarization on both sides of the border in the Prevlaka peninsula as a means of reducing tensions and stabilizing the entire area. The opening of the border crossings Debeli Brijeg and Konfin had resulted in demonstrable confidence-building among the local population on both sides of the border and provided an impetus for the renewed commercial and other ties between Croatia and Montenegro. Complete demining and unhindered civilian access throughout the entire Prevlaka range and the opportunity to use the natural resources would further strengthen stability and confidence, restart the tourist economy and thus constitute another step towards full normalization of relations.

Croatia and Montenegro considered UNMOP's mandate to be successful and remained confident that substantial reduction of its personnel should be able to start in the nearest possible future, consistent with the increased development of mutual trust and the willingness of Croatia and Montenegro to take responsibility for the security of the area.

Report of Secretary-General (July). The Secretary-General, in his July report on UNMOP [S/2000/647], said that neither Croatia nor FRY had put in place a comprehensive demining programme in the UNMOP area of responsibility. As a result, the situation of identified minefields remained unchanged. He also reported a significant increase in the number of Montenegrin Special Police in the DMZ, which did not constitute a violation of the security regime. In June, a Yugoslav army truck armed with a machine gun and carrying some 20 soldiers was observed within the DMZ. The violations of the security regime in the UN-controlled zone remained unchanged.

The Secretary-General observed that UNMOP's efforts to convince the parties to devise means for implementing the confidence-building measures proposed by the Secretariat had not been successful and the positions of the parties in that regard continued to reflect their differing interpretations of the Prevlaka dispute. Against that background, Croatia's invitation to FRY to attend the fifth round of negotiations and FRY's acceptance was a positive development. However, because of the still unsettled general political circumstances in the area, expectations for substantive progress remained limited. To maintain the conditions of stability that were essential to any meaningful progress towards a political settlement, the Secretary-General recommended that UNMOP's mandate be extended until 15 January 2001.

That recommendation was supported by FRY in a 6 July letter to the Council President [S/2000/653].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 13 July [meeting 4170], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1307(2000). The draft [S/2000/681] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 779(1992) of 6 October 1992, 981(1995) of 31 March 1995, 1147(1998) of 13 January 1998, 1183(1998) of 15 July 1998, 1222(1999) of 15 January 1999, 1252(1999) of 15 July 1999 and 1285(2000) of 13 January 2000,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 3 July 2000 on the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka,

Recalling the letter dated 5 April 2000 from the Permanent Representative of Croatia to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General and the letter dated 16 June 2000 from the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of the Permanent Mission of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia addressed to the President of the Security Council, concerning the disputed issue of Prevlaka,

Reaffirming once again its commitment to independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia within its internationally recognized borders,

Noting once again the Joint Declaration signed at Geneva on 30 September 1992 by the Presidents of the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, in particular articles 1 and 3, the latter reaffirming their agreement concerning the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula,

Noting with satisfaction that the overall situation in the area of responsibility of the Mission has remained stable and calm,

Reiterating its concern about continuing violations of the demilitarization regime, including limitations placed on the free movement of United Nations military observers,

Noting with satisfaction that the opening of crossing points between Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Montenegro) in the demilitarized zone continues to facilitate civilian and commercial traffic in both directions without security incidents and continues to represent a significant confidence-building measure in the normalization of relations between the two parties, and urging the parties to utilize these openings as a basis for further confidence-building measures to achieve the normalization of relations between them,

Reiterating its serious concerns about the lack of substantive progress towards a settlement of the disputed issue of Prevlaka in the continuing bilateral negotiations between the parties pursuant to the Agreement on Normalization of Relations between the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia of 23 August 1996, noting positive developments in this regard, and calling for the resumption of discussions,

Expressing its concern over the delay in putting in place a comprehensive demining programme by the parties,

Commending the role played by the Mission, and noting that the presence of the United Nations military observers continues to be essential to maintaining conditions that are conducive to a negotiated settlement of the disputed issue of Prevlaka,

Recalling the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel of 9 December 1994 and the statement by its President of 9 February 2000,

Welcoming and encouraging efforts by the United Nations to sensitize peacekeeping personnel in the prevention and control of HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases in all its peacekeeping operations,

1. Authorizes the United Nations military observers to continue monitoring the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula, in accordance with resolutions 779(1992) and 981(1995) and paragraphs 19 and 20 of the report of the Secretary-General of 13 December 1995, until 15 January 2001;

2. Reiterates its call upon the parties to cease all violations of the demilitarized regime in the United Nations designated zones, to take steps further to reduce tension and to improve safety and security in the area, to cooperate fully with the United Nations military observers and to ensure their safety and full and unrestricted freedom of movement;

3. Notes with concern the lack of progress by the parties in devising means of implementing the recommendations and options to develop confidence-building measures with which they were provided pursuant to its request in resolution 1252(1999), encourages the parties to take concrete steps to implement such recommendations and options with a view to, inter alia, further facilitating the freedom of movement of the civilian population, and requests the Secretary-General to report on the matter by 15 October 2000;

4. Urges once again that the parties abide by their mutual commitments and implement fully the Agreement on Normalization of Relations between the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, and stresses in particular the urgent need for them to fulfil rapidly and in good faith their commitment to reach a negotiated resolution of the disputed issue of Prevlaka in accordance with article 4 of the Agreement;

5. Requests the parties to continue to report at least bi-monthly to the Secretary-General on the status of their bilateral negotiations;

6. Reiterates its call upon the parties to put a comprehensive demining programme in place in the identified minefields in the area of responsibility of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka;

7. Requests the United Nations military observers and the multinational Stabilization Force authorized by the Council in resolution 1088(1996) of 12 December 1996 and extended by resolution 1305(2000) of 21 June 2000 to cooperate fully with each other;

8. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Communications. On 17 July [S/2000/702], FRY, in response to Council resolution 1307(2000), said that the provision of the resolution relative to the border crossings containing a reference to Montenegro by the name of Yugoslavia was not acceptable and attempted to circumvent the fact that the issue could be resolved only with FRY as a sovereign State. Under its constitution, border crossings and relations with sovereign States fell within the exclusive competence of the FRY authorities. The opening of border crossings without FRY's agreement was contrary to international law and the relevant domestic laws and FRY could not accept the support provided to the undertaking in the resolution.

On 4 September [S/2000/858], FRY said that implementation of the Agreement on Normalization of Relations [YUN 1996, p. 340] had stagnated for more than a year due to Croatia's passive attitude and lack of cooperation. Croatia had unilaterally discontinued negotiations on the issue of missing persons and, from March 1999 to July 2000, despite several Yugoslav initiatives, had not called a meeting between the FRY Commission for humanitarian issues and missing persons and Croatia's Commission for detained and missing persons. Croatia continued to obstruct implementation of the 1998 agreement between the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the two sides on the exchange of all detainees. The recent release of five Serbs was not satisfactory and FRY expected that all persons covered by that agreement would be released. In addition, Croatia did not accept a FRY proposal to hold a meeting, at the end of June in Belgrade, of the Joint Yugoslav-Croatian Commission for the implementation of article 7 of the Agreement on Normalization of Relations, which concerned the return of refugees and restitution of their property. It was also delaying the continuation of work of the Commissions for the resolution of the question of Prevlaka. While the Commissions had not met for more than a year, Croatia had held talks with Montenegro and border crossings between Croatia and FRY had been illegally opened on a part of the FRY-Croatian border in Montenegro, violating the border regime between the two countries. Moreover, Croatia had avoided the talks on the establishment of the borderline between the two countries on the Danube. It slowly and inadequately fulfilled its obligations under the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium [YUN 1995, p. 587] and the letter of intent concerning the unimpeded and free return of expelled and displaced Serbs, protection of human rights and security of all Serbs living in the area, restitution of property and compensation for seized, destroyed or damaged property.

Croatia had unilaterally joined separate negotiations with Montenegro, a federal unit of FRY, in flagrant violation of the Agreement on Normalization of Relations. FRY expressed its concern over the continued violations, delays and avoidance to carry out further scheduled and agreed activities and steps in the implementation of that Agreement and called on Croatia to respect the process of normalization of relations with FRY on the basis of the Agreement.

Report of Secretary-General (October). In October [S/2000/976], the Secretary-General reported no significant change in the overall situation in the UNMOP area of responsibility. On 23 September, the eve of FRY's elections, seven Yugoslav army officers were observed in Herceg Novi, guarding a municipal building in the DMZ. On the same day, the Montenegrin police deployed an anti-aircraft weapon at Debeli Brijeg on the border between Croatia and FRY, also in the DMZ. The Yugoslav Army personnel were withdrawn on 24 September but the heavy weapon remained in place. In the UN-controlled zone, the presence of unmanned checkpoints of Croatia and FRY for the purpose of operating a crossing regime at Cape Kobilica continued to violate the security regime. On 26 August, the Croatian President and an official party entered the zone without prior authorization, constituting the highest level of violation the zone had recorded since 1992.

The Secretary-General observed that, although the UN-controlled zones remained demilitarized and free of significant incidents, and despite the prevailing calm on the ground, there was still no movement towards a political settlement. Consultations on the confidence-building measures had not been followed by significant progress.

Communication. On 22 December [S/2000/1235], FRY said that it appreciated UNMOP's contribution to the maintenance of stability and security in Prevlaka thus far and its presence continued to be necessary to strengthen confidence and create conditions for finding an acceptable solution to the question. The major democratic changes that had taken place in FRY and the establishment of a new Government in Croatia would make it possible to step up the solution of the question of Prevlaka in a mutually acceptable way. FRY, therefore, invited Croatia to engage, as soon as possible, in concrete negotiations in the spirit of the current democratic changes in an attempt to solve the question of Prevlaka in good faith. As those negotiations would take some time, FRY expected that the Council would extend UNMOP's mandate until 15 July 2001.

Report of Secretary-General (December). In his December report on UNMOP [S/2000/1251], the Secretary-General said that Croatia's invitation in April to FRY to attend a fifth round of negotiations, together with FRY's acceptance, had not been followed so far by a meeting of the negotiating teams. Continued long-standing violations of the established security regime did not facilitate the establishment of mutual confidence. For that reason, the restrictions of movement imposed on UNMOP military observers on the Croatian side of the DMZ should be lifted. In the UN-controlled zone, the Montenegrin and Croatian police presence should be withdrawn and the violation of the security regime through continued operation of the checkpoints at Cape Kobilica should be resolved. The Secretary-General recommended that UNMOP's mandate be extended until 15 July 2001.

Bosnia and Herzegovina

The United Nations continued to support efforts towards the full implementation of the 1995 General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina (the Peace Agreement) [YUN 1995, p. 544] through the Office of the High Representative responsible for the Agreement's civilian aspects [YUN 1996, p. 293] and the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH) [ibid., p. 294], the key components of which were the International Police Task Force (IPTF) and the Mine Action Centre (MAC). Both those entities worked in cooperation with the multinational Stabilization Force (SFOR), led by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), which was responsible for the Agreement's military aspects.

The Peace Implementation Council (PIC), which continued to oversee and facilitate the Agreement's implementation, met in May to review progress in that regard. It issued a Declaration (see p. 338), in which it noted the slow pace of implementation and agreed on steps to accelerate it by setting key strategic targets for the consolidation of State institutions, economic reform and refugee return. Municipal elections were held in April and a general election in November.

UNMIBH elaborated a comprehensive mandate implementation plan aimed at completing its core mandate by December 2002. The Security Council extended the UNMIBH mandate until July 2001.

Implementation of Peace Agreement

Communications. On 28 January [S/2000/77], Bosnia and Herzegovina transmitted to the Security Council President the 25 January statement of the Secretary-General's Special Representative and Coordinator of United Nations Operations in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Jacques Paul Klein, before the Council of Europe on the subject of Bosnia and Herzegovina's admission to membership of that Council.

The Special Representative argued that real progress had been made in Bosnia and Herzegovina, although much more needed to be achieved for peace implementation to be self-sustaining. Five years after the conclusion of the Peace Agreement, the construction of the State of Bosnia and Herzegovina was still dogged by two major impediments: the building of a State identity and the continued domination of the political process by wartime leaders and recently enriched elites. Accession to the Council of Europe would promote State identity through a sense of belonging to a common value system based on respect for individual freedoms, rule of law and participatory government. It would enable Bosnia and Herzegovina to be confident in its relations with its neighbours and to fulfil its promise of being the most multi-ethnic democratic country in the Balkans. While Bosnia and Herzegovina still had a distance to go in fully meeting European standards, to deny accession would only reward those who caused its misfortunes. The dramatic change in Zagreb (Croatia), the expansion of the EU, and the strategic position of Bosnia and Herzegovina in the vision for a strong Europe argued for accession to be given.

Bosnia and Herzegovina, in agreeing with the Special Representative's overriding theme, said, in its letter of transmittal, that the longer the position of Bosnia and Herzegovina in relevant established institutions was blocked from without, the more that would encourage forces within the country not to fulfil commitments for membership.

On 9 February [S/2000/108], Bosnia and Herzegovina transmitted to the Secretary-General a proposal from the Co-Chairman of its Council of Ministers with respect to the Peace Agreement, entitled "Memorandum on Change". Though not a proposal of the Government, Bosnia and Herzegovina said that the proposal reflected the disappointment with the progress and development of the peace process. The Co-Chairman argued that the limited effects of the Peace Agreement and the fundamental changes in circumstances since its adoption pointed to the need to review the entire project, to remedy certain structural defects and to redefine the tactics for implementation. That was necessary to ensure the mass, rapid and secure return of refugees; to overcome the extended constitutional crisis; to define a well-thought-out strategy for the country's economic development; and to find solutions to the issue of the organization of the military. All those changes could be achieved in a relatively short period if the international community concentrated its efforts and made use of the resources at its disposal. Agreement could be reached within the framework of countries signatory to the Peace Agreement, with commitment on the part of PIC and a further expansion of the authority of the High Representative.

On 29 February [A/54/777-S/2000/170], Bosnia and Herzegovina forwarded to the Secretary-General the text of the "Position of the Croat Leadership regarding the process of deinstitutionalization of Croats in Bosnia and Herzegovina." According to the leadership of the Croat community in Bosnia and Herzegovina, since the signing of the Peace Agreement, the international community, instead of upgrading the rights and powers of the Croat community and making it a more equal partner of the Serbs and Bosniacs in the building of a common State, had limited them and, in fact, deconstituted the Croats, further alienating them. Therefore, Croat support for the Federation and a unified State had declined dramatically. Among the grievances cited were limits on the powers of the cantons in areas such as education, language, media, policing and the use of symbols; efforts to "unitarize" and centralize the Federation, especially in judicial and internal affairs, and outvoting the Croat members of the Federation Government and its deputies in the House of Representatives on questions of vital national interest; the process, at the State level, towards eliminating the principle of consensus and parity in the common institutions of Bosnia and Herzegovina, which would lead to a one-party State; and the issue of the constituent right of the Croats to elect their own officials, or to be represented by persons of their own choosing. The Croat leadership in Bosnia and Herzegovina continued to believe that the international community should assist it in finding ways to enfranchise the Croatian community and to harmonize the Peace Agreement in terms of standardizing institutions for all three communities so that the Croats could also develop a stake in Bosnia and Herzegovina as the other two communities already had. If the situation was not reversed, the Croat leadership and people in Bosnia and Herzegovina reserved their right to decide unilaterally what modalities to pursue to protect their rights as a sovereign and constituent people under the Constitution.

On 22 March [S/2000/248], Ante Jelavic, Member of the Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina, referring to the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY) (see PART FOUR, Chapter II) and its role in the success or failure of the Peace Agreement, stated that, as the Tribunal entered its eighth year, it was time to review its work. Issues such as its most recent judgement, the lack of progress regarding the Srebrenica case (see p. 353), the make-up of indictments and the imprisoned, as well as the Tribunal's competence over individual versus institutional responsibility should be of particular concern. Mr. Jelavic proposed that the Security Council consider whether the time was appropriate to undertake that review and appoint a commission to recommend possible changes. The Council should also review the establishment of a new body to address appeals and the issue of proper defence of the accused. Those issues represented a stumbling block to the peace process in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the region and required the Council's immediate attention.

On 5 April [S/2000/290], the FRY Federal Minister for Foreign Affairs condemned the 3 April arrest by SFOR of Momcilo Krajisnik (see p. 1221), the Speaker of the Republika Srpska Parliament and a member of Bosnia and Herzegovina's collective Presidency. He contended that some of the Tribunal's activities violated the Peace Agreement, the UN Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and international law and brought into question peace and security in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the region. The Federal Minister called for the abolition of ICTY and that its records be forwarded to the regular courts of UN Member States to be acted upon in accordance with their internal laws.

On 4 May [S/2000/381], Bosnia and Herzegovina said that it would like to encourage a debate within the Council and the adoption of standards of protocol in dealing with individuals who denied ICTY's authority, and by extension the Council and the United Nations as a whole. It set out norms of protocol and behaviour that could be considered.

Implementation of New York Declaration

On 6 March [S/2000/211], Bosnia and Herzegovina submitted the report of its Presidency on the implementation of the New York Declaration, adopted in November 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 314]. The Presidency reported that it had passed the draft Law on Border Service, but the Parliament failed to do likewise, obliging the High Representative to impose it. The training of future border staff was running as envisaged. The first Border Service unit was formed and would assume duties in March. In February, the Presidency appointed the Director and Deputy Director of the Border Service and requested the Service to present a plan for harmonizing its organization and structure. It established the secretariat of the Presidency and adopted the Book of Rules of the Organization and the Job Classification in the secretariat and appointed its senior staff. The filling of other vacancies was in progress. The Presidency harmonized the new structure of the Council of Ministers, adopted the budget for Bosnia and Herzegovina's institutions, and determined foundations for the Electoral Law, which was being discussed in Parliament.

A decision was taken to accede to the Regional Centre South-East Europe Cooperative Initiative for the struggle against international crime and to sign the civic-legal convention of the Council of Europe for the struggle against corruption. A central database within the Ministry of Civil Affairs and Communications was in its final stage of establishment and changes to the Law on Passports had been forwarded to the Parliament. The Presidency appointed those members of the Committee for the Implementation of the Return Programme nominated by the Council of Ministers and entity Governments. The Committee met on 23 February and prepared a report on the situation regarding the return of refugees and internally displaced persons, which was submitted to the Security Council.

Security Council consideration. On 9 May [S/PV.4136], the Security Council met to consider the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The High Representative, Wolfgang Petritsch (Austria), told the Council that time was running out for international engagement in Bosnia and Herzegovina and donor fatigue had set in. The $5.1 billion, four-year reconstruction aid package was all spoken for and SFOR had reduced its troop numbers by nearly a third. It was therefore necessary to focus on economic reform, acceleration of the return of refugees and displaced persons, and the consolidation of institutions, especially those at the State level.

On the economic front, the country was still far too dependent on international aid; to have any hope of a secure future, the economy had to become self-sustaining fast. Domestic and foreign investments were needed. However, the country's industry was still geared to the old command economy model. The Government's urgent task was to create an enabling environment for investors and to encourage small and medium-sized enterprises. The lack of a reliable banking system was another important obstacle to private investment, closely connected to the payment bureaux system. The numerous private banks were too small to provide the working capital necessary to kick-start enterprise. Overhauling the banking sector should encourage the participation of foreign banks and thus the necessary injection of capital. The process of privatization was in its first stage and the opening of the books of big State-sector companies to independent audit prior to evaluation had met with fierce political resistance.

As to the return of refugees and displaced persons, there had been twice as many returns so far in 2000 as in the same period in 1999 and that trend was likely to continue.

Concerning the consolidation of common institutions, the rule of law at the State and entity levels was actively being promoted and there was a major public affairs campaign to promote respect for property rights as part of efforts to accelerate returns. However, the High Representative reported that, despite the Presidency's pledge before the Council in the New York Declaration to establish the State Border Service, it had failed to do so, forcing him to impose it. Although the Presidency passed the draft election law to the Parliament as promised, its members stood by as the draft law was voted down. The New York Declaration also committed the Presidency to resolving the institutional crisis concerning the State Council of Ministers. Its members failed to meet the deadline for agreement on a new arrangement to replace the policy of rotating the chairmanship of the Council of Ministers, as a result of which that common institution fell into abeyance in February. The new law proposed by the Presidency still followed old patterns of ethnic parity and rotation. The ethnic agenda had once again taken precedence over what was best for the people of Bosnia and Herzegovina. All those actions confirmed that the leaders of Bosnia and Herzegovina were still far from ready to take responsibility for their country.

The High Representative said that the establishment of the concept of ownership was starting to take root, as demonstrated by the result of the municipal elections held across the country on 8 April. He was encouraged by that development, as political pluralism was a sure sign that democracy in Bosnia and Herzegovina was maturing. While the nationalist parties were still strong, their grip was weakening. The reform of the media, the professionalization of the police and the insistence on economic reform were steadily eroding their source of power. The High Representative declared that it was imperative to persevere in Bosnia and Herzegovina, because if the project there failed, ethnically pure mini-States were likely to dominate South-East Europe in the twenty-first century.

Declaration of Peace Implementation Council

The Peace Implementation Council (PIC) and the leaders of Bosnia and Herzegovina met in Brussels, Belgium, on 23 and 24 May to review progress in implementing the Peace Agreement [YUN 1995, p. 544] and to set priorities for a new accelerated phase of peace implementation.

In its 25 May declaration [S/2000/586], PIC underscored that much had been accomplished and the building of the State of Bosnia and Herzegovina had begun. In particular, the security situation had stabilized, major reconstruction had been completed, the return of refugees and displaced persons was accelerating, the Brcko District was established and political pluralism was gaining strength. However, PIC was dissatisfied with the slow pace of domestic peace implementation since its Madrid meeting [YUN 1998, p. 329]. PIC urged the High Representative to ensure full and accelerated implementation in all sectors of civilian implementation, including removing obstacles to economic reform.

PIC agreed on steps to accelerate implementation of the Peace Agreement in the period up to the next scheduled presidential elections in 2002, focusing on deepening economic reform and creating the conditions for market-driven eco-conomic growth; accelerating the return of displaced persons and refugees; and fostering functional and democratically accountable common institutions supported by an effective merit-based civil service and a sound financial basis. PIC reaffirmed its commitment to Bosnia and Herzegovina integrating into European structures. It would continue to assist the country through a civilian and military presence and believed that SFOR's current level of active engagement was essential to successful peace implementation. PIC expected Bosnia and Herzegovina and relevant countries to cooperate with ICTY to bring to justice all political or military leaders indicted for war crimes.

The Council, urging donors to condition assistance on the implementation of concrete and specific reforms, cited a number of them, including: the creation of a single economic space; enabling private sector growth; expeditious and transparent privatization; and anti-corruption measures. PIC urged the authorities to collaborate closely with international financial institutions and other donors in the design and implementation of economic reforms.

PIC noted the significant progress made concerning the return of displaced persons and refugees but that the clear will of citizens to return was not matched by authorities at all levels. The slow progress in urban returns reflected the unwillingness by all sides to implement property legislation and enforce the legal rights of all citizens. The High Representative was urged to take action against prominent Bosnians who continued to occupy contested property. The Council endorsed the Reconstruction and Return Task Force programme to accelerate the pace of return.

As to the goal of fostering and consolidating institutions, PIC noted that many public institutions, particularly State institutions, continued to fail, due to the lack of political will on the part of the ruling political parties and the existence of parallel institutions. It supported the High Representative's efforts to empower State institutions and requested the donor community to funnel its assistance through those institutions. The Presidency and the Parliamentary Assembly should re-establish the Council of Ministers and assure adequate funding for State-level ministries.

Noting the limited progress in judicial reform, PIC called for a truly independent and impartial judiciary. In that regard, it considered the strengthening of the Constitutional Court and the establishment of a State court to be major priorities.

PIC requested the Bosnia and Herzegovina authorities, in collaboration with UNMIBH, to accelerate deployment of the State Border Service and insisted that they complete the police restructuring process without delay. It endorsed the merger of the Human Rights Chamber with the Constitutional Court.

PIC also endorsed the holding of general elections in November, to be supervised by the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE). It requested OSCE to incorporate the provisions of the draft Election Law in the "provisional rules and regulations" as the basis for conducting those elections. The Council urged Bosnia and Herzegovina to put its intelligence services under democratic control and to consolidate them, and develop the Standing Committee on Military Matters into a State defence structure so that it could develop and oversee a common security policy. It welcomed the commitment to further reduce military expenditure by 15 per cent in 2000.

Appended to the declaration was a list of issues on which PIC demanded prompt action and which would be reflected in the strategy and programming of the donor community: the economy, return issues, institutions, exhumations, military issues, public security, the media, sport and education. Bosnia and Herzegovina would present reports to the PIC Steering Board every six months on the implementation of the programme set out in the declaration and the appendix, the first of which would be in October.

Prior to the PIC meeting, the EU, in a 22 May statement [S/2000/486], said that the programme presented by PIC would empower the people of Bosnia and Herzegovina to seize the opportunities open to those in a modern European State, and to choose the path of prosperity and democratic freedoms.

In communications of 20 and 23 May [S/2000/458, S/2000/472], FRY condemned the failure of the EU Presidency to extend an invitation to it to participate in the PIC ministerial meeting and requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider the matter.

Civilian aspects

The civilian aspects of the 1995 Peace Agreement [YUN 1995, p. 544] entailed a wide range of activities, including humanitarian aid, infrastructure rehabilitation, establishment of political and constitutional institutions, promotion of respect for human rights and the holding of free and fair elections. The High Representative, who chaired the PIC Steering Board and other key implementation bodies, was the final authority with regard to implementing the civilian aspects. UNMIBH, which comprised a UN civilian office, IPTF and MAC, reported to the Secretary-General through his Special Representative and Coordinator of United Nations Operations in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Jacques Paul Klein (United States).

Reports of High Representative. The High Representative, Wolfgang Petritsch (Austria), reported on the implementation process during the year, covering the periods from October 1999 to mid-April 2000 [S/2000/376] and mid-April to October 2000 [S/2000/999]. A later report [S/2001/219] covered activities during the remainder of the year. He described progress in the civilian implementation of the Peace Agreement, which he had been mandated to monitor, mobilize and coordinate. (For details, see below under specific subjects.)

UN Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH)

Report of Secretary-General (March). On 15 March [S/2000/215], the Secretary-General, reporting on UNMIBH activities in police restructuring, said that data collection and initial screening for the Law Enforcement Personnel Registry had proceeded quickly. On 1 March, over 5,500 officers had registered and 3,300 had been pre-screened, of whom only 120 did not meet required minimum standards. Steady progress was also being made in changing the composition of the police force to better reflect the multi-ethnic character of the communities it served. Over 320 minority police officers were attending courses or had already graduated from police academies in both Bosnia and Herzegovina entities. Graduates of the first multi-ethnic classes were completing field training before permanent deployment. The third multi-ethnic police academy class in Republika Srpska began in February. On 1 March, UNMIBH established the inter-entity Ministerial Consultative Meeting on Police Matters to facilitate inter-entity law enforcement agreements and establish procedures for recruitment and voluntary redeployment of minority officers. UNMIBH also initiated a police commissioner programme aimed at instituting a single chain of command in the cantonal police forces under a professional and independent police commissioner, selected on merit rather than ethnicity and insulated from political influences. That was intended to help remove political control and parallel chains of command in the Federation's police structures, a serious problem in ethnically mixed cantons. Both the Sarajevo Canton and the Federation Ministry of the Interior had begun the process of creating such posts.

In terms of the integration of the specialized police forces, in January, the Federal Ministry of the Interior finalized the restructuring of the Anti-Terrorist Unit, proportionally staffed by Croats and Bosniacs. In Republika Srpska, eligible members of the former Police Anti-Terrorist Brigade had started training for entry into the new specialized force. When fully staffed, IPTF co-locators would be appointed and the force transferred from SFOR supervision to civilian control. In February, UNMIBH organized the first meeting of commanders and deputy commanders of all cantonal specialized police units, at which Bosniacs and Croats agreed on improved operational cooperation and joint exercises. Those units would eventually replace international intervention in riot control and in case of serious threat to public security. UNMIBH was assisting in drafting amendments to the Federation Court Police Law and related rules and regulations for the establishment of court police.

UNMIBH faced severe obstruction and delay in integrating Bosniac and Croat police officers in Canton 7 (Herzegovina-Neretva) and in establishing the State Border Service. In Mostar, senior Croat authorities refused to allow Bosniac officers to work in the Croat-controlled western part of the city in the same building as their Croat counterparts. Local Croat obstruction affected all aspects of the international community's work in that canton. There had been only minimal achievements in technical aspects of integration of the cantonal Ministry of the Interior.

Concerning the State Border Service Law, which the High Representative imposed on 13 January, the Joint Presidency had accepted UNMIBH's draft organizational structure, the three-phase implementation plan and the deployment of the first operational support team at Sarajevo airport to prepare the police there for transition to the State Border Service.

The reform of the police continued. As at 1 March, 643 IPTF officers were fully co-located at 204 local police locations and 52 police stations were staffed on a 24-hour basis. The co-location programme had already produced tangible results, such as improved response of local police to IPTF advice and interventions and increased awareness among the local population of the presence of international monitors, which had resulted in increased complaints against the police and other ministerial organizations.

Random IPTF inspections of police stations continued to reveal instances of non-compliance with its policies, particularly the continued presence of mono-ethnic intelligence agencies inside multi-ethnic police buildings. During a 9 February weapons inspection of the Glamoc police station, the Canton 10 Ministry of Interior building and the Livno police station, IPFT discovered an intelligence-gathering complex and confiscated unauthorized weapons, explosives and eavesdropping equipment.

In terms of police training, UNMIBH had shifted its advanced training activities towards the training of local police trainers. Its human rights office continued to conduct independent investigations of alleged human rights abuses by local police officers and to monitor investigations by local law enforcement in crucial cases. Breaches of human rights by seven police officials in the Federation led to their decertification on 14 January.

UNMIBH released three public reports with specific recommendations to improve judicial practice and procedure: the report on arrest warrants, amnesty and trials in absentia resulted in the adoption of remedial measures in the cantonal and municipal courts in Sarajevo; the interim report on delays in detention led to the development of a methodology for countrywide follow-up of its recommendations in that regard; and the summary of conclusions of conferences on judicial independence led the Ministry of Justice in Canton 9 (Sarajevo) to separate the Ministry's budget from that for judicial institutions. UNMIBH intended to use the Canton 9 budget as a model for judicial reform throughout the country.

The Secretary-General observed that those developments demonstrated that, while tangible progress was possible, it required intensive, coordinated and robust international engagement. Progress had been made in police restructuring, but there were many areas where UNMIBH had to work with other members of the international community to achieve common goals in areas of shared responsibility. At a time of increasing calls on limited resources, it was essential that all international organizations involved in peace implementation in Bosnia and Herzegovina redouble their efforts to make timely progress.

Security Council consideration (March). The Security Council, on 22 March [S/PV.4117 & Corr.1], considered the Secretary-General's report on UNMIBH. The Council President, summarizing the debate, said that Council members welcomed the 6 March report of the Joint Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina (see p. 337) concerning the implementation of the New York Declaration and urged all parties to redouble their efforts to implement the outstanding commitments. Council members also urged those concerned to ensure without further delay the integration of the Ministry of the Interior, as well as the chain of command and communications system of the police throughout the Federation, and in particular in Mostar. The Council also urged the parties, in particular the Republika Srpska authorities, to increase the number of minority police officers, in accordance with their obligations.

Report of Secretary-General (June). In June [S/2000/529], the Secretary-General reported that, since 1 March, an additional 4,000 police officers had been registered, bringing the total near to the 20,000 ceiling. Of those registered, 2,295 had been authorized to exercise police powers, 2,600 were provisionally authorized, pending background checks, and the remainder were still in the pre-screening stage. On 15 May, UNMIBH issued comprehensive policy instructions to regulate all aspects of recruitment for the local police forces and authorization to exercise police powers. Progress continued in the recruitment and selection of minority cadets for police academies in both entities. A total of 393 minority police officers (203 in the Federation and 190 in Republika Srpska) were attending or had graduated from the two police academies. The Republika Srpska academy was preparing procedures for the selection and testing of cadets for the fourth class, scheduled for September. Under the auspices of the Ministerial Consultative Meeting on Police Matters, an agreement on the voluntary deployment of serving police officers wishing to return to their former place of employment was signed on 12 May by both entities. UNMIBH was identifying housing and other requirements for a target group of 200 such officers to be deployed between the entities in 2000.

Despite those efforts, progress in the representation of minorities in the local police was unsatisfactory. In the Federation, there was no significant recruitment of minority police other than cadets, and only about 600 of the Federation's 11,500 officers were minorities. The situation was even more disappointing in Republika Srpska, where there were currently only 57 minority police officers in a force of approximately 8,500.

In the area of police reform, the institution of the police commissioner programme continued. UNMIBH and the Ministry of the Interior of Canton 9 (Sarajevo) had agreed on a job description and selection and review procedures, as well as on the structural changes necessary in the Ministry. Preparations for political and legal implementation were ongoing. Discussions on a similar position in the Federation Ministry of the Interior were at an advanced stage. In an effort to integrate parallel police structures in the Croat-dominated Canton 7 (Herzegovina-Neretva), the Cantonal Assembly endorsed, on 18 May, an UNMIBH-brokered agreement on a permanent solution and interim measures for the immediate integration of the divided Ministry of the Interior, enabling Bosniacs to work with their Croat counterparts in west Mostar for the first time since the war. Another significant development was the appointment of judges from different ethnicities to the nine new municipal courts, making it possible to recommence the processing of long-delayed criminal cases. In Bosniac majority cantons, the contracts of 40 police officers were terminated by the new Minister of the Interior on grounds of fraud. UNMIBH worked closely with the new authorities to secure important changes in senior police management.

In Republika Srpska, spontaneous minority returns were beginning, but were not being encouraged or supported. Evictions of "double occupants" in towns were exceedingly slow and little progress was seen following the March agreement between Republika Srpska and Croatia to begin cross-border refugee returns within three months.

With regard to human rights, UNMIBH and the International Organization for Migration (IOM) assisted in 43 cases involving 185 foreign nationals brought into the country for the purpose of forced prostitution. UNMIBH completed a comprehensive report on trafficking in human beings in cooperation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR). It also broadened its approach from investigating individual cases to improving the institutional integrity of the police forces. To support minority returns, UNMIBH adopted a stricter policy on local police illegally occupying residential premises, involving loss of authorization to exercise police powers.

The judicial system assessment programme, established in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 342] and scheduled to conclude in December 2000, found that the entire judiciary was, to a greater or lesser degree, politically, professionally and structurally dysfunctional throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina. The programme, which had created a working relationship with the judiciary and local officials, advised the judiciary on a daily basis, produced more than a dozen reports on different aspects of the judicial system, including recommendations for legislative, structural and political reform, monitored cases and worked with IPTF on joint police/judiciary issues. It also played a crucial role in creating the legal framework for the judicial review of all judges and prosecutors. The Secretary-General's Special Representative was in discussion with the High Representative to find a way to hand over the programme's work to either the Council of Europe, the Office of the High Representative itself or an appropriate UN agency, with UNMIBH retaining appropriate expertise to assist and advise IPTF in its work.

The Secretary-General observed that the recent achievements required consolidation, and UNMIBH should address core mandate areas where little progress was possible in the past, such as minority police recruitment and finding adequate housing for returning minorities, including police officers. UNMIBH would have to monitor police performance closely, especially with regard to the ethnic minority population. To provide more focus to its work, UNMIBH was preparing a strategic and operational framework for the fulfilment of its core mandate by December 2002, which would identify specific achievable goals to complete its mission, the programmes and modalities to achieve them and a time line for the completion of each programme. The process would involve the continuous review of resource levels and progressive resource reallocation and reduction as programme objectives were met. Consideration would be given to follow-up arrangements once the core mandate was implemented.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend UNMIBH's mandate until 21 June 2001.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 21 June [meeting 4162], the Security Council adopted resolution 1305(2000) by vote (14-0-1). The draft [S/2000/591] was submitted by Canada, France, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions concerning the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, including resolutions 1031(1995) of 15 December 1995, 1035(1995) of 21 December 1995, 1088(1996) of 12 December 1996, 1144(1997) of 19 December 1997, 1168(1998) of 21 May 1998, 1174(1998) of 15 June 1998, 1184(1998) of 16 July 1998 and 1247(1999) of 18 June 1999,

Reaffirming its commitment to a political settlement of the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, preserving the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States there within their internationally recognized borders,

Underlining its commitment to supporting the implementation of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"),

Emphasizing its appreciation to the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Commander and personnel of the multinational Stabilization Force, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the personnel of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including the Commissioner and personnel of the International Police Task Force, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, and the personnel of other international organizations and agencies in Bosnia and Herzegovina for their contributions to the implementation of the Peace Agreement,

Noting that the States in the region must play a constructive role in the successful development of the peace process in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and noting especially the obligations of the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in this regard as signatories to the Peace Agreement,

Welcoming, in this regard, the recent positive steps taken by the Republic of Croatia to strengthen its bilateral relations with Bosnia and Herzegovina, as well as its increasing cooperation with all relevant international organizations in implementing the Peace Agreement,

Emphasizing that a comprehensive and coordinated return of refugees and displaced persons throughout the region continues to be crucial to lasting peace,

Taking note of the declaration of the ministerial meeting of the Peace Implementation Council held in Brussels on 23 and 24 May 2000 and the conclusions of its previous meetings,

Taking note also of the reports of the High Representative, including his latest report of 3 May 2000,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 2 June 2000, and noting that the judicial system assessment programme of the Mission will be concluded by December 2000,

Determining that the situation in the region continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security,

Determined to promote the peaceful resolution of the conflicts in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel of 9 December 1994 and the statement by its President of 9 February 2000,

Welcoming and encouraging efforts by the United Nations to sensitize peacekeeping personnel in the prevention and control of HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases in all its peacekeeping operations,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

I

1. Reaffirms once again its support for the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"), as well as for the Dayton Agreement on Implementing the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina of 10 November 1995, calls upon the parties to comply strictly with their obligations under those Agreements, and expresses its intention to keep the implementation of the Peace Agreement and the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina under review;

2. Reiterates that the primary responsibility for the further successful implementation of the Peace Agreement lies with the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina themselves and that the continued willingness of the international community and major donors to assume the political, military and economic burden of implementation and reconstruction efforts will be determined by the compliance and active participation by all the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina in implementing the Peace Agreement and rebuilding a civil society, in particular in full cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Res-sponsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, in strengthening joint institutions and in facilitating returns of refugees and displaced persons;

3. Reminds the parties once again that, in accordance with the Peace Agreement, they have committed themselves to cooperate fully with all entities involved in the implementation of this peace settlement, as described in the Peace Agreement, or which are otherwise authorized by the Security Council, including the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, as it carries out its responsibilities for dispensing justice impartially, and underlines the fact that full cooperation by States and entities with the International Tribunal includes, inter alia, the surrender for trial of all persons indicted by the Tribunal and provision of information to assist in Tribunal investigations;

4. Emphasizes its full support for the continued role of the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina in monitoring the implementation of the Peace Agreement and giving guidance to and coordinating the activities of the civilian organizations and agencies involved in assisting the parties to implement the Peace Agreement, and reaffirms that the High Representative is the final authority in theatre regarding the interpretation of annex 10 on civilian implementation of the Peace Agreement and that in case of dispute he may give his interpretation and make recommendations, and make binding decisions as he judges necessary on issues as elaborated by the Peace Implementation Council in Bonn on 9 and 10 December 1997;

5. Expresses its support for the declaration of the ministerial meeting of the Peace Implementation Council held in Brussels on 23 and 24 May 2000;

6. Recognizes that the parties have authorized the multinational force referred to in paragraph 10 below to take such actions as required, including the use of necessary force, to ensure compliance with annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement;

7. Reaffirms its intention to keep the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina under close review, taking into account the reports submitted pursuant to paragraphs 18 and 25 below, and any recommendations those reports might include, and its readiness to consider the imposition of measures if any party fails significantly to meet its obligations under the Peace Agreement;

II

8. Pays tribute to those Member States which participated in the multinational Stabilization Force established in accordance with resolution 1088(1996), and welcomes their willingness to assist the parties to the Peace Agreement by continuing to deploy a multinational Stabilization Force;

9. Notes the support of the parties to the Peace Agreement for the continuation of the Stabilization Force, set out in the declaration of the ministerial meeting of the Peace Implementation Council in Madrid on 16 December 1998;

10. Authorizes the Member States acting through or in cooperation with the organization referred to in annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement to continue for a further planned period of twelve months the Stabilization Force as established in accordance with resolution

1088(1996) under unified command and control in order to fulfil the role specified in annexes 1-A and 2 of the Peace Agreement, and expresses its intention to review the situation with a view to extending this authorization further as necessary in the light of developments in the implementation of the Peace Agreement and the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

11. Also authorizes the Member States acting under paragraph 10 above to take all necessary measures to effect the implementation of and to ensure compliance with annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement, stresses that the parties shall continue to be held equally responsible for compliance with that annex and shall be equally subject to such enforcement action by the Stabilization Force as may be necessary to ensure implementation of that annex and the protection of the Force, and notes that the parties have consented to the Force taking such measures;

12. Authorizes Member States to take all necessary measures, at the request of the Stabilization Force, either in defence of the Force or to assist the Force in carrying out its mission, and recognizes the right of the Force to take all necessary measures to defend itself from attack or threat of attack;

13. Authorizes the Member States acting under paragraph 10 above, in accordance with annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement, to take all necessary measures to ensure compliance with the rules and procedures established by the Commander of the Stabilization Force, governing command and control of airspace over Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all civilian and military air traffic;

14. Requests the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina to cooperate with the Commander of the Stabilization Force to ensure the effective management of the airports of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in the light of the responsibilities conferred on the Force by annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement with regard to the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

15. Demands that the parties respect the security and freedom of movement of the Stabilization Force and of other international personnel;

16. Invites all States, in particular those in the region, to continue to provide appropriate support and facilities, including transit facilities, for the Member States acting under paragraph 10 above;

17. Recalls all the agreements concerning the status of forces as referred to in appendix B to annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement, and reminds the parties of their obligation to continue to comply therewith;

18. Requests the Member States acting through or in cooperation with the organization referred to in annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement to continue to report to the Council, through the appropriate channels and at least at monthly intervals;

* *

Reaffirming the legal basis in the Charter of the United Nations on which the International Police Task Force was given its mandate in resolution 1035(1995),

III

19. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina, which includes the International Police Task Force, for an additional period terminating on 21 June 2001, and also decides that the Task Force shall continue to be entrusted with the tasks set out in annex 11 of the Peace Agreement, including the tasks referred to in the conclusions of the London, Bonn, Luxembourg, Madrid and Brussels Peace Implementation Conferences and agreed by the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed and to report at least every six months on the implementation of the mandate of the Mission as a whole;

21. Reiterates that the successful implementation of the tasks of the International Police Task Force rests on the quality, experience and professional skills of its personnel, and once again urges Member States, with the support of the Secretary-General, to ensure the provision of such qualified personnel;

22. Reaffirms the responsibility of the parties to cooperate fully with, and to instruct their respective responsible officials and authorities to provide their full support to, the International Police Task Force on all relevant matters;

23. Reiterates its call upon all concerned to ensure the closest possible coordination between the High Representative, the Stabilization Force, the Mission and the relevant civilian organizations and agencies so as to ensure the successful implementation of the Peace Agreement and of the priority objectives of the civilian consolidation plan, as well as the security of International Police Task Force personnel;

24. Urges Member States, in response to demonstrable progress by the parties in restructuring their law enforcement institutions, to intensify their efforts to provide, on a voluntary-funded basis and in coordination with the International Police Task Force, training, equipment and related assistance for local police forces in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to submit to the Council reports from the High Representative, in accordance with annex 10 of the Peace Agreement and the conclusions of the Peace Implementation Conference held in London on 4 and 5 December 1996, and later Peace Implementation Conferences, on the implementation of the Peace Agreement and in particular on compliance by the parties with their commitments under that Agreement;

26. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

VOTE ON RESOLUTION 1305(2000):

In favour: Argentina, Bangladesh, Canada, China, France, Jamaica, Malaysia, Mali, Namibia, Netherlands, Tunisia, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Russian Federation.

Speaking before the vote, the Russian Federation said that, although it agreed with the general thrust of the draft resolution, it could not support it, particularly paragraph 5, by which the Council would express support for the declaration of the May PIC meeting in Brussels (see p. 338). The Russian Federation did not participate in that meeting since FRY, one of the signatories to the Peace Agreement, was not allowed to work in that forum. The Russian Federation opposed attempts to oust FRY from all multilateral mechanisms. The policy of further isolating FRY and enforcing a blockade against it reflected the desire of certain individual States unilaterally to undo the Council's decisions. Moreover, it had serious problems with the provision extending UNMIBH's reporting period from three to six months, since it would weaken the Council's oversight of the Bosnian settlement process.

Security Council consideration (August). At a 15 August meeting [S/PV.4188], the Council received a briefing from the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations in which he focused on police restructuring and reform and strengthening of common institutions in Bosnia and Herzegovina. He reported that IPTF had reduced the allowed maximum police strength in the Federation to 10,600 because of the opening of the State Border Service and reduced needs in some of the smaller Federation cantons. The registration of police officers continued and UNMIBH was on track to conclude the full registration by mid-December.

With regard to inter-entity police cooperation and the strengthening of common institutions, a major initiative was taken on 27 June with the establishment of Joint Entity Task Forces on Illegal Immigration and Organized Crime through the Ministerial Consultative Meeting on Police Matters. The Doboj Public Security Centre in Republika Srpska and the Canton 2 (Posavina) Ministry of the Interior in the Federation cooperated in breaking up a group involved in drug smuggling and the production of counterfeit deutsche marks. In the Federation, Croat and Bosniac officers were cooperating with the Mostar police in carrying out the joint investigation and subsequent arrest of a group producing counterfeit passports.

A significant step towards building State institutions was the inauguration of the State Border Service entry point at the Sarajevo airport on 6 June. In late July and early August, the Service opened three additional crossing points at Doljani/Metkovic, formerly controlled by the Croatian police; at Izacic, formerly controlled by Bosniac police; and at Zvornik, formerly controlled by Serb police. There were currently 358 officers assigned to the Service.

The return of minority refugees and displaced persons continued to show progress, including to former hard-line areas in Republika Srpska, with 300 Bosnian families having returned to the Prijedor, Doboj, Visegrad and Foca municipalities. Over the past six months, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) had registered over 19,500 minority internally displaced persons and refugees returning, compared to just over 2,000 registered for the same period in 1999.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In his November report on UNMIBH [S/2000/1137], the Secretary-General said that the comprehensive Mandate Implementation Plan developed by UNMIBH, which aimed to provide a clear focus for fulfilling the mandate by the end of 2002, divided the Mission's work into six core programmes: police reforms; police restructuring; police and criminal justice cooperation; institution-building and inter-police force cooperation; public awareness; and general support for the participation of Bosnia and Herzegovina in the UN system, in particular in UN peace operations. The programmes addressed the three levels of law enforcement: the individual police officer, organizational structures of police forces and the required support for democratic policing in society at large. The Plan would assist UNMIBH in evaluating progress and reviewing internal resource allocation and resource levels.

An initial survey indicated that UNMIBH had made considerable progress in the past 18 months in establishing the Brcko District police force and in providing basic training for local police officers. At the same time, IPTF's average strength had fallen from 1,959 during 1998/99 to 1,709 as at 30 June. UNMIBH believed that a force of 1,850 IPTF officers was a realistic figure for the 2001/02 period.

On police reform, the Secretary-General reported that 6,200 of the 20,120 personnel registered as at 20 November had been provisionally authorized to exercise police powers and had received UNMIBH identification cards. In phase 2 of the project, UNMIBH would conduct detailed checks of wartime background and other character-related issues to weed out individuals suspected of war crimes or other offences before granting final certification. Over 300 police had vacated illegally occupied properties. While that addressed the legal problem, it opened that of finding permanent housing solutions for thousands of displaced police officers.

In terms of police restructuring, UNMIBH had determined the maximum strength and targeted ethnic composition of local police forces, taking into account the transfer of border functions from ministries of the interior to the State Border Service. The total number of police in Bosnia and Herzegovina might not exceed 18,438, comprising 7,835 in Republika Srpska and 10,603 in the Federation. Those levels were subject to further review.

Under the police commissioner project, legislation had been passed in Canton 9 (Sarajevo) and an independent selection and review board formed to review the 18 applications received. In Cantons 1, 5 and 6, political consensus had been reached and new posts were being established. The next priority was to extend the project to Republika Srpska. Substantial progress was also made with regard to the UNMIBH voluntary redeployment initiative, which commenced in May. Some 250 officers had applied for redeployment, of whom 30 had been successfully placed.

The absence of mechanisms to protect judges and witnesses remained a major impediment to establishing the rule of law, especially since police operations against organized crime and corruption had become more effective. UNMIBH had made little progress in securing funding to establish a dedicated court police service. Other options were therefore being reviewed, including the use of regular police. UNMIBH was working with local authorities and the judiciary in three cantons to develop an operational plan, as well as budgetary requirements for establishing such a service. If funding was not available, UNMIBH would review the entire project and seek alternative means of providing court and judicial security.

The Secretary-General stated that the lack of local and international funding had made it impossible to expand the State Border Service beyond the four border entry points. Current funding levels were barely sufficient to meet salaries and local operational costs, and the planned deployment of a further eight Service units before the end of the year was doubtful and might not be even possible in 2001 owing to the dire financial situation of the entity and State budgets. He reported also that, since the inauguration of that Service in June, the magnitude of illegal migration through Bosnia and Herzegovina to Western Europe had become apparent. In addition, the past months had witnessed a dramatic increase in the number of women victims of trafficking seeking UNMIBH assistance. He was concerned that, owing to a lack of funding, IOM was substantially reducing operations in that area, exposing victims to further risk following their release from local police custody. To address those problems and encourage inter-entity law enforcement co-operation, a Cooperative Law Enforcement Arrangement on Illegal Immigration and Organized Crime, signed on 26 September, had established a Joint Entity Task Force to exchange intelligence information, coordinate plans to stem the flow of illegal migrants and pursue criminal elements involved in human trafficking. The Task Force would also assist the Brcko Supervisor in closing the so-called "Arizona Market", a long-standing hotbed of criminal activity. The ministers of the interior of both entities had agreed to seek entity approval to request the State authorities to establish a centralized information-gathering mechanism to combat illegal activities.

In his concluding observations, the Secretary-General said that meeting UNMIBH's timetable to complete its core mandate by December 2002 would depend on the provision by international donors of the necessary financial resources. The voluntary redeployment programme for minority police officers was nearly stalled because of insufficient funding, and local funding for the State Border Service was barely sufficient to pay salary and operating costs. The International Monetary Fund doubted that the State budget for 2001 would be able to meet even those costs for the full year. The Secretary-General appealed to Member States to contribute generously to UNMIBH priority projects and to the Trust Fund for the Police Assistance Programme in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Later developments. In a later report [S/2001/571 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General indicated that UNMIBH's judicial system assessment programme was dissolved on 1 December and its functions subsumed into the Independent Judicial Commission established within the Office of the High Representative, which had been given the mandate for judicial reform in Bosnia and Herzegovina. UNMIBH retained a small Criminal Justice Advisory Unit to support IPTF on criminal procedure and the criminal justice process, advising on the structure and functioning of the judiciary, acting as a liaison between IPTF and judicial officials and the courts and encouraging cooperation between the police, prosecutors and the courts.

UNMIBH financing

In January, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly the UNMIBH financial performance report for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 [A/54/697] and the proposed budget of $153,588,000 gross ($145,543,200 net) for the maintenance of the Mission, including UNMOP (see p. 331) and the United Nations liaison offices in Belgrade and Zagreb for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 [A/54/712]. ACABQ's comments and recommendations with regard to those reports were submitted in April [A/54/841/Add.6]. The Assembly also considered the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the investigation into allegations of fraud in travel at UNMIBH [YUN 1999, p. 321].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 June [meeting 98], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee

[A/54/904], adopted resolution 54/273 without vote [agenda item 144].

Financing of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Having considered also the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the investigation into allegations of fraud in travel at the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1035(1995) of 21 December 1995, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina for an initial period of one year, and Council resolution 1247(1999) of 18 June 1999, by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission until 21 June 2000,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 1285(2000) of 13 January 2000, in which the Council authorized the United Nations military observers to continue to monitor the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula until 15 July 2000,

Recalling further its decision 50/481 of 11 April 1996 on the financing of the Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 53/233 of 8 June 1999,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina as at 30 April 2000, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 53.6 million United States dollars, representing 8 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission to the period ending 21 June 2000, notes that some 41 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

4. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

5. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

6. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Mission, and for this purpose requests the Secretary-General to speed up the implementation of the asset management system at all peacekeeping missions in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/1 A of 15 October 1997;

8. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

9. Takes note of the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the investigation into allegations of fraud in travel at the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

12. Decides to appropriate the amount of 158,707,667 dollars gross (149,375,001 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, inclusive of the amount of 7,530,382 dollars gross (6,372,279 dollars net) for the support account for peacekeeping operations and the amount of 1,177,285 dollars gross (1,047,522 dollars net) for the United Nations Logistics Base, to be apportioned, as an ad hoc arrangement, among Member States at a monthly rate of 13,225,639 dollars gross (12,447,917 dollars net) in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, 50/451 B of 23 December 1995 and 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999, and for the year 2001, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the Mission beyond 30 June 2000;

13. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 12 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 9,332,666 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001;

14. Decides further that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 12 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 19,642,720 dollars gross (17,805,020 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1999;

15. Decides that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 19,642,720 dollars gross (17,805,020 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 1999 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

16. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

17. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Mission;

18. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

19. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina".

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the financing of UNMIBH should remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458) and that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item at that session (decision 55/455).

International Police Task Force (IPTF)

During 2000, the authorized strength of UNMIBH's International Police Task Force remained at 2,057. Owing to continued requirements in the Kosovo province of FRY and elsewhere, the actual strength as at December stood below that number, at 1,808. UNMIBH assessed that a strength of 1,850 officers would be realistic for the 2001/02 period.

In February, General Vincent Coeurderoy (France) was appointed to succeed Detlef Buwitt (Germany) as Commissioner of IPTF [S/2000/117, S/2000/118].

IPTF continued to assist in the restructuring and reform of the police services in the Federation and to monitor local police. Together with more specialized monitoring, such as co-location and support for local investigations, basic monitoring continued to be the core task of the majority of officers. As at 1 March, 643 IPTF officers were fully co-located at 204 local police locations. Full co-location was completed in all Brcko District police stations on 25 May. IPTF levels in that district were being reviewed so that they could be adjusted in accordance with progress made and officers redeployed to other high-priority regions. IPTF continued its training and certification programmes and the random inspection of police stations.

Civil affairs

In October [S/2000/999], the High Representative reported that the Council of Ministers was finally instituted. The new Law on the Council of Ministers was adopted on 13 April but it was not until 6 June that the Bosnia and Herzegovina House of Representatives approved Spasoje Tusevljak as Chair of the Council. On 22 June, the House approved the Ministers and Deputy Ministers nominated by the Chair. The Council had met regularly since its establishment and had adopted proposed legislation related to the State treasury, travel documents and political party financing. Three new Ministries (the Ministry of the Treasury for the Institutions of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Ministry for European Integration and the Ministry for Human Rights and Refugees) were established.

However, overall progress in strengthening State institutions remained slow. Frequent delays in decision-making resulted in a serious backlog of legislation to be adopted, further hampering the work of the Bosnia and Herzegovina Parliamentary Assembly. The lack of commitment among politicians to strengthen the State continued to block the effective functioning of common institutions. Pending the adoption of a State-level Civil Service law, the High Representative had insisted on competitive recruitment of civil servants to new Ministries. The Ministry of European Integration had set a good example in that regard.

The Bosnia and Herzegovina Presidency had reached agreement on a number of areas, had ratified several agreements and treaties and agreed to the Rule Book on Internal Organization of the Auditing Office for Bosnia and Herzegovina Institutions. However, there was little or no progress in other areas. The Presidency secretariat had not been fully established and the High Representative was not satisfied with the method of staff recruitment. Important decisions continued to require the constant application of pressure from the international community due to the lack of dialogue and constructive engagement in decision-making among the three Presidency members, who continued to act and take decisions along strict ethnic lines. In July, the Chair of the Presidency, Alija Izetbegovic, announced his resignation, to take effect at the end of his term on 12 October.

The Parliamentary Assembly had adopted its 2000 work plan, as well as laws on party financing, the Council of Ministers and succession. The latter law contradicted the Constitution and the High Representative had decided to impose amendments so that the most important institutions served the interests of the citizens and not those of the ruling nationalistic elite. The Assembly also adopted the Law on State Treasury but failed to adopt the Law on Travel Documents, which had to be imposed by the High Representative in order to provide for a single national passport. The Office of the High Representative strengthened basic civil information management by establishing on 28 June the Central Registry of Passports in the Ministry of Civil Affairs and Communications. Legal working groups were also established to finalize the draft laws on identification cards, unique citizen number and residency. A joint working group of the Ministry of Civil Affairs and Communications/entity Ministry of the Interior was drafting State-level laws on data protection and mandatory data exchange to create protections for the first post-war citizens register.

The 1 July decision of the Bosnia and Herzegovina Constitutional Court on the Constituent Peoples' Case that no ethnic group constituent on the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina should be excluded for exercising its rights in the entities was the most debated and sometimes contested juridical and political issue. In Republika Srpska, the decision was seen as politically motivated, while in the Federation it was welcomed by most political parties.

The High Representative reported that he had dismissed 21 public officials for serious and persistent obstruction of the Peace Agreement; 19 of those officials were to be barred from holding any public elected and appointed office.

Elections

The High Representative reported in May [S/2000/376] that Bosnia and Herzegovina had held its second municipal elections on 8 April without significant incident or disruption. They were the first to be held under the new Provisional Election Commission rules. Participation was high (around 66 per cent), with a higher turnout in Republika Srpska, despite calls by nationalist Serb radicals for a boycott. Although party pluralism improved, nationalist parties continued to dominate in predominantly Croat or Serb municipalities. The multi-ethnic Social Democratic Party (SDP) gained significant ground against the main Bosniac nationalist party, the Party of Democratic Action (SDA) in the Bosniac-majority areas of the Federation. The main Croat party, the nationalist Croat Democratic Community (HDZ), retained most of its municipal seats. In Republika Srpska, the results were mixed, with the nationalist Serb Democratic Party retaining most of the municipalities it controlled, while the moderate forces made limited advances and a new party successfully made its appearance.

General elections were held on 11 November for the Bosnia and Herzegovina House of Representatives, the Federation and Republika Srpska parliaments, the Republika Srpska President and Vice-President, and Cantonal Assemblies in the Federation and the Srebrenica municipality. Supervised by OSCE, the elections were generally judged to be free and fair, except for the action by HDZ, which organized a "referendum" on election day. Voter turnout was estimated at 70 per cent, higher than that in the April municipal elections, although it varied from region to region. At the State level and in the Federation, moderate non-nationalist parties, which had formed a post-election coalition named "Alliance for Change", had made important gains. The multi-ethnic SDP polled well, but not as well as hoped, and smaller parties, such as the Party of Democratic Progress and the Party for Bosnia and Herzegovina, also gained ground. The Croat opposition parties—the New Croat Initiative and the Croatian Peasants Party of Bosnia and Herzegovina—survived. Overall the election results confirmed the pluralist nature of the political landscape and a continuation of growing support for more moderate political parties.

Republika Srpska issues

The High Representative reported during 2000 on issues related specifically to Republika Srpska, the entity of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina where primarily Bosnian Serbs resided. In May [S/2000/376], he indicated that the ruling Sloga coalition (the three Serb government parties) had come under considerable pressure as a result of internal and external disaffection. The Socialist Party of Republika Srpska (SPRS) withdrew from Sloga, with its anti-government faction forming the new Democratic Socialist Party. Nevertheless, Prime Minister Dodik had withstood those repeated attacks on his authority. Vice President Mirko Sarovic of the Serb Democratic Party (SDS) attempted to assume the Presidency of Republika Srpska.

In October [S/2000/999], the High Representative said that, in recent months, the political climate had deteriorated, almost short of collapse, with indications that FRY played a significant role. That crisis required frequent interventions by his Office to make sure that the entity parliament passed important legislation to provide visible support for the Government. With the growing economic problems in the entity, the cleavage among and within the Sloga parties after the municipal elections resulted in a split within two of the three coalition partners. As a result of those defections, Sloga was unable to prevent the most radical nationalist parties from challenging the Dodik Government in the entity parliament. On 7 September, Prime Minister Dodik lost a confidence vote. The High Representative urged the Government to stay in office until the elections in November (see p. 349). Following the elections, a new entity parliament was constituted by the end of the year. The SDS leadership, including Republika Srpska's newly elected President, Mr. Sarovic, issued a 12 December statement endorsing the Peace Agreement and all PIC documents and expressing the party's readiness to cooperate immediately with the international community at all levels, including ICTY.

Brcko District

On 8 March, the Brcko District was officially proclaimed, with the appointment of the interim government and District Assembly selected by the Supervisor based on professional credentials. Little progress was made on the privatization of State-owned enterprises. The Supervisor was working with the German Development Agency to establish an expedited privatization programme for the District. All elements of the Bosnia and Herzegovina army and police were removed from within the boundaries of the pre-war Brcko municipality and entity armed forces located there would either be disbanded or relocated under the directives issued by SFOR and in compliance with the provisions of the Brcko Final Award [YUN 1999, p. 324]. The tri-ethnic 320-strong Brcko District Police Service was fully restructured and integrated.

In October [S/2000/999], the High Representative reported that the multi-ethnic government and Assembly were in place and fully operational. The Assembly had already adopted 10 District laws and others were being prepared. In education, a school opened with multi-ethnic staff and pupils and would serve as a model for the rest of the District. Returns were moving forward; it was estimated that, since April, a little over 1,300 properties had been reinstated. By the end of the year [S/2001/219], over 5,000 minority returns were reported. Following an inter-entity meeting on 19 September, with the participation of the Brcko District Government, various working groups were created to tackle cooperation and participation of the entities' governments in the development of the Brcko District on crucial issues such as returns and reconstruction, revenues, pensions, health care and other social programmes and economic development.

Returns

Approximately 67,000 minority returns were registered in 2000 compared with 41,000 in 1999. The actual number was even greater than the registered figures showed, as individuals of all ethnic groups were spontaneously exercising their choice to return. Further, returns in 2000 were no longer limited to a few areas and took place all across Bosnia and Herzegovina, including Srebrenica. However, the High Representative said that that progress highlighted the need for targeted programmes to ensure that past and future returns were sustainable. Access to personal documents, employment, quality education, pensions and utilities remained a problem in many areas. The Return and Restitution Task Force and the Economic Task Force were working with donors and community leaders to develop economic opportunities to maintain the momentum on returns.

Human rights

In May [S/2000/376], the High Representative reported continued improvements in the implementation of the decisions of the Human Rights Chamber, recommendations of the Ombudsperson and those of the Commission for Real Property Claims of Displaced Persons (CRPC). Compensation awards issued by the Chamber in both entities had been almost paid in full. However, property-related matters continued to be among the most difficult to implement. Property decisions were generally only implemented with strong international pressure and there was no indication that the Governments had taken steps to prevent property-related violations of the European Convention on Human Rights and other international human rights instruments.

The draft Ombuds-Institution legislation was adopted by the Federation House of Representatives, although progress in the House of Peoples was slow. At the State level, it was with the appropriate Minister. Republika Srpska adopted its Ombudsman legislation in February and Ombudsmen were appointed in mid-November, taking up their duties in Banja Luka and four field offices (Prijedor, Doboj, Foca and Bijelina). On 10 November, Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Federation and Republika Srpska signed agreements providing for the continued operation of the Bosnia and Herzegovina Ombudsman, the Human Rights Chamber and CRPC, until at least 31 December 2003. The Mostar "Liska Street" incident of February 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 307] was being investigated by Mostar judicial authorities as recommended in the special report of the Ombudsman of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Continued difficulties were anticipated in the implementation of the human rights institutions' decisions requiring the eviction of current occupants of previously abandoned accommodation. In addition, Republika Srpska had not complied with the order of the Human Rights Chamber to provide all available information on the Father Matanovic case, involving the disappearance of a priest and his family near the end of the war. Following repeated interventions by the High Representative, Banja Luka authorities, in November, gave an "urban permit" to reconstruct the former Ferhadija mosque, as required by a decision of the Human Rights Chamber. A building permit was expected to follow the submission of building plans.

The Republika Srpska Labour Law entered into force on 16 November, offering rights that were harmonized with those of Federation law. On the initiative of OHCHR, the Council of Ministers, on 2 December, decided to establish a Working Group to Combat Trafficking in Human Beings.

Judicial reform

The High Representative reported in May [S/2000/376] that the priorities outlined in the Comprehensive Judicial Reform Strategy [YUN 1999, p. 326] were being implemented. Notably, the goal of creating an independent and impartial judiciary was advancing considerably by the completion of laws regulating the selection and dismissal of judges and prosecutors. The Federation House of Representatives passed the Law on Judicial and Prosecutorial Service, and Republika Srpska, the Law on Courts and Court Service. However, those laws remained to be passed by the domestic bodies. The High Representative had emphasized the implementation of the imposed amendments to the Federation Law on the Supreme Court and the Law on the Federation Prosecutor's Office, creating a trial chamber within the Supreme Court for certain "federal crimes" with an inter-ethnic dimension. Cases primarily relating to drug trafficking had already been sent from the cantons to the new chamber and his Office continued to support full funding by the Federation Government. The High Representative continued to promote the establishment of a nationwide structure for judicial training. A Joint Advisory Board linking relevant officials from both entities was formed in February and his Office had taken the lead in bringing together those parties in Government and the international community whose cooperation was essential to achieve that goal.

In Republika Srpska, the High Judicial Council and the High Prosecutorial Council, established in accordance with the Law on Courts and Court Service, had begun their work, providing for a non-politicized mechanism for the appointment, discipline and dismissal of judges and prosecutors. The Councils, under international oversight, would conduct an extraordinary review to scrutinize all sitting judges and prosecutors to make sure they met basic standards of education and training and had proven capable of independently and impartially performing their functions. Under a similar legal structure, the Federation and cantonal judicial commissions had commenced their judicial reviews.

The Coordinating Board for education of judges and prosecutors had been established to draft the Law on Judges and Prosecutors Institute in both entities. To promote a coherent, consolidated approach to the issues of judicial reform and the promotion of the rule of law, the High Representative established on 1 December the Independent Judicial Commission (IJC). IJC would be the focal point for international assistance to judicial reform initiatives, assist in the identification and design of specific programmes, monitor the status of the judicial system and support domestic training organizations. It would operate independently, reporting to the High Representative, and was expected to be operational by January 2001.

The Herzegovina-Neretva Cantonal Court, with panels consisting of representatives of all three peoples presiding, had begun to try war crime cases on Bosnian soil.

Economic reform and reconstruction

The May PIC meeting in Brussels (see p. 338) had put economic reform at the centre of the international community's strategy for Bosnia and Herzegovina, the objective being to deepen that reform and create conditions for self-sustaining market-driven economic growth. The strategy was aimed at creating a single economic space, enabling private sector growth and fostering privatization. To create a single economic space, significant steps were taken, which either had been or were expected to be completed before the end of the year. They included an agreed law on the Bosnia and Herzegovina Chamber of Commerce and a draft Law on Statistics, which were ready for parliamentary procedure; banks from one entity being able to open branches in the other without having to satisfy capital requirements requested of foreign banks; ongoing tax harmonization and the establishment of a working group to review double taxation cases; and approval of the State Treasury Law. The Bosnia and Herzegovina Treasury was already set up and the nomination of supreme auditors was under way.

Concerning private sector growth, several new initiatives were creating a more favourable environment for enterprises in Bosnia and Herzegovina. To facilitate clear ownership titles, the base of any market economy, a working group on a new law on land registry and cadastres, attended by both entities, would be preparing the necessary by-laws by the end of the year. Further progress was achieved in preparing a full set of laws in standardization, metrology and intellectual property. The final draft of a new obligation law was expected to be ready by mid-2001.

As to privatization, international standard tender regulations had been approved. The International Advisory Group for banking sector issues was focusing on a unified approach to bank privatization and reform, effective regulation and supervision, and deposit insurance. On 23 May, the High Representative issued a decision amending banking laws in both entities, providing protection for bank supervisors, examiners and officials of the banking agencies from personal liability arising from the normal performance of their duties. The Federation amended the Law on Deposit Insurance in April, providing a proper legal framework for setting up a system to improve security for deposits. Republika Srpska was to harmonize its Law on Deposit Insurance shortly and the international community was ready to provide considerable funds and technical assistance for deposit insurance. To reduce the risks for domestic and foreign direct investors participating in privatization and to remove obstacles to economic growth, the High Representative issued a decision protecting buyers of privatized assets from restitutions in kind without preventing claimants from seeking legal recourse.

In other areas, the entity Governments created, in March, the new joint Bosnia and Herzegovina Road Infrastructure Public Corporation. The Commission on Public Corporations recommended the establishment of three further joint public corporations for natural gas transmission, broadcasting transmission infrastructure and power transmission. In the energy sector, the Office of the High Representative, in cooperation with the World Bank and other international agencies, was developing and promoting a package of measures that included creating an independent regulatory commission for the energy market, an open privatization process that would attract foreign investors and establishing a joint, high-voltage transmission company. The new telephone numbering plan for Bosnia and Herzegovina had been successfully implemented and interconnection agreements signed. A new policy for the telecommunications sector was developed, which foresaw the liberalization of the telecom market, except for international telephone services. Measures to strengthen the role and capability of the Telecommunication Regulatory Authority were also under way.

Media issues

Efforts to reform the public broadcasting sector had resulted in encouraging progress. In February, the illegal broadcasts of HDZ-controlled Erotel TV were halted. The management of Radio and Television of Bosnia and Herzegovina (RTVBIH) was replaced by the Public Broadcasting Service Board of Governors, and a new Director and a Deputy Director of Federation Radio Television were appointed. The property of the old broadcaster (RTVBIH) was being assessed with a view to apportioning it to the national Public Broadcasting System (PBS) and Federation Radio Television and to extracting the transmission system for use by a nationwide transmission company, TRANSCO.

Given the failure of the Republika Srpska Government and National Assembly to adopt adequate public broadcasting legislation, the High Representative appointed a more diverse Board of Governors for Radio-Television Republika Srpska (RTRS) and assigned to it preparation of a draft law on public broadcasting for the entity. The Government pledged to create a new subscription-fee arrangement eliminating excessive service charges. However, the financial situation of RTRS remained critical with little action by the Republika Srpska Government to alleviate the situation.

A draft Freedom of Information Law, prepared by an expert group in coordination with OSCE and the Office of the High Representative, was adopted for discussion in both houses of the Bosnia and Herzegovina Parliament. Another expert group was preparing a draft Defamation Law.

The Independent Media Commission (IMC) was working to evolve into a Telecommunications Regulatory Agency of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

From 1 June, all heads of department posts were held by Bosnia and Herzegovina nationals; the remaining international members were reduced to three and shifted to advisory roles. IMC was preparing to issue long-term licences that would require broadcasters to meet international norms. It was also working to ensure development of a fully coordinated frequency plan and better population coverage for the national broadcasters. It had launched the Advertising and Sponsorship Code and helped in the establishment of the Bosnia and Herzegovina Press Council.

The High Representative, in order to implement the reform of the public broadcasting sector, issued on 23 October his second decision on restructuring the Public Broadcasting System, placing emphasis on ensuring that the three main public broadcasters, PBS, Federation Radio Television and RTRS, were economically viable, transparently financed and professionally run. The new system took into account the mutual interests of those broadcasting companies, which would remain independent, but would work together to improve the public service in both entities and across the whole of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Srebrenica

On 13 July [meeting 4169], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/23 in commemoration of the tragic events in Srebrenica five years earlier [YUN 1995, p. 529]:

Five years after the fall of Srebrenica in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Security Council pays tribute to the victims of one of the worst civilian massacres in Europe since the end of the Second World War. In the week after the fall of Srebrenica, a United Nations designated safe area, thousands of innocent civilians were murdered, and thousands of others forcibly relocated as a result of the policy of ethnic cleansing.

The tragic events at Srebrenica must not be forgotten. The Council regrets the deplorable events and recalls its resolve to ensure that justice is carried out fully through the work of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, and that such crimes are not repeated in the future. The Council stresses the importance that lessons be learned and acknowledges the report of the Secretary-General on Srebrenica [YUN 1999, p. 327]. The Council reiterates its commitment to the full implementation of the Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement and to the establishment of multi-ethnic democracy and the rule of law throughout the territory of the former Yugoslavia.

I invite the members of the Council to stand and observe a minute of silence in honour of the victims of the Srebrenica massacre.

In an 18 July letter [S/2000/709], FRY said that the Council President's statement was not founded on facts and material evidence and was part of the long propaganda campaign carried out by countries opposed to the stabilization of the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina in an effort to undermine and revise the Peace Agreement and destabilize the entire region. The statement was also a function of the continued political pressure being brought to bear on Republika Srpska, FRY and the Serbian people in general.

The High Representative reported that, on 25 October [S/2001/219], he had issued a decision on the location of a cemetery and memorial site for the victims of the Srebrenica massacre to help Bosnia and Herzegovina come to terms with its past. The allocated land was in Potocari near Srebrenica. A plan was being developed to implement that decision, as was an inter-agency plan to create conditions for sustainable return to Srebrenica.

The Secretary-General, in his November report on UNMIBH [S/2000/1137], said that the legacy of Srebrenica continued to be of deep concern. The High Representative had exercised his authority to end the stalemate over the location of a permanent burial site for the remains of the victims and a memorial, and had established a trust fund for that purpose. That had helped to clear the way for concerted efforts at reconciliation, as well as to address the many problems of the families of victims wishing to return and the situation of displaced local Serb residents wishing to reclaim their own homes elsewhere or to remain in the area. The Secretary-General had requested his Special Representative to examine ways in which the United Nations, with other principal organizations, could play a special role in helping the people of Srebrenica.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 November [meeting 61], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/24 [draft: A/55/L.31 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 45].

The situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/242 of 25 August 1992, 47/1 of 22 September 1992, 47/121 of 18 December 1992, 48/88 of 20 December 1993, 49/10 of 3 November 1994, 51/203 of 17 December 1996, 52/150 of 15 December 1997, 53/35 of 30 November 1998, 54/119 of 16 December 1999 and all relevant resolutions of the Security Council regarding the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Reaffirming its support for the independence, sovereignty, legal continuity and territorial integrity of Bosnia and Herzegovina, within its internationally recognized borders,

Reaffirming its support also for the equality of the three constituent peoples and others in Bosnia and Herzegovina as a united country, with two multi-ethnic entities,

Welcoming the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"), signed in Paris on 14 December 1995,

Welcoming also the accomplishments achieved in implementation of the Peace Agreement, including the stabilization of the security situation, major reconstruction, the acceleration of the return of refugees and internally displaced persons, including to minority areas, the establishment of the Brcko District and the strengthening of political pluralism,

Welcoming further the efforts for the respect, promotion and protection of human rights and the strengthening of the rule of law in all of Bosnia and Herzegovina and for the development of the common institutions that will ensure that Bosnia and Herzegovina functions as an integrated modern State, accountable to its citizens,

Supporting those institutions and organizations of Bosnia and Herzegovina that are engaged in the implementation of the Peace Agreement and the process of reconciliation and reintegration, and noting, however, the slow progress in the development of efficient common institutions of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Concerned by the continuing obstructions faced by refugees and displaced persons wishing to return to their pre-war homes, in particular in areas where they would be an ethnic minority, emphasizing the need for an unreserved commitment by all political authorities, including at the entity and local levels, also emphasizing the need for all parties and the relevant States and international organizations to create the conditions necessary to facilitate a secure and dignified return, particularly in urban areas such as Sarajevo, Banja Luka and Mostar, and stressing the need for a regional approach to the issue of refugees and displaced persons,

Supporting fully the efforts of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, stressing the importance and urgency of the work of the International Tribunal as an element of the process of reconciliation and as a factor contributing to the maintenance of international peace and security in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in the region as a whole, demanding that States and parties to the Peace Agreement meet their obligations to cooperate fully with the Tribunal, as required by Security Council resolutions 827(1993) of 25 May 1993, 1022(1995) of 22 November 1995 and 1207(1998) of 17 November 1998, including with respect to surrendering persons sought by the Tribunal, and welcoming the efforts to secure compliance with the orders of the Tribunal, consistent with the Security Council mandate,

Noting improved cooperation between the International Tribunal and the States and entities in the region, as stated in the seventh annual report of the Tribunal, also noting that a number of individuals named in public indictments still remain at large, calling upon all the States and entities in the region to continue to improve cooperation and to comply fully with their obligations, and welcoming the efforts of the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Commander of the multinational Stabilization Force in implementing the provisions of the Peace Agreement,

Welcoming the mutual recognition among all the successor States of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia within their internationally recognized borders, and stressing the importance of full normalization of relations among those States, including the unconditional establishment of diplomatic relations in accordance with the Peace Agreement and the settlement of all issues relating to the succession of the former Yugoslavia on the basis of the legal equality of all five successor States, in order to contribute to the achievement of lasting peace and stability in the area,

Noting the significant improvement of relations between Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Republic of Croatia following the elections held in Croatia in January 2000,

Welcoming the important political change following the recent elections in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, and noting the significance of this change for the region as a whole,

Welcoming also the successful summit meeting of heads of State and Government to launch the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe in Sarajevo on 29 and 30 July 1999, and stressing that the Stability Pact offers a broad regional framework for further progress in Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Noting that democratization in the region will enhance the prospects for a lasting peace and help to guarantee full respect for human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in the region,

Stressing the importance of full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for the success of the peace efforts for the region, and calling upon the Governments and authorities in the region, as well as the relevant international organizations, to facilitate such full respect,

Concerned about the plight of thousands of families of missing persons in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and supporting fully the efforts of the International Commission on Missing Persons to resolve the fate of the missing persons,

Reaffirming the importance of the early adoption of a permanent electoral law, consistent, inter alia, with the ruling of the Constitutional Court on the equality of the three constituent peoples throughout the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina, calling upon the Parliamentary Assembly elected in November to adopt this law expeditiously, noting that such adoption is a prerequisite of membership of the Council of Europe, and reaffirming the importance of genuine democratic representation of all three constituent peoples in all common institutions,

Stressing the importance of faster integration of the countries of the region into the political and economic mainstream of Europe, on the basis of individual merits and achievements, also stressing in particular the positive impact that the early admission to the Council of Europe could have on Bosnia and Herzegovina and the region in search of sustainable economic and political stability, and noting the importance of Bosnia and Herzegovina establishing its place in Euro-Atlantic institutions,

Noting the positive impact of the five pledging conferences, held on 21 December 1995, 13 and 14 April 1996, 25 July 1997, 8 and 9 May 1998 and 30 May 1999 and chaired by the World Bank and the European Union, on the peace process and reintegration of the country as well as the reconstruction effort, stressing the importance and urgency of providing the financial assistance and technical cooperation pledged for reconstruction efforts, and stressing the role of economic revitalization in the process of reconciliation, in the improvement of living conditions and in the maintenance of a durable peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in the region,

Stressing that the provision of reconstruction aid and financial assistance is conditional upon the parties meeting their obligations under the Peace Agreement,

Recognizing the importance of demining for the normalization of life and for the return of refugees and internally displaced persons,

Welcoming the achievements, and encouraging further efforts at reducing the military assets in line with the Agreement on Subregional Arms Control,

Noting with appreciation that Bosnia and Herzegovina is beginning to participate in the peacekeeping operations of the United Nations,

Welcoming the important efforts of the European Union to promote reform and stability through its stabilization and association process, and recognizing the work of the European Union and other donors in providing humanitarian and economic assistance for reconstruction,

1. Expresses its full support for the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"), which constitute the key mechanism for the achievement of a durable and just peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina, leading to stability and cooperation in the region and the reintegration of Bosnia and Herzegovina at all levels;

2. Reaffirms its support for the New York Declaration, adopted on 15 November 1999, in which the Joint Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina agreed to important steps for moving forward the process of fully implementing the Peace Agreement, notes that the progress of its implementation has been slow, and urges the parties to take the additional steps necessary to comply with all of its aspects;

3. Notes the progress that has been made towards the implementation of the Peace Agreement, and reiterates its demands for the full, comprehensive and consistent implementation thereof;

4. Supports fully the efforts of the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina, in accordance with the Peace Agreement and subsequent Peace Implementation Council declarations, and calls upon all parties to cooperate fully and in good faith with him;

5. Stresses the importance for the peace process in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the region as a whole of the activities related to the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe launched in Sarajevo, and urges the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina to take concrete steps to play an active role in it;

6. Welcomes the Zagreb summit to be held on 24 November 2000;

7. Notes the progress achieved with the concept of "ownership" as presented by the High Representative, also notes the continuing need for the High Representative to use fully the authority of his office to deal with obstructionists, and stresses the need for the political leaders to assume more responsibility in the process of the implementation of the Peace Agreement;

8. Recognizes that the role of the international community remains essential, welcomes the readiness of the international community to continue its efforts towards a self-sustaining peace, and recalls that the responsibility for consolidating peace and security primarily lies with the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

9. Welcomes the ruling of the Constitutional Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina on the equality of all three constituent peoples throughout the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina, urges the entity parliaments and cantonal assemblies to implement it accordingly, and also urges the Constitutional Court to rule further on the status of those other than the three constituent peoples;

10. Also welcomes the vital contribution of the multinational Stabilization Force in providing a secure environment for the implementation of civilian aspects of the Peace Agreement, calls for the fullest cooperation by all parties in this regard, expresses its full support for the efforts of the United Nations International Police Task Force in carrying out its mandate, and commends its efforts in the establishment of the rule of law in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

11. Underlines the fact that the assistance provided by the international community remains strictly conditional upon compliance with the Peace Agreement and subsequent obligations, including in particular cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 and facilitation of the return of refugees and displaced persons;

12. Insists upon the need to surrender all indictees to the International Tribunal for trial, notes that the Tribunal has the authority to address individual responsibility for the perpetration of the crime of genocide, crimes against humanity and other serious violations of international humanitarian law in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and demands that all the parties fulfil their obligations to hand over to the Tribunal all indicted persons in territories under their control and otherwise to comply fully with the orders of the Tribunal and to cooperate with the work of the Tribunal, including with exhumations and other investigative acts, in accordance with article 29 of the statute of the Tribunal, with all relevant Security Council resolutions and in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Peace Agreement, in particular the Constitution of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

13. Welcomes the support given by Member States so far, and urges Member States, taking into account the orders and requests of the International Tribunal, to offer the Tribunal their full support, including financial support, in order to ensure the achievement of the purpose of the Tribunal, and to carry out their obligations under the statute of the Tribunal and all relevant Security Council resolutions;

14. Reaffirms once again the right of refugees and displaced persons to return voluntarily to their homes of origin in secure and dignified conditions in accordance with the Peace Agreement, in particular annex 7 thereof, and the realization of the same in cooperation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and host countries, calls upon all parties to improve substantially their cooperation with the international community at the State, entity and local levels, in order to establish immediately the conditions necessary for the return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes and for the freedom of movement and communication of all the citizens of Bosnia and Herzegovina, encourages the relevant international organizations to enhance the conditions to facilitate both spontaneous and organized return, in accordance with relevant provisions of the Peace Agreement, in particular the Constitution of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and welcomes continued and new efforts by the United Nations agencies, the European Union, bilateral and other donors and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to establish and implement projects designed to facilitate the accelerated voluntary and orderly return of refugees and displaced persons to all regions of Bosnia and Herzegovina, including projects that would help to create a safe and secure environment with increased economic opportunity;

15. Encourages the acceleration of the peaceful, orderly and phased return of refugees and displaced persons, including in areas where they would be the ethnic minority, strongly condemns all acts of intimidation, violence and killings, including those acts designed to discourage the voluntary return of refugees and displaced persons, and demands that such acts be investigated and prosecuted;

16. Welcomes the report of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations, and takes note of the recommendations stemming from and relevant to the report of the Secretary-General pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/35 on the fall of Srebrenica;

17. Reaffirms the previous conclusions of the Peace Implementation Council on the importance of reform of the media in Bosnia and Herzegovina, reiterates its support for the decision of the High Representative of 30 July 1999 on the restructuring of the public broadcasting system in Bosnia and Herzegovina, notes that its implementation remains behind schedule, and calls upon the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina to implement that decision in full;

18. Stresses the importance of establishing, strengthening and expanding throughout all of Bosnia and Herzegovina free and pluralistic media, deplors any action that seeks to intimidate or restrict the freedom of the media, and condemns violent acts of intimidation against journalists;

19. Reaffirms once again its support for the principle that all statements and commitments made under duress, particularly those regarding land and property, are wholly null and void, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Peace Agreement, and in that regard supports the effective engagement of the Commission for Real Property Claims of Displaced Persons and Refugees, and calls upon all sides to implement the property laws imposed on 27 October 1999, in particular by evicting illegal occupants from the homes of returning refugees, and to ensure respect for individual rights to return and the establishment of the rule of law;

20. Emphasizes the importance of economic revitalization and reconstruction for the successful consolidation of the peace process in Bosnia and Herzegovina, recognizes the important contribution of the international community in this regard, and invites it to continue its efforts;

21. Notes that corruption and the lack of transparency seriously hamper the economic development of Bosnia and Herzegovina, emphasizes the importance of combating corruption, welcomes the important contribution made in this regard by the Customs and Fiscal Assistance Office, and expresses its full support for the efforts of the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina and its local bodies and of others that are supportive in this regard;

22. Supports the efforts by the High Representative and the Commander of the multinational Stabilization Force, in accordance with the Peace Agreement and subsequent Peace Implementation Council declarations, to weaken the continued political and economic influence of remaining parallel nationalist structures obstructing the peace implementation;

23. Stresses the need for a more comprehensive approach to implementing economic reforms, and underlines the fact that a self-sustainable, market-oriented economy operating in a single economic space, expeditious and transparent privatization, improved banking and capital markets, reformed financial systems, the provision of adequate social protection and the adoption by both entities of a law on pension reforms that meet sound economic standards are crucial for achieving lasting peace and stability in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

24. Welcomes the proclamation of the Brcko District and the appointment of an interim government and District Assembly, expresses its support for implementation of the final arbitration award in accordance with the Peace Agreement, and stresses that the obligation to cooperate fully with the Supervisor for Brcko is an essential obligation for both of the entities;

25. Also welcomes the Mostar Document adopted on 12 July 2000 by the representatives of the city of Mostar and its six city municipalities under the auspices of the European Union, and calls for its implementation;

26. Notes that the pledged reduction of 15 per cent in the military assets of each entity was achieved in 1999, urges the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina to fulfil their commitment to a further 15 per cent reduction in 2000 in the areas of military budgets, personnel, equipment and structure, and encourages the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina to redefine their defence policies with particular reference to ensuring that the size and structure of the military is affordable, that it is consistent with the legitimate security needs of Bosnia and Herzegovina and contributes to regional security;

27. Stresses the need for timely information about the level of cooperation and compliance with the International Tribunal and its orders, the status and programme for the return of refugees and displaced persons to and within Bosnia and Herzegovina and the status and implementation of the Agreement on Sub-regional Arms Control;

28. Welcomes the establishment of the Missing Persons Institute on 15 August 2000 in Sarajevo by the International Commission on Missing Persons, and supports the programmes put in place to resolve the continuing problem of missing persons within five to seven years;

29. Also welcomes the efforts of international regional organizations, Member States and non-governmental organizations, including through the Board of Donors, and the Slovenian International Trust Fund for Demining and Mine Victims Assistance in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and invites Member States to continue to support the mine-action activities in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

30. Commends the efforts of the international community, including the Council of Europe, the European Union, the European Community Monitoring Mission, the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Committee of the Red Cross, the International Monetary Fund, the multinational Stabilization Force, non-governmental organizations, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the Islamic Development Bank, the Islamic Chamber of Commerce and Industry, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Peace Implementation Council and the World Bank, in their roles in the implementation of the Peace Agreement;

31. Commends, in particular, the efforts of the International Tribunal, the Office of the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Office of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations International Police Task Force, the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the United Nations Development Programme and the other United Nations agencies in the peace process, and encourages their further engagement in the peace process in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

32. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "The situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina".

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458).

Military aspects of Agreement

Stabilization Force

During 2000, the NATO Secretary-General reported 10 times to the Security Council, in accordance with resolution 1088(1996) [YUN 1996, p. 310], on the activities of the multinational Stabilization Force (SFOR), also known as Operation Joint Guard [S/2000/46, S/2000/190, S/2000/297,

S/2000/399, S/2000/555, S/2000/690, S/2000/792, S/2000/872, S/2000/967, S/2000/1164]. The strength of the Force, which operated under NATO's leadership, fell from approximately 24,000 at the beginning of the year to 22,000 in December. The troops, which were deployed in Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, were contributed by all NATO members and 15 non-NATO countries. The Security Council, by resolution 1305(2000) of 21 June, authorized the continuation of SFOR for a further period of 12 months (see p. 342).

During the year, SFOR continued to conduct surveillance and reconnaissance by ground and air patrols, and to monitor entity compliance with Council resolution 1160(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 369], prohibiting the transport of weapons and the movement of controlled petroleum products into FRY. It also supported IPTF by providing security for its inspection of local police stations and in conducting prison inspections, and provided assistance to international institutions in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including the Office of the High Representative. SFOR maintained a safe environment for and assisted OSCE in its supervision of the 11 November elections, delivered ballots to counting centres and assisted civil authorities in ensuring a safe and secure environment following the announcement of the results.

On 3 April, the meeting of the Standing Committee on Military Matters (SCMM) addressed the further reduction by 15 per cent of the entity armed forces (EAF) by the end of 2000. That planned reduction followed the 15 per cent reduction achieved at the end of 1999. At its 8 December meeting, SCMM decided that the target date for the completion of the 15 per cent reduction of EAF could slip from 31 December 2000 to 31 January 2001. SFOR would begin the development of a joint SFOR-EAF training and exercise plan in 2001. SCMM also agreed on plans for the expansion of its secretariat and indicated that it would consider the draft defence policy for Bosnia and Herzegovina and the future EAF restructuring in January 2001.

Communications. FRY, in letters of 31 May [S/2000/509] and 6 September [S/2000/852], protested the violation of its airspace by SFOR military aircraft and helicopters, stating that it would no longer tolerate such action. On 20 September [S/2000/884], FRY requested an explanation for the continued monitoring of the movement of controlled petroleum products into FRY. The Security Council had terminated sanctions against it by resolution 1074(1996) [YUN 1996, p. 316], and resolution 1088(1996) [ibid., p. 310], by which SFOR was established, contained no sanctions monitoring provisions.

Federal Republic of Yugoslavia

In 2000, the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK), in implementation of Security Council resolution 1244(1999), made significant progress towards developing provisional institutions for democratic and autonomous self-government in the Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY), promoting the return of the territory to a viable administrative structure and economic and social recovery and reconstruction. Nevertheless, the continuing violence in the province, mostly against Kosovo Serbs, and the slow pace in implementing some of the resolution's political provisions, especially with regard to the process of reconciliation and return of refugees and displaced persons, led the Council to send a mission to Kosovo in April to assess the situation there and look for ways to enhance support for implementation of the resolution.

As a first step towards a return to normalcy, municipal elections were successfully held on 28 October, despite the non-participation of the Kosovo Serb community, paving the way for the establishment of functioning municipal assemblies in Kosovo.

At the same time, relations between the FRY federal Government and the Republic of Montenegro deteriorated as that Republic asserted control over its own affairs in the face of a deepening constitutional crisis. That crisis was avoided following the election on 24 September of a new federal President, Vojislav Kostunica. The political changes in Belgrade renewed hope for the constructive political dialogue on the future of Kosovo.

Despite those positive developments, the Council remained concerned over the post-election violence, particularly the potentially explosive situation in the ground safety zone between Kosovo and Serbia proper. In a 19 December statement, the Council condemned the violent action by Albanian extremist groups in southern Serbia and called for their dissolution. It called on UNMIK and the international security presence to continue to make all necessary efforts to address the problem.

Situation in Kosovo

Implementation of resolution 1244(1999)

In 2000, the United Nations continued to work towards the full implementation of Security Council resolution 1244(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 353], which set out the modalities for a political solution to the crisis in the Kosovo province of FRY. The civilian aspects of that solution were being implemented by UNMIK and the military aspects by the international security presence (KFOR), also known as Operation Joint Guardian.

During the year, the Council received a number of communications from FRY conveying its assessment of the status of implementation of resolution 1244(1999) and recommendations for action by the Council to address the situation.

Communications. On 10 January [S/2000/19], FRY listed a number of violations of resolution 1244(1999) by the Secretary-General's Special Representative, KFOR and UNMIK, which it demanded that the Council address in order to have the situation in Kosovo and Metohija restored to its prior state. On 14 January [S/2000/25], FRY listed crimes committed on 29 December 1999 and 11 January 2000, which, it said, provided telling evidence that the terrorists of the so-called Kosovo Liberation Army (KLA) continued to kill and ethnically cleanse non-Albanians. On 19 January [S/2000/41], FRY called for an urgent meeting of the Security Council, since none of its requests regarding illegal acts by KFOR and UNMIK had been acted upon. It asserted that, because of the failure to implement, and/or an arbitrary interpretation of their mandate established by resolution 1244(1999), KFOR and UNMIK and the Special Representative and Head of UNMIK, in particular, bore direct responsibility for the current situation in the province, characterized by lawlessness, chaos, massive crime, destruction and usurpation of public and private property and everyday terror, killings, kidnappings and ethnic cleansing of Serbs and other non-Albanians. Since 12 June 1999, over 350,000 people, mostly Serbs and Montenegrins, but also Roma, Muslims, Turks, Goranci and others, had been driven out of Kosovo and Metohija. A total of 793 persons had been killed, 611 wounded and 688 abducted.

On 25 January [S/2000/51], FRY drew the Council President's attention to the inauguration of the so-called Kosovo Protection Corps (KPC), which it claimed amounted to an attempt to legalize the terrorist separatist KLA, and its drive to impose itself as a security factor. FRY requested that the crimes committed by members of KLA, now KPC, be condemned and that the organization be fully demilitarized and disarmed, its structures disbanded and its leaders, who were guilty of crimes against non-Albanians, brought to justice.

Regarding further complaints of violations of and failure to implement resolution 1244(1999), FRY, on 11 February [S/2000/110], stated that the escalation of ethnic Albanian terrorism was evidenced by the upsurge in the number of terrorist attacks committed recently, including the shelling of the Serbian village of Gorazdevac on 7 January and the mortar attack on a UNHCR bus ferrying Serbs on 2 February, among others (see below). Those atrocities had shattered the trust of the Serbian community in the ability of the international presences to provide protection mandated by resolution 1244(1999). Ethnic Albanian terrorists were also responsible for destroying more than 50,000 homes and wiping out the Serbian historical heritage in Kosovo and Metohija, and more than 350,000 Serbs, Montenegrins, Roma, Muslims, Turks, Goranci and other non-Albanians had been ethnically cleansed. FRY said that the Secretary-General's Special Representative had illegally established the so-called Interim Administration Council, a de facto provincial "Government", composed exclusively of Albanians, mostly KLA leaders and Albanian separatist parties, in an attempt to legalize an ethnically pure Kosovo and Metohija and sever its ties with Serbia and FRY.

FRY demanded that the Council take the most energetic steps to implement resolution 1244 (1999) and redress the current situation, including by rescinding the illegal regulations of the Special Representative and bringing back the functioning of State and public services in accordance with the laws of Serbia and FRY. It also demanded that the Yugoslav border, customs and passport control authorities return to the Yugoslav international borders in Kosovo and Metohija.

Those demands and others were formally compiled in memorandums forwarded to the Council President on 2 March [S/2000/176] and 3 April [S/2000/284], in which FRY also provided its own assessment of current developments in Kosovo and Metohija. Appended to the memorandum of 3 April was a list of terrorist acts and other violations of resolution 1244(1999) reportedly committed between 10 June 1999 and 30 March 2000.

FRY contended that the 10-month-long international security and civilian presence in the southern Serb province was devastating. By their overall conduct, KFOR and UNMIK had confirmed that the presence of international forces under UN auspices was a complete fiasco. The Security Council bore primary responsibility for the tragic consequences, since it failed to take measures to ensure strict implementation of resolution 1244(1999) and related documents. There was no longer an excuse for the further stay of the mission of the international community, which should be ended as soon as possible. FRY expected that its previous initiative for a Council mission to visit the country and see firsthand the dramatic developments in the southern Serb province would be implemented in the near future.

On 10 March [S/2000/206], FRY expressed its displeasure at a statement made by the Secretary-General at a 7 March press conference to the effect that he would provide a basis for discussing the issue of the autonomy of Kosovo and Metohija in the Security Council in support of his Special Representative's contention that it was necessary to open the question of the political future of that Serbian province. FRY protested the Secretary-General's announced intention of introducing the question of autonomy in the Council.

Mitrovica incident

The Secretary-General, in his March report on UNMIK [S/2000/177], informed the Security Council that, on 2 February, a clearly marked UNHCR humanitarian shuttle bus carrying 49 Kosovo Serb passengers and escorted by two KFOR vehicles was targeted by a rocket, resulting in two persons being killed and three injured. Following the attack, violence broke out in northern Mitrovica on 3 and 4 February, resulting in eight deaths and at least 20 to 30 persons seriously injured, the displacement of over 1,650 Kosovo Albanians from northern Mitrovica and the reduction of the number of Kosovo Serbs in the southern part of the city to just 20 individuals, the majority of whom were living at a monastery under KFOR protection. Some 5,000 Kosovo Serbs remained in isolated enclaves in the southern outskirts of the city, as well as some 2,000 Kosovo Albanians in the northern outskirts. UNMIK and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) were also affected by the violence, and international and local staff had to be relocated. Nine vehicles belonging to UNMIK, UNHCR, OSCE and international NGOs were burned or looted. The International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) office was burned and several NGO offices and one KFOR office were looted.

Following a period of tense calm, violence again broke out in Mitrovica on 13 and 14 February. On 13 February, a grenade attack against a Bosniac cafe in northern Mitrovica injured seven persons. Shortly thereafter, snipers firing from apartment buildings at KFOR positions on the ground seriously wounded two KFOR soldiers. One suspected sniper was killed and another wounded, both Kosovo Albanians. A total of 46 persons, the majority of whom were Kosovo Albanians, were taken into custody. On 21 February, a public march of Kosovo Albanians from Pristina to Mitrovica also led to a confrontation with KFOR forces. To improve security in Mitrovica, the KFOR Commander launched Operation Ibar on 20 February, during which part of the city was cordoned off and buildings searched.

Communications. In bringing those incidents to the attention of the Security Council President on 3, 13 and 21 February [S/2000/86, S/2000/111, S/2000/140], FRY said that it was obvious that a concentrated attack had been planned to drive Serbs, Montenegrins, Goranci, Slav Muslims and Turks out of Kosovska Mitrovica, the only remaining multi-ethnic and multi-religious community in Kosovo and Metohija, and complete the process of ethnic cleansing of non-Albanians living in isolated enclaves. It accused UNMIK and KFOR of not doing anything to put an end to ethnic Albanian terror and vandalism and of complicity in those practices. FRY said that it found the Secretary-General's reaction to the attack on the UNHCR bus unacceptable, as he did not condemn the rampant terrorism. It warned the Council that failure to confront the security situation in Kosovo and Metohija would cause an escalation of terrorism throughout the region and result in the destabilization of the Balkans and South-East Europe. It called for an urgent meeting of the Council and for action to put an end to ongoing and future attacks of armed ethnic Albanian terrorists on the unprotected Serbian population.

The EU, on 23 February [S/2000/158], expressed concern over the events in Mitrovica and reiterated its strong condemnation of all acts of violence and public disturbance. It reaffirmed its support for the efforts of UNMIK and KFOR in the implementation of resolution 1244(1999) and warned that defiance and threats to the international presence in Kosovo would not be tolerated.

On 28 February [S/2000/156], FRY protested the most recent attacks by ethnic Albanian terrorist separatists, in which a Yugoslav police officer and a physician were killed and three police officers and another physician wounded. On 8 March [S/2000/199], it said that the escalation of violence by ethnic Albanian terrorists against Serbs in Kosovska Mitrovica was further evidence that the terrorist-separatist KLA had not been disarmed and continued its attempts to drive all Serbs and other non-Albanians out of Kosovo and Metohija. It asked the Council to take urgent measures to protect them in accordance with resolution 1244(1999).

On 15 March [S/2000/219], FRY protested KFOR's establishment of an extended security zone in northern Kosovska Mitrovica in the town quarter called Bosnjacka mahala. It said that 16 Serb civilians were injured, two seriously, when they were assailed with stun grenades and tear gas as they gathered around the so-called Mali most (Little Bridge). By those actions, KFOR continued to assist ethnic Albanian terrorists in putting pressure on the Serbian population to move out of Kosovo and Metohija, with the aim of ethnically cleansing it. FRY expected the Council to ensure minimum security and relatively normal living conditions to the Serbian population in Kosovska Mitrovica, the last Serb refuge in Kosovo and Metohija. On 22 March [S/2000/244], FRY indicated that a railway bridge at Zvecan, near Kosovska Mitrovica, an area inhabited almost exclusively by Serbs, was dynamited on the night of 21/22 March. Other acts of violence in Orahovac and Gnjilane were brought to the Council's attention on 29 March [S/2000/270] and 12 April [S/2000/310].

Between April and September, FRY transmitted numerous letters to the Security Council President describing other instances of violent acts against Kosovo Serbs and other non-Albanian minorities [S/2000/332, S/2000/342, S/2000/357, S/2000/374, S/2000/388, S/2000/497, S/2000/508, S/2000/526, S/2000/531, S/2000/543, S/2000/588, S/2000/613, S/2000/636, S/2000/675, S/2000/708, S/2000/815, S/2000/830, S/2000/843, S/2000/877].

Special Security Council briefing

On 28 February [S/PV.4105], Carl Bildt, Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for the Balkans, briefed the Security Council on the situation in the region. He said that, although the war in Kosovo ended with Council resolution 1244(1999), and with a military-technical agreement, there was no proper peace agreement, a key factor that made UNMIK's task so demanding and difficult. Since the core issues of the conflict concerning the long-term position of Kosovo were not settled, it had made it much more difficult to move towards stability for the region as a whole and there were too many expectations and fears generated by those unresolved issues.

The starting points for a settlement in Kosovo were: the Council's support for the search for a regional settlement, including dialogue within the Council on the shape of such a settlement; the States of the region actively participating, including not only Belgrade and the political representatives of the Kosovo Albanians but the leaders of FYROM and Albania; a true deal had to meet the minimum demands of everyone but the maximum demands of no one, as was the case of the Peace Agreement for Bosnia and Herzegovina [YUN 1995, p. 544]; and, most difficult, the agreement had to be set within the context of a wider arrangement for the region as a whole, and preferably within the wider European context.

However, the situation was handicapped by the regime in Belgrade, as the indictment of its key political and military leaders for crimes against humanity de facto excommunicated them from any dialogue or diplomatic contact. In addition, there was the situation between Serbia and Montenegro (see p. 381), which were headed on a collision course as long as there was no change in the regime in Belgrade. The confrontation between Montenegro and Serbia was a confrontation over the future of FRY and had obvious implications for the implementation of resolution 1244(1999).

The Special Envoy said the tensions along the fault lines between those wider interests could be seen on a daily basis in Mitrovica in northern Kosovo. One should not pretend not to recognize those extremist groups or individuals on both sides who were determined to exploit those tensions, be they in northern Kosovo, Serbia or FYROM. There was a clash between the forces of integration and those of disintegration in the region.

Security Council mission to Kosovo

Concerned about obstacles to the implementation of resolution 1244(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 353], the Security Council, on 14 April [S/2000/320], accepted the invitation of the Special Representative and Head of UNMIK and decided to send a mission to Kosovo. The mission, which comprised the Ambassadors of Argentina, Bangladesh (head of mission), Canada, China, France, Jamaica, Malaysia, the Russian Federation and Ukraine, visited Kosovo from 27 to 29 April. Its objectives were to look for ways to enhance support for the implementation of resolution 1244(1999); to observe UNMIK's operations and activities and gain a greater understanding of the situation on the ground in order to comprehend better the difficult challenges UNMIK faced; to convey a strong message to all concerned on the need to reject violence, ensure public safety and order, promote stability, safety and security, support the full and effective implementation of resolution 1244(1999), and fully cooperate with UNMIK to that end; and to review implementation of prohibitions imposed by Council resolution 1160(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 369].

On 7 April [S/2000/303], FRY said that it attached great importance to the envisaged visit, which it saw as an expression of the Council's readiness and openness to familiarize itself in greater detail with the situation in Kosovo and Metohija and to halt the ongoing violations of resolution 1244(1999). It undertook to assist and cooperate with the mission in fulfilling its mandate.

Report of mission. During its visit to Kosovo [S/2000/363], the mission consulted with a wide range of representatives at all levels and from all communities. It found that UNMIK had made significant progress in implementing resolution 1244(1999) but its full and effective implementation required sustained effort by UNMIK and KFOR, the full participation of local communities and support by the international community. All ethnic communities expressed a desire to live in peace together but were still deeply divided and the healing would require a long time. Despite improvement in the overall level of violence and criminality, attacks against minorities continued and special protection measures had to be constantly maintained, making KFOR's continued assistance and joint security operations with UNMIK police vital.

Inadequate physical, social and economic security remained a major concern. Lack of freedom of movement, access to education, health care, social services and employment hampered the return of internally displaced persons, primarily Serbs and Roma, and impeded the integration of ethnic minorities into public life.

There had been some positive signs of reconciliation but the painful issues of missing persons and detainees, continuing violence, and the return of internally displaced persons and refugees continued to be major impediments in that regard and undermined efforts to create a climate of tolerance and security. The mission noted the strong support of the different ethnic communities for the appointment of a special envoy for detainees and missing persons.

The recent participation of the Serbs as observers in the Joint Interim Administrative Structures, including the Kosovo Transitional Council and the Interim Administrative Council, was encouraging and hopefully would lead to their full participation and a larger representation of non-Albanians in the Structures. Bosniac and Roma representatives, however, had yet to join the Transitional Council.

The mission noted that a major effort by the international presences and long-term nurturing would be necessary to achieve progress in reconciliation. Nonetheless, several examples of more positive relations between communities were observed at the local level, where discussions were less politically charged and focused on practical modes of cooperation. The mission welcomed the renewal of contacts between leaders of both communities in Mitrovica, and believed that joint community-based programmes had a potential for confidence-building and reconciliation.

The lack of an effective and unbiased rule of law was a recurring theme at many of the mission's meetings. UNMIK's intention to recruit international judges and prosecutors and their staff to work with local counterparts would be critical in redressing the perceived culture of impunity undermining the judicial system. To increase the judiciary's effectiveness, substantial voluntary assistance, in both personnel and material resources, was required. Regarding the lack of sufficient policing resources, UNMIK should continue accelerating its training programmes for the Kosovo Police Service (KPS). The multi-ethnic and gender-sensitive KPS development programme and the OSCE-led Kosovo Police School should serve as models for future institutions in Kosovo. The mission was appreciative of the fact that human rights education and AIDS awareness were part of UNMIK's police curriculum.

While noting the serious staffing constraints UNMIK faced in civil administration and police, the mission recognized the significant imbalance in wages between its locally recruited civil service staff and the rest of the Kosovo population and felt that both issues should be pursued through the appropriate General Assembly process.

To ensure an organized, expeditious and sustainable return, significant resources would be required to create appropriate conditions for the returnees by increasing Kosovo's absorbing capacity.

The mission stated that it was unfortunate that all factions of the Kosovo Serb community had chosen not to participate in the civil and voter registration processes, due to the lack of physical security and freedom of movement. Substantial efforts by UNMIK and KFOR, with strong support from the international community, were essential to encourage and create the conditions for Serb participation, including those displaced outside Kosovo.

The mission noted UNMIK's intention to continue working to establish a joint committee to enhance dialogue with FRY authorities, and KFOR's regular contact with them on military issues within the framework of the Joint Implementation Committee. It was cognizant of the imperative for UNMIK to foster economic recovery as a means of underpinning confidence-building and reconciliation efforts at the local level and welcomed the deployment of EU economic reconstruction representatives at the municipal level. It supported UNMIK's view that UNMIK should guide economic investment priorities to ensure maximum effectiveness of donated funds. Property issues, however, remained unresolved and could potentially undermine international efforts aimed at Kosovo's economic recovery and even peace initiatives.

The mission felt that detailed information on KFOR's activities in the implementation of resolution 1160(1998) should be provided to the Committee established for that purpose.

Emphasizing that UNMIK had been deployed for only some 10 months, the mission stated that expectations for its achievements should be realistic. Reconciliation was a protracted process, and the international community had to be patient and persistent. UNMIK and KFOR had made significant progress in implementing their mandates and should be commended. The mission noted the enormity of the task facing UNMIK, and commended, in particular, its efforts in capacity- and institution-building. Further efforts to ensure full implementation of resolution 1244 (1999) remained a high priority of the Council.

In presenting the report to the Council on 11 May [S/PV.4138], the head of the mission said that in its interaction with the ethnic communities the mission sensed a clear desire of people to live together in peace and engage in economic reconstruction and the restitution of law and order. Its strong message to those communities to reject all violence was taken seriously, with the full understanding that a multi-ethnic society represented the best hope for the people of Kosovo.

The mission recognized the shortage in meeting the staffing requirements for civil administration and the civilian police as a serious constraint for UNMIK's operations and asked the Secretariat and contributing countries to take steps in that regard with seriousness and urgency.

Communications. In a 12 May letter [S/2000/429], FRY said that the Council's mission was the important initial step to obtain first-hand knowledge of the dramatic situation brought about by systematic violations of resolution 1244(1999). Regrettably, the violations were not reflected in the mission's report, which, in part, diverted attention from the true problems and even glossed over the policy and behaviour of UNMIK and KFOR and, in particular, the Secretary-General's Special Representative. The report was silent about daily instances of terrorism and the responsibility for rampant crime and lawlessness, but was loud in endorsing views that set very strict conditions for and prevented the return of expelled Serbs, Muslims, Roma, Goranci, Turks and other non-Albanians. Notwithstanding its shortcomings, the mission's report had borne out the validity of FRY's warnings that, even 11 months after the adoption of resolution 1244 (1999), UNMIK and KFOR had not fulfilled a single obligation entrusted to them. FRY reiterated its readiness to conclude an agreement on the status and cooperation with those missions, including the establishment of a joint coordination committee.

FRY, on 12 May [S/2000/428], 7 June [S/2000/547], 23 August [S/2000/829] and 26 September [S/2000/905], forwarded to the Council President further memorandums containing its position on the implementation of resolution 1244(1999) and violations of it, as well as an overview of terrorist and other acts of violence.

On 8 June [S/2000/553], FRY declared null and void all acts and decisions taken by the Special Representative. It called on the Council to put an end to his activities, withdraw UNMIK and KFOR from Kosovo and take measures to ensure the full and consistent implementation of resolution 1244(1999). It asked the Council to consider those demands and provide an answer at its 9 June meeting (see p. 365).

UN Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo

Special Representative and Head of UNMIK. During 2000, Bernard Kouchner (France) continued as the Secretary-General's Special Representative and Head of UNMIK. On 8 December [S/2000/1179], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint Hans Haekkerup (Denmark) to replace Mr. Kouchner. The Council took note of that intention on 12 December [S/2000/1180].

Communication. On 6 January [S/2000/6], FRY said that the Secretary-General's December 1999 report on UNMIK [YUN 1999, p. 361] gave cause for concern because of the contradiction between the claim that UNMIK had made progress and the facts presented in the report testifying that the Serbs and other non-Albanians were threatened and their human rights were being violated. Those facts corroborated FRY's position that the security situation in Kosovo and Metohija was difficult, compounded by gross violations of human rights by the so-called KLA, the abuse of juveniles and the presence of organized crime. The provisions of Security Council resolution 1244(1999) continued to be violated. In particular, FRY's sovereignty and territorial integrity were not being abided by; conditions were not being created for normal life; violence continued unabated, particularly against non-Albanians; public law and order were non-existent; no proper border-monitoring activities had been established; the provisions on the return of an agreed number of Yugoslav Army and Serbian police personnel had not been implemented; and no secure environment had been created for the return of refugees and internally displaced persons. The report failed to assess blame for the situation and identify perpetrators or to propose measures to deal with it.

Report of Secretary-General (March). The Secretary-General, in his March report on UNMIK [S/2000/177], stated that the three major Kosovo Albanian rival political parties (the Democratic League of Kosovo (LDK) of Ibrahim Rugova, the party coalition of United Democratic Movement of Rexhep Qosja and the Party for Democratic Progress of Kosovo (PPDK) of Hashim Thaci) had begun to work together in a new cooperative relationship in the Interim Administrative Council (IAC) and the Joint Interim Administrative Structure (JIAS). On the other hand, the Kosovo Serb political landscape remained diversified and dominated by divisions among three major political forces: the moderate Kosovo Serb National Council (SNC), mainly in the Pristina and the Gnjilane regions, and headed by Bishop Artemije and Momcilo Trajkovic; the SNC Mitrovica, led by Oliver Ivanovic and Vuko Antonijevic; and the pro-Belgrade Serb National Assembly led by Veljko Odalovic.

IAC met on average twice a week and had become involved in substantive issues, such as the events in Mitrovica (see p. 359) and draft regulations for municipal elections. Its work was hampered in February by friction linked to the dissolution of the parties' respective parallel structures and funds controlled by them. More recently, IAC members had exercised constructive political leadership. To ensure the participation of Kosovo Serb representatives in JIAS, an agreement in principle was reached between UNMIK and the Kosovo SNC on the need to enhance security, increase UNMIK's presence in Serb-populated areas and ensure greater access of the Serb population to essential public services. However, persisting political divisions within the Serb community and the deterioration of the security situation in Mitrovica hampered efforts to secure their participation in JIAS and finalization of the agreement. The UNMIK Task Force charged with developing a strategy to implement JIAS had, with IAC, identified 20 departments needed to administer Kosovo, each co-directed by an international and a local co-head. To date, 14 Kosovo and 16 international co-heads had been appointed, including three women.

Regarding the formation of municipal structures, by the end of February, 27 municipal councils and 12 administrative boards had been established. UNMIK administrators were continuing consultations to finalize the remaining municipal councils and administrative boards and to overcome disagreement among the various Kosovo Albanian political parties over the distribution of representatives. The limited participation of minorities within municipal structures remained a matter of concern and had been hampered by the withdrawal of their support in protest against ethnically motivated violence.

On 31 January, in accordance with the JIAS agreement [YUN 1999, p. 361], all parallel Kosovo Albanian bodies declared that they had ceased to exist and the so-called "ministries" of the self-proclaimed "Interim Government" officially stopped their work on that date. That was confirmed on 2 February by Dr. Rugova, the LDK President, and by Bujar Bukoshi, the "Prime Minister" of the parallel "Government". The integration of those structures into JIAS was smooth and UNMIK and KFOR had established monitoring mechanisms, especially of the former parallel law enforcement structures.

The Kosovo Transitional Council (KTC) was enlarged from 12 to 35 members on 9 February to better reflect Kosovo's pluralistic composition. The advisory bodies established by UNMIK, through which the local population and leadership were able to participate in the interim administration, were to be dissolved or absorbed into JIAS. UNMIK maintained channels of communication with the FR Yugoslavia Government, which also established the Committee for Cooperation with UNMIK in Pristina, with sub-offices in the Mitrovica and Gnjilane regions. Cooperation also took place through the Joint Implementation Committee established within the framework of the military-technical agreement [YUN 1999, p. 356]. Cooperation focused on humanitarian assistance to the Kosovo Serb community.

With the exception of events in Mitrovica, violent crime in Kosovo continued to follow a slow downward trend. However, an upsurge in grenade and arson attacks against Kosovo Serb enclaves was noted. In addition, on 26 February, a prominent Kosovo Serb medical doctor was killed in Gnjilane, and a Russian Federation KFOR soldier, who was shot in Srbica on 29 February, died from his wounds. Cross-boundary incursions by Yugoslav police were also reported in the Gnjilane region. International patrols along Kosovo's eastern boundary with Serbia had been stepped up and permanent boundary checkpoints established. KFOR and UNMIK reported seeing armed Albanians in military uniforms in the area of Dobrosin.

The Kosovo Protection Corps (KPC) was formally established on 21 January, with the appointment by the Special Representative of 46 KPC leaders. KPC's strength as at 25 February stood at 544 persons, out of a total authorized strength of 5,052. UNMIK regional administrators had begun identifying humanitarian and public works projects for KPC, and the first training courses for KPC personnel had begun. Minority communities had expressed concern about KPC with regard to its creation and composition, as well as the proposed location of KPC buildings, the alleged involvement of enrolled or aspiring KPC members in illegal law enforcement activities, their participation in political rallies and other incidents of ethnic intolerance.

Report of Secretary-General (June). In June [S/2000/538], the Secretary-General reported that, on 2 April, SNC Gracanica joined JIAS as an observer for an initial period of three months but listed additional conditions to be met before it joined as a full member. One Kosovo Serb represented the community in IAC and four in KTC, while two others were appointed as co-heads for the Departments of Agriculture and of Labour and Employment.

The trend towards pluralism within the Kosovo Albanian political landscape continued, with an increased number of political parties growing out of the former KLA. Altogether, some 30 Kosovo Albanian parties were active within the province. The Bosniac community was represented by three parties, and the Kosovo Turkish community fielded two.

On 11 April, for the first time, IAC held its meetings with both the Kosovo Serb and Kosovo Albanian representatives. IAC endorsed key regulations, including those establishing the JIAS departments, implementing the tax administration and creating the Central Election Commission, the Civil Registry and the Victim Recovery and Identification Commission, and addressed substantive issues, including the Kosovo consolidated budget, local administration, reconstruction, health, education, utilities and private sector development. It had also become increasingly vocal and active in promoting tolerance between ethnic communities and in condemning violence.

On 12 April, four Kosovo Serb representatives from SNC Gracanica returned to KTC as observers and two representatives of the Bosniac community rejoined on 3 May. On 17 May, a representative of the Roma community attended KTC for the first time. Consultations to nominate a second Kosovo Turkish representative continued. However, the representative of the Albanian party, the National Movement for the Liberation of Kosovo, resigned from that body on 10 May, protesting that UNMIK and the international community were not doing enough to solve the issue of Kosovo Albanian missing persons and detainees in Serbia proper. The expanded KTC focused on missing persons and detainees, civil registration, security, education, the judicial system, private sector development and the registration of political parties. On 10 May, it endorsed a statement on tolerance, condemning the crimes that took place in Kosovo before, during and after the recent conflict and urging all inhabitants of Kosovo to refrain from violence. It also called on the federal authorities to hand over all Kosovo Albanians and members of other Kosovo communities in prison in Serbia proper. Four KTC working groups were set up on tolerance and protection of local communities; detainees and missing persons; economic affairs and public utilities; and education. They formed another practical link between JIAS and the local population. The Working Group on Detainees and Missing Persons had begun to compile the information available on such persons of all ethnic communities.

Progress was also made in the establishment of municipal bodies. As at 29 May, a total of 27 out of 30 municipal councils had been established, as well as 27 out of 30 municipal administrative boards that managed the municipal services departments. All municipal councils and administrative boards had ad interim status in view of the upcoming municipal elections (see p. 367).

In keeping with UNMIK's mandate to organize and oversee the development of provisional institutions for democratic and autonomous self-government pending a political settlement, the Special Representative informed the Security Council on 6 March that he would develop a "contract" on self-government (see p. 367), which would build on existing joint bodies of JIAS, including IAC, and KTC. An important step would be the October municipal elections.

To advance meaningful dialogue with FRY, UNMIK suggested the establishment of a permanent joint consultative committee, which would deal with transboundary issues.

Although the general security situation in Kosovo had not changed significantly, in southern Serbia proper a series of violent incidents in the first quarter of the year gave rise to concern over the situation and its likely impact on Kosovo (see below).

Communications. On 15 June [S/2000/595], FRY commented that the Secretary-General's June report was selective in reflecting UNMIK's "successes" and biased in its appraisal of the situation, in particular the security situation. The report was characterized by generalization of the problems facing the Serbian population and showed an absence of criticism and condemnation of those responsible for the violence against Serbs. The situation in southern Serbia was raised without authority so as to project a picture of an alleged threat to Kosovo and Metohija. Calling on Member States to contribute to the release of Albanians detained in Serbia was an invitation to interference in its internal affairs, while no mention was made of Serbs detained in labour camps by ethnic Albanian terrorists. No firm evidence was given to corroborate the claims of mass graves, and scant attention was accorded to the return of 350,000 Serb refugees and other non-Albanians, for whom UNMIK and KFOR had failed to create the conditions for safe return.

On 22 August [S/2000/824], the Russian Federation said that the Head of UNMIK and the KFOR Commander had unilaterally adopted a 17 August joint declaration on the status of UNMIK and KFOR and their personnel in Kosovo, which amounted to a de facto self-proclamation of such status without any form of agreement with the Yugoslav authorities. The generally recognized practice of deploying peacekeeping operations required the signing of appropriate agreements with the host country, in that case FRY, which had repeated its readiness to begin consultations on the status of international presences in Kosovo. Moscow believed that the so-called "document" adopted by them was dangerous and harmful and ran counter to the provisions of resolution 1244(1999) on FRY's sovereignty and territorial integrity.

Security Council consideration. During the Security Council's consideration of the Secretary-General's June report on 9 June [S/PV.4153], the Special Representative said that progress had been made in the 12 months since UNMIK started its operations in Kosovo. The job of implementing resolution 1244(1999) was a complex one. UNMIK had to provide an interim administration and establish provisional institutions for democratic and autonomous governance. That was being accomplished in four phases: the emergency phase, during which it had to deal with refugees; the demilitarization phase, which, while imperfect, met with some degree of success; the establishment of a political administration; and the elections, for which preparations were being made. Despite UNMIK's successes, there were many negative aspects and challenges relating to the departure of the non-Albanian population and particularly the precarious security situation for that population. In addition, the interim status of Kosovo and the ambiguities in resolution 1244(1999) had to be dealt with, especially providing an explanation on the meaning of "substantial autonomy". The United Nations was not in Kosovo for 12 months or 24 months; it would undoubtedly be there for a significant number of years.

The Council President informed the Council that, on 8 June, he had received a delegation of Serbs from Kosovo, which shared with him the difficulties that community was encountering, particularly violence. The decision of some Serbs in Kosovo to participate in the joint administration structures had entailed personal risks to them and was fraught with considerable sacrifices. However, those sacrifices had not been rewarded by improvement in the fate of the community and their participation in the joint structures had become difficult to justify. The delegation wished the international community to indicate that it would no longer tolerate violence against the Serb population and that the perpetrators should be brought to justice. Specific measures were necessary, including additional forces to ensure security in the Serb enclaves. The Serb community should also have its own information media, the border with Albania should be better controlled and voter registration should be carried out on a stricter basis.

The Council continued to consider the situation in Kosovo on 13 July [S/PV.4171], 24 August [S/PV.4190] and 27 September [S/PV.4200].

Following the 13 July meeting, FRY, on 18 July [S/2000/710], expressed its disappointment that, during the debate, there was no clear condemnation of the ethnic cleansing and terror against the Serbs, Turks, Roma, Muslims and other non-Albanians in Kosovo and Metohija. The situation called for vigorous measures to eradicate terrorism, organized crime and the systematic violation of resolution 1244(1999). In a later communication [S/2000/859], FRY complained about the non-implementation of the provisions of resolution 1244(1999) relating to the return of an agreed number of Yugoslav and Serbian military and police personnel to Kosovo and Metohija, despite several requests to UNMIK and KFOR in that regard. The deterioration in the overall situation in Kosovo and Metohija bore witness to the need for a speedy deployment of those personnel. FRY had therefore established a combined detachment for special purposes, the Kosovo and Metohija Detachment of Peace, ready to be deployed there. That would help implement key provisions of resolution 1244(1999) and create a secure environment for all residents of Kosovo and Metohija.

On 10 August [A/56/2], the Council members authorized the President to make a press statement expressing their concern over FRY's disregard for international obligations with regard to the arrest and detention of two British, two Canadian and four Netherlands citizens. Council members urged FRY authorities to fulfil all of the requirements of the relevant provisions of international law without delay.

Report of Secretary-General (September). In September [S/2000/878], the Secretary-General reported that UNMIK had made substantial progress in consolidating the participation of moderate Kosovo Serb elements in the joint interim administration. SNC Gracanica, which had temporarily suspended its participation in both IAC and KTC at the beginning of June, lifted that suspension on 25 June following initiatives by the international community to encourage it to rejoin, including direct meetings between members of the Security Council and an SNC Gracanica delegation in New York. In addition, the Special Representative signed a Joint Understanding with Bishop Artemije of SNC Gracanica, outlining steps to enhance security and access to services for the Kosovo Serb population. Since then, SNC Gracanica representatives had played an increasingly constructive role in IAC and KTC, a position unanimously supported by its general membership in early August.

While the Understanding was well received by the Kosovo Serb community, Kosovo Albanian leaders feared that it would devolve elements of governance and delegate security powers to the Kosovo Serb population. Provisions in the regulation on self-government of municipalities, which called for the establishment of local community offices—a mechanism designed to improve minority access to municipal services—were criticized on similar grounds. That concern over potential divisions of the province culminated in the walk-out of Hashim Thaci and his party, PPDK, from IAC and KTC. Local co-heads of administrative departments nominated by PPDK also suspended their work. Following intensive efforts by UNMIK, the draft regulation was endorsed by IAC on 11 July, and PPDK resumed its participation in both bodies shortly thereafter.

Despite tension over the signing of the Understanding, encouraging signs of inter-ethnic political dialogue emerged. From 21 to 23 July, 40 representatives of Kosovo Serb and Albanian communities met in Airlie, Virginia, United States, at a conference convened by the United States Institute of Peace. The conference produced the unanimously supported Airlie Declaration, in which all participants agreed that building democracy in Kosovo was of the highest priority and that free elections were a key element in the process. The Declaration also recognized the fundamental right of all Kosovo residents to return to the province and that the cultivation of a strong and vibrant multi-ethnic civil society was essential for Kosovo's future. The conference participants also committed themselves to a "pact against violence" to promote tolerance, prevent negative exploitation of ethnic issues and enable physical integration and political participation by all residents of the province. The IAC and KTC representatives expressed strong support for the Airlie Declaration, and discussions were taking place on how to transform it into concrete initiatives.

As part of the continued development of Kosovo's provisional institutions, the Special Representative presented his initial concept of a "pact" for Kosovo society, formerly referred to as the "contract", and which would involve elaboration of a legal framework for substantial autonomy and community protection during the interim administrative period but would not address the issue of Kosovo's final status. It would include mechanisms to protect the rights of Kosovo's various ethnic communities and the establishment of Kosovo-wide institutions for genuine self-government. The first element of the pact, the regulation on self-government of municipalities (regulation 2000/45), which the Special Representative signed on 11 August, determined the nature and competencies of the municipalities, their elected and administrative bodies, and their relations with the central authorities. Most of the document's provisions would enter into force after the 28 October municipal elections, when municipalities would be delegated responsibilities in areas such as education, housing, primary health care and other social services. Funding for the municipalities would come from the central authority and local sources, but they would be allowed to generate revenue through licences, fees and fines. The regulation also included measures to ensure the non-discriminatory provision of municipal services and fair representation of minority communities within the municipal structures. As part of that effort, UNMIK had established local community offices in all but seven of Kosovo's municipalities.

UNMIK continued to strengthen ongoing and regular contacts with FRY, which focused on a number of issues, including the civil registration process, the upcoming municipal elections, the security of the Kosovo Serb community, returnees, detainees and missing persons. It also concluded a memorandum of understanding with FYROM on 30 June to improve cooperation between the two customs services, coordinate and harmonize customs procedures, expedite the flow of passengers and cargo, and normalize trade.

One of UNMIK's main concerns in the pre-election period was the rise in politically motivated violence, particularly against LDK members. Initiatives to address that threat included the establishment of an Information Coordination Group and an Operational Task Force to identify trends and implement security strategies to respond to and deter political violence. The Task Force developed procedures to provide security support to at-risk candidates and for major events during the election campaign period. Incidents of civil unrest occurred in various Kosovo Serb communities across the province; attacks against those communities in Gnjilane and Prizren were followed by attacks against UNMIK and KFOR personnel. KFOR discovered two concrete bunkers filled with a large cache of weapons and a training site near Klecka village in the central Drenica Valley on 15 June, and another substantial cache on 18 June. According to documents found at the site, the weapons belonged to the former KLA. Activities related to the FRY elections on 24 September were a potential source of concern.

Municipal elections

UNMIK, in accordance with its mandate as set out in Security Council resolution 1244(1999), and in cooperation with OSCE, conducted municipal elections throughout Kosovo on 28 October, as part of the political transition process. During the year, a large part of its activities were focused on putting in place measures to implement that mandate, in the face of increasing political violence within Kosovo and objections from FRY.

On 28 April [S/2000/372], FRY, in a position paper on the holding of elections in Kosovo, said that free, democratic and fair elections, including voter registration, could be carried out only if the necessary conditions were established and implementation of resolution 1244(1999) was achieved. That implied that basic elements of a political settlement for Kosovo and Metohija should be reached in accordance with that resolution.

In conditions of continued terror, ethnic cleansing of Serbs and other non-Albanians, the lack of conditions for the return of more than 350,000 expelled persons and the illegal presence of 250,000 foreign nationals, preconditions did not exist for the registration of the population in preparation for elections. FRY could not be a front to legalize activities contrary to resolution 1244(1999); therefore, any registration of the population of the province not carried out on the basis of the laws of FRY and Serbia could not be legal or binding.

In June [S/2000/538], the Secretary-General reported that UNMIK had begun the process of political party registration, in accordance with UNMIK regulation 2000/16, and political party certification. Party supporter lists had been issued to some 30 parties, which were collecting the necessary signatures for registration and certification. The scale and complexity of election preparations led, in April, to the establishment of the Political Party Consultative Forum to keep all parties informed of decisions of the Central Election Commission regarding the electoral process. Political party training activities were also held around Kosovo to address such issues as public and media relations, the basic principles of party organization and platform development. Particular attention was paid to including Serbs and other ethnic minority parties in those activities. UNMIK also continued to work with international and local women's groups to promote the participation of women voters in the municipal elections and to encourage female candidates to run for office.

On 14 August [S/2000/800], FRY, drawing attention to the announcement by the Special Representative that local elections would be held in Kosovo and Metohija on 28 October, said that holding those elections amounted to a fait accompli, support for ethnic Albanian separatism and terrorism, did not contribute to achieving a peaceful solution and could lead to the destabilization of Kosovo and the entire region. The fallacy of such a policy had been pointed out also by other important international actors, including some permanent members of the Security Council.

In September [S/2000/878], the Secretary-General reported that his Special Representative had signed two regulations establishing the legal foundations of the municipal elections. The first (regulation 2000/39 of 8 July) established that a proportional representation system with open lists would be used. It was supported by all parties except PSDK. The first term of office would be for two years and parties were to submit candidate lists on which at least 30 per cent of the first 15 candidates had to be women. The second regulation (2000/43 of 27 July) determined the names and boundaries of Kosovo's 30 municipalities. The Central Election Commission had adopted electoral rules to govern key elements of the election process. Procedures to prevent voter fraud and ensure secrecy of balloting and security in voting centres were already adopted. The Commission certified 19 political parties, 2 coalitions, 3 citizens' initiatives and 15 independent candidates. The Secretary-General said that the first phase of the civil registration process was successfully completed on a timely basis, with some 90 per cent of the Albanian population participating. Despite UNMIK's efforts to ensure that the registration was simple and safe, widespread intimidation by hard-line Kosovo Serb elements dissuaded the majority of Serbs from participating in the process. In addition, Kosovo Turkish participation was limited because of ongoing division within that community over demands regarding the status of the Turkish language and dissatisfaction with the representation of their community. Some elements of the Kosovo Turkish leadership repeatedly rejected UNMIK proposals designed to ensure the full use of the Turkish language in municipalities where that community resided and continued to demand the adoption of Turkish as a third national language.

To heighten the level of dialogue between UNMIK and the local population, the Special Representative launched a public outreach campaign, including "town hall" meetings, in which he urged participation in the elections and called for tolerance among ethnic communities.

On 4 October [S/2000/964], Turkey informed the Secretary-General that the Turkish minority, owing to the delay in the preparation of documents to reflect the understanding reached between the Turkish community representatives and UNMIK, were not able to complete their registration, and hence could not take part in the local elections in Kosovo. However, remarks made by UN representatives on the issue during the Security Council briefings on Kosovo on 24 August and 27 September did not fully reflect the real nature of the question, nor did the comments in the Secretary-General's September report (see above). Turkey clarified that the insistence of the Turkish community in Kosovo was to preserve their legitimate and acquired rights and was not an excessive drive by some splinter group. The Turkish community wanted those rights to be well and properly secured and for the Turkish language to have equal status with Albanian and Serbian, as stipulated in the 1974 Constitution. Thus, the comments on the "non-participation" of the Turkish community in the local elections were likely to cause confusion in the minds of the international community about the legitimate demands of the Kosovo Turks. Attached to Turkey's letter was a 15 September letter from the Special Representative containing the text, resulting from discussions held in August, entitled "To the Turkish Community", which outlined the main principles and ideas, as well as operational steps, that UNMIK would develop to guarantee the rights of the Turkish community in Kosovo.

On 27 October [S/2000/1039], FRY again expressed concern over the holding of the elections the next day and repeated its earlier reasons why the conditions for a free expression of will and democratic, free and fair elections had not been created. Holding elections, it said, where no security and freedom of movement existed for members of all ethnic communities led to the conclusion that the elections would be a competition of political parties of the Albanian ethnic community alone.

In December [S/2000/1196], the Secretary-General reported that municipal elections were held on 28 October in 30 municipal assemblies throughout Kosovo. Turnout was massive (79 per cent of the electorate), but Kosovo Serbs did not participate and voter turnout for Roma and Turks was low to negligible. On 7 November, the Special Representative certified the election results, except in the three northern Kosovo Serb majority municipalities of Leposavic, Zubin Potok and Zvecan, where voter turnout was negligible. In the 27 municipalities where the results were certified, LDK won in 21 municipalities, with approximately 58 per cent of the vote, and PPSK in six municipalities, mainly in the Drenica Valley, with 27 per cent. The Alliance for the Future of Kosovo got 8 per cent of the vote, while the rest of the parties obtained less than 1 per cent. A number of parties and other organizations that obtained elected seats in the municipal assemblies requested seats in KTC, arguing that the electoral results proved their popular support. UNMIK intended to expand KTC's membership to reflect Kosovo's political, religious and ethnic diversity.

Security Council consideration. During the Security Council's consideration of the situation in Kosovo on 16 November [S/PV.4225], the Special Representative observed that the municipal elections were a technical success and a victory for the burgeoning democracy, especially taking into account the context in which they took place and everything that had occurred over the past 17 months. He referred to his political plan for substantial autonomy, the "pact" (see p. 366), and advised that the process of defining that substantial autonomy and developing institutions of self-government, as set down in resolution 1244 (1999), should be hastened. That was more urgent following the municipal elections. Action should be taken to organize elections throughout Kosovo, most likely to elect a Parliament. He therefore proposed that general elections be held, possibly in the spring of 2001. A working group, involving the Group of Eight industrialized countries, the United Nations and the Contact Group, had been established to consider a possible provisional constitution.

In response to a question, the Special Representative said that he was of the opinion that, although the return of a limited number of FRY armed forces was provided for in resolution 1244(1999), he did not think that that was currently possible and the issue needed to be addressed through negotiations.

Report of Secretary-General (December). In December [S/2000/1196], the Secretary-General reported that, following the successful 28 October municipal elections, major progress was made in establishing functioning municipal assemblies. On 11 November, more than 800 members of the new assemblies took their oath of office and selected their Presidents and Deputy Presidents. To ensure that all of Kosovo's communities were represented in the new municipal structures, the Special Representative appointed representatives of minority communities to elected assemblies in areas where they lived, mainly Kosovo Turks, Bosniacs, Roma, Ashkalija and Egyptians. The integration of Kosovo Serb appointees into the 27 elected municipal assemblies was slower, owing to demands from some of their leaders that they be allowed to set up their own municipal structures separate and apart from the elected assemblies. That issue proved particularly contentious in Mitrovica and Strepce, where Kosovo Serbs refused to participate in the elected assemblies altogether. However, UNMIK appointed assemblies in the three northern municipalities of Leposavic, Zubin Potok and Zvecan, where the results of the elections were not certified. The assemblies consisted of 18 seats, two of which were reserved for Kosovo Albanians, which remained vacant in both Zvecan and Leposavic, as their leaders showed little interest in identifying potential appointees.

The changes in the Government in Belgrade at the beginning of October (see p. 384) had influenced Kosovo's political life. While Kosovo Albanian leaders welcomed those changes, they were sceptical as to whether that alone would place FRY and its Republic of Serbia on the path to true democracy. They were also concerned about a perceived shift in the attention and priorities of the international community within the region, and at the prospect of increased competition for international political and financial support. In addition, Kosovo Albanian leaders perceived President Kostunica's victory as a threat to their aspirations for independence for the province.

In the Kosovo Serb community, SNC Gracanica viewed those changes as having created the conditions for a constructive political dialogue on Kosovo's future and continued to support UNMIK. For their part, the representatives of SNC Mitrovica expressed optimism that changes in Belgrade would trigger a process through which Kosovo could be reintegrated into Serbia proper and indicated a willingness to improve its relations with UNMIK, but shied away from joining KTC in the immediate future. In general, with their attention focused on Belgrade, Kosovo Serb political groups had not articulated a clear policy on a number of critical issues, including future participation of Kosovo Serbs in JIAS. Nevertheless, a more constructive attitude towards UNMIK was increasingly evident.

UNMIK continued to place primary emphasis on combating politically motivated violence. A Political Violence Task Force, staffed by UNMIK

Political Violence Task Force, staffed by UNMIK police and KFOR, established a Kosovo-wide network of officials to coordinate activities between them at the local, regional and central levels. The Task Force worked with the Information Coordination Group. The pre-election period saw a significant drop in the level of politically motivated violence. In the post-election period, however, the number of attacks returned to a level comparable to that of mid-summer.

Joint security operations between UNMIK police and KFOR became a cornerstone of their military and civilian law enforcement mandates. In a pre-emptive joint operation late in September, three Kosovo Serb males were arrested in Gracanica and a significant quantity of weapons and bomb-making equipment was discovered. On 14 October, UNMIK police and KFOR conducted a joint operation in Pristina where 27 Kosovo Albanians were arrested, three of whom were suspects in major crimes, 17 weapons were seized and $50,000 in cash was confiscated. On 17 November, a major operation against trafficking in illegal weapons and drugs was organized in Kosovo Polje, with five major arrests made of persons allegedly involved in the trafficking of women. A similar operation carried out in Pristina on 18 November resulted in the arrest of six persons.

Later developments. In a later report on UNMIK [S/2001/218], the Secretary-General indicated that a pattern of threats and violence emerged in December. Mitrovica city remained tense and the region had seen several outbreaks of violent public disorder in both Kosovo Serb and Kosovo Albanian areas. Riots and vandalism in Leposavic and Zubin Potok in December appeared to have been organized to destabilize the area before the 23 December Serbian parliamentary elections.

UNMIK regulations

Pursuant to resolution 1244(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 353], the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council, in March [S/2000/177/Add.1.2], the texts of regulations 1999/24-27, 2000/1-5 and 2000/6-17 issued by the Special Representative. In May [S/2000/177/Add.3], he submitted the texts of regulations 2000/18-27 and, in June [S/2000/538/Add.1], the texts of regulations 2000/28-37. The texts of regulations 2000/38-49 were submitted in September [S/2000/878/Add.1] and those of regulations 2000/50-61 were transmitted in December [S/2000/1196/Add.1].

On 9 February [S/2000/102], FRY declared that the UNMIK draft regulation entitled "Privileges and immunities accorded to foreign government liaison offices in Kosovo" violated its sovereignty and territorial integrity, which were guaranteed by Council resolution 1244(1999). In that regard, on 16 February [S/2000/132], FRY said that the Special Representative's intention to allow Albania to open a representative office in the Serbian province of FRY would further encourage ethnic Albanian separatism, serve to promote the idea of a Greater Albania and destabilize the region. It said that representative offices of foreign and/or international organizations might be opened in the territory of FRY with the agreement and approval of that country's Government. On 1 August, it again protested over regulation 2000/42 concerning the establishment and functioning of those liaison offices [S/2000/757].

In other communications, FRY protested the issuance of travel documents to residents of the Serbian province of Kosovo [S/2000/178] and UNMIK's decision to issue postage stamps for the resumption of postal traffic in Kosovo and Metohija [S/2000/336]. It expressed concern over regulation 2000/18 of 29 March on issuing personal documents, primarily passports and identity cards, to residents of Kosovo and Metohija [S/2000/337]. In that regard, the EU issued a statement on 3 May [S/2000/403] welcoming that regulation and encouraging its member States and those States neighbouring Kosovo to recognize the travel documents.

UNMIK police

At the end of 2000, UNMIK's police strength stood at 4,411 from 53 countries, out of an authorized strength of 4,718, deployed in the Pristina, Mitrovica, Prizren, Gnjilane and Pec regions, and with the UNMIK border police, special police units, at the main headquarters, the Kosovo Police Service (KPS) development centre and the internal training centre.

UNMIK police had full responsibility for executive law enforcement in the Pristina and Prizren regions, as well as at the Pristina airport's international border crossing point, and investigative authority in the Gnjilane and Mitrovica regions, the Pec municipality and the international border crossing points of Djeneral Jankovic (Blace) and Globocica. They continued to run the Pristina and Mitrovica detention facilities, to develop and implement joint security operations with KFOR, including vehicle and foot patrols, weapons and ordnance searches and to build up a joint operations centre. UNMIK police carried out investigation, patrolling and public order functions, border policing and traffic control, and worked towards the development of professional capacities to counter organized crime affecting the Kosovo region through the establishment of a comprehensive criminal intelligence structure. They were responsible for establishing KPS, the future police in Kosovo. Training provided by the OSCE-run KPS school was coordinated with the UNMIK police field training programme. By December, of the 3,500 KPS cadets envisioned for training by January 2001, 2,516 had graduated from the KPS school and were deployed with UNMIK police field training officers throughout Kosovo.

UNMIK police developed a Special Security Task Force charged with designing measures to combat ethnically targeted violence, particularly the threat facing the Kosovo Serb community. It worked closely with KFOR to enhance joint security operations, including building a "partnership for security" at the local community and neighbourhood levels, and in educating the local population about crime prevention and general security practices. The Task Force also worked to strengthen information-sharing with local residents and develop recommendations for preventive investigation and enforcement measures. UNMIK police provided protection for at-risk persons, including international judges and prosecutors, key UNMIK partners within the minority communities, visiting dignitaries and other high-profile individuals.

UNMIK financing

The Secretary-General submitted in March [A/54/807 & Corr.1] the proposed budget for the maintenance of UNMIK for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 in the amount of $461,380,600 gross ($434,981,000 net), which ACABQ considered in March and April [A/54/841, A/54/842]. ACABQ recommended that UNMIK's requirements be re-examined in September and that the General Assembly authorize commitment with assessment of $220 million gross to allow UNMIK to continue its activities to 31 December 2000. It also recommended that authority be granted to enter into contractual arrangements for staff for up to one year and that the Secretary-General be allowed to redeploy posts among various offices of the Mission.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

On 15 June [meeting 98], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/674/Add.1], adopted resolution 54/245 B without vote [agenda item 166].

Financing of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1244(1999) of 10 June 1999 regarding the establishment of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo,

Recalling its resolutions 53/241 of 28 July 1999 and 54/245 A of 23 December 1999 on the financing of the Mission,

Acknowledging the complexity of the Mission,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolution of the Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 51/243 of 15 September 1997 and 52/234 of 26 June 1998,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo as at 30 April 2000, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 105.5 million United States dollars, representing 25 per cent of the total assessed contributions, notes that some 23 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

5. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

6. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

7. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

8. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Mission, and for this purpose requests the Secretary-General to speed up the implementation of the asset management system at all peacekeeping missions in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/1 A of 15 October 1997;

9. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

12. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments in an amount not exceeding 220 million dollars gross (207,407,400 dollars net) for the operation of the Mission for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2000;

13. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 220 million dollars gross (207,407,400 dollars net) for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2000 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, 50/451 B of 23 December 1995 and 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999;

14. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 13 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 12,592,600 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2000;

15. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

16. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Mission;

17. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

18. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo".

The Secretary-General resubmitted the UNMIK budget proposal for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 in October [A/55/477] in the amount of $474,401,800 gross ($446,239,700 net). In November [A/55/624], ACABQ recommended that the Assembly appropriate for the maintenance of UNMIK an amount of $450 million, reflecting a reduction of some 5 per cent from the proposed amount, inclusive of the $220 million already authorized by resolution 54/245 B.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 23 December [meeting 89], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/55/663], adopted resolution 55/227 A without vote [agenda item 133].

Financing of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1244(1999) of 10 June 1999 regarding the establishment of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo,

Recalling its resolution 53/241 of 28 July 1999 on the financing of the Mission and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 54/245 B of 15 June 2000,

Acknowledging the complexity of the Mission,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such operations,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolution of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo as at 31 October 2000, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 125 million United States dollars, representing 20 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission to the period ending 31 December 2000, notes that some 19 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

5. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

6. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

7. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

8. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Mission, and for this purpose requests the Secretary-General to speed up the implementation of the asset management system at all peacekeeping missions in accordance with its resolution 52/1 A of 15 October 1997;

9. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

10. Notes the increase in the number of high-level posts, and requests the Secretary-General to review this matter and to report thereon in the context of his next budget presentation;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to provide information, in the context of future budget submissions, on the level of interaction between the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 and the Mission;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in future budget submissions information on the guidelines applied to determine the financing through assessed contributions and other sources of income;

13. Further requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

14. Requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

15. Decides to appropriate the amount of 450 million dollars gross (422,053,500 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, inclusive of the amount of 220 million dollars gross (207,407,400 dollars net) authorized by the General Assembly in its resolution 54/245 B;

16. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, and taking into account the amount of 220 million dollars gross (207,407,400 dollars net) already apportioned in accordance with its resolution 54/245 B for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2000, to apportion the additional amount of 230 million dollars gross (214,646,100 dollars net) for the period from 1 January to 30 June 2001 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996, 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and 55/236 of 23 December 2000 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, 50/451 B of 23 December 1995 and 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2001, as set out in its resolution 55/5 B of 23 December 2000;

17. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 16 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated additional staff assessment income of 15,353,900 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 January to 30 June 2001;

18. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

19. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Mission;

20. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

21. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo".

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on UNMIK financing would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458) and that the Fifth Committee would consider the item at that session (decision 55/455).

Protection of minorities and human rights

One of UNMIK's major preoccupations was the continued widespread harassment, attack, murder and forcible eviction of non-Albanian minorities across the province of Kosovo. The attack on the UNHCR bus on 2 February (see p. 359), one of eight bus lines that shuttled minorities living in isolated communities, caused the UNHCR bus line programme to be temporarily suspended and was a serious setback to UNMIK efforts to promote freedom of movement and protect minorities. The poor security conditions and the consequent restrictions on freedom of movement led to difficulties for minority populations in gaining access to basic public services and were determining factors in the departure of Kosovo Serbs and other non-Albanian groups from Kosovo. The Kosovo Albanian minority in northern Mitrovica was subjected to similar problems, particularly since the violence of 3 February, which led to the departure or forcible expulsion of some 1,650 Kosovo Albanians from their homes. Many Kosovo Serbs and Roma lived under heavy KFOR guard or in mono-ethnic enclaves. In life-threatening situations or particularly vulnerable circumstances, UNHCR resorted to assisting minorities wishing to depart to Serbia and to Montenegro.

The inter-agency Ad Hoc Task Force on Minorities continued to work towards enhancing the physical protection and freedom of movement of minority populations and to engage in longer-term confidence-building measures. Measures undertaken by the Task Force had led to an improvement in living conditions and the situation of minority groups around the province. Those measures included targeted deployment of KFOR and UNMIK police officers to protect those most at risk; installation of enhanced physical security measures in minorities' homes; improved freedom of movement through the eight KFOR-escorted UNHCR bus lines between minority enclaves and an UNMIK train service between Kosovo Polje and the Mitrovica region; a targeted distribution network to enhance access to health care and food; and the provision of satellite and mobile phones to isolated minority communities. Confidence-building measures, such as facilitating contact between community leaders, were also under way.

UNMIK promoted inter-community dialogue through a series of round-table discussions. At such a meeting on 12 April, Kosovo Albanian and other minority leaders met for the first time and adopted a declaration recognizing the Roma communities as an integral part of Kosovo society and agreeing to draft a platform for action to solve the problems of Roma, Ashkalija and Egyptians, which was endorsed by IAC and KTC. UNHCR facilitated two visits by Kosovo Albanian political leaders to Kosovo Roma and Ashkalija communities in June and August, designed to demonstrate the commitment of Kosovo Albanian leaders to inter-ethnic tolerance, non-discrimination and the return of displaced persons.

The Special Representative launched a new initiative to improve conditions and services for Kosovo's non-Serb minority communities, which envisaged special support programmes in areas such as health, education, social welfare and public services. He had also intensified direct contacts with those communities in support of the initiative.

Violations of human rights continued to be of serious concern to UNMIK. Problems surrounding residential property, incidents of illegal evictions and construction continued to be reported. UNMIK police confirmed that trafficking in persons was a growing and serious problem in Kosovo. A regulation designed to ensure adequate legal and other protection to victims was under review. A safe house for victims of trafficking had been set up to provide them with physical assistance until they were repatriated to their country of origin. As at September, 65 females had received assistance. Some enrolled or self-proclaimed KPC members had been accused of human rights violations and illegal police activities, the collection of illegal taxes from businesses and participating in demonstrations, sometimes in the guise of crowd control.

The criminal justice system remained ill-equipped to provide adequate redress for human rights violations. The irregular conduct of some criminal trials involving members of ethnic minorities had highlighted the need to ensure the impartiality of the courts and the equal treatment of all defendants. Although the issue of delays in the court system was being addressed, defendants continued to face lengthy pre-trial detention and difficulties in gaining timely access to review mechanisms. Problems related to access to and effectiveness of counsel affected the quality of representation. The court system also suffered from inconsistencies in the approach to the applicable law and from lack of understanding of relevant international human rights laws.

UNMIK's efforts to create mechanisms for ensuring respect for human rights took a step forward with the establishment of the ombudsperson institution on 21 November. The ombudsperson would investigate and mediate complaints from individuals, groups and organizations regarding human rights violations and other abuses of power by authorities.

Some 800 Kosovo Albanians were being held in prisons in Serbia proper and, according to ICRC, 3,476 cases of missing persons from Kosovo remained unresolved, of whom some 600 were ethnic Serbs and Roma. UNMIK established a Bureau for Detainees and Missing Persons in October to coordinate the activities of the principal agencies involved in those issues. To facilitate the Bureau's work, two resource centres were opened, one in Pristina and the other in Gracanica.

The issue of Kosovo Albanian detainees in Serbia proper was highlighted following riots in prisons throughout Serbia. Concern for their safety during those riots led to marches and hunger strikes throughout Kosovo and a general strike on 14 November. UNMIK officials met with FRY and Serbian officials in Pristina on 15 November, which led to concrete initiatives concerning the welfare and safety of detainees. FRY also provided the first official list of Kosovo Albanian detainees in its prisons and informed UNMIK that an amnesty law covering political prisoners detained in Serbia proper would be presented to FRY's parliament as soon as possible.

Communications. On 16 March [S/2000/222], FRY informed the Security Council that, as at 9 March, 1,330 persons, relocated from Kosovo and Metohija, were in Serbia's penal-correctional institutions.

On 17 and 26 April [S/2000/325, S/2000/352], FRY brought to the attention of the Security Council President the fate of 43 Serbs, who, it said, were detained arbitrarily and without legal grounds by KFOR and UNMIK in Kosovska Mitrovica, 37 of whom were on hunger strike, protesting the endless postponement of their cases. FRY said it was a blatant violation of basic human rights and a breach of judicial procedure. FRY informed the Council President of the deterioration of the detainees' health in a letter of 10 May [S/2000/407]. It called on him to use his influence to put an end to their suffering and forestall tragic consequences. FRY also drew attention to the case of Serb national Mirosljub Momcilovic and his two sons, who had been detained at Camp Bondsteel, the military base of the United States KFOR contingent, since 10 July 1999, charged with murdering an ethnic Albanian [S/2000/737].

In another complaint [S/2000/272], FRY protested the violence committed by members of KFOR and UNMIK against residents of Lepine, which, it said, was telling evidence of their reprehensible attitude towards the Serbian community. It was necessary to conduct a thorough investigation and punish those responsible. FRY also protested the systematic and deliberate harassment of diplomatic representatives accredited to Belgrade [S/2000/887].

In February, FRY forwarded to the Council President its positions and comments on the OSCE report entitled "Kosovo/Kossova as Seen, as Told", on the situation of human rights in Kosovo and Metohija from October 1998 to October 1999 [S/2000/103]. It described the report as being one-sided and its publication as an abuse of that organization as an instrument for political purposes.

Establishment of the judicial system and the rule of law

UNMIK accorded priority attention to the establishment of an effective judicial and penal management system. The Secretary-General reported in June [S/2000/538] that, despite the appointment of more than 400 judges, prosecutors and lay judges and the increased capacity of the courts, the unwillingness of witnesses to testify and the ethnic bias and risk of intimidation of some judicial personnel hampered the administration of justice. Of the appointed judges, prosecutors and lay judges, only 46 were non-ethnic Kosovo Albanians and 7 of those were Kosovo Serbs. Since the swearing in of the appointees in January and February, a total of 116 trials had been conducted in Kosovo's district courts: 31 in Gnjilane, 26 in Pristina, 21 in Pec, 32 in Prizren and 6 in Mitrovica.

To build public confidence in the judicial system, UNMIK planned to take immediate measures, in particular the appointment of international judges and prosecutors throughout Kosovo. Preparations were under way to establish a Kosovo war and ethnic crimes court, which was a factor in the re-establishment of the rule of law, in consolidating peace through justice and in paving the way towards reconciliation.

The Kosovo Judicial Institute began functioning during the first week of March and conducted induction seminars for judges and prosecutors in all five regions of Kosovo. The Institute was preparing two round-table seminars, one on the collaboration between the police and the courts during the investigative stage and the other on juvenile justice.

On 9 August, the Special Representative appointed an additional 136 local professional judges, including 16 from non-Albanian ethnic groups and 24 women. The new appointments brought the judicial personnel in Kosovo to the level sufficient to meet the demand facing the court system. A total of 56 courts and 13 prosecutors' offices were staffed. Seven international judges and three international prosecutors were appointed to the Kosovo district courts and there were plans to have as many as 12 such judges and five prosecutors. Refurbishment of judicial establishments was ongoing under a capital project to improve those facilities. The increased human and material resources resulted in greater levels of activity.

UNMIK, with assistance from the Council of Europe, organized training seminars for local judges and prosecutors on the European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. In June, it opened the Kosovo Law Centre, an NGO, which served as a research centre and publishing house for the legal community and housed a library of legal and human rights documents.

On 17 October, OSCE published its six-month review of Kosovo's criminal justice system, which found that, although substantial progress had been made in 2000 in establishing a functioning justice system, significant problems remained. They included a lack of clarity among local judges as to whether international human rights standards were the supreme law in Kosovo, continued application of laws that could be in breach of international standards, and evidence of bias on the part of the local judiciary against minorities. In response, the UNMIK Department of Justice established a joint working group with OSCE to study the report and develop ways to implement its recommendations.

Returns

During 2000, over 104,000 Kosovo Albanians returned to the province, including 12,500 forced returns. As at September, more than 880,000 persons had returned to Kosovo since June 1999. Most of the returns were conducted in an organized manner with the assistance of UNHCR and the International Organization for Migration. While the voluntary returns were ongoing, forced returns started at the end of March. At the Intergovernmental Consultations on Asylum and Migration (Geneva, March), UNMIK and UNHCR urged host Governments to ensure orderly, humane and phased returns. UNMIK also urged that they establish a clear policy for returns on a voluntary basis. Fearing the destabilizing effect of uncontrolled large-scale returns, the Special Representative issued an open letter on 13 April, appealing to host countries to minimize the practice of forced returns and to participate actively with UNMIK in the reception of returnees to Kosovo.

A Joint Committee on Returns for Kosovo Serbs was established on 2 May to explore prospects for the safe, orderly and sustainable return of those displaced Kosovo Serbs wishing to go back to their homes and to coordinate efforts and initiatives in that regard. The Steering Committee of the Joint Committee conducted assessments of potential return locations throughout the province. UNHCR organized a go-and-see visit for displaced Serbs to five villages in Osojane. In a meeting with the FRY Minister for Refugees in August, the UNHCR Special Envoy for FRY stressed that it was not possible to promote returns until conditions for a safe, dignified and sustainable return were in place. The Envoy and the new FRY President Kostunica agreed in mid-November on the need to find a balance between hope and caution with respect to Kosovo Serb returns. However, as there were some small-scale spontaneous returns to a number of existing Serb communities, a system was put in place to track those returns so that assistance could be delivered. As many as 2,000 Kosovo Serbs might have returned to their places of origin over the course of the year.

Sectoral developments

UNMIK made considerable progress in establishing normality and improving the living conditions of the Kosovo population. By 8 February, some 90 per cent of the $29.6 million pledged to the UNMIK Trust Fund had been received. The Fund was used to finance quick-impact projects, including the payment of stipends to Kosovo civil servants and a winterization programme. "Kosovo: Reconstruction 2000", a comprehensive public reconstruction and investment programme, was presented to donors to better target resources in support of UNMIK's priorities for reconstruction. Donors pledged a total of 2.6 billion deutsche mark (DM). A number of high-priority needs remained without funding, including rehabilitation of the courts, schools, hospitals and other public buildings; the development of multiple solid waste disposal facilities and environmental clean-up; and the development of local human resources.
