Fifty-eighth session

Item 159 of the provisional agenda*

Scope of legal protection under the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel

Scope of legal protection under the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel

Report of the Secretary-General****

Summary

The key provisions of the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel have been introduced in a small number of status-of-forces and status-of-mission agreements, most of which are presently under negotiation. There has not yet been any request from a State for information on matters of fact relevant to the application of the Convention. The role of the Secretary-General as a certifying authority regarding such matters is therefore still to be tested. A standard provision is suggested for inclusion in agreements between the United Nations and non-governmental organizations to make clear that personnel deployed by the Organization in a mission area are “associated personnel” within the meaning of the Convention. However, such a clause is not likely to materially strengthen the protection enjoyed by those personnel if the host country is not already bound by the Convention.

* A/58/150.

** Preparation of the present report involved extensive consultations among all offices and departments concerned. Some of these consultations were not yet complete as of 18 July 2003.

With regard to possible procedures to initiate a declaration by the Security Council or General Assembly that an exceptional risk exists to the safety of personnel participating in a United Nations operation, consideration is given to a suggestion to link the issuance of such a declaration to the internal mechanism used by the United Nations Security Coordinator to categorize phases of security risk for United Nations personnel. It is concluded that this is not a viable or desirable option. Since there are not yet any agreed and generally recognized criteria for determining the existence of a situation of exceptional risk, the Secretary-General himself would find it difficult to go to the General Assembly or Security Council and propose that they issue a declaration in respect of a particular situation. The one exception is in cases where the General Assembly or the Security Council have already adopted decisions making it clear that they consider there to be a situation that presents a security risk to United Nations personnel in a particular area of operations. The situation in Afghanistan is such a case. The General Assembly is invited to issue a declaration that, for the purposes of the Convention, there exists an exceptional risk for United Nations and associated personnel participating in the operation in that country.

The difficulties in the issuance of the declaration of exceptional risk nevertheless remain the single most important limitation on the effectiveness of the Convention's protective regime. It is recommended that serious consideration be given to dispensing with the need for such a declaration as a condition for the application of the Convention.

Ultimately, the strength of the Convention's protective regime lies in the readiness of States to implement it. Since 1 January 1992, 198 civilian personnel have lost their lives as a result of malicious acts while performing services for the Organization. Only in 21 of those cases has the Member State concerned advised the Secretariat that it has taken legal action to bring the perpetrators to justice. The General Assembly should call upon the States concerned to investigate the attacks and to arrest and prosecute those responsible.

I. Introduction

1. In my first report to the General Assembly on the scope of legal protection under the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel (A/55/637), I analysed the scope of the protective regime of the Convention and recommended measures to strengthen the existing regime and to extend its scope by means of a protocol. Measures that I recommended to strengthen the existing regime of the Convention included: (a) initiating a procedure for a declaration by the Security Council or the General Assembly of an exceptional risk to the safety of personnel of a United Nations operation; (b) designating the Secretary-General as a "certifying authority" when required by national authorities to certify the status of any United Nations or associated personnel or the existence and content of a "declaration" or of an agreement between the United Nations and a humanitarian non-governmental organization (NGO); and (c) incorporating the Convention's key provisions into status-of-forces or status-of-mission agreements.

2. In recommending these measures, I also pointed out the limitations within the existing legal framework and suggested that if Member States were willing to extend the scope of the legal protection to all United Nations operations and associated personnel they might do so by means of a protocol that would make the protective regime of the Convention applicable to all United Nations operations, regardless of the existence or otherwise of a “declaration”, and to all humanitarian NGOs in the United Nations area of operation, regardless of whether or not they have a contractual link with the United Nations.

3. By its resolution 56/89 of 12 December 2001, the General Assembly established an Ad Hoc Committee on the Scope of Legal Protection under the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel to consider the recommendations made in my report on measures to strengthen and enhance the protective regime for United Nations and associated personnel. The Ad Hoc Committee held its first session from 1 to 5 April 2002. It expressed general support for the recommendations that I had made to strengthen the protective regime of the Convention within its existing framework and also considered the recommendation to extend the scope of the Convention to all United Nations operations and to the personnel of all humanitarian NGOs by means of an amending protocol. The discussions of the Ad Hoc Committee’s Working Group on my recommendations are contained in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee.<sup>1</sup>

4. Having considered the report of the Ad Hoc Committee, the General Assembly, in its resolution 57/28 of 19 November 2002, recommended the Secretary-General: (a) continue to seek the inclusion of key provisions of the Convention in existing status-of-forces, status-of-mission and host country agreements; and (b) advise the Security Council or the General Assembly, as appropriate, where in his assessment circumstances would support a declaration of exceptional risk for the purposes of article 1 (c) (ii) of the Convention; confirmed that he (c) may provide information, upon the request of a State, on matters of fact relevant to the application of the Convention, such as the fact and content of any declaration of exceptional risk or any agreement concluded between the United Nations and a humanitarian NGO or agency; and requested him (d) to prepare model or standardized provisions for incorporation into the agreements concluded between the United Nations and humanitarian NGOs or agencies and make available to Member States the names of organizations or agencies that have concluded such agreements, for the purpose of clarifying the application of the Convention to persons deployed by those organizations or agencies. In addition, the Secretary-General and relevant bodies were encouraged to take such other practical measures to strengthen the protection for United Nations and associated personnel, including locally recruited personnel, who are particularly vulnerable and account for the majority of casualties among United Nations or associated personnel.

5. Pursuant to paragraph 8 of resolution 57/28, the Ad Hoc Committee reconvened from 24 to 28 March 2003 in order to continue the discussion on measures to enhance the existing protective legal regime of the Convention, including addressing the application of the Convention to all United Nations operations. The discussions of the Ad Hoc Committee’s Working Group at that session are contained in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee.<sup>2</sup>

6. The present report, in accordance with to the General Assembly’s request in its resolution 57/28 and the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Committee, takes into account the discussions held in the Ad Hoc Committee and includes an assessment of the overall effectiveness of measures taken to implement the resolution. It focuses on: the incorporation of the key provisions of the Convention into status-of-forces and status-of-mission agreements; a procedure to initiate a declaration of an exceptional risk; and standardization of relevant provisions in agreements between the United Nations and humanitarian NGOs. Since no request for information has as of yet been submitted to me by any national authority regarding matters relevant to the application of the Convention, no practice has yet evolved in that respect.

II. Incorporating the key provisions of the Convention into status-of-forces and status-of-mission agreements

7. The number of States Parties to the Convention, which at the time of my first report stood at 43, has now grown to 64, with less than a handful of them currently hosting peacekeeping operations. The need to incorporate the key provisions of the Convention into status-of-forces and status-of-mission agreements concluded with countries not otherwise bound by the Convention has thus remained acute.

8. The core provisions of the 1994 Convention include the obligations to prevent attacks against members of United Nations operations, to establish them as crimes punishable by law and to “prosecute or extradite” offenders (A/57/52, para. 24). At the suggestion of some members of the Ad Hoc Committee, article 8 of the Convention, regarding the duty to release or return United Nations and associated personnel captured or detained, was also included among the key provisions to be incorporated in future status-of-forces or status-of-mission agreements. In addition, all such agreements already include a standard clause whereby Governments are bound to ensure the prosecution of persons accused of any criminal act against the peacekeeping force or mission, which, if committed in relation to their own forces, would have rendered such acts liable to prosecution.

9. The core provisions of the 1994 Convention were for the first time incorporated in the agreement between the Democratic Republic of East Timor and the United Nations concerning the status of the United Nations Mission of Support in East Timor (UNMISSET), concluded in May 2002. I have subsequently proposed their inclusion in two status-of-mission agreements currently under negotiation: one with the Government of Côte d’Ivoire, regarding the United Nations Mission in Côte d’Ivoire (MINUCI), and the other with the Government of Lebanon, regarding the Military Observers of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO).

10. An example of a different kind is the draft exchange of letters on the status of the United Nations and its specialized agencies in Iraq, presently under negotiation with the Governments of the United States of America and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the States constituting the Coalition Provisional Authority in Iraq. In recognition of the limited legislative powers of the Coalition Provisional Authority, the draft status-of-mission agreement does not include the obligation to criminalize attacks against United Nations personnel by means of legislation. In the spirit of the Convention, however, it maintains the general obligation to take all appropriate measures to ensure the safety and security of the United Nations, its officials and experts and the standard clause ensuring the prosecution of persons “who are accused of acts in relation to the United Nations, or its officials or experts, which if committed in relation to the forces of the Authority, would have rendered such acts liable to prosecution". It would be expected, therefore, that those responsible for attacks against United Nations personnel would be prosecuted under the same law and in the same military tribunals, if any, as those responsible for attacks against Coalition personnel.

III. A procedure to initiate a declaration of exceptional risk to the safety of United Nations and associated personnel

11. Any declaration of an exceptional risk to the safety of United Nations personnel in any given operation requires a set of criteria or risk factors applicable in a uniform way to all United Nations operations in similar situations. In the absence of a readily available set of risk criteria, some members of the Ad Hoc Committee suggested that the issuance of the declaration and its timing be linked to the internal mechanism used by the United Nations Security Coordinator for the categorization of the phases of security risk for United Nations personnel.

12. The Office of the United Nations Security Coordinator (UNSECOORD) system of security phases, however, is one which is constantly adaptable to the changing circumstances at any time and place. It is often the case, therefore, that different security phases are determined for different locations within the same area of United Nations operations at different points in time. Linking the applicability of the Convention regime to such a system would result in a situation where, within the same United Nations operation and depending on their location at any given time, some United Nations personnel may be covered by the Convention while others may not.

13. Linking the issuance of a declaration to the security phases may also open a political debate on the propriety and justification in any given circumstances of the determination of UNSECOORD and its overall economic, social and other implications for the host country. The political sensitivity of the security determination and the possible negative effects that such a linking may have on the work of UNSECOORD and its depoliticized and independent approach to identifying the phases of security risk for United Nations and associated personnel, were widely recognized by members of the Ad Hoc Committee.

14. It is therefore my considered opinion that linking the issuance of a "declaration" to the internal mechanism used by UNSECOORD to categorize phases of security risk for United Nations personnel is not a viable or a desirable option.

15. As previously noted, there are not at present any generally agreed criteria for determining that there exists a situation of exceptional risk to the safety of the personnel participating in a United Nations operation. In these circumstances, I would find it difficult, for the reasons set out in paragraph 27 below, to approach the Security Council or the General Assembly to suggest that situations in particular areas where United Nations operations are deployed involve an exceptional risk to the safety of United Nations and associated personnel.

16. There is, however, one type of situation in which I would feel able to propose to the Security Council or the General Assembly the issuance of a "declaration" of exceptional risk, namely, where the Organization's political organs have themselves already adopted decisions recognizing that the security situation prevailing in a United Nations area of operations is a difficult one and that a clear and unidentified risk to the safety of United Nations and associated personnel operating there exists. The situation in Afghanistan is such a case.

17. The United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA) was established by Security Council resolution 1401 (2002), with the mandate to: fulfil the tasks and responsibilities entrusted to the United Nations in the Bonn Agreement; promote national reconciliation and rapprochement throughout the country; and manage the United Nations humanitarian relief, recovery and reconstruction activities in Afghanistan. UNAMA is composed of the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and two “pillars”: the political affairs pillar, and the humanitarian and development pillar. Its headquarters are in Kabul and it has regional offices in seven cities. UNAMA has no military component.

18. UNAMA was established by a competent organ of the United Nations in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, though not “for the purpose of maintaining or restoring international peace and security”. It is not considered, therefore, an operation within the meaning of article 1 (c) (i) of the Convention. Furthermore, since neither the Security Council nor the General Assembly has declared that there exists an exceptional risk to the safety of the personnel participating in the operation, it is not a United Nations operation within the meaning of article 1 (c) (ii), either. UNAMA is therefore currently outside the scope of the Convention’s protective regime.

19. In consecutive reports of the Secretary-General on the situation in Afghanistan, the following risk factors were singled out: the existence of pockets of resistance and terrorist threat of al-Qa`idah and Taliban forces; sporadic fighting and factional clashes between rival Afghan political, ethnic and military groups over local power and tribal dominance; banditry of all kinds; a high crime rate, especially outside Kabul and the main towns; and the absence of national security forces or any local law enforcement agencies. Attacks against United Nations personnel and against the personnel of various agencies, funds and programmes and international aid organizations have taken place since 2002. The United Nations guest house, the compounds of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the United Nations Children’s Fund (UNICEF), the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, the Office of the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA) and the Office of the International Organization for Migration (IOM) in Kabul and other cities, have been hit by bombs, grenades, rockets and other explosive devices. Attacks have also been directed against humanitarian and other NGO personnel and, notably, a demining NGO and the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) (see A/56/875-S/2002/278; A/56/1000-S/2002/737; A/57/487-S/2002/1173; A/57/762-S/2003/333). The International Security Assistance Force, established by Security Council resolution 1386 (2001), has improved the security situation in Kabul and its surrounding areas. The security situation in other areas, however, remains precarious.

20. In its resolutions 56/220 A and B of 21 December 2001 and 57/113 A and B of 6 December 2002 on emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan and the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security, the General Assembly noted that lack of security remains the most serious challenge facing Afghanistan, expressed its deep concern over recent security incidents, condemned all acts of violence and intimidation directed against United Nations and associated personnel, as well as against other humanitarian personnel, expressed regret at the loss of life and physical harm suffered among the staff and urged “the Transitional Authority and local authorities to ensure the safety, security and free movement of all United Nations and humanitarian personnel ... and to protect the property of the United Nations and of humanitarian organizations, including non-governmental organizations”.

21. Similarly, the Security Council, at its 4774th meeting, issued a presidential statement (S/PRST/2003/7), which in its relevant part read as follows:

“The Security Council stresses that security remains a serious challenge facing Afghanistan. In particular, the Council expresses its concern over the increased number of attacks against international and local humanitarian personnel, Coalition forces, the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) and Afghan Transitional Administration targets by Taliban and other rebel elements .... Against this backdrop, the Council underlines the importance of accelerating the comprehensive reform of Afghanistan’s security sector, including the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants”.

22. In my view, the combined effect of the above fully justifies a declaration that, for the purposes of the Convention, there exists an exceptional risk for United Nations and associated personnel participating in the operation. I would therefore invite the General Assembly, in its consideration of the relevant agenda item, to make a declaration to that effect. It may wish, however, to call first upon the Government of Afghanistan to become a party to the Convention.

IV. Humanitarian non-governmental organizations contractually linked to the United Nations

23. In its resolution 57/28, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to prepare model or standardized provisions for inclusion in agreements concluded between the United Nations and humanitarian NGOs or agencies and to make available to Member States the names of organizations or agencies that have concluded such agreements for the purpose of clarifying the application of the Convention to persons deployed by those organizations or agencies.

24. A possible standard provision applicable in the diverse cooperation agreements between the United Nations and NGOs could read as follows:

For the purposes of the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, persons deployed by [the humanitarian non-governmental organization or agency] under this Agreement shall be considered “associated personnel” within the meaning of article 1 (b) (iii) of the Convention.

It should be underscored, however, that neither this nor any similar provision could clarify the applicability of the Convention to the personnel of the NGO in question if the host country in whose territory those personnel are operating is not a party to the Convention or if a “declaration” in respect of the United Nations operation there has not been made.

25. At the request of any host country, the United Nations will be ready to provide a list of all NGOs operating in the United Nations area of operation that are contractually linked to the Organization. In this connection, it should be noted that the Governments of States in which the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) is carrying out projects are already notified of the NGOs collaborating with UNDP in executing those projects since they are identified in the relevant project documents that UNDP signs with the Governments.

V. Observations

26. In the light of the very short period which has elapsed since the adoption of General Assembly resolution 57/28 and the 2003 report of the Ad Hoc Committee, it would be premature to assess the effectiveness of measures taken to strengthen the Convention’s protective regime. The key provisions of the Convention have been introduced in a small number of status-of-forces and status-of-mission agreements, most of which are presently under negotiation. In the absence of any request for information, the role of the Secretary-General as a “certifying authority” has not yet been tested. A standard provision in agreements between the United Nations and NGOs is not likely to affect in any way the application of the Convention or strengthen its protective regime if the host country is not otherwise bound by the Convention, although a list of NGOs operating in the United Nations area of operation and contractually linked to the Organization may be submitted to the host country, at its request.

27. The difficulty in the issuance of the declaration of an “exceptional risk” remains the single most important limitation to the protective regime of the Convention. The problems encountered in the process of the initiation of such a declaration include: the lack of an agreed set of risk criteria;<sup>3</sup> the timeliness of a declaration at the point of its establishment and at any time thereafter; the political considerations that may be likely to influence an otherwise technical assessment of any given security situation; the need to constantly monitor the security situation in all areas of United Nations operations throughout the world in order to ensure not only the timely issuance of a declaration but also its timely withdrawal, if and when the circumstances warrant it; and the destabilizing effect that such a declaration would have on the legal regime of the Convention. For all of these reasons, I recommend that serious consideration should be given to dispensing with the need for a declaration as a condition for the application of the Convention.

28. In the final analysis, however, the strength of the Convention’s protective regime lies in the readiness of States to ensure its implementation. While the shortcomings of the 1994 Convention have by now been widely recognized, it is the actual pressure that is brought to bear on Member States to prosecute those who are identified as being responsible for crimes against United Nations and associated personnel that will ensure that the legal protection that the Convention theoretically affords is actually effective. In point of fact, even before the negotiation and conclusion of the 1994 Convention, States were already under an obligation to prosecute crimes of murder and physical assault against United Nations personnel, while the capacity of the United Nations to bring a claim for damage caused by the injury of an agent of the Organization in the course of performing his or her duties was recognized by the International Court of Justice as early as 1949, in its Advisory Opinion 11 on the Reparation for Injuries Suffered in the Service of the United Nations.

29. In this connection, I recall that the annual reports of the Secretary-General on the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and the protection of United Nations personnel contain a list of civilian personnel who lost their lives during given years, including the place and details of the attack and indicating whether legal action has been taken. In all these cases, I have called upon the States concerned to assume their responsibility to deter further attacks on United Nations personnel by prosecuting those responsible, but to no avail. It is now time for the General Assembly to call upon these countries to investigate the attacks and to arrest and prosecute those responsible. To that end, I attach for the consideration of the General Assembly a consolidated list of the 198 civilian personnel who have lost their lives as a result of malicious acts while performing services for the Organization since 1 January 1992 (see annex). The list indicates the States in whose territories the crimes concerned were committed as well as those cases in which the Secretariat has been advised by the Member State concerned that it has taken legal action to bring the perpetrators to justice. As indicated in the list, the Secretariat has been advised that such action has been taken in only 21 cases.

<sup>3</sup> No generally agreed criteria has yet been established for determining that there exists a situation of exceptional risk to the safety of the personnel participating in a United Nations operation. However, the following elements could be used as guidelines in the event that consideration is given to the issuance of a declaration: international or civil war; hostilities; revolution; insurrection; riots; explosion of war weapons; terrorist activities; high crime rate; banditry; collapse of the national security system or of law enforcement agencies; and the actual occurrence of attacks against United Nations and other international personnel.
