I have the honour to inform you that on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the Foreign Minister of Austria and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in cooperation with the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, convened an international symposium on the theme "The role of judges in the promotion and protection of human rights: strengthening inter-agency cooperation". The symposium was held on 24 November 2003 in Vienna and was attended by high-ranking representatives of governmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as by eminent judges and experts.

The symposium focused on the role of the judiciary, which lies at the core of the national systems for the promotion and protection of human rights. It was motivated by the recognition that the role of judges is pivotal for human rights, but that too often their fundamental task and its long-term impact on the overall human rights situation of a country is underestimated. The objective of the symposium was to draw attention to the needs of judges for support as regards their independence, impartiality, competence and integrity, and to facilitate a more effective and better coordinated approach by all relevant international actors inside and outside the United Nations system in assisting countries in their efforts to strengthen the role of judges in the promotion and protection of human rights.

The many constructive ideas and proposals made in the preparation of and during the symposium were embodied in the Vienna Declaration on the Role of Judges in the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, which I have the pleasure of transmitting to you (see annex).

The Declaration constitutes the contribution of Austria to the implementation of General Assembly decision 57/535, in which the General Assembly decided that during its fifty-eighth session, the plenary meeting on 10 December 2003 marking the fifty-fifth anniversary of the Universal Declaration on Human Rights would also be devoted to the commemoration of the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action with contributions by Governments, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and relevant organs, funds and agencies of the United Nations system within their respective mandates.

I should be grateful if you could arrange for the present letter and its annex to be circulated as a document of the General Assembly and of the Security Council.

(Signed) Dr. Gerhard Pfanzelter

Vienna Declaration on the Role of Judges in the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms

The participants in the Symposium on “The Role of Judges in the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights — strengthening interagency cooperation”, convened in Vienna on 24 November 2003 upon the initiative of the Foreign Minister of Austria and the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights to mark the 10th Anniversary of the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, agreed on the following Declaration, bearing in mind that paragraph 27 of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action states the following:

“Every state should provide an effective framework to redress human rights grievances or violations. The administration of justice, including law enforcement and prosecutorial agencies and, especially, an independent judiciary and legal profession in full conformity with applicable standards contained in international human rights instruments, are essential to the full and non-discriminatory realization of human rights and indispensable to the processes of democracy and sustainable development. In this context, institutions concerned with the administration of justice should be properly funded, and an increased level of both technical and financial assistance should be provided by the international community. It is incumbent upon the United Nations to make use of special programmes of advisory services on a priority basis for the achievement of a strong and independent administration of justice.”

I. The role of judges in safeguarding human rights and fundamental freedoms

1. Judges are front-line actors in the protection of human rights. Their role is pivotal in the process of enabling people to assert their rights and in enforcing their claims to those rights. Independence and impartiality as well as competence and integrity of the judiciary are key to the protection of human rights, given that the implementation of all rights ultimately depend upon the proper administration of justice.

2. The domestic justice system is one of the pillars of the State and as such has an obligation to ensure the observance of the State’s international legal obligations. An independent and impartial judiciary that is familiar with international norms and standards, including relevant case law, can best articulate and activate the normative framework for the protection of human rights. In doing so judges also act as catalysts for law reform and social change, defending the constitution, establishing norms and contributing to the progress towards the full enjoyment of human rights and sustainable human development. Judges also have a crucial role in balancing the requirements of defending society against invidious types of crime - such as terrorism, organized crime and corruption - and preserving fundamental rights and freedoms. The rule of law and a fair judicial system can also reduce injustices in society and deter the resort to force for settling disputes.

3. Empowering the judiciary, ensuring their independence and equipping them with a comprehensive awareness of international standards is therefore vital for the protection of human rights, and regional initiatives in this regard are welcomed and encouraged. In this context reference is made to the “Bangalore Principles of Judicial Conduct” and the “Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary” (General Assembly Resolution 40/146), with the proviso that it might be timely to revisit the latter in the light of recent developments.

4. Whilst judges have a primary role in the promotion and protection of human rights at the national level, they are also key in facilitating international cooperation in combating trans-national crimes and crimes under international law. Moreover, international tribunals and courts, in particular the ICC and regional human rights courts such as the European Court of Human Rights and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, are an important instrument to complement and supplement the national mechanisms to ensure effective redress for violations of international human rights and humanitarian law. In this context, the importance of the establishment of the African Court on Human and Peoples' Rights is also to be welcomed. By fighting impunity, those courts strengthen the rule of law, thus making a fundamental contribution to peace, security and the respect of human rights.

II. The role of judges and their needs in conflict and post-conflict situations

5. Human rights violations and public perceptions of failure to secure justice are at the root of many conflicts. In such situations ensuring and sustaining the legitimacy of those institutions which safeguard human rights is a priority, recognizing that legitimacy depends on responsiveness to the rights of the human being and positive action taken to guarantee those rights.

6. In conflict situations it is through respect for international humanitarian, human rights and refugee law that the fundamental rights of the human being must be protected. In such situations members of the judiciary and of other law enforcement bodies have an obligation to observe those norms.

7. In post-conflict situations the re-establishment of the rule of law in a manner that protects and respects the human rights of all persons is key to an enduring peace and should therefore be a crucial element of peacekeeping. SC-Res. 1325 (2000) op11 emphasizes the responsibility of all States to put an end to impunity and to prosecute those responsible for genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes including those relating to sexual and other violence against women and girls. Such crimes should also be excluded from any amnesty provisions.

8. All efforts to promote peace, justice and national reconciliation have to go hand-in-hand with those to foster accountability and respect for human rights. Particularly in post-conflict situations, problems undermining the smooth and responsive functioning of the administration of the judicial branch, such as lack of resources, non-payment of salaries, damage to physical infrastructure, inappropriate executive branch influence, judicial corruption, lack of training for judges and court staff and lack of legal reference materials as well as the need for reform of the legal framework have to be addressed.

III. Action recommended

A. Action by States

9. States are called upon to

- a) enshrine the independence of the judiciary from the executive and legislative branches in the constitution and/or laws of each state and observe this principle in practice;
- b) ensure a transparent and independent process for selection and promotion of judges at all levels without discrimination of any kind which is based on objective criteria, primarily professional qualifications, training, and impartiality, and not political considerations. Measures should be taken to ensure gender equality and also a fair representation of members of minority communities within the judiciary and their staff;
- c) appoint judges and prosecutors in numbers that are sufficient in relation to case loads;
- d) ensure that all members of the judiciary receive comprehensive and continuing training on international and regional human rights standards and humanitarian law, including specialized gender and child rights training as well as training on the use of non-custodial and restorative justice measures. Judiciary should also be provided with specialized training to handle complex crimes and with courses on new technologies available;

- e) ensure that all courts and members of the judiciary are provided with adequate resources to exercise their functions in a professional, objective, conscientious and impartial manner and that they receive adequate salaries;
- f) support the judiciary in combating corruption in society and among their own ranks, since a corrupted judiciary will neither be independent nor impartial;
- g) ensure adequate protection, including from political interference, pressure or attacks, of judges, court staff and others involved in the administration of justice, including prosecutors and defence counsels, as well as the protection of victims and witnesses;
- h) take measures to promote fair sentencing, and to ensure monitoring of prison conditions and rehabilitation programmes as well as meaningful post release support and probation services;
- i) ensure access of independent monitors to persons deprived of their liberty as well as the confidentiality of their conversations;
- j) ensure access to justice and judicial remedies, including habeas corpus, for all, limit pre-trial detentions and reduce backlogs in court proceedings;
- k) foster cooperation among all justice actors to improve the functioning of the system to guarantee the optimal protection of human rights and to ensure effective implementation without undue delay of judgement;
- l) provide an effective judicial framework of remedies to redress human rights violations, including the possibility for national courts to decide on human rights violations and on reparations to victims of such violations;
- m) cooperate in establishing a consolidated international data base on important judgements in the area of human rights law.

B. Action by Intergovernmental and Non-Governmental Organisations

10. Intergovernmental and Non-Governmental Organisations are called upon to

- a) raise judicial awareness of existing international and regional standards and practice concerning the independence of justice and the role of the judiciary in the protection of human rights in particular through wide dissemination of information on international human rights law, human rights case law, guidance materials on equal rights and justice for women, a manual on the rights of children, compilations of international standards and the United Nations manual on human rights in the administration of justice in local languages as well as through workshops and seminars;
- b) develop and conduct training and awareness raising projects in a participatory manner addressing capacity needs and weaknesses as identified in the specific country context, focusing on the sustainable development of judicial capacity and structures and develop appropriate training evaluation criteria;

- c) ensure adequate representation of female judges and an overall gender perspective in their relevant projects;
- d) encourage cooperation among judges at the sub-regional or regional level through the organization of meetings, workshops and seminars on international human rights law taking into account the proposal by the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights contained in the report of the Secretary General on strengthening the rule of law (Doc. A/57/275), to convene a focused strategy meeting with associations specializing in the role of judges and lawyers aimed at deepening cooperation in this area;
- e) contribute to raising awareness among judges of the specific situation and problems of vulnerable groups in society, in particular with a view to avoiding discrimination in the administration of justice;
- f) sensitise the broad public and key governance institutions to the importance of the independence of judges and lawyers as precondition for institutionalising an effective judiciary;
- g) support the capacity of the legal community to respond to threats to its independence and impartiality;
- h) enhance judicial integrity through the adoption and dissemination of codes of conduct, and through assistance in the establishment of efficient public complaints mechanisms and credible and objective disciplinary control bodies;
- i) strengthen coordination and cooperation both at headquarters and field level in the design and execution of assistance projects so as to increase efficiency and to avoid duplication of efforts and waste of scarce resources;
- j) establish an appropriate consolidated data-base with a view to facilitating the exchange of information on any projects and concrete action undertaken in this field;
- k) carry out regular assessments of the performance of States' judicial systems on the basis of common statistical criteria. One such example is the Council of Europe's European Commission for the Efficiency of Justice (CEPEJ).

C. Specific action in connection with conflict and post-conflict situations

11. States and, in accordance with their respective mandates, Intergovernmental and Non-Governmental Organisations are called upon to

- a) ensure that the rule of law, the independence of the judicial system and its functioning are as far as possible preserved in conflict situations and that judges and their staff be protected from unlawful pressure hindering them from exercising their function;
- b) ensure that members of the judiciary and law enforcement agencies receive comprehensive information and training on international humanitarian law and that they are aware of their rights and obligations under this body of law in order to allow them to contribute effectively to its application and respect;
- c) include, where possible, provisions in instruments resulting from conflict resolution processes under international auspices, which ensure the independence, impartiality, competence and integrity of the judicial power;

- d) ensure comprehensive and continuing training of those involved in peace-keeping on international human rights and humanitarian law, including specialized training on gender and juvenile justice issues, on local law as well as on relevant methodologies and procedures;
- e) cooperate with local actors, building, where possible, upon existing rule of law institutions, laws, traditions and cultures and ensure that there is national ownership of and active participation in the administration of justice and in efforts to establish a culture of respect for the rule of law;
- f) ensure that people with relevant experience, including local actors, are trained to monitor and publicly report on all aspects of the administration of justice in accordance with international standards, and that monitors are granted access to all places where people are deprived of their liberty and have the right to confidential communication with such persons;
- g) ensure a smooth transition from the peacekeeping phase to longer-term post-conflict peace-building and development efforts;
- h) take into account specific difficulties in the administration of justice in IDP and refugee camps and consider establishing legal advice centres and mobile court systems.
- i) identify and address in a systematic manner possible contradictions between national laws and international human rights law;
- j) enable, where appropriate and in compliance with international human rights law, the use of traditional or alternative dispute settlement and mediation mechanisms, without prejudicing access to courts.

The participants agreed to concert their efforts for an appropriate follow-up to these recommendations.
