Speaking after adoption of the resolution, Australia and Denmark said that while they supported the consensus it was not for the United Nations to direct the World Bank and IMF to act in any specific manner; they were independent bodies with their own constitutions and regulations. Australia added that it did not regard SWAPO as the sole authentic representative of the people of Namibia, and reserved its position on the paragraph containing that statement.

Consideration by the Economic and Social Council

At its July 1980 session, the Economic and Social Council considered the implementation of the Declaration by the specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations.

In addition to the Secretary-General's report containing replies received from those agencies and institutions concerning organizational activities to implement the Declaration (see following section), another report before the Council was that of its President on his consultations with the Chairman of the Special Committee concerning co-ordination of the activities of the system's organizations. In his report, the President informed the Council that a UNDP - funded economic and social survey requested of UNCTAD by the Patriotic Front of Zimbabwe in 1978 had been submitted to the Front's co-leaders in February 1980 and considered at interagency meetings on that country's economic future, held at its capital in May with the participation of the Zimbabwean Government.

The two presiding officers called for co-ordinated, comprehensive support by all organizations concerned to facilitate Zimbabwe's recovery from the severe effects of the economic sanctions applied to it as pre-independence Southern Rhodesia.

They noted that several organizations had continued to expand, in varying degrees, their assistance to the remaining colonial territories, particularly within the framework of UNDP assistance programmes. More than 40 projects had been financed by UNDP from the Trust Fund for Assistance to Colonial Countries and Peoples and from Governing Council allocations for assistance to national liberation movements (see also pp. 236 and 585). The officers recalled the positive results of regular working meetings during the past few years by UNDP with liberation movements, United Nations organizations and the OAU secretariat- the latest of which had been held from 5 to 7 June at Nairobi, Kenya.

The officers welcomed an UNCTAD Trade and Development Board decision of 25 March, recommending that the special problems of colonial peoples should be integrated into the new International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s) (see p. 618), and stressed the importance of intensified efforts by member States of the specialized agencies and other organizations to accord priority to aiding the peoples concerned.

The officers noted with satisfaction that, on the initiative of the United Nations Council for Namibia, preparation of various assistance programmes to Namibians had been intensified, in close collaboration with a number of agencies and organizations, particularly in relation to the Nationhood Programme for Namibia and the United Nations Institute for Namibia, though the assistance fell far short of the people's pressing needs. They called for intensified efforts to increase funds needed to prepare extended aid programmes and, in particular, for the support of the system's major funding institutions, expressing the hope that their executive heads would formulate proposals without delay for consideration by their legislative organs. The officers agreed that organizations should try to find ways of including or increasing regular-budget financing for projects supported by OAU and the national liberation movements, noting that some agencies had defrayed travel and other costs of liberation movement representatives to attend meetings and had admitted the Council for Namibia to membership. They expressed confidence that these closer contacts would facilitate further assistance and enhance agencies' ability to respond to needs more quickly and flexibly, and hoped that further steps would be taken to strengthen co-ordination.

The officers noted that assistance to refugees from Zimbabwe and Namibia had recently increased through UNHCR, in co-operation with OAU and a number of United Nations-related organizations. By the end of 1979, some 50,000 Namibians had been assisted, more than $15 million in cash and $2.4 million in kind had been expended for them through UNHCR, and current WFP programmes amounted to some $31 million in food aid. The officers hoped that the United Nations system would continue to provide emergency and other aid for refugees and would respond positively to a recent appeal by UNHCR for $22 million for Zimbabwean refugees.

The officers noted measures by agencies to withhold assistance from and a UPU resolution to expel South Africa, and agreed that the United Nations system should bring about the maximum isolation of the régime.

On 23 July, the Council adopted without vote resolution 1980/50 by which it defined the role of the specialized agencies and United Nations-associated organizations in implementing the Declaration and supporting the peoples of the colonial territories and their national liberation movements.

By this resolution, the Council: endorsed the observations and suggestions in the President's report; reaffirmed that recognition by United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples entailed extending moral and material assistance to them and their national liberation movements, asked the specialized agencies and the system's other organizations to do everything possible as a matter of urgency to increase assistance to the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, in consultation with OAU and the Council for Namibia; asked them to continue to withhold any assistance to South Africa until it restored to the Namibians their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and refrain from action which might imply recognition of or support for the illegal occupation of Namibia; asked them to intensify their support for the oppressed people of South Africa and take measures to isolate the apartheid régime and mobilize world public opinion against apartheid; urged them to include in their governing bodies' agendas a separate item on their progress in implementing the Declaration and other relevant United Nations resolutions; and urged their executive heads to formulate, in co-operation with OAU, and submit as a matter of priority to their legislative organs, concrete proposals for full implementation of relevant United Nations decisions.

Expressing its appreciation to the organizations within the United Nations system that co-operated with the United Nations and OAU in implementing the Declaration and other United Nations resolutions, the Council: invited them and all Governments to extend maximum assistance to Zimbabwe in its national reconstruction and economic development efforts; called on international institutions that had not done so to enable representatives of the liberation movements recognized by OAU to participate as observers in proceedings concerning their countries; and recommended that all Governments which were members of the system's organizations should ensure full, effective implementation of the Declaration and other United Nations resolutions.

Drawing the attention of the Special Committee to this resolution and to the Council's current discussions, the Council requested its President to continue consultations with the Chairmen of the Special Committee and of the Special Committee against Apartheid and to report thereon to the Council.

The Council President had informed the Council in a report of 23 June of recent consultations held between those three presiding officers, during which they had reviewed assistance provided by United Nations organizations to oppressed South Africans and their liberation movement (see p. 236).

Resolution 1980/50 was approved by the Council's Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee without vote on 15 July; the text was proposed by Algeria, Barbados, Cyprus, Egypt, Ethiopia, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Lesotho, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Senegal, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, the United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

In explanation of position, Japan said that the request in paragraph 5 of the resolution should not be construed as meaning that organizations should withhold from South Africa minimum services that every Member State was entitled to receive. France and Japan also understood that references to support for the liberation struggle in no way meant support for armed struggle. Moreover, in France's view, isolation was not the best policy to be applied to South Africa.

The United Kingdom and the United States said they had long held the position that the overriding principle of universality would be violated by the isolation of South Africa from United Nations organizations. The United States said it would not support language that could be interpreted to mean that South Africa should be expelled from those organizations. While the United Kingdom was able to join in the consensus, it expressed reservations about certain aspects of the text, which it felt should have been more clearly and appropriately stated. It understood that the intent of the reference to isolating the apartheid régime was that the specialized agencies should, within their respective spheres of competence, put pressure on South Africa to renounce its policy of apartheid.

The USSR said it fully supported the resolution; in its opinion, the only weak point was the absence of a specific reference to the specialized agencies which had been disregarding relevant United Nations resolutions relating to implementation of the Declaration.

Consideration by the General Assembly

At its 1980 regular session, the Assembly had before it the report by the Secretary-General on implementation of the Declaration on granting independence by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations, previously considered by the Special Committee and the Economic and Social Council.

The report transmitted the substantive portions of replies by specialized agencies, IAEA, and six United Nations organizations and programmes (see p. 1062) to a request by the Secretary-General, in letters of 13 December 1979 addressed to them pursuant to an Assembly request of 21 November 1979,<sup>11</sup> for information on action taken by those organizations to give practical effect to United Nations resolutions seeking to implement the Declaration. The organizations reported variously on their provision of assistance to refugees from the colonial territories, aid to peoples of those territories in consultation with OAU and with the active collaboration of the national liberation movements, repatriation and rehabilitation of Zimbabwean refugees, projects for the Nationhood Programme for Namibia and arrangements to ensure observer representation of the territories by their liberation movements.

Referring to the regret expressed that the World Bank and IMF had not implemented the Declaration and continued to co-operate with South Africa, the Bank noted that it had made no loans to that country since 1966. South Africa had not participated in Bank Group elections since 1972 and therefore was not represented on the Group's governing bodies. The Bank was dismayed at the misleading picture presented of the actual situation and was seeking ways to implement resolutions that fell within its competence, within the limits of its constitutional restraints.

On 11 November 1980, the Assembly adopted resolution 35/29 by which it set forth its decisions on the implementation of the Declaration by the specialized agencies. The text, sponsored by 43 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), was approved by the Assembly's Fourth Committee on 3 November by a recorded vote of 128 to 0, with 11 abstentions, and adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 141 to 0, with 8 abstentions.

The Assembly thereby approved the relevant chapter of the Special Committee's report and re-affirmed that recognition by the Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to achieve freedom and independence entailed, as a corollary, the extension by the organizations of the United Nations system of all necessary moral and material assistance to the peoples of the colonial territories and their national liberation movements, and asked them to render such assistance as a matter of urgency and continue providing it to the newly independent and emerging States.

It expressed appreciation to the organizations that continued to co-operate with the United Nations and OAU in implementing the Declaration and other Assembly resolutions, urged all the system's organizations to accelerate their full, speedy implementation, and regretted that the World Bank and IMF had not taken the necessary measures in that respect, deploring in particular the fact that those agencies continued to co-operate with South Africa.

The Assembly expressed its concern that aid was far from adequate in relation to needs and recommended that United Nations-associated organizations initiate or broaden contacts with colonial peoples in consultation with OAU and introduce greater flexibility in their procedures so as to be able to extend the necessary assistance without delay to help those peoples and their liberation movements in their struggle to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence.

The Assembly urged them to withhold any financial, economic, technical or other assistance from South Africa, to discontinue all support to it until it restored to the people of Namibia their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of, or support for, the legitimacy of the domination of the territory by that regime.

It urged maximum assistance to Zimbabwe and Vanuatu in their economic development efforts. Further, it noted with satisfaction arrangements made for national liberation movements to participate as observers in proceedings relating to their countries in several specialized agencies and United Nations bodies and called on others to follow this example. Those which had not granted full membership to the United Nations Council for Namibia were urged to do so without delay.

of which they were members to ensure the full and effective implementation of the Declaration and other relevant United Nations resolutions and accord priority to providing emergency assistance to colonial peoples and their national liberation movements.

The Assembly urged the executive heads of the organizations of the United Nations system to formulate with OAU and to submit, as a matter of priority, to their governing and legislative organs concrete proposals for full implementation of the relevant United Nations decisions, in particular specific aid programmes to the peoples of the colonial territories and their liberation movements.

The Assembly requested the Economic and Social Council to continue to consider, in consultation with the Special Committee, appropriate measures for co-ordinating the policies and activities of the system's organizations in implementing relevant Assembly resolutions.

During discussions in the Fourth Committee, some States, including Afghanistan, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Pakistan and the Ukrainian SSR, expressed regret that the World Bank and IMF continued to co-operate with South Africa. Egypt considered that the specialized agencies should intensify their efforts to assist national liberation movements and dependent peoples. Referring to claims by certain agencies of constitutional restraints, Ghana felt that it was time for the United Nations to take a serious look at the constitutions of those agencies. Nepal commended the efforts of the specialized agencies and welcomed a decision of UPU to expel South Africa from its membership. Stressing the important role played by the specialized agencies with regard to small territories, the Ivory Coast urged them to pursue and extend their work.

At the time of the vote in the Fourth Committee, Sweden, speaking on behalf of the five Nordic countries, said that although they had voted in favour of the resolution they had reservations concerning references to the World Bank and IMF. Similarly Luxembourg, speaking on behalf of the nine member States of the European Community and Greece, did not agree with criticism levelled at those agencies. Australia, Japan, New Zealand, Portugal, the Sudan and Uruguay also expressed reservations in that regard. Trinidad and Tobago felt the sponsors of the resolution should have taken into account the information presented by the World Bank.

Australia, Austria and New Zealand had reservations about the reference in paragraph 14, describing SWAPO as the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people. New Zealand could not agree with that definition, as it did not wish to prejudice the outcome of elections yet to be held.

The United States said it had abstained in the vote because it was opposed to the increased politicization of the specialised agencies and other United Nations bodies. Further, it shared the reservation concerning the reference to SWAPO and it did not recognize the Council for Namibia as the legitimate Administering Authority of the territory; hence it did not favour giving it full membership in the agencies and other United Nations bodies.

The Economic and Social Council.

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General, and the reports of the President of the Economic and Social Council.

cil concerning the items entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations" and "Assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement by agencies and institutions within the United Nations system."

Recalling General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions adopted by United Nations bodies on this subject, including in particular General Assembly resolution 34/42 of 21 November 1979 and Council resolution 1979/50 of 2 August 1979.

Reaffirming the responsibility of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to take all effective measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies,

Welcoming warmly the achievement of independence by the people of Zimbabwe and mindful of the imperative need to assist the Government of Zimbabwe in its efforts to bring about reconstruction and economic development,

Deeply conscious of the continuing critical need of the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations, in their struggle for liberation from colonial rule,

Noting with concern that, although progress has been maintained through the continuing efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in the extension of assistance to refugees from Namibia, the action taken so far by the organizations and agencies concerned in the provision of assistance generally to the people of Namibia is still far from adequate to meet their urgent and growing needs,

Noting with satisfaction the intensified efforts of the United Nations Development Programme in the extension of assistance to the national liberation movements concerned and commending the initiative taken by that organizations in establishing channels for closer, periodic contacts and consultations between the specialized agencies and United Nations institutions and the Organization of African Unity and the national liberation movements in the formulation of assistance programmes,

Noting also the support given by the organizations within the United Nations system to the implementation of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 32/9 A of 4 November 1977.

Noting with satisfaction the high-level meetings held at Nairobi from 5 to 7 June 1980 between representatives of the general secretariat of the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations and organizations within the United Nations system, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 34/21 of 9 November 1979, on the question of co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity,

1. Takes note of the reports of the President of the Economic and Social Council and endorses the observations and suggestions contained therein;

2. Reaffirms that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to exercise their right to self-determination and independence entails, as a corollary, the extension by the United Nations system of organizations of all the necessary moral and material assistance to the peoples of the colonial territories and their national liberation movements;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and organizations within the United Nations system which have continued to co-operate in varying degrees with the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity in the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies, and urges all the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to accelerate the full and speedy implementation of the relevant provisions of those resolutions;

4. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in the light of the intensification of the liberation struggle in Namibia, to do everything possible as a matter of urgency to render, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations Council for Namibia, increased assistance to the Nationhood Programme for Namibia;

5. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, to continue to take all necessary measures to withhold any financial, economic, technical or other assistance to the Government of South Africa until that Government restores to the people of Namibia their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of, or support for, the illegal occupation of Namibia by that regime;

6. Requests also the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council on the apartheid policy of the Government of South Africa, to intensify their support for the oppressed people of South Africa and to take such measures as will isolate the apartheid regime and mobilize world public opinion against apartheid;

7. Welcomes the achievement of independence by the people of Zimbabwe and invites all Governments, the specialized agencies and the organizations within the United Nations system to extend the maximum possible assistance to the Government of Zimbabwe in its efforts to achieve national reconstruction and economic development;

8. Notes with satisfaction the arrangements made by several specialized agencies and United Nations institutions which enable representatives of the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity to participate fully as observers in the proceedings relating to matters concerning their respective countries, and calls upon those international institutions which have not yet done so to follow this example and make the necessary arrangements without delay;

9. Recommends that all Governments should intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system of which they are members to ensure the full and effective implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies;

10. Urges those specialized agencies and organizations within the United Nations system which have not already done so to include in the agenda of the regular meetings of their governing bodies a separate item on the progress made by those organizations in their implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies;

11. Further urges the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to formulate, with the active co-operation of the Organizations of African Unity, and to submit, as a matter of priority, to their governing and legislative organs concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant United Nations decisions;

12. Draws the attention of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to the present resolution and to the discussions on the subject at the second regular session of 1980 of the Council;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to follow the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the Council at its second regular session of 1981;

15. Decides to keep these questions under continuous review.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations,"

Recalling the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in its resolution 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960, and the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, contained in its resolution 2621 (XXV) of 12 October 1970, as well as all other resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Security Council on this subject, including in particular Assembly resolution 34/42 of 21 November 1979.

Mindful of the observance in 1980 of the twentieth anniversary sary of the Declaration, which has played and will continue to play a role of vital importance in the exercise by the colonial countries and peoples of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence.

Having examined the reports submitted on the item by the Secretary-General, the Economic and Social Council and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, as well as the related report of the United Nations Council for Namibia, Taking into account the relevant provisions of the Final Declaration of the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana from 3 to 9 September 1979.

Welcoming warm/y the achievement of independence by the peoples of Zimbabwe and Vanuatu and mindful of the imperative need to assist the Governments of the two countries in their respective efforts to achieve national reconstruction and economic development,

Aware that the struggle of the people of Namibia for self-determination and independence is in its final and most crucial stage and that it is therefore incumbent upon the entire international community to intensify concerted action in support of the people of Namibia and their sole and authentic representative, the South West Africa People's Organization, for the attainment of their goal,

Deep/y conscious of the critical need of the Namibian people and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, and of the peoples of other colonial Territories for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system in their struggle for liberation from colonial rule and in their efforts to achieve and consolidate their national independence,

Mindful of the urgent need to accelerate the process of the final elimination of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations and, in this respect, reaffirming the responsibility of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to take all the necessary measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to ensure the full and speedy implementation of resolution 1514 (XV), containing the Declaration, and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, particularly those relating to the provision of moral and material assistance, on a priority basis, to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements,

Deeply concerned that, although there has been progress in the extension of assistance to refugees from Namibia, the actions taken hitherto by the organizations concerned in providing assistance to the people of the Territory through their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, still remain inadequate to meet the urgent needs of the Namibian people,

Expressing its confident hope that closer contacts and consultations between the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of African Unity and the national liberation movements will help to overcome procedural and other difficulties which have impeded or delayed the implementation of some assistance programmes,

Recalling its resolution 34/92 C of 12 December 1979 in which it requested all specialized agencies and other organizations and conferences of the United Nations system to grant full membership to the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia,

Expressing its appreciation to the general secretariat of the Organization of African Unity for the continued co-operation and assistance extended by it to the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in connexion with the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Expressing its appreciation also to the Governments of the front-line States for the steadfast support extended to the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, in their just and legitimate struggle for the attainment of freedom and independence, and aware of the particular needs of those Governments for assistance in that connexion.

Noting with satisfaction the intensified efforts of the United Nations Development Programme in the extension of assistance to the national liberation movements and commending the initiative taken by that body in establishing channels for closer, periodic contacts and consultations between the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, on the one hand, and the Organization of African Unity and the national liberation movements, on the other, in the formulation of assistance programmes,

Noting also the support given by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to the implementation of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 32/9 A of 4 November 1977.

Noting with satisfaction the high-level meetings held at Nairobi from 5 to 7 June 1980 between representatives of the general secretariat of the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations and organizations within the United Nations system, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 34/21 of 9 November 1979, on the question of co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, Mindful of the necessity of keeping under continuous review the activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in the implementation of the various United Nations decisions relating to decolonization.

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the item;

2. Reaffirms that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to achieve freedom and independence entails, as a corollary, the extension by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system of all the necessary moral and material assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

3. Expresses its appreciation to certain specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system which have continued to co-operate in varying degrees with the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity in the implementation of resolution 1514 (XV), containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and urges all specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to accelerate the full and speedy implementation of the relevant provisions of those resolutions;

4. Expresses its concern that the assistance extended thus far by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to the colonial peoples, particularly the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, is far from adequate in relation to the actual needs of the peoples concerned;

5. Regrets that the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund have not yet taken the necessary measures towards the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, deplores in particular the fact that those agencies continue to maintain co-operation with the colonialist racist minority regime of South Africa and urges the executive heads of those agencies to draw the particular attention of their governing bodies to the present resolution with a view to formulating specific programmes beneficial to the peoples of the colonial Territories, particularly Namibia;

8. Recommends that the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system should initiate or broaden contacts with the colonial peoples in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, review their procedures in respect of the formulation and preparation of assistance programmes and projects and introduce greater flexibility in those procedures so as to be able to extend the necessary assistance without delay to help the colonial peoples and their national liberation movements in their struggle to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in accordance with General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV);

10. Urges once again the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, to take all necessary measures to withhold any financial, economic, technical or other assistance from the Government of South Africa, to discontinue all support to that Government until it restores to the people of Namibia their inalienable right to self-determination and independence and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of, or support for, the legitimacy of the domination of the Territory by that regime;

11. Welcomes the achievement of independence by the peoples of Zimbabwe and Vanuatu and invites all Governments, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to extend the maximum possible assistance to the Governments of the two countries in their respective efforts to achieve national reconstruction and economic development;

12. Notes with satisfaction the arrangements made by several specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system which enable representatives of the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity to participate fully as observers in the proceedings relating to matters concerning their respective countries, and calls upon those agencies and other organiza-

17. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to assist the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in working out appropriate measures for implementing the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and to prepare for submission to the relevant bodies, with the assistance of those agencies and other organizations, a report on the action taken since the circulation of his previous report in implementation of the relevant resolutions, including the present resolution;

Activities of foreign economic and other interests

Consideration by the Special Committee

During 1980, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples again examined the activities of foreign economic and other interests impeding implementation of the Declaration in colonial territories, as well as United Nations efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa.

On 20 August, the Committee, by 22 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, adopted a resolution, prepared following consultations, by which it reaffirmed the right of the peoples of dependent territories to dispose of their natural resources in their best interests, and reiterated that activities of foreign economic interests, by the depletive exploitation of those resources, constituted a major obstacle to political independence. Deprivation of the exercise of legitimate rights over the natural resources of colonial peoples by an administering or occupying power violated obligations assumed under the Charter of the United Nations. The Committee condemned these activities as impeding the implementation of the Declaration and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination. It also condemned the policies of Governments which collaborated with foreign economic and other interests engaged in such exploitation and condemned collaboration of certain Western and other countries with South Africa in the nuclear field; it called on all Governments, in respect of their nationals and companies under their jurisdiction that owned or operated enterprises in colonial territories, particularly in Namibia, to put an end to such enterprises and prevent new investments which ran counter to the interests of the inhabitants. It also requested all States to take measures to end investments in and any assistance to South Africa, including the supply of oil, and all economic, financial or trade relations concerning Namibia.

It condemned South Africa for its continued plundering of the resources of Namibia, for illegally extending the territorial sea and for proclaiming an economic zone off Namibia's coast. It declared illegal the activities of transnational corporations engaged in the exploitation of uranium in that territory. It invited all Governments and organizations within the United Nations system to ensure that the permanent sovereignty of colonial territories over their natural resources was fully respected and safeguarded, and called on the administering powers to abolish all discriminatory and unjust wage systems and working conditions in the territories.

The Committee requested the Secretary-General to undertake a broad publicity campaign to inform world public opinion of the facts concerning the pillaging of natural resources and the exploitation of indigenous populations in colonial territories by foreign monopolies and, in the case of Namibia, of the support they gave to the apartheid régime of South Africa.

In explanation of its abstention, Australia stated that, while its position with regard to southern Africa was essentially in accord with that of others, it rejected the proposition that all foreign economic activity in all other colonial territories was necessarily detrimental to the people or prejudicial to their right to self-determination and independence. Denmark explained that it had abstained because of the sweeping condemnations and unfounded allegations contained in the resolution.

Although Fiji and the Ivory Coast supported the resolution, they expressed reservations on the operative paragraph condemning all activities of foreign economic and other interests in colonial territories as impeding the implementation of the Declaration.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The question of the activities of foreign economic interests in colonial territories was discussed at the 1980 regular session of the General Assembly, mainly in the Fourth Committee, on the basis of the Special Committee's report.

On 7 November, the Fourth Committee, by a recorded vote of 91 to 16, with 26 abstentions, approved a resolution on the question, sponsored by 22 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), which was adopted by the Assembly on 11 November as resolution 35/28, by a recorded vote of 103 to 15, with 28 abstentions.

By this resolution, the Assembly reiterated that any power that deprived colonial peoples of the exercise of their legitimate rights over their natural resources or subordinated those rights to foreign economic and financial interests violated its obligations under the United Nations Charter. By their depletive exploitation of natural resources, accumulation, repatriation and use of huge profits to enrich foreign settlers and entrench colonial domination, the activities of foreign economic and other interests constituted a major obstacle to political independence and the enjoyment of the natural resources of territories by their indigenous inhabitants, particularly in southern Africa. Condemning all such activities in Namibia and South Africa, the Assembly asked the Special Committee to continue monitoring the situation in other non-self-governing territories to ensure that all economic activities there were aimed at strengthening and diversifying the economies in the interests of their peoples and their speedy accession to independence.

The Assembly strongly condemned Western and other States, as well as transnational corporations, that continued investing in and supplying armaments, oil and nuclear technology to the South African regime. It also strongly condemned the collusion of France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel and the United States with South Africa in the nuclear field, and called on other Governments to continue to refrain from supplying that regime with installations that might enable it to produce nuclear materials, reactors or military equipment.

The Assembly called on all States, particularly the United Kingdom, the United States, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Japan, Belgium, Israel and Italy, to end all collaboration with South Africa in the political, diplomatic, economic, trade, military and nuclear fields. It called again on Governments that had not done so to put an end to enterprises and investments in colonial territories by their nationals and by corporate bodies under their jurisdiction which were detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants. It requested all States to refrain from investing in, making loans to or promoting trade with the South African regime. It called on oil-producing and oil-exporting countries that had not done so to take measures against the oil companies that supplied crude oil and petroleum products to that regime. It asked all States to end all forms of assistance to regimes that used it to repress colonial peoples and their national liberation movements.

Reiterating that the exploitation and plundering of Namibia's natural resources by South African and other foreign economic interests were illegal and contributed to maintenance of the illegal occupation regime, the Assembly strongly condemned South Africa for its continued exploitation of those resources and called on all States to discontinue economic, financial or trade relations with South Africa concerning Namibia.

The Assembly called on the administering powers to apply a uniform and non-discriminatory wage system in each territory. The Secretary-General was asked to undertake through the Secretariat's Department of Public Information a sustained and broad campaign to inform world public opinion of the facts about the pillaging of natural resources in colonial territories, the exploitation of their populations by foreign monopolies and their support to colonialist and racist regimes. The Assembly appealed to non-governmental organizations to continue mobilizing international public opinion for the enforcement of economic and other sanctions against the Pretoria regime. It requested the Special Committee to continue to examine the question and to report in 1981.

The Assembly also by this resolution endorsed a Declaration on Foreign Investment in South Africa adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) in June. Sierra Leone, by a letter of 16 September, had transmitted the Declaration to the Assembly, as well as the other declarations, statements and resolutions adopted by the Council at its thirty-fifth ordinary session (Freetown, 18-28 June), and those of the seventeenth ordinary session of OAU's Assembly of Heads of State and Government (Free town, 1-4 July). Stating in the Declaration that it found that investments and bank loans in South Africa helped bolster the apartheid régime, the Council of Ministers reaffirmed its total opposition to foreign investment there and appealed to Western countries to withdraw their investments from South Africa.

Speaking in explanation of vote, Denmark, Finland, Gabon, Sweden, Thailand, Togo and Turkey said they abstained because, among other things, they could not approve arbitrary condemnation of specific countries. Reservations concerning the condemnation of certain States were expressed by several Members which voted for or abstained on the resolution, including Argentina, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Brazil, Burma, Burundi, Fiji, Greece, Indonesia, Liberia, Malaysia, Mali, Panama, Peru, the Philippines and Uruguay. Botswana, voting in favour, maintained reservations on the paragraphs relating to sanctions against South Africa.

Regretting what they said was a lack of consultations regarding the drafting of the text, Ireland and the Netherlands said they would vote against the resolution although they found the text to be marginally improved over the 1979 resolution on the question.<sup>12</sup> Also casting a negative vote, Japan felt that the reference to its country was arbitrary and did not take into consideration Japan's genuine efforts to co-operate in solving the problems of southern Africa. The Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom rejected the resolution as being full of distorting simplifications, polemics and propaganda.

France expressed the view that the resolution contained baseless accusations and discriminatory condemnations and was deliberately confusing two issues-Namibia and apartheid; the latter issue was not on the agenda of the Fourth Committee. The United Kingdom stated that the text missed the point about self-determination: free choice. It would continue to work towards balanced economic development of the territories under its administration, in consultation with the local populations, thus respecting the true meaning of self-determination. Australia could not support the resolution because it said it failed once again to differentiate between the situation in southern Africa and that prevailing in the small dependent territories of the Pacific and Caribbean areas. Spain, which abstained, took a similar view. Canada felt that efforts to solve the problems in southern Africa must be practical in design and sound in principle. It regretted the level of rhetoric of the resolution, and felt that its broad generalizations detracted from the serious intent of the sponsors. Norway considered that the text was unbalanced and contained unsubstantiated claims. Belgium, Israel, Portugal and the United States also voiced objections to the text, leading to their negative votes.

During the discussion in the Fourth Committee, the majority of speakers approved the Special Committee's report and condemned the activities of foreign economic and other interests as an obstacle to the process of decolonization - particularly in southern Africa-and as a way to deprive colonial peoples of their rightful ownership over the natural resources of their territories. Members such as Afghanistan, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, the German Democratic Republic

lic, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR deplored the lack of progress, despite numerous United Nations resolutions on the subject, and advocated strong United Nations action to put an end to the situation in the colonial territories.

Sierra Leone, reflecting on the voting pattern regarding the item for the past seven years, pointed out that the number of abstentions and negative votes were on the rise. It appealed to Members, as did Guyana and India, for a text that could be acceptable to all since that was the only way to ensure implementation.

New Zealand expressed regret that debates on the item had often lost sight of the purpose of the Committee's task, and had become merely occasions for making accusations. While endorsing the view that foreign economic activities detrimental to the future economic well-being of any territory should be condemned, New Zealand believed a distinction should be made between foreign economic activities which impeded the decolonization process and those which did not. Austria, New Zealand, Nigeria, and Trinidad and Tobago pointed out that texts adopted on the item had failed to distinguish between the situation in southern Africa and circumstances in other non-self-governing territories and expressed the hope that Members would refrain from generalizations and would strive for an impartial evaluation of each case in order to arrive at a consensus.

Bangladesh, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, Hungary, Iraq, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, Uganda, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Viet Nam recommended the application of comprehensive mandatory economic sanctions against South Africa to bring pressure to bear on its regime so that it would comply with United Nations resolutions on southern Africa.

In the case of Namibia, most speakers felt that ever-increasing foreign investments and the repatriation of huge profits derived from them by transnational corporations did not contribute in any way to the economic development of the territory and actually strengthened the South African regime, thus postponing the date when the territory would reach independence.

Egypt, Madagascar, Malaysia, the Philippines and the Syrian Arab Republic, among others, expressed concern about South Africa's nuclear programme which continued to exploit Namibian uranium.

Morocco, Pakistan and Zambia, advocating concrete measures against and condemning any co-operation with the Pretoria regime, stated that the Special Committee was charged with putting an end to colonialism and that it should strive for that goal, especially by mounting a broad publicity campaign to inform world public opinion of the facts concerning the pillaging of the natural resources in colonial territories.

The Ukrainian SSR charged the Western powers with hypocrisy. It said they condemned the Pretoria regime but in practice supported the exploiters by defending the interests of the transnational corporations, considering South Africa to be of vital strategic importance. Those powers thereby opposed the national liberation struggle on the African continent and exerted pressure on the independent African States.

The German Democratic Republic and the USSR said the major Western powers had enormous means, through their transnational corporations, for exerting effective economic pressure on the Pretoria regime and persuading it to end its racist policy and its illegal occupation of Namibia. But the Western countries' central objective remained the exploitation of the natural and human resources of colonial territories and not their accession to independence. In the USSR's view, foreign monopolies were exploiting natural resources and preventing the development of a national consciousness among populations; it pointed to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands as an example, where a Trusteeship Council visiting mission in 1980 had concluded that the United States was not giving the needed attention to the Territory's economic development. Cuba added that in many colonial territories in the Pacific and the Caribbean the administering powers were actually seeking to forestall the awakening of the peoples and impede economic development initiatives.

The Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom denied accusations that they had broken the arms embargo against South Africa.

Australia took issue with the assertion that all foreign economic activities were detrimental to the peoples of non-self-governing territories and constituted a barrier to self-determination. The responsible introduction of suitable investments and resources often had an important role in economic development and industrialization in dependent territories, it said. Administering powers and foreign investors should be sensitive to the aspirations and real needs of the peoples of such territories, while avoiding the dangers of too great an economic dependency and the harmful consequences of investment bent only on profit. Total condemnation of all foreign economic activity in dependent territories would be at odds with many resolutions that enjoined administering powers to provide, in consultation with territorial Governments, bilateral and multilateral assistance, Australia observed.

The Ivory Coast underlined the fact that multilateral external aid was of vital importance to colonial territories and, if the interests of the innocent were to be preserved, it was essential not to strike indiscriminately at all foreign interests. Condemnations should not refer to States by name, since a pragmatic resolution which brought countries together would have better prospects of being implemented.

Ethiopia expressed the hope that a dialogue could be established between the two opposing points of view and regretted the fact that those advocating the continuation of foreign economic activities in colonial territories were those who derived profit from it. The African group of States, it said, was convinced of the necessity of imposing sanctions against South Africa. Algeria, Guyana and Nigeria expressed concern at the exploitative wage system and at safety practices in South Africa. In their view, there could therefore, be no question of conciliation or compromise for the purpose of producing a resolution that could be adopted by consensus. Algeria said that, if the goals of freedom and emancipation of peoples were to be achieved, Africa and the entire third world must demonstrate unity and solidarity in the face of those seeking to divide them.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Namibia and in all other Territories under colonial domination and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa,"

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to this question,

Taking into consideration the parts of the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia relating to the question, Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, as well as all other resolutions of the United Nations relating to the item,

Taking into account the relevant provisions of the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, held at Maputo from 16 to 21 May 1977, as well as the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid, adopted by the World Conference for Action against Apartheid,

Recalling the Declaration on Namibia and the Programme of Action in Support of Self-Determination and National Independence for Namibia, contained in General Assembly resolution S-9/2 of 3 May 1978,

Bearing in mind the relevant resolutions, decisions and declarations adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its seventeenth ordinary session, held at Freetown from 1 to 4 July 1980, particularly the Declaration on Foreign Investment in South Africa, adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-fifth ordinary session, held at Freetown from 18 to 26 June 1980,

Bearing in mind also the Final Declaration of the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana from 3 to 9 September 1979,

Reaffirming the solemn obligation of the administering Powers under the Charter of the United Nations to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the Territories under their administration and to protect the human and natural resources of those Territories against abuses,

Reaffirming that any economic or other activity which impedes the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and obstructs efforts aimed at the elimination of colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa and other colonial Territories violates the political, economic and social rights and interests of the peoples of the Territories and is therefore incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter,

Reaffirming that the natural resources of all Territories under colonial and racist domination are the heritage of the peoples of those Territories and that the exploitation and depletion of those resources by foreign economic interests, in particular of southern Africa, in association with the illegal racist minority regime of South Africa constitute a direct violation of the rights of the peoples and of the principles stated in the Charter and all relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Noting with profound concern that the colonial Powers and certain States, through their activities in the colonial Territories, have continued to disregard United Nations decisions relating to the item and that they have failed to implement in particular the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolutions 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970 and 34/41 of 21 November 1979, by which the Assembly called upon all Governments which had not yet done so to take legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that own and operate enterprises in colonial Territories, particularly in Africa, which are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises and to prevent new investments which run counter to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories,

Condemning the intensified activities of those foreign economic, financial and other interests which continue to exploit the natural and human resources of the colonial Territories and to accumulate and repatriate huge profits to the detriment of the interests of the inhabitants, particularly in southern Africa, thereby impeding the realization by the peoples of the Territories of their legitimate aspirations for self-determination and independence,

Strongly condemning the support which the racist minority regime of South Africa continues to receive from those foreign economic, financial and other interests which are collaborating with it in its exploitation of the natural and human resources of, and in the further entrenchment of its illegal and racist domination over, the international Territory of Namibia,

Taking into account the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia on the hearings on Namibian uranium held in New York from 7 to 11 July 1980.

Strongly condemning the investment of foreign capital in the illegal production of uranium and the collaboration by certain Western countries and other States with the racist minority regime of South Africa in the nuclear field which, by providing that regime with nuclear equipment and technology, enables it to develop nuclear and military capabilities, thereby promoting South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia and enabling it to become a nuclear Power,

Deeply concerned at the fact that foreign economic, financial and other interests continue to deprive the indigenous populations of other colonial Territories, including those in the Caribbean and Pacific Ocean regions, of their rights over the wealth of their countries, and at the continued loss of ownership of land by the inhabitants of those Territories as a result of the failure of the administering Powers to take effective steps to safeguard such ownership,

Conscious of the continuing need to mobilize world public opinion against the involvement of foreign economic, financial and other interests in the exploitation of natural and human resources, which impedes the independence of colonial Territories and the elimination of racism, particularly in southern Africa,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the peoples of dependent Territories to self-determination and independence and to the enjoyment of the natural resources of their Territories, as well as their right to dispose of those resources in their best interests:

2. Reaffirms the relevant provisions of the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, as well as the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid, adopted by the World Conference for Action against Apartheid;

3. Endorses the Declaration on Foreign Investment in South Africa adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-fifth ordinary session:

4. Reiterates that any administering or occupying Power which deprives the colonial peoples of the exercise of their legitimate rights over their natural resources or subordinates the rights and interests of those peoples to foreign economic and financial interests violates the solemn obligations it has assumed under the Charter of the United Nations;

5. Reaffirms that, by their depletive exploitation of natural resources, the continued accumulation and repatriation of huge profits and the use of those profits for the enrichment of foreign settlers and the entrenchment of colonial domination over the Territories, the activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests operating at present in the colonial Territories, particularly in southern Africa, constitute a major obstacle to political independence and to the enjoyment of the natural resources of those Territories by the indigenous inhabitants;

6. Condemns all activities of foreign economic and other interests operating in Namibia and South Africa and declares that their collaboration with the racist minority regime is detrimental to the interests of the oppressed peoples and impedes the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

7. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to monitor closely the situation in other Non-Self-Governing Territories so as to ensure that all economic activities in those Territories are aimed at strengthening and diversifying their economies in the interests of the indigenous peoples and their speedy accession to independence, and that those peoples are not exploited for political, military and other purposes detrimental to their interests;

8. Strongly condemns those Western countries and other States, as well as the transnational corporations, which continue their investments in, and supply of armaments and oil and nuclear technology to, the racist South African regime, thus buttressing it and aggravating the threat to world peace;

9. Strongly condemns the collusion of France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel and the United States of America with South Africa in the nuclear field and calls upon all other Governments to continue to refrain from supplying the racist minority regime of South Africa, directly or indirectly, with installations that might enable it to produce uranium, plutonium and other nuclear materials, reactors or military equipment;

10. Calls upon all States, in particular the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the United States, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Japan, Belgium, Israel and Italy, to take urgent, effective measures to terminate all collaboration with South Africa in the political, diplomatic, economic, trade, military and nuclear fields and to refrain from entering into other relations with the racist regime of South Africa in violation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity;

11. Calls once again upon all Governments which have not yet done so to take legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that own and operate enterprises in colonial Territories, particularly in Africa, which are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises and to prevent new investments which run counter to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories;

12. Requests all States to refrain from making any investments to the benefit of, or extending loans to, the minority racist regime of South Africa and to refrain from any agreements or measures to promote trade or other economic relations with it;

13. Calls upon those oil-producing and oil-exporting countries which have not yet done so to take effective measures against the oil companies which supply crude oil and petroleum products to the racist regime of South Africa;

14. Requests all States to take effective measures to end the supply of funds and other forms of assistance, including military supplies and equipment, to the regimes which use such assistance to repress the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

16. Strongly condemns South Africa for its continued exploitation and plundering of the natural resources of Namibia in complete disregard of the legitimate interests of the Namibian people;

17. Calls once again upon all States to discontinue all economic, financial or trade relations with South Africa concerning Namibia and to refrain from entering into economic, financial or other relations with South Africa, acting on behalf of or concerning Namibia, which may lend support to its continued illegal occupation of that Territory;

18. Invites all Governments and organizations of the United Nations system, having regard to the relevant provisions of the Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in General Assembly resolution 3201(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, and of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in Assembly resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, to ensure in particular that the permanent sovereignty of the colonial Territories over their natural resources is fully respected and safeguarded;

19.. Calls upon the administering Powers to abolish every discriminatory and unjust wage system prevailing in the Territories under their administration and to apply in each Territory a uniform system of wages to all the inhabitants without any discrimination;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to undertake, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, a sustained and broad campaign with a view to informing world public opinion of the facts concerning the pillaging of natural resources in colonial Territories and the exploitation of their indigenous populations by foreign monopolies and the support they render to the colonialist and racist régimes;

21. Appeals to all non-governmental organizations to continue their campaign to mobilize international public opinion for the enforcement of economic and other sanctions against the Pretoria regime;

22. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session.

Questions concerning individual territories

The following pages give accounts of the decisions taken on individual territories in 1980 by the General Assembly and its Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.<sup>13</sup>

(See other chapters of this section for information on questions concerning Namibia and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.)

<sup>13</sup> See Y.U.N., 1960, p. 49, text of Declaration, contained in resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960.

For each of the territories considered, the Special Committee and the Assembly had before them a working paper prepared by the Secretariat that contained information on actions previously taken and on the latest developments concerning the territory. The working paper and the Special Committee's report were submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session, which opened on 16 September 1980, where they were discussed mainly in the Fourth Committee.

On 11 November, the Assembly adopted a series of decisions, described below, regarding the various territories.

American Samoa

On 20 August, the Special Committee approved the report of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories on American Samoa (administered by the United States) and endorsed its conclusions and recommendations.

Thus, the Committee noted with appreciation the participation of the administering power in its discussions, enabling it to conduct a more informed and meaningful examination of the territory. The Committee noted the report of a 12-member locally constituted Second Temporary Political Status Study Commission, which had rejected various options on the future status of the territory, emphasizing that several of them had posed a threat to the traditional Samoan social structure.

The Committee noted with satisfaction that the Government of American Samoa was working to raise its level of regional co-operation with the regional institutions and emerging nations of the South Pacific to promote the economic welfare of the area.

Recalling the positive attitude of the United States on the question of receiving United Nations visiting missions, the Committee reiterated the hope that the administering power would accept a mission to the territory in the near future.

The Committee called on that power to take all necessary steps, taking into account the expressed wishes of the people of American Samoa, to expedite the process of decolonization, and underscored the responsibility of the administering power for the economic and social development of the territory.

These last provisions were included by the Assembly in its resolution 35/23, by which it approved the chapter of the Special Committee's report on American Samoa and reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of the territory to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on granting independence. It reiterated the view that factors such as size, geographical location, size of population and limited natural resources should not delay implementation of the Declaration, and welcomed an invitation extended by the United States to the Special Committee to send a visiting mission to American Samoa in 1981.

Calling on the administering power to take all possible steps to strengthen and diversify the economy and work out assistance and economic development programmes, the Assembly also: urged that power to continue fostering close relations and co-operation between the people of the territory and the neighbouring island communities; urged it, in co-operation with the freely elected representatives of American Samoa, to safeguard the inalienable right of the territory's people to the enjoyment of their natural resources by taking measures to guarantee their right to own and dispose of those resources and maintain control of their future development; and noted its decision concerning the transfer to American Samoa of all mineral rights in submerged lands off the territorial coastline.

The Assembly requested the Special Committee to examine this question, including the dispatch of a visiting mission, in consultation with the administering power, and to report in 1981.

Resolution 35/23 was adopted on 11 November without objection; the Fourth Committee approved the text unanimously on 6 November. Its sponsors were Australia, Denmark, Fiji, Indonesia, Japan, Malaysia, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Samoa, Sierra Leone, Singapore and Sweden.

During the discussion in the Fourth Committee, the United States said that American Samoa was in the midst of a political campaign which would culminate on 4 November 1980 in the election for the first time of a Samoan delegate to the Congress of the United States and for the second time of an elected Governor of the territory. Also for the first time, a Samoan had been appointed to the Office of the Attorney-General of the territory. The United States observed that in 1980 the Second Temporary Political Status Study Commission had concluded that the most suitable political status for American Samoa was continuation as an unincorporated and unorganized territory of the United States, but with certain modifications. Among the Commission's recommendations was a proposal for the creation of a third commission to examine the situation regarding future status.

Belize

On 14 August, the Special Committee considered the question of Belize and decided without objection to transmit all available information to the General Assembly and to consider the matter in 1981, subject to any directives the Assembly might give at its 1980 session.

On 11 November 1980, the Assembly adopted resolution 35/20 on Belize by a recorded vote of 139 to 0, with 7 abstentions. Its Fourth Committee approved the text, sponsored by 57 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), by a recorded vote, requested by Guatemala, of 130 to 1, with 8 abstentions.

By that resolution, the Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Belize to self-determination, independence and territorial integrity, urging all States to assist in the secure and early exercise of that right and calling on all parties to respect the principle that the threat or use of force should not be applied to prevent the people from exercising that right.

The Assembly declared that Belize should become an independent State before the conclusion of the 1981 regular Assembly session, called on the United Kingdom-the administering power- to convene a constitutional conference to prepare for the independence of Belize, called on it to continue ensuring the security and territorial integrity of Belize, and urged it, in consultation with the Government of Belize, and Guatemala to continue their efforts to reach agreement without prejudice to the exercise of the inalienable rights of the people of Belize, and to consult with other specially interested States in the region.

The Assembly requested United Nations organs to take appropriate action as might be requested by the United Kingdom and Belize to facilitate the attainment of Belize's independence and to guarantee its security and territorial integrity thereafter, and called on Guatemala and independent Belize to work out arrangements for co-operation on matters of mutual concern. Finally, the Assembly requested the Special Committee to remain seized of the question.

Guatemala, which did not participate in the vote in the plenary Assembly, stated that in its view the Fourth Committee and the Assembly continued improperly to deal with the question. In view of the resumption of negotiations in the past year, it considered that the United Kingdom was putting pressure on Guatemala through the United Nations. It found several paragraphs unacceptable because an attempt was being made to hasten independence before the dispute was resolved.

In the Fourth Committee, Guatemala asked for a separate vote on the paragraphs by which the Assembly: declared that Belize should be an independent State in 1981 (paragraph 2); called on the United Kingdom to convene a constitutional conference (paragraph 3); requested relevant United Nations organs to take appropriate action to facilitate Belize's independence and guarantee its security and territorial integrity thereafter (paragraph 7); and called on Guatemala and Belize to work out post-independence co-operation (paragraph 9). The Committee rejected Guatemala's request by a recorded vote, requested by Guatemala, of 21 in favour to 100 against, with 16 abstentions.

Following the vote in the Committee, statements were made by Afghanistan, Argentina, Austria, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, the United States and Venezuela expressing support for the resolution and hope that Belize would soon accede to independence, though some of these States voiced reservations on certain operative provisions of the resolution. Argentina said paragraph 7 did not define the action that might be appropriate nor did it state which were the relevant organs. Venezuela said the paragraph contained a premature decision regarding United Nations participation in a State matter. To Colombia, certain passages could be interpreted as an attempt to bring pressure on the parties; in addition to reservations on paragraph 7, it also felt that paragraph 4, calling on the parties to respect the principle that the threat or use of force not be applied, was not clearly worded. Costa Rica said the inclusion of the paragraphs on which a separate vote had been requested did not contribute to the solution of the bilateral problems.

During the debate in the Committee, Mexico stated that the people of Belize had distinct social and cultural characteristics, hence an undeniable right to self-determination, independence and territorial integrity, as recognized by various international gatherings which had also declared that the problem of Belize should be resolved by peaceful means.

Guatemala said that for more than a century it had been prevented from exercising its sovereign rights in Belize. None the less, it was willing to co-operate with the United Kingdom in the quest for a peaceful, negotiated agreement. Talks were resumed in 1980, following elections in the United Kingdom and Belize, and Guatemala had shown understanding and flexibility. The question of Belize was essentially a territorial dispute with the United Kingdom to which Guatemala sought a solution by peaceful means; it was therefore surprising that attempts were being made to hasten independence for the territory before the dispute was settled. In Guatemala's view, to attempt to establish a new State with uncertain frontiers and territory subject to negotiation was irresponsible. Guatemala had more than once in the past rejected the role of the Fourth Committee and outside parties in the controversy, which could be settled only by direct negotiation because of its legal and territorial nature. Guatemala could not agree to an independence that was unilaterally granted to Belize, since this would cause dismemberment of Guatemalan territory and create another crisis point in the region.

A petitioner, Theodore Aranda, leader of the opposition United Democratic Party (UDP) of Belize, addressed the Committee, explaining that UDP did so since it had not been included in any representation from Belize since 1978. Guatemala's claim to the territory was vigorously rejected by all Belizeans. States, organizations and regional groups which supported Belize's drive to independence should put pressure not only on the administering power to pursue negotiations upholding Belize's right to self-determination and independence but also on Guatemala to recognize and respect those rights.

By a Memorandum of Understanding, signed in 1978, UDP was to have been included in all negotiations; it had, however, been excluded since that time, Mr. Aranda said. The Memorandum had also provided that the solution of the dispute was viewed as a national objective and any final agreement between the United Kingdom and Guatemala would be put to the people in a referendum. Since its exclusion from the talks, UDP had stressed that settlement of the dispute did not imply immediate independence, which should be considered as a separate issue whose timing was to be decided by referendum. Mr. Aranda called on the United Nations to insist that the will of the people be heard and to urge the United Kingdom to conduct a referendum to ascertain the people's wishes.

The United Kingdom restated its position on self-determination in dependent territories, pointing out that, in the case of Belize, independence had been delayed since 1964 because of Guatemala's claim to large sections of territory. The United Kingdom, in consultation with Belize, had held talks with Guatemala most recently in October 1980, and there was hope for progress in 1981. It would do its utmost to ensure that Belize achieved independence with its territory intact, sovereignty assured and in amity and concord with its neighbours.

Guyana said that, while it recognized that differences continued to exist, negotiations between the United Kingdom and Guatemala should not prejudice Belize's right to self-determination, independence and territorial integrity, and noted from the UDP representative's statement that all Belizeans were united on independence and in denying Guatemala's territorial aspirations.

Jamaica also rejected the view that Guatemala's claim, which it felt was incompatible with a just solution of the problem, should be the basis for denying the right of Belize to move towards nationhood. Jamaica hoped that strong support for the resolution before the Assembly would ensure Belize's early attainment of independence.

On 29 October, the Committee heard a statement by C.L.B. Rogers, Deputy Premier of Belize, who reported that the secure and early independence of his country had been the major issue in the recent elections, in which his party had obtained 13 of the 18 seats in the House of Representatives. The House was unanimous in opposing any proposals for a settlement of the Anglo-Guatemalan dispute that might involve the cession of Belizean territory or erode its sovereignty. In the past years of negotiations, Guatemala had tried to hold to ransom Belize's right to independence. The United Kingdom and Guatemala had both stated, during the last round of talks, that their positions had been clarified and that the process would continue. Belize was prepared to participate, but would not allow Guatemala to exercise a veto over its independence. The current resolution contained two new elements: that Belize should become an independent State with its territory intact before the 1981 General Assembly session ended, and that the administering power should initiate the constitutional measures required to complete the decolonization process. Belize appealed to Guatemala to respect its decision to proceed to independence in peace and to the international community to support Belize as it exercised its rights to self-determination, independence and territorial integrity.

Brunei

The Special Committee on 14 August, at the suggestion of its Chairman, decided without objection to consider the question of Brunei in 1981, subject to any directives from the General Assembly, and to transmit the documentation directly to the Assembly to facilitate consideration of the item.

On 11 November, by decision 35/410, the Assembly decided without vote to defer consideration of the question of Brunei to its 1981 session and requested the Special Committee to keep the situation in the territory under review and to report on it. The Fourth Committee had approved the decision, also without vote, on 7 November on an oral proposal by its Chairman.

Cocos (Keeling) Islands

On 17 June, the Chairman of the Special Committee appointed Fiji, the Ivory Coast (Chairman) and Yugoslavia as members of a visiting mission to the Cocos (Keeling) Islands in the Indian Ocean. The mission visited the territory from 8 to 11 July, at the invitation of Australia, the administering power.

In its report to the Special Committee, the mission noted that numerous changes had occurred in the constitutional, economic, social and educational life of the Cocos Malay community since the 1974 mission and that the general situation had improved. The Australian Government had purchased, on 1 September 1978, all the territorial property of John Clunies Ross with the exception of his residence and related structures, thus becoming owner of all the rest of the land. Australia then granted a lease at nominal rental of all plantation lands and facilities to the Cocos Islands Co-operative Society. The interim Advisory Council, elected on 18 March 1978, had become the first Cocos (Keeling) Islands Council on 25 July 1979; a second Council was elected on 20 October 1979.

The mission was of the opinion that these and other changes reflected progress in the implementation of some major United Nations recommendations. The members of the Council as well as the Management Committee of the Cocos Islands Co-operative Society (registered on 16 January 1979) had shown their ability to manage fully the affairs of the community.

The mission drew the attention of the administering power to the complexity of the territory's judicial system, as well as to the interdependence existing in the economic field between Mr. Clunies Ross, a shipper, and the Cocos Malay community. The mission favoured the termination of that relationship and was of the opinion that the administering power should take steps to deal effectively with the matter. It also called on Australia to make a complete study of the islands' economy with a view to its diversification. It notes, with concern the transportation problems faced, noted the administering power's expressed readiness to introduce compulsory education, considered that the question of the islands should be kept under constant review by the Special Committee, and considered that further missions were essential for the full implementation of the 1960 Declaration on granting independence.

On 24 October, the Special Committee adopted and submitted for the Assembly's consideration a draft decision concerning the Cocos (Keeling) Islands; the Assembly adopted it without objection on 11 November as decision 35/407, as representing the consensus of its Member States.

The Assembly thereby noted with appreciation the close co-operation and assistance extended to the visiting mission by the administering power, the Cocos (Keeling) Islands Council and the people of the territory, calling on that power to ensure the free expression by those people of their true aspirations concerning their future status, as well as the full exercise of their inalienable right to self-determination. The Assembly requested the Special Committee to continue its consideration of the item in the light of the mission's findings, including the possible dispatch of a further mission, as appropriate and in consultation with the administering power, and to report to the Assembly at its 1981 session.

In the Fourth Committee, the consensus statement recommended by the Special Committee was approved without vote on 30 October. During the discussion in Committee, Australia said that a central tenet of its policy in regard to the islands had been to bring about as speedily as possible conditions to enable the territory's people to exercise freely their right to self-determination; it had actively promoted their political, social, economic and educational advancement. Fiji noted Australian efforts to facilitate self-determination; the changes that had already taken place strengthened Fiji's conviction that political, constitutional, economic and social development programmes would be continued to prepare the people for the future.

East Timor

The Special Committee considered the question of East Timor on 14 August. Portugal, the administering power, participated in the discussion. The Committee granted a request for a hearing to José Luis Guterres, representative of the Frente Revolucionária de Timor Leste Independente (FRETILIN), who made a statement. Indonesia expressed strong reservations with regard to discussion of the question and to granting the hearing.

At the same meeting, the Committee decided without objection to continue its consideration of the item in 1981, subject to any directives from the General Assembly, and to transmit to the Assembly all relevant documentation to facilitate consideration of the question.

In a report of 9 October to the Assembly, the Secretary-General stated that a series of communications had been received regarding the territory. They included: (a) a letter of 21 February from Indonesia to the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, Trusteeship and Decolonization rejecting any United Nations resolution that did not recognize the completion of the process of decolonization in East Timor through its integration with Indonesia in 1976 and stressing that United Nations involvement would constitute interference in the internal affairs of a Member State; (b) a note of 3 October to the Secretary-General from Portugal, which stated that, although Portugal had been unable to exercise its responsibilities as administering power in East Timor since 1975, it had followed developments there and had tried to associate itself with the international community to provide humanitarian assistance to its people; and (c) a communication of 3 October to the Secretary-General from the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) reporting that it had approached Indonesian and Portuguese authorities to work out procedures for assisting the people of the territory, that Portugal had expressed willingness to co-operate with UNHCR especially in family reunion and repatriation activities, that UNHCR hoped Indonesia would favourably consider agreements for co-operation in this area, that a close relationship had been formed with the International Committee of the Red Cross regarding assistance, and that, while UNHCR stood ready to assist refugees from the territory, it had not received any requests from Governments for assistance for groups of refugees.

By a letter of 17 September, Portugal transmitted to the Secretary-General a communique issued by its Council of Ministers on 12 September stating that, since it was incumbent upon Portugal to define a policy aimed at solving the problem of East Timor, the Council had decided to focus such a policy on three levels: an economic and social aid programme for refugees from East Timor living in Portugal; humanitarian aid to Timorese inside East Timor; and the political status of the territory.

Other communications submitted in connexion with the subject were letters of 7 and 9 October from Indonesia, addressed to the Chairman of the Assembly's Fourth Committee, reiterating its position regarding the inappropriateness of considering the question of East Timor and objecting to the hearing of petitioners on the issue.

During the debate in the Fourth Committee, the following petitioners made statements: Mari Alkatiri of FRETILIN; Moises Da Costa Amarel of the União Democrática Timorense; Benedict R. O'G. Anderson, a professor at Cornell University (United States); Roger Clark of the International League for Human Rights; James Dunn of the Human Rights Council of Australia; T. Jill Jolliffe of the Anti-Slavery Society for Protection of Human Rights; Gene R. La Rocque of the Center for Defense Information; Margo Picken of Amnesty International; Michel Robert of the Ligue française pour les droits et la libération des peuples; William Roff, a professor at Columbia University (United States); Karen Talbot of the World Peace Council; Elizabeth Traube, an anthropologist; Taysa Tamara Vianna of the International Youth and Student Movement for the United Nations; and Jacob Xavier of the

During the general debate in the Fourth Committee, Portugal said that, in an attempt to break the current impasse concerning the territory, it had outlined a new approach which would include wide consultations involving Portugal's political parties, movements representing the Timorese people and representatives of countries directly concerned with the problem. Portugal trusted that these combined efforts would create conditions for a lasting settlement. It also emphasized efforts to alleviate the territory's pressing humanitarian needs.

Angola, Brazil, Burundi, Cape Verde, Cyprus, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique, Sao Tome and Principe, and Sierra Leone welcomed Portugal's initiative and expressed the hope that a solution to the problem would emerge. Mozambique held that the Indonesian occupation of East Timor should not be taken as a fait accompli.

Indonesia reiterated its position regarding the territory, emphasizing that many petitioners had shown complete ignorance or bias as to the real situation in East Timor.

Bangladesh, Malaysia, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand supported Indonesia's position that the process of decolonization in East Timor had been carried out and that any consideration of the item constituted interference in Indonesia's internal affairs.

Barbados, Ghana, Haiti, Nicaragua and Zimbabwe called on Indonesia to withdraw from East Timor and allow the people to exercise freely their right to self-determination and independence. Chad added that integration could not be lasting unless it was freely accepted.

Senegal stated its support for any resolution designed to bring peace to the island through the implementation of resolution 1514(XV),<sup>14</sup> containing the Declaration on granting independence.

Japan and the United States said that the most urgent task was to render humanitarian assistance to the people of East Timor.

On 11 November, the Assembly, by a recorded vote of 58 to 35, with 46 abstentions, adopted resolution 35/27. The Fourth Committee approved the text, sponsored by 23 powers (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), by a recorded vote of 58 to 35, with 42 abstentions, on 3 November.

The Assembly thereby reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of East Timor to self-determination and independence. It declared that they must be enabled freely to determine their own future within the framework of the United Nations (the sponsors had orally revised their original submission on this paragraph, the last part of which had read "under the auspices of the United Nations").

The Assembly welcomed Portugal's diplomatic initiative as a first step towards the free exercise of the people's right to self-determination and independence and urged all parties directly concerned to co-operate fully with a view to creating conditions necessary for the implementation of resolution 1514(XV).

The Assembly expressed its deepest concern at the continued suffering of the people of the territory and requested the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme and UNHCR to give all possible assistance, particularly to the children of East Timor.

Indonesia said it rejected the resolution totally and categorically.

Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany and Sweden explained their abstentions. France said that, while the Portugal/Indonesia dialogue would be a step forward towards a settlement, it would deprive the United Nations of any power to decide with respect to East Timor; France wanted to leave all options open. Finland and the Federal Republic of Germany said they abstained as they always had on previous resolutions on the question, judging any proposal relating to East Timor in the light of its usefulness to the island population; the exacerbation of the political controversies surrounding East Timor, Finland said, could only aggravate the sufferings of the population. Sweden also placed priority on alleviating their suffering.

Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

The Special Committee considered the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) on 14 August. It decided without objection to continue its consideration of the item at its 1981 session, and transmitted the relevant documentation to the Assembly.

The Assembly, when it took up the question at its regular 1980 session, had before it identical letters dated 5 May from Argentina and the United Kingdom stating that they had met in New York on 28 and 29 April to discuss the question of the islands and related issues in the South Atlantic. This meeting fell within the negotiating framework referred to in Assembly resolutions and the two Governments intended to continue the discussions at future meetings.

On 11 November, the Assembly decided without vote to defer its consideration of the question until its 1981 session and asked the Special Committee to keep the situation in the territory under review. This decision -35/412 -was adopted on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, which similarly approved the text on 7 November on an oral proposal of the Chairman.

Gibraltar

The Special Committee considered the question of Gibraltar on 14 August; it then decided without objection to transmit to the General Assembly all available information on the question in order to facilitate consideration of the item and, subject to Assembly directives, to consider the question in 1981.

On 11 November, the Assembly adopted without objection decision 35/406, as representing the consensus of its Members. It thereby noted that the Governments of Spain and the United Kingdom had signed a declaration on 10 April at Lisbon, Portugal, intending to resolve the problem of Gibraltar, thereby agreeing to start negotiations, agreeing to the re-establishment of direct communications in the region-Spain having decided to suspend the application of measures currently in force-and agreeing to base future co-operation on reciprocity and full equality of rights. The Assembly urged both Governments to make possible the initiation of negotiations envisaged in the Assembly consensus statement of 14 December 1973,<sup>15</sup> with the object of reaching a lasting solution to the problem of Gibraltar. The Fourth Committee approved the text, prepared in Committee, without objection on 30 October.

Guam

The Special Committee, on 20 August, approved the report on Guam of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories and endorsed its conclusions and recommendations. Expressing thereby its appreciation for the co-operation of the United States, the administering power, which had helped the Committee conduct a more informed examination of Guam, the Committee recalled that that power had the obligation to ensure that the people of the territory were kept fully informed of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in accordance with resolution 1514(XV), and to create conditions enabling them to exercise their inalienable rights freely and without interference. Recognizing that the presence of military bases could constitute a factor impeding implementation of the Declaration on granting independence, it reaffirmed its strong conviction that their presence in Guam should not prevent Guam's people from exercising their inalienable right to self-determination and independence.

The Committee underscored the responsibility of the administering power for the territory's economic and social development and called on it to take all possible steps to strengthen and diversify the economy and reduce excessive dependence on the military establishment. Noting that, according to the 1979 visiting mission,<sup>16</sup> one obstacle to economic development had been uncertainty concerning land held by federal authorities, it asked the administering power to protect the property rights of the people. It noted that the Guam Legislature had adopted a bill giving the territory control over all research, management, exploration and exploitation of resources within a 200-mile zone.

The Committee also noted that guidelines designed to stem the inflow of temporary alien workers had contributed to preventing the depression of wages and working conditions of domestic workers, although it registered concern at reports of alien workers who had returned to their homeland but had not been paid back wages. The Committee called on the administering power to revive, develop and promote the language and culture of the Chamorro people, who constituted some 55.5 per cent of the population.

The General Assembly adopted without objection resolution 35/22 on the question of Guam on 11 November. Its Fourth Committee unanimously approved the text-sponsored by Australia, Denmark, Fiji, Japan, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Samoa and Sierra Leone on 6 November.

By a preambular provision, the Assembly considered that the policy of maintaining military bases in non-self-governing territories which inhibited the right of self-determination of peoples was incompatible with relevant United Nations resolutions. By the operative paragraphs it approved the Special Committee's chapter on Guam and reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Guam to self-determination and independence, calling on the administering power to take all necessary steps, taking into account the freely expressed wishes of those people, to expedite the process of decolonization.

The Assembly recalled its relevant resolutions concerning military bases in colonial and non-self-governing territories, recognized that the presence of such bases could constitute a factor impeding implementation of the Declaration, and reaffirmed its strong conviction that their presence in Guam should not prevent the territory's people from exercising their inalienable right to self-determination and independence.

Reaffirming the administering power's responsibility for Guam's economic and social development, the Assembly called on that power: to strengthen and diversify the economy and to work out concrete programmes of assistance and economic development; to work with the territorial Government towards removing constraints limiting growth in various economic areas; to take the necessary action to enable the inhabitants to regain possession of unutilized land held by federal authorities and the military; and to develop and promote the language and culture of the Chamorro people.

The Assembly urged the administering power to continue to safeguard and guarantee the right of the people of Guam to own, dispose of and control the future development of their natural resources, noting that power's 14 May decision to transfer to Guam all mineral rights in submerged lands off the territorial coastline, and requesting it to protect the people's property rights. The Special Committee was asked to continue examining this question, including the possible dispatch of another visiting mission at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering power, and to report to the Assembly in 1981.

Speaking after approval of the text in the Fourth Committee, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, socialist States of Eastern Europe, and Viet Nam said they had joined the consensus because it reaffirmed the right of the people of Guam to self-determination but had reservations on the paragraphs concerning military bases. In their view, those bases impeded the implementation of the Declaration, represented a threat to peace and security, and were inconsistent with the principles of the United Nations Charter.

The United States said that on 14 February its President, Jimmy Carter, had announced a framework for a comprehensive territorial policy and had stated that the peoples of the territories were free to express their aspirations if they wished to modify their current political status. On 31 May, a Guamanian Commission on Self-Determination had been created by Public Law 15-128 to ascertain the desire of the people of Guam regarding their future political relationship with the United States. The President had called on the people of Guam to continue drafting a constitution to replace the federal laws under which their Government functioned. Also, at the request of the Governor of Guam, the United States had decided to sponsor Guam for associate membership in the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific.

New Hebrides

acceded to independence on 30 July 1980 as the Republic of Vanuatu.

Having learned that incidents had occurred on the island of Espiritu Santo in the territory by elements opposed to the majority Government elected on 14 November 1979, the Special Committee met on 10 June 1980 and adopted a resolution, recommended by its Sub-Committee on Small Territories, concerning the New Hebrides. It expressed its deep concern at the recent developments in the territory, requested the administering powers to take all necessary steps, in full consultation and co-operation with and through the elected Government, to restore law and order and bring about reconciliation in the territory, and requested those powers to ensure that the territorial integrity of the New Hebrides was respected and that it acceded to independence in accordance with the agreed timetable.

The Special Committee met again between 5 and 20 August to consider a second report on the New Hebrides by its Sub-Committee on Small Territories. The United Kingdom, one of the former administering powers, participated.

On 20 August, the Committee adopted the Sub-Committee's report and endorsed the conclusions and recommendations therein. Thus, it noted with satisfaction that the New Hebrides had attained independence on 30 July, facilitated by the administering powers. It regretted that continuing incidents on Espiritu Santo, supported by foreign nationals, had not been brought to an end before independence, reaffirmed its full support for the preservation of Vanuatu's unity and territorial integrity and noted strong support for the new Government recently expressed, particularly by the Governments of the South Pacific Forum (Australia, Fiji, Kiribati, New Zealand, Samoa, Solomon Islands, Tuvalu).

Australia, the Ivory Coast, Trinidad and Tobago, and the USSR expressed reservations on the resolution with reference to the Special Committee's competence in the matter in view of the attainment by Vanuatu of independence.

Pitcairn

The General Assembly, by decision 35/411 adopted without vote on 11 November 1980, deferred consideration of Pitcairn until its 1981 session, requesting the Special Committee to keep the situation in the territory under review and report in 1981. The text was orally proposed by the Chairman of the Fourth Committee, which approved it, also without vote, on 7 November.

On 10 June, the Special Committee had adopted without objection the report of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories, approving its draft consensus statement noting the willingness of the administering power- the United Kingdom- to discuss any change of constitutional status with the people of the territory whenever those people so desired. The Committee noted that the gradual decline of the population, as the result of emigration, continued to raise the question of the capacity of the islanders to maintain the essential services of education, medical welfare and the launching of longboats, on which their trade with passing ships depended, although it noted with satisfaction that through philatelic sales an appreciable increase in revenue was expected. The Committee called on the administering power to continue to safeguard their interests.

St. Helena

On 11 November 1980, the General Assembly adopted without objection a consensus statement on the question of St. Helena by which it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of the territory to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on granting independence. Noting the commitment of the United Kingdom as administering power to respect the wishes of those people in advancing towards self-determination and noting the holding of a general election in the island of Tristan da Cunha in May 1979, the Assembly urged that power, in consultation with the people's elected representatives, to continue to ensure the speedy attainment of the Declaration's goals. Reaffirming the responsibility of the administering power for the social and economic development of the territory through continued development assistance programmes, the Assembly also urged the continuation of increased industrial activity, as the result of which the territory's economy had improved.

Finally, the Assembly noted the positive attitude of the administering power concerning visiting missions and requested the Chairman of the Special Committee to continue his consultations in that regard.

This statement was set forth in decision 35/409, adopted on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, which approved the text without objection on 6 November.

The Special Committee on 10 June had approved without objection the draft consensus statement of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories concerning St. Helena on which the Assembly's decision was based.

Tokelau

On 11 November, the General Assembly adopted without objection a consensus statement -decision 35/408- whereby it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Tokelau, administered by New Zealand, to self-determination and independence. It commended the administering power for its efforts to foster an increased awareness of the avenues of constitutional development open to the people of Tokelau through a political education programme. It noted with interest recent measures to delineate the responsibilities of the Tokelau Public Service and the Tokelau political leadership, as well as a decision of the general Fono (Council) to establish a Budget Advisory Committee.

The Assembly noted with satisfaction that the administering power had assured Tokelau of continuing assistance in case its people desired to change their status and noted that power's continuing efforts to promote economic development and its measures to safeguard and guarantee the rights of the people to all their natural resources and benefits derived therefrom. The Assembly also noted that legislation had come into force on 1 April establishing a 200-mile exclusive economic zone for the territory. It expressed its appreciation to United Nations organizations, in particular the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), and to regional organizations for their assistance to Tokelau, and hoped that it would continue. It requested the Special Committee, in co-operation with the administering power, to continue to examine the question of the implementation of the Declaration with respect to Tokelau. The Assembly welcomed an invitation extended to dispatch a second visiting mission to Tokelau, in 1981, and asked the Special Committee to report to it in 1981 on implementation of this consensus statement.

The Special Committee, on 21 August 1980, had approved the report of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories concerning Tokelau and endorsed its conclusions and recommendations, on which the Assembly's consensus statement was based. The Committee noted with appreciation the willingness of the administering power to maintain its close co-operation with the Committee and the United Nations in the exercise of its responsibility towards Tokelau.

The question of Tokelau was discussed in the Assembly's Fourth Committee, where the text of the consensus statement later adopted by the Assembly was approved without objection on 6 November.

During the discussion in the Fourth Committee, New Zealand observed that Tokelau shared many of the characteristics of the remaining non-self-governing territories which were small and had limited resources, and said it was firmly committed to fulfilling its responsibilities towards the territory.

The Ivory Coast welcomed the legislative measures taken by New Zealand to protect Tokelau's marine resources, emphasizing that the problem of small territories was one of survival; achieving independence and parliamentary democracy was of little use if it was not accompanied by the necessary economic support. Fiji noted the socio-economic development programmes that New Zealand was setting up and its invitation to the Special Committee to send a mission to the territory in 1981, which would help to identify the problems facing small and isolated island communities such as Tokelau.

Turks and Caicos Islands

The Special Committee considered the question of the Turks and Caicos Islands at meetings in March, May, August and October 1980. The United Kingdom, which administered the territory, took part in the Committee's work. A mission visited the territory from 16 to 26 April at the United Kingdom's invitation, and the Committee took note of its report.

The mission, composed of India, the Ivory Coast and Venezuela (Chairman), reported that the main concern of the population at public meetings was to give its views to the mission on the question of independence. The majority view was that independence was not desirable at the current stage, mainly for economic and social reasons: lack of infrastructure (deep-water harbour, airports and roads), few viable industries or exports, lack of doctors and engineers, public health problems and inadequate education. The mission recommended that the political education of the population be intensified, that efforts be made to safeguard the political evolution of the islands from external influences, and that the United Kingdom grant the territorial Government constitutional changes towards greater self-government.

Concerning the economic situation, the mission recommended that the administering power establish without delay an infrastructure on which a viable economy could be built, that the local Government play a key role in selecting and implementing all development projects and in allocating financial resources, that the administering power arrange for bilateral and multi-lateral development aid and consider giving "untied" aid so that the territory could buy on the open market, and that it should encourage the revival of agriculture and traditional industries.

Finding that the lack of an adequate infrastructure was impeding social and civic development, the mission recommended that the first priority of the administering power should be to make electricity and water easily available to all the islands and improve the communications system. Health services in the outlying islands needed immediate improvement, more staff and better facilities. The education system required a change in emphasis to vocational training and an increase in scholarships for young people for higher education. These steps should be taken simultaneously with measures to improve the economy, so that both jobs and trained manpower would be available in the future.

On 24 October, the Special Committee approved the text of a draft resolution which it recommended for the consideration of the General Assembly.

During the debate in the Assembly's Fourth Committee, the United Kingdom said it would not impose constitutional changes against the expressed will of the people of a dependent territory; the question of independence was not necessarily synonymous with self-determination, to which the United Kingdom was committed. It invited the Special Committee to send a mission to observe general elections due to take place in the Turks and Caicos Islands on 4 November.

In India's view, decolonization in the Turks and Caicos Islands should proceed strictly in accordance with the wishes of its people. India had participated in the April mission to that territory and had found that the people wished to move in stages to independence, with more time and more infrastructural aid. The administering power's view that increased assistance could be provided only if a firm date was set for independence appeared contrary to the wishes of the people, India said. The forthcoming elections would be an important means of ascertaining their wishes, which should be fully taken into account before a final decision was made.

The Special Committee's recommended text was considered in the Fourth Committee, where an amendment, introduced by Australia, was adopted by a recorded vote of 70 to 40, with 17 abstentions. The amendment related to an operative paragraph recognizing that the presence of military bases and other installations constituted an impediment to the implementation of the Declaration; Australia proposed the formulation it said was normally employed with regard to the small territories- that their presence "could constitute" an impediment. Denmark, France, the Ivory Coast, Sri Lanka and the United Kingdom supported the amendment, while Bulgaria, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, the USSR and Viet Nam opposed any change that would tend to modify the Assembly's stand on the presence of military bases in non-self-governing territories. Reservations to the paragraph as amended were expressed by Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and the USSR. India, too, said it had always opposed the establishment of military bases as an impediment to the Declaration's implementation.

On 7 November, the Fourth Committee approved the text, as amended, without vote and the Assembly adopted it on 11 November without objection as resolution 35/25.

By its provisions, the Assembly approved the chapter of the Special Committee's report regarding the Turks and Caicos Islands, took note of the report of the visiting mission and commended for appropriate action by the United Kingdom and the territory's Government its conclusions and recommendations. It expressed appreciation for the mission's constructive work and for the close co-operation and assistance given to it by all concerned. It welcomed the United Kingdom's invitation to send a visiting mission to observe general elections in the territory on 4 November. The Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people to self-determination and independence, reiterating the view that special geographical and population factors should in no way delay speedy implementation of the Declaration in the territory.

Recognizing that the presence of military bases could constitute an impediment to the implementation of the Declaration, the Assembly reaffirmed its conviction that such presence should not prevent the peoples of colonial and dependent territories from exercising their right to self-determination and independence. The Assembly called on the administering power to take the necessary measures to promote the islands' economic development, urged it to continue to intensify and expand its aid programme so as to accelerate the development of economic and social infrastructure, and asked it to continue enlisting the assistance of United Nations organizations and regional and international bodies in strengthening, developing and diversifying the territory's economy. Finally, it requested the Special Committee to continue examining the question in light of the findings of the missions and to report to the Assembly in 1981.

India, the Ivory Coast (Chairman) and Yugoslavia were appointed by the Special Committee Chairman to observe the 4 November elections. They visited the islands from 31 October to 7 November, holding consultations with territorial officials and visiting all polling stations. In spite of some shortcomings it noted (a lack of uniformity in the conduct of balloting from one polling station to another and doubts about the untraceability of the ballots to the voters who cast them), the mission was of the view that the elections were conducted smoothly, peacefully, free of violence or pressure, and in a free and fair manner within the framework of existing electoral provisions. It concluded that the results expressed the true wishes of the territory's people.

The mission was to submit its report to the Special Committee in 1981.

United States Virgin Islands

On 20 August 1980, the Special Committee adopted without objection the report of its Subcommittee on Small Territories on the United States Virgin Islands endorsing its conclusions and recommendations. The Committee heard Geraldo Guirty, a delegate to the Fourth Constitutional Convention of the United States Virgin Islands, which on 31 July had adopted a draft constitution for the territory. The Special Committee noted, by its decision concerning the islands, the continued participation of the United States in the Committee's discussion of the territory and its willingness to receive missions in the territories under its administration. The Committee also took note of the recent political and constitutional developments in the United States Virgin Islands. Reaffirming the responsibility of the United States for full, unconditional implementation of the Declaration, and its obligation, in consultation with the territorial Government, to take all necessary measures to enable the people of the territory to exercise fully their right to self-determination, the Committee welcomed that power's assurances that it would continue to respect the freely expressed wishes of the people with regard to their future.

The Committee urged that power, in cooperation with the territorial Government, to guarantee the right of the people to own and dispose of their natural resources and took note of its decision to transfer to its territories all mineral rights and submerged lands off their coastlines. It urged that all necessary measures for the development of a viable and stable economy be taken and took note of those taken to expand the manufacturing sector and revitalize the agricultural sector.

By resolution 35/24 adopted without objection on 11 November, the General Assembly approved the chapter relating to the United States Virgin Islands in the report of the Special Committee, reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of the territory to self-determination and independence, requested the United States to continue taking all necessary measures, in consultation with the territory's freely elected representatives, to enable the people to exercise fully that right, took note of the approval on 31 July of a draft constitution for the territory, and requested that measures be taken to preserve the identity and cultural heritage of the people.

The Assembly urged the administering power, together with the local authorities, to safeguard the inalienable right of the people of the territory to the enjoyment of their natural resources, and to guarantee their right to own and control those resources and their future development. It noted the decision to transfer to the local administration all mineral rights in the submerged lands off the territorial coastline. The Assembly also reaffirmed the responsibility of the United States for the territory's economic and social development, and asked it to continue enlisting the assistance of the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations.

Resolution 35/24 was adopted by the Assembly on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, which had approved the text unanimously on 6 November. The sponsors were Australia, the Bahamas, Denmark, Fiji, Haiti, Japan, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sierra Leone, and Trinidad and Tobago.

In the Fourth Committee, the United States announced that the draft constitution for local self-government approved by the Constitutional Convention had been accepted by the Vice-President of the United States on behalf of the President on 26 August. After review by the United States Congress and approval or modification, it would be submitted to a referendum of the people of the territory for acceptance or rejection.

Western Sahara

The Special Committee considered the question of Western Sahara on 14 August 1980 when it heard a statement by Madjid Abdallah, a representative of the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (Frente POLISARIO).

At the same meeting, the Committee decided without objection to transmit to the General Assembly all available information on the question in order to facilitate consideration of the item and to consider the question in 1981, subject to any directives from the Assembly.

Reporting to the Assembly on 10 October, the Secretary-General said that the Executive Secretary of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) had informed him on 30 September that the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government, by a decision adopted at its seventeenth ordinary session (Freetown, Sierra Leone, 1-4 July), had agreed that its Ad Hoc Committee of Heads of State on Western Sahara should continue its work towards reconciling the parties to the conflict in the territory and seeking a peaceful and lasting solution, and welcomed Morocco's willingness to engage in discussions with all interested parties and to participate fully in that Committee's work.

On the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the Assembly, on 11 November, by 88 votes to 8, with 43 abstentions, adopted resolution 35/19. It thereby reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Western Sahara to self-determination and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle to ensure that right. It deeply deplored the fact that its 1979 resolution<sup>17</sup> which set forth the means for a just political solution of the question had not been implemented and declared again its concern at the aggravation of the situation deriving from Morocco's occupation of Western Sahara, appealing to Morocco to join the peace process and end that occupation. The Assembly also urged Morocco and POLISARIO, representative of the people of Western Sahara, to enter into direct negotiations.

Taking note of the July decision on Western Sahara by OAU's Assembly of Heads of State and Government and the conclusions of OAU's Ad Hoc Committee-which had met from 9 to 12 September- the Assembly welcomed those efforts, as well as the availability of the parties concerned, to promote a just solution to the question and reaffirmed the determination of the United Nations to co-operate fully with OAU in this regard.

The Assembly requested the Special Committee to continue to consider the situation as a matter of priority and requested the OAU Secretary-General to keep the United Nations Secretary-General informed of progress. It invited the latter official to submit a report on the question to the Assembly in 1981.

The Fourth Committee, on 30 October, had approved the text of the resolution-sponsored and revised by 42 powers (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) -by a recorded vote of 88 to 6, with 44 abstentions.

A second draft resolution, sponsored by nine powers- the Comoros, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, Guinea, Morocco, Oman, Saudi Arabia, Senegal and Zaire-was rejected by the Fourth Committee on 31 October by a recorded vote of 40 in favour to 41 against, with 44 abstentions.

By this draft, the Assembly would have: taken note with satisfaction of the OAU decision to request its Ad Hoc Committee to continue its work with a view to reconciling the parties involved and seeking a peaceful and lasting solution to the question; welcomed the participation of all interested and concerned parties, and of the organizations originating in Western Sahara, in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee; welcomed the peace process initiated by that Committee at its September session; appealed to all States to refrain from any action that might impede the peace process and reconciliation efforts of the Committee; expressed its confidence in that Committee; requested that the OAU Secretary-General keep the United Nations Secretary-General informed of OAU's results on the subject; and invited a report in 1981.

In explanation of vote, El Salvador, Guatemala, Morocco, Somalia and Uruguay indicated that they had voted for the nine-power draft because the question of Western Sahara should be solved peacefully within OAU.

Argentina, Bangladesh, Costa Rica, Honduras, Liberia, Malaysia, Pakistan and the Sudan stated that they voted for both texts, which they felt were not mutually exclusive.

Norway, Portugal and Tunisia said they had abstained on both drafts so as not to prejudice the process envisaged by OAU.

Angola, Australia, Cuba, Finland, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Mali, Saint Lucia, Sri Lanka and Suriname said they could not support the nine-power draft because there was no reference to decolonization or the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara.

Guinea, Morocco, Senegal and Zaire opposed the 42- power text because they believed it would thwart OAU efforts. Senegal added that the United Nations should, at this stage, express appreciation to OAU and encourage it to continue its mediation and conciliation efforts. Senegal also did not approve of the preferential treatment being given to POLISARIO. Morocco felt that any resolution of this nature would be null and void and would not serve the interests of reconciliation and peace. Liberia abstained in the vote in the plenary Assembly; it believed that United Nations and OAU actions were complementary but that OAU was the best forum in which to achieve the positive resolution of the conflict and it would take no action that might prejudice the work of the OAU Ad Hoc Committee.

Sweden and Togo said they supported the 42- power text because it advocated the principle of self-determination and the application of United Nations and OAU resolutions.

Romania observed that it had not participated in the vote because agreement on a single resolution had not been possible.

Ecuador said it had abstained from voting on the nine-power draft; cases of decolonization need not necessarily be referred to regional organizations.

The United States said it supported the nine-power text because Morocco had indicated a willingness to have OAU determine the will of the Saharan people; it could not support the 42- power text because it prejudged the outcome of the negotiation process.

During its consideration of the item, the Fourth Committee heard 11 petitioners: Bohoy Sidi Ahmed of the MOREHOB (Mouvement Révolutionnaire des Hommes Bleus) liberation movement; Zarouali Brika and Biadillah Mohamed Cheikh of the Front de liberation du Sahara; Haj Khatri Ould Sidi Said El Joumani, President of the Sahrawi Assembly; Khalli Hanna Ould Errachid of the Parti de l'Union nationale sahraoui; Habbouha Habib, President of the Association of Former Members of the Moroccan Liberation Army in the Saharan Provinces; Mohamed Taki Allah Maalainine, on behalf of the deputies of the Saharan provinces of Morocco; Brahim Mojtar of POLISARIO; Ahmed Rachid of the Mouvement des originaires de la Sakiat el-Hamra et du Río de Oro; Douihi Mohamed Rachid of the Front de liberation et de l'unité; and Leili Mohamed Salem, a Moroccan citizen.

During the debate in the Fourth Committee, Algeria said that the activities of the United Nations and OAU in seeking ways of securing a settlement were a shared responsibility and mutually reinforcing. Their competence should not be questioned. The OAU Ad Hoc Committee had formulated a process by which the people of Western Sahara could freely determine their future. Algeria called on Morocco and POLISARIO to come to the negotiating table and comply with OAU's recommendations.

Morocco said that after Spain's withdrawal from the territory in 1975 Morocco had consulted the Jema'a (National Assembly) and taken appropriate steps to integrate the Saharan provinces within its territory. The people of Western Sahara had thus had an opportunity to participate in the democratic life of the country. Morocco had participated in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee, believing that chances for arriving at results were excellent and that no attempt should be made to intervene in the process begun by OAU, which should be allowed as much latitude as possible to exercise its responsibilities. Morocco could support the Ad Hoc Committee's call for a cease-fire since it had not fired first but it questioned whether armed bands would cease crossing the border from Algeria. In addition, the Sahara was open to inspection if OAU wished to satisfy itself as to the freedom and authenticity of the Saharan people's choice.

Among the other Member States which took part in the debate- and the points they made- were the following.

Burundi, Cape Verde, Chad, Egypt, Guyana, Kenya, Mali, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal,

Viet Nam and Zaire welcomed OAU efforts to bring about peace in the area. Ghana and Nigeria agreed that the United Nations and OAU must play complementary roles in the search for a solution. Barbados, Benin, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, India, Jamaica, Kenya and Nicaragua appealed to Morocco to comply with United Nations and OAU resolutions, while Burundi, the Congo, Democratic Yemen, Haiti, Madagascar, and Trinidad and Tobago called on the United Nations to take measures which would encourage initiatives aimed at resolving the question.

Ghana and Guyana welcomed Morocco's willingness to engage in discussions with concerned parties.

Cuba, Iran and Rwanda expressed solidarity with and support for the Saharan people. Mexico supported their right to self-determination. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya called for an end to the genocide of the people of Western Sahara, and Angola called for intensified support for Saharans from third world countries.

Mozambique, for its part, said Morocco was attempting to persuade the United Nations that the conflict was between Morocco and its neighbours.

Other territories

In 1980, the General Assembly and its Special Committee also considered the situation in the following territories: Antigua, Bermuda, British Virgin Islands, Cayman Islands, Montserrat, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla.

The Committee referred to its Sub-Committee on Small Territories the questions of Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands and Montserrat for consideration and report.

On 14 August, the Committee decided without objection, following a statement by its Chairman, to defer consideration of Antigua and St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla to its 1981 session. On 11 November, by decision 35/413 adopted without vote, the Assembly did the same. The Assembly's decision, orally proposed by the Fourth Committee Chairman, was approved by that Committee without vote on 7 November.

In October, the Assembly received a report on assistance rendered to Antigua and St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla.

Also on 11 November, the Assembly adopted resolution 35/21 concerning the territories of Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands and Montserrat (see subsection below).

Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands.

CONSIDERATION BY THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The Special Committee adopted without objection the reports of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories concerning Bermuda (6 August), the British Virgin Islands and the Cayman Islands (10 June) and Montserrat (5 August) and endorsed its conclusions and recommendations.

The Committee thus reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of those territories to self-determination and independence, reiterating the view that such factors as size, geographical location, population and limited natural resources should not delay speedy implementation of the process of self-determination. It expressed its appreciation for the participation of the administering power- the United Kingdom -in its work and took note of the statement of that power that it would respect the wishes of the people of the territories in determining their future constitutional status. It urged the United Kingdom to expedite the process of decolonization, to strengthen and diversify the economies and, in co-operation with the territorial authorities, to safeguard the rights of the peoples to own and dispose of their natural resources and establish and maintain control of their future development. Mindful that visiting missions had proved to be an effective means of ascertaining the situation in territories visited, the Committee called on the administering power to consider receiving further missions at appropriate times.

Concerning Bermuda, the Committee took note of the holding in 1979 of a Constitutional Conference and the issuance of a white paper on independence, presented to the House of Assembly in November 1979. It welcomed changes to be made in the electoral system so that it more accurately reflected the wishes of the majority of the people, and expressed the hope that all necessary measures would be taken to foster national unity and identity.

The Committee recalled relevant Assembly resolutions concerning military bases in colonial and non-self-governing territories, recognizing that these could constitute a factor impeding implementation of the Declaration, and reaffirmed its conviction that the presence of military bases in Bermuda should not prevent its people from exercising their inalienable right to self-determination and independence. Noting that the economy continued to depend heavily on tourism and international company business, the Committee strongly urged that every effort be made to diversify it, especially to promote agriculture and fisheries. It also urged the administering power, in consultation with the territorial Government, to continue expediting the process of "bermudianization."

Concerning the British Virgin Islands, and underscoring the administering power's responsibility for the economic and social development of its dependent territories, the Committee urged that power to continue to strengthen and diversify the economy of the islands, expressing the hope that the signing of an agreement for oil exploration in the territorial waters would be a positive step in that direction. The Committee also urged United Nations bodies and regional institutions to pay special attention to the development needs of the territory. Noting the need to import foreign workers, the Committee urged the administering power to intensify its efforts to train local people in skills needed for development and to keep the Committee informed of its progress.

With regard to the Cayman Islands, the Committee reiterated its concern at the dependence of the local economy on two vulnerable industries: international finance and tourism. It urged the administering power to increase its efforts to assist the territory in diversification, encouraging in particular further agricultural and industrial development so as to reduce dependence on imports. It urged United Nations organizations and regional institutions to continue paying attention to the development needs of the Cayman Islands and urged the administering power to intensify its efforts to train Caymanians for specific positions in all fields of activity and to keep the Committee informed of its progress.

Concerning Montserrat, the Committee took note of recent statements by the Chief Minister that the question of independence would be actively considered during his term of office; the Committee therefore called on the administering power to take all necessary steps in accordance with the wishes of the people to expedite decolonization. It also urged that power to strengthen the economy of the territory through diversification, particularly in agriculture and livestock, tourism and industry, noting the objectives of the 1979-1983 Agricultural Sectoral Development Plan incorporating proposals for land use and agricultural development, and urging intensification of the development of the infrastructure of the economy.

The Committee noted with satisfaction the financial and technical assistance provided to Montserrat by the administering power, regional and international bodies and Governments, urging them and United Nations organizations to continue giving special attention to its development needs.

CONSIDERATION BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

On 11 November, the Assembly adopted without objection resolution 35/21 concerning Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands and Montserrat.

By this resolution, the Assembly approved the chapters of the report of the Special Committee on those territories and reaffirmed the inalienable right of their peoples to self-determination and independence and its conviction that questions of size, location and limited resources should not delay implementation of the Declaration in those territories.

The Assembly called on the United Kingdom, in consultation with the elected territorial authorities, to continue to take all necessary steps to ensure the speedy attainment of the goals of the Declaration, to strengthen and diversify further the economies of the territories and to work out concrete programmes of assistance and economic development. It urged the administering power, in co-operation with the peoples' elected representatives, to safeguard the peoples' inalienable right to the enjoyment of their natural resources by guaranteeing their right to own and dispose of them and control their development. It asked also that the administering power pay particular attention to the training of local personnel and continue to enlist the aid of organizations in the United Nations system in all sectors. The Assembly welcomed the positive attitude of the administering power on the question of receiving visiting missions and asked the Special Committee to consider sending such missions as appropriate. Finally, it asked the Committee to continue considering the question and to report to the Assembly in 1981.

Resolution 35/21 was adopted on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, which had approved the text unanimously on 6 November. The sponsors were Australia, Barbados, Denmark, Fiji, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Samoa, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Sweden, and Trinidad and Tobago.

Aid to Antigua and St.Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla

The Secretary-General reported to the Assembly in October on assistance offered to Antigua and to St.Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla. The report, which also dealt with aid to Saint Lucia and to Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, summarized action taken by the United Kingdom, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) to implement a 1979 Assembly resolution<sup>18</sup> emphasizing the urgency of the need for assistance to the peoples of those territories in their efforts to strengthen and develop their national economies.

The report outlined the type and quantity of aid provided for social and economic programmes in the islands. Aid from the United Kingdom was channelled through the Caribbean Development Bank and other regional organizations. Some programmes were financed by agency funds; others were carried out using UNDP funds. Further development aid was given by the OPEC Special Fund through the Caribbean Regional Food Plan and also in collaboration with UNDP and other international organs for technical assistance projects.

On 5 December, by resolution 35/101, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report. (For details of the resolution, see p. 552.)

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Belize,

Having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolutions 3432(XXX) of 8 December 1975, 31/50 of 1 December 1976, 32/32 of 28 November 1977, 33/36 of 13 December 1978 and 34/38 of 21 November 1979,

Having heard the statements of the representatives of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and Guatemala,

Having also heard the statement of the representative of Belize,

Recalling that the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana from 3 to 9 September 1979, reiterated its unconditional support for the Belizean people's inalienable right to self-determination, independence and territorial integrity and condemned all pressure or threats to prevent the full exercise of that right,

Reaffirming the principles established in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, set out in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, in particular that all peoples have the right to self-determination, by virtue of which right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development,

Welcoming the fact that, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 34/38, negotiations have recently taken place between the Government of Guatemala and the Government of the United Kingdom in close consultation with the Government of Belize and that the respective positions of both sides were clarified with a view to continuing the process of negotiations,

Noting with regret, however, that despite their efforts and good faith it has not yet proved possible for the parties concerned to agree upon a settlement of their differences,

Convinced that the differences that exist between the United Kingdom and Guatemala do not in any way derogate from the inalienable right of the people of Belize to self-determination, independence and territorial integrity and that the continuing inability of the parties to resolve such differences should no longer delay the early and secure exercise of that right,

Recognizing the special responsibility of the United Kingdom, as the administering Power, to take immediate steps to enable the people of Belize to exercise freely and without fear their right to the secure and full independence of all their territory,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Belize to self-determination, independence and territorial integrity, and urges all States to render all practical assistance necessary for the secure and early exercise of that right;

2. Declares that Belize should become an independent State before the conclusion of the thirty-sixth session of the General Assembly;

3. Calls upon the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to convene a constitutional conference to prepare for the independence of Belize;

4. Calls upon the parties concerned to respect the principle that the threat or use of force should not be applied to prevent the people of Belize from exercising their inalienable right to self-determination, independence and territorial integrity;

5. Urges the Government of the United Kingdom, acting in close consultation with the Government of Belize, and the Government of Guatemala to continue their efforts to reach agreement without prejudice to the exercise by the people of Belize of their inalienable rights and in furtherance of the peace and stability of the region and, in this connexion, to consult as appropriate with other specially interested States in the region;

6. Calls upon the Government of the United Kingdom, as the responsible administering Power, to continue to ensure the security and territorial integrity of Belize;

7. Requests the relevant organs of the United Nations to take such actions as may be appropriate and as may be requested by the administering Power and the Government of Belize in order to facilitate the attainment of independence by Belize and to guarantee its security and territorial integrity thereafter;

8. Welcomes the declared intention of the Government of Belize to apply for membership in the United Nations upon attainment of independence, in accordance with Article 4 of the Charter of the United Nations;

9. Calls upon Guatemala and independent Belize to work out arrangements for post-independence co-operation on matters of mutual concern;

10. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to remain seized of the question and to assist the people of Belize in the early exercise of their inalienable rights.

Chapter III

Question of Namibia

In 1980, the question of Namibia was again considered by various United Nations bodies. The Security Council remained seized of the question, while the General Assembly, its Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the United Nations Council for Namibia all took decisions on the matter. Related decisions were taken by the Commission on Human Rights and by the Economic and Social Council.

On 21 August, the Special Committee approved a consensus statement strongly condemning South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia and rejecting all manoeuvres by South Africa to legalize the puppet regime it had installed there, including a National Assembly and a Council of Ministers. The Committee recommended that the Security Council consider imposing comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa to secure South Africa's speedy compliance with the Council's decisions.

In its 1980 report to the Assembly, the Council for Namibia said it had continued to act as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence and as a policy-making organ of the United Nations. It had firmly supported the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO), in their struggle for independence, had undertaken six consultation missions to discuss with Governments ways to ensure implementation of United Nations resolutions and had represented Namibia in international meetings. The Council also made recommendations for action to be taken by the Assembly.

The question of Namibia was on the Assembly's agenda at its thirty-fifth (1980) session, which opened in September, when it was decided to discuss the item in plenary meetings and hear organizations concerned in the Fourth Committee. In early November, that Committee heard a number of petitioners.

On 17 December, the Assembly suspended the session, deciding to reconvene on 15 January 1981 to consider four agenda items, including the question of Namibia. Before adjournment, it appropriated funds to provide for continuing activities related to Namibia.

Action by the thirty-fifth Assembly session on the question of Namibia was completed on 6 March 1981, with the adoption of 10 resolutions, 35/227 A-J. Details of this action will be described in the 1981 edition of the Yearbook of the United Nations.

Consideration by the Special Committee

The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples considered the question of Namibia at meetings held in New York between 7 and 21 August 1980.

In conformity with Assembly resolutions and in accordance with established practice, the Special Committee invited SWAPO, the national liberation movement of Namibia, to participate in an observer capacity in its consideration of the question and heard a statement by SWAPO'S Permanent Observer to the United Nations, Theo-Ben Gurirab. The President of the United Nations Council for Namibia also participated in the Committee's work.

On 21 August, the Committee adopted by consensus the text of a statement by which it called the attention of the international community to the extremely serious situation in the territory as a result of South Africa's continuing manoeuvres to perpetuate its illegal domination and impose a puppet regime. The Committee reaffirmed that Namibia was the direct responsibility of the United Nations until genuine self-determination and independence were achieved and strongly condemned South Africa for its continued illegal occupation of Namibia and its brutal repression of the Namibian people, as well as its efforts to destroy the national unity and territorial integrity of the territory.

The Committee rejected and denounced all manoeuvres by South Africa to legalize its own Turnhalle puppet regime in Namibia, including the creation of a so-called National Assembly, a Council of Ministers and a South West Africa/Namibia Army, and declared those acts null and void. It called on all States to withhold any recognition from any so-called representatives installed or organs established as a result of those manœuvres and not to co-operate with any puppet regime the South African administration might impose.

The Committee reiterated that the only political solution for Namibia should be one based on the termination of South Africa's illegal occupation and the withdrawal of its armed forces and on the free exercise by the Namibian people of their right to self-determination and independence in a united Namibia. To that end, it reaffirmed the need to hold free elections under United Nations supervision and control in the whole of Namibia as one political entity, in accordance with Security Council resolution 385(1976).<sup>2</sup> The Committee commended SWAPO for its expressed readiness to participate in free and fair elections and reaffirmed its continuing support for the liberation movement and the people of Namibia.

The Committee demanded that South Africa release all Namibian political prisoners, including those imprisoned or detained under the so-called internal security laws, and ensure that all Namibians in exile for political reasons might return to their country without risk of arrest or loss of life. It also reaffirmed that SWAPO was the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people, appealing to all Member States to grant all necessary support and assistance to that organization.

The Committee condemned South Africa for its massive repression of the Namibian people and SWAPO with the intention of establishing an atmosphere of intimidation and terror and thereby perpetuating the apartheid system, its persistent efforts to destroy SWAPO, its military build-up in Namibia, its recruitment and training of Namibians for tribal armies and its use of Namibian territory for acts of aggression against independent African States. It condemned the continued military and nuclear collaboration between South Africa and certain Western States; any such collaboration was a violation of Security Council resolution 418(1977) imposing a military embargo against South Africa<sup>3</sup> and a threat to international peace and security.

The Committee condemned South Africa for its illegal extension of the territorial sea and condemned South African and other foreign economic interests that continued to exploit and plunder the territory's human and natural resources. It demanded that such exploitation cease and that States whose transnational corporations continued to operate in Namibia withdraw all investments from the territory and end co-operation with South Africa.

Given South Africa's increasing resort to force, its refusal to comply with the terms of resolution 385(1976) and its repeated acts of aggression against neighbouring African States, the Committee recommended that the Security Council urgently convene to consider imposing comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations' with a view to securing South Africa's speedy compliance with the Council's decisions.

The Committee paid tribute, to the front-line States (Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia) for their commitment to the cause of Namibian independence, reaffirmed its support for the activities of the Council for Namibia, including its Declaration and Programme of Action on Namibia adopted on 1 June at Algiers, Algeria (see p. 1110), and urgently called on all States to give generous support to all assistance programmes organized by the Council.

The Committee again asked the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts, through all available media, to mobilize world public opinion against South Africa's policies towards Namibia.

The Committee Chairman transmitted the text of the consensus statement to the Security Council by a letter of 28 August.

Reservations concerning elements of the text were expressed by Australia and Denmark. Australia reserved its position on references to the Namibian people's struggle "by all means at their disposal," to Pretoria's manœuvres aimed at proclaiming a unilateral declaration of independence in Namibia, which it felt prejudged South Africa's intentions, to a phrase commending SWAPO for "the spirit of accommodation and flexibility so abundantly demonstrated" throughout negotiations, to SWAPO as the sole and authentic representative of the people of Namibia, to military collaboration being a threat to international peace and security, which it considered outside the Committee's competence, and to the Committee's support of the Algiers Declaration. Denmark said it supported the overall thrust of the statement but not every part.

In a statement to the Special Committee, the representative of Zambia, President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, said that developments in Namibia during the year, including the persecution of SWAPO and its supporters, the influx of South African troops and their acts of armed aggression against independent African States, and the organization of tribal armies, continued to reflect the oppressive character of South Africa's domination of the territory and constituted an increasing threat to international peace and security. He recalled that in resolution 385(1976), the Security Council had established the conditions for a peaceful transition to independence on the basis of free elections under United Nations supervision. Subsequently, five Western powers-Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States-had taken the initiative of establishing talks including South Africa and SWAPO to achieve an acceptable settlement. By resolution 435(1978),<sup>5</sup> the Council had asked the Secretary-General to implement the proposals for a peaceful settlement. South Africa, however, refused to proceed with implementation of the proposals and had been constantly manoeuvring to obtain international recognition for its puppet Government.

To arrive at a compromise which would be acceptable to South Africa and SWAPO, he continued, the late President Agostinho Neto of Angola had suggested the concept of a demilitarized zone along the northern border of Namibia, which had been fully accepted by the front-line States and SWAPO. However, the five Western powers had failed to obtain South Africa's support for the plan. The President of the Council for Namibia said the credibility of the Western powers was thus in question, adding that South Africa had used the extended period of negotiation to consolidate the power of its puppet groups with the intention of promoting an internal settlement excluding SWAPO. The Council for Namibia had urged all Member States not to recognize any internal settlement and had declared that free and fair elections under United Nations supervision and control were an essential prerequisite of any peaceful settlement.

Mr. Gurirab of SWAPO said that since May South Africa had waged continuous aggression against the Namibian people and against Angola under the pretext of a search-and-destroy operation against SWAPO. Despite South Africa's claims to have destroyed SWAPO, it was intact and was even intensifying the military struggle, continuing to carry out mass mobilization both inside the country and abroad, with the full support of the Namibian people. As long as South Africa was present in Namibia, SWAPO would continue the struggle.

During the debate, the majority of speakers expressed the view that, in spite of continuing United Nations efforts to reach a negotiated settlement on the basis of the plan embodied in Security Council resolution 435(1978), South Africa was determined to maintain its illegal control of the territory and impose an internal settlement. This was shown by its massive military build-up, its continuing repression of the Namibian people and efforts to destroy SWAPO, as well as increasing acts of aggression against Angola and Zambia and the creation of an administrative apparatus, comprising a so-called National Assembly and a Council of Ministers, under the control of puppet parties.

Several States, including Australia, Chile and the Ivory Coast, continued to support the negotiation process as the only possible means to reach a peaceful solution. They expressed dismay, however, at South Africa's failure to co-operate with the United Nations, indicating bad faith. Other Committee members, including China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, India, Trinidad and Tobago, and Yugoslavia, believed that South Africa was using the settlement talks to gain time to consolidate the power of the puppet administration and that it had no intention of actually proceeding with free and fair elections under United Nations supervision.

Bulgaria, the Congo, Cuba and the USSR charged that South Africa was receiving support from the Western powers, which had initiated the negotiation process in order to protect their own special interests in the territory, particularly their economic investments. Ethiopia said the case of Namibia represented a classic example of the exploitative activities of foreign economic interests. The Congo believed that the Western powers could bring pressure to bear on South Africa to secure its compliance, but had failed to do so.

Cuba, Czechoslovakia, India, and Trinidad and Tobago, among others, believed that the Committee should recommend that the Security Council impose mandatory sanctions against South Africa under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter. The purpose of such action would be to increase the pressure on South Africa to agree to hold free elections and withdraw from the territory. Ethiopia and Trinidad and Tobago also urged that the international community support SWAPO'S military struggle.

China expressed support for the just struggle of the Namibian people against imperialism, colonialism, racism and hegemonism, urged the imposition of Security Council sanctions and demanded South Africa's immediate compliance with United Nations resolutions.

Decisions of the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council

At its February/March 1980 session, the Commission on Human Rights adopted a number of resolutions containing provisions relating to

Namibia. On 15 February, by a resolution on the right of peoples to self-determination and its application to peoples under colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation, the Commission reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination, national independence, territorial integrity, national unity and sovereignty, without external interference (see p. 837).

On 26 February, the Commission adopted a resolution by which it reaffirmed that right and the Namibian people's right to enjoy all the rights recognized in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights," and requested its Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa to continue its inquiries about persons suspected of having been guilty in Namibia of the crime of apartheid or of a serious violation of human rights, and to continue studying policies and practices which violated human rights in Namibia, bringing serious violations to the attention of the Commission's Chairman (see p. 810).

Both the Commission and the Economic and Social Council adopted resolutions on the implementation of the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination. On 26 February, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to consult the Council for Namibia and several other United Nations bodies with a view to determining the modalities for a study on effective measures to prevent transnational corporations and established interests from collaborating with the racist regimes in southern Africa (see p. 797). The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1980/7 of 24 April, recommended that the General Assembly adopt a resolution expressing its satisfaction to the Council for Namibia for its contribution to the implementation of the Programme for the Decade (see p. 798).

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1980/50, by which it asked the United Nations-associated organizations: to do everything possible to render, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the Council for Namibia, increased assistance urgently to the Nationhood Programme for Namibia; to continue taking all necessary measures to withhold any assistance to South Africa until its Government restored the inalienable right to self-determination and independence to the people of Namibia; and to refrain from any action that might imply recognition of, or support for, the illegal occupation of Namibia by the South African regime (see p. 1066).

By resolution 1980/59 of 24 July, the Council, strongly condemning the exploitation of Namibia's natural resources by transnational corporations without the approval of the Council for Namibia: reiterated that the activities of those corporations in that area and their collaboration with the racist minority regime were detrimental to the interests of the oppressed people of Namibia; deplored transnational corporations' and South African manoeuvres to weaken the African trade union movement; urged all transnational corporations to terminate investments in the area and their collaboration with South Africa; called on Governments to take measures in respect of their nationals owning or operating enterprises in the area to end such activities; called on States not to supply oil, oil products or other strategic materials to the South African regime, not to extend loans, investments or technical assistance to corporations registered in Namibia, and not to allow economic and financial interests under their jurisdiction to co-operate with such enterprises; asked all States not to exploit Namibia's natural resources, to deny tariff and other preferences to exports from Namibia as well as inducements or guarantees for investment and trade in the area, and to prohibit royalty or tax payments or transfer of assets or other financial resources to Namibia; and asked the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Transnational Corporations an updated report on the activities of such corporations in Namibia (see p. 668).

Reports and communications

Reports of the Secretary-General and related communications

By a letter of 9 January, the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention, with its consent, to proceed with the detailed technical discussions envisaged in his report of 20 November 1979,<sup>7</sup> which were to follow acceptance by the front-line States, SWAPO and South Africa of the concept of a demilitarized zone; to that end he intended to appoint Lieutenant-General Dewan Prem Chand initially as Commander-designate and later as Commander of the military component of the United Nations Transition Assistance Group (UNTAG).

By a letter of 12 January, the Security Council President informed the Secretary-General that the members of the Council had considered the matter in informal consultations and agreed to his proposal.

On 31 March, the Secretary-General issued a further report concerning the implementation of resolutions 435(1978)<sup>8</sup> and 439(1978)<sup>9</sup> on the question of Namibia. The Secretary-General recalled his two previous reports on the subject, of 26 February and 20 November 1979,<sup>10</sup> described the principal features of the demilitarized zone proposal which had been discussed in high-level consultations at Geneva from 12 to 16 November 1979,<sup>11</sup> and referred to a letter of 5 December 1979 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of South Africa,<sup>12</sup> indicating his Government's acceptance of the concept of a demilitarized zone, provided that agreement was reached in further discussion on a number of points which he had set out.

The Secretary-General reported that the Commander-designate of the military component of UNTAG and senior military and political experts from the Secretariat had visited Angola, Zambia and Botswana between 5 and 18 February 1980 and had held detailed technical discussions with ministers and senior military and civilian personnel on the functioning of the proposed demilitarized zone. The mission had reached agreement with the three Governments on the establishment and functioning of UNTAG liaison offices in their respective capitals. General Prem Chand had also received from SWAPO confirmation of its acceptance of the demilitarized zone.

The mission had visited Namibia from 18 to 29 February and had discussed with senior South African Defence Forces personnel the full range of practical questions concerning operation of the zone. From 4 to 7 March at Cape Town, South Africa, the mission had held discussions with the South African Government on the proposed arrangements. South Africa had reaffirmed its acceptance of the settlement proposal and its decision to co-operate in implementing resolution 435(1978). It had informed the mission that its military authorities would evaluate the feasibility of the United Nations concept in regard to the demilitarized zone, and that it would require some time to review its position in the light of the discussions with the mission and of recent developments in the area.

Subsequently, the mission had had talks with the Governments of Botswana, Angola, Zambia, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Nigeria, and also with the President of SWAPO, the current Chairman of OAU (the President of Liberia) and the Secretary-General of OAU. The front-line States had reaffirmed their position on the demilitarized zone proposal.

In the light of the findings of the mission, the Secretary-General expressed the opinion that UNTAG could, with the co-operation and support of all concerned, fulfil its obligations satisfactorily on the basis of the arrangements discussed.

By a letter of 12 May to the Secretary-General, South Africa transmitted a letter of the same date from its Minister for Foreign Affairs and Information containing South Africa's reactions to the proposals of the United Nations mission. He stated that South Africa had tested and evaluated the feasibility of the demilitarized zone, especially whether it could be a possible substitute for the monitoring of SWAPO troop restrictions to base, and requested further clarification on a number of matters, including: the number of South African bases within the zone; the deployment of UNTAG's military component; the disarmament of SWAPO personnel after the elections; and the status of SWAPO's claim to bases inside the territory. He also deemed it imperative that all participants in the political process be placed on an equal footing and asked the Secretariat to refrain from giving effect to General Assembly recognition of SWAPO as the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people and to elements of Assembly resolutions which singled out SWAPO for preferential treatment, including funds from the United Nations regular budget for SWAPO'S use to promote its aims. The Foreign Minister's letter referred to a telegram of 3 March to the Secretary-General from a representative of the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA), which he attached, demanding to become a party to putting into effect the plan for creation of the zone, calling for a guarantee of freedom of movement, and stating that it would take appropriate measures should the United Nations forces to be established north of Namibia try to intervene in the life of the people under UNITA authority.

In a letter of 20 June to the South African Foreign Minister, the Secretary-General transmitted the clarifications requested. He stated that the front-line States and SWAPO would agree to the South African proposal to retain 20 bases in the Namibian sector of the demilitarized zone for 12 weeks and that Angola and Zambia had reassured him that no SWAPO armed infiltration would take place from their territory after the cease-fire; by their acceptance of the settlement proposal, they had undertaken to ensure that the provisions of the transitional arrangements and the outcome of the election for a Constituent Assembly would be respected. The front-line States had informed the Secretary-General of their desire for a reciprocal undertaking by South Africa that it would also accept and abide by the outcome of free and fair elections held under United Nations supervision and control.

As to SWAPO bases in Namibia, he recalled that SWAPO and the front-line States had decided in 1979 that, upon South Africa's acceptance of the

The Secretary-General stressed his interest in ensuring that UNTAG was fully capable of fulfilling its responsibilities and that UNTAG'S provisional deployment proposals assumed the existence of a cease-fire and the co-operation of all parties concerned. While the United Nations would continue to deal only with the parties envisaged in the settlement proposal and in the demilitarized zone proposal, the Secretary-General reiterated that the principle of impartiality had been and would be consistently followed in the implementation of resolution 435(1978), and that not only the Secretariat but also the South African Government and its officials would be expected to carry out their duties with complete impartiality and without discrimination. He also noted that the implementation of that resolution was undertaken specifically under the authority of the Security Council.

On 29 August, South Africa transmitted to the Secretary-General a letter of the same date from its Foreign Minister, emphasizing that impartiality was the crucial issue for South Africa in the successful implementation of resolution 435(1978) and charging that some of the actions and statements of the Secretary-General, as well as those emanating from other organs of the United Nations, had not been helpful in this respect. In particular, he charged that the United Nations had undermined its credibility with the people of South West Africa by its bias in favour of SWAPO, which was one of several parties contending for power in the territory. The ambiguity of the United Nations position had become the central issue in the thinking of a large section of the people, he said, and something must be done to correct the assumption that UNTAG would be a stalking horse for SWAPO. Regarding other points, South Africa expected that SWAPO would be excluded from the seven bases of Angola and Zambia in the demilitarized zone on their sides of the border and welcomed assurances that those States would accept responsibility for ensuring that SWAPO personnel would peacefully return to Namibia, through designated entry points, after closure of their bases.

By a letter of 19 September to the South African Foreign Minister, the Secretary-General replied that, following consultations, he proposed to send a team of senior United Nations officials to South Africa from 29 September to 4 October to discuss the setting of a time-frame and other modalities for implementation of the United Nations plan. On 22 September, South Africa transmitted to the Secretary-General a letter of the same date from its Foreign Minister, suggesting that the officials visit South Africa from 20 to 27 October. In a reply of 25 September, the Secretary-General agreed to those dates.

On 24 November, the Secretary-General issued a further report concerning implementation of Council resolutions 435(1978) and 439(1978). He reported that a United Nations mission, led by the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Affairs, had had discussions with the South African Government from 20 to 25 October. The mission had emphasized the grave concern of the United Nations membership at the delays in implementing resolution 435(1978) and the primary importance of establishing a time-frame for a cease-fire and the emplacement of UNTAG in Namibia. South Africa had indicated that it saw the need for a time-frame but that it could not be achieved without resolving the remaining issues to which reference had been made in its letter of 29 August; in particular it stressed the question of impartiality and informed the mission that mutual mistrust and lack of confidence affected the setting of a date for implementation. The mission had pointed out that the establishment of trust and confidence was a subjective and imprecise criterion; if used as a pretext for delay, the implementation of resolution 435(1978) would be seriously undermined.

In the light of the findings of the mission and consultations with other concerned parties, the Secretary-General concluded that, to achieve independence for Namibia in 1981, it was necessary that a date for the cease-fire should be set in the early part of 1981. To facilitate agreement and to create the necessary climate of confidence and understanding, he proposed a pre-implementation multiparty meeting, from 7 to 14 January 1981, under his auspices, which the parties concerned in the envisaged election would attend. In the expectation that the problem of confidence could be overcome by the holding of such a meeting and subject to a satisfactory arrangement concerning the composition of UNTAG, the Secretary-General proposed March 1981 to begin implementation of resolution 435(1978).

Reports of consultation missions

In June, July and August 1980, the President (or the Acting President) of the United Nations Council for Namibia transmitted to the Secretary-General the texts of the reports of the Council's six consultation missions to a number of Member States to discuss with their Governments measures to obtain the withdrawal of the illegal South African administration from Namibia.

A mission composed of representatives from India (Chairman), Yugoslavia and Zambia and a representative of SWAPO visited the Federal Republic of Germany, France and the United Kingdom from 21 April to 1 May. All three Governments informed the mission that, within the framework of the efforts of the five Western powers, they had conveyed to South Africa their concern about the delayed implementation of the United Nations plan. They stated that the presence of South Africa in Namibia was illegal or unlawful and that they were trying to achieve genuine independence for Namibia. The Federal Republic of Germany reaffirmed its support for the Council for Namibia as the United Nations Administering Authority for Namibia until independence, while France and the United Kingdom affirmed that they did not recognize the Council in that role but would continue to co-operate with it to achieve mutually shared goals. France and the Federal Republic of Germany said that no solution of the Namibian question could take place without SWAPO's full participation.

With regard to the activities of foreign economic interests in Namibia, the Federal Republic of Germany observed that its policy was based on the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971<sup>13</sup> and was in conformity with Security Council resolutions 283(1970)<sup>14</sup> and 301(1971).<sup>15</sup> France considered that it was acting in the spirit of those resolutions, for the most part, while maintaining that they were not legally binding. The United Kingdom did not regard them as binding nor as imposing any obligation on its Government to prevent economic dealings with South Africa in respect of Namibia.

A Council consultation mission visited New Zealand and Australia from 7 to 15 May; it was composed of representatives from Algeria, Belgium, India, Mexico, Senegal and Turkey (Chairman) and a representative of SWAPO. Both Governments deplored the tactics of South Africa in delaying implementation of the United Nations plan and said they would not recognize the results of an internal settlement since they regarded the presence of South Africa in Namibia as illegal. Australia, a Council member, informed the mission that it held views similar to the Council's with minor exceptions. Although Australia recognized SWAPO's central role in the political situation in Namibia, it did not agree with the designation of SWAPO as the sole and authentic representative of the people of Namibia, did not believe that force was necessarily the correct means to resolve the conflict, and, concerning the question of economic sanctions against South Africa, felt that patience was necessary.

New Zealand also doubted the effectiveness of sanctions, expressed reservations on the use of violence to settle disputes and did not recognize SWAPO as sole representative of the Namibian people; it believed that only through free and fair elections held under United Nations auspices would the wishes of those people be made known.

A consultation mission visited the United States and Canada from 11 to 17 May, composed of representatives from Australia, Bangladesh, Romania, the United Republic of Cameroon, and Yugoslavia (Chairman) and a representative of SWAPO. The mission noted that, while neither Government recognized the Council as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia, they stated that they recognized the authority of the United Nations over Namibia and reaffirmed their full commitment to the United Nations plan laid down by Security Council resolutions. The United States expressed its commitment not to recognize any so-called internal settlement in Namibia, and Canada said it would not recognize any settlement imposed unilaterally by South Africa. Both Governments reaffirmed their acceptance of the June 1971 advisory opinion of the International Court, declared that the acts of South Africa in Namibia were illegal and recognized the important role played by SWAPO.

Another consultation mission—composed of representatives from Bulgaria, Guyana (Chairman), Nigeria, Pakistan and Turkey and a representative of SWAPO—visited Cuba, Panama, Jamaica, Barbados, and Trinidad and Tobago from 26 April to 13 May. All Governments consulted agreed that the time was appropriate for the Council for Namibia and the international community to provide new strategies for the liberation of Namibia. They expressed the view that support for SWAPO was crucial to the victory of the Namibian people and were unanimous in their support for the imposition of sanctions against South Africa to obtain its immediate compliance with United Nations resolutions. All the Commonwealth Caribbean countries visited were in agreement on the important role which the Commonwealth had been playing in international action against apartheid and recalled a decision of Commonwealth heads of Government in 1975 to welcome Namibia to Commonwealth membership, if that were the wish of its people.

A further consultation mission visited Ecuador, Mexico and Guyana from 14 to 24 April and from 17 to 20 May. It was composed of representatives from Algeria (Chairman), Burundi, Indonesia, Liberia and Poland and a representative of SWAPO. The three Governments reaffirmed their condemnation of the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa and their support for the Council as the sole legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence, emphasized the need to strengthen international community support for the Namibian people under SWAPO'S leadership, called for the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of South Africa, and expressed grave concern about the continued exploitation of the natural resources of Namibia by South Africa and other countries. Guyana said South Africa's continuing defiance of General Assembly and Security Council resolutions on Namibia warranted action under Chapter VII of the Charter and called for the imposition of mandatory sanctions, including an oil embargo.

A final 1980 Council consultation mission composed of representatives from Cyprus, the United Republic of Cameroon (Chairman) and Zambia and a representative of SWAPO-visited the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Kuwait and Iraq from 2 to 11 June. Those Governments affirmed their conviction that the lack of progress in the negotiations on the implementation of Security Council resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978) was the result of dilatory manœuvres by South Africa, reaffirmed their commitment to provide moral and material assistance to SWAPO, denounced South Africa's unilateral actions as attempts to impose its own solution on the Namibian people, and expressed deep concern at its military build-up in Namibia, use of Namibian territory for assisting rebel groups in neighbouring countries and repeated acts of aggression against Angola and Zambia. All three Governments called on the Security Council to impose comprehensive mandatory economic sanctions, including an oil embargo, against South Africa, expressed the view that the Security Council should take measures to ensure the termination of nuclear collaboration by certain Western countries and Israel with South Africa, and denounced the continuous supply of oil to South Africa by certain multinational corporations in violation of an embargo imposed by members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Other communications

By letters of 5 and 22 February and 29 July, South Africa transmitted to the Secretary-General letters of the same dates from its Minister for Foreign Affairs in which he charged that SWAPO was preparing to intensify its attacks against Namibia from bases in Angola and Zambia. The letter of 22 February listed 87 border violations from Angola for which South Africa held SWAPO responsible; the 29 July letter charged that SWAPO had attacked the village of Ruacanã.

By a letter of 19 February, Mali, as current Chairman of the African group of States at the United Nations, rejected South Africa's 5 February allegations and called attention to the threats of aggression directed against Zambia and Angola embodied in that letter.

By a letter of 29 May, South Africa transmitted a paper entitled "Islands along the coast of South West Africa/Namibia" in support of South Africa's claim to sovereignty over 12 of those islands; it rejected assertions to the contrary made by the Council for Namibia's missions following visits to Barbados and Guyana.

By a letter of 9 June, the President of the Council for Namibia transmitted the text of the Algiers Declaration and Programme of Action on Namibia adopted by the Council on 1 June (see following section).

By letters of 3 July addressed to the President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General, the Acting President of the Council for Namibia called attention to the establishment by South Africa of a so-called Council of Ministers in Namibia; the second of these letters transmitted the text of a statement he had issued that day denouncing South Africa's installation of that Council as the territory's governing body.

By letters of 19 September and 15 October, the President of the Council for Namibia transmitted, respectively, a statement of 19 September denouncing South Africa's intention to make military service compulsory for all Namibians between the ages of 16 and 14, and the text of a declaration approved at the International Conference in Solidarity with the Struggle of the People of Namibia (Paris, 11-13 September) and adopted by the Council at a meeting on 6 October. By the declaration, the Conference urged the Security Council to meet by 15 October to impose comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa, urged the Council to declare that Walvis Bay and all offshore islands of Namibia were integral parts of the territory, affirmed the authority of the Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority, pledging full co-operation with it in efforts to mobilize world public opinion to secure Namibia's independence, and called on Governments and organizations to support the declaration.

Report of United Nations Council for Namibia

The United Nations Council for Namibia transmitted to the General Assembly at its 1980 session its annual report on developments concerning the territory and on the Council's activities from 26 October 1979 to 31 July 1980. The three-volume report also contained recommendations to the Assembly and a report on the Council's hearings on Namibian uranium, held between 7 and 11 July 1980.

The Council reported that during the period under review it had continued to act both as a policy-making organ of the United Nations and as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence, firmly supporting the people of Namibia and their sole and authentic liberation movement, SWAPO, in their struggle for self-determination, freedom and national independence.

From 28 May to 1 June, in accordance with a 1979 Assembly resolution,<sup>16</sup> the Council held a series of extraordinary plenary meetings at Algiers to appraise the critical situation in Namibia resulting from the illegal occupation of the territory by South Africa and to review United Nations efforts to implement Security Council resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978). On 1 June, the Council adopted the Algiers Declaration and Programme of Action on Namibia in support of self-determination and national independence in Namibia, by which it defined principles vital to Namibia's accession to genuine independence and set forth a programme of action which included a request to the Security Council to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa as provided for under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter.

Under the Programme of Action, the Council: called for intensified efforts to isolate South Africa and for exposure to the widest international scrutiny of the foreign economic and other interests whose collaboration buttressed exploitation of Namibia; urged Member States not to recognize any so-called internal settlement; called for increased support to SWAPO's military, political and diplomatic strategies; decided to promote speedy implementation of its 1974 Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia;<sup>17</sup> called on the international community to intensify assistance to the Namibian people to enable them to exercise their right of self-defence in respect of South Africa; called on the Security Council to declare categorically that Walvis Bay was an integral part of Namibia and was not to be left for negotiation between an independent Namibia and South Africa; decided to take all necessary action to ensure that South Africa's false claims to islands along the coast of Namibia were declared illegal by relevant United Nations organs; recommended that an international conference in support of the struggle of the Namibian people be convened in 1981; called for a campaign to mobilize international opinion against South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia; and decided to use its authority to extend the territorial sea of Namibia and proclaim an exclusive economic zone for Namibia in order to counter actions by South Africa.

The Council's report noted that reservations had been entered by Australia, Belgium, Botswana and Finland on certain elements of the Declaration.

During the year, the Council continued to hold consultations with Governments to further the implementation of United Nations resolutions on Namibia representation of Namibian interests in international organizations and conferences, provision of moral and material assistance to Namibians and dissemination of information. From April to June, it sent consultation missions to Australia, Barbados, Canada, Cuba, Ecuador, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Guyana, Iraq, Jamaica, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, New Zealand, Panama, Trinidad and Tobago, the United Kingdom and the United States to exchange views on these and other questions (see preceding section for summaries of main conclusions of the missions).

During the year under review, the Council participated in meetings of international organizations, specialized agencies and United Nations organs and represented Namibia at meetings of: the Senate of the United Nations Institute for Namibia in September and December 1979 and May 1980, and an Institute' Seminar on the Legal System for Namibia (Lusaka, Zambia, 28-30 July); the Committees on Fisheries and on Food Aid Policies and Programmes of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) in October 1979; the Council and the Conference of FAO in November 1979; and the Third General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) and various meetings of bodies of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) in January and February 1980 as well UNCTAD itself in March.

The Council was also represented at: the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea at both parts of its 1980 sessions; the International Seminar on an Oil Embargo against South Africa (Amsterdam, Netherlands, 14-16 March); the Joint Solidarity Conference on the Struggle of the Peoples of Southern Africa (Bonn, Federal Republic of Germany, 23-28 March); the International Committee against Apartheid, Racism and Colonialism in Southern Africa (Stockholm, Sweden, 11-13 April); the World Health Assembly of the World Health Organization in May; and the Seminar on Political, Economic, Cultural and Other Factors underlying Situations Leading to Racism, including a Survey of the Increase or Decline of Racism and Racial Discrimination (Nairobi, Kenya, 19-30 May). Other meetings attended included the International Labour Conference of the International Labour Organisation (ILO) in June and the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women in July.

As in previous years, the Council continued to co-operate with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Special Committee against Apartheid, and was represented at sessions of various bodies of OAU. Having obtained full membership for Namibia in ILO, FAO, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, UNCTAD, UNIDO and the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, the Council represented it in meetings of those bodies.

The Council was again concerned with the question of foreign economic interests operating in Namibia and the military situation in the territory, and continued to pay special attention to implementation of its 1974 Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia.

In its report, the Council also reviewed the activities of the Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia, noting that the Office had continued to collect and analyse information relating to Namibia, had prepared reviews and the reports of the United Nations Fund for Namibia, had continued to disseminate information about Namibia, particularly through the publication of a weekly newsletter, Namibia in the News, and had served as the co-ordinating authority for the implementation of the Nationhood Programme. The Commissioner had carried out extensive fund-raising activities to ensure the financing of the Institute for Namibia and the implementation of the Nationhood Programme and other programmes. The regional office of the Commissioner at Lusaka had emphasized programmes of assistance for Naminians and was active in co-ordinating aspects of the Nationhood Programme; the regional office at Gaborone, Botswana, had conducted a preliminary survey to assess opportunities for implementing Nationhood Programme projects in that country.

The Council, working closely with the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, had continued its efforts to disseminate information on Namibia so as to mobilize world public opinion in support of Namibian independence.

The Council reported that hearings on Namibian uranium had been held pursuant to a 1979 Assembly resolution<sup>18</sup> with the aim of, inter alia: developing information concerning its exploitation and purchase; identifying the firms and countries involved; assessing the financial and economic deprivation suffered by Namibians as a result of this illegal exploitation; identifying the ultimate destination of Namibian uranium; and exposing and denouncing South Africa's use of Namibian uranium in its development of a nuclear-weapon capability.

On 7 July 1980, the Council held a solemn meeting to open the hearings, which were conducted in open meetings between 7 and 11 July by a panel chaired by Noel G. Sinclair (Guyana) and also composed of 10 other Council members, representatives of SWAPO and the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia, as well as scientific and legal advisers and a secretary. Witnesses invited to give testimony included: experts from United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, other United Nations-related organizations and OAU; representatives of companies engaged in prospecting, exploitation, exportation, transportation or use of Namibian uranium; representatives of other organizations and companies; and individual experts.

Following the hearing of witnesses, the Council concluded that their testimony established the intensive and extensive involvement of some States, particularly Western European States and their corporations, in the extraction, processing, transport and sale of Namibia's uranium. This involvement, apart from depleting the territory's uranium resources, contributed directly to South Africa's illegal presence in the territory, fortified its defiance of the United Nations and contributed directly to its development of nuclear capability.

On the basis of its findings, the Council recommended, among other things, that the Assembly request the Governments of States whose corporations were involved in Namibian uranium, in particular those of Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Switzerland, the United Kingdom and the United States, to take measures to prohibit their State-owned corporations and other corporations under their jurisdiction from all dealings in Namibian uranium and all prospecting activities in Namibia.

On 21 November, the Council approved a number of recommendations of the panel, some in the form of draft resolutions requiring action by the General Assembly (see following section) and others by the Council itself.

The panel recommended that the Council: compile a register of companies operating in Namibia, including their officials, shareholders and associated companies; encourage non-governmental and other organizations to continue tracing the transport routes of Namibian uranium; discuss with the International Atomic Energy Agency the question of tracing the movement of Namibian uranium, particularly in the case of parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;<sup>19</sup> request the European Atomic Energy Community to provide information on the importation into Europe and the destinations of Namibian uranium; seek information from Governments on the import and export of both unrefined and enriched Namibian uranium; warn corporations involved of the implications of their activities; strengthen the campaign to mobilize public opinion in favour of the cause of Namibia by working with non-governmental and other organizations and groups, including trade unions; continue to gather information and engage consultants to carry out research on Namibian uranium; invite organizations and support groups in countries involved in the illegal extraction, processing, transport and sale of Namibian uranium to consult the Council regarding legal action in the courts of their countries; and hold seminars for jurists, trade unions and support groups regarding the implementation of Decree No. 1, particularly with reference to Namibian uranium.

United Nations Fund for Namibia

The 1980 report of the United Nations Council for Namibia to the General Assembly contained the Council's report on the United Nations Fund for Namibia, for which the Council served as trustee.

The Council reported that the Fund continued to serve as the main vehicle through which the Council channelled its assistance. It financed three main programmes: (1) the Institute for Namibia in Lusaka, which provided assistance to Namibians in the form of remedial, technical and vocational training, primary and secondary education, and college and university education in African countries; (2) the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, which provided manpower training for Namibians and conducted sectoral surveys and analyses of the Namibian economy and identified development tasks and policy options for the transitional period; and 3) educational, social and relief assistance to Namibians.

Adding 80 more student graduates to the 66 granted diplomas in management and development studies in 1979, the Institute had graduated 146 students as at January 1981; it had also expanded its training programme to include short-term courses for the upgrading of teachers, secretarial skills, and preparatory English and mathematics.

Under the Nationhood Programme, the Council had approved 46 pre-independence projects costing a total of $9.4 million, approved an assistance project to establish a pilot vocational training centre in Angola expected to become operational in 1981, and provided 150 fellowships as well as group training abroad for about 60 participants.

The Fund was financed by voluntary contributions, the regular budget of the United Nations, and the United Nations Development Programme, whose Governing Council in 1980 established an indicative planning figure of $7.75 million for the period 1982-1986. The Fund's total expenditures for its three programmes in 1980 were $6.8 million, $3.1 million of which was channelled to the Institute, and the balance to the Nationhood Programme ($1.7 million) and educational, social and relief aid ($2 million).

After consideration of the report of its Committee on the United Nations Fund for Namibia, the Council, by a decision of 3 March, allocated $2,170,000 from the Fund to finance the Angolan vocational training centre project.

The Council also recommended for adoption by the General Assembly a draft resolution by which it would allocate $500,000 to the Fund from the United Nations regular budget for 1981, request the Secretary-General and the Council President to intensify appeals for contributions, and decide that Namibians should continue to be eligible for assistance also through the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa (see p. 294) and the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa (see p. 239).

By decision 35/442 of 16 December (see following section), the Assembly appropriated $500,000 for the Fund for 1981.

Consideration by the General Assembly

On 17 December 1980, the General Assembly suspended its thirty-fifth (1980) session until 15 January 1981, when it was to resume its consideration of the question of Namibia. It took this action in adopting decision 35/450, without vote, as announced by its President.

The Assembly had, however, taken earlier decisions related to aspects of the question of Namibia.

On 16 December, the Assembly by decision 35/442 decided that the activities of the United

Nations Council for Namibia and the support extended to the Office of SWAPO in New York, in order to ensure appropriate representation of the people of Namibia, should be maintained during 1981 at the same level as during 1980. It requested and authorized the Secretary-General to make the necessary expenditures for that purpose, subject to additional appropriations that might be considered at the resumed thirty-fifth session in January 1981. It decided to appropriate as a temporary measure an amount of $500,000 for the United Nations Fund for Namibia for 1981.

The text, proposed by Algeria, Burundi, Egypt, Guyana, India, Liberia, Pakistan, Turkey, the United Republic of Cameroon, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zambia, was adopted without vote by the Assembly.

When the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee considered the financial implications of the 12-power draft decision, the United Kingdom requested a recorded vote; the additional appropriation of $519,000 was approved on 10 December by 70 votes to 6, with 12 abstentions.

The United Kingdom, speaking also on behalf of Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United States, said they had voted against the appropriation because of their position of principle with regard to the budget and also because they believed that there was nothing in the decision to justify the need at the current stage for an appropriation for the support of SWAPO's New York Office. The United Kingdom pointed out that the decision explicitly referred to the resumed thirty-fifth session as the time when the Assembly might be required to consider such an appropriation.

At the beginning of its thirty-fifth session, the Assembly had decided, on the recommendation of the General Committee, that the question of Namibia should be considered directly in plenary meetings, on the understanding that hearings from organizations concerned would be held in the Fourth Committee. For its consideration, the Assembly had before it the report of the Special Committee on the implementation of the 1960 Declaration and the report of the Council for Namibia, including 10 draft resolutions recommended by the Council for adoption by the Assembly.

The draft resolutions proposed Assembly action on: the situation in Namibia resulting from its illegal occupation by South Africa; intensification and co-ordination of United Nations action in support of Namibia; the work programme of the Council for Namibia; action by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations with respect to Namibia; support for the United Nations Institute for Namibia; the Nationhood Programme for Namibia; the United Nations Fund for Namibia; dissemination of information on Namibia; a proposed International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence; and the question of Namibian uranium.

On 4 November, the Fourth Committee heard statements on Namibia by the Reverend G. Michael Scott of the International Fellowship of Reconciliation, George M. Houser of the American Committee of Africa, Lennox S. Hinds of the International Association of Democratic Lawyers, Elombé Brath on behalf of the Patrice Lumumba Coalition, Abdul Minty of the British Anti-apartheid Movement, Willis Logan of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the United States, Jerry Herman on behalf of the Quaker Office, William Johnston of the Episcopal Churchmen for South Africa, Wilfrid Grenville-Grey of the International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa, and Edward C. May of the Lutheran World Ministries. On 6 November, statements were made by Roxanne Dunbar Ortiz of the Afro-Asian Peoples' Solidarity Organization, Deborah A. Jackson of the National Conference of Black Lawyers, Margo Picken of Amnesty International, Dwain C. Epps of the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs of the World Council of Churches, and Karen Talbot on behalf of the World Peace Council.

The petitioners called for stronger international pressures on South Africa, including the imposition of sanctions, and stated that the human rights situation in Namibia remained critical. Several of them cited the case of Marcus Kateka, a Namibian farm worker who had been condemned to death on 13 October by the Supreme Court of Windhoek, Namibia, because he had not reported the presence of armed men-allegedly SWAPO guerrilla fighters-on his employer's property; there was reason to think that the death sentence was intended to serve as a deterrent.

Peter Mueshihange, Secretary for Foreign Affairs of SWAPO, who participated as an observer, thanked the petitioners for their support and said that the only correct course of action was for the Security Council to meet as a matter of urgency to impose sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter against the South African regime.

Related General Assembly decisions

At its 1980 regular session, the Assembly adopted a number of resolutions concerning aspects of the question of Namibia.

By resolution 35/28 of 11 November, the Assembly reaffirmed provisions of documents adopted by the 1977 Maputo (Mozambique) International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia,<sup>20</sup> condemned all activities of foreign economic interests operating in Namibia, declaring their collaboration with South Africa to be detrimental to the interests of the people, reiterated that the exploitation and plundering of Namibia's natural resources were illegal and contributed to the maintenance of the occupation regime, strongly condemned South Africa for its continued exploitation and plundering of those resources, and called again on all States to discontinue and refrain from entering into relations with South Africa concerning or acting on behalf of Namibia (for details, see p. 1074).

By resolution 35/29 of the same date,, the Assembly: expressed concern that assistance by United Nations-associated organizations to Namibians and their liberation movement was inadequate; expressed regret that the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund had not fully implemented the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, deploring the fact that they continued to co-operate with South Africa and urging that they formulate programmes beneficial to Namibians; urged organizations of the United Nations system to withhold any assistance and support from South Africa until it restored to the people of Namibia their right to self-determination and independence and to refrain from any action that might imply recognition of the legitimacy of its domination of the territory; urged those which had not done so to grant full membership to the United Nations Council for Namibia; and asked them to give substantial aid to the front-line States to support Namibia and SWAPO in their struggle for freedom and independence (for details, see p. 1068).

On 14 November, the Assembly adopted resolution 35/32 calling on Governments of countries where banks, transnational corporations and other organizations on a list maintained by a Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to stop trading, manufacturing and investing in Namibia, and asking that a revised report on the subject be submitted to the Council for Namibia (for details, see p. 809).

By resolution 35/35 A of the same date, the Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination, national independence, territorial integrity, national unity and sovereignty without external interference and demanded the immediate release of children detained in Namibian prisons (for details, see p. 837).

On 25 November, by resolution 35/40, the Assembly commended the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination for paying greater attention to the question of the elimination of the policy of apartheid in Namibia (for details, see p. 802).

On 10 December, the Assembly by resolution 35/117 called on the Council for Namibia, among other bodies, to continue to associate OAU closely with all its work concerning Africa (for details, see p. 292).

By resolution 35/119 of 11 December, the Assembly, condemning the activities of foreign economic and other interests which impeded implementation of the 1960 Declaration on granting independence, particularly in Namibia, requested all States to withhold all assistance from South Africa until it restored to Namibians their right to self-determination and independence and to take no action that might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the regime's occupation of the territory, urged them to provide assistance to Namibians and asked the Special Committee on implementation of the Declaration to examine compliance with resolutions on Namibia and to enlist world-wide support to achieve the objectives of the Declaration and to implement United Nations resolutions, particularly on Namibia (for details, see p. 1059).

By resolution 35/184 of 15 December, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to organize and implement a programme of educational and other aid for student refugees from Namibia who had taken asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia, and urged generous contributions to these programmes (for details, see p. 238).

In adopting resolution 35/206 N on 16 December, the Assembly urged all United Nations-associated organizations, Governments, international, regional, non-governmental and women's organizations, and anti-apartheid and other groups, to give the highest priority to the question of assistance measures to women in Namibia during the second half (1981-1985) of the United Nations Decade for Women, and appealed to all Governments and organizations to support projects of the national liberation movement and front-line States designed to aid refugee women and children from Namibia (for details, see p. 228).

By resolution 35/206 R of the same date, the Assembly commended the Secretary-General and the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa for their efforts to promote humanitarian and legal aid for victims of discriminatory legislation in Namibia and appealed for direct contributions to the voluntary agencies engaged in helping them (for details, see p. 240).

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

During 1980, the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa continued to provide scholarships to Namibians. During the period from 1 October 1979 to 30 September 1980, the Programme granted 59 new awards (42 of which were financed by the United Nations Fund for Namibia) and extended 156, making a total of 215 scholarship holders studying in 16 countries. Also during the period, 76 awards were completed.

At its 1980 session, the Assembly reviewed the Programme and, by resolution 35/30 of 11 November, recognized that the Programme should be strengthened to enable it to meet the related requirements of the growing outflow of student refugees from South Africa and Namibia and appealed to all States, organizations and individuals to make generous contributions to enable the Programme to continue and expand its operations (for details, see p. 294.)

Appointment of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia

On 17 December, acting on a proposal of the Secretary-General, the Assembly, by decision 35/323 adopted without vote, extended the appointment of Martti Ahtisaari (Finland) as United Nations Commissioner for Namibia for a further one-year term beginning 1 January 1981.

Decision 35/450, by which the General Assembly decided to resume its thirty-fifth session on 15 January 1981 for the sole purpose of considering four agenda items—among them item 27 (Question of Namibia)—as announced by Assembly President, adopted without vote by Assembly on 17 December 1980, meeting 99.

Chapter IV

Situation in Southern Rhodesia

Southern Rhodesia, a territory under the administration of the United Kingdom, gained its independence as the Republic of Zimbabwe on 18

April 1980 and, on 25 August, became a Member State of the United Nations (see p. 460).

Prior to these events, the Security Council met, between 30 January and 2 February, at the request of the African group of Member States at the United Nations, to consider the situation obtaining in the territory since the Lancaster House (London) agreement was reached in December 1979.<sup>1</sup> Concern was expressed that numerous violations were occurring of the terms of the agreement, which had provided for a constitutional settlement and for the transition of the territory to independence under majority rule. Following its deliberation, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 463(1980) on 2 February (the United Kingdom did not participate in the voting), calling on the United Kingdom to ensure full implementation of that agreement, including free and fair elections.

At its session from 4 February to 14 March, the Commission on Human Rights also asked the United Kingdom to guarantee free and fair elections and to implement the agreement strictly and impartially, and demanded that South Africa be prevented from further meddling in Zimbabwe's affairs.

The first general election in Southern Rhodesia under universal suffrage took place from 27 to 29 February.

The Human Rights Commission on 14 March, and the Economic and Social Council on 17 April (decision 1980/112), decided to send congratulatory telegrams on Zimbabwe's accession to independence to the Prime Minister-designate and to the President of Zimbabwe, respectively. The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples did not consider the matter during 1980; however, on 18 April its Chairman also presented to the Prime Minister, Robert G. Mugabe, a congratulatory message.

Several United Nations bodies took action to mobilize international assistance for Zimbabwe's reconstruction. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in February set $5.6 million as the prospective amount of UNDP assistance through 1981. The Commission on Human Settlements in May initiated talks with Zimbabwe to discuss projects and how it could help generate capital to build and improve human settlements. In May/June, the Secretary-General sent a mission to the country to consult with the Government about international assistance requirements. The General Assembly on 5 December (resolution 35/100) endorsed the mission's assessments and recommendations and appealed for aid to carry out the projects and programmes identified in the mission's report, setting up a special account to channel contributions.

Zimbabweans continued to receive scholarships for study abroad under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, as well as under a United Nations programme of assistance to southern African student refugees, some of whom remained in host countries to complete their studies.

A detailed account of deliberations on the above actions, reports and resolutions is given beginning on p. 243.

Chapter V

Other questions relating to non-self -governing territories

Transmission of information

Territories on which information was submitted in 1980

In accordance with Chapter XI, Article 73 e, of the Charter of the United Nations,<sup>1</sup> Member States responsible for the administration of territories whose peoples had not attained full self-government were obligated to send to the Secretary-General each year information on economic, social and educational conditions in those territories, subject to such limitations as security and constitutional considerations might require.

Australia, New Zealand, the United Kingdom and the United States regularly included information on political and constitutional developments in the territories on which they transmitted information. Additional information on such developments in the territories under their administration was also given by those States during meetings of the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

Australia: Cocos (Keeling) Islands

New Zealand: Tokelau

United Kingdom: Belize, Bermuda, British Virgin Islands, Cayman Islands, Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Gibraltar, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Helena, Turks and Caicos Islands

United States: American Samoa, Guam, United States Virgin Islands.

With respect to East Timor, the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly at its regular 1980 session that, on 13 May, he had been informed that the Portuguese Government had nothing to add to the information provided in 1979<sup>2</sup> that the conditions prevailing in that territory had prevented the Government from assuming its responsibilities for the administration of East Timor and that, under such circumstances, the Government was unable to supply any information relating to conditions there.

The Secretary-General also reported that he had received no information concerning Antigua or St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla (the United Kingdom had declared at previous Assembly sessions that those territories, having achieved the status of Associated States, had attained a full measure of self-government) nor concerning Brunei (on 18 September 1972, the United Kingdom had notified him that this territory had attained full internal self-government and, consequently, the transmission of information on Brunei was no longer appropriate).

Also, the Secretary-General had received no information in 1980 concerning Western Sahara. On 26 February 1976, Spain had informed him that the Spanish Government, as of that date, definitively terminated its presence in the territory of the Sahara and considered itself exempt from any international responsibility in connexion with the administration of that territory in view of the cessation of its participation in the temporary administration established for the territory.

The Anglo-French condominium of the New Hebrides, on which France and the United Kingdom formerly reported, attained its independence on 30 July 1980 as Vanuatu. Southern Rhodesia, on which the United Kingdom formerly reported, attained its independence on 18 April as Zimbabwe.

Study of information from administering Members

Since 1964, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples annually studied the information transmitted by administering Members on non-self-governing territories. The General Assembly had requested it to take the information fully into account in examining the situation in each of the territories.<sup>3</sup>

On 5 August 1980, the Special Committee adopted a resolution on this question, provisions of which were subsequently incorporated in Assembly resolution 35/26, adopted on 11 November. By this text, the Assembly reaffirmed that, in the absence of a decision by the Assembly itself that a non-self-governing territory had attained full self-government, the administering power concerned should continue to transmit information under Article 73 e of the Charter in respect of that territory. The Assembly requested the administering powers concerned to transmit or continue to transmit the prescribed information, as well as the fullest possible information on political and constitutional developments. It also requested the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it in 1963.<sup>4</sup>

Resolution 35/26 was adopted, by a recorded vote of 145 to 0, with 3 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, which approved the text on 3 November by a recorded vote of 136 to 0, with 4 abstentions. It was sponsored by 20 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). Japan and Denmark stated that, although they had supported the text, they had reservations on paragraph 2, containing the reaffirmation that, in the absence of an Assembly decision that a territory had attained full self-government, its administering power should continue to transmit information. France and the United Kingdom, which abstained in the vote, said they did not recognize the power of the Assembly or of the Special Committee to decide whether or not a territory had reached full independence.

Offers of study and training facilities

The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly in 1980 that as of 30 September the following 32 United Nations Member States had made available to persons from non-self-governing territories scholarships for secondary, vocational and graduate studies: Austria, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Hungary, India, Iran, Israel, Italy, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malawi, Malta, Mexico, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Sri Lanka, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda,

USSR, United Arab Emirates, United States, Yugoslavia.

On 11 November, after considering the report, the Assembly expressed appreciation to those Member States which had made scholarships available, invited all States to offer study and training facilities to inhabitants of non-self-governing territories, providing travel funds whenever possible, and urged administering powers to publicize and enable students to avail themselves of such offers.

The Assembly's decisions to this effect were embodied in resolution 35/31, adopted, without objection, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee. The Committee approved the text unanimously on 30 October, on the basis of a proposal by 28 nations (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 1970(XVIII) of 16 December 1963, in which it requested the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to study the information transmitted to the Secretary-General under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations and to take such information fully into account in examining the situation with regard to the implementation of the Declaration, Recalling also its resolution 34/33 of 21 November 1979, in which it requested the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it under resolution 1970(XVIII).

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee dealing with the transmittal of information under Article 73 e of the Charter and the action taken by the Committee in respect of that information,

Having also examined the report of the Secretary-General on the item,

Deplored the fact that some Member States having responsibilities for the administration of Non-Self-Governing Territories have ceased to transmit information under Article 73 e of the Charter,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Reaffirms that, in the absence of a decision by the General Assembly itself that a Non-Self-Governing Territory has attained a full measure of self-government in terms of Chapter XI of the Charter, the administering Power concerned should continue to transmit information under Article 73 e of the Charter in respect of that Territory;

3. Requests the administering Powers concerned to transmit, or continue to transmit, to the Secretary-General the information prescribed in Article 73 e of the Charter, as well as the fullest possible information on political and constitutional developments in the Territories concerned, within a maximum period of six months following the expiration of the administrative year in those Territories;

4. Requests the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it under General Assembly resolution 1970(XVIII), in accordance with established procedures, and to report to the Assembly at its thirty-sixth session.

International Court of Justice

Continental shelf (Tunisia/Libyan Arab Jamahiriya)

By 30 May 1980, the time-limit for the filing of Memorials (initial written pleadings) fixed by the International Court of Justice by an Order of 20 February 1979, the Governments of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Tunisia had filed with the Court their Memorials in the dispute concerning the delimitation of the continental shelf between them. The dispute had been referred to the Court under the terms of a Special Agreement drawn up by the parties in 1977 and submitted to the Court in 1978 and 1979.<sup>1</sup>

Having regard to the periods indicated in the Special Agreement, the President of the Court made an Order on 3 June 1980 fixing time-limits for the filing of Counter-Memorials: Tunisia, 1 December 1980, and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, 2 February 1981. The agents of the parties filed the Counter-Memorials within the prescribed time-limits.

United States diplomatic and consular staff in Iran

The International Court of Justice delivered a Judgment on 24 May 1980 in the case of the "United States diplomatic and consular staff in Tehran (United States of America v. Iran)."

The United States had filed an Application on 29 November 1979 instituting proceedings against Iran in respect of the seizure of its embassy in Teheran on 4 November and the holding as hostages of members of its diplomatic and consular staff. It had founded the Court's jurisdiction on, inter alia, Optional Protocols on dispute settlement to the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations and the 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, to which both Iran and the United States were parties. The Court had indicated provisional measures in an Order of 15 December 1979 and had fixed time-limits on 24 December for the filing of written pleadings.<sup>2</sup>

The United States filed its Memorial within the time-limit (15 January 1980). Iran did not file a Counter-Memorial but, in a letter of 16 March, reiterated its view that the Court could not, and should not, deal with the case.

From 18 to 20 March, the Court held three public meetings at which oral arguments were presented on behalf of the United States; Iran was not represented. In its final submissions, the United States requested the Court to adjudge and declare that the Iranian Government had violated its international legal obligations to the United States and must ensure the immediate release of the hostages, afford the United States diplomatic and consular personnel the protection and immunities to which they were entitledincluding immunity from criminal jurisdiction -and provide them with facilities to leave Iran, submit the persons responsible for the crimes committed to the competent Iranian authorities for prosecution or extradite them to the United States, and pay reparation in a sum to be subsequently determined by the Court.

At a public sitting on 24 May, the Court delivered a Judgment by the preambular part of which it found that it possessed jurisdiction under the Optional Protocols to the Vienna Conventions and one other treaty cited by the United States. It noted that its Order of 15 December 1979 had been publicly rejected by Iran and that organs of the Iranian State, having given approval to the acts of seizing the embassy and holding diplomatic and consular staff as hostages, had decided to perpetuate them as means of pressure. Accordingly, the Court found, those acts had been transformed into acts of the Iranian State, which itself had become internationally responsible for them.

Iran, the Court found, had committed multiple breaches of the Vienna Conventions, not only in respect of the situation at the embassy but also with regard to three members of the United States mission detained in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The Court rejected the suggestion that those breaches could be justified in the light of criminal activities alleged to have been carried out in Iran by the United States. Accordingly, the Court found that there was an obligation on the Iranian State to make reparation, the form and amount of which could not yet be determined. The Court also found that although a rescue attempt carried out on 24-25 April was, in the circumstances, an operation likely to undermine respect for the judicial process in international relations, the question of its legality had no effect on the evaluation of Iran's conduct, which had threatened an edifice of law whose maintenance was vital.

The operative part of the Judgment read:

The Court,

1. By thirteen votes to two,

Decides that the Islamic Republic of Iran, by the conduct which the Court has set out in this Judgment, has violated in several respects, and is still violating, obligations owed by it to the United States of America under international conventions in force between the two countries, as well as under long-established rules of general international law;

In favour: President Sir Humphrey Waldock; Vice-President Elias; Judges Forster, Gros, Lachs, Nagendra Singh, Ruda, Mosler, Oda, Ago, El-Erian, Sette Câmara and Baxter.

Against: Judges Morozov and Tarazi.

2. By thirteen votes to two,

Decides that the violations of these obligations engage the responsibility of the Islamic Republic of Iran towards the United States of America under international law;

In favour: President Sir Humphrey Waldock; Vice-President Elias; Judges Forster, Gros, Lachs, Nagendra Singh, Ruda, Mosler, Oda, Ago, El-Erian, Sette Câmara and Baxter.

Against: Judges Morozov and Tarazi.

3. Unanimously,

Decides that the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran must immediately take all steps to redress the situation resulting from the events of 4 November 1979 and what followed from these events, and to that end:

(a) must immediately terminate the unlawful detention of the United States Charge d'affaires and other diplomatic and consular staff and other United States nationals now held hostage in Iran, and must immediately release each and every one and entrust them to the protecting Power (Article 45 of the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations);

(b) must ensure that all the said persons have the necessary means of leaving Iranian territory, including means of transport;

(c) must immediately place in the hands of the protecting Power the premises, property, archives and documents of the United States Embassy in Tehran and of its Consulates in Iran;

4. Unanimously,

Decides that no member of the United States diplomatic or consular staff may be kept in Iran to be subjected to any form of judicial proceedings or to participate in them as a witness;

5. By twelve votes to three,

Decides that the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran is under an obligation to make reparation to the Government of the United States of America for the injury caused to the latter by the events of 4 November 1979 and what followed from these events;

In favour: President Sir Humphrey Waldock; Vice-President Elias; Judges Forster, Gros, Lachs, Nagendra Singh, Ruda, Mosler, Oda, Ago, El-Erian, Sette Câmara and Baxter.

Against: Judges Lachs, Morozov and Tarazi.

6. By fourteen votes to one,

Decides that the form and amount of such reparation, failing agreement between the Parties, shall be settled by the Court, and reserves for this purpose the subsequent procedure in the case.

In favour: President Sir Humphrey Waldock; Vice-President Elias; Judges Forster, Gros, Lachs, Nagendra Singh, Ruda, Mosler, Tarazi, Oda, Ago, El-Erian, Sette Câmara and Baxter.

Against: Judge Morozov.

Judge Lachs appended a separate opinion, and Judges Morozov and Tarazi dissenting opinions.

Interpretation of the Agreement of 25 March 1951 between the World Health Organization and Egypt

On 20 May 1980, the World Health Assembly of the World Health Organization (WHO) requested an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice on the following questions:

1. Are the negotiation and notice provisions of section 37 of the Agreement of 25 March 1951 between the World Health Organization and Egypt applicable in the event that either party to the Agreement wishes to have the regional office transferred from the territory of Egypt?

2. If so, what would be the legal responsibilities of both the World Health Organization and Egypt, with regard to the regional office in Alexandria, during the two-year period between notice and termination of the Agreement?

On 6 June, the President of the Court made an Order fixing 1 September as the time-limit for the submission of written statements by WHO and its member States entitled to appear before the Court. Statements were received from Bolivia, Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Arab Emirates and the United States; oral statements were presented on behalf of Egypt, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, the United Arab Emirates and the United States at public sittings on 21, 22 and 23 October.

On 20 December, the Court rendered in public an advisory opinion in which it found that the true legal question submitted in the request was: "What are the legal principles and rules applicable to the question under what conditions and in accordance with what modalities a transfer of the regional office may be effected?" By 12 votes to 1, it decided to comply with the request for an opinion and, in answer to question 1, detailed the mutual obligations of WHO and Egypt to consult together in good faith, specifying that the party wishing to effect the transfer should give a reasonable period of notice, taking due account of all the practical arrangements needed for an orderly and equitable removal to the new site.

By 11 votes to 2, it answered question 2 with the opinion that during any transitional period the legal responsibilities in question would be to fulfil in good faith the mutual obligations detailed in reply to question 1.

Judges Gros, Lachs, Ruda, Mosler, Oda, Ago, El-Erian and Sette Câmara appended separate opinions, and Judge Morozov a dissenting opinion.

Chapter II

Questions concerning the International Law Commission

The thirty-second annual session of the International Law Commission, held at Geneva from 5 May to 25 July 1980, was mainly devoted to completing the first reading of draft articles on succession of States to State archives; part I of draft articles on State responsibility; and draft articles on treaties concluded between States and international organizations or between international organizations. The Commission adopted provisionally initial draft articles on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses and on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property, began consideration of part II of a draft on State responsibility, and considered the topics of international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law, and the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier.

The General Assembly at its regular 1980 session considered the Commission's report and adopted a resolution approving and making recommendations on its programme of work for 1981.

Report of the International Law Commission

Succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties

On the basis of the eleventh and twelfth reports submitted by the Special Rapporteur, Mohammed Bedjaoui (Algeria), the Commission adopted on first reading four additional articles -C, D, E and F-on State archives, which were appended to the draft on succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties on the understanding that their ultimate place therein should be decided in the light of comments by Governments. They dealt, respectively, with succession of States to State archives in the cases of transfer of part of the territory of a State, uniting of States, separation of part or parts of the territory of a State and dissolution of a State.

State responsibility

The Commission completed the first reading at its 1980 session of a set of articles constituting part I of a draft on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts; part I concerned the origin of international responsibility. On the basis of the eighth (1979) report of the former Special Rapporteur, Roberto Ago (Italy), it provisionally adopted articles 33, 34 and 35, constituting the final provisions of chapter V (the last chapter of part I of the draft) concerning circumstances precluding wrongfulness. Articles 33 and 34 dealt with the circumstances precluding wrongfulness which were still outstanding, namely, state of necessity and self-defence. The Commission added a concluding provision (article 35) reserving questions that might arise in regard to compensation for damage caused by acts the wrongfulness of which was precluded under other articles of chapter V.

The Commission, taking into consideration a preliminary report submitted by the new Special Rapporteur, Willem Riphagen (Netherlands), reviewed a broad range of general and preliminary questions concerning part II of the draft, dealing with the content, forms and degrees of international responsibility.

Treaties concluded between States and international organizations or between international organizations

The Commission completed the first reading of draft articles on treaties concluded between States and international organizations or between international organizations and decided to transmit them to Governments for comments. At the 1980 session, on the basis of the ninth report submitted by the Special Rapporteur, Paul Reuter (France), the Commission provisionally adopted articles 61 to 80, constituting the remainder of part V (articles 61 to 72), part VI (articles 73 to 75) and part VII (articles 76 to 80), and an annex.

Articles 61 to 64, which completed the part V section on termination and suspension of the operation of treaties, dealt with supervening impossibility of performance (article 61), fundamental change of circumstances (article 62), severance of diplomatic or consular relations (article 63) and emergence of a new peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) (article 64). Articles 65 to 68 concerned procedure to be followed with respect to invalidity, termination, withdrawal from or suspension of the operation of a treaty (article 65); procedures for judicial settlement, arbitration and conciliation (article 66); instruments for declaring invalid, terminating, withdrawing from or suspending the operation of a treaty (article 67) and revocation of notifications and instruments provided for in articles 65 and 67 (article 68). Articles 69 to 72 dealt with the consequences of: the invalidity of a treaty (article 69); the termination of a treaty (article 70); the invalidity of a treaty which conflicted with a peremptory norm of general international law (article 71); and the suspension of the operation of a treaty (article 72). Articles 73 to 75 concerned miscellaneous provisions, including: cases of succession of States, responsibility of a State or of an international organization, outbreak of hostilities, termination of the existence of an organization and termination of participation by a State in the membership of an organization (article 73); diplomatic and consular relations and the conclusion of treaties (article 74); and the case of an aggressor State (article 75). Articles 76 to 80 covered depositaries of (articles 76 and 77), notifications regarding (article 78), corrections to (article 79) and registration of (article 80) treaties. The annex formulated procedures in application of article 66 for the establishment and functioning of a Conciliation Commission.

Non-navigational uses of international watercourses

On the basis of a second report by the Special Rapporteur, Stephen M. Schwebel (United States), the Commission provisionally adopted articles 1 to 5 and an article X of its draft on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses. Articles 1 to 5 dealt respectively with: the scope of the articles, system States, system agreements, parties to the negotiation and conclusion of system agreements, and use of waters which constituted a shared natural resource. Article X concerned the relationship between the draft's articles and other treaties in force. In addition, the Commission prepared a note describing its tentative understanding of what was meant by the term "international watercourse system."

Jurisdictional immunities
of States and their property

The Commission, on the basis of a second report submitted by the Special Rapporteur, Sompong Sucharitkul (Thailand), provisionally adopted articles 1 and 6 of its draft on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property, which dealt, respectively, with the scope of the articles and State immunity.

It also discussed, but did not adopt, article 2 on the use of terms, and article 3 on the interpretation of the expressions "foreign State" and "jurisdiction;" it postponed consideration of article 4, on jurisdictional immunities not within the scope of the articles being considered, and article 5, on the principle of non-retroactivity of those articles.

Other Special Rapporteur reports

The Commission discussed the preliminary reports of Special Rapporteurs, on international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law, Robert Q. Quentin-Baxter (New Zealand), and on the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier, Alexander Yankov (Bulgaria).

International Law Seminar

The sixteenth session of the International Law Seminar was held at Geneva between 2 and 20 June 1980, with 25 participants. Austria, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Kuwait, the Netherlands, Norway and Sweden gave fellowships to participants from developing countries. For the first time, a private body, the Dana Fund for International and Comparative Legal Studies (United States), also granted fellowships.

Other topics

On the basis of the recommendations of a planning group established in June 1980, the Commission adopted its work programme for 1981, which included: the second reading of the draft articles on succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties, and on treaties concluded between States and international organizations or between international organizations; continuing preparation of drafts on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, particularly on content, forms and degrees of international responsibility; as well as the study of and preparation of additional draft articles on the other topics on its 1980 work programme.

During the year, Commission members attended meetings of other legal bodies, such as the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee (Jakarta, Indonesia, April/May) and the Inter-American Juridical Committee (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, January/February). Those committees as well as the Arab Commission for International Law and the European Committee on Legal Co-operation were represented at the Commission's 1980 session.

At the Commission's request, the third edition of the handbook "The work of the International Law Commission" was published during the year under review.

Consideration by the General Assembly

During the debate in the General Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee on the report of the International Law Commission, many Members referred to the subject of State archives. Afghanistan, Brazil, Kenya and Yugoslavia pointed out that State archives were an essential part of a nation's cultural heritage. They stressed the obligation to pass them on to a successor State as soon as it attained sovereignty. In Jamaica's view,

State archives could be essential to national development. Hungary said the draft on succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties should emphasize the importance of preserving the unity of State archives in all cases of State succession. China believed that the draft articles on State archives should not be placed together with those on State property. It wondered whether it might be possible to broaden the definition of State archives to include cultural objects reflecting historical development.

Referring to the question of State responsibility, the USSR expressed the view that the Commission must act more quickly on the urgent needs of the international community. Japan felt that the draft articles on that subject were of great value since they contained guidelines regarding the fundamental rules of international law. The Ukrainian SSR referred to what it considered to be ambiguities in several articles which could be subject to broad interpretations. Several Members referred to State responsibility arising out of internationally wrongful acts, to circumstances precluding the wrongfulness of an act, and, in particular, to the draft articles dealing with self-defence, state of necessity and compensation for damages. The Byelorussian SSR, Hungary, Mongolia and the USSR said reference should be made in the draft article on self-defence to Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations setting out the inherent right of individual or collective self-defence.<sup>1</sup>

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya called for further definitions in relation to state of necessity and self-defence. In Algeria's view, the application of those articles in inter-State relations would give rise to difficulties and disputes, especially in the case of the use of armed forces. Pakistan supported the inclusion of state of necessity and self-defence in the category of circumstances in which wrongfulness of an act should be excused. Bulgaria and Mongolia pointed out that the provisions of the articles might give rise to the possibility of misuse.

Trinidad and Tobago held that recognition of a plea of state of necessity to safeguard essential financial and economic interests of the State would assist the Governments of developing countries to cope with their short-term and temporary financial difficulties without damaging their international credit.

Egypt approved the approach taken by the Commission with regard to treaties between States and international organizations or between international organizations. The Federal Republic of Germany and the United States thought the draft articles should follow the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties<sup>2</sup> as closely as possible. The United Kingdom said the draft articles appeared to be suitable for transformation into an international convention which would complement the Vienna Convention. However, the Commission should consider recasting the draft articles in the form of modifications to the Vienna Convention to avoid the risk of amendments that would undermine the authority of the Convention. Nigeria thought the draft articles should emerge as an international instrument and not merely as an appendage of the Convention.

Concerning the non-navigational uses of watercourses, Egypt, Finland and Spain supported the view that there was a primary need to prepare a framework treaty embodying fundamental norms. In Algeria's opinion, the draft articles could in time appear as a standard agreement on which agreements on particular watercourses could be reached. Sri Lanka said the rules should be complemented by more detailed agreements between States. The German Democratic Republic was opposed to the inclusion of any provisions whereby the uses of inland waters would be regulated by the law on non-navigational uses of international watercourses. Some Members, such as Ethiopia and Yugoslavia, felt that more attention should be paid to the right of States to sovereignty over their natural resources; others, including Algeria, Bangladesh, Egypt, Italy and Thailand, emphasized the use of shared natural resources in a spirit of equity and co-operation.

As to the question of jurisdictional immunity of States and their property, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR found the draft articles unsatisfactory. Pakistan called for reconsideration of the question. Japan noted that many States had exempted commercial activities of foreign States from the scope of application of jurisdictional immunities. If the Commission's work were to be directed against such contemporary trends in the practice of States, Japan said, its end product would prove to be unacceptable to many.

With regard to the liability for injurious acts not prohibited by international law, Sweden and Trinidad and Tobago agreed that the practical importance of the subject had increased because technological advances had made it a more frequent occurrence that licit activities in one State produced harmful effects in another. Czechoslovakia felt that the study of the subject should focus on activities which caused damage within the territory under the jurisdiction of one State, the injurious consequences of which were also felt on the territory of other States. Canada suggested that a further area to be studied was that of damages to areas beyond national jurisdiction; in such cases, no individual State might suffer immediate harm, but all States suffered a diminution of their rights in such regions. Japan suggested that a realistic approach would be to draw up a legal framework which took into account the contents of existing agreements in such areas as outer space activities, the use of atomic energy and the prevention of marine pollution, and to endeavour to extend the scope of the rules in those agreements.

On the subject of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by courier, many Members, including Algeria, Brazil, Bulgaria, Hungary and Mongolia, agreed that international developments had enhanced the need for protection of diplomatic couriers. Czechoslovakia and the USSR felt that an appropriate legal instrument would promote co-operation among States. Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States believed that the subject did not merit urgent attention.

A number of countries stressed that summary records of the Commission's meetings should be reinstated and the honorarium payable to members of the Commission should be increased.

Also before the Sixth Committee was a note verbale dated 20 October from Yugoslavia, requesting that resolutions on legal aspects of a new international economic order and on international water resources law adopted at the fifty-ninth Conference of the International Law Association (Belgrade, 18-23 August) be circulated as Assembly documents.

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, approved the Commission's programme of work for 1981 and recommended that, taking into account the written comments of Governments and views expressed in the Assembly, the Commission should: complete the second reading of the draft articles on succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties; commence the second reading of the draft articles on treaties between States and international organizations or between international organizations; continue its work on State responsibility with the aim of beginning the preparation of draft articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts; continue its work on international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law; proceed with the preparation of draft articles on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses and on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property; continue its work on the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier, with a view to possibly elaborating an appropriate legal instrument; and continue its study of relations between States and international organizations.

The Assembly endorsed the Commission's requests for Governments' observations and comments on the draft articles adopted on first reading and welcomed the considerations and recommendations of the Commission on questions having a bearing on the nature, programme and methods of its work. The Assembly reaffirmed its previous decisions concerning research projects and studies required by the work of the Commission and the increased role of the Codification Division of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat, as well as those on the need for continuing provision of summary records of the Commission's meetings.

These Assembly decisions were set forth in resolution 35/163, adopted without vote. The text was sponsored by 39 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) and approved by the Sixth Committee on 3 December without vote.

Most-favoured-nation clauses

In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 19 December 1978,<sup>3</sup> the item entitled "Consideration of the draft articles on most-favoured-nation clauses" was included in the agenda of the thirty-fifth (1980) session of the Assembly. The Sixth Committee had before it, in addition to the draft articles submitted by the International Law Commission to the 1978 session of the Assembly,<sup>4</sup> a report of the Secretary-General containing the comments and observations of Governments and intergovernmental organizations, as well as an analytical compilation of those comments and observations.

On 15 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, requested the Secretary-General to reiterate his invitation to Member States, organs of the United Nations and interested intergovernmental organizations to submit or bring up to date, not later than 30 June 1981, their written comments and observations on the relevant chapter of the Commission's 1978 report and, in particular, on the draft articles on most-favoured-nation clauses adopted by the Commission and provisions relating to such clauses on which the Commission was unable to take decisions. The Assembly requested States to comment on the Commission's recommendation that the draft articles should be recommended to Member States with a view to the conclusion of a convention. The Secretary-General was requested to bring up to date the analytical compilation of the comments and observations submitted. The Assembly further decided to consider the matter again in 1981.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 35/161, adopted by consensus. The text, sponsored by Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Mongolia, Romania and the USSR, was approved by consensus by the Sixth Committee on 5 December.

The proposal for a convention was welcomed by several Members, including Bangladesh, Barbados, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mexico and the USSR. Zaire regarded the draft articles as a valid basis for negotiations with a view to concluding an international convention. France and the Federal Republic of Germany considered it premature and inadvisable to embody the draft articles in a convention. The United Kingdom and the United States spoke against the proposal for a convention; the United States felt its practical importance would be minimal since it would govern only a small number of situations. Austria, Greece and Japan voiced serious doubts that a convention was the most appropriate instrument. Japan and others suggested that the draft articles should form a set of guidelines. The observer of the European Economic Community (EEC) stressed EEC's view that an express exception to the application of the most-favoured-nation clause must be made for customs unions and free-trade areas composed either of States or of entities other than States which, like EEC, had the power to grant and receive most-favoured-nation treatment.

In the USSR's view, the application of the most-favoured-nation clause would help implement sovereign equality of States. Other States, including Argentina and Iran, thought that the draft articles constituted a fundamental step forward in the codification of international law.

While stressing the value of most-favoured-nation treatment in principle, several countries, including Canada and China, made specific suggestions to improve the draft articles. Zambia thought that any legal instrument which might be adopted should particularly take into account the interests of the developing countries.

Chapter III

International trade law

United Nations efforts continued in 1980 towards the progressive harmonization and unification of international trade law with the aim of reducing or removing legal obstacles to the flow of international trade, having regard for the different social and legal systems of the world.

The United Nations Conference on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods, held at Vienna in March/April, adopted and opened for signature the United Nations Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods, as well as a Protocol amending the Convention on the Limitation Period in the International Sale of Goods (1974).

The United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL), which co-ordinated legal activities in its field, met in July at New York and adopted Conciliation Rules for use in disputes arising in international commercial relations; it postponed consideration of guidelines for administering commercial arbitrations under its Arbitration Rules and invited input for preparation of a draft model law on arbitral procedure.

The General Assembly, on 4 December, by resolution 35/52 recommended use of the Conciliation Rules and by resolution 35/51 recommended that UNCITRAL continue legal work on the various topics of its work programme, which included drafting uniform rules on liquidated damages and penalty clauses, a convention on international bills of exchange and promissory notes, and uniform rules applicable to international cheques.

Details of these and other decisions are given in this chapter.

United Nations Conference on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods

In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 16 December 1978,<sup>1</sup> the United Nations Conference on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods was held at Vienna from 10 March to 11 April 1980.

On 10 April, it adopted the United Nations Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods (the 1980 Sales Convention) as well as a Protocol amending the Convention on the Limitation Period in the International Sale of Goods (the 1974 Limitation Convention, concluded at New York on 14 June 1974) to harmonize the 1974 Convention's provisions with those of the new Sales Convention. The Protocol was opened for accession on 11 April. On that date, the Convention was signed by Austria, Chile, Ghana, Hungary, Singapore and Yugoslavia. The Final Act of the Conference, to which was annexed the texts of the Convention and the Protocol, was also signed on 11 April.

Sixty-two States were represented at the Conference; in addition, Venezuela, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Chamber of Commerce sent observers, as did six intergovernmental organizations.

The Conference elected Gyula Eorsi (Hungary) as President, and representatives of 22 States as Vice-Presidents. It established a General Committee, a First and Second Committee, a Drafting Committee and a Credentials Committee. (For list of participants and officers, see APPENDIX III.)

The Conference had before it the draft convention on contracts for the international sale of goods approved by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) in 1978,<sup>2</sup> which it assigned to its First Committee, along with an article on declarations relating to contracts in writing—one of a set of draft provisions concerning implementation, declarations, reservations and other final clauses.

To its Second Committee the Conference entrusted preparation of the remainder of the provisions on those topics and final clauses, as well as a protocol to the 1974 Limitation Convention, working on the basis of documents prepared by the Secretary-General. The Convention to be drawn up was intended to replace the Uniform Law on the International Sale of Goods and the Uniform Law on the Formation of Contracts for the International Sale of Goods, annexed to two 1964 Hague Conventions on these topics, so as to render the texts capable of wider acceptance by countries having different legal, social and economic systems.

On the basis of the reports of the First, Second and Drafting Committees, the Conference, after approving the text article by article, adopted the Convention by a roll-call vote of 42 to 0, with 9 abstentions (Burma, China, Colombia, Iraq, Kenya, Panama, Peru, Thailand, Turkey). On the basis of reports by the Second and Drafting Committees and after article-by-article approval it adopted, by a roll-call vote of 33 to 0, with 11 abstentions (Burma, Colombia, Denmark, Finland, Greece, India, Kenya, Nigeria, Sweden, Thailand, Zaire), the Protocol amending the Limitation Convention. The Final Act was adopted by acclamation.

At its July session, UNCITRAL noted with appreciation that the Conference had adopted the Sales Convention and Protocol and expressed its hope that the Convention would receive the widest possible acceptance.

The General Assembly, in adopting resolution 35/51 on 4 December (see following subchapter), took note of the successful conclusion of the Conference.

1980 Sales Convention

The United Nations Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods consisted of 101 articles divided into four parts.

Part I of the Convention was divided into two chapters. Chapter I (articles 1 to 6) described the sphere of application of the Convention. The Convention governed the formation of contracts of sale and the rights and obligations of the seller and buyer arising from such contracts between parties having their places of business in different States or where the law of a contracting State would otherwise have been applied under the rules of private international law. Chapter II (articles 7 to 13) contained general provisions applicable to the entire Convention, intended to promote uniformity for such purposes as interpretation, determination of intent, usage and understandings. A contract of sale need not be evidenced by writing and was not subject to any other requirements as to form.

Part II, concerning the formation of contracts, contained 11 articles on the identification of offers that were sufficiently definite so that their acceptance resulted in a contract and on when the offer became effective (articles 14 and 15), on revocability of offers (articles 16 and 17), on methods of acceptance of offers (article 18), on when acceptance became effective (articles 20, 21, 23 and 24), after which it could not be withdrawn (article 22), and on the effect of an acceptance quoting terms different from those contained in the offer (article 19)-which, if material enough, could constitute a rejection and counter-offer.

Part III, on the sale of goods, contained five chapters. Chapter I (general provisions) defined in article 25 a fundamental breach of contract as one resulting in such detriment as to deprive a party of what he was entitled to receive under the contract; a declaration of avoidance of contract was effective only by notice to the other party (article 26). Chapter I also dealt with the effect of delay or error in transmission of a communication (article 27), when a court was required to enforce one party's right to require performance of an obligation by the other party (article 28), and the right to modify or abrogate contracts by agreement between the parties (article 29).

Chapter II (obligations of the seller) dealt, in article 30 and in three sections comprising articles 31 to 52, with: the obligations of the seller regarding how, where and when he was to deliver the goods and the handing over of documents related thereto (articles 31 to 34); conformity of the goods to the requirements of the contract (articles 35 to 40); the seller's obligation to deliver goods free of third-party claims unknown to the buyer (articles 41 to 44); and remedies available (such as substitute goods, offers of repair, time extensions, claims for damages, avoiding of contract, reduction in price or refusal of delivery of goods) for breach of contract by the seller (articles 45 to 52).

In availing himself of the remedies under the Convention, the buyer would lose the right to rely on a lack of conformity of the goods with the contract if he did not notify the seller of defects within two years of delivery, unless that period was contractually different.

Chapter III (on obligations of the buyer, who, by article 53, was obliged to pay the price for the goods and take delivery as required by the contract and this Convention) set forth, in three sections: the buyer's obligation to pay the purchase price for the goods (articles 54 to 56) and where and when (articles 57 to 59); his obligation to take delivery (article 60); and the remedies for a breach of contract by the buyer (articles 61 to 65).

Chapter IV, on the passing of risk, contained articles 66 to 70 concerned with the time when the risk of loss of or damage to the goods passed from the seller to the buyer.

Chapter V, containing provisions common to the obligations of the seller and the buyer, contained six sections. The first section comprised articles 71 to 73 on anticipatory breach of the contract, i.e. cases in which the contract might be avoided or obligations suspended if it became apparent that a party would not perform a substantial part of his obligation. The second section (articles 74 to 77) stipulated the means of calculating damages for breach of contract; the third (article 78) entitled interest to be paid if a sum due was in arrears; the fourth (articles 79 and 80) enumerated cases permitting exemption from liability for failure to perform contractual obligations because of impediments beyond a party's control; the fifth (articles 81 to 84) spelled out the effects (loss of rights and obligations that remained) resulting from avoidance of the contract; and the sixth section (articles 85 to 88) contained the obligation to preserve the goods during the life of the contract.

Although remedies were available at the option of the party which did not receive performance, several limitations were placed on the exercise of choice. The right to avoid the contract or require delivery of substitute goods was also circumscribed, unless the breach of contract was so serious as to be "fundamental."

part IV of the Convention (articles 89 to 101) contained the final provisions. The United Nations Secretary-General was designated as depositary (article 89). The Convention was not to prevail over already concluded agreements covering the same matters (article 90), and it was to be open for signature at United Nations Headquarters, New York, until 30 September 1981 (article 91). Contracting States could extend the Convention's provisions to their territorial units (article 93).

In order to retain the advantages of having an integrated convention covering both the formation of contracts and the sale of goods while at the same time providing States with a degree of flexibility, article 92 allowed a State at the time of signature, ratification, acceptance, approval or accession to declare that it would not be bound by part II of the Convention (on the formation of contracts) or by part III (on the sale of goods). States could also declare at that time that the Convention was not to apply to contracts of sale or their formation where States had the same or closely related legal rules on matters governed by the Convention, as well as in other specified instances in which States made joint or reciprocal unilateral declarations to that effect (articles 94 to 97); these articles also indicated how such declarations were to be made or withdrawn and when they entered into force. No reservations were permitted except those expressly authorized (article 98).

Articles 99 and 100 dealt with the Convention's entry into force, and ratification, acceptance and approval of, accession to, and applicability of it. The Convention was to enter into force on the first day of the month one year after the date of deposit of the tenth instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession. Article 101 allowed for denunciation.

Protocol amending the 1974 Limitation Convention

The 14-article Protocol amending the Convention on the Limitation Period in the International Sale of Goods brought the Convention's provisions into harmony with the 1980 Sales Convention.

The first six articles replaced provisions not in concord with the 1980 Convention. The remaining articles were final provisions. Article VII designated the Secretary-General as depositary and article VIII concerned instruments of accession. The Protocol was to enter into force (article IX) on the first day of the sixth month following deposit of the second such instrument, provided that the 1974 Limitation Convention and the 1980 Sales Convention were also in force; if not, it would enter into force when those Conventions were in force. Ratification of or accession to the Limitation Convention could also constitute accession to the Protocol (article X), although a party could choose, under article XII, not to be bound by the Protocol's first article, applying the Limitation Convention only if the places of business of the parties to a sales contract were in contracting States or if the rules of private international law made the law of a contracting State applicable. A party to the amended Limitation Convention was to be considered also a party to the unamended Convention in relation to a party to the Convention which had not yet acceded to the Protocol (article XI). Article XIII pertained to the means and effective date of denunciation, and article XIV bound the depositary to transmit certified copies of the Protocol to all States and copies of the amended Limitation Convention, when in force, to all States parties.

United Nations Commission on international Trade Law

The United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) held its thirteenth session at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 14 to 25 July 1980. It adopted the UNCITRAL Conciliation Rules, intended for use in disputes arising in international commercial relations where the parties sought amicable settlement by recourse to conciliation. It decided to consider at its 1981 session the preparation of draft guidelines for administering international commercial arbitrations under the UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules and to invite Governments to aid in obtaining material on arbitration for the purpose of preparing a draft model law on arbitral procedure. The Commission decided, in the context of legal problems related to a new international economic order, to accord priority to work related to contracts in the field of industrial development. It noted progress made on draft uniform rules on liquidated damages and penalty clauses, on a draft convention on international bills of exchange and international promissory notes and on uniform rules applicable to international cheques. It decided to hold a symposium on international trade law in 1981.

The General Assembly, on 4 December, adopted two resolutions on the work of UNCITRAL. It recommended, by resolution 35/52, use of the Conciliation Rules and, by resolution 35/51, that UNCITRAL continue legal work on the various topics of its work programme, appealing for State and organizational support for those efforts.

International commercial arbitration and conciliation

UNCITRAL Conciliation Rules

The Commission, on 23 July, adopted the UNCITRAL Conciliation Rules for use in international commercial relations disputes.

The draft rules, submitted in 1979, had been revised by the Secretariat, in conformity with the Commission's request,<sup>3</sup> to take account of views expressed during the 1979 session and observations of Governments and interested international organizations.

The 20 articles covered: conditions under which the Rules might be applied, varied or excluded (article 1); invitations to conciliate and procedures by which conciliation proceedings were to begin (article 2); the number, appointment, working methods and role of the conciliator(s) (articles 3 to 5 and 7), including proscription of his role in arbitral or judicial proceedings (article 19); authorized assistance (articles 6 and 8); means of communication and place of meetings (article 9); rules for disclosure and confidentiality of information and proceedings (articles 10 and 14); the duty of the parties to co-operate with the conciliator (article 11); authorization to make settlement suggestions (article 12); drawing up settlement agreements (article 13) and fixing of costs and deposits relating thereto (articles 17 and 18); limitations on concurrent resort to arbitral or judicial proceedings (article 16); and prohibition of the introduction as evidence in such other proceedings of views or proposals made by the other party or the conciliator (article 20).

It was recognized that conciliation under these Rules was a non-judicial, non-adversarial proceeding. The function of the conciliator, under article 7, was to assist the parties to reach an amicable settlement of their dispute. At every stage of the proceedings, the parties were to be in complete control. Either party could, under article 15, declare unilaterally that the proceedings were terminated. It was this element of party control throughout the proceedings, and the consequently less formal nature of the procedure, that distinguished the UNCITRAL Conciliation Rules from the UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules adopted by the Commission in 1976.<sup>4</sup>

By resolution 35/52, adopted by consensus on 4 December, the General Assembly recommended the use of the Conciliation Rules and asked the Secretary-General to distribute them as widely as possible. The text of the resolution was introduced in the Sixth (Legal) Committee by Austria on behalf of 27 Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below); it was approved by the Committee on 7 November, also by consensus.

After approval of the text, Peru, speaking also on behalf of Colombia, Ecuador and Venezuela, wished to make it clear that the Conciliation Rules would not take precedence over rules that Andean Pact bodies had adopted or would adopt on the subject.

The Assembly, by resolution 35/51, noted with satisfaction UNCITRAL'S unanimous adoption of the Rules (for details, see ACTION BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY below).

UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules

As the Commission had requested in 1979,<sup>5</sup> the Secretary-General prepared for its 1980 session a set of guidelines to assist arbitral institutions in formulating rules for administering arbitrations under the 1976 UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules. These guidelines sought to prevent disparity in the use of the Rules by independent arbitral institutions, which were increasingly applying the Rules in administered arbitration although such use had been excluded from their scope, since they had been designed for ad hoc arbitration.

There was support in the Commission for the idea of preparing guidelines in the form suggested by the Secretary-General, but it was decided to postpone detailed discussion until 1981 to allow time for consultations with interested circles.

The advantages and disadvantages of preparing a list of arbitral and other institutions that had declared their willingness to act as appointing authorities under the UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules were also discussed in the Secretary-General's note. He suggested that it would not be desirable to do so; rather, it should be left to the institutions themselves to declare their willingness to act as such. The Commission adopted this recommendation.

Model arbitration law

On 21 July, UNCITRAL took note of a progress report by the Secretariat on its preparation of a model law on arbitral procedure, requested in 1979.<sup>6</sup> In order to facilitate preparation of an analytical compilation of national laws pertaining to arbitration procedure, to serve as a basis for preparing the model law, UNCITRAL invited Governments to provide materials on national legislation and case law and pertinent treatises.

The Assembly, in adopting resolution 35/51 (for details, see ACTION BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY below), repeated the appeal for such materials.

New international economic order

The Working Group on the New International Economic Order reported to UNCITRAL in 1980 on its session held at United Nations Headquarters from 14 to 25 January. It recommended six topics for inclusion in the work programme of the Commission. Of special importance to developing countries and to UNCITRAL'S work towards the new international economic order, in the Working Group's view, was the topic of harmonization, unification and review of contractual provisions commonly occurring in international contracts in the field of industrial development.

Additional topics were the legal aspects of multilateral commodity agreements, studies of legal issues arising from foreign investment, of intergovernmental bilateral agreements on industrial co-operation and of agreements on natural resources, and identification of legal problems arising from the activities of transnational corporations.

Pursuant to a Working Group request, the Secretary-General submitted a study reviewing the various types of contracts used in the context of industrialization: contracts on research and development, consulting, engineering, supply and construction of large industrial works, transfer of technology, service and maintenance, technical assistance, leasing, joint ventures, and industrial co-operation in general. The study described their main characteristics and content, noted existing legislation and referred to work in this field by other organizations and possible work to be done by UNCITRAL.

The Commission agreed to accord priority to work related to contracts in the field of industrial development and asked the Secretary-General to carry out preparatory work in respect of contracts on supply and construction of large industrial works and on industrial co-operation. He was to report to the Working Group, thenceforth to be composed of all UNCITRAL members, which was to report on progress to the Commission in 1981.

Also in accordance with its terms of reference, the Working Group considered the question of co-ordinating the legal work of organizations relevant to the new international economic order in order to avoid duplication of effort.

The Group placed before the Commission the following considerations: it was in the first instance the duty of Governments to exercise control over the work programmes of United Nations bodies in which they were represented, for which purpose detailed reports on different subjects and of the work thereon by various organizations would be useful; there should be greater co-operation between the secretariats of United Nations bodies; there might be need for a more rational approach by the United Nations to the legislative work of its various organs; and thought should be given to regular meetings of chairmen of commissions and committees.

The Commission agreed that the Group's recommendations, if fully implemented, would improve co-ordination. However, it felt that more information was required about the programmes and terms of reference of the various United Nations organs. It therefore asked the Secretariat to submit to it in 1981 complete information on the activities of other organs and international organizations so as to enable UNCITRAL to take appropriate decisions.

The General Assembly, in adopting resolution 35/51 (for details, see ACTION BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY below), called on UNCITRAL to continue taking account of Assembly resolutions on the new international economic order,<sup>7</sup> and endorsed its decision to carry out preparatory work on the contract topics chosen. It also reaffirmed UNCITRAL'S mandate in co-ordinating legal activities in trade law, and recommended that it maintain close collaboration and liaison with United Nations and other international organizations active in the field.

International trade contracts

At its 1980 session, UNCITRAL had before it a report of its Working Group on International Contract Practices which had met in September 1979.<sup>8</sup> The Group had considered preliminary draft rules, prepared by the Secretariat, regulating liquidated damages clauses (aimed at pre-estimating compensation payable on breach of contract) and penalty clauses applicable in a wide range of international trade contracts. There had been general agreement in the Group that greater consensus might be achieved on a set of rules designed to regulate such clauses in selected types, rather than a wide range, of international trade contracts. The Commission accepted the Group's recommendations that further work on the subject was justified, that another Group session be convened and that further studies be submitted to that session, focusing on how such clauses were drafted and used in trade contracts, the types of contracts that might usefully be regulated by uniform rules, and legal difficulties encountered in their use in courts and arbitration.

International payments

At its 1980 session, UNCITRAL had before it the reports of its Working Group on International Negotiable Instruments on its Geneva session in September 1979<sup>9</sup> and its New York session from 2 to 11 January 1980. These reported on progress made in preparing a draft convention on international bills of exchange and international promissory notes (mainly credit instruments) and in preparing draft uniform rules on international cheques (mainly payment instruments).

The Commission noted that the Working Group had completed the substance of its work on the 85-article draft convention, subject to reconsideration of certain issues referred to UNCITRAL'S Study Group on International Payments. The Working Group had also held a preliminary exchange of views on 30 articles of the draft uniform rules. It asked the Secretariat to complete the draft rules and submit a study on legal issues arising outside the cheque. It also agreed to convene a drafting group to harmonize the language versions of the draft convention.

The Commission decided to defer consideration of the draft convention until the Working Group had completed its work on international cheques, so that the Group might present a single integrated text or two harmonized texts. It also agreed that the Secretariat should prepare a commentary to the draft convention.

The Commission also discussed a report of the Secretary-General setting out issues to be considered in preparing uniform rules on security interests in goods (relating to secured property for credit transactions). The Commission's request for the report had followed from the Secretary-General's 1979 conclusion that, due to the complexity and different concepts of security interests, it would not be feasible to try to achieve unification by means of a uniform law in the form of a convention, although a model law might be formulated.<sup>10</sup>

The Commission concluded in 1980 that in all likelihood world-wide unification of the law was unattainable and that further work should not currently be carried out.

Symposium on international trade law

At its 1980 session, the Commission was informed of pledges from Austria, Canada, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, Sweden and Yugoslavia towards the holding of the second UNCITRAL symposium on international trade law during UNCITRAL'S 1981 session at Vienna; these would be sufficient to finance travel and subsistence of some 15 participants from developing countries. The Commission invited further contributions to enable it to invite additional participants and asked the Secretary-General to make the arrangements for the seminar. He was also asked to report on the possibility of holding regional seminars.

There was general agreement that discussion in the symposium should cover the matters in which UNCITRAL was active, in particular arbitration and conciliation, sales, maritime law and the legal implications of the new international economic order.

By resolution 35/51 (for details, see ACTION BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY below), the Assembly expressed appreciation to States for symposium contribution offers and appealed to other States, organizations and individuals for similar contributions.

Other matters

Law library

After considering ways to develop further the materials in UNCITRAL'S law library at the International Trade Law Branch of the Secretariat's Office of Legal Affairs in Vienna- the UNCITRAL secretariat-UNCITRAL invited Governments to place the library on their mailing lists for legal materials such as official journals, gazettes, legislative texts and other publications.

In adopting resolution 35/51 (for details, see ACTION BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY below), the Assembly repeated this appeal and asked the Secretary-General to earmark from funds allocated to the common library of the Vienna International Centre an amount needed to maintain the law library and to acquire needed materials.

Summary records

Drawing attention to the relevance of summary records for the legislative history of United Nations treaties, conventions and other legal texts, UNCITRAL believed that it was in the interest of United Nations legislative work that such records be available. It requested the Assembly to authorize them for UNCITRAL meetings devoted to the preparation of draft conventions or other legal instruments.

The Assembly, in adopting resolution 35/51 (for details, see following section), recognized the relevance of those records and emphasized the advisability of continuing drawing up complete summary records for such meetings.

By resolution 35/10 B of 3 November 1980, the Assembly authorized summary records for UNCITRAL in such cases, subject to review in 1981 (for details, see p. 1229).

Action by the General Assembly

On 4 December 1980, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on the work of UNCITRAL. By resolution 35/52, it recommended use of UNCITRAL'S Conciliation Rules (for details, see subsection above). Resolution 35/51 addressed other topics of UNCITRAL'S report and work programme, as noted in the sections above (model arbitration law, the new international economic order including co-ordination activities, training and assistance in international trade law, including the symposium on international trade law, and the United Nations Conference on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods). Taking note of the Commission's report on its 1980 session, the Assembly recommended that UNCITRAL continue its work in the above areas and commended its progress and efforts to enhance its efficiency.

Specifically, the Assembly by this resolution took note of UNCITRAL'S adoption of the Conciliation Rules and of its decisions on future work concerning the new international economic order, reaffirming UNCITRAL'S co-ordination mandate in this regard and recommending maintenance of collaboration and liaison with other international organizations for this purpose, and endorsed UNCITRAL'S decision to carry out preparatory work on two specific industrial contract topics. In addition, the Assembly appealed: for further contributions for the 1981 symposium; for law library materials, also asking the Secretary-General to earmark budgetary funds for library maintenance and acquisitions; and

Resolution 35/51 was adopted by consensus by the Assembly. The Sixth Committee had similarly approved it on 7 November; the text was introduced by Austria on behalf of 31 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2205(XXI) of 17 December 1986, by which it established the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law and defined the object and terms of reference of the Commission, 3108(XXVIII) of 12 December 1973, by which it increased the membership of the Commission, 31/99 of 15 December 1976, by which Governments of Member States not members of the Commission were entitled to attend as observers the sessions of the Commission and its working groups, and 34/142 of 17 December 1979, by which the co-ordinating function of the Commission in the field of international trade law was emphasized, as well as its previous resolutions concerning the reports of the Commission on the work of its annual sessions,

Recalling also its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974 and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975,

Reaffirming its conviction that the progressive harmonization and unification of international trade law, in reducing or removing legal obstacles to the flow of international trade, especially those affecting the developing countries, would significantly contribute to universal economic co-operation among all States on a basis of equality, equity and common interests and to the elimination of discrimination in international trade and, thereby, to the well-being of all peoples,

Having regard for the need to take into account the different social and legal systems in harmonizing the rules of international trade law,

Stressing the usefulness and importance of organizing symposia for promoting better knowledge and understanding of international trade law and, especially, for the training of young lawyers from developing countries in this field,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its thirteenth session;

2. Takes note of the successful conclusion of the United Nations Conference on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods, held at Vienna from 10 March to 11 April 1980, which has resulted in the adoption of the Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods and a Protocol amending the Convention on the Limitation Period in the International Sale of Goods:

3. Commends the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law for the progress made in its work and for its efforts to enhance the efficiency of its working methods;

4. Notes with satisfaction that the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law has unanimously adopted the Conciliation Rules of the Commission;

8. Reaffirms the mandate of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law in co-ordinating legal activities in the field of international trade law;

9. Recommends that the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law should:

(a) Continue its work on the topics included in its programme of work;

(d) Continue to maintain liaison with the Commission on Transnational Corporations with regard to the consideration of legal problems that would be susceptible of action by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law;

10. Expresses its appreciation to all States which have offered to make contributions to the holding at Vienna in 1981 of the second symposium on international trade law of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the occasion of the fourteenth session of the Commission:

11. Appeals to other States and to organizations, institutions and individuals to make similar contributions so that the number of participants in the second symposium from developing countries might be increased;

12. (b) Requests the Secretary-General to earmark, out of the funds allocated to the common library of the Vienna International Centre, such an amount as is necessary for the maintenance of the law library of the Commission and for the acquisition of materials that are required in the context of the programme of work of the Commission;

Chapter IV

Treaties and multilateral conventions

Registration and publication of treaties pursuant to Article 102 of the Charter

In accordance with a General Assembly request of 17 December 1979,<sup>1</sup> the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly's 1980 regular session on the question of the registration and publication of treaties and international agreements carried out under the terms of Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations.<sup>2</sup> In his report, he noted a general improvement in registration and publication due to the strengthening of the resources used by the Secretariat and to Assembly resolutions concerning the establishment of a priority publication system<sup>3</sup> and giving the Secretariat the option to publish in

Improvement was achieved particularly in respect of registration, where the 11-month backlog which had existed on 31 August 1979 was eliminated. The backlog in the publication of the United Nations Treaty Series, however, amounted to 260 volumes on 31 August 1980 (as against 244 on 31 August 1979). In order to eliminate that backlog, the Secretary-General in 1979 had proposed a recovery plan, the first phase of which had been approved. According to the proposal, the backlog in publication should begin to diminish in 1981 and be eliminated in 1988. (See also sub-section below on DEPOSITARY FUNCTIONS OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL.)

The Secretary-General's report mentioned the development of the United Nations Treaty Information System and indicated that he had not received a sufficient number of replies from States and intergovernmental organizations to his questionnaire of October 1979 on activities in the matter of international agreements, to help determine the best ways of putting the System to use for the international community- to enable him to report on this question.

The report was considered by the Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee, which recommended on 1 December without vote, on an oral proposal of its Chairman, that the Assembly take note of the Secretary-General's report and place the question on the agenda of its 1981 session. The Assembly adopted the Committee's recommendation on 15 December without vote as decision 35/436..

Review of the multilateral treaty-making process

The Secretary-General submitted to the 1980 regular session of the General Assembly, as requested by the Assembly in 1977,<sup>5</sup> a report on techniques and procedures used in the elaboration of multilateral treaties.

The report discussed the general features of multilateral treaty-making within the United Nations and other intergovernmental organizations, and included the observations of nine Governments which had responded to the Assembly's invitation in its 1977 resolution for information on the subject-Austria, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Japan, the Netherlands, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States-as well as the International Law Commission.

A diversity of methods and procedures employed was found within as well as outside the United Nations. The International Labour Organisation and the Hague Conference on Private International Law, however, followed highly structured procedures to elaborate treaties. In addition to such questions as the initiation of treaty-making and the formulation and adoption of multilateral treaties, the report dealt with ways of accelerating and enlarging participation in multilateral treaties. Also provided was a series of questions to be considered in the examination of the treaty-making process.

The report was considered in the Assembly's Sixth Committee, which on 5 December approved without vote a resolution sponsored by Australia, Egypt, Indonesia, Kenya, Mexico, the Netherlands and Sri Lanka. The Assembly adopted it without vote on 15 December as resolution 35/162. It thereby took note of the report of the Secretary-General and of the views of Governments and the International Law Commission. It invited Governments and intergovernmental organizations to submit by 31 July 1981 their observations on the Secretary-General's report, taking into account the specific questions set forth therein, as well as their comments on any other aspect of the subject. The Secretary-General was requested to prepare and publish new editions of the Handbook of Final Clauses and the Summary of the Practice of the Secretary-General as Depositary of Multilateral Agreements. A report containing the replies received as well as a topical summary of the debate at the 1980 session was to be submitted to the Assembly in 1981.

Privileges and immunities

Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations

During 1980, the Federal Republic of Germany and Seychelles acceded to the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations.<sup>6</sup> As at the end of 1980, the following 119 States were parties to the Convention:

Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Central African Republic, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland; Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Malta, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands; New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sudan, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Upper Volta, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies

During 1980, there were no notifications of succession or instruments of accession received in respect of the 1947 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies.<sup>7</sup> The parties to the Convention and the agencies in respect of which the Convention was applicable to those States remained the same as in 1979.<sup>8</sup>

Respect for privileges and immunities of officials

Reporting to the Economic and Social Council in 1980, the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) noted with concern that certain member States of United Nations organizations had taken measures against the security and independence of international civil servants, including detention, arrest and imprisonment without prior request to the respective executive head for the necessary waiver of immunity. In some instances, executive heads had not been allowed to contact the staff members concerned. Some staff members had disappeared; others had been subjected to pressure to induce them to resign. Deeply concerned at this state of affairs, ACC pointed out that, when joining the United Nations or specialized agencies, States undertook to respect the international character of the functions of staff members and not to seek to influence them. It recalled that the Commission on Human Rights had adopted at its 1980 session a resolution on the human rights of United Nations staff members (see p. 830), reminding Member States of their obligations under the United Nations Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,<sup>9</sup> the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights<sup>10</sup> and the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations. (See also p. 996.)

At the 1980 regular session of the General Assembly, the question was discussed in the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee. Australia, Canada, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Japan, Mexico, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal, Sierra Leone, Spain and the United States introduced a draft resolution on the subject, stating they considered it necessary for the Fifth Committee, which was responsible for the staffs well-being, to take action to guarantee adequate protection for international civil servants in the performance of their tasks.

The USSR questioned whether the protection of United Nations officials fell within the Committee's competence. In its view, it was a legal issue to be considered by the Sixth Committee. The Chairman said he understood that the resolution did not seek changes in the privileges of international civil servants under international conventions but related only to the practical application of those conventions and its bearing on the execution of the tasks of international civil servants. As not only the Sixth Committee but any of the Main Committees could draft international conventions, the Fifth Committee could therefore consider the draft resolution.

The USSR said that such consideration should not set a precedent for other drafts on the legal status of United Nations staff members. It should not mean either that the Fifth Committee was assuming the role of employer of the United Nations staff, in contravention of Article 97 of the Charter.<sup>11</sup>

The sponsors agreed with the USSR that the legal aspects of the draft resolution were within the competence of the Sixth Committee. If the Assembly's General Committee so decided at the next session, the item would be allocated to the Sixth Committee.

On 15 December, the Fifth Committee approved the text without objection and on 17 December the Assembly likewise adopted it as resolution 35/212.

The Assembly thereby appealed to all Member States to respect the privileges and immunities accorded to officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies by the Conventions on the privileges and immunities of the United Nations and of the specialized agencies. It requested the Secretary-General to bring this resolution to the attention of all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, with the request to furnish information on cases in which there were clear indications that the status of staff members had not been fully respected, and to submit, on behalf of ACC, a report to the Assembly containing any cases in which the international status of staff members had not been fully respected.

Registration and publication of treaties and agreements

Between 1 January and 31 December 1980, approximately 1,642 international agreements and 435 subsequent actions were received by the Secretariat for registration or filing and recording. In addition, there were 205 ex-officio registrations.

The texts of treaties and international agreements registered or filed and recorded are published by the Secretariat in the United Nations Treaty Series in the original languages with translations into English and French where necessary. In 1980, 20 volumes of the Treaty Series, covering treaties registered or filed and recorded in 1973, were issued. (For volume numbers, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Depositary functions of the Secretary-General

On 3 October 1980, the Fifth Committee approved without vote a sum of $346,000 for 1980-1981 to enable the Secretariat to cope with the rising workload in regard to the deposit, registration and publication of treaties. The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) had approved this appropriation for the requested staff resources for that task, recommended that the General Assembly take note of the plan of action for the elimination of the backlog in the publication of the Treaty Series (see section above on REGISTRATION AND PUBLICATION OF TREATIES PURSUANT TO ARTICLE 102 OF THE CHARTER), and asked that the Secretary-General report every two years on progress in eliminating the backlog.

The Assembly, by section I of resolution 35/127 adopted without objection on 17 December 1980, endorsed the recommendations of ACABQ. It acted on the recommendation of its Fifth Committee, which approved the text without vote on 3 October, on an oral proposal of its Chairman.

The General Assembly,
Bearing in mind that multilateral treaties are an important primary source of international law,

Conscious, therefore, that the process of elaboration of multilateral treaties, directed towards the progressive development of international law and its codification, forms an important part of the work of the United Nations and of the international community in general,

Recalling its resolution 32/48 of 8 December 1977, by which it requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the techniques and procedures used in the elaboration of multilateral treaties, taking into consideration the observations of Governments and of the International Law Commission on the subject,

Aware of the heavy burden which active involvement in the process of multilateral treaty-making places upon Governments,

Convinced that the most rational use should be made of the finite resources available for the elaboration of multilateral treaties,

Taking into account statements made at the current session in the debate in the Sixth Committee,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and of the views of Governments and of the International Law Commission contained in the addenda thereto, on the review of the multilateral treaty-making process;

2. Invites Governments and international intergovernmental organizations to submit by 31 July 1981 their observations on the report of the Secretary-General, taking into account the specific questions contained in section IV thereof, as well as their comments on any other aspect of the subject, as they consider desirable:

Resolution 35/212, as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/35/777, adopted without objection by Assembly on 17 December 1980, meeting 99.

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the statement by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination in annex I to its annual overview report for 1979/80,

Mindful of Article 100 of the Charter of the United Nations, under which each Member State has undertaken to respect the exclusively international character of responsibilities of the Secretary-General and the staff and not to seek to influence them in the discharge of their responsibilities,

Mindful also that under the same Article of the Charter the Secretary-General and the staff shall not, in the performance of their duties, seek or receive instructions from any Government or from any other authority external to the Organizations,

Reaffirming the relevant Staff Regulations of the United Nations,

Aware of the absolute necessity that staff members be enabled to discharge their tasks as assigned to them by the Secretary-General without interference on the part of any Member State or any other authority external to the Organization,

Recalling that, under Article 105 of the Charter, officials of the Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its Member States such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions in connexion with the Organization, which is indispensable for the proper discharge of their duties,

Realizing that staff members of the specialized agencies enjoy similar privileges and immunities,

Mindful of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations of 13 February 1946 and of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies of 21 November 1947,

Concerned about reports alleging that the privileges and immunities of officials of these organizations have been encroached upon,

1. Appeals to all Member States to respect the privileges and immunities accorded to officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies by the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations of 13 February 1946 and by the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies of 21 November 1947;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system with the request to furnish information on cases in which there are clear indications that the status of the staff members of such organizations has not been fully respected;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, on behalf of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, a report to the General Assembly containing any cases in which the international status of the staff members of the United Nations or of the specialized agencies has not been fully respected.

Other legal questions

Drafting of an international convention against the use of mercenaries

Pursuant to a 1979 General Assembly resolution,<sup>1</sup> the Secretary-General, by a note dated 29 February 1980, invited Member States to submit their views on the need to elaborate urgently an international convention against the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries as well as the texts of national legislation or other rules and regulations relevant to the activities of mercenaries to be prohibited under such a convention.

The Secretary-General submitted a report to the regular 1980 Assembly session containing the views and comments of 28 Member States: Argentina, Austria, Barbados, Belgium, Bolivia, Byelorussian SSR, Chile, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Finland, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Italy, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Philippines, Romania, Suriname, Sweden, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, Venezuela. It was their general view that the elimination of mercenarism through a multi-lateral convention would contribute to international peace and security. Nigeria submitted the text of a draft international convention and proposed that an ad hoc committee be set up by the Assembly to elaborate such a convention.

Having before it the Secretary-General's report, the Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee discussed the drafting of a convention at six meetings held between 14 October and 17 November. Most speakers supported the idea of drafting a convention. France, however, considered that it would be preferable for the Secretariat to prepare a comparative study of national legislation, which would enable each country to review its legislation and possibly improve it. If it was the general view that a convention should be elaborated, it should be drafted seriously and with objectivity, after careful consideration of the legal problems which might arise.

The United States said that, while the drafting of an international convention might be an effective way of dealing with the problem, it was not the only possible approach; the Sixth Committee might be well advised to leave open the possibility of other approaches, such as urging States to consider the enactment of a appropriate legislation.

Canada believed that, if a convention was to establish mercenarism as an international offence, great care would have to be taken in setting out the precise definition of the offence. Care should also be taken when considering any provision dealing with the possibility of criminal liability on the part of States.

Many references were made in the debate to the term "mercenary"-as used in the Nigerian draft, the 1977 Convention for the Elimination of Mercenaries in Africa, adopted by the Organization of African Unity (OAU), and Additional Protocol I, on the protection of victims of international armed conflicts,<sup>2</sup> to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 on the protection of war victims-indicating that there was lack of agreement on a definition of the term.

African States, as well as Barbados, Brazil, China, Democratic Yemen, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Indonesia, Iraq, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Pakistan, Poland, Spain, Venezuela and Yugoslavia, considered the draft text submitted by Nigeria as a useful basis for deliberation by any group that might be established to draft a convention. Guinea, Madagascar and Togo felt the Nigerian text should be considered together with the 1977 OAU Convention.

The Netherlands doubted that there was enough support for the Nigerian proposal to establish an ad hoc committee to begin work on a convention. It felt it was essential first to ascertain that there was a solid political basis for such a procedure and to obtain more detailed views of Governments on the content of a convention.

On 20 November, the Sixth Committee approved by consensus a resolution introduced by Nigeria on behalf of 48 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). The Assembly adopted it without vote on 4 December as resolution 35/48.

By the resolution, the Assembly decided to establish an Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries, composed of 35 Member States appointed by the Assembly President, after consultation with regional group chairmen, on the basis of equitable geographical distribution and representing the principal legal systems of the world. The Committee was requested to elaborate an international convention as soon as possible and to report to the Assembly in 1981. In fulfilling its mandate, the Committee was authorized to take into account suggestions and proposals from any State, bearing in mind the views and comments in the Secretary-General's report and those expressed during the debate at the current session. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to compile a list for the Committee of relevant legislation of Member States and any other conventions of international and regional organizations on mercenaries.

Following approval of the resolution in Committee, Australia, Austria, Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, New Zealand, Spain, Sweden (on behalf of the Nordic countries), the United Kingdom and the United States expressed reservations on the fourth preambular paragraph, by which the Assembly recognized that the activities of mercenaries were contrary to fundamental principles of international law, such as non-interference in the internal affairs of States, territorial integrity and independence, and seriously impeded the process of self-determination of peoples struggling against colonialism, racism and apartheid and all forms of foreign domination. These reservations were based on the lack of clarity in distinguishing between the responsibilities of States and the liability of individuals, as Sweden put it; States, not individuals, were the subject of international law, Canada said.

The United Kingdom also reserved its position on the issues to be discussed by the Ad Hoc Committee and on the acceptability of the results. Italy and the United States felt the wording of the text prejudged the work of the Committee by defining in advance the scope of the proposed convention.

In a separate action, the Assembly on 14 November adopted resolution 35/35 A on the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights. By this resolution, the Assembly reaffirmed that mercenaries were criminals and that the practice of using them against national liberation movements and sovereign States constituted a criminal act; it called on all Governments to enact legislation declaring the recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries in, and the transit of mercenaries through, their territory to be punishable offences and prohibiting their nationals from serving as mercenaries, and to report such legislation to the Secretary-General (for details, see p. 837).

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the need for strict observance of the principles of sovereign equality, political independence, territorial integrity of States and self-determination of peoples, as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and developed in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling, in particular, its resolutions 2395(XXIII) of 29 November 1968, 2465(XXIII) of 20 December 1968, 2548(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, 2708(XXV) of 14 December 1970 and 3103(XXVIII) of 12 December 1973, as well as its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, and also Security Council resolutions 405(1977) of 14 April 1977 and 419(1977) of 24 November 1977, in which the Council denounced the practice of using mercenaries against developing countries and national liberation movements,

Recalling also its resolution 34/140 of 14 December 1979, in which it urged States to consider effective measures to prohibit the recruitment, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries,

Recognizing that the activities of mercenaries are contrary to fundamental principles of international law, such as non-interference in the internal affairs of States, territorial integrity and independence, and seriously impede the process of self-determination of peoples struggling against colonialism, racism and apartheid and all forms of foreign domination,

Bearing in mind the pernicious impact that the activities of mercenaries have on international peace and security,

Considering that the progressive development and codification of the rules of international law on mercenaries would contribute immensely to the implementation of the purposes and principles of the Charter,

Having taken note of the views and comments expressed by Member States on the item,

1. Decides to establish an Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries, composed of thirty-five Member States;

3. Requests the Committee to elaborate at the earliest possible date an international convention to prohibit the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries;

6. Requests Secretary-General to provide the Committee with any assistance and facilities it may require for the performance of its work;

7. Requests the Committee to present its report to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session an item entitled "Report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries."

Draft code of offences against the peace and security of mankind

In accordance with a 1978 General Assembly resolution,<sup>3</sup> the Secretary-General, by a note dated 24 April 1979, had invited Member States and intergovernmental organizations to submit their comments and observations on the draft code of offences against the peace and security of mankind prepared by the International Law Commission in 1954.<sup>4</sup> In 1947, the Assembly had asked the Commission to formulate the principles of international law recognized in the Charter of the Nürnberg Tribunal and in the Judgment of the Tribunal, before which the Nazi war crimes trials were held after the Second World War; the code defined the offences against the peace and security of mankind which were crimes under international law for which the responsible individual was to be punished.

The Secretary-General submitted a report to the Assembly at its 1980 regular session, containing the replies received from 19 Governments and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

The majority of the respondents favoured the draft code elaborated by the Commission which, they felt, should be reviewed in the light of the latest developments of international law. The Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Yugoslavia considered it essential to take into account the provisions of the conventions, international agreements, Assembly resolutions and other documents aimed at preventing offences against the peace and security of mankind, such as the crimes of genocide, racism, colonialism, war propaganda, and racial and national hatred, and acts punishable under the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949. They felt it especially important to make room in the code for apartheid as well as for the relevant elements of the Assembly's 1974 Definition of Aggression<sup>5</sup> and the principles of the 1968 Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity."

Chile, Norway and Senegal offered comments and suggestions on the concrete operation of the code; Norway suggested that the International Law Commission undertake a renewed study of the question. Botswana found it difficult to accept the notion of the punishment of individuals for offences of an international character and considered that the terms used lacked acceptable definitions. Guatemala said that penalties to be imposed on offenders should be defined taking into account the principle nullum crimen, nulla poena sine lege. The Netherlands and Sweden were among those which held that the problem of implementing the code should be solved, for example through the creation of an international criminal court.

Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States doubted the desirability of further consideration of the draft code at the current time. The United Kingdom suggested that the need for such a code had been obviated by other instruments, and said that in any case "offences against the peace and security of mankind" should first be clarified. The United States observed that agreement on a code seemed highly unlikely and disagreement would not only distract attention from issues of greater priority on which progress was possible but risked weakening the impact of the existing precedents.

On 4 December, on the recommendation of its Sixth (Legal) Committee, the General Assembly adopted by consensus resolution 35/49, by which it requested the Secretary-General: to reiterate his invitation to Member States and intergovernmental organizations to submit or update by 30 June 1981 their comments and observations on the draft code and, in particular, to inform him of their views on future procedure, including the suggestion of referring the item to the International Law Commission; to prepare an analytical paper, based on the replies received and on the statements made during the debate, to facilitate further consideration; and to report to the Assembly in 1981, when it would accord the item priority and the fullest possible consideration.

The Sixth Committee had, without vote on 6 November, approved the text introduced by Zaire on behalf of 23 Members (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

During the debate in the Committee, a number of States stated that resumption of work on the draft code had become timely as a result of changes in the concept of international offence and the adoption of the Definition of Aggression in 1974. Algeria, Bangladesh, Burundi, China, Colombia, Hungary, Senegal, Sierra Leone, and Trinidad and Tobago said the draft code should be re-examined, taking into account various instruments of international law concerning specific offences, including aggression, the taking of hostages, the crime of genocide, the protection of minorities, racial discrimination and especially apartheid. Zaire added that the very existence of a code would have a preventive effect by providing strict sanctions against offenders, would discourage the perpetuation of offences and would solve the important question raised by the principle nullum crimen, nulla poena sine lege.

China proposed that the main content of the code should be the grave offences against the peace and security of mankind represented by the illegal use of force in armed aggression and intervention, large-scale massacres of innocent people, genocide, colonial aggression and racial discrimination. Yugoslavia advocated a broad definition of aggression based on the contemporary conception of the principle of non-intervention which guaranteed to all peoples the right to decide freely their socio-political and economic system without outside interference.

Brazil, Egypt and Sweden were among those which raised the question of the mechanism necessary to implement the code. Sweden said that it would be unsatisfactory to leave implementation to national courts, since that might in many cases result in arbitrariness or in failure to take effective action against offenders.

Canada, while recognizing that there was a growing international awareness of the existence of universally reprehensible acts, as reflected in a number of legal instruments, wondered whether it would be useful to list, in a new instrument lacking implementation mechanisms, acts already recognized as offences and referred to not only in international instruments but also in national legislation. Similar views were expressed by France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States, all of which deemed further action to conclude a code neither currently necessary nor opportune.

As to the preparation of a code, views were divided. The majority, including Argentina, Brazil, Finland, Mongolia, New Zealand, Senegal and Venezuela, favoured remanding the issue to the International Law Commission with precise terms of reference. Others, such as Afghanistan, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Kuwait, the USSR and Yugoslavia, considered the Sixth Committee the most suitable body for studying the matter.

Bearing in mind its resolution 33/97 of 16 December 1978, by which it decided to accord priority and the fullest possible consideration to the item entitled "Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind,"

Recalling the belief that the elaboration of a Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind could contribute to strengthening international peace and security and thus to promoting and implementing the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations, Having considered the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 33/97.

Noting that further comments and observations on the draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind are yet to be submitted by Member States and relevant international intergovernmental organizations.

Taking into account the statements made during the debate on this item, and, in particular, to inform him of their views on the procedure to be followed in the future consideration of that item, including the suggestion of having the item referred to the International Law Commission;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, on the basis of the replies submitted by Member States and relevant international intergovernmental organizations and the statements made during the debate on this item, to prepare an analytical paper in order to facilitate the further consideration of the item;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session the item entitled "Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind" and to accord it priority and the fullest possible consideration.

Protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives

By a letter dated 11 June 1980 to the Secretary-General, Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden requested inclusion in the agenda of the thirty-fifth (1980) session of the General Assembly of an item entitled "Consideration of effective measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives."

An attached explanatory memorandum referred to the customary rules of international law regarding the privileges and immunities granted to such missions and representatives, which had been codified in international conventions, the most important of which were the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations<sup>7</sup> and the 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations.<sup>8</sup> The memorandum noted that there had been increasingly frequent violations of or failures to observe the relevant provisions of international law, including the physical safety of diplomatic and consular personnel and the inviolability of their premises. In the light of this development, it was urgent that the Assembly consider ways of enhancing respect for the rules of international law governing diplomatic and consular relations.

On the recommendation of the General Committee, the Assembly included the item in its agenda and allocated it to the Sixth (Legal) Committee, which considered it at eight meetings held between 8 October and 25 November.

On 15 December, on the Committee's recommendation, the Assembly adopted resolution 35/168 by which it deplored all violations of the principles and rules of international law governing diplomatic and consular relations, urged all States to observe and implement them and strongly condemned all acts of violence against diplomatic and consular missions and representatives.

It urged in particular all States to ensure, in conformity with their international obligations, the protection, security and safety of such missions and representatives in territory under their jurisdiction, including taking measures to prohibit therein illegal activities against their security and safety by persons, groups or organizations.

The Assembly called on all States which had not done so to consider becoming parties to the conventions concerning the inviolability of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, and, in cases where a dispute arose in connexion with violation of international law concerning that inviolability, to make use of the means for peaceful settlement of disputes, including the good offices of the Secretary-General. It invited them to report to the Secretary-General serious violations of the protection, security and safety of the missions and representatives in question, and invited the State in which the violations took place to report on measures taken to bring the offenders to justice, to prevent a repetition of such violations and eventually to communicate, in accordance with its laws, the final outcome of the proceedings against the offenders.

The Secretary-General was requested to: circulate to all States the reports he received, unless requested otherwise by the reporting State; invite all States to inform him of their views on measures needed to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives; and report to the Assembly in 1981 on the reports and views expressed. He was also invited to submit his own views on these issues.

Resolution 35/168 was adopted by consensus. The Sixth Committee had likewise approved the text, introduced by Norway on behalf of 22 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), on 25 November. The adopted text was a revised version of a draft submitted by the five Nordic States that had requested inclusion of the item in the agenda.

Before approval of the resolution, Iran expressed reservations; in its opinion, the text did not provide for adequate measures for protecting the rights and security of the receiving State from subversive activities by diplomatic and consular missions. Afterwards, the Netherlands expressed reservations regarding the penultimate preambular paragraph dealing with the obligation of persons enjoying privileges and immunities to respect the laws and regulations of the receiving State and not to interfere in the internal affairs of that State. The United Kingdom said it assumed that the "serious violations" which States were invited to report to the Secretary-General were of the kind referred to in article 2 of the 1973 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents;<sup>9</sup> these included an attack on, or threats or attempts to attack, the person or liberty of a protected person, his official premises, private accommodation or means of transport.

matic and consular missions, stressed the need to implement existing international instruments. The USSR drew attention to the need to protect the missions and representatives to international organizations. Australia, Canada, Morocco, the United States and Zaire expressed the view that international civil servants should also be included among the persons to be protected.

While many States placed emphasis on the responsibility of receiving or host States, Cuba, Morocco, Pakistan and Tunisia called attention also to the duty of the sending States to co-operate with host States and not to abuse the privileges and immunities granted.

Chile, Ecuador and Uruguay were among those which suggested that current circumstances required adaptation of existing instruments to current needs and that an additional instrument might be necessary. Need for severe punishment of offenders was emphasized by many States, including the Byelorussian SSR, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Spain and the USSR.

Canada, among others, suggested that the Secretary-General, through his good offices or otherwise, could help in resolving incidents of violent acts against missions.

Having considered the item entitled "Consideration of effective measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives,"

Recalling its resolution 33/140 of 19 December 1978,

Taking note of the comments made by the Secretary-General in section VII of his report on the work of the Organization,

Conscious of its duty to develop and strengthen friendly relations and co-operation among States,

Convinced that respect for the principles and rules of international law governing diplomatic and consular relations, in particular those aimed at ensuring the inviolability of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, is a basic prerequisite for the normal conduct of relations among States and for the fulfilment of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing that for the same reason it is also necessary to ensure respect for the principles and rules of international law aimed at protecting missions and representatives to international intergovernmental organizations,

Aware that respect for the principles and rules of international law concerning the status of officials of international intergovernmental organizations contributes to the promotion of international co-operation and understanding and that non-observance of those principles and rules is a matter of serious concern to the international community,

Recognizing that acts of violence against diplomatic and consular missions and representatives may seriously affect the maintenance of friendly relations and co-operation among States,

Deeply concerned at the increasing number of violations of, or failures to observe, the relevant principles and rules of international law pertaining to the inviolability of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives,

Expressing its sympathy for the victims of illegal acts against diplomatic and consular missions and representatives,

Recalling that the principles and rules of international law governing diplomatic and consular relations also contain an obligation, without prejudice to their respective privileges and immunities under international law, for all persons enjoying such privileges and immunities to respect the laws and regulations of the receiving State and not to interfere in the internal affairs of that State,

Emphasizing the need for strict observance by all States of the principles and rules of international law in order to ensure the conduct of normal diplomatic and consular relations,

1. Deplores all violations of the principles and rules of international law governing diplomatic and consular relations:

2. Strongly condemns in particular all acts of violence against diplomatic and consular missions and representatives;

3. Urges all States to observe and to implement the principles and rules of international law governing diplomatic and consular relations;

4. Urges in particular all States to take all necessary measures with a view to effectively ensuring, in conformity with their international obligations, the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives in territory under their jurisdiction, including practicable measures to prohibit in their territories illegal activities of persons, groups and organizations that encourage, instigate, organize or engage in the perpetration of acts against the security and safety of such missions and representatives;

5. Calls upon all States which have not yet done so to consider becoming parties to the relevant conventions concerning the inviolability of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives;

6. Calls upon all States, in cases where a dispute arises in connexion with violation of the principles and rules of international law concerning the inviolability of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, to make use of the means for peaceful settlement of disputes, including the good offices of the Secretary-General;

7. Invites all States to report to the Secretary-General serious violations of the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, and invites the State in which the violations took place to report also on measures taken to bring to justice the offenders and to prevent a repetition of such violations and eventually to communicate, in accordance with its laws, the final outcome of the proceedings against the offenders;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to circulate to all States, upon receipt, the reports received by him under the terms of paragraph 7 above, unless requested otherwise by the reporting State;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to invite all States to inform him of their views with respect to any measures needed to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session on the reports and views expressed pursuant to paragraphs 7 and 9 above and invites him to submit any views he may wish to express on these issues;

Relations with the host country

Committee on Relations with the Host Country

The Committee on Relations with the Host Country held three meetings in 1980. At its first, on 10 April, it had a preliminary exchange of views on a suggestion that the Committee study the possibility of contacting the host country, the United States, with a view to publishing a compilation of laws and regulations which should be known by the United Nations diplomatic community in New York; it found that the suggestion required further study.

With reference to the security of missions and the safety of their personnel, the USSR informed the Committee of details of the bomb explosion at its Mission on 11 December 1979,<sup>10</sup> which had caused considerable material damage. In the USSR's view, this was a terrorist act whose commission proved that the authorities of the host country did not provide adequate security. Those responsible should be punished severely and similar incidents prevented. The USSR demanded full compensation for the damage. In response, the United States indicated that it had officially expressed its deepest concern over the bombing, and reiterated its commitment to its responsibilities for the protection of diplomatic personnel and establishments.

The USSR also advised that, on 21 February 1980, a shot had been fired into the USSR Mission; it was only by chance that nobody had been hurt. The USSR found this incident demonstrated that the necessary safety of the Mission's staff was not being ensured. In this connexion, it drew attention to anti-Soviet propaganda by some circles in the United States, which it felt served to encourage the commission of such terrorist acts. In reply, the United States expressed deep regret over the incident. However, police ballistic experts had concluded that the bullet appeared to have been a random one fired by a handgun possibly a mile away. The United States stated that Soviet establishments enjoyed better protection than any other diplomatic mission in New York, and emphasized that it was not responsible for media coverage of incidents involving Soviet diplomatic establishments. Reaffirming the substance of its complaint, the USSR declined to accept the statements concerning the random nature of the shot.

The Committee also considered two other communications from the USSR concerning demonstrations in December 1979 and October 1980 in the immediate vicinity of its Mission. In the view of the USSR, these demonstrations, by members of Zionist organizations calling themselves the Students Struggle for Soviet Jewry and the Jewish Defense League, often combined with illegal acts of harassment of Mission personnel, were violations of the host country's international obligations. The United States responded that the demonstrations were lawful under its Constitution and local laws. It regretted and condemned any irresponsible acts by its citizens against Soviet personnel or property. To prevent further verbal harassment by alleged members of the Jewish Defense League, crime prevention teams had begun patrols in the vicinity of the Mission. Two persons had been arrested for harassment of a USSR counsellor and a hearing was scheduled. In this connexion, the United States emphasized it was important for the prosecution that the counsellor be made available to testify.

Angola informed the Committee that a disastrous fire of suspicious origin had swept through its Mission on 13 March. The United States replied that, while police and fire insurance underwriters had observed that the fire appeared to have been accidental, the New York City Fire Department believed that arson was the cause. The Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) would continue to investigate.

Cuba gave details to the Committee of the terrorist bomb explosion on 27 October 1979 in the street outside its Mission.<sup>11</sup> While no Cuban was injured, three United States citizens and a police officer had been hurt by flying glass, and serious material damage had resulted. Cuba recalled that this bombing was the third outrage committed against the Mission within 18 months. Although an organization known as "Omega 7" had publicly claimed responsibility, nothing had been done to prevent these acts. Allegedly, Omega 7 included Cuban counter-revolutionary elements trained by the United States Central Intelligence Agency. Cuba demanded appropriate reparations from the host country and found that the intolerableness of the acts called into question the advisability of maintaining United Nations Headquarters in New York.

Cuba also advised the Committee of 15 hostile acts against its Mission and personnel that had occurred between 28 August and 10 October 1980, including the assassination on 11 September of Félix García Rodríguez, an attaché at the Mission, while driving in the New York City borough of Queens. Persons identifying themselves as members of Omega 7 had claimed responsibility. In reply, the United States said it strongly condemned any hostile acts against Cuban or other diplomats, and gave assurances that it was devoting the greatest possible attention to the matter. Although, regrettably, no one had been apprehended or prosecuted to date, the United States was confident that in the near future the persons responsible would be made to answer for their crimes.

The text of letters sent on 3 June to all permanent missions in New York City was transmitted to the Committee by the United States. The letters drew attention to intensive efforts by the United States to improve the protection of missions in the city. In May, a Terrorism Task Force composed of FBI agents and members of the New York City Police Department had been established to investigate all terrorist acts in the city and attempt to apprehend the perpetrators. Initially the focus would be on Omega 7.

Among other matters considered by the Committee was a complaint that the Deputy Permanent Representative of the USSR and his wife had been stopped by police while travelling in a car with diplomatic licence plates. Despite those plates and the identity papers shown by the Soviet diplomat, he had been held at the scene for 25 minutes. The United States took the view that no violation of diplomatic immunity had taken place. Police radar, it said, had recorded the car travelling above the speed limit; the diplomat had been detained only long enough to verify his status. The USSR reaffirmed its position in a subsequent communication, objecting to the 25-minute period taken for confirmation as excessive and doubting the need for calling a high ranking police officer to verify the Ambassador's diplomatic status.

By recommendations approved on 14 November, at the second of two meetings held that month, the Committee:

- expressed concern over any acts of terrorism committed against members of the diplomatic community in New York, noted the assurances given by the competent authorities and recognized that effective measures should be taken in view of recent events;

- urged the host country to continue to take measures to prevent any acts violating the security of missions and the safety of their personnel or the inviolability of their property, and to take measures against those responsible;

- called on missions to co-operate with the Federal and local United States authorities in cases affecting mission security;

- called on the host country to avoid actions not consistent with its obligations under international law relating to the privileges and immunities of Member States;

- appealed to the host country to review measures with respect to the parking of diplomatic vehicles and to consider terminating the practice of issuing summonses to diplomats;

- welcomed the diplomatic community's readiness to co-operate in solving traffic problems, and noted the desirability of its making reasonable efforts to use off-street parking facilities;

- expressed the hope that an information programme would be carried out to acquaint the local population with the privileges and immunities of mission personnel and the importance of the international functions they performed;

- suggested that the Secretariat and others work together to solve difficulties caused by unpaid bills for goods and services rendered by private persons and organizations to certain missions and diplomats;

- expressed appreciation to the New York City Commission for the United Nations and the Consular Corps and to the bodies which contributed to its efforts to help the diplomatic community, provide hospitality and promote mutual understanding between that community and the people of New York City; and

- considered that its future meetings should be organized both at the request of Member States and as necessary to fulfil its mandate.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country was considered at the 1980 regular session of the General Assembly by the Sixth (Legal) Committee. Notes verbales of 12 and 19 May from Afghanistan, submitted to both Committees, and of 28 July from the USSR currently before the Sixth Committee brought to the attention of the Secretary-General difficulties encountered by the two States in obtaining United States entry visas for their representatives. They accused United States authorities of actions contrary to their obligations under the 1947 Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations (Headquarters Agreement),<sup>12</sup> which required the host country to impose no impediments for the transit to and from United Nations Headquarters by representatives of Member States. They asked the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to prevent the repetition of such occurrences.

On 15 December, the Assembly adopted by consensus resolution 35/165, by which, having noted with deep concern the recent increase in acts of terrorism against premises and personnel of missions accredited to the United Nations, it expressed its sympathy for the victims of such acts, noted the assurances given by the host country and recognized that effective measures should be taken in view of recent developments.

The Assembly endorsed the recommendations in the report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country and strongly condemned the acts of terrorism perpetrated against United Nations missions and their personnel. It requested the Secretary-General to remain actively engaged in all aspects of host country relations with the United Nations, in particular with regard to the need for effective measures by the host country, and to follow developments in co-operation with the Committee Chairman.

The resolution was approved by consensus by the Sixth Committee on 4 December. It was sponsored by Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Benin, Colombia, the Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, Guinea, the Ivory Coast, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Viet Nam and Zimbabwe.

During the debate in the Sixth Committee, all speakers attached importance to security of missions and the safety of their personnel and emphasized the need for effective measures to ensure their safety. The USSR said the situation had grown worse in the past year and cited numerous incidents such as bombings, hostile demonstrations and the assassination of the Cuban attaché. It considered that the measures taken by the host country to protect missions and prosecute perpetrators were inadequate and that its tolerant attitude towards certain groups verged on complicity.

Afghanistan, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba and the Ukrainian SSR concurred with the USSR and emphasized the need for compliance with the provisions of the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations<sup>13</sup> and the Headquarters Agreement.

Cuba pointed out that the assassination of its attaché had been described by United States officials as an act of terrorism. The assassins, it said, remained at large, however, although easily identifiable. Afghanistan's complaint about the difficulties created by the authorities of the host country with regard to providing entry visas to official representatives was supported by Cuba and the USSR. The Byelorussian SSR and the Ukrainian SSR appealed to the host country to consider terminating the practice of serving summonses to diplomats for traffic violations.

Egypt noted the housing crisis in Manhattan and the discrimination in that sector against diplomats, and expressed the hope that information efforts would be intensified to make the inhabitants of New York City aware of the privileges and immunities of missions and diplomats and of the importance of diplomatic operations. It also observed that the report of the New York

City Commission for the United Nations and the Consular Corps indicated that the diplomatic community had co-operated well in respecting the laws and regulations of the host country; as shown by a reduction in the number of traffic offences by diplomatic vehicles, and that the presence of the United Nations brought nearly $500 million annually to the city as against costs of $21 million.

The United States joined with others in condemning all acts of terrorism and expressed its sympathy with the victims. It noted, however, that violence and terrorism were world-wide phenomena from which the United States was not isolated. The United States was committed to carry out its obligations under international law and was making every effort to apprehend those responsible for terrorist acts. In this connexion, it stressed the importance of co-operation with United States authorities by the States concerned, which would enable the authorities to prosecute and punish the perpetrators.

In response to comments made concerning its tolerance in connexion with demonstrations against missions, the United States pointed out that respect for freedom of expression and of association was compatible with its international obligations; it categorically rejected any suggestions of improper or inadequate conduct on the part of the United States authorities.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country,

Recalling Article 105 of the Charter of the United Nations, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations and the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations,

Recalling further that the problems related to the privileges and immunities of the missions accredited to the United Nations, the security of the missions and the safety of their personnel are of great importance and concern to the Member States, as well as the primary responsibility of the host country,

Having noted with deep concern the recent increase in acts of terrorism against the premises and personnel of missions accredited to the United Nations, noting the assurances given by the competent authorities of the host country and recognizing that effective measures should be taken in view of recent developments, in particular to avoid any acts violating the security of missions and the safety of their personnel,

Expressing its sympathy for the victims of the acts of terrorism perpetrated against accredited missions and their personnel,

1. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country contained in paragraph 31 of its report:

2. Strongly condemns the acts of terrorism perpetrated against missions accredited to the United Nations and their personnel;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to remain actively engaged in all aspects of host country relations with the United Nations, in particular with regard to the need for effective measures to be taken by the host country in view of recent developments, and to follow developments in these areas in co-operation with the Chairman of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country;

4. Requests the Committee on Relations with the Host Country to continue its work, in conformity with General Assembly resolution 2819(XXVI) of 15 December 1971;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session the item entitled "Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country."

Teaching and knowledge of international law

Activities under the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law continued during 1980 in accordance with a 1979 General Assembly resolution."

Under the fellowship scheme, jointly administered by the United Nations and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR), 20 fellowships were awarded to young government officials and university teachers from the Bahamas, Bangladesh, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Costa Rica, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, Grenada, Guinea, New Zealand, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, Saint Lucia, Sri Lanka, Tunisia, Uganda, the Ukrainian SSR and Zaire.

Academy of International Law and seminars and special talks organized by UNITAR at The Hague, Netherlands. Some of them also received practical training in legal offices of the United Nations and its associated organizations and bodies.

The United Nations Office at Geneva again organized an International Law Seminar, sponsored by the International Law Commission and held during its annual session, held from May to July at Geneva. Twenty-five persons attended, each from a different country. Voluntary contributions from several Governments enabled a number of participants to receive fellowships. (See also p. 1126.)

of international trade law and to practical training under the United Nations/UNITAR fellowship scheme. The second UNCITRAL symposium on international trade law, which had been postponed in 1979 for lack of funds, was to be held during UNCITRAL's 1981 session at Vienna. (See also p. 1133.)

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization continued to contribute to the Programme through: the preparation of teaching material for use in universities; the convening at Vienna in January of an international congress on the teaching of disarmament in international law; and the granting of fellowships and financial assistance to non-governmental organizations carrying out training programmes, especially in the area of international and comparative law of human rights.

Legal aspects of the peaceful uses of outer space

The Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and its Legal Sub-Committee continued work in 1980 on two priority items: elaboration of draft principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting; and legal implications of remote sensing of the earth by satellites from space, with the aim of formulating draft principles on that subject. Discussion also continued on the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities, bearing in mind questions relating to the geostationary orbit, and existing international law relevant to outer space activities was reviewed with a view to determining whether supplemental provisions relating to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space might be appropriate.

By resolution 35/14 of 3 November, on international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space, the General Assembly endorsed the Committee's recommendation that the Sub-Committee should continue considering the first two items on a priority basis considering matters relating to definition and/or delimitation. The Assembly further decided that the Sub-Committee should consider at its next session an item on the possibility of supplementing the norms of international law relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space, for which purpose it established a Sub-Committee working group.

Observer status of national liberation movements

In accordance with a General Assembly decision of 17 December 1979,<sup>15</sup> an item concerning two resolutions adopted by the 1975 United Nations Conference on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations<sup>16</sup> was included in the agenda of the Assembly's 1980 regular session. It was allocated to the Sixth (Legal) Committee for consideration.

The resolutions<sup>17</sup> dealt, respectively, with the observer status in international organizations of national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and/or by the League of Arab States and with the application of the Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character,<sup>18</sup> adopted by the Conference, in future activities of international organizations.

a recorded vote of 97 to 10, with 29 abstentions, resolution 35/167 on this question. By the preambular part of the text, the Assembly noted that the Vienna Convention regulated only the representation of States in their relations with international organizations; the current practice of inviting national liberation movements recognized by OAU and/or by the League of Arab States to participate as observers in sessions of the Assembly, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and in the work of conferences held under their auspices, the Assembly was convinced, helped to strengthen international peace and co-operation.

By the operative paragraphs, the Assembly: invited all States which had not done so, particularly those which hosted international organizations or conferences convened by, or held under the auspices of, international organizations of a universal character, to consider as soon as possible ratifying or acceding to the Vienna Convention; called on the States concerned to accord to the delegations of the liberation movements in question the facilities, privileges and immunities necessary for the performance of their functions in accordance with the Convention; and requested the Secretary-General to report in 1982 on the implementation of this resolution.

In the Sixth Committee, the text, introduced by the United Arab Emirates on behalf of 25 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), was approved on 5 December by a recorded vote of 70 to 10, with 29 abstentions. The sponsors accepted an amendment by Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic and the USSR by which the paragraph inviting wider adherence to the Vienna Convention was added. The text and the amendments were orally modified by their sponsors: calls on and appeals to Member States were addressed to States in general.

Speaking before the vote in the Committee, Belgium, on behalf of the nine member States of the European Economic Community (EEC), observed that only two of the resolution's 25 sponsors had signed the Vienna Convention and only one had ratified it; moreover, the Convention applied only to States. Since the resolution had been submitted at the very end of the session, leaving no opportunity for a meaningful debate, EEC appealed for a postponement of the matter. Argentina made a similar appeal.

In explanation of their negative votes, Canada and the United States pointed out that the Convention had not come into force, they had not ratified it, and only a few States had done so. The content of the resolution had many legal ramifications, required extensive discussion and was not appropriate for a hasty decision, the United States added. Canada could not accept that representatives of entities other than States be equated with those of States for the purpose of privileges and immunities. Similar views were expressed by Italy and the United Kingdom.

Israel explained its negative vote by pointing out that the 1975 Conference had merely asked the Assembly to examine the question; the matter therefore ought not to have been rushed to a decision.

Brazil, China and the USSR indicated that their positive votes were based on their support for national liberation movements. However, if a separate vote had been taken on the three-power amendment, Brazil said it would have voted against it and China would have abstained.

Austria said it had abstained because the resolution referred to a Convention to which Austria was not a party and which was not in force. Japan abstained for similar reasons and said it would have voted against the amendment if it had been voted on separately. Chile said that, although it was a party to the Convention and recognized liberation movements which were recognized by their regional organizations, it had abstained because certain movements had entered into agreements with countries that were inimical to the independence, political stability and self-determination of Chile.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the resolution of the United Nations Conference on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations relating to the observer status of national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and/or by the League of Arab States,

Noting that the Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character regulates only the representation of States in their relations with international organizations,

Taking into account the current practice of inviting the above-mentioned national liberation movements to participate as observers in the sessions of the General Assembly, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and in the work of the conferences held under the auspices of such international organizations,

Convinced that the participation of the national liberation movements referred to above in the work of international organizations helps to strengthen international peace and co-operation,

Desirous of ensuring the effective participation of the above-mentioned national liberation movements as observers in the work of international organizations and of regulating, to that end, their status and the facilities, privileges and immunities necessary for the performance of their functions,

1. Invites all States which have not done so, in particular those which are hosts to international organizations or to conferences convened by, or held under the auspices of, international organizations of a universal character, to consider as soon as possible the question of ratifying, or acceding to, the Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character;

2. Calls upon the States concerned to accord to the delegations of the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and/or by the League of Arab States, and which are accorded observer status by international organizations, the facilities, privileges and immunities necessary for the performance of their functions in accordance with the provisions of the Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Administrative and budgetary questions

Chapter I

Administrative arrangements

Composition of the United Nations Secretariat

On 17 December 1980, the General Assembly adopted resolution 351/210 on personnel questions. An annex to the resolution set out procedures and mechanisms for recruitment and appointment for Secretariat posts in the United Nations.

By the resolution, the Assembly endorsed recommendations of its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee in the following areas : recruitment of Professional staff; geographical distribution of the staff and determination of desirable ranges; concepts of career, types of appointment, career development and related questions; and employment of women.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to undertake measures to: ensure a more equitable geographical distribution of Professional staff posts and better representation of unrepresented and under-represented countries; increase the proportion of women, particularly at senior levels; and implement procedures and mechanisms for recruitment and appointment such as classification of Professional posts, regular recruitment missions, establishment of an annual work plan of recruitment, recruitment through competitive examinations at the P-1 (Assistant Officer) and P-2 (Associate Officer) levels, and systematization of the use of recruitment rosters at the P-3 (Second Officer) level and above. It also requested the Secretary-General to continue to permit replacement by candidates of the same nationality within a reasonable time-frame in respect of posts held by staff members on fixed-term contracts, thereby ensuring that the representation of Member States whose nationals served primarily on such contracts was not adversely affected. The Assembly reaffirmed the need to apply the regulations regarding the age of retirement and not to grant exceptions beyond six months, and decided that 10 out of every additional 100 posts should be added to the population factor-one of three weighted factors, the other two being membership in the Organization and contribution to the United Nations budget, taken into account in determining the desirable ranges of posts subject to geographical distribution, desirable ranges being the maximum and minimum numbers of posts above and below which a State was regarded as being over- or under-represented.

Report of the Secretary-General on the composition of the Secretariat

The 1980 report of the Secretary-General on the composition of the Secretariat reviewed the progress made in achieving objectives established with regard to recruitment and to the employment of women. It showed the representation of Member States in posts subject to geographical distribution, noting that at the beginning of the reporting year (1 July 1979-30 June 1980) there were 19 Member States not represented in the Secretariat. Following appointments and separations, the figure as at 30 June 1980 was 18, including a newly admitted Member State, Saint Lucia. Similar figures for under-represented Member States, i.e. those whose number of nationals was less than the lower limit of their desirable range, were 22 at the beginning of the period and 21 at its end. In 1978, the Assembly had requested the Secretary-General to establish an appointment target of 40 per cent of all posts subject to geographical distribution for nationals of unrepresented and under-represented Member States.<sup>1</sup>

The report indicated that some of the recruitment guidelines and procedures established in pursuance of this target had been revised lest qualified candidates from over-represented countries be discouraged from applying for posts subject to geographical distribution. Under the revised procedures, priority would be given to candidates from unrepresented and under-represented countries, women and young candidates, but superior candidates from over-represented countries, in particular women and nationals of developing countries, would also be put forward for review by the appointment and promotion bodies.

Of 268 appointments to posts subject to geographical distribution during the review period, four had gone to unrepresented countries, 52 to under-represented countries, 109 to within-range countries and 102 to over-represented countries.

In 1978, the Assembly had also requested that the regulations regarding retirement at age 50 should be applied and extensions should not be granted except for the time required to find a suitable replacement-not normally more than six months.<sup>2</sup>

The policy adopted in conformity with this request had resulted in a reduction in the number of staff granted extensions beyond retirement age from 141 in the 1978 reporting year to 98 in 1979 and 60 in 1980. Of these, language staff accounted for 29 extensions in 1978, 25 in 1979 and 12 in 1980.

In response to an Assembly request that the representation of developing countries at the senior levels (D-I (Principal Officer) and above) should be increased,<sup>3</sup> the report showed the geographical distribution of staff from developed and developing countries at these levels. Statistics were also given on age distribution and on the proportion of men and women in the Secretariat.

In 1978, the Assembly had requested that the proportion of women in posts subject to geographical distribution should be raised to 25 per cent over a four-year period.<sup>4</sup> Progress towards this objective continued to be steady but slow. The proportion of women in these posts had increased from 17.8 per cent in the 1978 reporting period to 18.9 per cent in 1980. In view of the difficulties experienced, vacant posts were being earmarked as an exceptional measure to meet the target. Measures taken to meet the Assembly's request with respect to the employment of women included the introduction of greater flexibility in the employment of spouses of staff members and the extension of maternity leave with full pay from 12 to 16 weeks. In addition, following established policy, particular attention continued to be paid in the annual promotion review to female staff members who were eligible for promotion or assignment to positions of greater responsibility, so as to ensure that their chances of advancement at all levels were equal to those of men.

Report on the geographical distribution of Professional staff

In 1979, the General Assembly had requested the Secretary-General to report in 1980 on the system of desirable ranges for the representation of Member States in posts subject to geographical distribution.<sup>5</sup>

The first of the two reports submitted by the Secretary-General in response to this request discussed the evolution of desirable ranges and the factors and criteria determining them. Alternative tables were included to serve as a basis for revising the ranges. They were based on a redistribution of the membership and contribution criteria, whereas the population factor had been maintained.

The second report, after noting the principles and guidelines governing the recruitment of staff, reviewed the concept of staff in posts subject to geographical distribution, which were subject to the system of desirable ranges. These were staff of the regular Secretariat in the Professional category and above who were appointed by the Secretary-General for a period of one year or more. This excluded staff appointed by officials other than the Secretary-General, staff in posts with special language requirements, staff specifically appointed for mission service, staff in posts financed on an interagency basis, technical co-operation project personnel, staff with permanent resident status in the country of their duty station, and staff appointed specifically for service with the United Nations Environment Programme.

A number of criteria for establishing new ranges were examined, some of which had been suggested in 1979 by the Assembly.<sup>6</sup> These included the level of development of Member States, the direct application of the size of the population of Member States, the establishment of a relationship between ranges and contribution understood as either a proportion of a State's gross national product or its size per capita, the adoption of one of the indicators of capacity to pay considered by the Committee on Contributions in 1977,<sup>7</sup> the establishment of a ceiling on the percentage contribution for calculating the range of a Member State, and the weight of the posts.

The Secretary-General formulated his own proposals on the basis of the Assembly's suggestions and of his consultations with representatives of the regional groups. He believed that the system of calculating desirable ranges should continue to be based on the factors of membership, population and contribution. He was of the view that any change in the method of calculating ranges should be made without reducing substantially the current range of any Member State. To take into account both this need and the concerns of the Assembly, the system of ranges would be revised by first increasing the base figure of posts subject to geographical distribution and, subsequently, by adding weight to the membership factor every time the base figure increased by an additional 100 posts.

The report contained a number of tables showing the consequences of alternative ranges, increases in the base figure, and increases in the number of Member States.

Implementation of personnel policy reforms

Report of the Secretary-General

In an October 1980 report to the General Assembly, the Secretary-General discussed steps taken towards fulfilment of a comprehensive plan for the reform of the personnel policies of the Organization. These efforts were described under three main headings: the structure of the Secretariat, recruitment and staff administration. The report reviewed the establishment and maintenance of a job-classification system and the initial steps taken towards the administration of the staff on the basis of occupational groups. The Secretary-General had decided to establish a job-classification system for posts in the Professional category, up to and including the Director (D-2) level, starting in 1980. To this purpose, posts would be classified on the basis of job descriptions outlining the duties and responsibilities of each post. In the development of this system, the Secretary-General bore in mind the common job-classification standards developed by the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC). The first tier (the "master standard") of the three-tiered system of job-classification standards<sup>8</sup> had been recommended by ICSC for progressive application beginning in January 1981.

Job-classification efforts were also being carried out for General Service posts in Geneva, New York and Vienna. In New York, the possibility of replacing the five-grade structure of the General Service category by one consisting of more grades was being considered. Its introduction would require close co-operation with other United Nations organs in New York, such as the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Children's Fund, and the conduct of a new salary survey.

Questions reviewed under the second major heading-recruitment-included recruitment planning, vacancy bulletins and publicity, and the roster of external candidates. The planning of recruitment in the Secretariat was required for the attainment of the objectives set forth in Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations<sup>9</sup>- the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity, and recruitment on as wide a geographical basis as possible -as well as those indicated by the Assembly in a number of resolutions with respect to nationals of unrepresented and under-represented Member States, women and young people. The basic tools used for this purpose were the projection of vacancies and the computerized roster of external candidates. The report referred to a study which had revealed a number of problems impeding the optimum use of the roster, and to steps being taken to solve these problems and enhance the operation and use of the roster. Also discussed were the issuance of vacancy bulletins, the use of publicity, and direct contacts with women's organizations to further the recruitment policies of the Organization. A programme of competitive examinations for the recruitment of junior Professionals scheduled for 1979-1980, which could not be held as planned owing mainly to conflicting claims on the resources available, was rescheduled for early 1981, and trial tests with new content and format for the recruitment of General Service staff were being introduced and reviewed.

Staff administration questions included a discussion of efforts to further career development, encourage staff mobility, administer competitive examinations for the passage of staff in the General Service and other categories to the Professional category, expand training programmes such as the staff development and external studies programmes, and update the Headquarters personnel data system. The report referred, in particular, to the competitive examinations conducted in 1979-1980 to determine the eligibility of staff in the General Service and other categories for promotion to posts at the P-1 and P-2 levels of the Professional category, in conformity with a 1978 request by the General Assembly.<sup>10</sup> Applications for the examination had been received from 750 staff members. Of these, the 157 highest-ranking candidates were convoked for a total of 199 interviews by boards of examiners.

The Secretary-General concluded that, in spite of progress, the plan for personnel policy reform as a whole had not advanced as fast as might be hoped, due in the main to the complexity and extent of the administrative aspects of the Secretariat's work and to the claims on available resources.

Report of the Joint Inspection Unit

In September 1980, Maurice Bertrand (France), a member of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU), submitted a third report on the implementation of personnel policy reforms approved by the General Assembly in 1974.<sup>11</sup> The Inspector concentrated mainly on procedures with regard to recruitment. One of his principal recommendations was that competitive examinations already in use for the promotion of General Service staff to the Professional category should be extended to all recruitment at the lowest Professional grades (P-1 and P-2). This should be done through a series of examinations held in a large number of countries. By January 1983, all outside recruitment at these levels, amounting to some 80 posts a year, should be limited to those who passed the examinations.

The use of similar methods for recruitment at the P-3 level and the possibility of instituting a P-2/P-3 post category should be examined. In addition, the report proposed that recruitment to higher-level posts, for which competitive examinations were normally not suitable, should be based on the development and more systematic use of rosters both inside and outside the Secretariat. With regard to posts from P-3 up, priority should be given to internal promotion, with outside candidates to be considered only if no suitable person was already on the staff.

With regard to the competitive examinations currently being held for promotion of General Service staff to Professional posts, no examination should be held in 1980, to compensate for the fact that the Secretariat was planning to promote more persons that year than the Assembly had authorized. An end should be put to the exceptional measures that had permitted promotions from the General Service to the Professional category without competitive examinations. When examinations were resumed in 1981, promotions from the General Service category should be limited to 36 of the 120 posts, to meet the 30 per cent limit established by the General Assembly.<sup>12</sup>

In his comments on the JIU report, the Secretary-General noted that, in the next examinations for promotion from the General Service to the Professional category in 1981, he would be guided by the 30 per cent rule, but it would not be possible to quantify that percentage in advance by a specific figure such as the 36 suggested by JIU.

With respect to recruitment from outside to lower-level Professional positions, the Secretary-General agreed that, in most cases, competitive examinations were the most appropriate method. Examinations would be organized in such a way as to take into account the current representation of different nationalities in the Secretariat. However, he was not currently in a position to endorse the extension of competitive methods of selection to the P-3 level, and pointed out that coalescing of the P-2/P-3 grading levels would be incompatible with the job-classification system.

The Secretary-General proposed to report in 1982 on these matters as well as on the maintenance and use of the rosters of internal and external candidates; he agreed with the JIU recommendations concerning the need for greater use of the rosters.

JIU report on the status of women

in the Professional category and above

Another member of the JIU, Earl D. Sohm (United States), submitted in July 1980 a progress report on the representation of women in the Professional category and above in the organizations belonging to the United Nations common system of salaries and allowances. The aim was to increase the number of women in posts subject to geographical distribution to 25 per cent of the total over a four-year period.<sup>13</sup> The report, prepared in response to a 1978 request by the General Assembly,<sup>14</sup> updated a previous report on the subject.<sup>15</sup>

The Inspector stated that, despite a commitment by the organizations and obvious efforts to increase the proportion of women, there had actually been little change over the past three years in the percentage of women in the Professional category, except in the United Nations, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the Universal Postal Union and the World Health Organization. The percentage of Professional women in the 11 United Nations organizations studied had risen from 17.9 in 1977 to 18.3 by the end of 1979. The Inspector also noted a continued imbalance between men and women with regard to grade. The majority of Professional women was still concentrated at the P-2 and P-3 levels, in contrast to men, who were concentrated at the P-4 (First Officer) and sometimes P-5 (Senior Officer) levels. In addition, there were still only three women at the Assistant Secretary-General level, the same number as in 1976, and no woman had ever headed an organization in the United Nations system. Despite appeals, there was little evidence that Governments had responded by nominating more women candidates to vacancies in the secretariats.

The Inspector made a number of recommendations, such as: establishment of challenging targets; special recruitment missions; working with government representatives; contacts with organizations aware of qualified women; careful monitoring of the reactions of substantive units to women candidates; increased efforts to recruit young women at the lower grades as well as qualified women at the higher levels; review of training opportunities to enhance career development; review of promotion practices to ensure equal advancement opportunities; extension of the practice of part-time employment; and regular review of the situation by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC).

Commenting on the report, ACC endorsed the recommendations with regard to the setting of targets for the recruitment of women, the nomination of more candidates by Member States, and greater recruitment of young women at lower levels as well as qualified women at the P-3 level and above. Most of the other recommendations were already part of the practice of the organizations. The Committee also suggested that the Assembly should request that such efforts be pursued, reiterate its invitation to Member States to co-operate in the recruitment of women, and request the Secretary-General to report on progress in 1985.

Consideration by the General Assembly

On 10 December 1980, the General Assembly took note with appreciation of the two JIU reports when it adopted decision 35/427 (see p. 1236).

Discussion of the composition of the Secretariat, with primary emphasis on a review of the system of desirable ranges and personnel policy reforms, was held mainly in the Fifth Committee. The Committee established a Formal Working Group on Personnel Questions to examine the matters covered by the reports. The Group submitted a draft resolution, which was approved by the Committee on 12 December without objection. The Assembly adopted it in like manner on 17 December as six-part resolution 35/2 10.

By section I, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General: to continue with a 40 per cent target of all vacancies in Professional posts subject to geographical distribution during 1981-1982 for nationals of unrepresented and under-represented countries; to raise the recruitment levels of personnel from those countries through an active recruitment policy; to continue to permit replacement by candidates of the same nationality in posts held by staff on fixed-term contracts, whenever necessary to ensure that representation of States whose nationals served primarily on fixed-term contracts was not adversely affected; and to ensure application of the principle that no post should be considered the exclusive preserve of any State or group. The Assembly reaffirmed the need to increase representation of developing countries in senior posts and to apply the regulations regarding the age of retirement-not granting exceptions beyond six months.

By section II of the resolution, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to calculate new desirable ranges for all Member States, to apply from 1 January 1981 and to be based on specific criteria designating the base figure for calculation, the weights of the membership, population and contribution factors, and the upper and lower limits of each range. In future, 10 of every additional 100 posts were to be added to the population factor and the remainder assigned equally to the other two factors. The question of desirable ranges would be discussed again in 1986..

By section III, the Secretary-General was asked to implement procedures and mechanisms for recruitment and appointment set out in an annex to the resolution, for posts subject to geographical distribution in the Secretariat. The procedures covered: basic preliminary requirements, such as classification of posts and job descriptions, timely publication of pending vacancies and recruitment missions; establishment of an annual work plan of recruitment; the use of competitive examinations at the P-1 and P-2 levels; and methods of recruitment at the P-3 level and above, including vacancy announcements, and maintenance of a roster of and dossiers on candidates.

Section IV contained a request that ICSC and JIU study further, and collaborate in drafting reports for 1981 on, the concepts of career, types of appointment, career development and related questions.

By section V, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General and called on Member States to continue efforts to increase the proportion of women in the Professional category and above. It called on executive heads of United Nations organizations to end discrimination based on sex, and asked them to meet the 25 per cent target for 1982 set by the Assembly and by the July World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women (see p. 894) and to take measures affecting employment of spouses, part-time employment, flexible working hours, sexual harassment, elimination of prejudices and improvement of the status of women in those organizations, as well as other measures to advance policy directives concerning women, including the possibility of designating a senior official to co-ordinate these functions. The Assembly asked JIU to continue monitoring developments and report by 1982, and the Secretary-General, as ACC Chairman, to report in 1981 on organizations' progress.

By section VI, the Assembly decided that the application of its resolutions dealing with mandatory retirement at age 60 would not be rigorously applied to locally recruited General Service staff serving before December 1978 and having less than 20 years' contributory service in the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund at age 60. It asked the Secretary-General to continue providing facilities for the work of the Panel to Investigate Allegations of Discriminatory Treatment in the United Nations Secretariat, and to encourage Professional staff to work at more than one duty station; satisfactory performance during such tours should be a factor in evaluating them for promotion.

A draft resolution on the conduct of international civil servants, sponsored by Chad, was withdrawn before it was formally introduced. By this text the Assembly, deploring the distribution of anonymous materials within the United Nations premises disparaging to Member States or United Nations officials, would have requested the Secretary-General: to remind staff members and their representatives of the provisions of the United Nations Charter, the Staff Rules and Regulations and the standards of conduct in the international civil service, requesting them to refrain from action which reflected adversely on their positions as international officials responsible only to the Organization; to recognize as representatives of the staff only those covered by staff regulations 1.4 and 1.5, which stipulated that Secretariat members were to conduct themselves at all times in a manner befitting their status as international civil servants and exercise the utmost discretion in regard to official business matters; and to remind staff members and their representatives to utilize existing machinery, including the United Nations Administrative Tribunal, to deal with grievances and the resolution of disputes.

During the debate, a number of States, including Afghanistan, Australia, the Byelorussian SSR, Egypt, Ghana, India, Senegal and the United States, emphasized the importance of relevant Charter provisions, in particular those in Article 101, paragraph 3.

The Byelorussian SSR stated that this Article laid down very clear guidelines for the recruitment of staff and the determination of conditions of service with a view to securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity, with due regard to the importance of recruiting staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible. Those two aspects were interdependent and neither one could be allowed to take priority over the other. This position was also held by Australia, the German Democratic Republic, Sweden and others. Pakistan, Portugal and the United States underlined that the paramount consideration in the recruitment of staff under Article 101 (3) was the securing of the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on the other hand, felt that due regard had not been paid to the principle of equitable geographical distribution in applying those provisions. Rwanda said a number of countries had sought to over-emphasize the Secretary-General's responsibility for personnel questions as Chief Administrative Officer under Article 97 of the Charter.<sup>16</sup>

Australia, the Bahamas, Barbados, Egypt, New Zealand and Sweden emphasized the importance of an independent international civil service. Sweden shared the concern expressed by the Secretary-General over the growing political pressure and interference by Member States at all levels of the Secretariat in the recruitment and promotion processes. Egypt stated that it was in the interest both of Member States and of staff that the international civil service should be truly independent and not merely multinational or intergovernmental.

The new desirable ranges were supported by Hungary, New Zealand, Sweden, the Ukrainian SSR and Yugoslavia. Among those that had reservations were Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States. Japan was particularly concerned about the concept of parity between the contribution and membership factors, which it believed should be achieved gradually over a long period of time. The United States pointed out that, given the competing claims for scarce resources and the fact that the major share of the United Nations budget was met by a few Member States that often made very large voluntary contributions as well, a wise and sensitive individual would perceive the political realities inherent in the link between equitable representation and the total contribution to United Nations organizations.

Egypt, India, Indonesia, Morocco, Venezuela (which spoke on behalf of the "Group of 77" developing countries) and others did not find the new ranges completely satisfactory, since they did not establish total parity between the membership and contribution factors, but thought they represented a reasonable compromise that would bring about some improvement in the current inequitable situation of developing countries. India could not agree with the system of calculating desirable ranges which made a State's scale of assessment a paramount consideration. Thus, the largest contributor, which in comparison to its economic strength made no greater sacrifice than the smallest, claimed a quarter of the posts.

The view that the ranges were merely a tool and that the principles of Article 101 (3) should continue to be the paradigm, was shared by the Bahamas, New Zealand, Sweden and the United States.

The preference to be given in recruitment to nationals of unrepresented and under-represented Member States and the establishment of a 40 per cent recruitment target for that purpose received the support of Afghanistan, the Byelorussian SSR, Colombia, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Mongolia, Nigeria, Portugal, Rwanda, the Sudan and Sweden. Egypt, Ghana, Indonesia, Pakistan, and Trinidad and Tobago considered that special measures to recruit nationals of these countries should not include halting recruitment of candidates from over-represented countries. Portugal emphasized that such measures should be taken subject to the paramount consideration set forth in Article 101(3).

Many countries, including Barbados, Canada, Denmark, Mongolia, Portugal, Trinidad and Tobago, Yugoslavia and the United States, supported the measures designed to increase the proportion of women in the Secretariat, particularly at the senior levels. The Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Indonesia, Rwanda, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic and others emphasized that those measures should be taken in accordance with the principle of geographical distribution. In this context, Nigeria pointed out that, because of cultural and other factors, Africa had been unable to evolve an adequate system of education for its women; it would be unfortunate if the developed countries, which already appeared to have more than their share of male recruits, were to take advantage of the provisions for increased recruitment of women to increase the total recruitment of their nationals.

Togo appealed to the under-represented countries to put forward more female candidates for vacancies. It added that the recruitment of women should not be carried out on a regional basis since such a system would prove discriminatory owing to the differences between regions with respect to concern over women's issues.

Australia, New Zealand and the United States strongly supported the designation of a senior official to co-ordinate functions related to the attainment of the policy directives concerning the appointment, promotion and assignment of women. Rwanda had reservations on this point and felt that a special post was not necessary.

The Syrian Arab Republic and Trinidad and Tobago underlined the importance of the work of the Panel to Investigate Allegations of Discriminatory Treatment. Moreover, complainants must be safeguarded against victimization, Trinidad and Tobago said.

Algeria, Barbados, Egypt, Indonesia, Nigeria, Senegal and others supported an increase in the representation of developing countries in senior and policy-making posts. Japan, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Morocco, Nigeria, Rwanda, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, and Trinidad and Tobago, among others, reaffirmed that no post should be considered the exclusive preserve of any Member State or group of States. Afghanistan, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, the USSR and others supported the continuing replacement by candidates of the same nationality in respect of posts held by staff members on fixed-term contracts, to ensure that the representation of Member States whose nationals served primarily on such contracts was not adversely affected. Trinidad and Tobago believed that continuation of that practice was intended to provide a practical solution to a short-term situation and was not in any way a contradiction or violation of the basic principle of non-inheritance of posts. To Canada, such an arrangement was not a right but rather a matter for the discretion of the Secretary-General. Portugal believed that replacement of staff members by others of the same nationality must not be made beyond the bounds necessary to redress imbalances in representation.

The USSR's view that the number of permanent contracts should be reduced and the number of fixed-term contracts increased in order to enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of the Secretariat was strongly supported by Afghanistan, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia and the Ukrainian SSR. Bulgaria in particular considered that a greater use of fixed-term contracts would make it possible for all Member States to attain their desirable ranges more speedily and for the 25 per cent target for the employment of women to be attained without any further staff increases.

Egypt, Japan, Nigeria, Rwanda, Togo and others supported the strict application of the regulations on the age of retirement. The Sudan and the Syrian Arab Republic felt that not even six-month extensions should be granted. The United States, however, believed that the age of retirement should be flexible, so that experienced and competent staff could be retained, regardless of age.

Many countries, among them Algeria, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Portugal, Trinidad and Tobago, and Yugoslavia, supported the proposed new recruitment procedures. Competitive examinations for recruitment, at the P-1 and P-2 levels in particular, received the support of Japan, Sweden, Togo, the United Kingdom, Yugoslavia and others. The Ukrainian SSR cautioned that cultural or linguistic discrimination should be avoided. Mongolia and Togo stressed that the ceiling of 30 per cent of posts to be filled by General Service-to-Professional examinations should be strictly enforced.

With reference to proposed reports on the concepts of career, types of appointment, career development and related questions, the Federal Republic of Germany, Pakistan and the United Kingdom expressed the view that the constitutional authority for dealing with personnel questions was vested in ICSC and not in JIU.

Many countries, including Algeria, Australia, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Morocco, Rwanda, the Sudan, Trinidad and Tobago, and the USSR, considered the resolution an acceptable compromise. Rwanda hoped its adoption would bring about a new dynamic recruitment policy which would take into account the interests of unrepresented and under-represented countries. Trinidad and Tobago described the resolution as a turning-point in the relationship between developed and developing countries and hoped that it would ultimately result in full equality of representation in the Secretariat.

The General Assembly,

Conscious of the importance that Member States attach to the personnel questions of the Organizations,

Recalling the personnel policy and policy reform measures set out in its resolutions 1436(XIV) of 5 December 1959, 31/26 of 29 November 1976, 32/17 of 11 November 1977, 33/143 of 20 December 1978 and 34/219 of 20 December 1979,

Having examined the reports of the Secretary-General on the composition of the Secretariat and on the implementation of personnel policy reforms,

Taking note of the reports of the Joint Inspection Unit on the implementation of the personnel policy reforms approved by the General Assembly in 1974 and on the status of women in the Professional category and above in the United Nations system,

Concerned about the limited progress achieved in the establishment of a coherent personnel policy, as well as in the implementation of the measures set out in the above-mentioned resolutions,

Noting the suggestions made by Member States during the deliberations of the Fifth Committee on this question at the thirty-fifth session,

Convinced that the effective and consistent implementation of the personnel policy and policy reform measures adopted by the General Assembly calls for an integrated approach to the personnel management requirements of the Organization,

Reaffirming that, as set out in Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations, the paramount consideration in the employment of staff at every level is the need for the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity, and convinced that this is compatible with the principle of equitable geographical distribution,

Recalling Article 8 of the Charter on the equality of opportunity for men and women to participate in the work of the Organization,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to establish a target of 40 per cent of all vacancies arising in Professional posts subject to geographical distribution during the period 1981-1982 for the appointment of nationals of unrepresented and under-represented countries, in order to ensure that all such countries achieve their desirable ranges during that biennium, while ensuring that the representation of countries which are within desirable ranges does not decrease:

2. Requests the Secretary-General to establish and pursue an active recruitment policy in order to raise the levels of personnel recruited from unrepresented and under-represented countries and countries below the midpoint of their desirable ranges to the extent possible towards this midpoint;

3. Reaffirms that no post should be considered the exclusive preserve of any Member State, or group of States, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure that this principle is applied faithfully in accordance with the principle of equitable geographical distribution;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to permit replacement by candidates of the same nationality within a reasonable time-frame in respect of posts held by staff members on fixed-term contracts, whenever this is necessary to ensure that the representation of Member States whose nationals serve primarily on fixed-term contracts is not adversely affected;

5. Reaffirms the need to increase the representation of developing countries in senior and policy-formulating posts, while safeguarding the principle of equitable geographical distribution in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

6. Reaffirms the need to apply the regulations regarding the age of retirement and not to grant exceptions beyond six months after the established age of retirement;

II

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the geographical distribution of Professional staff in the Secretariat,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to calculate new desirable ranges for all Member States, to apply from 1 January 1981, on the basis of the following initial criteria:

(a) The base figure for the calculations will be 3,350 posts;

(b) The membership factor will be based on 7.75 as the midpoint of the minimum desirable range;

(c) The population factor, to which 240 posts shall be allocated, will be directly related to the populations of the various regions and be distributed among the regions in proportion to their populations;

(d) The contribution factor will be based on the distribution of the remaining posts in proportion to the scale of assessments;

(e) The upper and lower limits of each range will be based on a flexibility of 15 per cent up or down from the midpoint but not less than 5.75 posts up or down;

2. Decides that, in future, 10 out of every additional 100 posts shall be added to the population factor, and the remaining posts shall be assigned equally to the membership and contribution factors;

3. Decides further to review at its forty-first session the question of desirable ranges, taking into account the concept of parity between the membership and contribution factors and discussions on this concept at the thirty-fifth session;

III

Conscious of the need to define objective methods of recruitment in order to ensure the full implementation of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

Requests the Secretary-General to implement the procedures and mechanisms for recruitment and appointment described in the annex to the present resolution and to report to the General Assembly annually on their implementation;

IV

Recalling its resolution 1436(XIV) of 5 December 1959, in which it recommended, inter alia, that the Secretary-

General's endeavours to increase the number of the Secretariat staff appointed on fixed-term contracts should be continued and encouraged,

Noting the growing tendency to increase the number of fixed-term appointments of staff in various organizations of the United Nations system,

Concerned about the limited progress in the establishment of a policy of career development,

Aware of the divergent views on such matters as various concepts of career, types of appointment and career development expressed, inter alia, in the reports of the Joint Inspection Unit and the International Civil Service Commission,

Recognizing the need to study further those matters and their impact on the implementation of Article 101 of the Charter of the United Nations and personnel policy reforms,

1. Requests the International Civil Service Commission and the Joint Inspection Unit to study further the subjects of the concepts of career, types of appointment, career development and related questions and to submit separate reports thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session;

2. Invites the International Civil Service Commission and the Joint Inspection Unit to co-operate in the drafting of those two reports;

V

Noting resolution 24 adopted by the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women and the report of the Joint Inspection Unit on the status of women in the Professional category and above in the United Nations system,

2. Takes note of the work of the Panel to Investigate Allegations of Discriminatory Treatment in the United Nations Secretariat and requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Panel with the necessary facilities for its activities;

3. Reiterates its requests to the Secretary-General that Professional staff of the United Nations should be encouraged to work at more than one duty station and that satisfactory performance during such tours of duty should be considered an additional positive factor in evaluating them for promotion.

ANNEX

Recruitment procedures for posts subject to geographical distribution in the United Nations Secretariat

I. Basic preliminary requirements

1. All posts shall be classified at each level of grades by occupation, this concept meaning "posts having largely comparable functions and the same entrance level qualifications." This classification shall be published.

2. Distinction shall be made between:

(a) Occupations for which it is reasonable to expect several vacancies each year;

(b) Those for which recruitment will be open only at widely spaced intervals.

3. For posts falling under category 2(a), job descriptions shall be complemented by an "occupational description," which will outline the main functions, the minimum level of qualifications and the desirable supplementary qualifications.

4. The vacancy announcement for all posts shall incorporate the existing job description. All changes in existing job descriptions and the content of job descriptions of new posts shall be submitted for approval to the Office of Personnel Services, justified by references to changes in programmes approved by intergovernmental bodies.

5. All pending departures of staff shall be made known to the Office of Personnel Services by the substantive departments as far in advance as possible of the actual departure date.

6. No prior commitments for appointments shall be made by the substantive departments.

7. In order to increase the number of candidates from under-represented and under-represented countries and of women candidates:

(a) Timely and frequent publicity shall be made regarding vacancies and recruitment of personnel, in co-operation with Member States, through information media, United Nations offices, universities and professional organizations, including women's organizations whenever appropriate, so as to enable the Office of Personnel Services to implement the personnel and recruitment policies adopted by States Members of the Organization;

(b) Regular recruitment missions composed of officials from both the Office of Personnel Services and the substantive departments shall be sent.

II. Annual work plan of recruitment

8. In order to facilitate the search for and the appointment of qualified candidates, particularly from unrepresented and under-represented countries and from among women, an annual work plan of recruitment shall be established. The plan shall indicate:

(a) General data on the estimated number of recruitments by grade and broad occupational groups;

(b) The targets to be reached during the year as to the number of candidates to be recruited from unrepresented and under-represented countries and among women, in accordance with the targets established by the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

(c) The various means by which recruitment will be undertaken, such as competitive examinations, publicity or recruitment missions.

9. The Secretary-General will report to the General Assembly each year on the implementation of the plan.

III. Use of competitive methods at the P-I and P-2 levels

10. At the P-I and P-2 levels, recruitment shall be made as a rule through competitive examinations. This principle shall be applied as follows:

(a) Movement of staff from the General Service category to the Professional category shall continue to be limited to 30 per cent of the total number of posts available for appointment at these levels and is to be regulated exclusively through competitive examinations under the conditions outlined in section I, paragraphs 1 (g) and (i), of General Assembly resolution 33/143 of 20 December 1978. No exceptions shall be authorized,

(b) For the remaining 70 per cent of posts at the P-I and P-2 levels, a transitional plan ending 31 December 1982 shall be established for applying progressively the method of competitive examination, with due regard paid to the principle of equitable geographical distribution.

(c) Competitive examinations under the plan shall be devised on a national basis, in consultation with the Governments concerned. They shall contain measures to protect the confidentiality and objectivity of the methods of selection and to ensure that the methods of testing take into account the cultural and linguistic diversity of the membership of the United Nations. They shall be geared candidates with at least a first-level university degree. The examinations should be based on written tests in one of the official languages of the United Nations, including a general test, specialized examination by occupational groups and personal interview. They may be organized simultaneously by groups of countries, but a given number of vacancies should be defined and offered to each country in advance, taking into account the geographical representation of each Member State. A reserve list shall be established from which all P-I and P-2 posts will be filled.

IV. Methods of recruitment at the P-3 level and above

11. The list of occupations for which it is reasonable to expect several vacancies each year, as stated in section I, paragraph 2. (a). above, shall be communicated to Member States, together with the corresponding "occupation description" not later than 1 October of the preceding year, and applications for candidatures shall be requested on this basis.

12. Vacancy announcements for all posts shall be issued without delay as soon as vacancies are known.

13. All applications received from candidates meeting the minimum standards established by the Office of Personnel Services for posts and occupations shall be put into the roster of external candidates. This roster shall be modernized rapidly and rendered operable and efficient. A roster of internal candidates should be developed and organized along the same lines and used in accordance with the Staff Regulations and Rules of the United Nations.

14. For each post open to recruitment a dossier shall be established comprising:

(a) A list of all potential qualified candidates, indicating name, nationality, sex, age and qualifications: this list shall be drawn from the roster;

(b) Their ranking by order of preference established by the substantive department concerned in consultation with the Office of Personnel Services;

(c) A summary of the interviews of the candidates considered most suitable.

This dossier shall be made available to the Appointment and Promotion Committee and the Appointment and Promotion Board.

15. For the evaluations of the candidates, the Office of Personnel Services, in consultation with the substantive departments concerned, shall take into account the targets indicated in the annual recruitment work plan.

16. If the substantive department and the Office of Personnel Services agree on the selection of one candidate, this recommended candidate will be proposed for appointment, in accordance with the Staff Regulations and Rules of the United Nations. If there is no agreement, the matter shall be submitted for advice to the Appointment and Promotion Committee and the Appointment and Promotion Board. If no solution is found, the Secretary-General or his designated representative will take the final decision.

17. The qualifications, nationality and sex of selected candidates shall be indicated on a list to be published twice a year and communicated to the delegations of Member States.

United Nations salary system

The General Assembly, after examining the report of the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) for 1980, adopted resolutions 35/214 A-C, affecting aspects of the salary and benefit system, including increases in the education grant, travel entitlements thereunder and home leave. It requested the Commission to complete its review of the post adjustment system, used to equalize the purchasing power of staff members serving in different countries, invited co-operation in the implementation of a new three-tier job-classification system,<sup>17</sup> consolidated 30 points of post adjustment into base pay of the Professional and higher categories, requested a study of the conditions of service of the General Service category and locally recruited personnel, and approved an ICSC classification of duty stations according to conditions.

By other decisions affecting remuneration, the Assembly increased the emoluments of the Secretary-General by an amount corresponding to a decrease in his post adjustment allowance, raised the annual compensation of some officials working for the Assembly who were not Secretariat officials and increased the salaries and daily fees of members of the International Court of Justice and ad hoc judges.

Details of these and other decisions are given in this subchapter.

Report of the International Civil Service Commission

The International Civil Service Commission held two sessions in 1980, its eleventh, at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 19 February to 14 March, and its twelfth, at Geneva from 14 July to 8 August. Its Advisory Committee on Post Adjustment Questions held its resumed fourth session from 30 January to 4 February and its fifth session from 30 June to 8 July, both at Geneva.

The 1980 ICSC report reviewed post adjustment and salary systems, education and death grants, job-classification standards, the classification of duty stations and special career-development programmes. Adjustments in pension entitlements were also examined (see p. 1180). The Commission recommended revised salary and staff assessment scales for the General Service category, effective 1 January 1981, and the consolidation of 30 points of post adjustment into the base salary of staff in the Professional and higher categories in order to correct certain anomalies and rectify the deficit, estimated for 1980 at some 30 per cent, in the Tax Equalization Fund, which receives money from staff assessments to provide reimbursement to staff paying income tax on their United Nations earnings without becoming a financial charge on Member States that did not impose such taxes. The Commission also recommended an increase in the education grant for non-disabled children -maximum reimbursable costs would increase from 75 per cent of the first $2,250 to 75 per cent of the first $3,000 a year-an increase in the periodicity of home leave to 18 and 12 months for staff serving in difficult and very difficult duty stations, and in some cases provision of dependent children's travel twice instead of once per year between duty stations and distant places of schooling.

With regard to supplementary payments to international civil servants of certain nationalities by their Governments, ICSC recommended that the General Assembly call to the attention of all Member States that such practice was unnecessary, inappropriate, undesirable and inconsistent with the Staff Regulations. The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination endorsed that recommendation in a statement transmitted by the Secretary-General on 19 November.

Other recommendations were that executive heads be delegated the authority to grade posts, subject to any appropriate control mechanisms, and that additional resources be provided to them to implement and maintain the common system job-classification standards promulgated by ICSC. While recommending to organizations the adoption of measures to ensure that adverse discrimination did not play a role in staff members' careers, ICSC recommended that they not institute special career-development programmes which would single out and groom for higher grades or establish target quotas at given grade levels for certain groups. The Commission recommended that no change be made to the current death grant benefit scheme.

Consideration by the General Assembly

For the first time, the views of the Federation of International Civil Servants' Associations (FICSA) on matters affecting its members were placed before the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee at the Assembly's 1980 regular session, transmitted in a note by the Secretary-General. Commenting on the ICSC report, FICSA, representing through its 29 member associations and unions more than 40,000 international civil servants, supported ICSC recommendations on education grant increases, travel and some leave changes, career development and job classification, but strongly opposed the introduction of a revised scale of assessments for the General Service. It urged the Assembly to postpone any decision on this matter and to mandate ICSC to undertake a revision of the existing scales for the General Service and Professional categories, with a view to making a recommendation for a new single scale applying to all staff. With regard to supplementary payments by Governments, FICSA proposed that the Assembly mandate ICSC to examine the level of base salaries, with a view to adjusting them in such a way that they would attract staff of all nationalities. Opposing the practice of paying low salaries to national or local recruits, it suggested that ICSC be asked to study legal aspects of such Professional employees. It also proposed that ICSC be asked to include in its work programme questions relating to the employment of women.

The Secretary-General estimated that ICSC's recommendations would cost the United Nations about $900,740 in 1981, almost half of it pertaining to the education grant proposal, a figure with which the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) concurred.

Speaking in the Fifth Committee, the United States said it considered United Nations salaries and benefits to be excessive in comparison to the pay of national civil servants. Afghanistan said it would be inappropriate to raise salaries at a time when they already exceeded those of the United States civil service by 16 per cent. According to both these countries, there should be no increase in benefits until ICSC had completed its comparison of total pay of national and international civil servants. The United Kingdom said the fact that United Nations salaries were 16 per cent higher did not warrant any corrective action; to relate the pay of top officials strictly to the United States civil service would introduce serious anomalies into the pay structure and cause their salaries to fall below desirable levels. Ghana suggested that consideration be given to the idea of reviewing staff salaries regularly, perhaps every four or five years. The Federal Republic of Germany said it would co-operate with ICSC in its study of whether the Federal Republic's civil service was currently the best-paid national civil service; in the comparison, the expatriate factor in the international civil service should be given greater recognition where necessary.

Concerning the post adjustment system, the United States said it was defective because it applied cost-of-living adjustments to almost the entire net salary, and United Nations staff members were over-compensated for inflation, as the cost-of-living adjustments clearly took into account extraneous expenditures. The United Kingdom supported the ICSC proposal to reduce slightly the cost-of-living allowance for Professional staff. The Ukrainian SSR held it necessary to improve the methodology for calculating post adjustment. The Federal Republic of Germany called for a study of the distortions in the system so as to correct inequities. Pakistan said anomalies in the system might stem from the fact that at the time of its establishment 20 years earlier the United States dollar had been overvalued. The Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Japan, Pakistan and the United Kingdom supported the ICSC proposal to shift part of the post adjustment component of pay into the base salary. The United States did not currently want to support this measure because it was based on a faulty post adjustment system and would raise base salaries to a higher level than they would be if a more realistic formula were used to measure cost-of-living differences. Afghanistan felt the proposal could not be endorsed before additional information was supplied on its effects.

The United States expressed the view that it would be clearly justifiable to increase the staff assessment paid in lieu of national income tax, while Czechoslovakia said it was time to abolish the Tax Equalization Fund; it suggested that the Assembly call on Member States to exempt their nationals from the payment of national income tax.

The United States considered the education grant-paid to Professional staff serving outside their home countries to compensate them for the extra costs for their children's schooling-excessive, and opposed extending it to General Service staff or to Professionals serving in their home country. The Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Pakistan and the United Kingdom, however, supported ICSC's recommendation to raise the level of that grant.

Those four countries and Japan accepted the ICSC plan to classify duty stations so as to identify places where living conditions were difficult enough to warrant compensatory measures. The United States said the ICSC proposals to enable home travel more often at the employing organization's expense had not been convincingly justified or accurately costed.

Japan was pleased to note that ICSC had formulated the first tier (the "master standard" applicable from 1 January 1981) of its three-tiered system of job-classification standards. It expressed the belief that the standards would contribute to realization of the objective of equal pay for equal value. In the Federal Republic of Germany's opinion, job classification should not be too rigid in lower Professional grades, where separation into different levels of responsibility could become artificial. Austria felt uneasy about the system, which seemed to it to be complex and far removed from reality. For Afghanistan and the USSR, the ICSC proposals on job classification were unacceptable; in the USSR's opinion, the right to determine the level and number of posts had to remain the prerogative of the Assembly. Moreover, in working out the system, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR said, ICSC had drawn most of its models from systems used in the private sector, thus conflicting with the Noblemaire principle (basing the pay of the Professional and higher categories on pay levels of the highest paying comparable national civil service).

India, on the other hand, was convinced that the concept of an international civil service of which the Noblemaire principle was an essential part had long ago disintegrated, and it would make sense to discard that principle-proceeding carefully, however, to avoid hardship. Certain countries, India said, would continue to subsidize their nationals in the Secretariat not because they were poorly paid but to retain control over them. As long as that practice continued, other Members would continue to regard with suspicion staff members from countries making such payments. Pakistan and Mauritania also considered supplementary payments to be inappropriate, as did the Syrian Arab Republic, which warned that it could have serious consequences for staff morale.

Most speakers expressed support for what they regarded as the important role of ICSC. The United Kingdom added that it regretted breaches of the common system of pay and allowances, whether such breaches were committed by the International Labour Organisation, the World Health Organization or the General Assembly.

The Assembly acted on the ICSC recommendations in adopting, by a recorded vote of 125 to 0, with 12 abstentions, resolution 34/214 A on 17 December. The Fifth Committee approved the text on 9 December by a recorded vote-requested by the USSR-of 84 to 0, with 14 abstentions; it had been submitted by Argentina, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, Pakistan, the Philippines, Trinidad and Tobago, and the United Kingdom.

By section I of the six-part resolution, the Assembly requested ICSC to present the results of its review of the post adjustment system to the Assembly at its 1981 session. It invited ICSC to complete its examination of the Noblemaire principle with a view to achieving comparability of compensation and ascertaining if the current comparator (the United States) was still the highest paid civil service.

By section II, the Assembly invited ICSC, the Secretary-General and all organizations that had accepted the Commission's statute to co-operate in implementing the three-tier job-classification system.

By section III, the Assembly requested ICSC to continue studying the principles and the methodology for surveys to determine the conditions of service, including gross salaries, of the General Service and locally recruited personnel.

By section IV, revised salary scales (see pp. 1170-1172) and consequential amendments to the Staff Regulations were approved, following the consolidation of 30 points of post adjustment into base pay, effective 1 January 1981. Staff Regulation amendments also gave effect to revisions of the education grant and of home leave and education-grant travel entitlements. These amendments were annexed to the resolution.

By this same section, the Assembly requested that the Commission review the possibility of extending the education grant to all internationally recruited staff, wherever they served, and, approving ICSC's classification of duty stations according to conditions of life and work, noted its intention to study further financial incentives for those serving in the most difficult stations.

By section V, ICSC was asked to begin as soon as possible a review of the language incentive scheme and to keep under review and report in 1982 on the possibility of establishing a cost-effective contributory system of death grant benefits. The Assembly welcomed ICSC's proposed examination of the relationship between the staff assessment system and the Tax Equalization Fund.

By section VI, the Assembly decided to establish from 1 January 1981, three temporary posts in the Cost-of-Living Section of the ICSC secretariat, pending a study due in 1981 of the long-term needs of that secretariat. It asked ICSC to continue providing the financial implications of all its recommendations.

Separate recorded votes were taken on section IV in both the Fifth Committee, at the request of the USSR, and the Assembly; it was approved in Committee by 70 votes to 11, with 8 abstentions, and in the Assembly by 118 to 11, with 4 abstentions.

Speaking in explanation of vote in the Committee, Algeria said it had voted for the provisions of section IV on the understanding that the criteria used to identify difficult duty stations would be applied equally and without discrimination in respect of all staff. The United Republic of Tanzania abstained, considering that the difficult stations should have been identified before the Committee was asked to decide on remedial measures. The United States voted against section IV and abstained in the vote on the resolution; it could not support the consolidation of 30 points of post adjustment into base salary, believed the methodology used was faulty, did not favour extending staff benefits until ICSC had reported on the total remuneration and conditions of service enjoyed by staff vis-à-vis the best-paying national civil service, believed that benefits under the education grant were already too high, opposed their payment to staff members living in their own country and disagreed with the idea of extending them to other staff, and could not currently support the proposal to change the frequency of home leave at difficult duty stations.

Egypt, while voting in favour, regretted that the text failed to cover the issues of supplementary payments to staff by Governments and the remuneration of nationally recruited Professional staff, particularly in developing countries, in accordance with local pay scales. Somalia said it had abstained, not having been consulted on the contents at any stage. Guinea observed that it had not taken part in the vote, not having had a text in their working language.

By resolution 35/214 B, adopted without vote on 17 December, the Assembly approved a revised scale of staff assessment for General Service and other locally recruited staff, including transitional arrangements, recommended by ICSC to avoid salaries lower than existing ones as a result of application of the new scales, which would reflect the most recent tax rates in the seven headquarters countries and in 10 others where regional offices were located. The Assembly also approved consequential amendments to the Staff Regulations, annexed to the resolution, and invited ICSC to keep the matter of staff assessment for all categories under review.

The text of this resolution was proposed (as a draft decision) in the Fifth Committee by the United Kingdom and the United States; it was approved there without vote on 13 December.

A related resolution proposed by Barbados and approved by consensus by the Fifth Committee on 13 December was adopted by the Assembly without objection on 17 December as resolution 35/214 C. The Assembly thereby asked ICSC to keep under review the matter of supplementary payments made by Governments to international civil servants and report in 1981, taking into account the views expressed at the current Assembly session.

Emoluments of the Secretary-General

On 17 December, the General Assembly approved increases in the emoluments of the Secretary-General-i.e. an increase in his gross salary and a corresponding decrease in his post adjustment allowance-and approved budgetary appropriations for this purpose. The change, in line with a similar adjustment for Professional and higher category staff members (see preceding section), would leave the total amount of the Secretary-General's pay unaltered; a consequential effect would be to raise his maximum retirement benefit (equal to one half of gross salary) by $14,325 a year- to $69,650. There would also be a parallel adjustment to pensions in payment to the survivors of former Secretaries-General or their surviving spouses.

The text of the authorizing resolution was proposed by ACABQ and approved without objection by the Fifth Committee on 15 December. The Assembly similarly adopted it on 17 December as section XVII of resolution 35/217 on budgetary questions.

Effective 1 January 1981, the Secretary-General would thus receive a net salary of $72,516.

Compensation for non-Secretariat

officials serving the General Assembly

The General Assembly, by resolution 35/221 of 17 December 1980 adopted without objection, decided that, with effect from 1 January 1981, the annual compensation of the Chairman and Vice-Chairman of ICSC and the Chairman of ACABQ, whose compensation was established independently from the regular staff remuneration system, would be increased from $59,000 to $67,000, with an additional allowance of $5,000 for the two Chairmen. It decided also that these three officials' compensation and conditions of service would next be reviewed in 1985; between quinquennial reviews, their pay would be adjusted in accordance with an automatic adjustment procedure based on movement of the New York consumer price index, similar to that used for members of the International Court of Justice (see following section).

The Fifth Committee approved the text of this resolution without objection on 6 December, as proposed by the United Kingdom; the provisions therein were based on recommendations by the Secretary-General.

Bolivia and the United States said they would have voted against the text had it been put to a vote.

A draft decision by Panama-by which the Fifth Committee would have requested the Secretary-General to examine and report in 1981 on the possibility of devising a special system of grants and allowances, including post-retirement benefits distinct from the common system arrangements, for the three officials-was withdrawn.

Emoluments of members of the International Court of Justice

By resolution 35/220 A, the General Assembly approved on 17 December, by a recorded vote of 122 to 11, with 2 abstentions, an increase in the annual salary of the 15 members of the International Court of Justice from $50,000 to $70,000, effective 1 January 1981.

It decided to continue the system of interim cost-of-living supplements introduced in 1976,<sup>18</sup> rebasing and modifying the index used in accordance with a suggestion by the Secretary-General for the changes made in such a way as to ensure no loss or gain in total emoluments.

In addition, ad hoc judges were to receive $192 (1/365th of basic annual salary) for each day on which they exercised their functions; those who did not normally live at The Hague (Netherlands) would receive an additional daily subsistence payment of 1/365th of the interim cost-of-living supplement rate (currently $102 per day).

The Fifth Committee, on 3 December, by 73 votes to 10, with 4 abstentions, approved the text of the resolution, which was proposed by ACABQ to embody the Secretary-General's suggestions, as amended by ACABQ.

In a report to the Assembly, prepared by the Secretary-General in accordance with a 1976 Assembly decision that the salaries of the judges be reviewed every five years<sup>19</sup> -the previous review having been made in 1975- the Secretary-General had proposed the increase, with the corresponding reduction in their interim cost-of-living adjustments.

Together with the above resolution, and by the same votes, both the Committee and the Assembly approved a second text, which became resolution 35/220 B, increasing the pensions for retired Court members and their maximum child benefit (see p. 1188).

Honoraria payable to members of United Nations organs

On 19 November 1980, the Chairman of the Sixth (Legal) Committee informed the Fifth Committee Chairman of the view of the International Law Commission (ILC) that the special allowance paid to ILC members was inadequate and that it was the sense of the Sixth Committee that non-adjustment of their honoraria had over the years eroded the level of the special allowance fixed in 1957. He requested that the Fifth Committee give consideration to the problem as early as possible.

By resolution 35/218 of 17 December, adopted by a recorded vote of 111 to 12, with 13 abstentions, the General Assembly increased, with effect from 1 January 1981, honoraria payable to members of ILC, the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB), the United Nations Administrative Tribunal and the Human Rights Committee.

These were exceptions to the principle of non-payment of honoraria to members of United Nations organs and subsidiary organs. The honoraria of Chairmen (Presidents) were increased to $5,000, of the Vice-Chairman of INCB to $4,000 and of other members to $3,000; an additional amount of $2,500 would be payable to ILC members when acting as special rapporteurs preparing specific reports between ILC sessions.

Algeria, Cyprus, Spain and the Syrian Arab Republic spoke in favour of the new proposal, in view of the amount of time the experts were called on to devote to their tasks and the erosion of purchasing power. Australia and the United States, considered honoraria as symbolic payments not related to changes in the cost of living and therefore thought that an increase was not justified. Rather than have the Assembly increase the amounts paid as exceptions, Australia would have preferred to see applied the general rule that no honoraria be paid to members of subsidiary organs. The United Kingdom supported the principle of increasing the payments but had abstained since it regarded the proposed amounts as excessive.

Mexico, which sponsored the resolution, had originally proposed that the Chairmen receive $4,000, the INCB Vice-Chairman $2,500, and other members $1,500. Mexico accepted the figures ultimately adopted, which were orally proposed by Egypt, as well as an Egyptian amendment to delete a parenthetical phrase excepting the ILC Chairman from the additional amount payable to ILC members if he acted as special rapporteur. The Fifth Committee approved the amended text on 26 November by 53 votes to 11, with 19 abstentions. At the request of the USSR, a separate vote was taken on the second paragraph, requesting the Secretary-General to keep the rates under review and report to the Assembly when, in his judgement, a revision might be warranted. Paragraph 2 was approved by 50 votes to 13, with 19 abstentions.

The Committee's decision was taken following consideration of a 1976 comprehensive study of honoraria by the Secretary-General, supplemented by a 1978 report requested by ACABQ, as well as ACABQ's related 1979 report, action on all of which had previously been postponed.<sup>20</sup>

United Nations pension system

The General Assembly approved several changes in 1980 in the benefits payable to participants in the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund (resolutions 35/215 A and B) and took several other actions affecting Fund operations. These measures were taken following consideration of recommendations by the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, which oversees the pension system for staff members of the United Nations and 12 other participating agencies. In addition, the Assembly adopted three resolutions -35/216 A-C-on the investment policy of the Pension Fund, with particular reference to African countries.

The 13 organizations that were members of the Fund in 1980 were: United Nations (including the Registry of the International Court of Justice); International Atomic Energy Agency; International Labour Organisation; Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations; United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO); World Health Organization; International Civil Aviation Organization; International Telecommunication Union; World Meteorological Organization;

Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization; World Intellectual Property Organization; International Fund for Agricultural Development; Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization.

During the year ending 31 December 1980, the number of participants in the Pension Fund increased from 46,904 to 49,098 and its principal rose from $1,870,216,859 to $2,154,600,924. The income of the Fund from interest and dividends during the year, less investment management costs, was $142,196,000. As at 31 December 1980, 5,386 retirement benefits, 5,255 deferred and early retirement benefits, 1,852 widows' and widowers' benefits, 3,087 children's benefits, 356 disability benefits, and 31 secondary dependants' benefits were in payment by the Pension Fund.

Report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board

The United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board held its twenty-seventh session at Washington, D. C., from 2 to 13 June 1980, and its twenty-eighth (special) session at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 15 to 18 September. Its report to the General Assembly in October contained, in addition to recommendations for Assembly action described below: the audited accounts of the Fund for the year ended 31 December 1979, together with the report of the Board of Auditors on the annual audit of the Fund; a summary of the Fund's investments as at that date; and statistical tables reflecting the operation of the Fund during 1979. The report gave an account of action or decisions taken within the Board's own authority on matters such as the annual review of the Fund's investment position and policy, and the methodology and assumptions to be used in the next actuarial valuation of the Fund as at 31 December 1980.

Acting on recommendations by the Board, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) and the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the General Assembly, on 17 December, adopted resolutions 35/215 A and B on the Pension Fund. The seven sections of resolution 35/215 A related to: (i) amendments to the Regulations of the Fund; (ii) revision of the pension adjustment system; (iii) admission of a new organization -to membership in the Fund; (iv) concurrence in agreements for the transfer of pension rights; (v) authorization to supplement the voluntary Emergency Fund; (vi) approval of administrative expenses of the Fund; and (vii) a request to examine and propose supplementary measures for pensioners with inadequate pensions. The resolution was adopted by 135 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions. Having first approved the addition of the last section (see subsection below), the Fifth Committee approved the Board-recommended text on 13 December, by 88 votes to 0, with 1 abstention.

The Assembly also expressed concern over the increasing cost of pension adjustments. By resolution 35/215 B, approved without vote in both the Fifth Committee and the plenary Assembly on 13 and 17 December, respectively, studies were requested, to be submitted in 1981, on procedures and methodology for verifying a pensioner's residence, the possibility of pro-rata pension adjustments for pensioners who spent significant time in a country not their country of residence, and the practice of simultaneously receiving both special service fees and pensions.

The Assembly adopted without vote on 17 December decision 35/447- whose text was submitted by Kenya, based on an ACABQ recommendation, and similarly approved by the Fifth Committee on 13 December- thereby requesting the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC), in co-operation with the Pension Board, to give high priority to elaborating a special pension adjustment index for pensioners which would include the impact of national taxation, and report thereon in 1981. Such an index was meant to replace the current use of the post adjustment system in measuring cost-of-living differences, in pensioners' countries of residence, which was based on expenditure patterns of active staff and did not reflect income tax as an item of expenditure.

The Commission had recommended that, pending completion of a study on such a special index, the current post adjustment indices should be used for adjustment purposes in regard to the Professional and higher categories. As regards General Service category pensioners, ICSC proposed an adjustment system of pensionable remuneration for the purpose of determining pension entitlements of staff retiring to high-cost-of-living countries.

Reservations on such a special index were expressed by staff representatives, while Austria, New Zealand and the United States favoured the idea, taking account of national income tax legislation. Kenya felt that income tax was a fact to be looked at critically; many retirees in high-cost countries paid none on their pensions, whereas others retiring in many developing countries had to pay such tax. In Kenya's view, an index could avoid excessive gains by some retirees and extra expenses to States. In Austria's opinion, the work of examining the effect of national income tax on United Nations pensions could gain substantially from the addition of a group of tax experts. Yugoslavia favoured setting a deadline of January 1982 by which ICSC should submit its findings on the subject.

Pensionable remuneration and the pension adjustment system

The Board recommended, with the endorsement of ICSC, changes in pensionable remuneration requiring revisions in both the pension adjustment system and the mechanisms used to index the pensionable remuneration of staff in the Professional and higher categories.

The recommendations involved maintenance of a universal pensionable remuneration system for such staff at the base of the system (New York), which would continue to be a function of their gross remuneration. It would be supplemented by a selective system providing for the application of cost-of-living differential factors to the final average remuneration. The rates of pensionable remuneration effective 1 January 1981 for staff in the Professional and higher categories would be established at the level reached by the application of a world-wide (major duty station) index known as WAPA

(weighted average of post adjustments) and, thereafter, periodically adjusted to reflect changing levels of inflation, using the United States consumer price index. The movement of each index would be measured twice a year, in January and in July. A change in pensionable remuneration would be effected on the following 1 April or 1 October respectively, if the movement amounted to 5 per cent or more.

Under the proposed scheme, Professionals retiring in countries where cost of living was substantially higher than that in New York would have their initial pension increased by the application of a cost differential factor, expressed as a percentage of their final average remuneration during the best three of their last five years. The difference in cost of living would have to be at least four classes of post adjustment or 22 per cent, averaged over the three years prior to retirement, before any differential was applied. The greater the difference, the larger would be the increase, up to a maximum of 46 per cent; but the increase in the pension would fall short of the cost-of-living difference. The post adjustment (cost-of-living allowance) paid to staff members in the country of retirement would be compared to that paid in New York to determine whether and how much the pension benefit should be raised. To limit the effect on those receiving high pensions, the percentage increase would be applied only to an amount equal to the pensionable remuneration at grade P-2 (Associate Officer), increment step XI.

Noting that no additional measures were needed for staff members in the General Service category who retired in the country of their duty station, as their pensionable remuneration reflected all elements of their compensation and was adjusted automatically by any cost-of-living increase in salary, the Board and ICSC suggested that for those staff members who retired in a country other than that of their duty station, a cost-of-living differential factor should be applied on the basis of the differences between the General Service pay scales at the country of retirement and at the duty station. An adjustment would be made to the local currency pension entitlement of a General Service staff member if he retired in a country where the General Service net salaries exceeded those in his duty station by 22 per cent or more. The adjustment would be calculated by reference to the same progressive scale of cost-of-living differential factors used for staff in the Professional and higher categories.

In order to give recognition to the adverse effect of currency fluctuations and inflation on small pensions, the Board recommended a further modification in the pension adjustment system, affecting only its dollar track. It would apply to retirement, disability and survivors' benefits which, based on 15 years of service, amounted to less than $4,000 per annum. Such pensions would be increased proportionally by the application of the same progressive scale of factors used for measuring the cost-of-living differential factors.

In a statement transmitted to the Assembly on 19 November by the Secretary-General, the interagency Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) stated that the joint ICSC/Board proposals offered a pragmatic solution to very complex problems; while they were of necessity a compromise and not fully satisfactory to any of the concerned parties, they were acceptable to all the organizations, and ACC strongly recommended their adoption by the Assembly.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions noted that the use of the post adjustment classification of duty stations for purposes of calculating the cost-of-living differential factors for staff in the Professional and higher categories gave rise to certain possible anomalies attributable to the fact that the post adjustment mechanism was essentially intended for staff in service. The Committee recommended that the Assembly approve the proposals of the Board and ICSC with a proviso that ICSC should give high priority to the elaboration of a special index for pensioners, including the impact of national taxation. The Assembly took action on this recommendation when it adopted decision 35/477 on 17 December (see preceding section).

The Advisory Committee also understood that the pensionable remuneration of Field Service personnel was to continue to be treated in the same way as Professional staff, and recommended that appropriate reference to that category should be made in the Staff Rules of the United Nations.

Subject to those observations and recommendations, ACABQ recommended approval of the Board's proposals. These were subsequently adopted by the Assembly in sections I and II of resolution 35/215 A (see preceding section). The Assembly thereby decided that the Regulations of the Joint Staff Pension Fund were to be amended (to reflect changes in the definition of pensionable remuneration), as from 1 January 1981, as set forth in an annex to the Board's report. It also decided to revise, in accordance with the Board's recommendations and with effect from the same date, the pension adjustment system it had approved in 1978.<sup>21</sup>

Barbados said it was not fully convinced of the adequacy of consultations on the matter and had been obliged to abstain in the vote.

The USSR said it had not objected to the ICSC/Board recommendations that new criteria for pensionable remuneration should be established, on the understanding that they would not involve, currently or in the future, an additional financial burden for Member States.

Commenting in the Fifth Committee on the Board's proposal for a revised pension system that would give higher payments to pensioners retiring in high-cost countries, the United States said it was currently opposed to it but would reluctantly go along if a majority wished to adopt it. New Zealand and the United Kingdom described the proposal as a compromise, which New Zealand wanted to see reviewed after two years. In spite of difficulties in certain areas, Kenya supported the proposal in general, as it felt it honoured the principle that cost-of-living differences between countries should not be covered in full by the supplement paid to pensioners in high-cost countries and it met the criterion established by the Assembly that States should not have to finance any increased benefits.

As to the levels of benefits, the United States said the new proposals would significantly benefit pensioners who, having been paid exceedingly high salaries, might receive pensions lower than they desired. Ecuador held the opinion that persons who had devoted the best years of their lives to the United Nations deserved the benefits proposed. Belgium said the formula proposed would increase the actuarial deficit of the Fund and would allow pensionable remuneration, already swollen as a result of European inflation, to grow further in response to inflation in the United States; in addition, the new scheme would, in view of its complexity, entail far greater administrative costs.

The Federal Republic of Germany, on the other hand, which said it had been pressing for the introduction of a system that would adjust pensions so as to allow for currency changes and inflation, supported the proposed system of cost-of-living adjustments for both categories of staff. Italy said approval of the proposals would in no way close the door to a future comprehensive examination of the United Nations salary and pension systems from a global perspective, instead of solely from the perspective of one particular national service; while it would have preferred a simpler, less costly scheme, it was prepared to support the Board's proposal on the understanding that its operation would be carefully monitored by the Board and reviewed by the Assembly, perhaps in three years' time. Austria supported the principle that some adjustment was called for to correct the large differences in purchasing power of pensions paid in different countries and agreed in general to the system proposed, but expressed reservations concerning the extent to which the adjustments would be applied.

As for the revised staff assessment scale for the General Service category, the Federal Republic of Germany did not, contrary to the view of the Federation of International Civil Servants' Associations (FICSA), feel that this question really belonged under the heading of the pension issue; nevertheless, the Assembly should accept the recommendations of ICSC, as it had already accepted the changes in staff assessment rates for Professional employees. The Philippines said it had no objection to the proposed modification of the pensionable remuneration of the General Service category, but would appreciate further details concerning FICSC's objections to the establishment of a new global scale of assessment. The General Service staff should not be losers in any package intended to improve the status of United Nations pensioners.

Admission to Fund membership

Taking action on a renewed Pension Board recommendation to admit the International Centre for the Study of the Preservation and the Restoration of Cultural Property to membership in the Fund, deferred in 1979,<sup>22</sup> the Assembly decided, by section III of resolution 35/215 A (see section above) to admit the Centre with effect from 1 January 1981. The Advisory Committee had agreed to the Board's recommendation, the Board having been informed by UNESCO that the Centre was a separate and autonomous organization which met the requirements of membership set out in the Fund's Regulations. As suggested by ACABQ, the Board decided to review the relevant article, 3 (b), to ascertain whether the requirements for admission of new member organizations should be revised.

Transfer of pension rights

The Board invited the Assembly's concurrence in proposed agreements with the Governments of the Byelorussian SSR, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, as well as with the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development and the European Centre for Medium Range Weather Forecasts, for the reciprocal transfer of pensions rights between them and the Fund.

The agreements with the three Member States followed in broad principle the agreement concluded with the Government of Canada in 1970;<sup>23</sup> those with the organizations followed the principles embodied in transfer agreements with the Commission of the European Communities approved in 1977<sup>24</sup> and with the European Space Agency and the European Free Trade Association approved in 1979.<sup>25</sup>

The Assembly concurred in the agreements, as ACABQ recommended; the Assembly's action was contained in section IV of resolution 35/215 A of 17 December 1980 (see section above).

While a number of countries, including Italy, the Philippines and Yugoslavia, endorsed the transfer of pension rights, the United States opposed it strongly. The USSR said the fear that pension rights would not be guaranteed to individuals was not justified because the agreements had been concluded in the interest of participants in the Pension Fund who, in the exercise of free choice, could either retain their United Nations pension rights or make use of the provisions in the transfer agreements.

Emergency Fund

Authorization to the Board to supplement voluntary contributions to the Pension Fund's Emergency Fund for another year, up to $ 100,000, was given by the Assembly in section V of resolution 35/215 A of 17 December 1980 (see section above). The Emergency Fund had been established in 1973 to alleviate hardship among individual pensioners. The Assembly's action had been recommended by the Board; ACABQ concurred in the Board's recommendation.

Administrative expenses

The Board submitted to the Assembly budget estimates to be charged to the Pension Fund for administrative expenses (including those chargeable to investments) of $4,744,200 (net) for 1981, consisting of some $2.73 million in investment costs and $2.01 million in administrative costs, together with supplementary estimates for 1980 in an amount of $181,700.

The Board requested 14 additional posts (including six conversions from temporary-assistance posts), two new temporary-assistance posts and two reclassifications. The Advisory Committee recommended approval of the Board's request for six new General Service posts, six conversions and two reclassifications—two fewer permanent posts than were asked; it agreed to the 1980 supplement but recommended a $46,000 cut in 1981 expenses.

The Fifth Committee adopted on 13 December, by a recorded vote—taken at the request of the United States—of 63 to 5, with 19 abstentions, a Kenyan oral amendment to the text the Board had recommended for Assembly approval; it thereby restored the sum needed to cover the two temporary-assistance posts not recommended by ACABQ. Thus it approved expenses chargeable directly to the Fund for 1981 of $4,723,200 (net) (the ACABQ-recommended amount of $4,698,200, increased by $25,000 for the new posts); it also approved supplementary expenses of $181,700 (net) for 1980.

This action, adopted by the Assembly on 17 December 1980 (see section above), became section VI of resolution 35/215 A. On the administrative expenses of the Pension Fund, the United States asked the Board to report in 1981 on the results of efforts to increase the efficiency of its secretariat's operations without further increases in staff or other resources. Kenya said the Board's request for additional staff was justified by the complexity and volume of work brought about by the proposed changes in the pension system. Austria, the Philippines and the United Kingdom also felt that the Fund secretariat needed appropriate backstopping and supported the request for two additional temporary-assistance posts.

Supplementary measures

In the Fifth Committee, Austria proposed to add a seventh section to the draft resolution the Board had recommended for Assembly adoption. This provision would request the Board to consider, in conjunction with its proposed study of aid to pensioners of advanced age who needed supplementary payments, and submit proposals in 1981 within the Fund's available resources, on measures to alleviate the situation of pensioners who retired in the early years of the Pension Fund and whose pensions remained inadequate despite subsequent adjustments. The Fifth Committee approved this proposal on 13 December without objection; the Assembly adopted it as section VII of resolution 35/215 A on 17 December (see section above).

Valuation assumptions

The Board reviewed during 1980 and decided on various changes in the rates of interest assumptions, based on recommendations of the Committee of Actuaries, for use in the actuarial valuation of the Fund to be conducted as at 31 December 1980. The Board requested, on the Committee's recommendation, that the valuation should be supplemented by realistic projections of the expected progress of the Fund over the next 30 years. This would enable the Board to assess the need for any measures to improve the financial status of the Fund.

Investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund

In response to a request by the General Assembly of 20 December 1979,<sup>26</sup> the Secretary-General in November 1980 submitted a report on Pension Fund investments, a subject considered by the Pension Board at its 1980 sessions. The Secretary-General attributed a negative investment return of minus 0.39 per cent in the year ended 31 March 1980, the date traditionally used in reporting to the Board, largely to the temporary strength of the United States dollar in March and to large declines in the bond market.

Against a background of general market uncertainty, wide and erratic fluctuations, high inflation rates and volatile markets, a policy of particular caution had been followed, with continuing reliance on diversification of investments. Investment in development-related securities continued to increase ($306 million at 30 June 1980, compared to $206 million a year earlier) as did those made directly in developing countries ($81 million compared with $51 million), as distinct from those made in regional development banks; investment possibilities in Africa had been given especially close scrutiny. Fifty per cent ($942 million) of the Fund's portfolio was invested in securities of transnational corporations, a decline from 51 per cent a year earlier.

The Secretary-General said all efforts were directed to preservation of assets and enhancement of investment return over the medium and longer term by a policy of prudent diversification by type, geography and currency, continually geared to increased investment in developing countries in accordance with the basic principles governing Fund investment.

The United Kingdom introduced in the Fifth Committee a resolution co-sponsored by the Federal Republic of Germany and the United States, which the Committee approved on 13 December by a recorded vote-requested by Cuba-of 53 to 18, with 21 abstentions, and the Assembly adopted on 17 December by 100 votes to 15, with 19 abstentions, as resolution 35/216 A. By this text, the Assembly took note with appreciation of the Secretary-General's report and reaffirmed its confidence in him as trustee of the Fund's assets. The Assembly asked him to continue to diversify Fund investments in appropriate investments in developing countries whenever it served participants' and beneficiaries' interests and was in accordance with the criteria of safety, profitability, liquidity and convertibility. This last provision was the result of a sponsor-accepted oral amendment by New Zealand.

tion to the resolution, said the new operative paragraph was not acceptable since it made investments in developing countries contingent upon the interests of pension participants and beneficiaries. They added that, while they supported diversification, they considered that reference to world-wide diversification in a preambular paragraph was too vague and made no reference to developing countries or the need to explore portfolio opportunities in those countries. Cuba felt that noting the Secretary-General's report with appreciation gave the false impression that all States were satisfied with it; Cuba also noted the omission of a reference to the high percentage of assets invested in transnational corporations.

Cuba, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mozambique, Nicaragua and Panama sponsored a resolution subsequently adopted by the Assembly, by which it commended the Secretary-General's efforts-which he was asked to continue and accelerate and on which he was asked to report in 1981- as trustee, to fulfil his mandate to diversify Fund investments and ensure, in consultation with the Investments Committee, that Fund resources invested in transnational corporation shares were reinvested in developing countries to the greatest extent practicable, subject to careful observance of the requirements of safety, profitability, liquidity and convertibility and in conformity with the Fund's Regulations. The Assembly decided that, as from its 1982 session, a detailed biennial inventory of Fund investments would be made for finding ways and means of strengthening its operations.

The Fifth Committee approved this text on 13 December by a recorded vote-requested by the United States-of 72 to 20, with 1 abstention; the Assembly adopted it on 17 December by 114 votes to 23 as resolution 35/216 B.

Speaking in explanation of vote on behalf of the nine member States of the European Economic Community, Belgium said they supported the principles governing management of the portfolio, but were concerned for the Fund's profitability and balance in investment and good management, and regretted being unable to support the text. Canada and Spain said they did not share the concern expressed in a preambular paragraph that investments in shares of transnational corporations had been maintained at an appreciable level. If the four criteria of safety, profitability, liquidity and convertibility were to be observed, Canada said, there could be no legislative preference for any specific investment. Australia concurred in the views. Portugal said it could not support the decision to make a detailed biennial inventory of investments; it did not believe the Fifth Committee was competent to involve itself in investments in an increasingly detailed fashion.

Kenya and Sierra Leone sponsored a text by which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue to consult all States members of the Organization of African Unity, as well as financial institutions in Africa, with a view to making substantial investments in Africa on safe and profitable terms, in keeping with the development requirements of African countries (the last clause was orally changed by the sponsors from "in keeping with the need for external financing for development projects"). The Fifth Committee approved the text without objection on 13 December and the Assembly adopted it without vote on 17 December as resolution 35/216 C.

The United Kingdom said it had reservations about the text, in that it did not refer specifically to the four investment criteria; however, it did not object to its adoption by consensus on the understanding that it would form part of an omnibus resolution on investment which included reference to those criteria. Morocco observed that, over and above the four criteria, nothing should stand in the way of compliance, given the importance the Committee attached to the need to take advantage of development-related investment opportunities in Africa.

Speaking of the Pension Fund investments in the Fifth Committee's discussions, the United States said it found the poor rates of return disappointing; the Fund's first investment consideration, in both developing and developed countries, must be to seek the absolute highest rate of return possible, bearing in mind safety and liquidity. Ecuador wanted the resolutions introduced to be regarded merely as suggestions, as the funds belonged to private individuals, not

Member States. While the Philippines and others welcomed the increase in direct investments in developing countries, New Zealand said a balanced portfolio should continue to include investments in developed countries. As to investments in Africa, the representative of the Secretary-General noted that the Fund had recently sent a mission to confer with African banks. The Fund's investments in the African Development Bank had risen from $3.9 million in March 1979 to $14.1 million in October 1980.

Pension scheme for members of the International Court of Justice

By resolution 35/220 B, adopted by the General Assembly on 17 December by a recorded vote of 122 to 11, with 2 abstentions, together with resolution 35/220 A on emolument increases for members of the International Court of Justice (see p. 1178), the Assembly decided that, with effect from 1 January 1981, the annual value of all pensions in course of payment as at 31 December 1980, including the pensions of any members of the Court who retired on or before that date, would be increased by 40 per cent; they were consequential upon and proportionate to recommended basic salary increases for judges in active service through incorporation of part of their cost-of-living supplement into their basic salaries. A proportionate increase would also raise the maximum child's benefit from $860 to $1,200.

The Secretary-General had proposed these changes in a report to the Assembly on the emoluments of Court members (see p. 1174). The text of the resolution, embodying the Secretary-General's suggestions, had been proposed by ACABQ. The Fifth Committee approved ACABQ's draft on 3 December by 73 votes to 10, with 4 abstentions.

Resolution 35/216 B, as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/35/774, adopted by Assembly on 17 December 1980, meeting 99, by 114 votes to 23.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 31/197 of 22 December 1976, 32/73A of 9 December 1977, 33/121 A of 19 December 1978 and 34/222 A of 20 December 1979, in which it requested the Secretary-General to ensure that the resources which the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund holds invested in transnational corporations are invested on safe terms and, to the greatest extent practicable, in sound investments in developing countries,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund,

Having considered the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board on the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund,

Reaffirming the fiduciary responsibility of the Secretary-General for the interests of the participants and beneficiaries of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund under the Regulations and Rules of the Fund,

Reaffirming its belief that the diversification of investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund in developing countries and development agencies can facilitate the attainment of the objectives and purposes of the organizations of the United Nations system without affecting the profitability of the investments of the Fund,

Noting with concern that investments in shares of transnational corporations have been maintained at an appreciable level,

1. Commends the efforts of the Secretary-General, as trustee of the assets of the Fund, to fulfil the mandate given to him to diversify the investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund and to ensure, in consultation with the Investments Committee, that the resources which the Fund holds invested in shares of transnational corporations are reinvested in developing countries to the greatest extent practicable, subject to careful observance of the requirements of safety, profitability, liquidity and convertibility, and in conformity with the Regulations of the Fund;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue and accelerate the efforts mentioned in paragraph 1 above and to report on those efforts to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session;

3. Decides that, as from the thirty-seventh session of the General Assembly, a detailed biennial inventory of the investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund shall be made with a view to finding ways and means of strengthening its operations in conformity with the Regulations of the Fund and the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly.

Other administrative and personnel questions

Evaluation of the structure of the Secretariat

On 17 December 1980, the General Assembly adopted, without objection, on the recommendation of its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee: resolution 35/211, by which it decided to establish a 17-member Committee of Governmental Experts to Evaluate the Present Structure of the Secretariat in the Administrative, Finance and Personnel Areas, and requested the Secretary-General to take interim measures within the existing structure to ensure that the Office of Personnel Services had the necessary authority to implement effectively the personnel policies outlined in Assembly resolutions; and decision 35/444 authorizing payment of travel and subsistence costs for the new Committee's members who were not stationed in New York. The resolution was presented by the Chairman (Austria) of a Formal Working Group on Personnel Questions of the Fifth Committee, and the decision was orally proposed by the Committee Chairman; both were approved without objection by the Committee on 12 December.

The Assembly also, by decision 35/446 of 17 December, asked the new Committee to study the use of the term "Controller" in the nomenclature of the Secretariat (see below).

In a letter of 8 November to the Fifth Committee Chairman, the Secretary-General recalled that the current administrative structure of the Secretariat had been in effect since 1968/consisting of one official at the higher level within the top echelon, the Under-Secretary-General for Administration, Finance and Management, assisted by officials at the lower levels, in charge of the offices of the Controller and the Director of Personnel. Concern had been raised since then regarding the adequacy of this structure to implement effectively decisions of the Assembly in this sphere. Some felt that there was a diffusion of authority on personnel matters while others believed that financial and personnel issues could not be wholly separated. Moreover, there was a trend in the Organization towards decentralization and to giving greater budgetary, financial and administrative flexibility to regional commissions and major programmes. Therefore, the Secretary-General felt it might be opportune to review the current administrative machinery with emphasis on evaluating the interrelationships among administrative units at Headquarters, these units and those at major offices away from Headquarters, and between administrative units in general and the substantive activities they served.

The recommendation by the Fifth Committee's Formal Working Group on Personnel Questions to establish a Committee of Experts received the strong support of many countries, including the Bahamas, Egypt, Ghana, Indonesia, Pakistan, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, the Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, and Venezuela (which spoke on behalf of developing Member States belonging to the "Group of 77"). The Syrian Arab Republic would have preferred the request for interim measures to have been more precise and stronger in its thrust, so as to give the Secretary-General the necessary flexibility and authority for the steps required, although, with regard to that paragraph, the United Kingdom said it was essential to draw a distinction between structural and procedural considerations. Egypt also attached great importance to the interim measures, which it said were urgently required to give the Office of Personnel Services the needed authority to implement the policies provided for in Assembly resolution 35/210 of 17 December (see p. 1164). Canada felt that adoption of the annex to resolution 35/210, setting out recruitment procedures, obviated to some extent the need for any further significant interim measures and even perhaps for restructuring; changes should not be introduced to tailor the Secretariat to fit personalities, it said. The Federal Republic of Germany would have preferred not to have a study carried out by outside experts, and considered that it was not clear what was intended by the interim measures other than the procedures described in the annex to resolution 35/210.

Australia, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Portugal and others expressed the hope that the new Committee would not limit itself to recommending the upgrading of posts or the decantation of authority from one office to another. Australia's support for the establishment of the Committee proceeded from the view that its review would be objective and not call into question the Secretary-General's prerogatives and responsibilities. Portugal regretted the need to establish the Committee; the problems should preferably have been settled by existing authorities. While Benin, Nigeria, Rwanda, Senegal, Togo and others emphasized the need to take special interim measures to strengthen the Office of Personnel Services, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany and others considered that no special measures should be adopted pending the outcome of the study. Algeria thought that the Committee's mandate, legal status and duration should have been set more clearly to avoid wasting time over procedural difficulties; the experts' qualifications should have been determined and information on Secretariat participation provided.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Morocco said that, had the decision on travel and subsistence costs been put to a vote, they would not have supported it in the belief that States should bear the costs of sending experts. The decision was an exception to established arrangements regarding the payment of travel and subsistence and was unacceptable to the Ukrainian SSR. Panama and Sierra Leone shared the concern that the experts might not be able to complete their evaluation in the two weeks for which appropriations were made, while the USSR considered that time to be more than ample, though it expressed concern at the seemingly preferential treatment given to a subsidiary the Fifth Committee wished to set up.

The redesignation of the title Controller as Assistant Secretary-General for Financial Services was another subject of Fifth Committee discussion. Canada, Spain, the United States and the Upper Volta introduced a draft resolution by which the Assembly, reaffirming its desire to strengthen United Nations financial management, would have requested the Secretary-

General to maintain the use of the title and the functions of the Controller in connexion with the Assistant Secretary-General for Financial Services.

In taking this action, the Assembly would have recalled a 1967 decision<sup>27</sup> endorsing the separation of the authority and responsibilities of the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management from the day-to-day financial tasks performed by the Controller, as well as 1978 and 1979 decision<sup>28</sup> endorsing proposals by the Board of Auditors for improving United Nations financial management and control systems, especially those that would strengthen the role of the Controller to enable him to provide functional leadership, guidance and central direction to all United Nations financial functions.

The Federal Republic of Germany also sponsored a draft decision by which the new Committee of Governmental Experts was requested to include in its review the question of the use of the term "Controller" in the nomenclature of the Secretariat, taking into account the various functions of financial management and control in the United Nations, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its 1981 regular session.

This decision was approved by the Fifth Committee on 16 December by a recorded vote of 45 to 7, with 41 abstentions. In view of this, the four-nation draft resolution was not put to a vote. The Assembly adopted the decision on 17 December by a recorded vote of 78 to 5, with 48 abstentions, as decision 35/446.

The United States considered that the decision would delay restoration of the use of the term. India had suggested that the two texts be combined. This suggestion was not acceptable to the Federal Republic of Germany. Algeria, Egypt, Indonesia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Panama, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Yugoslavia would have preferred a compromise text.

Job classification and career development of language staff

On 17 December 1980, the General Assembly adopted resolution 35/225, approving proposals of the Secretary-General aimed at reclassifying language posts.

On 28 November, the Secretary-General had reported on and endorsed proposals by two study groups, one for Headquarters and the other for Geneva, which recommended restructuring language services at those duty stations. The groups drew on a 1979 inquiry into career prospects for language staff by Eduardo Jiménez de Aréchaga (Uruguay), a former President of the International Court of Justice, who had recommended that the criteria followed in the classification of posts should be reviewed with full staff participation; a more favourable proportion between P-5, P-4 and P-3 posts should be established in order to provide avenues of advancement and to retain the best staff; the ratios between P-5, P-4 and P-3 language posts should be such that career development would be no less favourable than that for other Professional staff.

The translation process in the United Nations was evaluated by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) in an April report, which drew attention to the limited career prospects for translators.

The JIU study examined the effectiveness, productivity and operating problems of the translation services—a first JIU attempt at a system-wide evaluation of an administrative process, whose costs represented about 7 per cent of the regular budgets of the organizations in the United Nations system (some $70 million, 1,600 full-time staff and 400,000 pages of material yearly). Recommendations made to realize cost saving and improve the translation process included: strengthening document quality control, workload planning and references; encouraging language training centres and incentives for additional languages; greater use of contractual translation; system-wide efforts to develop productivity analysis, computer-assisted management information systems and a common computerized terminology and research unit; reconsideration of the use of translators for précis-writing functions and adequate facilities for translators; a shift towards self-revision of translations; and more careful periodic assessment of operations, effectiveness and results.

The Assembly took note of JIU's report with appreciation when it adopted decision 35/427 on 10 December (see p. 1236).

Commenting on the JIU report, the interagency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination observed that a quota system for documents was not considered feasible. There was also little support for additional-language incentives or for reassessment of translators' précis-writing functions, and it was agreed that there was a limit to the usefulness of recourse to external translation. In general, the organizations saw merit in most of the other recommendations, subject to budgetary restraints and the exigencies of individual organizations.

The Secretary-General proposed to implement a new grading structure for language staff over the three-year period 1981-1983; he recommended a larger number of posts in senior grades and the gradual introduction of self-revision of documents with a consequential reduction in the number of P-3 posts for translators, which would result in a net reduction of 67 posts, based on the workload remaining at its current level. By the end of this period, up to 45 per cent of translations would be self-revised.

A special study group on job classification and career development, set up by the Secretary-General, produced a revised grading structure that would provide the language staff with better career prospects as follows: Associate Translator (P-2), Translator (P-3), Translator (self-revising) (P-4), Reviser (P-4), Senior Reviser (P-5) and Chief of Service (D-1). It varied from that being developed by the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) in its work on tier II standards for translators with respect to the classification of self-revising translators at the P-4 level. The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) trusted that these differences could be resolved through consultations with ICSC.

In its evaluation of the Secretary-General's report, ACABQ stated that the proposed elimination of 20 P-3 translator posts (with 106 language posts to be upgraded) should go hand-in-hand with the gradual introduction of self-revision. Meetings away from Headquarters or Geneva should be covered by translators who could revise their own work, so as to reduce the number of language staff needed on missions. More sensitive documents such as draft resolutions would continue to be revised.

The Fifth Committee approved on 15 December, by 87 votes to 0, with 9 abstentions, a resolution sponsored by Morocco, as orally amended by Australia and the sponsor, by which the Assembly would approve the Secretary-General's proposals for reclassifying language posts so that the number reclassified was in proportion to the number established for each of the six languages of the United Nations and so that the translators, interpreters, verbatim reporters, editors, copy-preparers and proof-readers benefited. The Secretary-General would be asked to apply self-revision on an experimental basis, to the extent that it did not affect the quality of documents, and to report in 1981 on implementation.

The Assembly adopted the Committee's proposed text on 17 December, by a recorded vote of 124 to 0, with 11 abstentions, as resolution 35/225. The paragraph approving the Secretary-General's proposals was voted on separately in the Fifth Committee at the request of the USSR; it was approved by 86 votes to 8, with 2 abstentions.

With the sponsor's acceptance, Australia changed a preambular statement that the new languages required particular attention to indicate that the more recently introduced languages required particular attention.

The United Kingdom said it had voted in favour of the text on the understanding that it would not require additional appropriations during the current or next biennium.

Reclassification of regular-budget posts

During 1980, ACABQ discussed the question of reclassification of regular-budget posts with the executive heads or representatives of specialized agencies and, in a November report, it addressed the question with particular reference to the division of responsibilities between the intergovernmental organs and the executive heads, as well as to the scope of the problem in the agencies. It noted that requests for such reclassification had been included by the Secretary-General in all his budget estimates or programme budget proposals for many years. As such adjustments should involve both upgradings and downgradings, ACABQ envisaged the possibility for the Secretary-General to exchange posts at the P-5 (Senior Officer) level and below between budget sections, provided that the total number of posts at each level, as approved by the Assembly, remained unchanged; the Secretary-General would be required to seek ACABQ's concurrence in the proposed reclassifications, and ACABQ would then report to the Assembly thereon. Requests for upward reclassifications which were not offset by the downgrading of other posts should be submitted only in the context of the biennial programme budget proposals and only when it had been determined in the light of strict criteria that there had been a significant change in the nature of the duties and responsibilities. They would have to be reviewed and endorsed by the Classification Section of the Office of Personnel Services. Exceptional circumstances on special problems associated with promotion of deserving staff could be through alternative procedures, which would not involve the reclassification of posts, examined on an interagency basis if desired, with ICSC assistance, and appropriate recommendations made to the Assembly.

On 5 December, the Fifth Committee decided, without vote, on an oral proposal by its Chairman, to recommend to the Assembly that it take note of ACABQ's report and endorse its recommendations.

The Assembly took this action in adopting without objection on 17 December section VIII of resolution 35/217.

Access by staff representatives to the Fifth Committee

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 35/213 by which it reiterated its readiness to consider fully the views of the staff as set out in documents submitted through the Secretary-General, and decided that the Fifth Committee might invite representatives of the staff to introduce these documents.

Report of the Secretary-General/

A report of 30 September by the Secretary-General on the participation of the staff in the consultative bodies within the United Nations system described the various procedures that allowed effective participation by staff representatives, at both the organizational and interorganizational levels, in the process of determining conditions of employment. The most recent of these was an 18-member Secretariat-wide Staff-Management Co-ordination Committee composed of representatives of the staff and the administration at major duty stations. It was established by the Secretary-General on 30 June, to meet biannually under the chairmanship of the Chairman of the Joint Advisory Committee at Headquarters, to advise on staff questions of Secretariat-wide concern. It held its first session from 1 to 5 September to discuss, along with other subjects, the current report.

The report said that, despite an elaborate system of staff consultation within the Secretariat, many staff representatives did not consider the existing arrangements to be sufficient. They sought direct access to the Fifth Committee in order that the views of the staff might be heard at the final stage of the decision-making process. The extension of staff consultation to the level of the Fifth Committee would be in line with the recent trend, both within and outside the United Nations, for a greater participation of staff in the determination of their conditions of employment, particularly in view of the fact that the Fifth Committee had, in recent years, increasingly assumed the responsibility of deciding on matters of direct interest and concern to the staff, including the Committee's occasional non-acceptance or reversal of recommendations by ICSC, a body which had formal procedures of consultation with staff representatives. With regard to the existing system of consultations, the report noted that many staff representatives advocated replacing it by a system based on negotiations, resulting in binding agreements between administration and staff.

The Secretary-General concluded that the purpose of better staff involvement could be served by allowing the possibility for the Fifth Committee, after obtaining his views on the matter, to invite a single recognized staff representative of the United Nations or the Federation of International Civil Servants' Associations (FICSA) to submit a statement either orally or in writing on any proposal concerning staff matters under its consideration.

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly in September a report of the Staff Unions and Associations of the United Nations Secretariat, in accordance with a 1979 Assembly resolution<sup>29</sup> whereby the Assembly had expressed its readiness to receive and consider staff views set out by a single recognized representative in a document submitted through the Secretary-General.

The report reviewed personnel problems and issues under three major headings: security and independence of the international civil service; staff-management relations; and conditions of employment. It stated that, contrary to the Charter of the United Nations, political pressure and interference by Member States occurred at all stages of the appointment and promotion process in the Secretariat.

Among its recommendations were that: the principle of equitable geographical distribution should be applied on a Secretariat-wide basis and not in every unit, large or small; nationality should not be a ground for excluding staff members from transfers, assignments or promotions; there should be interchangeability and rotation of different nationalities in posts to allow for career development; proposals for extension beyond retirement age should first be approved by appointment and promotion bodies, as should appointments and promotions to the D-2 (Director) level; Member States should refrain from paying salary supplements to their nationals in the Secretariat and should respect their basic legal obligations under the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations<sup>30</sup> with respect to the arbitrary arrest and detention of staff without due process; specific steps should be taken to alleviate and compensate for difficulties faced by staff members working at difficult duty stations and on peace-keeping missions, including the institution of a hardship or hazardous pay allowance; effective staff participation in decision-making related to the terms and conditions of service could only come about through establishment of a system of negotiations, by bringing United Nations practice into line with public service practice in many countries and with international standards for the public service adopted by the International Labour Organisation, and by access to the Fifth Committee in terms of oral and written submissions; the 1979 competitive examination experience should be completely reviewed to determine if examinations should be continued and, if so, to devise improvements; no year should elapse without General Service-to-Professional promotions, and the quota for such promotions should be increased; all entry-level posts should be filled, whether from inside or outside, through improved competitive examinations; better orientation and training courses should be made available to local field staff; preference should be given to women in recruitment from over-represented countries or where the number of promotions was limited; where merited, they should receive accelerated promotion; at least two out of five candidates presented for posts should be women; special efforts must be made to recruit and promote women from developing and unrepresented countries; JIU recommendations for improving the use of the roster of candidates should be implemented; child-care centres should be established in New York and Vienna; bursary awards should be increased at both the United Nations and Vienna International Schools and such a school should be established at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia; more implementation authority and resources should be given to the Panel to Investigate Allegations of Discriminatory Treatment; retired staff should not be brought back as consultants to do the same job they did as staff members, and more favourable incentives should be offered to staff who wished to take early retirement; staff grievances should be dealt with more promptly, using simpler procedures; the Secretary-General should be bound by decisions of the Joint Disciplinary Committee, the Joint Appeals Board and the United Nations Administrative Tribunal; summary dismissal should not be allowed until the Disciplinary Committee had heard and judged the case; and a labour-management arbitration panel should be established for dealing with collective labour disputes.

A resolution on staff access to the Fifth Committee was sponsored in that Committee by Australia, Denmark, Finland, France, the Gambia, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal, Senegal, Sierra Leone and Sweden.

On 15 December, the Committee approved the text by a recorded vote, requested by the USSR, of 67 to 14, with 25 abstentions. The General Assembly adopted it on 17 December as resolution 35/213, by a recorded vote of 95 to 17, with 22 abstentions.

The Assembly thereby, reaffirming the responsibility and authority of the Secretary-General as the Chief Administrative Officer of the United Nations, reiterated its readiness to receive and consider fully the views of the staff as set out by a single recognized staff representative of the Secretariat, and by a designated representative of FICSA, in documents submitted through the Secretary-General under the agenda items on personnel questions and on the report of ICSC, respectively. To assist its deliberations, the Fifth Committee could, if considered desirable, invite those representatives to make oral presentations from the floor at the beginning of its consideration of the relevant agenda item. Questions posed by Committee Members in response to the statements could be answered in writing by the representative concerned in a single supplementary document submitted through the Secretary-General.

In explanation of vote, Benin, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Japan and the USSR said they voted against the text because they considered that the interests of the staff were represented by the Secretary-General and the staff already had other mechanisms through which their views were made known. Japan said it was not the Committee's function to negotiate with the staff, and Benin did not believe staff representatives should appear on an equal footing with States. Ethiopia said regional office staff might under the resolution seek access to the Government without consulting the Secretary-General's immediate representative.

The Bahamas, which abstained, said the Committee must look at staff problems objectively and comprehensively, and not jeopardize its role as a legislative body or do anything that might imply a vote of no confidence in the administration; when access was deemed necessary, it should be confined to access to subsidiary bodies of the Fifth Committee. Mauritania, Nigeria and Pakistan said their votes in favour were cast on the understanding that the text did not undermine the authority of the Secretary-General; because it felt it might do so, Morocco abstained. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said the resolution would add new and unnecessary burdens to the Committee's work. The Syrian Arab Republic, which abstained, said the text did not actually give access to the Fifth Committee but did not prevent it either, leaving the whole matter pending. While the Upper Volta felt it could lead to complications for the Committee, it voted in favour, since the actual arrangements were left to the Committee. Canada said it would not oppose adoption, but observed that the text merely authorized the Committee to do what it already had the right to do and would open the door for a debate on the matter every year. Brazil and Egypt said they had voted in favour on the understanding that the Committee might hear representatives on an ad hoc basis but never regularly. Nigeria said its vote in favour was cast on the understanding that an invitation to staff was not mandatory. The United Kingdom said that if paragraph 5, concerning the procedure for answering questions posed by Committee Members, had been voted on separately, it would have voted against it, considering that it did not ensure sufficient control of direct communication between Committee and staff.

First-class travel in the United Nations

On the recommendation of the Secretary-General, as endorsed by ACABQ and the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly on 17 December 1980 amended its 1977 resolution<sup>31</sup> which had set out the conditions under which first-class air travel would be authorized for official travel in the Organizations: it added the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to the officials entitled to travel first class. The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General to prepare a study on the conditions for travel of permanent representatives when on official missions on behalf of the Organization, and asked that his 1981 report cover the period from 1 October 1980 to 30 June 1981, and thereafter annually from mid-year to mid-year.

The text had been approved without vote by the Fifth Committee on 6 December based on an oral proposal by its Chairman, incorporating ACABQ-endorsed suggestions of the Secretary-General as well as those of New Zealand and the Syrian Arab Republic (concerning the time-frame for annual reports to permit earlier consideration) and Senegal (on the study of travel for accredited permanent representatives); it was subsequently adopted by the Assembly without objection as section X of resolution 35/217.

The Secretary-General's 1980 report covered the period from 1 October 1979 to 30 September 1980, indicating the exceptions he had authorized to allow first-class travel (involving 48 persons and 74 journeys) and of the savings achieved by using economy and other air fares (an estimated $229,000). Noting that travel by first class and by the Concorde for trans-Atlantic flights had increased, ACABQ recommended that the Secretary-General exercise tighter control over exceptions to the travel standards and approve travel by the Concorde only for the security officer accompanying him.

India had proposed that permanent representatives to the United Nations be entitled to first-class air travel when on United Nations business, but withdrew this proposal following the Senegalese suggestion that the Secretary-General be asked to prepare a study on this question.

Had the issue been put to a vote, the United States said it would have voted against the Chairman's suggestions.

Amendments to the Staff Rules

In adopting without objection decision 35/445 on 17 December, the General Assembly took note of the amendments to the Staff Rules, as reported by the Secretary-General. The Fifth Committee approved the text without vote on 15 December on an oral proposal of its Chairman. Neither body discussed the matter.

The principal changes in rules in the 100 series-applicable to all staff except technical assistance project personnel, staff members specifically engaged for conferences and short-term service, and special interneers-made to implement policy decisions previously taken or to revise non-Professional salary scales, affected employment of spouses, maternity leave, repatriation grants, excess baggage and unaccompanied shipments, rates of pensionable remuneration, revised salary scales for the General Service category, salary increments for staff in the Manual Workers category, and dependency and language allowances. Amendments to the 200 series, applicable to staff members specifically recruited for service with technical assistance projects, followed the same pattern as the amendments to the 100 series. Additional changes to the 200 series affected daily subsistence allowances while travelling, and the authentic texts of the rules.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Taking note of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recognizing the extreme importance of preserving the quality of all United Nations documents,

Stressing the necessity of avoiding any measure that might impair the equal status of all the official and working languages of the United Nations,

Recognizing that the career of staff in all the language occupational groups at the United Nations represents a functional continuum within which the range of grade levels should reflect the increasingly complex and specialized nature of the assignments performed by language groups,

Bearing in mind that the problems confronting the various language groups are not of a comparable nature and that the more recently introduced official languages require particular attention,

1. Approves the proposals of the Secretary-General aimed at reclassifying language posts so that:

(a) The number of posts reclassified is in proportion to the number established for each of the six languages of the United Nations:

(b) The translators, interpreters, verbatim reporters, editors, copy-preparers and proof-readers benefit from the reclassification measures;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to apply self-revision on a provisional and experimental basis, to the extent that it does not affect the quality of United Nations documents, whatever the official or working language used;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

United Nations programme budget

Revised programme budget for the biennium 1980-1981

On 17 December 1980, the General Assembly approved revised budget appropriations totalling $1,339,151,200 for the biennium 1980-1981. The Assembly also approved revised estimates of income in the amount of $238,333,100-including $193,897,500 to be derived from staff assessment (a kind of internal income tax paid by United Nations staff members) on salaries and wages.

The revised appropriation figure represented an increase of $91,358,000, or 7.3 per cent above the amount for 1980-1981 ($1,247,793,200) initially appropriated by the Assembly in December 1979.<sup>1</sup> The revised income figure was $16,989,900 above the initial 1979 estimates ($221,343,200).<sup>2</sup>

Member States were to be assessed a net total of $571,336,764 for 1981 (gross assessment ($669,456,779) less offsets from the Tax Equalization Fund ($98,120,015) which was financed from staff assessment and used to reimburse staff members who paid national income tax). This sum was the main source of financing in 1981 for a total of $715,254,600 in appropriations, of which $623,896,600 represented the second half of the initial appropriations for 1980-1981, and the balance of $91,358,000 was the increase approved in the revised budget for the biennium. Other sources of financing in 1981 were: $98,120,015 from staff assessment, $27,778,300 in revenue and miscellaneous income, $17,963,025 in unspent appropriations from years prior to 1980 (the surplus account), and the $56,496 contribution of a new Member State for 1979-1980.

These decisions were embodied in three Assembly resolutions adopted on 17 December on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee which approved them earlier that day. Resolution 35/226 A, on revised appropriations for 1980-1981, was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 111 to 20, with 5 abstentions, after having been approved in Committee by a recorded vote of 74 to 19, with 4 abstentions. Resolution 35/226 B, on revised income estimates for the biennium, was approved without objection in Committee and adopted by consensus by the Assembly. Resolution 35/226 C, on the financing of appropriations for 1981, was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 112 to 20, with 5 abstentions, after its approval in Committee by a recorded vote of 73 to 18, with 4 abstentions.

The Assembly approved the revised budget on the basis of reports by the Secretary-General and recommendations by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ). The Secretary-General submitted a total of $98,608,600 in proposed increases. The Fifth Committee, largely on the basis of ACABQ's recommendations, approved all but $7,250,600 of this sum. The approved additions consisted of $74,789,600 in revised estimates based on proposals of the Secretary-General, and $16,568,400 for the financial implications of resolutions approved by the Assembly during the current session.

The bulk of the Secretary-General's revised estimates were submitted in his first performance report on the 1980-1981 budget, dated 10 December 1980. In this report, he submitted supplementary expenditure estimates totalling $54,200,900. Higher inflation rates than had been anticipated in the initial budget were cited as the main factor in the rise. The Advisory Committee recommended approval of all but $252,700 of this amount. The Fifth Committee, on 16 December, on an oral suggestion by its Chairman in the light of the ACABQ recommendation, approved by a recorded vote of 73 to 17, with 6 abstentions an amount of $53,948,200 additional expenditure, as well as an increase of $6,378,100 in income estimates.

Explaining its negative vote on the revised appropriations, the USSR criticized what it called the entirely unjustified increase in Secretariat staff, swollen administrative expenses and the lack of any real effort to increase efficiency or counter the effects of inflation and currency instability. Moreover, some of the funds requested would be used to finance illegal activities that contravened the Charter of the United Nations. Any new expenditure which arose during the biennium should be financed primarily by making economies, re-evaluating programme priorities and reapportioning resources released through the curtailment or elimination of obsolete and ineffective activities.

Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and Japan said their votes against additional appropriations were to be understood as expressions of concern or displeasure about continued budget growth. The Federal Republic of Germany expressed hope that the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) would set priorities among programmes and decide what were the real needs of the United Nations. Japan said that, while it recognized efforts by the Secretariat to restrain budget growth, it felt that greater efforts to achieve economy and increased productivity were required so as to absorb additional costs and redeploy resources; it also called for more systematic efforts to identify obsolete, marginally useful or ineffective activities. Italy said that, in the light of the difficult international economic climate, the restraints being placed on national budgets should extend to the United Nations budget. Canada, while recognizing that the Secretary-General had finally taken a first step towards curbing growth, called on Member States to become much more aware of the need for financial restraint. Furthermore, it said, the Secretary-General should impose a zero net growth rate in submitting the next budget which could be done if priority programming and resource redeployment were taken seriously.

The United Kingdom, voting against the revised budget appropriations for the first time, said that instead of redeploying resources the Assembly had authorized many new activities, the cost of which far outweighed potential savings from the Secretary-General's meagre list of activities which might be terminated (see section below). The system of assessed contributions rested on a foundation of consent which could only be weakened by the action of a majority of Member States, against the will of a significant minority, in transferring to the regular budget charges which belonged elsewhere.

The United States cited the following reasons for its negative vote: first, a zero net programme-growth policy had not been followed; second, programme managers had not complied satisfactorily with the Assembly's calls for the elimination of completed, obsolete, marginal and ineffective activities; third, it could not accept the Secretariat's casual attitude in simply presenting the totality of requirements to offset inflation and currency fluctuations; and fourth, the revised appropriations included items which should not be charged to Member States, such as the financing of meetings which excluded some Member States, the cost of the New York office of the South West Africa People's Organization, the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, the Secretariat's Special Unit on Palestinian Rights, assistance to liberation movements and grants to the United Nations Fund for Namibia. The United States noted that States paying about 86 per cent of the budget had either voted against it or had abstained.

Israel, which also voted against, said there had been insufficient efforts to meet the challenge of maximum budgetary restraint. Moreover, it could not agree to the approval of funds for activities of a one-sided political nature.

Portugal abstained because it felt that activities could be carried out more efficiently and more economically.

Brazil and Spain, as well as Finland (speaking also on behalf of Denmark, Norway and Sweden), while voting in favour of the revised appropriations, expressed concern about the continued budget growth. Spain said it would be an interesting experiment to involve Member States, through the Assembly's Main Committees, in the identification of obsolete, marginal or ineffective activities and in the establishment of priorities. Brazil felt that any curb on expenditure should not be at the expense of the urgent needs of developing countries, which should have first priority, and that the Secretary-General should be given clear guidelines. Finland said that the four Nordic countries, while favouring greater efforts to finance new activities from within available resources, were opposed to any step which might hamper the flexibility and dynamic character of the United Nations.

Egypt, Greece and the Syrian Arab Republic explained their votes in favour of the revised appropriations. Egypt attributed the increases mainly to inflation which stemmed primarily from conditions in developed countries, for the effects of which developing countries should not be penalized, and to the Assembly's approval of important activities endorsed by the majority. Therefore, the argument that the additional appropriations were opposed by States contributing the greater part of the budget was irrelevant. Greece said it bore in mind the dynamic role which the United Nations was called on to play, yet the Secretariat should endeavour to achieve savings and display greater financial prudence in preparing the budget proposals for 1982-1983, in line with the steps being taken by Member States to practise restraint. The Syrian Arab Republic stated that the United Nations merely mirrored conditions in its Member States, whose budgets were increasing each year.

Programme and budget performance

In compliance with recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit on programming and evaluation, approved by the General Assembly in 1978,<sup>3</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report dated 19 March 1980 on the programme performance of the United Nations in 1978-1979. Using as a framework the descriptions of each substantive programme contained in the 1978-1979 proposed programme budget, the report classified all programme elements and their related output into five categories, according to the status of their implementation: (1) completed as programmed, (2) completed with deviations, (3) in progress as programmed, (4) in progress with deviations and (5) not commenced. Explanations were provided for items in categories (2), (4) and (5). In addition, actions initiated but not programmed in 1978-1979 were identified. The percentage of output implemented as programmed was indicated for each programme. Part Two of the report dealt specifically with aspects of the identification of activities that were completed, obsolete, of marginal usefulness or ineffective (see following section).

Considering this report at its May/June 1980 session, CPC welcomed the first attempt at quantifying programme performance in percentage terms, but expressed concern that the figures were of questionable reliability and could not be used as a valid basis for judgement. It felt some explanations for non-implementation were not acceptable or were insufficiently valid and that areas reporting a high degree of non-implementation had probably suffered from inadequate programme planning. It recommended that the Secretariat submit proposals for the termination of activities to the appropriate inter-governmental body for approval rather than taking unilateral decisions.

Since CPC's view was that an interim programme performance report on the first half of the budgetary period would be of limited usefulness, agreement was expressed with the Secretariat's proposal that such reports would be prepared and submitted biennially, at the end of implementation of each programme budget.

Also commenting on programme performance for 1978-1979, ACABQ said in a report to the General Assembly dated 9 September that the Secretary-General's report was ambiguous in attributing delays or postponements to shortages or lack of staff. Like CPC, ACABQ questioned the figures provided on the proportion of work actually carried out in each programme.

With regard to budget performance, ACABQ reported that, according to the Secretary-General, the United Nations had underspent 1978-1979 appropriations by $6,693,328, or 0.6 per cent of the revised total of $1,084,186,200 approved by the Assembly in 1979.<sup>4</sup> The Committee noted that one of the reasons why appropriations had not been fully utilized was the staff vacancy situation in various Secretariat units.

The recommendations of CPC were endorsed

In addition to his report on programme performance, the Secretary-General reported in March on how future programme budgets would identify the planned output of Secretariat actions—an output being a specific product such as a report or a meeting. A list of outputs was considered necessary in order to present to CPC, ACABQ and the Fifth Committee a statement of what would be delivered as a result of the expenditure of the resources requested and to provide a reference for subsequent performance monitoring and reporting. In a series of recommendations, the report indicated how various outputs would be described in the programme narratives of budget documents, according to whether they involved the organization of intergovernmental meetings, reports to intergovernmental bodies, peace-keeping and humanitarian operations, technical publications, public information services, technical assistance projects, grants and fellowships, and others.

The report was described by CPC as a positive contribution to the improvement of programme planning. The Committee recommended that it serve as a basis for instructions on the presentation of programme narratives in future budgets.

Identification of completed, obsolete and marginally useful or ineffective activities

In compliance with a 1979 General Assembly resolution,<sup>5</sup> the Secretary-General devoted Part Two of his report on programme performance of the United Nations for the biennium 1978-1979 (see preceding section) to the identification of activities that had been completed or were obsolete, of marginal usefulness or ineffective. A total of 55 programme elements were identified as having been terminated for those reasons; in addition, 57 separate items of output were also shown as having been terminated. These terminations had resulted in the release and redeployment of 138 Professional work-months.

The tentative criteria for the identification of obsolete, marginally useful or ineffective activities were accepted by CPC in June, on the understanding that they would be further refined and applied more strictly in future. The Committee noted with concern, however, that the programme performance report did not respond to the mandate laid down by the Assembly in 1979,<sup>6</sup> and recommended that the Economic and Social Council should reiterate to the Secretary-General the need to provide the information to the Assembly at its 1980 regular session.

In response to CPC's recommendations, which were endorsed by the Council on 25 July by decision 1980/179 (see p. 992), the Secretary-General submitted another report dated 14 November. The report identified 14 additional programme elements and 57 outputs which had been terminated; a total of 341 Professional work-months were released as a consequence and redeployed to other activities. The Secretary-General proposed for Assembly approval that: reporting on completed activities be limited to the biennial programme performance reports, focusing on programme output level and using the biennial budget as a frame of reference; and reporting on activities which were obsolete, of marginal usefulness or ineffective be undertaken in the context of the proposed medium-term plan and subsequent revisions of the programme budget, the programme performance report, and the in-depth programme evaluation reports.

The Advisory Committee recommended that the Assembly approve the proposals. It concurred in the Secretary-General's suggestion to defer to its 1982 session the submission of a full and comprehensive report on the implementation of the Assembly's 1975 resolution requesting information on programmes, projects or activities completed, nearly completed, or considered by the appropriate intergovernmental bodies to be obsolete, of marginal usefulness or ineffective.<sup>7</sup>

On 17 December 1980, the Assembly adopted without objection resolution 35/209 on the subject, following approval of the text by the Fifth Committee without vote on 11 December. The Assembly thereby decided to: terminate the activities identified in the November report of the Secretary-General as obsolete, ineffective or of marginal usefulness, taking into consideration the opinions of competent bodies; approve his proposals for the establishment of an integrated and comprehensive procedure for identifying such activities within the framework of United Nations planning, programming and budgeting cycles; request CPC to undertake, in the context of its consideration of programme priority setting, a comprehensive study of the subject and report to it and to the Economic and Social Council in 1981; request the Secretary-General meanwhile to identify obsolete, marginally useful and ineffective activities in the preparation of the 1982-1983 budget for CPC and ACABQ consideration; and endorse ACABQ's recommendation on deferral until 1982 of a full and comprehensive report on implementing the Assembly's 1975 resolution on this question.

The text was sponsored by Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Sweden and the United Kingdom.

The sponsors orally revised their text after submission: "forthwith" was deleted from the decision to terminate forthwith the activities identified by the Secretary-General; the Assembly approved his proposals (rather than his findings) that a comprehensive procedure should be established "within the framework of the planning, programming and budgeting cycles" (rather than that such a procedure should be incorporated in those cycles); requested a comprehensive (rather than an in-depth) study of this subject; and transmitted the Secretary-General's November report to CPC for consideration at its 1981 session, rather than transmitting it for CPC consideration in the context of the comprehensive study of the subject.

Following submission by the USSR of several oral amendments, informal consultations produced additional oral revisions announced by the sponsors. These included addition of a phrase to indicate that the opinions of competent bodies were to be taken into consideration in terminating the activities identified as obsolete, ineffective or of marginal usefulness, and mention of ACABQ as well as CPC in the provision whereby the Secretary-General's identification of such activities, in preparing the 1982-1983 budget, was to be considered by both bodies in their examination of budget proposals.

The United Republic of Cameroon observed, after approval of the text, that it was not happy with the request to the Secretary-General to identify obsolete and ineffective activities in preparing the budget, whose effect, it said, would make identification a part of the budgetary rather than the planning exercise. Regarding the forthcoming study, Indonesia said it could in no circumstances accept any attempt to use the study and the consequent redeployment of resources as a pre-condition for the financing of new activities.

Medium-term plan for 1980-1983

By a 1979 resolution,<sup>8</sup> the General Assembly had established a number of principles and guidelines for medium-term planning in the United Nations. The period to be covered by the medium-term plan was increased from four to six years, beginning with the next one (1984-1989), and the plan would be redrafted every two years to provide an up-to-date framework for the programme budget covering the first biennium of its four-year perspective. As a consequence, the submission of a 1982-1985 proposed medium-term plan originally scheduled for 1980 was not required, but the 1980-1983 plan—drawn up in 1978<sup>9</sup> but not endorsed that year, and reviewed by the Economic and Social Council in 1979<sup>10</sup>—was reviewed to take into account all decisions with programme implications during the first biennium (1980-1981).

To provide an up-to-date framework for the 1982-1983 proposed programme budget, the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council, CPC and the Assembly in 1980 reports on: proposed revisions to the medium-term plan for 1980-1983; model medium-term plans; and a draft calendar for the preparation of the proposed medium-term plan for 1984-1989. Preliminary conclusions in the last-mentioned report were that participation of sectoral, regional and other intergovernmental organs in the plan's formulation could necessitate considerable rescheduling of meetings and extra costs.

Revisions incorporating the effects of decisions taken by various intergovernmental bodies to the medium-term plan for 1980-1983 were proposed for 13 out of 25 major programmes. Major revisions were made to the disarmament programme as a result of the tenth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament (May/June 1978), and to the international trade programme as a result of the fifth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) (May/June 1979). Proposed changes in the programme of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as a result of its Third General Conference (January/February 1980) and to the science and technology programme, which was superseded by recommendations of the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development (August 1979), were issued later as addenda to the Secretary-General's report. Less extensive revisions were proposed in respect of individual subprogrammes of the following major programmes: political and Security Council affairs activities; international justice and law; trusteeship and decolonization; public information; development issues and policies; food and agriculture; human settlements; natural resources and energy; ocean economics and technology; and statistics.

The proposed revisions incorporated general principles and specific recommendations formulated by CPC and endorsed by the Assembly in 1979.<sup>11</sup> At its May/June 1980 session, CPC, in recommendations focusing on the planning process, recommended: the full involvement of the relevant sectoral, functional or regional intergov-environmental bodies, without rescheduling sessions, in the preparation of the medium-term plan prior to review by CPC, the Economic and Social Council or the Assembly; that, in formulating the 1982-1983 programme budget, the Secretary-General should follow priorities recommended by CPC in its 1980 report; that priority determination among major programmes should be accomplished within the context of the planning process; and that CPC in 1981 should determine the criteria and methods to be used in setting priorities for 1984-1989. It requested a brief report outlining the major issues and suggesting ways of making a decision. Relative real growth rates of programmes should be retained, except those for political and Security Council affairs activities, food and agriculture, human settlements, industrial development, and science and technology. A table of proposed relative biennial real growth rates of the major programmes was contained in CPC's report.

With respect to the medium-term plan for 1984-1989, CPC recommended: that the plan be prepared for review in 1982; that revisions to it be proposed in 1984; that the introduction to the plan contain a summary of its main initiatives; that a narrative at the major programme level indicate the relationship of that sector's plan to the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s); that the plan and programme budget continue to be linked at the programme level; and that the proposed programme budget be finalized and distributed by the end of April 1981 to allow for review by CPC at its May/June 1981 session. The Committee recommended several amendments to the programmes and sub-programmes in the 1980-1983 medium-term plan; the changes agreed on during its discussions would be set out in corrigenda to the initial plan document.

After reconsidering whether the medium-term plan should be "rolling" (subject to replacement by a new plan after a given interval, such as two years) or "fixed" (established once and for all for a given period, subject to partial review), CPC felt there was no need to take a decision at the current session; this decision needed only to be taken after the experience of the first revision to the plan.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1980/175, took note of the proposed revisions to the medium-term plan for the period 1980-1983, taking into account the comments and reservations made by some CPC members and comments made in the Council. This decision was adopted without vote on 24 July. It was orally proposed by the Chairman of the Council's Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, amended by the USSR to add the reference to comments and reservations of CPC members-with a sponsor-accepted subamendment by the United States to refer to those of "some" CPC members-and approved by the Committee without vote on 22 July.

By a separate decision of 25 July-decision 1980/179-the Council endorsed most of the recommendations and conclusions in CPC's report (for details, see p. 992).

When the medium-term plan was discussed in the Assembly's Fifth Committee, India introduced, on behalf also of Barbados, Burundi, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Ghana, Indonesia, Kenya, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Yugoslavia, a draft decision on the subject. The Committee approved a sponsor-revised and orally amended version of that text without vote on 14 October; the Assembly adopted it as resolution 35/9 without objection on 3 November. The Assembly thereby took note of the relative real growth rates for major programmes proposed by CPC, and decided to endorse most of CPC's other conclusions and recommendations, taking into account the reservations and comments made thereon in framing and considering the report in CPC, the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly.

However, the Assembly did not endorse recommendations: that the phrase "of an unforeseeable nature" be deleted from a provision in a 1976 Assembly resolution<sup>12</sup> by which sectoral, functional and regional programme-formulating organs involved in planning and programming were urged to refrain from undertaking new activities not programmed in the medium-term plan and the subsequent budget unless a pressing need of an unforeseeable nature arose, as determined by the Assembly; that human settlements be one of the programme areas for immediate Secretariat analysis for improved distribution of tasks and responsibilities between the regional commissions and other United Nations units, programmes and organs (see also p. 569); and that guidelines be formulated for a system-wide questionnaire collect information for an appraisal of how restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system in accordance with a 1977 Assembly resolution<sup>13</sup> had begun better to meet the requirements of the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order.<sup>14</sup>

<sup>14</sup>See Y.U.N., 1974, pp. 324 and 326, texts of Declaration and Programme of Action, contained in resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974.

The Assembly endorsed revisions to the medium-term plan of UNCTAD for 1980-1983 accepted ("accepted" was formerly "agreed to"-an oral change by the sponsors) by the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board's Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget (see p. 636).

Believing that plan revisions should include changes recommended by intergovernmental bodies following reviews of the system's response to existing mandates and as a result of implementing the Assembly's 1979 resolution on identifying completed, obsolete and marginally useful or ineffective activities,<sup>15</sup> the Assembly asked those bodies regularly to review their programmes in time to convey their views and concerns to CPC. Considering that CPC should not continue to set relative real growth rates, the Assembly asked it to determine at its 1981 session new criteria and methods for setting programme priorities; in setting such priorities, CPC was invited to take into account the views on sub-programme priorities of relevant bodies and to assess whether priorities had been respected in the proposed programme budget. The Assembly emphasized the importance of the satisfactory implementation of CPC's recommendations on finalization and distribution of the programme budget by April 1981 to allow for CPC review in 1981.

Reaffirming its belief in the value of the Joint Meetings of CPC and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) (see p. 992), the Assembly asked the Secretary-General and specialized agency heads to ensure their personal participation in those Meetings and invited ACC to report in 1981 on measures to improve inter-agency communication (see pp. 571 and 991).

Services to extrabudgetary activities

The Secretary-General's report on services provided by the United Nations to activities financed from extrabudgetary resources, originally submitted to the General Assembly in 1979 but deferred to the 1980 session,<sup>16</sup> divided services into three categories, supporting: the administrative structure of extrabudgetary activities; technical co-operation programmes; and substantive activities financed by extrabudgetary funds.

The largest category, in terms of the amount of money spent, covered costs incurred to provide backstopping at Headquarters or major overseas offices for technical co-operation projects financed from such voluntarily funded sources as the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP); in the second largest cost category were administrative services performed for voluntarily funded bodies. The report suggested that the total support costs for technical co-operation continue to be shared between the United Nations and the extrabudgetary source. A simple practical formula to be determined by the Assembly should be applied rather than detailed cost measurements.

With regard to support for administrative structures financed outside the regular budget, the Secretary-General noted that the United Nations and UNDP had worked out a new methodology for determining how much the United Nations should be reimbursed for its services. This new formula would call for calculating the percentage of a particular unit's workload devoted to its support for UNDP, and requiring UNDP to pay that percentage of the unit's total budget. A simple reimbursement formula should also be applied with regard to support for substantive activities financed outside the regular budget.

Endorsing continuation of the Secretary-General's methodology as well as of current procedures for administrative and budgetary presentation of reimbursement resources, ACABQ suggested refining and strengthening the system of administrative and financial control, especially in the administration of trust funds. It noted that the UNDP Governing Council in June had decided on a new formula for reimbursing executing agencies for their costs in providing support services for project execution (see p. 592), and that the Economic and Social Council had endorsed that decision by resolution 1980/65 of 25 July (see p. 593).

Regarding support costs for substantive activities, ACABQ shared the Secretary-General's view that the reimbursement rate was related to the question of the formula of reimbursement of technical co-operation support costs.

The report of ACABQ also examined the question of the creation of extrabudgetary posts and recommended that the establishment of all extrabudgetary posts at the D-I (Principal Officer) level and above for which the approval of an intergovernmental organ was not required be subject to the concurrence of ACABQ which would then report to the Assembly.

Also addressed was the question of future presentation of annex VIII of the proposed programme budget, which concerned extrabudgetary support services. Having obtained a precise indication from the Secretary-General of how this annex would be presented in future, ACABQ reproduced this information in an annex to its report. It had no objection to his stated intention of reflecting information on support services to activities financed from extrabudgetary resources in future programme budget proposals, instead of submitting further separate reports on the issue.

In the Fifth Committee, the USSR orally proposed a draft decision to request the Secretary-General to continue submitting separate reports. After informal consultations and acting on an oral suggestion by the Chairman which took into account the USSR proposal, the Fifth Committee recommended that the Assembly take note of the reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ, endorse the latter's recommendation on establishment of senior-level extrabudgetary posts, and request the Secretary-General to submit, as a separate annex to future programme budgets, all necessary information on services provided by the United Nations to activities financed from extrabudgetary resources. This decision was taken on 9 October without objection.

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted this recommendation without objection; its provisions became section II of resolution 35/217.

Scale of assessments for apportionment of United Nations expenses

Scale of assessments for the financial years 1981 and 1982

The General Assembly, by resolutions 35/11 A and B of 3 November 1980, adopted together without objection, established the rate of assessment for 1979 to 1982 for Saint Lucia, admitted to United Nations membership on 18 September 1979, and included the Democratic People's Republic of Korea among the non-member States called upon to contribute towards the 1980, 1981 and 1982 expenses of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO). The texts of the resolutions were proposed by the Committee on Contributions and approved jointly by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee without objection on 21 October.

For the percentage scales of assessment and net contributions payable for 1980, 1981 and 1982, see the table on pp. 1215-1216.

As requested by the Assembly in 1979,<sup>17</sup> when it had adopted the scale of assessments for the financial years 1980, 1981 and 1982,<sup>18</sup> the Committee on Contributions, at its fortieth session, held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 13 to 30 May 1980, studied and subsequently reported to the Assembly on ways and means of increasing the fairness and equity of the scale of assessments.

Report of the Committee on Contributions

tion of: methods for avoiding excessive variations in assessment rates between successive scales; a general index of development reflecting a country's capacity to pay, including economic and social indicators and the ability of Member States to secure convertible currency; heavy dependence of certain Member States on export of one product or a few products; application of the low per capita income allowance formula; different methods of national accounting by Member States, and different inflation rates and their effects on the comparability of national income statistics; national wealth as a factor of a country's capacity to pay; establishment of a uniform time period for basic data; and the effects of altering the statistical base period in the scale of assessments.

The Committee was unable to agree on what was meant by excessive or extreme variations. Some members considered that an imposition of any upward or downward limits would lead to a distortion of the true measurement of the capacity to pay. For countries experiencing continual growth or continual decline in their national incomes, the consequence of applying arbitrary limits to a series of successive scales would be to worsen that distortion over a period of years; it would also lessen the flexibility of the Committee to moderate scales for States whose upward or downward movements resulted from changes in national income, thereby diminishing their chances to obtain additional relief. Other members felt that the introduction of some limit would not essentially represent a departure from the capacity-to-pay principle since the current measurement based on national income, but not on other economic and social indicators, could not adequately reflect capacity to pay. The Committee also considered in this context the possibility of introducing a scale of up to 4 decimal digits. It concluded that this question should be kept under constant review.

Committee members agreed that, in principle, national income as a measure of capacity to pay should be supplemented by other economic and social indicators. In view of the absence of full conceptual agreement on the choice of indicators and the lack of actual statistics, the Committee decided to take up this question further at its next session and requested the Statistical Office to prepare a study on the relative ranking of Member States in respect of selected leading economic and social indicators.

With respect to the difficulty experienced by certain Member States in securing convertible currency, the Committee examined, as it had at past sessions, statistical data on external public debt in relation to export of goods and services, to international reserves and to national income, but did not find an appropriate formula for taking payment difficulties systematically into account in establishing the scale of assessments. As this question required further investigation, it requested the Secretariat to collect additional information for its future work.

The Committee also examined the effects of sharp rises or declines in prices on export earnings and the terms of trade and trade balances of certain Member States which depended heavily on the export of one or a few products. It realized that, in the case of developing countries dependent on the export of a non-renewable natural resource, account should be taken of that fact when assessing their capacity to pay. In the case of countries with commodity-oriented economies confronted with steep declines in export prices and increasing prices for imports, or countries whose earnings were subject to sharp fluctuations, the Committee realized that there might be an impairment of their relative capacity to pay as a result of a reduction in their international reserves of convertible currencies. Sharp movements in export as well as import prices could contribute to domestic inflation which, in turn, would distort the statistical measurement of national income, especially when the exchange rates did not respond adequately to variations in the relative rates of inflation. In this connexion, the Committee considered again the possibility of using data on national income in constant rather than in current prices. Since that method presented serious conceptual and practical difficulties, including the choice of rate of conversion, imperfections in price indexes and the choice of an appropriate basket of goods and services valued for the base period, it agreed to keep the matter under review.

The Committee discussed a number of formulae for calculating the low per capita income allowance-used to mitigate assessment rates for the poorest countries (except those paying the minimum rate) in proportion to the amount by which their national income per head of population fell below $1,800 per year-and their consequences on the scale of assessments. According to some members, an upward shifting of the low per capita income limit would result in heavily favouring middle-income countries rather than low-income countries. Others were of the opinion that such a change would be in conformity with the principle to take into consideration the ever-widening gap between the economies of the developing and developed countries. The Committee concluded that the matter should be thoroughly examined in connexion with the general review of the scale of assessments in 1982.

Progress had been achieved in reconciling the different methods of national accounting used by Member States with market economies and those with centrally planned economies. More and more countries belonging to the latter group were in a position to supply data of national income in market prices according to the system of national accounts, as required for the Committee's purpose, or were able to provide sufficiently detailed economic statistics to enable the Secretariat to make the necessary adjustments.

The Committee explored again the idea that a nation's accumulated wealth as well as its current annual income could be jointly considered as the factors influencing its capacity to pay, but concluded that sufficient progress had not been made in methodology and availability of national wealth statistics to warrant their systematic use in the determination of countries' relative capacity to pay.

In order to ensure a uniform time period for the basic data, the Committee decided to take appropriate action at the next general review in 1982 to adjust any Member State's fiscal year statistics to a calendar year basis.

Finally, the Committee studied the effects of altering the statistical base period in the formulation of the scale of assessments comparing statistics based on three-, five-, seven- and nine-year base periods. Some members favoured retaining a seven-year statistical base, while others expressed the hope that the Committee would return to the use of the former three-year base period, which they felt more appropriately reflected relative economic changes and was long enough to provide for correction of the influence of short-term fluctuations. Some considered that, in view of the lack of the necessary data on national wealth, an average national income for a period of nine years or longer would be more acceptable in order to obtain a wider reflection of economic realities. Within the time available, the Committee could not examine in depth all the aspects of this question and, therefore, decided to take it up again in 1982.

Other matters examined by the Committee were: reports on States which were in arrears in payment of their assessed contributions; a report of the Secretary-General on arrangements made for 1980 payments in currencies other than United States dollars (11 States paid the equivalent of $2.6 million in five of 21 acceptable non-dollar currencies), after which the Committee recommended that he continue to be authorized to make similar arrangements up to 1982; and a request by the World Tourism Organization for national income data and statistics used by the Committee, on which the Committee sought further guidance. Other subjects considered resulted in the draft resolutions subsequently adopted by the Assembly as resolutions 35/11 A and B on the assessment rate for Saint Lucia and the contribution of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea towards UNIDO expenses.

Consideration by the General Assembly

In the discussion of the Committee's report in the Fifth Committee, most speakers were in general agreement with the conclusions of the Committee on Contributions and endorsed the principle of apportioning expenses according to the capacity to pay. However, while a number of members continued to favour the use of national income as an internationally acceptable, objective and dependable statistical indicator of a country's capacity to pay, others, such as Algeria, India, Japan, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Morocco, Nigeria, the Philippines, Portugal, and Trinidad and Tobago, called for supplementing national income data with other economic and social indicators.

Portugal would have appreciated a more detailed account of the Committee's deliberations on such indicators and on the question of inflation rates and their effects on the comparability of national income statistics. Canada expressed its support of supplementary criteria to the extent that they could be generally and uniformly applied to all; since the necessary statistical data were either incomplete or non-existent, the additional criteria could not be used in the foreseeable future. The Netherlands suggested that the Committee select the factors and indicators to be studied on the basis of whether or not they were quantifiable and would ensure world-wide comparability. According to the Federal Republic of Germany, it was dangerous to use criteria which could not be quantified for all Member States and which would change the currently accepted basis for comparison of quantitative data based on comparable statistics. France, while recognizing that national income was a monetary criterion which could be distorted by inflation and exchange rates, observed that every other indicator also entailed difficulties.

Spain, Venezuela and Yugoslavia called for continued study of the question of social and economic indicators, considering that they would help to measure with greater precision the real capacity to pay. Poland said much remained to be done before a reasonably meaningful and acceptable set of indicators was arrived at. Brazil said such indicators, taken in isolation, tended to reflect not a country's capacity to pay but rather its level of well-being, which might be related to income distribution but not necessarily to the generation of income. In Indonesia's view, a new general index covering economic and social, as well as value and structural, aspects of development, including per capita national income, might provide a more comprehensive indicator of a country's overall level of development than did national income.

Egypt, Hungary, Poland and the Syrian Arab Republic emphasized that due consideration must be given to the ability of Member States to secure convertible currency. The ratio of external public debt to national income and changes in terms of trade should also be considered.

While countries such as Algeria, Indonesia, Nigeria and Venezuela were of the opinion that a country's accumulated wealth, as well as current annual income, should be taken into account in determining capacity to pay, others such as Czechoslovakia considered that idea questionable because inadequate data and methods made it impossible to use wealth as a systematic indicator. Greece and Italy believed that accumulated wealth as an indicator could not be interpreted to include national assets of a cultural character or pertaining to the national environment. Given the complexity of net national wealth, Morocco and Portugal urged that further developments in that important field be kept under review.

Commenting on the low per capita income allowance formula, Bangladesh, Japan, Mauritania and the Philippines expressed the view that it should be applied in such a manner as to lessen the burden of the low per capita income countries, in particular the least developed countries. The German Democratic Republic urged the Committee to explore ways of taking into account the particularly difficult economic situation of the least developed countries, for example by fixing their minimum contribution at a considerably lower level, or by setting a percentage for their combined contribution, with each country paying an equal share. Brazil expressed dissatisfaction with the formula because of the faulty methods of measuring national income; the aim of a revised formula was to update the real value of the dollar limit to take into account the devaluation of the dollar. Hungary, Poland and Yugoslavia favoured improving the formula by raising the upper limit of per capita income to $2,500 in order to keep up with the state of the world economy. Australia supported some revision of the formula, while France preferred to maintain the dollar limit of $1,800 but to increase the relief factor of 75 per cent. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya did not support any shift in percentage points in calculating the formula for the least developed countries.

A number of States, for example Greece, Indonesia, Japan and the Philippines, supported the idea that the Committee should make every effort to develop a formula to avoid excessive variations in the assessments between successive scales. Such views, however, were not shared by others. For instance, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary and Portugal warned against the imposition of artificial percentage limits, which would amount to an arbitrary departure from the accepted principle of assessment on the basis of capacity to pay. New Zealand felt that there was no need to place a formal limit on the increase or decrease allowable between successive scales. Czechoslovakia voiced serious doubts about the concept of avoidance of excessive variations of individual rates according to capacity to pay; variations in assessment rates were already more than sufficiently mitigated by the seven-year statistical base period. Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Romania considered the existing procedure flexible enough to enable the Committee to make allowance, on a case-by-case basis, for States with particular difficulties.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya believed that a practical method could be worked out on the basis of a consensus to avoid excessive variations and maintained the view that the introduction of upward and downward limits would not constitute a departure from the principle of assessment based on capacity to pay. The Syrian Arab Republic expressed the hope that the marked increase in some countries' assessed contributions in the most recent scale of assessments would not be repeated when the next scale was drawn up.

With respect to the statistical base period, Australia reiterated its view that the seven-year period continued to serve more than adequately as a safeguard against unwarranted fluctuations in national assessments between successive scales. The German Democratic Republic, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal, Romania, Trinidad and Tobago, and Yugoslavia were among those favouring the retention of the seven-year period, which, the Netherlands added, appeared to ensure reasonable stability, without ignoring economic realities but successfully avoiding excessive fluctuations in national assessments. New Zealand did not wish to see the seven-year period lengthened, while Japan thought that it would be advisable, until the statistical data for a set of acceptable socioeconomic indicators became available, to extend the base period. Nigeria favoured a nine-year period for that purpose. Pakistan felt that, while a long base period would reflect some elements of accumulated wealth, it would also distort the assessment of some Member States.

France and Poland preferred a five-year base period which, in their opinion, would be more adequate to correct the influence of short-term changes and exchange rate fluctuations.

Algeria wanted the development assistance provided by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to be taken into account in determining the scale of assessments. The Syrian Arab Republic observed that, in the case of States whose earnings depended on exports of one or a few products, account should be taken of the rising prices of goods they imported and the effect of foreign exchange rates on their capacity to pay.

The Ivory Coast explained that it would not be able to meet its increased assessment of 0.03 per cent because of the overall decline in the prices of its principal export crops and the rising prices of its imports, including its rising oil bill. It expressed the hope that, in the light of these circumstances, the Committee would maintain its contribution at 0.02 per cent.

Member States in arrears

By a letter of 10 January 1980, the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly President at the opening of the Assembly's sixth emergency special session that eight States (Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Congo, Nicaragua, Paraguay, South Africa, Sudan) were more than two years in arrears in payment of their financial contributions to the United Nations, within the terms of Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations.<sup>19</sup> The Assembly decided on that date that its decision of 4 January<sup>20</sup> to extend as an exceptional measure the authorization to vote for Members at that time in arrears would remain valid for the current session, with the exception of South Africa. On 14 January, the Secretary-General informed the President that the Congo and Paraguay had made the necessary payments.

The same five States, reduced by the Sudan, were in arrears at the opening of the seventh emergency special session on 22 July, as noted by the Secretary-General in a letter of that date.

On 25 August, at the opening of the eleventh special session, Chad, Comoros and South Africa remained, although the following day the President was informed that Comoros had made the necessary payment. At the opening of the thirty-fifth session on 16 September, Chad and South Africa were more than two years in arrears.

In response to requests from Chad annexed to the Secretary-General's letters of 22 July and 16 September and requests from Nicaragua annexed to his letters of 10 January and 28 July and in accordance with Article 19 whereby a Member might be permitted to vote if the Assembly was satisfied that failure to pay was due to conditions beyond a Member's control the Assembly authorized Chad, on 29 July and 16 September, and Nicaragua, on 14 January and 29 July, to participate in the vote during the sessions in question.

Financial emergency of the United Nations

On 10 December 1980, the General Assembly adopted, by a recorded vote of 64 to 8, with 9 abstentions, resolution 35/113 on the financial emergency of the United Nations. Noting with concern that the Organization's short-term deficit had increased by more than 100 per cent since 31 December 1976 and bearing in mind that a partial solution could enhance liquidity and might facilitate the achievement of progress towards a comprehensive settlement, the Assembly invited the Secretary-General, after consultation with pertinent groups, to issue postage stamps on conserving and protecting nature, including endangered species. Provisions of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations by which income derived from such stamps was to be credited to Member States were not to apply in this case; after deducting production costs, a portion of the revenues earned were to be earmarked for promoting, under United Nations auspices, conservation and protection of nature and endangered species, and the remaining revenues placed in a special account. The Secretary-General was to publicize the stamps with the aim of mobilizing the support of the philatelic community and interested organizations, and report on the project's progress in 1981.

Member States were invited to exert all possible efforts to reach a comprehensive accord and place the finances of the Organization on a sound footing, giving due consideration to suggestions put forward during the Assembly's current debate. The Negotiating Committee on the Financial Emergency of the United Nations was asked to keep the situation under review and report as appropriate to the Assembly's 1981 session. The Secretary-General was asked to submit to that session detailed information on the extent, rate of increase and composition of the Organization's deficit, as well as voluntary contributions received.

Pakistan introduced the draft of the resolution in the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on behalf of 13 sponsors: Egypt, Ghana, Indonesia, Malawi, Mauritania, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Sierra Leone, Uganda, Yugoslavia, Zaire. The Committee approved it on 4 December by a recorded vote, requested by the United Kingdom, of 76 to 10, with 10 abstentions.

Speaking in explanation of vote, the USSR reiterated that the text did not reflect the real reasons for the financial emergency nor did it propose adequate measures for eliminating the deficit; moreover, it contained provisions which would involve a violation of the existing financial rules. Cuba added that the causes of the emergency were not mentioned; in its opinion, those causes included inflation and monetary instability.

The Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom abstained, holding that the resolution did not solve the underlying causes of the emergency-which in their view was the withholding by some Members of payment of their assessed contributions- but only presented some pragmatic solutions of limited scope intended to mitigate the situation. India, Japan and Morocco said that while the text did not solve the problem it would help alleviate the difficulties and accordingly they voted in favour. Similarly Denmark, on behalf of the Nordic countries, said they voted in favour because they wished to promote a solution; nevertheless, they did not consider that the resolution dealt adequately with the problem.

Benin said that, at some point, the international community would have to give serious consideration to the substance of the question; it was regrettable that small, resource-poor countries which paid their assessments should see their contributions eaten away by an inflation which they had not caused, with no effort being made to remedy it.

The Secretary-General in a report of 26 September analysed the financial situation of the United Nations. A series of annexes contained: a comparative analysis of the short-term deficit of the United Nations as at 30 June 1980 and 1979; information on estimated withholdings by Member States from the United Nations regular budget; withholdings by certain Members, which they stated to be for reasons of principle, to the expenses connected with the United Nations Emergency Force, the United Nations

Disengagement Observer Force and the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (about two thirds of the short-term deficit); information relating to the United Nations Special Account to receive voluntary contributions for reducing the deficit, as at 30 June 1980 and 1979; and an estimated statement of cash position for 1980 of the United Nations General Fund, the Working Capital Fund and special accounts.

The report noted that withholdings by Member States from the regular budget, principally in respect of the bond issue and budget-financed technical assistance, had increased to a projected $72 million at the end of 1980 (from $68.1 million in 1979). The short-term deficit had increased from $188.4 million in 1979 to $209.2 million as at 30 June 1980.

Speaking in the Fifth Committee, the Vice-Chairman of the Negotiating Committee on the Financial Emergency of the United Nations, which had last met in 1976, said the ideal solution to financial problems would be for Member States to resolve their political differences, which were primarily responsible for the withholdings. He suggested that at least a partial or interim solution should be proposed if the Organization was not to find itself in an untenable financial situation.

The Assistant Secretary-General for Financial Services spoke of the growing deficit, and an increase in the number of States which withheld contributions, in respect of peace-keeping operations. The Secretary-General had repeatedly stressed that late payments to or failure to pay troop-contributing countries might affect their willingness to continue to make contingents available to the international community. Should the deficit continue to increase, there was every possibility that the financial situation of the Organization would be more difficult and its cash position more precarious in the years ahead.

Australia, Italy, Japan and Norway, among others, held that the financial situation was the result of an illegal and deplorable practice of some Member States withholding part of their assessed contributions. Japan felt it might be worthwhile to renew the appeal for voluntary contributions to the special account established in 1972,<sup>21</sup> to which only a few countries had responded, or perhaps a change should be made in budgeting methods, such as establishing a system limiting activities to those for which finances were available, with due regard for programme priorities. Italy opposed using interest, profits on stamp sales or other such revenue to finance payment on United Nations bonds or help reduce the deficit. Australia shared Italy's belief that that would be tantamount to compelling all Member States to bear the burden resulting from the refusal of a few to pay all their assessed contributions.

The position of Hungary and the USSR was that: the United Nations regular budget should not be used to finance projects not of an administrative nature, such as principal and interest on bond issues, the United Nations Cemetery in Korea and similar items of expenditure, which they deemed unjustified and contrary to the Charter of the United Nations; aggressors alone should bear the financial consequences of their actions taken in violation of Assembly resolutions or the Charter; and new programmes of technical co-operation and transfer to the regular budget of posts and programmes formerly financed from extrabudgetary funds should be financed from funds released by the elimination of obsolete, marginally useful or ineffective programmes. Technical assistance should be removed from the regular budget and financed from voluntary extrabudgetary funds payable in national currencies. The USSR also proposed that developed countries holding bonds should renounce claim to their redemption and that States should contribute to the United Nations Development Programme a sum equivalent to that part of their contributions which financed the regular programme of technical assistance. Another important factor, in the USSR's view, was the rapid rate of budget growth due to lack of vigour in improving efficiency and rationalizing the use of available resources. Another reason for the so-called financial emergency, Hungary added, was that yearly additional contributions were needed to compensate for the effects of inflation.

Sierra Leone, which was among States expressing concern over the large sums withheld because of positions of principle, said it could not accept the arguments advanced by those which opposed financing the regular programme of technical assistance from the regular budget.

Pending settlement of political differences which had given rise to the emergency, Pakistan suggested that three types of measures be considered, aimed at restoring the financial integrity of the budget: doubling the level of the Working Capital Fund from $40 million to $80 million; authorizing the Secretary-General to retain in a suspense account the surplus appropriations for 1978-1979 and temporarily suspending application of the financial regulations which stipulated the disposition of those funds; and transferring all or part of miscellaneous income to a special reserve which would constitute another cushion against cash shortage.

While Morocco and others supported Pakistan's proposals, France and the United Kingdom had misgivings: the former said they would not help meet the deficit and would in effect burden regularly-paying States with the share of those that refused to meet their obligations; the latter said the proposals would elevate cash-flow difficulties above principle, to which the United Kingdom was opposed, and did not attack the root of the problem. France also felt that expenditure on technical assistance under the regular budget must be limited as much as possible.

Egypt submitted a number of proposals, including suggestions that: income from revenue-producing activities and additional funds resulting from the admission of new Members not be refunded to Member States; every opportunity be taken to issue and sell commemorative stamps, coins and the like; guided tour fees at Headquarters be increased; major contributors and countries whose balance of payments was not in deficit pay their assessed contributions at the beginning of the year and/or in advance; those States especially, but also others holding United Nations bonds, consider forfeiting repayment of principal and interest; States be asked to pledge generous voluntary contributions; and Members objecting to including technical aid in the regular budget or those offering non-convertible currencies be asked to re-examine their position.

Noting with concern that the short-term deficit of the Organization has increased by more than 100 per cent since 31 December 1976.

Recalling the request in its resolution 32/104, addressed to all Member States, particularly those among them whose efforts can promote an accord, to negotiate with the aim of bringing about a lasting solution to the financial problems of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind that a partial or interim solution of parts of the problem could enhance the liquidity of the Organization and might facilitate the achievement of further progress towards a comprehensive settlement, which is desired by all Member States,

Other administrative and budgetary questions

Pattern of United Nations conferences

In 1980, the General Assembly approved guidelines on the preparation, organization and servicing arrangements of special conferences of the United Nations. The Assembly's Committee on Conferences continued throughout the year to oversee the scheduling of United Nations meetings and examined ways to achieve better utilization of conference resources. The Assembly also appropriated additional moneys to cover estimates of conference-servicing requirements in 1981 and asked for a complete schedule of titles of conference-servicing staff and a clear definition of their functions for a study of the question of workload standards for conference-servicing personnel.

Decisions of the Economic and Social Council

During the year, the Economic and Social Council approved changes in the calendar affecting a number of its subsidiary organs. On 17 April, it accepted an offer by Mexico to hold the sixth session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations at Mexico City in June/July, rather than at New York in May, and approved rescheduling of the Commission's Intergovernmental Working Group on a Code of Conduct to commence in May, rather than April. Decision 1980/113, containing this action, was proposed by the Council President and adopted without objection. On 7 November, by decision 1980/188 orally proposed by the Council President on the recommendation of the Working Group's Chairman, the Council approved a one-week extension of the Group's January 1981 session.

The Council also changed the dates for convening its own second regular session of 1980 (3 rather than 2 July), suspending on an exceptional basis its rule of procedure specifying when its regular sessions would be held, and for the Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (postponing the start of the two-day session by a day, to 1 July). This action, recommended by the Council's Bureau, was adopted on 2 May without objection as decision 1980/148.

On 23 July, the Council approved revised dates and venue changes for the two Working Groups on Development Priorities and Policy Needs of Africa (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, September/October) and of South and East Asia (Bangkok, Thailand, October) of the Committee for Development Planning, and for the 1981 session (January instead of February) of the Statistical Commission. Decision 1980/157, incorporating this action, was proposed by the Committee for Development Planning and the Secretariat, and was adopted without objection.

Report of the Committee on Conferences

The main tasks of the 22-member Committee on Conferences in 1980 had been defined in a 1979 General Assembly resolution.<sup>1</sup> In pursuance of this directive, the Committee developed a number of recommendations, which it submitted in its 1980 report to the Assembly. Further, in accordance with its mandate laid down in 1977,<sup>2</sup> the Committee continued to deal with matters related to, and intersessional departures from, the approved calendar of conferences and meetings for 1980. It approved eight changes in the conference programme, ranging from changes of venue and dates to addition of meetings and extension of sessions of various organs.

The Committee was also requested to approve the scheduling of meetings of a number of subsidiary organs of the Assembly during its 1980 regular session. Although the Assembly had stipulated in 1979 that subsidiary organs should complete their work by 1 September in order to report by the opening of the Assembly session,<sup>3</sup> the Committee approved a number of rescheduling requests expressly to enable some bodies to finalize their reports. It decided that a decision on whether certain bodies should be entitled to continue holding meetings of a substantive nature during the regular Assembly session should be referred to the Assembly's General Committee. The Committee recommended that the Assembly appeal to all its subsidiary organs to do their utmost to ensure that the Assembly's 1979 decision on this question would be meticulously adhered to, including affirmation of 1 September as the mandatory deadline for the completion of their work.

The Committee submitted for approval a revised calendar of United Nations conferences and meetings for 1981. In view of the limited number of conference rooms available at Headquarters, the Committee recommended that, in the event the Assembly approved the recommendation to hold the tenth session of the Third United Nations Conference of the Law of the Sea in New York, it should authorize the Committee to meet during the Assembly's regular 1980 session in order to propose necessary adjustments in the calendar of conferences for 1981 and, consequently, to enable the Assembly to consider fully any concomitant financial implications.

The Committee reviewed the extent to which Assembly resolutions and recommendations on the pattern of conferences had been implemented, including planned and actual durations of sessions of Assembly subsidiary organs. It recommended that the Assembly take note of the positive effects of over-programming, which had been introduced to reduce the negative impact on conference resources of cancellations of scheduled meetings. The Committee suggested that the Secretary-General should be encouraged to continue applying maximum over-programming whenever possible.

The planned and actual duration of sessions of subsidiary bodies of the Assembly was examined on the basis of a report providing data for all those bodies that had met in 1979 at Headquarters and at the United Nations Office at Geneva.

The Committee identified a number of bodies with a low utilization of available meeting time; its Chairman addressed letters to the chairmen of those bodies requesting their co-operation in shortening sessions. The Committee agreed that the relevant results should be fully reflected in the draft calendar of conferences and meetings for 1982-1983, and transmitted its data and findings to the Ad Hoc Committee on Subsidiary Organs.

The Committee took note of a Secretariat report on the implementation of Assembly decisions taken in the context of the pattern of conferences, including guidelines to reduce the wastage resulting from cancellations of scheduled meetings, the organization of work of United Nations bodies, informal meetings, a manual for committee secretaries, special conferences, and standards of staffing requirements.

The Committee also reviewed the organizational and servicing arrangements of past special conferences and their preparatory meetings to identify the most effective framework for their organization. It recommended a draft resolution on special conferences for adoption by the Assembly, annexing thereto a set of guidelines for the preparation, organization and servicing of special conferences. The guidelines proposed, in the preparatory phase: action to be taken at the intergovernmental and national levels; action to be taken by the Secretary-General; measures to control and limit documentation; and measures to be taken in respect of conferences held at the invitation of a host Government. Proposals were also outlined relating to the conference phase itself.

The Committee held an extensive exchange of views on the entire range of questions involved in implementing the measures adopted by the Assembly to control and limit documentation (see following subchapter).

Decisions of the General Assembly

The report and recommendations of the Committee on Conferences were considered by the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee at the Assembly's 1980 regular session. The Assembly adopted three resolutions based on the Committee's report.

By a resolution on the future work of the Committee on Conferences-resolution 35/10 A adopted by consensus on 3 November-the Assembly approved the recommendations of the Committee on Conferences as amended by the Fifth Committee, authorized the Committee on Conferences to make any adjustments in the 1981 calendar of conferences thereby approved which might become necessary as a result of action at the current Assembly session, emphasized the need for more Committee control over the establishment of and changes to calendars of subsidiary bodies, and asked it to undertake the necessary consultations in that regard. The Assembly instructed all its subsidiary organs to complete their reports for the following session by 1 September and to report any necessary post-deadline activity in addenda. It requested the Committee, when preparing the calendar for 1982-1983, to propose, after due consultations, the shortening of sessions of subsidiary Assembly bodies and recommend for consideration those which could meet biennially. The Assembly decided further that all proposals made at Assembly sessions affecting the schedule of conferences and meetings were to be reviewed by the Committee when administrative implications were being considered. It requested the Committee to study the possibility of establishing mechanisms to enforce all existing rules to control and limit documentation so as to ensure its timely availability in all official languages and to report thereon in 1981. It requested the Assembly President, after consultations with the chairmen of the regional groups, to appoint 22 Member States, on the basis of equitable geographical balance, to serve on the Committee for a three-year term.

The text of resolution 35/10 A, which was prepared following informal consultations among Fifth Committee Members, was approved by consensus by that Committee on 24 October.

Informal consultations were also held on the draft resolution on special conferences submitted by the Committee on Conferences. The Fifth Committee approved several amendments introduced by its Chairman recommending to the Assembly a modified version of the Committee's text. It deleted the sole recommended preambular paragraph by which the Assembly would have expressed concern about the growth in the number of and expenditure entailed in special conferences and their preparations. Taking into account suggestions by Morocco, the Fifth Committee modified the wording of operative paragraph 1 which would have the Assembly invite United Nations Members and organs, when considering the convening of special conferences, to ensure that (rather than determine whether) the objectives of the proposed conference were such that they had not been achieved and could not be pursued (the words "within a reasonable time-frame" were added here) through established intergovernmental machinery of the United Nations and the specialized agencies.

The remaining four operative paragraphs recommended by the Committee on Conferences were retained. By these, the Assembly would: decide that preparatory committees should be established for special conferences only if this function could not be appropriately performed by an existing intergovernmental organ; decide that the secretariats for special conferences should as far as possible be provided by existing Secretariat machinery with any needed temporary strengthening; ask the Secretary-General to propose in 1981 standard rules of procedure for special conferences; and approve the guidelines (except for a section on control and limitation of documentation) for the preparation, organization and servicing of special conferences.

New Zealand, which acted as co-ordinator of the informal consultations, proposed to add a new operative paragraph by which the Joint Inspection Unit would be invited to undertake a study on the improvement of the secretarial organization for special conferences, with a view to recommending procedures for reinforcing the efficiency and effectiveness of conference preparations, and to report, through the Committee on Conferences, to the Assembly in 1982. The Fifth Committee approved all these amendments on 24 October by consensus. The resolution as amended, with its annex containing the guidelines, was adopted without vote by the Assembly on 3 November as resolution 35/10 C.

A third resolution- 35/10 B-which the Assembly adopted on 3 November after considering the report of the Committee on Conferences, related to summary records for meetings of subsidiary organs of the Assembly (see following subchapter).

By a letter of 8 December to the Chairman of the Fifth Committee, the Chairman of the Committee on Conferences transmitted his Committee's recommendation to the Assembly that two bodies scheduled to meet in New York during 1981 -the Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and the Intergovernmental Working Group on a Code of Conduct of the Commission on Transnational Corporations -meet at Geneva instead. The Committee further recommended that the Assembly call on all other bodies entitled to meet at Headquarters during the tenth session of the Law of the Sea Conference (March/April 1981) to keep their meeting requirements to a minimum.

Administrative and financial implications of conference-servicing costs

Statements of financial implications issued during the Assembly's 1980 session contained estimates of conference-servicing requirements in 1981, on a full-cost basis-i.e. to be provided through recruitment of temporary staff-up to a total amount of $23,463,100. On 12 December, the Secretary-General prepared a consolidated statement of all the administrative and financial implications in respect of conference-servicing costs in order to identify to what extent the estimated requirements could be absorbed within the existing capacity and subsequently how much would be requested as an additional appropriation. The Secretary-General proposed that the Assembly approve for 1981 an additional appropriation equal to that approved for 1980 ($3,745,000) since several uncertainties remained about the schedule and venue of certain conferences. He intended to submit a more detailed analysis, for presentation to the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) during the first part of 1981, which would be the basis for any required adjustment in the appropriation at the time of the performance report.

In an oral report to the Fifth Committee, ACABQ agreed with the Secretary-General's proposal. Following approval by the Fifth Committee on 16 December by a recorded vote of 75 to 18, with 2 abstentions, this amount was included in the revised budget appropriations for 1980-1981 adopted by the Assembly in resolution 35/226 A of 17 December (see p. 1197).

In explanation of vote, the United Kingdom, which voted against the appropriations, protested the practice of not allowing for a vote on conference-servicing costs in first reading, on the ground that additional costs would not be known until the end of the session, which it said undermined Assembly control over conference-servicing expenditures. The United States, which also cast a negative vote, expressed the hope that the General Committee at the 1981 session would be more successful in obtaining compliance with the 1 December deadline for Main Committee approval of resolutions that entailed financial obligations, including conference-servicing costs, and stated that the so-called full-cost estimates submitted to the Main Committees were grossly inflated, which made them meaningless as any objective guide. Also, the amount requested included sums for activities which the United States considered unjustified and objectionable, and it was disappointed that the Secretariat had been unable adequately to balance new conference-servicing requirements against savings or resources released from completed, obsolete, marginal or ineffective activities.

The USSR's objection to the proposed amount was one of principle: it objected to the appropriation of additional sums after the budget had been adopted.

Workload standards for technical and complementary conference-servicing staff

In accordance with a 1979 General Assembly decision,<sup>4</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the 1980 Assembly session a report on the feasibility of establishing further workload standards, in particular for technical and complementary conference-servicing staff.

In his report, the Secretary-General identified six categories of technical and complementary staff servicing in and around conference areas: sound technicians, conference officers, messengers, security guards, meeting room attendants (at Geneva only), and information officers and supporting staff. He concluded that it was not possible to establish universally applicable standards for the first five categories since requirements in their functions tended to vary widely from one meeting to another. Finding that statement inadequate, ACABQ indicated that it planned to pursue its study of the matter. Regarding the sixth category, information coverage of meetings, the Secretary-General reported that workload standards and staffing patterns were being developed by the Department of Public Information.

The Assembly endorsed the recommendations on this subject by ACABQ, which recommended that the Secretary-General prepare a complete schedule of titles of conference-servicing staff with a clear definition of their functions and submit to ACABQ in early 1981 a progress report on the question of workload standards for conference-servicing personnel, including relevant information on the results of interagency meetings on language arrangements, documentation and publications. The Assembly action was contained in section VII of resolution 35/217, adopted on 17 December without objection, following approval by the Fifth Committee on 21 November, also without objection, of an oral proposal to that effect by its Chairman. The Assembly at the same time noted that ACABQ would revert to this question when it considered the proposed programme budget for 1982-1983.

Special conferences of the United Nations

The General Assembly

1. #### ANNEX

Guidelines on the preparation, organization and servicing arrangements of special conferences of the United Nations and their preparatory meetings

I. Preparatory phase

A. Action to be taken at the intergovernmental and national levels

1. If the General Assembly or the Economic and Social Council designates or establishes a preparatory organ for a conference, this organ should hold as soon as possible or practical a short organizational session of a few days' duration in order to elect its officers, to consider the organization and timing of a further session or sessions during the preparatory period, to adopt a provisional agenda for its first substantive session and to provide initial guidance for the substantive activities of the Secretariat.

2. If a preparatory organ is scheduled to hold several sessions, it should adopt at the end of each session a provisional agenda for the subsequent session.

3. If a preparatory organ is established, its last session Prior to the conference should be scheduled so as to allow enough time, between the closing of the session and the opening of the conference, for the timely circulation of the preparatory organ's report in all official languages.

4. States should be invited to designate, whenever appropriate and where possible, a single national focal point early in the preparatory process and to inform the conference secretariat thereof by a certain date.

B. Action to be taken by the Secretary-General

5. An indicative outline of the work programme derived from the general goals and objectives pronounced by the General Assembly or the Economic and Social Council when convening the conference should be submitted to the preparatory organ at its organizational session.

6. The bureau of a preparatory organ should be informed in an appropriate manner of the substance of all relevant measures to control and limit documentation which need to be applied to the documentation for a special conference and its preparatory organ.

7. Organizational rules and arrangements relevant to a conference, as well as a draft timetable for its work throughout its entire duration, should be submitted in the form of a document to a preparatory organ by the time of its last session.

8. An annotated provisional agenda, a document on the organization of work and related arrangements, including a timetable, and all required and available substantive documentation should be circulated well in advance of, but not later than, six weeks prior to the opening of a conference for which no preparatory organ is established.

C. Conferences held at the invitation of a host Government in accordance with General Assembly resolution 31/140

9. Whenever it is decided by the General Assembly to hold a conference away from established headquarters, a host Government should be invited to set up, at its earliest convenience, a national preparatory committee to serve as focal point for local arrangements to be made in connexion with the conference.

10. With regard to practical arrangements and working facilities, account should be taken of:

(a) The need to accommodate working, drafting and negotiating groups, as well as caucuses and regional groups, interagency meetings and briefings of press and non-governmental organizations, in suitably sized and suitably equipped conference rooms;

(b) The possibility of setting up, under the host Government's auspices and on a commercial basis, a service centre at the conference site for use by delegations.

The Secretary-General shall inform delegations well in advance of the opening of the conference about such local facilities and the conditions under which they would be available.

II. Conference phase

11. Special conferences should be scheduled so as to allow a sufficient interval, between the closing of the conference and the opening of the regular session of the General Assembly at which the report of the conference is to be considered, for the timely circulation of the report in all official languages.

12. Where necessary, there should be provision for a maximum of two days of consultations immediately prior to the opening of a conference:

(a) For pre-conference consultations to consider organizational matters, preferably on the day prior to the opening of the conference;

(b) For consultations within regional groups.

13. Recommendations emanating from pre-conference consultations should, in principle, be acted upon without further discussion at the first plenary meeting of a conference.

14. If circumstances so require, each regional group could be requested to designate, immediately prior to the opening of the conference, two persons to serve as "friends of the Rapporteur or Rapporteur-General" to assist the latter in preparing the draft report of the conference.

15. Messages by heads of State or Government which are made available during the opening meeting of a conference should be read from the floor by the delegation concerned prior to the substantive opening statement by the Secretariat.

16. If a general debate is to be held at a special conference, it should start at the second meeting, usually in the afternoon of the opening day.

17. A time-limit of fifteen minutes for interventions by representatives of States and of ten minutes for statements by other participants should normally be observed during the general debate.

18. The following procedure should apply in connexion with the right of reply:

(a) Delegations should exercise their right of reply at the end of the day whenever two meetings have been scheduled for that day and whenever such meetings are devoted to the consideration of the same item;

(b) The number of interventions in the exercise of the right of reply of any delegation at a given meeting should be limited to two per item;

(c) The first intervention in the exercise of the right of reply for any delegation on any given item at a given meeting should be limited to five minutes and the second intervention should be limited to three minutes.

Publications and documentation of the United Nations

In 1979, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly had taken steps to reduce the volume of United Nations documentation by discontinuing on an experimental basis the provision of summary records for the meetings of most of their subsidiary bodies.<sup>5</sup>

By resolution 35/10 B of 3 November 1980, the Assembly reintroduced-subject to review at its 1981 session on the basis of recommendations of the Committee on Conferences and the experience gained, and with the request that they keep their requirements to a reasonable minimum and dispense with meeting records whenever possible-summary records for the following organs: the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People; the Special Committee against Apartheid; the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization; the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean, when holding preparatory sessions for the envisaged 1981 Conference on the Indian Ocean; the United Nations Council for Namibia; and the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) and the Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, for sessions devoted to the preparation of draft conventions and other legal instruments.

Exceptions to the rule set forth regarding summary records in a 1979 Assembly resolution<sup>6</sup> followed partly from several requests for records reinstatement. The Secretary-General, in a report of 24 September 1980, had suggested that the Assembly might wish to refer to the Committee on Conferences for priority consideration in 1981 formal requests he had received or expected to receive from the last three bodies mentioned above, and authorize the Committee to grant exceptions it found warranted. He also suggested that the Assembly might wish to confirm the continued applicability of its 1979 resolution in respect of summary records for all the other organs for which such records were discontinued, for organs that did not receive summary records before the adoption of that resolution and for organs not yet established, unless the Assembly approved explicit exceptions. This last recommendation also became a provision of Assembly resolution 35/10 B.

Communications of 6, 8 and 14 October to the Chairman of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee from the Chairmen of the Sixth (Legal) Committee, on behalf of UNCITRAL, and the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, and the President of the Council for Namibia also sought reintroduction of summary records. The other bodies were included in the resolution's list of exceptions during the Fifth Committee's debate on the item, on oral proposals by Nigeria (Special Committee against Apartheid), the Philippines (Special Committee on the Charter) and Sri Lanka (Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean), agreed to by the other six sponsors of an amendment to include these Committees as well as the Palestinian Rights Committee. The sponsors also accepted subamendments by Austria to grant exceptions to UNCITRAL and the Outer Space Committee's Legal Sub-Committee for meetings devoted to preparation of draft conventions and other legal instruments (rather than those devoted to discussion of legal texts), and an amendment to make the exceptions subject to Assembly review in 1981.

Resolution 35/10 B was adopted by a recorded vote of 74 to 6, with 23 abstentions; the Fifth Committee approved the text on 24 October by 87 votes to 6, with 20 abstentions.

Notes of 29 January and 20 May by the United Nations Secretariat and the Secretary-General, respectively, set forth the policies laid down by the General Assembly regarding control and limitation of documentation. The notes concentrated on the main areas of meeting records (including a list of entitlements to meeting records), the content and format of reports of subsidiary bodies, and the presentation, volume, length and timely circulation of documentation.

In a note of 29 September, the Secretariat drew the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee's attention to the need to reduce the volume of documentation. It suggested: reduction of the number of requests for additional documents; discontinuance of requests that documents be submitted to the Assembly through the Economic and Social Council unless Council action was required; incorporation of reports of governing bodies or secretariats of subsidiary or related organs into annual reports of the subsidiary organ; requesting more oral reports; and submission of reports requiring complex consultation with Governments or specialized agencies, or the establishment of an expert body, to the Assembly at a session later than the one immediately following the request.

Implementation of the measures to control and limit documentation, including those on the provision of meeting records, was monitored by the Committee on Conferences.

The Committee, in its 1980 annual report, recommended that the General Assembly ask the Secretary-General to ensure that detailed explanations were provided for delays in the issuance of documentation, to be reflected in documents on the state of preparedness of documentation. It recommended that the Assembly appeal to all its subsidiary organs to adhere meticulously to its 1979 decisions, in particular those concerning the requirement that subsidiary organs complete their work by 1 September, so that their reports were available by the opening of the Assembly session, and that no subsidiary organ of the Assembly meet at United Nations Headquarters during a regular Assembly session.<sup>7</sup>

This last recommendation was the subject of an Assembly instruction in resolution 35/10 A of 3 November. By the same resolution, the Assembly requested the Committee on Conferences to study and report in 1981 on the possibility of establishing effective mechanisms to enforce all existing rules to control and limit documentation with a view to ensuring timely availability in all official languages. (For details of resolution 35/10 A, see preceding subchapter.)

Also, in resolution 35/10 C of the same date, the Assembly requested the Committee to reconsider, in the light of discussions during the current Assembly session, the question of guidelines on the control and limitation of documentation for special conferences and report to it in 1981 (this paragraph was included by the Fifth Committee by consensus on 24 October, following informal consultations on a text for this resolution recommended by the Committee on Conferences in its 1980 annual report). In the guidelines for the organization of special conferences, annexed to the resolution, the Secretary-General was asked to circulate all substantive documentation no later than six weeks prior to the opening of a special conference for which no preparatory organ was established, and such conferences should be scheduled so as to allow a sufficient interval between its close and the opening of the regular Assembly session for the timely circulation of its report. (For further details of resolution 35/10 C, see preceding subchapter.)

The Committee on Conferences had recommended a series of other specific measures to control and limit documentation, to be included in the guidelines; however, following informal consultations, they were not approved by the Assembly's Fifth Committee. After the informal consultations, the Chairman introduced amendments to the recommendations: a section of the guidelines for special conferences relating to control and limitation of documentation was deleted, as was an annex in the Committee's report setting out a format to be followed in the presentation of national or technical papers.

Resolution 35/10 B, twice revised, was sponsored by Morocco, Mozambique, Nigeria, the Philippines, Senegal, Sri Lanka, Uganda, the United Republic of Cameroon and Zambia. Their text was submitted as an amendment adding a new section to a draft resolution presented by the Fifth Committee Chairman following informal consultations on a draft on special conferences submitted by the Committee on Conferences (see p. 1222).

France, the United Kingdom and the United States also introduced an amendment to add a new section on this subject to the draft which resulted from informal consultations. Their text contained the same first operative paragraph as that adopted by the Assembly-confirming the continued applicability of its 1979 resolution-but would have had the Assembly request the Committee on Conferences to consider, on a priority basis early in 1981, any requests for summary record reinstatement by Assembly subsidiary organs submitted to it at its 1980 session, and would have had the Assembly authorize the Committee to grant the exceptions it found warranted. The sponsors did not press their amendment to a vote.

As requested by the USSR, the Fifth Committee voted separately on several of the proposed amendments. By 86 votes to 13, with 11 abstentions, and by 80 votes to 19, with 13 abstentions, respectively, it decided to retain UNCITRAL and the Special Committee on the Charter in the list of bodies for which summary records were to be reinstated. Australia, explaining its negative vote, believed decisions concerning exceptions should be taken by the Committee on Conferences, not the Fifth Committee. The USSR was convinced that those organs had other ways and means of reporting their work, but did not oppose reinstatement of meeting records for the other bodies in that list, although the decision to do so should not be regarded as a precedent.

Canada, Israel and the United States, in explanation of vote, said the large number of exceptions might undermine progress achieved in controlling documentation, might be a prelude to further exemptions and was incompatible with efforts to realize savings and limit volume.

At the request of the United States, the Committee voted on the revised text, paragraph by paragraph: paragraph 1, confirming the applicability of the Assembly's 1979 resolution on discontinuance of summary records, was adopted by 113 votes to 0; paragraph 2, listing exempted bodies, by 86 votes to 9, with 19 abstentions. The nine-nation amendment as a whole was then approved by 87 votes to 6, with 20 abstentions.

Canada and the United Kingdom, which said their position was based solely on administrative and budgetary grounds, added that the exceptions were likely to constitute a regrettable precedent. Brazil said the decision to authorize exceptions should not have the effect of instituting a procedure by which to overturn previous Assembly decisions nor as setting a precedent for authorizing reinstatements for all Assembly subsidiaries.

Finland and New Zealand considered that the procedure followed had violated provisions of the Assembly's 1979 resolution; Australia, New Zealand and Peru, moreover, said they could not support the paragraph containing exemptions in the light of the adoption of the Austrian subamendment calling for further review in 1981, while the Bahamas and Trinidad and Tobago said they voted in favour of that provision in the light of the subamendment.

Administrative and budgetary co-ordination

Report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) during 1980 again examined general budgetary trends in the specialized agencies related to the United Nations. In its annual report to the General Assembly on administrative and budgetary co-ordination of the United Nations with the agencies, ACABQ commented on the budgets of the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the World Health Organization (WHO), the International Civil Aviation Organization, the Universal Postal Union, the International Telecommunication Union, the World Meteorological Organization, the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization, the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) and the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD), as well as the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). These agencies' relationship agreements with the United Nations provided for transmittal of their budgets for review by the Assembly. The report contained comparative tables of approved budgets, net contributions, and contributions to technical co-operation activities, scales of assessment, Working Capital Funds and established posts.

The report submitted by ACABQ in 1979<sup>8</sup> had not been considered by the Assembly that year; its 1980 report complemented the earlier one. It indicated that, as 1981 was the second year of the agencies' biennial budgetary periods except UNESCO's, the increases in budget levels over 1980 were attributable largely to inflation and currency fluctuations rather than to programme changes. When added to the regular budget of the United Nations, the total amount of the approved or estimated budgets for 1981 was nearly $1,412 million, of which almost $532 million related to the United Nations and $880 million to the specialized agencies (excluding IFAD, for which the 1981 figure was not available) and IAEA. This was an increase of $57 million over 1980, when the approved figures were $532 million for the United Nations and $823 million for the agencies, although WIPO's $17.4 million of that amount was listed as a preliminary figure.

The Advisory Committee drew attention to the fact that IFAD's practice of communicating its budget to the Assembly only after approval by all the Fund's competent organs and after much of the financial period had elapsed was not in accordance with the United Nations/IFAD relationship agreement.

The total number of established posts projected for 1981 stood at 23,044, virtually unchanged from 1980's approved 23,039 posts. The total was divided almost equally between the United Nations (11,214) and the agencies (excluding IFAD) (11,830). Only UNESCO reported a substantial increase in posts (5 per cent) for 1981, while WHO reported a substantial decrease (4.9 per cent).

The total number of staff members in posts throughout the United Nations system (excluding the financial agencies in Washington, D. C.) was 38,649 as of 30 December 1980. In addition to established posts, this included staff members in temporary posts and those financed from extrabudgetary resources.

By resolution 35/114, adopted without objection on 10 December, the General Assembly concurred with ACABQ's observations and comments and referred them to the organizations concerned; it also referred to those agencies the comments made during the debate on the report in the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee—which considered the report and approved, without objection on 4 November, the text of the resolution as submitted by its Chairman following consultations among Committee

Members. The Assembly transmitted <sup>ACABQ'S</sup> report to the Board of Auditors, the Panel of External Auditors, the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (<sup>CPC</sup>) and the Joint Inspection Unit for their information, and reiterated its 1978 request<sup>9</sup> that <sup>ACABQ</sup> emphasize more in its future reports budgetary developments in individual organizations which were of potential interest to other organizations, and to supplement those reports with reports on specific problems common to the United Nations system.

(See also p. 996.)

During the debate in the Fifth Committee, France and the United Kingdom noted that <sup>ACABQ</sup> in its report had drawn attention to an observation by the <sup>UNESCO</sup> Director-General, who had said there was a tendency by the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council towards too many requests for contributions and reports which in some instances concerned problems of secondary importance or matters already abundantly discussed, as well as a tendency for the Assembly to take measures or decisions on matters plainly within the province of the specialized agencies; co-ordination did not mean the proliferation of competing secretariats in various activities but rather economy of effort.

Japan, Romania, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and others expressed concern at the steady growth of the administrative budgets of the organizations. It was essential, Romania stated, to make rational and effective use of the funds available, in particular to maintain strict control over staff costs. Japan and the Ukrainian SSR also said they disapproved of increasing allocations from regular budgets to technical co-operation activities, which they felt should be financed from voluntary sources. The USSR said it was clear from <sup>ACABQ'S</sup> report that there was no real link between the tremendous growth of the administrative machinery, which did not function as efficiently as it should, and the increase in the pressing needs of Member States, which could be met without staff increases by increasing productivity, reorganizing work and better management. The Ukrainian SSR said there was clearly room for administrative and budgetary co-ordination, as witnessed by the poor quality of information, the lack of standardization, the use of different criteria in preparing the various budgets, and lack of harmonization of budget and programming cycles. The United Republic of Cameroon observed that co-ordination did not necessarily require system-wide synchronization of planning periods, and it seemed desirable to maintain a certain flexibility in its view.

A number of suggestions were put forward on information various States would like to see included in <sup>ACABQ'S</sup> annual report on administrative and budgetary co-ordination. Italy thought a comparative table should be provided on voluntary as well as assessed contributions; it also suggested that <sup>ACABQ</sup> should limit discussions with the agency executive heads, making greater use of correspondence. France pointed to the need to strengthen the role of the bodies which played a leading role in co-ordination, i.e. the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (<sup>ACC</sup>), <sup>CPC</sup> and <sup>ACABQ</sup>, which, France hoped, would put forward specific views on the question. Sharing the concern regarding the problem of duplication, the United States felt <sup>ACABQ</sup> should try to determine where duplications existed and indicate appropriate action; that, it added, demonstrated the need to develop a common system of budgetary standards and reporting measures. It also suggested that <sup>ACABQ</sup> should provide tables or material illustrating: administrative costs and costs of services as a percentage of the budget; ratios of headquarters posts to field posts, General Service staff to Professional staff, and expenditure on equipment to personnel costs; conformity to standard job classification; specific cost-cutting or efficiency measures implemented during the year; and inflation and currency fluctuation corrections.

Poland and the United States both felt <sup>ACABQ</sup> should place greater emphasis on analysis and its report should contain more recommendations on administrative and budgetary problems common to the entire system. Poland also said perhaps the co-ordination item should be included in the agenda only every other year, in off-budget years. The USSR hoped that in future reports <sup>ACABQ</sup> would summarize its observations and comments. The Philippines thought it would be helpful if agencies could indicate the methods they used to establish their scales of assessment, the amount of reimbursement of overheads in their budgets, and the sums they set aside to meet inflation. What they considered to be a particularly worrisome problem- the growing impact on budgets of inflation and currency fluctuations- was stressed by Cuba, Romania, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and others.

Information Systems Unit in the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs

The General Assembly, in its 1980 omnibus resolution on questions relating to the programme budget for 1980-1981, dealt with the Information Systems Unit of the Secretariat's Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (DIESA). It decided that the salaries and common staff costs of the basic staff of the Unit's Development Information System (two Professional and two General Service posts) should be funded temporarily by the regular budget for 1981, that other operating and servicing costs should be financed through a combination of extrabudgetary support costs financing and voluntary contributions and that the System should be submitted to continued external evaluation. A report thereon should be circulated prior to the 1981 Assembly session.

Section XIII of resolution 35/217, incorporating the Assembly's decision, was adopted on 17 December by 110 votes to 19, with 9 abstentions; the Fifth Committee approved the text-revised by its sponsors to delete a reference to revenues generated by services rendered to users as a means of financing operating and servicing costs on 8 December by 73 votes to 15, with 18 abstentions. The sponsors were Canada, Mauritania, Panama, Somalia and Sweden.

A draft resolution on the same subject was sponsored and revised by the United States but rejected by the Fifth Committee on 8 December by 22 votes in favour to 33 against, with 47 abstentions. By that draft, the Assembly would have: extended appreciation to Member States which had generously supported the Unit through voluntary contributions; suggested that the Unit be maintained and requested the Secretary-General to undertake studies on arrangements for reimbursing it through voluntary contributions, for services provided; recommended that future users in the United Nations system reimburse the Unit for the costs of services; decided to defer financing it from the regular budget pending the submission by the Inter-Organization Board for Information Systems (IOB) of a report on the Unit, in particular on its co-ordination with other United Nations information systems; decided that staff remuneration during 1981 should be absorbed within already allocated regular-budget funds; and requested the Secretary-General to report to the 1981 Assembly session regarding possible areas of duplication or overlap of the Unit's work with that of the United Nations Bibliographic Information System and to suggest ways of eliminating such duplication.

The Secretary-General reported on 20 October on the one-year extended pilot phase of the Development Information System, established within the Information Systems Unit to make available to international and government officials information contained in unpublished documents in the files of DIESA, the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat). The System's data base currently contained some 3,100 references. The Secretary-General reported on the use made of and demand for the Unit's information dissemination services during 1980 by Governments and institutions concerned with economic and social development. The System was to be submitted to IOB for review and comment; however, as IOB had not met since the Assembly made that request in December 1979,<sup>10</sup> the Secretary-General had asked UNESCO to carry out such an evaluation. The organization concluded that the System had great potential value, which might be enhanced if it became a central component of a world-wide network of development information resources.

As the achievements of both the Unit and the System had been below expectations, in the view of ACABQ, that Committee recommended that continuation of the Unit by financing its estimated $230,000 1981 operating cost from the United Nations regular budget, as the Secretary-General had proposed, should not be approved. It suggested that he explore the possibility of continuing the Unit on a limited basis, in support particularly of technical co-operation activities under arrangements whereby it would be reimbursed from extrabudgetary resources at rates to be agreed on by the users, and that he seek to supplement those resources by soliciting voluntary funds.

Explaining their votes on the United States draft, Canada, Mauritania, Sierra Leone and Somalia said its adoption would spell the end of the Information Systems Unit. Chad, Panama and Senegal said they could not support it because of paragraph 3, recommending user reimbursement for costs of services of the Unit, which they felt was not in the interests of the developing countries. Peru also believed the resolution was detrimental to activities benefiting those countries. The United Republic of Tanzania, on the other hand, which voted in favour, understood paragraph 3 to mean that United Nations organizations would have to pay for services but Member States would not. Egypt opposed the text since it believed that 1981 staff remuneration could not be absorbed within already allocated funds. Algeria and the United Republic of Cameroon abstained in the hope of securing a further trial period for the Unit. India said it voted in favour because the Unit's work did not currently seem to justify regular-budget funds.

To guarantee the continued existence of the Unit was Peru's stated reason for voting in favour of the five-power text approved by the Committee. Algeria, noting comments on the Unit's potential, said it supported the decision. Indonesia supported it as an interim arrangement, but would have preferred to incorporate in it what it considered the positive elements of the United States draft: studies on reimbursement and deferring financing pending an IOB report. Although Egypt was not satisfied with the Unit's current level of work, it believed its performance could be improved and therefore voted in favour. Morocco said its abstention indicated its concern that IOB had not yet submitted its evaluation report. Senegal observed that it would normally have opposed continued provision of funds since the Unit had not lived up to expectations but, because the System would be submitted to continued evaluation and a definitive decision taken in 1981, it abstained. The USSR regarded the continued existence of the Unit as unwarranted and damaging, and said it would have no part in its financing.

Budget of the International Computing Centre

On 17 December 1980, by section XIV of resolution 35/217, the General Assembly approved, by 128 votes to 10, the 1981 budget estimates for the International Computing Centre, an inter-agency facility at Geneva financed by the United Nations and other participating organizations in the United Nations system. As submitted by the Secretary-General and orally endorsed by ACABQ, the Centre's 1981 budget estimates totalled $5,037,000, compared to an approved estimate of $4,905,600 for 1980. The text of this decision was approved without vote by the Fifth Committee on 11 December, on an oral proposal of its Chairman.

Common Register for Development Activities

Further development of another United Nations information system—an interorganization project register for analysing expenditures of United Nations organizations, known as CORE—currently awaited additional information input and a thorough examination of its first phase (see p. 995).

Impact of inflation on

budgets of the United Nations system

In a statement of 9 May 1980 to the Economic and Social Council, ACC reviewed measures taken by the different organizations in the United Nations system to deal with the budgetary pressures created by the current international financial situation and by currency instability in particular. Cases where it had proved feasible to deal with the effects of currency instability through arrangements capable of systematic and continuing application, such as reserve accounts or the earmarking of casual income, were of particular interest. It continued to hold the view that, in any of the necessarily diverse approaches to the problem, the dual objective of protecting the programmes and budgets of the organizations and of limiting recourse to supplementary estimates and assessments must be firmly pursued.

The Council, without vote on 25 July, took note of the ACC statement when it adopted decision 1980/183; the text had been similarly approved by the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee on 22 July, as orally proposed by its Chairman.

During its discussion at the General Assembly's 1980 regular session of administrative and budgetary co-ordination of the United Nations with the specialized agencies (see section above), the Fifth Committee examined a twice-deferred 1978 report of the Secretary-General on the question of the impact of inflation on the budgets of United Nations organizations.<sup>11</sup> Subsequently, the Assembly took note of the report and decided to include the question in the provisional agenda of its 1981 session. Decision 35/426, embodying this action, was adopted without vote on 10 December, having been similarly approved by the Fifth Committee on 29 October. The text was orally proposed by the Chairman taking into account a request by Cuba—which said it had decided not to submit to the current session a draft resolution it had prepared on the subject—that the question be included in the 1981 agenda.

United Nations Postal Administration

In 1980, gross revenue of the United Nations Postal Administration from the sale of philatelic items at United Nations Headquarters, New York, and at overseas offices totalled almost $21 million. Revenue derived from the sale of stamps for philatelic purposes is retained by the United Nations; revenue from stamps used for postage from United Nations Headquarters is retained by the United States Postal Service in accordance with an agreement between the United Nations and the United States Government. Similarly, revenue from stamps used for postage from the Palais des Nations, Geneva, and from the Vienna International Centre is retained by the Swiss and Austrian Postal, Telephone and Telegraph Enterprise, respectively, in accordance with agreements between the United Nations and the Swiss and Austrian Governments.

In March, responsibility for marketing, distribution and sale of United Nations stamps in Austria and the Federal Republic of Germany was transferred from the Geneva Office to Vienna.

During 1980, six commemoratives, two souvenir cards, three souvenir sheets and one definitive stamp were issued.

On 11 January, the first commemorative stamp was issued on the theme "New International Economic Order," in denominations of 15 and 31 cents, 0.80 Swiss francs and 4 Austrian schillings. At the same time, a definitive stamp of 2.50 Austrian schillings was issued.

The theme of the second commemorative stamp was the "United Nations Decade for Women." The stamp was issued on 7 March, in denominations of 15 and 20 cents, 0.40 and 0.70 Swiss francs, and 4 and 6 Austrian schillings. A souvenir card was issued at the same time.

The third commemorative issue, on 16 May, was for "United Nations Peace-keeping Operations," in denominations of 15 and 31 cents, 1.10 Swiss francs and 6 Austrian schillings.

The "35th Anniversary of the United Nations" was the subject of the fourth commemorative issue, on 26 June, in denominations of 15 and 31 cents, 0.40 and 0.70 Swiss francs, and 4 and 6 Austrian schillings. Three souvenir sheets were issued at the same time, of 46 cents, 1.10 Swiss francs and 10 Austrian schillings.

On 26 September, the commemorative "Flag Series" was launched, featuring the flags of Member States. The first 16 stamps in this series were issued in denominations of 15 cents each.

The sixth and final commemorative issue for the year paid tribute to the "Economic and Social Council." The stamps were issued in denominations of 15 and 20 cents, 0.40 and 0.70 Swiss francs, and 4 and 6 Austrian schillings. A souvenir card accompanied this issue.

The number of first-day covers serviced for the various issues in 1980 was as follows:

New International Economic Order	724,424
Definitive (2.50 Austrian schillings) }
United Nations Decade for Women	937,557
United Nations Peace-keeping Operations	717,065
35th Anniversary of the United Nations	1,610,248

Joint Inspection Unit

In 1980, the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) submitted one report to the Economic and Social Council and four reports to the General Assembly, each covering a specific area of United Nations activity examined by the Unit. On 10 December, the Assembly took note of the Unit's annual report, summarizing its work in the year ended 30 June, and commended it for its work.

In the report it submitted to the Council, JIU evaluated the technical co-operation activities of the United Nations system in Sri Lanka (see p. 599). The four reports submitted to the Assembly dealt with: the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (see p. 999); an evaluation of the translation process in the United Nations (see p. 1190); the status of women in the Professional category and above (see p. 1160); and the third report, transmitted in September, on the implementation of personnel policy reforms approved by the Assembly in 1974 (see p. 1160). The Assembly noted and otherwise acted on these reports either by decision 35/427 (see below) on the work of JIU or in other resolutions related to the subjects under which they were discussed. In addition, JIU also submitted an interim report on procedures for obtaining estimates and soliciting bids on construction projects (see p. 1239).

In accordance with a 1977 Assembly resolution,<sup>12</sup> the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly in November 1980 on the implementation of recommendations contained in four JIU reports considered by the Assembly prior to 1980: the second report on implementation of personnel policy reforms;<sup>13</sup> a report on the Inter-Organization Board for Information Systems;<sup>14</sup> a report on medium-term planning in the system;<sup>15</sup> and a report on the establishment of an Information Systems Unit (formerly Information Services Unit) in the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs.<sup>16</sup>

In the twelfth report on its activities, for the period 1 July 1979 to 30 June 1980, JIU summarized 14 reports and one note it had prepared. Four of them were submitted to the Council or the Assembly under separate cover (see above). The note and seven of the remaining reports evaluated training and research activities established or assisted by the United Nations: Asian and Oceanic Postal Training School (Bangkok, Thailand); Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific (Tokyo, Japan); Asia-Pacific Institute for Broadcasting Development (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia); African Training and Research Centre in Administration for Development (Tangier, Morocco); Regional Training Centre for Archivists (Accra, Ghana); Regional Dairy Development and Training Centre for English-speaking countries in Africa, of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (Naivasha, Kenya); African Regional Training Centre for Labour Administration (Yaoundé, United Republic of Cameroon); Commonwealth Caribbean project for the education and training of allied health personnel. One report examined the use of consultants and experts under the regular programme in the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and two reviewed planning and programming for children at the country level by the United Nations Children's Fund and the Fund's proposed new budget format.

On 10 December, the Assembly adopted without objection decision 35/427, by which it took note with appreciation of the annual and other reports submitted to it by JIU. The decision was recommended by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, which approved it, as orally proposed by its Chairman, without vote on 3 December.

Office accommodation and extensions to United Nations conference and office facilities

At its 1980 regular session, the General Assembly approved a reduction of a previously approved construction project for United Nations offices at Nairobi, Kenya. It also approved revised appropriations for the Vienna International Centre and authorized a study on United Nations accommodation at Santiago, Chile. The Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) submitted an interim report on procedures for obtaining estimates and soliciting bids on construction projects.

Details of these actions follow.

Accommodation at Nairobi

As indicated in an October report to the 1980 regular General Assembly session on the status of the construction project approved in 1977<sup>17</sup> for the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and for accommodation of other United Nations offices at Nairobi, the UNEP Executive Director, in approving the recommendations of the UNEP Committee on Contracts which had reviewed space requirements and proposed conference facilities with a view to effecting savings in construction costs, had rejected all bids in the interests of the Organization and proposed that the original project as approved in 1977- and as amended in 1979 to authorize additional construction to accommodate the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat)<sup>18</sup> - should be considerably scaled down by reducing planned office space and common service facilities and by postponing construction of two main conference services.

The Executive Director indicated that the revised proposal would mean a 15 per cent savings, of $5,230,000 at the current exchange rate of 7.33 Kenyan shillings to the United States dollar, in the $34,780,000 (KSh 254,944,000) approved in 1979. The Secretary-General, in a separate report, supported the Executive Director's submission.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) agreed that, in the light of recent developments and bearing in mind that the approved project contained provision for expansion beyond 1985, a reduction appeared to be warranted. With regard to conference facilities, ACABQ found it difficult to reconcile the revised proposals with the recommendations submitted by the Secretary-General in 1977 and 1979, but concluded that the Executive Director's proposals were based on a more accurate assessment of current and future requirements, and recommended approval of the proposals.

The Assembly, by resolution 35/222 of 17 December, approved the proposals in the Executive Director's report; however, it also decided to restore the two major conference rooms as envisaged in the original project and the necessary adjustment of catering, library and documentation facilities within the total appropriation of KSh 254,944,000 approved in 1979. The Secretary-General was asked to proceed without delay with the construction and submit a progress report in 1981 and annually thereafter until completion of the project.

Resolution 35/222 was adopted by a recorded vote of 119 to 9, with 8 abstentions. The Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee approved the text on 6 December by a recorded vote, requested by the USSR, of 83 to 9, with 7 abstentions, as submitted and revised by its sponsors: Burundi, Kenya, Malawi, Mauritania, Panama, Senegal, Sudan.

In explanation of vote, Canada, Ireland, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal, Sweden (also on behalf of Denmark, Finland and Norway), the United Kingdom and the United States, concerned over the delays which had occurred in the project, expressed the hope that established United Nations Financial Regulations and Rules would be observed, especially rule 110.21 dealing with the award of contracts to the lowest acceptable bidder, and understood that the total cost of the project would not exceed the total appropriations authorized. The USSR reiterated its reservations on the need for any construction at Nairobi.

In December, the Secretary-General also reported on common services which were to be established at the United Nations Centre at Nairobi to ensure a sharing of the Centre's services by United Nations agencies and programmes represented there; the report was prepared in accordance with a 1979 Assembly resolution.<sup>19</sup>

The Secretary-General reported that he had arranged for a survey to assess the situation on as broad a basis as possible. According to the survey, carried out in April 1979, there were basically three ways for providing common services at locations containing separate United Nations units: each unit would carry, according to its own needs, the responsibility for its common services; one organization would provide services to others on a reimbursable basis (similar to the situation at Vienna); or a special unit separate from the local or organizations would provide services to them (as at Geneva). The Secretary-General indicated that proposals for Nairobi based on a comprehensive analysis, including relevant cost analyses, would be submitted to the Assembly's 1981 regular session.

The Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on 17 December in adopting section XVIII of resolution 35/217; the text, orally proposed by the ACABQ Chairman, was approved by the Fifth Committee on 15 December. Both actions were taken without objection.

Accommodation at the Vienna International Centre

A report by the Secretary-General, submitted to the Assembly in November 1980, highlighted developments during the year at the Vienna International Centre, a complex of buildings made available by the Austrian Government, at nominal rent, to United Nations entities and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). As at 31 October, the Centre was occupied by 3,759 persons. Developments included the inauguration of guided lecture tours, which became fully operational in May, and the establishment on 1 January of a United Nations Office at Vienna for liaison, representation and diplomatic depository functions and to undertake consultations with Austrian authorities on local administrative arrangements and on all matters relating to the United Nations presence at Vienna, excluding those concerning the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO). It was decided that UNIDO, whose Executive Director, as the highest ranking official at Vienna, represented the Secretary-General there, would continue to be responsible for the servicing of United Nations conferences at Vienna, on an experimental basis, for another year from 1 January 1981.

During 1980, the Vienna International School began to enter students for the international baccalaureate. Agreement was reached between the Austrian Government and the School on the selection of a site for the School's permanent quarters, expected to be completed in 1984.

Agreements had been prepared: between the United Nations and Austria, supplementing that of 13 April 1967 between the two entities regarding the headquarters of UNIDO, regulating specific matters pertaining to the occupancy of the Vienna Centre by international organizations; and between the United Nations, IAEA and Austria to establish and administer a common fund for the financing of major repairs and replacements at the Centre, as well as a protocol to that agreement containing a provisional list of main elements to be used in defining whether a repair or replacement was deemed major and thus to be financed from the fund.

The tripartite committee, established in 1977 under the terms of a Memorandum of Understanding between the Secretary-General, the IAEA Director-General and the UNIDO Executive Director, held three meetings during 1980, at which the formula for sharing of costs between the organizations was refined.

The report also contained revised estimates for the costs of operating the Centre during 1980-1981 in the net amount of $14,244,700, since the Assembly had made budgetary provisions for 1980 only, pending further experience with the operation of the Centre which was opened in 1979. Commenting on the report, ACABQ recommended that the estimated additional requirement be reduced to $11,694,800. Following approval by the Fifth Committee on 13 December, this amount was included in the revised budget adopted by the Assembly in resolution 35/226 A of 17 December (see p. 1197).

Accommodation at Santiago

In 1979, the Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA) had requested its Executive Secretary to undertake a study and submit proposals concerning space requirements for ECLA headquarters at Santiago. The Secretary-General, in a report of 9 December 1980, stated that the number of staff accommodated at the existing site had grown considerably since it was completed in 1966 and substandard office space had been improvised. Additional space for future occupancy needs could not be rented nearby and, consequently, $125,000 was requested to finance an architectural and engineering study.

The Fifth Committee agreed with an ACABQ oral recommendation that the study be carried out without an additional appropriation and that additional requirements be considered in the context of the 1981 budget performance report; it recommended that the Assembly take note of the Secretary-General's report and authorize him to undertake the study.

The Fifth Committee took its decision on the understanding that no additional appropriations would be required for the 1980-1981 programme budget. It asked the Secretary-General to exert every effort to cover the related costs within existing appropriations, on the understanding that any additional requirements that might arise would be considered in the context of the budget performance report to be submitted in 1981.

Referring to the late submission of the report, the USSR, supported by Cuba, orally proposed, but did not press to a vote, that a decision be postponed until the 1981 Assembly session, while Panama and Peru said it would be to the detriment of the Latin American region if the Committee did not act immediately. The Fifth Committee action was approved on 13 December by a vote, taken at the request of the USSR, of 80 to 9, with 1 abstention. The Assembly adopted the recommendation on 17 December, by a recorded vote of 120 to 9, with 3 abstentions, as section XV of resolution 35/217.

In explanation of its abstention in Committee, Cuba said it did not share the view that additional construction should take place in Chile because it was not possible for all countries to have access to that country; it felt the proposed study should focus on the possibility of expanding facilities at Mexico City or Port of Spain, Trinidad.

Procedures for obtaining estimates and soliciting bids on construction projects

By a note of 9 July 1980, the Secretary-General transmitted an interim report of JIU on procedures for obtaining estimates and soliciting bids on United Nations construction projects.

The report described action taken thus far by JIU in response to a 1979 Assembly request for a full-scale study of those procedures.<sup>20</sup>

The report indicated that the Inspectors had prepared a two-part questionnaire. The first part sought information on all United Nations construction projects completed since 1970 and costing more than $1 million, or currently under way and expected to cost more than $2 million. Of the 11 respondent organizations, only the United Nations, the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the World Health Organization (WHO) and the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) had construction projects which fell within the scope of the study; the World Intellectual Property Organization, not a participating organization of JIU, was unable to reply, as it did not have the manpower for the extensive research necessary. The second part of the questionnaire posed detailed questions on specific projects chosen on the basis of replies to the first part. It covered three projects for the United Nations (in New York, Geneva and Bangkok (Thailand)) and one project each for ILO, UNESCO, WHO and ITU. The final report was to be submitted to the 1981 Assembly session.

Financial reports and accounts and reports of the Board of Auditors for 1978 and 1979

On 17 December 1980, by resolution 35/208 adopted without vote, the General Assembly accepted the financial reports and accounts and the audit opinions of the Board of Auditors for the biennium ended 31 December 1979 for the United Nations, the International Trade Centre, the United Nations University (UNU), the Fund of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation; it also accepted the financial reports and/or audited financial statements, and reports of the Board of Auditors for the year ended 31 December 1979 for the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR), the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA).

The Assembly expressed its appreciation for the observations and comments made in a report on the subject by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), requested the Board of Auditors and ACABQ to continue to give greater attention to the areas on which they had made observations and comments, and requested the executive heads of the organizations and programmes concerned to take remedial action as required.

This action had been recommended by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee which, on 3 October, approved without vote a draft resolution proposed by its Chairman.

Some of the Board's observations and ACABQ's comments on individual organizations and programmes are summarized below.

The Advisory Committee had no comments on the 1979 accounts of UNU, UNITAR, UNRWA or UNFPA.

United Nations. The Board commented on the action taken by the Administration on the observations and recommendations in the Board's 1978 special report on the financial management and control review of the United Nations Headquarters, New York, and the United Nations Office at Geneva.<sup>21</sup> In this connexion, ACABQ noted that the financial report of the Secretary-General for 1978-1979 contained information on the progress made by the Administration in implementing those recommendations. The Committee welcomed the establishment of a Financial Management and Control Systems Unit as recommended by the Board and endorsed by the General Assembly in 1978<sup>22</sup> and 1979.<sup>23</sup> Priority programmes assigned to the Unit were: the development and implementation of new budgetary and financial systems for trust funds; the design and implementation of cash-forecasting and cash-management information systems; the design and implementation of a new personnel-payroll system; and revision and issuance of a financial manual.

The Advisory Committee expressed concern at the slow progress in adopting and enforcing (particularly in offices away from Headquarters) measures for the establishment and efficient management of trust funds, on which it requested a follow-up report. In its discussion of budgetary control, the Board observed that allotment control procedures had not significantly improved and it would monitor progress in this regard. New revised allotment policies to be introduced would also cover extrabudgetary activities as part of the new trust fund procedures being developed, ACABQ was informed.

The Committee noted that the Board's recommendations to strengthen the responsibility of the Assistant Secretary-General for Financial Services for offices away from Headquarters, to improve cash-flow forecasting procedures and to develop a basis to measure investment performance had not been fully implemented.

The Board extended its examination of payroll expenditures to include a review of staffing-table controls and of the relationship between the personnel and payroll systems.

On the Board's recommendation to evaluate them, a task force headed by the Chief of the Financial Management and Control Systems Unit had been appointed. Its work was to include a complete analysis of how posts were authorized and appointments made.

The Board pointed out continuing weaknesses concerning the use of experts and consultants. The Advisory Committee was informed that a steering committee had been created in late 1979 to assist the Administrative Management Service in the development of a Secretary-General's Bulletin on types of personnel services used by the Organization.

Work on the comprehensive financial manual recommended by the Board and approved by the Assembly in 1978<sup>24</sup> had begun in January 1980.

The Board identified travel as one area where the Administration's procedures for budgetary control were not effective, drawing attention to weaknesses in the way travel expenditures were authorized, recorded and controlled. The Administration agreed to review, revise and consolidate all administrative instructions dealing with travel expenditures.

The Board referred to the limited action taken by the Administration to improve the effectiveness of the internal audit function as recommended by the Board in 1978; it recommended changes in the Internal Audit Division for more effective and comprehensive audit coverage. A review of the Division's organizational structure was to be reflected in the Secretary-General's proposed programme budget for 1982-1983.

Although encouraged by the action taken to improve procurement systems and accounting procedures for expendable and non-expendable property, the Board indicated that more improvements needed to be made. To shorten time-lags between requisition and delivery of goods purchased through Headquarters, an Automated Purchase Payment System was expected to become operational by 1981.

International Trade Centre. The Board informed the General Assembly that the Centre had no comprehensive documentation of its administrative, budgetary and financial policies, responsibilities and procedures. The Administration agreed with the Board's recommendation that the Centre should prepare a financial manual, and ACABQ expressed concern at the apparent lack of control of the use of consultant funds, as revealed by the Board, and indicated that it would follow up on this question.

Fund of the United Nations Environment Programme. The Board indicated that UNEP had not adequately complied with United Nations policies and procedures for engaging outside expertise and professional services and that adequate control was not being exercised over expenditures. The Advisory Committee noted that the UNEP administration had agreed with the Board's recommendations that immediate steps should be taken, and said it would follow up on the subject.

United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation. The Advisory Committee trusted that the Administration would take immediate action to deal with the weaknesses identified by the Board in the areas of budgetary control, trust funds, appointment of a travel agent and travel control procedures.

United Nations Development Programme. The Board reported that progress had been made in designing new financial and programme management systems being developed under the Integrated Systems Improvement Project. It believed that a regular analysis of variances between budgetary and actual expenditures should be incorporated in the budget system to improve financial management and control, and spoke of the need to upgrade the internal auditing, urging UNDP to continue giving priority to review and analysis of the financial statements and audit reports of participating and executing agencies.

With regard to field offices, the Board found that not all accounts were regularly received at Headquarters and that there was a considerable backlog. In the area of cash management, the Board found that, despite predictions, UNDP had increased its accumulation of non-convertible currencies to $44 million in 1979, up from $43 million in 1978. The Board also commented, as in the past, on the difficulties encountered in trying to collect overdue amounts from contributing Governments. It expressed concern at the Administration's practice of recording long-unpaid contributions as accounts receivable. The Board found that some unauthorized purchases had been made by field offices, that field offices had not regularly and promptly reported losses of equipment and supplies and that inventory control had not been properly executed, recommending corrective action concerning their supervision and monitoring. On personnel matters, the Board made a number of observations designed to improve procedures and internal controls, dealing with: reviewing procedures for recovering money due from former staff members; discrepancies in the maintenance of leave and attendance records; procedures for awarding within-grade salary increments; and limiting advance payments for travel expenses and introducing procedures to ensure prompt follow-up and collection.

United Nations Children's Fund. The Board felt that travel expenditures were not properly controlled and pointed out that UNICEF had not communicated to staff members a comprehensive statement of its policy and procedures on travel matters. The Board also indicated weaknesses in the procurement system. The Advisory Committee recommended that the Board's recommendations be implemented as soon as possible.

Voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. The Board drew attention to shortcomings with respect to the administration of contracts to provide supplies for refugees and a lack of co-ordination in procurement function and in the evaluation of business ventures. Commenting on project accountability of implementing agencies, the Board expressed concern over inadequate financial records and delays in submission of financial and narrative reports. The Advisory Committee noted that the Administration had concurred in and was implementing the Board's recommendations on project implementation and accountability.

The Board recommended that the internal audit be strengthened. The Administration of the Commissioner's Office indicated that it would take action to implement the Board's recommendations.

United Nations International School

By a note of 9 July, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the Board of Auditors on a special examination of the accounts of the United Nations International School, its accumulated deficit, bursary policies and building maintenance needs, as requested by the Assembly in 1979 after approving a special grant of $3,515,000 to the School<sup>25</sup>.

The report stated that, from 1971 to 1978, significant increases in teachers' salaries and maintenance costs, without proportionate increases in tuition fees, and inadequate financial management and controls were the principal factors contributing to the School's operating deficit. While noting improvements, mostly in the area of financial information and accounting records, the Auditors made four major recommendations towards improving the financial management and control systems: appointment of a qualified school administrator; appointment of independent external auditors; updating the financial rules and procedures and presentation of annual financial statements; and application of more formal policies and procedures to provide better direction for the award of bursaries and to permit a more accurate determination of the School's building maintenance needs.

No action was taken on the report by the Assembly in 1980.

Other matters

Language services in the United Nations

In 1979, the General Assembly had requested the Secretary-General to bring the Arabic language services up to a level equal with the services in other official and working languages of the Assembly and its Main Committees, and approved the establishment of 79 additional posts to that end, including services for the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.<sup>26</sup>

The Secretary-General reported to the regular 1980 Assembly session that, having been faced at the beginning of the year with the prospect of recruiting 12 interpreters, 50 translators and 30 typists, he had undertaken an extensive publicity effort to advertise competitive examinations for that purpose. Successful candidates selected were currently being processed. He intended to study further the requirements for services to be provided at offices away from Headquarters or other requirements which might arise.

On 17 December, by resolution 35/219 A, the Assembly decided to include Arabic among the official and working languages of its subsidiary organs by 1 January 1982, and, by resolution 35/219 B, adopted the concomitant amendments to its rules of procedure to reflect that decision. By the first resolution, the Assembly also requested the Security Council to include Arabic among its official and working languages and the Economic and Social Council to include it among its official languages by 1 January 1983.

Both texts were adopted by the Assembly without objection, having been similarly approved by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on 4 December. Resolution 35/219 A was sponsored by 45 countries (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below); resolution 35/219 B was orally proposed by the Committee Chairman on the recommendation of the Secretariat in a note of 3 December.

In a statement after the vote, the United Kingdom, noting that Arabic language services would involve considerable extra costs—estimated by the Secretary-General at $160,100 in 1981, $2.06 million in 1982 and $2.57 million in 1983—said it expected that those costs would be offset by savings elsewhere.

Following an oral report by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), the Fifth Committee on 11 December decided to inform the Assembly that the resolution's adoption would require an additional appropriation of $160,100.

Also on 17 December, by section XXI of resolution 35/217, the Assembly decided that the question of including Arabic as an official language of the Commission on Human Settlements should be dealt with in accordance with resolution 35/219 A. (For further details, see p. 735.)

Establishment of a child-care centre at Headquarters

The Secretary-General submitted to the 1980 regular Assembly session a proposal, long urged by women's and staff groups, to establish at Headquarters a child-care centre for 70 children, under the age of six, of United Nations staff members. Construction costs were estimated at $178,000, one-time capital equipment costs at $40,000, and the annual indirect operating costs at $140,000.

Reporting orally to the Fifth Committee on 15 December, ACABQ commended that the Secretary-General reconsider the question and submit a new proposal in 1981. It felt that proposals relating to the financing of the centre lacked clarity and information on how tuition fees would be determined and on insurance costs, and it doubted that the size proposed would adequately meet needs.

Benin supported this recommendation. Pakistan, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda and the United Kingdom, while not opposed to establishment of a centre, cautioned against a hasty decision and accepted ACABQ's recommendation.

Costa Rica, also on behalf of Ecuador and Guatemala, introduced a draft resolution to have the Assembly decide to establish the recommended day-care facilities, request the Secretary-General to take measures to commence construction immediately to avoid increased construction costs, urge him to ensure that all children of staff members whose circumstances so required would be accepted even if the quota were filled, if the case was a deserving one, and ask him to enable the facilities to commence operations in September 1981, at least for those aged one to six; the sponsors did not press for a decision on their draft. Austria and Venezuela announced they had been prepared to vote in favour of it, while the United States said it would have voted against because such facilities should be financed entirely from school fees or private contributions, not from the United Nations regular budget.

The Assembly adopted ACABQ's recommendation on 17 December without objection, as section XX of resolution 35/217, asking that the new study take into account ACABQ's recommendations and the comments made during the Fifth Committee's discussion at the current session. The Fifth Committee had approved the text without objection on 15 December, as orally proposed by its Chairman.

Procedures governing disposal of property

As requested by the General Assembly in 1979,<sup>27</sup> the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly in 1980 on current procedures governing the disposal of surplus property and equipment, with recommendations on how they could be improved. The Secretary-General concluded that the existing procedures and practices were generally appropriate for meeting the twofold objectives of maximizing income while minimizing disposal costs. Nevertheless, there appeared to be some limited scope for increasing revenue through more frequent use of the techniques of establishing a minimum acceptable price, sale by public auction, and placing greater emphasis on sale to staff members.

The Assembly, by section III of resolution 35/217 adopted without objection on 17 December, took note of the Secretary-General's report and a related oral report of <sup>ACABQ.</sup> and requested the Secretary-General to implement the procedures concerning the methods of increasing sales income, as recommended in his report, and apply those procedures when drawing up the proposed programme budget for 1982-1983.

The Assembly's decision was based on an oral recommendation of <sup>ACABQ.</sup>, the text of which was approved without vote by the Fifth Committee on 28 October on an oral proposal by its Chairman.

Use of experts and consultants

In 1978, the General Assembly had requested the Secretary-General to report to it in 1980 on the use of experts and consultants,<sup>28</sup> with a view to eliminating existing deficiencies in implementing the principles and guidelines on the use of such persons approved by the Assembly in 1974<sup>29</sup> and subsequently reaffirmed.

The Director of the Budget Division reported orally to the Fifth Committee that a working group had studied the practice in various departments and services, but had discovered that the subject was a difficult one and that departmental requirements and procurement methods varied widely; consequently it would not be possible to produce a satisfactory report in time. He therefore asked the Committee to agree to a postponement until 1981.

Noting the Director's statement, the Assembly, by resolution 35/224 of 17 December, again requested the Secretary-General to submit a full and comprehensive report on the use of experts and consultants; to enable evaluation of the practice on a priority basis at its 1981 session. The resolution was adopted without objection, the same manner in which it had been approved on 15 December by the Fifth Committee. The text was sponsored by Poland, Portugal, and Trinidad and Tobago, which accepted an oral drafting amendment by the United Republic of Cameroon in addition to an oral drafting change of their own.

Organizational nomenclature in the Secretariat

In a report of 7 November 1980 to the General Assembly, the Secretary-General indicated that, following consultations with his senior colleagues and taking into account recommendations by an interdepartmental working group he had established to assist in reforming organizational nomenclature in the Secretariat, he had approved the application of new nomenclature to 10 more departments, offices and secretariats. New nomenclature for the five regional commissions was to be decided upon shortly and applied in 1981. Seven major organizational elements remained to be considered by the working group.

By section XII of resolution 35/217, adopted without objection on 17 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report. The Fifth Committee similarly approved the text on 8 December as orally proposed by its Chairman on an oral recommendation of <sup>ACABQ.</sup>

The General Assembly,

Referring to its resolution 3190(XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, by which it decided to include Arabic among the official and working languages of the General Assembly and its Main Committees,

Referring also to its resolution 34/226 of 20 December 1979, by which the Arabic language establishment was put on a par with the establishments for all the other official and working languages,

Taking into consideration the fact that the Arabic language services are prevented from issuing documents with the necessary speed and in the necessary quantity because Arabic, unlike the other official and working languages of the United Nations, is used only in the General Assembly and its Main Committees,

Affirming that, in the interest of the full effectiveness of the work of the United Nations, Arabic should be accorded the same status as the other official and working languages,

1. Decides to include Arabic among the official and working languages of the subsidiary organs of the General Assembly, no later than 1 January 1982;

2. Requests the Security Council to include Arabic among its official and working languages and the Economic and Social Council to include Arabic among its official languages, no later than 1 January 1983;

PART TWO

Intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations

International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)

In 1980, the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) continued its activities to accelerate and enlarge the contribution of atomic energy to peace, health and prosperity throughout the world and to ensure that the assistance provided was not used for military purposes.

During the year, IAEA placed special emphasis on safety in nuclear power-plant operation and on improved training programmes.

An International Conference on Current Nuclear Power Plant Safety Issues was organized by IAEA at Stockholm, Sweden, from 20 to 24 October, to evaluate safety standards applied in the nuclear industry and discuss closer international and regional co-operation in safety matters. The Conference, while stressing improved training of operators and improved equipment, indicated that there were no factors, from the nuclear safety point of view, which should limit the development of nuclear power.

The Agency co-operated with the World Health Organization (WHO), the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation in assessing the health and environmental impact of various energy sources. It also co-operated with the Nuclear Energy Agency of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) in nuclear waste management.

The Agency's safe-transport regulations were being applied in almost all countries, under all relevant international conventions, by international and national regulatory authorities.

Expert groups continued studying international projects for plutonium storage and spent fuel management.

A Committee on Assurances of Supply was established by the IAEA Board of Governors on 20 June, to advise the Board on ways in which nuclear material, equipment and technology and fuel cycle services could be assured on a more predictable and long-term basis in accordance with mutually acceptable considerations of non-proliferation, and the Agency's role and responsibilities in relation thereto. It held an organizational meeting in September.

The first safeguards field office was established at Toronto, Canada, in September. The twenty-fourth session of the General Conference of IAEA was held at Vienna from 22 to 26 September. Membership of IAEA remained at 110.

The Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material was opened for signature on 3 March, to enter into force 30 days after deposit of 21 instruments of ratification. As of 31 December, 26 States and one regional organization had signed it, and one State had ratified it.

Technical assistance

During 1980, 73 countries received IAEA technical assistance in the form of expert services or equipment, or both. A further seven countries received assistance in the form of training awards. A total of 469 fellowships were awarded for individual studies and 495 persons participated in study tours and training courses. Technical assistance provided by IAEA in 1980 amounted to $18.7 million, 20 per cent higher than 1979's $15.6 million.

Included among the 34 projects financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and carried out by IAEA were: nuclear engineering (Argentina); nuclear manpower training (Brazil); nuclear technology (Cuba, Peru, Romania); a national nuclear energy centre (Chile); nuclear research in agriculture (Brazil, Nigeria); radiation-processing demonstration facilities (Egypt, Yugoslavia); uranium exploration (Chile, Colombia, India, Madagascar); a centre for the application of isotopes (Bulgaria); and a regional project on the industrial applications of isotopes and radiation technology (Asia and the Pacific).

The Agency also provided large-scale assistance for a nuclear research project in agriculture in Bangladesh and India, which was financed by Sweden.

The target for voluntary contributions for IAEA'S regular programme was $10.5 million for 1980. Total resources for 1980 programmes were $21.7 million, an increase of $4.6 million over 1979. The overall programme was financed by UNDP ($5.9 million), voluntary contributions and donations in kind from IAEA members-including expert services, equipment grants and fellowship training opportunities - extrabudgetary funds (special cash contributions) and monies provided under funds-in-trust arrangements.

Nuclear power

At the end of 1980, there were 253 nuclear power stations in operation with a total capacity of 136,000 megawatts (electrical) (MW(e)); they accounted for nearly 7 per cent of the world's electricity-generating capacity. However, the 11 per cent increase over 1979 was due primarily to increases in only three countries—France, Sweden and the USSR. New orders and letters of intent for 18,600 MW(e) were laced during 1980, compared to 8,000 MW(e) in 1979; 13,000 MW(e) were cancelled during 1980, compared to 16,000 MW(e) during 1979.

The price of uranium decreased sharply from around $40 per pound of  $U_3O_8$  at the start of 1980 to $28 at year's end, causing some producers to stop or reduce their operations.

The IAEA training programme on nuclear power was continued; eight interregional courses held in France, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United States focused on problem areas in nuclear power planning, operational safety, regulatory functions, quality assurance, environmental surveillance and fuel cycle management. Seminars on key issues of nuclear power development were also held, addressed to senior technical personnel in electricity-generating authorities and regulatory agencies in developing countries. In addition, a guidebook was published for estimating manpower requirements in creating the infrastructure needed by those countries for their nuclear power programmes.

Two new large fast-breeder reactors went into operation in 1980—the BN-600 (MW(e)) in the USSR and the Fast Flux Test Facility (400 MW(t)) (thermal) in the United States—and progress continued in fast-breeder reactor development.

Agency safeguards responsibilities

As at 31 December 1980, 110 non-nuclear-weapon States had either ratified or acceded to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (Non-Proliferation Treaty),<sup>1</sup> Barbados and Turkey having become parties during the year. Seventy-eight of these, including seven non-nuclear-weapon States members of the European Communities, had concluded safeguards agreements with IAEA, 65 of which had entered into force covering nuclear material in 69 States. By the end of 1980, safeguards agreements were in force with 86 States; safeguards were actually being applied in 51, the remaining States' nuclear activities not having reached the stage at which reports and verification activities were required.

Two nuclear-weapon States, the United Kingdom and the United States, both parties to the Treaty, had by year's end concluded agreements with IAEA that would permit the application of IAEA safeguards to nuclear material in facilities designated by IAEA, excluding those with direct national security significance. These agreements had entered into force on 14 August 1978 (United Kingdom) and 9 December 1980 (United States). A third nuclear-weapon State, France, had concluded a similar agreement, not yet in force, which would permit the application of IAEA safeguards to nuclear material in facilities to be designated by France.

Of the 22 States parties to the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco), 16, being parties to the Non-Proliferation Treaty as well, had concluded safeguards agreements with IAEA, consisting of comprehensive arrangements satisfying the requirements of both treaties. Twelve of these had entered into force.

By the end of 1980, safeguards applied by IAEA under all types of safeguards agreements covered nuclear material in 127 power reactors, 175 research reactors and critical assemblies, 4 conversion plants, 38 fuel fabrication plants, 7 reprocessing plants, 4 enrichment plants, 21 separate storage facilities and 40 other facilities, as well as in 358 other locations.

In its safeguards implementation report covering 1980, IAEA stated that, in carrying out its safeguards programme, it had not detected any anomaly which would indicate the diversion of a significant amount of safeguarded nuclear material for the manufacture of any nuclear weapon, or to further any other military purpose, or for the manufacture of any other nuclear explosive device.

The Agency assisted in preparations for the second Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (Geneva, 11 August–7 September) (see p. 51).

Environment

Continued attention was given to the environmental aspects of nuclear energy and its fuel cycle. Work continued on a comparative assessment of the environmental impact of various energy sources, in co-operation with WHO, the Economic Commission for Europe, UNEP and the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation and on the revision of an IAEA/WHO booklet on "Nuclear power and the environment." A report on environmental effects of cooling systems was published.

The Agency initiated, with the assistance of the United Nations Joint Group of Experts on the Scientific Aspects of Marine Pollution, a review of the oceanographic model underlying its definition of radioactive waste unsuitable for dumping into the deep sea, for the purpose of the 1975 London Convention on the Prevention of Marine Pollution by Dumping of Wastes and Other Matter. Reports were completed on packaging guidelines for sea disposal of radioactive waste and on the establishment of exemption limits below which small ("deminimis") quantities of radioactive waste could be dumped at sea with the required special permit. A symposium on the impact of radio-nuclide releases into the marine environment was held in co-operation with OECD's Nuclear Energy Agency in October 1980 at Vienna. A Technical Committee discussed updating a 1961 report on radioactive waste disposal into the sea.

Generic models and parameters for predicting environmental transfer of radio-nuclides to man were reviewed by an advisory expert group. A co-ordinated research programme on the movement of radium in waterways was terminated; others continued, on the behaviour of transuranics in the marine environment, the migration of radio-nuclides in the terrestrial environment, the radio-ecology of the Danube catchment area and the levels of radioactive substances in the Baltic Sea. In co-operation with the UNEP regional sea programme, research on the behaviour of radioactive and other pollutants in the marine environment was carried out in the Monaco International Laboratory of Marine Radioactivity, whose programme was reviewed.

Within a programme launched in 1977 to provide guidance on the underground disposal of radioactive waste, seven reports had been completed by 1980 giving guidance on regulatory aspects, site investigations for deep geological and shallow-ground disposal, and general safety assessment methods. The technologies for the treatment of low- and intermediate-level solid and gaseous radioactive wastes and the conditioning of waste concentrates were also reviewed by expert groups. Symposia were held on the management of gaseous radioactive waste from nuclear facilities (jointly with the OECD Agency) and on the handling of alpha-contaminated waste (jointly with the Commission of the European Communities).

Nine safety guides were published in 1980 under the Nuclear Safety Standards programme, in addition to the five codes of practice and 15 safety guides published by 1979. The future of this programme was reviewed, taking into account the Three Mile Island accident in Pennsylvania (United States) in 1979.

Work continued on an expanded emergency assistance programme, i.e. examining emergency procedures and developing new ones.

Nuclear information

The International Nuclear Information System, with 64 participating countries and 13 international organizations, provided a nuclear information and abstracting service, using computer and reprographic techniques, from a file of about 570,000 items.

Life sciences

The Agency's life sciences programme promoted the use of nuclear techniques in medicine, environmental studies and radiation biology, and encouraged improvements in the accuracy and reliability of radiation dosimetry.

Two symposia, on medical radio-nuclide imaging and on the physical aspects, instrumentation and calibration of biomedical dosimetry, and a seminar on the maintenance of nuclear instruments were held.

The IAEA/WHO network of Secondary Standard Dosimetry Laboratories (SSDLs), established in 1976, comprised 43 member laboratories, located mainly in developing countries, and was supported by 12 national standards laboratories and five collaborating international organizations. The Seibersdorf Laboratory in Austria, a central laboratory of the network, performed dose inter-comparisons serving 27 SSDLs and distributed 120 sets of thermoluminescent dose capsules to radiotherapy institutes for cancer treatment.

Thirteen co-ordinated research programmes were continued; two new programmes, on evaluation of an automatic gamma-counter of novel design and on the possibility of high linear-energy-transfer radiation therapy for cancer treatment, were initiated.

Food and agriculture

In co-operation with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), IAEA continued to execute a joint programme for the application of isotopes and radiation to increase food production, reduce food losses, and conserve and upgrade the quality of food products.

Induced mutations improved crop yield, disease resistance and food quality, especially for cereals and legume crops in the developing countries. Isotopic tracers were applied in studies to improve the efficiency of water and fertilizer use in crop production, including multiple cropping systems, to minimize water-source pollution from nitrogen residues and to develop methods to maximize biological fixing of air nitrogen.

Radiation-sterilized flies were used in large-scale field operations to control the Mediterranean fruit fly in Central America and preparations for such operations to control the tsetse fly were under way in Nigeria. Radio-immunoassay techniques, typically involving the labelling of hormones with radio-nuclides, improved live-stock reproduction, and isotopes were used to detect mineral imbalances in animal diets as well as in research on the use and productivity of buffalo in Asia and for control of tick-borne diseases. Investigations continued on the use of ionizing radiation for food preservation to prevent post-harvest losses and to conserve energy in the production, processing and storage of food. Tracer techniques were used in studying food- and environment-contamination control by various agricultural chemicals.

The joint <sup>FAO/IAEA</sup> programme was chiefly carried out in world-wide co-ordinated research contract programmes, with research grants given to national institutes in the developing countries. Other major features of the programme were training in the use of nuclear techniques in food and agriculture, support to nearly 100 technical assistance projects in 40 developing countries, and back-up services and development of efficient, standard techniques by the <sup>IAEA</sup> Laboratory.

Physical sciences and laboratories

The Agency's programme in physical sciences promoted co-operation among scientists throughout the world and assisted developing countries in physics, chemistry, industrial applications of isotopes, isotope hydrology and nuclear data.

The proceedings of the eighth <sup>IAEA</sup> International Conference on Plasma Physics and Controlled Nuclear Fusion Research, held at Brussels, Belgium, in July, documented continuing progress in the various approaches to controlled fusion as an energy resource. The <sup>INTOR</sup> (International Tokamak Reactor) workshop continued with the task of producing a conceptual design of a tokamak device that could be built by an international team as a next stage to large experimental devices under construction by the European Atomic Energy Community, Japan, the USSR and the United States.

Assistance in converting research reactor cores from highly enriched to low-enriched uranium continued through advisory missions and the preparation of a guidebook on the physics, engineering and safety aspects of conversion.

Significant progress was achieved in implementing the Agency's programme on regional co-operation in nuclear research, industrial applications of radioisotopes and radiation technology in developing member States. A preparatory assistance project was approved by <sup>UNDP</sup> for the initiation of a large-scale demonstration programme in the Asia and Pacific region for the use of nuclear techniques in the rubber, wood, paper, steel and mining industries.

In chemistry, co-ordination activities continued on the thermodynamics of actinide elements and compounds, development of standard procedures for solvent-extraction chemistry, standards for analysis of nuclear fuels, development of radio pharmaceuticals, production of radioisotopes for medical purposes, use of low-power reactors to produce radio-nuclides, and radiation-modified polymers for biomedical and biochemical applications.

Isotope techniques were used, within the isotope hydrology programme and in co-operation with other United Nations organizations, to help 20 member States to assess their water resources.

A regional seminar was held at Athens, Greece, in September to inform hydrologists at the management level, from countries in the Middle East and Mediterranean region, of isotope hydrology techniques in water resources development.

An isotope hydrology project involving Australia, Bangladesh, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Republic of Korea, Sri Lanka and Thailand was included in the regional co-operative agreement programme for research, development and training related to nuclear science and technology.

The Agency continued to offer data services to nuclear and atomic scientists in member States, and to co-ordinate the activities of all national and international centres participating in the compilation, exchange and dissemination of nuclear and atomic data.

Under the guidance of the International Nuclear Data Committee, <sup>IAEA</sup> continued to provide cost-free data services to member States, which increased 7 per cent over 1979. The Computer Index of Neutron Data (<sup>CINDA</sup>) and the new Computer Index to Atomic and Molecular Data relevant to Fusion (<sup>CIAMDA</sup>) were published in 1980.

The <sup>IAEA</sup> Laboratory at Seibersdorf provided member States with chemical and isotopic hydrological analyses, international intercomparisons and intercalibrations. Co-ordinated research on seed-protein improvement, the fate of agricultural nitrogen residues and the sterile-insect technique continued.

In co-operation with <sup>WHO</sup>, the Agency's Medical Applications Laboratory continued work on projects designed to improve the effectiveness and reliability of nuclear medicine instruments in developing countries.

The Safeguards Analytical Laboratory, which had become fully operational in 1979, analysed samples collected by safeguards inspectors for their uranium and/or plutonium content and isotopic composition.

The International Laboratory of Marine Radioactivity in Monaco conducted research on the occurrence, distribution and behaviour of radio-nuclides in the marine environment and assisted several national laboratories in the training of scientists and technicians. In co-operation with UNEP, the Laboratory provided further intercalibration services and helped maintain laboratory instrumentation used by Mediterranean countries for the determination of heavy metal and chlorinated hydrocarbon pollutants.

The International Centre for Theoretical Physics at Trieste, Italy, held courses, workshops and meetings on atomic and molecular physics and quantum optics, recent developments in phase transitions and critical phenomena, high-energy and plasma physics, and non-conventional energy. It also conducted research in particle and condensed-matter physics.

Secretariat

As at the end of 1980, 1,597 staff members were employed by IAEA. Of these, 577-drawn from 65 nationalities-were in the Professional and higher categories, and 1,020 were in the General Service and Maintenance and Operatives Service categories.

Budget

The twenty-fourth General Conference of IAEA, at its September 1980 session, adopted a budget of $88,677,000 for 1981.

The target for voluntary contributions to finance the Agency's technical assistance programme for 1981 was set at $13 million.

Chapter II

International Labour Organisation (ILO)

During 1980, the International Labour Organisation (ILO) continued activities in its four major programme areas: promotion of policies to create employment and satisfy basic human needs; improvement of working and living conditions and environment; strengthening of industrial relations and tripartite (government/employer/worker) co-operation; and the advancement of human rights in the social and labour fields. The main instruments of action continued to be standard-setting, technical co-operation activities, research and publishing.

Membership in ILO rose to 144 during the year, with the readmission of the United States on 18 February and the admission of Viet Nam (17 January), Saint Lucia (9 April), Lesotho (2 June) and Zimbabwe (6 June).

Meetings

The sixty-sixth session of the International Labour Conference, held at Geneva from 4 to 25 June 1980, was attended by 1,800 delegates, advisers and observers from 138 countries. The Conference had before it the annual report of the ILO Director-General and the sixteenth special report on the effect of apartheid on labour and employment in South Africa.

The Conference adopted an International Labour Recommendation on Older Workers (aged 45 or over) for equality of opportunity and treatment, adaptation of working conditions to age and mitigation of retirement problems. It also held a first discussion on three other items—collective bargaining, equality of treatment for workers with family responsibilities, and safety and health—with a view to adopting international labour standards at its 1981 session.

In accordance with usual practice, a tripartite Conference committee examined the application by member States of the 153 Conventions and 161 Recommendations adopted since 1919. It also reviewed application of the ILO standards concerning migrant workers.

Ratification of ILO Conventions registered during the Conference raised their total number to 4,800.

The Conference adopted resolutions on: the implications of Israeli settlements in Palestine and other occupied Arab territories in connexion with the situation of Arab workers; promotion and support of ILO activities for rural development; and a programme of assistance to Zimbabwe, emphasizing vocational and leadership training, workers' education and vocational rehabilitation.

The Ninth ILO Asian Regional Conference was held at Manila, Philippines, from 2 to 11 December. Attended by representatives of 19 countries, the Conference adopted conclusions on freedom of association, labour relations and development, and problems of rural workers. A debate was held on growth, employment and working conditions, and the Conference reviewed the application of ILO standards in the region. Resolutions were adopted on employment policy, working conditions, migrant workers, technical co-operation, workers' education, and multinational enterprises and social policy.

The tenth session of the Inland Transport Committee (Geneva, 15-24 January) urged countries to adopt an overall transport policy, and adopted conclusions on working conditions and vocational training, together with eight resolutions.

Further measures to safeguard workers' health and safety and to develop training were the main concern of the ninth session of the Petroleum Committee (Geneva, 15-24 April). A draft code of practice on the safety and health of workers engaged in the construction of offshore platforms was examined by a meeting of experts at Geneva in November/December.

The Second Tripartite Technical Meeting for the Clothing Industry (Geneva, 23 September-2 October) adopted conclusions on contract labour and on the employment effects in the clothing industry of changes in international trade. Resolutions concerned clandestine labour, multinational enterprises and social policy, trade union rights, working mothers, child labour, and safety and health.

Measures to improve seafarers' welfare and to secure observance of international standards on maritime work and employment were recommended by the Joint Maritime Commission meeting at Geneva from 16 to 24 October. In the same month, representatives of 31 European Governments adopted a European Agreement concerning Medical Care for Persons on Short Stays Abroad.

Working environment

The International Programme for the Improvement of Working Conditions and Environment, approved by the ILO Governing Body in 1976, continued to encourage member States to set definite objectives for improving working conditions and the working environment. The Programme included standard-setting and operational activities, studies and tripartite meetings, clearing-house activities in the fields of occupational safety and health and quality of working life, the design of an international alert system to detect potential hazards to the health of workers—for which more than 90 Governments had designated national focal points—and dispatch of multidisciplinary teams of experts to member States. At the end of 1980, visits by such teams had been made to 13 countries, and a number of tripartite seminars and symposia were held during the year in various parts of the world. The International Labour Conference adopted in June an amended list of occupational diseases, appended to the Employment Injury Benefit Convention, 1964 (No. 121), and held a first discussion on occupational safety and health and the working environment, with a view to preparing new international labour standards on the subject. Collaboration with the United Nations Environment Programme led to a second thematic joint programming meeting on the working environment.

World Employment Programme

The World Employment Programme was launched in 1969 as ILO's principal contribution to the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.<sup>1</sup> The Programme was designed to assist Governments in reshaping their policies and plans in order to achieve their employment and income distribution objectives more effectively. It was also concerned with international trade policies and the restructuring of the world economy.

The Declaration of Principles and the Programme of Action adopted by the 1976 World Employment Conference,<sup>2</sup> endorsed again by the 1979 International Labour Conference, continued to provide the basis for research activities and technical assistance under the World Employment Programme.

Field activities

During 1980, ILO spent more than $99.3 million on technical co-operation activities (an increase of about 25.8 per cent over expenditure in 1979) to promote employment, development of human resources and social institutions, and improvement in living and working conditions.

Most of this expenditure ($59.1 million) continued to be financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). The ILO regular programme provided $4.5 million in 1980 while expenditure funded from multi-bilateral arrangements and other special programmes rose to $29.6 million. Activities financed by the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) rose to $6.1 million in 1980 from $5.9 million in 1979.

A breakdown of expenditure by field of activity showed that training received the largest share of funds ($44.8 million), followed by employment planning and promotion ($27.5 million), sectoral activities ($15.6 million), working conditions and environment ($4.4 million), industrial relations and labour administration ($2.2 million), regional services ($2 million) and social security ($1.4 million); other activities received $1.5 million.

Educational activities

The International Institute for Labour Studies at Geneva, an ILO centre for advanced study in the labour and social fields, included in its 1980 programme six educational activities for 162 participants, 91 of whom were from government institutions, 29 from employers' groups, 26 from workers' organizations and 16 from universities.

Two industrial relations seminars, financed by Norway, were held at Cairo (Egypt) and Mogadiscio (Somalia). These national seminars were based on an Institute-developed decision-making exercise on in-plant industrial relations, a technique widely used in Africa, Asia and Latin America. Administrative guides and a manual have been prepared to facilitate the process of adaptation.

A seven-month course on comparative social policy was concluded in June. It was organized jointly with the University of Geneva for persons in that area concerned with social policy programmes. Fifteen sociologists, architects, students of development and international officials studied subjects related to social policy in Africa.

Thirty-four participants from planning ministries or similar organizations in Africa attended a seminar held at Dakar (Senegal) from 24 January to 1 February on economic planning and social perspectives in that continent. The seminar led to the formulation of a number of recommendations which the participants hoped would be integrated into future development plans in Africa. The Organization of African Unity had requested the Institute to organize the seminar.

The annual International Internship Course on Active Labour Policy Development (Geneva, 22 April-4 June) was attended by 22 participants from Angola, Argentina, Belize, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Mexico, Panama, Peru, Spain and Uruguay. The major topics covered were a study of the economic and social characteristics of the contemporary world, an examination of the structural factors which condition development, industrial relations systems and the role of ILO in the formulation and implementation of labour and social policy.

The Institute, with the co-operation of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, organized a seminar on the social aspects of rural development for participants from the English-speaking countries of Africa. The seminar was held at Alma-Ata (Kazakhstan, USSR) from 8 to 18 October. The All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions of the USSR offered host facilities and resources. The objective of the seminar was to present an analytical approach to a number of key issues related to rural development which participants could use in their own analysis of similar issues in their own countries.

International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training

During 1980, the ILO International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training at Turin, Italy, designed and conducted training activities in four main programme areas: educational technology, trade unionist training, industrial training and management training, with growing involvement in the area of rural development. Within these areas, the Centre also moved into new fields of training, such as new and renewable energy sources and energy conservation, working conditions and environment, project design and appraisal, and labour administration. Increased emphasis on these fields was expected to be characteristic of the 1980s.

During the year, the Centre conducted 67 residential training courses, many of which included, however, field-based activities, for a total of 1,011 participants. It also administered 537 individual fellowship programmes and sent 12 advisory missions to developing countries.

Publications

Published ILO research covered a wide range of topical social and labour questions. New volumes issued in 1980 included: Basic Needs, Poverty and Government Policies in Sri Lanka; Managing and Developing New Forms of Work Organization; Case Method in Management Development; Conciliation and Arbitration Procedures in Labour Disputes: A Comparative Study; Labour Administration: A General Introduction; Standards and Policy Statements of Special Interest to Women Workers; and The Impact of Micro-electronics: A Tentative Appraisal of Information Technology.

The periodicals and technical series continued to appear, including, in particular, the bimonthly International Labour Review and the quarterly Social and Labour Bulletin.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1980, the total number of full-time staff under permanent, fixed-term and short-term appointments at ILO headquarters and elsewhere was 3,082. Of these, 1,633 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 104 nationalities), and 1,449 were in the General Service or Maintenance categories. Of the Professional staff, 875 were assigned to technical co-operation projects.

Budget

The International Labour Conference in June 1980 adopted a revised budget for 1980-1981 totalling $218,942,218, increased from $203,779,154 approved when the budget was initially adopted in 1979. The increase was to be used mainly as reimbursement for a cash deficit incurred in 1978-1979.

Chapter III

Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)

Addressing the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), at its seventy-eighth session held at Rome, Italy, from 24 November to 5 December 1980, the FAO Director-General warned that the world was faced with another potential food crisis in the years to come.

The Council, FAO's main governing body between biennial sessions of the FAO Conference, called for continued vigilance against the problem of food shortages. It emphasized the need to increase food production in developing countries and build up reserves for emergencies.

Endorsing the efforts of the FAO Committee on World Food Security, which held its fifth session in March, to improve methods of dealing with food shortages, the Council asked the Committee to pay special attention to the establishment of regional food-security schemes for increased collective self-reliance among developing countries. It endorsed FAO efforts to obtain action from the International Monetary Fund to provide a financing facility to help food-importing developing nations. It endorsed special efforts to assist African countries with their food and agricultural problems and to accord higher priority to Africa in FAO's work programme and budget for 1982-1983.

The Council expressed concern over the world fish catch, which had stagnated for a decade because of rising fishing costs, mainly for fuel, and changes in the regime of the seas resulting from widespread enactment of exclusive coastal zones. It noted that forestry production and trade were also being affected by unfavourable world economic conditions.

The membership of FAO remained unchanged at 147 during 1980.

World food and agricultural situation

In his report to the Council, the Director-General warned that world cereal production in 1980/1981 was expected to fall for the second consecutive year and would not be sufficient to meet current demands. Decreasing cereal stocks were expected to approach their lowest levels of the past 10 years. The response to food-aid requirements continued to be disappointing and price inflation eroded the value of contributions. Allocations of food aid in 1979/1980 were 9 million metric tons, the lowest since 1975/1976.

Most of the continuing increase in the value of world exports of agricultural, forestry and fishery products accrued to the developed countries.

Activities In 1980

Agricultural commodities and food security

During 1980, the FAO Global Information and Early Warning System monitored food supply and demand conditions at both the world and country levels. Food situation and outlook reports, as well as special reports on the African food emergency, were issued monthly. Potential food donors were alerted to impending food shortages.

Efforts to improve commodity statistics and appraise the international market outlook covered about 80 food and agricultural commodities. Breaking new ground, FAO undertook to assess the effects of multilateral trade negotiations on trade in agricultural commodities, to review the effects of protectionism, especially on exports from developing countries, and to explore ways of developing trade between developing countries.

The Food Security Assistance Scheme (FSAS) supported the efforts of developing countries to formulate food security policy and establish national emergency food reserves. Total trust fund contributions to the Scheme had risen to $45.6 million by October 1980, when seven FSAS projects had been completed and 25 others, with a total value of $25.9 million, were operational.

Resources for development

The increased diversification of the funding for FAO's field programme continued in 1980. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) was still the major source of funds, but its share in the total had decreased from 85 per cent in 1970 to 57 per cent in 1980. Increased flows accrued from various trust funds and the establishment of FAO's Technical Co-operation Programme, financed under FAO's regular budget, which provided direct aid for emergency and short-term projects. Field programme expenditure in 1980 totalled $292 million, as against $229 million in 1979.

The major trust fund category was the FAO/Government Co-operative Programme under which 18 developed countries financed assistance to developing countries. In 1980, total expenditures were about $43 million. Around 75 per cent of FAO's group training activities were financed under the programme. Newly instituted in-service training awards allowed candidates from developing countries to gain experience in FAO-executed field projects.

The FAO/Near East Co-operative Programme was financed by oil-exporting countries primarily for the benefit of less privileged countries in the region. In 1980, expenditures were $5.3 million.

World Food Programme

The resources committed by the United Nations/FAO World Food Programme (WFP) since its inception in 1963 reached $5 billion during 1980. The Programme had made these resources available to over 1,000 projects for economic and social development in 113 countries and to 500 operations for emergency relief in 94 countries. For the fourth consecutive year, shipments exceeded 1 million metric tons of food commodities. New projects approved in 1980 represented an outlay of some $460 million.

By the end of 1980, pledges against the 1979-1980 target of $950 million had reached $801 million (84 per cent). Announcements against the pledging target of $1 billion for 1981-1982 reached 73 per cent by the end of 1980.

On the recommendation of WFP, FAO approved emergency requests. By year's end, WFP had provided aid totalling $159 million for emergency operations in more than 20 countries. Of this, $49 million was from WFP resources, while the balance came from the International Emergency Food Reserve.

Relief operations

The Office for Special Relief Operations, set up by FAO to meet emergency requests and expedite assistance, helped to counter the effects of several natural and man-made disasters. By the end of 1980, assistance requirements were estimated at $53 million. The Office organized and participated in a number of missions to evaluate critical agricultural needs and emergency food-aid problems in Chad, Ethiopia, Mali, Mozambique, Somalia and the Upper Volta, and set up an agricultural rehabilitation programme for Democratic Kampuchea.

Investing in development

Since 1964, when FAO first provided developing countries with an investment support service, some 380 projects prepared with the help of FAO's Investment Centre had been approved for financing. Total investment funds committed for these projects amounted to about $17 billion, including supporting loans from financing institutions of $8 billion.

In the first nine months of 1980, the Centre arranged 186 missions to help 62 developing countries formulate investment projects. Training national staff to identify and prepare investment projects and giving support to countries setting up their own permanent project preparation units were major responsibilities. Projects financed ranged from rural development to irrigation, credit and enhancement of forestry, fisheries and livestock production. Main beneficiaries were small farmers and the rural poor. Most projects were devised for the poorest developing countries. Loans supporting such projects were granted on concessional terms. Joint activities with the African Development Bank increased and a new programme was started with the Inter-American Development Bank. Membership of the FAO/Bankers' Programme rose to 65 national banks and internationally oriented commercial and merchant banks.

Agricultural services

Farm management, agro-industry, prevention of food losses, and marketing and credit facilities were the main objectives of FAO's engineering and micro-economic support services in 1980. Some 400 projects provided agricultural engineering advice at the farm, community and national levels. More than 130 projects dealt with assistance in farm-management techniques and production economics.

National efforts towards self-sufficiency were supported through assistance in improving food processing and conservation techniques. Better utilization of agricultural by-products and processing residues was encouraged, both for the production of biomass energy and as raw material for secondary industries.

Land and water management

Advisory and operational support was given for the introduction of low-cost technology, maximum use of local manpower, educational programmes and irrigation extension services.

The Fertilizer Programme sponsored operations in 20 countries. Some 3,900 simple trials and 8,300 multi-plot demonstrations were laid out for small farmers. About 31,000 small farmers in eight countries participated in fertilizer distribution and credit schemes and more than 3,000 national staff members attended some 200 training courses on the use of fertilizer.

The International Fertilizer Supply Scheme (IFS) carried out nine assistance operations involving 13,200 metric tons of material. Counterpart funds established with the proceeds of IFS fertilizer sales in 26 countries amounted to about $30 million. The FAO Fertilizer Data Bank became operational and had recorded results from more than 30,000 sites by the end of 1980.

In collaboration with the World Health Organization (WHO), FAO promoted health protection in irrigation and drainage schemes. It was also involved in studies of the reuse of sewage and in preparations for the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990).

Remote sensing services were applied to monitoring forest cover (in co-operation with the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP)) and rangeland conditions, development of a remote sensing infrastructure for agriculture in Argentina, and the use of airborne surveys. In addition, the first phase of an interregional project on remote sensing for desert locust survey and control, funded by the United States Agency for International Development, was concluded.

Plant production and protection

More than 1,000 experts and consultants worked with FAO in plant production and protection activities in 1980. Assistance ranged from food and industrial crops to horticulture and forage crops. Training courses for plant breeders, researchers and extension workers from Africa, Asia and the Near East were organized in Australia, China and Europe.

The Seed Improvement and Development Programme operated 124 field projects. Supported by the Swedish International Development Authority (SIDA), some 550 trainees from developing countries attended courses and workshops during the 1979-1980 biennium and about 80,000 crop and vegetable seed samples were dispatched for experimental purposes to almost 100 member countries.

More than 70 field projects dealt with the prevention of post-harvest losses and some 200 nationals of developing countries were trained in control measures.

The first meeting of the Governing Board of the European Co-operative Programme on Crop Genetic Resources, jointly organized by UNDP and FAO, met at Geneva from 15 to 18 December to consider a programme of conservation and free exchange of genetic material of plants.

Fisheries

Under FAO's comprehensive programme of assistance in the development and management of fisheries, teams of experts helped requesting member States to formulate new national fisheries policies for utilizing newly acquired resources in the 200-mile exclusive economic zones.

A UNDP-funded global programme for the rapid assessment of fishery resources in those zones by means of acoustic survey was launched. The Bay of Bengal project, supported by SIDA, assisted in the development of small-scale fisheries in Bangladesh, India, Sri Lanka and South-East Asia. A regional project financed by funds from the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries through UNDP helped develop fisheries in the Red Sea and the Gulf of Aden. The Indian Ocean Fisheries Development Programme, which undertook fishery surveys in waters ranging from the Arabian Sea to the Bay of Bengal, was completed.

The Latin American Fish Marketing Information Service was instrumental in promoting the export of about 125,000 metric tons of fishery products with an estimated value of $160 million. Preparations were advanced for a similar service for the Asia and Pacific region.

Some 170 projects buttressed the efforts of more than 60 countries to reduce waste in the handling, processing and distribution of fish and fishery products, make greater use of renewable sources of energy and strengthen research capabilities. High priority was given to upgrading the social and economic conditions in artisanal fishing communities.

Forestry

With the natural closed forests of tropical countries projected to decrease by some 140 million hectares by the year 2000, developing countries endeavouring to redress the situation increasingly entrusted the management of their forest resources to qualified nationals. The number of FAO forestry field projects increased to 200 in 1980, and 250 FAO consultants encouraged self-reliance in the countries concerned. Assistance in educating and training manpower for forestry management was extended to 19 more African countries. Sponsored by FAO, "forestry for local community development" projects were aimed at establishing small wood-lots in tree-poor areas to help farms and villages obtain cheap fuel and utility timber. Project targets were dictated by environmental conditions. Tree plantations were often combined with subsistence and cash crops, or reforestation with the improvement of pasture for grazing. A start was made on a network of demonstration areas in Africa and Latin America, emphasizing the trend towards combined wood and food production. High-quality seed was distributed to 40 developing countries to help improve and diversify forest tree species. With UNEP co-operation, some 40 conservation or selection stands were established.

Support for investment was a prominent feature of FAO's forestry programme. Investment-oriented missions visited Burma, Colombia, the Philippines, and Trinidad and Tobago.

The results of a world-wide survey of genetic resources needed for the plantation of tree species suited to arid and semi-arid zones, jointly carried out with the International Board for Plant Genetic Resources, were published, as was a report on tropical forest cover monitoring in Benin, Togo and the United Republic of Cameroon, containing suggestions for applying similar methodology to other countries in the tropical belt. A computer package for forestry inventory data-processing was installed in Brazil and the Philippines.

Livestock

The first session of the FAO Commission on African Animal Trypanosomiasis, held in 1980, called for an expanded campaign against this disease spread by the tsetse fly, which impeded the development of more than 30 African countries with a population of some 35 million people. Substantial progress was made in strengthening the quarantine and diagnostic capacity of countries threatened by African swine fever.

Trainees from FAO-executed projects in Africa and Latin America attended a three-month course in Australia on ticks and tick-borne diseases, held under the auspices of the Australian Development Assistance Agency.

The FAO Artificial Insemination and Breeding Development Programme assisted in the planning of such services and the training of national staff. Reorientation of the Regional Dairy Development Training Programme for 1980-1984 focused on technical co-operation among developing countries.

Nutrition

Because malnutrition was so prevalent among the rural poor, FAO included nutrition improvement among the objectives of its agricultural and rural development projects. A nutrition data bank was set up at FAO headquarters in Rome to store survey data on food intake and consumption and anthropometric measurements.

The FAO/WHO Codex Alimentarius Commission, with a membership of 118 nations, adopted 34 more international food standards and codes of hygienic and technological practice. Surveys of the food control needs of 20 developing countries were completed. Programmes in 12 developing countries were implemented to strengthen food control laboratories and food inspection services. Food contamination monitoring programmes and control methods were strengthened by regional projects for Africa and Asia. International training courses on food inspection were organized and fellowships awarded.

Follow-up to the World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development

Participants in the 1979 World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development<sup>1</sup> had made a political commitment to peaceful land reform, better access to land, water and other natural resources, and more equitable opportunities for disadvantaged sections of the rural community to improve production, income, health, literacy and the general quality of life. To help developing countries establish projects to attain these objectives, FAO undertook to raise $20 million over a five-year period. By the end of November 1980, $9.3 million had been pledged by China, the Danish and Swedish international development agencies, the Netherlands and Norway, $1 million of which had been received and allocated. During 1980, 927 projects with a total cost of $284 million were operating under FAO auspices to further the aims of the Conference, for whose co-ordination and follow-up FAO was the lead agency.

Atomic energy for agriculture

To apply nuclear techniques to increase agricultural production from plant and animal sources, while maintaining food quality, protecting products from spoilage and minimizing pollution, FAO and the International Atomic Energy Agency jointly sponsored a programme involving more than 250 scientists, mostly in developing countries. About 100 technical assistance projects were operational in 44 developing countries, whose scientists were given training in isotope and radiation applications in agriculture.

Institutions in 14 countries co-ordinated their efforts to improve genetically, through induced mutations, vegetatively propagated crops and tree crops. A new programme, aimed at ensuring sustained crop production under rain-fed agriculture in semi-arid regions, was joined by 13 countries.

Population

The FAO Population Programme supported government efforts to take population problems into account when formulating rural development policies and programmes. An FAO study completed in 1980 showed that the number of African countries which were not self-sufficient in food would increase, should current population growth and food production trends continue. Studies were carried out on interrelations between demographic and agricultural change in the Philippines, and between demographic and nutrition factors in Africa, Asia and Latin America, where work was started on the inter-linked problems of population and rural development. Seminars were held in Cyprus, Kenya and the United Republic of Cameroon to train agricultural planners in demographic concepts. A methodology for assessing statistically the contribution of women to agricultural production was developed.

Food and agricultural statistics

Results of the 1970 World Census of Agriculture in 79 countries had been published in 30 issues of FAO'S Census Bulletin by 1980, and FAO co-ordinated and gave substantial support to the 1980 Census. Courses on agricultural census were held in Japan and the United States. Training of statisticians was pursued in developing countries.

Revised estimates of the numbers of undernourished, based on data for 1974-1976 prepared for FAO'S study on long-term trends in agriculture, Agriculture: Toward 2000, showed that roughly a quarter of the total population of developing countries with market economies were still undernourished. The compilation of data intended for the agro-ecological investigation of land resources in relation to production potential was completed for countries of Latin America and the Near East and part of Asia and the Pacific.

Publications

In addition to monographs and documents, FAO issued in 1980 its annual Commodity Review and Outlook, the Animal Health Yearbook, the Yearbook of Fishery Statistics, the Yearbook of Forest Products, the Production Yearbook and the Trade Yearbook. Quarterlies included the Plant Protection Bulletin, the World Animal Review and Unasylva, the forestry magazine. Ceres, a review of agricultural, economic and social aspects of development, appeared on a bimonthly basis, and Food and Nutrition appeared twice during the year. Monthlies included the Monthly Bulletin of Statistics. A pioneer work on Energy for World Agriculture was published. The designation of 38 new depository libraries, all in developing countries, brought the total to 278. Lists of publications, depository libraries and sales agents appeared in FAO Books in Print.

Secretariat

At the end of 1980, the total number of staff employed by FAO at its headquarters and regional and country offices was 4,592, of whom 1,649 (drawn from 127 countries) were in the Professional and higher categories and 2,943 in the General Service category. Field project personnel, working in 128 countries and territories, comprised 2,325 staff members in the Professional and higher categories and 571 in the General Service category. Of the 368 associate experts working for FAO, 335 were in the field and 33 at headquarters and regional offices.

Budget

The twentieth session of the FAO Conference, which had met in November 1979, had approved a budget of $278,740,000 to finance the FAO regular programme for 1980-1981.

Chapter IV

United Nations Educational,
Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)

During 1980, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) gave priority to its contributions to the establishment of a new international economic order, to the promotion of peace, human rights and the elimination of colonialism and racialism, and to the improvement of the status of women. In addition, a broad range of activities in all of UNESCO's fields of competence was continued.

During the year, the following States joined UNESCO: Botswana (16 January), Sao Tome and Principe (22 January), Saint Lucia (6 March), Maldives (18 July), Zimbabwe (22 September), Tonga (29 September); this brought the number of member States to 153. The organization also had one associate member, the British Eastern Caribbean Group.

Education

The educational programme of UNESCO for 1980 was based on the twin concepts of democratization and more flexible educational structures. Special emphasis was given to the struggle against illiteracy by extension of primary education and development of adult education at the global level. Thus, in Nicaragua, for example, UNESCO took an active part in the national campaign against illiteracy. The global illiteracy rate among persons 15 years of age and older dropped from 32.4 per cent in 1970 to 28.9 per cent in 1980. However, the absolute number of illiterate adults continued to increase from 742 million in 1970 to some 814 million in 1980.

The twenty-first session of the General Conference of UNESCO (Belgrade, Yugoslavia, 29 September-23 October) supported the main lines of policy in education: education for international understanding, peace and disarmament, education in and out of school, and the link between education and productive work.

Member States also expressed interest in programmes for women, in the promotion of moral, aesthetic and humanistic values in education and in evaluation of the work of the Department of Education at headquarters and in the field.

Aid to refugees and national liberation movements was directed to Palestinian refugees through the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to African refugees through the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to national liberation movements in Africa recognized by the Organization of African Unity, and to the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Educational activities were carried out with due regard for the cultural identity of recipients, particularly in programmes of scientific, technological and environmental education, training of personnel, teaching practices and preparation of textbooks.

There was considerable growth of decentralized activities. The regional and subregional co-operative networks for education innovation with particular reference to developing countries were strengthened and expanded, notably in the Asian Programme of Educational Innovations for Development, with 90 associated national centres in 18 participating member States, and the Network of Educational Innovations for Development in Africa, with 100 associated national centres in 25 member States. Technical preparation continued for the Programme of Educational Innovations for Development in the Arab States and the Network of Educational Innovations for Development in the Caribbean. The Programme of Co-operation in Research and Development of Educational Innovation in South-East Europe was consolidated. Close co-operation was maintained with the regional offices for education at Bangkok (Thailand), Beirut (Lebanon) and Dakar (Senegal).

The International Bureau of Education at Geneva, the International Institute for Educational Planning and the UNESCO Institute for Education at Hamburg, Federal Republic of Germany, continued to strengthen their international training and research activities at the national and regional levels.

The regional centres for higher education at Caracas (Venezuela) and Bucharest (Romania) continued their work relating to the role of higher education in society, specifically its contribution to democratization and to the endogenous development of national and local communities.

From 12 to 21 June, the third Conference of Ministers of Education of Member States of the Europe Region was held at Sofia, Bulgaria. It focused on problems relating to educational policy that would have to be faced in the region during the 1980s, with special reference to requirements for democratization and the needs of societies. The strengthening of regional and international co-operation in education was also a central topic. Recommendations adopted addressed such topics as education and labour, higher education in rapidly changing societies, and education of migrant workers and their families, taking into account the need to preserve their cultural identity and to acquire, as far as possible, proficiency in their mother tongue.

The organization contributed to 441 operational projects in the field of education, funded from various international sources including the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, regional development banks and funds-in-trust. Operational activities included 18 regional, three interregional and two global projects, in close co-operation with other specialized agencies and United Nations-related organizations. To carry out these projects, 387 experts, 250 international consultants, 55 national consultants and 28 associate experts were needed.

Natural sciences

Significant changes were introduced in the UNESCO programme and approach as a result of the recommendations of the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, held at Vienna in August 1979.<sup>1</sup> These were reflected in the draft programme and budget submitted to the 1980 General Conference, centring on strengthening the science and technology capacities of member States.

Preparations for conferences of ministers and high officials responsible for the application of science and technology to development for Asia and Oceania, the Arab region and Latin America were begun. The Caribbean Council for Science and Technology, an intergovernmental institution, was set up with the co-operation of UNESCO and the Economic Commission for Latin America. Work on improving the efficiency of research units and on programme-budgeting techniques in science and technology continued.

organization collaborated in the creation of a popular technology newspaper, Change, to be published externally.

The International Organization for Chemical Sciences in Development was created by the 1980 General Conference to foster research in chemical sciences in developing countries. With non-governmental organizations, UNESCO held several workshops, symposia and training courses. In co-operation with the United Nations Environment Programme, it established a network of microbiological centres in Brazil, Egypt, Guatemala, Kenya and Thailand.

A first biennial report on priorities and trends in research related to human needs was widely distributed; a second edition was being prepared with the co-operation of the International Federation of Institutes for Advanced Studies.

The informatics programme expanded, emphasizing needs of developing countries in education and training, transfer and adaptation of technology, international co-operation and information on informatics. A pilot project to assist in establishing microprocessor laboratories and minicomputer centres in developing countries was designed.

By the end of 1980, the Intergovernmental Programme on Man and the Biosphere had established national committees in 96 member States; there were over 900 field research projects under way in 84 countries, together with an international network of biosphere reserves on 193 sites in 50 countries.

Activities within the programme of ocean and coastal systems were undertaken jointly by the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (IOC) and UNESCO's Division of Marine Sciences. An autonomous body within UNESCO, IOC promoted and co-ordinated projects adopted by its governing bodies for its 103 member States. It also acted as a joint specialized mechanism for several organizations conducting marine-related programmes (the United Nations, UNESCO, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Meteorological Organization and the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization).

Within the framework of the long-term and expanded programme of oceanic exploration, IOC directed 10 marine research programmes-four global and six regional- three ocean service programmes and a broad range of training, education and mutual assistance activities. Marine coastal research programmes of special relevance to developing countries offered advice on scientific matters as well as on how member States might expand their marine research capacity.

The first phase (1975-1980) of the International Hydrological Programme (IHP) was completed.

Significant progress was achieved in scientific studies on hydrological parameters for water projects, hydrological aspects of droughts, changes in the hydrological régime induced by man's activities, spreading of pollutants, socio-economic aspects of urban hydrology, groundwater contamination and land subsidence due to groundwater abstraction, as well as in methodologies in water-science education. About 400 specialists from developing countries were trained in UNESCO-sponsored courses in hydrology and water resources. An international symposium on man's influence on the hydrological regime was convened at Helsinki, Finland, from 23 to 26 June, and support was given to an international symposium at Beijing, China, on river sedimentation. The number of national committees and national focal points for IHP increased to 114, and co-operation among IHP committees was strengthened.

By 1980, 75 countries had adhered to the International Geological Correlation Programme (IGCP), a joint enterprise since 1973 of UNESCO and the International Union of Geological Sciences. Of the 62 projects originally admitted to IGCP, 11 were terminated by the end of 1980, five asked for prolongation and nine new project proposals awaited examination by the IGCP Board in 1981.

Progress continued on the establishment of regional networks of engineering schools, with Africa's network becoming fully operational.

An expert meeting was held at Brussels, Belgium, from 19 to 22 May to consider possible new activities for UNESCO in rural development technologies.

Action-oriented operational programmes with direct relevance to socio-economic progress as well as development of endogenous scientific and technological infrastructure of developing countries were continued, financed mainly from UNDP and other extrabudgetary resources.

Social sciences

The work programme in 1980 expanded to ensure the world-wide development of social sciences in co-operation with international governmental and non-governmental organizations. Special emphasis was given to regional institutions. Expert meetings were held on social science needs and priorities in the English-speaking Caribbean and Suriname (Bridgetown, Barbados, 28 January-1 February), and on the relationship between history and other social sciences (Mexico City, 21-25 April). Work was also commissioned on the subject of the modern expansion of a State's functions. The quarterly International Social Science Journal continued to be a major forum for debate and reporting research findings.

Studies for development were concerned with: agrarian reform and rural development; the transfer of knowledge for endogenous development; socio-cultural problems relating to the status, situation and role of children in different cultural contexts; and the impact of transnational corporations on education, science, culture and communication.

Socio-economic analysis activities were aimed at planning, implementing and evaluating socio-economic progress and development. They dealt with the practical use of indicators for this purpose at the national and subnational levels, modelling activities such as training workshops on global models and strengthening national capacity to use the <sup>UNESCO</sup> Educational Simulation Model, and the use of evaluation techniques.

Environmental activities were directed towards public participation in the rehabilitation of historic centres and awareness of the broader ecosystems in which people live, as well as towards the integrated training of planners and administrators of human settlements. To foster public participation, <sup>UNESCO</sup> developed a mass media programme to inform the public on environmental issues.

Population activities dealt with internal rural-urban migration, improving communication on population issues, distributing women's regional press feature services in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Caribbean, and journalist training.

Work continued on an analysis of human rights violations such as apartheid and action to combat such violations. Activities in this field dealt, in particular, with the teaching of human rights and research for peace, including specialized courses in human rights at universities and for socio-professional organizations, creation of an international network of institutions, and improvement of information and documentation for peace researchers. An International Congress on Disarmament Education was held in Paris from 9 to 13 June.

A programme concerning the participation of women in development underlined the role played by women in national liberation movements, peace movements, and political and social life generally, analysed socio-cultural obstacles to the exercise by women of their fundamental rights, and promoted the development of multidisciplinary research and teaching programmes related to women.

The youth programme supported national projects in developing countries through analysis and dissemination of information concerning youth, enlistment of young people in the service of international co-operation, development and peace, and action on behalf of disadvantaged young people.

Philosophical and interdisciplinary research was carried out on several planes: an attempt was made to draw up the basis for a new philosophy of development; the conditions for endogenous development of science and technology were examined; research was conducted on games as a solution to conflicts in the child's universe; and cultures were studied with a view to permitting a real dialogue between them.

Culture

In 1980, studies on culture covered the geocultural areas of Africa, the Arab world, the Arctic region, Asia, the Caribbean, Latin America, Oceania, south-eastern Europe and the Slav world. New emphasis was put on international studies. The first two volumes of the General History of Africa appeared.

New international campaigns were launched for the safeguarding of monuments in Haiti, Malta, Sri Lanka, the island of Gorée (Senegal), Fez (Morocco), Montenegro (Yugoslavia) and Sukhothai (Thailand). An international campaign to save the monuments of Philae (Egypt) was successfully completed, and work progressed for the preservation of Venice (Italy), the temple at Borobudur (Indonesia), Moenjodaro (Pakistan), Carthage (Tunisia), the Hanuman Dhoka Palace complex at Kathmandu (Nepal) and the Acropolis at Athens (Greece).

The number of States parties to the 1972 International Convention concerning the Protection of the World Cultural and Natural Heritage increased to 56. Under the Convention, 18 sites in 12 countries were designated as having outstanding universal value. The World Heritage List consisted of 85 cultural and natural sites of such value. Technical co-operation amounting to $1 million, including $400,000 for training, was provided to States parties from the World Heritage Fund, to which contributions reached a total of more than $2 million. The World Heritage Committee held its fourth session at Paris from 1 to 5 September.

An evaluation was begun on the implementation of recommendations of various regional intergovernmental conferences organized in the 1970s on cultural policies in Africa, Asia, the Caribbean, Europe and Latin America. The results served as a basis for the preparation of the second World Conference on Cultural Policies, to be convened in 1982. Other projects and studies were carried out on participation in cultural policies, the planning and financing of cultural development, and the training of cultural development specialists.

A Recommendation concerning the Status of the Artist was adopted by the <sup>UNESCO</sup> General Conference on 27 October. As the first regulatory instrument on this subject, it set out principles and guidelines designed to promote the artist's social and economic status, employment, working and living conditions, and role in cultural policies and development.

Two further recommendations in the field of culture adopted by the 1980 General Conference concerned the safeguarding and preservation of moving images, stressing the importance of the cinematic arts as a record of creative activity, and the international standardization of statistics on public financing of cultural activities, to promote the development of cultural policies by improving statistical instruments.

More than 20 translations of the world's classical literature were published in English and French. As a follow-up to the International Year of the Child (1979), the launching of programmes for co-publication of low-priced children's books was extended to Africa and Latin America, in addition to Asia. The organization of regional training seminars for high-level personnel as well as national training courses for technicians was emphasized. A regional seminar on book publishing in national languages (Karachi, Pakistan, 20-24 January) constituted a first step in this field.

Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, the Holy See and Panama became parties to the 1971 Universal Copyright Convention, bringing the total number of parties to 73 at the end of the year.

Communications

The major event of UNESCO's communications programme in 1980 was the Intergovernmental Conference for Co-operation on Activities, Needs and Programmes for Communication Development, held in Paris from 14 to 21 April. On the basis of a Conference recommendation, the General Conference adopted a resolution to establish a new International Programme for the Development of Communication. The United Nations General Assembly invited support for this Programme by resolution 35/201 of 16 December 1980 (see p. 473).

With the assistance of several funds-in-trust donors and UNDP, UNESCO continued assisting countries in formulating communication policies, planning communication systems and developing communication infrastructures, notably for Algeria, Bangladesh, Burma, Cape Verde, China, Ecuador, the Gambia, Ghana, Jamaica, Kenya, Kiribati, Mali, Mexico, Namibia, the Philippines, Rwanda, Sri Lanka, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tuvalu, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Upper Volta and Zambia. Activities also included promoting regional news-agency development and training in the Caribbean and in western Africa, regional radio-production training in eastern and southern Africa (Botswana, Kenya, Lesotho, Swaziland, United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia, Zimbabwe) and regional broadcasting training in Asia.

A programme was launched to investigate equipment needs for broadcasting and communication infrastructures in developing countries and to subcontract the design of suitable low-cost equipment prototypes for providing the basic requirements for producing television programmes and the interface to broadcast. Co-operation began with the Economic Commission for Africa for the development of a low-cost radio station.

The organization continued to promote the free flow and balanced exchange of information and the study of the process and role of communication in society. Within a continuing series of regional conferences, an Intergovernmental Conference on Communication Policies in Africa was held at Yaoundé, United Republic of Cameroon, from 22 to 31 July. The Conference helped formulate and define regional priorities and identify areas in which UNESCO could more effectively help the continent.

The General Conference examined the Director-General's comments on the final report of the International Commission for the Study of Communication Problems, published under the title Many Voices, One World, and, by a resolution, indicated that the report had succeeded in identifying many of the most significant problems in the field of information and communication. By the same resolution, the Conference identified certain considerations on which a new world information and communication order could be based.

Other activities aimed at establishing and strengthening regional mechanisms for the exchange of information. A significant step forward was the decision of Asian news agencies, brought together in New Delhi, India, in December, to set up an Asian news-exchange network. The Economic Community of West African States similarly decided to set up a news network among its member countries.

General Information Programme

The General Information Programme of UNESCO, concerned with the development and promotion of information systems in the fields of scientific and technological information and documentation, provided services at the national, regional and international levels.

Reinforcing the objectives of the 1979 Intergovernmental Conference on Scientific and Technological Information for Development* and the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development,<sup>3</sup> the Programme attached particular importance to socio-economic information and to the special needs of developing countries. It increasingly favoured a user-oriented approach, specifically users taking part in the development process, to facilitate member States' choice, use and adaptation of advanced information and communication technology.

Technical assistance

Participation Programme

With funding from the UNESCO Participation Programme, member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations continued to participate in activities for achieving the technical assistance objectives laid down by the General Conference. As at 31 December 1980, allocations totalling $7,679,021 had been approved from the Programme's budget for 1979-1980. The table below shows the distribution of these obligations by region, country or territory and main area of assistance.

Projects executed for UNDP

The table in the next column gives a breakdown by sector of estimated UNDP expenditure on UNESCO-executed projects for 1980, which totalled $57,063,000.

Sector	Amount
Education	32,423,000
Natural sciences	17,445,000
Culture and communications	5,018,000
Social sciences	970,000
General Information Programme	941,000
Statistics	266,000
Total	57,063,000

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1980, the total number of full-time staff employed by UNESCO on permanent, fixed-term and short-term appointments was 3,461 drawn from 129 nationalities. Of these, 1,501 were in the Professional or higher categories and 1,960 were in the General Service category.

Of the Professional staff, 596 were experts serving in the field; 424 of the General Service category were also employed in the field.

Budget

The 1980 session of the UNESCO General Conference approved a budget of $625,374,000 for the three-year period 1981-1983. The Conference fixed the level of the Working Capital Fund at $20 million; amounts to be advanced by member States were to be calculated according to their percentage contribution. The United Nations and other programmes were expected to provide some $379,383,000 for UNESCO-oriented projects and activities.

Chapter V

World Health Organization (WHO)

During 1980, the World Health Organization (WHO) directed its activities mainly towards national, regional and global strategies aimed at the target for the next two decades: health for all by the year 2000. The goal was a level of health permitting socially and economically productive lives for all.

Equatorial Guinea, Saint Lucia, San Marino and Zimbabwe became WHO members in 1980, bringing the membership to 156 plus one associate member. Zimbabwe, which attained independence on 18 April, had previously been listed under the name of Southern Rhodesia as an associate member, although that membership status had been regarded as in suspense.

The thirty-third World Health Assembly met at Geneva from 5 to 23 May. It unanimously adopted a resolution proclaiming the total worldwide eradication of smallpox.

Following proposals to remove WHO's Regional Office for the Eastern Mediterranean from Alexandria, Egypt, the Assembly, by a resolution of 20 May, requested an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice on whether the negotiation and two-year advance notice provisions of the Agreement concluded with Egypt on 25 March 1951 were applicable in the event of such a transfer. In its opinion of 20 December 1980, the Court advised that WHO and Egypt had a duty to consult on the modalities of such a transfer, to negotiate on the arrangements and to give reasonable notice (see P. 1123).

Research promotion and development

By a resolution adopted in May, the World Health Assembly urged member States to ensure inclusion of biomedical, psychosocial and health services research in their national policies, plans and budget allocations related to the goal of health for all by the year 2000, and to intensify co-operation, particularly between developed and developing countries. Priority should be given to research training and measures to encourage scientists from developing countries who were completing their studies in developed countries to return home and apply their skills and knowledge. A system of advisory committees on medical research, comprising headquarters and the six WHO regions, was responsible for overseeing WHO research-related activities throughout the world. Detailed planning, coordination and review were effected by sub-committees and ad hoc working groups, in close co-operation with the secretariat.

The twenty-second annual session of the global Advisory Committee on Medical Research was held at Geneva in October. It considered reports from its regional committees and noted progress obtained in ethics, nutrition, the control of diarrhoeal diseases and research on cancer. It reviewed sub-committee reports on information, health services research, mental health and neuropsychiatry, research administration and research career structures. The Advisory Committee recommended the establishment of a sub-committee to study further the research component of the WHO cancer programme. In addition, the special programmes of research and training in human reproduction and in tropical diseases were reviewed.

Co-ordination with other organizations

During 1980, co-ordinating action centred on developments resulting from decisions of main United Nations forums, such as the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council. All decisions directly concerning health were reviewed and brought to the attention of WHO's governing bodies. The International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s) and decisions concerning the new international economic order were of particular concern. A major co-operative effort took place among WHO and its major partners in health-oriented development programmes—the United Nations, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) —to launch the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990).

Working relations between WHO regional offices and those of other United Nations organizations were studied, in particular the potential role of the United Nations regional commissions in promoting health development. Co-operation among WHO programme co-ordinators, national ministries of health and agency country representatives helped ensure a concerted approach to development needs. Collective action with other United Nations agencies and bodies was usually channelled through the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination.

In addition, WHO worked closely with government aid agencies to mobilize extrabudgetary funds for health programmes. It advised WFP on health hazards and health care opportunities relating to its projects, and participated in WFP's evaluation field missions, leading to similar work being done at the request of Governments, the European Economic Community, international professional organizations and other United Nations agencies.

Managerial processes for programme development

In 1980, WHO developed a global strategy aimed at supporting member States in developing and applying an integrated managerial process for national health development. It consisted of promotion, technical co-operation, training, material support, development of methodologies, and strengthening WHO's support capacity. Plans of action up to the end of 1983 were prepared and indicators developed so that countries could monitor progress.

Development of comprehensive health services

Primary health care

A number of the year's activities aimed at putting into operation the main conclusions of the 1978 International Conference on Primary Health Care (Alma-Ata, USSR). National plans of action were reviewed by regional committees and regional strategies were proposed. The Programme Committee of the Executive Board then developed global strategies. Major concerns of WHO and UNICEF were the practical application of the principles of primary health care, obstacles to the formulation of national policies and the means to overcome them. A 1979-1980 joint UNICEF/WHO study appraised these issues, enabling the participating countries to review, and in some cases modify, their strategies.

Preparatory and post-workshop activities were undertaken in individual countries by teams comprising representatives of the health sector and other sectors, including education, agriculture, public works and information. Representatives of UNICEF and WHO worked together to ensure this multisectoral collaboration.

A programme on training the disabled in the community was developed. In an effort to move away from institutionalized, very expensive care, a manual was prepared to help disabled people and their families deal with different types of disability within the community itself.

Workers' health

Noting with concern the serious increase in occupational and work-related diseases in many parts of the world, as well as the shortage of occupational health services, the World Health Assembly urged member States to give special attention to occupational health care in workplaces and to the health care of working populations, particularly "under-served workers," such as migrant workers, miners and working children.

Family health

The family health programme exemplified the principles of primary health care, stressing the crucial role of the family in health promotion and in prevention, early diagnosis and treatment of disease. Intersectoral development strategies placed special emphasis on the improved health and social status of women and children. The programme as a whole focused on technical co-operation to strengthen the family health component of primary health care. During 1980, WHO was the executing agency for more than 70 national family health programmes, covering managerial, training and service aspects.

New initiatives were taken to promote maternal and child health. Infant and young-child feeding continued to generate positive action by Governments and non-governmental organizations, poor infant-feeding practices and their consequences being a major problem in both the developing and the developed world. A draft international code of marketing of breast-milk substitutes was prepared. By a resolution adopted in May, the World Health Assembly called for intensified activities in these areas.

The risk approach—a management tool for developing local strategies and determining appropriate maternal and child health and family planning by distributing resources based on individual and community risks—was developed further and implemented in an increasing number of countries. This approach attempted to give special attention to those in greatest need, using all available community and other resources within a framework of improved health for all. The risk approach was also used in health services research.

As part of an integrated approach to rural development, planning began with other agencies and several South-East Asian countries on research on problems of deprived rural children, such as child abuse, child labour and provision of day care.

Priority was also given to, and an action-oriented research programme initiated for, developing means to strengthen the ability of health workers to prevent major nutritional problems, particularly of mothers and young children, through better dietary practices, using available foods. Field activities in this area were begun in several countries in Africa, Asia and the Middle East.

Many countries were helped to strengthen their health education services by re-examining the approaches used to promote health and by collaborating in the family and community towards modifying life-styles in the cause of health.

Traditional medicine

Collaborating centres for traditional medicine were established in five WHO regions (Africa, the Americas, Europe, South-East Asia, Western Pacific) and plans were made to establish centres in the Eastern Mediterranean region in 1981. Two workshops on the promotion of traditional medicine and on its use in the development of health services were held in Africa; a number of Governments took immediate action on some of the recommendations made.

Human reproduction

The special programme of research and training in human reproduction, largely financed by voluntary contributions, had four main objectives: strengthening research capabilities in developing countries; research on the safety and development of methods of fertility regulation, on service and psychosocial aspects of family-planning care, and on infertility; co-ordination of world efforts in this field; and dissemination of information. In 1980, this collaborative programme involved administrators and scientists from 85 countries, 57 of which were developing countries.

Studies were completed during the year on the relative safety and efficacy of different oral contraceptives, intrauterine devices, sterilization procedures and natural family-planning methods. Financial support came from Australia, Cuba, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Nigeria, Norway, Sweden, Thailand, the United Kingdom and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA).

Mental health

The international network of collaborating countries, institutions, research teams and experts in the mental health field was expanded and strengthened. Co-operation was improved between services and agencies dealing with mental health problems at country, regional and global levels. Information transfer mechanisms were established, with particular reference to the extent and nature of mental health problems, services and manpower development, psychosocial aspects of health and health care, and research. An inventory of all mental health research activities in the South-East Asian region was being compiled. Collaboration continued with the United Nations, the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations in problems related to alcohol consumption, drug abuse, rehabilitation of mentally and otherwise disabled persons, and problems linked to socio-economic development (e.g., resettlement) or the improvement of the quality of life (e.g., housing, nutrition).

Drug quality control

International biological standards for quality and biological-activity control of medicines were provided free of charge to health authorities who wished to calibrate national standards in international units.

The action programme on essential drugs co-operated with member States in formulating drug policies and management programmes aimed at ensuring permanent access to essential drugs at affordable costs.

The health laboratory technology programme pursued its efforts to develop low-cost laboratory services supporting primary health care. Field operational studies identified the most appropriate way to organize these peripheral laboratories and to evaluate their efficiency with regard to curative and preventive (or disease control) medicine. The preparation of laboratory manuals and guidelines for tutors training laboratory technicians was initiated.

Progress in revising the International Pharmacopoeia was achieved with the publication of the first volume of the third edition, containing general methods of analysis of pharmaceuticals most widely used in health care. A consultation was convened to establish basic tests for pharmaceutical substances, using simplified test procedures to identify drugs.

Some 25 national authorities collaborated regularly with WHO to provide information on newly registered and hazardous drugs, which was disseminated to all member States in the WHO quarterly Drug Information Bulletin and in drug information circulars. A standing committee on drug registration and information, composed of senior officials from regulatory agencies in both developed and developing countries, assured that this programme was directly responsive to countries' needs.

Health manpower development

Early in 1980, the medium-term programme for health manpower development was partially remodelled to bring activities into line with WHO's goal of health for all by the year 2000. More emphasis was placed on the training and continuing education of front-line health workers and their direct supervisors, and on manager training. The Executive Board was developing an organizational study on the role of WHO in training for health programme management. A network of institutions was currently conducting community-oriented educational programmes and promoting support to provide an information service on new educational methods and techniques. A proposal was prepared for a global health learning-materials programme.

Disease prevention and control

Acute respiratory infections

In developing countries, acute respiratory infections were a major cause of death in young children. Projects to examine the problem and reduce mortality were started in Africa, South America and the Western Pacific. A consultation was held on the clinical management of such infections and a guide for training community health workers in the care of children with respiratory diseases was elaborated.

Diarrhoeal diseases

Diarrhoeal diseases constituted a major public health problem in many developing countries, particularly among infants and young children. The WHO control programme, in collaboration with UNICEF, UNDP and the World Bank, comprised a health services component, concerned with incorporating existing knowledge on the prevention and treatment of diarrhoeal diseases into national control programmes, and a research component. A global target was set: to make oral rehydration therapy accessible to 25 per cent of all children below the age of five in the developing world by the end of 1983. A major training effort to support these programmes focused particularly on country staff with managerial, supervisory and training responsibilities.

Immunization and immunology

The global expanded programme on immunization stimulated activities in more than 100 developing countries to increase protection of infants against diphtheria, whooping cough, tetanus, measles, poliomyelitis and tuberculosis. The goal was to provide immunization protection to all children by 1990; the more immediate target was to increase the current 20 per cent estimated coverage to 50 per cent by 1983.

The immunology programme focused on training immunologists from developing countries in disease diagnosis and treatment, development of simple immunological and related techniques, production of immunological reagents, and support of immunological research on communicable and non-communicable diseases.

Leprosy

The WHO leprosy programme directed its efforts towards the promotion of clearly defined leprosy-project activities as part of primary health care, manpower training, and increased research under the UNDP/World Bank/WHO special programme for research and training in tropical diseases. During 1980, an updated edition of A Guide to Leprosy Control was published, incorporating the latest advances in the knowledge of the disease. A WHO intercountry consultative meeting (New Delhi, India, June) reviewed the current status of leprosy control and research in the South-East Asian region in the light of problems such as dapsone resistance, formulated criteria for multidisciplinary regimens, and suggested specific regimens for field use research. Research progressed in the immunology of leprosy, particularly in vaccine development, with promising results also in antigenic characterization, methods for detecting immune responses and understanding immunopathological mechanisms. In chemotherapy, controlled clinical trials on combined drug regimens at Chingleput (India) and Bamako (Mali) were under way.

Malaria

The Seventh Asian Malaria Conference, held at Manila, Philippines, in November 1980, provided a forum for exchanging views on technical and other aspects of malaria control and recommended that control be maintained as a priority. The organization co-operated in the assessment of the antimalaria programmes of Democratic Kampuchea, Indonesia, Sri Lanka and the Syrian Arab Republic and the Plasmodium falciparum containment programme in India. A comprehensive presentation of epidemiology and control of malaria in the northern savanna of Africa was published, reviewing eight years of research in Nigeria. Preparations were made for a co-operative malaria training programme in Asia; the permanent secretariat established for this purpose was to start functioning at Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, in early 1981. A 'seminar on field-applied malaria research and a workshop on quantitative epidemiology held in China, a workshop on the continuous in vitro cultivation of P. falciparum held in the USSR and courses on the assessment of drug sensitivity in P. falciparum were among the major epidemiological and research activities. Research remained oriented towards improving malaria control; significant progress was made in drug sensitivity testing.

Parasitic diseases

The WHO parasitic diseases programme served as an operational research and control programme, with emphasis on schistosomiasis, filariasis (including onchocerciasis), African and American trypanosomiasis, leishmaniasis and gastrointestinal parasitic infections. Its aims were to reduce the incidence of and mortality from these diseases, to stimulate research and to implement training for medical and technical personnel. Activities in 1980 included research promotion, information dissemination and co-operation in control, health education and training.

Prevention of blindness

Trachoma, onchocerciasis, xerophthalmia/keratomalacia, cataract and accidents-all potentially avoidable-were the main causes for an estimated 28 million blind people in the world, of which some 80 per cent were in the less developed countries or areas. It was WHO's role to promote the use of relatively simple preventive measures, the basic approach being to promote national programmes geared to local needs and resources. Emphasis was on training auxiliary personnel in eye care and promoting eye health.

Radiation medicine

During 1980, field trials of the basic radiological service project were started in Yemen and were in an advanced preparatory stage in Colombia and Egypt. The goal was to improve diagnostic radiology coverage; the project included X-ray machines and training packages for operators and general practitioners. Quality assurance in diagnostic radiology and nuclear medicine represented a new area of WHO activity with the financial support of the Federal Republic of Germany; two consultations were held on this subject. Consultations on radiology in Africa and Europe analysed the situation of radio-diagnostic and radio-therapeutic services in these two regions, and means for their improvement.

Sexually transmitted diseases

The control of gonococcal infections remained a high priority. A world-wide study on gonococcal sensitivity to antibiotics was developed, concerned in the first instance with the frequency and spread of beta-lactamase-producing and other resistant strains.

The complications of sexually transmitted diseases (acute pelvic infections, spontaneous abortion, ectopic pregnancy and infertility) were the subject of an international symposium, co-sponsored by WHO. A scientific group re-appraised the world situation on, and proposed practical and updated guidelines for the control, diagnosis and effective treatment of, venereal syphilis. The organization collaborated in country evaluations of the epidemiological situation and approaches for control, with the aim of interrupting transmission of endemic treponematoses (yaws and endemic syphilis).

Smallpox

On 8 May 1980, the World Health Assembly proclaimed the global eradication of smallpox-an unprecedented achievement in the history of public health. The Global Commission for the Certification of Smallpox Eradication identified five follow-up areas: (1) abolition of routine smallpox vaccination and certificates; (2) establishment of reserve stocks of vaccine and continued investigation of suspected cases; (3) stringent safety measures for variola virus stocks in the six laboratories currently retaining the virus; (4) surveillance and research on monkeypox virus and other related pox viruses; and (5) documentation of smallpox eradication.

Smoking and cardiovascular diseases

Following up a World Health Assembly resolution, a WHO international clearing-house for smoking and health information was established in collaboration with the Office on Smoking and Health of the United States Department of Health and Human Services. The organization collaborated with non-governmental organizations and United Nations agencies, helped organize various international conferences on smoking and health and undertook a review of smoking-control legislation around the world.

The prevention and control of cardiovascular diseases at the community level was the basis of a WHO programme embracing the concept of primordial prevention. Plans were made in 1980 to launch such an approach in developing countries: initially, community smoking-control activities; then WHO collaboration with a limited number of member States to develop, implement and evaluate methodologies adapted to local conditions and needs. Other "risk factors" included unhealthy dietary habits, hypertension, obesity and lack of exercise.

Tropical diseases

The WHO/UNDP/World Bank special programme for research and training in tropical diseases, a global programme of technical co-operation, made significant progress in 1980 towards its two objectives: control of six tropical diseases (malaria, schistosomiasis, filariasis, trypanosomiasis- both African sleeping sickness and Chagas' disease - leishmaniasis and leprosy) ; and strengthening national institutions, including training, to increase the research capabilities of the affected tropical countries. Up to 30 December 1980, the programme had supported 1,088 projects, and more than 2,000 scientists from 109 member States participated in its planning, implementation, operation and evaluation.

More than $52 million was obligated for direct support to national scientists and institutions. Some 210 training grants were awarded and 22 institutions received long-term support. Twenty-three Governments (including those of six developing endemic countries) and six organizations, together with UNDP and WHO, contributed more than $70 million to the programme. The joint co-ordinating board approved maximum budgets of $26.61 million for 1980 and $30.09 million for 1981. The percentage of the project operations budget going to developing endemic countries rose from 29 per cent in 1977 to 56 per cent in 1980.

Progress was made in chemotherapy for malaria, schistosomiasis and filariasis, in biological control of vectors, and in simple and accurate diagnostic field tests for malaria, leprosy and African trypanosomiasis.

Tuberculosis

Expressing concern about inadequate efforts in control programmes, the World Health Assembly urged member States to give early attention to tuberculosis control, emphasizing programme evaluation, epidemiological surveillance and health services research. A WHO study group recommended that the vaccination of young children, a common practice in most developing countries, be continued.

Vector biology and control

Taking into account the recommendations of a WHO expert committee on environmental management for vector control which met in 1979, the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and WHO strengthened co-ordination of their activities for better prevention of the water- and vector-borne diseases associated with water resource development. Research sponsored by WHO on the biological control of vectors received considerable emphasis. A biological larvicide, safe for man and the environment, derived from Bacillus thuringiensis (serotype H-14), which gave promising results against blackflies and mosquitoes, reached the industrial production stage.

Veterinary public health

In recent years, zoonoses-food-borne diseases from animal products and other animal-related hazards to human health had become increasingly prevalent. In 1980, the counteracting programme continued to focus on developing national, regional and global strategies and methods for surveillance, prevention and control. A global programme for the elimination of dog rabies was initiated. The network of zoonosis centres was extended in all regions, in co-operation with UNDP, FAO and other agencies.

Other chronic non-communicable diseases

A report of the WHO expert committee on diabetes mellitus emphasized the need for the involvement of community and patient in diabetic care, and strongly recommended that preventive, promotive, curative, educational and research activities should be based at the primary health care level. The strategy recommended by the committee was explored throughout 1980, and prevention and control programmes started at the community level.

Promotion of environmental health

The World Health Assembly endorsed the basic policy for WHO participation in the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990). The organization provided information on water supply and sanitation in more than 100 countries and disseminated it widely to promote the Decade and attract more resources. In 33 countries, technical co-operation programmes were undertaken to develop national plans. At the regional level, WHO worked to increase awareness of and stimulate commitment for the Decade and to help plan, implement and support national programmes. At the global level, it accelerated the flow of information between member States and the donor community to increase participation. It also provided secretariat services for the Decade steering committee.

The second major priority of WHO in the environment was the recognition, evaluation and prevention of adverse effects of chemicals and other environmental hazards in air, water and food. During 1980, an international programme on chemical safety was launched jointly with UNDP and the International Labour Organisation (ILO), with specific tasks delegated to national institutions. The programme's initial priorities included the evaluation of the health effects of priority chemicals, the dissemination of information through UNEP's International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals, the development of methodology for risk evaluation and hazard assessment, and the training of manpower. Nine member States actively joined the programme in 1980 and agreed to assume specific tasks through their scientific institutions.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1980, the total number of full-time staff employed by WHO was 4,315 on permanent and fixed-term contracts. Of these, 1,577 staff members, drawn from 113 nationalities, were in the Professional and higher categories and 2,738 were in the General Service category. Of the total number of staff, 219 were in posts financed by UNDP, UNEP, UNFPA and the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control.

Budget

The thirty-second World Health Assembly (1979) approved an effective working budget for 1980-1981 of $427,290,000. This compared with $354,330,000 for the two years 1978 and 1979. The 1980-1981 budget was allocated as follows:

Chapter VI

International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank)

The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) and its affiliate, the International Development Association (IDA), continued to emphasize assistance for rural development in 1980. During the fiscal year 1 July 1979 to 30 June 1980, rural development projects accounted for 55 per cent of total Bank and IDA lending.

The other major sectors receiving sizeable funds were energy and transportation. The Bank and IDA together loaned 42,849.3 million for energy projects ($457 million for oil, gas and coal and $2,392.3 million for power) and $1,444.5 million for transportation.

Membership in the Bank rose to 139 during 1980, with the admission of Saint Lucia in June, Dominica, Seychelles and Zimbabwe on 29 September, and Djibouti on 1 October.

Lending operations

In the fiscal year ending 30 June 1980, the World Bank made 144 loans amounting to $7,644.2 million to 48 countries, an increase of $655.2 million over fiscal year 1979. This brought the cumulative total of Bank loan commitments since its inception in 1946 to $59,341.4 million.

The table on the following pages summarizes World Bank lending in fiscal year 1980 by country, region and purpose.

Agriculture and rural development

Helping to solve the food problem and aiding small farmers and the rural poor continued to be the main objectives of lending for agriculture and rural development projects, shown in the table on the following pages, to which, in fiscal 1980, $1,700.4 million was committed.

Indonesia's four loans totalling $292 million were for improved irrigation, drainage and flood-protection systems to benefit about 800,000 farm families, a project to establish rubber trees on family-sized holdings in two provinces, the construction of research centres, and farms for 4,000 landless families on unused land in South Sumatra.

A $160 million loan to Mexico for irrigation of 110,000 hectares in the Balsas River basin was to benefit about 10,000 families. Three loans, totalling $225 million, were made to Romania for the construction of breeding and production farms and slaughterhouses for poultry, and for agricultural credit to establish 29,820 hectares of new orchards and construct new fruit-packing and cold-storage facilities.

Development finance companies

The World Bank made loans totalling $720 million in fiscal 1980 to assist development finance companies in 11 countries. In addition, the Caribbean Development Bank was provided with $23 million for relending to Commonwealth members. The largest borrowers were Colombia's central bank ($150 million) and the Industrial Credit and Investment Corporation of India ($100 million). The Small and Medium Industry Bank of the Republic of Korea and the Industrial Development Bank of Turkey each borrowed $60 million.

Education

Nine loans totalling $360.1 million were granted for education projects in fiscal 1980. Algeria borrowed $87 million to establish six centres to train skilled workers and to train and upgrade supervisors for the construction, wood- and cork-processing, and food-processing industries. A loan of $24 million was made to the Ivory Coast to provide better access to primary education in rural areas, to establish four vocational training institutes and a pilot community development project.

Energy

Twenty-six energy projects in 20 countries were assisted by Bank loans totalling $1,913 million during fiscal 1980. Four loans were made to Thailand, totalling $334 million: a $107 million loan went for the construction of an underwater pipeline system to transport offshore gas; two loans, totalling $155 million, were for the installation of power transmission lines, dams; distribution transformers and related works to provide electricity to more than 6 million people; and a $72 million loan was to assist lignite production in the country's remote northern region.

India received a $25 million loan, along with a $225 million IDA credit, for the construction of a thermal power station in West Bengal state.

Loans totalling $149.5 million were also made to the following countries for oil, gas or coal exploration and/or production: Argentina ($27 million), Honduras ($3 million), Morocco ($50 million), Peru ($32.5 million), Tunisia ($37 million).

Industry

The World Bank made seven loans amounting to $393.5 million for industrial projects in six countries during fiscal 1980. Colombia received an $80 million loan for an open-pit mine at the Cerro Matoso nickel laterite deposit in Cordoba. Mauritania borrowed $60 million to develop two open iron-ore pits near Zouerate. Nine other major co-financiers provided an additional $278 million to the Mauritanian project. A loan of $83 million was made to Turkey for factory facilities and equipment to assist the textile industry.

Non-project

Four non-project loans, totalling $280 million, were made in fiscal 1980. The year also saw the beginning of a new form of programme aid—lending for structural adjustment—that sought to assist developing countries in adjusting to permanent or long-term changes in the world's economic environment. Two structural adjustment loans were approved in fiscal 1980: Bolivia received $50 million and Turkey received $200 million. The Dominican Republic received a $25 million loan for post-hurricane reconstruction efforts. Paraguay received $5 million for pre-investment studies.

Population, health and nutrition

Indonesia received a loan of $35 million to help expand its national family planning programme and the Republic of Korea borrowed $30 million to provide training programmes for family planning personnel and to expand health and family planning programmes.

Small-scale enterprises

Six loans totalling $222 million were made to five countries in fiscal 1980 for small-scale enterprise development. Mexico received two loans ($140 million) to promote small- and medium-scale industrial enterprises in rural areas, and Algeria borrowed $20 million to improve the management and operations of a metal company. The other three loans were made to Barbados ($10 million, for industrial promotion, construction, equipment and training), Colombia ($32 million, for subloans to small- and medium-scale industry) and Ecuador ($20 million, for subloans to small-scale industry and training).

Telecommunications

Colombia received $44 million to help meet the demand for telephone service in Medellín and surrounding areas, and Oman borrowed $22 million to extend rural and urban telephone facilities to benefit 14,000 new subscribers.

Transportation

Sixteen countries received loans amounting to $1,205 million for transportation projects in fiscal 1980. Yugoslavia received $125 million to finance road maintenance equipment, a highway safety programme and traffic operations on the Trans-Yugoslav highway. Zambia borrowed $25 million to renovate and extend 112 kilometres of railway track and purchase locomotives, wagons and other equipment; eight co-financiers supplied $94.2 million to the Zambia project.

In Brazil, a $159 million loan to construct a mass-transit rail system in the state of Rio Grande do Sul is expected to benefit about 2 million urban poor. A loan ($67 million) to the Philippines was to improve port operations, increase port productivity and provide a more economical means of transporting agricultural products grown in the hinterland to domestic and foreign markets.

Urbanization

Six loans were approved for urbanization in fiscal 1980. A loan of $31 million to Ecuador provided for technical assistance to small-scale enterprises, the upgrading of slums, and loans for housing construction and improvement in Guayaquil. Panama borrowed $35 million to construct houses, an education centre, recreation facilities, shopping areas and a bus station that was to benefit about 4,000 low-income families in Colon and Puerto Escondido. The other four loans were made to Nigeria ($17.8 million for electricity, drainage, water supply, education, health and sewage-disposal facilities in Bauchi state), the Philippines ($72 million for basic services, small business assistance and training in Manila), the Republic of Korea (a multipurpose loan of $65 million) and Thailand ($29 million for housing, improved services and small-scale industry development).

Water supply and sewerage

Nine loans were made in fiscal 1980 for water supply and sewerage projects in eight countries. A loan to Chile of $38 million went to improve and expand water treatment and distribution facilities in Santiago, and to a nation-wide chlorination programme to improve water quality in 36 other localities. The United Republic of Cameroon received $21 million to improve and extend water supply systems in 13 secondary centres and in Douala and Yaoundé. Brazil received two loans of $269 million to make available, extend or improve water supply and sewerage services in the states of Minas Gerais, Paraná, Santa Catarina and Rio Grande do Sul.

Technical assistance

A steady flow of technical assistance continued to be provided to borrowing countries as an integral part of the World Bank's activities during project preparation and appraisal. The Bank also continued to assist its borrowers with feasibility studies, engineering, resource surveys and other help of a similar nature.

Technical assistance was also provided as part of the Bank's loans. In fiscal 1980, 197 lending operations, totalling $534 million, included provision for technical assistance. Project preparation loans during the year amounted to $20.4 million.

The Bank continued to serve as executing agency for pre-investment and technical assistance projects financed by the United Nations Development Programme. For fiscal year 1980 as a whole, the Bank served as executing agency for 44 new projects. They included a regional programme in Central America and Panama that was designed to strengthen national capacity to develop and implement agricultural and rural development projects, and consultant studies on an agricultural project in Algeria.

The Bank also continued to act as executing agency for planning projects in nine countries in three different regions. Projects were completed in Uganda and Zaire and were undertaken in Indonesia, Kenya, Maldives, the Republic of Korea, Sierra Leone and Uganda.

Economic Development Institute

During fiscal year 1980, the Economic Development Institute conducted 10 courses and three seminars in Washington, D. C. (United States), for officials concerned with economic affairs in developing countries. In addition, assistance was given to 20 regional and 19 national courses, and seminars were offered to about 1,080 participants. In Africa, the Institute co-sponsored six regional and three national courses and seminars, including two regional courses in the Ivory Coast on development banking. Other regional courses co-sponsored by the Institute included: one on transportation projects, with the Bangladesh Institute of Development Studies; one on industrial projects, with the International Development Centre of Japan; and one on livestock development projects, with the University of the Philippines, the South-East Asian Regional Centre for Graduate Study and Research in Agriculture, and the German Foundation for International Development.

Development aid co-ordination

At the request of both donor and recipient Governments, the Bank continued to take the lead in organizing various aid co-ordination mechanisms for a number of developing countries that received assistance from bilateral and multilateral sources. During the year, 11 aid co-ordinating country groups for the following held Bank-sponsored formal meetings: Bangladesh, Colombia, Egypt, Nepal, Pakistan, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Sudan, Uganda, Zaire, and the Caribbean Group for Co-operation in Economic Development. The Bank also participated in a meeting of the Inter-Governmental Group for Indonesia, chaired by the Netherlands, and the Turkey Consortium meeting, chaired by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Settlement of investment disputes

By the end of fiscal year 1980, 79 States had ratified the Convention on the Settlement of Investment Disputes between States and Nationals of Other States, which established the International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes. Five additional Governments had signed but not ratified the Convention.

Financing activities

The World Bank's borrowings in the capital markets reflected the growth of financial requirements arising from a rapid expansion of the Bank's lending operations. Aggregate gross borrowings in the five fiscal years 1976-1980 were $22,426 million, as compared with $10,198 million in the preceding five years.

During fiscal 1980, the equivalent of $5,173.4 million was borrowed in 31 issues publicly offered or privately placed by the Bank ($3,503.9 million) and 11 issues ($1,652.9 million) placed with official sources, namely, member Governments of the Bank, central banks and government institutions.

The investment market in the Federal Republic of Germany was the largest supplier of borrowed funds to the Bank during the fiscal year. Six issues<sup>1</sup> totalling $825.3 million were sold in that market, four of which were public offerings and two sold by private placements. The Bank raised the equivalent of $379.8 million in Japan by means of one public offering and two private placements. In Switzerland, the Bank raised $608.3 million in seven issues: three public offerings and four from official sources, such as central banks and government institutions.

Borrowings in fiscal 1980 included $3,560.8 million in new borrowings, $1,612.6 million of which represented the refinancing of outstanding borrowings. Debt maturities during the year amounted to $2,669.1 million. An additional $121.9 million of debt was retired by sinking fund and purchase fund operations.

Outstanding obligations of the Bank increased by $3,388 million, to $29,668 million, as at 30 June 1980, of which 27.7 per cent were held by investors in the Federal Republic of Germany, 19.7 per cent in the United States, 15.9 per cent in Switzerland, 14.2 per cent by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries and 14.1 per cent in Japan. The remaining 8.4 per cent were held by investment institutions in other countries.

Income, expenditures and reserves

The Bank's net income was $588 million in fiscal year 1980, $181 million above the previous fiscal year, and gross revenues increased by $375 million to $2,800 million.

Total expenses amounted to $2,212 million, up 10 per cent from the previous year. Administrative costs totalled $198 million. Interest and issuance costs on the Bank's borrowings totalled $2,013 million.

Total reserves of the Bank amounted to $2,600 million at the end of the fiscal year. An amount of $307 million, derived from net income in 1979, was allocated to the General Reserve.

Capitalization

In the Bank's Articles of Agreement, the institution's capital stock is expressed in terms of 1944 dollars-the United States dollar of the weight and fineness in effect on 1 July 1944. On 1 April 1978, when the Second Amendment of the Articles of Agreement of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) became effective, currencies no longer had par values, and the basis for translating the 1944 dollar into current United States dollars no longer existed.

Thus, for the fiscal year ended 30 June 1980, the Bank expressed the value of its capital stock on the basis of the special drawing right (SDR) (whose value was based on a basket of 16 major currencies) in terms of the United States dollar as computed by IMF on 30 June. On that date, the value of the SDR was set at $1.32438.

The value of the Bank's subscribed capital was SDR 30,171.8 million at the end of fiscal 1980, an increase of SDR 1,181.6 million over the previous year.

On 4 January 1980, the Bank's Board of Governors adopted a resolution that increased the authorized capital stock of the Bank by 331,500 shares; this represented an increase of approximately $40 billion. The resolution provided that the paid-in portion of the shares authorized to be subscribed under it was to be 7.5 per cent, compared with the 10 per cent paid-in portion of existing capital stock. Subscribing members were to be required to pay 0.75 per cent of the subscription price in gold or United States dollars and 6.75 per cent in their respective currencies.

Secretariat

As at 30 June 1980, the staff of the World Bank and IDA numbered about 6,500, drawn from more than 100 nationalities.

Chapter VII

International Finance Corporation (IFC)

The International Finance Corporation (IFC) was established in 1956 as an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) to assist developing member countries by helping them to promote the private sector of their economies. The principal objectives of IFC were: to provide risk capital for productive private enterprise, in association with private investors and management; to encourage the development of local capital markets; and to stimulate the international flow of private capital.

The Corporation, which makes investments in the form of share subscriptions and long-term loans, carries out stand-by and underwriting arrangements, and provides financial and technical assistance to privately controlled development finance companies. It neither requires nor accepts guarantees by Governments in its operations. Generally, investments are in the form of a loan, a share subscription or a combination of both with other investors, local and foreign, providing the bulk of the funds required for any given project.

The Corporation significantly expanded its volume of business during fiscal year 1980 (ending on 30 June). Approved investments in loans and equities- including $266.8 million in sales of participations placed with other financial institutions, mainly commercial banks in developed countries-amounted to $681 million, or $256 million above the previous year's $425 million. Of the total investments approved, $248 million went to establish new operations, $366 million to expand and modernize existing plants, and $58 million to support financial institutions. The balance of $9 million involved the exercise of stock rights.

Investment approvals during fiscal 1980 were distributed over a wide range of sectors: 14 (totalling $302.5 million) for heavy industry projects, costing $1,113 million; 13 ($92.4 million) for light industry projects, costing $278 million; 13 ($62.1 million) for capital market and financial institution projects, costing $257 million; seven ($171 million) for fuel and mineral projects, costing $523 million; five ($26.6 million) for agro-industrial projects, costing $96 million; and three ($26 million) for service industries, costing $110 million.

About $45 million of total approvals was for equity investments. The number of projects financed increased from 48 to 55, in 30 countries. Approved investments were broadly distributed geographically, with 15 in Africa, 17 in Asia, seven in Europe and the Middle East, and 16 in Latin America and the Caribbean. By dollar volume, Africa accounted for 16 per cent of the total, Asia for 15 per cent, Europe and the Middle East for 13 per cent, and Latin America and the Caribbean for 56 per cent.

As of 1 July, a second Department of Investments to serve Africa was created to cope with the increased operations there.

The total cost of projects approved was $2,377 million as compared to $1,714 million the previous year. Thus IFC contributed 29 per cent of total project costs.

Among the operations during the fiscal year was the largest syndication in IFC's history- $101 million for the expansion of a flat glass manufacturing company in Mexico. Two other notable transactions were IFC's first sales of participations in energy projects in Pakistan and in a scheme to provide financing for Yugoslav small- and medium-scale industries.

Developing countries provided about 50 per cent of project financing. This included projects' internal cash generation. Of the balance, capital exporting countries provided the largest share- $342 million in loans and $163 million in equity investments.

The number of projects undertaken in the least developed and small member countries continued to increase. Twenty-eight projects, or roughly half of the total, were in member States with a per capita income of less than $626 per year. Within this group, projects in countries with a per capita income of less than $361 a year increased from 12 in 1979 to 15 in 1980.

With the admission of Barbados, Burundi, Djibouti, Dominica, Fiji, the Niger, Solomon Islands and Zimbabwe, IFC's membership increased to 117 at the end of 1980.

Technical assistance

The Corporation provided two types of technical assistance: project-related, undertaken in connexion with the appraisal of new ventures and supervision of past investments and an integral part of IFC's ongoing programme; and non-project related, ranging from financial sector surveys, to advisory missions to member Governments, to training, including studies and policy analysis to assist members or international or regional institutions in stimulating private investment.

Financial operations

The Corporation's total operating income in fiscal year 1980 was $86.8 million. After administrative expenses and financial charges on borrowings ($59.5 million), income from operations amounted to $27.3 million. Net income, including $3.4 million in gains on sales of investments and a $10.6 million deduction as a provision for losses on investments, totalled $20.7 million, as compared to $19.2 million for the previous year.

Chapter VIII

International Development Association (IDA)

The International Development Association (IDA) is an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank). Its purpose is to promote economic development by supporting productive, high-priority projects in developing member countries.

The Association lends for the same kinds of projects as the World Bank, using the same appraisal criteria and staff, but it obtains its funds from different sources and lends on different terms; its capital and assets are entirely separate from those of the Bank.

The Bank obtains the largest part of its funds in the capital markets and lends on roughly conventional terms. The bulk of IDA resources are contributed by member Governments, enabling it to lend to the poorest countries on more flexible terms which weigh less heavily on their balances of payments.

In general, a country eligible to receive IDA credits must have a low per capita income—not more than $625 a year; emphasis is on assistance to the poorest countries within this category. A further eligibility requirement is a difficult balance-of-payments problem with little prospect of earning sufficient foreign exchange to justify borrowing on conventional terms all the external funds needed for development. The country must also have sufficient economic, financial and political stability to warrant long-term development lending and a genuine commitment to development.

The Association's credits are interest-free, with a service charge of 0.75 per cent on disbursed and outstanding credit balances. The credits are repayable over 50 years, with an initial grace period of 10 years before repayment begins.

Unlike the Bank, which may lend to public and private entities with government guarantees, IDA lends only to Governments. In the case of revenue-producing projects, IDA credits are re-lent by the Governments on terms reflecting the local cost of capital. Thus, IDA terms help Governments to finance economic development without distorting the local credit structure.

From the start of operations in 1960 to the end of fiscal year 1980 (30 June), IDA's resources totalled the equivalent of $20,773 million.

The bulk of IDA funds for lending are provided by its Part I (richer) member countries and several Part II (developing) countries under a series of replenishment agreements. In fiscal 1980, the total resources of IDA increased by $1,192 million, primarily from subscriptions and contributions to the fifth replenishment, in 1977, which aggregated $681 million. The World Bank granted $100 million to IDA from its fiscal 1979 net income, of which $86 million was for the general purposes of the Association and $14 million for grants for agricultural research and onchocerciasis control. Other resources available to IDA during the fiscal year totalled $56 million and were derived from releases by Part II countries and cancellations of repayments on credits.

The Board of Governors agreed in March on a sixth replenishment for the three-year period 1 July 1980 to 30 June 1983, in the equivalent of $12 billion, approved by the Executive Directors in January. In June 1980, the Executive Directors authorized IDA commitments, as well as repayment obligations of borrowers, to be expressed in special drawing rights, beginning with the sixth replenishment.

With Solomon Islands becoming a member on 21 July 1980, Dominica and Zimbabwe on 29 September and Djibouti on 1 October, IDA's membership rose to 125 at the end of 1980.

Lending operations

Cumulative IDA commitments through 30 June 1980 totalled $20,569.8 million. Commitments in the fiscal year amounted to $3,837.5 million, an increase of $816 million over the previous year. The poorest of the developing countries—those with annual per capita gross national products of $360 or less—received 87 per cent of IDA commitments, South Asian countries received $2,311.5 million and Eastern African countries received $664.5 million. India was the largest borrower, with 14 credits amounting to $1,535 million, followed by Bangladesh with 10 credits totalling $267 million.

The table below summarizes IDA lending in fiscal 1980 by region/country and by purpose.

Agriculture and rural development

The largest portion of IDA commitments, about 50 per cent, went to finance projects in agriculture and rural development, a total of 53 credits amounting to $1,758 million, including four credits for joint Bank/IDA operations. In several African countries, IDA financed integrated projects designed not only to improve crop and livestock output but also to provide support services and develop social and economic infrastructure.

India borrowed $210 million for an irrigation project in Maharashtra state designed to benefit some 120,000 farm families. Nepal borrowed $17 million for the first phase of a 20-year national forestry programme. The United Republic of Cameroon received $15 million to help replace depleted forest areas and develop an industrial rubber estate. A $17 million credit was made to Yemen for fisheries development, including the construction of a fishing port and related marketing and storage facilities.

Development finance companies

Five credits amounting to $74.5 million, including one credit for a joint Bank/IDA operation, were granted to assist development finance companies. Pakistan borrowed $40 million to cover foreign exchange costs of industrial projects carried out by private enterprises in the Seven credits ($128.5 million) for oil, gas and/or coal energy development or exploration and nine credits ($807.8 million, including three credits for joint Bank/IDA operations) for electric power were granted during the fiscal year. India borrowed $300 million for the construction of the second stage of the coal-fired Singrauli power generating station in Uttar Pradesh state. Democratic Yemen received $9 million for oil and gas exploration, and a $16 million credit was made to Bolivia for a 14-well appraisal drilling programme, seismic surveys and various studies designed to enable the country to increase its gas exports and foreign exchange earnings.

Industry

The only credit in the industry sector ($29 million) was given to Bangladesh for the rehabilitation of three major fertilizer plants.

Non-project

Of the four non-project credits, totalling $242.5 million, Kenya received $55 million in the form of a structural adjustment credit to help improve foreign trade and industrial structure. A credit of $65 million was given to the Sudan to provide foreign exchange for high-priority imports in the irrigated agriculture subsector. Uganda was granted $72.5 million for the rehabilitation of its economy.

Population, health and nutrition

India received the only two credits for population, health and nutrition: $46 million for a second population project to reduce infant mortality and morbidity in the states of Uttar Pradesh and Andhra Pradesh, and $32 million to provide food, vitamins and mineral supplements to about 711,000 children and 275,000 pregnant and nursing women in Tamil Nadu.

Small-scale enterprises

Of the three small-scale enterprise credits, totalling $38 million, Benin received $10 million for the financing of small- and medium-scale investments in the industrial sector.

Technical assistance

Four credits amounting to $13 million were provided for technical assistance during the fiscal year. Kenya borrowed $4.5 million to finance studies, training and consultant services related to export promotion. Sri Lanka received $3 million for a study of plans for conveying and using surplus Mahaweli Ganges water to develop land in three alternative areas.

Telecommunications

Two credits were made in the telecommunications sector: Burma received $35 million for the installation of about 68,000 direct exchange lines and the expansion of service in 30 regional and 54 township centres; Sri Lanka borrowed $30 million to expand local and long-distance telephone service.

Transportation

Of the ten credits for transportation, totalling $239.5 million (which included three credits for joint Bank/IDA operations), the Congo received supplementary financing of $30 million to a previous loan to complete the realignment of 88 kilometres of railway serving four West African countries. Guinea borrowed $13 million for the rehabilitation and maintenance of about 6,000 kilometres of roads, $50 million was given to Pakistan for a third highway project, and $53 million for Sri Lanka was to improve public bus operations.

Urbanization

Of the four credits for urbanization, totalling $99 million, $15 million was granted to Burundi to improve basic infrastructure in seven neighbourhoods in Bujumbura, benefiting some 118,000 people. Lesotho received $6 million for urban development and Nicaragua $22 million for the rehabilitation of six civil-war-damaged cities.

Water supply and sewerage

In the water supply and sewerage sector, seven credits amounting to $184.7 million were granted. Bolivia borrowed $9 million to improve water standards in Santa Cruz de la Sierra. A sum of $80 million was given to India to improve and expand water-supply facilities and sewerage systems in Rajasthan state to benefit some 2.4 million people. Democratic Yemen received $13.2 million for the first stage of a long-term water-supply master plan to help meet demand to 1987.

Chapter IX

International Monetary Fund (IMF)

During 1980, there was a substantial increase in the total volume of financial activity of the International Monetary Fund (IMF), as well as an evolution of its policies. New commitments under stand-by and extended arrangements, together with other use of Fund resources-expressed in special drawing rights (SDRs), the SDR being a unit of account whose value, calculated daily, was based on a "basket" of international currencies-rose to an unprecedented SDR 9.5 billion from SDR 3.4 billion in 1979, far surpassing the previous high of SDR 5.7 billion attained in 1977. The surge largely reflected a more than threefold jump in new loan commitments under stand-by and extended arrangements, to SDR 7.2 billion from SDR 2.2 billion in 1979. Purchases other than those under these arrangements rose to about SDR 1 billion from SDR 700 million in 1979. Including trust fund loan disbursements of SDR 1.3 billion, the Fund's balance-of-payments assistance to developing countries was doubled from these two sources.

Throughout 1980, the Fund continued to shape its policies to meet the balance-of-payments needs of its members in the light of changing world economic conditions. Previous innovations had included the 1974 and 1975 oil facilities,* the Subsidy Account for the 1975 oil facility, the liberalization of the compensatory financing facility, the extended facility, gold sales, the Trust Fund, and the supplementary financing facility, providing aid to members facing payments difficulties large in relation to their economies and IMF quotas. Also, in 1979, IMF had reviewed its guidelines governing conditionality for the use of Fund resources; modifications introduced provided for greater flexibility in exceptional cases. In December 1979, the Fund had also extended the maximum repurchase period under the extended Fund facility from eight to 10 years and further liberalized members' access to the compensatory financing facility, established to assist primary-producing countries with temporary balance-of-payments difficulties caused by export-earnings shortfalls due to factors beyond their control.

In April 1980, the Interim Committee of the Board of Governors of the International Monetary Fund on the International Monetary System, meeting in Hamburg, Federal Republic of Germany, recognized that IMF should stand ready to play a growing role in the adjustment and financing of payments imbalances and in the recycling process. The Committee encouraged IMF's Managing Director to start discussions with potential lenders on terms and conditions under which IMF could borrow to supplement its resources. Meanwhile members continued to have recourse to supplementary financing facility borrowing arrangements. The General Arrangement to Borrow and the associated borrowing agreement with Switzerland were renewed for another five years, until 23 October 1985.

The Fund received an important contribution to its liquidity with the entry into effect on 29 November of the 50 per cent increase in quotas under the Seventh General Review of Quotas, initiated in 1976. The minimum participation requirement (not less than 75 per cent of total quotas as of 1 November 1978) for the quota increases to be effective was met when 128 members representing 75.62 per cent of total Fund quotas as of that date notified IMF of their consent to the increase in quotas. When all members consented to the full increase proposed for them, the aggregate of Fund quotas was to be raised from SDR 39,766.5 million to SDR 60,025.6 million. As of the end of 1980, 138 members had paid their quota increases, raising the total to SDR 58,890.5 million.

The Fund's gold sales programme that was agreed by the Interim Committee in 1975, in accordance with the objective of the gradual reduction of the role of gold in the international monetary system, was completed in May 1980. Under this provision IMF completed the fourth sale of gold (at the former official price of SDR 35 per ounce) to countries that were IMF members on 31 August 1975. This brought the total amount sold under this programme to about 25 million fine ounces. The four-year programme of gold auctions (25 million ounces), which was also completed with the final auction of 7 May 1980, yielded proceeds of $4.6 billion, of which $1.3 billion was distributed directly to 104 developing member countries. The balance, together with the income from investments, was available for concessionary loans by the Trust Fund (established in 1976 to provide additional balance-of-payments assistance to developing countries from gold-sales profits).

The second of three annual allocations of SDRs in accordance with a 1978 Board of Governors' resolution was made as of 1 January 1980. The resolution provided for the allocation of about SDR 4 billion in each of the three years 1979, 1980 and 1981.

To enhance the role of the SDR as an international reserve asset, IMF decided to permit its use in swap arrangements, forward operations and donations (grants), and to increase the number of official institutions that might hold, acquire and use SDRs. It also prescribed nine institutions as "other holders" of SDRs, authorizing them to acquire, hold and use SDRs on uniform terms and conditions. Such other holders were not obliged to acquire or use SDRs, but the decision permitted them to do so in bilateral transactions and operations by agreement with any participant or other prescribed holder, with the same degree of freedom that participants in such dealings have among themselves. No general provision was made for other holders to deal in SDRs with the Fund's General Resources Account, but the Swiss National Bank, which had borrowing agreements with the Fund, was authorized to accept SDRs in payment of interest on, or repayment of, the Fund's indebtedness to the Bank, in accordance with the terms of the borrowing agreements. "Other holders" did not receive allocations of SDRs.

Another step towards enhancing the role of the SDR as a reserve asset was achieved with the decision to introduce, as at 1 January 1981, a new five-currency basket to be used to determine the value of the SDR and its interest rate. The new basket was composed of the currencies of the five members having the largest exports of goods and services during the period 1975-1979, namely the United States dollar, the deutsche mark, the French franc, the Japanese yen and the pound sterling. The same currencies also comprised the basket previously used to determine the SDR interest rate, whereas the value of the SDR was formerly based on a basket of 16 currencies. The currency composition of the basket was to be adjusted at five-year intervals beginning 1 January 1986, unless the Fund's Executive Board decided otherwise, so as to include the currencies of the five IMF member countries with the largest exports of goods and services during the five-year period preceding the revision (e.g. 1980-1984 for the revision that was to take effect on 1 January 1986).

Zimbabwe joined IMF on 29 September 1980, raising membership to 141; and the Executive Board decided that, with effect from 17 April, the Government of the People's Republic of China represented China in IMF.

Fund operations

Members' purchases (drawings) from the Fund in 1980 amounted to SDR 3,752.7 million. The largest share of these transactions (48 per cent) was attributable to credit tranche purchases of SDR 1,798.6 million, of which SDR 943.1 million was financed by the supplementary financing facility. Credit under the Fund's basic financing policy was viewed as being available in tranches, each being equivalent to 25 per cent of quota. With the addition of Trust Fund loans to members' purchases, the total flow of Fund resources to members in 1980 was SDR 5,008.7 million, compared with SDR 2,369.4 million in 1979. Total repurchases in 1980 amounted to SDR 3,344.8 million, compared with SDR 4,215.3 million in 1979. Net purchases were thus SDR 407.9 million in 1980, against net repurchases of SDR 2,372.5 million in 1979.

Transfers of SDRs to and from the Fund's General Resources Account reached an all-time high in 1980, mainly because of the activity associated with quota payments. In December, the Fund's General Resources Account received an unprecedented SDR 5,046.8 million, of which SDR 4,977.2 million represented 138 members' payments of 25 per cent of their increase in quotas under the Seventh General Review. Following these transfers, the Fund's SDR holdings at the end of 1980 amounted to SDR 5,571.9 million.

Stand-by and extended arrangements

There were 22 stand-by arrangements in effect at the end of 1980 (these were in the nature of a line of credit, normally for one year, but might be for as long as three years). The total amount approved under these arrangements was SDR 3,691 million, and the undrawn balance was SDR 2,334.2 million. There were also 12 extended arrangements in effect on the same date, for a total of SDR 4,823.9 million which, as in the case of stand-by arrangements, were subject to phasing on the basis of performance criteria in individual country programmes. The extended facility made resources available for longer periods and in larger amounts than under the credit tranche policies to members experiencing balance-of-payments difficulties. The undrawn balance under these arrangements was SDR 3,939.4 million. Thus, the total amount approved under stand-by and extended arrangements was the equivalent of SDR 8,514.9 million, with an undrawn balance of SDR 6,273.6 million at the end of the year. This unprecedented total was attained through a record volume of SDR 7.2 billion of new loan commitments under stand-by and extended arrangements in 1980, compared with SDR 2.2 billion in 1979.

Publications

Publications issued by IMF in 1980 included the Annual Report, the Annual Report on Exchange Arrangements and Exchange Restrictions, World Economic Outlook, International Financial Statistics, Direction of Trade and Balance of Payments Statistics. Periodicals included the quarterlies Staff

Papers and Finance and Development (published jointly with the World Bank), the IMF Survey, published 23 times a year, and the monthly IMF Memorandum. Books published by the Fund included glossaries and manuals, surveys of African economies, two volumes of the history of the Fund, a series of pamphlets on legal and institutional aspects of the international monetary system, and a collection of central bank, monetary and banking laws.

Secretariat

As of 31 December 1980, the total full-time staff of IMF under permanent, fixed-term and temporary appointments was 1,530, drawn from 96 nationalities.

Chapter X

International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)

The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) estimated total traffic of the world's scheduled airlines at almost 130 billion tonnekilometres during 1980, an increase of some 2.7 per cent above 1979 traffic. The airlines carried some 734 million passengers at a load factor of 63 per cent, down from 1979's all-time high of 66 per cent. Air freight increased by some 3.9 per cent to some 29 billion tonne-kilometres, the second lowest rate during the last decade. Air mail traffic amounted to 3.7 billion tonne-kilometres, an increase of 8 per cent, the highest rate of increase in 10 years.

The ICAO Assembly, which meets triennially, held its thirty-third session at Montreal, Canada, from 16 September to 6 October, at which it adopted the organization's budget and work programme for 1981, 1982 and 1983. It was attended by representatives from 134 contracting States, one non-contracting State and 17 intergovernmental organizations.

During 1980, membership of ICAO rose to 146 with the admission of Monaco on 3 February. Viet Nam, whose status had been in the process of clarification in 1979, became a contracting State on 12 April 1980.

Air navigation

During 1980, the main efforts of ICAO in the air navigation field continued towards updating and implementing ICAO Specifications and Regional Plans. The Specifications consisted of International Standards and Recommended Practices contained in 17 technical Annexes to the Convention on International Civil Aviation (Chicago, 1944), and of Procedures for Air Navigation Services (PANS) contained in three PANS documents. The ICAO Regional Plans set forth air navigation facilities and services required for international air navigation in the nine ICAO regions.

The Specifications in five Annexes and one PANS document were amended in 1980. Amendments were also made to all nine Regional Plans.

Eleven air navigation meetings were held in 1980; they made recommendations for changes to ICAO Specifications and one Regional Plan. To promote uniform application of the Specifications, ICAO made available guidance material in the form of new and revised technical manuals and ICAO circulars.

The organization's regional offices assisted States in implementing Regional Plans. Their efforts were supplemented by the work of experts sent to advise States on installation of new facilities and services and operation of existing ones.

Special attention was given to: aircraft airworthiness; aircraft operations; aircraft noise; aircraft engine emissions; aircraft accident investigation and prevention; aerodrome physical characteristics; air traffic control; aeronautical communications; aeronautical meteorology; personnel licensing and training; aviation medicine;

Air transport

The organization's main efforts in the air transport field during 1980 were directed to its continuing programmes of economic studies, collection and publication of air transport statistics, promotion of greater facilitation in international air transport, studies of current developments in the regulation of international air transport and establishment of tariffs, and the convening of the Second Air Transport Conference and the twenty-third session of the ICAO Assembly.

The Second Air Transport Conference, held in Montreal from 12 to 28 February, was attended by participants from 102 countries and nine international organizations. It considered topics on the regulation of international air transport services, fares and rates. A total of 32 recommendations were developed by the Conference.

The Panel of Experts on the Regulation of Air Transport Services held its fourth meeting from 8 to 19 December and determined further guidelines for regulating capacity.

The Statistics Panel, at its eighth meeting, held from 24 November to 2 December, reviewed and advised on various statistical issues in preparation for a 1981 Statistics Division meeting.

Informal regional meetings were held during 1980 in the fields of statistics (Bangkok, Thailand, 27-31 October), economics of airports and route facilities (Curaçao, Netherlands Antilles, 23-27 June; Doha, Qatar, 14-18 December) and facilitation (Dakar, Senegal, 3-7 November).

A study of air passenger and freight transport for Asia and the Pacific was completed following consultations with the United Nations Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific. Other publications in 1980 included the regular series of digests of civil aviation statistics, the yearbook on world civil aviation statistics, manuals on ICAO's statistical programme and on airport and air navigation facility tariffs, a study of regional differences in fares, rates and costs for international air transport in 1978, and surveys of international air transport fares and rates in 1978 and 1979.

Enforcement of international air carrier tariffs and the availability, distribution and price of aviation fuel continued to be monitored with a view to providing guidance to contracting States in developing their civil aviation policies.

Secretariat services were provided by ICAO to three independent regional civil aviation bodies- the African Civil Aviation Commission, the European Civil Aviation Conference and the Latin American Civil Aviation Commission.

The organization also continued to administer a 1956 joint financing agreement on air navigation services in Greenland and the Faeroe Islands and another for services in Iceland.

Legal matters

A Panel of Experts on the Legal Status of the Aircraft Commander met at Montreal from 9 to 22 April 1980 to prepare a list of operational and legal problems related to the subject of its title requiring a solution, and to suggest specific solutions for further consideration by appropriate ICAO bodies. The Council, on 16 June, noted the Panel's report and submitted it to the ICAO Assembly's Legal and Technical Commissions, which were to decide, within their respective expertise, on the further course of action.

During the Assembly's September/October session, the Legal Commission decided and the Assembly agreed that the general work programme of the Legal Committee should include: the legal status of the aircraft commander; the liability of air traffic control agencies; aerial collisions; a study of the status of the instruments of the "Warsaw system"; and the problem of liability for damage caused by noise and sonic boom. The Assembly took action as well to provide for whatever revision of the Committee's work programme might be required during the 1980s.

The Committee on Unlawful Interference with International Civil Aviation and its Facilities, at four meetings during 1980, reached agreement on a revised text of specifications in Annex 17 (on security and safeguarding international civil aviation against acts of unlawful interference) which it presented to the Council as Amendment 4 to the Annex. Since the proposed text introduced a new element—the subject of lease, charter and interchange of aircraft in international operations—the Council requested the Secretary-General of ICAO to obtain the views and comments of contracting States and interested international organizations before proceeding with adoption of the amendment.

During 1980, the following conventions and protocols on international air law concluded under ICAO auspices were ratified or adhered to by the countries indicated:

Convention on International Civil Aviation (Chicago, 1944)

Monaco, Viet Nam

Convention on International Recognition of Rights in Aircraft (Geneva, 1948)

Technical assistance

During 1980, ICAO provided technical assistance to 122 States, 87 of which had resident missions of one or more experts. In addition to resident expertise, assistance was provided in the form of equipment, fellowships and scholarships and through short missions by experts.

Seventeen new large-scale projects, each costing more than $500,000, for which ICAO was to be the executing agency, were approved by the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Six large-scale projects were financed under trust funds.

The organization employed 647 experts from 45 countries during all or part of 1980; 408 on assignments under UNDP, 255 on trust fund projects and three under the associate experts programme. There were also 17 United Nations volunteers. At the end of 1980, there were 401 experts in the field, compared with 347 at the end of 1979. A total of 1,354 fellowships were awarded in 1980, compared with 1,055 for 1979.

Chapter XI

Universal Postal Union (UPU)

The Universal Postal Union (UPU), established at Berne, Switzerland, in 1874 for the reciprocal exchange of postal services between nations, is one of the oldest international intergovernmental organizations. Its aim is to promote the organization and improvement of postal services and to further the development of international collaboration in this sphere. It also participates in various forms of postal technical assistance requested by its member States.

In 1980, the number of member States increased from 158 to 160, following the admission of Dominica (31 January) and Saint Lucia (10 July).

Activities of UPU organs

Universal Postal Congress

The Universal Postal Congress, composed of all member States, is the supreme legislative authority of UPU. Normally, it meets every five years. The most recent Congress (the eighteenth since the Union's establishment) took place at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 12 September to 25 October 1979; the next was due to be held at Hamburg, Federal Republic of Germany, in 1984. The work of the Congress consists mainly of examining and revising the Acts of the Union on the basis of proposals submitted by member States, the Executive Council or the Consultative Council for Postal Studies, and of making administrative arrangements for UPU activities. The Acts in force since 1 January 1976 were those of the 1974 Lausanne (Switzerland) Congress. The Acts of the 1979 Rio de Janeiro Congress were to enter into force on 1 July 1981.

Executive Council

The 40-member Executive Council of UPU is responsible for carrying out the work of the Union during the five-year intervals between meetings of the Congress. During its 1980 annual session, held at Berne from 5 to 16 May, the Council considered administrative matters and examined several studies concerning international mail that had been referred to it by the Rio de Janeiro Congress.

Among other questions reviewed by the Council were technical assistance for developing countries, international postal co-operation, relations with the United Nations, other international organizations and restricted postal unions, finances, international high-speed mail (Datapost, Express Mail, Postadex), customs treatment of postal items, transit charges and terminal dues, basic airmail conveyance rates, maximizing the air conveyance of mail, revising rates and supplementary charges for parcel post, and development of monetary-articles services in the postal field.

Consultative Council for Postal Studies

The 35-member Consultative Council for Postal Studies is responsible for studying and compiling data and advising on technical, operational, economic and technical co-operation problems of the postal administrations of UPU member States, including matters of particular interest to new and developing countries.

During its annual session held at Berne from 21 to 30 October 1980, the Council examined, among other things, the future of postal services in the light of developments in computerized telecommunications, improvement of postal operations, mechanization, buildings and motor transport, financial services and accounting, personnel, postal administration, international post and technical co-operation.

International Bureau

The International Bureau of UPU, under the general supervision of the Government of the Swiss Confederation, constitutes the secretariat of UPU and serves the postal administrations of UPU member States as an organ for liaison, information and consultation.

The Bureau is responsible for collecting, coordinating, publishing and distributing information relating to the international postal service. It also conducts inquiries requested by postal administrations and acts as a clearing-house for settling certain accounts between them.

As at 31 December 1980, the total number of permanent and temporary staff members employed at the Bureau was 130, of whom 52 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 40 countries) and 78 were in the General Service category. Also, 12 officials were employed in the Arabic, English, Spanish and Russian translation services.

Technical co-operation

Technical co-operation was provided by UPU in 1980 through the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the UPU Special Fund and bilateral assistance programmes. Multi-lateral aid provided by UNDP amounted to some $3.2 million.

The Union continued to provide expert assistance to developing countries, financed partly from its regular budget but for the most part by the postal administrations of contributing member States. Missions were carried out in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Middle East to assist postal administrations in improving postal organization, services and training and to make forecast studies. The consultants were also associated with the formulation of UNDP projects and the organization of seminars, study courses and vocational training courses. Operational teams for different sectors were formed, composed of specialists chosen by recipient States from their national services, directed by a UPU expert.

The Union continued to hold training courses for postal instructors from developing countries, in the United Kingdom (22 July-4 December) and at regional training centres. Inter-country instructor-training courses were organized in five developing countries: Cape Verde, India, Ivory Coast, Kenya, Philippines.

Carried out under UNDP were 50 national and regional projects relating to postal services. Seventy-one expert missions were undertaken and 340 scholarships awarded, of which 276 were for study courses. Several projects covered all the principal branches of the postal service, including national and regional vocational training centres.

The UPU Special Fund, maintained by voluntary contributions in cash and kind from member States, continued to focus its assistance on training and the provision of teaching materials. Contributions in kind consisted mainly of the award of scholarships and the organization of training courses. The Fund also assisted a project for the drought-stricken Sahelian region of Africa. The budget for the 1980 programme was $597,250.

In addition to supporting the Special Fund, member States continued to provide direct bilateral assistance.

The Union continued to support mutual assistance programmes between developing countries, particular emphasis being placed on the formation of operational teams and regional training. It also maintained its programme of technical assistance subject to payment, under which member States could finance assistance themselves by funds on deposit.

Budget

The expenditures of UPU are borne in common by all member countries, which, for the purpose of assessment, are divided into classes. The following table shows how the assessments for 1980 were divided among the various classes:

CLASS OF CONTRIBUTION	ASSESSMENTS
	Swiss francs	US dollar equivalents <sup>a</sup>

The Government of the Swiss Confederation continued to advance the necessary funds and supervise the keeping of financial accounts.

Chapter XII

International Telecommunication Union (ITU)

As at 31 December 1980, 154 countries were members of the International Telecommunication Union (ITU), reflecting a membership unchanged since 1977.

Administrative Council

The Administrative Council of ITU held its thirty-fifth session from 12 to 30 May 1980 at ITU headquarters, Geneva. It reviewed administrative matters, approved a schedule of conferences, and drew up the agenda for a regional administrative conference on frequency modulation sound broadcasting in the 87.5-108 megahertz band in region 1 (Africa, Europe, Mongolia and the USSR).

Administrative radio conferences

The first session of the Regional Administrative Medium-Frequency Broadcasting Conference (for region 2-the Americas and Greenland) was held at Buenos Aires, Argentina, from 10 to 28 March 1980. The Conference formulated technical and operational criteria and planning methods for a frequency assignment plan for medium-frequency (MF) broadcasting in the region.

International consultative committees

Study groups of the two ITU international consultative committees- the International Radio Consultative Committee (CCIR) and the International Telegraph and Telephone Consultative Committee (CCITT) -held numerous meetings during the year.

At its meetings, CCIR was engaged in: preparing technical information for future world and regional administrative radio conferences; studying spectrum utilization, especially frequency-sharing between different services, and efficient use of the geostationary satellite orbit; drawing up standards for satellite broadcasting, digital microwave radio relay, digital television transmission, and new television broadcasting-data and still-image services; and radiowave propagation studies.

At its seventh plenary assembly, held at ITU headquarters from 10 to 21 November, CCITT approved technical recommendations for: the new Teletex, which provided, additionally and in parallel to the existing telex service, communication between terminals used for preparing, editing and printing correspondence; and the Videotex public interactive information retrieval service, which was based on public networks and used standard television receivers suitably modified or supplemented as terminal equipment, although the use of other equipment was not excluded.

Plan committees

Four regional plan committees of ITU, responsible for preparing plans for circuit and routing requirements for international telecommunications and for estimating growth of international traffic, continued to play an active part in the work of the World Plan Committee, which was concerned with interregional relations.

The World Plan Committee met in Paris from 9 to 18 April 1980 and organized two special study days: on the impact of digital facilities on the planning of telecommunication networks; and on new developments in telecommunications and their impact on global telecommunication network planning. The Co-ordination Committee for the Latin America Plan met at Santiago, Chile, from 1 to 3 September.

International Frequency Registration Board

The International Frequency Registration Board continued to register frequencies assigned by countries to their radio stations in the Master International Frequency Register, and effected a technical examination of 56,236 such frequencies during 1980.

The Board also worked on a comparative report concerning 9 kilohertz (kHz) and 10 kHz channel-spacing for MF broadcasting in region 2.

Technical co-operation

In 1980, under various ITU programmes of technical co-operation for developing countries, 630 expert missions were carried out, 650 fellows were trained abroad and equipment valued at $8,903,467 was delivered, mainly to telecommunication training centres. The total cost of this assistance was $33,352,764, an increase of 28 per cent over 1979. Countries and territories aided under joint ITU/United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) projects were:

Africa: Algeria, Angola, Burundi, Cape Verde, Chad, Congo, Djibouti, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Malawi, Mauritania, Mauritius, Morocco, Mozambique, Namibia, Niger, Nigeria, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan, Swaziland, Tunisia, Uganda, United Republic of Cameroon, Upper Volta, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

The Americas: Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Cuba, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay.

Asia and the Pacific: Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Burma, China, India, Indonesia, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, Nepal, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, 'Republic of Korea, Samoa, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Tonga.

Europe and the Middle East: Albania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Greece, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Malta, Oman, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, Yemen.

The three main objectives of ITU technical co-operation activity continued to be: promoting development of regional telecommunication networks in Africa, the Americas, Asia and the Pacific, and the Middle East; strengthening telecommunication technical and administrative services in developing countries; and vocational training.

The Union continued its efforts to promote development of telecommunication networks and their integration into the world-wide telecommunication system, in accordance with objectives established by the World Plan Committee and the regional plan committees.

Considerable progress was made in the implementation of the Pan-African Telecommunications Network comprising high-grade large-capacity terrestrial, submarine and space systems. Two sections of the integrated system were due to become operational early in 1981: one connecting Dakar (Senegal) to Cotonou (Benin), via Mali and the Upper Volta; and the other connecting the city of Djibouti to Lusaka (Zambia), via Ethiopia, Kenya and the United Republic of Tanzania. A section linking Guinea, Sierra Leone, Liberia, the Ivory Coast, Ghana and Togo was also largely completed, and field surveys were carried out and tender specifications prepared for other routes: Ziguinchor (Senegal) to Bissau (Guinea-Bissau); Bissau to Boké (Guinea); Makabana (Congo) to Bakoumba (Gabon); and Brazzaville (Congo) to Pointe Noire (Congo), as part of a projected route to Cabinda (Angola). Several regional and sub-regional meetings were also held on co-ordination, operation, maintenance, tariffs and training.

The Union continued to collaborate with the Central American Telecommunication Commission towards completion of the third phase of a regional network. Eleven consultants assisted in: planning five new international electronic switching centres; training; organizing and administering telecommunications; and planning networks and land mobile systems.

The Inter-American Telecommunication Conference continued to receive co-operation in its programme for development and integration of telecommunication systems.

In Asia, telephone and allied services grew significantly, reflecting new awareness of the importance of telecommunication infrastructure. The Asian Telecommunication Network also required urgent updating of traffic forecasts and establishment of a data base for planning activities.

Improvements and expansion of telecommunications for the island countries of the Pacific included: assistance for gateway telephone exchanges in Tonga and Samoa, an electronic telex exchange for Fiji and a satellite earth station in Samoa—all funded by the European Economic Community; installation and testing of UNDP-funded equipment in Tuvalu for a high-frequency (HF) radio link to Fiji; preparation of plans for HF links between Kiribati and Australia, and Kiribati and Nauru; and aid to Fiji, Kiribati, Papua New Guinea, Samoa and Tuvalu for development of a regional network.

In the Middle East and Mediterranean region, telecommunication network development progressed very well, especially in digital switching systems and new earth stations and transmission routes. New technical specifications for teleprinters with both Latin and Arabic characters were also established for the regional telex network. The projects in the 1978 Middle East and Mediterranean telecommunication network master plan continued to be co-ordinated and implemented, and experts prepared detailed technical specifications for the subregional network in Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Ethiopia, Saudi Arabia, Somalia and Yemen. Other regional studies undertaken by ITU experts included: a pre-feasibility study on submarine cables, from the Middle East to Asia; installation of measuring equipment in Bahrain, Iraq, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates; improvement of the regional sound broadcasting and television network; and establishment of a regional plan for telex services. Two further microwave links in the 1978 master plan—between Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic, and between the latter and Iraq—were put into operation.

The Union continued to advise developing countries on administrative and technical telecommunications measures; 272 expert missions were devoted to assistance of this type.

During the year, nearly two thirds of the total ITU field expenditure was spent on training telecommunications personnel in developing countries.

Chapter XIII

World Meteorological Organization (WMO)

During 1980, three States became members of the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) - Dominica (22 March), Fiji (17 April) and Bahrain (21 May)-raising membership to 147 States and five territories as at 31 December 1980. Southern Rhodesia ceased to be a member territory on attainment of independence as Zimbabwe in April.

The World Climate Programme, established by the Eighth World Meteorological Congress (1979) as one of WMO's major programmes, came into being on 1 January 1980.

The Executive Committee of WMO held its thirty-second session in Geneva, Switzerland, in May. A Panel of Experts set up by the Committee began a review of WMO's current scientific and technical structure.

The twenty-fifth International Meteorological Organization Prize was awarded to Dr. R. M. White (United States) in recognition of outstanding contributions to the development of the science of meteorology and of his services to international collaboration in meteorology.

World Weather Watch

The basic programme of WMO, the World Weather Watch, continued in 1980 as an integrated global system designed to make available to member States convenient, observational data and processed information required for operational and research purposes. Its essential elements were the Global Observing System (GOS), whereby observational data were obtained, the Global Data-processing System (GDPS), providing for the processing, storage and retrieval of observational data and making available processed information, and the Global Telecommunication System (GTS), offering telecommunication facilities and arrangements for rapid and reliable collection, exchange and distribution of such data and information.

The Global Observing System consisted of two subsystems: a surface-based subsystem providing conventional basic data from regional basic synoptic networks, other observational networks of stations on land and at sea, and aircraft meteorological observations required for operation and research; and a space-based subsystem, within which meteorological satellites in both near-polar orbiting and geostationary systems took direct observations and collected and disseminated data. These satellite systems made a major contribution to operations and research in meteorology, hydrology and other related environmental activities by providing to member States quantitative data and qualitative information such as: vertical profiles of temperature and humidity; temperatures of sea, land and cloud top surfaces; wind field derived from cloud displacements; cloud amounts, type and height of cloud tops; and snow and ice cover, as well as radiance balance data.

In the operation of GDPS, a number of World Weather Watch processing centres installed new-generation electronic computers, thus improving their capability to produce analysis and forecast products to be exchanged on GTS. Progress was achieved in GTS operation on a global, regional and national level. High-speed data transmission was introduced on one segment of the main trunk circuit, some branches of which were upgraded. A number of high-frequency point-to-point circuits were replaced by satellite circuits, thus making GTS more reliable and weaknesses in elements of the global system were identified and remedial action taken.

An effort to strengthen and intensify the Tropical Cyclone Programme began in 1980 with increased attention being given to general and regional components. The need for greater efforts to assist affected member States was again demonstrated in 1980 when severe tropical cyclones occurred in a number of areas. Planning for the Typhoon Operational Experiment, aimed at improving area forecasting and warning capabilities, under the programme of the Typhoon Committee of WMO and the United Nations Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific was pursued, particular attention being given to arrangements for the 1981 pre-experiment phase.

Demand for marine meteorological information increased. Shipmasters, replying to a questionnaire on marine meteorological services, commented on their adequacy, and suggested improvements. A major step was the adoption by WMO of a Manual on Marine Meteorological Services, a synthesis of international marine meteorological practices and procedures.

Efforts continued towards achieving increased participation by WMO members in the further implementation of all parts of the Integrated Global Ocean Station System. A technical conference enabled aeronautical user groups to have a direct dialogue with meteorologists and research scientists on different subjects in the field of the application of aeronautical meteorology to operating efficiency and safety of air operations.

Research and development

The research and development programme included weather prediction research, tropical meteorology, weather modification, environmental prediction research and climate change. Several specific activities were: the development of a long-term plan for projects of the WMO programme on research in tropical meteorology; the convening of the Third WMO Scientific Conference on Weather Modification (Clermont-Ferrand, France, in July); progress in carrying out the Global Ozone Research and Monitoring Project, with the publication of an up-to-date handbook on ozone measurements with Dobson Spectrophotometers and the convening of technical meetings; review of advances in boundary-layer meteorology; and recommendations on urban air pollution, proposing further research in meteorological conditions leading to high levels of air pollution.

A meeting to assess the increasing carbon dioxide concentration and its possible impact on climate was called jointly by WMO, the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and the International Council of Scientific Unions (ICSU) (Villach, Austria, in November), and its report was widely distributed.

During 1980, the Commission for Instruments and Methods of Observations continued its work on standardizing and improving atmospheric measurements. The Fifth International Pyrheliometer Comparisons were held at Davos, Switzerland; the results provided the basis for all radiation measurement calibration.

Meteorological applications and environment

The meteorological applications and environment programme included activities aimed at applying meteorology to various human activities and problem areas such as agriculture, aviation, atmospheric and marine pollution, production and use of energy, industry, and urban and regional land-use planning.

Agrometeorological activities in aid of food production continued to be concentrated on assisting developing countries to improve their capabilities in the application of meteorology to agriculture; expert missions were sent to a number of developing countries, and training seminars and courses in agrometeorology were held. Technical notes on meteorological aspects of the use of wind and solar radiation as energy sources as well as world maps related to the distribution of solar energy potential were prepared for the 1981 United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy.

The preparation of the maps (of mean temperature and amount of precipitation) of the first volume of the Climatic Atlas for Asia was completed, with publication scheduled for 1981. Work was begun on the preparation of maps of mean sunshine-duration for the second volume of the Climatic Atlas for Europe.

Environmental pollution issues again put much emphasis on the further implementation of WMO's global background pollution monitoring network which currently comprised approximately 115 stations in about 75 countries. Several countries in areas not well covered joined the network. To contribute to the preparation of one-decade-after-Stockholm UNEP reports-examining progress since the 1972 United Nations Conference on the Human Environment<sup>1</sup>—first evaluations of precipitation density, turbidity and carbon dioxide data obtained in background air-pollution monitoring were made. Further progress was achieved in an integrated approach to environmental monitoring which was to cover all environmental compartments and major biomes. Other activities concentrated on problems of the long-range transmission of atmospheric pollutants on the regional scale and on the interchange of pollutants between the air and oceans.

World Climate Programme

Action was taken to accelerate WMO activities in the furthering of climate studies, with the establishment of a World Climate Programme (WCP) office. The four interrelated elements within WCP were: the World Climate Research Programme (WCRP), jointly sponsored with ICSU; the World Climate Applications Programme, in collaboration with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and other international organizations; the World Climate Impact Studies Programme, with UNEP as lead agency; and the World Climate Data Programme which dealt with establishment of data services, including a data referral system, for other elements of the overall WCP.

Within WCRP- which continued and expanded upon the climate research activities started as part of the Global Atmospheric Research Programme (GARP) - the Joint Scientific Committee was responsible for planning and co-ordinating as well as completing studies initiated within the framework of the former WMO/ICSU agreement on GARP.

Among other meetings held to advance WCP was a large-scale Technical Conference on Climate for Asia and the Western Pacific, in December.

Hydrology and water resources development

The hydrology and water resources programme of WMO aimed at co-ordinating establishment of hydrological networks and services, including data collection and processing, hydrological forecasting and warnings, and the supply of meteorological and hydrological data for design purposes. Its three components were the operational hydrology programme, hydrology in environmental management and development, and co-operation with water-related programmes of other international organizations. Emphasis was on the operational programme, a subprogramme of which sought to provide a means of technology transfer, improve hydrological data and provide a framework of integrated techniques and procedures for data collection and processing.

A large part of WMO's activities in the field of hydrology and water resources were carried out through the expert Commission for Hydrology, which held its sixth session at Madrid, Spain, in April. The Commission elaborated a three-year plan for implementing the operational programme.

Technical co-operation

Assistance to developing countries was provided through the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the Voluntary Co-operation Programme, from funds in trust and from the regular budget of WMO.

Through UNDP, assistance was provided to 89 countries in 1980 at a value of approximately $9.8 million. Thirty-one large-scale projects were under way, 15 of which were completed in 1980. Assistance was given in the development of government meteorological and hydrological services, and in training personnel at all levels: provision of experts, fellowships for training abroad and support for training seminars. Fields of aid also included such specialized subjects as the interpretation and utilization of satellite data. Two sectoral advisers (one in meteorology and one in hydrology), assigned by UNDP to WMO, visited 17 countries in 1980, at the request of the UNDP resident representatives of the countries concerned, to advise on the requirements for and application of meteorological information of all types in various sectors of national economies.

Under the Voluntary Co-operation Programme, support at a total value of $4.8 million was given mainly to the GOS element of the World Weather Watch. Long-term fellowships for the training of meteorological personnel were also awarded.

The regular budget of WMO financed fellowships and assistance to participants in special training courses and technical conferences.

Six trust fund projects were under way in 1980, three of which were funded by the countries receiving the assistance and three by other countries.

In 1980, 461 fellows received meteorological or hydrological training. The number of students who started training in 1980 under UNDP fellowships was 136, under the voluntary co-operation programme 60, under the regular budget 21, and under trust funds 4.

Among the training seminars and courses organized during the year were an international course for meteorological instructors (Turin, Italy), a regional training workshop on the maintenance and repair of conventional meteorological instruments in Africa (Cairo, Egypt) and a regional training seminar for national instructors (Mexico City, Mexico).

Secretariat

As of 31 December 1980, the total number of full-time staff employed by WMO (excluding 73 Professionals on technical assistance projects) stood at 287. Of these, 120 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 41 nationalities) and 167 in the General Service and related categories.

Budget

The year 1980 was the first year of the eighth financial period (1980-1983), for which the 1979 World Meteorological Congress had established a maximum expenditure of $74,400,000, while also authorizing additional expenditures, not to exceed $1 million, to provide for particular circumstances such as losses resulting from changes in currency exchange rates or to meet urgent unforeseen programme activities.

The regular budget for 1980 amounted to $17,495,000. The 1980 budget for technical co-operation activities, financed from extrabudgetary sources, amounted to an additional $2,696,400.

At its May 1980 session, the Executive Committee approved a regular budget of $18,663,800 for 1981, as follows:

Chapter XIV

Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO)

Membership of the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO) continued to grow during 1980, reaching 118 by the end of the year, and one associate member. New members were the United Arab Emirates (4 March), Benin (19 March), Saint Lucia (10 April), Guyana (13 May) and Democratic Yemen (2 June).

Activities in 1980

Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea

On 25 May, the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea, 1974, (SOLAS Convention) entered into force. This Convention, generally considered the most important of all international instruments dealing with maritime safety, by the end of the year had been accepted by 48 countries whose combined merchant fleets represented about 89.79 per cent of the world's gross tonnage.

Superseding a version adopted in 1960, the Convention dealt with matters such as construction and equipment of ships, fire prevention, life-saving appliances, radio, navigation safety, and the carriage of grain and dangerous goods. One of its most important features was the incorporation of a tacit acceptance procedure designed to speed up the entry into force of amendments.

On 31 October 1980, Colombia and Yugoslavia accepted the Protocol to the SOLAS Convention, adopted in 1978 at the International Conference on Tanker Safety and Pollution Prevention. Entry into force requirements having been fulfilled, the Protocol was to become international law on 1 May 1981, introducing new requirements for the installation of inert gas systems on oil tankers. While the SOLAS Convention requirements applied only to new tankers of 100,000 deadweight tons and above, the Protocol was to make inert gas systems compulsory on new tankers of 20,000 deadweight tons and above and on existing tankers of the same size within two years of the Protocol's entry into force. The Protocol also provided for strengthened requirements concerning steering gear on tankers and the carriage of radar and automatic radar plotting aids. Other changes included stricter requirements for survey and certification of ships, among them government institution of unscheduled or mandatory annual surveys of ships. By the end of the year, the majority of IMCO members had advised that they would opt for the second alternative.

Convention on Tonnage Measurement

On 18 July, Japan accepted the International Convention on Tonnage Measurement of Ships and, as a result, the Convention was to enter into force on 18 July 1982. Adopted by IMCO in 1969, the Convention introduced the world's first universal tonnage measurement system. Although current systems were based on a method devised in the last century, differences had arisen in application, creating anomalies such as sister ships being allocated varying tonnages because they operated under different flags.

A significant factor in the commercial operation of international shipping, tonnage is used for many purposes, including assessment of port and harbour dues, pilotage fees, canal tolls, insurance premiums, manning levels, maritime statistics and application of international conventions.

Technical assistance

Technical assistance to developing countries continued to grow, with much of the assistance being concerned with maritime training, the theme of World Maritime Day, observed on 26 September.

In 1980, IMCO had 18 inter-country consultants in the field and at its London headquarters where, from 6 to 12 May, IMCO's advisers and consultants held their first meeting.

Maritime fraud

In November 1979, the IMCO Assembly had adopted a resolution calling upon the Council to consider ways of countering maritime fraud, which had grown considerably in recent years. At its session held from 2 to 6 June 1980, the Council established a working group which met in Paris from 24 to 26 November and agreed on a draft recommendation, to be further considered by the Council in June 1981; it would call upon Governments to co-operate with each other and with appropriate bodies, especially the International Chamber of Commerce's International Maritime Bureau, which was to commence operation in January 1981.

International Maritime Prize

Moldov Hareide (Norway) was named first winner of the International Maritime Prize by the Council at its session held from 20 to 24 October. The prize was to be awarded each year to the person or organization judged to have made the most significant contribution to IMCO's work and objectives.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1980, IMCO employed 232 full-time staff members (excluding those on technical assistance projects). Of these, 79 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 33 nationalities) and 153 were in the General Service and related categories. There were 45 Professional staff employed on technical assistance projects in the field.

Budget

In November 1979, the eleventh IMCO Assembly had voted a budget of $22,464,600 for the two-year period 1980-1981. In October 1980, the IMCO Council adopted a revised budget of $9,651,100 for 1980 and $14,785,400 for 1981.

Chapter XV

World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO)

During 1980, seven States (Argentina, China, Colombia, Gambia, Guinea, Peru, Philippines) became members of the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO), bringing membership to 95. The Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea joined the Paris Union, established by the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property, bringing its membership to 89 (Southern Rhodesia was a member of the Paris Union in 1979; as the independent State of Zimbabwe in 1980, it had not joined the Paris Union). Guinea joined the Berne Union, established by the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works, bringing its membership to 72. At the end of the year, total membership in WIPO and its various Unions, taken together, was 116.

In 1980, WIPO, with headquarters in Geneva, centralized the administration of 15 intergovernmental Unions, each founded on a multilateral treaty listed below under the two main fields of intellectual property, in the order of their adoption:

Industrial property: Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property; Madrid Agreement for the Repression of False or Deceptive Indications of Source on Goods; Madrid Agreement Concerning the International Registration of Marks; The Hague Agreement Concerning the International Deposit of Industrial Designs; Nice Agreement Concerning the International Classification of Goods and Services for the Purposes of the Registration of Marks; Lisbon Agreement for the Protection of Appellations of Origin and their International Registration; Locarno Agreement Establishing an International Classification for Industrial Designs; Patent Co-operation Treaty; International Patent Classification Agreement; Trademark Registration Treaty; Vienna Agreement Establishing an International Classification of the Figurative Elements of Marks; Vienna Agreement for the Protection of Type Faces and Their International Deposit;* Budapest Treaty on the International Recognition of the Deposit of Microorganisms for the Purposes of Patent Procedure; Geneva Treaty on the International Recording of Scientific Discoveries.*

Copyright and neighbouring rights: Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works; Rome Convention for the Protection of Performers, Producers of Phonograms and Broadcasting Organizations; Geneva Convention for the Protection of Producers of Phonograms Against Unauthorized Duplication of Their Phonograms;

Brussels Convention Relating to the Distribution of Programme-Carrying Signals Transmitted by Satellite; Madrid Multilateral Convention for the Avoidance of Double Taxation of Copyright Royalties.*

The governing bodies of WIPO and the Unions administered by it held their eleventh series of meetings in Geneva from 22 to 26 September 1980. They noted with approval the activities and the accounts of the International Bureau of WIPO, and approved the reappointment of two Deputy Directors General and the appointment of a third, as proposed by the Director General.

Activities in 1980

Development co-operation activities

Two WIPO permanent programmes, supervised by intergovernmental permanent committees, provided the framework for development co-operation relating to industrial property and to copyright and neighbouring rights. The Permanent Committee for Development Co-operation Related to Industrial Property met in Geneva in April/May 1980.

In the field of industrial property, a Working Group on Technological Innovation, meeting in September in Geneva, examined means to promote national inventive and innovative capabilities, particularly in developing countries. It attached particular importance to the offering of prizes to inventors and, noting with satisfaction the publication by WIPO of a directory of associations of inventors, recommended additional publications. Prizes were presented by WIPO for inventors at the Geneva Salon international des inventions et des techniques nouvelles in December 1979 and at the Second Festival of Philippine Inventions week in April 1980.

Nearly 300 state-of-the-art search reports on technology disclosed in patent documents and related literature were furnished to developing countries, free of charge, under agreements with WIPO, by patent offices of developed countries. Collections of patent documents and related material were provided to developing countries requesting them, under arrangements made by WIPO.

Missions were undertaken to obtain information for the preparation of a survey of the administration of industrial property laws in Latin America and the Caribbean area. The remaining parts of a new model law for developing countries on inventions and know-how was published (Part I, on patents, had been published in 1979). The <sup>WIPO</sup> Licensing Guide for Developing Countries was used as a basic working document in regional training workshops held at Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, in June, and at Lima, Peru, in October, and in a national licensing seminar held in Singapore in December. An Industrial Property Glossary, previously published in a four-language version (Arabic-English-French-Spanish), was issued also in English-French-Russian and in English-French-Portuguese.

Development co-operation activities in 1980 relating to copyright and neighbouring rights included the convening, jointly with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), of a working group in January on model provisions for national legislation on the protection of folklore, of a committee of experts in Paris in April on model statutes for institutions administering authors' rights in developing countries, and of a group of experts on the problems posed for developing countries by access to works protected under copyright conventions.

The <sup>WIPO</sup> training programmes in industrial property and in copyright continued to grow in 1980, 153 fellowships being granted to nationals of 71 developing countries. Twenty-four countries (including eight developing countries) provided individual training and study opportunities, and courses for groups were organized at Bissau (Guinea-Bissau), The Hague (Netherlands), Madrid (Spain), Stockholm (Sweden), Strasbourg (France), Vienna (Austria), Zurich (Switzerland), and Berlin, at the invitation of the Federal Republic of Germany.

Regional and national meetings and seminars on industrial property and copyright were organized by <sup>WIPO</sup> in Algeria, Argentina, Barbados, China, Malaysia, Mexico, Peru, the Philippines, Singapore, Togo, the United Arab Emirates, the United Republic of Cameroon, and Zimbabwe.

During 1980, <sup>WIPO</sup> co-operated with the Governments of 36 developing countries and with three intergovernmental organizations in their development projects in the fields of industrial property and copyright, mainly through providing assistance in the preparation of legislation or the establishment or modernization of national or regional institutions, including patent documentation and information services.

Industrial property

The first session of the Diplomatic Conference on the Revision of the Paris Convention was held at Geneva from 4 February to 4 March 1980, and arrangements were made at an extraordinary session of the Paris Union Assembly in September for the holding of a second session at Nairobi, Kenya, in September/October 1981. The primary aim of the revision was to introduce special provisions for the benefit of developing countries.

The publications of <sup>WIPO</sup> in the field of industrial property included, in 1980, detailed tables of industrial property statistics, Industrial Property Laws and Treaties and the monthly review Industrial Property.

A group of consultants, meeting in September, gave advice on a questionnaire concerning the possibility of a treaty for the protection of computer software; studies continued of the legal treatment of inventions made in the course of international co-operation; a group of university professors meeting in April prepared a draft constitution of an international association for the advancement of teaching and research in intellectual property; and a working group held its first session in Geneva from 14 to 17 January and gave advice on the industrial property aspects of consumer protection. Work also continued on keeping up to date the International Patent Classification (IPC) and the Classification of Goods and Services for the Purposes of the Registration of Marks.

The organization continued to assist the International Patent Documentation Centre and to be represented on its Supervisory Board, which met in May and December at Vienna.

At the end of 1980, 30 States were party to the Patent Co-operation Treaty (PCT). During the year, record copies of 3,539 international applications were transmitted to <sup>WIPO</sup> by 19 receiving offices. Twenty-nine issues of the PCT Gazette were published in 1980 containing information on 2,897 published international applications.

The Trademark Registration Treaty and the Budapest Treaty on the International Recognition of the Deposit of Microorganisms for the Purposes of Patent Procedure entered into force on 7 and 19 August 1980, respectively.

Copyright and neighbouring rights

Groups of experts studied and made recommendations on the impact of cable television in the sphere of copyright (March), copyright problems arising from the use of computers for access to or the creation of works (December), and the preparation of a world-wide forum on combating piracy of phonograms and audiovisual recordings (March).

Publications in the field of copyright in 1980 included a multilingual (English, French, Spanish) glossary of terms of the law on copyright and neighbouring rights, the WIPO Guide to the Berne Convention in Portuguese, a Copyright Law Survey containing summaries of national copyright laws, and the monthly review Copyright.

Budget

The principal sources of the budget of WIPO are ordinary and special contributions from member States and income derived from international registration services.

Ordinary contributions are paid on the basis of a class-and-unit system by members of the Paris, Berne, Nice and Locarno Unions and by member States of WIPO that are not members of any of the Unions.<sup>a</sup>

States members of those four Unions are placed in seven classes (I to VII) for the purpose of determining the amounts of their ordinary contributions. States members of WIPO that are not members of any of the Unions are placed in three classes (A, B or C) for the same purpose. States in Class I or A pay the highest contributions of their group and those in Class VII or C the lowest. The class in which a State is placed is solely a matter for the State itself to decide. The rights of each State are the same, irrespective of the class chosen.

The contribution class for each member State of WIPO and of the Paris or Berne Unions, together with the amount of the ordinary contribution of each State, is given in ANNEX I to this chapter (the class indicated for the Paris Union also applies to the Nice, Locarno and (IPC) Unions). Members of one or more Unions do not pay separate contributions to WIPO; the Unions themselves contribute towards the costs of WIPO's International Bureau.

The amounts of ordinary contributions for 1981 are given in the table below.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1980, WIPO employed 252 full-time staff members. Of these, 84 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 34 member States) and 168 were in the General Service category. In addition, eight experts were employed by WIPO on technical assistance projects.

Chapter XVI

International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD)

The International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD), was established in 1977 to mobilize resources, to be made available on concessional terms, for the agricultural development of its developing member States. Its lending policies and criteria provide that the largest portion of the resources is to be made available on concessional terms, for the agricultural development of its developing member States. Its lending policies and criteria provide that the largest portion of its resources should be made available to the poorest developing countries, whose food problems required priority attention both in respect of volume and terms of lending.

The admission of an additional 10 States—Angola, China, Dominica, Equatorial Guinea, Grenada, the Ivory Coast, Maldives, Solomon Islands, Saint Lucia and Zimbabwe—during 1980 brought IFAD membership to 135. Of these, 20 were in Category I (developed countries), 12 in Category II (oil-exporting developing countries) and 103 in Category III (other developing countries).

In December 1980, IFAD completed three years of operations during which the bulk of its resources had been provided to countries with a per capita gross national product (GNP) of $300 or less (in 1976 prices). Most of the States categorized by the United Nations as "least developed" or "most seriously affected" by the world economic situation received at least one loan from the Fund.

During the three years, IFAD committed some $892 million for projects and programmes in 69 developing countries. These included 60 project loans (24 in Africa, 23 in Asia and 13 in Latin America) amounting to $870.2 million, as well as a number of technical assistance grants totalling about $22 million.

Most loans were made on highly concessional terms, with 50-year maturity periods, including a 10-year grace period and a 1 per cent service charge per annum. Generally countries with above $300 per capita income received loans on intermediate terms (at 4 per cent, 20 years maturity and a five-year grace period) or on ordinary terms (at 8 per cent, 15 to 18 years maturity, including a three-year grace period).

Since January 1979, IFAD denominated its loans in special drawing rights (SDRs), an international unit of account. Because the relationship between the SDR and the United States dollar fluctuated, the amounts of individual loans appeared to fluctuate as well. The dollar figures indicated in this chapter are based on the SDR/United States dollar conversion rate at 31 December 1980 (1 SDR = US $1.27).

Resources

Total resources pledged by members, valued at exchange rates prevailing on 31 December 1980, amounted to $1,050 million; of this, some $967 million had been paid. Contributions from Category I and Category II members were payable in convertible currencies and comprised 98 per cent of the Fund's total resources. Of the Category III contributions, which totalled almost $20 million, nearly $11 million was in convertible currency. Thus, convertible currency contributions comprised 99 per cent of the total resources.

The Fund's Governing Council at its fourth session, in December 1980, agreed on a replenishment level that would permit an operational level of $1,500 million for the period 1981-1983. This would mean new resources of $1,270 million which (taking into account $230 million already available for commitment) would enable IFAD to accelerate its annual level of operations from $400 million in 1980 to about $550 million in 1983. A commitment level of $450 million was proposed for 1981, representing a 12.5 per cent increase in operations compared to 1980. Loans were expected to account for $430 million, with the remaining $20 million to be committed for technical assistance grants.

Investments

In April 1978, the Executive Board had approved guidelines governing the investment of the Fund's liquid assets. The guidelines had as their major criterion the aspect of safety or security, and investments were restricted to obligations issued or fully guaranteed by Governments or by major banks of high financial standing. At the end of 1980, IFAD's liquid assets totalled $530 million. To provide protection for the Fund's resources against exchange rate fluctuations, the Fund was gradually diversifying the currency structure of its liquid assets along SDR lines. The average rate of return earned on liquid assets during 1980 was just over 11.8 per cent and investment income for the full year was a little more than $64 million.

Activities in 1980

During 1980, IFAD provided financial assistance totalling over $380 million for 27 projects in 27 countries, compared with 23 projects in 1979 and 10 in 1978. Loan operations fell into two main groups: projects initiated by IFAD (17 projects in 1980) and co-financed projects (10 in 1980) from the pipelines of other institutions. In IFAD-initiated projects, the Fund took the lead in project identification and preparation as well as in mobilizing additional resources from other financial agencies where necessary. Technical assistance grants of over $15 million were also approved during the year for project preparation, national and international agricultural research, and grant components within loans.

The following tables show the technical assistance grants approved during 1980 for project preparation and those for research. For technical assistance grants as components within loans, see the table on PROJECT LOANS on page 1340.

Total	7,321.5

Rural development projects continued to receive attention; 27 were approved during 1980-12 in Africa, 10 in Asia and five in Latin America. In eight projects-in Brazil, Cuba, Ghana, Guinea, India, Mexico, the United Republic of Cameroon, and Yemen-efforts to increase agricultural production were combined with specific measures to improve the living conditions of the rural poor.

While the main emphasis in the seven agricultural development projects in Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, the Niger, Pakistan, Sri Lanka, Tunisia and Zaire was on providing essential inputs and services for rapid agricultural growth, the need for institutional improvements was also considered.

Irrigation continued to be an important element in IFAD's lending. It was featured in 10 projects benefiting Bangladesh, Bhutan, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Guinea, India, Mauritania, the Sudan and Tunisia, in a number of which the main effort was directed towards rehabilitating or improving existing irrigation works.

Whereas in the past, agricultural credit tended to go mainly to large- and medium-scale farmers, IFAD continued efforts to change this pattern and ensure that the credit it provided would reach small farmers and be used effectively by them. Five loans were made for credit projects in Bangladesh, Dominica, Lesotho, Nepal and Peru, though a number of other projects also had a credit element.

Five special programming missions- to Haiti, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Papua New Guinea and Senegal-helped Governments during 1980 to identify specific investment priorities and projects suitable for IFAD financing to improve the food production, incomes and productivity of the rural poor.

Project loans

The table on p. 1340 gives a summary of the project loans approved and related technical assistance granted during 1980. Loans were all made on highly concessional terms except in the case of Cuba, Indonesia, Peru, Thailand and Tunisia (intermediate terms) and Brazil and Mexico (ordinary terms).

Administrative budget

The Governing Council at its third session, in January 1980, approved an administrative budget for 1980 of $12.8 million, including a general contingency amount $600,000. Actual expenses for the year amounted to $12.7 million.

Secretariat

As at the end of December 1980, the secretariat of IFAD totalled 141, of whom 60 were executive or technical staff (Professional category and above) and 81 were support staff (General Service category). The Professional staff consisted of nationals of 43 different countries.

Chapter XVII

Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization (ICITO) and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT)

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment, held at Havana, Cuba, between November 1947 and March 1948, drew up a charter for an International Trade Organization (ITO) and established an Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization (ICITO). Since the charter itself was never accepted, ITO was not established. However, while drawing up the charter, the Preparatory Committee's members negotiated on tariffs among themselves, and also drew up the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). The agreement—a multilateral treaty embodying reciprocal rights and obligations—entered into force on 1 January 1948. Since then, ICITO has provided the GATT secretariat.

The General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade is the only multilateral instrument that lays down agreed rules for international trade.

By the end of 1980, the number of Contracting Parties to GATT had risen to 85 from the original 23 of 1948; the Philippines became a Contracting Party during the year. Two other countries—Colombia and Tunisia—had acceded provisionally. The members of GATT conducted about 85 per cent of all international trade and 30 other countries applied the rules of GATT.

Multilateral trade negotiations (1973-1979)

By 1980 there had been seven "rounds" of multilateral trade negotiations in GATT's 32-year history. The latest in the series, the Tokyo Round, although held in Geneva, was so called because it was launched at a ministerial meeting in the Japanese capital in September 1973. The 1979 negotiations were concluded with agreements covering: an improved legal framework for the conduct of world trade (including recognition of tariff and non-tariff treatment in favour of and among developing countries as a permanent legal feature of the world trading system), tariffs non-tariff measures (subsidies and countervailing duties, technical barriers to trade, government procurement, customs valuation, import licensing procedures and a revision of the 1967 anti-dumping code), bovine meat, dairy products, tropical products, and free trade in civil aircraft. The agreements contained provisions for special and more favourable treatment for developing countries.<sup>1</sup>

The agreements providing an improved framework for the conduct of world trade took effect in November 1979, when GATT's member States adopted them as an integral part of the rules of the General Agreement.

On 1 January 1980, most industrialized participants in the Tokyo Round made the first of a series of eight annual tariff cuts agreed upon in the negotiations which, when completed, were to reduce average duties imposed on imports of manufactured goods by about one third, a cut comparable to that achieved in the 1964-1967 Kennedy Round. In general, the largest reductions were being made in the highest duties, and significant cuts were also being made in duties on agricultural products. A number of countries were following faster schedules for reducing tariffs on products imported from developing countries. Many developing countries were themselves making tariff concessions.

The non-tariff agreements covering subsidies and countervailing duties, technical barriers to trade, import licensing procedures, and a revised anti-dumping code took effect on 1 January 1980; committees were established to supervise their implementation. Agreements on customs valuation and government procurement were to take effect on 1 January 1981.

The agreements covering bovine meat and dairy products took effect on 1 January 1980, and councils were set up to oversee their implementation.

Most industrialized participants in the Tokyo

Round had implemented their concessions and contributions on exports of tropical products from developing countries in 1976 and 1977. Further concessions offered during the later stages of the negotiations, including those offered by the United States, were taking effect from 1980 onwards.

Several major industrialized participants in the Tokyo Round reached an Agreement on Trade in Civil Aircraft under which signatory Governments eliminated, by 1 January 1980, all customs duties and any similar charges of any kind on civil aircraft, aircraft parts, and repairs on civil aircraft. These zero duties were legally "bound" under GATT and thus, in accordance with the most-favoured-nation rule, applied to all GATT member countries. A Committee was established in 1980 to supervise implementation of this agreement.

Other GATT activities

Council of Representatives

The GATT Council of Representatives, which meets about nine times a year between sessions of the Contracting Parties, in 1980 examined and acted on some 60 different international trade policy issues, including reports from panels of independent experts set up to examine and make recommendations on trade disputes between GATT members. Ten of the 13 international trade disputes examined by panels and brought before the Council in 1980 concerned agricultural products.

Consultative Group of Eighteen

In November, GATT members agreed that the Consultative Group of Eighteen-established to help Contracting Parties follow international trade developments more effectively, forestall or deal with sudden disturbances in world trade, and implement the international adjustment process-should in future be the forum for discussing problems facing international agricultural trade. Also, the Council accepted a recommendation by the Group that a working party be established to make specific proposals for the future work of GATT relating to structural adjustment and trade policy.

Committee on Trade and Development

The Committee on Trade and Development established two sub-committees in 1980, one to examine any new protective measures taken by developed countries against imports from developing countries, and the other to consider trade problems of the least developed countries.

Preferential arrangements among developing countries

The possibilities for expansion of trade among developing countries through a further round of negotiations continued to be examined in 1980 by the developing countries party to the 1973 Protocol relating to Trade Negotiations among Developing Countries.

Balance-of-payments restrictions

Consultations with countries whose balance-of-payments difficulties had led them to restrict imports were held in 1980 with Bangladesh, Egypt, Ghana, Greece, India, Indonesia, Israel, Pakistan, Peru, the Philippines, Portugal, the Republic of Korea, Sri Lanka and Tunisia.

Multifibre Arrangement

The year 1980 was the third year of the renewed quadrennial Arrangement Regarding International Trade in Textiles (widely known as the Multifibre Arrangement), regulating most of world trade in textiles and clothing. Originally negotiated in 1973 under GATT auspices for four years, the Arrangement was extended in 1977 to the end of 1981. Towards the end of 1980, participating countries carried out a major review of its operation and also began consideration of the future of the Arrangement.

Technical assistance

In 1980, the GATT secretariat's Technical Co-operation Division responded to requests from developing countries for information on various Tokyo Round agreements concerning products of interest to them. The information was designed to help these countries assess the results of the Tokyo Round for their trade and to identify increased marketing opportunities resulting from the negotiations.

Training programme

By 1980 a total of 730 officials from 104 countries and two regional organizations had attended the GATT series of 50 commercial policy courses, which began in 1955. During 1980, the GATT secretariat also organized, in addition to the regular courses, two extra courses, proposed and financed by Finland, Norway and Sweden, aimed at helping least developed countries assess the benefits stemming from the Tokyo Round.

International Trade Centre

In 1964, GATT established the International Trade Centre to provide trade information and trade promotion advisory services for developing countries. Since 1968 the Centre has been jointly operated by GATT and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

The Centre's work for the developing countries was directed to helping them formulate and implement trade promotion programmes and activities, and to become progressively self-reliant in doing so.

Publications

Publications issued in 1980 included the annual reports on GATT Activities and International Trade.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1980, the GATT secretariat employed 255 staff members; of these 110 were in the Professional and higher categories, and 145 were in the General Service category. They were drawn from 37 nationalities.

Financial arrangements

resumed its status as an independent State, also resumed its separate membership in the United Nations: it changed its name to the Syrian Arab Republic on 14 September 1971. The United Arab Republic continued as a Member of the United Nations and reverted to the name of Egypt on 2 September 1971.

<sup>2</sup>By a letter of 20 January 1965, Indonesia informed the Secretary-General that it had decided to withdraw from the United Nations. By a telegram of 19 September 1966, it notified the Secretary-General of its decision to resume participation in the activities of the United Nations. On 28 September 1966, the General Assembly took note of that decision and the President invited the representatives of Indonesia to take their seats in the Assembly.

<sup>3</sup>On 16 September 1963, Sabah (North Borneo), Sarawak and Singapore joined with the Federation of Malaya (which became a United Nations Member on 17 September 1957) to form Malaysia. On 9 August 1965, Singapore became an independent State and on 21 September 1965 it became a Member of the United Nations.

<sup>4</sup>Tanganyika was admitted to the United Nations on 14 December 1961, and Zanzibar, on 16 December 1963. Following ratification, on 26 April 1964, of the Articles of Union between Tanganyika and Zanzibar, the two States became represented as a single Member: the United Republic of Tanganyika and Zanzibar: it changed its name to the United Republic of Tanzania on 1 November 1964.

Charter of the United Nations and Statute of the International Court of Justice

Charter of the United Nations

NOTE: The Charter of the United Nations was signed on 26 June 1945, in San Francisco, at the conclusion of the United Nations Conference on International Organization, and came into force on 24 October 1945. The Statute of the International Court of Justice is an integral part of the Charter.

Amendments to Articles 23, 27 and 61 of the Charter were adopted by the General Assembly on 17 December 1963 and came into force on 31 August 1965. A further amendment to Article 61 was adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1971, and came into force on 24 September 1973. An amendment to Article 109, adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1965, came into force on 12 June 1968.

The amendment to Article 23 enlarges the membership of the Security Council from 11 to 15. The amended Article 27 provides that decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven) and on all other matters by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven), including the concurring votes of the five permanent members of the Security Council.

The amendment to Article 61, which entered into force on 31 August 1965, enlarged the membership of the Economic and Social Council from 18 to 27. The subsequent amendment to that Article, which entered into force on 24 September 1973, further increased the membership of the Council from 27 to 54.

The amendment to Article 109, which relates to the first paragraph of that Article, provides that a General Conference of Member States for the purpose of reviewing the Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any nine members (formerly seven) of the Security Council. Paragraph 3 of Article 109, which deals with the consideration of a possible review conference during the tenth regular session of the General Assembly, has been retained in its original form in its reference to a "vote of any seven members of the Security Council," the paragraph having been acted upon in 1955 by the General Assembly, at its tenth regular session, and by the Security Council.

WE THE PEOPLES OF THE UNITED NATIONS DETERMINED to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our life-time has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

AND FOR THESE ENDS

to practice tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours, and to unite our strength to maintain international peace and security, and to ensure, by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods, that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest, and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

HAVE RESOLVED TO COMBINE OUR EFFORTS TO ACCOMPLISH THESE AIMS

Accordingly, our respective Governments, through representatives assembled in the city of San Francisco, who have exhibited their full powers found to be in good and due form, have agreed to the present Charter of the United Nations and do hereby establish an international organization to be known as the United Nations.

Chapter I PURPOSES AND PRINCIPLES

Article 1

The Purposes of the United Nations are:

1. To maintain international peace and security, and to that end: to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace;
2. To develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace;

3. All Members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered.

4. All Members shall refrain from their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the Purposes of the United Nations.

6. The Organization shall ensure that states which are not Members of the United Nations act in accordance with these Principles so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security.

7. Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the present Charter; but this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII.

Chapter II MEMBERSHIP

Article 3

Article 3

1. The Court shall consist of fifteen members, no two of whom may be nationals of the same state.

At least three months before the date of the election, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall address a written request to the members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration belonging to the states which are parties to the present Statute, and to the members of the national groups appointed under Article 4, paragraph 2, inviting them to undertake, within a given time, by national groups, the nomination of persons in a position to accept the duties of a member of the Court.
