Foreword

THE United Nations is engaged in a unique experiment. The task assigned to the Organization by the Charter, namely to construct a new order of peace and co-operation among all nations and peoples, is unparalleled in both scope and complexity. We need hardly recall that such an endeavour cannot be fulfilled in the space of one year. Instead it is a process of transformation, both in the structures of national and international society and in the attitude of men and women throughout the world.

The Yearbook of the United Nations is a record of the efforts made by the Organization over the course of one year to edge closer to the great ideals of the Charter. It is a useful point of reference for all students of international life. But the successes and difficulties it records must be seen in the light of our long-term endeavours for peace, justice, and social and economic progress.

The United Nations itself fully recognizes the magnitude and complexity of the tasks before it. We set our sights on a future of true international co-operation, but we also had to measure our progress in limited spans of time. As the Yearbook recounts, 1980 saw the beginning of two important decades proclaimed by the General Assembly: the Second Disarmament Decade and the Industrial Development Decade for Africa. Other long-term goals were set over the year.

This Yearbook shows that we have given ourselves demanding objectives and we face some of the world's most intractable problems. But the start of a new decade is a time for renewal and for optimism, based on a measured understanding of the possibilities of this Organization for peace and rational change.

EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS

To assist readers who wish to make a more detailed study of subjects discussed in Part One of this volume, documentary references are provided at the end of each chapter and subchapter. These references give the symbols and short titles of documents of the principal United Nations organs dealing with the subject concerned, records of voting, and texts of adopted resolutions and decisions. Also listed are the numbers of the meetings at which the subject was discussed, and for which summary or verbatim records are available. The following is a guide to the principal document symbols:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly, numbered in separate series by session. Thus, A/35/- refers to documents issued for consideration at the thirty-fifth session, beginning with A/35/1. Documents of the Assembly's special and emergency special sessions are identified as A/S- and A/ES-, followed by the session number: in 1980, A/S-II/- (eleventh special session), A/ES-6/- (sixth emergency special session) and A/ES-7/- (seventh emergency special session). A/C.- refers to documents of six of the Assembly's Main Committees, e.g. A/C.I/- is a document of the First Committee, A/C.6/-, a document of the Sixth Committee. The symbol for documents of the seventh Main Committee, the Special Political Committee, is A/SPC/-. A/AC.- documents are those of the Assembly's ad hoc bodies and A/CN.-, of its commissions; e.g. A/AC.105/- identifies documents of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, A/CN.4/-, of its International Law Commission. Assembly resolutions and decisions since the thirty-first (1976) session have been identified by two Arabic numerals: the first indicates the session of adoption; the second, the sequential number in the series. Resolutions are numbered consecutively from 1 at each session. Decisions of regular sessions are numbered consecutively, from 301 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 401 for all other decisions. Decisions of special and emergency special sessions are numbered consecutively, from 11 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 21 for all other decisions.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council, numbered in separate series by year. Thus, E/1980/- refers to documents issued for consideration by the Council at its 1980 sessions, beginning with E/1980/1. E/AC.-, E/C.- and E/CN.-, followed by permanent identifying numbers, refer to documents of the Council's subsidiary ad hoc bodies, committees and commissions. For example, E/C.1/-, E/C.2/- and E/C.3/- refer to documents of the Council's sessional committees, namely, the First (Economic), Second (Social) and Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committees, respectively; E/CN.5/- refers to documents of the Council's Commission for Social Development, E/CN.7/-, to documents of its Committee on Natural Resources. E/ICEF/- documents are those of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Symbols for the Council's resolutions and decisions, since 1978, consist of two Arabic numerals: the first indicates the year of adoption and the second, the sequential number in the series. There are two series: one for resolutions, beginning with 1 (resolution 1980/I); and one for decisions, beginning, since 1980, with 100 (decision 1980/1100).

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council. Its resolutions are identified by consecutive numbers followed by the year of adoption in parentheses, beginning with resolution 1 (1946).

T/- refers to documents of the Trusteeship Council. Its resolutions are numbered consecutively, with the session at which they were adopted indicated by Roman numerals, e.g. resolution 2171(XLVII) of the forty-seventh session.

ST/- refers to documents of the United Nations Secretariat.

DC/- refers to documents of the Disarmament Commission.

DP/- refers to documents of the United Nations Development Programme.

ID/- refers to documents of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization.

ITC/- refers to documents of the International Trade Centre.

TD/- refers to documents of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

UNEP/- refers to documents of the United Nations Environment Programme.

"L" in a symbol belonging to one of these series refers to documents of limited distribution, such as draft resolutions; "CONF," to documents of a conference; "INF," to those of general information. Summary records are designated as "SR.", verbatim records by "PV.", each followed by the meeting number.

U.N.P. designates United Nations sales publications, each of which carries a sales number.

PART ONE

The United Nations

Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization

I

The past year, which marked the thirty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations, has provided some reasons for celebration and many for anxiety. For example, the attainment of independence by Zimbabwe and the striking progress made by the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea are, in their different ways, sources of considerable satisfaction and encouragement. They show that with goodwill, hard work and understanding apparently insurmountable obstacles can be overcome through negotiation. On the other hand, we have witnessed at too many levels of international society a growing uncertainty and lack of direction. This is reflected in the deteriorating relationships of some of the more powerful nations, in the continuing deadlock on vital economic matters, in the persistence of certain regional conflicts to the detriment both of the peoples concerned and of the wider international community, in humanitarian disasters stemming from political and military conflict, and in an increasing incidence of politically motivated violence and terror.

In this confused climate the pursuit of many of the great objectives proclaimed in 1945 may seem to have lost momentum or to have been obscured, while some of the progress made in the last 30 years has been dissipated. A reliable system of international peace and security—the central theme of the Charter of the United Nations—has developed little further in practice than haphazard and last-minute resorts to the United Nations. Disarmament, for all the meetings and mechanisms, seems a more distant goal than ever, and the world still lives in the shadow of nuclear destruction. The new international economic order remains little more than an abstraction, while the economic prospects of the vast majority of countries and peoples continue to be affected by the general disorder and malaise. Fundamental questions of human rights have been put aside or deadlocked by political and economic expediency. The development and observance of international law and a universally accepted code of international behaviour have sustained a series of reverses. These are the main challenges which we must address with determination and vision in the United Nations.

There is a general tendency to take progress for granted but loudly to bemoan the lack of it. We must therefore look at the other side of the 35-year balance-sheet. The world, in spite of its burgeoning armaments, has so far escaped the scourge of another global war. The international community has come through the geopolitical revolution of decolonization with an unexpected minimum of violence and has embarked on a far more representative international political system. This system, despite the present insecurities, should in the long run have greater stability, justice and balance than the old system, which was polarized on the relations of a few great powers. If this proves to be true, the United Nations, as the Organization in which the new system is taking shape, will have an increasing importance and relevance to international relations.

In this connexion a very important development has been the emergence, within the United Nations system, of regional and other groups of nations representing common interests and common views on important world problems. I believe that the emergence of these groups has been of great value to the United Nations both in articulating important policies and points of view and in facilitating and streamlining its work. This year we mourned the death of President Tito, a great statesman and one of the founders of the non-aligned movement. This movement has pioneered the progression to a more broadly based international system for the future. I believe that this will prove to have been a major historic step in the development of international relations.

Although unable to put an end to some regional conflicts, the United Nations has time and again shown its vital utility as a means of keeping some of them under control and preventing them from leading to a confrontation between global nuclear powers. The present range of activity of the Organization, encompassing great economic and social aims, humanitarian programmes, human rights concerns and global problems of universal interest, is far wider and more comprehensive than anything envisaged at San Francisco.

His Holiness Pope John Paul II, whose visit to our Headquarters was a most inspiring event of the past year, expressed our common aspiration in the wish that “in view of its universal character, the United Nations will never cease to be the forum, the high tribunal from which all man's problems are appraised in truth and justice."

We are, then, in a period in which certain fundamental improvements are accompanied by much strife and frustration. Since the United Nations represents a teeming world in transition, it is not surprising that the improvements and heightened opportunities, which we more or less take for granted, are offset by much disorder and perplexity. In the United Nations our task should be to try increasingly to tilt the balance in the right direction.

II

In this year, which has again witnessed alarming and unexpected international developments, it seems relevant to look once more at the concept of international peace and security which is the primary concern of the United Nations. Is this concept, as outlined in the Charter, still a valid aim to strive for? And if so, how do we proceed, in practical terms, to make the United Nations machinery more effective and more respected?

It is rightly a matter of general concern that the decisions of the Security Council and the resolutions of the General Assembly often go unheeded, so that problems which should have been brought under control persist, proliferate and pose continual threats to international peace. This failure also has a debilitating effect on the United Nations itself. Continued frustration breeds extremism, and extremism in its turn tends to breed irresponsibility and violence. Thus a reasonable decision disregarded may soon lead to a far sharper decision which tends to harden positions on all sides. This is a vicious circle which affects a number of important international problems. It is also a process which has much to do with the erosion of the authority and reputation of the United Nations as a responsible international body. We need to tackle both ends of this cycle—enhancing the authority of, and respect for, the main organs, and taking into account the need for a sense of realism in achieving results.

The United Nations was intended to provide a forum where injustices could be righted and international conflicts resolved. It was also intended to be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations. While the Organization is often used effectively as a diplomatic centre for the resolution of problems, it is also frequently used as a parliamentary forum for actually waging a conflict in public. This process inevitably projects the Organization into controversial positions which have aroused considerable criticism in some quarters. There are complaints, for example, that such debates do not always take account of the realities of a situation and do not always allow for the relationship between voting strength and the possibility for practical implementation. Conversely, there have been counter-charges that the will of the majority in the United Nations has too often been flouted and that the reasonable demands of its resolutions have been ignored.

It seems to me that both the diplomatic and the parliamentary approaches are important parts of our evolving world Organization. To bring both into a proper working balance, where each will support the effectiveness of the other, will require a much broader development of a sense of world community and of a basis of shared interests and responsibilities. We cannot expect such a sense of community to emerge overnight, but it is an essential goal if the Organization is to develop as its founders intended. At the present stage of evolution, desirable long-term international policies are all too often the victim of short-term domestic politics.

What is the real nature of the problem of international peace and security? Is our world fundamentally safe from an unforeseen and disastrous general conflict? Personally, I do not believe that we are on the brink of another world war, but there is certainly a great deal to worry about in the present unpredictable state of international relations. We cannot safely assume that the world situation is fundamentally stable.

After the Second World War the system of international peace and security envisaged in the Charter was based on the proposition that the nations of the world should entrust their security and the responsibility for maintaining international peace primarily to the Security Council of the United Nations. To take such a fundamental step requires a confidence both in each other and in the Council which the Governments of the world have not generally been able to muster. This has meant that the Council has too often played a peripheral role in important conflict situations or has tended to be used as a last resort when the situation was already seriously out of hand. This does not mean that the Council has not played a significant role. On the contrary, time and again it has provided the means to defuse a crisis and to point the way towards a solution.

Is this even remotely satisfactory, when compared with the system outlined in the Charter, which was designed after the experience of the most destructive war in history? The answer is that it is probably all that current political conditions will allow. We should be clear, however, that each time, for political reasons, limits are put on the capacity of the United Nations to act, each time the Organization is divided or vacillates in the face of actions which are clearly in violation of the Charter, and each time its decisions on important matters are ignored or treated with disrespect, the capacity and authority of the United Nations to deal with a future crisis is diminished.

I hope that all Governments will give this problem the most serious attention. It can become a matter literally of survival if, as has happened before, an unforeseen concatenation of events brings us face to face unexpectedly with an encompassing threat to world peace. We must remember that such a threat lies very near the surface of the arrangements which at present govern international politics.

III

Many important developments have claimed the attention of the United Nations in the past year. The problem of the Middle East has as usual been a dominant concern of the Organization, and in view of its special nature I shall deal with it separately.

The new and unexpected crisis which arose late in 1979 in Afghanistan raised fundamental problems of Charter principles. It has affected the process of detente, which had seemed to promise a more positive relationship between the world's most powerful States. It created tension and anxiety throughout the world community.

The United Nations was seized of this problem, and the General Assembly pronounced itself on the principles involved and the action required to resolve the crisis. A number of suggestions to this and related ends have been made both within and outside the United Nations, and various Governments, both individually and in groups, have made efforts to point the way to the solution of this formidable problem. These have included, in particular, moves on behalf of the Governments of the region, the Islamic Conference, the current Chairman of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, and the Council of Europe. Evidently any such solution needs the co-operation and consent of all the parties concerned, and must ensure that the Afghan people will be able to determine their own destiny, free from foreign interference and intervention.

For my part, I have exerted my best efforts to assist in the search for a solution. I discussed the situation with the Prime Minister and Foreign Minister of India and with the President and Foreign Minister of Pakistan on the occasion of my trip to New Delhi to attend the Third General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization. During the following months I had the opportunity to continue these contacts and also to discuss the matter with the Foreign Minister of Afghanistan and the Secretary-General of the Organization of the Islamic Conference. In addition I had talks with members of the Security Council, in particular the representatives of the Soviet Union and the United States. In all these talks, I expressed my concern about the dangerous situation in the area and the need for an early negotiated settlement. However, I have not yet been able to discern from these contacts a basis for an agreed solution. Therefore the only way that appears open is to initiate a process of negotiation among all the parties concerned with a view to finding a political solution of the problem with full regard to the principles of the Charter and the decisions of the Organization. This should be done in a manner that permits the national interests involved to be reconciled by peaceful means. Another, and tragic, aspect of this problem is the plight of the large number of Afghan refugees. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other concerned agencies have endeavoured to meet the essential humanitarian needs.

A completely unexpected development which has deeply preoccupied the United Nations and shaken international confidence has been the crisis in relations between the United States and Iran and the taking of the American diplomatic personnel in Iran as hostages. This was a unique event since the long-standing international conventions governing diplomatic relations and diplomatic immunity had hitherto been more or less taken for granted. Indeed, as recently as 1961 these international instruments were brought up to date under United Nations auspices in the Vienna Convention. This episode, which, to my deep regret, is still continuing, underlines the absolute necessity of preserving codes of conduct in the essential relations between nations. If we lose this basic minimum we face a future of international chaos.

The Security Council and the International Court of Justice have pronounced themselves firmly and unanimously on the essential principles involved in the hostage question. I myself have been closely involved from the outset in efforts to free the hostages and to settle the very serious crisis in relations between Iran and the United States, as well as to find some means of recognizing the sufferings of the Iranian people and of dealing with their strongly held perception of their historic grievances. I have been to Teheran myself, as has a Commission of Inquiry which stands ready to resume its work whenever this may appear to be useful and opportune. I have remained in constant contact with the Iranian authorities and the Government of the United States. The fate of the hostages demands the most careful and imaginative handling. For my part I shall continue to exert my best efforts to bring about a satisfactory solution to this grave problem in all its aspects.

In Africa many developments give cause for serious concern. But in a world of unresolved problems the emergence of the independent nation of Zimbabwe stands out as a shining example of statesmanship. The fact that it was possible, after a prolonged conflict, to work out a solid political basis for the self-determination of a people while assuring the harmonious coexistence of different races is a triumph for leadership, moderation and the capacity to learn from past mistakes. Tenacity in the struggle for a people's inalienable rights led to a settlement in which magnanimity, understanding and tolerance were the order of the day. This was an inspiring moment in human history, no matter what difficulties and challenges the new Government of Zimbabwe is now so courageously facing. These developments owe much to the wisdom and statesmanship of many very different people, in particular the leaders of the Zimbabwe liberation movements, the African front-line States, the British Government and the Commonwealth. The role in this historic process of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, which kept alive the objective of genuine independence and majority rule, was an indispensable factor in the ultimately successful outcome.

Important discussions have already been initiated concerning United Nations assistance to Zimbabwe in its challenging task of national reconstruction. The Security Council has recognized that this is an international responsibility, and I shall do my best to mobilize all possible assistance. I hope that bilateral aid will also be forthcoming in generous measure to assist the Government of Prime Minister Mugabe in dealing with the tremendous problems of reconstruction.

The events in Zimbabwe are an object lesson in escaping from the past in order to win the future. As well as marking a turning-point in southern Africa, this development will also, I hope, be studied in other parts of the world where historic problems block the way to a peaceful future of peoples in coexistence.

It is to be hoped that the Zimbabwe development will be followed by corresponding progress in Namibia. For the moment, however, to my regret, the implementation of the settlement proposal approved by the Security Council is still pending. In the past year intensive efforts have been made through negotiations and representations of various kinds to break the deadlock, and the concept of a demilitarized zone along Namibia's frontier with Angola and Zambia has been accepted by all concerned, including South Africa. I wish to express my appreciation to all those who have been helpful in facilitating our efforts to break the deadlock. I sincerely hope that these efforts will come to fruition in the very near future.

Quite apart from the existing embitterment and frustration, I am concerned that a further delay in solving this question may lead to wider destruction and bloodshed on both sides of the frontier. In a matter of such importance one party or another may well have doubts about taking a historic step forward, for such a step inevitably involves a considerable element of chance. But I am convinced that the alternative is bound to lead to a steady erosion of the situation, an escalation of violence and a bitter long-drawn-out struggle which will profit no one and bring bloodshed and ruin to the region. The prospect of a coexistent future in which problems are solved in co-operation rather than by conflict will be indefinitely postponed, and all parties in the end will be the losers. The tide of history is flowing strong in Africa. Many of the lessons of the immediate past have been learned and the result is a mood of statesmanship and pragmatism. I believe that the climate for transition to Namibian independence has never been more favourable than now. I therefore urge all concerned to take advantage of it and move forward expeditiously to the implementation of the settlement proposal contained in Security Council resolution 435(1978). In the Secretariat we are fully prepared to play our part in ensuring the fair and objective implementation of this plan.

While the problem of Namibia is an immediate preoccupation, the general concern over the system of racial discrimination and apartheid in South Africa has been heightened in recent months by increasing tensions and violent incidents in South Africa. I need only repeat here that this concern will inevitably persist until there are significant signs that the system of apartheid with all that it represents is a thing of the past. No reasonable person can underestimate the magnitude of the problem. But by the same token the world community's concern will continue and grow as long as the manifest injustices of apartheid persist.

Elsewhere in Africa there are serious inter-State and other conflicts as well as enormous internal problems. The tragic civil war in Chad, the unresolved problems of the Horn of Africa and the prolonged conflict of Western Sahara all call for urgent action by the international community, and more importantly by the parties directly involved, to restore conditions of peace and understanding.

I certainly hope that the painstaking efforts of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) to resolve these problems will succeed. I am in close contact with African leaders on these matters and have assured them of the support of the United Nations in their efforts.

In the case of Chad, I hope that the intensive efforts being undertaken by OAU to reconcile the warring parties will prove fruitful. Otherwise, it is possible that a request will be made to the United Nations for assistance in a peace-keeping operation.

In the Horn of Africa, I was pleased to learn that relations between the Sudan and Ethiopia had taken a positive turn and that OAU has resumed its good offices in resolving differences between Ethiopia and Somalia.

The question of Western Sahara, with which the United Nations is seized, has entered a critical phase. The Organization of African Unity has actively sought a solution to the problem and a report on the latest situation will be submitted to the General Assembly.

The United Nations has a profound interest in such situations, not only because of their potential bearing on the wider peace, but also because its assistance is often necessary to deal with massive humanitarian disasters which result from military and political conflict. I hope therefore that, in close co-operation with OAU, efforts can be intensified in the coming year to bring these flash-points of the African scene under control. I shall have more to say later on international assistance in the humanitarian field.

The Middle East and Cyprus remain direct concerns of the United Nations in the peace-keeping field as well as in the broader dimension of political settlement. In Cyprus, while the actual situation in the island remains calm, not least because of the presence of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP), the peace-making process has been deadlocked for over a year in spite of the high-level 10-point agreement reached under my auspices in May 1979. The year has therefore been spent in trying to clarify the assumptions on which substantive intercommunal talks could proceed. On 9 August 1980 the talks were finally resumed and agreement was reached to proceed to the substantive stage in mid-September. Here again the will of the parties to engage in a significant process of negotiation and compromise will be the key to any future success. A sustained international effort, at many levels and in many forms, has been made to assist them in their task. That effort will continue.

I wish to take this opportunity to express appreciation to the Governments which have provided troops and other forms of support for UNFICYP.

The situation in South-East Asia has remained dangerous and is of the deepest concern to me. Despite efforts made at various levels, little progress has been achieved in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 34/22 regarding the situation in Kampuchea, including the withdrawal of foreign troops and the search for a political solution. Persistent political and military problems have rendered extremely difficult the vast humanitarian relief operation being undertaken by the United Nations system on behalf of the afflicted people of Kampuchea. I have been mindful, since its adoption by the Assembly, of the resolution requesting me to exercise my good offices in order to contribute to a peaceful solution of the problems in the area. Following consultations with the parties, I travelled to Hanoi and Bangkok in August 1980. I discussed these problems in both capitals, and despite the conflicting views it was agreed that the process of discussion would continue with my assistance when the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Viet Nam and Thailand are in New York to attend the forthcoming session of the General Assembly. I have made it clear that my good offices continue to be available to the countries of the region for any purpose that they may find useful. In the mean time, until solutions are found to resolve the political and military issues that underlie the crisis in the area, the humanitarian operations of the United Nations system have to continue as effectively as possible despite the serious limits imposed upon them by the prevailing situation. In this connexion, I should like to recall that all aspects of the relief programme were considered in a meeting that I convened at Geneva in May 1980, at the request of the Economic and Social Council.

I shall be commenting later on the search for a settlement in the Middle East. Here, therefore, I shall mention only the peace-keeping involvement of the United Nations in that region. The two main forces involved are the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) on the Golan Heights and the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) in south Lebanon. The military observers of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in Palestine (UNTSO) assist both of these operations while carrying out their other duties. Once again this year the UNTSO observers have displayed outstanding courage, efficiency and devotion to duty. The United Nations Disengagement Observer Force has continued to carry out its duties most effectively and without incident. The United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, as I have pointed out before, is involved in a far less clearly defined and much more complex situation. It is not surprising, therefore, that the Force has continued to face major problems and to experience extremely disturbed conditions.

I do not wish to repeat here the substance of my very detailed reports on UNIFIL to the Security Council. We continue to face in south Lebanon a situation in which it has so far proved impossible for UNIFIL to achieve all the objectives of its mandate. In particular, it has been prevented from taking full control of its entire area of operations, from establishing peaceful conditions and from helping to restore the full authority and sovereignty of the Lebanese Government in that area. A main factor in this situation is the policy of the Government of Israel and its support of the de facto forces in southern Lebanon. The disturbed conditions in other parts of southern Lebanon, including the presence of Palestinian and other armed elements, and the general political and security situation in Lebanon itself also contribute to the extremely difficult conditions in the south.

Whatever its frustrations, I believe that all concerned agree that UNIFIL is fulfilling with great courage and restraint an absolutely vital peace-keeping function, not only in south Lebanon but in regard to the Middle East situation as a whole. We shall persevere, in co-operation with the Government of Lebanon, in pursuing all the objectives of UNIFIL, in strengthening its capacity to discharge its functions by peaceful means, and in making all possible efforts to secure those changes which are necessary to the successful fulfilment of UNIFIL'S task. I wish here to pay a heartfelt tribute to the Commander, officers, men and civilian staff of UNIFIL for their steadfastness in adversity and danger. I also wish to thank those Governments which have provided contingents for the confidence and understanding they have shown in supporting this vital but difficult operation. And I wish here to honour the memory of those United Nations soldiers who have given their lives in south Lebanon in the cause of peace.

In this connexion, I feel obliged to express once again my concern at the financial difficulties which two important peace-keeping operations, UNIFIL and UNFICYP, continue to confront. This situation places a heavy burden on the troop-contributing countries which, if allowed to continue, may adversely affect the future of such operations. It also involves a matter of basic principle, since the maintenance of international peace and security under the Security Council should be a collective responsibility.

IV

The Middle East situation continues to dominate the affairs of the international community and remains central to the political and economic stability of the world. Few other international problems have such a complex structure or such widespread repercussions. I am deeply concerned at the present trend of events, in which extremism feeds extremism, where claims foster counter-claims or reactions, and where the short-term demands of national politics tend to obscure the long-term demands of justice, peace and humanity. I do not intend to deal here with specific cases in this regard with which the Security Council has been concerned and on which it has taken decisions in the past year.

In the current circumstances, there are severe limitations to what the United Nations can do to maintain a reasonable degree of peace and to promote progress towards a settlement. Indeed it is significant and ominous that the United Nations itself is increasingly under attack in some quarters, and that at times its good faith is impugned. This is a serious development, because the United Nations should be in a position at all times to play a useful and constructive role in the search for a comprehensive solution. Indeed there are some indispensable functions—peace-keeping for example—which it is uniquely qualified to perform. It is vital therefore that the United Nations should uphold the essential principles and the rights of the parties involved and, in doing so, should be able to command the confidence of all. This is an extremely difficult role to play effectively. And yet without it an essential element will be missing when we come, as we must, to move forward towards a settlement.

We have to realize that there is not, and cannot be, an instant solution to the Middle East problem which will be immediately acclaimed by all. This is particularly so because the problem is compounded of a long series of historical developments, errors, injustices and conflicts. I am moved to make this statement by my concern at the present state of affairs—a state of affairs, incidentally, which casts a shadow over many other important activities of the community of nations.

Any progress in the Middle East requires in the first place a vastly improved degree of communication and understanding at many levels. There can be no hope of peaceful progress if the peoples of the region and their leaders do not recognize and accept each other's existence and each other's right to exist. Conditions must be created in which positive and agreed solutions can be developed.

The main aspects of the Middle East problem are interdependent and cannot be separated. A continuous and determined effort must therefore be made to achieve a comprehensive settlement through negotiations involving all the parties concerned, including the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Any future solution of the problem will have to be based on the right of all States in the area to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries free from threats or acts of force, on the inalienable rights of the Palestinians, including their right to self-determination, and on withdrawal from occupied territories. In this context the question of Jerusalem is of primary importance and cannot be solved through any unilateral decision.

I continue to believe that the United Nations can do much to facilitate a settlement, and I earnestly hope that it will play an increasingly important role in this vital endeavour.

V

In my report of 1978 on the work of the Organization I referred to the achievements of the tenth special session of the General Assembly, devoted to disarmament, which had just completed its work. Unfortunately, the disarmament strategy adopted at the special session, which might have become a landmark in the quest for a reduction of the burden of arms, has yet to be translated into substantive action and has been followed instead by a further escalation of the arms race. Available figures on military expenditures already indicate another big upward jump, attributable in large measure to the deteriorating trend of the general international situation. World military expenditures in 1980 will exceed the staggering figure of $500 billion, or roughly 6 per cent of total world output. The quantitative and qualitative development of weapons, particularly nuclear weapons, continues. The impact of such expenditures on other critical basic needs of society is self-evident, and I have referred repeatedly in the past to the link between disarmament and development as being of critical importance.

Present trends cast ominous shadows over disarmament efforts, both within and outside the framework of the United Nations. Indeed, disarmament activities seem to remain largely confined to organizational and procedural matters rather than substantive ones. In view of the scope and intensity of the efforts that went into the successful elaboration of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it seems necessary to examine carefully the assumptions that underlay that exercise and the factors involved in the subsequent frustration of the hopes placed in it. It is after all an abiding irony that all Governments are aware of the dimensions, the significance and the dangers of the arms race and are committed in principle to disarmament, and yet we see less actual progress in this field than in almost any other major international problem.

It is important to define and recognize the realities of the situation. The very Governments which in principle strongly favour disarmament and arms control as a general proposition will, when faced with perceived concrete dangers, tend to give priority to military strength in order to enhance their security. While it is widely acknowledged that disarmament will improve the security of all in the long run, few are prepared to rely on it as a protection against their perception of today's threats or tomorrow's dangers. Faced with this choice, most Governments for the time being consider it their duty to opt for the dictates of immediate safety through armaments.

This is the dilemma which perpetuates the arms race. The evolution of the international situation since the special session on disarmament convened in May 1978 has tended to sharpen this dilemma. Almost every one of the areas of current tension and conflict, some of which are mentioned in other sections of this report, generates security problems for the parties concerned and almost every one of them adds further momentum to the arms race. The lessons of history indicate that enduring peace and security cannot in the long run be built on the accumulation of weaponry by individual States or by military alliances. But history also demonstrates that, in the face of threats to or breaches of peace, States will exercise their right of individual and collective self-defence as best they can. It is true that the balance of deterrence is essentially fraught with risk, but many Governments, not only those of nuclear-weapon States, would consider that in the present circumstances world peace would be endangered if that balance were destabilized. And yet it is all too clear that the steady increase in weapons, especially nuclear weapons, exposes the world to terrible potential dangers. The comprehensive study on nuclear weapons called for two years ago by the General Assembly, and recently completed, highlights such dangers. In 13 years the total number of strategic nuclear warheads has reportedly almost tripled. The report emphasizes the deficiencies and risks of current deterrence strategies and the threatening prospects of further nuclear proliferation.

In effect, while the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session laid down the basis for an effective approach for disarmament, disarmament cannot be conceived in a vacuum. There is an intimate relationship between disarmament and security, and the nature of the relations among countries obviously affects their willingness to perceive security in other than military terms. Progress in disarmament will increase confidence among nations. But progress is likely to be modest until that confidence has been developed, at least to some extent, and until at least some of the causes of distrust and rivalry are dealt with. Thus, if we believe that disarmament is essential, we must also strengthen the belief that only through compromise, restraint and the harmonization of national goals can lasting and genuine international security be achieved. In short, we must make a determined effort to return to the purposes and principles of the Charter.

In these circumstances, we should recognize that it is essential to keep the consideration of the disarmament problem closely tied to specific political realities and to the ways in which Governments actually respond to those realities. This applies both to disarmament proper and to the closely related area of arms control.

There must be tangible demonstrations of renewed commitment to the objectives outlined in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session. The Second Disarmament Decade, which began this year, offers a suitable framework for setting politically attainable concrete targets and making substantive progress in that direction.

The role of the negotiating body is particularly important in this regard. It is the Committee on Disarmament which has been entrusted with the important task of giving practical effect to the Programme of Action. The Committee now has a clear-cut agenda and has also established a number of working groups to facilitate its consideration of various issues on its agenda. What is needed now is a vigorous pursuit of negotiations leading to substantive agreements.

There is one area in particular where agreement is not only urgent but possible. In transmitting to the Committee on Disarmament the study on a comprehensive nuclear-test ban, I reiterated my conviction that "all the technical and scientific aspects of the problem had been so fully explored that only a political decision was necessary in order to achieve agreement." The problem can and should be solved now.

While Member States have a responsibility for maintaining the process of halting and reversing the arms race, the United Nations can play an important role also in providing objective and authoritative information on the arms race, disarmament and arms control. By disseminating such information, world-wide public support for disarmament can be generated, including support for the efforts of Governments on this most difficult of all problems.

The second special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, to be convened in 1982, will provide a new opportunity to assess the processes initiated through the international disarmament strategy adopted at the tenth special session.

V I

Political and military conflicts and upheavals invariably engender human suffering which, on occasion, reaches disaster proportions. We have all too many such cases today. Problems of refugees and displaced persons as well as demands for relief and rehabilitation on a massive scale exist in Africa and Asia. Similar problems exist on a lesser scale in Latin America. Considerable strain is imposed on the fragile economies of countries that receive large numbers of refugees, and they naturally expect the international community to share the burden they carry.

In addition, international assistance is required to deal with the ravages of drought and famine which have spread from the Sahelian countries to many other countries in Africa, leaving in their wake starvation and social disruption.

To deal with such situations, the United Nations has long-standing humanitarian programmes and agencies. The efforts of the United Nations system to meet specific humanitarian challenges are being reported in full elsewhere, and I wish here only to make some general comments and suggestions on this essential part of the Organization's work.

Political and humanitarian factors are sometimes difficult to separate in some of the situations I have mentioned. Unfortunately most of the great human tragedies of our time are deeply rooted in political and military developments. This is particularly true of the various humanitarian demands of Indo-China. In the face of human misery on the scale which exists in that part of the world, it is essential to provide humanitarian assistance even though a political solution has yet to be found. I appeal to all Governments to understand this dilemma and to support the humanitarian efforts of the United Nations system and associated international and voluntary organizations to provide assistance on a non-discriminatory basis to the afflicted civilian population. Above all, there is a need to make renewed efforts to move in the direction of political settlements which will allow the agonized populations of that tortured region to look at last to a future of peace.

My second comment concerns the question of security. It has until now been generally accepted that security and peace-keeping are political matters and separate from emergency humanitarian efforts, although past experience has shown that when the two have happened to coincide the humanitarian task has been greatly facilitated by the presence of peace-keeping operations. A relatively small United Nations presence can have a calming effect on a violent situation out of all proportion to its numbers, armaments or military capacity. I fully recognize the political and other complexities involved. Clearly the authority of the Security Council must be respected, and the principle of national sovereignty strictly observed. On this basis, I believe however that Member States might consider the possibilities of extending in some form the Organization's very considerable experience of peace-keeping into humanitarian emergencies where conditions call urgently for an element of security.

My third comment relates to the United Nations system itself and humanitarian emergencies. The United Nations and the specialized agencies were not, in themselves, originally conceived as bodies which would conduct large-scale operations. The operations which they have increasingly undertaken have therefore necessarily been improvised. This is all very well up to a point, but after 35 years it is abundantly clear that the Organization is going to continue to be faced with practical emergencies, sometimes on a very large scale, where as a matter of human necessity and conscience it has to act and where the circumstances urgently require that the United Nations provide the leadership that is necessary to avert unspeakable tragedy.

It is simply insufficient on such occasions to cobble together for such vast emergencies an improvised coalition of independent United Nations agencies and programmes, sometimes in co-operation with the Red Cross and with a number of non-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies. All are willing to help, and many contribute magnificently, but organization, co-ordination, united policies and co-operative forward planning alone can ensure full success and the optimum use of the assistance provided by the international community.

I shall be pursuing this matter within the United Nations system and in the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination. I would naturally welcome the views of Member States, especially those which have so generously supported these humanitarian efforts. In this connexion I welcome the initiative taken this summer in the Economic and Social Council and the proposal for a review of the emergency operations of the United Nations system. I feel that it is time to take a further step in making our Organization better fitted to meet the challenges of the present and the future.

I wish here to mention a long-standing humanitarian programme, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), which reached its thirtieth anniversary this year. The question of the renewal of UNRWA is on the provisional agenda of the forthcoming session of the General Assembly. Every year UNRWA goes through a financial crisis which absorbs a very large proportion of the Commissioner-General's time and energy. As long as the Palestine refugee problem exists, UNRWA makes an essential contribution, not only in discharging a humanitarian obligation of the United Nations but as an important stabilizing factor in the region. Every year financial shortfalls threaten drastic cuts in UNRWA's services, especially in the education system, and the outlook for next year is even more serious.

VII

Earlier in this report I mentioned the necessity of observing binding codes of conduct in the essential relations between nations. Interference, often by violent means, in the internal affairs of sovereign States has for far too long been a deplorable feature of the international scene. The past year has in addition witnessed a dangerous increase of violence directed at diplomatic and political persons both at home and abroad. There have been kidnappings, threats and assassinations.

I am deeply disturbed at such trends, indicating, as they do, anarchic tendencies which can only erode the already tenuous structure of international relations. Such activities reveal both a contempt for international rules, conventions and practices and a disrespect for the domestic peace and order of other States. They can only cause universal concern among the vast majority of States which are striving for a peaceful and less violent future. As Secretary-General, with my direct responsibility for international civil servants all over the world, I am also profoundly disturbed by a trend which can very seriously affect the security and effectiveness of the international civil service.

The General Assembly has, on my initiative, previously had occasion to consider the broader problem of international terrorism and its underlying causes. I now welcome the proposal for the inclusion of a new item in the Assembly's agenda concerning effective measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives. I hope that the Assembly will take advantage of this proposal to make abundantly clear the concern of Member States with preserving and enhancing the respect for and security of those engaged in international affairs as well as the need for an end to the present violent trend, which can only have the most dangerous consequences for the entire world community.

VIII

Throughout the past year, I have on numerous occasions expressed my concern about current trends in the world economy. These trends have caused and continue to cause widespread uncertainty and have assumed special gravity in their impact on the weakest and most vulnerable countries. It is clear that urgent responses are required from the international community and that such responses must be based on greater understanding and co-operation. It is imperative that the political will of nations be mobilized, at the highest levels of government, if we are to accelerate the processes of negotiation and compromise which are required to reverse present trends and to transform and restructure the international economy.

In these circumstances, during the contacts that I had with numerous world leaders in the past months and in the visits that I paid to various capitals, I invariably expressed my deep anxiety at the present pace of negotiations and explored ways and means to proceed with a greater sense of cohesion and urgency.

Certain positive steps have been taken over the past few months, notably in the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, where negotiations have led to the establishment of a Common Fund and a set of rules and principles regarding restrictive business practices. Further, actions have been taken by the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund in an attempt to alleviate the balance-of-payments problems of developing countries. However, in the critical areas of energy, money and development finance, no significant progress has been achieved, and initiatives that were undertaken have proved inadequate. Even the preparations for the eleventh special session of the General Assembly, devoted to development and international economic co-operation, proved to be difficult.

We are therefore entering a new decade burdened with unresolved problems, with insufficient agreement on how to address these problems. It is the aim of the new International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, discussed by the General Assembly at its eleventh special session, to provide a common perspective and to indicate the goals, objectives and policy measures required of the international community as a whole if we are to accelerate the development of developing countries. The Strategy provides a measure of the massive effort that will be required, both domestically and at the international level, if worthwhile progress is to be achieved. Unless challenges are boldly met, these objectives will remain in danger of staying unfulfilled, as were many elements of the previous Strategy.

I need hardly elaborate on the ominous consequences that any such shortcoming would imply for the 6 billion people who will inhabit this planet by the year 2000.

It is thus essential that the proposed global negotiations in critical areas relating to raw materials, energy, trade, development, money and finance should be given a serious new impetus in the coming months. I hope that the convergence in concerns and the expressions of the determination to act that emerged from many of the statements to the General Assembly at its eleventh special session would serve to accelerate the now dangerously modest pace of discussions in the North-South negotiations. A large majority of countries strongly support the view that this new round will contribute to the solution of international problems and be instrumental in restructuring international economic relations. However, discussions on the agenda and procedures for the new round have underlined that there are still serious divergences concerning the manner in which negotiations should proceed. The final outcome of the special session will indicate whether, beyond general statements of intent, there is a real determination to engage in substantive negotiations.

It is my earnest hope that these answers will indeed be found at the earliest moment so that the process of global negotiations can move forward. Even then, the process, if it is to succeed, must be backed continuously by the serious political will of all the parties involved. To this end, and in order to stimulate current efforts, it may prove useful to hold short meetings at the ministerial level at crucial stages of the negotiations. Likewise, the Brandt Commission has suggested the holding of summit meetings of limited numbers of heads of State or Government. This suggestion deserves careful attention.

As I noted in addressing the Economic and Social Council, the time-frame required for fruitful global negotiations must not deter us from seeking immediate remedies to urgent problems. Thus, the critical situation of certain developing countries may deteriorate drastically during the coming months unless prompt and appropriate action is taken. It was in this connexion that I drew the attention of Governments to the balance-of-payments difficulties being experienced by many developing countries, including especially the least developed and others of low income. I made a number of proposals on how to deal with these difficulties and also urged that the pace of investment in the energy sector of these countries should be accelerated. I have noted that the response to these proposals has been encouraging; I would hope that they will be considered more fully during the thirty-fifth session of the General Assembly and that appropriate actions will be initiated to remedy the situation.

As we view the current stage of our negotiations on economic matters, we cannot afford to delude ourselves with the thought that paralysis in the economic sector will not entail serious political consequences. The interaction between economic and political factors is constant and intense. Peace is as much at stake in the discussions on economic questions as prosperity and a decent standard of living for all humanity. Inevitably, in these circumstances, economic issues will play an increasing role in the life of the United Nations in answer to the concerns of Member States. I intend to ensure that the United Nations system does its utmost to meet these concerns with a sense of purpose and determination.

Our Organization remains central to humanity's aspirations for a world in which human rights and the dignity of the human person are respected. While a number of positive steps have been taken in this field in the past year, particularly as a result of recent initiatives in the Commission on Human Rights, there have also, unfortunately, been a great number of human rights violations in the international community. These violations, which include arbitrary detention, torture, hostage-taking and forced migrations, remain the cause for deep concern and anguish. A most distressing and continuing phenomenon has been the summary execution of individuals in many parts of the world without regard for the due process of law. I have condemned these acts on humanitarian grounds and will continue to do so in unequivocal terms.

Moreover, senseless violence and wanton assaults on human dignity in the past year have created fresh challenges, not only for the United Nations but for all organizations and individuals involved in the promotion of human rights.

I have repeatedly said that the hopes placed in the United Nations in the field of human rights can only be realized if the Governments which make up the Organization comply with the principles of the Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Too often we see a wide gap between principles and actual practice. This results in frustration within the Organization and disillusionment among the public at large.

The proceedings of the last session of the Commission on Human Rights were among this year's more positive developments and pointed the way to a serious approach to a number of difficult matters. Despite the political climate nevvailing, the Commission made advances in the elaboration of standards on various subjects such as the rights of the child, the rights of minorities, the prohibition of torture, and the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance. Moreover, the Commission addressed itself specifically to situations of gross violations of human rights. The establishment by the Commission of a working group to investigate the fate of missing and disappeared persons was indicative of its deep concern with regard to this tragic problem. The Working Group has since met and is seeking the co-operation of all concerned for the purpose of eventually bringing an end to the problem of enforced or involuntary disappearances and of determining the whereabouts or fate of missing or disappeared persons. Quiet and effective work, through a series of seminars and studies, was also undertaken in the course of the year to give wider understanding to the purposes of the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.

Such measures, each in itself seemingly a small step, represent in the aggregate a serious effort to build up the machinery and procedures necessary to make a reality of the objectives of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. We should be very clear, however, that our efforts hitherto are small indeed in comparison to the awesome magnitude of this problem. Nor must we forget that the human rights of the Universal Declaration, if they are to have meaning to millions around the globe, must be related to the right to development and to the creation of a new international economic order. There can be scant comfort in the contemplation of abstract rights while poverty and disease afflict vast numbers in this world.

In these circumstances, I would appeal to States which have not yet done so to accede as speedily as possible to instruments such as the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto, and the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination.

I have always regarded it as my duty to exercise my good offices in human rights matters and I shall continue to assist in every way that I can. Increasingly I have been requested by various United Nations bodies dealing with human rights to enter into direct contacts with Governments of countries facing problems. In several instances, such Governments have received visits from special representatives designated by me. I appreciate such co-operation, which furthers a purpose that is central to our Organization and the values we profess.

The World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, held at Copenhagen, which marked the mid-point of the Decade declared by the General Assembly in 1976, thoroughly considered the totality of issues relating to women. The Conference and its attendant activities vividly demonstrated the vastly increased understanding of these fundamental problems and the rightful degree of importance which is now at last being given to them. The Conference showed dramatically that women fully intend to play a more active role in determining, at the national and international levels, their own destinies as well as sharing in key decisions in matters of peace and development.

The Conference stressed the need for the redistribution of tasks and responsibilities among men and women so that the division of labour between the sexes both within and outside the household is more equally shared. It highlighted the undoubted fact that mass poverty is a primary cause of the inequality of women and that their advancement is therefore closely linked with the goals of development and of the new international economic order. It emphasized the undoubted fact that women are not simply discriminated against by the productive system but carry a double responsibility as the reproductive force of our society.

The Conference articulated clearly the determination of women to share more fully in the process of global management for development and for peace as well as their conviction of the need for the allocation of a greater share of the world's resources to the betterment of the lives of all people rather than to the instruments of war. In this context, it underscored the important place both of women's potential and their concerns in the formulation of a new international development strategy.

The political controversy over certain aspects of the Programme of Action should not be allowed to overshadow the great range, importance and imaginativeness of the deliberations in Copenhagen. The Conference served progressively to advance and deepen the realization of the world community that women are actively involved in every global concern. I hope and believe that this recognition will increasingly become a powerful force for positive change and peaceful development.

The Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea completed its ninth session at the end of August with a successful conclusion definitely in sight, and it seems likely that a convention can be adopted early in 1981. This monumental negotiation to draft a constitution for the seas has been called, with good reason, one of the most significant achievements in international relations since the United Nations Charter.

The more than 300 articles and eight annexes of the informal text that contains the draft convention, dealing as they do with almost every conceivable aspect of the uses and resources of the oceans, are the result of tireless negotiation and the process of consensus. The compromises reached have their roots in common interests and in the reconciliation of competing interests rather than in ideology, and signal a striking victory for the rule of reason and law. In fact the Conference on the Law of the Sea disposes of the idea that the United Nations cannot be used as an effective negotiating body and that it is impossible to negotiate on complex matters in large groups of Governments.

At the recent session acceptable formulations were found on the remaining hard-core issues. The work which remains outstanding could be completed at the next and last session of the Conference. It is confidently hoped that a convention would be ready for adoption by April 1981. This would bring to fruition one of the most arduous and complex negotiations ever undertaken under the auspices of the United Nations, or perhaps in human history.

Quite apart from the achievement of the specific objectives of the Conference on the Law of the Sea, I attach the highest importance to the impact which its success may have in strengthening the role of the United Nations in finding viable solutions to great global issues. I hope that those who labour in other fields will take courage from this remarkable example.

XII

In my last report on the work of the Organization, I stated that the international civil service was at a critical juncture and that there was an urgent need to re-evaluate positions and attitudes in this regard in the full knowledge that there are differing views on the matter. That assessment remains unchanged.

This is a time of increasing interest in the personnel questions of the Organization on the part both of Member States and of staff members themselves. Equitable geographical distribution of the Secretariat, the desirability of establishing and maintaining a more rational recruitment policy, the career prospects of staff as well as the status and security of the members of the international civil service are vital matters that have engaged the attention of Member States and staff alike. We must spare no efforts to tackle effectively these crucial issues, if we are to reaffirm and revitalize the original concept of an independent international civil service outlined so cogently in Articles 100 and 101 of the Charter.

There is a wide range of diversity of attitudes among Member States and staff members on many of the practical problems of the Secretariat. This year, for example, the resolution of the General Assembly requesting reports on the possibility for change in the existing criteria has given rise to serious differences between the major financial contributors and other Member States concerning the desirable ranges for geographical distribution of posts in the Secretariat.

The question of the international civil service is an extremely complex one, since there are constraints and practical limitations which severely curtail the possibilities of meeting all points of view. Thus a perfect solution is, in the nature of things, impossible. We must therefore strive to achieve common ground through understanding and mutual accommodation where all sides are willing to appreciate the interests of others and to co-operate in the relief of legitimate concerns. A great deal of patience will be required.

As far as the Secretary-General is concerned, he needs such guidance from Member States as will permit him to exercise fully the proper discretion necessary in the matter of appointments so that the Organization will always have the staff it requires to carry out its functions effectively. The legitimate interests of the staff itself must also be borne in mind at all times not only by the Secretary-General but also by the Member Governments. In this connexion I wish to express my concern about the security of international civil servants and about the imperative need for Member States to comply with their obligations under the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations.

We now have a wealth of experience on the problems and functioning of the international civil service. I believe that we need a frank and open evaluation of personnel matters and of the concept of the international civil service in the light of this experience and in the full knowledge of the existence of widely divergent views. I am confident that, in the right spirit, we can find the accommodations and arrangements necessary to preserve the essential nature of the international civil service and to secure for the Organization the best efforts from its staff in their dedicated service to the world community.

In recent years, much attention has been devoted to the rationalization of the structures and procedures of the Organization both at the intergovernmental and Secretariat level. Some progress has been achieved at both levels. But important as it is to rationalize structures and procedures, it should be emphasized that these are not aims in themselves but rather the means for supporting the substantive work of the Organization, the programmes, facilities and services it produces for the benefit of Member States and the international community at large. It is, therefore, no less important to rationalize these substantive activities and to ensure that their orientation, content and delivery are timely and relevant to the priority needs of Member States and of the international community. Here we have so far failed to make satisfactory progress.

In an Organization as vast and complex as the United Nations—with a $1.2 billion biennial budget, a programme composed of some 2,000 individual elements or major projects, some 50 programme-formulating intergovernmental organs with powers to adopt decisions demanding action from the Secretariat, and with major units located in different parts of the world—this is no simple task. It is nevertheless an urgent one at a time when we are faced with the dilemma of reconciling the need to meet new demands on the Organization with the need for budgetary restraint. As the scope for real growth in the budget of the Organization is severely limited, the only possibility for meeting demands for new activities is to analyse closely the programmes for elements which can be scaled down or abandoned because their relative priority is lower than that of the proposed new programmes. This would entail a rigorous examination of priorities among programmes and procedures for rethinking the allocation of resources to them.

As part of this process there are a number of actions which will greatly assist in this endeavour. These include the medium-term plan, which more systematically involves intergovernmental organs in the review process; the programme budget, which gives increased emphasis to programme aspects particularly in the economic and social sectors; and an evaluation of the effectiveness and impact of United Nations programmes which will enable the Organization to draw more systematically on its own experience and help it to concentrate on approaches and methods which have proved most effective.

Such measures are essential for the identification of activities that are of marginal usefulness or obsolete. Obviously the efficiency and effectiveness of the Organization cannot be radically improved solely by actions initiated within the Secretariat. The other essential is the active participation of Governments and their readiness to take the necessary hard decisions to terminate marginally useful activities.

I have commented in previous reports on the relentless increase in the number of international meetings each year. I know that my concern on this score is shared by a great many of those whose duty takes them to an unrelenting round of international conferences. However, the programme shows no signs of being curtailed. In fact, in the past year there has been a larger number of international meetings of various kinds than ever. In the United Nations one sometimes has the impression that the main organs are in permanent session, so brief is the gap between their various meetings. Although I recognize that this tendency reflects the vitality of the Organization, the resulting burden imposed upon delegations and the Secretariat inevitably affects the quality of preparations and sometimes of results. I appeal to the Governments of all Member States to consider this situation with care and to make renewed efforts to rationalize the programme of meetings with a view to improving the effectiveness and impact of our work.

In the Secretariat we absorb, as part of our daily duties, a great deal of criticism, some of it valid, of the working methods, programmes and relevance of the United Nations. I hope that Member States will co-operate far more closely with the Secretariat in measures such as I have described above to make our Organization more effective, efficient and relevant to the great problems of our time.

XIV

In the preceding pages I have tried to give a frank assessment of the current state of our Organization as well as some suggestions for the consideration of the Member States. I have no wish to seem pessimistic, but I feel strongly that we must be realistic in facing up to the problems we are called upon to deal with and that we must make a continuous effort to grasp the essentials of those problems. Only then shall we be able to identify the most useful role for the United Nations and the manner in which it can best make a significant contribution to their solution.

As always, the United Nations remains an easy target for criticism and denunciation, especially by the many people in the world who are deeply dissatisfied with the current international situation and are at a loss to know what to do about it. Certainly there is much to criticize in this as in other representative political institutions. But we should be careful to distinguish justified criticisms from the kind of totally negative, and often self-serving, denunciations of the United Nations which castigate the Organization precisely for being the world institution that it is.

It is quite impossible for an Organization composed of 153 sovereign States and having on its agenda most of the contentious issues among those States to remain above controversy. It is very natural for such an institution to be controversial as long as it continues also to be based on the fundamental principles and aims of its Charter. We can expect that those on the majority side will usually find the Organization less controversial than those in the minority, but it should also be remembered that in the United Nations, as is to be expected of an Organization of independent sovereign States, majorities and minorities change according to the subject under discussion, and that there is no so-called "automatic majority."

While I am receptive to justified criticisms of the United Nations, I am far more concerned with the relevance of the Organization to the pressing problems of the world it represents. I continue to feel that the enormous effort in terms of meetings and documents is still out of proportion to the results achieved in terms of practical policies for the future or actual benefits to the peoples of the world. I am also concerned that the Organization should maintain its balance and comprehensive character and that the preoccupation with certain key issues should not detract from the importance of the other problems of the world community.

There is a tendency in some quarters to continue to regard the United Nations as peripheral to the real process of international relations which is supposed to go on in the corridors of power elsewhere. The fact that Governments usually resort quickly to the United Nations in times of trouble seems to me to illustrate clearly the fallacy as well as the dangers of this approach.

One of the most important and least recognized functions of the United Nations is to keep alive ideas and principles which cannot immediately be realized, but which remain as an objective to be strived for and eventually won. The self-determination and independence of the people of Zimbabwe was one such objective which has now, happily, been achieved. There are many other objectives, some more specific than others, where the perennial concern of the United Nations, expressed in debates, hearings, reports and other activities, is an essential factor in marking an issue that needs to be solved and in pointing the way to a solution. Especially on the economic and social side, the Organization can have an extremely important long-term effect in focusing attention on problems, in changing the accepted thinking about them and in formulating programmes, strategies and guidelines which provide the framework in which Governments can approach great problems. It is important, however, that each year we make the laborious effort to ascertain how far we have moved forward on these problems in practical terms.

Early in this report I mentioned that the United Nations system was not originally designed as an operational system. The operational activities it now carries out are therefore for the most part improvised. However, operational activities properly carried out are most persuasive evidence of the potential for effective international action, and they also foster the spirit of common endeavour which I mentioned earlier as the essential unifying factor in our approach to contentious or controversial problems. A great humanitarian or peace-keeping operation, for example, is a striking illustration of international effort at its best, where aims, objectives, and even difficulties and dangers, are a uniting and inspiring factor. Such examples are the best answer to the weary cynicism of those who profess to believe that the United Nations is a lost cause.

Now that the Organization is 35 years of age, it cannot hope to capture the headlines as easily as it did in earlier youth; but it can hope to look back on an ever-growing record of solid and durable achievement as well as on dramatic occasions when the peace was kept or saved. If we can proceed along this path, we shall gain increasing respect and co-operation, and an authority and effectiveness based on responsibility, acceptance and experience.

For a global institution such as this there are few short cuts or easy successes and many obstacles and traps. We must therefore make a conscious effort to maintain our faith and determination to build upon the foundations which were so well laid 35 years ago.

Chapter I

Disarmament and related matters

During 1980, negotiations and debates on disarmament and related matters continued to be held under the auspices of the United Nations, primarily in the General Assembly, the Disarmament Commission and the Committee on Disarmament. The work of those bodies was influenced by an international political climate of heightened tensions and increasing conflict in international relations. None the less, decisions providing new contributions to promote the cause of disarmament were made.

For the first time since the establishment of a negotiating body on disarmament having a special relationship with the United Nations, the five nuclear-weapon States participated in its work, when China took its seat in the Committee on Disarmament in February. The Committee established four ad hoc working groups to negotiate on the prohibition of radiological weapons and chemical weapons, security assurances for non-nuclear-weapon States and a comprehensive programme of disarmament.

The deliberations of the Disarmament Commission resulted in the elaboration of the elements of a Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, except for a very few cases of unagreed wording which were resolved at the subsequent session of the General Assembly.

A major event was the reconvening in September of a United Nations conference on inhumane weapons, which resulted in the adoption, on 10 October, of the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects. The Convention and its Protocols sought to reduce the suffering of civilians and combatants in war.

Two other important disarmament conferences were held. The Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, which met in March, adopted a final declaration that reaffirmed the strong determination of the parties to exclude completely the possibility of the use of such weapons. The Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons failed to reach consensus on a substantive final declaration. However, in the area of peaceful uses of nuclear energy, general agreement was reached on questions of safeguards and access to nuclear materials and technology, providing a basis for future action in other forums, especially the International Atomic Energy Agency.

At the thirty-fifth session of the General Assembly, the special concern and active role of the developing countries in carrying forward the work on disarmament was made evident by their sponsorship of more than three fourths of the 43 resolutions adopted on the subject. These resolutions covered a wide range of subjects, such as the prohibition and destruction of nuclear weapons, the cessation of nuclear explosions, the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and fissionable material for weapons, security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States, confidence-building measures, nuclear-weapon-free zones, disarmament studies and training, the implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session of the Assembly held in 1978, the economic and social consequences of the arms race and military expenditures, and other issues related to general and complete disarmament. An important responsibility of the Assembly was to set in motion preparatory work for the second special session on disarmament, scheduled to be held in 1982. The Assembly also emphasized the role of the Committee on Disarmament in the negotiation of a comprehensive test-ban treaty and deplored the fact that the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (SALT ii) had not been ratified, notwithstanding that it had been signed in June 1979.

The view was widely expressed in the Assembly debates that, without an improvement in the political climate generating the necessary trust and political will, non-use of force in international relations and strict adherence to universally recognized norms of international behaviour, the initiatives for disarmament were likely to remain relatively unproductive. It was also emphasized that various aspects of disarmament were organically linked, thus progress in one direction would induce positive movement in others.

Committee on Disarmament

Report of the Committee on Disarmament

The Committee on Disarmament, the major international negotiating body in the disarmament field, met in 1980 from 5 February to 29 April and from 12 June to 9 August. All five nuclear-weapon States participated, with China taking its seat in the Committee for the first time. The 40 United Nations Member States represented on the Committee were: Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Canada, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Ethiopia, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Italy, Japan, Kenya, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Netherlands, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Poland, Romania, Sri Lanka, Sweden, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Austria, Denmark, Finland, Spain and Switzerland, not Committee members, were invited at their request to participate in its work or that of its subsidiary bodies, or make statements relating to specific questions being discussed. The Committee decided that requests for participation by Democratic Kampuchea and by the "People's Republic of Kampuchea" could not be considered at that time. Also, at the request of Viet Nam, the Committee postponed consideration of a request by Viet Nam to participate in the discussion of chemical weapons. By a letter of 27 June, Mongolia requested circulation of Viet Nam's statement of reasons for not insisting on a decision at that time; Viet Nam placed responsibility on China for obstructing its participation.

Two statements in this connexion were circulated as Committee documents: China, at the end of its March tenure as Committee Chairman, assessed the month's work and summarized efforts to resolve the question of non-member participation; a group of Eastern European States in a statement of 25 March voiced disapproval of what they considered to be obstructionist efforts by certain members to block the consideration of participation requests by non-members.

In this connexion, Mexico submitted a declaration of its views on the Committee's method of reporting on these requests, and presented for future consideration amendments to the rules of procedure intended to expedite the procedure for inviting non-member States to participate, including States whose representation was the subject of controversy; however, the Committee took no formal action on this question.

In a message conveyed to the Committee at its opening meeting, the Secretary-General stated that the Committee was facing very disturbing developments in the international situation, which emphasized the importance and urgency of the disarmament process. He said that full use should be made of bilateral, regional or multilateral arrangements as part of that process, especially when new tensions arose.

The Committee held 48 formal plenary meetings and 45 informal meetings. Its agenda and the programme of work for the first part of its session were elaborated in the course of consultations and adopted on 19 February and 11 March respectively; the programme of work for the second part was adopted on 17 June.

In its report to the General Assembly's 1980 regular session, the Committee provided a detailed account of the year's work. This is summarized below.

Nuclear test ban

In accordance with an Assembly request of 11 December 1979<sup>1</sup> that the Committee on Disarmament should initiate negotiations on a comprehensive test-ban treaty as a matter of highest priority, the item on a nuclear test ban was placed first on the Committee's agenda. Although a number of States called for an early start on substantial negotiations, there was disagreement on how the Committee should set about initiating them. Committee members known as the "Group of 21" --Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, Burma, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zaire--supported by the group of Eastern European States and Mongolia, favoured the establishment of a working group to conduct concrete negotiations within the

Committee. In written statements of 27 February and 4 March, the Group of 21 stated that there was adequate material to initiate immediate negotiations on the cessation of nuclear-weapon testing in all environments, and working groups on this and other priority issues provided the best available machinery for conducting such negotiations. Australia, on the other hand, supported by Canada, Italy and the Netherlands, suggested that the Committee should work out the institutional framework within which a seismic detection system to monitor adherence to a comprehensive test ban could operate.

The USSR supported the establishment of a working group on condition that all the nuclear powers would take part in it and that its purpose would be to discuss questions relating to the complete and general prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests. The USSR believed that such a discussion should not in any way conflict with the ongoing trilateral (USSR/United Kingdom/United States) negotiations on a treaty prohibiting nuclear-weapon tests in all environments and a protocol covering nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes. The United Kingdom and the United States were of the view that the best way forward lay in the tripartite negotiations.

The United Kingdom, on behalf of the three negotiating powers, introduced a report on 31 July on their negotiations. The report recorded that considerable progress had been made and provided information on the scope of the treaty, its protocol, a procedure for amendment and verification procedures, including challenge procedures and special arrangements for on-site inspection.

Several Committee members welcomed the fact that the report was more detailed than previous ones, although concern was generally expressed at the slow pace of progress. Some members commented on the substance of the report. For instance, Algeria, Canada, India, Nigeria, Pakistan, Sweden and Venezuela were critical of a proposal that any amendments to the treaty and decisions taken by the review conference would require the assent of all permanent members of the Security Council. Canada, Nigeria and others favouring a treaty of long duration noted that the proposed duration was not clear.

India and Mexico called for a moratorium on all further tests pending the outcome of the trilateral negotiations. The United States, however, did not believe a moratorium was a good idea because the three powers were engaged in a technically complex process of elaborating adequate verification procedures; a moratorium, by definition not based on such procedures, could seriously complicate efforts to develop them.

The Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events, which held sessions from 11 to 15 February and from 7 to 16 July, submitted two progress reports, which the Committee approved on 19 February and 24 July. The Ad Hoc Group had set up five study groups to deal with specific issues of a system for international seismic data exchange: on seismological stations and station networks; on data to be regularly exchanged; on the format and procedures for exchanging that data; on the format and procedures for exchanging other data; and on procedures to be used at international data centres. The Group considered further sessions necessary.

On 18 July, on a proposal by Belgium, the Committee held an informal meeting with the Ad Hoc Group to discuss progress and learn of the possibilities of national participation in an international seismic data-exchange system and how it might contribute to verification.

Australia provided an illustrative list of topics concerning an international seismic monitoring system which the Committee might examine, outlined under headings of legal aspects, administrative and financial aspects, and distribution of and access to information. Canada provided a compendium of arms control verification proposals and a quantitative working paper on the compendium, prepared by its defence department.

In addition, the Federal Republic of Germany had offered a workshop at Erlangen from 3 to 5 July to demonstrate modern seismographic equipment.

Committee members expressed appreciation for the Ad Hoc Group's work. However, Japan expressed regret that a proposed experimental global exercise on seismic data exchange seemed to be receding into the future. The Group's Chairman reported that it had not been possible to obtain a consensus on conditions for starting the proposed exercise, but that once a text for a test-ban treaty had emerged, progress would be faster.

The Committee on Disarmament was not able to commence specific negotiations on a nuclear test ban as the General Assembly had requested, but noted in its report that it would pursue its efforts, taking into account the proposals and extensive discussion on the question during its 1980 meetings.

STUDY ON A COMPREHENSIVE NUCLEAR-TEST BAN

On 16 April, 1980, the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee the report of the study on a comprehensive nuclear-test ban requested by the General Assembly in 1979.<sup>2</sup>

The report, prepared with the assistance of four consultant experts, summarized negotiations that had led to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water (Partial Test-ban Treaty), signed at Moscow on 5 August 1963. It listed Assembly resolutions on the question and outlined the main developments in negotiating bodies from 1963 to 1979, including progress in the trilateral negotiations. The report also referred to the major unresolved issues: verification problems, such as a seismic monitoring system, on-site inspection and the extent of State participation in verification arrangements; the scope of the ban, encompassing both peaceful nuclear explosions and laboratory tests; and the duration of the ban.

The study indicated that of 1,221 nuclear explosions reported to have been conducted between 1945 and 1979, 488 were carried out in the 18 years preceding the conclusion of the 1963 Partial Test-ban Treaty, and 733 in the 16 years after its signing. Thus, the rate of testing was, on average, 45 per year after the Treaty as compared to 27 per year before it. The three nuclear-weapon States parties to that Treaty—the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States—had accounted for more than 90 per cent of all nuclear explosions.

The report concluded that more intensive negotiations were essential, because the achievement of a comprehensive nuclear-test ban would have a major impact on non-proliferation and arms limitation and was the first and most urgent step towards a cessation of the nuclear arms race, in particular with regard to its qualitative aspects. The experts reiterated the view that such a ban would reinforce the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons<sup>3</sup> (Non-Proliferation Treaty) by demonstrating the awareness of the major nuclear powers of their obligation under the Treaty to pursue negotiations in good faith on effective measures relating to cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date. They also noted that, in order to achieve its purpose, the comprehensive test ban must be such as to endure.

Cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament

During 1980, nuclear arms limitation and disarmament were discussed within general statements in the Committee as well as in the context of an agenda item on the cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament.

Some members were of the view that suitable conditions did not exist for multilateral negotiations on nuclear disarmament. Others disagreed and considered that substantial negotiations on certain concrete issues should begin without delay in view of the gravity of the threat posed by the continuing nuclear arms race and the overriding importance and urgency of the final objective. Brazil, India and Pakistan, among others, stressed the responsibility of the Committee in the nuclear disarmament field, particularly in view of current international circumstances.

Addressing the question of how the Committee should deal with the agenda item, Eastern European countries and those of the Group of 21 recalled the high priority the General Assembly had accorded to negotiations on the cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament, requesting the Committee to undertake, at the beginning of its 1980 session, preparatory consultations for initiating those negotiations.<sup>4</sup> A variety of views was expressed on such questions as the role of the Committee and its relationship to other negotiating forums, the basis for negotiations in the Committee, and the approach to the whole complex of problems involved in negotiations on the subject.

Hungary recalled the working paper that seven socialist countries of Eastern Europe and Mongolia had submitted in 1979<sup>5</sup> on those countries' approach to negotiations on ending production of nuclear weapons and gradually reducing stockpiles. Hungary considered that the participation in the negotiations of all five nuclear-weapon States was indispensable, and observed that the current composition of the Committee made it possible to proceed in that way. In the opinion of Romania, the eight-power proposals submitted in 1979 and those by the Group of 21 on how the Committee should proceed,<sup>6</sup> together with the many ideas and suggestions put forward at formal and informal meetings of the Committee, provided a good point of departure for continuing the dialogue.

China, addressing the question of where to begin nuclear disarmament, could not accept the proposition that the first step should be to stop the production of nuclear weapons. The first step, in its view, was for the nuclear-weapon States with the largest nuclear arsenals to reduce their nuclear armaments. Moreover, equal importance should be given to conventional and nuclear disarmament. France considered that nuclear disarmament remained the particular responsibility of the two major powers as long as the disproportion between their arsenals and those of the other nuclear powers continued to be of the current magnitude.

India reiterated its conviction that, pending nuclear disarmament, there should be total prohibition of the use of such weapons. It proposed a five-phase programme for negotiations, encompassing those for an international convention on the renunciation of the use of nuclear weapons, leading eventually to complete nuclear disarmament: identification of problems in the negotiation of such a convention; elaboration of the terms of reference in negotiating a mutually acceptable balance of conventional forces in the European theatre; preparation of a phased programme to achieve such a balance; conclusion of a protocol prohibiting the use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances; and progress towards genuine and comprehensive nuclear disarmament.

Two proposals on nuclear disarmament were presented to the Committee: one, by the German Democratic Republic on behalf also of Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland and the USSR, suggested steps, such as preparatory consultations and establishment of an ad hoc working group, to be taken immediately for the practical implementation of the 1979 proposals of the Group of 21 and the eight socialist States on negotiations on ending the production of all types of nuclear weapons and gradually reducing stockpiles until they were completely destroyed; the other, by the Group of 21, was a working paper on the cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament, also proposing that a working group be established to begin negotiations on issues, enumerated in the paper, which the Group felt needed to be addressed.

Another working paper, by Australia and Canada, reviewed the question of the prohibition of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes as it had been considered and debated over the past 25 years.

There was general regret expressed in the Committee that the USSR/United States strategic arms limitation Treaty, known as SALT II, had not entered into force and that negotiations for a SALT III agreement had not begun, although assessments differed as to why the process was lagging. A number of countries, including Japan, Mexico and Nigeria, stressed the special responsibility of the two major nuclear powers for nuclear arms limitation and disarmament, and the critical importance of a prompt ratification of SALT II and the continuation of the SALT process with a view to achieving significant and substantial reductions of strategic weapons and qualitative limitations thereon. The United States said that its President's request for a delay in consideration of the Treaty by the United States Senate had been occasioned by the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan in December 1979, and pointed out that he had reaffirmed the United States commitment to nuclear-weapons control and to ratification of SALT II when circumstances permitted. The USSR held that long before events in Afghanistan the United States had begun unilaterally to break off bilateral negotiations on arms limitations. Hungary stated that the reasons could be found in the plans of some Western circles to gain military superiority, no longer accepting the principle of parity.

A related matter which also figured prominently in the debate was the question of nuclear-weapon systems in Europe. Various Eastern European countries criticized a decision of the Council of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) of 12 December 1979 to manufacture and develop in Western Europe new United States medium-range nuclear missiles, holding that it destroyed the basis for negotiations on limiting such weapons. Western countries, on the other hand, pointed out that the NATO decision also contained an invitation for negotiations on the limitation of land-based, long-range theatre missiles.

In its report to the Assembly, the Committee agreed to resume intensive consideration in 1981 of nuclear disarmament and cessation of the nuclear arms race, taking into account the proposals and views presented during the current session. (For General Assembly consideration, see p. 41.)

against the threat or use of nuclear weapons

International arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons were discussed by the Committee in February and March, and subsequently mainly in closed meetings by an Ad Hoc Working Group it established on 17 March to continue negotiations on the subject. The Group was to report before the end of the 1980 session.

Chaired by Egypt, the Group held nine meetings and conducted informal consultations between 25 April and 28 July to reconcile divergent perceptions of what would constitute the best type of assurance. The Committee adopted the Group's report on 9 August, including it in its own report to the General Assembly.

There was recognition of the urgent need to reach agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons. The Group had examined the suggestion that, on the recommendation of the Assembly, the Security Council might consider the question of concrete measures of assurance. The Group had agreed that no interim arrangement, such as the possible adoption by the Council of a resolution on assurance measures, should substitute for the search for a common approach, a formula acceptable to all, which could be included in an international, legally binding instrument. The Group noted that there was no objection, in principle, to the idea of an international convention, although the difficulties involved were also pointed out.

The Committee approved the Group's recommendation that, at the beginning of its 1981 session, the Committee should continue negotiations towards reaching agreement on effective international arrangements on the matter.

The USSR stated in the Committee that it was in favour of the elaboration of an international convention by which nuclear-weapon States would undertake to give non-nuclear-weapon States appropriate guarantees of security, and non-nuclear-weapon States having no such weapons on their territory would renounce the production or acquisition of nuclear weapons. The USSR believed that an essential drawback of the approach adopted by some nuclear States, characterized mainly by considerations of membership in military and political alliances, was the fact that they did not base the criterion for providing "negative" guarantees (non-use undertakings on objective factors such as the non-possession of nuclear weapons or the non-deployment of such weapons on a State's territory, but on purely subjective considerations-in particular, on one nuclear power's assessment of the involvement of a non-nuclear State in acts of another nuclear power.

Speaking of possible parallel measures, the USSR stated that a joint declaration, or separate but identical declarations, by all nuclear powers providing negative guarantees to non-nuclear countries, with Security Council approval, could have a certain positive significance.

The United States said that the assurance it had given in 1978<sup>7</sup>-a solemn declaration by its President-which applied to the vast majority of non-nuclear States, was fitting, proper and effective. The 1978 statement could be taken as a firm and reliable declaration of United States policy.

China stated that all nuclear-weapon States should undertake not to use nuclear weapons against non-nuclear States and nuclear-free zones, and had long ago unilaterally declared that in no circumstances would it be the first to use nuclear weapons.

In a statement on behalf of the Group of 21, Sri Lanka expressed disappointment that the search for a common approach which could be included in an international instrument had not been fruitful. The Group reiterated its view that the nuclear-weapon States had an obligation categorically to assure all non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons. Pending conclusion of a legally binding instrument for that purpose, consideration should be given to other appropriate measures.

Pakistan continued to believe that an international convention would be the most appropriate form in which assurances could be provided. It was prepared, however, to explore the possibility of recommending that the Security Council adopt a resolution concerning non-use assurances as an interim measure, and it submitted a draft text attempting to identify the elements of a possible Council resolution.

Sweden stated that the responsibility for formulating a binding set of assurances acceptable to all States must rest primarily with the nuclear powers. It had reservations about a convention, which would be based on the assumption that nuclear-weapon and non-nuclear-weapon States would enter into some kind of reciprocal obligations. Non-nuclear States had already accepted their obligations by acceding to the Non-Proliferation Treaty and there was no reason for them to repeat this undertaking.

Bulgaria, Hungary and Poland supported the idea of an international convention on negative security guarantees and other possible, parallel measures, including interim arrangements, which might add to the credibility and the effectiveness of existing non-use undertakings and facilitate work on a convention. The Federal Republic of Germany stated that countries which enjoyed the nuclear umbrella of a nuclear-weapon State did not have the same need for the benefit of a guarantee as did States that renounced acquisition by entering the Non-Proliferation Treaty or other internationally binding commitment. The question of stationing or non-stationing of nuclear weapons was irrelevant for assessing the need of a non-nuclear-weapon State for protection. Canada believed it necessary to define the notion of "non-nuclear-weapon State" in a way satisfactory to all. Australia said non-nuclear-weapon State status could and must be verifiable by membership of the Non-Proliferation Treaty or by an equally effective alternative.

By a letter of 12 March to the Committee Chairman, Finland, not a Committee member, presented its views on the subject: all approaches to achieving arrangements for non-use assurances should be explored, all interested Governments involved, and no efforts spared.

Chemical weapons

The Committee continued its efforts in 1980 towards elaborating an agreement on the prohibition of chemical weapons. The General Assembly in 1979 had urged negotiations on such an agreement as a matter of high priority.* For this purpose, many Committee members pressed for the setting up of a working group on chemical weapons.

The Federal Republic of Germany, welcoming the decision of the USSR and the United States to continue their bilateral negotiations on a chemical weapons convention, expressed hope that such a working group, taking stock of the proposals submitted thus far, would designate the areas to be covered by the proposed convention. Hungary hoped that resumption of the bilateral talks would facilitate the Committee's work and vice versa. Poland stated that the group's mandate should include a recommendation to elaborate, first, a definitive outline of the treaty; on that basis and with the assistance of experts, it should analyse in detail specific issues and questions on which basic agreement had been reached bilaterally and on which general consensus had emerged in the Committee. The USSR did not object to the establishment of a special working group, but at the current stage felt its mandate should be restricted. The Netherlands proposed an initial work programme for the group focusing on preparation of a chemical weapons questionnaire and analysis of and commentary on the replies. Australia and France tabled responses to a chemical weapons questionnaire which the Netherlands had outlined in 1979.

On 17 March, the Committee established an Ad Hoc Working Group, for the duration of its 1980 session, to examine and define issues to be dealt with in the negotiations on a chemical weapons convention. The Group was to take into account all existing proposals and future initiatives.

The Group held 16 meetings and its Chairman, Japan, also conducted informal consultations between 23 April and 1 August, structuring its work under three general headings: scope, verification and other issues. According to the Group's report, which the Committee adopted on 9 August and included in its report to the General Assembly, there appeared to be a general convergence of views on some issues relating to activities that could be prohibited under a convention (development, production, stockpiling, acquisition, retention, and transfer and assistance to other States) and to specific items, subject to agreed definitions, that could be prohibited (chemical warfare agents, chemical munitions, precursors, chemical weapons, equipment or systems, and means of or facilities for producing these items).

There was also a general convergence of views on some criteria that might be used to determine the scope of the convention, action States parties might be required to take to implement the ban, and exceptions that might be allowed for civilian or certain non-hostile military purposes.

The report further stated that the importance of adequate verification was recognized. There appeared to be no agreement, however, on certain other issues. Among them were such questions as whether a convention should cover chemical warfare capability (the subject of a Swedish paper enumerating activities, facilities and materials to be prohibited in order to attain such an objective), to what extent a ban on the use of chemical weapons was already covered in the Geneva Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, of 17 June 1925 (the subject of a paper by Mongolia contrasting the two instruments), and what would be a realistic verification system.

The Working Group recommended that the Committee set up at the beginning of its 1981 session a further working group to continue and advance the work undertaken in 1980.

Acting on an Australian proposal, the Committee itself held four informal meetings with experts on chemical weapons between 24 and 26 June.

Among the working papers submitted to the Committee was a study by Finland on the identification of degradation products of potential organophosphorus warfare agents, and a report by Yugoslavia outlining the current situation, investigations in progress and achievements regarding the problem of medical protection against nerve-gas poisoning.

China and Poland submitted papers on the issues to be dealt with in a convention on the prohibition of chemical weapons. Belgium enumerated in a working paper the criteria to be taken into account in defining a chemical warfare agent and chemical munitions. Canada, Indonesia, Morocco and Yugoslavia suggested, in written proposals, definitions of chemical warfare agents or chemical weapons.

In the Committee's discussions, Algeria, Bulgaria, Canada, China, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Iran, Italy, Japan, Mongolia, the Netherlands, Pakistan, Poland and Sweden were among the many members which stressed the urgency of reaching agreement on total prohibition of chemical weapons.

A number of delegations referred to the problems related to verification. China favoured international supervision and inspection to ensure the effective implementation of the treaty provisions.

France outlined, in a working paper, control and verification elements for a total prohibition of single-purpose (supertoxic and incapacitating) agents and for limiting the manufacture of dual-purpose agents and irritants to only those required to meet civilian needs.

The Federal Republic of Germany said that any effective verification of a chemical weapons ban must provide for the application of international control measures, which could and should be combined with national ones. Canada, in a working paper on verification within a convention, suggested the establishment of an international verification control agency and national verification agencies in each State as well. Nigeria also envisaged a system that would help to combine both national and international means of verification.

On 8 July, the United States introduced, on behalf also of the USSR, a joint progress report on their bilateral negotiations on the prohibition of chemical weapons. Reviewing the current status of the negotiations, the report stated that the two sides were proceeding from the premise that the scope of the prohibition in a future convention would be determined on the basis of the general-purpose criterion: the parties should assume the obligation never to develop, produce, otherwise acquire, stockpile or retain supertoxic, other lethal or other harmful chemicals, or precursors of such chemicals, unless they were intended for non-hostile purposes or military purposes not involving the use of chemical weapons, and provided their types and quantities were consistent with such purposes. Agreement had been reached, it was stated, that the destruction or diversion of declared stocks should be completed not later than 10 years after a State became party to the convention. No agreement had been reached, however, on the question of the time for beginning the destruction or diversion of stocks, and other issues were the subject of continuing negotiations. The two States believed that the fulfilment of the obligations assumed under the convention must be subject to adequate verification, which should be based on a combination of national and international measures. Although important verification issues remained unresolved, the two States informed the Committee of their intention to continue their persistent efforts to find mutually acceptable solutions.

In the Committee, some States referred to allegations of the use of chemical weapons in various parts of the world. Viet Nam forwarded a memorandum of 21 January on the use of chemicals by the United States in Indo-China during the Viet Nam conflict, and Democratic Kampuchea, in statements on 5 February and a report of 25 February, transmitted on 26 March, charged intensification of the use of chemical weapons by Viet Nam. Afghanistan transmitted a Government statement of 11 April charging that, in an undeclared war against it, subversive bands had used lethal chemical weapons given to them from outside the country. In a working paper of 1 August, Pakistan said the charges appeared to have been concocted to shift attention from internal Suppression.

New types and systems of weapons of mass destruction; radiological weapons

The two-component agenda item on new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons, and radiological weapons, was considered by the Committee periodically during the year.

Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria and the German Democratic Republic were among Eastern European States that again stressed the necessity of an appropriate agreement on the prohibition of new types and systems of weapons of mass destruction. The USSR explained that its approach included: first, comprehensive prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types and systems of such weapons, with a list of specific examples of the types banned; second, the possibility of adding to the list; and third, the possibility of concluding individual agreements on specific weapons. Supported by Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia and Romania, the USSR proposed the establishment of an ad hoc group of experts to prepare a draft comprehensive agreement and consider the question of concluding special agreements on individual types and systems of weapons.

The United Kingdom emphasized that a treaty dealing with hypothetical weapons could not fulfil the requirements of specificity of scope and susceptibility of verification. Moreover, the role envisaged for the expert group, to prepare specific agreements on individual types of weapons of mass destruction which might be identified, would only become possible once such weapons had been identified. Australia and the Netherlands suggested that the Committee should hold informal discussions at each session, with the assistance of experts, to review any new scientific and technical developments, potentially relevant to new weapons of mass destruction, which could have arms control implications.

Cuba and Pakistan said they would prefer finding a way of stopping the possibility of development and production of new weapons of mass destruction before they saw the light of day. Supported by Mexico, Pakistan suggested the establishment of a group of scientific experts who could elucidate the current situation regarding possibilities and dangers of the development of new weapons and systems of mass destruction and the problems relating to their prohibition. Alternatively, Pakistan added, the Committee could commission an in-depth technical study by governmental experts. Still another idea was offered by Venezuela, namely, that a working group be established in 1981 to study all arguments in favour of both a general agreement and of specific agreements with a view to devising a common approach combining the two alternatives.

No consensus was achieved in the Committee on the setting up of a working group on the general aspects of the issue.

General Assembly consideration of the question of banning new weapons of mass destruction, see p. 75.)

With regard to the specific issue of radiological weapons, several members, including Italy, Poland, the USSR and the United States, considered that negotiations should be initiated on the basis of the agreed joint proposal on major elements of an international convention prohibiting those weapons, which had been submitted to the Committee by the USSR and the United States in 1979.<sup>9</sup>

On 17 March, the Committee established for the duration of the 1980 session an Ad Hoc Working Group to try to reach agreement on a convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons. It based its work on a compilation of documents, statements and proposals covering 1979 and 1980.

Discussion of the issue in the Committee and the Ad Hoc Working Group revealed that, while all members were ready to negotiate a treaty, different concepts existed concerning approach, the priority of a radiological weapons ban, the role and scope of the treaty, the definition of radiological weapons, and procedures for verifying compliance, as well as some other areas. Sweden, for example, felt that the dangers posed by possible use of radiological weapons were limited compared to the immensely graver dangers from radioactive substances produced by nuclear weapons, particularly those of "dirty" design or excessive yield. Sweden, as well as Egypt and Mexico, felt that further consideration of what constituted radiological weapons was necessary, referring specifically to so-called particle-beam weapons. Expressing major reservations, India said that the urgent priority should be given to nuclear weapons and also called for a more precise definition of radiological weapons; it particularly objected to any exclusion from the scope of the treaty of radiation from nuclear explosive devices. Venezuela proposed that the convention should not refer to radiological weapons, but should concentrate on the prohibition of the use of radioactive materials for military purposes and of radiological methods of warfare.

On 7 August, the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Working Group (Hungary) presented the Group's report on its 16 meetings held between 24 April and 1 August. The Committee adopted it on 9 August and included it in its report to the Assembly. It identified main elements in negotiations of a treaty and an order for discussing them, and summarized views expressed on those elements.

Referring to the divergencies of view, the Group's Chairman stated that more time was needed to study the various concepts and proposals. The Group recommended that the Committee establish, for its 1981 session, a further ad hoc working group to continue negotiations on a treaty banning radiological weapons. Several members expressed disappointment that the Group had been unable to agree on a text of a draft convention, but virtually all considered the discussion of its main elements to have been useful.

Comprehensive programme of disarmament

The elements of a comprehensive programme of disarmament were considered by the Committee from 19 to 29 February and from 17 to 28 March 1980. Egypt, Mexico and Zaire were among the many members which referred to the Disarmament Commission's successful elaboration of the elements of such a programme in 1979.<sup>10</sup> Cuba and Zaire expressed the hope that the Committee might complete the programme before the second special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, in 1982. On 17 March, the Committee established an Ad Hoc Working Group to initiate negotiations with that end in view.

Brazil reiterated its concern about some of the formulations included in the text of the elements, particularly regarding what Brazil felt was its timidity in dealing with the question of responsibilities and obligations of the nuclear-weapon powers for nuclear disarmament.

Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Mongolia submitted a set of proposals for the main elements of a comprehensive programme, setting forth their views on its main objectives and principles, and the main negotiation and mobilization efforts as well as negotiating machinery needed.

The Working Group, chaired by Nigeria, held 10 meetings between 19 June and 29 July. Its report to the Committee was adopted on 9 August and was included in the Committee's report to the General Assembly. The Group had exchanged ideas on six of seven chapters of an outline of the programme proposed by its Chairman: objectives, principles, priorities, measures, stages of implementation, and machinery and procedure; substantive discussion of a preamble or introduction was deferred. The Group recommended that it be enabled to resume its work immediately on the commencement of the Committee's 1981 session when it should be able to begin elaborating a text.

Other issues and communications

Although not considered in 1980, a working paper by Italy on control and limitation of international arms transfers, submitted to the Committee, advocated setting up a United Nations ad hoc body to monitor, control and limit arms trade through agreed procedures.

Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic, Poland and Romania each submitted statements to the Committee outlining their positions on disarmament questions and detente. The German Democratic Republic transmitted a communique adopted at a meeting of the Committee of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the member States of the Warsaw Treaty on Friendship, Co-operation and Mutual Assistance, held at Berlin on 5 and 6 December 1979, at which special attention was given to detente and military disarmament.

Poland forwarded a resolution adopted in February 1980 by the Eighth Congress of the Polish United Workers' Party endorsing the Government's foreign policy. The USSR transmitted extracts from an address delivered by its President in Moscow on 22 February giving an overview of USSR foreign policy and the international situation. Egypt charged in a letter of 11 April that the statement contained unfounded slanderous allegations against its President and policy on aspects of the Middle East question beyond the Committee's competence. By a letter of 11 April to the Secretary-General, the Foreign Minister of the USSR outlined the main areas in which efforts should be concentrated during the Second Disarmament Decade (the 1980s). In June, Poland transmitted the text of a declaration adopted on 15 May by the States parties to the Warsaw Treaty, indicating the areas in which they felt it was necessary to concentrate disarmament efforts. Mongolia transmitted a statement of 20 May in support of the declaration.

Decisions of the General Assembly

By two resolutions adopted at its regular 1980 session, the General Assembly sought to give impetus to the negotiating work of the Committee on Disarmament on priority questions and to ensure that the Committee reviewed its membership before 1982.

On 12 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 35/152 J-concerning negotiations under consideration by the Committee-by a recorded vote of 132 to 0, with 13 abstentions. By its terms, the Assembly urged the Committee to continue, intensify or undertake substantive negotiations on the priority questions of disarmament on its agenda. It invited the Committee members involved in separate negotiations on specific priority questions to intensify their efforts to conclude them successfully and report on them fully to the Committee. The Assembly requested the Committee to continue negotiations in 1981 on a comprehensive programme of disarmament for submission to its 1982 special session devoted to disarmament.

The text had been approved by the First Committee on 25 November by a recorded vote of 124 to 0, with 12 abstentions. It was sponsored by 27 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

In introducing the draft, Yugoslavia observed that the Committee on Disarmament was expected to contribute directly to the implementation of the recommendations and decisions unanimously adopted by the Assembly at its 1978 special session devoted to disarmament. However, many of those important actions had not even been initiated, and negotiations must be intensified. The sponsors were guided by the desire to support the Committee's work as an effective body for international negotiations on disarmament problems.

Explaining its abstention before the vote, the USSR stressed that the contents, scope and character of the information on negotiations being conducted outside the framework of the Committee on Disarmament fell within the competence of the States taking part in those negotiations. The United States pointed out that certain disarmament issues, for example nuclear disarmament, should be addressed by the countries directly concerned, and involvement by the Committee on Disarmament at an inappropriate stage would not be useful and could even jeopardize the productive potential of particular negotiations.

Also on 12 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 35/156 I by a recorded vote of 135 to 0, with 10 abstentions. By its terms, the Assembly requested the Committee on Disarmament to continue to consider the modalities of the review of its membership, recommending that the first review be completed during the Assembly's 1982 special session devoted to disarmament. It also reaffirmed that States not members of the Committee should be invited at their request to participate in its work when their particular concerns were under discussion.

The resolution was approved by the First Committee on 25 November by 127 votes to 0, with 11 abstentions. It was sponsored by 26 countries (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Introducing the draft, Turkey stated that the sponsors wished the Committee on Disarmament to continue to examine the membership question, and wanted to reaffirm the right of all States to take an active part in disarmament negotiations, as had been recognized by consensus at the 1978 special session. Greece, a sponsor, added that it should be ensured that interested States could participate in the negotiating body at regular intervals on the basis of rotation of membership.

On behalf also of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, Czechoslovakia expressed the view that the question of reviewing the Committee's composition should be resolved within the framework of that body itself on the basis of consensus, noting that the Committee in its 1980 report had stated its intention to carry out such a review at an appropriate time. Prescribing when and how to resolve this question was interference with the Committee's prerogatives. Mexico interpreted recognition of the right of all States to participate in disarmament negotiations in the light of provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,<sup>11</sup> stating that, while all Member States should be represented on deliberative disarmament bodies, negotiating bodies should have a relatively small membership. Nigeria said its vote in favour was on the understanding that the invitation to participate in the Committee's work should be in strict accord with its rules of procedure.

Recalling its resolution 34/83 B of 11 December 1979,

Expressing its satisfaction that the Committee on Disarmament has made progress in respect of the improvement of its organization and methods of work,

Affirming that the establishment of ad hoc working groups on substantive disarmament issues will promote the negotiating role of the Committee on Disarmament,

Expressing its concern that, despite improvements in its methods of work, the Committee on Disarmament has not thus far been able to achieve concrete results on disarmament issues which have been under consideration for a number of years,

Convinced that the Committee on Disarmament, as the single multilateral negotiating body on disarmament, should play the central role in substantive negotiations on priority questions of disarmament and on the implementation of the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Stressing that negotiations on specific disarmament issues conducted outside the Committee on Disarmament should not in any way constitute an impediment to the negotiations on such questions in the Committee,

1. Urges the Committee on Disarmament to continue or undertake, during its session to be held in 1981, substantive negotiations on the priority questions of disarmament on its agenda, in accordance with the provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and the other relevant resolutions of the Assembly;

2. Invites the members of the Committee on Disarmament involved in separate negotiations on specific priority questions of disarmament to intensify their efforts to achieve a positive conclusion of those negotiations without further delay for submission to the Committee and, at the same time, to submit to the Committee a full report on their separate negotiations and the results achieved in order to contribute most directly to the negotiations in the Committee in accordance with paragraph 1 above;

3. Requests the Committee on Disarmament, at its session to be held in 1981, to continue negotiations on the elaboration of a comprehensive programme of disarmament, and to submit the programme in time for consideration by the General Assembly at the second special session devoted to disarmament;

4. Also requests the Committee on Disarmament to intensify its work on priority questions of disarmament, so that it may be in a position to contribute, through concrete accomplishments, to a favourable climate for the second special session Of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament:

5. Further requests the Committee on Disarmament to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session the item entitled "Report of the Committee on Disarmament."

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that all the peoples of the world have a vital interest in the success of disarmament negotiations,

Recognizing also that all States have the duty to contribute to and the right to participate in disarmament negotiations, as acknowledged in paragraph 28 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, Recalling, to that effect, its resolution 33/91 G of 16 December 1978.

Noting section IX of the rules of procedure of the Committee on Disarmament, relating to the participation of non-member States in the work of the Committee,

Recalling a/so that the membership of the Committee on Disarmament is to be reviewed at regular intervals in accordance with paragraph 120 of the Final Document,

1. Takes note of the relevant part of the report of the Committee on Disarmament on its session held in 1980 in which it is stated that the Committee will, at an appropriate time, conduct a review of its membership and report on the results to the General Assembly;

2. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to continue to consider the modalities of the review of the membership of the Committee and to report on this subject to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session;

3. Recommends that the first review of the membership of the Committee on Disarmament should be completed, following appropriate consultations among Member States, during the next special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament;

4. Reaffirms that States not members of the Committee, upon their request, should be invited by it to participate in the work of the Committee when the particular concerns of those States are under discussion;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session an item relating to a review of the membership of the Committee on Disarmament.

Disarmament Commission

Report of the Disarmament Commission

In 1980, the United Nations Disarmament Commission held its substantive session at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 12 May to 6 June.

The major emphasis during the session was on preparing elements of a draft Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, as directed by the General Assembly in 1979.<sup>12</sup> The other substantive items on the agenda were carried over, in modified form, from the 1979 session. The first of these concerned the consideration of various aspects of the arms race, particularly the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament, and the elaboration of a general approach to negotiations on nuclear and conventional disarmament. The second concerned the harmonization of views on the reduction of military budgets and reallocation of resources being used for military purposes to economic and social development, together with identification of ways and means to achieve agreements on freezing or restraining military expenditures in a balanced and satisfactorily verified manner.

Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade

Early in the session, the Commission established an informal, open-ended working group to prepare the elements of a Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade. The group held 16 meetings between 16 May and 4 June.

On 5 June, reporting on the status of the group's work, its Chairman (Nigeria) stated that consensus had been reached on some parts of the draft Declaration, which the group had agreed would form part of a resolution; on other sections there was disagreement, requiring further consultations and negotiations by the Commission as a whole.

Following informal consultations, agreement was reached on nearly all of the disputed paragraphs and, on 6 June, the Disarmament Commission adopted by consensus its report for submission to the thirty-fifth (1980) session of the General Assembly. The text of the elements of the Declaration none the less contained a few areas where alternative texts were included in square brackets for final decision by the Assembly.

These points fell under a section of the draft relating to priority activities during the Decade. One case concerned the wording of a call on the Committee on Disarmament to negotiate agreed texts on specific subjects before the Assembly's 1982 special session on disarmament. Another was whether one of these subjects was to be effective international arrangements or a binding international legal instrument to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons. Another instance dealt with the time-frame for priority measures. Yet another concerned the wording relating to the conclusion of an agreement prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons. A final area of alternative wording dealt with avoidance of the use of nuclear weapons and the prevention of nuclear war and related objectives.

A number of countries made statements expressing satisfaction that consensus had been reached on the report to the Assembly. However, a few members drew attention to some of the elements contained in the draft Declaration which they were unable to accept as being completely satisfactory. The Federal Republic of Germany, for example, felt that the Commission had been somewhat pessimistic in its assessment of the achievements of the first Disarmament Decade (the 1970s). A similar view was expressed by the United States, which noted that no mention or explicit reference had been made to the achievements of the 1970s; it was important that the international agreements achieved be recognized. Other countries, such as Finland, New Zealand and the United Kingdom, felt that the question of the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, and especially the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,<sup>13</sup> had not been dealt with in sufficient detail in the draft.

Some members felt that not enough attention had been paid to the question of conventional weapons. China, for instance, reiterated its belief that nuclear and conventional disarmament should be carried out in conjunction with each other. India felt that acceptance of the concept of a linkage between nuclear and conventional disarmament risked eroding the emphasis on nuclear disarmament, responsibility for which lay with the nuclear-weapon States.

While some countries, such as Japan, believed it would be unrealistic to fix target dates for the specific disarmament measures to be realized during the Second Disarmament Decade, others, most notably India, strongly advocated the need for a clear and unambiguous time-frame, particularly in the areas identified in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly<sup>14</sup> in 1978 as being worthy of priority negotiations. A number of States, including Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, Romania, the USSR and Yugoslavia, expressed general satisfaction with the draft Declaration as a whole.

Aspects of the arms race

With regard to the agenda item on various aspects of the arms race, the Commission held six informal meetings between 27 May and 3 June. It adopted by consensus on 6 June a text noting with grave concern that the arms race among the major powers, particularly the nuclear arms race, had further escalated and there were grave prospects of even further intensification. The Commission noted with profound regret that there had been a marked lack of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action<sup>15</sup> agreed upon in the Final Document of the 1978 special session and that even the talks on a few limited arms-control and -limitation measures had either been suspended or were proceeding very slowly. It recommended that: the Assembly call on all States to take measures to implement the Programme of Action, including resumption of the interrupted talks and agreement on measures for the Second Disarmament Decade; urgent action be taken to prevent the further spiralling of the nuclear arms race; and the Committee on Disarmament continue its efforts to undertake negotiations with a view to the cessation of the nuclear arms race and the achievement of nuclear disarmament, in conformity with its mandate.

Further, the Commission noted that, while nuclear disarmament had the highest priority, the Assembly had declared in the 1978 Final Document that, together with negotiations on nuclear disarmament measures, the limitation and gradual reduction of armed forces and conventional weapons should also be resolutely pursued.

The Commission also reported that it had considered a proposal—by Denmark—for a study to be made on disarmament relating to conventional weapons and armed forces. Although the proposal elicited wide support, the Commission noted that strong objections or reservations were expressed.

Reduction of military budgets

The Commission devoted a number of formal meetings, as well as informal ones under the chairmanship of Austria, to a general exchange of views on the question of a gradual, agreed reduction of military budgets and examination of ways to reach agreements to freeze, reduce or otherwise restrain military expenditures. The Commission's recommendations to the Assembly, adopted by consensus on 6 June, stated that the exchange of views had revealed widespread concern about the economic and social costs of the arms race, as well as the conviction that the increase in weapons weakened, rather than strengthened, international security. Member States reiterated that a gradual reduction of military budgets on a mutually agreed basis, for example in absolute figures or in terms of percentage points, particularly by nuclear-weapon and other militarily significant States, would be a major contribution to curbing the arms race and would increase the possibilities of reallocating resources being used for military purposes to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries.

Some members stressed that the primary responsibility for reduction of military budgets rested with the nuclear-weapon States and States with significant military potential, which should be the first to freeze and reduce their military budgets. It was considered that, like other disarmament measures, such reduction should take place in a balanced and equitable manner, the objective at each stage being undiminished security at the lowest possible level of armaments and forces. Adequate verification measures were mentioned, and the view was expressed by some members that a reliable reporting instrument was a pre-condition for agreements. References were also made to the need for the exercise of political will for the initiation of business-like negotiations on the reduction of military budgets, particularly on the part of the major powers; they believed that further consideration of budget comparability or control would only delay such negotiations.

The Commission noted that a working paper submitted by Romania and Sweden had suggested the elaboration of a joint commitment by United Nations Member States in the form of a declaration, expressing their political will to freeze and reduce military expenditures and to exercise restraint in this area pending the conclusion of agreements on reduction. It would call for increased efforts to conclude international agreements to freeze and reduce such expenditures on global, regional and bilateral levels. The declaration was to rest on such principles as: the process should start with the military budgets of the most heavily armed States; it should be carried out without affecting military balance and national security; it should provide for adequate verification measures; and part of the funds released should be reallocated to developing countries. The paper proposed that the General Assembly ask the Commission to work out the main elements of such a joint commitment and ask the Secretary-General to study the legal and technical problems.

The Commission recommended that the Assembly, at its 1980 session, request the Commission to continue at its 1981 session consideration of the question and, in particular, to identify and elaborate the principles which should govern further actions of States in freezing and reducing military expenditures, keeping in mind the possibility of embodying such principles into a suitable document at an appropriate stage.

Before the Commission's report was adopted, India said it considered it premature to make suggestions on the possibility of embodying as yet unidentified principles in a document. Canada and the Netherlands also expressed misgivings on this recommendation.

Other matters

The Commission reported to the Assembly that it had been unable to consider the report of the 1979 United Nations Seminar on Nuclear Collaboration with South Africa,<sup>16</sup> and a list of disarmament proposals contained in the Final Document of the 1978 special session. These subjects had been placed on the agenda, having been transmitted to the Commission in 1979.<sup>17</sup>

Consideration by the General Assembly

On 12 December 1980, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 35/152 F on the report and work of the Disarmament Commission. The Assembly thereby endorsed the Commission's report and recommendations, and asked it to meet for up to four weeks in 1981 to continue its work. This included further consideration of the items mandated to it in 1978<sup>18</sup> and 1979<sup>19</sup> currently on its agenda, with emphasis on the preparation of a report to the Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament, scheduled to be held in 1982.

Since, at the time of adoption of the text, the starting date for the Commission's 1981 session had not been determined, a clause referring to this date-left unfinished by the First Committee-was deleted, at the suggestion of the Committee's Rapporteur.

This resolution was approved by the First Committee on 24 November, also without vote. It was sponsored by Argentina, Bangladesh, Cuba, Cyprus, Egypt, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Romania, Uruguay and Yugoslavia.

Speaking on behalf of the nine member States of the European Community and Greece, the Netherlands said that, despite their approval of the resolution, those States considered that it was not entirely correct to endorse without qualification the Commission's report, which contained certain passages that had not been agreed upon. They also considered that the time-frame implied for completion of work to be submitted to the 1982 special session was perhaps not realistic.

Related Assembly decisions

The General Assembly adopted four other resolutions in December which had a bearing on the work of the Disarmament Commission. By resolution 35/46 of 3 December, the Assembly adopted the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, which the Commission had forwarded to it for consideration with optional formulations on the unagreed paragraphs. Under one of its provisions (paragraph 25), the Assembly was to undertake a review and appraisal in 1985, through the Commission, of progress in implementing the Declaration (see p. 93).

By resolution 35/142A of 12 December, the Assembly requested the Commission to continue in 1981 the consideration of the agenda item on reduction of military budgets and, in particular, to identify and elaborate on principles to govern State action on freezing and reducing military expenditures, keeping in mind their possible future inclusion in a suitable document (see p. 79).

By resolution 35/156A of the same date, the Assembly approved in principle the carrying out of a study on all aspects of the conventional arms race and on disarmament relating to conventional weapons and armed forces, and agreed that the Commission in 1981 should work out the general approach to the study (see p. 110).

By resolution 35/156 D, also of 12 December, the Assembly decided to transmit to the Commission a study, prepared by a group of governmental experts, on all aspects of regional disarmament (see p. 111).

Organizational session (December)

On 8 and 9 December, the Disarmament Commission held two further meetings at which it reviewed the resolutions approved at the Assembly's current session relating to it and discussed its provisional agenda for 1981. In addition, it elected its Chairman and Rapporteur for 1981.

Consideration of disarmament questions by the General Assembly

At its thirty-fifth session, in 1980, the General Assembly had 20 disarmament items on its agenda, two more than in 1979. The Assembly's First Committee held a general debate on all the items together, then took up separately the draft resolutions submitted on each item. These deliberations took place between 15 October and 1 December. As a result of the Committee's recommendations, the Assembly on 12 December adopted 43 disarmament resolutions, 20 of them without a vote.

Most of the resolutions dealt with items which had been before the Assembly for a number of years; some of them included new suggestions in the context of those items. The USSR submitted a new proposal dealing with urgent measures for reducing the danger of war, but it did not press it to a vote since its basic provisions were covered in other resolutions before the Assembly.

By resolutions introducing new suggestions under existing agenda items, the Secretary-

General was requested to prepare studies on conventional disarmament (resolution 35/156 A) and on the question of a World Disarmament Campaign (35/152 I), and to bring up to date a 1977 report on economic and social consequences of the arms race and of military expenditures (35/141). The Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade (35/46) described the goals and principles, activities and priorities of the Decade, and contained provisions concerning implementation, review and appraisal. To make preparations for its second special session devoted to disarmament, in 1982, the Assembly established a Preparatory Committee (35/47) which met for the first time on 4 December 1980. Two resolutions (35/145A and B) contained requests that the Committee on Disarmament establish in 1981 working groups to negotiate a treaty for the prohibition of all nuclear-weapon tests and a comprehensive test-ban treaty. The Committee was also called on to consider establishing a working group for negotiations on the cessation of the nuclear arms race and on nuclear disarmament (152 B and C). The Assembly again declared the use of nuclear weapons to be a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and asked States for proposals on avoiding nuclear war (35/152 D).

Many of the resolutions adopted without a vote dealt with studies requested from the Secretary-General, organizational questions, and general guidelines for disarmament deliberations and negotiations. Consensus was also reached on matters relevant to current disarmament negotiations, such as those on the prohibition of chemical and radiological weapons, following the practice of previous years. Adopted without a vote, for the first time, was a resolution (35/147) to urge steps towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East, including depositing declarations of support for such a zone with the Security Council for consideration. Another resolution (35/156 K), by which the parties that had signed the second strategic arms limitation Treaty (SALT II) were urged to ratify it, was also adopted without a vote.

Questions relating to nuclear disarmament

In efforts to end nuclear-weapon tests, the General Assembly in 1980, by resolutions 35/145 A and B, urged all States to refrain from such testing and reaffirmed its conviction that a treaty to prohibit all nuclear test explosions for all time was a matter of the highest priority; it asked that negotiations towards that end be initiated by the Committee on Disarmament in 1981.

Considering it necessary, until nuclear disarmament was achieved, to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the threat or use of nuclear weapons, the Assembly recommended, by resolution 35/154, that the Security Council examine declarations by nuclear States that they would not use such weapons against non-nuclear States and, if they were found consistent with the objective, approve them. In addition, it asked that the Committee on Disarmament continue negotiations on international arrangements to assure non-nuclear States against the use or threat of use of such weapons (resolution 35/155).

The Committee was also asked to pursue work on the question of a ban on the production of fissionable material for weapons and other explosives (resolution 35/156 H), and to proceed to talks on elaborating an international agreement on the non-stationing of nuclear weapons where there currently were none (resolution 35/156 C).

With regard to studies on nuclear disarmament, the Assembly recommended wide distribution of a completed comprehensive study on nuclear weapons (resolution 35/156 F), and took note of the Secretary-General's report on progress in a study on Israeli nuclear armament (resolution 35/I 57).

The Assembly continued to support regional efforts to create nuclear-weapon-free zones in Latin America (resolution 35/143), Africa (resolutions 146 A and B), the Middle East (resolution 35/147) and South Asia (resolution 35/148).

The second Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons concluded a four-week session in September but was not able to agree on a final substantive declaration on ways better to ensure the implementation of the Treaty's provisions.

Details of these and other actions are described in the following sections.

Nuclear-weapon test ban

By two resolutions of 12 December 1980, the General Assembly sought, through the Committee on Disarmament and by direct appeal, to end test explosions of nuclear weapons.

By the first-resolution 35/145 A on the cessation of all test explosions of nuclear weapons-the Assembly urged all members of the Committee on Disarmament to support the creation by the Committee, early in 1981, of an ad hoc working group to begin the multilateral negotiation of a treaty for the prohibition of all nuclear-weapon tests. They were to endeavour to have the text ready for the Assembly's 1981 regular session. Until such a treaty entered into force, the Assembly called on the depositaries (the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States) of the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons<sup>20</sup> (Non-Proliferation Treaty), by virtue of their special responsibilities under those treaties, to bring to a halt without delay all nuclear test explosions, either through a trilaterally agreed moratorium or through three unilateral moratoria.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 111 to 2, with 31 abstentions. The text was approved by the First Committee on 26 November by a recorded vote of 95 to 1, with 35 abstentions. It was sponsored by Ecuador, Egypt, Ireland, Kenya, Mexico, Pakistan, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Venezuela, Yemen and Yugoslavia.

When Mexico introduced the text, it reminded Members of the Assembly's dissatisfaction, expressed the previous year, that no progress had been shown in the consideration of the question of a test-ban treaty,<sup>21</sup> and of the view the Assembly had expressed that negotiations on disarmament issues conducted outside the Committee on Disarmament should not impede negotiations on such questions in it.<sup>22</sup> The draft was intended to continue to apply pressure for cessation of nuclear-weapon tests.

Resolution 35/145 B sought the prohibition of all nuclear test explosions by all States for all time. The Assembly thereby called on the three negotiating nuclear-weapon States (the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States) to exert their best efforts to bring their negotiations to a successful conclusion in time for consideration during the 1981 session of the Committee on Disarmament. The Committee was asked to take steps at the beginning of that session, including the establishment of a working group, to initiate substantive negotiations on a comprehensive test-ban treaty as a matter of the highest priority, with a view to submitting a draft treaty no later than at the Assembly's 1982 special session on disarmament.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 129 to 0, with 16 abstentions. The text was approved by the First Committee on 26 November by a recorded vote of 115 to 0, with 18 abstentions. Its sponsors were Australia, Canada, Denmark, Greece, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand and Norway.

Australia, introducing the text, said it was necessary that the issue of completing a comprehensive test ban be again addressed by the Assembly, this time with greater urgency, since it was entirely uncertain when such a ban was likely to be concluded.

India, Nigeria, Sweden and Yugoslavia introduced amendments to this eight-power text, which the sponsors had revised after their initial submission. In addition to drafting changes, a preambular paragraph was modified to express recognition of the indispensable role of the Committee on Disarmament in the negotiation of, rather than in achieving, a comprehensive test-ban treaty capable of attracting the widest possible international support and adherence. Another amendment broadened the request to the Committee to initiate treaty negotiations to include establishment of a working group for that purpose as a matter of the highest priority at the beginning of its 1981 session. The Committee was further asked to determine—in the context of its negotiations, rather than as a matter of priority as originally proposed—the institutional and administrative steps needed for establishing, testing and operating an international seismic monitoring network and effective verification system. A fourth amendment added the provision calling on the Committee to exert all efforts in order that a draft comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty could be submitted to the Assembly no later than at its 1982 special session.

The First Committee adopted these amendments as a unit, on a Swedish proposal, by a recorded vote of 90 to 3, with 35 abstentions, before approving the text as a whole, as thus amended.

Several States spoke in explanation of vote after approval of the resolutions. Explaining its abstention on the amended resolution, the United Kingdom said it believed the trilateral negotiations offered the best hope for progress towards a comprehensive test ban, to which the United Kingdom was committed; nothing should be done that might disturb them. The text invited the Committee on Disarmament to play a role incompatible with the responsibility of the three negotiating States.

France had difficulty in believing the idea contained in both texts that a complete ban on nuclear-weapon testing would be a major step towards ending proliferation, or, as stated in the first preambular paragraph of the second resolution, that testing States were in fact continuing their tests to the detriment of "the health of present and future generations." To be a real contribution to the disarmament process, France said, a ban should be tied to commitments relating to nuclear arsenals.

Australia and New Zealand said they abstained on the first resolution since it called for only a partial moratorium, excluding some nuclear-weapon States, and could be interpreted as condoning so-called peaceful nuclear explosions. Similar concerns gave rise to Austrian and Finnish reservations, although those States voted in favour. India, which abstained, said it would have preferred that the call be addressed to all nuclear-weapon States rather than just those engaged in trilateral negotiations. Mongolia considered this a major deficiency.

Recalling that it had proposed during the general debate (see below) a one-year moratorium on nuclear explosions, the USSR expressed regret that the text did not take into account its position, particularly regarding the participants in the moratorium—the participation of all nuclear-weapon States was essential and that it should have a fixed time-frame. As to the second resolution, the USSR felt the Committee's task was to prepare not a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty but rather a treaty on the general and complete cessation of nuclear-weapon tests; an evaluation of how a global seismic monitoring system worked in practice could be decided on after conclusion of such a treaty.

Explaining its negative vote on the first resolution, the United States said it was of the view that multilateral negotiations would interfere with and complicate the trilateral negotiations, nor could it accept a call for a moratorium which would not be verifiable. Furthermore, the United Kingdom and the United States both felt it was not useful to set a deadline for submission of a treaty text to the Assembly, and they also opposed the four-power amendments en bloc, as they had the effect of changing the character of the text. France, the USSR and the United Kingdom all considered that the Assembly should not tell the Committee on Disarmament how to organize its subsidiary bodies or its work.

The Niger regretted being unable to support the text, but did not believe a new test-ban treaty would have any effect on nuclear proliferation.

In the general debates in both the plenary Assembly and the First Committee, numerous countries referred to the pressing need for cessation of nuclear-weapon testing, an objective towards which the Assembly had adopted more than 40 resolutions. Many speakers expressed concern over the Committee on Disarmament's inability to commence multilateral negotiations. Although the latest report on the trilateral negotiations on a treaty prohibiting nuclear test explosions in all environments and a protocol covering nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes, presented to that Committee in July (see p. 21), was generally regarded as a step forward, there was a majority feeling that an ad hoc working group should be established at the Committee's 1981 session to work on a multilaterally negotiated text for submission to the Assembly at its regular 1981 session.

Austria, Bangladesh, Egypt, Italy, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Uruguay were among the many States which considered that the trilateral negotiations should be paralleled by multilateral negotiations within the framework of the Committee on Disarmament. Involvement of other equally interested parties but with a different perspective, Austria said, might have a catalytic effect on the negotiations. Yugoslavia voiced concern at the constant refusal of some of the participants to accept multilateral negotiations within that framework. Their insistence on restricted negotiations suggested an insensitivity to the majority view, Nigeria added.

The USSR stated that, subject to a corresponding readiness by the other two powers engaged in the trilateral negotiations, it was quite realistic to expect successful early conclusion of an international treaty on the complete and general prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests.

The United States reaffirmed its commitment to seeking an effective and verifiable comprehensive test-ban treaty. Substantial progress had been made towards that goal, but the remaining issues were matters of considerable technical complexity and political sensitivity, and solution did not come easily. The United Kingdom also stated that it remained committed to the achievement of a comprehensive test ban and would continue to play a full part in the negotiations.

Australia, Austria, Burundi, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, India, Ireland, the Netherlands, Norway, Somalia and Turkey urged the completion of a test-ban treaty as a valuable means of strengthening the non-proliferation regime. Japan appealed for the early conclusion of a comprehensive test-ban treaty as a first step towards making the Second Disarmament Decade (the 1980s a "fruitful decade;" all further nuclear test explosions would be regarded by Japan as a serious act of defiance of all people aspiring to peace and security. Sweden observed that, up to October 1980, 40 nuclear tests had been registered and reported since January, which was the average carried out annually during the first Disarmament Decade.

Calls for a moratorium on further nuclear test explosions pending the completion of a comprehensive test-ban treaty were made by Fiji, India, Mexico, Nepal, the Philippines, Sierra Leone and others. For a limited period, Sweden said, a moratorium could bring about an atmosphere conducive to reaching agreement on a treaty. Ireland held that if even one of the nuclear powers took the initiative of announcing an indefinite voluntary moratorium, the pressure on the others would be greater and a breakthrough might be made.

The USSR proposed a one-year moratorium, as from an agreed date, on all nuclear explosions while negotiations continued along with other urgent measures to reduce the danger of war (see p. 98). This proposal was supported by Afghanistan, Angola, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and Viet Nam, which viewed the initiative as a new and valuable stimulus to the trilateral negotiations.

A short-term moratorium was not the answer to the serious problem of testing, according to the Netherlands; the USSR proposal made no mention of any verification provisions. The Federal Republic of Germany, Portugal and others also considered verification arrangements to be indispensable. A moratorium without such provisions, in Canada's opinion, was likely to delay negotiations and conclusion of a treaty.

Mexico said the explanation that verification was a laborious process and must be carried out with the greatest care was unacceptable and groundless.

Several Members commented on the July report on the trilateral negotiations. Denmark, the German Democratic Republic, Ghana and Mongolia, among others, welcomed the progress reported. Poland felt the report's significance resided perhaps not so much in its indication of progress as in its expression of a strong commitment by the three powers to the completion of their task. Pakistan, however, observed that the duration of the proposed test-ban treaty had yet to be agreed, that verification was to be left to national technical means, taking account of the special concerns of the three negotiating powers, and that in several other respects, such as amendments and review conference decisions, the treaty would include provisions extending the right of veto to the five permanent members of the Security Council. Such stipulations were bound to inhibit prospects for its general acceptance. Ghana expressed similar concerns. Brazil believed that a comprehensive test-ban treaty should contain an unequivocal commitment to nuclear disarmament, embodying a meaningful balance of obligations between nuclear and non-nuclear countries and avoiding any discrimination regarding the development and use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes. To Venezuela, the progress achieved did not seem considerable. Several other Members—Fiji, Ghana, Ireland, Nepal and the United Republic of Tanzania, for example—criticized the slow progress of the trilateral negotiations.

China's position was that the correct first step must be for the super-powers to take the lead in reducing their nuclear weapons; once they had ceased testing and substantially reduced and destroyed their nuclear weapons, the other nuclear States would follow suit.

Study on a comprehensive nuclear-test ban

In 1979, the General Assembly had asked the Secretary-General to prepare the study on the question of a comprehensive nuclear-test ban for transmittal to the Committee on Disarmament in 1980.<sup>23</sup> The study he submitted to the Committee in April (see p. 21) was prepared by four consultant experts he had appointed. It was subsequently distributed also to the Assembly.

Certain points in the Secretary-General's foreword to the report and in the report itself were noted in preambular paragraphs of resolution 35/145 A (see above). The Assembly recalled that in 1972 the Secretary-General had stated his belief that all the technical and scientific aspects of the problem had been fully explored and only a political decision was necessary in order to achieve agreement; he continued to hold that belief. The Assembly also noted that the experts had emphasized that non-nuclear-weapon States in general regarded a comprehensive test ban as a litmus test of nuclear States' determination to halt the arms race, adding that verification of compliance no longer seemed to be an obstacle to reaching agreement.

By resolution 35/145 B (see above), the Assembly took note of the report with appreciation.

Security guarantees to non-nuclear-weapon States

Three items on security guarantees to non-nuclear-weapon States were included in the Assembly's 1980 agenda and the Assembly, on 12 December, adopted resolutions on two of them. They pertained to continuation of work towards the conclusion of an international convention on the strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons (resolution 35/154) and towards agreement on international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons (resolution 35/155).

With regard to the third item, on strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States, no draft resolution was put forward and the Assembly merely took note, by decision 35/431 of 12 December, of a statement by the Rapporteur of the First Committee that no report on the item was submitted by that Committee. This action, orally proposed by the Assembly President, was adopted without vote.

By resolution 35/154, the Assembly asked the Committee on Disarmament to continue during its 1981 session, on a priority basis, the negotiations on the question of strengthening the security guarantees of non-nuclear-weapon States. It called on States participating in talks on the question to make efforts for the speedy elaboration and conclusion of an international convention on the subject. In addition, the Assembly called on all nuclear-weapon States to make solemn declarations, identical in substance, concerning the non-use of nuclear weapons against non-nuclear States having no such weapons on their territories, as a first step towards the conclusion of such a convention. Finally, the Assembly recommended that the Security Council should examine declarations which might be made and, if all of them were found consistent with the above-mentioned objective, it should adopt an appropriate resolution approving them.

The Assembly's resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 110 to 2, with 31 abstentions. Its sponsors were Angola, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, Mongolia, Nicaragua and the USSR.

On 24 November, the First Committee had approved the text by a recorded vote of 100 to 2, with 30 abstentions. Before that vote, however, separate recorded votes were taken on paragraph 5, calling on nuclear-weapon States to make solemn declarations concerning non-use, and paragraph 6, recommending that the Security Council examine and possibly approve those declarations. Those paragraphs were approved, respectively, by 90 votes to 12, with 28 abstentions, and by 84 votes to 13, with 28 abstentions.

Bulgaria introduced the resolution, stressing that non-nuclear-weapon States which had renounced the nuclear option and had no nuclear weapons on their territories had the right to obtain guarantees that they would not be subjected to nuclear conflagration. The sponsors continued to believe that, among several possible arrangements, the most effective guarantees were those which could be included in a legally binding instrument. By advancing new, concrete ideas for interim steps, the sponsors sought to facilitate efforts aimed at overcoming difficulties encountered thus far in the search for a solution to the problem. The USSR pointed out that this text differed from resolution 35/155 (see below), proposed under the other agenda item on security guarantees, in that it took into consideration broad-based support for the idea that the Security Council might, on the Assembly's recommendation, take up the question of assurance measures.

On behalf of the nine member States of the European Community, which abstained, the Netherlands stated that the text took no account of any approach to the question of security assurances other than that advocated by the sponsors. Canada shared this view. The text also included a qualification of non-nuclear-weapon States which was not acceptable to the nine States, the Netherlands added. Egypt, which voted in favour, stated its understanding that the reference to non-nuclear States having no nuclear weapons on their territory referred to all non-nuclear-weapon States.

Zaire felt that the idea that the Security Council could endorse a great-power declaration on non-use was rather ambiguous and might even hamper conclusion of a convention on guarantees. The United Republic of Cameroon believed that the security of non-nuclear States could not be governed by mere unilateral declarations, however solemn, and wondered what effect they might have in the Council, whose decisions, it said, were so often flouted. Both States abstained in the vote.

By its other 12 December decision on this subject-resolution 35/155- the Assembly appealed to all States, in particular the nuclear-weapon States, to demonstrate the political will necessary to reach agreement on a common approach which could be included in an international instrument of a legally binding character. The Assembly recommended that the Committee on Disarmament should actively continue negotiations with a view to reaching agreement and concluding effective international arrangements on the question during its next session, taking into account the widespread support for the conclusion of an international convention and giving consideration to any other proposals designed to secure the same objective.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 121 to 0, with 24 abstentions. The text, sponsored by Guinea and Pakistan, was approved by the First Committee on 24 November by a recorded vote of 114 to 0, with 24 abstentions.

In introducing the draft resolution, Pakistan stated that, while it had an open mind on the question of both the form and the nature of negative security guarantees, as such assurances were called, it remained convinced that a common and uniform approach could be evolved to meet the concerns of all States. While it believed that an international convention was the most effective form for extending such assurances, its flexible approach was evidenced by the proposed change in the nomenclature of the agenda item for the following year, referring to conclusion of effective international arrangements, rather than of an international convention, to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons. It could not agree that a Security Council or Assembly resolution noting unilateral declarations-different from each other in scope, conditions and qualifications and susceptible of varying interpretations-could serve as an effective arrangement.

Speaking in explanation of the abstentions of the members of the European Community, the Netherlands said that the text did not altogether reflect the balance of opinions expressed in the Committee on Disarmament, and it gave pre-eminence to the idea of an international convention. Further, it did not make any reference to assurances that nuclear-weapon States had already made to non-nuclear-weapon States with regard to the use of nuclear weapons. Canada supported the resolution, despite concern that the text favoured a convention over other possible mechanisms.

Although Austria and Sweden, in principle, favoured negative security assurances, they had reservations regarding an international convention; the vast majority of non-nuclear-weapon States had already done their share in adhering to the Non-Proliferation Treaty and there was no reason for them to repeat this obligation. Moreover, Sweden felt that a convention might contain provisions incompatible with its policy of neutrality. For these reasons, they abstained on both resolutions.

Both in the plenary debate and in the First Committee, the USSR called on all nuclear-weapon States to make identical and solemn declarations concerning the non-use of nuclear weapons against non-nuclear States which had no such weapons on their territories. Such declarations could be reinforced by an authoritative decision of the Security Council. The Soviet proposal received support from Bulgaria, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR. The USSR also stated that, while it was prepared to consider other possible solutions, the early conclusion of an appropriate convention would best serve to strengthen security guarantees for non-nuclear States. This view was shared by Eastern European States and others such as Afghanistan, Lebanon, Mongolia, Nigeria and Uruguay.

Until general and complete disarmament was attained, Cuba, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Morocco, the United Republic of Cameroon and the United Republic of Tanzania supported the adoption of interim measures to guarantee security through an internationally binding legal instrument. An agreed formula could be achieved, Indonesia added, if the nuclear-weapon States would only consider that such action would also benefit their peoples by saving them from annihilation. The United Republic of Tanzania stated that the extension of security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States would not only offer a disincentive to the acquisition of nuclear weapons but would also demonstrate the commitment of the nuclear-weapon States to matters pertaining to international peace and security. Norway felt that States which were not parties to alliances involving security guarantees and which had renounced the option of acquiring nuclear weapons had a legitimate claim to guarantees, and thus the nuclear States had a special responsibility for finding a solution to the problem.

Austria said that, while assurances were no substitute for disarmament, they would to a certain extent alleviate the threat perceived by non-nuclear-weapon States and thereby enhance their commitment to non-proliferation. Austria and Portugal supported the efforts of the Committee on Disarmament to develop, on the basis of declarations, more effective arrangements concerning those assurances.

Egypt considered that, pending a treaty, the nuclear States should submit to the Security Council instruments embodying their commitment of security guarantees-an approach also favoured by Afghanistan, Cuba and Uruguay. Ghana cautioned that unilateral declarations were no substitute for legally binding commitments.

The Netherlands felt that both a convention and a Security Council resolution should be explored; while it was convinced that the convention would be more difficult, it felt that a meaningful common formula could be found to constitute the heart of a Council resolution.

Finland believed that all approaches towards achieving arrangements for non-use assurances should continue to be explored-including the further development of unilateral declarations as well as multilateral agreements.

Albania considered that the kind of guarantees being sought could only be formal or fictitious; as for a convention, it could be violated at any moment. Accordingly, it had voted against the first resolution and had not taken part in the vote on the second.

France stated that the search for a uniform solution seemed unlikely to be successful in the current circumstances. It held, however, that the assurances already given or offered, whatever their diversity and limitations, were a substantive response. Italy felt that unilateral declarations by individual nuclear-weapon States, taking into account the needs of the legitimate individual and collective self-defence of the nuclear States and their allies, seemed to be the most appropriate and effective solution suggested thus far, in view of existing political and strategic realities.

Cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament

The General Assembly adopted two resolutions on 12 December 1980 on the question of multilateral negotiations on the cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament.

By resolution 35/152 B, the Assembly expressed its belief that it was necessary to intensify efforts with a view to initiating negotiations, as a matter of high priority and with the participation of all nuclear-weapon States, on the question of the cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament. It called on the Committee on Disarmament, as a matter of priority, to undertake consultations for the purpose of early commencement of negotiations on the substance of the problem; consultation topics would include the establishment of an ad hoc working group on the cessation of the nuclear arms race and on nuclear disarmament, with a clearly defined mandate.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 118 to 18, with 7 abstentions. The First Committee similarly approved the text on 20 November by 105 votes to 14, with 13 abstentions. The resolution was sponsored by 15 States: Afghanistan, Angola, Benin, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Poland, Romania, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Viet Nam.

The USSR, introducing the resolution, said the steps proposed were designed to remedy a situation that had evolved in which the consideration of the problem of limiting the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament was, for no good reason, outside the framework of practical negotiations in the Committee on Disarmament. That Committee, whose membership included all five nuclear powers, was the most appropriate forum for preparing and holding talks on nuclear disarmament.

By resolution 35/152 C, the Assembly urged the Committee on Disarmament to establish, at the beginning of its 1981 session, an ad hoc working group to deal with the agenda item on the cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament. The Assembly considered it advisable that the group begin by addressing the question of the elaboration and clarification of the stages of nuclear disarmament envisaged in paragraph 50 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly.<sup>24</sup> That paragraph stated that the achievement of nuclear disarmament would require urgent negotiation of agreements at appropriate stages, with adequate verification measures, and indicated the results that should be pursued in each of those stages.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 124 to 4, with 17 abstentions. In the First Committee, the text was approved on 20 November by a recorded vote of 115 to 3, with 18 abstentions. The proposal was sponsored by 19 States: Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, Burma, Congo, Cuba, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

Mexico, which introduced the text, stated that account had been taken therein of the experience derived from the performance of the four ad hoc working groups established by the Committee at its 1980 session, which had dealt with chemical weapons, radiological weapons, negative guarantees and the comprehensive programme of disarmament. Their positive results suggested that similar procedures should be used in the future, especially for priority items.

Mexico noted that this 19-power resolution was complementary to the 15-power text introduced by the USSR; however, the sponsors felt that certain substantive differences regarding the establishment, functioning and terms of reference of the proposed working group were more adequately defined in their resolution. Votes in favour of the 15-power text by sponsors of the 19-power text should be understood as in no way affecting the meaning and scope of their own proposal.

Commenting on their abstention and negative vote, respectively, on the first resolution, Brazil and France stated that conditions necessary for negotiations on nuclear disarmament "with the participation of all nuclear-weapon States" did not exist. Brazil added that this requirement amounted to conferring virtual veto power on individual nuclear States by enabling them to block the Committee's negotiating process. Sweden said it considered the words superfluous; they should in no way be construed as contradicting or diminishing the particular responsibility of the major nuclear-weapon powers. France added that responsibility for negotiations on nuclear disarmament at the current historic stage rested with the two powers possessing the most sizable nuclear arsenals.

Neither Belgium nor France felt that a working group should be set up under the Committee on Disarmament, and, along with the United Kingdom, did not think it was up to the Assembly to take action with respect to the organization and methods of the work of that Committee. While the USSR voted in favour of the 19-power text, believing that a special working group with a clearly defined mandate would serve the cause of the Committee's work, it did not believe the Assembly was entitled to tell the Committee how to organize the work of its subsidiaries or to determine that mandate. Australia expressed concern at the number of issues assigned to the Committee for priority consideration.

The United Kingdom explained that it had voted against the two resolutions because, although it attached great importance to the urgent task of the limitation of nuclear weapons, it believed that the relationship between nuclear weapons and the fundamental security concerns of some States meant that a general approach to the issue of nuclear disarmament, as reflected in those resolutions, was unlikely to produce tangible and positive results. The Federal Republic of Germany also had reservations as to whether the measures proposed were really adapted to the complex process of nuclear disarmament.

Belgium said its opposition to the 15-power text stemmed essentially from the unacceptable nature of a preambular paragraph by which the Assembly noted with alarm the increased risk of a nuclear catastrophe associated with the intensification of the nuclear arms race and the adoption of the new doctrine of limited or partial use of nuclear weapons giving rise to illusions of the admissibility and acceptability of a nuclear conflict. That doctrine, Belgium said, was neither new nor disproved by the capabilities of the nuclear-weapon States. Australia, Austria, Canada and Turkey also recorded serious reservations on the language of that paragraph.

Austria and Sweden attached particular importance to emphasizing the special responsibility for nuclear disarmament of the major nuclear powers. Austria believed that use of the Committee on Disarmament for substantive talks on nuclear disarmament issues would open a promising approach.

Non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war

By resolution 35/152 D, the General Assembly again declared that the use of nuclear weapons would be a violation of the United Nations Charter and a crime against humanity and that their use or the threat of their use should therefore be prohibited, pending nuclear disarmament. The Assembly requested all States that had not submitted proposals concerning the non-use of nuclear weapons, avoidance of nuclear war and related matters-as the Assembly had requested in 1978<sup>25</sup>-to do so in order that the question of an international convention or some other agreement on the subject might be further considered by the Assembly in 1981.

The resolution was adopted by the Assembly on 12 December by a recorded vote of 112 to 19, with 14 abstentions. The text was approved by the First Committee on 21 November by 101 votes to 19, with 15 abstentions.

India, which introduced the resolution on behalf of 24 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), stated that the danger of a nuclear war breaking out had significantly escalated, not only because of the continued increase in nuclear arsenals but also because of the espousal of such dangerous strategic doctrines as nuclear deterrence and limited nuclear strikes. Thus the question of providing mankind with a credible and binding assurance against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons had become ever more urgent. It was the sponsors' opinion that once a cross-section of views, as broad as possible, had been obtained, negotiation of an internationally binding agreement banning the use of nuclear weapons could be taken up in a more practical and concrete manner.

Explaining its abstention in the vote, the USSR regretted that by this text the question of the prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons had once again been artificially divorced from the question of the adoption of international political and legal measures to strengthen the security of all States and from the question of the renunciation by States of the use of force in international relations. Commenting on its negative vote, Ireland considered that it was unrealistic and indeed, in so far as it might convey a false sense of security, dangerously misleading to the world at large to suggest that, pending nuclear disarmament, the nuclear powers could be willing to accept a prohibition of the threat of use of nuclear weapons when that was central to the logic of their strategic doctrines, however much one regretted those doctrines. Moreover, the Charter made no mention of weapons and did provide for the right of self-defence. Japan, which also cast a negative vote, said that, against the background of increased international tension in various regions, notably in Afghanistan, it considered a stabilized system of nuclear deterrence to be of ever-increasing importance as a factor to contain the further spread of such tension.

Sweden observed that the first operative paragraph, making a precise interpretation of the Charter, had to be carefully scrutinized from a legal standpoint. Although it voted in favour, Finland did not consider that paragraph to be in conformity with the Charter.

Prohibition of the production of fissionable material for weapons

By resolution 35/156 H, the General Assembly requested the Committee on Disarmament, at an appropriate stage, to pursue its consideration of the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices, keeping the Assembly informed of its progress.

The resolution, adopted on 12 December by a recorded vote of 125 to 11, with 8 abstentions, had been similarly approved by the First Committee on 26 November by 114 votes to 11, with 9 abstentions.

Canada had initiated the proposal and introduced it on behalf of 19 sponsors: Australia, Austria, Bolivia, Canada, Costa Rica, Denmark, Greece, Indonesia, Ireland, Japan, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Philippines, Romania, Singapore, Sweden, Uruguay. Canada noted that, while the matter had again been discussed during 1980 by the Committee on Disarmament, no agreement had been reached on specific steps, such as a ban on the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes, or on other aspects of nuclear disarmament. The purpose of the resolution, Canada said, was to draw attention to the Committee's discussion and to the Assembly's continuing interest in the question. In a period of heightened international tension, it was important to explore every avenue that offered greater control of those weapons.

Explaining their votes, India, which abstained, and the German Democratic Republic and the USSR, which voted against, reiterated their view that a cut-off in the production of fissionable material could not be separated from the cessation of the production of nuclear weapons and the reduction of stockpiles. India added that the two measures, combined, would mean that all nuclear facilities in both nuclear-weapon and non-nuclear-weapon States would become peaceful facilities, to which one system of international safeguards could then be applied on a universal basis without any discrimination. However, a cut-off not accompanied by a production ban would be an incomplete step.

The United States said its vote in favour demonstrated its support of the objective of a prohibition on the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes as a long-term goal. However, it believed that there were other, more practicable and pressing near-term arms-control steps to which attention should currently be directed. Verification, an essential factor in its view, would pose considerable difficulties. The United Kingdom abstained, taking a similar view: an appropriate stage for negotiations had not been reached and negotiations by the Committee on Disarmament would not be fruitful.

Australia, Belgium, Ireland and Sweden stressed the importance of an agreement on this question as a brake on proliferation. Norway believed that a ban on the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes would place nuclear-weapon States on a more nearly equal basis with non-nuclear-weapon States. The Netherlands hoped serious negotiations could begin soon on a cut-off agreement that could be verified basically by universal application of International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) safeguards.

Israeli nuclear armament

The Secretary-General reported to the Assembly in September on the progress being made by a group of five experts he had appointed to assist him in preparing a study on Israeli nuclear armament, as the Assembly had requested in 1979.<sup>26</sup> The expert group had held its first session on 21 July to 1 August 1980 at United Nations Headquarters in New York. It had discussed the organization of the study and the structure and principal elements of the report to be made on that study. It had agreed to prepare for its second session, in 1981, draft texts for various chapters.

The Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's progress report on 12 December when it adopted resolution 35/157, and asked him to pursue his efforts and report again in 1981. The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 99 to 6, with 38 abstentions. The text, with 28 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), was approved by the First Committee on 21 November by a recorded vote of 96 to 6, with 34 abstentions.

In introducing the draft on behalf of 22 States-subsequently joined by Bangladesh, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali and Viet Nam-Iraq referred to the Assembly's concern over military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa. Iraq pointed to the danger of the proliferation of nuclear weapons in the Middle East and called on Israel to adhere to the Non-Proliferation Treaty and to submit its nuclear installations to international safeguards.

Israel observed that of the original 22 sponsors of the resolution nine had not signed the Non-proliferation Treaty, two had not ratified it and four had not complied with full-scale safeguards. Israel said that the resolution was not a procedural one; it did not just recall the Assembly's 1978 resolution calling for sanctions against Israel,<sup>27</sup> it reaffirmed it and was a restatement of Iraq's hostility towards Israel. Moreover, the terms of reference of the group of experts were clearly prejudicial.

In explanation of its abstention, Ireland stated that the resolution would have the Assembly reaffirm resolutions on military and nuclear collaboration with Israel and on Israeli nuclear armament of 1978<sup>28</sup> and 1979<sup>29</sup> which were unacceptable to Ireland. A similar explanation of their abstentions was made by the Federal Republic of Germany and Italy. Though they voted in favour, the Bahamas and Brazil also expressed disagreement with that paragraph.

Earlier in the year, in connexion with the subject, in a letter of 26 February to the Secretary-General, Iraq requested circulation of a news item of The New York Times of 22 February reporting that the United States doubted that Israel and South Africa had collaborated to detonate a nuclear device in the South Atlantic the previous September.

By related decisions of 16 December, the Assembly condemned States, in particular certain Western States and Israel, which continued to collaborate with South Africa in the military and nuclear fields (resolution 35/206 B), and condemned the increasing collaboration by Israel with that country, demanding that it be terminated (resolution 35/206 H) (see pp. 216 and 219).

Nuclear-free zones

The discussion of nuclear-weapon-free zones during the general debate at the Assembly's 1980 regular session evinced the general view that such zones were highly desirable. They were looked upon as a means to prevent nuclear proliferation, to enhance the stability and security of a region, and to contribute to efforts to arrive at world-wide nuclear disarmament. The USSR said the desire of States in various regions to preserve their peoples from the threat of involvement in a nuclear conflict deserved full support. Finland and Lebanon added that, despite certain difficulties, the proposals for such zones were valid.

Support for the concept was voiced by virtually every State which addressed the subject, although most specified that the voluntary acceptance and support of the region's States was paramount. A number of States were of the view that certain other conditions must be met for efforts to establish such zones to be fruitful. Among these, the Federal Republic of Germany and the Netherlands mentioned the need for geographic delimitation and the position of nuclear States outside the zone as factors to be taken into account. Zonal arrangements must reflect the special circumstances obtaining in the region, in Norway's view. Sweden mentioned the conditions of non-possession of nuclear weapons by zonal States, non-development and non-presence of such weapons in the zone and the withdrawal of any such weapons that could only be used against targets in the zone, thus establishing a safety area adjacent to the zone. The need for such a commitment by surrounding States was a point also mentioned by Sri Lanka. Sweden and the United Republic of Cameroon pointed to the need for a commitment by nuclear States not to use or threaten to use nuclear weapons against targets within the zone.

Australia, India, Israel, the Netherlands and the United States were among those believing that the initiative should come from the States concerned. The Netherlands, Sri Lanka and the United States felt all States whose participation was deemed important should participate.

Other conditions to be met, in the view of the United States, were that: compliance with the arrangement must be verifiable-also noted by Australia and the Federal Republic of Germany; establishment of the zone should not disturb existing security arrangements to the detriment of regional and international security, and the zone arrangement should not seek to impose restrictions on States' rights recognized by international law-points also mentioned by Australia; and the zone arrangement should prohibit development of any nuclear explosive device or conduct of a nuclear explosion, for any purpose-also advocated by Papua New Guinea. Australia felt a basic step would be for all States of a region to become parties to the Non-Proliferation Treaty; those which stood outside the Treaty could reassure others by accepting full-scope safeguards or some other binding commitment.

India, while not opposed to the concept, cautioned that the promotion of such arrangements, where they did not emerge as a direct result of spontaneous initiative by the zonal States, might result in solidification of the protectorate status of certain regions vis-a-vis one or the other great power, thus further hardening military polarization of the globe.

In addition to the proposals for nuclear-weapon-free zones before the Assembly- for Latin America, Africa, the Middle East and South Asia-on which resolutions were adopted, Fiji and Papua New Guinea also drew attention to their continued interest in such a zone for the South Pacific, and Finland for the Nordic region.

Treaty of Tlatelolco

On 12 December 1980, the General Assembly expressed regret that of the five nuclear-weapon States the United States and France had not ratified Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco).

The two States had signed the Protocol on 26 May 1977 and 2 March 1979 respectively. It concerned the application of the Treaty to territories in the region, committing outside States having de jure or de facto responsibility for territories there to apply in them the Treaty's statutes of denuclearization.

Resolution 35/143, which the Assembly adopted by a recorded vote of 138 to 0, with 5 abstentions, reiterated with special urgency the Assembly's invitation to those States to ratify the Protocol. The text was approved by the First Committee on 20 November by a recorded vote of 129 to 0, with 6 abstentions, and was sponsored by the 22 Latin American and Caribbean countries that were parties to the Treaty (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Mexico, the Treaty's depositary Government, introduced the text. It was the sponsors' hope, Mexico said, that at its 1981 session the Assembly would be able to welcome the realization of another of its aspirations, as it had been able to do in 1979 in respect of Additional Protocol II.<sup>30</sup> France and the United States, in explaining their abstentions, pointed out that the Treaty had not been signed and ratified by all the countries of the area to which it applied, nor had all the necessary action been taken to bring it into force. Both States noted that the matter was currently the subject of their national parliamentary procedures. France did not feel it was for the Assembly to interfere with national parliaments or reiterate invitations to them with special urgency. Guyana, while supporting nuclear-weapon-free zones, said that a discriminatory exclusionary provision of the Treaty prevented it from becoming a party, and it had therefore abstained in the voting, as in the past.

Denuclearization of Africa

Concerned about South Africa's nuclear capability, the Assembly, by two resolutions of 12 December 1980, called for an end to co-operation with that country in the nuclear field. Both resolutions sought full implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, adopted by the Organization of African Unity in 1964.

In connexion with this subject, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in September a report prepared by a six-member Group of Experts on South Africa's Plan and Capability in the Nuclear Field, pursuant to an Assembly request of 11 December 1979.<sup>31</sup> The Group had met in New York from 25 to 29 February and from 28 July to 8 August 1980.

The report traced the development of South Africa's nuclear activities, and the experts concluded that those activities had advanced steadily, their progress and increasing sophistication helped by nuclear co-operation with several other countries, corporations and institutions. The report catalogued the country's nuclear fuel-cycle resources, production, and enrichment and research facilities, both safeguarded and unsafeguarded. It analysed the possible place of nuclear weapons in South Africa's political and military strategy. In addition, it discussed reports of the discovery of a possible nuclear-weapon test site in the Kalahari Desert in 1977 and an unsubstantiated explosion in the South Atlantic on 22 September 1979. Finally, it reported on recent international attempts to persuade the country to abandon its apartheid policies and nuclear activities.

The experts reported that, because of gaps in the availability of reliable information, some of the assessments were subject to an element of uncertainty. They noted that until recently South Africa had produced approximately 16 per cent of the uranium produced by the market-economy countries. Moreover, by its illegal control of Namibian resources, it had been able to increase its share of the international uranium market. According to the experts, there was no doubt that South Africa had the technical capability to make nuclear weapons and the means of delivery. Among their other conclusions, the experts expressed the view that the introduction of nuclear weapons to the African continent, and particularly volatile southern Africa, would not only be a severe blow to world-wide efforts at non-proliferation but would also upset many years of work to spare the continent from the nuclear arms race and to make it a nuclear-weapon-free zone. Thus, it was necessary to have South Africa adhere to the Non-Proliferation Treaty and place its nuclear facilities under IAEA safeguards, and it was the United Nations responsibility to take whatever action was required to eradicate apartheid and prevent proliferation of nuclear weapons.

By resolution 35/146 A, the General Assembly expressed its deep alarm that the Secretary-General's report had established South Africa's capability to manufacture nuclear weapons, as well as its deep concern that that capability was being developed to preserve white supremacy by intimidating neighbouring countries and black-mailing the continent. The Assembly requested the Security Council to prohibit all forms of co-operation and collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa in the nuclear field, and to institute effective enforcement action against that regime to prevent it from endangering international peace and security through acquisition of nuclear weapons. The Assembly called on all States, corporations, institutions and individuals to terminate such collaboration, and demanded that South Africa submit all its nuclear installations to IAEA inspection. The Secretary-General was asked to give maximum publicity to his report on South Africa's nuclear capability.

This resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 132 to 0, with 13 abstentions, having been similarly approved by the First Committee on 21 November by 124 votes to 0, with 13 abstentions. It was sponsored by 28 African States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Also on 12 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 35/146 B, by which it strongly reiterated its call on all States to respect Africa as a nuclear-weapon-free zone and condemned any form of nuclear collaboration with South Africa's racist regime as frustrating that objective. The Assembly repeated its call for termination of such collaboration, its request for a Security Council ban on such collaboration, and its demand that South Africa submit its nuclear installations to IAEA inspection.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 133 to 0, with 12 abstentions. The text, sponsored by 31 African States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), was approved by the First Committee on 21 November by a recorded vote of 123 to 2, with 10 abstentions.

Before the vote on the first of the two texts in the Committee, the sponsors orally deleted from a preambular paragraph taking note of the report of the Security Council Committee Established by Resolution 421 (1977)<sup>32</sup> concerning the question of South Africa (see p. 200)-reference to a particular recommendation in that report that all forms of nuclear collaboration with South Africa should cease. They also agreed to a word substitution in both resolutions' references to the regime's nuclear programme, plans and capability; these constituted a very grave "danger" rather than "threat" to international peace and security.

A number of States spoke in explanation of vote on the two texts. Despite their support of the resolutions, Australia, Ireland, Portugal and the United Kingdom found it particularly contentious to single out certain Western States, as in a preambular paragraph expressing indignation that certain Western States and Israel had continued nuclear collaboration with South Africa. Those spokesmen, as well as those of Denmark, France and New Zealand, found the texts deficient in failing to distinguish between co-operation for peaceful purposes and co-operation for weapons production. Finland, France, Ireland, New Zealand and Portugal expressed reservations about references to the Security Council's role; as France saw it, the Assembly should not address such requests and recommendations to the Council. France added that it had previously stated its opposition or reservations to some of the proposals put forward by members of the Council Committee and referred to in the texts.

The United States felt that the action called for by several of the provisions could prevent co-operation of a kind offering the best prospects for encouraging South Africa to accept non-proliferation controls.

Denmark and Japan said their votes were cast with reservations on assertions in the texts for which there was no evidence based on fact. Turkey supported the resolutions to the extent that the wording accorded with the principles that guided its foreign policy. The Netherlands and Spain agreed with the objectives and substance of the texts, but found certain terms extremely polemical and not entirely accurate. The Netherlands also objected to what it charged was the haste and lack of debate and prior consultations on the texts, believing such matters must be deliberated carefully.

Accusations that Israel, singled out by name, collaborated with South Africa in the nuclear field were false and unfounded, Israel asserted; indeed, in the Secretary-General's report such allegations were described as speculation, it said. The Federal Republic of Germany, which also abstained on both texts, did not think that the first accurately reflected the findings of the Expert Group or that the second would advance the cause of the denuclearization of Africa, a goal it supported.

India reiterated that its affirmative votes were without prejudice to its position on the Non-Proliferation Treaty, which it considered unequal and discriminatory, and the safeguards questions. Albania said it voted in favour of the resolutions despite its belief in the futility of nuclear-weapon-free zones as shelters from nuclear danger—a position it said it held in respect of all other resolutions dealing with the creation of such zones.

Nigeria, which introduced both texts, observed that certain States still regarded their collaboration with South Africa on its nuclear programme in terms of peaceful purposes. In reality that distinction was untenable. The programme was aimed towards anything but peaceful purposes and collaboration by some Western countries and Israel allowed its beneficiary to destabilize an entire continent. Nigeria said the resolutions drew not only on the Secretary-General's report but also on the report and recommendations of the Security Council Committee on ways of making the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa more effective.

In the debate, various States again expressed their deep concern that the nuclear plans and capability of South Africa jeopardized the security of African States and increased the danger of the proliferation of nuclear weapons. Many African States, including Burundi, Egypt, Ethiopia, Kenya, Madagascar, Nigeria, Somalia, the Sudan and Zambia, considered that the report of the Group of Experts had reinforced their fears. A number of these States, as well as Angola, the Congo, Ghana, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Togo, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zaire, denounced the technological and military assistance in the nuclear field being given to South Africa by certain countries that could assist in its development of nuclear weapons. This was a concern of many non-African States as well, including Bahrain, Bangladesh, Guyana, Indonesia, Iraq, Pakistan, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates.

Cessation of nuclear collaboration with South Africa was also the subject of provisions of two Assembly resolutions of 16 December (resolutions 35/206 B and H; see pp. 216 and 219).

Nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East

By resolution 35/147 of 12 December 1980, the General Assembly urged all parties directly concerned seriously to consider taking the steps required to implement a long-standing proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East. To promote that objective, it invited the countries concerned to adhere to the Non-Proliferation Treaty and invited them, pending the establishment of such a zone, to declare solemnly that they would refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from producing, acquiring or in any other way possessing nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices. It called on them not to permit the stationing of nuclear weapons on their territory by a third party and to agree to place their nuclear activities under IAEA safeguards. The Assembly invited them to declare their support for establishing such a zone and to deposit those declarations with the Security Council for consideration. It renewed its invitation to the Secretary-General to continue exploring possibilities of progress towards establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East.

The resolution was adopted without vote in both the Assembly and the First Committee; the text, proposed by Egypt, was approved by the latter body on 20 November.

Canada, Finland (on behalf of the Nordic countries—Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden), the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States all commented on the significance of a resolution on a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East having for the first time been adopted with the consent of all the States in the region. Bhutan, Brazil and India, despite their participation in the consensus, recorded reservations on the reference to the Non-Proliferation Treaty.

Egypt, introducing its text, said the resolution took into account the special situation which existed in the Middle East and the difficulty of bringing all countries in the region to the negotiating table to conclude the necessary arrangements for establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone: this was reflected in the provision inviting the States to make declarations and deposit them with the Security Council.

In a letter to the Secretary-General, dated 23 October, Israel reiterated its view that the spread of nuclear weapons could best be solved by negotiated regional arrangements, and advocated establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East on the Treaty of Tlatelolco model. Israel transmitted the text of a resolution on the question which it intended to submit to the First Committee. It introduced such a draft on 13 November, stating that a regional nuclear-weapon-free zone could be established if the States concerned were prepared to negotiate in good faith.

The Israeli proposal would have had the Assembly call on all States of the Middle East and adjacent non-nuclear-weapon States that were not signatories to any treaty providing for a nuclear-weapon-free zone to convene a conference as soon as possible with a view to negotiating a multilateral treaty establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East. The region's States were to indicate by 1 May 1981 their willingness to participate in such a conference, for which the Secretary-General was to provide the facilities.

On 20 November, Israel withdrew its draft, stating that it was being argued by those rejecting the proposal, which included Iraq, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic, that, until all their demands were met in respect of the situation in the Middle East, no consultations among the regional States could take place with a view to establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone. Israel added that it would join a consensus in support of the Egyptian resolution, in spite of certain reservations as to the modalities of arriving at the resolution's objective, to demonstrate its goodwill and support for the idea of the establishment of such a zone.

The Syrian Arab Republic considered that the goal in question could be achieved only if the following conditions were met: occupation and aggression must cease, their effects removed and Palestinian national rights restored; all parties must sign the Non-Proliferation Treaty and undertake to submit their nuclear activities and facilities to IAEA control; and all must accept international guarantees as an alternative to the possession of nuclear weapons. Jordan added that all should pledge on a mutual basis to renounce all production and acquisition of nuclear weapons, and the status of the zone should be respected and be free from super-power rivalry.

In the debate in the First Committee, Bahrain, Bhutan, Democratic Yemen, Ecuador, Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, Lebanon, Oman, Pakistan, Somalia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, the United Arab Emirates and the United Republic of Tanzania continued to emphasize their support of the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East. Many of them reiterated their concern about the danger of the development of nuclear weapons by Israel which could cause a serious threat to the States in the region. A number of representatives drew a comparison between reports of nuclear programmes in South Africa and Israel and particularly condemned any collaboration between the two in the nuclear field (see also preceding subsection). Cessation of such collaboration was called for by two Assembly resolutions of 16 December (resolutions 35/206 B and H; see pp. 216 and 219).

COMMUNICATIONS

Several communications on nuclear programmes in the Middle East were received by the Secretary-General. Iraq on 24 July transmitted a message of that date from its Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs, drawing attention to threats he said were being directed against Iraq by Israeli officials because of its programme for peaceful uses of nuclear energy. Specific mention was made of a reported statement by the Israeli Deputy Minister of Defence that Israel would resist French intentions of providing Iraq with enriched uranium.

Israel replied on 13 October that Iraq's recent conduct vindicated the conclusion that Iraq's bellicose policies and belligerent behaviour were a grave threat to peace. Israel's letter annexed recently published opinions expressing concern about Iraq's nuclear programme and intentions. On 10 December, Israel charged that Iraq had closed its nuclear facilities to IAEA inspectors, thereby violating its international undertakings and providing further evidence of its intentions. Drawing attention to what it said were efforts by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to acquire nuclear capability, Israel's letter appended excerpts from published reports about the Libyan nuclear programme.

In a reply of 24 December, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya asserted that it did not possess an atomic bomb and had, on 30 July, signed an agreement with IAEA on the application of safeguards under the Non-Proliferation Treaty, which it had signed in 1968. Pakistan, on 3 February 1981, refuted what it called irresponsible and unfounded allegations in the reports Israel had transmitted on 10 December that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya was seeking to acquire nuclear weapons—an "Islamic bomb"—through financial assistance to Pakistan's nuclear programme; Pakistan said that programme was geared entirely to peaceful purposes. Both countries counter-charged that Israel was aggressively continuing to develop its nuclear potential.

Nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia

The General Assembly in 1979 had requested the Secretary-General to render any required assistance to promote efforts for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia.<sup>33</sup> In September 1980, he reported that he had been in contact with States of the South Asian region and that there had been no request by them for his assistance in connexion with the subject, noting that in the course of his contacts a view was expressed that he should continue to be available for such assistance.

By resolution 35/148 of 12 December, the Assembly reaffirmed its endorsement, in principle, of the concept of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and again urged the States of South Asia and any other interested neighbouring non-nuclear-weapon States to continue efforts to establish such a zone and to refrain, in the mean time, from any action contrary to that objective. The Assembly called on nuclear-weapon States that had not done so to respond positively to this proposal and to co-operate in the efforts to establish the zone; the Secretary-General was asked to assist as required to promote the efforts.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 96 to 3, with 44 abstentions. The text was approved by the First Committee on 21 November by a recorded vote of 89 to 2, with 41 abstentions.

Many speakers expressed their support in the First Committee for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia, including those of Bangladesh, Chile, Ecuador, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Togo, the United Arab Emirates and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Pakistan, introducing the text also on behalf of its other sponsor, the Niger, said it was convinced that the creation of such a zone was a realistic objective. From the point of view of geographical, historical, cultural and other considerations, the South Asian region was distinct and qualified for the creation of the zone. Moreover, the countries of the region had more than once declared unilaterally their commitment to nuclear non-proliferation. In Pakistan's view, the next step should be a joint endeavour to translate those commitments into a binding regional declaration.

Before the vote in the First Committee, India stated that it had consistently called for the total elimination of all nuclear weapons and did not intend to develop or acquire them; its nuclear programme was entirely devoted to peaceful purposes. However, it was opposed to a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia both on principle and for practical considerations: the initiative for its establishment must derive from all States of the region, and participation must be voluntary; South Asia was a contiguous and integral part of the region of Asia and the Pacific, and could not be treated in isolation; and the deployment of nuclear weapons in the Asia-Pacific theatre and the presence of foreign military bases in the Indian Ocean complicated the security environment of the region.

Bhutan said it was voting against the proposal on grounds of the lack of consultations and agreement among the States concerned. Among those voting in favour, Bangladesh, Japan and the Netherlands reaffirmed support for the establishment of such a zone but held that strengthening the security of the region would require the agreement of all States concerned, including the nuclear-weapon States, on the basis of a regional initiative. Bangladesh and the Netherlands added that the zone's limits should be adequately defined, and Bangladesh recalled its proposal for a regional forum to exchange views on matters of mutual interest. Sri Lanka also stressed the need for intensive consultations.

Australia, Italy and Sweden, which abstained, believed that the participation of all the countries of the region concerned, on the basis of arrangements freely negotiated among themselves, was among essential conditions for creating viable nuclear-weapon-free zones, such as that proposed for South Asia. The United States said it did not wish its vote in favour to imply that it regarded the creation of such a zone as the only, or even necessarily the most promising, means to avert nuclear arms competition in South Asia.

Non-stationing of nuclear weapons

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 35/156 C, by which it requested the Committee on Disarmament to proceed without delay to talks with a view to elaborating an international agreement on the non-stationing of nuclear weapons on the territories of States where currently there were no such weapons.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 95 to 18, with 27 abstentions, having been approved by the First Committee on 20 November by 69 votes to 19, with 44 abstentions.

The text was introduced in the First Committee by Hungary on behalf of 17 sponsors: Angola, Benin, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Mongolia, Poland, Romania, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Viet Nam. Support for the aim pursued was expressed in the debate also by Afghanistan, Burundi and Guyana.

Hungary said the conclusion of an international agreement on non-stationing of nuclear weapons would considerably strengthen the non-proliferation regime, could contribute to reducing the danger of nuclear war and the nuclear arms race, and could promote the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones. Hungary referred to the concurring opinions of several of the 25 countries that had submitted their observations, pursuant to an Assembly resolution of 11 December 1979,<sup>34</sup> on the possibility of concluding such a convention; these were contained in a report to the current session by the Secretary-General.

elaboration of an international convention was desirable. Indonesia and Yugoslavia supported the idea, in principle, as an element within the context of nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation, and Haiti recorded no objection to such a convention. Egypt supported promulgation of a declaration by nuclear States on non-stationing and by non-nuclear States of a collective position refusing to accept stationing. Mexico and Finland felt the best way to ensure that nuclear weapons were not introduced was through the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones. In the opinion of the Netherlands and the United Kingdom, the cause of non-proliferation was best safeguarded by the Non-Proliferation Treaty; a non-stationing agreement would be unverifiable, destabilizing, and would undermine universal adherence to that Treaty.

In explaining its negative vote on the resolution, Portugal maintained that it would have the practical result of limiting the freedom of States to exercise their sovereign right to defend their territories, and would create discrimination between States that had nuclear weapons on their territories and those that did not. Moreover, the proposal was based on the false premise that the stationing of nuclear weapons on the territory of a State or in a region had a destabilizing effect on international peace and security. The Federal Republic of Germany, which also voted against the resolution, stated that in Europe nuclear weapons helped to offset an existing imbalance in the conventional field and were therefore an indispensable prerequisite for peace and stability. Under current world conditions, Japan believed, restrictions on deployment of nuclear weapons would be of doubtful effectiveness, would destabilize the international military balance and would therefore prove detrimental to peace and security. Japan felt it was more important to proceed step by step to realize concrete nuclear disarmament measures.

Ireland believed that the question of where the weapons of the two major powers should be stationed, and under what kind of control, was a matter of contention between the alliances of which those powers were members. Noting that the resolution's sponsors were almost entirely members of one of those alliances, Ireland abstained so as not to be perceived as taking sides. Yugoslavia and Zaire, which also abstained, held that the framework for non-stationing as laid down in the resolution was too narrow: the convention should encompass the obligations of nuclear-weapon States with regard to the non-stationing of nuclear weapons not only on nuclear-free territories but also on other territories and in other areas, such as international air and maritime spaces, as well as with regard to withdrawal of such weapons from non-nuclear-weapon States. Sweden, too, had reservations as to the idea of seeking the solution of a complex problem by dealing with only one of its aspects in an agreement; the question could best be dealt with in the context of regional disarmament arrangements. Brazil and Ghana also abstained, noting that the text seemed to confer legitimacy on the existence of nuclear weapons in countries that already possessed them.

Of those voting in favour, Cuba recognized that the principle was an effective means of non-proliferation, but reiterated support for the right of all States to have whatever weapons they deemed necessary to defend their sovereignty and territorial integrity. Finland supported the general objective of achieving a world-wide zone of countries free of nuclear weapons, but said that only the country concerned was qualified to interpret its own security needs; that must be kept in mind when examining possibilities of an agreement. India's vote in favour was without prejudice to its position of total opposition to nuclear weapons anywhere, and Mexico's was to be understood to mean that the request to the Committee on Disarmament to proceed to talks was without detriment to its established priorities.

Strategic arms limitation talks

By resolution 35/156 K, the General Assembly, deploring that the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (SALT I), signed on 18 June 1979, had not been ratified, urged the two signatory States not to delay any further in taking action so that it might enter into force. Meanwhile, the Assembly trusted that the signatory States would refrain from any act which would defeat the object and purpose of the Treaty. The Assembly reiterated its satisfaction at the agreement by both parties to pursue negotiations towards SALT II, which would endeavour to achieve substantial quantitative reductions of strategic arms and qualitative limitations on strategic offensive arms. It invited the two States to keep it informed of the results of their negotiations.

The resolution was adopted on 12 December 1980 by the Assembly and approved on 24 November by the First Committee, in both instances without a vote.

Introducing the resolution also on behalf of Argentina, Indonesia, the Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Sweden and Yugoslavia, Mexico pointed out that, in view of the complete lack of results on the previous year's resolution on this subject,<sup>35</sup> it should surprise no one that the text stated the Assembly's conviction that the signature in good faith of a treaty in this case after more than six years of negotiations-carried with it the presumption that its ratification would not be unduly delayed. Its purpose was to seek a remedy for the alarming situation caused by the unbridled nuclear arms race and promote practical action to prevent a nuclear war. The need for an early ratification of SALT II and for the continuation of negotiations was stressed by a large number of States.

The USSR stated that the delay in the entry into force of the Treaty was not the fault of the Soviet side and reiterated that it was in favour of its immediate ratification and entry into force. The United States spokesman said that, as it had stated on numerous occasions, the invasion of Afghanistan in December 1979 had created a serious obstacle to action by the United States Senate on ratification. He anticipated that the incoming administration (January 1981) would be reviewing the United States position on SALT II very soon.

Albania dissociated itself from the consensus; it could not endorse the resolution's evaluation of the nature and effects of SALT II nor the appeals addressed to the two super-powers. New Zealand had difficulties with the statement that signature of a treaty carried with it the presumption that it would soon be ratified, a notion which it felt might encourage States to refrain from associating themselves with agreements until they were in a position to ratify them.

Non-proliferation of nuclear weapons

Second Review Conference on the Non-Proliferation Treaty

The second quinquennial Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,<sup>36</sup> which had entered into force on 5 March 1970, was held at Geneva from 11 August to 7 September 1980 to review the operation of the various articles of the Treaty. It was not able to agree on a substantive final document, but recommended that a third conference be held in 1985.

The Secretary-General had been asked by the General Assembly in 1978<sup>37</sup> to render any assistance required for the Conference or its preparation.

Of the 114 countries parties to the Treaty, 75 participated in the Conference:

Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Belgium, Bulgaria, Burundi, Canada, Congo, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Holy See, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Malta, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Romania, San Marino, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Sweden, Switzerland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, USSR, United Kingdom, United Republic of Cameroon, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Egypt, a signatory State which had not ratified the Treaty, participated without taking part in decisions. Eleven States, neither parties nor signatories, were granted observer status: Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Cuba, Israel, Mozambique, Spain, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia.

The United Nations and IAEA also participated, and two regional bodies, the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the League of Arab States, were granted observer agency status. In addition, representatives of 29 non-governmental organizations attended.

On 11 August, the Conference elected as its President Ismat T. Kittani (Iraq), confirmed the nomination of its Secretary-General, Alessandro Corradini (Italy), and elected 26 Vice-Presidents.

The Conference held 19 plenary meetings, 12 of which were devoted to a general debate. Divergent views were expressed on which aspects of the Treaty merited the greatest attention. The nuclear-weapon States and a number of others, including Eastern European countries, generally felt that the Conference should first endeavour to strengthen the Treaty by encouraging wider adherence and taking measures aimed towards a more effective safeguards system to prevent the diversion of nuclear materials and technology to military purposes. States stressing those points regarded the Treaty as having met its primary purpose, both as an instrument to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons and as the most appropriate framework for international co-operation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy.

On the other hand, many non-nuclear-weapon States, especially developing countries, held that the main emphasis should be on determination of whether all the provisions were being implemented and on measures required to fill gaps and remedy inadequacies. They believed that, while a strong and universal Treaty was desirable, that goal could best be accomplished on the basis of a balance of mutual responsibilities and obligations by both its nuclear and non-nuclear parties.

Of the Treaty's various provisions, the most intense debate was on the implementation of article VI, concerning nuclear disarmament.<sup>38</sup> Most participants held that the nuclear-weapon States had not adequately fulfilled their obligations under that article, and that the Conference should therefore urge them to intensify their efforts to stop the nuclear arms race and start a real process of nuclear disarmament. Sri Lanka, the co-ordinator of the participating developing countries that belonged to the "Group of 77," while accepting that recrimination would be futile, at the same time felt that one could hardly conceive of a review that did not relate to past performance. Mexico asserted that the future of the Treaty depended primarily on the implementation of article VI by the nuclear powers. In this regard, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States drew attention to their efforts to reach agreement on a number of issues, including a comprehensive nuclear-test ban, and to provide security guarantees to non-nuclear-weapon States.

Virtually all speakers addressing the provisions relating to the peaceful application of nuclear energy commended IAEA for the manner in which it had carried out its safeguards activities pursuant to article III. A number of developing non-nuclear-weapon States expressed dissatisfaction with what they considered to be restrictive export policies of suppliers and the inadequacy of technical assistance in nuclear energy given to developing-country parties; thus, the co-operation in peaceful applications of nuclear energy called for in article IV had not been observed. The United States, for its part, felt strongly that the Conference should promote full-scope safeguards under IAEA by calling on members of the non-proliferation regime to enter into new nuclear supply commitments only with States that accepted such safeguards on all their peaceful nuclear activities. The USSR, while stressing that all countries would benefit equally from the strengthening of the non-proliferation regime, saw the need for expanded co-operation in peaceful uses of nuclear energy, particularly with regard to the problem of assured supply of nuclear fuel on an equitable and mutually acceptable basis.

The Conference's substantive work was undertaken in two main committees. There were, in addition, a General Committee, a Drafting Committee and a Credentials Committee. A Preparatory Committee for the Conference had held three sessions at Geneva, in April and August 1979 and from 24 March to 1 April 1980; its final report was issued as a Conference document.

Main Committee I considered agenda items on elements of the review and role of the Treaty concerning: (1) implementation of provisions relating to non-proliferation; (2) other provisions; (3) security assurances, including those under Security Council resolution 255(1968)<sup>39</sup> on assistance to non-nuclear-weapon States parties which were victims of aggression involving nuclear weapons, and international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons; (4) State acceptance of the Treaty; and (5) measures to promote wider acceptance.

Committee I set up two open-ended informal groups: one to review articles I (on commitments not to transfer or assist in nuclear-weapon acquisition), II (on commitments not to receive or otherwise acquire such weapons), and VII (on nuclear-weapon-free zones) and security guarantees; and the other to review articles VI, VIII (on amendments) and IX (on ratification and accession). The groups reported little success in reconciling the various positions, although agreement was approached in the case of article VII and on security guarantees to non-nuclear-weapon States.

Committee II focused on provisions that related to peaceful applications of nuclear energy, mainly articles III (on undertaking to accept safeguards) and IV (on co-operation in developing peaceful applications). Some 36 working papers were presented containing various formulations for a final declaration on those articles. The Committee also examined article V, relating to sharing the benefits of peaceful applications of nuclear explosions. Perceived changes in nuclear export policies in the direction of more stringent control and a stricter safeguards regime led to differences of view between supplier and recipient countries. Despite progress on the issues before it, the Committee reported to the plenary Conference on 4 September that it had been unable to reach agreement on the matters allocated to it and was not in a position to submit any recommendations. In the case of Committee II, the difficulties were, however, more the result of its awareness of intractable difficulties experienced in Committee I than of those deriving within the Committee itself.

On 5 September, negotiations were resumed at the plenary level in two informal drafting groups composed of negotiators representing three groups of countries: the Group of 77, Eastern European countries, and Western European and other States. These held discussions in an attempt to reach agreement on the components of a final declaration acceptable to all. The informal group on peaceful uses of nuclear energy completed its work and produced three informal papers on the review of articles III, IV and V. The other informal group was unable to make significant progress on the questions of nuclear weapons and disarmament.

<sup>38</sup>Article VI of the Treaty states: "Each of the Parties to the Treaty undertakes to pursue negotiations in good faith on effective measures relating to cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament and on a treaty on general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control."

The Conference then opted to adopt a procedural Final Document without a substantive final declaration. At its last meeting, on 7 September, it proposed to the depositary Governments-the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States- that a third such review conference be convened in 1985, and requested States parties that were United Nations Members to request inclusion of an appropriate agenda item in the Assembly's 1983 session for establishing a preparatory committee. All proposals submitted to the Conference, and the views expressed as reflected in the summary records and documents, formed part of the Final Document of the Conference.

After the adoption of the Final Document, 23 parties made statements. Virtually all speakers expressed regret that the Conference had not been able to produce by consensus a substantive final declaration on the operation and implementation of the Treaty since 1975 and on measures to be taken in the future. Some participants, such as Norway, the United Kingdom, the United States, and the USSR and Eastern European States, felt that the Conference had done what was required of it-it had reviewed the operation of the Treaty and discussed how future progress might be made. Fears were expressed, however, that the failure to reach agreement on a final declaration represented a serious setback for international non-proliferation policies. Nigeria, Romania and Yugoslavia stated that the Conference had emphasized the loopholes, inequalities and unsatisfactory state of affairs between nuclear and non-nuclear parties to the Treaty. On the other hand, representatives from all regions affirmed their continued support for the Treaty and urged that work on the outstanding issues be continued.

Consideration by the General Assembly

No draft resolution concerning the Non-Proliferation Treaty or the Review Conference was put forward in the General Assembly at its regular 1980 session. However, in the First Committee, a number of countries referred to the Conference in their statements.

Mexico expressed particular concern about a recent resurgence of the illusory theory that limited nuclear war might be winnable, and therefore "thinkable," and emphasized that the non-nuclear-weapon States, in refusing to accept a purely academic final declaration at the Review Conference, had demonstrated that their 10 years of patience awaiting nuclear disarmament had been exhausted. Denmark, Japan, Portugal and the United States said that, despite the absence of a final declaration, there had been agreement on the fundamental soundness of the Treaty and the desirability of universal adherence, and there was virtually no criticism of its objectives.

Pointing to what they considered to be other positive aspects of the Conference, Australia, Finland, the Netherlands and Sweden noted the wide agreement on most of the issues relating to the application of safeguards and arrangements governing peaceful uses of nuclear energy.

Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic said the Conference reaffirmed the exceptional importance of the Treaty, the necessity of strengthening its regime and the irreplaceable role of IAEA in the application of safeguards and in developing international co-operation for peaceful uses of nuclear energy. Hungary, Mongolia and Poland said it proved that there was general recognition of the need for universalization of the Treaty and further advancement of its effectiveness. The German Democratic Republic and Poland added that the Conference had confirmed that the Treaty's principal provisions- the object of which was to prevent the emergence of further nuclear-weapon States- had been observed and there had been no violation of the Treaty by any party.

While Austria considered that the overall record of the first 10 years of operation was a positive one, it pointed to the Treaty area in which implementation had been extremely disappointing: article VI, concerning disarmament. Australia said the Conference was a sound warning that the nuclear-weapon States would have to achieve nuclear arms limitation if the Treaty's objectives were to be maintained. The Netherlands and Japan added that enormous damage would be inflicted on the Treaty's credibility and durability if vertical proliferation (the further development and stockpiling) of nuclear weapons continued and if nuclear disarmament maintained such a snail's pace. Agreement in other areas was not enough to offset the failure to agree on action to promote nuclear disarmament under article VI, Ireland added.

Commenting on the terms of that article, Algeria, Bangladesh, Egypt, Ethiopia, Indonesia, Kenya, the Philippines, Romania, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Suriname, the United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela and Yugoslavia were in agreement that the nuclear powers had not fulfilled their obligations to negotiate in good faith in arresting vertical proliferation and reducing nuclear arms. Sweden cautioned against an interpretation of that article as stipulating an obligation only to start negotiations, then going on negotiating for years or decades without results.

Nigeria said the nuclear States' unwillingness to discharge the obligations they had assumed justified the criticisms that the Treaty was elitist and discriminatory. This failure damaged hopes for attracting more non-nuclear States to the Treaty, Ireland observed. The future of the Treaty itself could be placed in jeopardy unless those obligations were honoured, Bangladesh and Yugoslavia added.

Algeria, Bangladesh, Egypt, Pakistan, Romania, Sierra Leone and the United Republic of Tanzania drew attention to another element of concern raised at the Conference: the dissatisfaction of non-aligned and developing States parties aroused by restrictive measures, artificial barriers and monopolistic policies practised in the transfer of nuclear energy and technology for peaceful purposes.

Algeria and Sri Lanka warned of the defective-ness of the Treaty in not preventing non-parties with the capacity to do so to pursue efforts to go nuclear. The United Republic of Tanzania said the Conference demonstrated that inherently discriminatory treaties could not be viable instruments for combating proliferation. Non-proliferation obligations should be shared equally, Sierra Leone contended.

China considered as just the demands that the super-powers cease vertical proliferation and extend effective security guarantees to non-nuclear States.

In a joint letter of 31 October addressed to the Secretary-General, the five Nordic States stated that the deliberations at the second Review Conference and other forums reconfirmed that non-proliferation policies did not and should not jeopardize the right of any state that accepted effective non-proliferation restraints to develop its programmes for peaceful, non-explosive uses of nuclear energy, and that international co-operation in that field would be served by dispelling fears of proliferation. The Nordic countries stressed the need for further steps to promote international confidence that additional States were not seeking to achieve nuclear explosive capability.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that the complete cessation of nuclear-weapon tests, which has been examined for more than twenty-five years and on which the General Assembly has adopted more than forty resolutions, is a basic objective of the United Nations in the sphere of disarmament, to whose attainment it has repeatedly assigned the highest priority.

Stressing that on seven different occasions it has condemned such tests in the strongest terms and that, since 1974, it has stated its conviction that the continuance of nuclear-weapon testing will intensify the arms race, thus increasing the danger of nuclear war,

Reiterating the assertion made in several previous resolutions that whatever may be the differences on the question of verification, there is no valid reason for delaying the conclusion of an agreement on a comprehensive test ban,

Recalling that since 1972 the Secretary-General has declared that all the technical and scientific aspects of the problem have been so fully explored that only a political decision is now necessary in order to achieve final agreement, that when the existing means of verification are taken into account, it is difficult to understand further delay in achieving agreement on an underground test ban, and that the potential risks of continuing underground nuclear-weapon tests would far outweigh any possible risks from ending such tests,

Recalling also that the Secretary-General, in his foreword to the report entitled "Comprehensive nuclear-test ban," has reiterated with special emphasis the opinion he expressed eight years ago and, after specifically referring to it, has added: "I still hold that belief. The problem can and should be solved now."

Noting that in the same report, which was prepared in compliance with General Assembly decision 34/422 of 11 December 1979, the experts have emphasized that non-nuclear-weapon States in general have come to regard the achievement of a comprehensive test ban as a litmus test of the determination of the nuclear-weapon States to halt the arms race, adding that verification of compliance no longer seems to be an obstacle to reaching agreement,

Taking into account that the three nuclear-weapon States which act as depositaries of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water undertook in that Treaty, almost twenty years ago, to seek the achievement of the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time and that such an undertaking was explicitly reiterated in 1968 in the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

1. Reiterates once again its grave concern that nuclear-weapon testing continues unabated against the wishes of the overwhelming majority of Member States;

2. Reaffirms its conviction that a treaty to achieve the prohibition of all nuclear test explosions by all States for all time is a matter of the highest priority and constitutes a vital element for the success of efforts to prevent both vertical and horizontal proliferation of nuclear weapons and a contribution to nuclear disarmament;

3. Urges all States that have not yet done so to adhere without further delay to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and, meanwhile, to refrain from testing in the environments covered by that Treaty;

4. Urges likewise all States members of the Committee on Disarmament:

(a) To support the creation by the Committee, upon initiation of its session to be held in 1981, of an ad hoc working group which should begin the multilateral negotiation of a treaty for the prohibition of all nuclear-weapon tests;

(b) To use their best endeavours in order that the Committee may transmit to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session the multilaterally negotiated text of such a treaty;

5. Calls upon the States depositaries of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, by virtue of their special responsibilities under those two treaties and as a provisional measure until the new comprehensive test-ban treaty enters into force, to bring to a halt without delay all nuclear test explosions, either through a bilaterally agreed moratorium or through three unilateral moratoria;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session an item entitled "Cessation of all test explosions of nuclear weapons."

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its conviction that it is in the interests of all people that nuclear-weapon testing by all States in all environments should cease, as this would be a major step towards ending the qualitative improvement, development and proliferation of nuclear weapons, a means of relieving the deep apprehension concerning the harmful consequences of radioactive contamination for the health of present and future generations and a measure of the utmost importance in bringing the nuclear arms race to an end,

Recalling that the parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapons Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons have already expressed in those treaties their determination to continue negotiations to achieve the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject, in particular resolution 32/78 of 12 December 1977, paragraph 51 of resolution S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, resolution 33/60 of 14 December 1978, section IV of resolution 33/71 H of 14 December 1976 and resolution 34/73 of 11 December 1979,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on a comprehensive nuclear-test ban,

Taking note of the progress report on the trilateral negotiations, submitted to the Committee on Disarmament by the three negotiating nuclear-weapon States, on a treaty prohibiting nuclear test explosions in all environments and its protocol covering nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes,

Expressing regret that those negotiations have not moved as rapidly as had been expected,

Emphasizing the urgent need for all nuclear-weapon States to cease the testing of nuclear weapons,

Recognizing the indispensable role of the Committee on Disarmament in the negotiation of a comprehensive test-ban treaty capable of attracting the widest possible international support and adherence,

Believing that the Committee on Disarmament should establish an ad hoc working group on a nuclear-test-ban treaty,

Recognizing the importance to a treaty prohibiting nuclear testing of the work being carried out under the auspices of the Committee on Disarmament on the development of a global seismic verification system,

Convinced that the conclusion of such a treaty would create a favourable international climate for the second special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, to be held in 1982.

1. Reiterates its grave concern that nuclear-weapon testing continues unabated against the express wishes of the overwhelming majority of Member States:

2. Reaffirms its conviction that a treaty to achieve the prohibition of all nuclear test explosions by all States for all time is a matter of the greatest urgency and priority:

3. Calls upon the three negotiating nuclear-weapon States to exert their best efforts to bring their negotiations to a successful conclusion in time for consideration during the next session of the Committee on Disarmament;

4. Expresses the conviction that such a treaty is a vital requirement to halt the nuclear arms race and the qualitative improvement of nuclear weapons and to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons to additional countries:

5. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to take the necessary steps, including the establishment of a working group, to initiate substantive negotiations on a comprehensive test-ban treaty as a matter of the highest priority at the beginning of its session to be held in 1981;

6. Further requests the Committee on Disarmament to determine, in the context of its negotiations on such a treaty, the institutional and administrative steps necessary for establishing, testing and operating an international seismic monitoring network and effective verification system;

7. Urges all members of the Committee on Disarmament to co-operate with the Committee in fulfilling its mandate and, to this end, to support the creation of a working group on a comprehensive nuclear-test ban;

8. Calls upon the Committee on Disarmament to exert all efforts in order that a draft comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty may be submitted to the General Assembly no later than at its second special session devoted to disarmament, to be held in 1982;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session an item relating to the implementation of the present resolution.

The General Assembly,

Convinced of the need to take effective measures for the strengthening of the security of States and prompted by the desire shared by all nations to eliminate war and prevent nuclear conflagration,

Taking into account the principle of non-use of force or threat of force enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and reaffirmed in a number of United Nations declarations and resolutions,

Noting with satisfaction the desire of States in various regions to prevent nuclear weapons from being introduced into their territories, including through the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the region concerned, and being anxious to contribute to the attainment of this objective,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective measures to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recognizing that effective measures to assure the non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can constitute a positive contribution to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons,

Mindful of the statements and considerations made by various States on the strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States,

Desirous of promoting the implementation of paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Recalling its resolutions 33/72 of 14 December 1978 and 34/84 and 34/85 of 11 December 1979,

Noting the consideration by the Committee on Disarmament in 1980 of the item entitled "Effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons" and the setting up of an ad hoc working group to continue the negotiations on this problem,

Recalling the drafts of an international convention submitted on this item to the Committee on Disarmament in 1979,

Taking note of the report of the Committee on Disarmament, including the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group,

Noting with satisfaction that the idea of a convention has received widespread international support,

Wishing to promote an early and successful completion of the negotiations on the elaboration of such a convention,

Noting further the examination by the Committee on Disarmament of the suggestion that, upon the recommendation of the General Assembly, the Security Council might consider the question of concrete measures to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons which, as an interim arrangement, should not be a substitute for the indispensable renewed efforts to reach agreement on a common approach acceptable to all which could be included in an international instrument of a legally binding character,

1. Welcomes the conclusion of the Committee on Disarmament that there is continuing recognition of the urgent need to reach agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. Notes with satisfaction that in the Committee on Disarmament there was no objection, in principle, to the idea of an international convention;

3. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to continue on a priority basis, during its session to be held in 1981, the negotiations on the question of strengthening the security guarantees of non-nuclear-weapon States;

4. Calls upon States participating in talks on the question of providing guarantees to non-nuclear States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons to make efforts for the speedy elaboration and conclusion of an international convention on this matter;

5. Calls upon all nuclear-weapon States to make solemn declarations, identical in substance, concerning the non-use of nuclear weapons against non-nuclear States having no such weapons on their territories, as a first step towards the conclusion of such an international convention;

6. Recommends that the Security Council should examine declarations which may be made by nuclear States regarding the strengthening of security guarantees for non-nuclear States and, if all these declarations are found consistent with the above-mentioned objective, should adopt an appropriate resolution approving them;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session the item entitled "Conclusion of an international convention on the strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons."

Convinced that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are essential to remove the danger of nuclear war,

Taking into account the principle of the non-use of force or threat of force enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Deeply concerned about any possibility of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Recognizing that the independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty of non-nuclear-weapon States need to be safeguarded against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the International community to develop effective measures to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recalling its resolution 3261 G (XXIX) of 9 December 1974,

Further recalling its resolution 31/189 C of 21 December 1976,

Further noting the general support expressed in the Committee on Disarmament and in the General Assembly for the elaboration of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to reach agreement on effective International arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that nuclear weapons pose the most serious threat to mankind and its survival and that it is therefore essential to proceed with nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming also that all nuclear-weapon States, in particular those which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, bear a special responsibility for the fulfilment of the task of achieving the goals of nuclear disarmament,

Stressing again that existing arsenals of nuclear weapons alone are more than sufficient to destroy all life on earth, and bearing in mind the devastating results which nuclear war would have on belligerents and non-belligerents alike,

Noting with alarm the increased risk of a nuclear catastrophe associated both with the intensification of the nuclear arms race and with the adoption of the new doctrine of limited or partial use of nuclear weapons giving rise to illusions of the admissibility and acceptability of a nuclear conflict.

Stressing again that priority in disarmament negotiations should be given to nuclear weapons, and referring to paragraphs 49 and 54 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/71 H of 14 December 1978 and 34/83 J of 11 December 1979,

Noting with satisfaction that the Committee on Disarmament during its session held in 1980 considered the item of its agenda entitled "Cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament,"

Noting also the proposals and statements made in the Committee on Disarmament on the cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament,

Noting with regret that the Committee on Disarmament during its session held in 1980 did not have an opportunity to attempt to reconcile the different points of view as regards the approach, machinery and basis for multilateral negotiations on nuclear disarmament,

Convinced that the Committee on Disarmament is the most suitable forum for the preparation and conduct of the negotiations on nuclear disarmament,

1. Notes the decision of the Committee on Disarmament to resume intensive consideration, at its session to be held in 1981, of the item on the cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament;

2. Believes it necessary to intensify efforts with a view to initiating, as a matter of high priority, negotiations, with the participation of all nuclear-weapon States, on the question of the cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 50 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

3. Calls upon the Committee on Disarmament, as a matter of priority and for the purpose of an early commencement of the negotiations on the substance of the problem, to undertake consultations in which to consider, inter alia, the establishment of an ad hoc working group on the cessation of the nuclear arms race and on nuclear disarmament with a clearly defined mandate;

4. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to report on the results of those negotiations to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session.

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, it decided that effective measures of nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war had the highest priority and that it was essential to halt and reverse the nuclear arms race in all its aspects in order to avert the danger of war involving nuclear weapons,

Recalling also that, at the same session, it was expressly recognized that the achievement of nuclear disarmament would require urgent negotiation of agreements at appropriate stages and with adequate measures of verification satisfactory to the States concerned, and the results that should be pursued in each one of those stages were defined,

Reiterating its conviction, as stated in its resolution 34/83 B of 11 December 1979, that the Committee on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating body, should become urgently and most directly involved in substantive negotiations on priority disarmament questions,

Bearing in mind the declaration formulated by twenty-one of the States members of the Committee on Disarmament, in the working paper of 27 February 1980, to the effect that working groups are the best available machinery for conduct of concrete negotiations within the committee.

Taking into account the positive conclusions derived from the performance of the four ad hoc working groups established by the Committee on Disarmament on 17 March 1980 to deal, respectively, with the items relating to chemical weapons, radiological weapons, "negative guarantees" and the comprehensive programme of disarmament,

1. Urges the Committee on Disarmament to establish, upon initiation of its session to be held in 1981, an ad hoc working group on the item which in its agenda for 1979 and 1980 was entitled "Cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament";

2. Considers that, in the light of the exchange of views held on this subject during the last two annual sessions of the Committee on Disarmament, it would be advisable that the working group begin its negotiations by addressing the question of the elaboration and clarification of the stages of nuclear disarmament envisaged in paragraph 50 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, including identification of the responsibilities of the nuclear-weapon States and the role of the non-nuclear-weapon States in the process of achieving nuclear disarmament.

The General Assembly,

Alarmed by the threat to the survival of mankind and to the life-sustaining system posed by nuclear weapons and by their use, inherent in concepts of deterrence,

Convinced that nuclear disarmament is essential for the prevention of nuclear war and for the strengthening of international peace and security,

Recalling its declaration, contained in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, that all States should actively participate in efforts to bring about conditions in international relations among States in which a code of peaceful conduct of nations in international affairs could be agreed upon and which would preclude the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Recalling its resolutions 1653(XVI) of 24 November 1961, 33/71 B of 14 December 1978 and 34/83 G of 11 December 1979,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, to which is annexed the Comprehensive Study on Nuclear Weapons, prepared with the assistance of a Group of Experts,

1. Declares once again that:

(a) The use of nuclear weapons would be a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity;

(b) The use or threat of use of nuclear weapons should therefore be prohibited, pending nuclear disarmament;

2. Requests all States that have so far not submitted their proposals concerning the non-use of nuclear weapons, avoidance of nuclear war and related matters to do so, in order that the question of an international convention or some other agreement on the subject may be further considered at the thirty-sixth session of the General Assembly;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session the item entitled "Non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war."

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/91 H of 16 December 1978 and 34/87 D of 11 December 1979, in which it requested the Committee on Disarmament, at an appropriate stage of the implementation of the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and of its work on the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects," to consider urgently the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices and to keep the Assembly informed of the progress of that consideration,

Noting that the agenda for 1980 of the Committee on Disarmament included the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects" and that its programme of work for both parts of its session held in 1980 contained the item entitled "Cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament,"

Recalling the proposals and statements made in the Committee on Disarmament on these items,

Noting further that the report of the Committee on Disarmament contains a summary of the work of the Committee during 1980 on this subject and refers to the submission of the document entitled "The prohibition of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes,"

Considering that the cessation of production of fissionable material for weapons purposes and the progressive conversion and transfer of stocks to peaceful uses would be a significant step towards halting and reversing the nuclear arms race,

Considering that the prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other explosive devices would also be an important measure in facilitating the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons and explosive devices,

Requests the Committee on Disarmament, at an appropriate stage of its work on the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects," to pursue its consideration of the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices and to keep the General Assembly informed of the progress of that consideration.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 34/76 B of 11 December 1979,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its first ordinary session, held at Cairo from 17 to 21 July 1964,

Alarmed by South Africa's increased sophistication in the nuclear field, including the advanced processing and enrichment of uranium as nuclear-weapon fuel and its advanced nuclear technology,

Alarmed also at the fact that South Africa's nuclear capability has been enhanced by the co-operation of certain Western States and Israel with the racist régime.

Taking note of the report of the Security Council Committee Established by Resolution 421(1977) concerning the Question of South Africa on ways and means of making the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa more effective,

Noting with concern that South Africa has persistently refused to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and to conclude adequate and comprehensive safeguards agreements with the International Atomic Energy Agency with a view to preventing the diversion of nuclear materials from peaceful uses to the manufacture of nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices,

Recalling its decision taken at the tenth special session, devoted to disarmament, that the Security Council should take appropriate effective steps to prevent the frustration of the decision of the Organization of African Unity for the denuclearization of Africa,

Bearing in mind the persistent concern with which the international community regards South Africa's capability and plans in the nuclear field,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on South Africa's plan and capability in the nuclear field, including the reported explosion of a nuclear device in the South Atlantic on 22 September 1979,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report on South Africa's plan and capability in the nuclear field;

2. Expresses its deep alarm that the report has established South Africa's capability to manufacture nuclear weapons;

3. Also expresses its deep concern that South Africa's nuclear capability is being developed to preserve white supremacy by intimidating neighbouring countries and black-mailing the entire continent of Africa;

4. Reaffirms that the racist régime's nuclear plans and capability constitute a very grave danger to international peace and security and, in particular, jeopardize the security of African States and increase the danger of the proliferation of nuclear weapons;

5. Requests the Security Council to prohibit all forms of co-operation and collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa in the nuclear field;

6. Calls upon all States, corporations, institutions or individuals to terminate forthwith such nuclear collaboration between them and the racist régime of South Africa;

7. Requests the Security Council to institute effective enforcement action against the racist régime of South Africa, so as to prevent it from endangering international peace and security through its acquisition of nuclear weapons;

8. Demands that South Africa submit all its nuclear installations to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to give maximum publicity to the report on South Africa's plan and capability in the nuclear field and to distribute it to Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and non-governmental organizations, so that the international community and public opinion may be fully aware of the danger inherent in the programme;

10. Further requests the Secretary-General to follow closely South Africa's activity in the nuclear field and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa."

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its first ordinary session, held at Cairo from 17 to 21 July 1964,

Recalling its resolutions 1652(XVI) of 24 November 1961, 32/81 of 12 December 1977, 33/63 of 14 December 1978 and 34/76 A of 11 December 1979, in which it called upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa, comprising the continental African States, Madagascar and other islands surrounding Africa, as a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Recalling also that in its resolution 33/63 of 14 December 1978 it vigorously condemned any attempt by South Africa to introduce in any way whatsoever nuclear weapons into the continent and demanded that South Africa should forthwith refrain from conducting any nuclear explosion on the continent of Africa or elsewhere,

Reaffirming that the nuclear programme of the racist regime of South Africa constitutes a very grave danger to international peace and security and, in particular, jeopardizes the security of African States,

Noting with concern that South Africa has persistently refused to conclude adequate and comprehensive safeguards agreements with the International Atomic Energy Agency with a view to preventing the diversion of nuclear materials from peaceful uses to the manufacture of nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices,

Taking note of the report of the Security Council Committee Established by Resolution 421(1977) concerning the Question of South Africa on ways and means of making the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa more effective and, in particular, its recommendation that all forms of nuclear collaboration with South Africa should cease,

Having seriously examined the report of the Secretary-General on South Africa's plan and capability in the nuclear field, including the reported detonation of a nuclear explosive device in the South Atlantic on 22 September 1979,

Gravely concerned that South Africa might have acquired nuclear weapons,

Expressing its indignation that certain Western countries and Israel have continued to collaborate with South Africa in the nuclear field despite the risk of proliferation of nuclear weapons which the South African nuclear programme poses,

Recalling its decision taken at the tenth special session, devoted to disarmament, that the Security Council should take appropriate effective steps to prevent the frustration of the decision of the Organization of African Unity for the denuclearization of Africa,

1. Strongly reiterates its call upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa, comprising the continental African States, Madagascar and other islands surrounding Africa, as a nuclear-weapon-free zone;

2. Reaffirms that the nuclear programme of the racist regime of South Africa constitutes a very grave danger to international peace and security and, in particular, jeopardizes the security of African States and increases the danger of the proliferation of nuclear weapons;

3. Condemns any form of nuclear collaboration by any State, corporation, institution or individual with the racist regime of South Africa since such collaboration frustrates, inter alia, the objective of the Declaration of the Organization of African Unity to keep Africa a nuclear-weapon-free zone;

4. Calls upon such States, corporations, institutions or individuals, therefore, to terminate forthwith such nuclear collaboration between them and the racist regime of South Africa;

5. Requests the Security Council, in keeping with the recommendation of its Committee Established by Resolution 421(1977) concerning the Question of South Africa, to prohibit all forms of co-operation and collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa in the nuclear field;

6. Demands that South Africa submit all its nuclear installations to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to render all necessary assistance to the Organization of African Unity towards the realization of its solemn Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa."

S/14179. Report of Security Council Committee Established by Resolution 421(1977) of 9 December 1977 concerning the Question of South Africa on ways and means of making mandatory arms embargo against South Africa more effective.

A/35/690. Report of First Committee.

Resolution 35/147, as recommended by First Committee, A/35/690, adopted without vote by Assembly on 12 December 1980, meeting 94.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3263(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, in which it overwhelmingly commended the idea of the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Recalling also its resolution 3474(XXX) of 11 December 1975, in which it recognized that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East enjoyed wide support in the region,

Bearing in mind its resolution 31/71 of 10 December 1976, in which it expressed the conviction that progress towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East would greatly enhance the cause of peace in the region and in the world,

Recalling its resolution 32/82 of 12 December 1977, in which it expressed the conviction that the development of nuclear capability would further complicate the situation and immensely damage the efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East,

Guided by the recommendations in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly dealing with the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Recalling also its resolutions 33/64 of 14 December 1978 and 34/77 of 11 December 1979,

Recognizing that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East would greatly enhance international peace and security,

1. Urges all parties directly concerned seriously to consider taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and, as a means of promoting this objective, invites the countries concerned to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

2. Invites those countries, pending the establishment of such a zone in the Middle East and during the process of its establishment, to declare solemnly that they will refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from producing, acquiring or in any other way possessing nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices;

3. Calls upon those countries to refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from permitting the stationing of nuclear weapons on their territory by any third party and to agree to place all their nuclear activities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

4. Further invites those countries, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East and during the process of its establishment, to declare their support for establishing such a zone in the region consistent with paragraphs 60 to 63, in particular paragraph 63 (d), of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session and to deposit those declarations with the Security Council for consideration as appropriate;

5. Reaffirms again its recommendation to the nuclear-weapon States to refrain from any action contrary to the spirit and purpose of the present resolution and the objective of establishing in the region of the Middle East a nuclear-weapon-free zone under an effective system of safeguards and to extend their co-operation to the States of the region in their efforts to promote these objectives;

6. Renews its invitation to the Secretary-General to continue to explore the possibilities of making progress towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East."

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3285 B (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3476 B (XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/73 of 10 December 1976, 32/83 of 12 December 1977, 33/65 of 14 December 1978 and 34/78 of 11 December 1979 concerning the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia,

Reiterating its conviction that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in various regions of the world is one of the measures that can contribute most effectively to the objectives of non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and general and complete disarmament,

Believing that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia, as in other regions, will strengthen the security of the States of the region against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the declarations issued at the highest level by Governments of South Asian States reaffirming their undertaking not to acquire or manufacture nuclear weapons and to devote their nuclear programmes exclusively to the economic and social advancement of their peoples,

Recalling that in the above-mentioned resolutions it called upon the States of the South Asian region and such other neighbouring non-nuclear-weapon States as might be interested to make all possible efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to refrain, in the mean time, from any action contrary to this objective,

Further recalling that, in its resolutions 3265 B (XXIX), 31/73 and 32/83, it requested the Secretary-General to convene a meeting for the purpose of the consultations mentioned therein and to render such assistance as might be required to promote the efforts for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia,

Bearing in mind the provisions of paragraphs 60 to 63 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly regarding the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, including in the region of South Asia,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia,

1. Reaffirms its endorsement, in principle, of the concept of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

2. Urges once again the States of South Asia and such other neighbouring non-nuclear-weapon States as may be interested to continue to make all possible efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to refrain, in the mean time, from any action contrary to this objective;

3. Calls upon those nuclear-weapon States which have not done so to respond positively to this proposal and to extend the necessary co-operation in the efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to render such assistance as may be required to promote the efforts for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to report on the subject to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia."

<sup>a</sup>Subsequently advised the Secretariat that it had intended to vote against.

The General Assembly,

Conscious that a nuclear war would have devastating consequences for the whole of mankind,

Recalling its resolution 33/91 F of 16 December 1978, in which it called upon all nuclear-weapon States to refrain from stationing nuclear weapons on the territories of States where there are no such weapons at present, and on all non-nuclear-weapon States which do not have nuclear weapons on their territories to refrain from any steps which would directly or indirectly result in the stationing of such weapons on their territories,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, submitted in accordance with General Assembly resolution 34/87 C of 11 December 1979,

Bearing in mind the clearly expressed intention of many States to prevent the stationing of nuclear weapons on their territories,

Considering that the non-stationing of nuclear weapons on the territories of States where there are no such weapons at present would constitute a step towards the larger objective of the subsequent complete withdrawal of nuclear weapons from the territories of other States, thus contributing to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons and leading eventually to the total elimination of nuclear weapons,

1. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to proceed without delay to talks with a view to elaborating an international agreement on the non-stationing of nuclear weapons on the territories of States where there are no such weapons at present;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Committee on Disarmament all documents relating to the discussion of this question by the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session;

3. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to submit a report on the question to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session the item entitled "Non-stationing of nuclear weapons on the territories of States where there are no such weapons at present: report of the Committee on Disarmament."

Resolution 35/156 K, as recommended by First Committee, A/35/699, adopted without vote by Assembly on 12 December 1960, meeting 94.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2602 A (XXIV) of 16 December 1969, 2932 B (XXVII) of 29 November 1972, 3184 A and C (XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 3261 C (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3464 C (XXX) of 12 December 1975, 31/169 A of 21 December 1976 and 32/67 G of 12 December 1977,

Reaffirming once again its resolution 33/91 C of 16 December 1978, in which it, inter alia:

(a) Reiterated its satisfaction at the solemn declarations made in 1977 by the heads of State of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, in which they stated that they were ready to endeavour to reach agreements which would permit starting the gradual reduction of existing stockpiles of nuclear weapons and moving towards their complete, total destruction, with a view to a world truly free of nuclear weapons.

(b) Recalled that one of the disarmament measures deserving the highest priority, included in the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, was the conclusion of the bilateral agreement known as SALT II, which should be followed promptly by further strategic arms limitation negotiations between the two parties, leading to agreed significant reductions of and qualitative limitations on strategic arms,

(c) Stressed that in the Programme of Action it was established that, in the task of achieving the goals of nuclear disarmament, all nuclear-weapon States, in particular those among them which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, bear a special responsibility,

Recalling that the SALT II agreement-which bears the official title of "Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms"-was finally signed on 18 June 1979, after six years of bilateral negotiations, and that its text, together with the texts of the Protocol to the Treaty and of the joint statement of principles and basic guidelines for subsequent negotiations on the limitation of strategic arms, both signed on the same date as the Treaty, and that of a joint communique, also issued on 18 June 1979, were reproduced as a document of the Committee on Disarmament,

Reaffirming that, as stated in its resolution 34/87 F of 11 December 1979, it shares the conviction expressed by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America in the joint statement that early agreement on the further limitation and further reduction of strategic arms would serve to strengthen international peace and security and to reduce the risk of outbreak of nuclear war,

Bearing in mind that in the same resolution it expressed its trust that the SALT II Treaty would enter into force at an early date, inasmuch as it constituted a vital element for the continuation and progress of the negotiations between the two States possessing the most important arsenals of nuclear weapons,

Recalling that, at its first special session devoted to disarmament, it proclaimed that existing arsenals of nuclear weapons alone were more than sufficient to destroy all life on earth, that the increase in weapons, especially nuclear weapons, far from helping to strengthen international security, on the contrary weakened it, and that the existence of nuclear weapons and the continuing arms race posed a threat to the very survival of mankind, for which reasons the General Assembly declared that all the peoples of the world had a vital interest in the sphere of disarmament,

Noting that the Disarmament Commission, at its session held in 1980, agreed, while examining the "Elements of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade," to include, among the concrete measures which should be given the highest priority, the ratification of the strategic arms limitation agreement (SALT II) and the commencement of negotiations for a SALT III agreement,

Noting also that in the debates of the Committee on Disarmament during its session held in 1980 the need for prompt ratification of the Treaty was constantly stressed,

Convinced that the signature in good faith of a treaty, especially if it is the culmination of prolonged and conscientious negotiations, carries with it the presumption that its ratification will not be unduly delayed,

1. Deplores that the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (SALT II) has not yet been ratified, notwithstanding that it was signed on 18 June 1979 and in spite of the many other reasons existing for such ratification as illustrated by those summarized in the preamble of the present resolution;

2. Urges the two signatory States not to delay any further the implementation of the procedure provided for in article XIX of the Treaty for its entry into force, taking particularly into account that not only their national interests but also the vital interests of all the peoples are at stake in this question;

3. Trusts that, pending the entry into force of the Treaty, the signatory States, in conformity with the provisions of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, will refrain from any act which would defeat the object and purpose of the Treaty;

4. Reiterates its satisfaction, already expressed in its resolution 34/87 F, at the agreement reached by both parties in the joint statement of principles and basic guidelines for subsequent negotiations on the limitation of strategic arms, signed the same day as the Treaty, to the effect of continuing to pursue negotiations, in accordance with the principle of equality and equal security, on measures for the further limitation and reduction in the number of strategic arms, as well as for their further qualitative limitation which should culminate in the SALT III treaty, and to the effect also of endeavouring in such negotiations to achieve, inter alia, the following objectives:

(a) Significant and substantial reductions in the numbers of strategic arms;

(b) Qualitative limitations on strategic offensive arms, including restrictions on the development, testing and deployment of new types of strategic offensive arms and on the modernization of existing strategic offensive arms;

5. Invites the Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to keep the General Assembly appropriately informed of the results of their negotiations, in conformity with the provisions of paragraphs 27 and 114 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session the item entitled "Strategic arms limitation talks."

Non-proliferation of nuclear weapons

A/C.1/35/10. Letter of 31 October from Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden (transmitting memorandum stating views on question of non-proliferation of nuclear weapons).

NPT/CONF.II/22/I and II. Final Document of 2nd Review Conference of Parties to Treaty on Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, Geneva, 11 August-7 September. Part I: Organization and work of Conference; Part II: Summary records.

Questions relating to non-nuclear disarmament measures

A Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction was held in March 1980. One of three 1980 General Assembly resolutions on chemical and bacteriological weapons (resolutions 35/144 A-C) welcomed the final declaration of the Conference; another urged the Committee on Disarmament to give high priority to negotiations on a convention banning chemical weapons; and the third requested an investigation of reports of alleged use of chemical weapons.

The Committee on Disarmament was asked to continue negotiations on a treaty banning radiological weapons (resolution 35/156 G) and on a comprehensive agreement banning new types and systems of weapons of mass destruction and possible agreements on particular types (resolution 35/149).

The Assembly commended to all States the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, and the Convention's three Protocols banning specific weapons (resolution 35/153). These instruments were adopted on 10 October at a United Nations conference convened to draft the Convention.

By resolution 35/142 B, the Assembly asked Member States to report annually their military expenditures, using a reporting form drawn up by an Ad Hoc Panel on Military Budgeting, while another expert group was to help further refine the reporting instrument and examine related questions of comparability and verification of budget-reduction agreements. The Disarmament Commission also was asked to elaborate principles governing freezing and reducing military expenditures resolution 36/142 A).

For the first time, the draft resolution recommended by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean, which was undertaking preparatory work for a Conference on the Indian Ocean, was adopted without a vote (resolution 35/150).

Details of these decisions are given in this subchapter.

Chemical and bacteriological weapons

On 12 December 1980, the General Assembly adopted three resolutions (35/144 A-C) pertaining to chemical and bacteriological weapons. By the first, it welcomed the results of the Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction,<sup>40</sup> held at Geneva from 3 to 21 March. By the second, it urged the Committee on Disarmament to give high priority to negotiations on a multilateral convention banning chemical weapons and, by the third, it requested an investigation of reports of recent alleged use of chemical weapons.

The Review Conference was the first convened under the terms of article XII of the 1971 Convention, which had entered into force on 25 March 1975; that article provided for a review of the operation of the instrument, taking into account any new scientific and technological developments.

Of the 81 States that had ratified the Convention (there were six accessions), 53 participated in the Conference:

Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Finland, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Hungary, India, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Kenya, Kuwait, Luxembourg, Mexico, Mongolia, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Romania, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Eight of 37 signatory States also participated; they were Chile, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, the Federal Republic of Germany, Iraq, Morocco, the Netherlands and Sri Lanka.

The Conference elected as its President Oscar Vaerno (Norway) and confirmed Rosa Amada Segarra (Ecuador) as Secretary-General. Vice-Presidents were representatives of Argentina, Bulgaria, Canada, Ecuador, Ghana, Hungary, Italy, Kuwait, Nigeria, Pakistan, Spain, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States, Venezuela and Yugoslavia. In addition to a Committee of the Whole, the Conference established Drafting and Credentials Committees.

The Conference adopted a Final Document by consensus on 21 March, which contained the text of the final declaration of the Conference, the report of the Committee of the Whole, and the summary records of both that Committee and the 12 plenary meetings.

By the final declaration, which commented on each of the Convention's 15 articles, the States parties reaffirmed their strong determination to exclude completely the possibility of bacteriological agents and toxins being used as weapons, their strong support for the Convention, their continued dedication to its principles and objectives, and their commitment to implement its provisions. They expressed the belief that article I, which defined the scope of the Convention, was sufficiently comprehensive to have covered recent scientific and technological developments. Noting the differing views on the adequacy of article V, which contained an undertaking to consult and co-operate with other States parties in solving problems concerning the aim of or in applying the Convention, the parties decided that the question should be considered further at an appropriate time; the flexibility of that article's provisions on consultations and co-operation enabled parties to use various procedures-including the right to request a consultative meeting at the expert level-to ensure that the Convention's provisions were implemented.

The parties reaffirmed their obligation to continue negotiations towards early agreement on complete, effective and adequately verifiable measures for banning and destroying chemical weapons. Articles permitting the lodging of a complaint with the Security Council for breach of obligations (article VI), assistance to a party which was a victim of a violation (article VII), amendments (article XI) or withdrawal (article XIII) had not been invoked since the Convention's entry into force.

By resolution 35/144 A, the Assembly welcomed the statements contained in the final declaration of the Review Conference and called on signatory States that had not ratified the Convention to do so without delay and those that had not signed it to consider doing so soon.

The text was approved without vote by the First Committee on 25 November; it was similarly adopted by the Assembly.

Norway, introducing the resolution on behalf of its 22 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), said that the Convention, the first containing provisions regarding concrete disarmament measures, was one of the major agreements in the disarmament field and an important step towards a similar ban on chemical weapons.

By resolution 35/144 B, the Assembly expressed its regret that an agreement on the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons had not been elaborated and urged the Committee on Disarmament to continue negotiations in 1981 on such a multilateral convention as a matter of high priority. The First Committee approved the text on 25 November without a vote; it was likewise adopted by the Assembly.

Poland introduced the resolution in the First Committee on behalf of 38 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). It stated that the complete and effective elimination of stocks of chemical weapons was one of the most crucial and pressing disarmament issues facing the international community. For its part, Poland understood the disappointment and impatience over what many considered to be an unsatisfactory rate of progress, but believed that the surest and shortest route towards the cherished goal led not so much through setting time-frames but rather through dedicated and constructive co-operation, goodwill and an open mind.

The USSR and many other Members attached great importance to the early conclusion of an international agreement completely banning chemical weapons. Nigeria, Senegal, the United Republic of Cameroon, and Viet Nam were among the many States that appealed for the early conclusion of a treaty prohibiting such weapons.

The United States noted that it was continuing bilateral negotiations on the question with the USSR and that it had given full support to the work of the Committee on Disarmament on the question. Hungary welcomed the reaffirmation of the commitment of those two States to pursue their negotiations. Venezuela, however, believed the bilateral negotiations to be a complementary process to multilateral negotiations in the Committee on Disarmament, which had a fundamental role to play in achieving a permanent chemical weapons ban.

Austria, Burma and China were among those expressing dissatisfaction with the slow rate of progress of the bilateral negotiations. China stated that, because of delaying tactics and obstruction by the super-powers, the working group set up by the Committee on Disarmament still had a very long way to go before a convention on chemical weapons could be concluded.

The Philippines called for a moratorium, pending an agreement on the banning of the production or deployment of chemical weapons and the destruction of existing stocks.

Italy believed that good progress towards such an agreement had been made in the Committee on Disarmament in 1980, a view that was shared by the nine members of the European Economic Community and voiced on their behalf by Luxembourg. Nevertheless, Italy stated that it would be extremely dangerous to the credibility of that Committee and of the disarmament process if the Assembly's 1982 special session devoted to disarmament had to be told that a treaty on chemical weapons had not been concluded. Nigeria regretted that the resolution just adopted did not reflect a stronger sense of urgency towards that end.

Mongolia believed that the problem of banning chemical weapons was becoming more urgent in view of the reported intentions of certain Western countries to continue to improve this weapon of mass destruction and increase its production. The USSR charged that one country was openly discussing plans for building new plants to produce binary chemical weapons at a time when that country's representatives were participating in negotiations on their prohibition. Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR and the German Democratic Republic added that attempts to strengthen existing chemical warfare capabilities, especially through the introduction of new types of weapons, were unhelpful to the ongoing negotiations.

Austria stated that any strengthening of the chemical weapons capabilities of the superpowers would not only diminish the chances for the eventual conclusion of the treaty but might also lead to an erosion of the existing restraint with regard to their use.

Some Member States, including Australia, Austria, Canada, China, Italy, Malaysia, the Netherlands, Sierra Leone, Somalia, the United Kingdom and Uruguay, expressed concern over reports of the possible use of chemical weapons in specific regional conflicts. Japan stated that reports suggesting the possibility that poisonous gas or other chemical weapons might have been used in Afghanistan, Democratic Kampuchea and the Lao People's Democratic Republic, if proved accurate, would be extremely regrettable challenges to the efforts towards the prohibition of chemical weapons. The United States said the international community could not ignore the persistent reports that chemical weapons had been used in those countries. It was of the view that an impartial investigation into those reports could most appropriately be launched under the auspices of the United Nations. The Netherlands and the United Kingdom said they would support any realistic, impartial and balanced undertaking to investigate the reports, which would moreover establish the precedent of verification of use.

France, Ghana, Singapore, Somalia and Zaire said their concern was to strengthen the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, particularly by use of an inquiry procedure; machinery for investigating reports about activities prohibited under the Protocol was not provided for in that instrument. Without verification, Togo said, all international instruments were pointless. Sweden said it supported in principle every request of a Member State for clarification of the truth behind allegations of violations of the Protocol.

The Lao People's Democratic Republic challenged United States allegations that it had used chemical weapons. On the other hand, it stated, there was overwhelming proof that the United States had used such inhumane and murderous weapons intensively during its aggressive war against the Lao People's Democratic Republic.

Democratic Kampuchea charged that the Vietnamese army of occupation had used chemical weapons and toxic gases in Kampuchea. Denying these charges, Viet Nam referred to an investigation made in mid-March by the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), which had sent for laboratory analysis some specimens taken at the Khmer-Thai frontier from patients suspected of having been victims of poison gas; the results, Viet Nam declared, had shown that poison gas was not involved.

Afghanistan stated that the question of chemical weapons was of particular importance to it; during 1980, it had repeatedly been the victim of their use by bandit units. It stated that chemical grenades produced in the United States had been seized in Afghanistan early in 1980 and poisonous agents had been used in June against students. It categorically declared to be pure lies reports of the use of chemical weapons by Soviet troops stationed in Afghanistan, who were there at the request of the Afghan Government and in accordance with a treaty concluded with the USSR.

Noting reports alleging that chemical weapons had been used in recent wars and military operations and reports from certain States concerning the use of such weapons on their territories, the Assembly, by resolution 35/144 C, decided to carry out an impartial investigation to ascertain the facts regarding the alleged use of chemical weapons and to assess the extent of damage. The Secretary-General was requested to carry out the investigation with the assistance of qualified medical and technical experts, taking into account proposals advanced and information provided by the States in whose territories the use of chemical weapons had been reported. He was asked to report on the matter to the 1981 regular session.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 78 to 17, with 36 abstentions. It was sponsored in the First Committee by Australia, Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Spain and Turkey. Following considerable amendment and two revisions by the sponsors, the First Committee approved the text on 1 December by a roll-call vote of 62 to 17, with 32 abstentions.

New Zealand, introducing the text, stated that, since there were reports of the alleged use of chemical weapons, the sponsors believed that the international community had an obligation to ascertain the facts. The sponsors twice revised their draft, incorporating parts of amendments submitted by Afghanistan, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Poland and Viet Nam. Those seven States, as well as Hungary, again submitted amendments to the second revision.

The voting on the amendments proceeded according to a compromise formula of the Chairman, following proposals by Bulgaria and Viet Nam that the amendments be voted on separately, and by the Netherlands that they be voted on as a whole: the amendments pertaining to preambular paragraphs were voted on en bloc and those pertaining to the operative paragraphs in the same manner.

The Committee approved, as a unit, by a recorded vote of 34 to 25, with 58 abstentions, the following of the eight-power amendments pertaining to preambular paragraphs:

- an expression of belief that international law required full attention to reports of alleged use of chemical weapons and their harmful effects, as contained in the second revision, was expanded after amendment to specify both immediate and long-term effects to humans and to the environment of the victim countries; this final clause was also added to a paragraph referring to the need to ascertain the facts pertaining to the reports and determine the harmful effects of chemical weapons "to human beings and the environment of the victim countries," replacing a reference to the need to determine their harmful effects in the reported cases;

- a provision noting the difficulty of ascertaining, through generally available information, the facts relating to the alleged use of chemical weapons was replaced by one noting the statements of various international organizations, in particular ICRC, concerning reports from certain States concerning the use of such weapons on their territories; and

- two paragraphs were added-one to express grave concern over continued chemical weapons research and development programmes, especially binary and multicomponent weapons whose deployment could compromise efforts to ban chemical weapons and trigger a chemical arms race, and another to urge all States to refrain from developing, producing and deploying new types of chemical, particularly binary and multi-component, munitions.

The eight-power amendments to operative paragraphs were rejected as a unit by a recorded vote of 30 in favour to 35 against, with 52 abstentions. These amendments sought to effect the following changes:

- paragraph 1, rather than calling on States parties to the 1925 Geneva Protocol to reaffirm their determination strictly to observe all their obligations thereunder, would have called on them to observe strictly all provisions of the Protocol without any exceptions or exemptions;

- the investigation decided on in paragraph 4 would have been carried out with the consent of the countries concerned, and the assessment of the damage caused would have been that done to human beings and the environment;

- the request in paragraph 5 for the Secretary-General to conduct an investigation with the aid of medical and technical experts would have been reworded as a request to him to carry out the investigation on the basis of proposals advanced by States victims of the use of chemical weapons; and

- the call for State co-operation and information, in paragraph 7, would also have included a call in particular on States responsible for use of chemical weapons to contribute to the healing of the damage to human beings and the environment.

Regarding the amendments, New Zealand stated that the sponsors' difficulty with some of the preambular ones was that they were not related to use; others moved the emphasis away from the need for machinery to establish the facts. The amendments to the operative part would render it impossible to carry out an impartial investigation without the agreement of the country accused of using chemical weapons. Moreover, dropping all reference to medical and technical expert assistance would make it impossible for a fact-finding mission to be undertaken. The sponsors of the resolution, as well as Belgium, Guatemala, Ireland, the United Kingdom and the United States, observed that they had voted in favour of the final text despite their reservations with regard to some of the new preambular provisions, which had introduced extraneous issues.

Viet Nam, on the other hand, said the question of investigation affected sovereignty; that was why the consent of the countries concerned was indispensable. Opposing the text, Viet Nam deplored that the resolution said nothing about the use of toxic chemical products by the United States against Viet Nam and other countries in Indo-China, the immediate and long-term consequences of which were extremely serious for human life and the environment of those countries. Instead, the United Nations was asked to carry out an inquiry on the basis of tendentious information, creating an extremely dangerous precedent. To the Laotian representative, the resolution was totally unacceptable, was based on unreliable information and ill concealed the sponsors' intention to intervene in the internal affairs of States.

Bulgaria said it was in favour of strengthening the Geneva Protocol, but considered that the resolution constituted an attempt to impose an ad Hoc verification mechanism onto the Protocol by means of an Assembly resolution, which would represent a de facto revision of that instrument by countries not party to it. The danger of setting such a precedent was also stressed by the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Madagascar and the Syrian Arab Republic. The German Democratic Republic and Madagascar, the latter abstaining, felt the initiative might endanger the independence of the Secretary-General; the Lao People's Democratic Republic felt it degraded his role in an inadmissible way.

The USSR said the resolution was the pursuit of a policy of doing damage to the 1925 Protocol and to the talks on banning chemical weapons, of giving the go-ahead for new types of chemical weapons, and for inflating anti-Soviet propaganda. Bulgaria, Cuba, Ethiopia and the German Democratic Republic also charged that it had a markedly political nature. Poland and the USSR stated that it lacked clarity regarding, among other things, a time-frame and an indication of what reports were to be investigated. The Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, and Yugoslavia felt the text was selective and unbalanced.

Sri Lanka, explaining its abstention, said the resolution had assumed a highly charged political complexion which detracted from whatever laudable objectives the sponsors might have had. Argentina said the necessary analysis of the initiative required more time and better world and political conditions than currently existed. Mexico added that its support for any text on verification would require that it be acceptable to all parties concerned.

Nigeria did not think the proposal susceptible of implementation, and Bangladesh thought more time should be allowed to enable all parties to try to arrive at a consensus. Also abstaining, the United Republic of Cameroon welcomed the idea of establishing inquiry machinery but regretted that certain States were not providing the necessary co-operation.

Algeria, Ethiopia and Guinea-Bissau observed that they would not participate in the voting. The first two of these States said they considered the proposal contradictory, with an amended preamble and an unamended operative part. What Finland perceived as an internal contradiction in the text was given as its reason for abstaining.

Although there were some defects, China said, the text did call for an impartial international investigation of reports of chemical weapon use, which was a correct position; China would support it. Ghana also voted in favour, although it felt the resolution did not substantiate forcefully enough the authority of the 1925 Protocol and regretted that it did not touch upon the question of compensation.

See also pp. 303 and 320 for information concerning communications received by the Secretary-General during the year on the use of chemical weapons.)

Convention on banning radiological weapons

On 12 December 1980, the Assembly adopted, without a vote, resolution 35/156 G, thereby calling on the Committee on Disarmament to continue negotiations with a view to elaborating a treaty prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons and to report on the results to the Assembly in 1981. It also noted the recommendation of the Committee's Ad Hoc Working Group to set up at the 1981 session a further ad hoc working group to continue negotiations on such a treaty (see p. 27).

The text, sponsored by Hungary, was approved without vote by the First Committee on 21 November. Hungary, which had been Chairman of the Ad Hoc Working Group, regretted the failure of the Committee on Disarmament to elaborate a treaty text, but believed that the consideration of the main elements had been useful and further negotiations should be encouraged. Hungary accepted an Indian oral amendment to the first operative paragraph calling on the Committee to continue negotiations with a view to elaborating a treaty; as originally formulated, the Committee would have been called on to complete without delay the elaboration of a treaty.

The Netherlands, speaking on behalf of the nine member States of the European Community, also expressed regret that the Ad Hoc Working Group had not been able to make more progress; they hoped that work on a radiological weapons treaty could be pursued without allowing extraneous or inopportune considerations to delay its completion. India believed that the characteristics of this category of weapons should be clearly defined in an objective and positive manner. It held that the definition of radiological weapons contained in the agreed joint proposal put forward in 1979 by the USSR and the United States<sup>4</sup> should be redrawn so that it did not have to resort to a nuclear-weapon exclusion clause which could, in effect, indirectly legitimize their use. Ghana held that the convention envisaged should include the prohibition of all types of weapons involving radiation. In Venezuela's view, the proposed convention should not refer to radiological weapons since, it said, there was no such specific type; rather it should refer to radioactive material for military purposes, radiological means of warfare or means of radiological warfare.

Indonesia noted that the Committee on Disarmament had recognized the need to avoid any loop-holes in a treaty on the issue; such an approach was intended not as a hindrance to the conclusion of a treaty but rather to promote clearly defined objectives. Pakistan felt that the substantive exchange of views in the Ad Hoc Working Group had helped to identify certain conceptual differences and problems.

The USSR did not see any reason why the work on the treaty could not be completed in the very near future. Bulgaria considered that the necessary prerequisites for its final conclusion were at hand and the Committee on Disarmament should avail itself of the opportunity without delay.

Finland and France hoped that negotiations could be completed in 1981. Similar views were expressed by the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Nigeria, Somalia and the Ukrainian SSR. Kenya looked forward to a more concerted effort.

Banning new weapons of mass destruction

In its continuing efforts aimed at banning new types and new systems of weapons of mass destruction, the General Assembly, on 12 December 1980, adopted resolution 35/ 149. By the resolution, the Assembly requested again that the Committee on Disarmament continue negotiations, with the assistance of governmental experts, with a view to preparing a draft comprehensive agreement on the prohibition of the development and manufacture of such weapons and systems. It also asked the Committee to draft possible agreements on particular types of such weapons. All States were again urged to refrain from any action which could adversely affect talks aimed at working out an agreement or agreements on the question.

The First Committee approved the text on 21 November by a recorded vote of 107 to 0, with 27 abstentions. The Assembly adopted it by a recorded vote of 117 to 0, with 26 abstentions.

The text, introduced by the Byelorussian SSR, was sponsored by 26 Members (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Member States generally took the same approaches and positions as they had at previous Assembly sessions and in other bodies, especially in the Committee on Disarmament in 1980 (see p. 26). Eastern European States and some countries of the non-aligned movement continued to advocate the conclusion of a comprehensive treaty on the prohibition of new weapons of mass destruction. Western States reiterated their view that the conclusion of an all-encompassing treaty on the prohibition of all new types and systems of weapons of mass destruction would not lead to a realistic or verifiable solution of the problem. They advocated the conclusion of specific agreements prohibiting particular types of new weapons of mass destruction which might be identified.

While advocating a comprehensive ban on new weapons of mass destruction, the USSR stated that it was prepared at the same time to reach agreement on prohibiting individual new types of such weapons, first and foremost referring to neutron weapons. The German Democratic Republic held that it was urgently necessary to begin negotiations because the possibility could not be disregarded that in five or 10 years new types of weapons of mass destruction would be included in arsenals and thus another chance to safeguard peace and stability and to achieve disarmament would have been lost. The Byelorussian SSR, on behalf of the sponsors of the text, pointed out that they had taken into account the positions of the Western countries in that the resolution provided for the preparation of both a comprehensive agreement and possible agreements on individual types of such weapons.

Member States of the European Community, according to the Netherlands, considered that a comprehensive agreement could not adequately distinguish between peaceful research and that which might have military application. Its verification would require detailed international supervision of disparate civil research activities in many States, which was neither feasible nor realistic. However, the nine States recognized the need to continue discussions to identify potentially dangerous developments in science and technology so that early necessary controls could be introduced. The United Kingdom added that it did not believe that any purpose would be served by the Committee on Disarmament expending a great deal of time and effort in attempting to draft a generalized treaty, which could only be vague in its application, unverifiable, and without sanctions.

Explaining its abstention, Portugal stated that the text made no reference to verification and was recommending the preparation of a comprehensive agreement on the question. In Portugal's view, the objectives of disarmament would be better served by specific measures relating to well-defined and clearly identified weapons or types of weapons. Japan and Spain held similar views.

United Nations Conference on Prohibiting or Restricting Use of Certain Conventional Weapons

The conclusion in October 1980 of the United Nations Conference on Prohibitions and Restrictions of Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects resulted in the adoption of a Convention banning such weapons. Three Protocols were also adopted on non-detectable fragments, on mines, booby traps and other devices, and on incendiary weapons. The General Assembly commended these instruments to all States when it adopted resolution 35/153 on 12 December.

Work of the Conference

The United Nations Conference on prohibiting or restricting use of certain excessively injurious or indiscriminate conventional weapons, which had first convened from 10 to 28 September 1979,<sup>42</sup> resumed its work on 15 September 1980 at Geneva. (For officers and participants, see APPENDIX III.)

Pursuant to an understanding reached at the first session, issues on which agreement had been reached in 1979 were not to be reopened. The Conference, therefore, at the opening meeting, requested its Working Group on a General Treaty and its Committee of the Whole to resume negotiations immediately on the remaining outstanding issues, and most of the work of the Conference in 1980 was conducted in those subsidiary bodies.

The Conference itself held four plenary meetings at its resumed session. On 10 October, it approved the reports of the Working Group, of the Committee of the Whole and of a Drafting Committee. On the same date, it unanimously adopted its final report to the Assembly to which was annexed the Final Act of the Conference together with the texts of the Convention and its three Protocols. The Conference recommended that the Assembly commend the instruments to States with a view to achieving the widest possible adherence.

In addition, the Conference took note of, but did not adopt, six draft resolutions before it and a proposal-by Belgium, Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy, Japan and the Netherlands- to set up a consultative committee of experts of States parties to the Convention to investigate, on request, problems which arose about compliance with the Convention or its Protocols.

The first of the six resolutions, by Belgium, Ireland and the Netherlands, sought to encourage incorporation, in regional agreements banning or restricting excessively injurious or indiscriminate conventional weapons, of invitations to extraregional States to accede to those instruments or observe their rules in conflicts. Cuba, Hungary, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and Viet Nam, by a text they sponsored, would have had the Conference recognize the need for additional international instruments to protect civilians and freedom fighters during wars against colonial domination and racist regimes; countries conducting such wars would be urged to apply the Hague Convention of 1907 and the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and their Additional Protocol I.

Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic, Mongolia, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR would have had the Conference call for Governments to assist in convening a world disarmament conference, which could also consider the subject-matter of the current Conference. Denmark, Finland, Norway and Sweden sought to invite Governments to continue considering the question of the protection of combatants against incendiary weapons, a matter on which the Conference was unable to reach agreement, with a view to taking up the issue at a future conference convened under the Convention. Similarly, Egypt, Ireland, Mexico, Sweden, Switzerland and Yugoslavia sought, for a future conference agenda, continued consideration of other proposals put forward at the Conference but not fully discussed or on which agreement was not reached. A draft by the Netherlands would have called on non-parties to the Convention to apply it and its Protocols in any conflict in which they were engaged.

CONVENTION

The Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects consisted of a preamble and 11 articles.

It was to serve as the legal framework for the application of the three Protocols annexed to it, and it was based on such stated principles as the general principle of the protection of civilian populations against the effects of hostilities, the principle of international law that the right to choose methods or means of warfare was not unlimited, and the principle that prohibited the employment of weapons and methods of warfare of a nature to cause superfluous injury, unnecessary suffering, or long-term and severe damage to the natural environment.

It referred to the possibility that the General Assembly and the Disarmament Commission might wish to discuss broadening the scope of the Convention and its Protocols, and that the Committee on Disarmament might decide to consider further measures to prohibit or restrict certain conventional weapons.

Article 1 included in the scope of the Convention the situations referred to in the 1949 Geneva Conventions for the protection of war victims, as well as their Additional Protocol I providing protection in conflicts involving national liberation movements. The relationship between the 1949 Conventions and their Protocol and this Convention and its Protocols, and the circumstances in which the various instruments applied to States parties to a conflict in which both parties and non-parties to the relevant instruments were involved, were set forth in article 7.

The review mechanism contained in the Convention (article 8) included arrangements for convening a conference of States parties to consider amendments to the Convention and its Protocols, or for the development of new rules for prohibition or restriction. The convening of such a conference would take place if requested by a majority that was not less than 18 States parties, or by any State party if no conference had been convened for 10 years.

Other provisions prevented the Convention and its Protocols from detracting from obligations under international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts (article 2), provided for ratification, acceptance, approval or accession, as well as optional expressions of consent to be bound by any of the Protocols (article 4), contained an undertaking by States parties to disseminate the texts of the instruments to their armed forces (article 6), set forth the terms and means of denunciation of the instruments (article 9), and designated the United Nations Secretary-General as Depositary and indicated his functions (article 10), one of which was to receive the six authentic texts-Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish (article 11). The Convention was to be opened for signature at New York on 10 April 1981 (article 3), and the instruments were to enter into force separately six months after deposit of the twentieth instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval, accession or, in the case of each of the Protocols, notification of consent to be bound by it (article 5).

PROTOCOLS

The 26-word Protocol on Non-Detectable Fragments (Protocol I) prohibited the use of non-detectable fragmentation weapons against both civilians and combatants. The weapons in question were those composed of substances such as wood, glass or plastics which in the human body escaped detection by X-rays, making extraction difficult and prolonging suffering and risk of infection.

The Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II), consisting of nine articles and a technical annex, applied to the devices mentioned in its title, but not to the use of anti-ship mines at sea or in inland waterways (article 1).

Article 2 defined mines and booby traps, as well as the term "other devices," which meant manually emplaced munitions and devices, actuated by remote control or automatically after a lapse of time, and designed to kill, injure or damage.

Article 3 set general restrictions on the use of mines, booby traps and other devices. It prohibited in all circumstances the directing of weapons, either in offence, defence or by way of reprisals, against civilians, or the indiscriminate use of such weapons. Indiscriminate use meant placement which was not on or directed against a military objective, whose means of delivery could not be directed at a specific military objective, or which might be expected to cause incidental loss of civilian life, injuries or damage to non-military objectives which would be excessive in relation to the anticipated military advantage.

Other provisions restricted the use of mines (other than remotely delivered mines), booby traps and other devices in populated areas (article 4), and of remotely delivered mines (article 5). The locations of the latter type were to be recorded or they were to contain a mechanism for rendering them harmless. Article 6 prohibited the use of booby traps in the form of apparently harmless portable objects or attached to or associated with internationally recognized protective emblems, the wounded or dead, grave sites, medical facilities or supplies, products for children, animals, food or drink, civilian kitchen equipment, religious objects, historic monuments, works of art or places which constituted a cultural or spiritual heritage, or any booby trap designed to cause superfluous injury or unnecessary suffering.

The text contained guidelines for the recording and publication of the location of minefields, mines and booby traps (article 7) and for international co-operation in providing information on and assistance for the removal of such devices (article 9). Guidelines were also laid down for the protection of United Nations forces and missions from the effects of these devices (article 8).

A technical annex attached to Protocol II provided guidelines for recording the location of pre-planned minefields and of large-scale, pre-planned use of booby traps, by maps, diagrams or other records to indicate the extent of the affected area.

The Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Incendiary Weapons (Protocol III) was agreed after an attempt to develop rules for the protection of combatants was abandoned in the interest of a consensus. This was on the understanding that consideration of that question would be resumed during the follow-up to the Conference.

The two-article Protocol thus provided for the protection of civilians and civilian objects against incendiary weapons, as defined in the first article. Military objectives located within a concentration of civilians could not be the object of an air-delivered incendiary-weapons attack; such objectives which were clearly separated from civilian concentrations were excluded from these restrictions, provided that all feasible precautions were taken to limit the incendiary effects to the military objective and to avoid or minimize incidental civilian deaths, injury or damage. It prohibited making forests or other plant-cover the object of incendiary-weapons attack except when they concealed combatants or other military objectives or were themselves military objectives.

On 12 December 1980, the General Assembly adopted, without a vote, resolution 35/153, commending the Convention and the three Protocols to all States with a view to achieving the widest possible adherence to those instruments, and asking the Secretary-General to inform it from time to time of the state of adherence.

The resolution was approved by the First Committee on 20 November, also without a vote; the final, revised version of its draft listed 27 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Introducing the resolution in the First Committee, Nigeria observed that the Convention was a compromise agreement between those wishing to prohibit a wide range of weapons and those believing that only a few weapons had been sufficiently examined to enable a decision to be taken. Nigeria called attention to the Convention's provisions for ensuring the continuation of further work in this rather wide field through additional protocols covering other weapons.

Countries from all regional and political groups considered that the Conference had been successful in advancing the humanitarian cause of giving protection to civilians in time of armed conflict. In the opinion of many of them, notably the German Democratic Republic, Indonesia, Nigeria, Poland, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka and the Sudan, it was proof that, with the political will of the participants, differences in approach on a number of important issues could be overcome and negotiations conducted even in complicated international circumstances.

China commended the efforts of the many small and medium-sized countries in achieving the results. Although encouraged, a number of Member States, including Algeria, Australia, Bangladesh, Denmark, Finland, France, India, the Netherlands, Sweden, the United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela and Yugoslavia, pointed out that the Protocols adopted were nevertheless rather limited in scope and that on some categories of weapons agreement could not be reached at all.

Belgium and some other States expressed disappointment that it had not been possible to agree on setting up under the Convention a consultative committee of experts which, in the event of doubts about the observance of the agreements, would be able to initiate consultations and investigate the facts. The Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland and the United States stated that they intended to pursue this question further. The Netherlands, speaking on behalf of the nine member States of the European Community, also called on States to study further the question of an adequate mechanism to assure compliance with the instruments.

The instruments would not, in Albania's view, provide any additional guarantee that civilian defence would be strengthened since aggressors ignored such agreements when they chose to do so; Albania wondered how defenders against aggression could be asked not to use booby traps or mines against aggressors.

Reduction of military budgets

Ad Hoc Panel on Military Budgeting

The seven-member Ad Hoc Panel on Military Budgeting held three sessions in 1980: from 21 to 25 January, from 23 June to 3 July and from 25 to 29 August. It analysed and assessed replies on military expenditures from 14 Member States that participated in a practical test of a proposed standard instrument for international reporting of military expenditures, in order to recommend ways to refine it further in the light of different budgeting and accounting systems.

The 14 States which, participating voluntarily in the test, reported their military outlays or budget-plan data using the Panel's sample reporting form as a guide were Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Indonesia, Italy, Mexico, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden and the United States. Some reported data for a calendar year (1978, 1979 or 1980) and others for a fiscal year during that three-year period. India, the Philippines and the United Kingdom communicated their views on the test without participating in it.

The standardized form solicited and sought to present information submitted on the annual operating, procurement and construction, and research and development costs of all branches of a country's armed forces, including support and command costs, as well as expenditures for paramilitary forces, civil defence and military assistance. It allowed for presentation of the data on different levels of aggregation showing different degrees of detail. The Governments' replies were appended to the report, as was a synthesis into tables of the information in the replies, with the amounts converted into national currency units per United States dollar and per special drawing right. A revised and recommended standardized instrument was also appended. In addition, the report discussed the problems of comparability of costs presented in national currencies and of military purchases at different times, and touched on the problem of verification.

The Ad Hoc Panel, whose report was submitted to the regular 1980 General Assembly session by the Secretary-General, stated that the information received constituted a satisfactory basis for the Panel's assessment of the viability of the reporting instrument and for recommendations for refining and implementing it. Although further refinement in the light of experience was not excluded, the results of the test had shown that it represented a practical means for international reporting of military expenditures and provided a solid and practical basis for decisions to implement an international standardized reporting system. The Panel also underlined the close relationship between building confidence and increased openness in matters of military expenditures.

The Panel recommended that the Assembly should take steps towards early implementation of the reporting instrument in a general and regular system. Also, further steps should be taken with a view to universal reporting by an ever-widening set of States, to disseminating information about the instrument, and to studying further the comparability of military budgets and the verification problems arising from any agreements on reducing expenditures. The Panel suggested the possible establishment of a special international body to collect and report regularly on military-expenditure data received from States.

Consideration by the General Assembly

Of two resolutions on the reduction of military budgets that the Assembly adopted on 12 December, resolution 35/142 B dealt with the report of the Ad Hoc Panel. By this resolution, the Assembly took note with appreciation of the Panel's report and requested the Secretary-General to publish and distribute it widely. It recommended that all Member States make use of the reporting instrument and report annually to the Secretary-General their military expenditures of the latest fiscal year for which data were available. The first such report should preferably be submitted by 30 April 1981. The Assembly asked the Secretary-General, with the assistance of experts, to refine the reporting instrument further and to examine and suggest solutions, in a report to be submitted to its special session on disarmament in 1982, to the question of comparing military expenditures and to problems of verification that would arise in connexion with reduction agreements.

This resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 113 to 0, with 21 abstentions, the text having been approved by the First Committee on 24 November by a recorded vote of 106 to 0, with 25 abstentions. Its sponsors were Austria, Belgium, Canada, Costa Rica, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Mexico, the Netherlands, the Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Romania and Sweden.

Introducing the text, Sweden said it was obvious that military overspending in the most powerful countries gave added stimulus to the international inflationary trends which threatened to wreck the financial stability of most national economies. The purpose of the resolution was to prepare the ground for real and substantial reductions of military expenditures, to be agreed upon in a convention.

By resolution 35/142 A, adopted without vote, the Assembly reiterated its appeal to all States, in particular the most heavily armed States, to exercise self-restraint in their military expenditure, pending the conclusion of agreements on the reduction of military expenditures, with a view to reallocating the funds thus saved to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of developing countries. The Assembly requested the Disarmament Commission to continue considering the item, in particular to identify and elaborate on principles to govern State actions on freezing and reducing military expenditures for possible inclusion in a suitable document at an appropriate stage. The Commission's action was to be complementary to any other ongoing United Nations activity related to the question, as well as to any possible unilateral State initiatives.

The text was approved without vote by the First Committee on 20 November; it was sponsored by Austria, Indonesia, Ireland, Nigeria, Peru, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Sweden, the United Republic of Cameroon, and Uruguay.

Romania, which introduced the text, orally added on behalf of the sponsors a preambular paragraph by which the Assembly reaffirmed that it was possible to achieve reductions in military budgets without affecting the military balance to the detriment of the national security of any State.

The debates in the Disarmament Commission, Romania said, had demonstrated deep concern about the economic and social costs of the arms race, particularly the human and material resources squandered, as well as the conviction that stockpiling armaments led to a continued weakening of international security. While favouring careful examination of the technical aspects of the question, Romania believed these matters must not be considered in isolation or regarded as pre-conditions for practical action.

India expressed regret that the concept of the maintenance of military balance had been introduced; reduction should clearly be on the basis of ensuring equal security for all States rather than maintaining a balance of power, a concept India considered untenable. Further, it was erroneous to suggest that all, or even most, States were equally responsible for rising military expenditure and that international guidelines applicable to all were suitable or even wise. Efforts for reduction must be concentrated on the five or six most heavily armed States.

The recommendation that States make use of the reporting instrument and report their military expenditures annually was the subject of several reservations or statements in explanation of vote. India did not think the instrument had been sufficiently examined or debated. Australia, Ghana and Yugoslavia said the action recommended could prove useful and effective only if all States participated. The United Kingdom added that the recommendation should have been directed principally to States from the regions that had not participated in the testing of the instrument. Guinea felt the provisions concealed the real objective sought—reduction. Bolivia and Brazil held that the militarily significant States should be the first to use the reporting instrument; military-budget reduction was incumbent first and foremost on nuclear-weapon States which should reallocate savings to the economic and social development of the less developed countries. Egypt and Zaïre observed that because of the principle involved they would vote in favour, but believed the text was basically addressed to the nuclear-weapon and militarily significant powers.

Hungary said the decisive issue was one of political will, not a reporting system or its refinement; the resolution would not contribute to the solution of the question of reducing military budgets. Afghanistan held a similar position.

The Netherlands, speaking on behalf of the nine member States of the European Community, which supported both resolutions, confirmed their view that concrete measures for freezing or reducing military expenditures was one of the Community's foremost aims. The standardized reporting instrument, if refined and implemented on a regular and general basis by States belonging to different regions and representing different economic and budgetary systems, would strengthen international confidence by contributing to greater transparency in military matters. Ireland suggested trying to establish a voluntary maximum ceiling for defence expenditures, perhaps as a percentage of gross national product.

The USSR reiterated its established position favouring the reduction of military budgets of all countries, and expressed its readiness to enter into talks with militarily significant States on the amount military budgets ought to be reduced, either in percentages or in absolute terms. This approach was supported by Eastern European countries and Mongolia, among others. The USSR announced that its defence expenditures for 1981 had been reduced by an amount representing 5.7 per cent of its total budget. As to the resolutions, the USSR expressed a reservation with regard to a preambular paragraph in resolution 35/142 A recalling provisions of the Assembly's 1979 resolution on this subject,<sup>43</sup> and, referring to resolution 35/142 B, said it could not support a text that was restricted to the usual proposals about studies on budget comparability and accounting machinery and that diverted Member States from the attainment of practical agreements on the reduction of military budgets.

Among the many States expressing, during the debate, deep concern on the continuation of the arms race and stressing the need to limit and reduce military outlays, Bangladesh, Burundi, Cyprus, Guinea, Iraq, Kenya, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Morocco, Nigeria, Qatar, Singapore, the United Arab Emirates, the United Republic of Cameroon, and Zambia noted that world military expenditure, which had recently reached $500 billion a year, was still increasing. This was about 6 per cent of the total world product, the Lao People's Democratic Republic added. Burundi also noted the growth of military expenditures from some $120 billion in 1960 and $200 billion in 1970. Angola stated that annual military activities throughout the world absorbed resources equivalent to about two thirds of the aggregate gross national product of the third-world countries. Sudan found it a matter of serious concern also that about 70 per cent of the resources of those countries went to armaments. Several States, including Albania, Bahrain and Papua New Guinea, drew attention to the fact that the United States and the USSR alone were responsible for over 50 per cent of the world military outlays. Papua New Guinea put this figure at 58 per cent, and, with their alliances, 80 per cent.

Numerous States, particularly those of the non-aligned movement, pointed to the disparity between world military expenditure and development aid. Pakistan stated that world security was as much threatened by the reckless diversion of resources towards the arms race as by the neglect of the fundamental needs of the underprivileged. India stressed that there was a moral link between the vast spending on armaments and low spending on measures to remove hunger and disease in the third world, while Somalia deplored the fact that this indicated the lop-sided and grim order of priorities which governed progress. Democratic Kampuchea, Guyana and Yugoslavia noted that assistance to developing countries amounted to only 5 per cent of the annual military expenditures. Not only was it a cause of world-wide inflation, Ecuador added, but of delays in needed investments in development.

The Bahamas suggested that, instead of asking for reduced military spending and giving the savings to development projects, Governments should be requested simply to allocate a percentage of their budgets to development aid. Pakistan said that a 1978 proposal by the Secretary-General that all States devote one tenth of 1 per cent of their military expenditure to research, education and information on disarmament should be widely recommended.

The Federal Republic of Germany considered it necessary to establish two registers in the United Nations: the first to record how much every industrialized country spent per capita on armaments and on development assistance, and the second covering world-wide exports and imports of weapons.

Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean

The General Assembly in December 1980 renewed the mandate of its Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean and asked it to continue preparatory work for a 1981 Conference on the Indian Ocean in implementation of the Assembly's 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace.<sup>44</sup>

The newly enlarged Committee held 39 formal and several informal meetings between 4 February and 30 October 1980, and submitted a report on the year's work to the Assembly, containing a draft resolution it unanimously recommended for adoption.

The Committee had held a general exchange of views, followed by a more detailed consideration of Conference preparations, based on written replies to a request for members' views on the subject. The discussion was held within the framework of an informal list of topics which included geographical limits, foreign military presence, nuclear weapons, security, peaceful settlement of disputes, and use of the Indian Ocean by foreign vessels and aircraft. Progress was made in harmonizing differing approaches on these subjects, although a number of fundamental issues remained to be resolved.

On other issues, the Chairman informed the Committee that further consultations were necessary with respect to requests from Democratic Kampuchea (pending a decision on its candidacy for membership) and Viet Nam for participation as observers in the Committee's work. Also, the Committee recommended that, in view of the political nature of its work, summary records should be reinstated for 1981.

Consideration by the General Assembly

On 12 December, the Assembly adopted, as resolution 35/150, a draft resolution proposed by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean. By this resolution, the Assembly took note of the Committee's report and requested the Committee to continue its efforts for the necessary harmonization of views on the issues related to the convening of a Conference to achieve the objectives of the Declaration, and to complete preparations for the Conference, including the dates for its convening. To this end, it was to hold two

The resolution was adopted without vote; it was similarly approved by the First Committee on 25 November.

The United States said it was able to join the consensus this year for the first time. However, it wanted to make clear its interpretation of some of the resolution's provisions: that the reference to a 1981 Conference was a description of the content of the Assembly's 1979 resolution on this topic<sup>45</sup> and not a call to convene the Conference; that the Ad Hoc Committee was not specifically bound to set a date for the Conference; that the Committee would continue to take its decisions by consensus; that forces deployed in the Ocean in accordance with the United Nations Charter's purposes and principles did not undermine the intent of the zone of peace; and that it was recognized that the threat to regional security did not emanate solely from the presence of the great powers.

The point that the threat did not originate primarily from the presence of naval forces was also made by Luxembourg, speaking on behalf of the European Community. These nine States also understood a reference to "other recent relevant resolutions," in a preambular paragraph recalling a number of Assembly resolutions, as including resolution ES-6/2 of 14 January 1980 (see p. 301), calling for withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan. The nine States also recalled that they had abstained in the Assembly's 1971 resolution declaring the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace<sup>46</sup> and in its 1979 decision to convene a Conference during 1981.<sup>47</sup>

India recorded its understanding that the mandate of the Committee had not been changed, and observed that it was being diverted from that general mandate by the introduction of a series of extraneous issues.

The USSR considered that a preambular reference in the text to the danger posed by the military presence of the great powers in the area, "conceived in the context of their confrontation," did not correctly reflect the real situation and weakened the resolution—a view shared by the German Democratic Republic. The argument of equal responsibility, the USSR said, concealed the point that the open military build-up currently being pursued by the United States following its declaration of the region as a sphere of vital interest was the cause of heightened tension in the region. The USSR, expressing its willingness to resume the USSR/United States talks on limiting armaments and reducing military activity in the region, which had been broken off in 1978, reaffirmed its intention to co-operate with all interested States and take an active part in the Ad Hoc Committee's efforts to convene a Conference during 1981 and to ensure practical results at that Conference, so that a zone of peace might be created in the region.

China recalled that it had proposed two preambular amendments in Committee to the Ad Hoc Committee's draft resolution— that there should be a reference to the Assembly's January resolution calling for the withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan, and an expression of deep concern at the invasion and occupation of that country by Soviet troops. It expressed reservations in that they had not been reflected in the text.

Albania dissociated itself from the consensus in conformity with its stated position that the super-powers' rivalry remained an obstacle to improvement of the situation.

Introducing the Ad Hoc Committee's report, Sri Lanka, its Chairman, said it was significant that for the first time the Committee's membership, virtually doubled, had included all the permanent members of the Security Council and it had approved a compromise draft resolution by consensus. Against this progress, the Chairman added, it was sad to witness an increase in tension and unrest in the area, though that must not be allowed to diminish commitment to the final goal.

During the debate in the First Committee, various States reaffirmed their conviction that the establishment of a zone of peace in the Indian Ocean would constitute a significant measure towards strengthening international peace and security. These included Afghanistan, Bulgaria, Burundi, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, Malaysia, Mongolia, Nepal, Oman and the Sudan.

India expressed the hope that, with the participation of the Security Council's permanent members, the Ad Hoc Committee could proceed expeditiously towards the transformation of the Indian Ocean into a zone of peace, as originally envisaged in 1971 by most of the non-aligned littoral and hinterland States. India stressed that in the long run such a development would be in the interest of the great powers themselves. Ethiopia emphasized that action taken to further the objectives of the 1971 Declaration would contribute substantially to the enhancement of the right to free and unimpeded use of the zone by vessels of all nations as well as strengthen regional peace.

not necessarily be to everyone's benefit for the major powers to withdraw from the region. Foreign forces were not currently preventing or halting conflicts and the risk of intervention was increased. Madagascar called for the elaboration of an international instrument with binding force, and Bangladesh felt the Ad Hoc Committee ought to be entrusted with initiating the drafting process. Afghanistan, the USSR, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Viet Nam expressed support for a proposal by the President of Madagascar, in a telegram to the Secretary-General dated 22 June 1980 transmitted to the Ad Hoc Committee, to hold a summit conference in 1981 or 1982 of all countries concerned about preserving peace and security in the Indian Ocean.

Somalia emphasized that the 1971 Declaration could best be implemented by the elimination from the region of hegemonic ambitions, colonial oppression and interventionist foreign mercenaries, which caused instability, continued tension and conflict.

Bahrain, Ethiopia, Sierra Leone, the United Arab Emirates, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia, among others, expressed concern at what they characterized as the expansion of the military presence of the great powers and the intensification of confrontation and rivalry among them in the region. Pakistan regretted that the recently deteriorating political climate in the area had cast serious doubts on the hope for an early realization of the zone-of-peace initiative.

Afghanistan, Bulgaria, Cuba, the German Democratic Republic and the USSR placed the blame for the tense situation in the region on the expansion of United States military presence there, and Viet Nam also criticized that country's recent decision to create a so-called rapid deployment force. Mongolia and the USSR further blamed the United States for the interruption since 1978 of the bilateral (USSR/United States) talks on the limitation and reduction of military activity in the Indian Ocean. The United States, on the other hand, said that the USSR build-up of naval forces in the Indian Ocean area in connexion with the Horn of Africa conflict, even while it was engaged in the force-limitation talks, had left the United States no choice but to suspend them.

China observed that for many years, in order to defend their independence, sovereignty and security, the countries of the region had been calling for the establishment of a zone of peace. The super-powers' military expansion and quest for hegemony in the region had to be curbed, in order that the zonal States could work towards that objective. Those powers must be called upon to cease their threats, interference, subversion and aggression in that region, which included all its littoral and hinterland States, and to reduce and ultimately eliminate all forms of their military presence in the area.

Addressing themselves to the question of the Conference on the Indian Ocean scheduled for 1981, some States, such as Australia, China and the United Kingdom, held that unless there was an improvement in the political and security climate in the region, particularly in Afghanistan and in Iran and Iraq, and unless views on various fundamental issues were harmonized, the Conference would be a futile venture, probably leading to acrimonious exchanges and hardening of positions. Japan, the Netherlands (speaking on behalf of the European Community), the United Kingdom and the United States were among those which maintained that, because of the continuing existence of wide differences within the Ad Hoc Committee on substantive issues and because of the deteriorating security situation in the area, it would be premature to schedule a Conference. Australia said it was the task of the Committee at its next session to decide if the necessary conditions had been met and if a Conference could therefore be convened in 1981. The United Kingdom and the Netherlands felt that efforts should be directed in the first instance to clarifying fundamental issues. The Netherlands added that States could not be prevented from exercising their right to make arrangements for individual or collective self-defence. It and Japan underlined the importance of the principle of consensus in the Ad Hoc Committee.

Other countries, such as Ethiopia, India and Indonesia, affirmed the position that it was precisely the dangerous political and security climate in the area which underscored the need to convene the Conference without preconditions and within the stipulated time-frame. Some States also felt that a full harmonization of views was not a necessary condition for the convening of the Conference since that was the ultimate goal of the Conference itself. The United Republic of Tanzania expressed concern at efforts it said were being made by some nuclear-weapon States to perpetuate their presence in the area and to frustrate efforts to convene a Conference in 1981.

Resolution 35/144 A, as recommended by First Committee, A/35/687, adopted without vote by Assembly on 12 December 1980, meeting 94.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2826(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, in which it commended the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, and expressed the hope for the widest possible adherence to that Convention,

Recalling that, in paragraph 73 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it expressed the opinion that all States which have not yet done so should consider adhering to the convention,

Recalling that the States parties to the Convention met at Geneva from 3 to 21 March 1980 to review the operation of the Convention,

Noting with satisfaction that, at the time of the Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, eighty-one States had ratified the Convention, six States had acceded to the Convention and a further thirty-seven States had signed but had yet to ratify the Convention,

1. Welcomes the final declaration of the Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, in which the States parties to the Convention, inter alia:

(a) Reaffirmed their strong determination, for the sake of all mankind, to exclude completely the possibility of bacteriological (biological) agents and toxins being used as weapons, their strong support for the Convention and their continued dedication to its principles and objectives and their commitment to implement effectively its provisions;

(b) Expressed the belief that article I had proved sufficiently comprehensive to have covered recent scientific and technological developments relevant to the Convention;

(c) Considered that the flexibility of the provisions concerning consultations and co-operation on any problems which might arise in relation to the objective, or in the application of the provisions, of the Convention enabled interested States parties to use various international procedures which would make it possible to ensure effectively and adequately the implementation of the provisions of the Convention, taking into account the concern expressed by the participants in the Conference to this effect-these procedures include, inter alia, the right of any State party subsequently to request that a consultative meeting open to all States parties be convened at the expert level-and, having noted the concerns and differing views expressed on the adequacy of article V, believed that this question should be further considered at an appropriate time;

(d) Reaffirmed the obligation assumed by the States parties to the Convention to continue negotiations in good faith towards the recognized objectives of an early agreement on complete, effective and adequately verifiable measures for the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of chemical weapons and for their destruction;

(e) Noted that during the first five years of the operation of the Convention the provisions of articles VI, VII, XI and XIII had not been invoked;

2. Calls upon all signatory States which have not ratified the Convention to do so without delay and upon those States which have not yet signed the Convention to consider doing so at an early date as a significant contribution to international confidence.

Resolution 35/144 B, as recommended by First Committee, A/35/687, adopted without vote by Assembly on 12 December 1980, meeting 94.

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 2454 A (XXIII) of 20 December 1968, 2603 B (XXIV) of 16 December 1969, 2662(XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2827 A (XXVI) of 16 December 1971, 2933(XXVII) of 29 November 1972, 3077(XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, 3256(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3485(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/65 of 10 December 1976, 32/77 of 12 December 1977, S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, 33/59A of 14 December 1978 and 34/72 of 11 December 1979, relating to the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and to their destruction,

Reaffirming also the necessity of strict observance by all States of the principles and objectives of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, and of the adherence by all States to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Disarmament, which embodies, inter alia, the report of its Ad Hoc Working Group on Chemical Weapons,

Taking note of the joint report on progress in the bilateral negotiations on the prohibition of chemical weapons, submitted by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to the Committee on Disarmament on 7 July 1980, which regrettably have not yet resulted in the elaboration of a joint initiative, Considering it necessary that all efforts be exerted for the earliest successful conclusion of the negotiations on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction.

1. Notes with satisfaction the work of the Committee on Disarmament during its session held in 1980 regarding the prohibition of chemical weapons, in particular the work of its Ad Hoc Working Group on that question;

2. Expresses its regret that an agreement on the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction has not yet been elaborated;

3. Urges the Committee on Disarmament to continue, as from the beginning of its session to be held in 1981, negotiations on such a multilateral convention as a matter of high priority, taking into account all existing proposals and future initiatives;

4. Request the Committee on Disarmament to report on the results of its negotiations to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, which was signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925 and entered into force on 8 February 1928,

Noting that the States parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction have reaffirmed their adherence to the principles and objectives of that Protocol and called upon all States to comply strictly with them,

Noting that the Protocol does not provide for the establishment of any machinery for investigating reports about activities prohibited under the Protocol,

Believing that the continued authority of the Protocol and relevant rules of customary international law require that full and proper attention be given to all reports regarding the alleged use of chemical weapons and to their harmful effects, both immediate and long-term, to humans and to the environment of the victim countries,

Noting reports alleging that chemical weapons have been used in recent wars and certain military operations in various regions of the world.

Noting recent reports from certain States concerning the use of chemical weapons on their territories,

Noting also the statements of various international organizations, in particular of the international Committee of the Red Cross, concerning these reports,

Expressing profound regret that certain States directly interested in the clarification of reports pertaining to the actual or alleged use of chemical weapons and which have submitted appropriate proposals or suggestions in that matter had not been given the opportunity to present their views in the Committee on Disarmament during its session held in 1980.

Concerned over the fact that a convention on the complete and effective prohibition of chemical weapons and on the destruction of their stockpiles which would fully preclude the danger of their use has not yet been concluded,

Grave/y concerned about the continued research and development programmes in the field of chemical weapons, especially the development of binary and multicomponent weapons whose field deployment could compromise the ongoing effort to prohibit the development, production and stockpiling of chemical weapons and trigger a chemical arms race,

Urging all States to refrain from the development, production and deployment of new types of chemical munitions, in particular binary and multicomponent munitions,

Believing it necessary for all States, in particular militarily significant States, to refrain from any action which could impede multilateral negotiations on banning chemical weapons,

Convinced of the need to ascertain the facts pertaining to these reports and, in particular, to determine the harmful effects of the use of chemical weapons to human beings and the environment of the victim countries,

1. Calls upon all States parties to the 1925 Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare to reaffirm their determination strictly to observe all their obligations under the Protocol;

2. Calls upon all States which have not yet done so to accede to the Protocol;

3. Appeals to all States to comply with the principles and objectives of the Protocol;

4. Decides to carry out an impartial investigation to ascertain the facts pertaining to these reports regarding the alleged use of chemical weapons and to assess the extent of the damage caused by the use of such weapons;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to carry out such investigation, inter alia, taking into account proposals advanced by the States on whose territories the use of chemical weapons has been reported, with the assistance of qualified medical and technical experts who shall:

(a) Seek relevant information from all concerned Governments, international organisations and other sources necessary;

(b) Collect and examine evidence, including on-site with the consent of the countries concerned, to the extent relevant to the purposes of the investigation;

6. Invites the Governments of States where chemical weapons were used to provide the Secretary-General with all relevant information they may have in their possession;

7. Calls upon all States to co-operate in this investigation and to provide any relevant information they may have in their possession regarding such reports;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on this matter to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session.

<sup>a</sup> Subsequently referred to as the Group of Experts to Investigate Reports on the Alleged Use of Chemical Weapons.

Resolution 35/158 G, as recommended by First Committee, A/35/699, adopted without vote by Assembly on 12 December 1980. meeting 94.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the resolution of the Commission for Conventional Armaments of 12 August 1948, which defined weapons of mass destruction to include atomic explosive weapons, radioactive material weapons, lethal chemical and biological weapons and any weapons developed in the future which have characteristics comparable in destructive effect to those of the atomic bomb or the other weapons mentioned above,

Recalling its resolution 2602 C (XXIV) of 16 December 1969,

Recalling paragraph 76 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that a convention should be concluded prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons,

Reaffirming its resolution 34/87 A of 11 December 1979 on the conclusion of such a convention,

Convinced that such a convention would serve to spare mankind the potential dangers of the use of radiological weapons and thereby contribute to strengthening peace and averting the threat of war,

Expressing its satisfaction that negotiations on the conclusion of an international convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons have begun in the Committee on Disarmament,

Taking note of that part of the report of the Committee on Disarmament which deals with those negotiations, including the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group,

Noting with satisfaction the wide recognition of the need to reach agreement on the text of a treaty prohibiting radiological weapons,

1. Calls upon the Committee on Disarmament to continue negotiations with a view to elaborating a treaty prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons and to report on the results to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session:

2. Notes, in this connexion, the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Working Group, in the report adopted by the Committee on Disarmament, to set up at the beginning of its session to be held in 1981 a further ad hoc working group, under an appropriate mandate to be determined at that time, to continue negotiations on the elaboration of a treaty prohibiting radiological weapons;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Committee on Disarmament all documents relating to the discussion by the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session of the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons."

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3479(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/74 of 10 December 1976, 32/84 A of 12 December 1977, 33/66 B of 14 December 1976 and 34/79 of 11 December 1979 concerning the prohibition of new types of weapons of mass destruction,

Bearing in mind the provisions of paragraph 39 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, according to which qualitative and quantitative disarmament measures are both important for halting the arms race and efforts to that end must include negotiations on the limitation and cessation of the qualitative improvement of armaments, especially weapons of mass destruction, and the development of new means of warfare,

Recalling the decision contained in paragraph 77 of the Final Document to the effect that, in order to help prevent a qualitative arms race and so that scientific and technological achievements might ultimately be used solely for peaceful purposes, effective measures should be taken to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction based on new scientific principles and achievements, and that efforts aiming at the prohibition of such new types and new systems of weapons of mass destruction should be appropriately pursued,

Expressing once again its firm belief, in the light of the decisions adopted at the tenth special session, in the importance of concluding an agreement or agreements to prevent the use of scientific and technological progress for the development of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Noting that, in the course of its session held in 1980, the Committee on Disarmament considered the item entitled "New types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems, of such weapons; radiological weapons,"

Taking into consideration the part of the report of the Committee on Disarmament relating to this question,

1. Requests once again the Committee on Disarmament, in the light of its existing priorities, to continue negotiations, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts, with a view to preparing a draft comprehensive agreement on the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons, and to draft possible agreements on particular types of such weapons;

2. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to submit a report on the results achieved to the General Assembly for consideration at its thirty-sixth session;

3. Once again urges all States to refrain from any action which could adversely affect the talks aimed at working out an agreement or agreements to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Committee on Disarmament all documents relating to the consideration of this item by the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session;

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/152 of 19 December 1977, 33/70 of 14 December 1978 and 34/62 of 11 December 1979,

Reiterating its conviction that the suffering of civilian populations and of combatants could be significantly reduced if general agreement could be attained on the prohibition or restriction for humanitarian reasons of the use of specific conventional weapons, including any which may be deemed to be excessively injurious or to have indiscriminate effects,

Reaffirming its belief that positive results as regards the non-use or restriction of use for humanitarian reasons of specific conventional weapons would serve, in addition, as encouragement in the broader field of disarmament,

Recalling that, by its resolutions 32/152 and 33/70, it decided to convene in 1979 the United Nations Conference on Prohibitions or Restrictions of Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects and established the mandate of the Conference,

Further recalling that, by its resolution 34/82, it endorsed the recommendation of the Conference to hold another session in September/October 1980, with a view to completing negotiations in conformity with resolutions 32/152 and 33/70,

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provision of paragraph SO of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, according to which it should continue to consider what concrete steps should be taken to facilitate the reduction of military budgets, bearing in mind the relevant proposals and documents of the United Nations on this question,

Convinced that reductions of military expenditures could be carried out without affecting the military balance to the detriment of the national security of any country,

Recalling its resolution 33/67 of 14 December 1978, in which the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General, with the assistance of an ad hoc panel of experienced practitioners in the field of military budgeting:

(a) To carry out a practical test of the proposed reporting instrument with the voluntary co-operation of States from different regions and representing different budgeting and accounting systems,

(b) To assess the results of the practical tests,

(c) To develop recommendations for further refinement and implementation of the reporting instrument,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General submitted in pursuance of resolution 33/67, containing recommended steps leading to the early implementation of the revised instrument in a general and regular system for the international reporting of military expenditures, ensuring an increasing participation with a view to universal reporting by an ever-widening set of States and at the same time recommending that a further study should be undertaken of the problems of comparing military expenditures among different States and in different years as well as the problems of verification that will arise in connexion with agreements on reduction of military expenditures,

Recognizing with satisfaction that a carefully elaborated reporting instrument has now become available for general and regular implementation, in the course of which it may be further refined, in particular through its testing by a widening set of States,

Emphasizing the value of such a reporting instrument, once fully implemented in its refined form, as a means to increase confidence between States by contributing to greater openness in military matters,

Convinced that the systematic reporting of military expenditures is an important first step in the move towards agreed and balanced reductions in military expenditures,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements for the above-mentioned report to be issued as a United Nations publication and widely distributed;

2. Recommends that all Member States should make use of the reporting instrument and report annually to the Secretary-General their military expenditures of the latest fiscal year for which data are available, presenting their first report preferably not later than 30 April 1961;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report on these matters to the General Assembly on an annual basis;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of an ad hoc group of qualified experts in the field of military budgets:

(a) To refine further the reporting instrument on the basis of future comments and suggestions received from States during the general and regular implementation of the reporting instrument;

(b) To examine and suggest solutions to the question of comparing military expenditures among different States and between different years as well as to the problems of verification that will arise in connexion with agreements on reduction of military expenditures;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of paragraph 4 above to the General Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the group of experts with the necessary financial assistance and secretariat services;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session the item entitled "Reduction of military budgets."

a Subsequently referred to as the Group of Experts on the Reduction of Military Budgets.

A/C.1/35/L.S. Austria, Indonesia, Ireland, Nigeria, Peru, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Sweden, United Republic of Cameroon, Uruguay: draft resolution, as orally revised by sponsors, approved without vote by First Committee on 20 November, meeting 37.

A/35/685. Report of First Committee, draft resolution A.

Resolution 35/142 A, as recommended by First Committee, A/35/685, adopted without vote by Assembly on 12 December 1980, meeting 94.

The General Assembly,

Expressing its deep concern about the ever-spiralling arms race and growing military expenditures, which constitute a heavy burden for the economies of all nations and have extremely harmful effects on world peace and security,

Deeply convinced that the common aspirations of mankind for peace, security and progress require the urgent cessation of the arms race, particularly of the nuclear arms race, and the reduction of military expenditures, as well as the adoption of effective measures leading towards general and complete disarmament,

Reaffirming the provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly according to which gradual reduction of military budgets on a mutually agreed basis, for example, in absolute figures or in terms of percentage points, particularly by nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, would be a measure that would contribute to curbing the arms race and would increase the possibilities of reallocation of resources now being used for military purposes to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries,

Reaffirming that it is possible to achieve reductions in military budgets without affecting the military balance to the detriment of the national security of any State,

Recalling its resolution 34/83 F of 11 December 1979, in which it, inter alia, stipulated that, in the light of the above-mentioned provision of the Final Document, a new impetus should be given to endeavours to achieve agreements to freeze, reduce or otherwise restrain, in a balanced manner, military expenditures, including adequate measures of verification satisfactory to all parties concerned and, to this end, requested the Disarmament Commission to undertake during 1980 to examine and identify effective ways and means of achieving such agreements, Having considered the report of the Disarmament Commission on the work accomplished during its session of 1980 in pursuance of resolution 34/83 F.

Noting a/so the recommendation of the Disarmament Commission concerning the elements of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, which provides that during the Decade renewed efforts should be made to reach agreement on the reduction of military expenditures and the reallocation of resources from military purposes to economic and social development, especially for the benefit of developing countries,

Aware of the various proposals submitted by States and of the activities carried out so far within the framework of the United Nations in the field of the reduction of military budgets,

Recalling a/so paragraph 41 of the Final Document, which refers, inter alia, to the contribution of the unilateral measures to the attainment of the disarmament goals, and welcoming in this connexion such measures taken by States aimed at the freezing and the reduction of their military expenditures,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to reinforce the endeavours of all States and international action in the area of the reduction of military budgets, with a view to reaching international agreements to freeze, reduce or otherwise restrain military expenditures;

2. Reiterates the appeal to all States, in particular the most heavily armed States, pending the conclusion of agreements on the reduction of military expenditures, to exercise self-restraint in their military expenditure with a view to re-allocating the funds thus saved to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of developing countries;

3. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue at its session to be held in 1981 the consideration of the item entitled "Reduction of military budgets," taking into account the provisions of General Assembly resolution 34/83 F as well as those of the present resolution and, in particular, to identify and elaborate on the principles which should govern further actions of States in the field of the freezing and reduction of military expenditures, keeping in mind the possibility of embodying such principles into a suitable document at an appropriate stage;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to invite Member States to express their views and suggestions on the principles which should govern their actions in the field of the freezing and reduction of military expenditures and to prepare on this basis a report to be submitted to the Disarmament Commission at its session in 1961;

5. Considers that this action to be carried out by the Disarmament Commission should be regarded as complementary to any other ongoing activity within the framework of the United Nations related to the question of reduction of military budgets as well as to any possible unilateral initiatives which may be undertaken by States in this field;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session the item entitled "Reduction of military budgets."

A/35/29, Chapter III. Draft resolution, as recommended by Ad Hoc Committee for adoption by General Assembly, approved without vote by First Committee on 25 November, meeting 42.

A/35/542 and Corr.1. Note verbale of 14 October from Cuba (transmitting communique of extraordinary meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and heads of delegations of non-aligned countries, New York, 2 and 3 October).

A/C.1/35/L.55, A/C.5/35/100, A/35/758. Administrative and financial implications of draft resolution recommended by First Committee in A/35/693. Statements by Secretary-General and report of Fifth Committee.

A/35/693. Report of First Committee.

Resolution 35/150, as recommended by First Committee, A/35/693, adopted without vote by Assembly on 12 December 1980, meeting 94.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, contained in its resolution 2832(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, and recalling also its resolutions 2992(XXVII) of 15 December 1972, 3080(XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, 3259 A (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3468(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/88 of 14 December 1976, 32/86 of 12 December 1977, S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, 33/66 of 14 December 1978 and 34/80 A and B of 11 December 1979, and other recent relevant resolutions,

Bearing in mind, in particular, its decision at the thirty-fourth session in resolution 34/80 B to convene a Conference on the Indian Ocean during 1981 at Colombo,

Recalling further the report of the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean,

We/coming the addition of new members of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean, appointed pursuant to resolution 34/80 B and noting that the participation of these members has helped the work of the Committee,

Reaffirming its conviction that concrete action for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace would be a substantial contribution to the strengthening of international peace and security,

Considering that the continued danger posed by the military presence of the great Powers in the Indian Ocean area, conceived in the context of their confrontation, gives greater urgency to the need to take practical steps towards the early achievement of the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace,

Considering also that all other foreign military presence in the area whenever it is contrary to the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace and the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations further gives greater urgency to the need to take practical steps towards the early achievement of the objectives of the Declaration,

Considering that the creation of a zone of peace in the Indian Ocean requires the participation of and co-operation among the littoral and hinterland States, the permanent members of the Security Council and major maritime users, to ensure conditions of peace and security based on the purposes and principles of the Charter as well as the general principles of international law,

Considering also that the creation of a zone of peace requires co-operation among the regional States to ensure conditions of peace and security within the area, as envisaged in the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, and the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the littoral and hinterland States,

Deeply concerned at recent ominous developments resulting in further deterioration of peace and stability in the region and their implications for international peace and security,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean and the exchange of views in the Ad Hoc Committee which, inter alia, indicate that:

(a) Following the expansion of its membership, there has been a varied and useful exchange of views on important issues regarding the implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, as contained in General Assembly resolution 2832(XXVI), and on other related matters;

(b) Progress has been made towards harmonizing differing approaches on these issues while a number of fundamental issues remain to be resolved;

2. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee in pursuance of the decision contained in resolution 34/80 B to convene a Conference on the Indian Ocean during 1981 at Colombo, and taking into consideration the exchange of views thereon:

(a) To continue its efforts for the necessary harmonization of views on the issues related to the convening of the Conference to achieve the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace as contained in resolution 2632(XXVI);

(b) To make every effort, in consideration of the political and security climate in the Indian Ocean area, particularly recent developments, as well as the progress made in the harmonization of views referred to in subparagraph (a) above, to finalize, in accordance with its normal methods of work, all preparations for the Conference including the dates for its convening;

(c) To continue the preparatory work for the convening of the Conference and to hold two preparatory sessions in 1981 totalling six weeks;

(d) To submit to the Conference a full report on its preparatory work;

3. Requests the Conference on the Indian Ocean to submit its report to the General Assembly;

4. Renews the general mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee as defined in the relevant resolutions;

5. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session a full report on the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to render all necessary assistance to the Ad Hoc Committee, including the provision of summary records,

Comprehensive approaches to disarmament

Considering it imperative to achieve genuine progress in disarmament negotiations, the General Assembly at its 1980 regular session urged intensification of efforts to conclude negotiations currently taking place both within and outside the United Nations framework (resolution 35/152 E). Permanent members of the Security Council and countries having military agreements with them were called on not to increase their armed forces and conventional armaments (resolution 35/152 G).

The Assembly recommended that, parallel to disarmament efforts, the main United Nations organs responsible for maintaining international peace and security consider developing ways of effectively applying the system of international security provided for in the Charter of the United Nations (resolution 35/156 J).

On 3 December, the Assembly adopted the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, a framework of goals and activities within which disarmament questions could be pursued during the coming 10 years (resolution 35/46). On the same date, it set up a Preparatory Committee for the Second Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament, to prepare a draft agenda and examine other questions for consideration at the 1982 special session (resolution 35/47).

The mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference was renewed, and the Committee was asked to maintain contact with and report on the attitudes of States regarding the convening of such a conference (resolution 35/151).

A USSR draft resolution proposing measures to reduce the danger of war was not pressed to a vote. Details of these and other decisions and proposals are given in this subchapter.

Follow-up of the tenth special session

The General Assembly adopted 10 resolutions at its 1980 session under its agenda item on review of the implementation of the recommendations and decisions it had adopted at its 1978 special session devoted to disarmament. One of these sought intensification of negotiations on disarmament, another a halt to increases in armed forces and conventional armaments of Security Council permanent members and their military allies; both resolutions, discussed below, were intended to contribute towards implementing the Programme of Action set forth in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly.<sup>48</sup>

By resolution 35/152 E, adopted without vote on 12 December, the Assembly expressed its deep concern about the continued arms race, in particular the nuclear arms race, and about constantly growing military budgets. The Assembly urgently called on all States, in particular nuclear-weapon and other major military powers, to take steps immediately leading to halting and reversing the arms race and to disarmament. It urged them to intensify efforts to conclude successfully the negotiations taking place in the Committee on Disarmament and other international forums or to proceed with negotiations on international agreements according to the priorities of the Programme of Action set forth in the Final Document of the tenth special session. In addition, the Assembly called on States to refrain from any actions which might have negative effects on the implementation of the special session's recommendations and decisions. It recommended that the Committee on Disarmament concentrate on the substantive and priority items on its agenda. States engaged in disarmament negotiations outside the United Nations framework were invited to keep the Assembly and the Committee informed of their results, and were called on to implement results thus far achieved so as to create favourable conditions for further progress.

The text, a revised version of which was adopted, listed 34 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below); it was approved without vote by the First Committee on 24 November. Yugoslavia, which introduced it, said the resolution was actuated by the sponsors' profound belief that the decisions of the tenth special session had to be implemented. The resolution was the result of compromise and co-operation; the sponsors had been able to incorporate in their text the aims of a separate proposal submitted earlier by the German Democratic Republic and Guinea. The two-power text was not pressed to a vote and its sponsors joined those of the compromise text. The German Democratic Republic observed that both drafts had been aimed at the same purpose: intensifying negotiations on disarmament.

Also on 12 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 35/152 G, by which it called on the permanent members of the Security Council and the countries which had military agreements with them to exercise restraint in both the nuclear and conventional fields and to resolve not to increase their armed forces and conventional armaments, effective from an agreed date, as a first step towards a subsequent reduction of their armed forces and conventional armaments. The Assembly invited international disarmament bodies to continue efforts aimed at curbing the arms race in accordance with its 1978 Programme of Action<sup>49</sup> and the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade (see section below).

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 104 to 19, with 17 abstentions. The text was approved by the First Committee on 25 November by a recorded vote of 89 to 19, with 23 abstentions. It was sponsored in revised form by Angola, Benin, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam.

The German Democratic Republic introduced the text, emphasizing the appeal for restraint in both nuclear and conventional fields and for a freeze in armed forces and conventional armaments; the sponsors considered this a first, practical measure towards reduction and one that, though limited, would give fresh impetus to disarmament efforts in all fields.

The Federal Republic of Germany explained its negative vote on the proposal on the grounds that it failed to fulfil its alleged purpose when judged against criteria for a reasonable measure capable of easing international tension and leading towards concrete, balanced and verifiable arms limitation and disarmament. Specifically, a preambular provision calling for the dissolution of existing military alliances seemed directed against the option of organizing defence in a common effort and implied that the mere existence of alliances was a threat to peace and security. This was not in line with Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations<sup>50</sup> which guaranteed the right to self-defence, individually and collectively, nor with the Final Act of the 1975 Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe.

Sweden, which abstained, stated that it did not support prescribing for others what security arrangements they should choose and, while it advocated restraint in armaments, it doubted the value of sweeping declarations to promote practical disarmament agreements.

Democratic Kampuchea observed that it had not participated in the voting inasmuch as one of the sponsors, Viet Nam, was currently occupying Kampuchean territory and, it charged, was cynically involved in a military alliance camouflaged under a so-called treaty of friendship and co-operation.

The USSR said the issue of dissolving existing military alliances was of great importance in resolving the whole range of disarmament problems, since any expansion of military blocs would subvert the established military and strategic balance in the world. In Poland's view, the implementation of the Final Document in respect of an agreement on the limitation of conventional armed forces and armaments would stimulate progress in the nuclear field and go a long way towards releasing important human and material resources for development.

Other issues which the General Assembly examined under its agenda item on reviewing the implementation of the recommendations of the tenth special session, and on which it adopted resolutions in 1980, were: the continuation of the United Nations programme of fellowships on -disarmament (resolution 35/152 A, see p. 113) and of negotiations on the cessation of the nuclear arms race and on nuclear disarmament (resolutions 35/152 B and C, see p. 41); proposals on the non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war (resolution 35/152 D, see p. 42); requests that certain topics be included in the work of the Disarmament Commission and the Committee on Disarmament (resolutions 35/152 F and J, see pp. 33 and 28); continuation of the programme of research and studies on disarmament (resolution 35/152 H, see p. 113); and a study on organizing a World Disarmament Campaign (resolution 35/152 I, see p. 112). #### Disarmament and international security

By resolution 35/156 J of 12 December, the Assembly called on all States to proceed in a positive spirit towards measures under the United Nations Charter for a system of international security and order concurrently with efforts at effective disarmament measures. It recommended that the main United Nations organs responsible for the maintenance of international peace and security should give early consideration to the requirements for halting the arms race and developing the modalities for the effective application of the system of international security provided for in the Charter. In addition, the Assembly requested the permanent members of the Security Council to facilitate the Council's work towards carrying out that essential responsibility. The Secretary-General was asked to submit a progress report to the Assembly at its regular 1981 session.

The resolution was adopted without a vote, having been similarly approved by the First Committee on 25 November. It was sponsored in its revised form by Argentina, the Bahamas, Cyprus, Ecuador, India, the Niger, Pakistan, Qatar, Singapore, Sri Lanka and Yugoslavia.

After revising their text, the sponsors then further orally amended it. Among other modifications, a preambular provision, referring to the purpose of the United Nations under Article 1 of the Charter, was changed to conform more closely to the wording of the first part of that Article.<sup>51</sup>

Introducing the resolution, Cyprus said that, since it was recognized that something had to be done to end the current state of international insecurity and anarchy, the place to turn for a substitute to the use of force was the Charter, whose purposes and principles were designed to promote world order and security through collective measures; this required a degree of co-operation among States which could not be achieved in the atmosphere of antagonism caused by the arms race. What was being asked was not a matter of political will; compliance with the Charter was mandatory for United Nations Members.

Bulgaria, speaking also on behalf of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said those countries agreed with the basic idea of the resolution regarding the need for parallel efforts both in the field of disarmament and in that of security. However, they had serious doubts about the request for a report from the Secretary-General in 1981; it was for the Security Council itself, should it so desire, to submit reports to the Assembly on any problem.

By a separate decision related to this topic (resolution 35/156 E of 12 December), a group of experts studying the relationship between disarmament and international security was given additional time to complete its study (see p. 112).

Declaration of the Second Disarmament Decade

Having decided in 1979 to declare the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade,<sup>52</sup> the General Assembly on 3 December 1980 adopted, without vote, the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade. The Declaration, whose elements had been prepared by the Disarmament Commission in May/June (see p. 31), was annexed to Assembly resolution 35/46. The First Committee had approved it by consensus on 25 November, after agreeing on the wording of some provisions for which the Commission had submitted alternative texts, and accepting some oral amendments by France.

The Declaration consisted of three main sections. A "General" section (section I) enumerated the objectives of the first Disarmament Decade (the 1970s) and briefly outlined the situation at the end of those 10 years, which had ended without the accomplishment of those objectives, although some limited agreements had been reached. In spite of the encouraging outcome of the 1978 special session on disarmament, the Declaration stated, the 1980s had started with ominous signs of deterioration in the international situation, a trend which had to be checked and reversed. Military expenditures by major military powers were reaching ever higher levels, involving greater diversion of resources that could have helped promote the well-being of all peoples.

Section II, on "Goals and principles," listed the aims and expectations of the Decade. Consistent with the overall objective of general and complete disarmament under effective international control, the goals of the Decade should include: halting and reversing the arms race, particularly the nuclear arms race; concluding and implementing agreements on disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament; strengthening international peace and security; and making available a substantial part of the resources released by disarmament measures to attain the objectives of the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s). Progress in disarmament should be accompanied by the strengthening of the peace-making and peace-keeping functions of the United Nations.

Section III of the Declaration set out in eight subsections the priorities and main areas on which attention should be focused. The Decade should witness renewed intensification of efforts to reach agreement and implement disarmament measures leading to discernible progress towards the ultimate goal. Special attention should be focused on certain identifiable elements in the Assembly's 1978 Programme of Action.<sup>53</sup> The comprehensive programme of disarmament should be elaborated with a view to its adoption at the 1982 special session.

The text of paragraph 12, left unagreed by the Disarmament Commission, was decided on. The Assembly thereby stated that all efforts should be exerted by the Committee on Disarmament urgently to negotiate with a view to reaching agreement, and to submit agreed texts where possible before the 1982 special session on: a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty, treaties banning chemical and radiological weapons, and effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the threat or use of nuclear weapons. By paragraph 13, the Assembly stated that the same priority should be given to: ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America; signature and ratification of the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects (see p. 76); commencement of negotiations on a third strategic arms limitation treaty; agreement on mutual reduction of armed forces and armaments in central Europe; and confidence-building measures, including negotiations on confidence-building and disarmament measures in Europe and achievement of a more stable situation in that continent at a lower level of military potential.

Agreement was also reached on the wording of paragraph 14, which had also been left unagreed by the Disarmament Commission. Thus, other priority measures that should be pursued as rapidly as possible during the Decade included: agreements on halting the improvement and development of nuclear-weapon systems and the production and means of delivery of nuclear weapons and fissionable material for weapons, and a phased programme to reduce nuclear-weapon stockpiles and their means of delivery; preventing new types and systems of weapons of mass destruction from emerging; further strategic arms limitation negotiations; nuclear non-proliferation; strengthening the Latin American nuclear-weapon-free zone and establishing others, as well as zones of peace; measures to secure the avoidance of the use of nuclear weapons, the prevention of nuclear war and related objectives, where possible through international agreement, bearing in mind various proposals designed to secure these objectives in accordance with provisions of the Final Document,<sup>54</sup> thereby ensuring that mankind's survival was not endangered; prohibiting military or other hostile use of environmental modification techniques; and limiting and reducing conventional weapons, armed forces and military expenditures.

During the Decade, efforts should be made to implement measures whereby disarmament would contribute to economic and social development and the early realization of the new international economic order. Efforts should also be made to strengthen co-operation for promoting the transfer and use of nuclear technology for economic and social development, especially in the developing countries.

There existed, according to the Declaration, a direct relationship among disarmament, relaxation of international tension, respect for the right to self-determination and independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, the peaceful settlement of disputes and strengthening international peace and security. All Governments, in particular the most advanced military powers, should therefore take steps to widen trust among nations and regions. This implied a commitment to avoid actions likely to increase tension.

To alert world opinion to the danger of war, particularly nuclear war, information organs and non-governmental organizations should undertake further information programmes on the danger of the arms race and on disarmament efforts and negotiations. The United Nations, in particular the Centre for Disarmament, should intensify and co-ordinate its programme of publications, audio-visual materials, co-operation with non-governmental organizations and relations with the media. It should also sponsor seminars in different regions to discuss disarmament.

On the Assembly's decision, studies on specific questions should be undertaken to prepare the ground for negotiations. The United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research could also study disarmament problems.

The United Nations should play a central role in accomplishing the Decade's activities. The Declaration recalled that an important role could be played by bilateral and regional disarmament negotiations and that it had been agreed in 1978 that a world disarmament conference should be convened. The question of implementation of the Decade's activities should be included in the agenda of the 1982 special session and, through the Disarmament Commission, the Assembly would review and appraise progress in 1985.

A contact group convened by the Chairman of the First Committee evolved mutually acceptable language for the two paragraphs that had been left unagreed by the Disarmament Commission (see p. 31). The Committee also agreed to oral amendments by France to reflect decisions that had taken place since the Commission's session; i.e. reference was made to priority to be given to the signature and ratification, rather than conclusion, of the agreement by the United Nations Conference on prohibiting or restricting the use of certain excessively injurious or indiscriminate conventional weapons, and the adjective "proposed" preceding a reference to the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research was deleted. A USSR oral subamendment added reference to the establishing resolution for the Institute.

India introduced the draft resolution annexing the Declaration, drawing attention to the need for mobilizing world public opinion on behalf of peace and disarmament. India suggested that the Centre for Disarmament, in co-operation with the Department of Public Information, prepare a programme of information activities for 1981 and 1982, to be continued through the decade, focusing them on the 1982 special session.

Several representatives explained their positions before or after approval of the text. The USSR expressed satisfaction with and support of the document as a whole, convinced that its adoption by consensus would encourage States to make increased efforts in the disarmament field. France also expressed its support and welcomed the spirit of co-operation which enabled consensus to be reached.

Albania dissociated itself from the consensus. While in principle it had no objection to the declaration of another disarmament decade, reality had shown that, in the social and political conditions of today's world, disarmament remained a very distant goal. It believed this Declaration would yield an experience no better than that of the first.

The United States, noting that the Decade embraced some very ambitious goals, believed that certain points must be borne in mind, among them that adequate and effective measures of verification remained essential to meaningful arms control and disarmament, and arms control negotiations could not be conducted effectively against artificial and unrealistic deadlines.

During the debate, many countries, while expressing regret that the hopes attached to the first Disarmament Decade had been disappointed, were cautiously hopeful that the Second Decade, if approached realistically and with commitment, would yield concrete results.

The Netherlands, speaking on behalf of the nine member States of the European Community, reiterated the belief that approval of the new Disarmament Decade was an appropriate step to increase the awareness of public opinion of the question of disarmament and the problems associated with it. The 1980s offered an opportunity to enhance the security and integrity of all States through a long-term process of concrete disarmament measures in different fields, providing an umbrella under which the comprehensive programme of disarmament could be implemented. Similar views were taken by several countries, including Austria, Chile and Portugal, which stated that the Declaration's guidelines and principles were of fundamental importance; the comprehensive programme, when incorporated with it, would serve as a valuable frame of reference for the next 10 years.

As had been the case during the first Disarmament Decade, representatives continued to stress the importance of the link between disarmament and development, especially since the Second Disarmament Decade and the Third United Nations Development Decade were being proclaimed simultaneously. Yugoslavia noted that the implementation of disarmament measures would undoubtedly release financial and human resources in both the developed and the developing countries, thus making possible a reallocation of resources for development needs. Bangladesh, Nigeria, Romania and the United Republic of Tanzania also referred to the timeliness of the dual proclamations, as well as the launching of the global round of economic negotiations, emphasizing that disarmament problems had to be approached in the context of their interdependence with the other major problems of contemporary life. Nigeria also stated that, contrary to the Assembly's hopes, the 1970s had turned out to be a decade for neither disarmament nor development. The new decade was an opportunity to elaborate result-oriented activities in the interrelated fields of disarmament and development.

Many representatives, among them those of Algeria, Morocco, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, Togo and the United Republic of Tanzania, stressed the need once again for achieving measurable progress during the decade towards the goal of general and complete disarmament. Others, such as Austria and the United States, cautioned that, without losing sight of the ultimate goal, it was necessary to adopt a step-by-step programme of attainable measures covering both nuclear and conventional weapons, taking into account the close interrelationship of the many important issues.

Afghanistan, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Mongolia and Poland, among other countries, believed that the most urgent targets for the Second Disarmament Decade had to include the consolidation of detente and resolute measures to halt and reverse the impending new spiral of the arms race. Détente, however, in Algeria's opinion, must be universal and not stop at the gates of the third world. Portugal, on the other hand, pointed out that, while it would not be excessive to devote a second decade to the problems of disarmament, it would be unrealistic to believe that its aims would be attained by fixing over-ambitious objectives which were not connected with the realities of international life; it would be far better to use the Second Disarmament Decade to publicize the dangers of the arms race so as to make world opinion aware of its possible consequences.

China, while basically endorsing the formulations contained in the Disarmament Commission's recommendations, noted what it considered to be certain inadequacies. First, the two countries with the largest arsenals and military budgets should have been explicitly called upon to be the first to reduce both their nuclear and conventional armaments. Second, nuclear and conventional disarmament should be given equal importance and carried out in conjunction with each other.

A number of countries mentioned specifically the second special session devoted to disarmament, scheduled for 1982, as being one of the highlights of the decade. Australia held that the only way substantive progress could be achieved during the coming period would be if the General Assembly, at its second special session, were to set itself realistic goals for which adequate preparation had been made. India expressed a similar view.

Two letters before the First Committee, addressed to the Secretary-General, concerned plans for the Second Disarmament Decade. They were from the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the USSR and Czechoslovakia, dated 11 April and 8 June, respectively- the latter transmitted on 14 July. Each of them listed the issues on which those countries believed successful negotiations would give real content to the Second Decade; these covered a wide programme of measures for halting the arms race and achieving disarmament, and indicated the basic direction in which the two States felt efforts should be concentrated in coming years.

Second special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament

On 3 December 1980, by resolution 35/47, the General Assembly established a 78-member Preparatory Committee for the Second Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament, to be appointed by the Assembly President on the basis of equitable geographic distribution. The Committee was to prepare a draft agenda for the 1982 session, examine relevant questions and submit its recommendations in 1981. Member States were invited to submit their views on the agenda and other questions by 1 April 1981. The Committee was also requested to meet for a short organizational session before the end of the Assembly's current session to set the dates for its substantive sessions.

The resolution, sponsored by 42 Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), was adopted without vote, having been similarly approved by the First Committee on 26 November. The number of Preparatory Committee members and the date it was to meet for its organizational session were agreed following consultations with regional groups and the Bureau (officers) of the First Committee.

Introducing the proposal, Yugoslavia said the 54-member Preparatory Committee for the first special (1978) session had proved to be of inadequate size; moreover, the sponsors believed that interested countries in addition to the members should not be prevented from participating in the new Committee's work. Portugal, speaking as current Chairman of the group of Western European and other States at the United Nations, observed that the group would have preferred that the Preparatory Committee be constituted as a committee of the whole of the Assembly.

In a letter to the Assembly President, dated 11 November, Czechoslovakia, in its capacity as Chairman of the regional group of Eastern European States, placed on record that group's request for at least eight seats on the Committee.

Japan observed, when the text was approved, that it understood that the Preparatory Committee's recommendations, which were to include those in respect of the implementation of the decisions and recommendations adopted at the tenth special session in 1978, in no way implied that any attempt should be made to revise or re-draft the Final Document of that session at the second special session. France held a similar view. Nigeria, on the other hand, stated that events, by 1982, might well dictate the advisability of not regarding the Final Document-whose purpose was not to lay down a new Bible but to guide disarmament activities-as an ex cathedra document; the need for other approaches could not be ruled out.

Most States which spoke on the subject during the debate placed emphasis on the need for thoroughgoing preparations for the special session. Hungary and the Netherlands (on behalf of the European Community members) said the preparations should be built on the work of the 1978 special session and experience since that time.

Australia and Spain believed the session must set realistic goals. The United States added that its success would depend on the degree to which superficial and impractical proposals were avoided and effective and verifiable arms-control measures were concentrated on. It cautioned that success would also be affected by the state of the international political climate in 1982.

Cuba, the USSR and Yugoslavia felt the task of the special session should be to review and promote the implementation of the decisions of the 1978 special session. Yugoslavia added that it must do more than merely reaffirm the 1978 Programme of Action; preparations should include consideration of what new content might be imparted to the session.

Lebanon suggested that heads of State be invited to take part in a summit meeting during the session so that disarmament questions could be given the priority they deserved.

The General Assembly also adopted two decisions concerning the Preparatory Committee. By decision 35/417 of 3 December, adopted without vote, it decided that the Preparatory Committee could be provided with summary records of its meetings as an exception to the general rule and in addition to the exceptions granted on 3 November by resolution 35/10 B (see. p. 1227). By decision 35/430 of 12 December, it agreed that the Committee would hold its second substantive session from 5 to 16 October 1981, even though the Assembly would be in session at the time, thereby waiving the provisions of the Assembly's general proscription against such meetings.<sup>55</sup> Decision 35/417 had been orally proposed by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee Chairman and approved without objection on 1 December. Decision 35/430 had been sponsored in the plenary Assembly by Costa Rica, Cyprus, the German Democratic Republic, Nigeria, Portugal and the Sudan, and was adopted by consensus. It was introduced by Nigeria at the request of the Preparatory Committee after the Committee had held its organizational session.

The Preparatory Committee dealt with the organization of its work at three meetings on 4 and 5 December. It elected its Chairman, but deferred the election of its other officers until its May 1981 session. The Committee decided to be governed by the relevant rules of procedure of the Assembly, although it was understood that every effort should be made to ensure that decisions on matters of substance would be adopted by consensus. It agreed that representatives of non-member States could participate in its plenary meetings without the right to vote.

World disarmament conference

Report of the Ad Hoc Committee

The Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference held two sessions in 1980, consisting of two meetings on 31 March and 1 April and three meetings between 16 and 20 June. At the final meeting, it unanimously adopted its report to the General Assembly, as drafted by a working group.

The Ad Hoc Committee stated in its report that it had maintained close contact, through its Chairman, with the representatives of the nuclear-weapon States, and set out the information gained from those contacts. The USSR continued to stress the need to convene a world disarmament conference, to make it possible to concentrate government attention and world public opinion on the solution of the question of how to halt the arms race and move forward to real disarmament. The four other nuclear powers maintained their reservations on the practicability or value of such a conference. China's position remained unchanged; it had previously observed that such a conference could only be acceptable if all nuclear-weapon powers, in particular the two major ones, undertook not to be the first to use nuclear weapons and to end all forms of military presence in other countries. While in the past France had favoured the idea in principle, it did not feel the current international situation was conducive to the necessary meaningful planning. The United Kingdom did not believe it useful to continue to consider the idea for the time being, and the United States felt it was premature to begin preparations inasmuch as there was insufficient political agreement on the issues to be addressed.

The Committee reiterated that the idea of a world disarmament conference had received wide support from United Nations Member States with varying degrees of emphasis and differences as to conditions and certain aspects related to the question of its convening, including those related to the deteriorating international situation. It was also evident that no consensus with respect to the convening of such a conference under current conditions had been reached among the nuclear-weapon States, whose participation was generally deemed essential. It suggested the Assembly might wish to decide that, after its 1982 special session, such a conference would take place, as soon as the necessary consensus was reached.

Consideration by the General Assembly

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted, without vote, resolution 35/151 by which it renewed the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee and requested it to maintain close contact with nuclear-weapon and other States in order to remain informed of their attitudes, and to consider and report on proposals and observations which might be made.

The resolution was approved by the First Committee on 24 November, also without vote, as sponsored by Burundi, Mongolia, Peru, Poland, Spain and Sri Lanka. Sri Lanka, the Ad Hoc Committee Chairman, introduced the text, as well as the Committee's report, on behalf of the sponsors, which, except for Mongolia, were Ad Hoc Committee officers.

Before approval of the text, the Netherlands, speaking on behalf of the nine European Community members, said the continuing absence of consensus among the nuclear-weapon States and the deterioration of the world situation had made it more difficult to solve the question of convening a world disarmament conference. They doubted that further meetings of the Ad Hoc Committee would lead to advancement of the idea before the conclusion of the Assembly's 1982 special session.

Albania dissociated itself from the consensus, believing the conference proposal to be an unnecessary and propagandistic exercise.

In the debate, a number of Eastern European States, including the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic and the USSR, as well as Mongolia, emphasized the importance they attached to the convening of such a conference following the second special session. It should not merely lead to recommendations, but should adopt binding decisions to be fully implemented by all States without exception. The German Democratic Republic felt that such a conference could become a genuine highlight of the Second Disarmament Decade and the special session should devote particular attention to its preparation.

A number of developing countries, such as Afghanistan, Chile and Cuba, also expressed their support for a conference. Fiji believed that it would be an appropriate forum in which all peoples and nations should participate to make a concerted effort at reaching consensus on the means of achieving disarmament goals. It believed, however, that political will, and the participation of all the nuclear-weapon States, would be required to make such a conference effective. Guinea also favoured a conference but stressed that it should be motivated by serious considerations so that it might establish real goals, making it possible to enlist the support of the international community in general, and the nuclear-weapon States in particular, to work towards general and complete disarmament.

China held that a conference would be an unnecessary duplication of the second special session on disarmament and would risk undermining efforts to implement the decisions of the first special session. China also expressed serious reservations concerning further consideration of the question.

Urgent measures for reducing the danger of war

As proposed by the USSR Minister for Foreign Affairs in a letter/explanatory memorandum of 23 September, an item entitled "Urgent measures for reducing the danger of war" was included in the 1980 agenda of the General Assembly. The USSR emphasized the worsening of the international situation, holding that a course was openly being pursued to achieve military and strategic superiority leading to an unfettered spiralling of the arms race.

Believing efforts to strengthen detente and prevent war should be multiplied, it proposed: (a) renunciation by States members of military alliances of the expansion of those alliances, dismantling of the military organizations of the two major blocs, and avoidance of the formation of new military-political groupings; (b) a halt to increases in armed forces and conventional weapons as a first step towards their reduction; (c) further action in the area of security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States, with the objective of the conclusion of an international convention on that question; and (d) a moratorium on nuclear-weapon tests for a certain period, in order to create more favourable conditions for conclusion of a treaty on a comprehensive test ban. In the USSR's view, implementation of those measures would have a restraining influence on the growing danger of war and contribute to an easing of tension.

The USSR submitted to the First Committee a draft resolution, previously annexed to its letter of 23 September, by which the Assembly would call on States belonging to military alliances not to expand existing military-political groupings, on other States not to join such groupings, and on all States not to form new ones or assign military functions to regional organizations that had no such functions. It would also call on States not to increase their armed forces and conventional armaments as from 1 January 1981, as a first step towards reduction, and on States participating in talks on providing guarantees to non-nuclear States to try to conclude speedily an international convention on this matter; as a first step, all nuclear-weapon States would be called on to make solemn declarations, identical in substance, concerning the non-use of nuclear weapons against non-nuclear States having no such weapons on their territories. If found consistent with the final objective, the Security Council might adopt a resolution approving them. Stressing the need for speedy conclusion of an international treaty on the complete and general prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests, the Assembly would call on all nuclear-weapon States not to conduct any nuclear explosions for one year from an agreed date.

A number of Eastern European States, including Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary and the Ukrainian SSR, and others such as Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Ecuador, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam, voiced support for the Soviet initiative.

Democratic Kampuchea, on the other hand, charged that treaties of friendship and co-operation which the USSR and its supporters signed with other countries were nothing but treaties of aggressive military alliances by another name, serving the Soviet strategy of world expansion; by the resolution, it was trying to maintain its supremacy in conventional weapons.

France and the Netherlands-the latter speaking on behalf of the European Community-said one of their objections was based on the Charter, particularly its provisions regarding the right of self-defence and the conditions in which that right might be exercised. Another objection centred on an erroneous assumption that there was a link between the danger of war and the existence of military alliances. The United Kingdom and the United States did not think the text deserved support.

Sri Lanka said the interconnexion between the resolution's several aspects was recognized, but its current formulation limited the scope for its consideration.

The USSR decided not to press its proposal to a vote since its basic provisions were reflected in two related resolutions, one calling for restraint in both nuclear and conventional arms and forces (resolution 35/152 G; see section above on FOLLOW-UP OF THE TENTH SPECIAL SESSION) and the other for a convention on strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States (resolution 35/154; see p. 39), and in view of the broad support expressed in the First Committee for a moratorium on nuclear explosions.

By decision 35/432 of 12 December, adopted without vote on an oral proposal by its President, the Assembly took note of a statement by the First Committee Rapporteur that the Committee had submitted no report on the item.

The General Assembly,

Having reviewed the implementation of the recommendations and decisions adopted at the tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling its resolutions S-10/2 of 30 June 1978 and 34/183 C of 11 December 1979,

Bearing in mind that general and complete disarmament has been recognized as an imperative and most urgent task facing the international community and that all the peoples of the world have a vital interest in the success of disarmament negotiations,

Considering it imperative to achieve genuine progress in all negotiations dealing with disarmament issues,

Reaffirming that the United Nations has a central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament,

Noting with satisfaction that the tenth special session resulted in greater involvement by Member States in efforts aimed at halting the arms race and launching a process of genuine disarmament,

Expressing its satisfaction that some initial results in the implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session have been achieved, primarily through a considerable revitalization of the multilateral disarmament machinery,

Deeply concerned, however, about the continuing arms race and, in particular, the nuclear arms race, which constitutes a growing threat to international peace and security,

Calling attention to the tasks set forth in the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, which demand intensified efforts to be taken in the Committee on Disarmament and other appropriate forums,

Stressing the need to promote the development, strengthening and intensification of international co-operation designed to achieve general and complete disarmament, as defined by the General Assembly at its tenth special session,

Noting with concern the lack of tangible progress with respect to the implementation of the measures expressed in the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

1. Expresses its deep concern about the continued arms race, in particular the nuclear arms race, and about the constantly growing military budgets, which bear negative consequences and pose a growing threat to international peace and security as well as to the unhampered development of countries, particularly developing countries;

2. Urgently calls upon all States, in particular nuclear-weapon States and other major military Powers, immediately to take steps leading to effective halting and reversing of the arms race and to disarmament;

3. Urges those States also to intensify their efforts to bring to a successful end the negotiations which are currently taking place in the Committee on Disarmament and other international forums or to proceed with negotiations on effective international agreements according to the priorities of the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

4. Recommends that the Committee on Disarmament should concentrate on the substantive and priority items on its agenda with a view to achieving tangible results;

5. Expresses its conviction that one of the most important contributions for the preparation of the special session on disarmament to be held in 1982 will be to achieve tangible progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action;

6. Calls upon all States to refrain from any actions which have or may have negative effects on the implementation of the relevant recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session;

7. Invites all States which are engaged in disarmament negotiations or arms limitation negotiations outside the United Nations framework to keep the General Assembly and the Committee on Disarmament informed of the results of such negotiations in conformity with the relevant provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session;

8. Also calls upon States engaged in disarmament negotiations or arms limitation negotiations outside the United Nations framework to implement the results achieved so as to create favourable conditions for further progress;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session the item entitled "Implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session of the General Assembly."

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the declaration set forth in section II of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly that, unless its avenues are closed, the continued arms race means a growing threat to international peace and the security of mankind,

Profoundly concerned over the deterioration of the international situation,

Recalling the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document as well as the activities undertaken in pursuance of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade towards bringing about the cessation of the arms race and towards real disarmament,

Reaffirming that, while nuclear disarmament is a task of the first and highest priority, progress in the limitation and subsequent reduction of nuclear weapons would be facilitated by parallel political measures and international legal measures to strengthen the security of States,

Calling for the dissolution of existing military alliances and, as a first step, for refraining from actions conducive to expansion of existing military groupings,

Concerned over the fact that the current negotiations on arms limitation and on disarmament are being protracted and that some of them have been suspended or terminated,

1. Calls upon the States permanent members of the Security Council and the countries which have military agreements with them to exercise restraint in both the nuclear and conventional fields and to resolve not to increase their armed forces and conventional armaments, effective from an agreed date, as a first step towards a subsequent reduction of their armed forces and conventional armaments;

2. Invites the appropriate international bodies in the field of disarmament to continue, in accordance with the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, efforts aimed at achieving positive results in curbing the arms race in accordance with the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document and the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to keep this question under constant review and to transmit all relevant documents of the thirty-fifth session of the General Assembly to appropriate International bodies.

Resolution 35/156 J, as recommended by First Committee, A/35/699, adopted without vote by Assembly on 12 December 1980, meeting 94.

The General Assembly,

Noting with concern that the arms race, particularly the nuclear arms race, continues unabated while efforts towards arms reduction or limitation have not yet produced concrete results,

Conscious of the grave danger of a nuclear conflagration resulting from the continued escalation of the arms race, particularly the nuclear arms race, and from recent ominous developments,

Considering that the lack of effective international security is a generating factor in the escalating arms race,

Recalling that, according to Article 1, paragraph 1, of the Charter of the United Nations, the primary purpose of the United Nations is to maintain international peace and security and, to that end, to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to peace and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of peace,

Recognizing that compliance with the purposes and principles of the Charter would promote world order and security, so necessary in these demanding times,

Convinced that confidence in the effectiveness of the United Nations and the resulting climate of trust will facilitate co-operation between Member States on matters of common interest for peace and survival, irrespective of any differences in political or social systems,

Recalling that in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it is stated that the arms race, particularly in its nuclear aspect, runs counter to efforts to achieve further relaxation of international tension, to establish international relations based on peaceful coexistence and trust between all States, and to develop broad international co-operation and understanding,

Recalling further that in the Final Document it is also stated that genuine and lasting peace can only be created through the effective implementation of the security system provided for in the Charter and the speedy and substantial reduction of arms and armed forces, by international agreement and mutual example, leading ultimately to general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Considering that the objective of halting the arms race, particularly the nuclear arms race, and proceeding to effective disarmament measures, compatible with national security, could be effectively served through applying the collective security system provided for in the Charter, parallel to disarmament efforts,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 34/83 A of 11 December 1979 on disarmament and international security;

2. Calls upon all States to proceed in a positive spirit towards measures under the Charter of the United Nations for a system of international security and order concurrently with efforts at effective disarmament measures;

3. Recommends that the main organs of the United Nations responsible for the maintenance of international peace and security should give early consideration to the requirements for halting the arms race, particularly the nuclear arms race, and developing the modalities for the effective application of the system of international security provided for in the Charter;

4. Requests the permanent members of the Security Council to facilitate the work of the Council towards carrying out this essential responsibility under the Charter;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a progress report to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 34/75 of 11 December 1979, in which it decided to declare the decade of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade,

Having considered the elements of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade prepared by the Disarmament Commission, Adopts the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, as set forth in the annex to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Declaration of the 1980s
as the Second Disarmament Decade

I. General

1. In proclaiming the decade of the 1970s as the first United Nations Disarmament Decade, the General Assembly, in its resolution 2602 E (XXIV) of 16 December 1969, enumerated its objectives as follows:

(a) All Governments should intensify without delay their concerted and concentrated efforts for effective measures relating to the cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament and the elimination of other weapons of mass destruction, and for a treaty on general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control;

(b) Consideration should be given to channelling a substantial part of the resources freed by measures in the field of disarmament to promote the economic development of developing countries and, in particular, their scientific and technological progress.

2. Although these objectives were reiterated by the General Assembly in later sessions, the first Disarmament Decade ended without their accomplishment. While it is true that some limited agreements were reached, effective measures relating to the cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament have continued to elude man's grasp. Furthermore, no progress has been made in channelling for the purpose of economic and social development any amount of the enormous resources which are wasted on the unproductive arms race.

3. Through the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, contained in resolution S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, which was adopted by consensus, the Assembly, after expressing its conviction that disarmament and arms limitation, particularly in the nuclear field, were essential for the prevention of the danger of nuclear war, for the strengthening of international peace and security and for the economic and social advancement of all peoples, laid down a Programme of Action enumerating the specific measures of disarmament which should be implemented over the next few years.

4. In spite of the positive and encouraging outcome of the special session devoted to disarmament, the decade of the 1980s has started with ominous signs of deterioration in the international situation. International peace and security are threatened by the use or threat of use of force against the sovereignty, national independence and territorial integrity of States, by military intervention and occupation, hegemonism, interference in the internal affairs of States, the denial of the right of self-determination of peoples and nations under colonial and alien domination, and by the further escalation of the arms race and efforts to achieve military superiority. It is clear that, if the emerging trend continues and meaningful efforts are not made to check and reverse this trend, international tensions will be further exacerbated and the danger of war will be greater than foreseen at the time of the special session on disarmament. In this connexion, it is pertinent to recall that in the Final Document the General Assembly emphasized that, on the one hand, the arms race in all its aspects runs counter to efforts to achieve further relaxation of international tension to establish a viable system of international peace and security and, on the other, that peace and security must be based on strict respect for the principles of the Charter of the United Nations. It is ironic that, while intensive discussions are under way in various forums on global economic problems and on the depletion of resources available for coping with present international economic problems, military expenditures by major military Powers are reaching ever higher levels, involving the greater diversion of resources that could have helped to promote the well-being of all peoples.

5. The close relationship between disarmament and development was also underscored in the Final Document, which stated that the resources released as a result of the implementation of disarmament measures should be devoted to the economic and social development of all nations and contribute to the bridging of the economic gap between developed and developing countries. It is, therefore, only appropriate that, simultaneously with the proclamation of the Third United Nations Development Decade and the launching of the global round of negotiations, the 1980s should be declared as the Second Disarmament Decade.

II. Goals and principles

6. The goals of the Second Disarmament Decade should be conceived in the context of the ultimate objective of the efforts of States in the disarmament process, which is general and complete disarmament under effective international control, as elaborated in the Final Document.

7. Consistent with this overall objective, the goals of the Second Disarmament Decade should be the following:

(a) Halting and reversing the arms race, particularly the nuclear arms race;

(b) Concluding and implementing effective agreements on disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament, which will contribute significantly to the achievement of general and complete disarmament under effective international control;

(c) Developing on an equitable basis the limited results obtained in the field of disarmament in the 1970s in accordance with the provisions of the Final Document;

(d) Strengthening international peace and security in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

(e) Making available a substantial part of the resources released by disarmament measures to promote the attainment of the objectives of the Third United Nations Development Decade and, in particular, the economic and social development of developing countries, so as to accelerate the progress towards the new international economic order.

8. The disarmament process and the activities during the Second Disarmament Decade should be in accordance with the fundamental principles enshrined in the Final Document and should be carried out in such a balanced and equitable manner as to ensure the right of each State to security through the adoption of appropriate measures, taking into account the importance of nuclear disarmament and conventional disarmament, the special responsibility of the States with the largest military arsenals, the specific requirements of regional situations and the necessity for adequate measures of verification. At each stage, the objective should be undiminished security at the lowest possible level of armaments and military forces.

9. Progress in disarmament should be accompanied by the strengthening of the peace-making and peace-keeping functions of the United Nations in accordance with the Charter.

III. Activities

A. General

10. The decade of the 1980s should witness renewed intensification by all Governments and the United Nations of their efforts to reach agreement and to implement effective measures that will lead to discernible progress towards the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control. In this connexion, special attention should be focused on certain identifiable elements in the Programme of Action as adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session which should, as a minimum, be accomplished during the Second Disarmament Decade both through negotiations in the multilateral negotiating forum, the Committee on Disarmament, and in other appropriate forums. Adequate methods and procedures of verification should be considered in the context of international disarmament negotiations.

B. Comprehensive programme of disarmament

11. Having been recognized as an important element in an international disarmament strategy, the comprehensive programme of disarmament should be elaborated with the utmost urgency. The Committee on Disarmament should expedite its work on the elaboration of the programme with a view to its adoption no later than at the second special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, scheduled for 1982.

C. Priorities

12. The accomplishment of those specific measures of disarmament which have been identified in the Final Document as worthy of priority negotiations by the multilateral negotiating organ would create a very favourable international climate for the second special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament. All efforts should be exerted, therefore, by the Committee on Disarmament urgently to negotiate with a view to reaching agreement, and to submit agreed texts where possible before the second special session devoted to disarmament on:

- (a) A comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;
- (b) A treaty on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and their destruction;
- (c) A treaty on the prohibition of the development, production and use of radiological weapons;
- (d) Effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, taking into account all proposals and suggestions that have been made in this regard.

13. The same priority should be given to the following measures which are dealt with outside the Committee on Disarmament:

- (a) Ratification of the Treaty on the Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (SALT II) and commencement of negotiations for a SALT III agreement;
- (b) Ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco);
- (c) Signature and ratification of the agreement negotiated by the United Nations Conference on Prohibitions or Restrictions of Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects;
- (d) Achievement of an agreement on mutual reduction of armed forces and armaments and associated measures in central Europe;
- (e) Negotiations on effective confidence-building measures and disarmament measures in Europe among the States participating in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, taking into account initiatives and proposals to this effect;
- (f) Achievement of a more stable situation in Europe at a lower level of military potential on the basis of approximate equality and parity by agreement on appropriate mutual reduction and limitation of armaments and armed forces in accordance with paragraph 82 of the Final Document, which would contribute to the Strengthening of security in Europe and constitute a significant step towards enhancing international peace and security.

14. Other priority measures that should be pursued as rapidly as possible during the Second Disarmament Decade include:

- (a) Significant progress towards the achievement of nuclear disarmament, which will require urgent negotiation of agreements at appropriate stages and with adequate measures of verification satisfactory to the States concerned for:
  - (i) Cessation of the qualitative improvement and development of nuclear-weapon systems;
  - (ii) Cessation of the production of all types of nuclear weapons and their means of delivery, and of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;
  - (iii) A comprehensive, phased programme with agreed time-frames, whenever feasible, for progressive and balanced reduction of stockpiles of nuclear weapons and their means of delivery, leading to their ultimate and complete elimination at the earliest possible time;
- (b) Prevention of the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons;

(c) Further strategic arms limitation negotiations between the two parties, leading to agreed significant reductions of, and qualitative limitations on, strategic arms. These should constitute an important step in the direction of nuclear disarmament and, ultimately, of the establishment of a world free of such weapons;

(d) Further steps to develop an international consensus to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons in accordance with the provisions of paragraphs 65 to 71 of the Final Document;

(e) Strengthening Of the existing nuclear-Weapon-free zone and the establishment of other nuclear-weapon-free zones in accordance with the relevant paragraphs of the Final Document;

(f) Establishment of zones of peace in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Final Document;

(g) Measures to secure the avoidance of the use of nuclear weapons, the prevention of nuclear war and related objectives, where possible through international agreement, bearing in mind various proposals designed to secure these objectives and in accordance with paragraphs 57 and 58 of the Final Document, and thereby to ensure that the survival of mankind is not endangered;

(h) Further steps to prohibit military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques;

(i) Multilateral regional and bilateral measures on the limitation and reduction of conventional weapons and armed forces, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Final Document;

(j) Reduction of military expenditures;

(k) Confidence-building measures, taking into account the particular conditions and requirements of different regions, with a view to strengthening the security of States.

D. Disarmament and development

15. Peace and development are indivisible. During the Second Disarmament Decade, utmost efforts should be made towards the implementation of the specific measures whereby disarmament will contribute effectively to economic and social development and thus facilitate the full and early realization of the new international economic order. To this end, renewed efforts should be made to reach agreement on the reduction of military expenditures and the reallocation of resources from military purposes to economic and social development, especially for the benefit of developing countries.

16. Efforts should also be made to strengthen international co-operation for the promotion of the transfer and utilization of nuclear technology for economic and social development, especially in the developing countries, taking into account the provisions of all relevant paragraphs of the Final Document, in particular to ensure the success of the United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy, to be convened in principle by 1983, as decided upon in General Assembly resolution 34/63 of 29 November 1979, as well as other promotional activities in this field in the United Nations system, including those within the framework of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

E. Disarmament and international security

17. An essential condition for progress in the field of disarmament is the preservation and strengthening of international peace and security and the promotion of confidence among States. Nuclear weapons pose the greatest danger to mankind and to the survival of civilization. It is essential to halt and reverse the nuclear arms race in all its aspects in order to avert the danger of war involving nuclear weapons. The ultimate goal in this context is the complete elimination of nuclear weapons. Significant progress in nuclear disarmament would be facilitated both by parallel political and international legal measures to strengthen the security of States and by progress in the limitation and reduction of armed forces and conventional armaments of the nuclear-weapon States and other States in the regions concerned.

18. All States Members of the United Nations have, in the Final Document, reaffirmed their full commitment to the purposes of the Charter of the United Nations and their obligation strictly to observe its principles as well as other relevant and generally accepted principles of international law relating to the maintenance of international peace and security. Disarmament, relaxation of international tension, respect for the right to self-determination and national independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of States, the peaceful settlement of disputes in accordance with the Charter and the strengthening of international peace and security are directly related to each other. Progress in any of these spheres has a beneficial effect on all of them; in turn, failure in one sphere has negative effects on others. In the decade of the 1980s, all Governments, in particular the most advanced military Powers, should therefore take such steps as will contribute to the widening of trust among nations of the world as well as in the various regions. This implies a commitment on the part of all States to avoid actions likely to increase tension or create new areas of threats to international peace and security and, in their relationship with the other countries, strictly to respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States, and the right of peoples under colonial or foreign domination to self-determination and national independence.

F. Public awareness

19. As stated in paragraph 15 of the Final Document, it is essential that not only Governments but also the peoples of the world recognize and understand the dangers in the present world armaments situation, so that world public opinion will be mobilized on behalf of peace and disarmament. This will be of great importance to the Strengthening of international peace and security, the just and peaceful resolution of disputes and conflicts and effective disarmament.

20. In the course of the decade of the 1980s, therefore, governmental and non-governmental information organs of Member States and those of the United Nations and the specialized agencies, as well as non-governmental organizations, should, as appropriate, undertake further programmes of information relating to the danger of the armaments race as well as to disarmament efforts and negotiations and their results, particularly by means of annual activities conducted in connexion with Disarmament Week. These actions should constitute a large-scale programme further to alert world opinion to the danger of war in general and of nuclear war in particular. In keeping with its central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament, the United Nations, in particular its Centre for Disarmament, should intensify and co-ordinate its programme of publications, audio-visual materials, co-operation with non-governmental organizations and relations with the media. Among its activities, the United Nations should also, in the course of the Second Disarmament Decade, sponsor seminars in the different regions of the world at which issues relating to world disarmament, in general, and to the particular region, especially, will be extensively discussed.

G. Studies

21. As part of the process of facilitating the consideration of issues in the field of disarmament, studies on specific questions should be undertaken on the decision of the General Assembly, when necessary for preparing the ground for negotiations or reaching agreement. Also, studies pursued under the auspices of the United Nations, in particular by the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research established by Assembly resolution 34/83 M of 11 December 1979 within the framework of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, could bring a useful contribution to the knowledge and exploration of disarmament problems, especially in the long term.

H. Implementation, review and appraisal

22. In the accomplishment of the activities earmarked for the Second Disarmament Decade, all Governments, particularly the most advanced military Powers, should make an effective contribution. The United Nations should continue to play a central role. The Committee on Disarmament should fully discharge its responsibility as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating body. The General Assembly should, at its annual sessions and, in particular, at its second special session devoted to disarmament to be held in 1982, make an effective contribution to the pursuit of the goals of disarmament.

23. It is pertinent also to recall that paragraphs 121 and 122 of the Final Document stated:

(a) That bilateral and regional disarmament negotiations may also play an important role and could facilitate the negotiation of multilateral agreements in the field of disarmament;

(b) That at the earliest appropriate time, a world disarmament conference should be convened with universal participation and with adequate preparation.

24. In order to ensure a co-ordinated approach and to consider the implementation of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, this question should be included in the agenda of the second special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, envisaged for 1982.

25. In addition, the General Assembly will undertake at its fortieth session, in 1985, a review and appraisal, through the Disarmament Commission, of progress in the implementation of the measures identified in the present Declaration.

Reaffirming the validity of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and its conviction that disarmament remains one of the essential objectives of the United Nations,

Expressing its concern over the continuation of the arms race, which aggravates international peace and security and also diverts vast resources urgently needed for economic and social development,

Resolution 35/151, as recommended by First Committee, A/35/694, adopted without vote by Assembly on 12 December 1980, meeting 94.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2833(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, 2930(XXVII) of 29 November 1972, 3183(XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 3260(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3469(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/190 of 21 December 1976, 32/89 of 12 December 1977, 33/69 of 14 December 1978 and 34/81 of 11 December 1979,

Reiterating its conviction that all peoples of the world have a vital interest in the success of disarmament negotiations and that all States should be in a position to contribute to the adoption of measures for the achievement of this goal,

Stressing anew its conviction that a world disarmament conference, adequately prepared and convened at an appropriate time, could provide the realization of such an aim and that the co-operation of all nuclear-weapon Powers would considerably facilitate its attainment,

Taking note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference,

Recalling that, in paragraph 122 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it decided that, at the earliest appropriate time, a world disarmament conference should be convened with universal participation and with adequate preparation,

Recalling that, in its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980 on the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, the General Assembly considered it pertinent also to recall that in paragraph 122 of the Final Document it had stated that at the earliest appropriate time a world disarmament conference should be convened with universal participation and with adequate preparation,

1. Notes with satisfaction that in its report to the General Assembly the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference stated, inter alia, the following:

"Having regard for the important requirements of a world disarmament conference to be convened at the earliest appropriate time, with universal participation and with adequate preparation the General Assembly may wish to decide that, after its second special session devoted to disarmament, a world disarmament conference would take place as soon as the necessary consensus on its convening has been reached";

2. Renews the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee;

3. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to maintain close contact with the representatives of the States possessing nuclear weapons in order to remain currently informed of their attitudes, as well as with all other States, and to consider any possible relevant proposals and observations which might be made to the Committee, especially having in mind paragraph 122 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

4. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to submit a report to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session the item entitled 'World Disarmament Conference.'

Decision 35/432, by which the General Assembly took note of the statement by the Rapporteur of the First Committee informing it that the Committee had submitted no report on this item, as orally proposed by Assembly President, adopted without vote by Assembly on 12 December 1980, meeting 94.

General and complete disarmament

General and complete disarmament under effective international control continued to be recognized as the ultimate, ideal goal of the United Nations, the objective recognized in numerous resolutions as well as in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,<sup>56</sup> held in 1978 and devoted to disarmament. The agenda item on general and complete disarmament continued to provide a framework for the discussion of a variety of new initiatives as well as established concepts.

Under this item, the General Assembly adopted 11 resolutions in 1980. Five of them pertained to studies on disarmament: those completed during the year (on regional disarmament and on nuclear weapons-resolutions 35/156 D and F; see pp. 111 and 110); those in progress (on confidence-building measures and on the relationship between disarmament and international security-resolutions 35/156 B and E; see below and p. 112); or that to be undertaken (on the conventional arms race-resolution 35/156 A; see p. 110).

Four of the resolutions contained requests to the Committee on Disarmament to begin or continue work on specific subjects: an international agreement on the non-stationing of nuclear weapons where there currently were none (resolution 35/156 C-see p. 49), a treaty prohibiting radiological weapons (resolution 35/156 G-see p. 74), verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material (resolution 35/156 H-see p. 43) and a review of the Committee's membership (resolution 35/156 I-see p. 29).

By resolution 35/156 J (see p. 92), the Assembly recommended that consideration be given to developing methods to apply effectively the system of international security provided for in the Charter of the United Nations, and, by resolution 35/156 K (see p. 50), it urged ratification of the bilateral agreement known as SALT II, which had resulted from strategic arms limitation talks.

(Confidence-building measures are discussed in this subchapter; for page references to texts of the other resolutions mentioned above, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

General and complete disarmament was also the heading under which a number of communications were transmitted, including documents of conferences held outside the United Nations.

On 27 October, the German Democratic Republic transmitted the texts of the resolutions adopted by the Inter-Parliamentary Conference held at Berlin from 14 to 25 September: two of these dealt with strengthening détente and preserving the Indian Ocean and Gulf region as zones of peace. In a letter of 23 September to the Secretary-General, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the USSR conveyed a Memorandum of the Soviet Union entitled "Peace, disarmament and international security guarantees." It recalled numerous proposals put forward by the USSR and other socialist countries towards halting the arms race, for disarmament, and to strengthen legal guarantees of international security.

In the debates in both the plenary Assembly and the First Committee, general concern was expressed about the dangerous continuation of the arms race; emphasis was placed on the urgent requirement that it be halted and measures of genuine disarmament implemented before it was too late. Virtually all speakers commented on a general deterioration in international relations.

Algeria noted that in earlier years general and complete disarmament had been the subject of specific negotiation but, since then, the world had been led more and more towards partial negotiations for limited measures to control armaments. Barbados, calling for implementation of strategies for general and complete disarmament, observed that human needs were denied to 800 million poor people in the third world while developed countries frittered away resources on the build-up of arms.

Some States emphasized the need for confidence-building, especially in the context of the 1975 Helsinki Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe which commenced its 1980 review session at Madrid, Spain, on 11 November, while the General Assembly was in session. Confidence-building measures, as the Federal Republic of Germany defined them, were measures to reduce mistrust and fear among nations and to diminish the danger of armed conflicts resulting from misunderstanding or misinterpretations of military activities, in the belief that openness, reliability and predictability in relations among States would contribute to the maintenance and strengthening of international peace and security. The Federal Republic of Germany supported a proposal by France for a conference on disarmament in Europe to continue the necessary process of confidence-building. The United Kingdom said it hoped the Madrid meeting would be able to agree on a mandate for such a follow-up conference.

Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic observed that the socialist countries of Eastern Europe considered it important that a decision be reached in Madrid to convene a conference on military detente and disarmament in Europe, concentrating first on confidence-building measures and subsequently on the co-ordination of measures to reduce military confrontation in Europe. A comprehensive approach, in the Byelorussian SSR's view, in which material confidence-building measures were harnessed with political and legal contractual steps to reduce the danger of war and strengthen security guarantees, was the only reliable path towards international peace and security.

Canada, Cyprus, Greece, Japan, Pakistan and Peru were among the States that referred to the importance of confidence-building measures as a vital component of the process of disarmament negotiations. Without mutual trust and confidence, Portugal and Singapore observed, no progress in arms control and disarmament was possible.

Three replies, additional to 30 transmitted to the Assembly in 1979, were received during the year in response to Assembly invitations for Government views and experiences on confidence-building measures.<sup>57</sup> Bulgaria and Czechoslovakia supported measures formulated in the Final Act of the 1975 Helsinki Conference, which included prior notification of major military manoeuvres, limitation of their scope, and observer participation. Peru, the third respondent, discussed matters to be included or taken into account in a study of such measures currently being undertaken by a group of experts.

Some States stressed the importance of verification as one such measure, convinced that arms limitation and disarmament agreements based on an ability to verify effectively and adequately the implementation of agreements would increase confidence. This was among the provisions included in a draft resolution submitted to the First Committee by Australia, Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Italy, Japan and Spain. By this draft, the Assembly would have requested the Committee on Disarmament to undertake as soon as possible consideration of all aspects of verification with a view to determining effective verification methods and procedures acceptable to all parties concerned that were adequate and appropriate for the arms limitation and disarmament measures involved, taking into account their purposes, scope and nature.

Mexico submitted a number of amendments, among them the addition of a provision requesting that the Committee consider procedures for verification of the 1925 Geneva Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare. Another amendment would have added a request that the Committee, when negotiating specific disarmament measures to ensure the security of States at progressively lower levels of armaments, endeavour to consider at the same time such effective verification measures relating to those disarmament measures as were acceptable to all parties, in accordance with the Final Document of the 1978 special session.<sup>58</sup> Mexico explained that its amendments were intended to bring the resolution in line with the wording of the Final Document and with the approved work programme of the Committee on Disarmament, as well as to fill a gap left in the Geneva Protocol, which contained no verification procedures.

In view of the Mexican amendments, which Canada said would change the general, procedural resolution into a substantive one dealing with a specific issue, and because there was insufficient time for consultations, Canada withdrew the draft on the sponsors' behalf before it was formally introduced.

The question of verification, in the view of Belgium, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Philippines and the United Kingdom, was a central issue of any meaningful arms control agreement. Belgium and the Federal Republic noted its importance for generating confidence. The United Kingdom believed that arms control agreements without adequate verification provisions could be counter-productive—a source of uncertainty and therefore a possible source of tension.

India, while acknowledging the importance of verification procedures, cautioned that it was important to guard against the issue becoming a pretext for postponing the conclusion of agreements. Without underestimating the importance of verification, Romania felt that establishing a system of verification and solving technical problems should not be regarded as objectives in themselves, but ways to achieve the objective;

Study on confidence-building measures

The Group of Governmental Experts on Confidence-building Measures held two sessions in 1980, from 8 to 11 April at Geneva and from 29 July to 1 August in New York. The 14-member Group discussed the scope and contents of the study it was carrying out pursuant to a 1979 Assembly resolution,<sup>59</sup> and the programme and methodology of its work. It agreed on a provisional outline, to contain substantive chapters covering general considerations, the concept of confidence-building measures, their evolution, principles, regional, interregional and global approaches and methods of implementation, types of measures, the role of the United Nations, and conclusions and recommendations. The outline constituted the main component of the Group's 1980 progress report, submitted to the Assembly by the Secretary-General.

By resolution 35/156 B, the Assembly took note of the report with satisfaction and requested the Secretary-General to continue the work and submit the full study at the 1981 session.

The text had 32 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below); it was approved by the First Committee without vote on 20 November and similarly adopted by the Assembly on 12 December.

Introducing the resolution, the Federal Republic of Germany said there was general agreement in the Group that regional conditions demanded a flexible approach; where in one region military measures were paramount, in other regions, where the danger of armed conflict was less pronounced, other confidence-building measures might be of equal importance. Canada and Zaire noted also that military confidence was not the only kind; political, economic and social confidence were needed in some parts of the world even more, although Canada noted that experience to date had been almost exclusively in the military field and the study's outline strongly pointed in that direction.

Studies, information and training

Three disarmament studies were completed during 1980 and the General Assembly adopted resolutions asking that they be widely distributed: a study on a comprehensive nuclear-test ban (resolution 35/145 B), a study on regional disarmament (resolution 35/156 D) and a comprehensive study on nuclear weapons (resolution 35/156 F). The Assembly approved in principle the undertaking of a study on the conventional arms race (resolution 35/156 A), and requested a study on organizing and financing a World Disarmament Campaign (resolution 35/152I). This last was one of four topics selected during the year by the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies as subjects for possible study, the others being zones of peace, verification, and a halt to production and delivery of nuclear weapons and materials.

The Assembly asked that a 1977 study on the economic and social consequences of the arms race be updated (resolution 35/141), extended the deadline for a study on the relationship between disarmament and international security (resolution 35/156 E), and received progress reports on two other ongoing studies: on confidence-building measures (resolution 35/156 B) and on Israeli nuclear armament (resolution 35/157).

In the field of education and training relating to disarmament, the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research was established in October, an event of which the Assembly took note in resolution 35/152 H. Also in October, the annual Disarmament Week was observed at the United Nations and in various countries. In December, the Assembly decided to continue its programme of fellowships on disarmament (resolution 35/152A), which completed its second year in 1980.

Details of these activities are given below.

United Nations studies on disarmament

Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies

The Secretary-General submitted a report to the General Assembly in November on the work of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies at its two 1980 sessions: its fourth, held from 30 April to 9 May; and its fifth, held from 2 to 15 October. The Board had examined detailed proposals from its members on topics for possible study, including the approaches to be taken and the manner in which the studies were to be carried out.

The Board had reported to the Secretary-General that, although it had not been able to make a unanimous recommendation on studies to be carried out, there was broad agreement that four studies from among those discussed should be undertaken. They dealt with: (1) the conduct and financing of a world-wide disarmament campaign; (2) the question of zones of peace and co-operation; (3) the verification problem; and (4) the cessation of the production of all types of nuclear weapons and means of delivery and of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes.

The Advisory Board had also discussed proposals for studies on the consequences of military uses of science and technology on free access for States to science and technology for peaceful purposes, further banning military and other hostile uses of environmental modification techniques, further measures to prevent an arms race on the sea-bed and in outer space, and the denuclearization of Africa. These proposals were to be further considered. A proposal for a study on military presence in the Indian Ocean was withdrawn on the understanding that it might be revived at a later date.

Studies on specific subjects

COMPREHENSIVE STUDY ON NUCLEAR WEAPONS

In September, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the comprehensive study on nuclear weapons which the Assembly had requested in 1978.<sup>60</sup> It had been prepared with the assistance of 12 experts who had held five sessions in New York and Geneva in 1979 and 1980, under the chairmanship of Anders I. Thunborg (Sweden).

Using published information, the study described the enormous arsenals of nuclear weapons possessed by the nuclear powers, the intense technological development taking place in war-head design, weapon and delivery systems and counter-measures, and the destructive power and after-effects of explosions of nuclear weapons of various sizes and yield. Also covered were the deterrence and other nuclear doctrines of the nuclear-weapon States, the impact of the spread of nuclear weapons on international relations and the efforts towards nuclear disarmament made in the United Nations and elsewhere.

The study concluded that nuclear weapons, of which there were currently an estimated 40,000 to 50,000, representing more than three tons of TNT for each person on earth, were the most serious threat to international security. In many cases, technology dictated policy rather than served it, and ways must be sought for controlling its contribution to the arms race. While in a nuclear war the nuclear-weapon States themselves might suffer the heaviest casualties and the most damage, all nations would feel massive effects, either directly, through radioactive fallout, or by a breakdown in the world's economy and food supply.

In the view of the experts, mutual deterrence through a balance of terror was an unsafe and a morally and politically unacceptable philosophy. The possibility of human or technical accident made it impossible to offer a blanket guarantee of the stability of the deterrence balance and no one should be permitted to issue calming declarations to this effect. It was inadmissible that the prospect of the annihilation of civilization was used to promote the security of some States. Moreover, a world system of nuclear-weapon and non-nuclear-weapon States carried within it the seed of nuclear-weapon proliferation.

Among the experts' suggestions was that the international community should be empowered, perhaps through the establishment of institutional machinery, to verify compliance with disarmament measures, and it must press for speedier and more substantive results of the strategic arms limitation talks. The creation of further nuclear-weapon-free zones should be encouraged. Other matters that required the attention of the world community were restraining and reversing the deployment of theatre nuclear forces in Europe, and stronger efforts to curb vertical proliferation (the further development and stockpiling of weapons) as well as horizontal proliferation (their further spread).

The United Nations should be used for all the purposes and stages of disarmament that were relevant—from negotiation to agreement, implementation, verification and ratification where necessary—and it should seek the more active involvement of its Members. In addition, the United Nations must become more active in involving non-governmental organizations and individuals in the disarmament effort; a strong public opinion could, in time, help to create the political will among all States to renounce the system of nuclear deterrence in favour of a different system accepted by all, based on the principles of international law and the Charter of the United Nations.

On 12 December, by resolution 35/156 F, the Assembly took note with satisfaction of the report as a highly significant statement on current nuclear arsenals and expressed the hope that all States would consider its conclusions carefully. It recommended that the Committee on Disarmament should take the report and its conclusions into account in its deliberations. It asked that the study be published in as many languages as practicable and recommended wide Government and organizational distribution.

The resolution was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 126 to 0, with 19 abstentions. The text was approved by the First Committee on 21 November by 116 votes to 0, with 20 abstentions. Its sponsors were Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Costa Rica, Ghana, India, Ireland, Mexico, Pakistan, Romania, Sweden, Yemen and Yugoslavia.

Explaining its abstention, the USSR doubted that the study would bring any nearer a practical solution of the question of nuclear disarmament. In their negotiations, States were unlikely to take the study's provisions, which were controversial, as a basis of their positions. This reaffirmed the USSR's view that independent studies should be carried out only where they were genuinely justified.

STUDY ON A COMPREHENSIVE NUCLEAR-TEST BAN

In May 1980, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly the study on the question of a comprehensive nuclear-test ban which the Assembly had requested in 1979.<sup>61</sup> The study, prepared by four consultant experts, had been submitted to the Committee on Disarmament in April (see p. 21). The Assembly on 12 December took note of the report with appreciation when it adopted resolution 35/145 B, concerning the prohibition of all nuclear test explosions for all time (see p. 36).

STUDY ON CONVENTIONAL WEAPONS

By resolution 35/156A of 12 December, the Assembly approved, in principle, the carrying out of a study on all aspects of the conventional arms race and on disarmament relating to conventional weapons and armed forces. It was to be undertaken by the Secretary-General with the assistance of a group of experts appointed by him on a balanced geographical basis. The Assembly agreed that the Disarmament Commission should work out in 1981 the general approach to the study, its structure and scope, and asked the Commission to convey its conclusions to the Secretary-General as the guidelines for the study. He was to submit a progress report on the study to the Assembly's 1982 special session devoted to disarmament, and a final report in 1983.

The resolution was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 101 to 14, with 27 abstentions. The text, sponsored by Denmark and the Philippines, was approved by the First Committee on 28 November by a recorded vote of 79 to 14, with 24 abstentions.

In introducing the text, which the sponsors subsequently revised, Denmark stated that the proposal was not intended to interfere with efforts to obtain progress in nuclear disarmament, nor to deprive countries of their rights to protect their own security and to self-defence. However, since more than 80 per cent of the $500 billion in total military expenditures was being spent on conventional weaponry, Denmark felt it was time to reassess thoroughly the general problem of the conventional aspects of the arms race. Support for the initiative was expressed by Italy, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Portugal, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Spain, the United Kingdom, the United States and Venezuela.

India said it could not subscribe to the concept of a conventional arms race in which all or a majority of countries were engaged; the major concern was the five or six States that had the largest and growing arsenals. Brazil and India noted that the text referred to support in the Disarmament Commission for recommending such a study, but neglected to mention that strong objections and reservations had been made. India said the text prejudged the Commission's decision. These States and others, such as Egypt and the USSR, doubted that the study was worth the necessary diversion of attention and resources from the priority issues of the Commission.

STUDY ON REGIONAL DISARMAMENT

The study of a Group of Governmental Experts on Regional Disarmament was submitted to the Assembly in 1980 by the Secretary-General pursuant to an Assembly request of 16 December 1978.<sup>62</sup> The nine experts, appointed by the Secretary-General, had met during two sessions in 1979 at Geneva, and in 1980 from 14 to 25 April in New York and from 28 July to 8 August at Geneva.

The report surveyed past and current regional disarmament efforts, e.g. treaties, conferences, and efforts to establish zones of peace and nuclear-weapon-free zones. It discussed the objectives and importance of a regional approach to disarmament and the concept of a "region," examining the link between regional disarmament measures and general and complete disarmament. It also discussed the basic conditions and guidelines governing the regional approach, considering the security requirements of States, generally accepted principles relating to disarmament efforts, and the link between regional and global measures. Finally, the report outlined conceivable disarmament measures that might lend themselves to a regional approach-measures States might take to promote disarmament in their regions. These included both disarmament measures and others, such as those aimed at relaxing international tension, building confidence, preventing the use of force and mobilizing public opinion, as well as disarmament studies.

The Group concluded that, given the political will, there was a vast and largely unexplored potential for progress in disarmament if the global approach was supplemented with determined efforts at the regional level. Progress in disarmament, both nuclear and conventional, and avoidance of a deterioration of global political and security conditions would greatly facilitate agreement on effective regional measures. Equally, progress in regional disarmament, the equitable solution of problems and disputes at the regional level and measures to build confidence among a region's States could promote disarmament and the relaxation of tension at the global level or in other regions.

Regional measures contributing to halting and reversing the nuclear arms race and to nuclear disarmament assumed particular importance given the threat posed by nuclear weapons, although conventional weapons should receive due emphasis.

The Group believed that a potentially useful approach would be for regional States to agree on long-term, overall disarmament objectives, in the framework of which specific, practical steps could be inserted, applicable to the region as a whole or to particular situations in subregions. There might be a need for strengthening or creating mechanisms, institutions or arrangements for development, discussion and negotiation. It was important that governmental and educational institutions and public opinion in general be encouraged to contribute to sustained efforts in the process.

United Nations bodies could provide valuable advice, assistance and guarantees and promote public opinion for the entire process. General Assembly resolutions could be of great value in promoting specific measures and securing the support of extraregional States.

By resolution 35/156 D, the Assembly commended the study and its conclusions to the attention of all States. It was to be issued as a sales publication for wide distribution as well as transmitted to the Committee on Disarmament and the Disarmament Commission. The Assembly invited all Member States to inform the Secretary-General of their views on the study and its conclusions for the Assembly's information at its 1981 regular session.

The text was adopted by the Assembly on 12 December, having been approved by the First Committee on 20 November, in both instances without vote. Its sponsors were Argentina, Belgium, Denmark, Egypt, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Indonesia, Italy, Mexico, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Pakistan, Poland, Qatar, Spain, Sweden and the United Kingdom.

India explained that its participation in the consensus was not to be interpreted as a change in its position on regional disarmament: such questions could not be divorced from the overall process of achieving general and complete disarmament on a global scale. Partial measures were of limited value and could distract from priority issues.

STUDY ON THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN DISARMAMENT AND INTERNATIONAL SECURITY

The Secretary-General reported to the Assembly at its 1980 session that he had received a letter dated 3 September from the Chairman of the Group of Experts on the Relationship between Disarmament and International Security requesting more time in which to complete the Group's work. The Group had not been able to complete the study with which it was charged in time for submission to the 1980 session, as the Assembly had requested in 1978.<sup>63</sup> It had accepted as the basis for its work a consolidated, 500-paragraph draft study prepared by the Secretariat; however, the vast area to be covered and a number of substantial conceptual differences had made it clear that more time would be required to find common ground on all aspects of the question.

The Group held sessions during the year in New York (28 April to 9 May and 8 to 19 December) and at Vienna (28 July to 8 August).

The Assembly, by resolution 35/156 E, took note of the Secretary-General's report and asked him to continue the study and to submit the final report in 1981.

The resolution, sponsored in the First Committee by Bangladesh, Cyprus, Denmark, Liberia, Peru, the Philippines, Qatar and Zaire, was approved by that Committee on 24 November and adopted by the Assembly on 12 December in both bodies without a vote. (See also p. 92.)

STUDY ON CONFIDENCE-BUILDING MEASURES

The Group of Governmental Experts on Confidence-building Measures, at two sessions during the year, approved a provisional outline for the study it was preparing on the subject. By resolution 35/156 B of 12 December, the Assembly took note of a progress report the Secretary-General had submitted on the Group's work, and asked him to continue the work and submit the study in 1981. (For details, see p. 108.)

STUDY ON ISRAELI NUCLEAR ARMAMENT

The five-member Group of Experts to Prepare a Study on Israeli Nuclear Armament, meeting in New York in July/August 1980, discussed the principal elements to be incorporated in its study.

In adopting resolution 35/157 on 12 December, the Assembly took note of a report of the Secretary-General on the Group's progress and asked him to pursue his efforts and to submit his report to the Assembly in 1981. (For details, see p. 43.)

STUDY ON A WORLD DISARMAMENT CAMPAIGN

Having examined the proposal for a study on the conduct and financing of a world-wide disarmament campaign, contained in the report on the work of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies (see subsection above), the Assembly on 12 December requested the Secretary-General to carry out, with the assistance of a small group of experts, a study on the organization and financing of a World Disarmament Campaign under United Nations auspices. As far as circumstances permitted, the group's members were to be drawn from the Secretariat.

The Assembly took this action in adopting resolution 35/152 I by a recorded vote of 128 to 0, with 17 abstentions. The First Committee approved the text on 25 November by a recorded vote of 125 to 0, with 12 abstentions, following which the United States said it had abstained because it believed the study was neither necessary nor even desirable.

In introducing the text, Mexico stated on behalf of the sponsors—the Congo, India, Mexico, the Niger, Nigeria, Romania, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Venezuela and Yugoslavia—that, in order to carry out a campaign of a permanent character as an effective tool for mobilizing world public opinion on behalf of disarmament, it would be necessary to define some basic rules to ensure co-ordination and to establish an acceptable method for financing such a campaign.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL CONSEQUENCES OF THE ARMS RACE

A request that the Secretary-General update a 1977 study on the Economic and Social Consequences of the Arms Race and of Military Expenditures<sup>64</sup> was the subject of an Assembly resolution of 12 December 1980. To assist him, he was to appoint a group of consultant experts, and Governments, non-governmental and international organizations and institutions were invited to co-operate. The Assembly was to consider this subject again in 1985.

Resolution 35/141, containing this request, was adopted without vote; it had been similarly approved by the First Committee on 25 November, where the text was sponsored by 25 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

In introducing the proposal, Romania stated that the report in question, first drafted in 1971

and updated in 1977, had provided useful information and ideas on the most complex phenomenon of armaments and had assisted Governments in the process of debating and negotiating disarmament questions. Another updating of the report was justified because the arms race had undergone important qualitative and quantitative developments since 1977.

Despite their participation in the consensus, several States expressed reservations. Australia, Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States expressed concern at the high cost of the project. The Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States felt there might be some duplication of other ongoing exercises, such as the studies on disarmament and development and on the reduction of military budgets.

Information and training

Programme of fellowships on disarmament

The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly in October 1980 on the implementation of the programme of fellowships on disarmament, initiated in 1978.<sup>65</sup> Twenty fellowships were awarded in 1980, mostly to foreign service officials, to nationals of Bolivia, Burma, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Hungary, Malawi, Morocco, Nepal, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Peru, the Philippines, Thailand, Turkey, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zaire.

The programme for the year included lectures and seminars on disarmament issues that were the subject of deliberations and negotiations. It also included attending meetings of disarmament bodies, visiting the Federal Republic of Germany and Sweden to study their policies and activities in arms control and disarmament, and writing papers and reports. The first part of the programme was at Geneva from 30 June to 22 August, followed by a one-week course at the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna from 25 to 29 August. Thereafter, the fellows continued their training at United Nations Headquarters in New York from 11 September to 28 November.

The Secretary-General concluded that the experiences of the programme's second year reaffirmed the conclusions drawn in 1979; the high quality of the candidates evidenced the importance attached to the programme and it was fulfilling its aim.

By resolution 35/152 A, adopted without a vote on 12 December 1980, the Assembly decided to continue the programme, asked the Secretary-General to make arrangements for 1981, and commended him for the diligence with which it had been conducted thus far.

On 20 November, the text, with 24 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), was approved by the First Committee, also without a vote.

United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research

The United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research was established at Geneva with effect from 1 October 1980, within the framework of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR). This was an interim arrangement until the 1982 special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, at which time the matter was to be reviewed.

This action, taken in consequence of deliberations and consultations during the year, was reported to the Assembly by the Secretary-General in November. Following discussions at a special meeting on 19 and 20 February, UNITAR'S Board of Trustees had, on 8 April, decided to establish the Institute and set up an advisory council. Subsequently, the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies had discussed the Institute, giving particular attention to its mandate and to the composition of its advisory council, currently the subject of consultations.

The Secretary-General observed that the Institute was given a simple, pragmatic mandate to carry out research to assist negotiations on disarmament and arms limitation, stimulate initiatives for new negotiations and provide a general insight into the problems involved.

The Assembly, by resolution 35/152 H, approved the Secretary-General's report and welcomed the establishment of the Institute.

Introduced by France on behalf of 39 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), the text was approved by the First Committee on 25 November and by the Assembly on 12 December - in both cases without a vote.

World Disarmament Campaign

By resolution 35/152 I of 12 December, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to carry out, with the assistance of a small group of experts, a study on the organization and financing of a World Disarmament Campaign under United Nations auspices (for details, see p. 112).

Disarmament Week (24-30 October)

The Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly's regular 1980 session information received from 21 States and two specialized agencies (the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization) on their activities undertaken to promote the objectives of Disarmament Week. Beginning 24 October, this was a week devoted to fostering the objectives of disarmament. Barbados, Belgium, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Mongolia, the Netherlands, Peru, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Suriname, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Kingdom- and the United States had responded to the Assembly's 1979 invitation to Governments for information.<sup>66</sup> They listed national programmes and activities such as radio and television broadcasts, press articles and statements, pamphlets, declarations, posters, letters, newsletters and other publications, exhibits, conferences, seminars, and public meetings, lectures and discussion groups. Some, such as

Egypt, the German Democratic Republic and Poland, mentioned the use they had made of elements of the model programme for Disarmament Week set forth by the Secretary-General in 1979.<sup>67</sup> Disarmament Week was observed at the United Nations at a special meeting of the First Committee on 24 October-United Nations Day-where statements were made on behalf of the Secretary-General and the President of the General Assembly and by representatives of the various regional groups. In addition, the Commonwealth Secretary-General addressed a special meeting of non-governmental organizations and delegations. The dangers of the arms race, its economic and social consequences and the importance of mobilizing public opinion in support of disarmament were emphasized.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it was stated that nuclear weapons posed the greatest danger to mankind and to the survival of civilization,

Recalling also its resolution 33/91 D of 16 December 1978, in which the Secretary-General was requested to carry out a comprehensive study on nuclear weapons,

Noting that the report of the Secretary-General, to which is annexed the report of the Group of Experts on a Comprehensive Study on Nuclear Weapons, has been completed and is available.

Considering that in its report the Disarmament Commission recommended that, in the course of the decade of the 1980s, governmental and non-governmental information organs of Member States and those of the United Nations and the specialized agencies, as well as non-governmental organizations, should, as appropriate, undertake further programmes of information relating to the danger of the armaments race as well as to disarmament efforts and negotiations.

Convinced that the wide dissemination of the report would contribute to a better understanding of the threat presented by nuclear weapons as well as of the need for progress in the various negotiations aiming at the prevention of both horizontal and vertical proliferation of nuclear weapons and the achievement of nuclear disarmament,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General as a highly significant statement on present nuclear arsenals, the trends in their technological development and the effects of their use, as well as on the various doctrines of deterrence and the security implications of the continued quantitative and qualitative development of nuclear-weapon systems and also as a reminder of the need for efforts to increase the political will necessary for effective disarmament measures, inter alia, through the promotion of public awareness of the need for disarmament;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and to the experts who assisted him for the prompt and effective manner in which the report was prepared;

3. Notes the conclusions of the report and expresses the hope that all States will consider them carefully;

4. Recommends that the Committee on Disarmament should take the report and its conclusions into account in its efforts towards general and complete disarmament under effective international control, in particular in the field of nuclear disarmament;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to arrange for the reproduction of the entire report as a United Nations publication and, making full use of all the facilities of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, to publicize the report in as many languages as is considered desirable and practicable;

6. Recommends to all Governments the wide distribution of the report and its publication in their respective languages, as appropriate, so as to acquaint public opinion with its contents;

7. Invites regional Intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency, and national and international non-governmental organizations, to use all the facilities available to them to make the report widely known.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the continuing arms race, including the conventional arms race, and the alarming increase in expenditures on armaments,

Recognizing the right of all States to protect their security, Reaffirming the relevant paragraphs of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session of the Assembly devoted to disarmament, regarding priorities in the disarmament negotiations,

Recalling the recommendations in paragraphs 81 and 85 of the Final Document,

Noting that at the session of the Disarmament Commission held from 12 May to 6 June 1980, there was wide support in favour of recommending to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session that it should approve, in principle, a proposal for a study on all aspects of the conventional arms race and on disarmament relating to conventional weapons and armed forces, to be undertaken after the general approach to the study, its structure and scope had been fully discussed and agreed upon,

1. Approves, in principle, the carrying out of a study on all aspects of the conventional arms race and on disarmament relating to conventional weapons and armed forces, to be undertaken by the Secretary-General with the assistance of a group of qualified experts appointed by him on a balanced geographical basis;

2. Agrees that the Disarmament Commission, at its forthcoming substantive session, should work out the general approach to the study, its structure and scope;

3. Requests the Disarmament Commission to convey to the Secretary-General the conclusions of its deliberations, which should constitute the guidelines for the study;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit a progress report on the study on all aspects of the conventional arms race and on disarmament relating to conventional weapons and armed forces to the General Assembly at its second special session devoted to disarmament, and a final report at its thirty-eighth session.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 32/87 C of 12 December 1977, in which it requested the Secretary-General to initiate a study on the interrelationship between disarmament and international security,

Recalling also its resolutions S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, 33/91 I of 16 December 1978 and 34/83 A of 11 December 1979,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General to which is annexed a letter from the Chairman of the Group of Experts on the Relationship between Disarmament and International Security, Informing the Secretary-General that, owing to the vast area to be covered and the complexity and sensitivity of the issues involved, the Group would need more time to complete its work;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the study and to submit the final report to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session.

<sup>a</sup>Subsequently advised the Secretariat that it had intended to vote in favour.

The General Assembly,

Recalling that at its tenth special session it stressed the importance of mobilizing public opinion on behalf of disarmament,

Taking into account that, in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it recommended to that end the adoption of several concrete measures intended to intensify and broaden the dissemination of information about the arms race and the efforts to halt and reverse it as well as to promote programmes of study and education concerning disarmament,

Bearing in mind that for the realization of a world disarmament campaign of a permanent character it will be necessary, on the one hand, to define some basic rules which, without detriment to the necessary flexibility, will ensure a minimum of co-ordination and, on the other hand, to establish a practical and generally acceptable system for the financing of such a campaign,

Having examined the relevant section of the report of the Secretary-General on the fourth and fifth sessions of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to carry out, with the assistance of a small group of experts, for whose composition, in so far as circumstances permit, preference should be given to members of the Secretariat, a study on the organization and financing of a World Disarmament Campaign under the auspices of the United Nations;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session an item entitled "World Disarmament Campaign."

Resolution 35/141, as recommended by First Committee, A/35/684, adopted without vote by Assembly on 12 December 1980, meeting 94.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Economic and social consequences of the armaments race and its extremely harmful effects on world peace and security."

Deeply concerned that the arms race, particularly in nuclear armaments and military expenditures, has continued to increase at an alarming speed, absorbing enormous material and human resources, which represents a heavy burden for the peoples of all countries and constitutes a grave danger for world peace and security.

Convinced that, disarmament being a matter of universal concern, there is a pressing need for all Governments and peoples to be informed about and be aware of the problems created by the armaments race and of the need for disarmament, and that the United Nations has a central role in this connexion,

Noting that, since the preparation of the updated report of the Secretary-General entitled Economic and Social Consequences of the Arms Race and of Military Expenditures, new developments have taken place in the fields covered by the report that are of particular relevance in the present economic and political conditions of the world, Recalling its decision, as reaffirmed in its resolution 32/75 of 12 December 1977, to keep the item under constant review,

Recalling further paragraph 93 (c) of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, which provides that the Secretary-General shall periodically submit reports to the Assembly on the economic and social consequences of the armaments race and its extremely harmful effects on world peace and security,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to bring up to date, with the assistance of qualified consultant experts<sup>a</sup> appointed by him, the report entitled Economic and Social Consequences of the Arms Race and of Military Expenditures, covering the basic topics of that report, and to transmit it to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session;

2. Invites all Governments to extend to the Secretary-General their support and full co-operation to ensure that the study will be carried out in the most effective way;

3. Calls upon non-governmental organizations and international institutions and organizations to co-operate with the Secretary-General in the preparation of the report;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Economic and social consequences of the armaments race and its extremely harmful effects on world peace and security."

Expressing its satisfaction that Governments, particularly those of developing countries, have continued to manifest serious interest in the programme,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament for 1980,

1. Decides to continue the United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament;

DISARMAMENT WEEK (24-30 OCTOBER)

General Assembly- 35th session
First Committee, meeting 13.

A/35/147. Report of Secretary-General.

Chapter II

Peaceful uses of outer space

Questions relating to the legal as well as the scientific and technical aspects of international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space continued to be discussed during 1980 in the General Assembly, in its Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (Outer Space Committee) and in that Committee's two sub-committees.

With the conclusion in 1979 of the Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, the Legal Sub-Committee returned to the long-standing items on its agenda, continuing its efforts to reach agreement on the legal implications of remote sensing from space of the earth's environment and resources, and on principles to govern the use of artificial satellites for direct television broadcasts receivable in homes and institutions. Although in the discussion of the second of those two items special attention was given to the principle of consultation and agreement between States, basic differences remained as in earlier sessions and no substantial progress was made. Extensive discussion continued on the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and questions relating to the geostationary orbit.

The Sub-Committee was unable to reach agreement on the appropriateness of supplementing international law with provisions relating to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space. The General Assembly subsequently decided to include in the Sub-Committee's 1981 agenda an item under which to consider the possibility of supplementing the norms of international law in this area.

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee gave priority to remote sensing, the United Nations programme on space applications and co-ordination of space activities within the United Nations system, and the use of nuclear power sources in outer space. It also considered questions concerning space transportation systems and their implications for future activities in space, and the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit. Its Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space reaffirmed at its 1980 session its belief that nuclear power sources could be used safely in space, provided that all necessary safety requirements were met.

The Sub-Committee also met in its capacity as Advisory Committee to the Preparatory Committee for the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE-82) and recommended acceptance of Austria's invitation to host the Conference at Vienna in August 1982.

The Outer Space Committee held its twenty-third session at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 23 June to 3 July 1980, preceded by sessions of its two sub-committees. Its report was examined by the General Assembly, mainly in the Special Political Committee.

Based on the Outer Space Committee's recommendations, the General Assembly on 3 November adopted three resolutions on outer space affairs. By resolution 35/14, it endorsed the Committee's report and future work programme; by resolution 35/15, it adopted preparatory arrangements for UNISPACE-82; and by resolution 35/16, it enlarged the Committee.

United Nations Member States continued to supply information in 1980 on the launching of objects into orbit or farther into space.

Details of these actions are set out in the following subchapters.

Legal aspects of the peaceful uses of outer space

During 1980, the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and its Legal Sub-Committee continued work on the following priority items: elaboration of principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting; and legal implications of remote sensing of the earth by satellites from space, with the aim of formulating draft principles. Discussion also continued on two other items: definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities, bearing in mind questions relating to the geostationary orbit; and review of existing international law relevant to outer space activities with a view to determining the appropriateness of supplementing such law with provisions relating to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space.

The Committee was informed that requests to participate in its work had been received from Cuba (by a letter of 23 June to the Committee Chairman) and Democratic Kampuchea (by a letter of 20 June to the Secretary-General). The Committee decided that any Member State of the United Nations which desired to attend its twenty-third session might do so.

The Legal Sub-Committee held its nineteenth session at Geneva from 10 March to 3 April. At its June/July session, the Outer Space Committee considered the report of the Sub-Committee and recommended that it continue its work. However, no decision was reached on the Sub-Committee's future consideration of the item on supplemental legal texts on the use of nuclear power sources in outer space.

With the adoption of resolution 35/14 without vote on 3 November, the General Assembly endorsed the report of the Outer Space Committee and adopted several provisions setting priorities for the work of the Legal Sub-Committee in 1981. The Assembly asked the Sub-Committee to continue giving priority to detailed consideration of its two current priority items, and continue to consider definition/delimitation matters. It decided to include in the Sub-Committee's next agenda an item entitled "Consideration of the possibility of supplementing the norms of international law relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space."

By the same resolution, the Assembly invited States which had not become parties to the international treaties governing the uses of outer space to consider doing so. It asked the Outer Space Committee to consider and submit a report in 1981 on new projects in outer space activities, containing its views on which subjects should be studied in the future.

Other provisions of this resolution dealt with scientific and technical aspects of the peaceful uses of outer space, preparations for the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, training and co-operation (see following subchapter).

The text of resolution 35/14, introduced by Austria, was proposed by 40 Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) following discussion of the Outer Space Committee's report in the Special Political Committee, where the draft of the resolution was approved without objection on 29 October.

Direct-broadcast satellites

On 10 March 1980, the Legal Sub-Committee re-established its Working Group on direct television broadcast satellites. The Group, which met between 11 March and 2 April, held 14 meetings and a number of informal consultations.

In addition to the texts of draft principles governing the use of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting as they appeared at the conclusion of the 1979 session, including a text submitted by Canada and Sweden,<sup>1</sup> the Group considered working papers submitted to it and the Sub-Committee in 1979, a 1977 paper by the United Kingdom concerning the World Administrative Radio Conference,<sup>2</sup> and 1980 papers by the United Kingdom, on consultation and arrangements between States, and by Colombia, on agreements between States.

Since the feeling that the Canadian/Swedish set of principles might serve as an acceptable basic text was not shared by all, the Working Group began discussion of the draft principles as they appeared at the conclusion of the Group's discussions in 1979.

Some members felt that a preambular recognition that direct television broadcasting by satellites based on respect for the sovereign rights of States and non-interference in their internal affairs should be contained in the text of the principles. In the view of others, however, broadcasting should be based on recognition of the right to freedom of expression, including the right to seek, receive and impart information and ideas, regardless of frontiers.

The Group felt that the following provision could be included: "Special consideration should be given to the needs of developing countries in the use of direct television broadcasting satellites for the purpose of accelerating their national development."

No agreement was reached on the principles of the duty and right to consult, peaceful settlement of disputes, copyright and neighbouring rights, and notification to the United Nations, or on whether the principles on programme content and unlawful/inadmissible broadcasts should be retained. Some members considered that the principle on duty and right to consult should be reconsidered in order to avoid inconsistencies and redundancies with the principle on consultation and agreements between States.

As to the principle of the applicability of international law, some members stated that direct television broadcasting by satellite constituted a use of outer space which was subject to a special regime. Others held that international law, particularly International Telecommunication Union (ITU) instruments, would govern such broadcasting.

Members expressing support for the Canadian/Swedish text on State responsibility recalled that the text had already been agreed on in a preliminary manner by the Working Group at previous sessions; it indicated that States should bear international responsibility for activities in this field carried out by them or under their jurisdiction; when carried out by an intergovernmental organization, responsibility should be borne by the organization and the participating State. Others considered the principle unnecessary in view of article VI of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies (Outer Space Treaty)<sup>3</sup> as well as of ITU regulations. According to some speakers, the text as currently formulated would make a State responsible for certain activities of private entities—a responsibility going beyond existing international law and contrary to national legislation in a number of countries. Some agreed with a Netherlands proposal that a State's international responsibility be qualified by the phrase "in accordance with the applicable rules of international law."

Others expressed the view that the principle on State responsibility should go beyond the scope of article VI of the Outer Space Treaty, considering that States should, in certain circumstances, be subject to international obligations. The view was also expressed that activities permissible in one State could be hazardous in another; such situations required solution at the international level. Inclusion of a reference to international law in general was suggested as a compromise solution.

On the principle of consultation and agreements between States, some members viewed the Canadian/Swedish text as an acceptable compromise formulation balancing the interests of broadcasting and receiving States. Thus, by the principle's first paragraph, a direct television broadcasting service directed at a foreign State, which was to be set up only if not inconsistent with ITU instruments, was to be based on agreements between the broadcasting and receiving States to facilitate information dissemination. By the second and third paragraphs, a State proposing to establish such a service would notify and promptly enter into negotiations with that State if requested, although agreements would not be required in case of signal overspill within ITU-established limits.

Some States observed that any direct broadcasting service would be legally impossible except under ITU regulations. The United Kingdom proposed in a working paper the reformulation of the first paragraph to indicate that such a service was to be established only in accordance with relevant ITU instruments.

It was also suggested that ITU regulations might not cover all aspects and that what might seem technically impossible currently might not be impossible in the future.

Some members were of the opinion that the first paragraph would derogate from the principle of free flow of information—a fundamental human right embodied in numerous constitutions, national legislation and international instruments. The view was also expressed that the principle on consultation and agreements between States was not an infringement of and was compatible with the free flow of information.

A Colombian proposal would reformulate the second paragraph of the principle to state that any State intending to make direct television broadcasts by satellite which might be received in all or part of a foreign State was to conclude the appropriate arrangements and/or agreements with the receiving State.

On 2 April, the Legal Sub-Committee took note with appreciation of the report and work of the Working Group. The texts of the principles remained as they were at the end of the 1979 session.

The Outer Space Committee at its June/July session took note of the work of the Legal Sub-Committee: a principle-by-principle reading of the draft principles had been conducted but agreement on further formulations could not be reached. The Committee recommended that the Sub-Committee continue, as a matter of priority, its efforts to complete the principles.

In adopting resolution 35/14 (see above), the Assembly noted the Sub-Committee's continued efforts to elaborate the draft principles and endorsed the Outer Space Committee's recommendation for continued priority consideration.

During discussion of international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space in the Assembly's Special Political Committee, Brazil, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Ecuador, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Iraq, Mexico, Mongolia, the Niger, Pakistan, the Philippines, Romania, Tunisia, Turkey, the USSR, Uruguay and Venezuela stated that the principles of sovereignty and noninterference in the internal affairs of States must be taken as the basis for regulations in the field of direct television broadcasting by satellites. In the view of most of those States, the idea of prior consultations and agreements offered the best solution by preserving national identity and cultural heritage and promoting international co-operation and understanding.

Argentina, Kenya, the Upper Volta and Yugoslavia, while emphasizing the importance of the freedom of information, believed that this freedom should be regulated and not used to undermine the sovereignty of States or to spread political propaganda.

Some Members, including Italy, the Netherlands and the United States, were of the view that the free flow of information should constitute the basis of direct television broadcasting by satellite. The Netherlands and the United States stated that this principle was embodied in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights<sup>4</sup> and had been reaffirmed in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights<sup>5</sup> and recent pronouncements of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and other bodies.

Bulgaria and Yugoslavia linked direct television broadcasting satellites with the foundation of the new world information and communication order. Greece, while endorsing the importance of respect for State sovereignty in the case of satellite broadcasting and supporting the principle of free flow of information, suggested that, in order to prevent abuses of the freedom of expression, the Legal Sub-Committee should examine the possibility of defining the type of information to be broadcast.

Chile was of the view that, in the establishment of a direct television broadcasting satellite service, the legitimate rights of the receiving State, the interests of the broadcasting State and the fundamental principles of freedom of information ought to be reconciled. Canada, Nigeria and Sweden expressed the hope that the Canadian/Swedish text might open the way for a compromise solution on satellite use. France considered that attention must be paid to the concern of the receiving States, although it hoped for a flexible regime for such broadcasting in the elaboration of which existing ITU provisions would be of help.

China believed that the question of direct television broadcasting affected the interests of every country and urgently required a just solution.

Remote sensing

The Legal Sub-Committee on 10 March 1980 re-established its Working Group to consider further the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space. The Working Group, which met between 19 March and 2 April, held 12 meetings and a number of informal consultations. The Group had before it the texts of the draft principles as they had appeared at the conclusion of the 1979 session, working papers submitted at that session, and the report of the Outer Space Committee's Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee on its recently concluded 1980 session, which had also considered the subject of remote sensing of the earth by satellite (seep. 129).

The Working Group agreed that for the time being it would leave aside those principles on which tentative agreement had already been reached and would concentrate on the remaining principles, identified below, with the understanding that any others could be referred to by any member.

As to principle I, defining terms, the Group agreed to use existing definitions of "primary data" and "analysed information" without considering them as final.

On the basis of discussions in an informal drafting group, the Group adopted a new text of principle VIII relating to prompt dissemination of information on natural disasters identified by means of remote sensing. The Group retained a footnote to the new text indicating that the meaning of the term "natural disaster" was subject to further discussion; it was felt that a hastily formulated definition could result in an unduly broad or narrow application of the principle to sudden events.

Having reviewed the text of principle IX on the use by States of remote-sensing data or information in a manner compatible with rights and interests of other States, the Group decided to retain it, pending a final decision at a later stage.

No consensus was reached as to the retention or deletion of principle XI concerning international responsibility of States for remote-sensing activities. On the basis of discussions in the Group and informal consultations, the Chairman proposed new language for principle XII, which dealt with non-discriminatory access to data by a sensed State. The Group substituted, with certain changes, the language proposed by the Chairman for the former text, although much of the text remained in square brackets, indicating lack of consensus. Footnotes indicated that the question of from which States access to and provision of data should be obtained needed further consideration and that the principle was subject to review in the light of discussion on access by third States.

The Group was unable to reach agreement on the text of principle XIII, to require that prior notification be given to States whose territory was to be sensed. Some members favoured advance notice since, in their view, remote sensing touched on the question of sovereignty of States; others doubted the desirability of such a principle, referring to technical and practical difficulties in implementing it.

No agreement was reached on whether the text of principle XV, requiring the approval of the sensed State for dissemination of information on its natural resources, should be retained or deleted.

In principle XVII regarding the settlement of disputes, the Group decided that the word "procedures"—mentioned in an unagreed formulation whereby, if a mutually acceptable solution could not be found by consultations among the parties to a dispute, other mutually agreed upon procedures for peaceful settlement should or must be sought—should carry both the adjectives "existing" and "established" on the understanding that both adjectives could be deleted. A footnote to this principle indicated that the principle was subject to review in the light of the full set of agreed principles and a decision on their legal nature.

On 2 April, the Legal Sub-Committee took note with appreciation of the report and work of the Working Group.

At its June/July session, the Outer Space Committee noted that the Legal Sub-Committee had carried out a principle-by-principle reading of the text as formulated to date and that a number of issues remained to be agreed upon. It recommended that the Sub-Committee continue to give detailed priority consideration to the subject, with the aim of formulating draft principles. In adopting resolution 35/14 (see above), the General Assembly endorsed the Committee's recommendation.

During the debate on the peaceful uses of outer space in the Special Political Committee, Argentina, Brazil, Ecuador, Iraq, Kenya, Nigeria, the Philippines and others spoke of the concerns of sensed States with regard to sovereignty over their natural resources, information on those resources and respect for their territorial integrity—concerns shared by Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary and Romania. Ecuador, Greece, Kenya, Turkey and Venezuela stated that prior consent for sensing should be obtained from States to be sensed and, together with Cuba, Mexico, Pakistan, Sierra Leone, Tunisia, the Upper Volta, Venezuela and Yugoslavia, emphasized the importance of priority access by sensed States to information pertaining to their territories and natural resources.

Cuba, Mexico, Mongolia, the Philippines, Tunisia, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the Upper Volta and Uruguay considered that certain data should not be disseminated to third parties without the approval of the sensed State. In this regard, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR felt that photographs with high spatial resolution (a measure of the amount of detail visible in a photograph taken from space) of better than 50 metres should only be circulated with the consent of the sensed State. Brazil and Venezuela stressed that the sensed State should have control over the acquisition and dissemination of data and information concerning its territory.

Others, including Italy, Sweden and the United States, supported the idea of free dissemination of remote-sensing data, believing that it would promote the use of remote-sensing technology and benefit all States. Canada considered that the lack of agreed technical definitions made the drafting of principles by the Legal Sub-Committee more difficult. In the view of France, if a consensus on the right of sensed States to have access to data was reached, then means must be found to enable every country to benefit from such data.

Kenya, Mexico and Nigeria called for strengthening the co-ordinating role of the United Nations in the field of remote sensing. Argentina, Chile, Egypt, Tunisia and Yugoslavia favoured the establishment of an international body under United Nations auspices to direct and operate remote-sensing activities.

Other matters

Definition and/or delimitation of outer space and questions relating to the geostationary orbit

Discussions continued at the 1980 session of the Legal Sub-Committee on the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities, bearing in mind questions relating to the geostationary orbit.

The Sub-Committee, which considered this subject from 26 to 28 March, noted that the subject of the physical nature, technical attributes and use of the geostationary orbit had been on the agenda of the recently concluded session of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee (see p. 132).

Some members of the Legal Sub-Committee viewed definition and/or delimitation of outer space as a necessity. They stated that the legal regime applicable to outer space differed in important respects, particularly on matters relating to State sovereignty, from the legal regime applicable to airspace; thus it was necessary to establish the boundary between airspace and outer space so that the areas of application of the two legal regimes were defined. They considered a conventional boundary, established by a multilateral international convention, to be necessary. Some members expressed support for the proposal made by the USSR in its 1979 working paper<sup>6</sup> to establish a boundary at an altitude not higher than 100-110 kilometres above sea-level. They considered a mesospace or intermediate zone between airspace and outer space unnecessary. The view was expressed that a boundary could at a later date be lowered by multilateral agreement, if that should be required in the light of technological advances. The view was also expressed that the establishment of a conventional boundary should be supplemented by functional definitions of the terms "space flight" and "space object." Some members that considered a boundary necessary said that a definition and/or delimitation of outer space should also contain provisions on the sui generis, or unique, character of the geostationary orbit.

Others stated that such a definition and/or delimitation was not currently necessary. In their view, the absence of a definition had not hitherto given rise to practical difficulties and there was no scientific or technical justification for the designation of a particular altitude as the boundary between airspace and outer space. They noted that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee had not identified any problem that would be solved by such a designation and referred to a 1976 study of the Committee on Space Research of the International Council of Scientific Unions on minimum altitudes of artificial earth satellites. That study noted that past estimates of the lowest altitude at which a satellite could survive had been too high; the perigee of a satellite had already been lower than 100 kilometres. They considered that an arbitrary definition and/or delimitation of outer space could lead to complications because of the inability of most countries to observe and control a designated boundary and could impede further developments in space science and technology.

It was the opinion of some members that a functional approach to the question was preferable to the establishment of a conventional boundary which might prove inappropriate in light of technical advances.

On another question, some members observed that the geostationary orbit, due to its physical characteristics and technical attributes, was a limited natural resource of a sui generis character. In that connexion, some members considered that equatorial States exercised sovereign rights over those segments of the orbit above their territories, stressing that the geostationary orbit should also be taken into account in a definition and/or delimitation of outer space.

The view was expressed that an equitable legal régime ought to be established to ensure that the geostationary orbit was utilized for the benefit of all and particularly the developing countries.

Some members felt that the geostationary orbit was an integral part of and inseparable from outer space and was thus not subject to claims of sovereign or preferential rights. Some of these members were of the opinion that the question of equitable access to the geostationary orbit in the light of the needs of all countries was a matter to be provided for through international machinery such as ITU.

Reference was made to a resolution of the 1979 World Administrative Radio Conference of ITU<sup>7</sup> which stated that attention should be given to relevant technical aspects concerning the special geographical situation of particular countries. In some members' view, this referred to polar and certain tropical and desert countries where geographical and climatic conditions affected signals from satellites, and was not meant to give any preferential rights to equatorial countries, as had been expressed in reservations by some countries at the Conference. On the other hand, the view was also expressed that the resolution had sought to provide for the special interests of equatorial States.

At its mid-year session, the Outer Space Committee in its report to the General Assembly noted that a variety of views had been expressed in the Legal Sub-Committee on the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and the geostationary orbit. The same divergencies held in the Outer Space Committee, with some members supporting the concept of establishing a lower limit of outer space and others having reservations on the need for such a boundary and the criteria by which it might be determined. The Committee endorsed a request by the Sub-Committee that a study on the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit continue to be brought up to date. Again, the divergent views on this orbit stated in the Sub-Committee were also evident in statements in the Outer Space Committee: some equatorial States claimed sovereign rights over the segment of the geostationary orbit above their territories; some felt there was a need to establish a special regime to govern its use; and others considered it inseparable from outer space and therefore not subject to claims of sovereign preferential right.

on international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space (see above), endorsed the Outer Space Committee's recommendation that the Legal Sub-Committee continue in 1981 to consider matters relating to the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities, as well as the geostationary orbit.

In the Special Political Committee, Ecuador, Greece, Hungary, Indonesia, Italy, Mongolia and the USSR restated their belief that a definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities should be established. The USSR proposal to establish the lower limit at 100-110 kilometres above sea-level was supported by Hungary and Mongolia, among others.

Sweden and the United States were not convinced that it was currently useful to establish a delimitation between airspace and outer space; hasty decisions were to be avoided. Australia supported this view, reiterating its position that close consideration must be given to the scientific, legal and political factors involved to determine whether it was necessary to define the outer limits of the atmosphere. Iraq considered that objective, functional criteria should provide the basis for the definition of space activity; such a definition could then supplement the criteria used in the delimitation of outer space. In the view of Yugoslavia, agreement on the definition of outer space would solve the currently unresolved problem of the upper limit of the sovereignty of States in the space above their territories.

Austria stated that it was prepared to join any consensus that might develop on definition/delimitation. Uruguay favoured the principle of free transit in outer space and on the moon and other celestial bodies and believed in the international character of those areas.

Colombia, Ecuador, Indonesia and Kenya reiterated their position according to which the geostationary orbit was a limited natural resource and was subject to the sovereignty of the subjacent States. Colombia and Mexico said that the orbit was not a matter that had been satisfactorily regulated in the 1967 Outer Space Treaty.<sup>8</sup>

Australia, Egypt, Hungary, Iraq, Italy, the Philippines, Uruguay and Venezuela, while recognizing the unique character of the geostationary orbit, were of the view that it should be subject to rational management. Uruguay suggested that an international authority be created for this purpose. Egypt and Turkey, emphasizing that the geostationary orbit should be used for the benefit of all States, also felt that a special regime to govern it should be established. Austria and Uruguay stressed the necessity of optimal use of the orbit and equitable access to it for all countries.

Use of nuclear power sources in outer space

The Legal Sub-Committee, at meetings on 28 March and 1 April, discussed the question of reviewing existing international law on outer space activities to determine whether it should be supplemented with provisions on the use of nuclear power sources in outer space.

The Sub-Committee had before it the report of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee which had considered technical aspects and safety measures relating to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space in January/February (see p. 132). Replies of Governments to an invitation by the Outer Space Committee for their views on existing international law relevant to outer space activities were before the Legal Sub-Committee, together with a Canadian working paper entitled "Use of nuclear power sources in outer space" containing possible elements of a legal regime covering four areas where Canada considered further international rules were necessary: information concerning the use of nuclear power sources; notification prior to re-entry; assistance to States in emergency situations; and radiation exposure levels.

Some Sub-Committee members expressed the view that international law relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space—namely, the general principle that a State should not engage in activities harmful to other States, and certain provisions in the five international space treaties (see section below) such as article IX of the 1967 Outer Space Treaty—were inadequate and needed to be supplemented. They observed that, in every other area but outer space, international codes and standards had been elaborated on the use of nuclear power, with a view to ensuring adequate containment of nuclear material under normal operating conditions and also in case of accidents.

These members also expressed support for the Canadian working paper. They thought there should be specific requirements relating to information concerning the use of nuclear power sources in outer space. Some of them felt that, before launching space objects carrying nuclear power sources, launching States should be required to provide the international community with specific information on such objects, with assurances that nuclear power sources would be used safely and that radioactive material would be properly handled in the event of malfunction during placement in orbit.

They also considered that specific requirements were necessary regarding the question of notification prior to re-entry. Some of them considered that the launching State, before the re-entry of its space object with nuclear power sources aboard, should be required to notify, as soon as possible, the Secretary-General and/or States likely to be affected, so States could prepare for search and recovery operations and protect their populations.

On the question of emergency assistance to States, those members felt that article 5 (requiring the launching State to assist, if requested, in recovering space objects on another State's territory) of the 1968 Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space (Assistance Agreement),<sup>9</sup> article VI (concerning giving assistance to States parties in identifying a space object that caused damage or might be hazardous or deleterious) of the 1975 Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space (Registration Convention),<sup>10</sup> and article XXI (on aid to States that suffered damage by a space object which presented a large-scale danger to human life and to the functioning of vital centres) of the 1972 Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects (Liability Convention)<sup>11</sup> needed to be developed further. Some considered that provisions ought to be elaborated, taking account of the special needs of developing countries, on monitoring and tracking assistance, providing information enabling precautionary measures to be taken, and assistance after re-entry. Because in their view outer space law did not contain provisions on protecting humans against exposure to excessive radiation from use of nuclear power sources in outer space, they believed that the standards for radiation protection recommended by the International Commission on Radiological Protection should constitute the basis for developing necessary provisions.

Some members felt attention should be given to the question of liability for damage arising from the use of nuclear power sources in outer space, in addition to the four areas covered by the Canadian paper.

Other members expressed the view that existing norms and principles of modern international law were quite adequate to regulate all aspects of the use of such sources; accordingly there was no need for additional legal provisions. They pointed out that, in accordance with the 1967 Outer Space Treaty, the use of nuclear power sources in outer space was not only legitimate but also desirable. That Treaty, as well as article IV (listing the information to be furnished by each State of registry concerning its space objects) of the Registration Convention, adequately dealt with the normal functioning of outer space objects with nuclear power sources. In this connexion, they emphasized that a space object with a nuclear power source, when it functioned normally, did not differ in any manner from any other space object.

Those members expressed the view that article 5 of the 1968 Assistance Agreement and article VI of the 1975 Registration Convention adequately ensured the interests of States with regard to timely and effective liquidation of possible harmful consequences that might occur as a result of an accident involving a nuclear power source. They also recalled the Assembly's 1978 resolution,<sup>12</sup> by which launching States were asked to inform States concerned if a space object with a nuclear power source on board was malfunctioning and there was risk of re-entry of radioactive materials to the earth.

They also considered that the 1972 Liability Convention adequately regulated all questions of liability and compensation for damage that might be caused by the use of nuclear power sources in outer space. Specific accidents, they felt, should be dealt with separately, taking into account the particular circumstances in each case, since it was impossible to envisage all accidents that could happen and therefore impossible to provide for remedies of a general nature.

Still other members had not yet reached any final conclusions on the adequacy of existing international law applicable to the matter, favouring further close examination of the question. Some members, agreeing that existing international law was inadequate and further international regulations should be established, believed the questions raised in Canada's working paper should be discussed, provided that due consideration was given to the technical problems involved.

Following its discussion, the Sub-Committee recommended that its parent Committee consider what arrangements should be made for the Sub-Committee's discussion of the question in 1981.

At its 1980 session, the Outer Space Committee, noting the Legal Sub-Committee's request, held an exchange of views on that aspect.

Some Committee members, such as Austria and Italy, were of the view that the question should be given high priority at the Sub-Committee's next session. The Netherlands and Sweden felt that a working group should be established to consider it. Australia, Austria, Canada, Chile, Colombia, the Federal Republic of Germany, Indonesia, Mexico, Sweden and the United Kingdom believed there was a need to elaborate new legal provisions governing the use of nuclear power sources in outer space. Mexico also felt that the title of the item should be amended to reflect more accurately the current stage of consideration, beyond review of existing standards and norms.

Others considered such moves premature, at least until the deliberations of the Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee were completed. Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia and Hungary felt there was no real need to supplement existing law with special provisions on this subject. Mongolia, Poland and the USSR also generally considered that existing international legal norms were adequate to regulate nuclear power sources in space. Australia, Austria, Canada, Sweden and the United States were of the opinion that the Legal Sub-Committee should continue its work in this area, taking into account the results of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee's work and co-ordinating their efforts.

Japan and others felt that the drafting of provisions on certain aspects of the use of nuclear power sources in outer space could usefully begin before the completion of the work of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee's Working Group.

The Committee could not reach agreement with respect to the treatment of the item in the Legal Sub-Committee. Some members expressed their intention to request the General Assembly to consider what arrangements should be made for the discussion of this item in that Sub-Committee. According to others, future discussion of the item by the Assembly might be based on any agreed conclusions and recommendations adopted by the Legal Sub-Committee on the basis of conclusions and recommendations of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee.

By its resolution 35/14 of 3 November (see above), the Assembly noted that the Legal Sub-Committee had reviewed existing international law relevant to outer space activities with a view to determining the appropriateness of supplementing such law with provisions relating to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space. The Assembly decided to include in the agenda of the Sub-Committee's 1981 session an item entitled "Consideration of the possibility of supplementing the norms of international law relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space," and to establish in connexion with the item a working group of the Legal Sub-Committee.

The discussion of outer space items in the Special Political Committee was marked by general support for the view that the safety of people and of the environment should be ensured. Argentina, Brazil, Ecuador, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Pakistan, the Philippines, Turkey and others, including States that had addressed the item in the Outer Space Committee, were of the opinion that existing international law was not adequate in the case of the use of nuclear power sources in outer space and should be supplemented. Most of those countries supported the ideas contained in the Canadian working paper. They were also in favour of establishing a working group of the Legal Sub-Committee to elaborate provisions governing the use of such sources in space. Mexico, the Philippines and the United States supported continued consideration of the issue by both sub-committees and the establishment of international safety standards and procedures in that area. Egypt reiterated a proposal to consider the establishment of an adequate global tracking system for use in emergencies, together with a programme to train specialized teams, especially from developing countries, for such emergencies. China believed that the key to solving this and other outer space problems was to arrive at an overall arrangement that would take into account the interests of all sides and would be in conformity with the principles governing outer space activities already established by the Outer Space Committee.

Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia and the USSR were of the opinion that contemporary international law provided adequate regulation for the use of nuclear power sources in space and did not need to be supplemented.

International space treaties

By resolution 35/14 (see above), the General Assembly invited States that were not parties to the international treaties governing the uses of outer space to consider adhering to them.

As at 31 December 1980, the Assembly had commended to States five such treaties: the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies;<sup>13</sup> the Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space;<sup>14</sup> the Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects;<sup>15</sup> the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space;<sup>16</sup> and the Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies.<sup>17</sup>

Scientific and technical aspects of the peaceful uses of outer space

As in previous years, consideration of various scientific and technical aspects of the peaceful uses of outer space continued during 1980 in the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, its Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee and the General Assembly.

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee met from 28 January to 13 February, giving priority to items dealing with remote sensing of the earth by satellites, the United Nations programme on space applications and the co-ordination of space activities within the United Nations system, and the use of nuclear power sources in outer space. It also examined questions relating to space transportation systems and their implications for future activities in space, and the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit.

The Outer Space Committee, which met from 23 June to 3 July, examined the report of the Sub-Committee and in general endorsed its recommendations.

In a comprehensive resolution—35/14—on these and other aspects of outer space, the Assembly noted that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee had continued its consideration of the above-mentioned questions, endorsed the United Nations programme on space applications for 1981 and asked the Outer Space Committee to consider new projects in outer space activities.

Resolution 35/14 also dealt with various legal aspects of the peaceful uses of outer space, which were considered by the Outer Space Committee's Legal Sub-Committee (see preceding sub-chapter).

By resolution 35/15, the Assembly endorsed the recommendations of the Preparatory Committee for the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE-82) and decided to accept Austria's invitation to host the Conference at Vienna in August 1982. The Assembly also indicated the States and other participants to be invited to take part in the Conference, and invited submission of national papers by 15 June 1981 and promotion of public awareness of the Conference.

Details of these and other decisions are described below.

Remote sensing

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee continued consideration of the current pre-operational/experimental phase of remote sensing of the earth by satellite as well as possible future operational satellite remote-sensing systems.

In examining the various aspects of remote-sensing data, the Sub-Committee had before it, as it had requested in 1979,<sup>18</sup> a document containing the views of members of the Outer Space Committee and international organizations defining the terms "Coarse," "medium" and "fine" as used to characterize the spatial resolution (a measure of the amount of detail visible in a photograph taken from space) for remote-sensing imaging systems. Governments which replied generally considered that the terms could not be given precise quantitative definitions; these concepts, which should only be used in a relative sense, might require different definitions depending on their applications. Another document the Sub-Committee had requested reported on the concept of effective resolution element as an approach to a definition of resolution; it discussed two concepts—"effective radiometric resolution element" and "spatial effective resolution element"—but did not provide finalized definitions. A paper prepared by the United Kingdom on the definition of spatial resolution in imaging radar systems noted that a number of definitions existed for that purpose, related to the particular applications of the data. The relation between spatial and radar radiometric resolution was emphasized.

The Sub-Committee requested the International Society for Photogrammetry to review the above concepts and to inform it in 1981 of more precise definitions, if any.

Differing opinions were expressed regarding the practicability and utility of classifying primary (unanalysed) remote-sensing data. The Sub-Committee again was not able to agree on specific recommendations concerning the need for such a classification or the manner in which it might be made. Differing opinions were also expressed regarding the dissemination of primary data. Some States believed that such data should be freely disseminated; thus nations that could not afford their own system would not be placed at a disadvantage. Other points of difference were whether and when dissemination should be subject to the permission of the sensed State and what might be an appropriate limit of photographic resolution for dissemination without such consent.

The Sub-Committee reiterated the view that there was no scientific or technical basis for a sensed State not having timely and non-discriminatory access to data of its territory.

The Sub-Committee again discussed the possible co-ordinating role of the United Nations in remote sensing through the establishment of a panel of experts; however, it was not currently in a position to recommend establishment of such a panel. Expressed but not agreed upon were views that: the Sub-Committee rather than a panel should continue to be the focal point of technical and scientific aspects of remote sensing; the panel's tasks could better be undertaken through direct bilateral and multilateral co-operation; application of remote-sensing techniques to different areas of resource management required different methodologies and approaches and a panel would not be able to address itself to such a wide range of activities; a Secretariat officer might be nominated to keep the Sub-Committee informed of co-ordination activities taking place outside the United Nations framework; the Working Group on Remote Sensing might be reconvened within the Sub-Committee; and an international body with remote-sensing satellites might be established under United Nations auspices to provide data.

The Sub-Committee, which also had before it a list of applications of remote sensing, prepared by the Secretariat, recommended that States should be requested to assist in the compilation of a detailed catalogue on the uses of remote sensing, to be prepared by the Secretariat; such a catalogue, containing also examples of resource management, problems and possible solutions, of applied remote-sensing techniques, of other information sources, and of benefits of remote sensing, would be useful in preparations for the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (see section below).

Aware of the need to provide assistance to developing countries and recognizing the necessity of regional co-operation, the Sub-Committee encouraged the establishment of new and the strengthening of existing regional remote-sensing centres, with a view to creating an indigenous capacity within these countries. It urged the United Nations, through its space applications programme and the remote-sensing centres of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the Natural Resources and Energy Division (NRED) of the United Nations Secretariat's Department of Technical Co-operation for Development, and other interested agencies to continue co-operation with those centres, which were encouraged to give high priority to remote-sensing activities in agriculture and non-agricultural resources.

The Outer Space Committee, at its June/July session, considered and endorsed the views of the Sub-Committee that the International Society for Photogrammetry review definitions of resolution elements for remote-sensing imaging systems and that States provide the Secretariat with the necessary assistance in updating the remote-sensing catalogue. It recommended the continued strengthening of the newly established FAO Centre of Remote Sensing Applications, particularly in education and training, encouraged the remote-sensing centre of NRED to continue its work, and welcomed a World Meteorological Organization (WMO) proposal to provide in 1981 a progress report on the Global Atmospheric Research Programme summarizing the results of this effort. The Committee expressed its appreciation that the remote-sensing centre in Cairo, Egypt, was prepared to offer its services and facilities, within the framework of African co-operation, as a regional training and user-assistance centre for training in remote-sensing techniques, environmental studies and engineering, and other studies and projects in African countries. The Committee noted the importance of providing adequate training facilities in all aspects of remote sensing.

When the General Assembly adopted resolution 35/14 on 3 November (see p. 120), it endorsed the Outer Space Committee's recommendation that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee should consider as a priority topic in 1981 questions relating to remote sensing of the earth by satellites.

Space applications programme and co-ordination of outer space activities

Reviewing his report outlining the United Nations programme on space applications, the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee commended the work of the United Nations expert on space applications and expressed its appreciation to Governments and organizations that had hosted or provided assistance during 1979 to the four United Nations-sponsored training courses and seminars on practical applications of space technology.<sup>19</sup> It also expressed its gratitude to Italy and the Netherlands for having offered fellowships in 1979, and noted with appreciation Belgian and Italian offers to renew sponsorship of training fellowships.

The 1980 programme contained the following training courses or seminars: a regional training seminar on satellite remote-sensing applications for agriculture, rangeland and hydrology (Ouagadougou, Upper Volta, 9-23 January); a United Nations/FAO seminar on remote-sensing benefits for national development (San José, Costa Rica, 20-22 April, in co-operation with the Environmental Research Institute of Michigan (United States)); the United Nations/FAO fifth international training course on applications of remote sensing to water resources and hydrology (Rome, 19 May-16 June, in co-operation with Italy); a United Nations seminar on applications to land-use planning (Tokyo, Japan, 15-20 September); a United Nations/FAO regional training seminar on applications for land resources (Athens, Greece, 7-17 October); and a United Nations training seminar on applications in geology and hydrology (Baku, USSR, 17-29 November).

The Outer Space Committee endorsed the United Nations programme on space applications for 1981 outlined by the expert on space applications in his report-which also gave information on United Nations-sponsored seminars and training courses in 1979 and 1980 and evaluated the 1977 programme-and commended the expert's work in carrying out the programme. The Committee requested him to include in his 1981 report a list of activities that could be undertaken within the programme to assist Member States further in their efforts to share the benefits of applications of space technology for development.

The Committee expressed appreciation for governmental, and organizational assistance for training courses and seminars, and to Austria, Belgium, India and Italy for fellowship offers for advanced study and training in space applications; it hoped such offers would be increased.

The General Assembly, in adopting resolution 35/14 (see p. 120), endorsed the Outer Space Committee's recommendation that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee consider as a priority item questions relating to the programme on space applications and co-ordination of space activities in the United Nations system. It endorsed the space applications programme for 1981 proposed by the expert, reiterating the Committee's request that he include a list of further activities of assistance in this field that might be undertaken. The Assembly also expressed its appreciation to Governments and organizations which had hosted, offered fellowships for or assisted in holding training seminars and workshops.

The Sub-Committee also considered the co-ordination of activities of the organizations within the United Nations system in the area of practical applications of space technology. It noted a subject-oriented report by the Secretary-General on future activities of the organizations and on progress achieved in furthering consultation on and co-ordination of outer space activities among United Nations-related organizations. It also noted that the interagency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) had recognized the need for further consultation on activities and programmes particularly as related to the preparations for the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space.

Another study, submitted by the Secretariat, concentrated on two aspects of a comprehensive study the Sub-Committee had requested on the current and potential benefits of space science and technology to Member States, particularly the developing countries: a general survey of such benefits and an explanation of how the United Nations system was attempting to meet requests for aid in space applications.

The Sub-Committee noted the conclusion in the study that the system had sufficient expertise and flexibility to play an effective role in assistance in realizing benefits from outer space activities. The Sub-Committee concluded that, before an assessment could be made of the benefits to be derived from co-ordination of space science activities, it would be necessary to survey in more detail and through interagency consultations the various space science programmes that already existed.

As agreed at an ACC-convened interagency meeting on outer space activities held at Geneva from 26 to 28 September 1979, a second interagency meeting was held there from 8 to 10 September 1980 to discuss the preparation of background papers for the Conference, assigned to interested organizations, as well as contributions to the Secretary-General's integrated report on assistance being extended to developing countries on practical applications of space technology.

preciation the reports and participation in its work of representatives of United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and other international organizations.

The General Assembly, in adopting resolution 35/14, asked the specialized agencies to continue their co-operation with the Committee and provide it with progress reports on their work relating to the peaceful uses of outer space.

Use of nuclear power sources in outer space

The expert Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space, established by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, continued its work at its second session at Headquarters, New York, from 28 January to 12 February 1980. It discussed safety problems involved in the use of nuclear power sources in outer space, implementation of recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection for populations and the environment in the context of space vehicles using nuclear power sources, an evaluation of existing methods in understanding orbital mechanics to determine if improvements might be made in predicting re-entry phenomena, and a definition of technical considerations regarding a format for notification.

The Group reaffirmed its conclusion that nuclear power sources could be used safely in space provided that all necessary safety requirements were met, and agreed that study should continue on the subject areas it had been discussing, based on studies that had been or might be submitted to it. The Group recommended that it should meet during the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee's next session to continue its consideration of the question, and further requested the Secretariat to circulate to Member States before that session the studies already submitted plus any new material.

The Outer Space Committee noted the conclusions of the Working Group and endorsed the recommendation that it should meet during the Sub-Committee's 1981 session and the request that the Secretariat should ensure the advance distribution of material to Member States.

The General Assembly, in adopting resolution 35/14 (see p. 120), endorsed the Committee's recommendation that the Sub-Committee consider as a priority item in 1981 the use of nuclear power sources in outer space.

(For information on the legal aspects of the use of nuclear power sources in outer space, see p. 125.)

Space transportation systems

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee in 1980 considered space transportation systems on the basis of: a Secretariat report on the international implications of new space transportation systems, summarizing existing systems and those under development, surveying current and future requirements for such systems and discussing issues that might arise as a consequence of their development; a report containing the views of Member States on space transportation systems; and a bibliography of literature on activities that might be undertaken using space platforms.

Recognizing that the progress being made in the various programmes was providing the international community with a much wider choice in such systems, the Sub-Committee decided to continue consideration of this item. This decision was endorsed by the Outer Space Committee, and by the General Assembly when it adopted resolution 35/14 (see p. 120).

Geostationary orbit

A study prepared for the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, with the assistance of the Committee on Space Research of the International Council of Scientific Unions, examined the dynamics of space objects. It focused on satellite orbit stability and factors affecting it, such as gravity, air drag and lunisolar disturbances, and on methods of removing inactive satellites from their orbits, including the efficiency and economy of each of the methods. A second document contained the views of Member States on the most efficient and economical means of using the geostationary orbit. These papers were used in the Sub-Committee's continued examination of the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit. A comprehensive study on the topic was under preparation.

Some members reaffirmed their view that planning was a principal way to assure effective use of the geostationary orbit; a promising way to avoid saturation of the orbit would be the use of geosynchronous orbits with small inclinations and quasi-stationary orbits. Other suggestions included the establishment of criteria of compatibility of geostationary-orbit satellite networks, better onboard- and ground-antennae directional equipment, and application of interference-resistant methods of transmission from geostationary satellites. Other members doubted the possibility of reaching the best possible use of the geostationary orbit by planning and asked that the Sub-Committee's work not duplicate studies being conducted by the International Telecommunication Union. Other views concerned claims of sovereignty by equatorial countries over segments of the geostationary orbit (see also p. 124).

As in the Sub-Committee, widely divergent views were expressed in the Outer Space Committee on the subject. The Committee endorsed the Sub-Committee's request that the study on the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit continue to be updated as required.

By resolution 35/14 (see p. 120), the General Assembly endorsed the Committee's recommendation that the Sub-Committee consider the item again at its 1981 session.

Preparations for the Second United Nations Outer Space Conference

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, acting as Advisory Committee to the Preparatory Committee for the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space scheduled to be held in 1982, met during the Sub-Committee's January/February 1980 session. The Advisory Committee stressed the primary importance of national papers to be submitted by Member States to serve as the basis for Conference discussion of the agenda items and to provide an input to the final report. To assist States in preparing national papers before the end of June 1981, the Committee requested that the Secretariat commission the preparation of background papers as soon as possible. Recommending that Member States consider sending officials to regional seminars organized in 1980-1981 in the context of preparations for the Conference, the Advisory Committee was of the view that papers commissioned by the seminars in this regard should also be considered in elaborating the final report.

The Advisory Committee requested the Secretariat to prepare a more detailed report on the publicity aspects of the Conference, including financial implications. The Secretariat was also requested to outline in a document for the Preparatory Committee general rules concerning the convening of United Nations meetings and conferences, including their financial implications.

The Preparatory Committee for the Conference, which held its second session during the Outer Space Committee's June/July session, established a working group to assist it. It endorsed the Advisory Committee's recommendations and recommended that the Conference be held at Vienna from 9 to 21 August 1982.

The Preparatory Committee expressed its approval of the arrangements made for the preparation of background papers and decided to invite Member States to propose additional experts to join the international teams preparing them. The Committee also welcomed the decision of the Executive Committee of WMO to prepare two additional technical background papers.

The Preparatory Committee enumerated, and recommended that the General Assembly request the Secretary-General to invite to the Conference, various categories of participants.

Among the recommended public information activities for the Conference were issuance of a special United Nations stamp, holding an international essay contest, organization of a worldwide poster contest, exhibits, updating the United Nations publication Space Activities and Resources, and providing mass-media material for promoting public awareness of the Conference.

The Preparatory Committee recommended that the Secretary-General appoint senior members of the Conference secretariat in consultation with United Nations Member States.

The recommendations and views of the Preparatory Committee were endorsed by the General Assembly at its 1980 regular session.

The Assembly's adoption without vote of resolution 35/15 on 3 November followed deliberations in the Special Political Committee on the Preparatory Committee's report. The Special Political Committee on 29 October approved the resolution without objection; it was introduced by Austria on behalf of 40 sponsoring Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). The Assembly thereby endorsed the recommendations in the Preparatory Committee's report, including those pertaining to who should receive invitations to participate. In addition to all States, these included Namibia, represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, and national liberation movements recognized in its region by the Organization of African Unity. Member States were invited to submit national papers by 15 June 1981 and to promote public awareness of the Conference through the mass media and by issuing special commemorative stamps. The Assembly also decided to accept Austria's offer to host the Conference at Vienna from 9 to 21 August 1982.

During the discussion, Brazil, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Japan, Kenya, Poland, the Upper Volta and Venezuela expressed support for the Conference and discussed some of its aims: the peaceful use of space technology; the possible future direction of space activities; and the role to be played by the United Nations in the exploration and use of outer space. Austria, China, Ecuador, Egypt, France, Indonesia, Pakistan, Romania, Turkey and the United States expressed the hope that the Conference would provide a forum for agreement on how to make the benefits of space technology available to all, and in particular to the developing countries.

The Federal Republic of Germany, speaking after approval of the resolution, also on behalf of Canada, France, the United Kingdom and the United States, reaffirmed the reservations of those Governments concerning the participation of the Council for Namibia in the Conference. Similarly, Israel recorded its objections to the participation of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Enlargement of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space

By resolution 35/16, adopted without a vote on 3 November 1980, the General Assembly enlarged the membership of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space from 47 to 48 and then decided to expand it to a maximum of 53.

In letters of 9 and 10 October to the Assembly President, China and Viet Nam, respectively, requested membership in the Outer Space Committee.

In the Special Political Committee, Austria sponsored a two-part resolution to enlarge the Outer Space Committee, which the Assembly adopted as resolution 35/16. By section I, the Assembly took note of China's request and accordingly increased the Committee's membership from 47 to 48. By section II, the Assembly noted the interest expressed by other States in becoming members, decided to expand the membership to a maximum of 53, and requested the Assembly President, after consultation with the regional groups, to appoint the new members.

Before approving the text of the resolution as a whole without objection on 29 October, the Special Political Committee voted separately on section II, approving it by a recorded vote of 113 to 1 (United States), with 1 abstention (Tunisia).

In a note verbale of 5 November, the United States explained that, had a separate vote been taken on section II of the resolution in the plenary Assembly, it would again have voted against it, while joining the consensus on the resolution as a whole. It was the view of the United States that the expansion of the Committee would detract from its ability to carry out its work and that any consideration of expanding its membership should have been thoroughly discussed within the Committee itself before a final decision was made.

The General Assembly,

Noting that the advance of science and technology has enhanced the knowledge of, and interest in, the peaceful uses of outer space and international co-operation in this important field, to the benefit of mankind and to the advantage of all States, whatever their level of economic and scientific development,

Aware of the need to ensure that the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space carries out its work in the most effective way,

I

1. Takes note of the request of a Member State for admission to membership in the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space;

2. Decides, accordingly, to increase the membership of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space from forty-seven to forty-eight;

II

1. Decides to expand the membership of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space from forty-eight to a maximum of fifty-three;

3. Requests the President of the General Assembly, after consultation with the regional groups, to appoint no more than five new members of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space.

Registration of space launchings

In 1980, United Nations Member States and international governmental agencies launching objects into orbit around the earth or farther into space continued to supply to the United Nations information on their launchings, in accordance with a 1961 General Assembly resolution<sup>20</sup> and the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space.<sup>21</sup> The Convention, which came into force on 15 September 1976, had 27 States parties as at 31 December 1980.

Sixteen notifications were received and distributed as documents of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space. They covered objects launched during the last part of 1979, as well as during 1980.

India and the European Space Agency each submitted information on one launching. The USSR reported on the launching of 117 objects and the United States on the launching of 16 spacecraft.

Chapter III

Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea

The 1980 session of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, its ninth, ended in August with the issuance of an informal text of a draft convention on the law of the sea. The draft convention, covering most human uses of the oceans, incorporated the results of negotiations at the ninth and previous sessions.

The Conference recorded substantial agreement on all but one of the "hard-core" issues which were identified as standing in the way of a convention. But it did not reach the goal it had set itself in August 1979<sup>1</sup>—approval of a convention by the end of 1980. The new timetable approved at the close of the ninth session envisaged a concluding session in 1981, at Caracas, Venezuela, for the purpose of signing the convention.

Ninth session of the Conference

The ninth session of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea was held during 1980 in two parts: from 3 March to 4 April at United Nations Headquarters, New York, and from 28 July to 29 August at Geneva.

Previous sessions had been held every year since 1973, as follows: first session, New York, December 1973; second session, Caracas, Venezuela, June/August 1974; third session, Geneva, March/May 1975; fourth session, New York, March/May 1976; fifth session, New York, August/September 1976; sixth session, New York, May/July 1977; seventh session, Geneva, March/May, and New York, August/September 1978; and eighth session, Geneva, March/April, and New York, July/August 1979.<sup>2</sup>

The mandate of the Conference, assigned to it by the General Assembly in 1973, was to draw up a convention dealing with all matters relating to the law of the sea.<sup>3</sup> The decision to convene the Conference was taken by the Assembly in 1970.<sup>4</sup>

A total of 155 States and the United Nations Council for Namibia participated in the ninth session: 152 attended the first part and 143 the resumed session. Zimbabwe, as a member of a specialized agency, began participating in the Conference at the resumed session. Two territories, 10 specialized agencies or United Nations-related bodies and 13 intergovernmental organizations participated as observers. (For participating States and officers, see APPENDIXIII.)

In addition, 31 non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council participated as observers, as did four national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity or the League of Arab States: the Palestine Liberation Organization and the South West Africa People's Organization at both parts of the session, the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania at the first part and the African National Congress (South Africa) at the resumed session.

The only changes made during 1980 in the officers of the Conference and membership of its committees were that Ireland replaced Belgium as a Vice-President and Thailand replaced Bangladesh as a member of the Drafting Committee.

Organization of work

As at previous sessions, the work of the Conference in 1980 was largely carried on in informal meetings and was based on negotiating texts issued by the Conference's collegium, consisting of its President and the Chairmen of its three main committees. The results of these meetings were then reported to the Conference at formal meetings.

For the first part of the 1980 session, work was based on a revised informal composite negotiating text issued in April 1979.<sup>5</sup> Following a month of informal negotiations, the officers concerned reported on the results, after which the Conference held two days of public meetings in April to enable delegations to comment on proposed changes in the text. A second revision of the negotiating text was issued at the end of the first part of the session and formed the basis for work at the resumed session. After four more weeks of negotiations, on which the President and committee Chairmen again reported, a general debate was held in plenary meetings at the end of August, followed by the issuance of the "Draft convention on the law of the sea (informal text)."

The work at the first part of the session was carried out mainly in: the Working Group of 21, concerned with the international sea-bed area; Negotiating Groups 6 and 7, dealing with a definition of the continental shelf and with delimitation of maritime boundaries, respectively; the Third Committee, on marine scientific research; and informal plenary meetings on dispute settlement, general provisions of the convention and a proposed Preparatory Commission (see p. 140). During the resumed session, sea-bed matters were again dealt with by the Working Group, while negotiations on other outstanding issues were conducted in ad hoc groups, as the mandates of the seven negotiating groups established by the Conference in 1978<sup>6</sup> expired at the end of the first part of the 1980 session.

The Working Group of 21 was chaired by the Chairman of the First Committee, who also co-ordinated the negotiations on issues involving the Assembly (the supreme organ) and the Council (the executive organ) of the proposed International Sea-Bed Authority. Frank X. J. C. Njenga (Kenya), Chairman of Negotiating Group 1, co-ordinated for the first part of the session the negotiations on matters relating to the sea-bed exploration and exploitation system. Tommy T. B. Koh (Singapore), Chairman of Negotiating Group 2, co-ordinated those concerning financial arrangements for the future system. Harry Wuensche (German Democratic Republic) continued consultations with the Group of Legal Experts on the Settlement of Disputes relating to First Committee matters (those pertaining to the sea-bed); for the resumed session, he carried out consultations on exploration and exploitation. Satya N. Nandan (Fiji) continued consultations on production policy.

Participation of Namibia

On 6 March 1980, the Conference decided that Namibia, represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for the territory, would participate in the Conference in accordance with a 1979 resolution by which the General Assembly had decided to grant Namibia full membership in the Conference.<sup>7</sup> The decision was taken on the recommendation of the Conference's General Committee, made the previous day, following a request by the Council President. In taking this decision, placed before it by the President of the Conference, the Conference also deleted rule 62 of its rules of procedure, which had provided that the Council might designate representatives to participate as observers in the Conference without the right to vote.

In Committee, the United States, speaking also on behalf of Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom, reaffirmed the reservations they had made in explanation of vote when the Assembly adopted its resolution.

First Committee and its Working Group of 21

The Working Group of 21 continued to be composed of 10 representatives from the "Group of 77" developing States, two from the Eastern European group and nine from Western European and other developed States. Its co-ordinators reported to the First Committee on 1 April and 22 August on the results of negotiations on sea-bed issues, dealt with in part XI of the negotiating text.

On the system of exploitation, the Chairman of Negotiating Group 1 suggested some changes relating to the transfer of technology to the International Sea-Bed Authority and developing countries from State-operated entities and private firms holding mining contracts with the Authority. He said the changes aimed at making the contractors' undertakings binding and more precise while setting realistic limitations to them.

He also proposed a new procedure for a future review of the entire system for exploiting the deep sea-bed that would enable a Review Conference to modify the initial system by a two-thirds majority of the States parties in the event no agreement on changes had been reached within five years after the review commenced. This procedure replaced a suggestion he had made in 1979<sup>8</sup> for the possible imposition of a moratorium on new mining contracts if the Review Conference failed to reach agreement.

On sea-bed production policy, Mr. Nandan, reporting on the results of discussions, suggested a revised formula by which the Authority would determine how much nickel and other sea-bed minerals could be produced each year. He said his proposals were acceptable to a substantial majority of the participants in the discussions, including land-based producer and consumer countries.

On financial arrangements, the Chairman of Negotiating Group 2 reported substantial support for proposals covering the financing of the Enterprise- the mining arm of the Authority- and a tax system for private and public miners under contract to the Authority. He suggested that the amount of capital needed for the first mine site of the Enterprise be determined by the Preparatory Commission, so that prospective participants would know in advance how much money they would have to commit. He also suggested that the Enterprise be exempted from paying taxes to the Authority during its first 10 years of operation. He redrafted the Statute of the Enterprise, adding a phrase providing for its operational autonomy and a requirement that it operate on sound commercial principles.

The Chairman of the Group of Legal Experts on the Settlement of Disputes reported agreement on the role of commercial arbitration in settling disputes over sea-bed mining contracts.

The Chairman of Negotiating Group 3, on organs of the Authority, carried out consultations on the required majorities for decision-making in the future Council. He reported that further negotiations were needed.

The second report of the co-ordinators, in August, set out new proposals on outstanding issues relating to future exploitation of the deep sea-bed.

A new voting scheme was proposed for decision-making in the Council. Different majorities would be needed for different categories of decisions: a simple majority for procedural matters, a two-thirds or three-fourths majority for most questions of substance and consensus on the most sensitive matters. Rules, regulations and procedures for sea-bed mining could be adopted or changed only by consensus. A special conciliation committee would be set up where necessary to promote consensus.

Developing States which were potential land-based producers of minerals found on the sea-bed would be entitled to representation on the 36-member Council, among six developing countries with "special interests" which would be given seats.

Endorsement by the Council's Legal and Technical Commission would suffice to assure Council approval of any plan of work submitted by a sea-bed operator, unless the Council decided by consensus to reject the plan. The Commission would calculate an annual production ceiling for the sea-bed as a whole and, once plans of work were approved, issue production authorizations to individual miners. If producers sought authorizations in excess of the ceiling, the Council would select among applicants to determine how much each could produce.

The Authority would be obliged to study measures of economic adjustment assistance, including co-operation with specialized agencies and other international organizations, to help developing countries whose export earnings or economies were likely to be seriously affected by sea-bed mining.

All contracts with sea-bed miners approved by the Authority up to 10 years after the start of commercial production by the Enterprise would carry provisions obliging the contractor to transfer technology to the Enterprise. Under the previous text, this obligation would have been limited to contracts approved before the Enterprise began commercial operation. Another proposal would strengthen the provision on the transfer of technology owned by a "third party." sea-bed miners would be obliged to acquire, as long as there was no substantial cost to them, the legal right to transfer to the Authority any technology they had bought or leased from others for use in their sea-bed operations.

Payments by States for the initial mining project to be carried out by the Enterprise would be staggered so that the funds would be made available as needed, rather than all at once.

Minor changes were proposed in the production control scheme and the procedure for future review of the sea-bed system after 15 years.

Commenting on the report in the First Committee, the Chairman of the Group of 77 did not object to the incorporation of the proposals in the new revision of the negotiating text, but some members, including Chile, Kenya, the Philippines, Trinidad and Tobago, Zambia and Zimbabwe, expressed reservations on some aspects, including the production control formula and the voting scheme. China regarded the voting scheme as unsatisfactory and the tax rates for sea-bed miners as too low.

A number of industrialized countries, including Australia, Canada, France, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States, welcomed the progress achieved but expressed reservations, particularly on the tax scheme. Small and medium-sized industrialized countries, including Austria, Finland, Israel, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland and Turkey, called for improvement of their representation on the Council, but the United States opposed this view.

Mongolia, Poland and the USSR found the proposals imperfect but an acceptable compromise.

On the proposal of Romania, the Committee requested the Secretariat to prepare a study on how much money each State would have to contribute to the administration of the Authority and the Enterprise.

The Conference, on a proposal of the Philippines at a plenary meeting on 29 August, requested the Secretariat to conduct a study analysing the effects of the new clause in the sea-bed production control formula introduced in the April revision of the negotiating text, designed to protect the interests of land-based mineral producers and mineral-consuming countries (see p. 142). The Conference, without objection, approved the proposal, which was supported by Burundi, Canada, Indonesia, Nigeria and Zaire, as amended by the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom.

Second Committee and Negotiating Groups 6 and 7

The Second Committee and the two negotiating groups dealing with Second Committee matters met informally during the first part of the 1980 session. At the resumed session, the Second Committee held one informal meeting. The Committee's mandate covered ocean areas other than the deep sea-bed.

The Committee Chairman, who was also Chairman of Negotiating Group 6, concerned with a definition of the continental shelf, submitted a report to the Conference dated 29 March. He proposed an addition to the definition worked out in 1979<sup>9</sup> that would limit the breadth of the shelf to 350 nautical miles when its outer limit extended to an oceanic ridge. He also proposed a new annex to the negotiating text, setting out the mandate of a Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf. No agreement was reached on the main outstanding issue relating to the shelf—a proposal to have coastal States share with the international community part of the revenue they derived from exploiting non-living resources in areas of the shelf more than 200 miles from shore.

The Chairman also reported widespread understanding in favour of a proposal by Sri Lanka to allow an exceptional method of delimitation to meet the special circumstances of that country's broad continental shelf. The understanding would be incorporated in the Conference's Final Act.

No agreement was reached on the delimitation of the exclusive economic zone and the continental shelf between States with opposite or adjacent coasts, and on the settlement of delimitation disputes. The Chairman of Negotiating Group 7, Eero J. Manner (Finland), in a report of 24 March issued at the conclusion of the Group's work, suggested a formula to the effect that delimitation in such cases would be effected by agreement in conformity with international law. Such an agreement, the text added, would be in accordance with equitable principles, employing the median or equidistance line, where appropriate, and taking account of all circumstances prevailing in the area concerned. Mr. Manner also proposed that delimitation disputes be settled by compulsory conciliation, a procedure that States parties would be bound to follow but whose outcome they would not be obliged to accept.

The Manner formula mentioned both criteria favoured by the two opposing sides on the issue—delimitation in accordance with equitable principles and the use of a line equidistant between the two coasts. Discussions began on 13 August in a 22-member informal body called Consultations on Delimitation, composed of equal numbers from each side of the issue.

The Second Committee agreed on revised provisions for the protection of marine mammals and the extension of the right of hot pursuit to chases begun in archipelagic waters, as well as the addition of southern bluefin tuna to the list of highly migratory species entitled to protection.

Third Committee

The conduct of marine scientific research, particularly in the 200-mile exclusive economic zone and on the continental shelf, was the only Third Committee issue which had remained outstanding. The Committee held one formal meeting on 4 March 1980 to organize its work and continued discussion of the subject in informal meetings.

The results were reported to the Conference on 28 March by the Committee's Chairman, who suggested a text which he said had widespread support. The revised articles would in principle allow foreign vessels to conduct scientific research in the exclusive economic zone and on the continental shelf, but would also allow the coastal State to withhold consent to such research in areas of its continental shelf which it planned to explore or exploit itself. A foreign researcher would be given a second chance to comply with its obligations towards the coastal State before that State could call a permanent halt to the research on the ground that the researcher had violated those obligations. Another clause provided for compulsory conciliation in disputes where a coastal State was charged with not living up to its obligations under the convention in regard to foreign research.

Another revised article spelled out the rights of land-locked and geographically disadvantaged States with regard to marine scientific research in the exclusive economic zones or on the continental shelves of neighbouring coastal States.

During the resumed session, the Third Committee, on 20 August, approved recommendations by its Chairman for drafting changes in a number of articles. In a report to the Conference dated 25 August, the Chairman noted that the Committee had previously completed substantive negotiations on all parts of the convention entrusted to it, dealing with the marine environment, technology and research. However, at the Committee's meeting of 20 August, several countries, including Brazil, Egypt, India, Spain, and Trinidad and Tobago, wanted negotiations to be continued on some articles, particularly article 263 dealing with the responsibility and liability of States with regard to marine scientific research.

Drafting Committee

The Drafting Committee and its six language groups met informally during both parts of the 1980 session, and also held an intersessional meeting at United Nations Headquarters from 9 to 27 June. The language groups continued to study lists of recurring words and expressions, and engaged in improving the translations of the negotiating text, in preparation for an article-by-article review by the Committee.

The Chairman submitted three reports during the year, one for each of its series of meetings. The reports contained the Committee's recommendations for modifications to the text.

Informal plenary meetings

The Conference held a number of informal plenary meetings on the following issues: the preamble to the convention, dispute settlement, the Preparatory Commission, final clauses and general provisions.

During informal meetings at the first part of the session, the Conference agreed on the text of a preamble, setting out principles on which the convention was to be based. In a report to the Conference dated 29 March, in which he presented the agreed text, the President said it had seemed from the discussion that the preamble should be brief, non-controversial and non-polemical.

On dispute settlement, the President reported on 29 March that agreement had been reached on the one outstanding issue: the appointment of members of a conciliation commission. According to a text by the President, which was accepted at an informal plenary meeting on 24 March, only one of the two conciliators chosen by each side might be its national unless the parties agreed otherwise.

In a report dated 23 August, the President said the Conference, at informal plenary meetings, had responded favourably to a proposal to restructure the dispute settlement part of the negotiating text (part XV), grouping in one section all provisions for compulsory resort to conciliation. In addition, it had accepted his proposal to call the new court to be established under the convention the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea.

The President presented on 14 March an informal draft resolution for the establishment of a Preparatory Commission, which would make arrangements for convening the first sessions of the Assembly and the Council of the Sea-Bed Authority and the Tribunal. The Commission would be empowered to prepare and adopt draft rules of procedure and draft financial regulations for the Assembly and the Council, and would be composed of all States that had signed, ratified or acceded to the convention. It would meet as soon as possible after the lapse of 60 days following the opening of the convention for signature, provided that by that time it had been signed, ratified, acceded to or otherwise accepted by at least 50 States; if the number of States fell short of 50 at that point, the Commission could not be convened until 30 days after the fiftieth signature. Funds would be lent by the United Nations and repaid by the Authority. The United Nations would provide secretariat services.

Reporting to the Conference on 1 April, the President said there had been agreement during the informal meetings on the establishment of a Commission, though a few countries would have preferred its functions to be limited to preparations for the Authority. Regarding its composition, some countries felt that, to ensure broad and representative membership, it should consist of States which had signed the Conference's Final Act rather than being restricted to those which had signed or ratified the convention. While some countries wanted the Commission to take all decisions by consensus, others doubted the need for that as the Commission was only supposed to make recommendations. Concerning the preparation of rules, regulations and procedures of the Authority, some countries strongly felt that they should have provisional effect until the Authority decided otherwise, while others considered that such provisional effect would contravene the powers and functions of the Authority.

The Conference did not deal with the Preparatory Commission proposal at its resumed session.

Several proposals to insert general provisions in the convention, encompassing matters beyond the purview of any main committee, were considered at informal plenary meetings during both parts of the 1980 session. The initial discussions were inconclusive, according to reports by the President of 29 March and 1 April, though there had been broad acceptance of a proposal by Mexico and the United States intended to prevent any State from abusing its rights under the convention. An informal proposal on the peaceful uses of the seas, submitted by

Costa Rica and others, had also received wide support.

On 22 August, the President reported acceptance by the informal plenary meetings of a package of three proposals, concerning good faith and abuse of rights, peaceful uses of the seas, and disclosure of information. Also in August, the informal plenary meetings accepted articles on protection of archaeological and historical objects recovered from the sea-bed, prohibition of amendments to the principle that sea-bed resources were the common heritage of mankind, and responsibility for damage (see p. 145 for a summary of these articles). Consultations were inconclusive on an article proposed by Turkey, stating that the general provisions of the convention were to be applied with due regard to the special characteristics of the region concerned.

The Group of Legal Experts on Final Clauses, established in July 1979,<sup>10</sup> continued its work in informal meetings on certain controversial issues concerning the legal effect of the convention, namely, ratification, amendments, status of annexes, reservations and exceptions, relation to other conventions, denunciation and entry into force. Most of these clauses were accepted at informal plenary meetings during the resumed session, according to a report by the President dated 23 August. One of them provided for the convention to enter into force after ratification or accession by 60 States. (For a summary of these articles, see p. 145.)

Second revision of the negotiating text

After reviewing the reports submitted to the Conference and the debate on them in April, the collegium decided to include in the second revision of the informal composite negotiating text all proposals submitted by the Chairmen of the three main committees as well as the text suggested by the Chairman of Negotiating Group 7 (on delimitation of maritime boundaries) and the texts of the preamble and on dispute settlement proposed by the President as a result of negotiations at informal plenary meetings. A memorandum by the President, accompanying the text, stated that the Second Committee Chairman had expressed reservations about the inclusion of the text on delimitation.

The second revised text consisted of the preamble, 16 parts containing 303 articles, a transitional provision (on territories) and eight annexes.

The eight-paragraph preamble, which had not been in previous texts, mentioned the historic significance of the convention, cited the need for a new and generally acceptable convention, and stressed that the problems of ocean space were closely interrelated. It referred to the desirability of establishing a new legal order for the oceans which would contribute to a just international economic order, and voiced the desire to develop the principles of the 1970 General Assembly Declaration of Principles Governing the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor, and the Subsoil Thereof, beyond the Limits of National Jurisdiction that the sea-bed and its resources were the common heritage of mankind." It expressed the belief that the convention would contribute to the strengthening of peace and security, and affirmed that matters not regulated by the convention would continue to be governed by general international law.

Part I, on the use of terms, remained unchanged. The only change in part II, on the territorial sea and contiguous zone, was in article 25, on the rights of protection of the coastal State. A coastal State could suspend temporarily in specified areas of its territorial sea the innocent passage of foreign ships if this was essential to its security, including weapons exercises. There were no changes in part III, on straits used for international navigation, or part IV, on archipelagic States.

In part V, on the exclusive economic zone, articles 65 and 74 were changed. Article 65, on marine mammals, would explicitly permit coastal States and international organizations to impose stricter rules of exploitation than the convention itself provided, and encourage States to work through international organizations for the conservation, management and study of cetaceans. Article 74 dealt with the delimitation of the zone between States with opposite or adjacent coasts. Delimitation would be effected by agreement in conformity with international law and in accordance with equitable principles, employing the median or equidistance line, where appropriate, and taking account of all circumstances in the area. Pending agreement, the States concerned should make every effort to enter into provisional arrangements of a practical nature and not to jeopardize or hamper the reaching of a final agreement.

In part VI, dealing with the continental shelf, there were changes in articles 76 and 83. The definition of the continental shelf in article 76 was the same as in the previous text, except for the addition of a sentence excluding from the shelf the deep ocean floor with its ocean ridges, and a paragraph limiting the shelf to 350 nautical miles from the coastal baselines where the outer limit was on a submarine ridge. The limits established by the coastal State, taking into account recommendations by the projected Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf, would be final and binding. A new annex II defined the powers, functions and mode of operation of this 21-member Commission. Article 83, on the delimitation of the continental shelf between States with opposite or adjacent coasts, had the same changes as article 74.

In part VII, on the high seas, the only change was in article 111, on the right of hot pursuit. That right was extended to chases begun in archipelagic waters. Parts VIII, IX and X, on the régime of islands, on enclosed or semi-enclosed seas, and on the right of access of land-locked States to and from the sea and freedom of transit, respectively, remained unchanged.

In part XI, on the international sea-bed Area, there were a number of changes. In article 151, concerning production policies, a new clause placed a floor under the application of the existing formula, according to which sea-bed producers would be guaranteed a 60 per cent share in the growth of world nickel consumption. The effect of the new clause was to specify that, in calculating the sea-bed share, an annual consumption increase of at least 3 per cent would be assumed, thereby guaranteeing a larger market for sea-bed producers even at times of sluggish growth in demand. At the same time, to protect land-based producers from a declining share of the market, the increase for sea-bed producers would be limited to 100 per cent of the actual consumption increase. Several other changes affecting the operation of production control were made in this article.

Article 155 called for the convening of a Review Conference 15 years after the start of the first commercial production from the sea-bed. The Conference would be given five years to evaluate the mining system and its benefits. If it failed to agree, it would have another year to adopt amendments to the system by a two-thirds vote. The amendments would enter into force for all States parties 30 days after two thirds of them ratified, acceded to or accepted the amendments.

A new paragraph in article 157, on the nature and fundamental principles of the International Sea-Bed Authority, stated that the Authority would have the powers and functions conferred on it by the convention as well as incidental powers needed to perform those powers and functions. A revised article 158, on the organs of the Authority, would require each organ to avoid taking any action which might derogate from or impede the exercise of powers and functions conferred on another organ. Article 160, on the powers and functions of the Assembly, described it as the Authority's supreme organ and gave it the power to decide which organ should deal with any question not specifically entrusted by the convention to any organ. A footnote was added to article 161, on the composition, procedure and voting of the Authority's Council, stating that productive negotiations had commenced on the subject of decision-making. The Legal and Technical Commission, the subject of article 165, was to have additional powers for the protection of the marine environment.

Changes were made in article 188, which provided for the submission of sea-bed disputes to a special chamber of the Law of the Sea Tribunal or an ad hoc chamber of the Tribunal's Sea-Bed Disputes Chamber or to binding arbitration. Contract disputes were to be submitted to binding commercial arbitration unless agreed otherwise by the parties. A commercial arbitral tribunal would not be competent to interpret the convention; questions of interpretation would have to be referred to the Sea-Bed Disputes Chamber.

There were a number of changes in annex III, on the basic conditions of prospecting, exploration and exploitation. Regarding technology transfer, the revised text stated that every contract with the Authority authorizing an operator to explore or exploit the deep sea-bed would spell out the operator's obligations to transfer technology, including the commitment to make available to the Authority, on fair and reasonable commercial terms and conditions, the technology he was legally entitled to transfer. In the case of technology owned by a third party, the operator would have to obtain a written assurance from the owner that it would be made available to the Enterprise on request, and he would have to take all feasible measures to acquire the legal right to transfer it to the Enterprise. The operator would also be obliged to transfer technology to developing countries mining the deep sea-bed, but only when the Enterprise had not requested or received technology from him. If the Enterprise could not obtain the technology it needed to begin operations, the Council or Assembly could convene a meeting of States to take steps to ensure that the technology was made available. The technology transfer obligations could be invoked until 10 years after the Enterprise had begun commercial production. Technology was defined in the annex as the equipment and know-how needed for a viable system.

Other changes in this annex included: tighter limitations to ensure against monopolization of sea-bed mining by a particular country; additional criteria to guide the Authority in deciding whether to grant priority to a particular applicant for a mine site; and giving the Authority power to impose penalties, including fines and contract suspension or termination, in cases of contract violation.

The Statute of the Enterprise, set out in annex IV, also contained numerous changes. The Enterprise was to operate on sound commercial principles and enjoy autonomy in the conduct of its operations. Its Governing Board was to take decisions by an absolute majority of eight of its 15 members, who would be paid by the Enterprise. The Board's powers and functions would include the development of plans of work and programmes for the Enterprise's mining activities, the submission of work plans to the Council, approval of the results of negotiations on the acquisition of technology, establishment of terms and conditions for joint arrangements with outside entities, budget approval and borrowing. The Director-General of the Enterprise would be directly responsible to the Board and subject to rules and regulations approved by it.

The Enterprise would be exempted from paying income taxes to the Authority during its first 10 years of commercial production. The amount of funds needed for its first mining operation would be recommended by the Preparatory Commission. In the event that the Enterprise did not obtain all the funds it needed from the States which initially adhered to the convention, they could be asked to contribute supplementary amounts until more States came in, at which time the extra payments and loans would be refunded. The schedule of repayment to States would be adopted by the Assembly on recommendation of the Council and advice from the Governing Board. The funds made available to the Enterprise would be in freely usable or convertible currencies. The Enterprise would negotiate with host countries for immunity from national taxation.

Part XII, on protection and preservation of the marine environment, remained unchanged, but several changes were made in part XIII, dealing with marine scientific research.

A new paragraph in article 242, on promotion of international co-operation, would require a State to enable other States to obtain information necessary to prevent and control damage to the health and safety of persons and the environment.

Article 246, on the conduct of marine scientific research in the exclusive economic zone and on the continental shelf, contained a new provision on research in the outer shelf (beyond 200 miles from shore): a coastal State would not be able to withhold consent to such research except in areas which it had designated for exploitation or exploration. Regarding research projects under the auspices of or undertaken by an international organization, article 247 provided that the coastal State should be deemed to have authorized such a project if it had approved it when the organization decided to undertake it or if the State was willing to participate in the project. Article 253 dealt with suspension or cessation of research activities: a coastal State could require the suspension of a project on grounds specified in the article, but once those conditions had been met it would have to lift the suspension order and allow research to continue; if the researcher did not comply within a reasonable time, the coastal State could require cessation.

Revised article 254, on the rights of neighbouring land-locked and geographically disadvantaged States, would require a researcher to notify the coastal State of any notice of a proposed research project given to such a neighbouring State. An expert appointed by a land-locked or geographically disadvantaged State could participate in a research project if the coastal State did not object to the expert appointed.

There were no changes in part XIV, on the development and transfer of marine technology.

In part XV, on dispute settlement, two articles were revised. Article 296, which set out limitations on the applicability of the convention's compulsory settlement section, listed two types of disputes over marine research which the coastal State would not be obliged to submit to binding third-party settlement: disputes involving the right or discretion of coastal States to withhold consent for research in their exclusive economic zone and on their continental shelf, and disputes over a decision by the coastal State to order suspension or cessation of research. If in such matters a researching State alleged that the coastal State was not acting in accordance with the convention, the dispute would have to go to conciliation, but the conciliation commission could not call into question the discretionary right of the coastal State to bar certain types of research in the economic zone or on the continental shelf, or to exclude foreigners from resource-related research in designated areas of the outer shelf.

In article 298, allowing optional exceptions to binding dispute-settlement procedures, a new paragraph would require States involved in a dispute over sea boundaries to submit it to conciliation. If the parties were then unable to negotiate an agreement on the basis of the conciliation commission's report, they would be obliged, by mutual consent, to submit the question to other binding procedures.

Annex V, on conciliation, was revised to provide that only one of the two conciliators chosen by each side to sit on a conciliation commission might be its national, unless otherwise agreed.

Draft convention on the law of the sea (informal text)

At the end of the resumed session in August 1980, the collegium prepared a draft convention (informal text) which contained a preamble, 17 parts consisting of 320 articles, a transitional provision and eight annexes. Compared to the second revision of the negotiating text (described in the preceding section), the only changes appeared in: part XI, on the international sea-bed Area, and related annexes; part XV, on dispute settlement (rearranged); part XVI, new to the text and containing general provisions; and part XVII, final clauses.

Article 150 in part XI added two guidelines for policies relating to sea-bed activities: development of the common heritage for the benefit of mankind as a whole, and conditions of market access for sea-bed minerals no more favourable than those applied to imports from other sources.

A reference to other measures of economic adjustment assistance, as an alternative to compensation, was added to a paragraph in article 151, on production policies, requiring the Assembly to assist land-based developing country producers harmed as a result of sea-bed production. The Assembly would also, on request, study the problems of States likely to be most seriously affected.

Under the review procedure provided for in article 155, amendments to the sea-bed part of the convention adopted at a future Review Conference would enter into force one year after two thirds of the States parties had ratified, acceded to or accepted them.

In article 161, on the composition, procedure and voting of the Council, one change was made in the list of interest groups to be represented: potential land-based producers of the types of minerals to be derived from the sea-bed were mentioned as part of the developing country representation on the 36-member Council.

The article spelled out a new voting formula, the key element of which was the extensive use of a consensus procedure. Consensus-defined as the absence of any formal objection-would be required for adoption of the rules, regulations and procedures for sea-bed mining, as well as for recommendations to the Assembly on rules for the distribution of economic benefits to States, decisions on protection of mineral-producing developing countries against adverse economic effects of sea-bed mining, and the adoption of amendments to the sea-bed part of the convention. A conciliation commission could be set up to promote consensus. Other substantive matters would be decided either by two-thirds or three-fourths majorities, depending on the nature of the issue, and procedural questions would be decided by a simple majority of members present and voting.

Article 162, on the Council's powers and functions, included a revised procedure for the approval of sea-bed miners' plans of work. Such a plan, once it was endorsed by the Council's Legal and Technical Commission, would be deemed to have been approved by the Council unless the Council disapproved it by consensus of all members other than the State sponsoring the applicant. A plan disapproved by the commission could be approved by a three-fourths vote of the Council. Under another paragraph, the Council (by a three-fourths majority) would make a selection among applicants for production authorizations when the total of what all producers wanted to mine exceeded the annual production ceiling.

Under article 163, on organs of the Council, the decision-making procedures of the Legal and Technical Commission and the Economic Planning Commission would be established by the rules, regulations and procedures of the Authority. Their members, 15 for each commission, would be elected for five-year terms from among persons nominated by States parties on the basis of competence and integrity. The members would be prohibited from having any financial interest in sea-bed activities and from disclosing industrial secrets they learned while working for the Authority. Under article 165, the Legal and Technical Commission was given the additional task of calculating the production ceiling for all sea-bed mining and issuing production authorizations to individual mining entities within that ceiling.

Article 183, on the Authority's immunities from national taxation, was revised to specify that the immunities would extend only to transactions within the scope of its official activities and not to taxes which were no more than charges for services. Goods exempt from tax could not be resold except as agreed with the State concerned. States would not be permitted to tax the pay of persons working for the Authority who were not their nationals.

In annex III, on basic conditions of prospecting, exploration and exploitation, most of the changes concerned technology transfer. A new provision would give a sea-bed contractor 45 days to revise his offer in a case where a commercial arbitration body found that he had not complied with the requirement that he make technology available to the Authority on fair and reasonable terms and conditions. Where the technology sought by the Enterprise was owned by a third party, the contractor would be bound to acquire, whenever he could do so without substantial cost to himself, a legally binding and enforceable right to transfer it to the Enterprise.

According to another addition in this annex, the selection of applicants for production authorizations would be made so as to avoid discrimination against any State or system.

The Statute of the Enterprise, contained in annex IV, included several changes in regard to the financing of that organ's first mining operation. The amount of funds needed for that purpose, and the criteria and factors for adjusting that amount, would be included by the Preparatory Commission in the Authority's draft rules, regulations and procedures. The Assembly, at its first session, would adopt by consensus measures to deal with any shortfall that might result if the contributions of States parties to the convention were less than the Enterprise needed. The interest-free loans to be made to the Enterprise by all States parties would take the form of irrevocable non-negotiable non-interest-bearing promissory notes which the Enterprise would cash as needed, in accordance with a schedule to be drawn up by its Governing Board.

Part XV, on dispute settlement, was rearranged into three sections, dealing respectively with voluntary procedures, compulsory procedures entailing binding decisions, and limitations and optional exceptions. In the last section were grouped all procedures involving compulsory resort to conciliation. The body previously referred to as the Law of the Sea Tribunal was named the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea. A new section in annex V, on conciliation, detailed the procedural aspects of this form of settlement.

The new part XVI contained general provisions concerning the application or interpretation of the convention as a whole or relating to matters going beyond the scope of other parts. Under article 300, States would be required to discharge their obligations in good faith and not to abuse their rights, jurisdictions and freedoms under the convention. Article 301 would oblige States parties to refrain from any threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State. Article 302 would exempt States from having to supply information if disclosure would harm their essential security interests. By article 303, States would have the duty to protect archaeological and historical objects found at sea; a coastal State could treat their removal from the contiguous zone (up to 24 miles from shore) as a violation of its regulations. Article 304 stated that the convention's provisions on responsibility and liability for damage were without prejudice to the application of existing rules and the development of new ones.

Part XVII set out the convention's final clauses, most of them appearing in the text for the first time. The convention would be open for signature for 24 months after its adoption (article 305). It would enter into force 12 months after the sixtieth State had adhered to it (article 308).

No reservations or exceptions could be made to the convention unless expressly permitted by other articles (article 309). A State would not be precluded from making declarations or statements that did not purport to alter the legal effect of the convention (article 310). The new convention would prevail, for the States adhering to it, over the 1958 Geneva Conventions on the law of the sea,<sup>12</sup> and no amendments could be made to the basic principle that the sea-bed and its resources were the common heritage of mankind (article 311).

Under articles 312 to 316, amendments to the convention could be made as follows: for sea-bed matters, amendments would have to be approved by the Assembly and the Council, followed by acceptance by three-fourths of the States parties; for the other parts of the convention, amendments would have to be approved by a conference and accepted by two thirds or by 60 of the States parties, whichever number was greater. In the case of non-controversial amendments, a simplified procedure without convening a conference would be applied if no State objected.

A State could cease to be a party to the convention by denouncing it, with effect from one year after its notification reached the Secretary-General (article 317). The Secretary-General would act as depositary of the convention, and also report on issues of a general nature that had arisen with respect to it (article 319).

Discussion in plenary meetings

The Conference met on 2 and 3 April for a general discussion on proposed changes to the first revision of the negotiating text. Most of the 91 speakers favoured the preparation of a revised text on the basis of the proposals made by the President and the Chairmen of the main committees and negotiating groups, although some countries expressed reservations and stressed the need for further negotiation.

Following the incorporation of these changes into the second revision of the text, the Conference held a general debate from 25 to 27 August at which 120 delegations expressed their views on the new text and on the results of the latest negotiations. Again the text was generally endorsed but a number of individual difficulties were placed on record.

A summary of the positions expressed at these two debates follows.

Sea-bed. A number of countries endorsed as a whole the changes affecting sea-bed exploration and exploitation made in the second revision. Among those taking this position were Argentina, Australia, Bahrain, Brazil, Bulgaria, the Bye-

Iorussian SSR, Chile, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, Greece, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Ireland, Jamaica, Kenya, Kuwait, Lesotho, Malawi, Mongolia, New Zealand, the Niger, Norway, Oman, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Poland, the Republic of Korea, Singapore, Sri Lanka, the Syrian Arab Republic, Swaziland, Tonga, Turkey, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates, the United Kingdom, the United States, Uruguay and Viet Nam. Similar broad support by countries from all regions was voiced in August for the changes that were later introduced into the informal draft convention, though Uganda, as Chairman of the Group of 77, said that Group's acceptance did not preclude individual countries from voicing reservations on specific parts of the package.

Members of the Group of 77 called for strengthened provisions to ensure the transfer of technology to the International Sea-Bed Authority on reasonable commercial terms. The Group proposed in April that the text retain a provision prohibiting sea-bed contractors from using a particular item of technology unless they had obtained a written assurance from the supplier that he would also make it available to the Authority.

India urged that specific sanctions be envisaged against third-party owners who did not comply with their obligations towards the Authority. Liberia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Philippines and Tunisia also favoured provisions to ensure that contractors did not evade their obligations.

Speaking of the proposals that were eventually incorporated into the second revised text, Algeria and the United Republic of Tanzania said they undermined the concept of technology transfer by requiring the Enterprise to buy it on the open market and by restricting the definition of the kinds of technology covered. Iran believed they offered no guarantee that technology transfer would take place and failed to provide adequate penalties in the event of failure to respect obligations. Venezuela also doubted the effectiveness of the guarantee to transfer.

Many developing countries, including Algeria, the Congo, the Ivory Coast, Kenya, Liberia, the Libyan Arab -Jamahiriya, Mali, Mauritius, Mexico, Mozambique, Oman, Pakistan, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Swaziland, the Syrian Arab Republic, Yugoslavia and Zaire, asked that mineral-processing technology be explicitly included in the transfer provisions, and most of these also suggested that transport and marketing technology be covered as well.

Commenting on the 10-year period during which the technology transfer obligations would remain in effect after the Enterprise began commercial production, Angola, the Ivory Coast, Mozambique, Pakistan and Sierra Leone asked for removal of the time-limit. Swaziland was not convinced that there should be a limit, while Kenya suggested that it be extended to 25 years. In Jamaica's view, the obligations should continue during the first decade after each contractor (rather than the Enterprise) began commercial operations. On the other hand, the Netherlands wondered whether any extension of the period might not upset the balance of the negotiated package.

Among the industrialized countries, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan and the United States objected to the provision requiring contractors to transfer technology to developing countries, and the United Kingdom voiced reservations on the same clause. Japan also found difficulty in endorsing the provision on transfer of technology owned by a third party, stating that it would discourage private enterprise from participating in sea-bed mining. Italy asked for further negotiations on technology transfer. The Netherlands could accept the obligation of technology transfer but urged that the language be kept flexible to accommodate differing national laws. Sweden and Switzerland found the proposals generally acceptable, though Switzerland had difficulties about the transfer to developing countries.

Industrialized countries expressed concern about arrangements for financing the sea-bed system, including the Enterprise. Austria, Belgium, the German Democratic Republic, Japan, the Netherlands, Sweden and the USSR wanted some advance indication of how much they would have to pay to establish and operate the Enterprise's first sea-bed mine site. Czechoslovakia urged that a limit be placed on amounts required from individual States, while Italy wanted the total sum to be fixed. Poland believed the financial burden placed on States should be proportionate to the benefits they would derive from sea-bed exploitation. Spain feared that an undue financial burden would be imposed on medium-sized industrialized States which would not immediately benefit from sea-bed mining. Switzerland voiced concern that some States might delay ratifying the convention because of the provision making the original parties responsible for covering any shortfall caused by the failure of others to adhere. Several States welcomed the changes in the financial provisions proposed in August and later incorporated into the informal text.

Some developing countries, such as Nigeria, questioned whether the financial arrangements for the Enterprise were adequate. Bhutan and Nepal thought the least developed countries should be exempt from making financial contributions, and Tonga said a way must be found to alleviate the financial burden on small States. The Ivory Coast and Mauritius thought that the funds to be loaned and guaranteed by all States should not be restricted to the Enterprise's first project. Sri Lanka regretted that the negotiators had not agreed to exempt the Enterprise from all taxes, though it welcomed changes in the text tending to enhance the Enterprise's financial independence. Trinidad and Tobago suggested that all States, whether participants or not, had a duty to contribute to the Enterprise because they were all entitled to share in the benefits. Viet Nam would have preferred the Enterprise's first mine site to be underwritten mainly by sea-bed contractors.

Belgium, Italy, Japan and the Netherlands were critical of the tax rates to be paid to the Authority by sea-bed contractors; Belgium thought they were so high as to eliminate any prospect of profitability and jeopardize investment prospects. The Federal Republic of Germany proposed that the rates be halved for contractors starting commercial production before the year 2000. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on the other hand, said the Enterprise should be able to change the rates if it felt they were not commensurate with the immense profits of contractors.

Mauritius and Morocco urged changes in the text to guarantee the autonomy of the Enterprise.

Differing views about sea-bed production policies continued to be expressed by large consuming and investing countries, which stressed the need to maximize opportunities for the development of sea-bed resources, and by land-based mineral producers, which feared that their own economies would suffer if sea-bed miners gained too large a share of the market.

Several industrialized countries expressed dissatisfaction with proposed limitations on sea-bed mining. Belgium, for example, thought many countries might be reluctant to ratify the convention if there could only be about a dozen sea-bed mine sites, particularly as the financial contributions to be required of Governments were so high. The Federal Republic of Germany expressed concern that, by limiting the number of mine sites, production control could render meaningless the convention's guarantees of assured access to sea-bed minerals. Opposing any production limitation, Italy said it wanted to discourage any proposal that might prejudice not only the interests of the industrialized countries but those of the consumer countries in particular, including most of the developing countries. The Netherlands considered that any limitation system should last only until world-wide arrangements were made between producers and consumers, and should afford reasonable opportunities for producing sea-bed minerals. Concern about restrictions on sea-bed production was also voiced in April by the United States, but it said in August that the latest formula, though far from ideal, was balanced and the issue should be regarded as closed.

Other countries viewed more positively the revised production-policy text that had emerged from the negotiations. Cuba accepted it but hoped the provisions to protect developing land-based producers would be strengthened. Denmark and Sweden viewed it as the maximum restriction on sea-bed production that could be accepted. Indonesia, concerned that land-based producers not be harmed by sea-bed production, noted that the negotiations seemed to have produced a basis for consensus. Norway regarded the text as a major contribution but said the production ceiling might need further study. Eastern European countries generally supported the new text as a basis of compromise; the German Democratic Republic and Hungary also stressed the need to protect the interests of commodity exporters.

On the other hand, Angola thought the formula should be refined to meet the interests of land-based producing States and potential producers, taking due account of possible catastrophic effects on the economies of certain developing countries. Concern about the effects of the formula on such producers was also voiced by Burundi, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Malaysia, Mali, Papua New Guinea and the United Republic of Tanzania. Swaziland suggested study of a possible provision for consultations between interested parties and for remedial measures when a developing land-based producer country was adversely affected. Hungary, Liberia, the Republic of Korea, Senegal and Yugoslavia stressed the need to balance the requirements of land-based producers on the one hand and of developing country consumers and sea-bed miners on the other. Lesotho urged that negotiations on the subject continue.

The Group of 77 proposed certain changes in the production-control formula that would have had the effect of reducing the production guarantee to sea-bed miners and ensuring a larger share for land-based producers during periods of low market demand. Zaire urged the Conference to go even further in that direction, arguing that the proposed formula would not prevent sea-bed producers from dominating the market, would restrict land-based production and prevent the emergence of new producers because no one would risk huge sums to enter a glutted market. Zambia warned that the formula would create a catastrophic situation for developing land-based producers dependent on mining by forcing them to cut back on production during periods of low market growth. Zimbabwe proposed that sea-bed production not be permitted to exceed an amount that would cause land-based production to drop below its latest five-year average. Canada, the Ivory Coast and the Philippines thought that the figures in the production-guarantee clause should have been omitted from the revised text because there had not been agreement on them. However, Japan considered that the production guarantee for sea-bed miners in the existing text was insufficient to attract contractors, especially at the initial stage.

Argentina, Australia, Canada, Chile, Colombia and Zimbabwe pressed for an anti-subsidy clause to ensure that sea-bed miners would not obtain an unfair economic advantage.

Strengthening the proposed compensation scheme for affected land-based producers was supported by Angola, Chile, the Ivory Coast, Malawi, Morocco, Zaire and Zambia. Mauritius welcomed the provision for compensation but said it must not become a first charge on the revenues of the Authority, which must be fairly distributed among all States. Nigeria regarded the promise of compensation as illusory, and the Philippines said the idea was practically negated by the fact that consensus in the Council would be required to implement it.

Bhutan feared that a clause added during the August negotiations, specifying that the benefits derived from the deep sea-bed be shared on a non-discriminatory basis, would prevent the least developed countries from receiving the special consideration they deserved.

Referring to a provision whereby a sea-bed operator's plan of work would be deemed to have been approved unless it was challenged in the Council after acceptance by the Legal and Technical Commission, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United States favoured better safeguards to ensure the Commission's impartiality and to protect the rights of applicants for contracts. On the other hand, Algeria and Indonesia regretted that this provision would make approval of work plans almost automatic, whereas under the earlier text they would not have been approved if it meant surpassing the production limitation in effect; Algeria said the provision opened the way for more intensive exploitation of the sea-bed in a manner seriously detrimental to land-based producers.

Eastern European countries asked that the provision to prevent monopoly control be extended to the part of the sea-bed reserved to the Enterprise and to developing countries, particularly in cases where firms from developed countries participated in joint ventures. France pressed for what it described as a truly effective anti-monopoly clause.

Regarding decision-making in the Council of the Authority, many developing countries expressed willingness to accept the compromise voting scheme worked out in August, but some regarded it as unsatisfactory because of its emphasis on decision by consensus, which they feared would paralyse the Council by subjecting it to a veto. Among those voicing concern about the effects of the consensus rule were Algeria, Angola, Bahrain, Cape Verde, the Congo, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guyana, Indonesia, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Kenya, Kuwait, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mauritius, Mozambique, Nigeria, the Philippines, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Swaziland, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zaire. Mali voiced concern because of the number of matters to be decided by a three-fourths majority. New Zealand described the voting scheme and the formula for composition of the Council as complex and cumbersome.

On the other hand, Fiji viewed the decision-making scheme as offering the only possible compromise, and said the consensus procedure was deeply rooted in many third world cultures where people were encouraged to take account of one another's views and interests. Jamaica described the formula as an assertion of the will of the international community to liberate itself from domination by the powerful. The Republic of Korea welcomed the breakthrough achieved on this point but thought safeguards were needed to ensure that the consensus method was not used to paralyse the Council.

A number of speakers suggested specific changes in the formula requiring different majorities for different types of decisions. Thus, China and Kenya thought that a number of questions should be resolved by a two-thirds rather than a three-fourths majority, though China said it would not object to the August formula if most countries accepted it. Colombia, Indonesia, Kuwait and Zimbabwe did not want the consensus rule to apply to action the Council might take to protect land-based producers from being harmed by sea-bed production. Bahrain, Kuwait, Qatar, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Nations Council for Namibia took the same position in regard to Council decisions on the distribution to States and peoples of benefits from sea-bed production; Kuwait noted that the recognition of liberation movements was involved in this issue. Canada was concerned that a three-fourths majority would be required before the Council could act to protect environmentally sensitive areas. Pakistan, Somalia, and Trinidad and Tobago thought that decisions as to which voting majority would be required in specific cases should be made by a simple majority.

Eastern European countries and Mongolia, emphasizing the need to take account of the interests of all political and social systems represented in the Council, took the position in April that the best compromise lay in the earlier negotiating text, which provided for decisions by a three-fourths majority. As an alternative, they favoured a system originally suggested by Mongolia in the First Committee by which decisions on substantive questions would require a two-thirds vote of all members participating in a given session and would be valid only if negative votes were not cast by a simple majority in any two out of the five interest groups making up the Council or by the whole of a geographical group. This suggestion was supported by Cuba and Viet Nam, the latter adding that the voting system must be one that would prevent a small group of Western developed States from imposing their will on the Council by a sort of collective veto. However, when the new proposal on voting was made at the resumed session, the Eastern European countries supported it.

Speaking in April before the compromise formula was presented, the United States stressed the need of giving adequate protection to the real economic interests at stake in sea-bed mining. Speaking in August after the new formula emerged, Austria said it might paralyse the Council and did not seem to have been designed as an instrument of executive and managerial efficiency. France welcomed it as offering a safeguard rather than a privilege for the interests of the industrialized countries.

Austria, Greece, Portugal, Spain, Sweden and Switzerland suggested that the Council be slightly enlarged to accommodate the smaller and medium-sized industrialized States. They feared that such States would be excluded from membership for excessive periods because they did not qualify under any of the special interest categories that would determine the composition of the Council under the existing text. Others favouring some formula to accommodate such States were Belgium, Finland, Honduras,

Norway, Senegal, and Turkey, though Norway added that this must be done in a way that did not call into question the agreed decision-making procedures. New Zealand thought it unfair that developed States which were not major mineral producers would be inadequately represented on the Council, since most of them would be substantial contributors to the Authority and the Enterprise. Greece urged better representation for States with special maritime interests, while Morocco and Portugal suggested that countries supplying the labour force for maritime activities should be represented.

The Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Japan, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and the United States opposed efforts to revise the compromise reached in August on the composition of the Council and its voting system. The Netherlands and the United Kingdom feared that any change in the Council's size would upset the voting scheme.

Argentina, Colombia and Guatemala expressed the view that the special interests of potential land-based mineral producers must be represented—a point which was endorsed by Honduras in August after it was added to the second revision of the negotiating text. Senegal urged that "potential producer" be defined. The Republic of Korea felt that the interests of developing consumer countries heavily dependent on mineral imports had not been given sufficient importance.

Algeria, Angola, Egypt, Madagascar, Tunisia, the United Arab Emirates and the United Republic of Tanzania were concerned that the Council's powers might outweigh those of the Assembly. Kenya suggested that the Assembly be given the right to discuss any matter on which a negative decision by the Council might paralyse implementation of the convention.

With regard to the procedure for review of the sea-bed mining system 15 years after the start of commercial production, a number of industrialized countries, including the Federal Republic of Germany, welcomed the abandonment of the provision in previous texts that would have permitted a moratorium on new sea-bed mining contracts if agreement on changes in the system had not been reached within five years after the start of a Review Conference. However, they said they could not accept the latest proposal to permit the sea-bed part of the convention to be amended by two thirds of the States parties.

Several developing countries described the new review formula as acceptable, but others, including Algeria, Bahrain, the Congo, Guyana, India, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Kenya, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritius, Mozambique, Nigeria, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Swaziland, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia, favoured retention of the moratorium proposal. Angola and Guyana thought the review provision needed further work to ensure respect for sea-bed resources as a common heritage.

Referring to the question of preparatory investments prior to the entry into force of the convention, the United States said in August that the convention must contain arrangements to facilitate the incorporation of existing sea-bed exploration activities into the treaty regime and to prepare for an early start of the Enterprise.

Territorial sea. Albania, Algeria, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Cape Verde, China, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Guatemala, Guyana, Iran, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malta, Morocco, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Somalia, the Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, the United Arab Emirates and Uruguay supported a proposal that the innocent passage of foreign warships through the territorial sea should be subject to prior authorization by or notification to the coastal State. The Republic of Korea proposed an alternative text providing only for prior notification. Egypt and the United Arab Emirates said coastal State authorization should also be required for the passage of nuclear-powered ships or vessels carrying dangerous goods. Finland and Sweden said coastal States already had the right to require prior notification of the passage of warships.

The Federal Republic of Germany said that innocent passage by all ships was a fundamental right. The United Kingdom and the United States opposed the proposal for prior authorization or notification and, along with Nigeria, urged retention of the existing text, giving all vessels the right of innocent passage. Australia, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Hungary, Mongolia and the Ukrainian SSR also opposed revision of the existing text.

In the view of the United Republic of Tanzania, the definition of innocent passage did not strike the right balance between the interests of coastal and other States.

Albania said each coastal State had the right to define its territorial waters up to a reasonable width, taking account of individual conditions and the interests of others. Ecuador maintained that States should be able to extend their territorial sea to 200 miles, as Ecuador had done. Somalia, which had also proclaimed a 200-mile territorial sea, said the convention should protect such acquired rights, either by allowing reservations or by incorporating a safeguard clause.

The Federal Republic of Germany said the right laid down in the negotiating text to extend the limit to 12 miles should not be exercised to the detriment of other States and was dependent on acceptance of passage through straits used for international navigation. Turkey stated that the right to a 12-mile territorial sea should not be exercised unilaterally in semi-enclosed seas without taking account of the rights of others.

Three countries objected to a provision in the negotiating text to the effect that, when two States disagreed on where to draw the line between overlapping territorial seas, they could not go beyond the midway point unless historic title or other special circumstances dictated otherwise. Argentina called the provision unacceptable unless agreement could be reached on delimitation of the exclusive economic zone and the continental shelf. Venezuela said the provision should be brought into line with the delimitation clauses covering those other maritime zones. In Romania's view, the basic principles in such cases should be equality and agreement between the States concerned.

Peru and a number of other countries seeking changes in the text concerning the territorial sea and other zones of national jurisdiction objected during the August debate that other delegations appeared unwilling to negotiate on outstanding matters within the purview of the Second Committee. Others, however, including Colombia, Cuba, Indonesia and Eastern European countries, said they would oppose any attempt to reopen negotiations on already agreed issues.

Straits used for international navigation. The articles on this topic were generally endorsed in the discussion. However, Albania said there could be no automatic right of free passage through a strait leading to an enclosed or semi-enclosed sea. A provision permitting innocent passage from the open sea through a strait leading to the territorial sea of another State was opposed by Kuwait on the ground that States might have to suspend passage of hostile ships menacing their territorial integrity and independence.

Iran opposed the provision permitting overflight of straits by foreign aircraft. Morocco and Spain asked that the criteria for the passage of aircraft and vessels be made more precise, and that the obligations assumed by user States be accompanied by adequate provisions concerning responsibility. In Oman's view, a number of States bordering straits had not received equitable treatment. The United Republic of Tanzania considered that the provisions on straits were discriminatory and put undue emphasis on super-power military use.

Archipelagic States. The Philippines regretted that recognition of archipelagic waters had been made conditional on requiring the archipelagic State to designate sea lanes through those waters for the passage of foreign vessels, and to accept the right of overflight of those lanes—a right not enjoyed over the territorial sea.

Exclusive economic zone. Bahrain, Iraq and Poland urged that the text be revised to accommodate the need of geographically disadvantaged States to fish in neighbouring maritime areas. Bahrain and Mali did not want to see such States confined to "surplus" fish stocks. Romania suggested an amendment to give them access to the fisheries of neighbouring regions if their own region was poor in living resources; this suggestion was supported by Albania, Cape Verde, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Dominica, Poland, Tonga, Turkey and Zaire, though Zaire said it needed improvement.

Urging that geographically disadvantaged States be granted more equitable participation in the fisheries of neighbouring States' zones, Nepal said that decisions on the distribution of the zone's resources should be taken by an international organization, not unilaterally, while Bhutan said coastal States should take the recommendations of such organizations into account. Lesotho thought that the nationals of a land-locked State should have the same status as those of coastal States or should be given preferential treatment.

Malawi felt that provisions favourable to coastal States should be reconsidered. Mongolia said it would have liked to see improvements that took account of the rights of land-locked and geographically disadvantaged States. The Niger opposed any attempt to reopen debate with the aim of further diminishing the modest rights granted to those States.

Speaking of the provision giving developing land-locked States the right to share in fishing resources within their region, even when the coastal State approached the point where it could harvest the whole of the catch itself, Austria and Switzerland said the text should not draw a distinction between developed and developing land-locked States.

Kuwait and Spain thought the text did not safeguard the interests of States whose nationals had traditionally fished in areas previously considered to be high seas. Zaire interpreted the term "States with special geographical characteristics" to cover States that had traditionally fished in waters which would, under the convention, become another State's economic zone.

Taking a different view, Pakistan said it did not recognize any other State's right to resources in the zone and voiced strong reservations on the articles pertaining to this matter. Ecuador suggested changes to ensure that no decisions on the management of highly migratory species in the zone were taken without coastal State consent. The United Republic of Tanzania thought the provisions on the zone impinged too much on the rights of coastal States.

A number of countries, among them Australia, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, France, the German Democratic Republic, Guatemala, Hungary, the Ivory Coast, New Zealand, Peru, the Philippines, Turkey, the USSR, the United Kingdom, Uruguay and Viet Nam, were in favour of the proposed addition to the text on protection of marine mammals (see p. 141), originally submitted by the United States. Japan said it could accept the new wording on the understanding that each stock of such mammals would be dealt with individually, when appropriate, through consultations among the States concerned, taking account of such factors as population and harvesting levels. Denmark expressed its understanding that the assistance of international organizations would be required when necessary in respect of individual stocks.

Argentina urged support for an informal proposal to strengthen the article on the settlement of disputes over the management of fish stocks that straddled neighbouring economic zones and the high seas; it argued that the existing text would not achieve the objective of conserving a resource threatened by the predatory activities of large fishing fleets. Guatemala, Guyana, Kenya, Morocco, Somalia and Turkey were among those supporting this proposal, and Cape Verde said that conservation provisions for such stocks should be strengthened to prevent uncontrolled and selfish depletion.

A revised version of the Argentine proposal, sponsored also by Canada, was endorsed by Costa Rica, Guyana, Morocco, Portugal and Uruguay. Chile called for further negotiations on the basis of this proposal, while Ecuador urged that the article be amended to ensure that regulations applicable beyond the 200-mile limit were brought into line with those of the coastal States concerned.

However, Hungary, Italy (speaking for the European Economic Community (EEC) nations), Somalia, the USSR and Zaire opposed any changes in the articles on fisheries. Japan opposed any restriction on freedom of the high seas and believed that any conservation arrangement for stocks within and beyond the economic zone should be based on voluntary agreement among those concerned.

Brazil said the convention should stipulate that the area beyond the territorial sea must not be used in a manner detrimental to a coastal State's security, and that military exercises in the economic zone required authorization by the coastal State. The United Kingdom called for improvements in the article on removal of off-shore structures in the zone. Uruguay asked for negotiations on responsibility for damage caused in the zone by warships or other non-commercial government vessels as a result of non-observance of coastal State laws and regulations—a point which the text did not cover.

Nepal, supported by Austria, Bhutan, Lesotho, Mali, the Niger, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Swaziland, Uganda, Zaire and Zambia, urged inclusion in the revised negotiating text of its 1978 proposal for a common heritage fund, which would redistribute to developing countries a share of the mineral revenues derived by coastal States from their economic zone and continental shelf.<sup>13</sup> Swaziland said the fund would be a real move in the direction of the new international economic order. Uganda declared that, if the Conference did not affirm that the economic zone was not within the exclusive jurisdiction of coastal States, about 10 such States, most of them developed, would gain the most; the needs of the land-locked and geographically disadvantaged States, which numbered at least 67, should be taken into account.

Continental shelf A number of countries agreed with the formula on the limits of the continental shelf, presented on 29 March by the Chairman of Negotiating Group 6 (see p. 139). These included Ireland and the USSR, authors of two earlier proposals to define the outer limits of the shelf, though the USSR said it was not fully satisfied with the new provision excluding oceanic ridges. Also in favour were Australia, Brazil, the Byelorussian SSR, Costa Rica, Denmark, the German Democratic Republic, Guatemala, Iceland, Italy, Mauritius, Mexico, New Zealand, Norway, the United Kingdom, the United States and Venezuela. China considered the new formula reasonable but suggested an amendment to allow flexibility in view of the great variations in geography and geology. Cuba and Viet Nam also accepted the formula but reiterated their preference for criteria based on distance from shore rather than depth. Nigeria, which had favoured making the shelf coterminous with the exclusive economic zone, said it could accept as a compromise the principles underlying the new text.

Argentina accepted the definition as part of a package but regarded the addition of the clause on oceanic ridges as a further sacrifice of the legitimate interests of coastal States and a restriction on their sovereign rights over the shelf. Mongolia supported what it described as a major concession to the broad-margin States in the hope that they would accommodate the interests of the land-locked and geographically disadvantaged States.

The United Arab Emirates, speaking for the Arab group, which had previously proposed a 200-mile limit, considered that the new definition made the text even more obscure and allowed coastal States to extend their shelves arbitrarily. The group was willing to extend the outer limit beyond 200 miles, but felt that distance rather than depth must be the sole criterion. Austria, Liberia, Nepal, Romania, Swaziland, Sweden, Switzerland and Thailand voiced concern that the definition would extend the jurisdiction of coastal States and thereby reduce the international area of the sea-bed. Dissatisfaction or reservations were also expressed by China, Malta, Yugoslavia and Zaire; the last three favoured a 200-mile limit. Algeria, Bhutan, Mali, Singapore and Swaziland objected that the text allowed for uncertainty in its application. Bangladesh stated that the shelf should be coextensive with the exclusive economic zone and requested special consideration for its own situation because of the peculiar nature of its seaboard.

The new clause on oceanic ridges was criticized by Bahrain, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany and Poland on the ground that it was vague or unnecessary, and by Switzerland, which regarded it as unacceptable if it meant that States could claim certain undersea areas that were not theirs under existing international law. Denmark also objected to a provision permitting States to lay pipelines across the shelf of another State.

Most States welcomed the proposal to establish a Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf, but differing views were expressed on whether the Commission's actions should be taken as definitive. Brazil, France and Venezuela thought the Commission should make non-binding recommendations. The United Kingdom opposed a change in wording, made in the April revision, according to which the final limits established by a coastal State would have to be on the basis of the Commission's recommendations rather than taking them into account, as the previous text had stated. In Uruguay's view, the new language would alter the legal status of the recommendations. Austria, on the other hand, felt there should be a closer link between the recommendations and the final definition of limits.

Singapore questioned the proposal to elect the Commission's members on the basis of geographical distribution, stating that this could give an edge to broad-margin States and those sympathetic to their views. Austria, Bhutan and Mongolia urged that the interests of land-locked and geographically disadvantaged States be represented.

Bhutan, Czechoslovakia and Singapore suggested that the expenses of the members be met by the coastal States concerned or by the Sea-Bed Authority, Singapore added rather than by the State which nominated them. Mali feared that the provision to make the nominating States pay members' expenses would bar developing countries, particularly land-locked ones, from participating in the Commission. Uruguay thought the financial provisions would not safeguard the Commission's autonomy.

The United Kingdom said it was ready to make a contribution under the scheme outlined in the negotiating text whereby coastal States would share with the international community part of the revenue they derived from exploiting the shelf in areas beyond 200 miles, but it regarded the maximum rate of 7 per cent proposed in the text as so high that it would inhibit operations. Canada stated that any revenue-sharing must benefit the developing countries and not burden coastal States. The United States described as inequitable a provision exempting developing countries which were net importers of a mineral produced on their shelf from a revenue-sharing contribution in respect of that mineral.

Austria, Bahrain, Jamaica, Lesotho, Morocco and the Syrian Arab Republic called for increased payments under this scheme so as to benefit countries adversely affected by extension of the shelf beyond 200 miles. Ethiopia, Singapore and Swaziland also thought the proposed rates of contribution were low. Democratic Yemen and the Sudan asked that the formula be reconsidered in the light of the needs of developing countries, and Bhutan and Switzerland also found the text unsatisfactory. Iraq, on behalf of the Arab group, said that peoples who had not yet attained full independence should be able to share in the benefits. Yugoslavia stated that the proposed extension of the shelf could be justified only if the international community benefited substantially from exploitation of the outer shelf.

Boundary delimitation. Delimitation of the exclusive economic zone and the continental shelf between States with adjacent or opposite coasts remained the only unresolved "hard-core" issue. Most speakers continued to favour either "equitable principles" or the median line as the main criterion.

Accepting the new text proposed by the Chairman of Negotiating Group 7 (see p. 139) as a better basis for consensus were Bulgaria, Canada, Cape Verde, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Democratic Yemen (with reservations on dispute settlement), Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Ethiopia, Greece, Guyana, Iceland, Italy, Japan, Malaysia, Malta, Nigeria, Oman, Peru, Portugal, the Republic of Korea, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Spain, Sweden, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates, the United Kingdom and Yugoslavia, although Chile and Spain considered that the criteria in the formula were incomplete and required clarification. Most of these countries had supported the median line approach, and Kuwait, Peru, Spain and the Sudan reiterated such support. Indonesia said the new formula did not adequately reflect the equidistance principle.

Among those favouring a reference to equitable principles and objecting to the new formula were Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, China, Democratic Kampuchea, Dominica, France, Iraq, Ireland, the Ivory Coast, Kenya, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mali, Morocco, Mozambique, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Romania, Senegal, Somalia, Suriname, the Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, Venezuela and Viet Nam. They sought instead to retain the original language, which called for delimitation by agreement in accordance with equitable principles, employing, where appropriate, the median and equidistance line, and taking account of all relevant circumstances. Venezuela stressed that agreement between the States concerned in a delimitation dispute was the best means of reaching equitable solutions; if the text did not take sufficient account of the vital interests involved, a number of States would be unable to ratify the convention.

Iran doubted whether the reference in the new text to international law would suffice without further clarification, and the Republic of Korea also regarded the reference as ambiguous. Thailand considered all the proposed texts to be acceptable, since delimitation was subject to the agreement of the parties to employ suitable criteria. Viet Nam agreed that the formula should refer to international law, on the clear understanding that that law was based on equity.

The German Democratic Republic, Iran, Pakistan and Poland endorsed the Negotiating Group Chairman's proposal for dispute settlement by compulsory resort to conciliation. Nigeria and Somalia said they could accept compulsory conciliation but not binding adjudication. Mozambique and the USSR opposed the compulsory arbitration procedure called for in the previous negotiating text, stating that settlement could be reached only by negotiation or other methods agreed by the parties. Cuba also opposed any procedure for binding settlement involving third parties, while the Ukrainian SSR and Viet Nam expressed preference for direct negotiation on the basis of mutual respect for independence and sovereignty.

The Netherlands advocated a compulsory dispute-settlement procedure strengthened by a clause enabling each party to request a final and binding determination by an international tribunal. Greece and the United Arab Emirates warned that the failure to provide for a binding procedure could delay the settlement of disputes. Bangladesh, Chile, Guyana and Spain also favoured a binding third-party procedure.

Argentina, on the other hand, regarded the compulsory conciliation provision as unacceptable, since direct negotiation was the most suitable means of settling delimitation disputes. Opposition to binding procedures was also voiced by Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia and Kenya.

Several delegations endorsed the provision in the new text that would encourage States involved in a delimitation dispute to make provisional arrangements of a practical nature and not to jeopardize final agreement during the interim. Iran thought this could be improved by adding a statement that exploration and exploitation should not be interrupted during the interim period, and the Republic of Korea also considered that it would be wrong to leave valuable resources unexploited simply because one party refused to negotiate. Greece regarded the provision as ineffective because it was no more than an expression of wishes. The United States hoped the provision would be amended to take account of the legitimate interests of third States, as well as States directly involved, pending agreement on a boundary.

Pakistan believed that no activity should be carried out in the disputed area by either party pending final settlement. Romania said the parties should not take any unilateral measures which might hamper attainment of a final solution.

High seas. The USSR and some other Eastern European States urged approval of a proposal providing that sunken ships and aircraft, as well as equipment and cargoes on board, could be salvaged only by the flag State or with its consent. The United Republic of Tanzania said the provisions on the high seas failed to put the right emphasis on international co-operation.

Islands. Referring to a provision that would give habitable islands the same maritime zones as land territory, Algeria said that recognition of the right of islands to an economic zone must be accompanied by measures to safeguard the rights of other affected States. Ireland called for a review of the provision to reflect the clauses on delimitation of the exclusive economic zone and continental shelf. Turkey regarded the article on islands as out of harmony with international law, while Cyprus opposed attempts to change the text.

The United Kingdom, stating that it objected to any arbitrary distinction between parts of a coastal State's territory, voiced reservations to the provision that uninhabitable rocks could have no exclusive economic zone or continental shelf of their own. Iran opposed in principle any distinction between areas that were above water at high tide. Venezuela also opposed this provision. Dominica urged its retention, however, stating that to give rocks an economic zone would create a disturbing precedent that could only be based on political factors.

Ecuador called for a special provision to preserve the natural wealth of the Galapagos islands, in line with the treatment accorded by the convention to the waters surrounding archipelagic States. Greece believed that mixed archipelagos should have been covered by the provisions on archipelagic States.

Enclosed or semi-enclosed seas. Iraq and Turkey urged improvement of a provision designed to encourage co-operation among States bordering enclosed or semi-enclosed seas; Iraq added that the provision should take into account freedom of passage in all sea lanes leading to straits. Ethiopia could not accept any interpretation of the text purporting to impose strict legal obligations on the States concerned. Iran welcomed the idea of voluntary co-operation among States bordering such seas, adding that any obligation imposed in that respect could have harmful consequences. Kuwait stressed the importance of co-operation among such States and said the text should remain as it stood. Cyprus favoured its deletion.

Access of land-locked States to the sea. The Federal Republic of Germany maintained that freedom of transit for land-locked States through the territory of a neighbouring coastal State should not infringe the sovereignty of the latter; in the absence of agreement, the national law of the coastal State regulated the transit of persons and goods. Iran was ready to recognize freedom of transit, as long as the land-locked State granted the same right on its territory to the neighbouring coastal State. Pakistan could not accept the article, on the ground that it did not comply with the transit State's sovereignty over its territory.

Among land-locked States, Lesotho said that aircraft, pipelines and gaslines should be included among the means of transport covered by the freedom of transit provisions. Lesotho, Swaziland and Uganda considered that the ships of land-locked States should enjoy most-favoured-nation status in ports of the access State. In Zambia's view, the right of access should be set out clearly instead of being subject to bilateral agreement or other requirements that would negate the right. Malawi also called for improvements in this part of the text.

Marine environment. Most speakers regarded the provisions on protection of the marine environment as acceptable. France described them as relatively satisfactory but felt that the provision authorizing monetary penalties for foreign vessels guilty of pollution seemed to be a regression from existing international law, which acknowledged the right of coastal States to impose prison sentences for such offences.

Iran refused to agree to any provision limiting the coastal State's right to safeguard ecologically vulnerable parts of its exclusive economic zone, and was not satisfied with purely monetary penalties against coastal pollution from large tankers passing outside the territorial sea. Spain criticized the text for not making it clear that States bordering straits used for international navigation could take emergency measures when an accident occurred in the strait. The United Republic of Tanzania thought that the powers granted to coastal States were weak and encumbered by too many exceptions in favour of flag States, and that the provisions for safeguards against inappropriate enforcement measures seemed to protect shipping interests instead of the environment.

Marine scientific research. Speaking in April about the latest set of suggested changes in the articles on this topic, China and others said the revised articles on marine scientific research in the exclusive economic zone weakened the position of coastal States in favour of researching States—a view shared by the United Republic of Tanzania in the August debate. Ecuador and Pakistan wanted the text to state unambiguously that no research in the zone could be undertaken without the prior express consent of the coastal State. Egypt called for restoration of the guarantees for coastal States contained in the previous text. In Greece's view, the text should not be interpreted as obliging coastal States to grant consent for research when their vital interests were at stake. Guatemala expressed reservations on a number of articles.

Austria, on the other hand, said the new text would endow coastal States with ill-defined discretionary powers to regulate marine research, while Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany and Sweden expressed regret at what they saw as restrictions on research. The United States, though describing the package as the best that could be achieved, said it offered far less protection for research than the United States and the scientific community considered desirable.

Differing views were expressed about a revised article on research on the outer continental shelf (beyond 200 miles from shore), limiting the discretion of coastal States to withhold consent to foreign research while giving them an unchal-lengeable right to prohibit such research in certain areas when resources were involved. Researching States, including the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan and Sweden, did not object to this provision but stressed the need to lighten restrictions on such research. Several coastal States with broad continental shelves, including Argentina, Australia, Brazil, Canada, New Zealand, Norway, the Philippines and Uruguay, emphasized the sovereign rights of coastal States over the shelf; most of them indicated that they would not oppose the revised text, but Brazil said it would continue to oppose attempts to undermine the rights of coastal States by applying different rules for research on the outer shelf. Guyana, Kenya and Malaysia voiced dissatisfaction with the new text, while Mauritius, Mongolia, the Republic of Korea and Senegal indicated support.

Egypt and Somalia expressed concern over the effect on coastal States' rights of a clause giving a research vessel a reasonable period of time to comply with the coastal State's wishes before that State could call a halt to the research.

With regard to a revised article on the research rights of land-locked and geographically disadvantaged States, Peru and other coastal States objected to the word "rights," and Peru, Spain and Venezuela thought the article should refer to States with special geographical characteristics, as defined in an article on the exclusive economic zone with reference to the fishing rights of such States. On the other hand, Poland, Singapore and the Sudan opposed such a change in terminology.

Angola expressed strong reservations on this article because of the need to safeguard the rights of coastal States, and Senegal said more negotiations were needed. Among the land-locked and geographically disadvantaged States, the German Democratic Republic and Switzerland felt that the revised article took less account of their interests than the earlier version. Mali thought it should be improved, while Hungary did not want to see it weakened.

Concerning a provision giving a neighbouring land-locked or geographically disadvantaged State the right to appoint an expert to participate in a foreign research project in a coastal State's exclusive economic zone provided that the coastal State did not object to the person appointed, Austria stated its understanding that the right to object did not give a coastal State the right to exclude the appointing State from participating. Singapore understood that the coastal State would not be entitled to exercise capriciously its right to object to an appointment.

The Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and Japan expressed their preference for mandatory dispute-settlement procedures in regard to disputes over foreign research; the first two voiced concern at a clause in the revised text which excluded certain types of disputes from the requirement that they be submitted to conciliation. On the other hand, Ecuador said it would be unacceptable to make disputes over foreign research subject to compulsory settlement, and El Salvador would not go beyond compulsory conciliation. Pakistan and Uruguay wanted to limit or exclude the possibility that a coastal State's discretion over certain types of foreign research could be challenged, and Brazil did not think the text adequately reflected the sovereign rights of coastal States over the continental shelf. Venezuela, while reserving its position on the article, felt that the compulsory conciliation provision improved prospects for consensus.

Bahrain viewed as superfluous a change that had the effect of preventing a coastal State from using the absence of diplomatic relations as a reason for withholding consent to research by another State.

Honduras said the text should be more specific on the obligation to co-operate in the publication and dissemination of information resulting from research.

Most of the critical comments about the provisions on research were made during the April debate. By August, most speakers who referred to the topic said they were pleased that the substantive negotiations were completed.

Dispute settlement. Chile said the dispute-settlement provisions were ineffective and included a series of exceptions that would make them practically inoperative. In the same vein, Malta viewed the provisions as the most serious failure of the Conference; there was no point in agreeing on elaborate regulations which could not be enforced. Bangladesh and Cyprus favoured binding adjudication of disputes, while Finland expressed preference for compulsory settlement procedures and regretted that the text allowed so many exceptions to that principle. The United Arab Emirates thought that every party should have a right to use compulsory settlement procedures if conciliation failed or if one of the parties refused conciliation.

Taking a different view, Albania and Ethiopia stressed the need for mutual consent before disputes could be submitted to compulsory settlement. Cuba said it was willing to endorse compulsory conciliation but not procedures that would impose binding settlements, unless the parties agreed to such a course. In France's view, the dispute-settlement system constituted a balance which it would be dangerous to question. Mexico stated that compulsory conciliation was the maximum concession it could make in respect of specific types of disputes. Compulsory conciliation was also endorsed by Malaysia.

Bahrain considered that the settlement of disputes over the sharing of living resources in the exclusive economic zone and the delimitation of sea boundaries should be compulsory. Zambia thought it unsatisfactory that a coastal State would have no obligation to submit to compulsory settlement of disputes over its economic zone.

General provisions. Most speakers who referred to the matter welcomed the fact that agreement had finally been reached on protection of archaeological objects and objects of historical value. The Republic of Korea said the new provision should not prejudice the rights of coastal States to such objects found on the continental shelf. Turkey stated that the clause was unrealistic because it was linked to the contiguous zone instead of the continental shelf.

Jamaica said there was danger of abuse in regard to the provision that a State was not obliged, in fulfilling its obligations under the convention, to supply information if disclosure would be contrary to essential security interests.

Final clauses. On the matter of reservations to the convention, Bhutan and Greece felt they should not be allowed at all. Chile, Colombia, Cyprus, Ethiopia, Iceland and Mongolia thought they should not be permitted unless specifically authorized with respect to a particular article. Argentina, Bahrain, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Nicaragua, the Republic of Korea, Senegal, Spain and the United Kingdom thought the no-reservations clause should be conditional on adoption of the convention by consensus, though Argentina added that reservations might be permitted on certain unsettled questions.

However, Albania, Bangladesh, China, Democratic Kampuchea, Ecuador, El Salvador, Oman, Pakistan, the Philippines, Portugal, Romania, the Syrian Arab Republic and Venezuela argued that States should be permitted to enter reservations to provisions they could not accept, especially on matters of vital national interest. Somalia would not renounce the right to enter reservations until such time as a satisfactory package was achieved. Tonga believed it unlikely that the convention would attract the number of ratifications it deserved without a provision for reservations. Trinidad and Tobago felt that reservations should be permitted as long as they were not inconsistent with the convention's basic purposes.

The United Kingdom did not believe the convention should enter into force until a well-balanced Council of the Sea-Bed Authority, reflecting the various interests, could be constituted from the States which had adhered to the convention. Chile and Senegal, on the other hand, were of the view that the convention should take effect once the requisite number of ratifications were received. Commenting on the provision requiring 60 ratifications to bring the convention into force, Fiji thought that number undesirable if the new legal régime was to take effect as soon as possible.

In the view of Hungary and the German Democratic Republic, amendments to the convention should require a three-fourths rather than a two-thirds majority for approval.

The EEC member States, as well as Senegal, supported a proposal to enable intergovernmental organizations such as EEC to become parties to the convention. Colombia said such organizations should be permitted to adhere as long as they did not prejudice the purpose of the convention and they gained no special advantages for themselves or their members. The Ukrainian SSR, however, thought that no international organization should become a party, though it might enjoy rights under the convention if its member States had given it responsibility for matters covered by the convention.

Members of the Arab group, as well as Cape Verde, Malta, Nicaragua, the Niger, Sierra Leone, Zaire and the United Nations Council for Namibia, said that national liberation movements recognized by the United Nations should be able to adhere to the convention. Fiji, New Zealand and Tonga urged the same possibility for self-governing States, notably certain islands in the Pacific Ocean, which were not fully independent.

Referring to a provision according to which the convention would not alter the rights and obligations of States under other agreements compatible with it, Costa Rica said it could not accept the idea that the 1958 Geneva Conventions on the law of the sea<sup>14</sup> should apply in respect of States which did not adhere to the new convention, even though the legal régime which currently governed the seas formed part of customary international law and was already binding on all States.

Preparatory Commission. Chile opposed the provisional application of rules and regulations for sea-bed activities to be drawn up by the Preparatory Commission. Ecuador said the Commission should have only recommendatory powers, while Egypt and Liberia said it should not act in place of the Authority. On the other hand, the United States insisted that the rules, regulations and procedures drafted by the Commission should be applied provisionally, pending action by the Authority.

Unilateral sea-bed legislation

resumed session on 28 July, protested that national legislation recently enacted by the United States, concerning exploration and exploitation of the deep sea-bed beyond the limits of national jurisdiction, was contrary to international law. That position was supported by the Chairmen of the African, Asian, Eastern European and Latin American groups as well as by Canada, China, Cuba, India, Iraq, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Peru (also on behalf of Chile, Colombia and Ecuador), Sierra Leone, the Syrian Arab Republic, the USSR, Viet Nam and Zimbabwe. A number of other countries endorsed this view during the August general debate.

The United States replied that its legislation placed a moratorium on commercial mining until 1 January 1988, allowing time for the convention to come into force, and that sea-bed mining beyond areas of national jurisdiction remained a freedom of the high seas until regulated by an international agreement. This view was supported by France, the Federal Republic of Germany (which noted that it had also adopted a law to regulate activities by its nationals on the sea-bed beyond the limits of national jurisdiction), Italy, Japan and the United Kingdom; they stated that national legislation on the matter was not contrary to international law.

By a letter of 29 August to the Conference President, Uganda submitted a document outlining the legal position of the Group of 77 on this issue. This document reiterated the views expressed at the Conference on the Group's behalf and concluded that the Group's member States were free to resort to the competent courts against States responsible for unilateral legislation.

Sites of the Authority and Tribunal

The Conference agreed on 4 April 1980 to add a footnote to the article that was to specify the site of the International Sea-Bed Authority, stating that at an appropriate time the Conference should have the opportunity to express its preference among the three countries-Fiji, Jamaica and Malta-which had offered their candidacy. This would be done by vote unless the Conference decided otherwise, the note added.

As a consequence of this decision, proposed orally by the President, the Conference did not take up a revised proposal submitted in March by Greece (for the group of Western European and other States), the Philippines (for the Asian group) and the United Arab Emirates (for the Arab group) that the three candidates be put on an equal footing until the Conference had decided the question.

During the general debate on 25 August, the Federal Republic of Germany offered Hamburg as the site of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea. Portugal reaffirmed its offer to serve as host country for the Tribunal.

Programme of work for 1981

On 29 August 1980, the Conference approved a programme of work for its tenth (1981) session, as recommended by the General Committee. Three weeks of private negotiations at the start of the session would be devoted to unresolved issues. At the same time, the three main committees and the plenary Conference would examine recommendations for changes in the negotiating text made by the Drafting Committee. At the end of the third week, the Conference would decide on the status to be given to the text. If it proved impossible to avoid submission of formal amendments, a time-limit would be established for their presentation.

The Conference's tenth session would be preceded by a session of its Drafting Committee in New York.

The Conference decided, subject to General Assembly approval (see following subchapter), to hold the session at United Nations Headquarters, with Geneva as the alternative if adequate facilities were not available in New York.

The approved timetable envisaged a concluding session at Caracas in 1981, its date to be determined, for, the purpose of signing the convention.

Decisions of the General Assembly

By a letter dated 29 September 1980, the President of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea informed the President of the General Assembly of the decisions and recommendations adopted by the Conference on 29 August with respect to its work programme for 1981. He also requested that the Secretary-General prepare a study identifying the future functions of the Secretary-General under the convention and the needs of countries, especially developing ones, for information, advice and assistance under the new legal regime. In addition, he suggested that a special effort be made to promote the widest possible public awareness of the Conference's achievements.

These recommendations were the subject of a draft resolution submitted by Bulgaria, Honduras, India, Mexico, New Zealand, Norway, Peru, Singapore, Thailand, Tunisia and the United Republic of Tanzania. Following the death on 4 December of H. Shirley Amerasinghe (Sri Lanka), President of the Conference, the draft resolution was revised by its sponsors to include a paragraph paying tribute to him. Maldives introduced an amendment by which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to report to it in 1981 on the question of awarding a memorial fellowship or scholarship in the field of the law of the sea and related matters, in recognition of Mr. Amerasinghe's contribution to the work of the Conference.

The draft resolution, as amended, was adopted without vote on 10 December as resolution 35/116. By this text, the Assembly, after paying tribute to Mr. Amerasinghe, approved the convening of the Conference's 1981 session in New York, with Geneva as an alternative, and recommended that facilities be provided for informal consultations among delegations just prior to the session. It also approved a Drafting Committee session in New York, preceding the Conference. It requested a study by the Secretary-General of his future functions under the draft convention and of the needs of countries for information, advice and assistance, and suggested that special efforts be made to promote public awareness of the Conference's achievements. Finally, it authorized arrangements to be made for a final session of the Conference at Caracas, should the Conference decide, in consultation with the Government of Venezuela, to hold the final session prior to the Assembly's 1981 regular session.

In an explanation of position, Trinidad and Tobago said it would have abstained if there had been a separate vote on the study request, as the matter had not been considered by the Conference. Zaire joined in the consensus, though it had reservations on parts of the draft convention.

(a) The future functions of the Secretary-General under the draft Convention;

(b) The needs of countries, especially developing countries, for information, advice and assistance under the new legal regime;

7. Suggests to the Secretary-General that special efforts be made, particularly in connexion with the adoption of the Convention, to promote the widest possible public awareness of the achievements of the Conference;

8. ## Chapter IV

Questions concerning the uses of atomic energy

Effects of atomic radiation

The United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation held its twenty-ninth session at Vienna from 1 to 12 September 1980, during the course of which the twenty-fifth anniversary of its establishment by the General Assembly was celebrated. At the session, an address by the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) highlighted the Committee's role in fulfilling its mandate with scientific authority and independence of judgement, and the Committee discussed, on the basis of drafts prepared by the Secretariat, scientific documents on which a comprehensive report was to be based. This report was to have been submitted to the Assembly at its thirty-sixth (1981) session,<sup>1</sup> but the Committee decided, in view of the amount of work involved, to submit the report and scientific annexes in 1982.

These annexes reviewed available information on: models for assessment of radiation doses; natural radiation exposures, including technologically enhanced sources; doses from radon and thoron; doses due to environmental contamination by nuclear explosions; and doses from nuclear power production, from medical uses of radiation and from occupational exposure. The Committee also discussed the genetic and somatic effects of radiation, particularly short- and long-term non-neoplastic consequences of localized exposures and life-shortening effects on experimental animals and man. The Committee also considered current models of tumour induction by radiation and their influence on risk estimates in man at low doses and dose rates, and preliminary data on the action of radiation in combination with other physical, chemical and biological agents. The Committee further reviewed a series of criteria documents on environmental behaviour and dosimetry of various radio-nuclides, being prepared at the request of UNEP, and announced its intention to continue scientific review and assessment on behalf of the General Assembly, particularly with regard to the criteria documents.

The Committee reiterated a request to agencies and Member States for further data about doses, effects and risks from various sources of radiation, which would help in the preparation of the major report to the Assembly.

The Assembly, at its thirty-fifth (1980) session, referred the Scientific Committee's report to the Special Political Committee for consideration. On 14 October, the Special Political Committee approved without vote a resolution on the effects of atomic radiation, introduced by Poland on behalf of 26 sponsoring nations (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

On 3 November, in adopting the text-also without vote-as resolution 35/12, the General Assembly took note of the Scientific Committee's report, commended it for its valuable contribution to wider knowledge of atomic radiation and for fulfilling its mandate, and endorsed its intention to continue scientific review and assessment on the Assembly's behalf. The Assembly requested the Committee to continue its work and co-ordinating activities in order to increase knowledge of the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources, noted with satisfaction the continued, growing co-operation between the Committee and UNEP and requested UNEP to continue providing support for the Committee's work and for dissemination of its findings to the Assembly, the scientific community and the public. After expressing appreciation for assistance rendered to the Committee by Member States, specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and non-governmental organizations and inviting them to increase co-operation in this field, the Assembly endorsed the Committee's renewed request for further data to assist it in preparing its major report to the Assembly.

A/35/555. Report of Special Political Committee.

Resolution 35/12, as recommended by Special Political Committee, A/35/555, adopted without vote by Assembly on 3 November 1980, meeting 50.

The General Assembly,
Recalling Its resolution 913(X) of 3 December 1955, by which it established the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, and its subsequent resolutions on the subject, Including resolution 34/12 of 9 November 1979, by which it, Inter alia, requested the Scientific Committee to continue its work, Taking note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation.

Concerned about the potentially harmful effects present and future generations, resulting from the levels of radiation to which man is exposed,

Conscious of the continued need for examining and compiling information about atomic and ionizing radiation as well as for analysing its effects on man and his environment,

Noting that, in view of the amount of work involved in completing the forthcoming substantive report and of the desirability that some of the documents under review should undergo further consideration, the Scientific Committee decided to submit the report with scientific annexes to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session, rather than at its thirty-sixth session as originally planned,

1. Commends the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation for the valuable contribution it has been making in the course of the past twenty-five years, since its inception, to wider knowledge and understanding of the levels, effects and risks of atomic radiation, and for fulfilling its original mandate with scientific authority and independence of judgement;

2. Notes with satisfaction the continued and growing scientific co-operation between the Scientific Committee and the United Nations Environment Programme;

3. Requests the Scientific Committee to continue its work, including its important co-ordinating activities, to increase knowledge of the doses, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources;

4. Endorses the Scientific Committee's intention to continue its activity of scientific review and assessment on behalf of the General Assembly;

5. Requests the United Nations Environment Programme to continue providing support for the effective conduct of the Scientific Committee's work and for the dissemination of its findings to the General Assembly, the scientific community and the public;

6. Expresses its appreciation for the assistance rendered to the Scientific Committee by Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and non-governmental organizations, and invites them to increase their co-operation in this field;

7. Endorses the Scientific Committee's renewed request that Member States and the United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations concerned should provide further relevant data about doses, effects and risks from various sources of radiation, which would greatly help the Committee in the preparation of its next major report to the General Assembly.

Annual report of the International Atomic Energy Agency

The annual report of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) for 1979<sup>2</sup> was formally presented to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth (1980) session by the Director-General of IAEA on 6 November.

Examining the prospects for nuclear power, the Director-General said that Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, the United Kingdom and the United States had significant nuclear power programmes and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe had also embarked on programmes of major size. However, not more than 10 developing countries would be operating nuclear power plants by 1990, and at the most this would increase to 20 by the turn of the century. Orders for new plants were still declining, the Director-General added, despite overwhelming agreement on the need for nuclear energy in view of the environmental consequences of burning large quantities of coal and oil. Current stagnation in the nuclear industry had also led to a decline in availability of professional manpower, he said.

By disseminating information, by expanding its work to ensure the highest standards of reactor safety, by its contribution to non-proliferation and by helping to stabilize and clarify the world-wide nuclear supply system, IAEA was helping Governments to decide their form of energy production, the Director-General continued.

At the October 1980 IAEA International Conference on Current Nuclear Power Plant Safety Issues held at Stockholm, Sweden, the general view was that safety-regulated operating experiences and abnormal occurrences should be discussed at periodic international meetings.

Referring to technical assistance, he said that IAEA's resources and the needs of developing member States continued to widen. Applications of nuclear science and technology in agriculture, health and industry were proving of great value in assisting developing countries which were severely affected by rising energy costs.

The Director-General said that the second Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons<sup>3</sup> had been held at Geneva in August/September (see p. 51) and, since the first Review Conference in 1975, a number of States had become parties to the Treaty and a considerable number of safeguards agreements had been concluded with non-nuclear-weapon States. There had also been substantial progress in implementing safeguards agreements and in organizing the first safeguards field offices. There had been significant improvements in safeguards techniques, implementation, instrumentation and procedures, he continued. Also being studied were: the possibility of introducing a system of international plutonium storage to effect safeguards measures foreseen in IAEA's statute; and the potential for international management of spent fuel and its accumulation problems.

He further reported that an international Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material, opened for signature on 3 March 1980, had been signed by 26 Member States and that all five nuclear-weapon States had adhered to Additional Protocol II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America, a fact welcomed by the Assembly on 11 December 1979.<sup>4</sup>

The International Nuclear Fuel Cycle Evaluation was completed in February 1980, he said, and might lead to better understanding among supplier and consumer countries with regard to proliferation and assurance of supply.

Referring to non-nuclear-weapon States operating or constructing unsafeguarded nuclear facilities, the Director-General said that a comprehensive test-ban treaty would be a major step towards making the non-proliferation regime universally acceptable.

The Director-General reported that IAEA had established a Committee on Assurances of Supply to consider how nuclear material, equipment, technology and fuel cycle services could be assured on a more predictable and long-term basis, thereby lessening the risk that some countries might establish their own facilities.

On 6 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 35/17 by which it took note of the report of IAEA and the Director-General's statement, and noted with satisfaction that IAEA was strengthening technical assistance to developing countries, that financing of that assistance was being studied and that IAEA assistance was playing a significant role in the introduction of nuclear power as well as in the application of nuclear science and technology, particularly in agriculture, medicine and industry in the developing countries. The Assembly further noted with satisfaction that IAEA studies to establish an international system of plutonium storage and management of spent fuel were progressing and that IAEA's Committee on Assurances of Supply had held its first session in September and would reconvene in March 1981.

The Assembly commended IAEA for efforts to ensure safe and secure use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes, noting with satisfaction the improvement of its safeguards system and welcoming the conclusion that in 1979 nuclear material under its safeguards remained in peaceful nuclear activities or was otherwise adequately accounted for. The Assembly urged all States to ratify the new Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material and support IAEA's endeavours in furthering the peaceful uses of nuclear power, improving safeguards and promoting safety. The Assembly noted with appreciation IAEA's expansion and strengthening of its nuclear safety programmes and enhancement of its ability to deal with emergencies, as well as the discussions at the Stockholm Conference in October.

The Assembly further noted that its 1978 recommendation that IAEA consider increasing representation of the areas of Africa and of the Middle East and South Asia on its Board of Governors<sup>5</sup> had been considered by IAEA at the 1979 and 1980 sessions of its General Conference, and expressed hope that the matter would soon be concluded.

Resolution 35/17, sponsored by Canada, Egypt and Poland, was adopted without vote.

During the Assembly's discussion of the IAEA report, India said that the new guidelines for administration of technical assistance were discriminatory and contrary to IAEA's statute; such assistance should be free of restrictive and preferential preconditions. An imbalance between regulatory and promotional activities was reflected in the relative expenditure on safeguards and on promotional programmes. India added that the next annual report should include information on all unsafeguarded nuclear facilities in nuclear as well as in non-nuclear States and that the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material had ignored material stockpiled for military use.

Bulgaria, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary and the USSR also expressed concern that the number of non-nuclear-weapon States operating unsafeguarded facilities had not decreased, a concern shared by Luxembourg speaking on behalf of the nine member States of the European Community.

Pakistan considered that IAEA's safeguards, though adequate in scope, were not applied uniformly and said that technical assistance levels should be increased substantially if the Agency was to fulfil its objectives.

Romania also felt that technical assistance activities should be intensified in the near future; it did not subscribe to the tendency to direct IAEA activities towards its monitoring function at the cost of providing technical assistance to further peaceful applications of nuclear power. Czechoslovakia was in favour of technical assistance going as a matter of priority to parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and the least economically developed.

Egypt did not agree with IAEA's method of raising funds for technical assistance by voluntary contributions, which did not allow for proper planning. Nigeria and Zambia felt that this assistance should be funded by IAEA's regular budget and stressed the need to correct the imbalance in representation on the IAEA Board of Governors, a view shared by Egypt and Pakistan.

Yugoslavia said that the multiplicity and diversity of IAEA safeguards should be eliminated.

The General Assembly had before it a report of the Secretary-General on peaceful use of nuclear energy for economic and social development, submitted in response to a 1979 request that he urge all States to communicate their views on the agenda, date and duration of the International Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy, which the Assembly had decided to convene in principle by 1983.<sup>6</sup> As at 30

October 1980, the Secretary-General had received replies- reproduced in the report-from 25 States.

Views on the beginning date for the Conference varied from between the end of the Assembly's 1982 special session, to be devoted to disarmament, and its 1982 regular session (Qatar, Ukrainian SSR, USSR) to the first half of 1983 (Argentina, Cuba, Iraq) or at least during that year (Czechoslovakia, Hungary). The German Democratic Republic suggested any time when neither the Assembly nor the IAEA General Conference were in session; Madagascar, as soon as possible; and Japan, after other scheduled 1983 conferences on the subject. India felt the date should be considered at the Assembly's 1981 regular session.

Proposals on its duration varied between one week (Ecuador), three weeks (Argentina) or as the agenda required (Iraq, Sudan). Among suggested agenda items mentioned were: promotion of international co-operation (Argentina, Cuba, Italy, Japan, Poland, Portugal); transfer of material, equipment, technology and know-how (Argentina, Iraq, Madagascar, Portugal, Romania); safeguards and legal and regulatory matters (Argentina, Iraq, Portugal); the role of international organizations (Argentina, Iraq); peaceful nuclear energy applications (Italy, Portugal); supply of fuel cycle services (Iraq, Poland); technical aid (Romania, Sudan); measures to facilitate access (Romania); training and a financing system (Madagascar); infrastructure problems and information diffusion systems (Portugal); strengthening non-proliferation (USSR); progress made in the area (Ecuador); and amendment of IAEA'S statute (Sudan). Oman suggested appointment of a preparatory committee to prepare the agenda and settle other questions.

Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Japan, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR stressed the importance of IAEA'S role in preparations.

Denmark, France, Haiti, Luxembourg, the United Kingdom and the United States were not currently in a position to transmit their views; several of them felt suggestions should await availability of additional information on the work of forthcoming conferences in this field.

On 5 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 35/112 by which it decided to convene in 1983 the United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy, and to take account of the results of the work of the Committee on Assurances of Supply. It established and requested a 70-member Preparatory Committee, and other interested Member States participating on an equal footing, to hold an organizational session at Vienna during the second half of 1981 and to report to the Assembly's 1981 regular session.

The Assembly invited all States which had not done so to communicate to the Secretary-General by 30 June 1981 their views on the Conference's opening date, duration, venue and agenda.

Resolution 35/112, sponsored by Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Belgium, Ecuador, Egypt, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Romania, Turkey and Yugoslavia, was adopted without vote.

Introducing the draft, Yugoslavia stressed the need for early commencement of preparations for the Conference, owing to the complex nature of the technical and scientific problems with which it was to deal.

After adoption of the text, the Netherlands said that, although the resolution had been adopted by consensus, underlying differences of opinion should be recognized in preparing for the Conference. Finland regretted that the resolution did not contain explicit reference to the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons.

Chapter v

Strengthening of international security

Implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security

The thirty-fifth (1980) session of the General Assembly marked the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security.<sup>1</sup> A report of the Secretary-General on review of the implementation of the Declaration was submitted to the Assembly in connexion with the annual examination of the subject. The Assembly adopted two resolutions under this agenda item. By resolution 35/158, the Assembly urged States to implement the Declaration's principles and provisions consistently, and urged specific actions to be taken in this regard. By resolution 35/159, it requested continued work on a declaration on the inadmissibility of intervention and interference in the internal affairs of States.

During the year, the Secretary-General received a number of communications from Member States on various aspects of strengthening international security, many of them addressed to specific disputes or problems.

Communications

At the request of Member States, a number of communications were circulated during 1980 in connexion with the topic of strengthening or maintaining international security, as official documents of the Security Council and/or the General Assembly.

Several communications were from Democratic Kampuchea, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam and referred to the situation in Kampuchea, to relations between China and Viet Nam or to other aspects of the situation in South-East Asia (see p. 320).

A note verbale of 24 January annexed a Declaration adopted on 18 December 1979 by the National Assembly of Bulgaria, expressing grave concern over a decision taken that month by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization with regard to the deployment of new United States medium-range nuclear missiles in some Western European countries. Another note, of 5 August 1980, requested circulation of a speech by the President of the State Council of Bulgaria delivered on 8 July at an International Meeting and Dialogue on Detente, and, by a letter of 21 October, Bulgaria transmitted the text of an Appeal of the World Parliament of Peoples for Peace, held in September at Sofia. A statement of 21 November by the Great People's Khural of Mongolia, transmitted on 26 November, associated that Government with the Sofia forum's call on parliaments and parliamentarians of the world to intensify the struggle against the danger of war, for deepening detente and for strengthening the foundations of international peace and security, and expressed support for several USSR disarmament proposals.

An appeal of the Grand National Assembly of Romania was circulated by a letter of 2 April. It was addressed to all parliaments and peoples of the countries that had participated in the 1975 Helsinki (Finland) Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, asking them to co-operate in preparing for and securing the success of the Madrid (Spain) follow-up meeting, which was to convene on 11 November 1980. Similar objectives were set forth in a Declaration/ Appeal of that Assembly, the State Council and the Government of Romania, adopted on 1 August and transmitted on 15 August. It was addressed to all supreme bodies, heads of State or Government and peoples of all participating countries in the Helsinki Conference on the occasion of its fifth anniversary.

By a letter of 25 February, Poland transmitted a resolution of the Polish United Workers' Party on the preservation of peace, halting the arms race, and the continuation of the policy of detente. On 12 May, it forwarded an appeal to the peoples of Europe for peace and disarmament by Communist and Workers' Parties, which had held a meeting in April in Paris.

Several communications transmitted joint declarations and communiques issued following official visits. The German Democratic Republic requested circulation on 26 March of a joint declaration signed by the Chairman of the Central Committee of the National United Front for the Salvation of Kampuchea and President of the People's Revolutionary Council of the People's Republic of Kampuchea and by the President of the Council of State of the German Democratic Republic, following an official visit of friendship by the former to the German Democratic Republic from 17 to 21 March. The treaty of friendship and co-operation signed by those officials on 18 March was denounced in a statement of 25 March by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Democratic Kampuchea, transmitted on 7 April. Following an official visit from 17 to 21 November by the same People's Revolutionary Council official to Czechoslovakia, the final communique adopted at the conclusion of the visit was transmitted on 24 November by Czechoslovakia.

On 23 April, a joint letter from the German Democratic Republic and Nicaragua attached an excerpt from a joint communique released on the occasion of a visit from 27 March to 2 April of a delegation of the Government of National Reconstruction of Nicaragua and the National Executive of the Sandinist Front for National Liberation to the German Democratic Republic. A statement of 16 October by Afghanistan and the USSR was transmitted by a joint letter of 30 October, following a visit to the USSR by the General Secretary of the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan Central Committee, Chairman of the Revolutionary Council and Prime Minister of Afghanistan.

The statement and the declaration adopted at the meeting of the Political Consultative Committee of the States parties to the Treaty of Friendship, Co-operation and Mutual Assistance (Warsaw Treaty), held at Warsaw on 14 and 15 May, was transmitted by Poland on 16 May. On 8 July, Mongolia transmitted a Government statement issued on 20 May welcoming and supporting the results of the Warsaw Treaty meeting. On 23 October, Poland asked for circulation of the communique of the meeting of the Committee of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States parties to the Warsaw Treaty, held at Warsaw on 19 and 20 October. The USSR, on 17 December, transmitted the text of a document adopted on 5 December at a meeting in Moscow of leading figures from the States members of the Warsaw Treaty.

Transmitted for circulation by a note verbale of 14 October from Cuba was the communique of an extraordinary meeting on 2 and 3 October of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs and heads of delegations of the non-aligned countries to the General Assembly. at its 1980 regular session, who had agreed on the Assembly's agenda items to which they should give priority.

A series of communications from Ethiopia and Somalia concerned the situation in the Horn of Africa. By a note verbale of 13 June, Somalia transmitted resolutions on assistance to refugees in Somalia and on foreign intervention in the region, adopted by the eleventh Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers Meeting, held at Islamabad, Pakistan, from 17 to 21 May. Ethiopia, in a letter of 8 September, charged that Somalia had manipulated a forum at which Ethiopia was not represented and its actions constituted interference in the internal affairs of Ethiopia. Ethiopia also annexed to a letter of 9 August a communication from its Minister for Foreign Affairs on developments which he said had seriously undermined peace and stability in the region, charging that Somalia had carried out provocative activities by infiltrating thousands of its troops into Ethiopia for sabotage, subversion and aggression. In a letter of 21 August, Somalia rejected the Foreign Minister's allegations of Somali military involvement in what it said was the liberation struggle being waged by the Western Somali Liberation Front, and counter-charged that Ethiopia had continually violated Somalia's territorial integrity by aerial attacks.

Ethiopia transmitted on 2 September the text of a resolution of the ministerial meeting of the Ethiopia-Somalia Good Offices Committee of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), held at Lagos, Nigeria, from 18 to 20 August. The Committee recommended taking the needed measures to normalize relations between the two countries, starting with the restoration of diplomatic relations, and recommended application of OAU principles of respect for territorial integrity, non-interference, peaceful settlement, opposition to subversion and inviolability of inherited frontiers. Referring to that resolution in a letter of 8 September, Somalia claimed that Ethiopia's action in circulating the text was highly irregular and unprincipled; the proceedings were preliminary and should be kept confidential until consultations were completed. In a response dated 15 October, Ethiopia said Somalia's protests were unwarranted; it was aware of no rule prohibiting circulation of recommendations of resolutions of OAU subsidiary organs. Moreover, Ethiopia charged that the Committee's efforts had not been successful because of Somalia's rejection of the OAU principles. Somalia on 24 November 1980 and 27 January 1981 repeated its charges of breach of good offices procedure and its stand on the status of the Good Offices Committee: it was not composed of foreign ministers—those who had met in August to hear representations—but of eight heads of State, who had not met, and therefore its work was not concluded. Somalia also expressed support for the OAU principles, as well as for the principle of the right of colonized peoples to self-determination and independence. In its view, the question of the Somalia-Ethiopia border dispute, under negotiation in 1964 at the time of adoption of the OAU principle of respect for boundaries existing at the time of decolonization, was excluded from the scope of the resolution containing the principle, inasmuch as the parties to the dispute had agreed to settle it through negotiation, mediation and arbitration. Ethiopia responded in a letter of 31 December 1980 that Somalia's interpretation was incorrect and the principle did in fact apply to Somalia.

A letter of 3 September from the Foreign Minister of Ethiopia, forwarded on 8 September, called attention to what he termed the grave danger posed to Ethiopia's existence as an independent State by the conclusion of a military base agreement between Somalia and the United States. The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Somalia, in a reply of 7 October, asserted that the letter misrepresented the agreement as a military-base agreement; no agreement by Somalia would permit foreign military bases to come into being there.

Report of the Secretary-General

At the request of the General Assembly, contained in a resolution of 14 December 1979,<sup>2</sup> the Secretary-General enlisted the help of a group of governmental experts from the Bahamas, Bangladesh, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, Peru, Senegal, Sri Lanka and Yugoslavia to prepare an analytical report on the extent of the implementation of the provisions of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security and on actions which the Assembly should take to secure full compliance with those provisions. The group held 17 meetings between 25 March and 15 September 1980, adopting its report unanimously.

The group's report, annexed to a report of the Secretary-General on implementation of the Declaration, reviewed follow-up resolutions to the Declaration and assessed the degree of SUCCESS achieved in implementing its provisions. Included in the group's recommendations for action to secure compliance with the Declaration were: strict adherence in international relations to commitments under the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration; expediting the work of and co-operating with the Assembly's special committees currently examining enhancement of the principle of non-use of force, the Charter and the role of the Organization, and peace-keeping operations; adoption of declarations on the inadmissibility of intervention in internal affairs and on the peaceful settlement of disputes; maximum efforts to implement the Programme of Action of the Assembly's 1978 special session on disarmament;<sup>3</sup> early commencement of global economic negotiations; acceleration of decolonization, including aid to liberation movements and elimination of apartheid, promotion of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms; greater use of the United Nations potential to consolidate peace and security and develop co-operation; possibly setting time-frames for the implementation of resolutions; enhancement of the effectiveness of the Security Council; wider co-operation between the United Nations and regional organizations; and wider publicity to major resolutions.

The Secretary-General also forwarded comments on proposed action to implement the Declaration received from Bangladesh, Benin, the Byelorussian SSR, Chile, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Jordan, Mali, Mexico, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Yugoslavia. Some of these replies also contained views on ways of assuring greater respect for the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of States.

Decisions of the General Assembly

The implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security was reviewed by the General Assembly's First Committee at four meetings from 1 to 3 December 1980, concurrently with discussion of a draft declaration on the inadmissibility of intervention and interference in the internal affairs of States.

The debate centred mainly on discussion of the analytical report of the Secretary-General, presented by the Bahamas, whose representative was the Chairman of the group of governmental experts. He noted that it was the first time since the adoption of the Declaration 10 years previously that an objective assessment had been made of how well it had been implemented.

Representatives who spoke generally assessed the current international situation and explained the positions of their countries on a wide range of problems related to peace and security throughout the world. Most speakers expressed support for the Declaration which, as was stressed by Ethiopia, ever since its adoption had served as an important programme of action and a code of conduct for inter-State relations. Yugoslavia said it supplemented the United Nations Charter and brought it up to date, stressing rights and duties arising therefrom and dealing directly with State conduct which endangered security and peace. Similarly, Hungary and the USSR pointed out that the past decade had proved that that historic document had had a positive impact on international life and had contributed, in the spirit of the purposes and principles of the United Nations, to the preservation of world peace. These States as well as Bulgaria and the Byelorussian SSR also reviewed recent events and trends that they considered were set-backs in current world relations, making it particularly timely to review the implementation of the Declaration to determine future action required to strengthen international security and the process of detente.

Egypt considered that the implementation of the Declaration and respect for its provisions formed the main axis around which international relations should be reordered, and Romania and the Ukrainian SSR believed that its basic principles had not become irrelevant but needed to be implemented.

A number of States stressed the usefulness of the Assembly's annual debate on the subject. That debate had made it possible, in the view of the USSR on whose initiative the Declaration had been adopted, to focus the attention of all States on the performance of the principal task of the United Nations—ensuring universal peace and the development of mutually advantageous international co-operation among States with different social systems. On the other hand, the Netherlands, which spoke on behalf of the nine members of the European Community, and the United States doubted the contribution which this procedure could make to the achievement of the goals established in the Declaration. The problem lay, in the view of the United States, in failure to make use of existing machinery and observe existing rules.

Ghana said that, since some States preferred not to speak on the item, the one-sided yearly debates detracted from the purpose of the exchange of views and deprived the Committee of an opportunity to make a balanced and objective assessment of areas of international relations requiring urgent attention.

While not denying the Declaration's positive effects, Qatar and several other States nevertheless noted with regret that certain of its principles had been totally ignored. Cuba pointed to what it said were continued flagrant violations, particularly with reference to interference in the internal affairs of States. China expressed the view that the people of the world could not but regret and be disappointed at the development of the actual situation in connexion with the implementation of the Declaration; basic norms of international relations were repeatedly and grossly violated. Bangladesh said the, main stumbling-block to full implementation was lack of consensus and political will. Iran considered that States could not depend on international organs to defend their independence and territorial integrity.

Various representatives made specific proposals for further implementation of the Declaration. Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Romania and Yugoslavia were among those which considered it necessary to overcome the stagnation in the negotiations on disarmament. Referring to the Madrid meeting, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia and Mongolia, among others, attached particular importance to its adoption of a decision to convene a conference on military detente and disarmament in Europe. Cyprus emphasized that the only way to expect nations to desist from engaging in a competition in weapons was to provide international security. In Poland's view, the only way to consolidate peace and security was through constructive dialogue, detente, a halt to the arms race, and disarmament. Poland felt that keeping all channels open at a time of crisis was the first step towards reducing tensions. Cyprus, Egypt, Malta, Senegal, Sri Lanka, Yugoslavia and others believed that careful consideration should be given to the possibility of further enhancement of the authority and enforcement capacity of the Security Council.

In the view of Cuba, the creation of a new international economic order was one of the imperative necessities of the times, without which it was impossible to conceive of strengthening international security. Bangladesh, Qatar and others held a similar view. Ecuador deprecated coercive economic pressure as endangering good relations. Madagascar stressed that whatever was done in support of the cause of peace and international security would be futile unless everyone contributed. In Viet Nam's opinion, measures to ensure respect for the Declaration's provisions could be extremely diverse; the main thing was to try to ensure its implementation, and first and foremost to ensure unity among all anti-imperialistic and anti-hegemonic forces in the common struggle for peace, justice and social progress.

Having in mind the actions suggested in the report of the Secretary-General, Bangladesh, on behalf also of the Bahamas, Ecuador, Egypt, Peru, Senegal, Sri Lanka and Yugoslavia, later joined by Zaire, introduced a resolution on implementation of the Declaration. The First Committee approved it on 3 December by 83 votes to 0, with 22 abstentions.

Before the Committee's recommended text was adopted by the plenary Assembly, however, the resolution's original eight sponsors submitted an amendment to add a paragraph by which the Assembly would reaffirm its 1978 decision, taken at the tenth special session devoted to disarmament, by which it had called on the Security Council to take measures to prevent non-fulfilment of the objectives of the denuclearization of Africa,<sup>4</sup> and would note with alarm that South Africa's nuclear capability posed a serious danger to international peace and the security of African States.

On 12 December, the Assembly adopted the amendment by a recorded vote of 119 to 0, with 25 abstentions. It then adopted the amended text, as resolution 35/158, by a recorded vote of 120 to 0, with 24 abstentions.

Expressing deep concern at situations, policies and elements of the current international state of affairs which it listed as the main obstacles to the strengthening of international peace and security, the Assembly noted that, increasingly, the Security Council had not been able to act in accordance with its mandate and that the decade-long process of relaxation of international tensions remained limited and had encountered a serious set-back.

The Assembly strongly condemned any violation of the Charter and urged States to abide by their Charter commitments and to implement consistently the Declaration's principles and provisions. It commended all efforts to consolidate political and legal foundations for strengthening international peace and security and peaceful coexistence of States. Support for any intervention or interference in the internal or external affairs of States should be rejected, according to the Assembly. States were also invited to refuse recognition of situations brought about by the threat or use of force against any Member State. The Assembly urged all States, particularly the permanent members of the Security Council, to prevent further erosion or disruption of detente and to refrain from any act which might aggravate the international situation, impede the resolution of crises or the elimination of focal points of tension, or hamper the implementation of the decisions on halting and reversing the arms race taken at the Assembly's 1978 special session. The Assembly then reaffirmed its 1978 decision calling on the Security Council to take measures to prevent non-fulfilment of the objectives of the denuclearization of Africa and noted the danger to African States of South Africa's nuclear capability.

Expressing its satisfaction that the process of decolonization was nearing its end, the Assembly reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under colonial or racist regimes, foreign domination and alien occupation to achieve self-determination and independence. It urged increased support for them and their liberation movements and speedy completion of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.<sup>5</sup> The Assembly reaffirmed the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace,<sup>6</sup> expressed the hope that the current Madrid meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe would further strengthen the security and co-operation of European States and urged all States to co-operate in efforts to transform the Mediterranean region into a zone of peace and co-operation. The Assembly considered that progress towards establishing a new international economic order had become a central element of a peaceful and secure world.

It also considered that the deterioration of the international situation required an effective Security Council. To that end, it emphasized the urgent need to examine all existing mechanisms in order to enhance the Council's authority and enforcement capacity, in accordance with the Charter, and the possibility of holding periodic Council meetings at the ministerial or higher governmental level in specific cases to consider and review outstanding problems and crises or actions, enabling the Council to play a more active role in preventing potential conflicts.

Finally, the Assembly urged implementation of all unimplemented provisions of the Declaration, particularly those relating to the strengthening of the capacity of the Security Council to exercise its responsibilities, and asked the Council to report in 1981 on the steps taken to implement the above provisions on enhancing its effectiveness.

The Netherlands, giving the reasons for reservations of the members of the European Community- which it said nevertheless remained committed to implementation of the Declaration-mentioned their concern about selective presentation of certain aspects of the Declaration which risked weakening it. The use of the term "non-intervention" alone in several cases would have been preferred to the notion of "non-interference." The Community members could not subscribe to reaffirmation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, as they had abstained on that 1971 Declaration. A particular reservation by France pertained to assessment of the Security Council's role and functions. The European Community also could not subscribe to certain criticisms of the functioning of the Council, and, with Austria and Sweden which also abstained in the vote, regretted that a reference to human rights violations had not been included in the resolution as one of the actions detrimental to international security. Moreover, the provision concerning the Madrid meeting did not sufficiently reflect the carefully balanced nature of the process of the European Conference. The Community said questions concerning the Mediterranean should be left to the appropriate regional frameworks. Finland and Greece also considered that regional arrangements could only be arrived at freely among the States of the region concerned, with undiminished security for all.

Greece and the European Community saw a contradiction between the satisfaction, expressed in the preamble, that the vast majority of Member States had adhered and actively contributed to the implementation of the Declaration and the subsequent expression of profound disturbance at the escalation of acts in violation of the Charter and the principles and provisions embodied in the Declaration.

The United States took exception to what it considered to be an unclear preambular reference to the struggle for the division of the world into spheres of influence and domination, listed as among the main obstacles to strengthening international peace and security. In addition, it felt it was misleading to suggest that it was primarily within the power of the permanent members of the Security Council alone to affect the course of the international situation.

Observing that it had not participated in the vote, Albania said it considered that peace and security had been seriously breached and constantly threatened in the past 10 years, that detente did not exist, that the super-powers would not heed appeals made in the resolution, and that their obstructionism would prevent strengthening the effectiveness of the Security Council.

The representative of Guyana, who was the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Working Group of the First Committee on the Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention and Interference in the Internal Affairs of States, set up to elaborate such a declaration, presented to the Committee an oral report on the Group's work. General statements on a working document had been made at two meetings on 5 and 6 November; discussions were continuing, but it was not possible for the Group to complete its work at the current session.

Pakistan expressed a reservation with regard to the Chairman's report, considering that the informal paper on which the Group was basing its work was inadequate, especially in dealing with the elimination of military interventions, and could not serve as a basis for future work. Senegal also considered that the document had no status pending its endorsement by the non-aligned group of States.

Czechoslovakia, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, Malta, Romania and the USSR supported in their statements the work being done on the declaration. Yugoslavia said it was a matter to which non-aligned countries accorded high priority.

Algeria, Benin, the Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, Guyana, Kuwait, Madagascar, Yugoslavia and Zambia, later joined by Qatar, sponsored in the First Committee a resolution on non-interference in the internal affairs of States. The Committee did not take action on it, however, at the request of the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom, which noted that the text had not been available for examination for the required period. The sponsors and the Committee agreed to an Irish suggestion that the text be included in the Committee's report and--an identical resolution might be submitted directly to the plenary Assembly.

Guyana thus reintroduced the resolution in the Assembly on 12 December, on behalf of the original 12 sponsors. The same day, the Assembly adopted it, as resolution 35/159, by a recorded vote of 120 to 0, with 25 abstentions.

The Assembly thereby reaffirmed that a declaration on non-interference in the internal affairs of States would be an important contribution to the further elaboration of the principles for strengthening equitable co-operation and friendly relations among States. Taking note of the report of the Chairman of the First Committee's Ad Hoc Working Group on this question, it requested the Group to continue its negotiations at the 1981 session, with a view to completing the elaboration of the declaration.

Luxembourg, on behalf of the nine member States of the European Community and Greece, which abstained, said that they continued to have serious reservations on having a draft declaration on non-interference discussed by the First Committee, which they felt was not alone qualified to consider questions which impinged so widely upon the competences of other committees, in particular the Sixth (Legal) Committee. Turkey also abstained, cautioning against an exclusive political treatment of principles of international law. This view was shared by the United States, which also feared that the practical effect of adopting a declaration on non-interference would be to undermine the principles of the United Nations Charter.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the Item entitled "Review of the Implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security" and the report of the Secretary-General prepared with the assistance of the Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security,

Taking note of the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security and the important role it has played in consolidating peace and security and promoting co-operation among States on the basis of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Noting with satisfaction that the vast majority of Member States has adhered and actively contributed to the implementation of the provisions and principles of the Declaration,

Profoundly disturbed by the escalation of acts of violation of the Charter of the United Nations and the principles and provisions embodied in the Declaration by recourse to the threat or use of force, military intervention, interference and occupation, resulting in breaches of the peace and threats to international peace and security,

Deeply concerned at the continued existence of crises and focal points of tension, the emergence of new conflicts among States endangering international peace and security, the continuation and escalation of the arms race, particularly the nuclear arms race, and the further increase of military expenditure, the pursuance of the policy of rivalry, the confrontation and struggle for the division of the world into spheres of influence and domination, the continuance of colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism in all its manifestations and apartheid, the further aggravation of the international economic situation and the widening of the gap between the developed and the developing countries, which remain the main obstacles to the strengthening of international peace and security,

Noting that, increasingly, the Security Council has not been able to act in accordance with its mandate under the Charter and that in several instances the General Assembly has been called upon in special and emergency special sessions to consider critical international problems affecting or threatening international peace and security,

Noting with deep concern that the process of relaxation of international tensions, which has evolved during the decade since the adoption of the Declaration, has remained limited, both in scope and in its geographical application, and has encountered a serious set-back,

1. Solemnly reaffirms, on the occasion of the thirty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations and the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, the universal and unconditional validity of purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations as the basis of relations among States, irrespective of their size, geographical location, level of development or their political, economic, social or ideological systems, as a basic way to ensure international peace and security;

2. Strongly condemns any act of violation of the Charter, particularly of its principles of sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity of States and of the inalienable rights of peoples under colonial or racist regimes, foreign occupation and alien domination to self-determination and independence in pursuance of their national destiny, in accordance with their political, economic, social and ideological aspirations, by the use of military force or intervention and interference or by more subtle and insidious means of subversion and destabilization, or by any form of political, economic, military, psychological, financial or ideological pressure;

3. Urges all States to abide strictly, in their international relations, by their commitments under the Charter and, to that end, to implement consistently the principles and provisions of the Declaration;

4. Commends all efforts of Member States directed towards the consolidation of political and legal foundations for strengthening international peace and security and the peaceful coexistence of States on the basis of the Charter, particularly those in respect of the consolidation of the principles of the non-use of force in international relations, non-intervention and non-interference and the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, the early completion of which would contribute to the strengthening of peace and security and promote mutually beneficial co-operation and friendly relations among States;

5. Again invites all States to reject any support for or encouragement of any form of intervention or interference in the internal or external affairs of States for any reason whatsoever and to refuse recognition of situations brought about by the threat or use of force against any Member State;

6. Urges all States, particularly the permanent members of the Security Council, to take all the necessary steps to prevent further erosion or disruption of the process of detente and to refrain from any act which may aggravate the international situation, impede the resolution of crises and the elimination of focal points of tension in various regions of the world and hamper the implementation of the decisions and recommendations adopted at the tenth special Session of the General Assembly on halting and reversing the arms race, particularly the nuclear arms race, which are essential for the preservation of international peace and security;

7. Reaffirms the decision, taken at its tenth special session, by which it called upon the Security Council to take appropriate effective measures to prevent the non-fulfilment of the objectives of the denuclearization of Africa, and notes with alarm that the nuclear capability of South Africa poses a serious danger to the security of African States and to international peace and security;

8. Expresses its satisfaction that the process of decolonization is nearing its end and reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under colonial or racist regimes, foreign domination and alien occupation to achieve self-determination and Independence, and urges Member States to increase their support for and solidarity with them and their national liberation movements and to take urgent and effective measures for the speedy completion of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

9. Reaffirms the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace and commends the decision of the permanent members of the Security Council and major maritime users of the Indian Ocean to serve on the expanded Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean to prepare for the Conference on the Indian Ocean scheduled to be held in 1981 at Colombo;

10. Commends again the convening at Madrid of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe and expresses the hope that it will result in further strengthening the security and co-operation of States in Europe in all spheres, including reduction of armaments and armed forces and halting the arms race in both nuclear and conventional fields, thus contributing to the preservation and furtherance of the process of detente in Europe and to peace and stability in the world;

11. Urges all States to co-operate in efforts aimed at transforming the region of the Mediterranean into a zone of peace and co-operation on the basis of the principles of equal security, sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity, non-intervention and non-interference, non-violation of international frontiers, non-use of force, peaceful solution of disputes and respect for sovereignty over natural resources and the inalienable rights of peoples under colonial or racist regimes, foreign occupation, or alien domination to self-determination and independence;

12. Considers that the achievement of real progress towards the establishment of a new international economic order and an accelerated economic development of the developing countries has become a central element of a peaceful and secure world, and expresses the hope that global negotiations will lead to a significant revival of the world economy and restructuring of international economic relations;

13. Considers also that the current deterioration of the international situation requires an effective Security Council and, to that end, emphasizes the great urgency of the need to examine all existing mechanisms in order to enhance the authority and enforcement capacity of the Council, in accordance with the Charter, and the possibility of holding periodic meetings of the Council at the ministerial or higher governmental level in specific cases to consider and review outstanding problems and crises or actions which would enable the Council to play a more active role in preventing potential conflicts;

14. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and, in view of the important role that the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security has played in international life since its adoption, urges all Member States to contribute to the implementation of all the provisions of the Declaration which have not yet been implemented, particularly those relating to the strengthening of the capacity of the Security Council to exercise its responsibility under the Charter;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to the Security Council and invites the Council to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session on the steps taken to implement the provisions of paragraphs 13 and 14 above;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session the item entitled "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security."

Resolution 35/159, as proposed by 12 powers, A/35/L.43 and Add.1, adopted by Assembly on 12 December 1980, meeting 94, by recorded vote of 120 to 0, with 25 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia

The General Assembly,

Recalling, especially, paragraph 2 of its resolution 34/101 of 14 December 1979 and previous resolutions on non-interference in the internal affairs of States,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General, containing the views of Member States on ways by which greater respect for the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of States can be assured,

Reaffirming that a declaration on non-interference in the internal affairs of States would be an important contribution to the further elaboration of the principles for strengthening equitable co-operation and friendly relations among States, based on sovereign equality and mutual respect,

Noting that a number of Member States have expressed support for the preparation of such a declaration,

Taking note of the report of the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Working Group of the First Committee on the Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention and Interference in the Internal Affairs of States,

Considering that the Ad Hoc Working Group was unable to conclude negotiations for the adoption of such a declaration at the thirty-fifth session,

1. Requests the Ad Hoc Working Group of the First Committee on the Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention and Interference in the Internal Affairs of States to continue its discussions and negotiations at the thirty-sixth session, with a view to finalizing the elaboration of a declaration on the inadmissibility of intervention and interference in the internal affairs of States and adopting it at that session;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide, within the context of the facilities allotted for meetings of the First Committee, facilities for the Ad Hoc Working Group to undertake its deliberations during the thirty-sixth session;

Chapter VI

Non-use of force in international relations

The General Assembly, by resolution 35/50 of 4 December 1980, decided that its Special Committee on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Principle of Non-Use of Force in International Relations should continue its efforts to draft a world treaty on that principle. Differences remained, however, among United Nations Member States, including Committee members themselves, on the necessity or even desirability of such a treaty, on whether or not the Committee's mandate should perhaps be broadened and other alternatives explored for enhancing the effectiveness of that principle, as well as on whether or not the Committee's mandate should be renewed at all.

An account of the Special Committee's and the Assembly's consideration of this matter is given below.

Report of the Special Committee

The Special Committee on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Principle of Non-Use of Force in International Relations met at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 7 April to 2 May 1980 and submitted a report on its work to the General Assembly's thirty-fifth (1980) session.

The Committee had further examined an eight-article draft world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations, which had been introduced in the Committee by the USSR in 1976.<sup>1</sup> It also had before it comments by the Niger on drafting such a treaty, submitted in response to a renewed invitation by the Assembly in 1979<sup>2</sup> for States' observations. These comments, as well as those of Jordan, were subsequently transmitted to the Assembly by the Secretary-General.

The Committee devoted four plenary meetings to a general debate. The balance of its work in 1980 was conducted in a working group, open to all Committee members, whose mandate and Chairman were the same as the Committee's. The group held nine meetings between 21 and 28 April.

The group first examined a paper submitted at the previous session by Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and the United Kingdom.<sup>3</sup> These States had expressed doubts about the usefulness of a treaty on the non-use of force and urged that the group focus instead on a study analysing the reasons why States resorted to force. Their paper also proposed a working method for the group and a list of items that might be discussed, including a listing of means of peaceful settlement of disputes and the development of the peace-keeping concept and machinery.

Another of the group's meetings was devoted to consideration of the USSR proposal for a world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations, according to which States would renounce the use of armed force and of any kind of weapon and, its sponsor said, direct State policy towards the peaceful settlement of disputes.

The group also devoted two meetings to consideration of a working paper, intended as a basis for discussion, submitted by a group of 10 non-aligned countries: Benin, Cyprus, Egypt, India, Iraq, Morocco, Nepal, Nicaragua, Senegal, Uganda. The paper contained 17 principles embodying a series of ideas set forth in the Charter of the United Nations, international instruments and various United Nations resolutions pertaining to the obligation not to use force or threaten it, and the duties and responsibilities of the United Nations and individual States in this respect. It postulated that the use of force or threat of force could be defined not only in terms of military force, but also in terms of all uses of economic or political coercion or hostile propaganda as well as coercive activities such as subversion, pressure, intimidation, support of terrorism, covert destabilization, or the use of or support for mercenaries.

The Committee approved the working group's report on 2 May, but, since it had not completed its work, generally recognized the desirability of further consideration of the questions before it. While the majority were in favour of renewing the Committee's mandate, some members were not; others thought that it should be reviewed.

In the debate in the Special Committee, all members were in agreement on the need to strengthen the principle of the non-use of force, but views differed on how to achieve that goal.

A number of States spoke in favour of the idea of drafting a treaty on the non-use of force in international relations and supported the Soviet initiative.

The USSR said that the speedy conclusion of such a treaty would be an effective political and international legal guarantee of the strengthening of international peace and security and would safeguard against the threat of a worldwide thermonuclear disaster. The USSR believed that, due to the fact that the international situation had become strained as a result of provocative acts by the forces of imperialism and hegemonism, the conclusion of a world treaty had become a task that could no longer be delayed. It would give States a greater responsibility for the stricter observance of this principle and thereby enhance its effectiveness.

Benin, India, Iraq, Mongolia, Nicaragua and Romania observed that the idea of a treaty defining in concrete terms the obligation of States not to use force in their international relations had the support not only of the Eastern European countries but also of non-aligned countries in Asia, Africa and Latin America. Mongolia said this had been made clear by the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Havana, Cuba, 3-9 September 1979).

In the opinion of Bulgaria, Hungary and Poland, the world treaty, in developing and concretizing the obligation enshrined in the Charter, would, particularly in the light of the emergence of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction, be in keeping with the vital interests of all States, irrespective of their size or population and regardless of whether or not they were nuclear-weapon powers. In Nicaragua's opinion, the principle of non-use of force was inseparable from the principle of self-determination of peoples. Romania added that it was not enough to concretize and develop the principle; the required good faith and political will to respect it also had to be present. These States considered the USSR draft to be a sound basis for working out a generally acceptable text. The treaty would create favourable conditions for curbing the arms race, reducing armaments and furthering general and complete disarmament.

Other States, including Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan and the United Kingdom, while expressing readiness to co-operate in the search for means of enhancing the principle of non-use of force, objected to the drafting of the treaty. In their view, not only would the proposed treaty be redundant, it would also, if identical to the Charter, create confusion and legal ambiguities in the event that not all Member States adhered to it and, if different from the Charter, result in discrepancies all too easy to exploit. Brazil thought that a thorough comparative analysis of existing international instruments that enshrined that principle should first be made. Japan and the United Kingdom added that effective implementation of the principle could not be attained by mere repetition in an international treaty. Such a course was felt by Belgium, Chile, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Spain and others to be especially dubious in the light of recent events in Afghanistan; in their view, a clear violation had been committed against the principle of non-use of force by the very proponent of a world treaty on that principle. France and the United Kingdom drew attention to a United States note verbale of 27 March to the Secretary-General in which those events were given as among the reasons for United States non-participation in the Committee's current session. The United Kingdom added that the way the Committee could best enhance the effectiveness of the principle was to reaffirm the validity of the existing law based on the Charter and to call on all Member States fully and faithfully to fulfil their obligations.

For these reasons, the United Kingdom, together with other Western States, opposed the renewal of the Committee's mandate, at least in its current form. If the mandate was renewed, France felt it should concentrate on trying to determine reasons why States resorted to force and on the suitability of existing machinery for peaceful settlement of disputes. Spain believed special attention should be devoted to the intimate relationship existing among the principles of the non-use of force, of peaceful settlement of disputes and of the system of collective security. Since in Italy's opinion many of the issues directly related to non-use of force were being examined in other forums, Italy suggested a pause in the Committee's activities to await the results of such work or obtain new ideas.

Argentina, Egypt, Finland, Morocco, Nepal and Senegal stressed the relevance and importance of the Committee's work to the maintenance of international peace and security. They observed that any initiative aimed at safeguarding international peace and security could only arouse the interest of all Governments, particularly in view of the resurgence of the cold war, the arms race, flagrant interventions in the internal affairs of States and direct and indirect subversion. The legal format of the future instrument was of secondary importance. The Committee's approach, Senegal said, should be open and non-exclusive, and all proposals should be taken into account. Egypt suggested its joint proposal with Mexico submitted in 1979,<sup>4</sup> which aimed at elaborating upon provisions of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning

Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,<sup>5</sup> taking into account all United Nations resolutions pertaining to peace and security, as a point of departure for the Committee's work. India felt the proposal deserved serious consideration. Argentina said, in addition, that no conclusion arrived at in the Committee could weaken principles already recognized and accepted by the international community. Whether the agreed document was a treaty or any other instrument, these States felt that it should focus on strengthening the general rule of the prohibition of the use of force in all its forms, on strengthening international and regional institutions and machinery for the implementation of that rule and on strengthening peaceful means for the settlement of disputes.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The report of the Special Committee was considered by the Sixth (Legal) Committee at 12 meetings between 21 October and 12 November at the General Assembly's 1980 session.

On 4 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 35/50 on the report of the Special Committee. Taking into account the fact that the Committee had not completed its mandate, the Assembly decided that it should continue its work on drafting, as soon as possible, a world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations as well as the peaceful settlement of disputes or any other recommendations as it deemed appropriate. The Assembly also requested the Committee to consider thoroughly all the proposals submitted to it for that purpose, and invited other comments and suggestions from Governments.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 107 to 16, with 12 abstentions. The Sixth Committee had approved the text on 6 November by a recorded vote of 70 to 15, with 8 abstentions. The resolution was sponsored by 31 Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

The sponsors had revised their original submission following consultations with the group of Arab States at the United Nations and several non-aligned countries, according to Iraq, to give the resolution a more neutral character and encourage broader participation, while not tampering with the Special Committee's existing mandate.

The discussion in the Sixth Committee revealed the same divergence of views concerning the mandate of the Special Committee as had been apparent in the Special Committee itself.

Introducing the Special Committee's report, its Chairman said that, while all States seemed to have the common goal of enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of non-use of force in international relations, their views differed on the means of attaining that goal. The majority of States, he said, favoured the Soviet proposal for a treaty. Others could not endorse such an idea which, they maintained, was based on the false premise of a lack of clarity in the Charter prohibition of the use of force, and they therefore opposed the renewal of the mandate of the Special Committee. Still others felt the Committee's mandate should be revised to create a better balance among its various elements and that it should not confine its efforts to any single course of action.

The States which spoke in favour of the elaboration of a world treaty, which included Eastern European States and several of the resolution's sponsors, as well as Bangladesh, Burundi, Gabon, Jordan, Nicaragua and Nigeria, held that the obstacles to the drafting of that treaty did not stem from legal difficulties, but from a lack of political will on the part of certain States.

The USSR, which introduced the resolution to continue the Committee's work, said the obligations under the Charter and the draft treaty were identical in scope and could not conflict with each other; once a general legal norm had been adopted, detailed and specific norms were usually elaborated to enhance its effectiveness.

Poland stressed the discrepancy between the universally recognized principle of the non-use of force in international relations and the present-day reality characterized by a deterioration of the international situation, the accumulation of all types of weapons, including nuclear weapons, and the danger of armed conflicts. In the view of Czechoslovakia and Hungary, the treaty would have exceptional importance for detente and for the strengthening of trust between States, help to limit armaments and encourage a reciprocal renunciation of attempts to gain military superiority. As for the proposal to study why States used force in violation of international law, Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic and the Lao People's Democratic Republic said the reasons were well known and studying them would divert attention from the real objective of the Special Committee. Cuba said such proposals were delaying tactics designed to change the Committee's mandate.

Romania felt that the mere enunciation of the principle of non-use of force, however important, was not enough; international law in general and that principle in particular should keep pace with the changes in international life, as reflected in the development and codification of certain principles of international law. The future treaty should establish the right to individual and collective self-defence and to resort to armed struggle for national liberation, establish the obligation to adopt disarmament measures and contain a provision establishing the obligation of all States to settle their disputes peacefully. Algeria also stressed the importance it attached to inclusion of these elements.

Burundi stressed that a treaty would bolster the effectiveness of the United Nations in carrying out its peace-keeping function, and Zaire observed that there was a need for finding international legal instruments to develop the principle of non-use of force and bring it up to date. Afghanistan pointed out that the Charter itself, in Article 13,<sup>6</sup> provided for the progressive development of international law and its codification. Algeria, Bangladesh, Hungary, India, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia were among States which felt that codification and development of the principle of non-use of force in international relations would help to make the Charter a more balanced instrument and strengthen its effectiveness. Ecuador, Nicaragua and Venezuela felt the principle could and should be developed to its fullest scope in the same way that other Charter principles had been developed.

Among States which spoke against the proposed treaty, Canada said that the idea of elaborating such a treaty was based on the false assumption that the dangerously frequent cases of recourse to force resulted from an insufficient understanding of the basic obligations derived from the Charter and from international law in general. The solution to violations of the principle of non-use of force, which was universally recognized as binding, did not lie in a general restatement of that principle but in a study of the means that could be used to strengthen existing machinery for the maintenance of peace and security, whether it was the Security Council, peace-keeping operations, the means available for the peaceful settlement of disputes, or other ways.

Similar views were expressed by several States, including Austria, Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan and the Netherlands. To them, the crux of the matter lay in the failure of States to observe the obligations they had already undertaken. France expressed doubts as to the effectiveness and desirability of drawing up a binding legal instrument which, far from enhancing the authority, scope and effectiveness of the principle embodied in the Charter, would do the exact opposite: such a treaty by its very existence would weaken the Charter and, by seeking to specify cases in which its provisions should be applied, further restrict the scope of Article 2, paragraph 4,<sup>7</sup> containing the obligation to refrain from the threat or use of force. The Charter needed no confirmation or elaboration, the Netherlands added; it needed implementation. Isolating one element of Charter obligations, said the United States, would be a retrogressive development of international law.

China said the USSR draft treaty contained articles which restricted and distorted Charter principles and should never be the basis for the Special Committee's work. It believed the next step should be to draft a concise statement of principles containing: a solemn declaration that the principle of non-use of force must be observed in inter-State relations; a statement that States would not use or threaten force for aggression, interference, subversion of Governments, fostering puppet regimes or suppression, and that such acts were Charter violations and crimes under international law; a provision that a State's illegal use of force gave rise to international responsibility; a requirement that faults accomplices ensuing from illegal use of force must not be recognized; a provision that States had a duty to support victims of illegal uses of force; and an affirmation that States could legitimately exercise the right to self-defence.

Argentina, while recognizing that existing legal instruments had not been sufficient to prevent interference in the internal affairs of States, observed that it did not seem realistic to envisage a treaty aimed at enforcing the decisions of the Security Council, given the current state of affairs in the world and the risk of eroding the credibility of the United Nations by drafting treaties that could not possibly be implemented. Pakistan also felt that little practical purpose would be served by elaborating yet another international treaty, since its effectiveness could not be greater than that of the Charter and both suffered from the same deficiency: the want of appropriate sanctions for their enforcement. Nevertheless, Argentina, Burundi, Chile, Ecuador, Finland, Morocco, Peru and Somalia were among States that felt any attempt to enhance the effectiveness of the principle of non-use of force deserved support.

Several other States advocated further work in the Special Committee on the question of strengthening the effectiveness of the principle of non-use of force without, however, making any commitment as to the final form of the envisaged instrument.

Spain said that the Special Committee's mandate should be changed. It held, as did Italy, the Federal Republic of Germany and others, that the principles of the non-use of force and of the peaceful settlement of disputes and those on which the collective security system were based were inseparably interrelated. Since a more comprehensive approach was necessary, Spain felt that the idea of drafting a treaty should be replaced by a more flexible concept in which reference would be made to the elaboration of an appropriate international legal instrument.

Reference to drafting a world treaty should be deleted, Japan believed, and the Committee be assigned the task of formulating recommendations on the issues before it. Panama and Turkey also felt that the Committee's mandate should be broadened and new alternatives explored.

Egypt said it was important that the Committee's work be harmonized with that of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization (see p. 182). Canada and Italy favoured suspension of the Committee's work pending settlement of existing external disagreements; experience showed that no progress could be made in defining principles or rules while the atmosphere was one of high tension.

Brazil felt that the work on draft articles on the subject should be pursued and, after a substantial agreed text had been formulated, a decision should be taken as to whether the instrument to embody that text should be a treaty or a declaration. Brazil and many other States, including Argentina, Belgium, Chile, Greece, Indonesia, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Panama, Romania, Somalia, Turkey, Venezuela and Yugoslavia, therefore welcomed the ideas in the 10-nation working paper, listing 17 principles, that had been submitted to the Special Committee. While the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia and the USSR considered the paper to be a positive contribution to the Committee's work on a treaty, Somalia felt its greatest merit was that it moved the Committee away from the idea of a somewhat sterile treaty and focused attention on the question of defining the use of force. The document had merit for exploring new ways for the Committee to work, in the Netherlands view, but it could not agree with the way in which Charter provisions and Assembly resolutions were put on an equal footing in the paper.

Explaining its negative vote on the resolution, the United States said it had no alternative; in view of the presence of Soviet troops in Afghanistan and the brutal invasion of that country, the United States said, it was impossible to go in a positive frame of mind beyond the first preambular paragraph inviting examination of a draft world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations. The United Kingdom said it was opposed to the idea of such a treaty because it attempted to create an exception for the Soviet doctrine of limited sovereignty and would weaken the Charter. Italy and the Federal Republic of Germany expressed regret that the Special Committee's mandate was again limited to working on the basis of the USSR draft treaty. Israel did not see what advantages the treaty would bring.

Albania considered that drafting a treaty was a futile exercise inasmuch as the super-powers ignored treaties and used force as a basic feature of their policy. Albania would not participate in the voting.

Brazil, which abstained, could not support a resolution which meant that the Committee would continue a sterile and futile discussion for another year. Since ways had not been found of modifying the Committee's mandate to take account of new developments and make it possible for all its members to co-operate, Austria, too, had abstained. Australia held a similar view, and Sweden said a new treaty was unlikely to strengthen the Charter's clear prohibition of the use of force and might create problems of interpretation. China's spokesman said China was opposed to military occupation and aggression accompanied by deceptive legal manoeuvres to impose one country's views on another; since the situation and the danger to which he referred still existed, China had abstained.

Somalia said its affirmative vote did not imply that it favoured a world treaty in preference to, for instance, a declaration. Iran, Somalia and Zaire added that their votes also did not imply acceptance of a double standard of behaviour on the part of some sponsors of the resolution.

By a letter of 28 October, Chile, current Chairman of the group of Latin American States at the United Nations, transmitted to the Assembly President a list of the group's Member States to serve on the Special Committee for 1981, 1982 and 1983, in accordance with an agreed system of rotation.

Chapter VII

Review of the question of peace-keeping operations

Although the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations could not agree in 1980 on how to carry out its mandate, the General Assembly, by resolution 35/121 of 11 December, urged it to renew its efforts towards completing guidelines to govern the conduct of United Nations peace-keeping operations, while also considering specific questions related to the practical implementation of such operations.

Report of the Special Committee

The General Assembly's 33-member Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations met five times during 1980—on 13 May, 16 July, 4 and 24 September and 10 October—with a view to compiling agreed guidelines to govern United Nations peace-keeping operations in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, and to discuss practical implementation questions.

Pursuant to an Assembly request of 23 November 1979,<sup>1</sup> Canada and Cyprus provided information on experience they had gained in contributing to and as the subject of peace-keeping operations, respectively. Suriname, which also replied, said it had not been in a position to participate in such operations. These responses were transmitted to the Special Committee by the Secretary-General on 12 September.

The Special Committee reconstituted its Working Group to proceed with the tasks assigned to the Committee and requested the Secretariat, in conjunction with the Working Group, to bring up to date a working file containing material on observer missions and peace-keeping forces authorized by the Security Council, including information on administration and logistics, an account of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon operation and developments in and information on other operations since 1977.

The Committee's and the Working Group's discussion, as reflected in the Committee's 1980 report to the Assembly, reaffirmed the wide disparity of members' views on the matters facing the Committee and the great difficulty in finding a compromise acceptable to all. Some members urged that, despite the absence of progress on agreed guidelines, some positive action should be taken towards resolving some of the difficulties related to the practical implementation of peace-keeping operations, including the financial aspects. However, other members believed the Committee's responsibility continued to be the agreement on guidelines for which, in their view, there already existed a definite basis for further progress, provided that goodwill was demonstrated. Yet another view was that both issues should be addressed in order to make balanced progress in both aspects.

The Committee reported that it could not reach agreement on how to carry out its mandate. However, despite the difficulties, it believed that the importance of the issues was such that its mandate should be renewed.

Action by the General Assembly

On 11 December 1980, the General Assembly adopted resolution 35/121. Noting with regret the difficulties of the Special Committee in carrying out its mandate, the Assembly took note of the Committee's report, again invited Member States to provide information on their experience in peace-keeping operations for compilation by the Secretary-General, and again urged the Committee to renew its efforts to complete agreed guidelines, devoting further attention to specific questions related to the practical implementation of peace-keeping operations. The Assembly acted without vote, following consideration of the Committee's report in the Special Political Committee, which approved, without vote on 10 November, a draft resolution submitted by its Chairman following informal consultations.

Thirty-four representatives made statements during the Special Political Committee's discussion of the question from 3 to 5 November.

Many speakers commented on the value of peace-keeping operations which, Bangladesh said, had played a remarkable role in preventing the recurrence of fighting, in maintaining order in areas of operations and in creating appropriate conditions for negotiations.

A number of countries, including Cyprus, Egypt, Greece, India, Israel, Pakistan and the Syrian Arab Republic, stressed that peace-keeping operations could not replace the peace-making process. Jordan emphasized that such operations should not be used merely to disengage conflicting forces—in many cases, that was tantamount to guaranteeing the security of the aggressor. They should not legitimize a stalemate or evoke a feeling of political complacency, Sri Lanka said.

Luxembourg, speaking on behalf of the nine member States of the European Community, stressed that peace-keeping operations could only function properly if all the parties involved were prepared to co-operate. These States appealed to all countries for their co-operation and said they would continue to participate actively by placing men and materiel at the disposal of the United Nations. Liberia, Portugal and Senegal were among the Governments calling for the full support of all parties to a conflict. Several speakers made the point that the sovereignty of States in which peace-keeping forces operated should be fully respected.

Austria saw a change in the concept of peace-keeping operations from static peace-keeping to a more active role in a political context—a view shared by Greece.

Lebanon hoped for permanent forces capable of implementing Security Council resolutions and of guaranteeing national borders, territorial integrity and international peace and security. In Nepal's view, the United Nations should establish a permanent peace-keeping force under the command of the Secretary-General, in conformity with the decisions of the Security Council and the General Assembly, to which all countries would contribute troops on the basis of equitable geographical distribution.

With respect to the financing of peace-keeping operations, many representatives held that aspect to be the collective responsibility of all Member States of the United Nations—especially, Nigeria added, of those directly involved in the decision-making process leading to the dispatching of troops to trouble spots.

Denmark, speaking for the Nordic countries, expressed regret at the refusal of some Governments to participate in the financing of certain peace-keeping operations, since that placed unreasonable burdens on the United Nations and other Member States and might impede the recruitment of contingents in the future and thereby obstruct efficient and speedy action in times of crisis. Similar points were made by Australia, Luxembourg (for the European Community) and the Philippines. However, the German Democratic Republic believed that the aggressor should bear the financial responsibility for the consequences of its criminal acts—a view shared by Democratic Yemen and the Syrian Arab Republic.

Many countries expressed regret that the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations had not made progress on agreed guidelines to govern United Nations peace-keeping operations and on questions related to their implementation; some observed that the Special Committee's success depended on the political will of its members.

For some countries, such as Hungary, the first step must be to establish agreed guidelines; any attempt to give priority to practical measures would be unrealistic, Hungary said.

Other countries, however, shared the view of Chile that the Special Committee should be able to tackle simultaneously the elaboration of guidelines and the study of practical measures. The United Nations should strengthen its capacity to respond to possible requirements on a more co-ordinated, economical and effective basis, Canada suggested. Cyprus was among the countries that saw a need for training peace-keeping forces. In the view of the United States, the institutional basis for peace-keeping was secure and the manner of initiating and running a peace-keeping operation well understood, but improvements were needed in such areas as earmarking contingents, supplying advanced training and making technology available to the United Nations. The practical implementation of peace-keeping operations was urgent, Zambia said, in view of the increasing involvement of the United Nations and the growing demand for its services.

Perhaps, suggested Bangladesh, the attempt to establish guidelines should be abandoned and the current practice of ad hoc arrangements retained. For its part, India mentioned laying down a time-limit for the production of agreed guidelines, beyond which the mandate of the Special Committee would be terminated and the matter referred back to the Assembly.

Israel said the usefulness of guidelines drafted in general terms was likely to be very limited; they could be practical only if they were adaptable to the particular requirements of the area of operations. Japan said the effort to establish agreed guidelines was tantamount to codifying a new section of the Charter and must be undertaken with great care; it was unreasonable to expect that the task could be accomplished quickly. The Syrian Arab Republic believed that, although peace-keeping operations might vary according to the political conditions or the nature of the aggression which had necessitated them, there were common features which would justify a set of common guidelines concerning such aspects as formation of contingents and the mandate and duration of the peace-keeping operation.

Stating that the Security Council had decision-making powers on such questions as the conduct and control of operations, the means of financing them and the extent and functioning of the command of individual operations, Czechoslovakia suggested the establishment of a Council committee on the conduct of operations, to ensure their practical implementation and to help the Council in a given operation. Egypt, however, believed that the authorization of peace-keeping operations was not within the exclusive competence of the Council since the Assembly had residual power with respect to the maintenance of international peace and security. Tunisia thought both the Council and the Assembly should co-operate in the maintenance of international peace and security. Yugoslavia said non-aligned countries found it difficult to accept that the elaboration of guidelines should be blocked simply because those with the greatest responsibility for the maintenance of peace could not agree or lacked goodwill; the Assembly, as the only principal organ of the United Nations in which all Member States were represented on the basis of equality, was the only forum in which agreement respecting the interests of all could be reached.

The USSR held that only strict adherence to the Charter could guarantee that the peace-keeping forces were not used for purposes contrary to the Charter and the interests of States, especially small ones. The Security Council was the only body empowered to undertake action to maintain or restore international peace.

There was general support for extending the Committee's mandate, although many speakers expressed regret at its lack of progress.

Chapter VIII

Questions concerning the United Nations Charter and the strengthening of the role of the Organization

The Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization met at Manila, Philippines, from 28 January to 22 February 1980 and continued work on two main topics: the maintenance of international peace and security, and the peaceful settlement of disputes. It examined proposals made by Member States on both topics and transmitted to the General Assembly an account of its deliberations, making no recommendations but expressing the view that progress had been made.

The two topics were debated together by the Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee at its year-end session and two resolutions were adopted pertaining to the Special Committee's work. By resolution 35/164, the Assembly renewed the Committee's mandate, adding a request that it accord priority to work on the proposals it was examining relating to the maintenance of international peace and security, including those relating to the functioning of the Security Council, and make recommendations on areas where general agreement was possible. By resolution 35/160, the Assembly asked the Special Committee to continue discussing, for Assembly consideration in 1981, a text known as the draft Manila declaration on the peaceful settlement of international disputes, which had been submitted to the Committee at its January/February session but not discussed for lack of time.

Details of these and other actions are examined in the subchapters below.

Maintenance of international peace and security

Pursuant to a General Assembly resolution of 17 December 1979,<sup>1</sup> the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, at its January/February 1980 session, continued its task of listing proposals made to the Committee by Member States on ways to maintain and consolidate international peace and security, develop co-operation among nations and promote the rules of international law in relations between States. It was to examine the proposals that awakened special interest with a view to according priority to areas in which general agreement seemed possible.

The Special Committee had before it working papers submitted by Member States at its four annual sessions since 1976, contained in its reports to the Assembly, as well as five new working papers submitted at the 1980 session. Three of these related to the maintenance of international peace and security and two to the peaceful settlement of disputes. (For consideration of the question of peaceful settlement of disputes, see subchapter below.)

Following previous practice, the Special Committee established a Working Group, open to all Committee members, which held 31 meetings between 31 January and 22 February to discuss proposals on these two questions. The Group was chaired by the Committee's Chairman, Estelito P. Mendoza (Philippines). A third topic entrusted to the Committee by the Assembly, regarding rationalization of existing United Nations procedures, was not considered in 1980 for lack of time.

With regard to the maintenance of international peace and security, the Working Group considered: two successive versions of a working paper by Japan; a twice-revised paper by 15 developing States (Algeria, Congo, Cyprus, Egypt, El Salvador, Ghana, Iran, Kenya, Nigeria, Romania, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, Tunisia, Yugoslavia, Zambia), which incorporated an earlier Egyptian paper; and an Indonesian working paper to add a paragraph to a 1979 proposal by the United Kingdom. A second paper from 1979, by the United States, was also considered by the Group.

The United States paper offered proposals to improve crisis anticipation through the establishment of a United Nations consultative mechanism to involve the Security Council before crises erupted into violence, even if the disputing parties did not do so. Member States should be reminded of the need to honour the collective security system, bringing matters to the Council's attention and reporting to it promptly any actions taken under Article 51 of the Charter<sup>2</sup> in the exercise of the right of self-defence. Proposals to strengthen peace-keeping capabilities included earmarking national troops or support facilities for a United Nations peace-keeping reserve, training such troops and observers, and studying administrative and logistics problems. Ways to finance peace-keeping operations were also suggested.

The United Kingdom working paper also stressed the role of the Security Council in crisis management, suggested periodic Council review of the international scene to identify areas of tension and incipient dispute in order to defuse crises, and proposed encouraging the Secretary-General to exercise his options under Article 99 to bring such matters to the Council's attention and provide facts. The Council should also consider ways to supplement fact-finding techniques such as observer missions, and make use of informal consultations. Its permanent members should examine whether there were areas, such as fact-finding missions, which they could agree to treat as procedural and therefore not subject to veto (the rule, in Article 27, according to which a negative vote by one of the five permanent members of the Council prevents the adoption of a substantive resolution which otherwise obtains the required majority of nine votes). The United Kingdom also recommended strengthening the Organization's peace-keeping capabilities and encouraging the role of regional organizations.

To the United Kingdom proposals, Indonesia suggested the addition of a paragraph encouraging the Secretary-General to bring matters threatening international peace and security to the attention of the General Assembly through his annual report on the work of the Organization and by inscribing items on the Assembly's agenda.

The working paper by Japan suggested ways to strengthen the fact-finding functions of the United Nations. Included were suggestions for establishing or better utilizing fact-finding functions and bodies of the Security Council, the Secretary-General and the General Assembly. Japan proposed that the establishment of Council fact-finding missions not be subject to veto, that the Council might give the Secretary-General a general fact-finding mandate not linked to a particular dispute, and that general guidelines for setting up and dispatching Council subsidiaries should be established by a Council resolution. A revised text was submitted later in the session containing what the sponsor described as minor amendments that took account of comments by Member States. One change elaborated on the provision concerning the non-applicability of the unanimity rule (veto) to the establishment and sending of such missions.

The first part of the 15-nation working paper contained proposals for a universal code of conduct covering fundamental rights and duties of States with a view to concluding an international binding treaty that would supplement the Charter. The rights and duties proposed were, in part: the obligation to implement United Nations resolutions on peace and security as well as the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States;<sup>3</sup> the duty to settle international disputes by peaceful means; the prohibition of the use of force, the obligation to abstain from the use or threat of force or other forms of coercion, and non-recognition of situations brought about thereby; the right of all States to participate in solving international disputes; the right to national independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, and the obligation to respect that right; the right of States to develop their own political and socio-economic systems; the right of peoples under colonial and racist minority rule to self-determination, the legitimacy of their struggle by all means to achieve national liberation, and the obligation of States to support that struggle and to refrain from action detrimental to it; prohibition of the usurpation by States of the powers of the authority representing a people struggling for self-determination; the prohibition of colonialism, racial discrimination and foreign domination, and the duty to try to eliminate them; respect for the inviolability of frontiers; the duty not to intervene in the internal or external affairs of other States; and the right to self-defence.

The second part of the 15-nation working paper proposed institutional and functional reforms relating to the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Secretary-General, as well as specific amendments to the United Nations Charter. With regard to the Council, an agreement was recommended to exempt from the unanimity rule all matters relating to: the admission of Member States, the right to self-determination, withdrawal to international boundaries or cease-fire lines in cases of cease-fire injunctions, and disputes involving a permanent member. Also proposed for exemption from the unanimity rule, through a revision of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, were resolutions relating to Chapter VI of the Charter, on the peaceful settlement of disputes, and those on fact-finding or authorizing peace-keeping operations. Finally, the paper proposed that nine affirmative votes be sufficient for a decision on whether a matter was procedural.

Also included in the paper were proposals to strengthen the role of the Assembly in the maintenance of international peace and security, and to define the Secretary-General's fact-finding responsibilities in matters relating to international peace and security. A proposed amendment to Article 25 of the Charter was designed to secure agreement by Member States to carry out Council and Assembly resolutions relating to peace and security and to support United Nations peace-keeping operations, and an amendment to Article 2 was designed to add to the basic principles of the Organization the principle of sovereignty of States over their natural wealth and resources and the right of peoples under colonial or foreign domination to struggle for self-determination and national independence.

A revised version of the working paper was not discussed by the Group for lack of time.

An informal compilation of 74 proposals submitted to the Committee since 1976 was prepared by the Chairman and the Rapporteur of the Working Group. It included seven sets of proposals on the maintenance of international peace and security, in addition to those in the working papers summarized above.

(1) Reasons for the United Nations inability to maintain peace should be investigated and ways to enhance its role explored; Member States should refer to it matters within its competence; a treaty on the non-use of force should be drafted; and the definition of aggression should be added to the Charter.

(2) All Member States should carry out all Security Council decisions and follow all Assembly recommendations; the Charter should be amended to state that resolutions adopted by consensus or unanimously were firm commitments and that, for important problems, the Council and the Assembly should indicate the machinery responsible for overseeing implementation of their decisions; and a mechanism, including periodic reports, should be established to control implementation.

(3) The Assembly should be able to ask the Council for reports on major problems, formulate proposals and hold urgent special sessions when the Council was unable to act; and Article 18 of the Charter, on the Assembly's voting procedure, should endorse the consensus procedure for dealing with essential problems of peace and security.

(4) Council membership should be increased; in electing non-permanent members, due regard should be especially paid to their contribution to the maintenance of international peace and security; Members should be obliged by the Charter to carry out Council decisions on that topic; a universal body might be set up to examine progress in disarmament, adopt decisions and review negotiating machinery; permanent members should be asked to abide by their joint statement of June 1945 on the Council's voting procedure,<sup>4</sup> and should agree not to use the veto in matters of international peace and security; "procedural matters" should be defined; the unanimity rule should be extended to one or two non-permanent members by rotation; the Council should meet in regions where peace was threatened; it should establish an organ of inquiry or mediation to follow up on its decisions; a committee for supervising peace-keeping operations should be created; the Council should avoid decisions that did not have the consent of the States directly involved, except when peace was threatened or aggression committed; a Charter amendment should permit any Member to participate in the Council without vote when its sovereignty or security was involved; and a consultative mechanism should be set up to enhance the likelihood of early Council involvement in disputes.

(5) All of Chapter VII of the Charter, on threats to and breaches of the peace, should be implemented; clear rules should govern United Nations military activities; a report should be prepared on how States might comply with their obligations to contribute to peace-keeping forces under Articles 43 and 45; the Council should be asked to give early consideration to negotiations under Article 43 on agreements for contributing armed forces and aid; Charter amendments should give the Assembly the right to lay down guidelines on the use of forces and should stipulate advance agreement by the concerned States on their composition; the Military Staff Committee should be enlarged to include all

Council members; the Council should implement Charter measures to ensure implementation of its decisions; the activities of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations should be enhanced; a permanent peace-keeping force should be established; and the Council should be able to establish and deploy observation and interposition forces whenever necessary.

(6) The Secretary-General should be authorized to request Council meetings when he deemed it necessary.

(7) Member States should be asked for comments on the "enemy States" references in Articles 53 and 107; those provisions should be dealt with through an Assembly declaration that they did not apply to Member States; a document protecting the rights of minorities should be incorporated in the Charter; practical measures and assistance programmes should be established in support of liberation movements; a special Assembly session should be devoted to measures for granting independence to territories and establishing deadlines; and fascist activities should be prohibited.

In adopting its report to the Assembly, the Special Committee expressed the view that substantial progress had been made towards the fulfilment of its tasks. It recommended that the Repertory of Practice of United Nations Organs be brought up to date, but took no formal decisions requiring Assembly action.

Consideration by the General Assembly

At its 1980 regular session, the General Assembly renewed the Special Committee's mandate when it adopted resolution 35/164 on 15 December.

The Committee's 1980 report was considered chiefly in the Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee, simultaneously with a debate on the peaceful settlement of disputes (see subchapter below).

The Sixth Committee had before it, in addition, a report of the Secretary-General transmitting the comments of the Netherlands on the importance of peaceful settlement, stressing in particular the importance of independent fact-finding.

On 1 December, the Sixth Committee approved, by a recorded vote of 98 to 0, with 17 abstentions, a draft resolution sponsored by 35 Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) on the report of the Special Committee; the Assembly adopted it as resolution 35/164, by a recorded vote of 125 to 0, with 13 abstentions.

By this resolution, the Assembly decided that the Special Committee should continue to examine proposals with a view to according priority to areas on which general agreement seemed possible "and to make recommendations thereon." It was asked to accord priority in 1981 to proposals on the maintenance of international peace and security, "including those relating to the functioning of the Security Council," and also to consider proposals on the rationalization of United Nations procedures and, subsequently, on other topics. The Assembly invited Governments to submit or update proposals for consideration by the Special Committee. The Secretary-General was asked to give high priority to the preparation and publication of supplements updating the Repertoire of the Practice of the Security Council and the Repertory of Practice of United Nations Organs, and to report on progress in 1981.

At the request of the USSR, separate recorded votes were taken in the Sixth Committee on the phrases within quotes in the above summary. The wording by which the Special Committee was requested to make recommendations on the proposals it examined was retained by 86 votes to 15, with 15 abstentions; that referring to the Special Committee's examination of proposals on the Council's functioning was retained by 82 votes to 17, with 16 abstentions. The USSR objected to the proposal to have the Special Committee make recommendations, and warned against any attempt to redefine the principle of unanimity in the Council or to restrict its application; it also wondered whether publication of the two repertoires of practice might not be too costly.

Amendments by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya were not pressed to a vote. They contained two elements: a decision that the Committee should review the Council's unanimity rule, taking into consideration the principle of the equality of States, the fact that the maintenance of international peace and security was a joint responsibility of all Member States, and the strengthening of the Council's role in maintaining peace and security; and a request that the Committee report in 1981 on possible alternatives to the unanimity rule.

Although the United States and the United Kingdom said they regarded as unnecessary the two phrases on which separate votes were taken, they voted in favour of the resolution as a whole.

The German Democratic Republic, which abstained in the vote on the resolution after voting against retention of the two phrases, shared the view of the USSR that the Committee's mandate could not be changed without detriment, adding that the text did not contain sufficient safeguards against new attacks on the Charter. Voicing similar positions were Hungary and Poland. Hungary found it contradictory for the text to speak of priority consideration for areas on which general agreement was possible and also of priority for proposals on the maintenance of peace and security, on which general agreement in the Committee was not possible. Poland reserved the right to reconsider its future participation in the Special Committee's work.

Introducing the text, the Philippines said the Special Committee should not be given a deadline for its work or life; it should be used to enhance the effectiveness of the United Nations as an arbiter of differences and maintainer of world peace.

In assessing the Special Committee's work, most Members agreed that progress had been made at the 1980 session, though China observed that the progress had been slow. The German Democratic Republic believed that generally acceptable results on the Committee's many controversial topics could only be achieved over a longer period of time, and Austria cautioned that consensus could be the only basis for progress. Israel, on the other hand, questioned whether the compilation of repetitive, contradictory or inconsequent resolutions really contributed to strengthening the role of the Organization and expressed doubts as to whether the Committee should be continued.

A number of speakers felt that the Committee's mandate should be extended; Romania said it should be placed on a stable footing to avoid the need for annual renewal.

Some States, including Cyprus, India, Kenya, Mauritania, New Zealand, Romania, Uganda, Venezuela and Zambia, expressed the view that the Committee's mandate should be streamlined, clarified or made more action-oriented. Chile, the Federal Republic of Germany, Spain, and Trinidad and Tobago agreed with a suggestion by the Special Committee's Chairman that its mandate should be expanded to allow it to respond to the growing impression that the United Nations was powerless to maintain international peace and security; several States, including Algeria, Brazil, Egypt, Japan, Kenya and Nigeria, felt that the Committee should be empowered to make specific recommendations on this score to the General Assembly. Zambia said it should be given clear guidance on priorities. Italy favoured the inclusion of social matters, and especially human rights, among the topics entrusted to the Committee. The Federal Republic of Germany thought that rationalization of the Organization's procedures should be deleted from its mandate, at least for the time being, while Argentina, Belgium, France, Hungary, the USSR and Zaire felt that discussion of the topic should be resumed at the Committee's next session. New Zealand and the United States cautioned that the Committee must seek areas of common agreement and not maximize those of disagreement.

Bulgaria and Saudi Arabia were among those which favoured continuing the Committee's mandate without alteration. France advised the greatest caution with regard to proposals that might lead the mandate to be substantially changed. Afghanistan, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and the United Kingdom felt the Committee's efforts should be directed towards securing more effective application of existing Charter provisions. Turkey said the Committee should continue its work by examining proposals that did not entail any revision of the Charter.

Whether the Committee should be empowered to make recommendations involving amendments to the Charter was the subject of numerous comments. Several States, including Algeria, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Somalia and Zaire, argued that the Organization's ineffectiveness in maintaining peace and security could be traced to shortcomings in the Charter and stressed the need for bold reform in a changing world. Burundi, the Congo, Ghana, Mauritania, Tunisia, Uganda, Venezuela and others specifically favoured Charter amendment to restrict or abolish the use of the veto in the Security Council, as a necessary step towards the full democratization of the United Nations. The Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR argued against tampering with the unanimity rule or amending the Charter. Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates also expressed doubt as to the advisability of amending the Charter. Finland said that, since the proposal for a general review of the Charter did not seem to enjoy widespread support, the Special Committee should concentrate on measures to enhance the Organization's effectiveness.

Other States also felt that the Organization's effectiveness could be enhanced without resorting to Charter amendment. Some felt it was impractical to expect the degree of consensus necessary for amendment and preferred to concentrate on more immediate practical reforms. Italy and the United Kingdom, for example, favoured continuing review of the Charter but felt that caution should be exercised before seeking changes which might disturb the balance of powers between the principal organs on which the Organization was based. Czechoslovakia and Italy also pointed out that agreement on even minor amendments would be difficult to achieve in the current world situation. Others, such as Brazil, China and Japan, while upholding the basic principles and soundness of the Charter, expressed willingness to consider possible changes, if they could be shown to contribute to strengthening the Organization.

Greece believed Charter principles should be elaborated in the form of a legally binding universal code of conduct in international relations, as proposed by the group of developing countries in the Special Committee; Austria felt the proposal needed careful study. The Ukrainian SSR considered that the proposed code would duplicate the Charter or lead to its revision without improving the Organization's effectiveness.

Some States, such as Bangladesh, Egypt, India, Indonesia and Pakistan, observed that actions less drastic than outright revision of the Charter could be taken through procedural and institutional reforms, including voluntary restriction on the use of the veto. Kuwait felt that voluntary restraint was the more practical course, with greater responsibility in the decision-making process being the immediate aim, based on an objective determination of disputed facts. Although Japan recognized the necessity of the veto procedure, it favoured measures to restrict its abuse as much as possible, particularly in fact-finding. The United States supported the idea of treating the establishment of fact-finding missions as procedural and said it could consider dealing similarly with mediation and conciliation proposals, but it was sceptical as to the wisdom of tinkering with the Charter.

A great deal could be done to strengthen the United Nations through decisions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, without amending the Charter, Mexico stated. Austria felt that a dialogue between the two organs would be useful and suggested that the Council be asked to reactivate its committee of experts that had drafted its rules of procedure and dealt with other constitutional issues.

Peaceful settlement of disputes between States

Report of the Special Committee

The peaceful settlement of international disputes was one of the two main questions considered by the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization at its 1980 session, held at Manila, Philippines, from 28 January to 22 February. The other main topic was a list of proposals regarding the maintenance of international peace and security (see subchapter above). Both topics had been assigned to the Committee by the General Assembly in 1979.<sup>5</sup>

The Committee established a Working Group to consider both questions. The Group, open to all Committee members, concluded that a draft declaration on the peaceful settlement of disputes should be prepared, and an informal working paper containing such a draft was submitted. In the light of the Group's examination of its provisions, in first reading, the text was twice revised by the sponsors to take account of numerous suggestions, amendments, reservations and objections, which were appended to the Special Committee's report to the Assembly. The second revision, sponsored by Egypt, El Salvador, Ghana, Indonesia, Nigeria, the Philippines, Romania, Sierra Leone and Tunisia, and known as the draft Manila declaration on the peaceful settlement of international disputes (see section below), was not discussed for lack of time.

The Group also considered a Greek working paper proposing that States do all in their power to settle disputes peacefully, refrain from action likely to prolong a dispute, avoid the threat or use of force, and undertake never to recognize situations created through force in contravention of the United Nations Charter; parties unable to settle their disputes through negotiation would promptly use the other settlement procedures provided for in Article 33 of the Charter.<sup>6</sup>

For lack of time, the Working Group did not pursue consideration of a United States working paper proposing that a questionnaire be sent to Member States to try to determine why States were not making fuller use of existing machinery for peaceful settlement, with the aim of improving its effectiveness, and a proposed outline by France for a handbook on dispute settlement.

Report of the Secretary-General

The Secretary-General submitted in 1980 a summary report of the opinions, suggestions and proposals he had received from Member States in response to a 1979 request by the General Assembly<sup>7</sup> for views on a declaration on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States.

Of the 15 responding States, Chile, Ecuador, Greece, Qatar, Romania and Suriname favoured elaboration of a declaration. Norway and Sweden felt that any proposed instrument should contain concrete recommendations. France said it must not affect the Charter's substantive provisions or its institutional machinery. The USSR stressed the importance of direct negotiation and the need to avoid pressuring States to choose a particular means of peaceful settlement. Seychelles believed the United Nations should strive towards peaceful settlement in all cases, and Ghana would support any initiative to enhance the effectiveness of the Charter. Such questions should continue to be considered by the Special Committee, in the view of Indonesia and the United States. The Philippines said its views were incorporated in the draft Manila declaration submitted to that Committee.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The subject of peaceful settlement of disputes between States was considered at the Assembly's 1980 regular session mainly in the Sixth (Legal) Committee, concurrently with consideration of the report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization.

The Sixth Committee established a Working Group on the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes, open to all United Nations Members, to pursue the work towards a declaration on this subject undertaken by the Special Committee at its 1980 Manila session.

The Group held 10 meetings between 30 October and 2 December. It used as its basis for discussion the latest revision of the draft Manila declaration on the peaceful settlement of international disputes introduced in the Special Committee. The draft was reintroduced in the Sixth Committee by the same nine sponsors, joined by Madagascar.

Preceded by a preamble, general principles of the draft text declared that all States would:

(1) act in good faith in conformity with the United Nations Charter and conduct their international relations with a view to avoiding inter-State disputes;

(2) settle international disputes exclusively by peaceful means;

(3) settle disputes on the basis of the sovereign equality of States, with free choice of means, in conformity with justice and international law;

(4) observe, in settling disputes, the principles of: respect for national independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity; non-use of force or threat of force and non-recognition of territorial acquisition resulting therefrom; non-interference and non-intervention; every people's inalienable right to choose freely its political, economic and social systems, and to self-determination; and permanent sovereignty over natural resources;

(5) seek early and just settlement by negotiation, inquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements, or other peaceful means of their choice, including good offices;

(6) seek settlement of local disputes through regional arrangements or agencies of which they were members, before referring disputes to the Security Council;

(7) refer a dispute to the Council only after failing to reach a solution by the above means and after consulting with each other on agreed ways to settle the dispute peacefully;

(8) refrain from action which might aggravate the situation, extend the dispute, or obstruct or delay settlement;

(9) respect the principle of international law on the exhaustion of local remedies when applicable;

(10) consider concluding agreements on peaceful settlement and consider including settlement provisions in international conventions;

(11) enhance the effectiveness of treaty-established international tribunals; and

(12) implement in good faith all aspects of agreed terms of settlement.

The declaration's provisions were to apply to the authentic representatives of a people recognized by its regional organization and the United Nations. No dispute or failure of peaceful settlement procedure was to justify the use or threat of force or coercion. Nothing in the declaration was to be construed as enlarging or diminishing the scope of the Charter, including its provisions on the right of self-defence.

With reference to the role of the United Nations in the peaceful settlement of disputes, States should, under the draft declaration:

(1) make full use of the Charter's procedures and means, particularly Chapter VI concerning pacific settlement;

(2) respect and implement General Assembly and Security Council recommendations based on Chapter VI;

(3) strengthen the Assembly's role by: fully using Charter provisions enabling the Assembly to consider situations before they developed into conflicts and to recommend measures for those deemed likely to impair general welfare or friendly relations; using Charter-established machinery; and considering setting up, on request of the parties, an informal, ad hoc, good-offices group;

(4) strengthen the Council's role by: informing it of action taken to settle any dispute, whether previously referred to it or not; asking it to meet formally or informally; encouraging it to use Charter-provided opportunities or information provided by the Secretary-General in periodic reviews of potential threats to peace; considering making greater use of informal consultations and the Council's fact-finding capacity; and encouraging it to consider using observer missions more often; and

(5) strive to enhance the role and effectiveness of the International Court of Justice, through more frequent recourse, by: considering acceptance of its compulsory jurisdiction; referring to it any legal dispute whose continuation could endanger peace, unless the dispute could otherwise be settled expeditiously; extending the range of cases in which an advisory opinion might be requested; and considering the inclusion of treaty clauses providing for submission to it of disputes arising from treaty interpretation or application.

In bringing disputes to the Council's attention, the Secretary-General might acquire information and ascertain facts, arranging visits for this purpose to consenting States. The declaration's provisions were not to be construed as prejudicing Charter provisions, the rights and duties of States, or the functions and powers of United Nations organs under the Charter.

The final provisions of the draft declaration contained an appeal for observance and promotion of its provisions, the statement that the conclusion of a general treaty on peaceful settlement could facilitate or contribute to just and equitable international relations and enhance international peace and security, and a provision stressing the need to continue efforts to codify and promote the progressive development of principles and norms for peaceful settlement.

The Working Group held a first reading of the draft Manila declaration. Its report to the Sixth Committee, adopted on 2 December, summarized general comments on the draft as well as proposals on specific provisions. The report listed three additional elements suggested for insertion in the draft: a reminder of the peaceful settlement role of the specialized agencies and of international non-regional organizations; a reminder of the existence and role of certain international specialized or technical tribunals; and a proposal for preparation of a list of authorities willing to appoint arbitrators or tribunal chairmen.

Introducing the Group's report in the Sixth Committee, its Chairman, Canada, said there were serious divergencies of view on important questions in the draft declaration, but he did not believe the difficulties were insurmountable.

On 15 December, following consideration of the Group's report, the Assembly adopted a resolution whereby it again called on all States to adhere strictly to the principle of peaceful settlement of disputes. The Assembly considered that the question of peaceful settlement should be a central concern for States. To that end, efforts should be continued to examine and develop the principle and the means of consolidating its full observance. The Assembly asked the Special Committee on the Charter and the role of the Organization to continue elaborating the draft Manila declaration for further consideration at the Assembly's 1981 session. It expressed hope that additional States would transmit their opinions as soon as possible.

Resolution 35/160 was adopted by consensus. The text, sponsored by 27 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), had been similarly approved in the Sixth Committee on 4 December.

In a related action, the Assembly, by resolution 35/164 of 15 December, asked the Special Committee to continue its work on the question of peaceful settlement of disputes with a view to developing and recommending a way to conclude that work. It also asked the Committee to continue elaborating the draft Manila declaration for consideration by the Assembly in 1981. (For details of the resolution, see subchapter above.)

Introducing the draft which became resolution 35/160, Romania said it was primarily designed to guarantee continued efforts to strengthen the United Nations role with regard to peaceful settlement.

Japan, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Somalia, Spain, Turkey, the United Kingdom and Yugoslavia were among the many States which welcomed the Romanian initiative. Most of the States which spoke also welcomed the Special Committee's efforts to formulate a declaration: these included Argentina, the Congo, Cyprus, the Federal Republic of Germany, Indonesia, Iran, Italy, Mauritania, Nepal, New Zealand, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda and Venezuela. Austria, Bahrain, Belgium, Egypt and Liberia considered it the principal achievement of the Special Committee since its establishment. Ecuador believed the declaration would promote the progressive development of international law.

Algeria and Japan were among the many States which felt there was an urgent need for fresh efforts to improve the methods and strengthen the mechanisms for the peaceful settlement of international disputes. Austria held that the Special Committee should concentrate on technical and procedural aspects of the issue and clarify the role of the United Nations in that field.

Pakistan said a declaration would serve a useful purpose if confined to the elucidation and amplification of the principles of the Charter. Algeria felt the term "international dispute" should be defined exactly in the declaration, to specify whether it referred to all disputes or only those which threatened peace.

China held that the declaration should emphasize the danger of hegemonism and include a condemnation of the unlawful use or threat of force, aggression, subversion, military intervention and occupation.

Several States which favoured enhancement of the principle struck a note of caution about the way to achieve that goal. Some considered that the aim of the declaration should be to ensure better application of Charter provisions. What was required, in Italy's view, were precise proposals which would develop the potential inherent in the Charter. Australia remarked that little use had been made of existing procedures. India and Togo said they did not doubt the need to strengthen the role of the United Nations in this field but observed that an increase in the number of legal instruments did not enhance their effectiveness.

The United States said it was optimistic about the work on the draft declaration, although it believed that institutional reform and other concrete steps were more likely to produce meaningful results than another normative reiteration. The Netherlands had misgivings about the usefulness of yet another declaration, warning that it could divert attention from existing procedures and risk a more restrictive interpretation of legally binding obligations. Israel considered that the draft should develop the obligation of States to comply with binding decisions of third-party machinery in which they had participated, and should be limited to disputes between States.

Bangladesh and Iran believed that the Charter and other instruments contained adequate provisions for ensuring strict respect for the principle of peaceful settlement, if full use was made of the means they provided. The fault, according to Iran, lay not in the absence of legal instruments but in the attitude of States determined to secure advantages they would never be accorded at a negotiating table.

Instead of establishing new machinery, the Ukrainian SSR said, the resources of the Charter should be used to the full. The positive elements of the Manila draft were those which sought to enhance the Organization's effectiveness through the use of existing procedures that respected the Charter, the Byelorussian SSR added. Czechoslovakia, Hungary and the Ukrainian SSR also felt it essential that the instruments be based on and not go beyond the provisions of Chapter VI of the Charter. The USSR said the Charter contained all that was needed to maintain and strengthen international peace and security.

Togo expressed the view, held by many States, that the Charter provisions for dispute settlement depended for their implementation on the political will of States, and especially the permanent members of the Security Council. The need to encourage the will to use available mechanisms was stressed also by Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, Finland, Iran and the Upper Volta. Algeria and the Lao People's Democratic Republic referred in this connexion to the principle of good faith, cited several times in the draft declaration. Morocco added that it was essential for countries to refrain from one-sided pursuit of their own interests.

Afghanistan favoured a declaration that would leave States free to choose among various means of settling disputes peacefully. Poland and the USSR observed that the wide choice of means in the Charter enabled States to select the one that best suited them. The principle of freedom of choice from among settlement procedures should be guaranteed, in the view of Afghanistan, Bulgaria, Ecuador, Hungary, Mongolia and Viet Nam.

Of the various methods indicated, direct negotiations between the parties offered the necessary flexibility and effectiveness, in the opinion of Afghanistan, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Hungary, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Poland and Viet Nam.

Kuwait, on the other hand, warned that such methods as negotiation, inquiry and mediation had led to a stalemate in many cases; in the absence of compulsory jurisdiction, there was no guarantee of settlement. Mandatory arbitration and judicial settlement in some cases was supported by Greece and Somalia.

The idea of advance mandatory settlement procedures was opposed by Eastern European countries. The USSR objected to proposals to create an organ responsible for the settlement of disputes and to give the International Court of Justice compulsory jurisdiction, on the ground that such approaches contradicted the principle of freedom of choice. Hungary and the USSR pointed out that more than two thirds of the Member States did not recognize compulsory jurisdiction of the Court or had entered reservations of a kind which nullified that principle. Similar views were held by the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the Ukrainian SSR and Viet Nam. These States were also opposed to extending the range of cases in which an advisory opinion might be requested of the Court, mandatory intervention of third States in dispute settlement, establishment of general organs for peaceful settlement, or the assignment to the Secretary-General of functions not specified in the Charter.

China and the Netherlands, on the other hand, felt it was important to broaden the Court's competence at both the contentious and advisory levels. Japan believed that the proposal for preparation of a list of authorities to appoint arbitrators or chairmen of arbitral tribunals should be further developed.

Israel, New Zealand and the United States felt that greater stress should be placed on the importance of accepting in advance to have matters submitted to third-party settlement.

The United States considered the section of the Manila draft on strengthening the roles of the Court and the Security Council to be the most important part of the text. Yugoslavia favoured developing and strengthening the role of both the Assembly and the Council as negotiating organs. The Congo also believed the Assembly should be given a greater role in dispute settlement.

Urging a more active role for all three organs, Egypt suggested such measures as appointment of an Assembly sub-committee to seek consensus on draft resolutions before a vote, an early offer of the Secretary-General's good offices and the dispatch of observers at an early stage in conflicts. The United Arab Emirates said the Council and the Assembly should ensure that the Secretary-General could act in accordance with the powers vested in him with a view to ending a dispute quickly, and parties should agree to any procedures likely to achieve that objective. Ecuador felt that the Assembly and the Council should strengthen their means for recommending implementation of settlement measures and use their right of initiative more often.

Eastern European States generally considered that, while the role of the Council should be stressed, that of other organs and of the Secretary-General should remain unchanged. Czechoslovakia and Hungary, as well as Afghanistan, said they were opposed to any attempt to transfer the specific powers and functions of the Council to other bodies or share those powers with others. The Byelorussian SSR could not accept setting up standing auxiliary organs, investigative missions or informal fact-finding groups.

The right of self-defence should be more clearly defined in the declaration, according to Iran and Yugoslavia, but Israel cautioned that care must be taken not to depart from Charter language. China said the principle of peaceful settlement should not prevent a country from exercising its right of self-defence under Article 51. Algeria felt that the obligation for peaceful settlement could not be invoked, if the dispute had already degenerated into an open conflict, until the status quo ante had been restored.

The vagueness of the reference to the duty to settle disputes peacefully in relation to national liberation movements was a point to be improved, in Japan's view. Algeria and the Congo felt it would be harmful to impose on those movements in all cases the obligations deriving from the principle of peaceful settlement.

There was support from several States for the French proposal for a manual compiling peaceful settlement provisions in existing treaties and the United States proposal for a questionnaire on why States were not fully using existing machinery. Both proposals had been presented to the Special Committee, and support for one or both was expressed by Argentina, Austria, the Congo, France, Greece, Italy, Japan, Liberia and the Netherlands. Israel remarked that the Secretariat might be asked to update its earlier surveys of treaty provisions on peaceful settlement.

Mexico and Italy mentioned the possibility that codification of the peaceful settlement principle might eventually take the form of a universal treaty.

The General Assembly,

Having examined the item entitled "Peaceful settlement of disputes between States,"

Deeply concerned at the continuation of conflict situations and the emergence of new sources of disputes and tension in International life, and especially at the growing tendency to resort to force or the threat of force and at the escalation of the arms race, which gravely endanger the independence and Security of States, as well as international peace and security,

Reaffirming its resolution 34/102 of 14 December 1979, in which it urged all States to co-operate in the elaboration of a declaration of the General Assembly on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States,

Considering that the elaboration of a declaration on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States could contribute to the elimination of the danger of recourse to force or the threat of force and, therefore, to the strengthening of international peace and security,

Noting with satisfaction the report of the Secretary-General, containing the opinions, suggestions and proposals of States regarding the declaration on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States,

Noting a/s/o the report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, especially the work done on the draft Manila declaration on the peaceful settlement of international disputes,

Taking into account the suggestions and opinions expressed during the examination at its current session of the question of the peaceful settlement of disputes between States,

Bearing in mind the wide consultations that have taken place in connexion with the content of the declaration on the peaceful settlement of international disputes and the fruitful activity in the Working Group, established at the current session of the General Assembly, which continued the elaboration of the declaration,

2. Considers that the question of the peaceful settlement of disputes should represent one of the central concerns for States and that, to this end, the efforts for examining and further developing the principle of the peaceful settlement of disputes between States and the means of consolidating its full observance by all States in their international relations should be continued;

3. Considers a/s/o that the elaboration, as soon as possible, of a declaration of the General Assembly on the peaceful settlement of international disputes is likely to contribute to the strengthening of the role and the efficiency of the United Nations in preventing conflicts and settling them peacefully;

4. Requests the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization to continue the elaboration of the draft Manila declaration on the peaceful settlement of international disputes with a view to submitting it for further consideration to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session;

5. Refers to the Special Committee the report of its Working Group on the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes, as well as the views expressed at the current session of the General Assembly on the contents of the declaration:

6. Expresses the hope that the States which have not yet transmitted to the Secretary-General their opinions on that matter will do so as soon as possible in order to contribute, in this way also, to the elaboration of the declaration;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session the item entitled "Peaceful settlement of disputes between States."

Chapter IX

Matters relating to Africa

The internationally recognized independence of Zimbabwe, achieved at midnight on 17/18 April 1980, resolved one of the major political problems faced by the United Nations in southern Africa during the past two decades. Following agreement on transitional arrangements for the independence of the former United Kingdom colony of Southern Rhodesia, the Security Council, on 2 February, called for measures to ensure the fairness of the elections later that month to constitute the new Government. Zimbabwe was admitted as a United Nations Member State on 25 August.

The apartheid policies of South Africa and ways to bring them to an end remained high on the United Nations agenda. The General Assembly continued to urge the imposition of mandatory sanctions against South Africa, while the Security Council called on the Pretoria regime to take a series of internal steps to end its racist policies.

The Secretary-General and his representatives continued discussions with the South African Government on ways to achieve independence for Namibia through implementation of a plan approved by the Security Council in 1978.<sup>1</sup>

On another matter concerning South Africa, the Security Council in April condemned that country for violating Zambia's territory and demanded the withdrawal of its troops. In June, the Council condemned South Africa for its invasion of Angola and also demanded the withdrawal of its forces. Issues between Lesotho and South Africa were the subject of letters from them to the Council and the Secretary-General, and of a message by the Council President. Mozambique lodged a complaint against South Africa in February.

The General Assembly reaffirmed in November the sovereignty of the Comoros over the island of Mayotte and invited the Comoros and France to continue talks for a just solution. In December, it reaffirmed an earlier invitation to France to start negotiations with Madagascar for the reintegration of several Malagasy islands in the Indian Ocean.

Relations between Benin and Togo and between Egypt and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya were the subject of letters from those countries to the Secretary-General.

The Assembly and the Economic and Social Council continued to oversee a number of special economic assistance programmes directed to 13 African nations faced with special problems, and the Assembly added Benin, the Central African Republic and Zimbabwe to the list, raising the number to 16. The United Nations and the Organization of African Unity continued their co-operation on a number of matters aimed at the elimination of colonialism and apartheid on the African continent and the accelerated development of African countries.

Details follow on these questions relating to Africa.

Matters concerning South Africa's apartheid policies

Both the Security Council and the General Assembly continued in 1980 to call insistently for an end to the racial separation policies enforced by the Government of South Africa under the name of apartheid. Throughout the year, the Assembly's Special Committee against Apartheid mobilized international campaigns to apply pressure on South Africa and to block various forms of collaboration with that country's regime.

The Security Council, on 13 June, unanimously condemned the regime for massive repression against opponents of apartheid, and called on it to take a series of internal steps to end its racist policies (resolution 473(1980)). The Council's

Committee on the question of South Africa recommended in September a number of measures to make the existing arms embargo against South Africa more effective, but the Council had taken no action on these proposals by the year's end.

Following a debate in plenary meetings, the Assembly adopted 18 resolutions on apartheid on 16 December; it also adopted two others that originated in its Main Committees. By the first of the resolutions arising out of the plenary discussion, it urged the Security Council to impose mandatory sanctions against South Africa and condemned collaboration with the regime by Western and other States (resolution 35/206A). This call for comprehensive mandatory sanctions was repeated in another text by which the Assembly also called on Governments to sever all relations with South Africa (35/206 C). It repeated an earlier request that the Council consider imposing a mandatory oil embargo, and it detailed steps which Governments should take to stop the supply of oil to South Africa (35/206 D). To mobilize support for such efforts, it authorized the holding of an International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa (35/206 I).

The Assembly reiterated its call for the cessation of military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa (35/206 B). In the economic sphere, it urged the Security Council to consider action aimed at halting further foreign investments in that country (35/206 A) and invited Governments to prohibit their transnational corporations from collaborating with South Africa (35/206 F). It demanded that Israel terminate collaboration with South Africa, particularly in the military and nuclear fields (35/206 H), and it urged an intensified campaign to isolate South Africa from economic, political, military, nuclear and other forms of co-operation (35/206 O).

In the latest of a series of resolutions on political prisoners in South Africa, the Assembly condemned the death sentences imposed in November on three men accused of treason and attempted murder in connexion with an attack on a bank outside Pretoria in January (35/206 K). Endorsing a Declaration by an International Seminar on Women and Apartheid, held at Helsinki, Finland, in May, the Assembly appealed for support of projects to assist South African women and children (35/206 N).

The Assembly took a series of steps to mobilize public action against apartheid. It requested the Special Committee against Apartheid to promote international campaigns with a view to isolating South Africa (35/206 G), and requested States to prevent cultural, academic, sports and other exchanges with that country (35/206 E). In parallel with efforts to promote a total boycott of <sup>apart</sup> heid sports teams, it asked for continued work on a draft convention against apartheid in sports (35/206 M). It requested priority for the dissemination of information on apartheid as part of the United Nations public information programme (35/206 L).

The United Nations continued its efforts to aid the people of South Africa, their national liberation movement and victims of apartheid. The United Nations Development Programme committed $2.2 million for such assistance over five years (1977-1981), and both the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly requested United Nations organizations to expand their activities in this sphere (resolutions 1980/50 and 35/206 J). The Assembly again urged contributions to the United Nations programme of assistance to southern African student refugees, which entered its fourth year (resolution 35/184 of 15 December), as well as to two older programmes—the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, which aided refugees from that country as well as persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa (35/206 R of 16 December), and the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa (35/30 of 11 November).

The Special Committee against Apartheid continued to review the apartheid policies of South Africa and their international repercussions. Meeting throughout the year, it carried out work in pursuance of its mandate from the Assembly to promote the dissemination of information on the evils of apartheid and the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa, to encourage full implementation of United Nations resolutions on the subject by all Governments and organizations, to promote public action and campaigns supporting the national liberation movement of South Africa, and to promote concerted action by Governments and organizations in the international mobilization against apartheid.

In its annual report to the Assembly, adopted on 11 September, the Committee summarized its activities and presented a series of conclusions and recommendations, many of which were incorporated into Assembly resolutions. It also submitted three special reports: on the implementation of United Nations resolutions on apartheid by Governments and intergovernmental organizations; on relations between Israel and South Africa; and on plans for the International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa. The Assembly authorized the Committee to continue its work in 1981 (resolution 35/206 P).

Reviewing the situation in South Africa in its annual report, the Committee found that the anti-apartheid movement in South Africa had scored a tremendous advance, evidenced by: a nation-wide uprising by black students, supported by teachers and significant numbers of white students; strikes by workers on unprecedented scales; mass demonstrations by blacks against rent increases and the forcible removal of communities; and armed attacks by the national liberation movement. The régime, however, was pursuing its policy of repression, terror and propaganda. It had gunned down student demonstrators, arrested and deported striking workers, incarcerated other opponents of apartheid and escalated acts of aggression against neighbouring States. While pretending to favour reforms, the régime had enacted more repressive laws and had continued mass population removals. It had proposed a new constitutional dispensation which would retain the white minority's power monopoly, co-opt coloured people and Asians into a merely advisory role and exclude the African majority. The danger of conflict had greatly increased as a result of the régime's continued military build-up and its frantic efforts to acquire nuclear-weapon capability.

The Security Council and the Assembly also dealt with aspects of South Africa's relations with the neighbouring States of Angola, Lesotho, Mozambique and Zambia (see following subchapters).

Security Council consideration of the question of South Africa

Consideration by the Security Council (4-13 June)

On 13 June 1980, following a series of demonstrations by student and other groups in South Africa, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 473(1980), by which it strongly condemned the racist régime for further aggravating the situation and for its massive repression against all opponents of apartheid, for killings of peaceful demonstrators and political detainees, and for its defiance of General Assembly and Council resolutions. Expressing profound sympathy with the victims, it reaffirmed that apartheid was a crime against the conscience and dignity of mankind and seriously disturbed international peace and security. It recognized the legitimacy of the struggle of the South African people for the elimination of apartheid and for the establishment of a democratic society.

The Council called on South Africa urgently to end violence against the African people. It expressed hope that the inevitable change in South Africa's racial policies could be attained through peaceful means, and declared that the régime's violence and repression and its continuing denial of equal human and political rights to the great majority of South Africans greatly aggravated the situation and would lead to violent conflict and racial conflagration with serious international repercussions and the further isolation and estrangement of South Africa. It called on the régime to take specified measures immediately to eliminate apartheid and grant equal rights to all South Africans; urgently called for the release of all political prisoners, including Nelson Mandela and all other black leaders with whom the régime must deal in any meaningful discussion of the country's future; and demanded that the régime refrain from committing further military acts and subversion against independent African States.

The Council called on all States strictly and scrupulously to implement its arms embargo resolution of 1977<sup>2</sup> and enact effective national legislation for that purpose. It requested its Committee Established by Resolution 421(1977)<sup>3</sup> to redouble its efforts to secure full implementation of the arms embargo by recommending by 15 September measures to close all loopholes in the arms embargo, reinforce it and make it more comprehensive. It requested the Secretary-General to report by 15 September on the implementation of this resolution, and decided to consider the situation again not later than 30 September.

Resolution 473(1980), prepared in the course of consultations among Council members, was adopted following a debate in the Council between 4 and 13 June. The convening of the Council as a matter of urgency to consider "The question of South Africa," in view of the situation in that country, was requested in a letter dated 29 May to the Council President from Morocco, as current Chairman of the African Group of Member States at the United Nations.

By a letter of 5 June to the Council President, South Africa transmitted the text of a letter of the same date from its Minister for Foreign Affairs and Information. The Minister said it was ironic that the Council should display vindictiveness against South Africa at a time when the Government was more than ever committed to, and actively engaged in, a programme of constructive political evolution and constitutional reconstruction designed to accommodate the aspirations of all national entities in the country. It had sought to increase contacts and discussion between leaders in an effort to establish the broadest basis for co-operation between white and black, to remove legitimate grievances and resolve contentious issues. Misguided attempts by States to use the United Nations to bring outside pressure to bear on South Africa while encouraging subversion and conflict internally would not achieve their ends. Solutions to domestic problems could be found only internally, free from external interference and pressure.

The representatives of Algeria, Bahrain, Benin, Botswana, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, Guyana, Mozambique, Nigeria, Romania, Seychelles, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia and Zaire were invited, at their request, to participate in the Council's discussion without the right to vote. At the request of the Niger, Tunisia and Zambia, and with the Council's consent, the President extended invitations, under rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure,<sup>4</sup> to Johnstone F. Makatini, representative of the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC), and to Henry E. Isaacs, representative of the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC).

In the debate, Mozambique, speaking as Chairman of the African group for the month of June, said the group had requested an emergency meeting of the Council because an alarming and explosive situation was developing in South Africa due to the apartheid policy of the South African regime. After numerous attempts to bring about change through peaceful means, and after being confronted by violence and brutality, the people of South Africa were being forced to resort to other means of attaining their legitimate rights. The recent wave of boycotts of classes by students demanding an end to discrimination were not isolated acts. Recently, the South African régime had been leading a massive and hostile campaign against the neighbouring countries and had been systematically violating their airspace and territory in a deliberate effort to provoke armed confrontation. South Africa should not be allowed to export its internal conflicts to neighbouring countries.

Africa wished the minority racist regime to be strongly condemned for its criminal policies and actions, Mozambique continued. The international community could secure the elimination of apartheid by giving full support to the national liberation movement of South Africa, and by discouraging any military or nuclear collaboration with South Africa. The African group called on the Council to take measures to end the suffering, repression and terror, and the massive and indiscriminate detentions of South Africans, and to bring about the freeing of all political prisoners, including Nelson Mandela.

Speaking also as Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid, the representative of Nigeria said that in the past six weeks schoolchildren had abandoned classes in open protest against their racially segregated and inferior education, and many of them had been killed or maimed by the South African police and army, armed with automatic weapons. Bishop Desmond M. Tutu, Secretary-General of the South African Council of Churches, had been arrested on 26 May, along with 52 other black and white church leaders, for demonstrating peacefully in support of the schoolchildren. Some 15,000 to 20,000 white South Africans, mainly professionals, were emigrating annually from South Africa, and the Committee Chairman had asked the International Labour Organisation to assist in preventing further emigration from Europe and America to South Africa, since the 21 million South Africans were being denied training and employment because of the new white immigrants. The national liberation movement, which had long been wedded to non-violence, had decided that the people could not allow the regime to kill with impunity, and there had been many attacks on police stations and other targets, culminating in the attack on 1 June against the South African Oil and Gas Corporation's oil storage facilities at Sasolburg and Secunda.

Nigeria called on the Council to: express revulsion at the killing of children in South Africa and call on world public opinion to exert its influence; demand the immediate release of Nelson Mandela and all political prisoners; call for an end to all repression; call for the full participation of the genuine leaders of the oppressed people in determining the future of South Africa and the establishment of a democratic government based on majority rule; call on all States to implement strictly the arms embargo against South Africa and to stop all nuclear collaboration with that regime; ask the Security Council Committee Established by Resolution 421(1977)<sup>5</sup> to make proposals urgently for the reinforcement and effective monitoring of the arms embargo; impose an oil embargo against South Africa, as the members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) and some other major oil producers had done, and meanwhile take adequate measures to stop illegal transport of oil to South Africa from OPEC countries; and act to end new investments in and trade with South Africa. In anticipation of the Council's decision, Nigeria would confiscate any ship, tanker or aircraft within its territorial sea or airspace found to be violating the OPEC oil embargo, and would penalize their crews.

The German Democratic Republic expressed support for the proposals by Nigeria.

Several participants in the debate, including Algeria, Bangladesh, Botswana, Cuba, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, Norway, Portugal, Romania, Seychelles, Tunisia, the United Kingdom, the United States, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia and Zambia, supported the demands for the immediate release of Nelson Mandela and other political prisoners. Calls for strengthening of the arms embargo were made by Bangladesh, Jamaica, Mexico, Viet Nam and Zaire. Benin, Guyana, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia called for comprehensive and mandatory sanctions. Algeria, Egypt and Guyana demanded the cessation of acts of reprisal and intimidation against the States neighbouring South Africa. Guyana, Jamaica, Yugoslavia and Zaire wanted an end to all forms of collaboration with the South African regime. Botswana, the Philippines and Zambia called for the establishment of a democratic State. Benin, Cuba, Ethiopia, Guyana and Viet Nam held certain Western Governments responsible for the situation because of their collaboration with the Pretoria regime.

Bahrain, on behalf of the group of Arab States, said the group hoped the Council would be able to implement an effective oil embargo, such as that declared by OPEC, and decide to put an end to economic and nuclear collaboration with the minority regime.

Yugoslavia said the Non-Aligned Movement, which had always been a staunch supporter of liberation struggles, was ready to assume part of the international responsibility and to contribute to the liberation of South Africa through solidarity with its people.

Mexico called on the Council to close any door through which South Africa could continue to receive war matériel, and systematically to suppress whatever support and supplies were given to that regime. Mexico reaffirmed its recent decision not to entertain relations of any kind with the Pretoria régime or to allow South African nationals into Mexico.

The USSR said it shared the deep concern of African and other States at the events in South Africa. The preservation of the hotbed of colonialism and racism in southern Africa was in keeping with the long-term political, strategic and economic interests of a number of countries of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), in particular the United States, which viewed South Africa as a bulwark and a base for the struggle against independent Africa as well as its military spring-board in that part of the world. The economic and military potential of South Africa had increased as a result of the support of NATO countries; some of them had been doing everything they could to prevent the adoption of effective economic sanctions against the Pretoria racists. The USSR called for strict observance of existing sanctions and the adoption of comprehensive ones. The proposals by Nigeria and others were the minimum which should underlie any Council decision.

China said the South African racist authorities were continuing their militarist policies, refusing to abandon their colonialist rule over Namibia while stepping up armed aggression against neighbouring African States and intensifying their barbarous repression of the Azanian people. In order to maintain their tottering racist rule, they had again resorted to brutal atrocities of repression, arresting more than 1,000 people and killing and wounding innocent students. China firmly supported the just position of the African States. The Council should strongly condemn the crimes committed by the South African authorities, demand that they stop forthwith all repression and persecution of the Azanian people and release all political prisoners immediately. It should also appeal to all peoples and Governments to support and assist the peoples of Azania and Namibia in their just struggle against racism and colonialism and for national liberation, as well as the peoples of other parts of southern Africa in their just cause of fighting against South Africa's aggression and defending their national independence and territorial integrity.

Mr. Isaacs of PAC said that since the Soweto uprising of 1976 there had been a rising tide of black resistance in Azania, evidenced by the increase in the number of political trials. Black resistance had intensified during the past month despite the efforts of the Pretoria regime to crush opposition to its racist policies through the use of Draconian legislation to imprison and detain black leaders and activists. Hundreds of students and community leaders had been detained during the past few weeks. The campaign for the total isolation of the South African regime, politically, economically and diplomatically, must be strengthened.

Mr. Makatini of ANC said that the so-called "coloured" youth had been challenging the racist ideology of the régime by boycotting schools, demanding equal remuneration for their teachers, objecting to the practice of interrogation on school grounds by secret police and indicting the racist character of the educational system. Since 1948, 2 million blacks had been removed from so-called white areas to bantustans and squatter camps. There had been a spate of political trials, and large numbers of white draftees were refusing to take up arms in defence of apartheid Unemployment was at an all-time high of 25 per cent and there had been a chain of industrial strikes by black workers in various cities.

The United States said South Africa faced a critical choice between peaceful settlement and resistance to change. Acts of violence or repression could only harm prospects for a peaceful settlement and discourage the moderate leaders and elements that sought peaceful change. The Government had instituted some reforms during the previous year, but because they had not gone to the heart of the matter they were not sufficient. The United States called on South Africa to make a gesture of good faith by freeing, recalling and dealing with those whose participation was essential to the country's peaceful and stable future. Such a gesture would warrant an equivalent response, in the form of co-operation instead of violent resistance. The United States supported the resolution adopted by the Council on 13 June, but said the text did not entirely fit the new approach which the United States would like to see.

By a letter dated 13 June, the United States transmitted to the Council President the text of the kind of resolution it thought would have constituted a new approach. By this proposal, the Council would have expressed grave concern over the mounting cycles of violence in South Africa and stated that South Africa stood at a crossroads, where South Africans of conscience must decide to lead their country towards equal rights and treatment under law for all citizens. The Council would have: reiterated that apartheid was incompatible with the rights and dignity of man, the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;<sup>6</sup> recognized that the situation in South Africa made the elimination of apartheid necessary, that the current time presented genuine opportunities for change, that South Africa stood at a critical juncture and that it could embark on a course leading towards equality, justice and peace or to increasing and potentially catastrophic racial strife; declared its strong support for the forces within South Africa pressing for change in that country's system of racial discrimination; and called on the South African Government urgently to end violence against its people and to take urgent measures to eliminate apartheid.

The Council would have declared its firm conviction that racial equality and peace in South Africa, and thus the possibility of its taking its place as a respected member of the community of nations, depended on the direction it took in eliminating apartheid and the realization by all its citizens of equal rights, including equal political rights and a full and free voice in the determination of their destiny. Measures towards those ends would have included: an unconditional amnesty to all persons imprisoned, restricted or exiled for their opposition to apartheid; an end to the violence against peaceful demonstrators against apartheid and against those in detention, including political prisoners; abrogation of the bans on political parties and organizations and the news media opposed to apartheid; termination of all political trials, and the provision of equal educational opportunities as a major step towards eradicating apartheid at its roots. The Council would have: urgently requested South Africa, as a first step, to release all political prisoners, and especially the leaders of the black community with whom the Government must deal, and whose voices must be heard, in any meaningful discussion of the nation's future; called on all States strictly and scrupulously to implement the 1977 arms embargo<sup>7</sup> and enact effective national legislation for that purpose; and requested its Committee Established by Resolution 421(1977)<sup>8</sup> to redouble its efforts to obtain full implementation of the arms embargo and recommend measures for full compliance by Member States. Finally, the Council would have reiterated its strong hope that the inevitable change in South Africa's racial policies could be attained through peaceful means, while convinced that, failing a decision by the Government and people of South Africa to establish full and equal rights for all citizens, pressures for such change from the international community inevitably would grow and, with them, the further isolation and estrangement of South Africa from the family of nations.

Speaking before the Council adopted resolution 473(1980), Portugal said it would have preferred the Council to take into consideration the tentative but apparently positive steps that seemed to have been made by the South African Government. Norway associated itself with appeals for a fully representative national convention made by Bishop Tutu and Percy Qoboza, editor of the Johannesburg Sunday Post.

After the Council adopted the resolution, the United Kingdom said it had voted in favour, though with some reluctance, because it agreed with the important proposition that emerged clearly throughout the text, namely, that the fundamental problems of South Africa derived from the wholly unacceptable system of apartheid. Although the United Kingdom agreed with many of the provisions, the resolution as a whole was not the right response to the current dangers in South Africa and ignored important facts:

Zimbabwe had achieved independence, progress was being made in the negotiations on Namibia, and there were signs of progress in South Africa itself—evidence of a growing recognition within the white population that change must come. There was no recognition in the resolution of the fact that the South African authorities had, during the recent unrest, shown more restraint than on past occasions. Instead, the text reiterated the rhetoric of old resolutions. An important opportunity had been missed to send to South Africa the message that southern Africa was changing fast and that it was no longer possible to put off change indefinitely in South Africa itself. The United Kingdom did not accept that the references to the recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle related to armed struggle or extended to the use of force, and did not regard paragraph 11 (containing a request for redoubled efforts by the Committee on the arms embargo) as prejudging the question of whether the arms embargo should be extended.

France said that only some of the suggestions by Western members of the Council had been accepted by the sponsors. The reference in paragraph 11 to reinforcing the arms embargo and making it more comprehensive had to be understood as meaning that the embargo must be implemented and that all loopholes must be closed. France was strictly observing the embargo and was ready to consider any measures to enhance its implementation. France urgently requested the South African Government to put an end to violence and racial discrimination.

The USSR said it supported the resolution because of its strong condemnation of the South African régime and its demand for the implementation of a number of measures designed to eliminate the apartheid regime, which posed a threat to international peace and security. At the same time, the resolution did not contain effective, vigorous measures to exert pressure on the rulers of South Africa with a view to the elimination of apartheid.

Reports by the Secretary-General and the Committee on the question of South Africa

On 12 September 1980, the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Security Council on the implementation of resolution 473(1980) of 13 June. He stated that thus far he had received replies from 26 States in response to his request for information on the measures they had taken in accordance with the resolution. In an addendum to this report, issued on 18 December, he said replies had been received from 11 more States.

Notes verbales containing the replies of Angola, Austria, Brazil, the Byelorussian SSR, China, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Egypt, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Ireland, Japan, Norway, Pakistan, Poland, the Republic of Korea, Suriname, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States were issued, at the States' request, as separate documents of the Council. The substantive parts of these, as well as of the replies of the other respondent States (Benin, Canada, Colombia, Cuba, France, Iraq, Israel, Jordan, Kuwait, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Rwanda, Sweden), were reproduced in the Secretary-General's report.

The Committee Established by Resolution 421(1977) concerning the question of South Africa adopted, on 19 September, the report requested by the Council in resolution 473(1980) on ways and means of making the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa more effective. The date for submission of the report, 15 September, was extended by four days at the Committee's request, following informal consultations among Council members at which no one objected to the extension. Agreement to the extension was confirmed in a note by the Council President.

The report reviewed the problems encountered in the implementation of the embargo, including ways it had been circumvented and legislative and other measures taken by States. The Committee concluded that there was strong circumstantial evidence of illicit transfers to South Africa of arms and related matériel of all types. Clandestine operations were carried out from an undetermined number of countries, in circumvention of the embargo. Devious routes were used, on which the Committee had scant information. Some licensing agreements previously granted to South Africa for the manufacture and maintenance of arms and related matériel continued in force.

The Committee noted with concern the existence of varying interpretations of certain provisions of the arms embargo resolution, including the phrases by which the Council decided that States were to cease providing to South Africa "arms and related matériel of all types" and "refrain from any co-operation with South Africa in the manufacture and development of nuclear weapons."<sup>9</sup> It also noted that States had adopted few legislative measures to implement the embargo resolution, and that no international system existed for investigating reported violations.

The Committee submitted 15 recommendations to the Council. They were, in summary, as follows:

States should: (1) take concrete steps to close loopholes in the embargo by ensuring that arms export agreements included guarantees to prevent embargoed items from reaching the South African military and police through third countries; (2) prohibit the export of spare parts for embargoed aircraft and other military equipment belonging to South Africa, and the maintenance and servicing of such equipment; (3) revoke or terminate all industrial licences previously concluded with South Africa to manufacture arms and related matériel; (4) prohibit their government agencies and their corporations from transferring technology or using technology subject to their control in the manufacture of arms and related matériel in South Africa; (5) prohibit their corporations from investing in the manufacture of arms and related matériel in South Africa; and (6) prohibit the export to South Africa of civilian items that could be diverted or converted to military use, including aircraft, aircraft engines and parts, electronic and telecommunications equipment and computers, as well as four-wheel-drive vehicles for military or police forces.

In addition: (7) the term "arms and related matériel of all types" in the Council's 1977 arms embargo resolution should be defined to include all equipment intended for South African military and police forces; and (8) all forms of nuclear collaboration with South Africa should cease, along with the exchange of nuclear scientists and the training of South African nuclear scientists in any country.

States should: (9) ensure that their national legislation or policy directives for implementing the arms embargo included stiff penalties for violations; (10) include in their legislation or directives a prohibition of the enlistment and/or recruitment of mercenaries or any other personnel for service with South Africa's military and police forces; and (11) end the exchange of military attaches and of visits by government personnel, weapons experts and arms factory employees when such visits maintained or increased South Africa's military or police capabilities.

Further: (12) the embargo should include imports of arms and related matériel from South Africa; and (13) <sup>NATO</sup> countries should reject arms purchase orders by South Africa submitted through the codification system used by the organization's member States.

Finally: (14) the machinery for implementing the embargo should be strengthened by systematic study of the international flow of arms to South Africa, investigating violations, keeping public opinion informed about the terms of the embargo and about violations, and maintaining contact with organizations whose activities and/or expertise were likely to promote implementation of the embargo; and (15) a sanctions branch should be created within the United Nations Secretariat to assist the Committee.

The United Kingdom made a general reservation on these recommendations. France expressed reservations on recommendations 3, 5, 7, 11, 13 and 15, and opposition to 6 and 8. The United States expressed reservations on recommendations 5, 6, 8, 10 and 15.

Consideration by the Security Council (19 December)

The Security Council held one meeting on 19 December 1980, at the request of the African group of Member States, to consider the situation in South Africa. The Council discussed the report of its Committee on the question of South Africa (see preceding section) and adjourned without receiving any formal proposals.

The initial call for the meeting was contained in a letter to the Council President dated 23 September from Sierra Leone, as current Chairman of the African group, requesting the urgent convening of the Council to consider the situation in South Africa. In a further letter dated 6 October, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Sierra Leone, Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity, confirmed that the African group wished the Security Council to remain seized of the question and added that, after consultation, a date would be suggested.

When the Council met on 19 December, the Chairman of the Committee Established by Resolution 421(1977), the representative of Bangladesh, introduced the Committee's report. He said little could be done to stop the breaches and violations of the arms embargo unless decisive action was taken, nationally and internationally. The Committee's recommendations were designed to close the loopholes and end sanction-breaking. They aimed at reinforcing the embargo, making it more comprehensive and creating a tangible structure for its implementation.

Speaking as the representative of Bangladesh, he said his country had taken measures much more stringent than those recommended by the Committee.

Zambia said that a few members of the Council continued to flout the embargo and were arming South Africa through clandestine manoeuvres. Certain States, and their corporations, had violated the arms embargo which they had originally supported, and had sought and created loopholes. There was ample evidence of illegal arms transfers by devious routes. Some Council members had deliberately created difficulties for the Committee by according different interpretations to the embargo resolution and had even opposed the strengthening of its secretariat. The Committee should summon before it representatives of countries that violated the embargo, and establish a system of verification and independent investigation. Zambia endorsed all the Committee's recommendations.

The USSR said that some NATO countries, Israel and other States had not ended their military and nuclear co-operation with the racist régime, nor had they ensured that their corporations and institutions refrained from such co-operation. The arms embargo had been ineffective because a number of States lacked political will and covertly and overtly circumvented the 1977 embargo resolution by finding loopholes. The USSR supported the Committee's recommendations and reiterated its support for the adoption of full sanctions against South Africa.

The German Democratic Republic viewed the recommendations as the minimum necessary to make the arms embargo more effective and said they should be supplemented with comprehensive binding measures in accordance with Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter.<sup>10</sup>

Tunisia said the Committee's recommendations could make the mandatory arms embargo more effective. In spite of the embargo, Pretoria was still able to obtain increasingly sophisticated weapons. Because of assistance from its allies and partners, it had been able to set up its own arms industry. The arsenal offered South Africa was used solely to intensify repression and oppression of the South African and Namibian peoples, and served the policy of aggression against neighbouring African countries.

Resolution 473(1980), as proposed in S/13995, adopted unanimously (15-O) by Council on 13 June 1980, meeting 2231.

The Security Council,

Taking note of the letter dated 29 May 1980 from the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of the Permanent Mission of Morocco to the United Nations contained in document S/13969,

Grave/y concerned by the aggravation of the situation in South Africa, in particular the repression and the killings of schoolchildren protesting against apartheid, as well as the repression directed against churchmen and workers,

Noting also with grave concern that the racist regime has intensified further a series of arbitrary trials under its racist and repressive laws providing for death sentences,

Convinced that this situation has been brought about by the continued imposition by the South African racist regime of apartheid in defiance of resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions on the question of South Africa, in particular resolutions 392(1976), 417(1977) and 418(1977),

Recalling further its resolutions 454(1979) and 466(1980). In which it condemned South Africa for the flagrant violation of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of neighbouring African States,

Reaffirming its recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of the South African people for the elimination of apartheid and the establishment of a democratic society in accordance with their inalienable human and political rights as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Taking note of the extensive demands within and outside South Africa for the release of Nelson Mandela and other political prisoners, Gravely concerned about reports of supply of arms and military equipment to South Africa in contravention of resolution 418(1977).

Taking note of the letter of 27 March 1980 from the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid concerning an oil embargo against South Africa, Mindful of its responsibilities under the Charter for the maintenance of international peace and security.

1. Strong/y condemns the racist régime of South Africa for further aggravating the situation and its massive repression against all opponents of apartheid, for killings of peaceful demonstrators and political detainees and for its defiance of General Assembly and Security Council resolutions, in particular resolution 417(1977);

2. Expresses its profound sympathy with the victims of this violence;

3. Reaffirms that the policy of apartheid is a crime against the conscience and dignity of mankind and is incompatible with the rights and dignity of man, the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and seriously disturbs international peace and security;

4. Recognizes the legitimacy of the struggle of the South African people for the elimination of apartheid and for the establishment of a democratic society in which all the people of South Africa as a whole, irrespective of race, colour, or creed, will enjoy equal and full political and other rights and participate freely in the determination of their destiny;

5. Calls upon the Government of South Africa urgently to end violence against the African people and to take urgent measures to eliminate apartheid;

6. Expresses its hope that the inevitable change in the racial policies of South Africa can be attained through peaceful means and declares, however, that the violence and repression by the South African racist régime and its continuing denial of equal human and political rights to the great majority of the South African people greatly aggravate the situation in South Africa and will certainly lead to violent conflict and racial conflagration with serious international repercussions and the further isolation and estrangement of South Africa;

7. Calls upon the South African régime to take measures immediately to eliminate the policy of apartheid and grant to all South African citizens equal rights, including equal political rights, and a full and free voice in the determination of their destiny; these measures should include:

(a) Granting of an unconditional amnesty to all persons imprisoned, restricted or exiled for their opposition to apartheid;

(b) Cessation forthwith of its Indiscriminate violence against peaceful demonstrators against apartheid, murders in detention and torture of political prisoners;

Consideration by the General Assembly

The policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa were the subject of a debate at eight plenary meetings of the General Assembly between 11 and 17 November 1980. In addition to the addresses by State representatives, statements were made by Alfred N zo of the African National Congress of South Africa and Achmed C. Ebrahim of the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania.

On 13 November, the Special Political Committee heard statements by representatives of nine non-governmental organizations in accordance with a decision by the Assembly that these organizations should be heard on the apartheid item. The speakers were: Jennifer Davis, Director of Research, American Committee on Africa; Dwain C. Epps, Executive Secretary, Commission of the Churches on International Affairs, World Council of Churches; the Reverend Carl H. Mau, Jr., General Secretary, Lutheran World Federation, Geneva, speaking for Lutheran World Ministries; Beatrice von Roemer, representative at the United Nations, International Confederation of Free Trade Unions; Wilfred Grenville-Grey, representative at the United Nations, International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa; Father Daniel Driscull, Interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility; Karen Talbot, representative at the United Nations, World Peace Council; the Reverend Herbert Daughtry, Chairman, National Black United Front, and David Lampel; and Dennis Akumu, Organisation of African Trade Union Unity.

On 17 November, on an oral proposal of the President, the Assembly adopted without vote decision 35/415, by which it took note of the Special Political Committee's report on these hearings.

The debate on apartheid was followed on 16 December by the adoption of 18 resolutions (35/206 A-R) on this subject (see following section and subchapters). Under other agenda items, the Assembly also adopted resolutions on the status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid (see p. 808), on assistance to student refugees in southern Africa (see p. 238) and on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa (see p. 295).

Debate on apartheid

The Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid introducing its reports at the outset of the Assembly's debate, observed that the independence of Zimbabwe in April had altered the balance of forces in South Africa and heightened expectations of a fundamental change within the country, perhaps within five years. There had been greater unity of action, more political consciousness, a nation-wide student uprising, workers' strikes and mass demonstrations by the people. However, South Africa's régime had escalated repression, resuming the killing of schoolchildren and arresting thousands of students, workers, churchmen and other opponents of apartheid. The Committee considered the imposition of total sanctions against South Africa as a peaceful and effective way to bring about change.

Some representatives taking part in the Assembly debate cited what they regarded as positive developments in the situation. Thus, Singapore viewed the past year as a period of progress, in that the South African regime had been further isolated and its bantustan policy had been decisively rejected by the international community.

The immediate neighbours of South Africa were especially critical of its racial policies. Botswana, for instance, said the white minority in that country did not need apartheid to secure its future; it needed only to understand that the future of the country could be sought in shared aspirations.

A number of speakers questioned the validity of "reforms" announced by South Africa in aspects of its racial policies and denounced its effort to create additional bantustans. Australia said the recent actions provided only marginal improvements for certain urban blacks, while increasing the burden of discrimination on the majority and providing harsher penalties for offenders against apartheid laws. Brazil was encouraged that some segments of the South African population refused to be lured into devious manoeuvres designed to exclude the black majority from the political process. Egypt saw no basis for the contention by Western States that transnational corporations provided a means of changing apartheid through their commitment to improving the wages and welfare of black workers. India said that no such concessions could ever substitute for full recognition of human rights and majority rule. Liberia viewed the changes as using the old colonial technique of divide and rule to entice an élite urban black middle class to join with the white minority to prevent a further influx of blacks from the homelands to the cities. Mexico thought the changes were aimed at deceiving international opinion, soothing consciences and offering justification to investors who benefited from racial exploitation. The United Republic of Cameroon saw them as window-dressing designed to give the barbarous system of apartheid a human facade.

In Finland's opinion, apartheid was a system that could not be reformed, since it was a negation of the most basic human rights. A similar point was made by Mozambique and the Ukrainian SSR, which declared that apartheid was a vile criminal system that could not be reformed but must be destroyed. Madagascar criticized certain Western countries for concentrating on partial measures against human rights violations while failing to recognize the universality of the struggle for democracy within South Africa.

Other States complained of South Africa's threat to the peace and security of Africa and the world. Angola's support for the anti-apartheid struggle, said its representative, had led to repeated armed invasions of its territory by South Africa. Benin charged that South Africa had decided to resort to nuclear blackmail against the African peoples. Haiti was among those which described its acts of aggression against neighbouring States as a serious threat to international peace and security. Zambia said that only a few weeks prior to the Assembly's debate its Government had foiled a coup plotted by South Africa in league with foreign mercenaries and Zambian dissidents.

A position commonly expressed was that the international community must step up pressure against South Africa for a change in its apartheid policies. Jamaica favoured a twofold strategy: a halt to all collaboration with the racist régime and support for the people of South Africa and their liberation movement. Nicaragua considered that, until the Security Council imposed full sanctions, it would be idle to hope that the racist régime would abide by United Nations resolutions. Poland and Romania were among those calling for more resolute action by the United Nations. Sri Lanka said those who were apprehensive of drastic changes in the status quo in South Africa should not direct plaintive calls to the international community to go slowly. The logical response to South Africa's defiance, in Sweden's view, was to increase the pressure for a fundamental change in the country's society. Pointing to the ineffectiveness of past efforts at negotiation and dialogue, Turkey was convinced that the distressing trend could be reversed only by the threat of concrete international measures.

Bangladesh and many others argued that any form of relations with South Africa directly encouraged its apartheid policies. Burundi, Indonesia, Trinidad and Tobago, and Zaire were among those which called for the total isolation of the apartheid régime. The imposition of comprehensive economic sanctions was urged by many countries, such as Cyprus, the Gambia and Somalia. Nepal and others urged a total ban on the sale to South Africa of arms and defence equipment as well as petroleum and petroleum products. Czechoslovakia and others advocated that pressure be applied not only against South Africa but also against those who helped it, to compel them to respect United Nations decisions.

Some countries spoke of concrete action they were taking or contemplating to apply pressure on South Africa. Argentina, for example, said it was ready to co-operate in applying any compulsory measures adopted by the Security Council. China stated that it stood firm in its policy of having no diplomatic, political or economic relations with the regime. Ireland was ready to consider effective, co-ordinated measures by the international community to bring pressure to bear against South Africa. Japan said it was making every possible effort to reduce dependence on trade with South Africa. The Netherlands was prepared to support selective economic sanctions, notably on the supply of oil, but considered that such measures must be effective in furthering United Nations aims. Norway stated that it would welcome a stronger arms embargo and believed that further collective action against South Africa might become necessary unless the situation changed.

Other countries stressed the need for an internal, peaceful solution to the apartheid problem. In Austria's view, the only solution lay in a peaceful transition to a free, democratic and multiracial society. Greece, while sympathetic to those who suffered under apartheid, could not support resolutions calling for or approving armed struggle. Luxembourg, speaking for the nine members of the European Community, said those States were actively pursuing the objective of a fundamental change, through peaceful means, in the system of racial discrimination and segregation in South Africa. For the Philippines, the example of Zimbabwe suggested that peaceful change was possible in South Africa and that the sovereign rights of peoples could be reclaimed through political and diplomatic solutions. The United States urged the South African Government to signal its readiness to begin a genuine dialogue with all of its citizens, and said the international community must find ways to demonstrate a positive attitude by offering encouragement and good offices as mediators and facilitators of change.

Albania, on the other hand, felt that no solution could be reached through negotiation; only struggle created conditions for victory over racism, imperialism and neo-colonialism. Algeria stated that because of its ideology, the racist régime could not be expected to engage in a constructive dialogue which could reform its anachronistic and ossified internal structures. Mauritania was among the States which said there could be no dialogue with Pretoria as long as the people of the country had no opportunity to enjoy fundamental freedoms. Sierra Leone denied a South African statement attributing to its President the view that there should be a dialogue between South Africa and the Organization of African Unity (OAU); if there was to be a dialogue, it should be between the Pretoria regime and the black majority in South Africa.

Pakistan was one of a number of countries which advocated the extension of all possible moral and material support to South African liberation movements. Kenya and many others called for the release of political prisoners.

A number of speakers placed blame on States which they identified as supporters of the apartheid régime. Bulgaria made the point that the régime's existence had been prolonged mainly by the enormous amount of aid it received from some Western countries, above all the United States and the United Kingdom. Democratic Yemen saw a collusion with South Africa by members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) as the main factor in the preservation of the Pretoria régime. The Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic and Hungary said that financial assistance from imperialist countries and from the international institutions under their influence were behind the dramatic rise in arms expenditure by South Africa. Mongolia and Viet Nam maintained that without the support of the Western powers South Africa would not be able to hold out against the national liberation movement. South Africa was sustained in its refusal to carry out United Nations resolutions, the USSR said, by its perception that it had the powerful support of the West. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya made a similar point, citing an alliance between Pretoria and Tel Aviv as well as the support of imperialist countries headed by the United States. All of these speakers favoured broader sanctions against South Africa.

Many speakers criticized the role of transnational corporations in providing essential support to the South African régime. Cuba remarked that the outrageous profits they extracted from South Africa made apartheid quite profitable. The Lao People's Democratic Republic stated that apartheid was a tool used by capitalist and imperialist circles for the exploitation, through their transnational corporations, of the cheap labour of African workers and for the plunder of natural resources. The Sudan observed that foreign investments, loans and assistance to the régime had reached astronomical proportions. It was unacceptable, in Yugoslavia's view, that some countries, in their relations with South Africa, gave preference to the economic interests of transnational corporations or to strategic considerations.

The importance of the attitude adopted by the Western countries was mentioned by many speakers. Thus, Barbados called on those who had urged an international boycott of the 1980 Olympic Games in Moscow to take the lead in imposing a total boycott on Pretoria. The West, said the Congo, Guinea and others, made available to Pretoria the military, economic and other means that enabled it to survive and to commit acts of aggression against neighbouring countries. Guyana said that what helped to sustain South Africa most was its conviction that in the last resort its Western friends would be prevented from acting to bring down apartheid by their perception of the country's economic and strategic value. Tunisia said it was astonished that the European countries did not realize that their support for South Africa only encouraged it to pursue discrimination, repression and expansion. In Uganda's view, collaboration with South Africa was as repugnant and unacceptable as collaboration with the fascists in Europe had been. The United Republic of Tanzania called on the three Western permanent members of the Security Council to desist from frustrating meaningful enforcement action by the Council.

Ghana warned that if the States which collaborated with South Africa did not heed international opinion and refrain from such collaboration, the people and their liberation movement would have no option but to intensify the armed struggle in order to wrest power from the régime. Malaysia urged those who maintained military and economic relations with South Africa to demonstrate their sense of responsibility by severing all such relations. Morocco saw those who maintained military and nuclear relations with Pretoria as contributors to genocide against Africans.

Several Arab countries saw links between the problems in South Africa and the Middle East. Bahrain condemned what it called the unholy alliance between Israel and South Africa and their growing co-operation. Iraq charged that nuclear co-operation between the Zionist entity and South Africa had led to a test explosion of a nuclear device in September 1979 off the coast of South Africa, which it said had been corroborated by various scientific sources. Kuwait considered that collaboration between the two nations emanated from shared racist concepts. Qatar was concerned at their increasing collaboration on nuclear and other matters, stating that the situation threatened not only Africa and the Middle East but the entire world. Saudi Arabia voiced concern at a growing relationship between Israel and South Africa, particularly in the military and economic field. In Yemen's view, the struggle against racial discrimination in South Africa and Zionism required a display of determination by other countries.

Israel reiterated its opposition to apartheid and said its trade with South Africa still amounted to no more than two fifths of 1 per cent of South Africa's total trade, while, according to press reports, the Arab petro-hegemonic powers continued to trade billions of dollars worth of their oil for South African gold, food and building materials.

Resolution on the situation in South Africa

The first of the 18 resolutions on apartheid which the General Assembly adopted on 16 December 1980 dealt with the situation in South Africa. It was adopted as resolution 35/206 A by a recorded vote of 118 to 10, with 15 abstentions.

By this resolution, the Assembly urged the Security Council to determine that the situation resulting from South Africa's policies and actions posed a threat to international peace and security. It further urged the Council to impose mandatory sanctions, including an oil embargo, against South Africa.

It condemned political, economic, military, nuclear and other collaboration with South Africa by Western and other States and by transnational corporations. It condemned the minority régime for brutal repression of opponents and for attempts to destabilize and commit aggression against neighbouring States.

The Assembly reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movement by all means, including armed struggle, and appealed to States to assist them. It denounced the bantustan programme and condemned the plan to create a "constellation" of southern African client States.

The resolution was sponsored by 58 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). In introducing it, Sierra Leone said that the debate had shown that apartheid posed a growing threat to international peace and the security of Africa. Thus, the responsibility of the international community towards the oppressed people of South Africa, their liberation movement and front-line States was compelling.

The Netherlands and Portugal, which voted against this resolution, Australia, Austria and New Zealand, which abstained, and Argentina and Uruguay, which voted in favour, voiced objections or reservations to any United Nations endorsement of armed struggle. A similar position was expressed by Luxembourg on behalf of the nine members of the European Community, and by Iceland on behalf of the five Nordic countries-Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden. Australia and the Netherlands added that they could not support a blanket condemnation of specific States for collaborating with South Africa. Uruguay added that maintaining diplomatic, consular or other relations with South Africa did not imply support for its policies.

Brazil, though voting for the resolution, expressed doubts about the appropriateness of some of its language.

Other General Assembly decisions

The General Assembly, at its 1980 regular session, adopted a number of other resolutions with a bearing on apartheid in addition to the 18 resolutions adopted under the agenda item on South Africa's apartheid policies. Relevant portions of these other resolutions are summarized below. (For page references to texts of the following resolutions, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

By resolution 35/28, on activities of foreign economic and other interests impeding efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa, the Assembly on 11 November: condemned all activities of foreign interests in South Africa; declared their collaboration with the racist régime to be detrimental to the people's interests; strongly condemned Western and other States and transnational corporations which invested in South Africa and supplied arms, oil and nuclear technology to the régime; strongly condemned the collusion of France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel and the United States with South Africa in the nuclear field; called on all other Governments to continue to refrain from supplying the régime with nuclear installations; called on all States to terminate all collaboration with South Africa; requested all States to refrain from making investments in or loans to South Africa and from trading with it; called on oil-producing and -exporting countries to act against companies which supplied oil and oil products to the régime; and appealed to non-governmental organizations to continue mobilizing public opinion for the enforcement of economic and other sanctions against Pretoria (see p. 1071).

By resolution 35/29 of the same date, on implementation by United Nations organizations of the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, the Assembly deplored the fact that the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund continued to co-operate with South Africa (see p. 1065).

By resolution 35/32, on the adverse consequences for human rights of assistance given to colonial and racist régimes in southern Africa, the Assembly on 14 November: vigorously condemned the collaboration of certain NATO members, Israel and other States as well as multinational corporations and other organizations collaborating with South Africa; reaffirmed that those which aided the racist régime became accomplices in apartheid; requested the Security Council to consider complete and mandatory sanctions against South Africa, including a ban on aid for arms and military production, cessation of trade and nuclear collaboration, prohibition of loans and investments, and an embargo on oil and other strategic commodities; and called on Governments to act against corporate trading, manufacturing and investment in South Africa (see p. 809).

By resolution 35/33 of 14 November, on the Decade for Action to Combat -Racism and Racial Discrimination (1973-1983), the Assembly: strongly condemned apartheid; reaffirmed its strong support for the national liberation struggle against apartheid and for the achievement of self-determination by all available means, including armed struggle; congratulated liberation and anti-apartheid movements for their co-operation in efforts to attain the objectives of the Decade; called on States to outlaw organizations based on racial hatred and prejudice, including private clubs and institutions which spread ideas of apartheid; approved the Declaration of the International Seminar on an Oil Embargo against South Africa (Amsterdam, Netherlands, 14-16 March); invited United Nations organizations to intensify efforts to alert public opinion to the scourge of apartheid; invited all States and organizations to intensify efforts for the release of all political prisoners held for their fight against apartheid; and decided to hold in 1983 a Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination to formulate ways of ensuring full implementation of United Nations resolutions on racism and apartheid (see p. 797).

By resolution 35/35 A of 14 November, on realization of the right to self-determination and independence, the Assembly: condemned South Africa's bantustan policy; reiterated its support for the oppressed people of South Africa in their just and legitimate struggle against the racist regime; demanded the application of the Security Council's mandatory arms embargo against South Africa by all countries, particularly those which maintained military and nuclear co-operation with that régime and supplied it with related matériel; strongly condemned the increasing massacres of innocent and defenceless people by that regime in its desperate attempt to thwart legitimate demands; demanded the immediate release of children from South African prisons; and called for maximum assistance to the victims of apartheid through recognized liberation movements (see p. 837).

By resolution 35/39 of 25 November, on the status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, the Assembly: appealed for additional ratifications of the Convention; requested intensified efforts to publicize it; called on States parties to take action to prosecute and punish persons responsible for the criminal acts defined in the Convention; called on them to disseminate the list of individuals and organizations deemed responsible for such crimes, compiled by the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts of the Commission on Human Rights; and invited the Commission to intensify its efforts to compile such a list periodically (see p. 807).

By resolution 35/40 of 25 November, on the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Assembly commended the Committee for paying greater attention to the elimination of apartheid and invited States parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination to supply the Committee with information on their relations with South Africa (see p. 802).

By resolution 35/96 of 5 December, on assistance to Lesotho, the Assembly noted that country's requirements to lessen its dependence on South Africa and requested the Secretary-General to report on the type of assistance Lesotho needed to absorb into its economy migrant workers returning from South Africa (see p. 271).

By resolution 35/117 of 10 December, on co-operation with OAU, the Assembly: reiterated the determination of the United Nations, in co-operation with OAU, to intensify efforts to eliminate apartheid; reiterated its appreciation of the Secretary-General's efforts to organize special economic assistance programmes to help newly independent and front-line African States cope with the situation caused by South Africa's aggression; requested the Secretary-General to strengthen co-operation between the two organizations, particularly with regard to the provision of assistance to victims of apartheid, and drew attention to the need for contributions to the OAU Assistance Fund for the Struggle against Colonialism and Apartheid (see p. 292).

By resolution 35/118 of 11 December, by which it adopted a Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, the Assembly reaffirmed that South Africa's apartheid policy threatened international peace and security. In this Plan, the Assembly called for: an end to all collaboration with South Africa, particularly in the nuclear field, by States, corporations and individuals; the cessation of all new investments and loans; measures to prevent the recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries for use against national liberation movements struggling against colonialism and apartheid; and measures to enhance public awareness of the need for assistance to eradicate colonialism and apartheid. Also in this Plan, the Assembly drew the Security Council's attention to the need to consider imposing mandatory economic sanctions against South Africa, including a mandatory oil embargo, and to reinforce the arms embargo against that country by adopting comprehensive mandatory measures to end all military and nuclear collaboration with the régime. (See p. 1052.)

By resolution 35/119 of 11 December, on implementation of the 1960 Declaration on granting independence, the Assembly reaffirmed that the continuation of colonialism in all its forms, including apartheid posed a serious threat to international peace and security. It strongly condemned all collaboration with South Africa, particularly nuclear and military, and called on the States concerned to cease such collaboration. (See p. 1053.)

The Assembly also adopted resolutions containing provisions on South Africa's nuclear programme (see p. 46) and on United Nations information activities with regard to apartheid (see p. 473).

The General Assembly,

Conscious of the responsibility of the United Nations and the international community towards the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement, as proclaimed, in particular, in General Assembly resolution 3411 C (xxx) of 28 November 1975,

Having considered the reports of the Special Committee against Apartheid, Recalling Security Council resolution 473(1980) of 13 June 1980.

Taking note of the great advance in the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement, Grave/y concerned at the further aggravation of the situation in South Africa, resulting from the policies and actions of the apartheid régime.

Considering that the policy of "bantustanization" aggravates the situation in the region,

Reaffirming that the policies and actions of the apartheid régime, the strengthening of its military forces and the escalating acts of aggression and subversion of that régime against independent African States constitute a grave threat to international peace and security,

Considering that the acquisition of nuclear capability by the apartheid régime constitutes a grave menace to Africa and the world,

Condemning all military, nuclear and other collaboration by certain States with South Africa,

Condemning also the collaboration by transnational corporations and financial institutions with South Africa,

Reaffirming that apartheid is a crime against humanity,

Recognizing that the so-called constitutional and other reforms by the racist minority régime are no more than mere adjustments within the framework of apartheid.

Convinced that it is incumbent on the international community to provide all necessary assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement in their legitimate struggle for the establishment of a democratic society in accordance with their inalienable human and political rights, as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Recalling and reaffirming the Declaration on South Africa contained in resolution 34/93 D of 12 December 1979,

1. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement by all available means, including armed struggle, for the seizure of power by the people, the elimination of the apartheid régime and the exercise of the right of self-determination by the people of South Africa as a whole;

2. Strong/y condemns the racist minority régime for its brutal repression and indiscriminate torture and killings of workers, schoolchildren and other opponents of apartheid;

3. Vehement/y condemns the Pretoria régime's persistent attempts at destabilization of neighbouring States and its repeated acts of aggression and subversion:

4. Further condemns that régime for its defiance of Security Council resolution 473(1980);

5. Urges the Security Council to determine that the situation in South Africa, and in southern Africa as a whole, resulting from the policies and actions of the racist régime of South Africa constitutes a threat to International peace and security;

6. Further urges the Security Council to impose effective mandatory sanctions, including an Oil embargo against South Africa, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations;

7. Condemns the collaboration of certain Western and other States, as well as those transnational corporations and other organizations which maintain and/or continue to increase their collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa in the political, economic, military and nuclear and other fields;

8. Again proclaims its full support of the national liberation movement of South Africa as the authentic representative of the South African people in their just struggle for liberation;

9. Appeals to all States to provide all necessary assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement in their legitimate struggle;

10. Again denounces the establishment of bantustans as designed to consolidate the inhuman policy of apartheid, to destroy the territorial integrity of the country, to perpetuate white minority domination and to deprive the African people of South Africa of their inalienable rights, and calls upon all Governments to continue to deny any form of recognition to the so-called "independent" bantustans and to refrain from any dealings with such entities as have been declared null and void;

11. Strong/y condemns the Pretoria régime's continued plan to create a so-called "constellation" of southern African States which seeks to reduce the neighbouring African countries to client States as part of its bantustan programme designed to perpetuate apartheid in South Africa and the political, economic and military domination of the régime;

12. Reaffirms the commitment of the United Nations to the total eradication of apartheid and the promotion of the establishment of a democratic society in which all the people of South Africa as a whole, irrespective of race, colour, sex or creed, will enjoy equal and full human rights and fundamental freedoms and participate freely in the determination of their destiny;

13. Appeals to all States which have not yet done so to accede to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid;

14. Calls upon all Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organisations to take effective measures to promote the international mobilization against apartheid in order to isolate the racist régime of South Africa and lend full support to the national liberation movement of South Africa;

15. Requests the Special Committee to promote the international mobilization in co-operation with Governments and organizations, including anti-apartheid and solidarity movements, trade unions, religious bodies, youth and student organizations, women's organizations and all other non-governmental organizations concerned.

Sanctions against South Africa

While the Security Council discussed ways of making more effective the arms embargo it had imposed against South Africa in 1977 (see p. 201), the General Assembly in December 1980 repeated its calls for comprehensive and mandatory sanctions, and also for an embargo on oil shipments to South Africa. To help mobilize world opinion for such actions, it called for the holding of an International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa. It also lent its support to cultural, academic and other boycotts aimed at isolating the régime (see p. 231).

Comprehensive sanctions

Action by the General Assembly

By resolution 35/206 C, adopted on 16 December 1980 by a recorded vote of 115 to 10, with 20 abstentions, the Assembly requested the Security Council urgently to adopt comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa. It condemned continued economic and other collaboration with South Africa by certain Western and other States and by transnational corporations and other institutions.

The Assembly called on Governments that had not done so to sever all relations with South Africa, to impose an oil embargo, and to end loans to and investments in that country. It urged the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development to terminate loans and credits to South Africa and to suspend its membership in those organizations. It requested United Nations organizations to withhold investment of their funds in banks and firms which continued to invest in or make loans to South Africa, and to refrain from purchasing South African products.

Introducing this resolution, which was sponsored by 65 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), Algeria said that the international community had gradually exhausted all measures designed to persuade Pretoria to abide by international law. The steps proposed in the resolution were the minimum needed to prevent a deterioration of peace and security.

Canada, which voted against this resolution, and New Zealand, which abstained, said the question of sanctions was the prerogative of the Security Council; moreover, Canada said, the impact of sanctions on States in the region of South Africa must be borne in mind. Explaining their abstentions, Botswana said its stand was due to obvious reasons; Lesotho and Swaziland mentioned their geographical position and economic interdependence with South Africa; and Zimbabwe said it had abstained because of the problems it faced in reconstructing its economy. Ireland, which also abstained, said it had doubts about the wisdom of calling for comprehensive sanctions, reservations about calls for action addressed to individual States and legal difficulties with some of the wording. Argentina, though voting for this resolution, said Governments could not be required to comply with some of the measures proposed in it without action by the Security Council.

Action by the Special Committee against Apartheid

The urgent imposition of comprehensive mandatory sanctions, as part of action by the United Nations to secure the total isolation of the South African régime, was also called for by the Special Committee against Apartheid in its annual report to the Assembly. In the Committee's view, sanctions and boycotts should cover arms and ammunition, nuclear co-operation, investment, trade, transfer of technology, and airline and shipping links, as well as scientific, cultural and sports exchanges.

An International Non-Governmental Organizations Action Conference for Sanctions against South Africa was held at Geneva from 30 June to 3 July. Organized by the Non-Governmental Organizations Sub-Committee on Racism, Racial Discrimination, Apartheid and Decolonization in co-operation with the Special Committee, the Conference adopted a Declaration by which it called for an international campaign-in co-operation with the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and committed Governments-against collaboration with the apartheid régime and for comprehensive, mandatory and universally applied sanctions against South Africa. The Declaration was transmitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council by the Chairman of the Special Committee in a letter dated 5 September.

Oil embargo

Action by the General Assembly

By resolution 35/206 D-adopted on 16 December 1980 by a recorded vote of 123 to 7, with 13 abstentions- the General Assembly again requested the Security Council urgently to consider a mandatory embargo on the supply of petroleum and petroleum products to South Africa. It urged States to take legislative and other measures to ensure the implementation of such an embargo as well as embargoes already imposed by States. Such measures would include: enacting and enforcing "end-users" agreements to stop the supply of oil to South Africa directly or through third parties; prohibiting transport to South Africa of crude oil or oil products, regardless of origin; action against companies or individuals supplying or transporting oil or oil products to South Africa and seizure of tankers used for such transport; prohibiting all assistance to South Africa for the construction of oil-from-coal plants; preventing South African enterprises from maintaining or expanding holdings in oil companies or properties outside South Africa; and banning the participation of foreign corporations and individuals in the South African oil industry.

The resolution incorporated a revision by its sponsors to paragraph 4, which in its unrevised version would have had the Assembly urge States to take effective legislative and other measures to ensure the implementation of the oil embargo. In its revised form, the Assembly also urged the implementation of embargoes already imposed by States, individually or collectively.

This resolution had 69 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). Introducing it, Nigeria lamented the fact that, while all members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) and other major oil-producing countries had imposed an oil embargo on South Africa, oil continued to reach that country illegally. The Special Committee against Apartheid and concerned countries were exploring ways to tighten monitoring of regulatory machinery and punishment of violators.

Among those voting in favour of this resolution, Iceland, speaking for the five Nordic countries, said the measures called for in the text must be subject to a decision by the Security Council. Ireland commented that it was not right for the Assembly to pre-empt discussion by the Council. The Netherlands remarked that an oil embargo could be effective only if imposed by the Council or adopted by enough countries.

Among States which explained their abstentions, Botswana, Lesotho and Zimbabwe cited the same reasons they had given for their votes on the resolution on comprehensive sanctions (see preceding section).

Action by the Special Committee against Apartheid

The Special Committee against Apartheid, in its annual report to the Assembly, expressed the belief that an oil embargo against South Africa would be feasible and effective. In its view, the violence against the people of South Africa and acts of aggression against neighbouring States were made possible by the availability of oil. An oil embargo was feasible since all OPEC members and other major oil exporters had prohibited export of their oil to South Africa. However, action was also needed by countries that exported refined oil products and those which had jurisdiction over companies involved in the South African oil industry or which transported oil and oil products to South Africa.

The Committee regarded a decision by the Security Council for a mandatory oil embargo to be essential and urgent. In the event of an embargo, the international community should assist the neighbouring States which were likely to be adversely affected. The Committee recommended that a special appeal be addressed to France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States to persuade companies within their jurisdiction to withdraw from participation in South Africa's petroleum and oil-from-coal industries.

In pursuance of its promotion of an oil embargo against South Africa, the Committee co-sponsored a seminar on the subject at Amsterdam, Netherlands, from 14 to 16 March, in co-operation with the Holland Committee on Southern Africa and Working Group Kairos.

The Seminar adopted the Declaration of the International Seminar on an Oil Embargo against South Africa, stressing the urgent need for international action to secure the implementation of General Assembly calls for an oil embargo. It saw such an embargo as a key element of international sanctions which could seriously weaken the South African regime. The Seminar called for an international campaign by all Governments, organizations and individuals to: secure an urgent and mandatory decision by the Security Council for an oil embargo against South Africa; encourage all States immediately to enact effective legislation and other measures to implement an oil embargo, including strict penalties against violators; and prevent, by public action, the continued collaboration of multinational companies with the racist régime in obtaining crude oil and refined oil products, as well as in its oil and related industries. It urged the United Nations and OAU to assist independent neighbouring States which might be adversely affected by such an embargo. Pending a mandatory decision by the Council, all Governments should take unilateral measures to implement an embargo. The Seminar called for the creation of machinery to monitor all oil shipments to South Africa, as recommended by OAU.

The Seminar's Declaration was transmitted to the Secretary-General by a letter dated 27 March from the Chairman of the Special Committee. The Committee fully endorsed the Declaration and hoped the Council would consider without delay a mandatory decision for an oil embargo.

On the Seminar's recommendation, the Committee appealed for the observance of 20 May 1980 as the International Day for an Oil Embargo against South Africa, to mark the start of an international campaign to secure a mandatory oil embargo by the Council, encourage all States to implement an oil embargo immediately, and prevent multinational companies from collaborating with South Africa in all oil-related industries.

International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa

By resolution 35/206 I-adopted on 16 December 1980 by a recorded vote of 130 to 6, with 8 abstentions- the General Assembly requested the Special Committee against Apartheid to organize, in co-operation with OAU, an International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa. All appropriate United Nations, inter- and non-governmental bodies were invited to co-operate.

The resolution had 71 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). In introducing the text, Nigeria said that, although the United Nations had been paralysed by the stubborn support given to South Africa by certain Western powers, the resistance of those powers was beginning to crumble. Numerous non-governmental organizations supported sanctions, and there was an urgent need for a frank and honest dialogue about the matter. Nigeria hoped that all countries, especially of the West, would be represented in the Conference at the highest possible level.

Plans for the Conference, drawn up by the Special Committee against Apartheid, were described in a special report by the Committee to the Assembly, submitted on 1 October. The Assembly had decided in 1979 to organize the Conference in 1980," but the Committee decided to postpone it because of practical difficulties concerning dates and adequate preparation. In the mean time, the Committee co-sponsored a conference and a seminar during 1980 to promote the campaign for sanctions against South Africa (see pp. 211 and 212).

The Committee envisaged the Conference as a forum for exchanging views on all forms of international action on South Africa, including sanctions. It recommended that the Conference be held for six days at dates to be decided by the Preparatory Committee established by the Special Committee in 1980, and that all United Nations Member States and specialized agencies be invited, together with representatives of recognized national liberation movements and selected non-governmental organizations and experts.

The General Assembly,

Recalling and reaffirming its resolution 34/93 A of 12 December 1979.

Having considered the reports of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Reaffirming that any form of collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa constitutes a hostile act against the oppressed people of South Africa and a contemptuous defiance of the United Nations and world public opinion at large,

8. Urges the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank to terminate loans and credits to South Africa and to suspend South Africa from membership;

9. Requests once again the Secretary-General, as well as all agencies and organizations of the United Nations system which have not yet done so:

(a) To withhold any facilities from, or investment of any funds in, banks, financial institutions and corporations which continue to invest in, or give loans to, the South African régime;

(b) To refrain from any purchase, direct or indirect, of South African products;

Taking note of the report of the International Seminar on an Oil Embargo against South Africa, held at Amsterdam from 14 to 16 March 1980.

1. Commends all Governments which have imposed an oil embargo against South Africa and have taken effective measures to implement the embargo;

3. Again requests the Security Council to consider urgently a mandatory embargo on the supply of petroleum and petroleum products to South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Urges States to take effective legislative and other measures to ensure the implementation of such an oil embargo against South Africa as well as embargoes already imposed by States, individually or collectively, including the following:

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 34/93 C of 12 December 1979 on an International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa,

Having considered the special report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Endorsing the recommendation of the Special Committee for the convening of the Conference in 1981,

1. Requests and authorizes the Special Committee against Apartheid to take all necessary steps, in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, for the organization of the International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa and preparatory meetings, in accordance with the recommendations contained in its special report;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Special Committee in the organization of the Conference;

3. Invites all appropriate United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to co-operate with the Special Committee in the implementation of the present resolution.

Collaboration with South Africa

Military and nuclear collaboration

Action by the General Assembly

By resolution 35/206 B—adopted on 16 December 1980 by a recorded vote of 127 to 4, with 13 abstentions—the General Assembly condemned States that violated the arms embargo and continued to collaborate with South Africa in the military and nuclear fields, in particular certain Western States and Israel. By a preambular paragraph, it expressed serious concern at the failure of certain members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), Israel and other States to cease military and nuclear co-operation with South Africa.

The Assembly requested the Security Council to implement the existing arms embargo, to strengthen it in a number of specified ways and to secure cessation of all collaboration with South Africa. Measures to be taken would include revocation of licences for the manufacture of arms and related materials in South Africa, prohibition of the transfer of technology relating to military and nuclear industries, and the cessation of all nuclear collaboration with the racist régime. The Assembly also appealed to South African youth not to enlist for military service.

This resolution was sponsored by 60 States (See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). In introducing it, Benin said it tackled the weighty and serious problem of the military and nuclear collaboration between South Africa and certain Western States and Israel. A consequence of that collaboration was the stockpiling of conventional and nuclear weapons by South Africa. Benin said the text put into clear perspective the danger that the apartheid régime and its Western protectors created for international peace and security.

Explaining its vote against the resolution, France referred to reservations it had expressed on certain proposals contained in the report of the Security Council's Committee on an arms embargo (see p. 201). The United States, which also voted against the text, said it nevertheless supported strict implementation of the Council's arms embargo and did not supply nuclear materials or equipment to South Africa.

Canada, which abstained, said the resolution might weaken South Africa's incentives to subscribe to international nuclear safeguards agreements and to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons.<sup>12</sup> The Netherlands, explaining its abstention, said the resolution widely exceeded the limits of the Security Council's arms embargo.

Argentina and Ireland, which voted for the resolution, and New Zealand, which abstained, reserved their position on the reference to members of NATO, which Ireland called an arbitrary condemnation. Among others which voted in favour, Iceland made a similar point, speaking for the five Nordic countries, and added that NATO members Denmark, Iceland and Norway categorically rejected the notion that there was any co-operation between NATO and South Africa. Turkey stated that relations with South Africa were not within the scope of NATO activities. Ireland also objected to what it saw as confusion between the arms issue and nuclear collaboration.

Australia did not think that every contact should be condemned in the terms used in the resolution; it was important to maintain contacts with the South African régime in order to bring about policy changes.

By resolution 35/146 A of 12 December, on the nuclear capability of South Africa, the Assembly expressed deep alarm that a report by the Secretary-General on South Africa's nuclear plan and capability had established that country's ability to manufacture nuclear weapons, and deep concern that its nuclear capability was being developed to preserve white supremacy by intimidating neighbouring countries and black-mailing all Africa. It requested that the Security Council take enforcement action to prevent South Africa from acquiring such weapons. The Assembly reaffirmed that that country's plans and capability gravely endangered international peace and security, jeopardized African States and increased the danger of nuclear-weapon proliferation. This reaffirmation was repeated in Assembly resolution 35/146 B of 12 December, on implementation of the Organization of African Unity's 1964 Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, by which the Assembly also condemned any form of nuclear collaboration with South Africa by any State, corporation, institution or individual. Both resolutions called for the termination of such collaboration forthwith, requested the Security Council to prohibit all nuclear collaboration with the South African regime, and demanded that South Africa submit all its nuclear installations to International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) inspection. (Seep. 46.)

By resolution 35/158 of 12 December, on implementation of the 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, the Assembly noted with alarm that the nuclear capability of South Africa posed a serious danger to the security of African States and to international peace and security (seep. 169).

Action by the Special Committee against Apartheid

Concern over South Africa's continued military build-up and the danger posed by its nuclear plans was expressed by the Special Committee against Apartheid in its 1980 report to the Assembly. The Committee observed that, in spite of the mandatory arms embargo, the régime had been able to obtain military equipment, technology and supplies. It recommended that the machinery for the supervision of the arms embargo be strengthened and that the embargo be reinforced.

The Committee further recommended a total prohibition of military collaboration and liaison with South Africa, an embargo on all supplies for its military and police forces, an embargo on the import of arms for South Africa, cessation of the training of South Africa's military and police personnel, and the termination of exchanges of such personnel between South Africa and other countries.

Voicing concern at South Africa's efforts to acquire nuclear-weapon capability, the Committee stated that the régime had been able to acquire that capability because of collaboration by a number of States, transnational corporations and other institutions. It considered such collaboration to be a grave threat to international peace and security. South Africa had embarked on its nuclear plans in order to entrench apartheid and to intimidate African and other States. Nuclear weapons in South Africa's possession posed an enormous danger to humanity. The Committee recommended that the General Assembly stress the need for total cessation of collaboration with South Africa in the nuclear field. It further recommended that the Assembly request IAEA to suspend all co-operation with South Africa.

On 11 February, the Committee held a hearing on violations of the arms embargo against South Africa. At the hearing, Sam Hemingway and Scott Malone, authors of a series of articles in the Burlington Free Press (Burlington, Vermont, United States) on activities of the Space Research Corporation, located on the Canada/United States border, stated that that company had sold 53,000 long-range artillery shells to South Africa and had the backing of a United States bank and various international companies in its sales of military equipment and supplies, in violation of the arms embargo against South Africa. The Committee later learned from the Permanent Mission of Canada to the United Nations, in a letter dated 18 August, that the Space Research Corporation (Quebec) had pleaded guilty on 14 August to charges laid in a Montreal court in connexion with arms shipments to South Africa.

Inquiry into reports of a South African nuclear explosion

As a follow-up to reports he had submitted in October, November and December 1979,<sup>13</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly a report dated 19 August 1980 on an inquiry into reports of a nuclear explosion by South Africa over the South Atlantic or Indian Oceans in September 1979. Annexed to the report was a note verbale of 21 July 1980 from the United States, transmitting the report of an ad Hoc panel of non-governmental scientists set up by that country to look into the event.

The panel's report, released by the United States Government on 15 July, stated that the panel had found, after examining records of a light signal detected by a United States space satellite on 22 September 1979, that there was no persuasive evidence to corroborate the occurrence of a nuclear explosion on that date. Based on the lack of corroborative evidence, the existence of other unexplained instrument-triggering events which had some of the characteristics of nuclear explosions and the discrepancies observed in the 22 September signal, the panel concluded that the signal was probably not from a nuclear explosion. Although it could not rule out the possibility of nuclear origin, the panel considered it more likely that something else had occurred—for example, the satellite could have been struck by a small meteoroid.

Investments In South Africa

By resolution 35/206 Q-adopted on 16 December 1980 by a recorded vote of 137 to 0, with 9 abstentions—the General Assembly expressed the conviction that a cessation of all new foreign investments in and loans to South Africa would be an important step in international action for the elimination of apartheid, as such investments and loans abetted and encouraged apartheid. It again urged the Security Council to consider the matter at an early date with a view to taking steps to achieve the cessation of further foreign investments in and loans to South Africa.

Introducing this resolution on behalf of its 43 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), Sweden said that to diminish the flow of capital to South Africa for investment and other purposes would be an effective way of pressuring it to change its racial and aggressive policies and make it more difficult to carry out its ambitious build-up of military and nuclear capacity and energy reserves for the purpose of withstanding internal and international pressure.

The United States, speaking in explanation of its abstention, said the recommendations in the text did not accord with United States policy.

Action by the Special Committee against apartheid

In its 1980 report to the General Assembly, the Special Committee against Apartheid noted with concern that, while the Security Council had failed to act on the matter of investments, South Africa was raising substantial loans in international financial markets and was receiving large-scale investments from Western countries. It recommended early action to stop such loans and investments, and United Nations encouragement of campaigns against institutions and corporations engaged in such dealings. It further recommended that: the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development be urged to terminate loans and credits to South Africa, end other forms of collaboration with that country and suspend its membership; and the United Nations and its specialized agencies terminate relations with banks that provided loans to South Africa and withdraw their pension fund investments from corporations and banks that continued to invest there.

The Committee expressed the belief that the imposition of economic sanctions was the most effective and peaceful means of assisting in the liberation of South Africa.

Role of transnational corporations

Action by the General Assembly

By resolution 35/206 F-adopted on 16 December 1980 by a recorded vote of 120 to 7, with 16 abstentions- the General Assembly invited Governments to prohibit collaboration with South Africa by transnational corporations within their jurisdiction, to deny contracts or facilities to collaborating corporations, to encourage non-governmental organizations engaged in campaigns against such collaboration, and to expose the influence of corporations operating in southern Africa on news media and their control over such media. The Secretary-General was requested to promote campaigns against the operations of transnational corporations in South Africa.

Speaking for the 67 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) of this resolution, Nigeria said the powerful transnational corporations assisted South Africa to develop its military machine, enabled it to prepare for and violate sanctions, and provided capital and technology for its nuclear-weapon capability.

Canada, which voted against this resolution, objected to the inclusion of emotive generalizations regarding the alleged effect and intent of international business dealings with South Africa and alleged collaboration by private and public institutions. The Netherlands, explaining its negative vote, said that since the total isolation of South Africa was not its policy, it could not impose such a policy on its corporations. Iceland, speaking for the five Nordic countries, all of which abstained, said parts of the resolution would require enforcement action by the Security Council.

Action by the Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1980/59 of 24 July on activities of transnational corporations in southern Africa and their collaboration with racist minority régimes, reiterated that such activities and collaboration were detrimental to the interests of the oppressed peoples. It strongly condemned such collaboration, urged its termination and recognized the urgent need for effective measures, including sanctions, to ensure that it would be stopped. It called on Governments to adhere strictly to United Nations decisions on sanctions, and deplored the manoeuvres of South Africa and companies operating there to weaken the African trade union movement.

The Council called on all States to terminate all collaboration with the racist regime by their nationals and corporations, and in particular: to refrain from supplying petroleum and other strategic materials, from extending loans, investments and technical assistance to the régime and to corporations registered in South Africa, and from strengthening the régime's military capability; to deny trade preferences to South African exports; and to prohibit their nationals from paying taxes or transferring funds to South Africa in order to facilitate trade or investments. Finally, the Council requested the Secretary-General to have the Secretariat continue research on collaboration by transnational corporations with South Africa, update the report on this subject submitted in 1980, and continue to publicize information on the topic, making use of meetings he was to organize to educate the public in the home countries of such corporations.

Action by the Special Committee against Apartheid

The Special Committee against Apartheid in its 1980 report to the Assembly, expressed concern at the activities of transnational corporations, banks and financial institutions that collaborated with South Africa. The Committee said their activities strengthened the repressive machinery of the apartheid régime and undermined international action to eliminate apartheid. Actions of transnational corporations, such as denying recognition to trade unions, dismissing striking workers and colluding with the South African police in the violent suppression of workers, affirmed those conclusions. Several transnational corporations had expanded investments in South Africa with a view to exporting from that country, in defiance of international efforts to isolate the regime.

The Committee recommended that the Assembly invite Governments to stop collaboration by transnational corporations with South Africa, prohibit investments by South African interests in their countries, and encourage non-governmental organizations engaged in the campaign against collaboration with South Africa. To promote action against transnationals operating in South Africa, the Committee recommended: that the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations intensify its research and information activities on matters relating to South Africa; and that the United Nations Centre against Apartheid collaborate with other bodies inside and outside the United Nations in monitoring work in this area, publicize information and studies on the activities of transnational corporations, and assist Governments and organizations in actions against collaboration with South Africa.

Relations between Israel and South Africa

Action by the General Assembly

By resolution 35/206 H-adopted on 16 December 1980 by a recorded vote of 103 to 19, with 21 abstentions- the General Assembly strongly condemned the continuing and increasing collaboration by Israel with South Africa, and demanded that Israel desist from and terminate such collaboration, particularly in the military and nuclear fields.

The resolution had 59 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). The Sudan, which introduced it, said the increasing gravity of the situation regarding ever closer relations between Israel and South Africa was described in the special report on the subject submitted by the Special Committee against Apartheid (see following subsection).

Israel, which announced that it would not participate in the vote on this resolution, said the sponsors had ignored Israel's refutation of false allegations and had relied on unsupported distortions, innuendoes and speculative press reports.

Greece, explaining its negative vote, said bilateral relations between States should not come under United Nations scrutiny unless they had been proved to violate Charter principles. Iceland, speaking for the five Nordic States, which also voted against the resolution, deplored the inappropriate singling out of one country.

Explaining its abstention, Argentina said it did not agree with the selective criterion on which the resolution was based.

Report by the Special Committee against Apartheid

The special report on relations between Israel and South Africa by the Special Committee against Apartheid, prepared in accordance with a 1979 request by the General Assembly<sup>14</sup> and submitted on 4 September 1980, described developments during the previous 12 months.

The report cited an interview with South African Prime Minister Pieter W. Botha, published on 2 November 1979 in Die Vaderland (Johannesburg), in which he had called for closer ties with Israel and had expressed satisfaction with the positive developments in relations between the two countries. It mentioned a visit to South Africa in March 1980 by the Israeli Minister for Defence, a 14 November 1979 report in The Times of Zambia (Lusaka) that the two countries were co-operating in nuclear arms development, and press reports of Israeli involvement in what had seemed to be a nuclear explosion in September 1979 in an area of the Indian and South Atlantic Oceans.

The report said that Israel had been South Africa's fastest-growing trade partner in recent years, its imports from South Africa rising from $8.1 million in 1971 to $79.9 million in 1979 and its exports rising from $9.4 million to $37.7 million over the same period. Tourism from Israel was also reported on the rise, up by 22 per cent in a year to 7,000 visitors in 1978. Several instances of cultural collaboration were cited, including South African participation in an international flower show in Israel, a co-operative research programme between the University of Pretoria and Ben Gurion University in Israel, and a tour of South African scientific centres by three Israeli specialists.

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions on the arms embargo against South Africa and nuclear collaboration with South Africa, in Particular its resolutions 34/93 D and E of 12 December 1979,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, 421(1977) of 9 December 1977 and 473 (1980) of 13 June 1980,

Recalling also its resolutions concerning the denuclearization of the continent of Africa,

Recalling further its resolution 33/165 of 20 December 1978 on the status of persons refusing service in military or police forces used to enforce apartheid.

Having considered the reports of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Taking note of the report of the Security Council Committee Established by Resolution 421(1977) concerning the question of South Africa, the report of the Secretary-General on South Africa's plan and capability in the nuclear field, and his reports concerning a nuclear explosion by South Africa,

Gravely concerned that the racist régime of South Africa has continued to obtain military equipment and ammunition, as well as technology and know-how to develop its armament industry and to acquire nuclear-weapon capability, thus posing an ever increasing threat to international peace and security,

Recognizing that any nuclear-weapon capability of the racist régime of South Africa constitutes a grave menace to the continent of Africa and the world as a whole,

Expressing its serious concern at the failure of certain members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Israel and other States to cease their co-operation with the racist régime of South Africa in the military and nuclear fields and to prevent corporations and institutions within their jurisdiction from carrying out such co-operation,

Condemning the attitude of those transnational corporations which continue, through their collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa, to enhance its military and nuclear capabilities,

Considering the urgent need for mandatory action by the Security Council, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, to prohibit any military and nuclear collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa,

1. Condemns all States which violate the arms embargo and continue to collaborate with South Africa in the military and nuclear fields, in particular certain Western States and Israel;

2. Urges the Security Council to take immediate steps to ensure the scrupulous and full implementation of the arms embargo imposed by the Council in resolution 418(1977) Of 4 November 1977 and its effective monitoring in the light Of the report of the Council Committee Established by Resolution 421(1977) concerning the question of South Africa;

3. Again requests the Security Council to take mandatory measures to strengthen the arms embargo and secure the immediate cessation of any form of collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa in the military and nuclear fields and, in particular, to ensure that all States shall:

(a) Prevent South Africa from acquiring arms, ammunition and related materials as well as nuclear equipment and materials;

(b) Revoke all licences granted previously to South Africa for the manufacture of arms and related materials of all types;

(c) Prohibit corporations within their jurisdiction from becoming involved in the manufacture or development in South Africa or elsewhere of arms and related materials and all supplies for the use of South Africa's military and police forces and its nuclear programmes;

(d) Prohibit the transfer of technology relating to military and nuclear industries to the racist régime of South Africa or its agencies;

(e) Prohibit the supply or maintenance of aircraft, aircraft engines or parts, telecommunications equipment, computers and four-wheel-drive vehicles to South Africa;

(f) Prevent investments by corporations or individuals within their jurisdiction in South Africa's military and nuclear industry, as well as its supportive institutions;

(g) Cease all forms of nuclear collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa and terminate in particular the exchange of nuclear scientists with South Africa and the training of South African nuclear scientists and technicians;

(h) Prohibit the recruitment of nuclear scientists and technologists by South Africa;

(i) Prohibit the import of any arms and related materials from South Africa;

(j) Terminate the exchange of military, air, naval and scientific attachés and of visits by military and police personnel, experts in weapons technology and employees of arms factories with South Africa, as well as the training of South African military and police personnel;

(k) Take effective legislative and other measures to prevent the recruitment and/or enlistment, training and transit of mercenaries for service with South Africa's military and police forces;

(l) Refrain from purchasing uranium or enriched uranium from South Africa;

4. Requests all States to co-operate with the Special Committee against Apartheid in its efforts to ensure the total cessation of military and nuclear collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa;

5. Appeals to the youth of South Africa to refrain from enlisting in the South African armed forces, which are designed to defend the inhuman system of apartheid, to repress the legitimate struggle of the oppressed people, and to threaten and commit acts of aggression against neighbouring States;

6. Invites all Governments and organizations to assist, in consultation with the national liberation movement, persons compelled to leave South Africa because of their objection, on the ground of conscience, to serving in the military or police force of the apartheid régime;

7. Authorizes the Special Committee:

(a) To continue its efforts to promote a comprehensive and effective embargo on all forms of military and nuclear collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa, and to take appropriate measures for this purpose;

(b) To continue its co-operation with the Security Council Committee Established by Resolution 421(1977) concerning the question of South Africa and to organize joint hearings and seminars with that Committee as appropriate;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to follow closely the question of the nuclear plan and capability of South Africa and to report to the General Assembly as appropriate.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 34/93 Q of 12 December 1979,

Taking note of the reports of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Convinced that a cessation of all new foreign investments in and financial loans to South Africa would constitute an important step in international action for the elimination of apartheid, as such investments and loans abet and encourage the apartheid policies in that country,

Welcoming the actions of those Governments which have taken legislative and other measures towards that end,

Noting with regret that the Security Council has not yet taken steps towards that end, as requested in General Assembly resolutions 31/6 K of 9 November 1976, 32/105 O of 16 December 1977, 33/183 O of 24 January 1979 and 34/93 Q of 12 December 1979,

Again urges the Security Council to consider the matter at an early date with a view to taking effective steps to achieve the cessation of further foreign investments in and financial loans to South Africa.

The General Assembly,
Having considered the reports of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Taking note of the Declarations of the International Seminar on the Role of Transnational Corporations in South Africa, held in London from 2 to 4 November 1979, the International Seminar on an Oil Embargo against South Africa, held at Amsterdam from 14 to 16 March 1980, and the International Non-Governmental Organizations Action Conference for

Sanctions against South Africa, held at Geneva from 30 June to 3 July 1980, as well as Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/59 of 24 July 1980 on activities of transnational corporations in southern Africa and their collaboration with the racist minority regime in that area, Taking note also of the Declaration on Foreign Investment in South Africa, adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-fifth ordinary session, held at Freetown from 18 to 28 June 1980.

Convinced that investments in and loans to South Africa help to bolster the apartheid régime and encourage its defiance of world opinion,

Strongly condemning the activities of those transnational corporations which assist the racist regime of South Africa in its military and nuclear build-up, provide it with its needs of petroleum, petroleum products and other strategic materials, and enable it to counter international measures for the eradication of apartheid,

Deploping the activities of those transnational corporations which continue to deplete the natural resources of South Africa and Namibia,

Considering that the States concerned should take action to prevent transnational corporations within their jurisdiction from collaborating with the racist régime of South Africa,

1. Commends the Governments and non-governmental organizations which have taken action against transnational corporations collaborating with the racist régime of South Africa in violation of the resolutions of the United Nations;

2. Expresses its appreciation to student and other groups engaged in campaigns for discouragement and withdrawal of investments from South Africa:

3. Invites all Governments:

(a) To prohibit all collaboration with South Africa by transnational corporations within their jurisdiction;

(b) To deny any contracts or facilities to transnational corporations collaborating with South Africa;

(c) To encourage non-governmental organizations engaged in campaigns against collaboration by transnational corporations with South Africa;

(d) To expose the influence of transnational corporations operating in southern Africa on news media in their countries and their control over such media:

4. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid, the Commission on Transnational Corporations, the Commission on Human Rights and other appropriate bodies to intensify efforts towards the cessation of activities by transnational corporations in South Africa;

5. Requests the Special Committee, in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity and anti-apartheid movements, to publicize the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and to encourage appropriate action against them by Governments and other organizations;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take steps, in accordance with the recommendations in paragraphs 360 and 369 of the report of the Special Committee, in order to promote campaigns against the operations of transnational corporations in South Africa;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to convey the present resolution and the relevant recommendations of the Special Committee to the Commission on Transnational Corporations for consideration at its seventh session.

The General Assembly,

Recalling and reaffirming its resolution 34/93 P of 12 December 1979,

Having considered the special report of the Special Committee against Apartheid on recent developments concerning relations between Israel and South Africa,

Gravely concerned about the reports of continued collaboration between Israel and South Africa, in particular in the military and nuclear fields,

Considering that such collaboration is a serious hindrance to international action for the eradication of apartheid, as well as encouragement to the régime in South Africa to persist in its criminal policy of apartheid, and a hostile act against the oppressed people of South Africa and the entire African continent,

1. Strongly condemns the continuing and increasing collaboration by Israel with the racist régime of South Africa:

2. Demands that Israel should desist from and terminate all forms of collaboration with South Africa forthwith, particularly in the military and nuclear fields, and abide scrupulously by the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council;

3. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid to keep the matter under constant review and report to the General Assembly and the Security Council as appropriate.

REPORT BY THE SPECIAL

COMMITTEE AGAINST APARTHEID

A/35/22/Add.2 (S/14156/Add.2). Second special report of Special Committee against Apartheid.

Implementation of resolutions on apartheid

By resolution 35/206 O—adopted on 16 December 1980 by a recorded vote of 114 to 10, with 22 abstentions— the General Assembly condemned States that continued to collaborate in any form with South Africa and urged the international community to intensify the campaign to isolate the régime from economic, political, military, nuclear and other forms of co-operation. It declared firm support for the armed struggle for the liberation of the South African people from apartheid and requested the Security Council to impose immediate and total mandatory sanctions on South Africa.

This resolution was sponsored by 67 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). In introducing it, Nigeria said that, having declared apartheid a crime against humanity, Governments were under a moral, political and legal obligation to terminate relations with South Africa.

In explanation of vote, Luxembourg said the nine members of the European Community could not support a demand to break off all relations with South Africa; they believed that existing lines of communication must be used to allow for the free expression of views on all political, social and economic questions of concern to the South African people. Ireland and Uruguay, which abstained, objected to an endorsement of armed struggle.

In another action, the General Assembly, by resolution 35/29 of 11 November, deplored the fact that the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund (IMF) continued to co-operate with South Africa (see p. 1065).

By resolution 1980/50 of 23 July 1980, on implementation of the Assembly's 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, the Economic and Social Council requested United Nations organizations to intensify their support for the oppressed people of South Africa and to take measures to isolate the apartheid régime and mobilize world public opinion against apartheid (see p. 1064).

Report by the Special Committee against Apartheid

The implementation of United Nations resolutions on apartheid by Governments and intergovernmental organizations was the subject of a special report to the Assembly by the Special Committee against Apartheid submitted on 4 September.

The Committee noted that although many States and organizations had complied with the resolutions, others had actually expanded their political, military, economic and other relations with South Africa. The country could not have achieved its current industrial, military, economic and nuclear strength without the extensive assistance provided by a few industrial nations.

Reviewing specific spheres of relations between South Africa and the outside world, the report said that while most Governments had terminated or refrained from official relations with South Africa, some, such as Japan, kept consular relations, and 24 States maintained full diplomatic missions in South Africa: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Costa Rica, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Israel, Italy, Malawi, Netherlands, Paraguay, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay. Six States (Argentina, France, Paraguay, Portugal, United Kingdom, United States) had military, naval or air attachés in their missions in South Africa, while many more hosted South African defence attachés.

As to the effectiveness of the Security Council's 1977 mandatory arms embargo against South Africa,<sup>15</sup> the report cited reports of delivery of aircraft by firms in France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and the United States, patrol boats and tanks by Israeli corporations, missiles by suppliers in France and the Federal Republic of Germany, and various arms by United States companies. In addition to obviously illegal arms shipments, transfer of military equipment had continued under the guise of "civilian" or "grey-area" exports, including goods such as aircraft, computers, radar and other equipment which, while ostensibly civilian, could be converted to military use.

Some States also continued to co-operate with South Africa on nuclear energy matters in spite of United Nations resolutions, the report went on. It cited assistance by the United Kingdom, the United States and, more recently, France, one of whose consortia was to build reactors for a 2,000-megawatt nuclear power station near Cape Town. The report in September 1979 of a probable nuclear explosion in the South Atlantic demonstrated the urgent need to stop South Africa's nuclear-weapon programme.

The significance of foreign participation in the South African economy was highlighted in the Committee's report. That economy was heavily dependent on Western technology, finance, capital and oil, without which it would be vulnerable to international sanctions. Many States had refrained at great sacrifice from trading with South Africa, in conformity with the request of the Assembly. However, South Africa's main trading partners had increased their trade with the regime. The value of such trade had risen from 3,961 million South African rand in 1970 to 14,618 million rand in 1978, the main suppliers of goods being the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States, in that order. The United States, the United Kingdom and Japan were the largest importers of South African goods, in that order.

Foreign investment had increased from 5.8 billion rand in 1970 to 21.3 billion rand in 1977, most of it from countries in the European Economic Community (63 per cent), followed by North and South American countries (24 per cent). By the end of 1978, total foreign investment in South Africa was more than 22 billion rand ($27 billion). The international banking community also played a particularly important role in the South African economy. The United Kingdom remained the largest direct investor.

The report listed 17 countries with which South African Airways maintained regular service, in contravention of the Assembly's recommendation that Member States deny facilities for such flights. The national shipping line, Safmarine, had also continued to grow. The number of immigrants in 1978 had dropped to 18,669, the lowest number since 1961; most had come from Southern Rhodesia.

Referring to cultural, educational, sporting and other collaboration with South Africa, the report said that visits by foreign artists, mostly from the United States, the United Kingdom and Israel, served as a critical psychological and educational buffer against the growing international isolation of South Africa. The country was barred from all major world championship sporting events, but several United States boxers had fought with South Africans in widely publicized bouts, and several West European and a few South American countries had had sporting links with South Africa in the past few years. The number of tourists visiting South Africa had increased in 1978 for the first time in three years, to a total of 641,588; the largest number had come from the United Kingdom.

South Africa had granted "independence" to the bantustans of Bophuthatswana (1977), Transkei (1976) and Venda (1979), but no State other than South Africa had recognized them. However, multinational corporations and banking institutions did business with the bantustans, contrary to United Nations recommendations.

Many organizations in the United Nations family had implemented Assembly resolutions on South Africa, which had withdrawn or been expelled from the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Labour Organisation and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations. However, IMF had granted it aid in 1976, 1977 and 1978.

In the concluding part of this report, the Special Committee recommended that the Assembly: (a) emphasize the need for States to terminate all forms of collaboration with the South African regime; (b) urge the international community to intensify the campaign to isolate South Africa from economic, political, military, nuclear, and sports and cultural contacts; (c) appeal for expanded humanitarian and other assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement; (d) declare its firm support for the armed liberation struggle; and (e) request the Security Council to impose total mandatory sanctions on South Africa.

In its annual report to the Assembly, the Committee urged specialized agencies and other United Nations institutions to stop assistance to the apartheid régime and to support the liberation struggle. It suggested that the Assembly request the Secretary-General and Member States to promote greater contributions by those organizations to international action against apartheid, and to ensure greater co-ordination of effort among them.

By a letter dated 1 December to the Secretary-General, the Chairman of the Special Committee transmitted the text of a statement issued by him on 26 November in connexion with action taken by the South African régime to grant "independence" to the bantustan Ciskei. He appealed to all Governments and organizations to denounce the move, adding that there must not be any recognition of the bantustans, direct or indirect, and no dealings with them.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid on the implementation of United Nations resolutions on apartheid by Governments and intergovernmental organizations,

Reaffirming its resolutions on apartheid,

Deploping that some Member States have maintained and even increased their political, military, economic and other relations with South Africa despite United Nations resolutions on apartheid,

Considering that all relations with South Africa serve to fortify a military State whose existence is antagonistic to the very principles on which the United Nations is founded,

Convinced that continuation of the policies of apartheid by the racist regime of South Africa can only lead to a further deterioration of the situation in southern Africa and to a rapid escalation of the threat to world peace and security,

1. Commends all Governments and intergovernmental organizations which have implemented United Nations resolutions on apartheid;
2. Strongly condemns those States which are continuing collaboration in any form with the racist régime of South Africa, in violation of resolutions of the General Assembly;
3. Considers it essential that Member States should adopt legislation and take appropriate measures to terminate effectively all forms of collaboration with the racist apartheid régime;
4. Strongly urges the international community, including Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to continue and intensify the campaign to isolate South Africa from economic, political, military, nuclear and other forms of co-operation;
5. Declares its firm support for the armed struggle of the national liberation movement of South Africa in its quest for the liberation of the people of South Africa from the oppression of apartheid;
6. Requests the Security Council, acting under Chapter

VII of the Charter of the United Nations, to impose immediate and total mandatory sanctions on South Africa:

7. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid to continue, as a matter of priority, to monitor the implementation of and compliance with United Nations resolutions on apartheid;

8. Authorizes the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with all necessary assistance in the discharge of this task.

Human rights aspects

Decisions of the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council

The apartheid policies of South Africa were dealt with during 1980 in a number of resolutions and decisions of the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights. These, covered in greater detail in the chapter on HUMAN RIGHTS QUESTIONS (see p. 795) and elsewhere in this Yearbook, included the following (for page references to texts of Council resolutions, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS).

On 15 February, in a resolution on the right to self-determination, the Commission reaffirmed the inalienable rights of the people of South Africa, and all peoples under alien and colonial domination, to self-determination, independence, territorial integrity, national unity and sovereignty without external interference (see p. 837).

On 21 February, the Commission, by a resolution on the realization of economic, social and cultural rights, again declared that apartheid constituted an impediment to social and economic progress (see p. 864).

On 26 February, the Commission requested its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to prepare a study on ways of ensuring implementation of United Nations resolutions on apartheid, racism and racial discrimination, for submission to the Commission in 1982 (see p. 798).

In another action on the same date, the Commission, after examining a report by its Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa, requested the Group to continue to study human rights violations in South Africa and call the attention of the Commission's Chairman to serious violations so that he could take whatever action he deemed appropriate. The Commission denounced the so-called declarations of independence of bantustans as an infringement of the right to self-determination. (See p. 810.)

Also on 26 February, the Commission: appealed to countries to accede to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid; requested its Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts to continue compiling its list of individuals and organizations responsible for committing crimes enumerated in the Convention, and requested the Secretary-General to publicize each case and the persons involved; requested the Group to study ways of implementing instruments such as the Convention, including the establishment of an international jurisdiction to deal with cases; and welcomed the campaign by the Special Committee against Apartheid to give effect to the Convention. In a related action on the same date, the Commission urged States parties to the Convention to submit their periodic reports on implementation of that instrument, as required by article VII. (See p. 807.)

In a resolution adopted on 26 February concerning the adverse consequences for human rights caused by assistance to colonial and racist régimes in southern Africa, the Commission expressed support for the projected International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa (see p. 212), and requested annual updating of the list of banks, transnational corporations and other organizations assisting the racist régimes, prepared by a Special Rapporteur of its Sub-Commission. By decision 1980/131 of 2 May, the Council decided that the Rapporteur's report should be printed and widely disseminated, and approved the Commission's decision to have him update the list every year. (See p. 809.)

By resolution 1980/33 of 2 May, on alleged infringements of trade union rights in South Africa, the Council noted a report on this subject by the Commission's Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts, requested the Group to continue its study of the situation, reiterated its demand for the abolition of all restrictions on such rights and the recognition of all existing African trade unions, deplored manoeuvres by South Africa and by companies to weaken the African trade union movement by establishing parallel unions and harassing union officials, and demanded the release of all imprisoned trade unionists (see p. 855).

Political prisoners

The Special Committee against Apartheid, in its annual report to the General Assembly, observed that South Africa had failed to release its political prisoners despite repeated international demands. The Committee recommended that the Assembly: demand that the racist regime end repression against its opponents, grant prisoner-of-war status to captured freedom fighters and desist from executing them; call on parties to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 on the protection of war victims to ensure that South Africa respected those Conventions; call on Governments and organizations to work for the release of all political prisoners and detainees; demand that the regime repeal repressive laws and lift a ban on the collection of funds by organizations dedicated to the welfare of political prisoners and their families; request Governments and United Nations agencies to publicize acts of repression in South Africa; urge Governments, judicial associations, other organizations and individuals to provide material, legal and other aid to political prisoners, restrictees and their families; and request the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts of the Commission on Human Rights to seek access to political prisoners and detainees in South Africa.

On several occasions in 1980, the Chairman of the Special Committee issued statements in support of the campaign launched in South Africa for the release of Nelson Mandela, leader of the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC) and other imprisoned leaders. On 26 March, the Committee held a hearing on repression, political prisoners and related matters.

By resolution 35/206 K, adopted without vote on 16 December, the General Assembly demanded that South Africa release Nelson Mandela and all other political prisoners, cease trials under repressive laws and recognize the prisoner-of-war status of captured freedom fighters. It called on parties to the 1949 Geneva Conventions and to Additional Protocols I and II to those Conventions (adopted in 1977,<sup>16</sup> relating to the protection of victims of international and non-international conflicts, respectively) to ensure respect for those instruments by South Africa. A preambular paragraph of the resolution mentioned that, under Protocol I, freedom fighters in wars of national liberation were entitled to prisoner-of-war status.

The Assembly urged Governments, judicial associations, other organizations and individuals to provide material, legal and other aid to South African political prisoners, restrictees and their families. It requested the Committee against Apartheid to continue to promote the campaign for the release of South African political prisoners.

The sponsors-which numbered 77 (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) -revised their original text to add a provision by which the Assembly condemned the death sentences imposed on freedom fighters on 25 November. India, which introduced the revised resolution, explained that the reference was to Nekimbithi Johnson Lubisi, Naphtali Manana and Petrus Tsepo Mashigo, sentenced to death by the Supreme Court in Pretoria on charges of high treason and attempted murder in connexion with an attack on a bank in Silverton, a suburb of Pretoria. The remaining six of the "Silverton Nine," accused of conspiring with ANC in planning the attack, had been sentenced to terms of imprisonment ranging from 10 to 20 years.

Argentina, explaining its stand on this resolution, reserved its position on references to Additional Protocol I, which was still being studied by Argentine authorities. France, noting that it had not signed that Protocol, said it would have abstained if the resolution had been put to a vote. Iceland, speaking also for Denmark, Finland, Norway and Sweden, said the Nordic countries reserved their position regarding the applicability of prisoner-of-war status under the Geneva Conventions. Japan expressed reservations on legal grounds.

Turkey said it understood the phrase "freedom fighters" in the resolution to refer to the liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity. The United States noted that Additional Protocol I applied to liberation movements only if they met specified requirements, including the transmission of a declaration stating their adherence to the Protocol.

The death sentences imposed on three of the "Silverton Nine" were also the subject of letters to the President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General.

By a letter to the Council President dated 28 November, Senegal, as current Chairman of the African group of States at the United Nations, forwarded a letter of the same date from an ANC representative concerning the recent death sentences given to three ANC members. The ANC letter said that they and six others had been accused of conspiracy in planning an attack on a bank in Silverton (on 25 January) and of conspiring or taking part in a grenade raid on a police station in northern Transvaal (on 4 January). The ANC representative requested the good offices of the President to alert world opinion to save the lives of the three men.

By a letter dated 1 December to the Secretary-General, the Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid transmitted the text of a statement he had issued on 26 November condemning the sentences imposed by the Pretoria Supreme Court and appealing to all parties to the 1949 Geneva Conventions to ensure that the Pretoria regime respected the status of freedom fighters as prisoners of war.

By a note of 23 December to the Council President, Cuba transmitted the text of a communiqué adopted at an extraordinary plenary meeting of the non-aligned countries held that day in New York, calling on States and non-governmental organizations to pressure the apartheid régime to spare the lives of the condemned men, accord prisoner-of-war status to all captured freedom fighters and release all political prisoners.

In a letter dated 3 December, the Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid transmitted to the Secretary-General a declaration by ANC made on 28 November to ICRC, stating that, whenever practically possible, it would endeavour to respect the rules of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol I.

Women and children under apartheid

The International Seminar on Women and Apartheid, held at Helsinki, Finland, from 19 to 21 May 1980, drew attention in its Declaration and Recommendations to the oppression, exploitation and persecution of women affected by the apartheid system. Women and children fleeing from apartheid made up most of the refugees from South Africa in neighbouring countries, the Seminar stated. They needed lasting asylum, food, shelter, medical care, legal protection, guarantees of fundamental human rights, intensive counselling, education, training and employment. The Seminar urged all Governments and organizations to increase their support for humanitarian efforts by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in favour of southern African refugees, and it proposed steps to assist women victimized by apartheid.

Expressing support for the position of the liberation movements, the Seminar said it respected their right to choose their means of struggle. It expressed alarm and indignation that certain Governments, such as Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, Italy, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States, as well as transnational corporations and other interests, continued to collaborate with the Pretoria regime. It declared any such collaboration to be a crime against all peoples and against peace.

The Seminar was organized by the Non-Governmental Organizations Sub-Committee on Racism, Racial Discrimination, Apartheid and Decolonization, in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, the secretariat of the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. Its Declaration and Recommendations were transmitted to the General Assembly by a letter of 6 June from the Committee Chairman.

The Committee, in its annual report to the Assembly, also urged expanded assistance to women and child victims of apartheid. It recommended that the Assembly: request the Commission on Human Rights to investigate crimes against women and children in South Africa; encourage the proclamation of an International Day of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women of South Africa and Namibia; recommend that the United Nations and its agencies, Governments and other organizations assist women in the liberation movement and those from front-line States to attend conferences, seminars and educational and other institutions in various regions of the world; request the Committee to encourage and co-sponsor regional and national meetings on women under apartheid; and invite women's organizations to express solidarity with the liberation struggle and consider co-ordination of efforts with the Committee.

The Declaration and Recommendations of the Helsinki Seminar were endorsed by the Assembly in resolution 35/206 N, adopted on 16 December by a recorded vote of 132 to 0, with 13 abstentions. The Assembly appealed to Governments and organizations to support projects by liberation movements and front-line States designed to assist women and children from South Africa. It encouraged women's and other organizations to proclaim an International Day of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women of South Africa and Namibia. It also endorsed recommendations on the subject made by the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women (Copenhagen, Denmark, 14-30 July) (see p. 894).

Introducing this resolution on behalf of its 77 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), the Philippines said that women under apartheid were doubly discriminated against: first, because they were Africans, and second, because they were dependants of men and therefore considered inferior. Apartheid was equally destructive to children, as evidenced by the fact that 200 of every 1,000 non-white South African children died in infancy, as compared to 20 of every 1,000 white children.

The United States, explaining its abstention on this resolution, opposed the endorsement of the Seminar's Declaration and Recommendations. Japan, which also abstained, and New Zealand, which voted for the text, also reserved their positions on this point; Japan objected that the Declaration had arbitrarily and incorrectly accused Japan and others of collaborating with South Africa. Ireland abstained in the vote for similar reasons. France explained its abstention as due to the references to armed struggle and to the recommendations of the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women. Reservations on the paragraph containing endorsements of the Seminar and Conference recommendations were also expressed on behalf of Denmark, Iceland and Norway, which abstained, and Finland and Sweden, which voted in favour.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/4 of 18 October 1979 and 34/93 K of 12 December 1979,

Taking note of the Report of the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, particularly its recommendations on assistance to women in southern Africa, Taking note also of the Declaration and Recommendations of the International Seminar on Women and Apartheid, held at Helsinki from 19 to 21 May 1980.

Noting with admiration the great sacrifices of the women and children in South Africa in the struggle for their inalienable rights and their national liberation,

Affirming its full solidarity with the women of South Africa in their struggle for liberation under the leadership of their national liberation movement,

Considering that international efforts should be greatly intensified to publicize the plight of women and children in South Africa and to promote greater solidarity with and assistance to them in the context of their heroic struggle for the liberation of South Africa,

1. Commends the Special Committee against Apartheid for giving special attention to the plight of women and children under apartheid;

2. Endorses the Declaration and Recommendations of the International Seminar on Women and Apartheid and the relevant recommendations of the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, and commends them to the attention of Governments and organizations;

3. Urges all organizations of the United Nations system, Governments, international and regional intergovernmental organizations, women's organizations and anti-apartheid groups, non-governmental organizations and other groups to give the highest priority to the question of measures of assistance to women in South Africa and Namibia during the second half of the United Nations Decade for Women;

4. Appeals to all Governments and organizations to support the various projects of the national liberation movements and front-line States designed to assist refugee women and children from South Africa and Namibia;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to investigate crimes against women and children in South Africa;

6. Encourages women's organizations and other organizations concerned with women in South Africa, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, to proclaim an International Day of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women of South Africa and Namibia in order to promote the widest mobilization of world public opinion in support of the righteous struggle of the women of South Africa and their national liberation movement, as well as to provide all necessary assistance to them to ensure the speedy triumph of that struggle;

7. Invites women's organizations all over the world to intensify action in solidarity with the struggle for liberation in South Africa and to consider greater co-ordination of their efforts in co-operation with the Special Committee;

8. Requests the Special Committee and its Task Force on Women and Children:

(a) To promote and monitor the implementation of the relevant recommendations of the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women;

(b) To publicize the plight of women and children under apartheid and their struggle for liberation;

(c) To encourage national, regional and international conferences on women and children under apartheid and to co-sponsor such conferences, as appropriate.

Encouragement of public action against apartheid

International campaigns

By resolution 35/206 G-adopted on 16 December 1980 by a recorded vote of 133 to 0, with 12 abstentions- the General Assembly requested the Special Committee against Apartheid to promote international campaigns against apartheid with a view to isolating South Africa in the political, economic, military, nuclear, cultural, sports and other fields, terminating all forms of collaboration with it, securing the release of all political prisoners, encouraging protests and boycotts by groups, giving effect to the oil and arms embargoes, and securing the support of the mass media and public opinion. It further requested the Committee to organize a seminar on the activities and role of the mass media, Governments, anti-apartheid movements and other organizations in publicizing the liberation struggle and the crimes of the apartheid régime.

This resolution was sponsored by 71 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) and was introduced by Zambia.

Several States explained their abstentions on this resolution. The United Kingdom said it did not believe the isolation of South Africa would bring about the fundamental change of view needed for a peaceful solution, it did not think the Assembly should attempt to determine how the South African people should decide their future and it was not for the Assembly to prescribe measures that fell within the Security Council's competence. Portugal said apartheid could not be ended through a total isolation of South Africa; maintaining a dialogue was more likely to influence the regime to introduce the required measures. The United States said isolation ran counter to its policy of maintaining contacts in order to promote change.

Although it voted in favour, Japan said it did not approve of all of the wording in the resolution.

Cultural, academic and other boycotts

By resolution 35/206 E-adopted on 16 December 1980 by a recorded vote of 123 to 8, with 13 abstentions- the General Assembly requested States to prevent cultural, academic, sports and other exchanges with South Africa. It further requested States to cease cultural and academic collaboration with South Africa, prevent promotion of tourism to the country, terminate visa-free entry privileges for South Africans and prohibit emigration to South Africa. It appealed to writers, artists, musicians and others to boycott South Africa, and urged academic and cultural institutions to sever links with that country.

Sixty-seven countries (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) sponsored this resolution. In introducing the text, which was based in large part on recommendations by the Special Committee against Apartheid, Nigeria commended sportsmen, writers, playwrights, musicians and others who had boycotted South Africa.

Ireland, explaining its abstention on this resolution, said some of the measures proposed went beyond what the Irish Government was prepared to take in relation to individuals and private bodies. Japan and the Netherlands voiced similar reservations, though they voted for the resolution. Iceland, speaking for the five Nordic countries, which abstained, reserved their position on elements which they said infringed the constitutional rights of citizens in free and democratic societies.

Apartheid in sports

The Special Committee against Apartheid continued in 1980 to promote an international campaign to achieve a total boycott of apartheid sports teams. It issued statements commending countries and organizations that had refused to participate in matches with South African teams, and it organized a hearing on 28 March in which leaders of international and national sports organizations discussed ways to further the campaign.

The Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against Apartheid in Sports again reported to the General Assembly in 1980 that it had not concluded consideration of a key article in the draft convention and that further consultations were essential. Differences continued to exist over whether States should simply be required to prohibit their nationals from competing with athletes from a country practising apartheid, or whether the ban should extend to third parties, so as to bar competition with those who engaged in sports events with individuals or teams from apartheid countries. The Committee, which began work on the draft convention in 1978,<sup>17</sup> recommended that its mandate be extended.

In its report, adopted on 10 September 1980, the Committee also said that its members had expressed grave concern over continued sports exchanges with South African teams, particularly a visit of the South African Barbarians rugby team to the United Kingdom and of the British and Irish Lions rugby team to South Africa. Several members had also expressed dismay at attempts by some national sports organizations to readmit South African athletes to international bodies from which they had been barred.

By resolution 35/206 M-adopted on 16 December by a recorded vote of 131 to 0, with 15 abstentions--the Assembly condemned sports organizations, sportsmen and promoters that had collaborated with South Africa, and requested the mass media not to publicize sports exchanges with that country. As recommended by the Ad Hoc Committee, it requested the Secretary-General to circulate to United Nations Member States, for their comments, the revised draft of the international convention against apartheid in sports (annexed to the Committee's report). It asked the Committee to continue work with a view to submitting a draft convention to the Assembly in 1981.

This resolution, introduced by Barbados, was sponsored by 66 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Among those which abstained on the resolution, Canada and Ireland expressed constitutional reservations about the proposed convention. The Netherlands also voiced reservations on the convention and added that it could not go along with a blanket condemnation of every form of sports contact with South Africa, irrespective of whether the team was composed on a racial basis. The United States said its position on the participation of individuals and organizations in sporting events remained unchanged.

Speaking for the Nordic countries—Denmark and Iceland, which abstained, and Finland, Norway and Sweden, which voted in favour—Iceland said sports organizations in those countries were free and independent. Luxembourg, speaking for the nine members of the European Community, said that, while respecting the independence of private organizations and the fundamental right of people to travel abroad freely, the nine would continue to discourage sporting contacts involving racial discrimination.

New Zealand voted for the resolution but expressed reservations about the request to the media, which did not accord with its approach to press freedom. A similar reservation was voiced on behalf of the Nordic countries.

Dissemination of information on apartheid

By resolution 35/206 L, adopted without vote on 16 December, the General Assembly requested Governments and organizations to co-operate with the Special Committee against Apartheid and the United Nations Secretariat's Centre against Apartheid in the production and dissemination of anti-apartheid information. It asked the Secretary-General to ensure that the Secretariat's Department of Public Information gave priority to the dissemination of information on apartheid and to expand, within existing budgetary appropriations, the number of radio programmes for broadcast to South Africa. Governments, information media and organizations were invited to counteract apartheid propaganda and co-operate in exposing the activities of those who assisted in such propaganda. The Assembly also appealed to Governments and organizations to contribute generously to the Trust Fund for Publicity against Apartheid.

This resolution had 67 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). Tunisia said in introducing it that its aim was to increase the funds available to inform public opinion and mobilize anti-apartheid energies throughout the world.

Explaining its position, Turkey said the resolution caused some constitutional difficulties regarding freedom of the press. The United States joined in the consensus on the text but said its laws prevented it from carrying out certain provisions. France said it would have abstained if a vote had been taken.

By resolution 35/201 of 16 December, on questions relating to information, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to ensure that special attention was given to United Nations activities against apartheid (see p. 473).

A report by the Secretary-General to the Assembly contained information submitted by four States—the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, the USSR and the United Kingdom—on their implementation of two 1979 Assembly resolutions, on the situation in South Africa and on the role of the mass media in international action against apartheid.<sup>18</sup> According to these replies, the mass media of the States concerned helped to promote an understanding of the struggle against apartheid, analysed the evils of apartheid and mobilized public opinion in favour of action to eliminate it.

Meetings, missions and observances

The Special Committee against Apartheid continued in 1980 to promote public action by trade unions and by youth, student and other organizations struggling against apartheid. On 24 March, it organized a hearing on labour and trade union aspects of the situation in South Africa, with trade unionists and others taking part. In May, a delegation of Committee members consulted in Stockholm, Sweden, with international and regional youth and student organizations, whose representatives had agreed on a series of projects in support of the liberation of South Africa and Namibia. The Chairman of the Committee consulted throughout the year with many other non-governmental organizations on anti-apartheid activities.

The Committee co-sponsored a number of conferences, seminars and other events with anti-apartheid movements and other non-governmental organizations. These included: an International Seminar on Youth Solidarity with the People's Struggle in South Africa (Sigtuna, Sweden, 23-26 May); an International Non-Governmental Organizations Action Conference for Sanctions against South Africa (Geneva,

30 June-3 July) (see p. 211); and a meeting of organizations engaged in campaigns against loans to South Africa (Geneva, 4 July). The Committee also held special meetings in observance of the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (21 March) (see p. 803) and the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggling People of South Africa (16 June).

Paying special attention to the plight of women and children under apartheid, the Committee co-sponsored a Hemispheric Seminar on Women under Apartheid (Montreal, Canada, 9-11 May) and an International Seminar on Women and Apartheid (Helsinki, Finland, 19-21 May) (see p. 228).

The Committee sent missions for consultations with the Governments of Belgium, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, Norway and Sweden. It also sent representatives or messages to numerous international conferences.

A colloquium organized by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, on the prohibition of apartheid, racism and racial discrimination and the achievement of self-determination in international law, was held at Geneva from 20 to 24 October, in accordance with a 1978 request by the General Assembly.<sup>19</sup> The participants concluded that States had a duty to assist the South African liberation movement, to examine means to make existing mandatory sanctions against South Africa more effective, particularly by developing more reliable means for the timely detection and exposure of violations, and to strengthen the economies, and thus the resistance, of front-line States. The colloquium's report was transmitted to the Secretary-General in a letter from Bangladesh dated 28 November.

The General Assembly,

Convinced that the United Nations must take a leading role in concerted international action for the elimination of apartheid,

Noting that the racist minority regime in Pretoria, through its system of institutionalized racial discrimination, exploitation and oppression, continues to deprive the majority of the South African people of avenues of peaceful and legal courses of action to secure their inalienable rights to self-determination,

Recalling the Programme of Action against Apartheid contained in its resolution 31/6 J of 9 November 1976 and the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid,

Noting with great appreciation the efforts of the Special Committee against Apartheid, with the assistance of the Centre against Apartheid of the Secretariat, in encouraging and promoting concerted action by anti-apartheid movements, solidarity committees, trade unions, religious bodies, women's organizations, student and youth organizations, and prominent scientists, artists and sportsmen, Recognizing the vital role of the media in the international campaign for the eradication of apartheid.

Taking note of the recommendations of the Special Committee against Apartheid for an effective international mobilization against apartheid,

1. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid, with the assistance of the Centre against Apartheid of the Secretariat and in co-operation with the South African liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity, to take effective measures to promote international campaigns against apartheid, with a view to:

(a) Isolating the racist Pretoria regime in the political, economic, military, nuclear, cultural, sports and other fields, and terminating all forms of collaboration;

(b) Securing the release of Nelson Mandela and all other political prisoners as a first step towards the convening of a national convention fully representative of the entire people of South Africa to determine the future of the country;

(c) Encouraging Governments, anti-apartheid movements and solidarity committees, trade unions, religious bodies, women's organizations, student and youth organizations and the media to undertake, separately and collectively, protest and boycott actions against the racist minority regime in Pretoria;

(d) Giving effect to the oil embargo against South Africa;

(e) Ensuring the implementation of the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa;

(f) Securing the support of the mass media and world public opinion, in particular by organizing and co-sponsoring colloquia, hearings and seminars in the light of the principles, guidelines and provisions of General Assembly resolution 34/931 of 12 December 1979;

2. Requests the Special Committee to organize or promote the organization of a seminar on the activities and role of the mass media, as well as of Governments, anti-apartheid and solidarity movements and other organizations, in publicizing the crimes of the apartheid regime and the legitimate struggle of the national liberation movement of South Africa;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Centre against Apartheid with all the necessary means to support these promotional and publicity efforts;

4. Call/s upon all Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, prominent scientists, artists, sportsmen and intellectuals to step up efforts in support of these international campaigns against apartheid.

Commending writers, musicians, artists, sportsmen and others who have boycotted South Africa because of their opposition to apartheid,

Commending also those States and non-governmental organizations, in particular anti-apartheid movements, student organizations, academic institutions and sports organizations, which have promoted the boycott of South Africa,

Noting that the racist regime of South Africa is using cultural, academic, sports and other contacts to promote its propaganda for the inhuman policies of apartheid and "bantustanization,"

1. Requests all States to take steps to prevent all cultural, academic, sports and other exchanges with South Africa;

International assistance

Assistance to the people of South Africa and to their national liberation movement

Action by the United ##### Nations Development Programme

During 1980, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) continued to assist the two national liberation movements in South Africa recognized by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) with a commitment of $631,760 to several development projects. The commitment was divided about equally between the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC) and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC). The projects included various forms of educational assistance, aid to self-help community development projects, the Institute of Azania and the Solomon Mahlangu Freedom College, and assistance for self-reliance in food production.

The UNDP commitment totalled $2.2 million for the period 1977-1981. The UNDP Administrator informed the UNDP Governing Council in March 1980 that, in view of the political situation in South Africa as well as the fact that no date had been set for the independence of Namibia, it was felt that additional resources would be needed for the period after 1981 to provide further support for the peoples struggling for independence. This report was noted by the Governing Council in a decision of 26 June.

Action by the Economic and Social Council

As requested by the General Assembly in 1979,<sup>20</sup> the Economic and Social Council conducted a review during 1980 of the assistance provided by United Nations organizations to oppressed South Africans and their liberation movement. This review was carried out in consultation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, whose Chairman met with the Council President and the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. The President informed the Council about these consultations in a report dated 23 June.

The report stated that the Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid had expressed the Committee's view that the assistance provided in this connexion by the United Nations system should consist not only of educational, humanitarian and other assistance but also of political assistance aimed at isolating the racist regime and mobilizing world opinion against apartheid. Calling for greater co-ordination and consultation among the agencies on the provision of assistance, the Chairman said the Committee recommended that a meeting to that end be convened early in 1981 among the three presiding officers and representatives of the organizations, OAU and the liberation movements. He also suggested that the organizations be requested to report on their activities in this area and that such reports be given wide publicity.

The President of the Council stated that a decision had been taken to hold such a co-ordination meeting annually, in the context of co-operation between the United Nations and OAU (see p. 290). Referring to the concrete action taken against apartheid by various organizations in response to appeals by the Assembly and the Security Council, the President called particular attention to the campaign by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and other agencies to mobilize world public opinion against apartheid and to enlist maximum public support for the South African people.

The three presiding officers agreed that the momentum should be maintained by all concerned to bring pressure to bear on the Pretoria regime. They also agreed that, in view of the enormous burden borne by neighbouring States in meeting the pressing needs of refugees, efforts to extend further assistance to those States should be intensified, especially to strengthen their infrastructure for responding to such needs.

After considering this report, the Economic and Social Council, on 23 July, adopted resolution 1980/50, on implementation of the Declaration on granting independence and assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations. By doing so, it endorsed the observations and suggestions in the President's report and requested United Nations organizations to intensify their support for the oppressed people of South Africa and to take measures to isolate the South African regime and mobilize world public opinion against apartheid.

In the discussion of this resolution and of the report, many speakers called for continued support by the United Nations system to the South African liberation movement; they included China, the German Democratic Republic, Iraq, Nigeria, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yugoslavia. Speaking for the resolution's sponsors, Nigeria said that measures to isolate the South African regime involved action to bring pressure against that regime so that the country's majority would be granted freedom, human rights and liberty of movement.

France, while condemning the apartheid regime and endorsing humanitarian assistance, did not consider it appropriate for international organizations to aid the South African liberation movement, whose goal was to seize power in a Member State by all available and appropriate means, including armed struggle. The United States held that humanitarian and development assistance should be made available to all peoples in question, regardless of political affiliation, and should be carefully controlled, administered and audited; further, the United States opposed language that could be interpreted to mean the expulsion of States from specialized agencies on grounds not provided for in their constitutions. The United Kingdom, making a similar point, said that the call for measures to isolate the South African regime could not be interpreted to imply a breach in the principle of universality of the United Nations system.

Action by the Special Committee against Apartheid

The Special Committee against Apartheid, in its annual report to the Assembly, described its efforts to seek the commitment of the international community to provide moral and material assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement in the struggle for self-determination and the construction of a non-racial society. It emphasized humanitarian and educational assistance, as well as aid to enable the liberation movements to generate publicity, attend conferences and engage in other activities connected with their struggle. The Committee recommended greater co-ordination among the organizations involved in this assistance. It further recommended that funds continue to be made available from the United Nations regular budget to assist the liberation movements in maintaining offices in New York.

In view of the economic and other hardships endured by front-line States as a result of their support for the liberation struggle in South Africa, the Committee urged the United Nations and the international community to provide them with generous economic and other assistance.

Action by the General Assembly

On 16 December 1980, the General Assembly, by a recorded vote of 137 to 3, with 5 abstentions, adopted resolution 35/206 J. By this resolution, the Assembly appealed to all States to provide humanitarian, educational, financial and other assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa as well as direct assistance to the liberation movements in their legitimate struggle. It urged UNDP and other United Nations agencies to expand their assistance programmes to the recognized liberation movements. It also urged the United Nations agencies to ensure the participation of those movements in their activities and to give financial aid to that end. Funds from the United Nations regular budget would continue to be provided to enable ANC and PAC to maintain offices in New York.

This resolution was sponsored by 71 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). Introducing it, the United Republic of Tanzania said that its thrust was to heighten the role of the liberation movement in the total liberation of Africa.

In explanation of its vote against this resolution, the United States said it opposed United Nations financial assistance to or through liberation movements. The Netherlands said it had voted in favour, with reservations on the designation of ANC and PAC as liberation movements; South Africa's situation was not a colonial one and they could not claim to represent all the people.

Assistance to southern African refugee students

The United Nations programme of assistance to southern African student refugees in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia entered its fourth year in 1980, having begun in February 1977. By a 1979 decision of the General Assembly,<sup>21</sup> it was expanded to cover the care, health and education of refugee students in those countries from Namibia and Zimbabwe (see p. 249).

A United Nations mission which visited southern Africa from 28 May to 10 June 1980 stated, in a report of the Secretary-General to the Assembly, that government contributions earmarked for refugee aid in those countries, in response to a 1977 appeal by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, amounted to $15,950,329 as at 24 May 1980 and that an additional $5,323,905 in bilateral assistance to student refugees in Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland had been reported to the High Commissioner.

The mission listed a number of projects being implemented in co-operation with the Office of the High Commissioner or proposed for its financing in the context of the assistance programme for southern African student refugees. These included: for Botswana, additional educational facilities for 50 student refugees at a campus of the University of Botswana and Swaziland, aid to the multinational refugee centre at Dukwe and a secondary school building programme; for Lesotho, additional residential and related facilities for student refugees at the National University, the creation of additional facilities in existing secondary and technical schools for 730 student refugees, and new projects for the construction of a refugee transit centre at Maseru and expansion of the Lerotholi Technical Training Institute; for Swaziland, aid to the refugee reception/transit centre at Mpaka High School and expansion of facilities at the University of Swaziland; and for Zambia, recommended expansion of the facilities at Nkumbi International College.

The mission concluded that the international assistance rendered through this programme had done much to improve the conditions of the young, homeless student refugees in the countries neighbouring South Africa and had lightened the burden borne by the host countries. Outside aid used to expand facilities in the universities and secondary and technical schools in southern Africa had made more places available for student refugees. However, much more could be achieved with more money, trained staff, and educational material and equipment. The flow of student refugees from South Africa to other countries in the region had not abated and international assistance would be required for some time. The mission identified new and uncompleted projects costing an estimated $4.8 million.

Before the mission's report was circulated in September, the Economic and Social Council reviewed the status of the programme in July, as requested by the General Assembly in 1979.<sup>22</sup> The Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes told the Council in an oral report on 21 July that the need for assistance continued. He noted that, in addition to other forms of bilateral and multilateral aid, the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa was providing scholarships (see p. 240). The Council took note of this report by decision 1980/158 of 23 July, adopted, without objection, on an oral proposal by Nigeria.

The General Assembly, by resolution 35/184 of 15 December adopted without vote, requested the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the High Commissioner, to organize and implement an effective programme of educational and other assistance for student refugees from Namibia and South Africa who had taken asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia. Endorsing the assessments and recommendations in the Secretary-General's report, the Assembly urged Member States and organizations to contribute generously, and called on United Nations agencies and programmes to co-operate in humanitarian aid programmes for the student refugees. It requested a further report in 1981, with the Economic and Social Council to be apprised of the status of the programme.

The resolution was sponsored in the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee by Algeria, Benin, Botswana, the Comoros, Djibouti, Egypt, Ethiopia, Lesotho, Madagascar, Qatar, Senegal, Somalia, the Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Zaire and Zambia. It was approved unanimously on 19 November as revised by the sponsors. The revision altered paragraph 5, calling for an assistance programme, so as to have the Assembly address the request to the Secretary-General in co-operation with the High Commissioner, rather than just to the High Commissioner, as in the original version.

Swaziland, speaking in the Third Committee for the four host countries, said the projects described in the Secretary-General's report were only a beginning; once built or expanded, facilities would have to be maintained, and support far exceeding the amounts estimated in the report would be needed.

United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa

Activities of the Fund

The United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa made seven grants totalling $2,025,000 in 1980, under a mandate from the General Assembly<sup>23</sup> authorizing it to make financial contributions to help persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa and Namibia, as well as refugees from those countries. The funds were to be used for legal aid, relief, education and other assistance to such persons and, in some cases, to their families. Recipients of grants were voluntary organizations, Governments of host countries of South African refugees and other bodies.

The Fund's mandate also extended to Southern Rhodesia. However, in his annual report on the Fund to the General Assembly, dated 9 October, the Secretary-General noted that, with the accession of Zimbabwe to independence in April 1980, the release of political prisoners and the cessation of persecution of persons under repressive and discriminatory legislation, the Fund was no longer required to provide relief and assistance in that country.

According to the report, the total amount of grants provided by the Fund since its inception rose to $10,469,170, and its income—entirely from voluntary contributions—increased to $11,408,585, leaving a balance of $939,415 as of 30 September.

The Committee of Trustees of the Fund, in a report annexed to the Secretary-General's report, said it was satisfied that direct contributions from Governments and the public, supplemented by grants from the Fund, had enabled voluntary agencies to provide legal assistance in almost all cases to persons persecuted under so-called security legislation and modest grants to needy dependants—mostly women and children—of persons detained, imprisoned or restricted under such legislation. But the contributions were hardly adequate to cover persons persecuted under other racially discriminatory laws. Very limited assistance could be provided to workers subjected to discrimination and victimization resulting from apartheid in the labour market.

Remarking that repression continued to escalate in South Africa, the Committee said recent events had greatly increased the need for assistance. It expressed hope for increased contributions from States to the Fund and to voluntary agencies.

Contributions received for the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa totalled $2,364,579 during the year ended 30 September 1980. They came from 37 countries and from public donations, as follows:

Action by the General Assembly

By resolution 35/206 R, adopted without vote on 16 December, the General Assembly expressed appreciation to the Fund's contributors and to the voluntary agencies aiding victims of apartheid and racial discrimination. The General Assembly appealed for generous and increased contributions to the Fund, and further appealed for direct contributions to the voluntary agencies concerned.

The resolution was sponsored by 41 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below for further details).

Introducing the text, Finland stated that, until apartheid was totally eradicated, the international community had to do whatever it could to alleviate the suffering caused by that policy and to assist the victims of apartheid.

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

During 1980, 590 persons from South Africa were studying in 20 countries on scholarships granted by the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, which the General Assembly established in 1967. Of the 590 recipients, 285 were studying in Africa, 159 in North America, 83 in Asia and 63 in Europe.

By resolution 35/30 of 11 November, the Assembly appealed for further contributions from States, organizations and individuals (see p. 295).

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/183 K of 24 January 1979 and 34/93 I of 12 December 1979, as well as Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/50 of 23 July 1980,

Reaffirming once again the special responsibility of the United Nations and the international community towards the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement,

Noting the great advance of the movement against apartheid and for national liberation and the rise in political consciousness of the oppressed people of South Africa,

Condemning the violence and repression practised by the apartheid regime against all opponents of apartheid.

Recognizing the need for increased humanitarian and educational assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa, as well as direct assistance to the liberation movements in their legitimate struggle,

1. Appeals to all States to provide humanitarian, educational, financial and other necessary assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement;

2. Urges the United Nations Development Programme and other agencies within the United Nations system to expand their assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and to the South African liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity, in consultation with the Special Committee against Apartheid;

3. Urges all agencies within the United Nations system to ensure the participation of the South African liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity in their relevant conferences and meetings, and to provide financial assistance for that purpose;

4. Decides to continue the authorization of adequate financial provision in the budget of the United Nations to enable the South African liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity—the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania—to maintain offices in New York in order to participate effectively in the deliberations of the Special Committee and other appropriate bodies.

A/35/714. Report of Third Committee, draft resolution V.

Resolution 35/184, as recommended by Third Committee, A/35/714, adopted without vote by Assembly on 15 December 1980, meeting 96.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 34/174 of 17 December 1979, in which it, inter alia, noted with concern the continued influx into Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia of student refugees from Namibia and South Africa and the urgent need to provide facilities for their care, health and education,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, the annex to which contains the findings of the review missions sent by him to Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia in May and June 1980 to examine the status of the programmes of assistance to student refugees in southern Africa,

Conscious of the responsibilities and obligations shared by the international community to assist the countries of asylum by providing financial and material assistance to enable them to cope with the influx of these student refugees,

Convinced that the discriminatory policies and repressive measures being applied in South Africa and Namibia will lead to a further exodus of student refugees from these countries,

Recognizing the need to strengthen the capacity of the countries of asylum to deal with any new emergency which may develop as a result of a sudden influx of student refugees from Namibia and South Africa,

Disturbed by the adverse effects which the application of apartheid, particularly the bantustan policy, is having on settled communities living in South Africa in areas bordering Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland, and by the consequent flight into those three countries of large numbers of families, including children of school age,

Aware of the problems confronting the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland created by the entry into their school systems of large numbers of children from the South African side of the border and their need to determine more precisely the number of children involved and the extent of the assistance required to relieve the Governments of this particular burden,

Recognizing the need to enable former student refugees from Zimbabwe to continue their education in neighbouring countries until alternative arrangements can be made for their education in their own country,

1. Endorses the assessments and recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General and commends him and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on their efforts to mobilize resources and organize the programme of assistance to student refugees in the host countries of southern Africa;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia for the assistance which they are giving to the student refugees and for the extent of co-operation which they have extended to the Secretary-General and to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on matters concerning the welfare of these refugees;

3. Notes with satisfaction the financial and material support provided for the student refugee programmes by Member States, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, other bodies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

4. Decides to make provision in the student refugee programme for former student refugees from Zimbabwe until they complete their studies in the country of asylum or until alternative arrangements can be made for the completion of their education in their own country;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to organize and implement an effective programme of educational and other appropriate assistance for student refugees from Namibia and South Africa who have taken asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia;

6. Urges all Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute generously to the assistance programmes for these students, through financial support of the regular programmes of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and of the projects identified in the report of the Secretary-General;

7. Appeals to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Food Programme, the World Bank and the United Nations Children's Fund, as well as other international and non-governmental bodies, to provide humanitarian and development assistance to expedite the resettlement and integration of refugee families from South Africa who have been given asylum in Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland;

8. Call upon all agencies and programmes of the United Nations system to co-operate with the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in the implementation of humanitarian programmes of assistance for the student refugees in southern Africa;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to continue to keep the matter under review and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1981, of the current status of the programmes, and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Resolution 35/206 R, as proposed by 41 powers, A/35/L.33 and Add.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 December 1980, meeting 98.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, to which is annexed the report of the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa,

Gravely concerned at the continued and increased repression of opponents of apartheid and racial discrimination in South Africa and the institution of numerous trials under arbitrary security legislation, as well as continued repression in Namibia,

Reaffirming that increased humanitarian assistance by the international community to those persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa and Namibia is appropriate and essential,

Recognizing that increased contributions to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies concerned are necessary to enable them to meet the increased needs for humanitarian and legal assistance,

1. Commends the Secretary-General and the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa for their efforts to promote humanitarian and legal assistance to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa and Namibia, as well as assistance to their families and to refugees from South Africa;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments, organizations and individuals that have contributed to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies engaged in rendering humanitarian and legal assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination;

3. Appeals for generous and increased contributions to the Trust Fund;

4. Further appeals for direct contributions to the voluntary agencies engaged in assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination in South Africa and Namibia.

Work programme of the Special Committee against Apartheid

By resolution 35/206 P—adopted on 16 December 1980 by a recorded vote of 141 to 0, with 5 abstentions—the General Assembly authorized the Special Committee against Apartheid to participate in and co-sponsor conferences, send representatives to meetings of United Nations bodies, commission studies, hold sessions away from United Nations Headquarters in New York, and send missions to Member States and intergovernmental organizations to promote action against apartheid. It requested the Committee to devote special attention in 1981 to promoting campaigns for the total isolation of the South African racist regime, promoting increased assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movement, monitoring the implementation of resolutions on apartheid and exposing collaboration with South Africa. It decided to make a special annual allocation of $150,000 from the United Nations regular budget for 1980-1981 for such special projects as aid to anti-apartheid meetings, assistance to enable liberation movements to participate in such meetings, promotion of anti-apartheid days and campaigns, and expert studies.

Sixty-five States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) sponsored this resolution, which was introduced by Senegal.

The United States, explaining its abstention, opposed authorization of United Nations financial assistance to enable national liberation movements to participate in conferences and seminars. France also abstained on grounds of budgetary policy.

Japan voted affirmatively but said it could not support some objectives of the resolution or some recent practices of the Committee. The Netherlands also voted in favour but voiced reservations on that aspect of the Committee's programme aimed at the total isolation of South Africa. The United States said isolating South Africa ran counter to its policy.

Situation in Southern Rhodesia

The situation in Southern Rhodesia as a colonial territory of the United Kingdom, which had engaged the attention of the United Nations for nearly two decades, was finally resolved during 1980 with the international recognition of an independent Zimbabwe, followed by its admission to the United Nations.

In December 1979, the Lancaster House agreement had been reached in London, providing for a constitutional settlement and the transition of the territory to independence under majority rule. Accordingly, on 21 December 1979, the Security Council had terminated the sanctions previously imposed against the illegal regime there, and also dissolved the Committee that had supervised their implementation.<sup>24</sup> The Council met in January/February 1980 at the request of the African group of Member States at the United Nations, which was concerned at what it termed gross violations of the Lancaster House agreement by the United Kingdom. Following discussion, the Council adopted resolution 463(1980) on 2 February, by which it called on all parties to comply with the agreement and called on the United Kingdom to create conditions for a free and fair election and thereby avert the danger of the collapse of the constitutional agreement.

The machinery for transition to majority rule was put into operation and the first general election under the principle of universal suffrage took place in Southern Rhodesia from 27 to 29 February. The former territory of Southern Rhodesia became the sovereign independent State of Zimbabwe at midnight on 17/18 April and was admitted to the United Nations on 25 August (see p. 460).

Consideration by the Security Council

Report of the Committee on sanctions

On 15 January 1980, the twelfth and final report of the Security Council Committee Established in pursuance of Resolution 253(1968)<sup>25</sup> concerning the question of Southern Rhodesia was issued. The report, which the Committee had adopted on 20 December 1979, covered the Committee's work from 16 December 1978 to 15 December 1979. The Committee had held 31 meetings during that period, while its two working groups—on cases and on the manual of documentation and procedures—had held a total of four meetings.

The Committee reported that it had continued consideration of 53 cases of suspected violations of the Council's sanctions, already mentioned in its previous reports, as well as 10 new cases. It had decided that 13 cases should be closed. Also, it had prepared a special report which it had submitted to the Council on 4 May 1979, in which it had made specific recommendations for improving the effectiveness of the existing sanctions and for widening their scope.<sup>26</sup>

Appended to the chapter detailing the Committee's work were: the report of its Working Group on the Manual of Documentation and Procedures for goods originating in southern Africa, which the Committee had noted without taking further action; a summary of portions of a report on sanctions prepared by the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity (OAU); a summary of portions of a report by the OAU Standing Committee on Sanctions; and a cumulative list of individuals and non-governmental organizations from which the Committee had received communications.

The supply to Southern Rhodesia of oil and oil products and of military aircraft and other military equipment were the subjects of separate chapters in the report. The Committee also gave an account of other aspects of sanctions, namely: actions by Governments to implement sanctions; consular and other representation in Southern Rhodesia and representation of the illegal regime abroad; airlines operating to and from Southern Rhodesia; and immigration and tourism.

The report concluded by stating that, in view of the Council's December 1979 decision to lift the sanctions and dissolve the Committee, all outstanding or pending matters relating to the Committee's work were suspended indefinitely.

Volume II of the Committee's final report, issued in July 1980, contained four annexes, giving details on: cases carried over from previous reports and new cases; the import of chrome, nickel and other materials from Southern Rhodesia into the United States; cases of transactions reflected in foreign trade figures submitted by reporting Governments; and cases opened on the basis of information supplied by individuals and non-governmental organizations.

Communications (January-1 February)

By a letter of 25 January 1980, Malawi, as current Chairman of the African group at the United Nations, transmitted the text of a resolution on Southern Rhodesia adopted by the OAU Co-ordinating Committee for the Liberation of Africa at its thirty-fourth session (Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania, 21-25 January). By this resolution, the Committee called on the United Kingdom to comply with and implement fully and impartially the Lancaster House agreement, create conditions for a free and fair election, release all political prisoners in Southern Rhodesia, allow all Zimbabwe exiles to return home, and ensure the immediate and complete withdrawal of South African troops as well as all mercenaries serving with the Rhodesian security forces. The Committee also requested the African group to call for a meeting of the Security Council to consider the situation in Southern Rhodesia.

By letters dated 31 January and 1 February, statements expressing concern at the activities of forces formerly under the authority of the illegal regime and at the presence of South African forces in Southern Rhodesia were transmitted to the Council by Cuba, as Chairman of the group of non-aligned countries in the United Nations, and by Lesotho, respectively. The message transmitted by Cuba was from the Cuban President, Chairman of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries. It said that, contrary to the Lancaster House agreement, troops of the Patriotic Front of Zimbabwe were being encircled by the forces of their racist enemies. The statement by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Lesotho, dated 31 January, said that the presence of South African forces and mercenaries in Southern Rhodesia constituted the most serious breach of the agreement. Both statements charged the British Government with not living up to the agreement.

Meetings of the Security Council (30 January-2 February)

As requested by the African group, the Security Council considered the situation in Southern Rhodesia at five meetings held between 30 January and 2 February 1980. The representatives of Algeria, Botswana, Cuba, Egypt, Ghana, Kenya, Liberia, Malawi, Mozambique, Nigeria, Somalia, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia and Zaire were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. At the request of the Niger, Tunisia and Zambia, invitations were also extended to Tirivafi J. Kangai and Callistus Ndlovu, of the Patriotic Front of Zimbabwe, and to Johnstone F. Makatini of the African National Congress of South Africa.

Opening the debate, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Liberia, in a statement on behalf of the Chairman of OAU, warned that a breakdown of the constitutional agreement reached in London would defeat the peaceful achievement of self-determination in Southern Rhodesia and lead to the resumption of the war of liberation, thereby endangering international peace. Serious violations of that agreement were occurring. In particular, up to 6,000 South African soldiers and policemen were deployed in various parts of the territory, contrary to the understanding that had induced the Patriotic Front to enter into a cease-fire agreement. To ensure the free participation of all Zimbabweans in the planned elections, he called on the United Kingdom to expel South African troops and all mercenaries from Southern Rhodesia, confine Southern Rhodesian security and auxiliary forces to their bases, release all political prisoners and allow all Zimbabwe exiles to return home without threat, intimidation or arrest.

The United Kingdom representative rejected the claim in the African group's letter of 25 January that his Government had violated the Lancaster House agreement and denied that the situation was deteriorating. There had been serious breaches of the agreement, but they had not been committed by the United Kingdom. Complaints of breaches had come from all parties, and the machinery to investigate them was operating satisfactorily, with the co-operation of all concerned.

With regard to the presence of South African security forces in Southern Rhodesia, he said that a small force of South African troops had been deployed to protect a vital lifeline—the Beit Bridge, over the Limpopo River, linking Rhodesia with South Africa—but they were too few to affect the elections, and in any case they had been withdrawn on 30 January. Addressing other aspects of the African group's complaint, he said he assumed the charge that Patriotic Front troops had been killed and harassed was based on an incident at Lupane, for which the Cease-fire Commission had held forces of the Zimbabwe Revolutionary People's Army responsible. The United Kingdom Governor had had to renew the state of emergency and maintain martial law because of the lawlessness and violence in the country. There were no political prisoners, and refugees were already returning from neighbouring countries, though some practical problems had arisen. As to the charge that the Governor had refused to accord equal treatment to the Patriotic Front, the fact that he had been accused of bias by all sides could be viewed as proof of his impartiality. The United Kingdom was committed to do all it could to ensure proper conditions for fair and free elections leading to independence.

The representatives of the Patriotic Front emphasized the complaints raised in the OAU resolution of 25 January. They particularly objected to the presence of South African troops in Southern Rhodesia, whom they estimated to number at least 6,000. Contrary to the claims of the United Kingdom representative, they said, the South African forces were not confined to the Beit Bridge area; some were in the Rhodesian Army and others had been employed as mercenaries since the unilateral declaration of independence in 1965. They suggested that the withdrawal of South African forces be verified by an international body.

They also urged the disbanding of the so-called auxiliary forces in Southern Rhodesia, which they charged with terrorizing civilians and attempting to coerce them into supporting Bishop Abel Muzorewa, partner with former rebel leader Ian Smith in the illegal regime that had been in power in Salisbury until the British Governor assumed his functions in December 1979. In addition, they said that the Southern Rhodesian security forces, which included the auxiliaries and mercenaries, should be confined to their bases and the responsibility of monitoring the cease-fire left to the Commonwealth forces.

The representative of Cuba, speaking on behalf of the group of non-aligned countries, echoed the complaints voiced by the African speakers and declared that the British Government had failed to establish a climate appropriate to the holding of free and fair elections in Zimbabwe. He urged the Council to condemn the illegal activities of the South African Government in Southern Rhodesia and to demand the withdrawal of all South African forces. He also appealed to the Council to declare that the international community would not recognize any government or institution that was not the free and sovereign choice of the people of Zimbabwe. Viet Nam and Yugoslavia supported the points made by Cuba.

A number of other States supported in the Council the complaints raised by OAU. These included Malawi, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia. They stressed in particular that the United Kingdom must enforce the Lancaster House agreement impartially so that fair and free elections would be possible, and that South African soldiers must be withdrawn immediately. Ghana suggested that sanctions might be necessary to deal with South Africa's threats of intervention. Uganda thought that the British Governor should be replaced by a trustee who would command the confidence of all parties. Other calls for the United Kingdom to rectify the situation were made by Algeria, Bangladesh, Kenya, the Niger, Somalia, Tunisia and Yugoslavia. Nigeria saw the British role not as one of an impartial referee but as a leader who should take the initiative in creating a climate of reconciliation and normalcy.

China, which urged the United Kingdom to carry out the agreement fairly, stated that hegemonists from outside were seeking opportunities to infiltrate and expand their presence in the area. The German Democratic Republic, the USSR and Viet Nam warned that imperialistic circles continued to pursue the goal of imposing on Zimbabwe a colonial status so that they could maintain their economic and strategic interests. They supported the actions proposed by the African States.

Other speakers—including Egypt, Portugal and Zaire—expressed confidence that the United Kingdom would implement the Lancaster House agreement in good faith. Portugal added that the international community must avoid stressing divisions and suspicions, thereby rendering the situation even more dangerous.

Botswana was among those which commended the fact that the Patriotic Front had fulfilled its part of the agreement, despite insinuations that it did not want peace. Jamaica and Mexico voiced concern at the dangers of a breakdown followed by a return to warfare. In the view of the Philippines, the United Kingdom, which had traditionally been associated with one of the parties, must be above suspicion in its new role.

Following this debate, the Security Council, on 2 February, adopted resolution 463(1980) by 14 votes to 0. The United Kingdom did not participate in the vote. The resolution was sponsored by Bangladesh, Jamaica, Mexico, the Niger, the Philippines, Tunisia and Zambia.

By this resolution, the Council, reaffirming the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination, freedom and independence, called on all parties to comply with the Lancaster House agreement and called on the United Kingdom to ensure the full and impartial implementation of the agreement's letter and spirit. The Council also called on the United Kingdom, while noting its announcement that the South African troops had been withdrawn from the Beit Bridge, to ensure the immediate, complete and unconditional withdrawal of any other South African forces, regular or mercenary, from Southern Rhodesia.

The Council called on the United Kingdom to ensure that eligible Zimbabwe nationals would freely participate in the forthcoming elections. As steps to this end, it mentioned the speedy and unimpeded return of Zimbabwe exiles and refugees, the release of all political prisoners, strict compliance by all forces with the Lancaster House agreement, the confinement forthwith of the Rhodesian and auxiliary forces to their bases, equal treatment for all parties to the agreement, and the rescinding of all emergency measures and regulations inconsistent with the conduct of free and fair elections. The Council called on the United Kingdom to create conditions in Southern Rhodesia which would ensure free and fair elections, and thereby avert the danger of the collapse of the Lancaster House agreement, which could have serious consequences for international peace and security. It called on the United Kingdom to release any South African political prisoners, including captured freedom fighters, in Southern Rhodesia and to ensure their safe passage to any country of their choice.

The Council strongly condemned the racist regime in South Africa for interference in Southern Rhodesia's internal affairs. It called on all Member States to respect only the free and fair choice of the people of Zimbabwe. Finally, it decided to keep the situation under review until the territory attained full independence under genuine majority rule.

Speaking after the voting, the United Kingdom explained that it had not participated in the vote because it could not associate itself with attempts to reinterpret the agreement reached with all the main parties in Rhodesia. The United Kingdom would continue to apply the Lancaster House agreement.

France said that, while the Council had to take note of the complaints of the various parties, it would be dangerous for the parties to blame each other. The Council should encourage those who were working for peace in Southern Rhodesia. Although France had reservations on some of the language, it had voted for the resolution because it reflected an effort that should be properly appreciated.

Norway, Portugal and the United States expressed similar views, urging caution by the Council in a delicate situation. The United States added that, although it had voted for the resolution, it did not accept the charges of violations of the London agreement by the United Kingdom Government.

The USSR said that the United Kingdom had been unable to refute the allegations by the African countries. Although the resolution should have indicated more clearly who was responsible for the dangerous situation in Southern Rhodesia, the USSR had supported it in the hope that the demands expressed in it would help remedy the abnormal situation in the territory.

Further communications

By a letter dated 15 February 1980, Mali, as Chairman of the African group at the United Nations for that month, transmitted the text of a statement by the group in which it reiterated its commitment to the full implementation of the Lancaster House agreement and expressed dismay that the British Governor was taking an aggressive stance against one wing of the Patriotic Front, and demonstrating favouritism for the Muzorewa faction. The statement also listed a number of demands which the group believed the United Kingdom Government should fulfil in order to normalize the situation in Southern Rhodesia and ensure conditions favourable to free and fair elections.

By a letter dated 21 March, Mauritania, current Chairman of the African group, transmitted the text of a resolution adopted by the OAU Council of Ministers at its thirteenth extraordinary session (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 10-12 March). After taking note of the report of the OAU secretariat observer team on the elections in Southern Rhodesia held from 27 to 29 February, the Ministers endorsed the outcome of the elections and congratulated Prime Minister-designate Robert G. Mugabe and the Patriotic Front on their victory. The Ministers appealed to the international community, including the United Nations system, to provide all possible assistance to the new Government of Zimbabwe for its national reconstruction.

Decisions of the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council

Arrangements for the elections leading to independence for Southern Rhodesia were the subject of a resolution adopted by the Commission on Human Rights on 26 February 1980. By this resolution, the Commission affirmed that the purpose of the Lancaster House agreement was to enable the people of Zimbabwe to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence and to enjoy other rights that had been denied them by the minority regime in Salisbury. Calling on all parties to comply with the agreement, the Commission also called on the United Kingdom to implement it impartially and in strict compliance with its terms, and to ensure free and fair elections in which no political party was handicapped. It urged the international community not to recognize any institution set up in Zimbabwe which was not the direct outcome of free and fair elections. Finally, it demanded that South Africa be prevented from further meddling in Zimbabwe's affairs.

Southern Rhodesia was also dealt with in a resolution on the right to self-determination which the Commission adopted on 15 February. After reaffirming the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination, national independence, territorial integrity, national unity and sovereignty without external interference, the Commission requested the United Kingdom to guarantee free and fair elections in the territory, which would bring it to genuine independence acceptable to its people.

After the outcome of the elections was announced, the Commission, on 14 March, decided to send a telegram to Prime Minister-designate Mugabe, congratulating the people of Zimbabwe on their victory. Noting that it had always supported their just struggle for self-determination and independence, the Commission expressed best wishes for their further success and prosperity.

Another message, to the President of Zimbabwe, was sent by the Economic and Social Council, in accordance with decision 1980/112, adopted, without objection on 17 April, on an oral proposal by Ghana. Meeting to consider the matter of the United Nations Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1973-1983), the Council expressed satisfaction at the independence of Zimbabwe, to be celebrated on 18 April, and said that event marked a major step towards achievement of the Decade's objectives.

Consideration by the #### Special Committee on decolonization

On 18 April 1980, the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, present in Salisbury at the Government's invitation for the independence celebration of Zimbabwe, presented to Prime Minister Mugabe a letter of congratulations. He said in this letter that the event signified a victory for the people of Zimbabwe and represented the successful discharge of an important responsibility entrusted to the Committee by the General Assembly. The Chairman informed the Committee of this letter at a meeting on 16 May.

Assistance to Zimbabwe

As Zimbabwe achieved independence in April 1980, several United Nations bodies took action to mobilize international assistance for its reconstruction, in line with a call by the Security Council on 21 December 1979 addressed to all United Nations Member States and specialized agencies.<sup>27</sup>

The Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) decided on 14 February 1980 on an indicative planning figure of $5.6 million for Zimbabwe for the remainder of the 1977-1981 planning cycle, representing the prospective amount of UNDP assistance during that period.

The Commission on Human Settlements was among the first United Nations bodies to act on the needs of Zimbabwe following its independence. Meeting in Mexico City, the Commission adopted a resolution on 15 May by which it requested the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements to hold discussions with Zimbabwe with a view to helping it generate capital from international funding agencies for the construction and improvement of human settlements, assess training requirements, and set up structures to improve conditions in settlements. United Nations organizations were invited to help Zimbabwe meet its development needs, and the Commission appealed to States to provide funds and material and technical assistance to the projects arising from such discussions. The Executive Director was asked to report on the matter at the Commission's next session.

Report of the Secretary-General

Between 19 May and 1 June, a mission sent by the Secretary-General in pursuance of the Security Council's December 1979 resolution visited Zimbabwe to consult with the Government on its reconstruction requirements and on the international assistance required to help the country overcome its economic and social difficulties. In its report, which was annexed to a report to the Council by the Secretary-General dated 25 August, the mission described the economic and financial position of the country after years of fighting and a long period of international isolation brought about by economic sanctions adopted in 1965<sup>28</sup> in response to the unilateral declaration of independence of the illegal regime.

In its report the mission described the difficult and complex development problems facing the new State. The rural sector was particularly depressed, having been subjected to widespread dislocation by the war. The Government was projecting a balance-of-payments deficit on current account of over $150 million for 1980, and was facing a gross deficit of $750 million on its financial operations for the fiscal year 1980/1981.

It was estimated that $350 million would be needed to rebuild railways and restore rolling stock, $225 million to reconstruct rural roads, and $165 million for agriculture and animal health. There were also substantial needs in human health and telecommunications. The mission estimated that, over the next three to five years, Zimbabwe would require at least $1.1 billion for its major short-term reconstruction and development requirements.

With regard to the relief, repatriation and resettlement of refugees and displaced persons, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees had drawn up an assistance programme in consultation with the Government. Returnees, internal rural displaced persons and urban squatters, estimated to exceed 1 million, required many forms of assistance.

An international appeal for funds had been launched on 13 April, seeking $110 million for non-food items and approximately $30 million in food aid for the immediate programme. The international response had been encouraging, with contributions totalling $102.1 million having been provided or pledged. However, little food aid had been provided.

The mission's report described the assistance in individual sectors and listed a number of projects recommended in each sector for the guidance of prospective donors.

Decision by the General Assembly

On 26 August 1980, the day after Zimbabwe was admitted to membership in the United Nations, Prime Minister Robert G. Mugabe, ad-addressing the eleventh special session of the General Assembly, devoted to international economic co-operation, appealed for international support in the massive reconstruction programme facing his country, the cost of which he estimated at $4 billion over the first five years. On 29 September, during the general debate at the Assembly's 1980 regular session, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Zimbabwe described the nation's reconstruction, resettlement and economic restructuring plans aimed at correcting the legacy of colonialism and war. In a letter to the Secretary-General of 29 October, Zimbabwe requested that the matter of assistance to that country be brought to the Assembly's attention as a further step in mobilizing international assistance.

Subsequently, in connexion with its consideration of special economic and disaster relief assistance, the Assembly adopted on 5 December, without vote, resolution 35/100, on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. The Second Committee had approved the text, as sponsored by 57 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), on 19 November, also without vote.

By this resolution, the Assembly endorsed fully the assessments and recommendations in the Secretary-General's report. It appealed to Member States and organizations to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Zimbabwe, and appealed for contributions to a special United Nations account set up to channel funds to Zimbabwe. It requested the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize resources, to keep the situation under review, and to report to the Assembly in 1981 while keeping the Economic and Social Council apprised of the status of the special economic assistance programme for Zimbabwe.

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

Zimbabwean students held 556 scholarships in 1980 from the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa. They were for study in 24 countries: 333 scholarships in Africa, 150 in North America, 44 in Europe and 29 in Asia. Between 1 October 1979 and 30 September 1980, 2,050 applications were received from Zimbabweans, 110 new awards were granted and 446 former awards were extended.

When the General Assembly reviewed the Programme at its 1980 session, it decided, by resolution 35/30 of 11 November, that Zimbabweans should continue to be granted scholarships for one year after independence (18 April 1980) and that awards to Zimbabwean students already sponsored should continue until they completed the courses for which the awards had been granted. These were the recommendations of the Programme's Advisory Committee, which had also agreed that some of the new awards could be used for study within Zimbabwe. (For further details on the Programme, see p. 294.)

Assistance to student refugees

Zimbabweans were also being aided in 1980 under the United Nations programme of assistance to southern African student refugees. The Assembly had decided in December 1979 to extend this programme, formerly limited to South Africans, to include the care, health, education and other needs of student refugees from Zimbabwe and Namibia.<sup>29</sup>

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1980/158 of 23 July, took note of an oral report on the programme made on 21 July by the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes. In a written report, dated 12 September and based on the findings of a mission to the area, the Secretary-General stated that, although a substantial number of Zimbabwean students had returned home following the independence settlement in their country, a few had remained in host countries to complete their studies. Zambia, where the largest number of such refugees were located, had agreed to permit Zimbabwean students at Solwezi and Chikumbi, sites of two educational and agricultural centres for youth being aided by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to remain in Zambia until adequate educational facilities were set up in Zimbabwe.

The General Assembly, after reviewing this programme at its 1980 session, decided, by resolution 35/184 of 15 December, to make provision in the student refugee programme for former student refugees from Zimbabwe until they completed their studies in the country of asylum or until alternative arrangements could be made to complete their education at home. (For further details, see p. 238.)

Concerned at the numerous violations of the terms of the Lancaster House agreement, Reaffirming the need for strict compliance with the terms of paragraph 7 of resolution 460(1979), which called upon the administering Power to ensure that no South African or other external forces, regular or mercenary, would remain in or enter Southern Rhodesia, except those forces provided for under the Lancaster House agreement,

The General Assembly,
Noting the statement made before the General Assembly at its eleventh special session, on 26 August 1980, by the Prime Minister of Zimbabwe, in which he outlined his Government's economic development priorities and invited the international community to render assistance in dealing with serious economic and social problems in Zimbabwe, and having heard the statement made before the Assembly by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Zimbabwe, on 29 September 1980, in which he described the serious economic and social problems facing his country,

Recalling Security Council resolution 460(1979) of 21 December 1979, in which the Council called upon the international community to provide urgent assistance for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Zimbabwe,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General of 25 August 1980 on assistance to Zimbabwe,

Stressing the necessity for major programmes for reconstruction and rehabilitation of both rural and urban areas in Zimbabwe and the fact that the country inherited at independence an obsolete and worn-out infrastructure, showing obvious signs of lack of repair and maintenance,

Noting the heavy burden of resettling returning refugees and displaced people in Zimbabwe,

Also noting the significant role which an independent and economically strong Zimbabwe can play in the economic development of the southern African region,

Deeply concerned, however, that the assistance so far provided or pledged by the international community falls far short of the amount needed for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Zimbabwe,

1. Endorses fully the assessments and recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General and draws the attention of the international community to the requirements for assistance to carry out the projects and programmes identified in that report;

2. Appeals to Member States, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental bodies to provide effective and continuous financial, material and technical assistance to Zimbabwe to help that country to overcome its financial and economic difficulties;

3. Appeals to the international community to contribute to the special account which was established by the Secretary-General for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to Zimbabwe;

4. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Zimbabwe and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 August 1981;

5. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist Zimbabwe;

6. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Zimbabwe;

(b) To ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the mobilization of international assistance for Zimbabwe;

(c) To keep the situation in Zimbabwe under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, regional and other intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies and international financial institutions concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1981, of the current status of the special economic assistance programme for Zimbabwe;

(d) To arrange for a review of the progress made in organizing and implementing the assistance programme for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session;

7. Expresses its appreciation to those States and organizations that have provided assistance to Zimbabwe in response to the appeals by the Security Council and the Secretary-General;

8. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for co-ordinating a programme for the return to Zimbabwe and resettlement of refugees and displaced people.

Question of Namibia

Discussions between United Nations officials and the South African Government continued in 1980 on ways to implement the plan approved by the Security Council in 1978<sup>30</sup> for a settlement of the problem of Namibia through United Nations-supervised elections leading to independence for the territory. At the same time, United Nations bodies reiterated their demands for South Africa to end its occupation of Namibia, regarded by the United Nations as illegal since the General Assembly, in 1966, terminated the League of Nations Mandate and transferred direct responsibility for the territory to the United Nations.<sup>31</sup>

The Secretary-General made two reports to the Security Council on the results of consultations with South Africa and with other African States directly concerned, including the front-line States. In the first report, dated 31 March, he described inconclusive talks on the status of a demilitarized zone which, under the 1978 plan, would be set up along the northern border of Namibia. In the second report, dated 24 November, he proposed that a multi-party meeting be held in January 1981 to resolve difficulties so that implementation of the plan could begin in March. In the period between these reports, South Africa sought and received clarifications in regard to the demilitarized zone but, in letters to the Secretary-General, it continued to question the impartiality of the United Nations with respect to Namibia.

The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples adopted a statement on 21 August in which it recommended that the Security Council consider imposing comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa to secure its early compliance with Council decisions. The Committee rejected and denounced all manoeuvres by South Africa to legalize its puppet regime in Namibia, and called on all States to withhold recognition from any so-called representatives of such a régime.

The United Nations Council for Namibia sent six missions of consultation to Governments during the year to discuss measures and initiatives to obtain the withdrawal of the illegal South African administration from Namibia. It also held hearings on Namibian uranium in July, on the basis of which it concluded that the testimony of witnesses had established the intensive and extensive involvement of some States—particularly Western European States—and their corporations in the extraction, processing, transport and sale of the territory's uranium. Such activities, it held, were illegal and contributed to South Africa's development of nuclear capability.

The Council for Namibia proposed several draft resolutions for adoption by the General Assembly, one of which contained a call for Security Council consideration of the imposition of sanctions. The Assembly put off consideration of these proposals to a resumed part of its 1980 session, in March 1981.

A detailed summary of these developments begins on p. 1102.

Complaint by Angola against South Africa

Following a series of letters from Angola complaining of armed attacks by South African forces across the Angolan border with Namibia throughout the first half of 1980, the Security Council met in June to consider a complaint of a large-scale assault which, Angola charged, had left 370 people dead. The Council, on 27 June (resolution 475(1980)), strongly condemned South Africa for its invasions of Angola, demanded the withdrawal of its forces, called for the payment of compensation and decided to consider adopting more effective measures in the event of further violations.

Communications (February-May)

By a letter dated 19 February 1980, Angola transmitted to the President of the Security Council the text of a communique issued by its Ministry of Defence, stating that in January South African forces had carried out aerial reconnaissance missions over the towns of Ruacana, Cahama, Xangongo and N'giva, and had attacked moving vehicles in Cunene province. It gave details of 44 incursions by South African forces from 1 to 29 January.

By a letter of 31 March, Angola transmitted the text of a communique issued by the Office of Presidential Security concerning military action by South Africa against Angola during February and up to 10 March, including penetration of Angolan territory from Namibia and aerial bombardments. Among the incidents reported was the bombing on 22 February of a civilian vehicle on the N'giva-Nehone road by two South African aircraft, leaving eight dead and 10 wounded and destroying the vehicle.

By a letter of 7 May, Angola transmitted the text of a statement issued by its Ministry of Defence on the deterioration of the situation in southern Angola. It stated that since the beginning of March, South African aircraft had been constantly bombarding all types of vehicular traffic on the roads in Cunene province with the aim of disrupting supply lines to the local population. South African aircraft had also made reconnaissance flights along the Moçâmedes coast, and since 15 March there had been a strong concentration of mechanized South African troops on the border between Cunene province and Namibia.

By a letter of 22 May, Angola transmitted the text of a communique issued by its Defence Ministry outlining military actions carried out by South Africa against Angola from 10 March to 28 April. These included an increase in the number of flights over Angolan territory in the provinces of Cunene, Huila, Moçâmedes and Cuando-Cubango, and bombings and strafings which had resulted in more than 12 deaths and injury to 38 persons.

By a note verbale dated 28 May, Angola transmitted the text of a communique issued by its Defence Ministry detailing two aerial and ground assaults by South African forces. In the first of these, on 12 May, an airborne attack against the hamlet of Chiede, in Cunene province, was said to have resulted in 60 civilians killed and 19 wounded, and the abduction of families into Namibia. On 21 May, 200 troops and civilians had been lost in a ground assault, supported from the air, against Savate, in Cuando-Cubango province.

Consideration by the Security Council (26 and 27 June)

On 26 June, Angola requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council in connexion with the question of South African aggression against Angola. South Africa, it stated, had made Angola a target of constant raids, bombings, invasions and armed aggression, violating its sovereignty and territorial integrity and resulting in the deaths of thousands of patriots. About eight battalions of the South African armed forces were inside Angola at that time.

By a letter of 27 June, South Africa transmitted to the Council President a letter of the same date from its Minister for Foreign Affairs and Information, stating that South Africa favoured dialogue as a means of resolving differences but that, in the case of Angola, that aim had been severely hampered by the continuing acts of violence perpetrated from Angolan territory by the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO). On the day before, the South African Government had drawn the attention of the Secretary-General to SWAPO terrorist activities involving the deaths of 46 civilians, the abduction of 71 schoolchildren and the wounding of 35 civilians between March and May. Furthermore, civil war and instability had prevailed in southern Angola for some five years.

South Africa, the letter stated, emphatically rejected the accusation that it had committed aggression against Angola. The border problems were the direct result of SWAPO activity. The Angolan authorities knew that any action by South African security forces was aimed solely at SWAPO and not at Angola. Only a small combat team with some air support had been involved in such action, and casualties involved only SWAPO personnel or persons involved with SWAPO activities. At no time had South Africa directed operations against civilians and at no time had it acted against Angola, except on 23 June when, in the course of action against SWAPO, a grounded South African helicopter pilot, acting in self-defence, had killed several Angolan soldiers.

The letter added that the combat team engaged in the operation against SWAPO had commenced its return to base some days previously, advance elements having crossed the Namibian border on 26 June. The withdrawal would be completed within a day or two.

By a letter of 27 June, Angola transmitted details of attacks said to have been carried out by South Africa against Angola in June, including an attack on 7 June by six Mirage jet aircraft on a Namibian refugee camp 16 kilometres east of Lubango, in which three of them had been shot down and 12 Namibians killed. It was stated that since 23 June a South African armed forces brigade had been inside Angola in an attack which had left 370 people dead (mainly old men, women and children), 255 people wounded, vehicles, bridges and houses destroyed, most of the livestock in the area killed, and roads mined.

The Security Council met on 26 and 27 June to consider the complaint by Angola against South Africa.

On 27 June, following a debate, the Council adopted resolution 475(1980) by 12 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions (France, United Kingdom, United States). The text was sponsored by Bangladesh, Jamaica, Mexico, the Niger, the Philippines, Tunisia and Zambia.

The Council, by this resolution, strongly condemned the racist régime of South Africa for its premeditated, persistent and sustained armed invasions of Angola, which constituted a flagrant violation of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of that country as well as a serious threat to international peace and security. It also strongly condemned South Africa's use of the international territory of Namibia as a spring-board for armed invasions and destabilization of Angola. The Council demanded that South Africa withdraw forthwith all its military forces from Angola, cease all violations of Angola's airspace, and scrupulously respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola. It called on all States to implement fully the arms embargo imposed by the Council against South Africa in 1977,<sup>32</sup> and requested United Nations Member States urgently to extend all necessary assistance to Angola and the other front-line States, in order to strengthen their defence capacities in the face of South Africa's acts of aggression. It called for the payment of full and adequate compensation to Angola by South Africa for the damage to life and property resulting from those acts of aggression. Finally, the Council decided to meet again in the event of further South African violations of Angola's sovereignty and territorial integrity, to consider the adoption of more effective measures in accordance with the appropriate provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, including Chapter VII.<sup>33</sup>

In introducing this resolution, Zambia said that while stronger measures could have been wished, the text was based on consultations and relied on language used previously by the Council.

For the discussion which preceded the adoption of this resolution, the representatives of Algeria, Angola, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Cuba, Guinea, India, Madagascar, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Romania and Yugoslavia were invited, at their request, to participate without the right to vote.

With the consent of the Council, the President also extended invitations, under rule 39 of its provisional rules of procedure,<sup>34</sup> to: the Acting President and the delegation of the United Nations Council for Namibia, at the Acting President's request; Clovis Maksoud, Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States to the United Nations, as requested by Tunisia; and Theo-Ben Gurirab, Permanent Observer of SWAPO to the United Nations, as requested by the Niger, Tunisia and Zambia.

The representative of Angola described the human and material loss suffered by Angola as a result of the latest South African attack, as outlined in its letter of 27 June. He repeated that a motorized infantry brigade had been on Angolan territory since 23 June and he gave details of the locations of the three infantry and two paratroop battalions. The South African action, he said, showed what sort of South African participation could be expected in United Nations efforts for the independence of Namibia. It was South Africa's warning to the Angolan commitment to liberation, self-determination, majority rule and revolutionary path of national development. Only total sanctions against South Africa could make it realize the need for change and thereby avert a holocaust.

The representative of Mozambique, Chairman of the African group of States at the United Nations for the month of June, said that South Africa had given shelter, arms and military training to the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA), in the service of imperialism against African liberation. The armed aggression against Angola was directed at all peoples seeking a just and peaceful solution to the Namibian problem. He called on the Council to condemn South Africa in the strongest possible terms and demand the unconditional withdrawal of all its military forces from Angola. Similar calls were made by Botswana, Cuba (on behalf of the countries of the Non-Aligned Movement), France, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, India, Jamaica, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan (on behalf of the member countries of the Organization of the Islamic Conference), the Philippines, Romania, Tunisia and Zambia, and by the United Nations Council for Namibia. The Niger also urged vigorous action by the Security Council against South Africa.

The USSR said that Pretoria, by its continual armed attacks, was trying to subvert social and economic reform in Angola and hamper its development along its chosen path. It was using UNITA in activities aimed at subverting the Angolan Government. Its true plans for Namibia had been demonstrated by its acts of aggression against Angola. Its defiant behaviour was explained by the support given it by the United States and certain other countries of the North

<sup>34</sup>Rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

Atlantic Treaty Organization. The Council should not merely condemn South Africa's aggression and demand its withdrawal but should envisage the adoption of effective measures under Chapter VII of the Charter to put an end to such actions.

Similar calls for consideration of enforcement action under Chapter VII were made by Benin, Cuba (on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement), the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, India, Jamaica, Pakistan (on behalf of the Islamic Conference), Tunisia and Yugoslavia. Bangladesh and Nicaragua also urged the consideration of further appropriate measures, while Algeria said the Council should respond appropriately to the aggressive behaviour of the Pretoria regime.

China said the intensified armed invasions of Angola, Zambia and other front-line States were a component of South Africa's criminal scheme to sustain its illegal occupation of Namibia by weakening and stamping out the armed struggle of the Namibian people and coercing the front-line States into ending their support for that struggle. The Council should strongly condemn the South African authorities for their military invasion of Angola and demand that they put an end to their acts of aggression, withdraw forthwith all their invading forces, ensure against the recurrence of such incidents and compensate Angola for its losses.

Calls for compensation to Angola were also made by Cuba (on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement), the German Democratic Republic, Nigeria, the Philippines and Romania.

Benin remarked that the imperialist powers holding the veto right had rendered the Council ineffective in such situations. The Western powers did not raise a finger against the slaughter committed by South Africa, for their vital interests were served by such acts. The action contemplated by the Council was another useless piece of paper which had nothing to do with the serious events it had met to discuss.

In Madagascar's view, the cavalier attitude of South Africa was the result of a political context in which it had no lack of allies to ensure it impunity and encourage it to persevere in its reprehensible policy.

Brazil said it was naïve to expect a State based on the abhorrent policies of apartheid to relinquish expansionist and aggressive policies; apartheid must be terminated.

Botswana, Mexico and Nigeria appealed for implementation of the arms embargo against South Africa.

Portugal said that the climate of violence in southern Africa must be eliminated and all aggressive acts across international borders must cease forthwith. It appealed to South Africa to withdraw its forces immediately from Angolan soil and refrain from such action against Angola, in full respect for its territorial integrity.

Norway, stating that the Council must strongly condemn South Africa's attack, said further South African aggression against Angola or any other front-line States would raise the most serious doubts as to South Africa's willingness to seek a peaceful solution in Namibia. Norway would vote in favour of the resolution before the Council but reiterated its past reservations concerning the contents of paragraph 5, by which the Council would request Member States to assist Angola and other front-line States in order to strengthen their defence capacities.

The United States said that South Africa's attack on Angola, launched from Namibia across an internationally recognized border, and its continued military presence in Angola were wrong. By its behaviour, South Africa was reinforcing the doubts of those who were sceptical about whether a negotiated solution to the problem of Namibia was truly possible. The United States condemned South Africa's disrespect for the principle of mutual respect for territorial integrity and called for an end to the cycle of violence rooted in South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia, to be achieved through a comprehensive settlement.

The United Kingdom regretted the loss of life and property in Angola. It could not in any way condone the actions of the South African armed forces and it condemned the resort to violence. However, by seeking a solution to the future of Namibia, the Western countries, with the front-line States, were doing what they could to excise the problem at its roots. The United Kingdom could not support the draft resolution before the Council and would not regard it as a determination in the technical sense of Chapter VII of the Charter.

France reaffirmed its disapproval of the military actions undertaken by South Africa against its neighbours. The direct cause of the troubled situation in southern Africa was the maintenance in Namibia of an unjustified South African presence and the refusal to recognize the people's right to self-determination. However, while France joined in the condemnation of the attack against Angola and was convinced of the need to end such attacks, it could not vote for the resolution because some of the language might be interpreted in different ways and its implications might give rise to serious difficulties.

The Acting President of the United Nations Council for Namibia said that Council expected the Security Council strongly to condemn the South African régime for its premeditated, persistent and sustained armed invasions of Angola, to take measures to ensure prompt and total withdrawal of all South African troops from Angola, and to prevent further acts of aggression by South Africa against any neighbouring State. The Security Council, in so doing, must bear in mind that it must act to fulfil its commitment to the Namibian people by implementing its resolutions on the withdrawal of the illegal South African administration from Namibia.

Mr. Gurirab, of SWAPO, said future generations of Namibians would not forget Angola's sufferings and sacrifices. His organization was convinced that Angola's support would remain unswerving. The Council should do more than condemn; it should assist the front-line States.

Subsequent communications (June-July)

In a letter dated 30 June 1980, Angola stated that South African forces continued to occupy Angolan territory, despite Security Council resolution 475(1980). Angola appealed to the international community to effect immediate South African withdrawal from Angola.

In a letter also dated 30 June, South Africa stated that its troops had completed their withdrawal and that there were, therefore, no troops in Angola.

In a letter of 2 July, Angola stated that the intensity and volume of South African military actions in Angola had not diminished. A statement by the Ministry of Defence annexed to Angola's letter gave details of incursions by South Africa into Angola from 24 to 29 June which, it was stated, had resulted in the deaths of 22 civilians and 29 soldiers, dozens of injuries and the destruction of three vehicles. According to the statement, as of 30 June, South African troops had enlarged their area of operations and increased their numbers, attacking the village of M'pupa in Cuando-Cubango province, 60 kilometres inside Angola.

By a letter of 4 September, Angola transmitted the text of a communiqué issued by its Ministry of Defence giving details of South African attacks between 26 and 29 August, said to have resulted in 31 deaths.

The Security Council,

Having considered the request by the Permanent Representative of Angola contained in document S/14022, in which he requested the convening of an urgent meeting of the Security Council,

Having heard the statement of the Permanent Representative of Angola,

447(1979) and 454(1979), by which it, inter alia, condemned Recalling its resolutions 387(1976), 428(1978), South Africa's aggression against the People's Republic of Angola and demanded that South Africa scrupulously respect the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the People's Republic of Angola,

Gravely concerned at the escalation of hostile, unprovoked and persistent acts of aggression and sustained armed invasions committed by the racist régime of South Africa in violation of the sovereignty, airspace and territorial integrity of the People's Republic of Angola,

Convinced that the intensity and timing of these acts of armed invasion are intended to frustrate efforts at negotiated settlements in southern Africa, particularly in regard to the implementation of Security Council resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978),

Grieved at the tragic loss in human life, mainly that of civilians, and concerned about the damage and destruction of property, including bridges and livestock, resulting from the escalated acts of aggression and armed incursions by the racist regime of South Africa against the People's Republic of Angola,

Gravely concerned that these wanton acts of aggression by South Africa form a consistent and sustained pattern of violations aimed at weakening the unrelenting support given by the front-line States to the movements for freedom and national liberation of the peoples of Namibia and South Africa,

Conscious of the need to take effective measures to maintain international peace and security,

1. Strongly condemns the racist régime of South Africa for its premeditated, persistent and sustained armed invasions of the People's Republic of Angola, which constitute a flagrant violation of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of that country as well as a serious threat to international peace and security;

2. Strongly condemns a/s South Africa's utilization of the international Territory of Namibia as a spring-board for armed invasions and destabilization of the People's Republic of Angola:

3. Demands that South Africa should withdraw forthwith all its military forces from the territory of the People's Republic of Angola, cease all violations of Angola's airspace and, henceforth, scrupulously respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the People's Republic of Angola:

7. Decides to meet again in the event of further acts of violation of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the People's Republic of Angola by the South African racist régime, in order to consider the adoption of more effective measures in accordance with the appropriate provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, including Chapter VII thereof;

8. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Complaint by Benin

Between October and December 1980, the Secretary-General received three communications from Benin and one from Togo relating to the complaint by Benin, first brought to the Security Council in 1977,<sup>35</sup> that mercenaries had attacked its capital city of Cotonou in an airborne assault on 16 January 1977.

By a letter dated 8 October 1980, Benin transmitted copies of the periodical Historia, No. 406 bis, containing two articles which, Benin stated, had information about the act of aggression committed against it in 1977. One of those articles was entitled "Bob Denard, 20 years as a mercenary," by Alain Leluc; the other was "Benin, the dismal failure of a daring raid," by Véronique Vucher-Bondet. In connexion with Benin's communication, the Permanent Mission of Togo to the United Nations, in a note transmitted by a note verbale of 4 December, rejected allegations made in the second article and reiterated that

Togo had not participated in any way in the mercenary operations against Benin. Benin, in an annex to a letter of 19 December, denied that it had been Benin's intention, as stated in the Togolese note, to take advantage of the criminal operation of 1977 in order capriciously to discredit sister countries.

In a letter of 13 October, the Minister for Foreign Affairs and Co-operation of Benin stated that the response by the international community to the Security Council's 1977 resolution appealing for assistance to repair the damage caused by the aggression<sup>36</sup> had not met Benin's expectations. Benin requested the exploration, at the 1980 regular session of the General Assembly, of ways of implementing the Council's resolution. (For information on assistance to Benin, see p. 268.)

Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte

In response to a request by the General Assembly in December 1979,<sup>37</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Assembly dated 10 October 1980 on the question of the Comorian island of Mayotte. The report contained information from the Permanent Mission of France to the United Nations, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Co-operation of the Comoros and the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity (OAU).

The report gave the text of an aide-mémoire from France delivered to the Secretary-General on 23 June, describing developments in Franco-Comorian relations since December 1979. These included talks at the ministerial level in the capitals of both countries (Paris, 11-13 December 1979; Moroni, 9-11 April 1980) to examine the status of the problems between them, and the promulgation by the French President, on 22 December 1979, of an act establishing a five-year deadline for consulting the people of Mayotte on the status to be applied to the territory.

The report also reproduced a note verbale of 24 April 1980 from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Co-operation of the Comoros, giving an account of the high-level talks and adding that they had resulted in agreement on economic, social and political measures which could lead to the gradual integration of Mayotte into the Comorian body politic. The measures were aimed at developing airports, ports and shipping links, harmonizing tariffs, developing communications and facilitating the free movement of persons within the archipelago.

The report also included the text of a resolution on the question of Mayotte adopted in June by the OAU Council of Ministers at Freetown, Sierra Leone. By this resolution, the OAU Council reaffirmed the sovereignty of the Comoros over Mayotte, called on France to accelerate the return of Mayotte to the Comoros, and requested the OAU Committee of Seven, which was charged with the question, to meet at Moroni before the June 1981 session of the OAU Council to review with the Comorian Government measures likely to speed a peaceful settlement.

The Secretary-General stated that he had informed the parties of his readiness to continue his efforts in favour of a settlement.

On 28 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 35/43—introduced by the Comoros and sponsored by 27 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below)—by a recorded vote of 100 to 1, with 26 abstentions.

By this resolution, the Assembly: reaffirmed the sovereignty of the Comoros over the island of Mayotte; invited the Governments of the Comoros and France to continue their talks with a view to finding a just solution in conformity with United Nations resolutions; and welcomed the OAU initiative to convene its Committee of Seven at Moroni to discuss measures to speed a settlement. It requested the United Nations

Secretary-General to follow developments, in conjunction with the OAU Secretary-General, and to report at the 1981 session of the Assembly.

In the Assembly's debate preceding adoption of the resolution, the Foreign Minister of the Comoros reiterated his country's argument that Mayotte had been an integral part of the Comoros up to the 1975 proclamation of Comorian independence, and that his country would not surrender its elementary right to exercise sovereignty over the whole of its territory, including Mayotte. The Comoros had chosen the path of negotiation with France and, to establish a favourable framework for the reintegration of Mayotte, it had adopted a federal Constitution which, while respecting the unity of the Republic, gave each island administrative autonomy.

The representative of France repeated his country's contention that the inclusion of this question in the Assembly's agenda was an interference in France's internal affairs. The people of Mayotte had opted to remain French and France had respected their choice. Mayotte had been granted special status by French laws of 24 December 1976 and 22 December 1979, without closing the door on any future possibilities. Meanwhile, France remained ready to seek grounds for understanding with the Comoros, as recent events had shown. For example, visas had been abolished for the movement of persons between the islands of the archipelago. France would not be bound by any decisions adopted under the item and would vote against the resolution.

Singapore and Zaire, and Senegal speaking as Chairman of the African group of Member States at the United Nations for November, expressed the wish for continued negotiations between the parties. Senegal added that it was the United Nations duty to help OAU find a settlement.

Australia explained that its abstention in the vote did not affect its long-standing view that colonial territories should be brought to independence based on unity and territorial integrity.

The question was also referred to in resolution 35/35 A of 14 November, on the importance of universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination. By this resolution, the Assembly took note of the contacts between the Comorian and French Governments in the search for a just solution to the integration of the Comorian island of Mayotte into the Comoros in accordance with United Nations and OAU resolutions. (See p. 837.)

Relations between Lesotho and South Africa

Border situation

In a letter to the Secretary-General dated 11 January 1980, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Lesotho said his Government had learned with surprise of a contention by South Africa, stated in a letter of 7 December 1979 to the Secretary-General,<sup>38</sup> that 250 refugees from Lesotho had recently entered South Africa. During the three weeks prior to the South African letter, Lesotho had protested to South Africa following acts of sabotage and murder in Lesotho perpetrated by armed bandits. The situation should be observed by an unbiased observer, such as the representative in Lesotho of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

By letters of 22 January and 4 February, South Africa transmitted letters of the same dates from its Minister for Foreign Affairs in response to the charge by Lesotho. In his first letter, the Foreign Minister said that South Africa would not allow its territory to be used as a spring-board for subversive forces. In his second letter, he said 706 refugees from Lesotho were being cared for at the expense of the South African Government, and it would be appreciated if the High Commissioner were requested to attend to the situation urgently.

Detention of Victor Matioiu

After consultation with members of the Security Council, the Council President, on 13 March 1980, sent the following message to the South African Government regarding that Government's seizure and continued detention of Victor Matlou, identified by the Government of Lesotho as an official of the African National Congress of South Africa:

The Security Council has learned with profound concern that South African authorities seized and continue to keep in detention Mr. Victor Matlou, an international passenger on Lesotho Airways en route from Swaziland to Maseru, Lesotho.

According to information available to the Security Council, on 12 December 1979, Mr. Matlou, who is a South African refugee, boarded a Lesotho Airways International Flight No. 351 from Maputo, Mozambique, via Swaziland to Maseru. Because of bad weather conditions at Maseru, the plane landed with permission at Bloemfontein, South Africa. All passengers, including Mr. Matlou, were transferred from the plane to a bus to be transported to Maseru. At the border post the South African Police seized Mr. Matlou at gunpoint.

All efforts to get Mr. Matlou released have so far failed to produce the desired results. The efforts of the Lesotho Government and appeals from third parties have not succeeded in obtaining the release of Mr. Matlou. The Security Council understands that the South African authorities intend to put Mr. Matlou on trial under the "Terrorism Act" of South Africa.

I therefore make an urgent appeal, on behalf of the Security Council, to the South African authorities to take full account of the particular circumstances of this case, to release Mr. Matlou immediately and unconditionally and to allow him to leave the country.

I also urge South Africa to facilitate the maintenance of airline communications between Lesotho, a land-locked country, and the rest of the world.

In a letter to the Council President dated 28 March, South Africa responded that in arresting Zinjiva Winston Nkondo, alias Victor Matlou, South Africa had acted entirely in accordance with international law. Nevertheless, in a spirit of good neighbourliness, South Africa was discussing the issue with Lesotho.

In letters of 14 May to the Council President and the Secretary-General, Lesotho reported that the issue had been peacefully resolved and that Mr. Matlou had been handed over to the Lesotho authorities on that day. The successful resolution of the matter had reaffirmed Lesotho's right of transit through South Africa and primarily the right to fly over South African territory on scheduled international flights.

By a letter dated 29 May to the Secretary-General, South Africa transmitted the text of a note which its Department of Foreign Affairs and Information had addressed to the Lesotho Ministry of Foreign Affairs on 28 May, stating that there was no rule of customary public international law nor any provision in a convention or treaty which dictated that South Africa had erred when it arrested and detained Mr. Nkondo.

Relations between the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Egypt

By a note verbale dated 19 June 1980, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted to the President of the Security Council a letter from the Libyan Secretary for Foreign Affairs stating that Egypt had affirmed its aggressive intentions against the Libyan people by declaring a state of emergency and massing its forces along the Egyptian-Libyan border. An annexed statement by the Libyan Secretariat of Foreign Affairs said the Egyptian actions were equivalent to a declaration of war.

Referring to this communication, Egypt, in a letter dated 3 July, stated that it had declared a state of emergency along the border as a precautionary measure to foil attempts by Libyan agents to infiltrate into Egypt. The letter added that the measures were confined to Egyptian territory.

On 1 August, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted the text of a statement dated 28 July by its Secretariat of Foreign Affairs complaining of terror and spying missions by the United States in Libyan airspace, stating that the Council should act to put an end to that aggression before it was too late, and charging that Egypt had become an instrument for carrying out United States aggressive plans against the Libyan people.

In reply, Egypt stated, in a letter dated 11 August, that the tension in the border area between the two countries was a direct result of a hostile and aggressive policy against Egypt and warned that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya would be held responsible for any further deterioration in the situation.

On 28 November, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted a letter of 24 November from its Secretariat of Foreign Affairs charging that United States Rapid Deployment Force exercises in Egypt between 16 and 22 November were directed primarily against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and had violated its airspace and territorial waters.

Malagasy islands in the Indian Ocean

By resolution 35/123 of 11 December 1980, the General Assembly reaffirmed a 1979 resolution<sup>39</sup> by which it had invited France to initiate negotiations without delay with Madagascar for the reintegration of the islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India, which the Assembly stated had been arbitrarily separated from Madagascar.

In a response to the Assembly's request in the 1979 resolution for follow-up and report, the Secretary-General addressed communications to the Governments of France and Madagascar on 1 May 1980, inviting them to inform him of any developments in the matter since December 1979.

Reporting on 27 October 1980 on the information supplied in response to his request, the Secretary-General said Madagascar had informed him that no developments in the attitude of the French Government had been noted, while France had reaffirmed the statements made on the subject in the Assembly, its General Committee and its Special Political Committee in 1979.<sup>40</sup> Madagascar had also sent to the Secretary-General the text of a resolution adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-fifth session (Freetown, Sierra Leone, 18-28 June) by which the Council had reaffirmed that the islands were an integral part of Madagascar, urged France to negotiate for their reintegration, called on France to revoke and refrain from measures hindering negotiations, and called on the African group of Member States at the United Nations to follow the matter in the Assembly.

Addressing the Special Political Committee in November, Madagascar recalled its position that the islands in question were natural dependencies of Madagascar, that they had not been terrae nullius when France took possession of them in 1892 and 1896, and that France had recognized the islands as part of the Malagasy State in 1958. The problem had arisen when France arbitrarily and unilaterally separated the islands from Madagascar just as that country was about to accede to independence. In its efforts to secure the return of the islands, Madagascar had repeatedly shown its desire for a negotiated settlement, but France, despite the Assembly's 1979 directive, had not given any precise indication of its intentions.

Algeria, Benin, Cuba, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Seychelles-all sponsors of a resolution on the subject submitted by 29 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below)-supported the position of Madagascar and urged France to negotiate on the matter.

France reiterated its position that it did not recognize the Assembly's competence in the matter. The territories under discussion had been part of the French Republic since the nineteenth century, when they were uninhabited. The French had taken over the islands in accordance with international law and without the slightest protest from the international community. The Malagasy Government had taken note of that situation on 2 April 1960, at the time of the conclusion of the first series of co-operation agreements with France. Consequently, inclusion of the item in the agenda represented interference in France's internal affairs, and France would vote against the resolution and would not recognize the Assembly's recommendations.

Morocco, which also voted against the resolution, said that the problem concerned other States in the region, including the Comoros. If the Committee supported Madagascar's arguments it could be faced in the near future with a dispute between neighbouring States.

Following the vote in Committee, the Comoros stated that it had abstained because it did not consider itself bound by any resolution concerning the Glorieuses islands. The Comoros reserved the right to reopen the question of those islands at a later date.

The Assembly adopted the 29-nation text as resolution 35/123 by a recorded vote of 81 to 13, with 37 abstentions. It was introduced in the Special Political Committee by the United Republic of Tanzania and was approved on 25 November by a recorded vote of 83 to 13, with 32 abstentions.

By this resolution, the Assembly invited France to initiate negotiations with Madagascar as a matter of urgency to settle the question in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, and requested the Secretary-General to monitor the implementation of the resolution and report to the Assembly in 1981.

Complaint by Mozambique against South Africa

By a note verbale dated 25 February 1980, Mozambique transmitted a message of 21 February to the Secretary-General from its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, stating that South Africa had massed military contingents along Mozambique's border, systematically violated its airspace and territory, and threatened to use force against Mozambique wherever and whenever it considered it necessary.

Also attached were an exchange of notes between the Department of Foreign Affairs and Information of South Africa and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Mozambique. South Africa, in a note of 19 February, warned that, unless Mozambique took steps to terminate the acts of terrorists who, South Africa said, were operating from Mozambique and carrying out sabotage against South Africa, that country would be obliged to take whatever steps were necessary to protect life and property. Mozambique, in its reply, denied that there were military bases on its territory used as a spring-board for attacks against South Africa, and stated that the South African Government was deliberately creating situations of tension and seeking a pretext to carry out military aggression against neighbouring countries.

Complaints by Zambia

Separate complaints by Zambia against South Africa and Southern Rhodesia were before the Security Council in 1980. Following a charge by Zambia that South African troops had repeatedly crossed into its territory from Namibia to kill and harass Zambian citizens, the Security Council, by resolution 466(1980) of 11 April, condemned South Africa for acts in violation of Zambia's sovereignty and territorial integrity, demanded the withdrawal of its forces from Zambia, and warned that it would consider further action in the event of further armed incursions. In connexion with an earlier Zambian complaint of damage caused by Southern Rhodesian troops, a Committee of the Council reported on 31 January that States and organizations had pledged sufficient funds to repair 11 bridges but that Zambia continued to require outside aid.

Complaint against South Africa

By a letter of 8 April 1980, Zambia requested the President of the Security Council urgently to convene a meeting of the Council to take effective measures to compel the South African regime to desist from committing aggression against Zambia and to respect its sovereignty and territorial integrity. It stated that South African occupation troops in Namibia were repeatedly crossing into Zambia to commit acts of intimidation, harassment, torture and destruction of life and property, and that South African fighter aircraft were daily violating Zambian airspace. Zambia accredited to the Council a special delegation led by Reuben C. Kamanga, Chairman of the Political and Legal Committee of the United National Independence Party.

By a letter of 10 April to the Council President, South Africa transmitted a letter of the same date from its Minister for Foreign Affairs and Information. He stated that existing channels of communication, arising from a policy of South African co-operation with Zambia, would provide the means of settling bilaterally matters of alleged concern to Zambia. Zambia accommodated on its territory elements hostile to South Africa and Namibia and engaged in subversion, sabotage and terrorism. A situation of instability existed along Namibia's borders with Zambia and Angola because of the presence of armed terrorists of the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO) who were allowed to attack Namibia from bases in those countries. More than 800 such incidents had been brought to the Secretary-General's attention during the past 18 months.

South Africa remained responsible for the peace and security of Namibia, its Foreign Minister continued, and had no alternative but to take protective action against aggression committed from Zambian soil. Its actions were aimed solely at the elements committing aggression and not against the countries concerned or their citizens. Zambia must bear full responsibility for allowing terrorist elements to establish sanctuaries in and operate from its territory, and it was Zambia which should stand accused before the Council. He urged the Council to adopt a resolution advising Zambia to concentrate on uplifting of its people rather than to engage in confrontation with South Africa.

The Council held three meetings on the complaint by Zambia, on 10 and 11 April. It invited the representatives of Algeria, Angola, Cuba, Guyana, India, Liberia, Mauritius, Nigeria, the United Arab Emirates, Yugoslavia and Zaire, at their request, to participate without vote in the discussion.

The representative of Zambia said his country had come to the Council to complain about persistent and escalating South African aggression against Zambia. As a result, economic and social development programmes in the area had come to a virtual standstill, and the supply of food and medicine had been adversely affected. He listed a series of what he called South African acts of aggression against Zambia since January 1980, including troop incursions and bombings in which six persons had been killed and 13 wounded. He said that hundreds of South African troops were still on Zambian soil. South African strategy seemed to be aimed at provoking an international conflict through aggression against Zambia and Angola, thereby hoping to obscure its illegal occupation of Namibia and to buy time for its apartheid policies.

Zambia called on the Council to condemn

South Africa for its continued, intensified and unprovoked aggression against Zambia, demand that South Africa withdraw all its military forces from Zambia and cease all violations of its airspace, and warn South Africa that, in the event of any further aggression against Zambia, the Council would meet to take enforcement measures against it under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.<sup>41</sup>

All speakers voiced support for the complaint by Zambia. China expressed firm support for Zambia's just struggle to safeguard its independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, and supported all measures taken by Zambia to counter South African aggression. The Niger said it was urgent to comfort the courageous people of Zambia and sustain them in their aid to Namibia and SWAPO.

Most participants stressed the need for action by the Council to put an end to such incidents. Algeria urged the Council to apply binding sanctions against South Africa to halt its repeated aggression against Zambia. Liberia stated that the Council bore a responsibility under the Charter to compel South Africa to desist from aggression against Zambia, which could threaten international peace unless it was stopped. Nigeria suggested that the Council impose a total embargo on the supply of crude oil and oil products to South Africa. Speaking for the Arab group of Member States at the United Nations, the United Arab Emirates said the Council should seriously study the possibility of applying measures under Chapter VII of the Charter with a view to forcing South Africa to abandon its policies of apartheid and aggression. In Yugoslavia's view, South Africa's behaviour called for a proper and energetic response from the United Nations, which was confronted with an open challenge.

Most speakers commented on the link between South Africa's policy with regard to Namibia and its attacks on neighbouring countries. Angola, speaking on behalf of the front-line States, said that both Angola and Zambia were being repeatedly punished by Pretoria for daring to support the struggle against imperialism and apartheid in southern Africa. Cuba, speaking for the members of the Non-Aligned Movement, said South Africa seemed to be carrying out systematic harassment and aggression in order to destabilize those States. Mauritius, speaking for the African group at the United Nations, said any attempt by South Africa to coerce Zambia or any other front-line State into abandoning its support for SWAPO should be condemned.

Making a similar point, Bangladesh stated that South Africa's actions against Zambia, Angola and the front-line States represented the last entrenched stand of the racists to preserve the anachronistic status quo of white supremacy and apartheid. India thought South Africa's actions should be viewed in the context of its attempts to revive the concept of a "constellation of States" in southern Africa, hinged on Pretoria and aimed at offering security for the racist minority rump in the region. Jamaica saw the tactics of intimidation through violence and terror against the front-line States as a sign of South Africa's determination to undermine United Nations efforts for self-determination and independence in Namibia. Until racism was eradicated, the Philippines said, the illegal occupation of Namibia could be expected to continue and the neighbouring countries could be expected to suffer continually from actions by the apartheid regime designed to destabilize them and to derail United Nations efforts in favour of self-determination for Namibia.

Observing that the victory of the Zimbabwe people had brought the winds of freedom that much closer to South Africa, Guyana said it was that vision which had produced the reaction of desperation manifested in the attacks against Zambia.

Among others which condemned South Africa's actions against Zambia, France said the South African attacks had seriously complicated the initiatives to settle peacefully the problem of Namibia; it appealed to all parties to display moderation and foster the creation of conditions for such a settlement. Norway said South Africa should learn a lesson from the peaceful settlement in Zimbabwe; continued aggression against neighbouring countries would seriously complicate the situation in the region. The United Kingdom deplored any escalation of violence in relation to Namibia, either there or in neighbouring countries, and said the best way to end the cycle of violence lay in the early implementation of the Council's plans for Namibia.

Expressing concern and distress at the flagrant violation of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of a State, Portugal urged South Africa not to persist in creating such situations. Describing South African military operations in Zambia as unjustifiable and a part of the spiralling cycle of violence rooted in its illegal occupation of Namibia, the United States urged restraint by both South Africa and SWAPO, and reaffirmed its efforts to achieve an internationally acceptable settlement in Namibia.

Some speakers blamed Western countries for encouraging South Africa's disregard for United Nations decisions. The German Democratic Republic said South Africa was able to scorn the vital interests of whole peoples only because it could rely on the comprehensive economic, political, military and nuclear co-operation of imperialist forces. In the view of the USSR, South Africa would not have been able to continue attacking independent African States for so long and with such impunity without the support of the West, primarily the United States, the United Kingdom and other members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Other speakers stressed the key role which they felt South Africa's suppliers and supporters could play in inducing it to alter its policies. Mexico, observing that South Africa continued to receive equipment which enabled it to bomb and invade defenceless countries such as Zambia, said all States must ensure observance of the Council's arms embargo against South Africa and must avoid any complicity in the violation of that embargo. Tunisia said it expected the regime's allies, besides expressing their unanimity in principle on a Council resolution, to contribute to an immediate withdrawal of the troops stationed in Zambia. Zaire appealed to South Africa's principal partners to do what they could to see to it that the crisis in southern Africa was brought to an end by peaceful means; otherwise, their continual support would serve only to increase African resentment.

On 11 April, the Security Council unanimously adopted, as resolution 466(1980), a text which had been prepared in the course of consultations among Council members. By this resolution, the Council strongly condemned the racist regime of South Africa for its continued, intensified and unprovoked acts against Zambia, which constituted a flagrant violation of Zambia's sovereignty and territorial integrity. It demanded that South Africa withdraw forthwith all its military forces from Zambia, cease all violations of Zambia's airspace, and scrupulously respect that country's sovereignty and territorial integrity. It solemnly warned South Africa that, in the event of any further armed incursions against Zambia, it would meet to consider further appropriate action under the Charter, including Chapter VII. It commended Zambia for exercising maximum restraint in the face of serious provocations repeatedly committed against it by South Africa.

Following the adoption of this resolution, the United Kingdom said it did not regard the text as a commitment to any particular course of future action in the Council. Both France and the United Kingdom welcomed the fact that the Council had been able to act unanimously.

By a letter of 15 April to the Secretary-General, Zambia transmitted information regarding incidents on 8 and 10 April in which, it said, two Zambian vehicles had hit landmines planted on Zambian territory by South African soldiers, killing at least eight persons.

Complaint against Southern Rhodesia

On 31 January 1980, the Security Council's Ad Hoc Committee Established under Resolution 455(1979),<sup>42</sup> concerning a complaint by Zambia against Southern Rhodesia, submitted its final report to the Council. By that resolution, the Council had condemned the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia for aggression against Zambia, had established the four-member Committee to assist it in implementing, in particular, provisions of the resolution calling for the payment of compensation by those responsible for the damage, and had called for international assistance to Zambia in rebuilding its infrastructure.

In its final report, the Committee stated that contributions by States and international organizations had reached 14,618,000 kwachas ($18,711,040), estimated by Zambian authorities as the cost of repairing 11 blown-up bridges. Nevertheless, despite that encouraging response to the Council's appeal, Zambia continued to need external assistance to facilitate reconstruction of its economic infrastructure.

The report gave an account of the Committee's visit to Zambia from 11 to 14 December 1979, during which it consulted with officials and visited six of the damaged rail and road bridges. It also listed contributions pledged by Austria, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the Commission of the European Community, in response to letters sent by the Secretary-General and the Committee Chairman, Per Aasen (Norway), to a number of States and intergovernmental organizations. One of these replies, a letter of 18 January 1980 to the Secretary-General from the Federal Republic of Germany, announced that a 40-ton pontoon ferry had been shipped by air to Zambia on 10 January and that the Federal Republic had offered to supply Zambia with several bridges.

The Committee's original reporting date- 15 December 1979-had been extended to 31 January 1980 at the Committee's request.<sup>43</sup> By a note of 22 January, the Council President stated that, following consultations among Council members, it had been agreed that, for the purpose of presentation of its report, the Committee would continue to be composed of Jamaica, Kuwait, Nigeria and Norway.

A special economic assistance programme for Zambia, called for by the General Assembly, was also under way during 1980 (see p. 273).

Emergency and special economic assistance programmes in Africa

The United Nations continued in 1980 to mobilize international assistance for a number of countries in special need of help, most of them in Africa. The General Assembly added three countries to the 1979 list of 13 African nations for which programmes of special economic assistance were being carried out by the Secretary-General in response to previous Assembly resolutions: Benin, by virtue of its special situation as one of the least developed countries and in view of damage caused by an attack led by mercenaries in 1977; the Central African Republic, whose economic and social infrastructure had been damaged under a regime overthrown in September 1979; and newly independent Zimbabwe.

Ten of the 13 African countries aided in 1979 continued to benefit in 1980 from special economic assistance programmes in response to a variety of economic difficulties: Botswana (damage in areas bordering Southern Rhodesia, vulnerability as a land-locked country, food shortage and an outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease); Cape Verde (inadequate infrastructure and drought); the Comoros (budget and balance-of-payments deficits); Djibouti (drought and refugees); Guinea-Bissau (financial and economic problems and crop failure); Lesotho (economic dependence on South Africa); Mozambique (effects of past sanctions against Southern Rhodesia, damage in areas bordering Southern Rhodesia and drought); Sao Tome and Principe (inadequate infrastructure); Seychelles (structural imbalance, dependence on tourism and imports); and Zambia (effects of past sanctions against Southern Rhodesia).

The three other countries-Chad, Equatorial Guinea and Uganda-as well as the Central African Republic, were the object of assistance for reconstruction, rehabilitation and development as an aftermath of civil strife and unsettled economic and social conditions. For Chad, the Assembly also called for emergency humanitarian assistance.

In addition, drought-stricken areas in Djibouti, Ethiopia, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda were being aided under related programmes, and the Sudano-Sahelian region was benefiting from a medium- and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme (see p. 968).

The Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) -after considering a report by the UNDP Administrator on implementation of the Assembly's 1979 requests for increased assistance to the 13 African countries-adopted a decision on 26 June 1980 by which it stated that it had responded appropriately by its action to ensure that the largest amount of programme resources for 1982-1986 were devoted to countries with a per capita gross national product of up to $500 a year and that additional resources were given to countries facing special difficulties.

On 21 July 1980, the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Coordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes made an oral report to the Economic and Social Council on the status of the programmes for the 13 African States. The Council took note of this report by decision 1950/158, adopted, without objection, on 23 July on an oral proposal by Nigeria.

To each of the countries involved in a previously established special economic assistance programme-except for Chad and Uganda, where local conditions did not permit-the Secretary-General sent review missions composed of officials from several United Nations organizations to survey the economic situation and the progress of the programme. The missions assessed the level of assistance-bilateral and multilateral-received by each country, described ongoing projects and, in many cases, detailed new projects proposed by the Government. The estimated cost of each project was given, for the information of potential donors. The missions' reports were annexed to a series of reports by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly, which had requested this information by resolutions adopted in December 1979.

The Secretary-General also submitted to the Assembly a report dated 7 October 1980 containing replies by specialized agencies and organs of the United Nations system giving an account of their activities for the countries involved in these programmes. The Assembly took note of this report on 5 December by decision 35/423, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved it similarly on 20 November on an oral proposal of its Chairman.

The Assembly also adopted on 5 December, without vote, a resolution on each of the countries concerned, except Seychelles, which had stated that it was not asking for a resolution in 1980. By these texts, which were approved without vote by the Second Committee, the Assembly appealed to United Nations Member States and intergovernmental bodies to assist the affected countries, and requested United Nations organizations and programmes to increase their assistance programmes, co-operate with the Secretary-General in organizing a programme for each country, and report to him periodically on what they had done and spent for that purpose. In most cases the agencies were asked to bring to the attention of their governing bodies the special needs of the countries concerned and report their decisions to the Secretary-General. Member States and international financial institutions were urged in most cases to contribute to the special accounts established by the United Nations to channel contributions to the affected Governments. For the programmes already established, the Secretary-General was asked to mobilize resources for financial, technical and material assistance. In all cases he was requested to report on progress to the Economic and Social Council in 1981, and to the Assembly.

By resolution 35/106, also adopted on 5 December 1980, the Assembly authorized a review by the Economic and Social Council of the economic situation of Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Sao Tome and Principe, and Seychelles with a view to their inclusion in the United Nations list of least developed countries (see p. 548). This action, in decision 1980/161 of 24 July, was taken at the Council's request.

By resolution 35/117 of 10 December, on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the Assembly called on Member States and organizations to participate actively in the United Nations special economic assistance programmes and to increase their assistance to African States affected by natural or other disasters. It requested the Secretary-General to co-ordinate with similar programmes organized by OAU. (See p. 292.)

Details follow on each of the special economic assistance programmes for African countries (other than Zimbabwe, dealt with earlier in this chapter-see p. 248).

Special economic assistance

Benin

In a letter to the Secretary-General dated 13 October 1980, the Minister for Foreign Affairs and Co-operation of Benin said his country's expectations had not been met by the international response to an appeal made by the Security Council in 1977<sup>14</sup> for assistance to help repair the damage caused by an attack by mercenaries against the capital city of Cotonou in January 1977. He requested that means of implementing the Council's resolution be explored at the 1980 regular session of the General Assembly.

The economic problems facing Benin were described by its representative to the Assembly's Second Committee on 4 November. The main problem was a decline in the volume of its commercial crops and the low world prices for agricultural products. Benin attributed the situation largely to the failure to correct the unequal relations between raw-materials producers and industrialized countries, to drought and desertification, and to the poor response to the Security Council's 1977 appeal.

On 5 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 35/88, by which it requested the establishment of an international assistance programme for Benin. The text was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, where it had been similarly approved on 19 November, on the basis of a draft sponsored by 63 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) and introduced by Algeria.

By this resolution, the Assembly appealed to Member States and organizations to provide assistance to help Benin overcome its financial and economic difficulties, requested United Nations organizations and programmes to increase their aid and co-operate with the Secretary-General in organizing an international assistance programme, and asked him to mobilize resources for such a programme to meet the country's specific economic and development needs.

Botswana

The mission sent by the Secretary-General to review the economic situation in Botswana reported, after its visit from 25 to 28 February 1980, that 12 of the 16 projects identified as required to meet the country's emergency and strategic needs had been completed since the United Nations special economic assistance programme began in 1977. It identified 13 additional projects, estimated to cost $34 million, aimed at rehabilitating and developing the border area with Zimbabwe following the political settlement there. The mission was sent in pursuance of December 1979 resolutions of the General

Assembly<sup>45</sup> and the Security Council<sup>46</sup> by which the Secretary-General had been asked to organize assistance and keep the situation under review.

The mission reported that work had begun on the four remaining projects from the existing programme. They concerned emergency railway operation, oil storage depots, tarring of the Botswana-Zambia road and airport construction. For its economic security, Botswana was planning a phased take-over of the railway line within Botswana previously operated by Rhodesia Railways. To provide a cushion against possible disruption of oil supplies, which moved overland through neighbouring South Africa, it needed to fill recently built storage tanks.

The proposed new projects were for: rehabilitation of farms, forests, fisheries and a game park near the border with Zimbabwe, which had been affected by fighting and uncertain security in recent years; eradication of an outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease, due largely to a breakdown in veterinary controls as a consequence of the security situation; and improvements in transport and communication links with Zimbabwe, following the resumption of normal relations. The largest projects were a $14.9 million scheme to renew railway track and a $10.4 million plan to engineer and surface the last link in a north-south road near the Zimbabwe border.

After examining this report, the General Assembly, on 5 December, adopted without vote resolution 35/98, on continued assistance to Botswana. The text-a draft introduced by Senegal on behalf of 45 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) - had been approved in the same manner by the Second Committee on 19 November.

By this resolution, the Assembly endorsed the revised assistance programme set out in the mission's report, drawing particular attention to the transport and communications, rehabilitation and drought-relief projects. It reiterated its appeal to States and organizations for assistance, including food aid, and requested the Secretary-General to continue mobilizing resources for Botswana and to arrange for a review of the programme in 1981.

Cape Verde

The economic and financial situation of Cape Verde remained serious in 1979, according to the mission sent by the Secretary-General from 2 to 6 March 1980 to review the progress of the special economic assistance programme for that country, initiated three years earlier. Irregular rainfall had led to a virtually complete failure of the cereal crop, creating a food deficit estimated at about 64,000 tonnes for 1980. The trade deficit had continued its steady increase, and the Government had been able to meet only 61 per cent of its 1979 investment target of $53.2 million.

The mission, sent in pursuance of a General Assembly request in December 1979 that the Secretary-General arrange for a review of the programme,<sup>47</sup> reported that only four of the 88 projects in the programme had been completed, 14 others were expected to be completed shortly and assistance had been promised for 36 projects, leaving 34 for which no aid had been pledged. The Government had assigned top priority to water and soil development, and the largest element in the programme related to the tapping of groundwater supplies and the construction of surface works for catchment and soil conservation. The prolonged drought and catastrophic fall in the production of food and fodder continued to make food aid essential.

After examining this report, and acting without a vote, the General Assembly, on 5 December, adopted resolution 35/104, on continued assistance to Cape Verde. The text had been approved in similar fashion by the Second Committee on 19 November, on the basis of a draft, revised by its sponsors and introduced by Senegal on behalf of 64 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

By this resolution, the Assembly endorsed the mission's assessment and recommendations, expressed concern that the international response had been insufficient, and reiterated its appeal to States and organizations to provide assistance for Cape Verde's accelerated development, as well as food and fodder. It requested the Secretary-General to continue mobilizing resources for this purpose, to keep the situation under review and to report again in 1981.

Comoros

The review mission sent to the Comoros by the Secretary-General from 21 to 28 March 1980 reported that the major single economic problem facing the Government continued to be its budget deficit, which had more than doubled from $6.5 million in 1979 to $13.3 million in 1980. The mission was informed that only $4.2 million of the $6.8 million needed for the Government's 1980 capital investment plans had been secured. The balance of trade continued to show a sizable deficit, attributed by the Government mainly to an increase in the cost of food imports.

Reviewing the $38 million United Nations-sponsored special economic assistance programme for the Comoros, the mission reported that 29 of the 39 projects had been fully funded and another seven had received partial funding, leaving three unimplemented. Remaining projects for which international assistance was needed included budgetary support, airport improvement and creation of a petroleum reserve. The mission was sent in pursuance of a 1979 request by the General Assembly that the Secretary-General arrange for a review of the country's economic situation and the aid programme.<sup>48</sup>

The Assembly, after considering this report, adopted without vote on 5 December resolution 35/97. The text had been approved by the Second Committee on 19 November, also without vote; the draft, introduced by Senegal, was revised and sponsored by 51 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

By this resolution, the Assembly, noting with concern that the assistance which the Comoros had received fell short of its urgent requirements, reiterated its appeal to Member States and organizations to provide aid to help the country overcome its financial and economic difficulties, in particular its budgetary and balance-of-payments deficits. The Secretary-General was requested to continue mobilizing resources for the programme and to review the situation for renewed consideration by the Assembly in 1981.

Djibouti

The mission sent by the Secretary-General to review the status of the special economic assistance programme for Djibouti reported, after a visit to that country from 19 to 25 July 1980, that despite depressed port activity and a persistent drought in the interior, Djibouti had experienced some development in the past two years, due in large part to international assistance. With the decline in the role of the port, brought about in part by the development of new and improved facilities elsewhere in the region, the Government was exploring programmes to diversify the economy. The drought had seriously reduced forage for livestock and was beginning to affect the availability of water in rural areas. Food and other assistance was needed for drought victims as well as for the large number of refugees who had entered the country.

The mission reported that a number of projects in the special economic assistance programme, including port and transport improvements, had been completed, and funding had been arranged for others, at a total cost of more than $68 million. However, some new projects had become urgent in order to reduce Djibouti's heavy dependence on its port, develop alternative employment opportunities and increase exports. At the same time, new investments in the port were needed to maintain it and improve its efficiency.

On 26 June, the UNDP Governing Council, after reviewing revised data on the country's gross national product, decided to increase the indicative planning figure of projected UNDP assistance for Djibouti from $905,000 to $2.2 million for the 1977-1981 planning cycle.

After receiving the results of the review of the special economic assistance programme, which it had requested in 1979,<sup>49</sup> the General Assembly, on 5 December 1980, adopted resolution 35/89 on assistance to Djibouti. The text, sponsored by 42 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) and introduced by Bangladesh, had been approved in the Second Committee on 19 November. Approval was without a vote in both cases.

By this resolution, the Assembly endorsed the assessment and recommendations in the mission's report. It drew attention to the critical economic situation confronting Djibouti and the assistance needed for drought victims and for projects submitted by the Government. It renewed its appeal for aid to Djibouti from Member States and organizations, and requested the Secretary-General to continue mobilizing resources and to review progress on the programme for consideration by the Assembly in 1981.

In addition to organizing the special economic assistance programme, the United Nations was involved in aiding refugees in Djibouti (see p. 934) and in helping its drought-stricken areas (see p. 970).

Guinea-Bissau

Rainfall in Guinea-Bissau was again inadequate in 1979, causing a poor harvest and large-scale import of cereals, according to the report of the mission sent to that country by the Secretary-General from 7 to 12 March 1980 to review the status of the United Nations special economic assistance programme. As a result, the country faced a food deficit of 46,000 tonnes for 1980. Both budget and balance-of-payments deficits also continued to be serious, with the budget deficit for 1979 expected to exceed $16 million. The Government would have to depend for some time on external sources for public capital expenditure and might even require foreign assistance for its recurrent expenditures.

The mission, sent in response to a December 1979 request by the General Assembly for a review of the situation,<sup>50</sup> reported that international assistance had fallen far short of Guinea-Bissau's needs. No progress had been made on 26 out of the 83 potential assistance projects reviewed by the mission. Guinea-Bissau required foreign assistance both to meet serious economic and financial problems and to cope with the serious food deficit.

On 5 December, the Assembly, after reviewing this report, adopted without vote resolution 35/95, on assistance to Guinea-Bissau. The Second Committee had approved the text on 19 November, also without vote; the draft, sponsored and revised by 68 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), was introduced by Senegal.

By this resolution, the Assembly endorsed the assessment and recommendations in the mission's report, called on Member States and organizations to respond to Guinea-Bissau's need for food aid, and renewed its appeal for assistance to help the country overcome its financial and economic difficulties and implement the projects identified in the mission's report. It requested the Secretary-General to continue mobilizing resources for this programme and to arrange for a review of progress for consideration by the Assembly in 1981.

Lesotho

The mission which the Secretary-General sent to Lesotho from 3 to 11 June 1980 to examine the economic situation and the progress of the United Nations special economic assistance programme reported that the country's gross national product had grown at an average annual rate of about 9 per cent in recent years, with the public sector and the construction industry making important contributions. Agricultural output had been declining, because of adverse weather conditions as well as the persistence of poor cultivation practices, overstocking and erosion. Lesotho was a land-locked country entirely surrounded by South Africa, and one of the objectives of the current five-year development plan (1980/81-1984/85) was to reduce its vulnerability to external economic and political pressures through sustainable economic growth and diversification.

The mission reported that, according to information from the Lesotho Government, the international community had provided or pledged $160 million under the special economic assistance programme, including $37 million during the year ended 31 May 1980. A number of small projects had been completed and many large ones had received substantial funds, including nearly $34 million to construct a national airport as well as other money for a satellite communications system, a flour mill (already in operation), food reserves and road-works. To lessen the country's dependence on South Africa, Lesotho had put forward new proposals for international assistance, involving roads, the wool industry, livestock marketing and small hydroelectric power plants in rural areas.

The General Assembly, after considering this review, carried out in pursuance of its 1979 request,<sup>51</sup> adopted without vote on 5 December 1980 resolution 35/96, on assistance to Lesotho. The text, sponsored by 22 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) and introduced by Senegal, was approved by the Second Committee on 19 November, also without vote.

By this resolution, the Assembly, endorsing the assessment in the mission's report, reiterated its appeal to Member States and organizations to assist Lesotho in the implementation of unfunded projects, and called on them to help Lesotho achieve greater self-sufficiency in food production, ensure an adequate and regular supply of oil, and develop its air and road transport systems. Recalling that a meeting of donors had been held in Lesotho from 5 to 9 November 1979, it urged Member States and organizations to provide assistance in accordance with the outcome of that meeting. Finally, it requested the Secretary-General to continue mobilizing resources for Lesotho, to report on the type of assistance Lesotho needed to absorb migrant workers returning from South Africa into its economy, and to arrange for a review of the situation and the special economic assistance programme before the 1981 Assembly session.

Mozambique

The mission sent by the Secretary-General to Mozambique from 8 to 17 February 1980, in pursuance of a 1979 request by the General Assembly,<sup>52</sup> reported that the country's economy had shown signs of improvement over the past two years but that there was still a critical shortage of foreign exchange and shortages of raw materials and spare parts for industry. Economic activity had been seriously disrupted by attacks from Southern Rhodesia in 1979. The value of exports had risen by 40 per cent in 1979 over 1978, but the Government had forecast a $66 million deficit in the 1980 budget and a $140 million balance-of-payments deficit. Mozambique had faced a serious maize shortage in 1979 as a result of drought and attacks from Southern Rhodesia, and a major drought in 1980 necessitated large imports of wheat, maize and rice.

About $113 million in international assistance had been paid or pledged during 1979, the mission reported. Food imports would have to be externally financed, and about $15 million for fertilizers would be required. To rehabilitate its economy, Mozambique would need nearly $127 million for ports, railways and airports, $2 million for telecommunications, $13 million to rehabilitate agriculture in border provinces, $4.5 million to repair petroleum facilities and generators, and $5 million to build food warehouses. Total rehabilitation and reconstruction needs were estimated at about $152 million in 1980.

By a letter to the Secretary-General dated 20 October, Mozambique transmitted an appeal of 29 August from its Government for international assistance to cope with the effects of the drought which, it said, had affected some 1.5 million people in six provinces, killing cattle, cutting food production by half and causing serious health problems. It asked for food, medicines, seeds, equipment and transport.

After considering the mission's report and Mozambique's appeal, the General Assembly, on 5 December, adopted resolution 35/99, on continued assistance to Mozambique. The text, revised by its sponsors, was approved by the Second Committee on 19 November; it was sponsored by 59 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) and introduced by Senegal. Approval in both cases was without a vote.

By this resolution, the Assembly, endorsing the assessment and major recommendations in the mission's report, called on Member States and organizations to assist Mozambique and asked all States to grant it the same treatment as that enjoyed by the least developed among the developing countries. It appealed specifically for external aid in foodstuffs and medicines, and technical co-operation for disaster preparedness and prevention. The Secretary-General was requested to continue mobilizing resources and to arrange for a review of the situation for consideration by the Assembly in 1981.

Australia and Sweden, the latter speaking on behalf of the Nordic countries, said they had joined in the consensus on this resolution on the understanding that established United Nations procedures must be followed- including review by the Committee for Development Planning- before a nation was granted the treatment of a least developed country. The Federal Republic of Germany and Japan, making a similar point, added that, with regard to their bilateral development assistance, they could apply the conditions granted to the least developed countries only to countries recognized by the United Nations as being in that category.

Sao Tome and Principe

Drought and a lack of adequate agricultural extension services made it impossible for Sao Tome and Principe to carry out in 1979 a campaign to produce food crops for the local market, according to the mission sent to the country by the Secretary-General from 23 to 28 February 1980. The mission, which reviewed the economic situation in the country and the progress of the United Nations special economic assistance programme, as requested by the General Assembly in 1979,<sup>53</sup> reported that Sao Tome and Principe would need to import 11,100 tonnes of essential foodstuffs in 1980 but that only 2,085 tonnes had been committed as of March.

The mission said that progress had been made on all but 12 of the 48 projects (one was withdrawn) recommended by a United Nations mission in 1978, at a total cost of more than $21 million.<sup>54</sup> The remaining projects called for aid in such areas as fisheries, food industries, aviation, shipping and ports, schools, a training institute, and vehicles for health and sanitation work.

On 26 June 1980, the UNDP Governing Council took note of an assurance given by the UNDP Administrator that a solution was being worked out with a view to upgrading UNDP's representation in Sao Tome and Principe by establishing a separate office in that country.

After receiving the report of the review mission, the General Assembly on 5 December adopted without vote resolution 35/93, on assistance to Sao Tome and Principe. It acted on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which had approved in similar fashion on 19 November- after it had been revised- a draft introduced by Senegal on behalf of 43 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

By this resolution, the Assembly, endorsing the mission's assessment and recommendations and expressing regret that the assistance provided had fallen far short of the country's needs, renewed its appeal to Member States and organizations for aid to enable Sao Tome and Principe to launch a development programme, and requested them to take special measures on the country's behalf until the Committee for Development Planning examined the situation. It requested the Secretary-General to continue mobilizing resources and to arrange for a review of the situation for consideration by the Assembly in 1981.

Seychelles

The mission sent by the Secretary-General to Seychelles from 31 March to 3 April 1980 to review the status of the United Nations special economic assistance programme, as requested by the General Assembly in 1979,<sup>55</sup> reported that the country had lost an estimated $22 million in development aid in 1980 due to political difficulties with its major traditional donors, France and the United Kingdom. Lacking any significant surplus in its budget, the Government had had to borrow for public investment purposes, raising net public debt from $8.6 million in 1978 to more than $16.7 million in 1979. The economy, particularly dependent on tourism, was extremely vulnerable to world inflation due to its heavy reliance on imports of food, manufactures, fuel and construction materials.

The mission also reported that, of a total of 33 projects identified in the special economic assistance programme, 24 had been fully or partially financed. An appendix to the mission's report described 23 of the 33 projects, including five of six new ones that had been proposed by the Government in 1979: a port-improvement feasibility study, a State abattoir, a new school, land settlement schemes and hospital improvement. The sixth, an ice-making plant, had been funded.

In a letter to the Secretary-General dated 11 November, Seychelles announced that, although it continued to require substantial assistance, it would not propose to the General Assembly in 1980 a resolution on the subject, as the annual passage of such texts had not resulted in an increase in aid. Instead, Seychelles invited the implementation of existing resolutions.

On 5 December, the Assembly, by decision 35/423, took note of the Secretary-General's report on assistance to Seychelles. The Second Committee approved this decision on 20 November, on an oral proposal by the Chairman. Both actions were taken without a vote.

Zambia

Zambia had successfully carried out an economic stabilization programme, reduced its external debt and moved its balance-of-payments position from deficit to an estimated $29.1 million surplus, according to the report of the mission sent to that country by the Secretary-General from 17 to 23 February 1980 to review the status of the United Nations special economic assistance programme, as requested by the General Assembly.<sup>56</sup> The Government expected an improvement in the economic situation and a larger balance-of-payments surplus in 1980. However, transport continued to be the major problem, as it would take a long time to repair damage caused by the fighting in and around neighbouring Southern Rhodesia, including the destruction of 11 bridges (see also p. 266). Zambia had also faced a severe maize shortage in 1979 as a result of drought and delays in the arrival of fertilizers, and the crop outlook for 1980 was unfavourable, necessitating the import of an estimated 209,000 tonnes of maize, externally financed.

Zambia would need some $375 million for reconstruction and rehabilitation to recover from the losses of recent years, the mission stated. Most of this would be for transport ($340 million), with additional sums needed for rehabilitation of border areas and for telecommunications. The Government had signed international assistance agreements totalling about $232.6 million in 1979.

After considering this report, the Assembly adopted without vote on 5 December 1980 resolution 35/94, on assistance to Zambia. Sponsored by 43 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) and introduced by Senegal, the resolution was approved in similar fashion by the Second Committee on 19 November, as revised by its sponsors.

By this resolution, the Assembly endorsed the mission's assessment and recommendations. Expressing concern that assistance had fallen far short of Zambia's needs, it appealed for urgent assistance to enable the country to reconstruct its transport system, rehabilitate its destroyed infrastructure, and clear land-mines and other remnants of war in the border areas. It also appealed for additional food aid, and called on Member States and organizations to provide aid in the form of grants wherever possible. The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees was requested to continue his humanitarian assistance programmes on behalf of refugees in Zambia, with help from the international community. Finally, the Secretary-General was asked to continue mobilizing resources and to arrange for a review of the situation for consideration at the 1981 Assembly session.

Assistance for reconstruction, rehabilitation and development

Central African Republic

In a statement during the general debate in the General Assembly on 9 October 1980, the Vice-Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Central African Republic, stating that his country had been ruined by 14 years of dictatorship and plunder, outlined steps towards economic and social recovery it had been taking since the overthrow of the former regime in September 1979, and said the country needed considerable amounts of foreign capital.

On 5 December, by resolution 35/87, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to organize a programme of financial, technical and material assistance to the Central African Republic to enable it to meet its long- and short-term needs for reconstruction, rehabilitation and development. The resolution was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which approved it in similar fashion on 19 November, on the basis of a text sponsored by 46 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), revised by them and introduced by Senegal.

Also by this resolution, the Assembly urgently appealed for contributions by Member States and organizations, and requested them to give special treatment to the Central African Republic. It requested the Secretary-General to open a special account to channel such contributions, to send a mission to consult on additional assistance needed and to report in 1981 on implementation of the resolution.

Chad

The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on 26 September 1980 that, until the security situation improved, it would not be possible for a United Nations mission to visit Chad to discuss the country's reconstruction, rehabilitation and development needs, as requested by the Assembly in 1979.<sup>57</sup> He added that large numbers of people were homeless and more than 300,000 had been forced to seek asylum in neighbouring countries, notably the United Republic of Cameroon.

Supplementing this report with an oral account to the Second Committee on 3 November, the Joint Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes said the Government of Chad had informed the Secretary-General that the country needed urgent humanitarian assistance to deal with the consequences of internal strife. The International Red Cross was providing humanitarian aid inside Chad, while the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other United Nations agencies had instituted programmes to help Chad refugees in the Sudan and the United Republic of Cameroon. Plans had been completed to restart United Nations-sponsored programmes of humanitarian and development assistance once conditions within the country improved.

On 5 December, the Assembly adopted two resolutions on assistance to Chad, both without vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which had approved them in similar fashion on 19 November on the basis of texts introduced by Senegal.

By the first of these, resolution 35/92 A, the Assembly appealed to Member States and organizations to provide emergency aid to meet Chad's reconstruction, rehabilitation and development needs. It requested the Secretary-General to organize a programme to this end and to dispatch a mission, once peace was restored, to review its needs with the Government. He was asked to report to the Assembly on the matter in 1981. This resolution had 41 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

The second resolution, 35/92 B, dealt with emergency humanitarian assistance. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to send a mission to Chad to assess the scope of the problem and the volume of aid required. He was asked to mobilize international humanitarian assistance on behalf of those suffering from the war, to contact Chad urgently with a view to the appointment of a resident co-ordinator who would also act as special representative for emergency relief operations, and to report to the Assembly in 1981 on implementation of the resolution. The Assembly appealed to Member States and organizations to provide assistance urgently to enable Chad to aid the people affected by the civil war. Before its approval, the draft of this resolution was revised in Committee by its 37 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), following informal consultations presided over by a Vice-Chairman.

Equatorial Guinea

The Governing Council of UNDP agreed on 14 February 1980 to allocate an additional $258,000 for Equatorial Guinea during the 1977-1981 planning cycle of UNDP assistance, and authorized, as an exception, limited borrowing from the following five-year cycle, if required, for urgent technical co-operation activities in 1980-1981. It also authorized the extension to Equatorial Guinea, for 1980 and 1981, of other benefits accorded by UNDP to least developed countries.

From 28 July to 6 August 1980, a mission sent by the Secretary-General visited Equatorial Guinea to review its needs, in pursuance of a 1979 decision by the General Assembly to organize an international assistance programme for the country.<sup>58</sup> The mission found, according to its report, that the Government had instituted a number of measures to extricate the country from the economic disorder and administrative chaos which had engulfed it prior to the overthrow of the previous regime in August 1979. However, since there was unlikely to be a budget surplus from which capital investment funds could be obtained, the Government would look to external donors and international organizations to help finance its investment programme. The mission thought that foreign budgetary support for a development programme and for the payment of local as well as capital costs of assistance projects might also be considered. Grants or soft loans would also be needed in view of the balance-of-payments deficit.

The mission drew up a $59 million programme of development and other assistance, consisting of $28 million for urgent rehabilitation and reconstruction, $20 million for medium- and long-term development, and $11 million in emergency humanitarian assistance. It expressed the view that Equatorial Guinea's economy could reach, within five or six years, the level it had achieved on independence in 1968, provided that the country benefited from political stability, rehabilitation of its infrastructure, adequate influx of capital in the form of grants and soft loans, sufficient manpower and technical assistance. It called particular attention to the acute shortage of trained manpower.

After receiving the mission's report, the General Assembly, on 5 December 1980, adopted without vote resolution 35/105, on assistance to Equatorial Guinea. Introduced by Senegal on behalf of 40 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below,) the resolution was twice revised by them before the Second Committee approved it on 20 November, also without vote.

By this resolution, the Assembly, endorsing the assessment and recommendations contained in the mission's report, appealed to Member States and organizations to contribute to the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development needs of Equatorial Guinea, and requested them to grant special measures to the country pending a review of the situation by the Committee for Development Planning. It also appealed to Member States to help the Government organize educational and training programmes to overcome the country's critical shortage of trained and skilled manpower, and requested the International Labour Organisation to help in manpower training and in formulating a labour code and employment policies. The Secretary-General was requested to continue mobilizing resources for the programme and arrange for a review of the situation for consideration by the Assembly in 1981.

Egypt, explaining its position on the resolution, said that, while it would not withdraw its sponsorship, it saw no justification for changes in the text made by the sponsors which, in its view, implied an unwarranted link between aid and the economic, social and political conditions in the country. Preferring the previous text, it voiced reservations to a preambular paragraph in the second revision, by which the Assembly noted with satisfaction efforts made to ensure the welfare of all citizens of Equatorial Guinea. This replaced a paragraph in the first revision noting with satisfaction the effort made to ensure full respect for the rights of the country's citizens, which in turn had been changed from similarly noting that the Government had taken measures to ensure full respect for their human rights.

Uganda

On 26 June 1980, the UNDP Governing Council, expressing deep concern about deteriorating economic and social conditions in Uganda, decided to review the situation in 1981 and requested the UNDP Administrator to report on UNDP's assistance to Uganda. The Council took note of the Administrator's assurance that every effort would be made to accommodate Uganda's needs.

In an oral report to the Economic and Social Council on 21 July, the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Coordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes stated that an emergency airlift had been organized for areas in Uganda where, as a result of a breakdown of law and order and a severe drought, more than 500,000 people were threatened by starvation. Supplies would be adequate to provide a bare survival ration until September, when local food production was expected to become available. Nevertheless, the situation in northern Uganda remained critical, and cereals and proteins would continue to be needed after September, together with transport.

In a report to the General Assembly dated 26 September, the Secretary-General said that, because of unsettled conditions in Uganda, he had not been able to send a mission there to identify its urgent rehabilitation and reconstruction needs, as the Assembly had requested in 1979.<sup>59</sup> However, the situation had improved and provisional arrangements had been made for such a mission. Meanwhile, the United Nations had continued to provide food, medicines, vehicles, seeds, agricultural implements and other needs for people in drought-stricken areas, though the amount of humanitarian assistance being provided was well below the country's urgent needs, particularly in the north.

The Assembly, on 5 December, adopted without vote resolution 35/103, on assistance to Uganda. The resolution, sponsored by 37 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) and introduced by Senegal, was approved in similar fashion by the Second Committee on 19 November.

By this resolution, the Assembly renewed its appeal to Member States and organizations for contributions to the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development needs of Uganda and to its emergency requirements, making use of the special United Nations account for this purpose. It asked the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to continue humanitarian assistance for Uganda. It requested the Secretary-General to continue mobilizing resources for assistance and to send a mission to Uganda to consult on its most urgent reconstruction, rehabilitation and development needs, arranging for a review of the situation for consideration by the Assembly in 1981.

In addition to organizing the special economic assistance programme, the United Nations was involved in providing aid to Uganda's drought-stricken areas (see p. 971).

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 403(1977) of 14 January 1977 and 406(1977) of 25 May 1977, concerning the complaint by the Government of Botswana regarding acts of aggression committed against its territory by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia,

Noting with satisfaction that the war in Zimbabwe has now stopped,

Noting the need of the Government of Botswana to rehabilitate and develop effective road, rail and air communications, both internally and with the rest of the world, in view of the uncertain political situation in the region, Botswana's vulnerability as a land-locked country and its dependence on the externally controlled railway systems for the transport of its principal exports and imports,

A/35/663. Report of Second Committee, draft resolution XXI.

Resolution 35/104, as recommended by Second Committee, A/35/663, adopted without vote by Assembly on 5 December 1980, meeting 84.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/127 of 19 December 1978, in which it made an appeal to the international community to provide generous and immediate assistance to the development programme recommended in the report of the Secretary-General on the mission which he sent to Cape Verde in response to General Assembly resolution 32/99 of 13 December 1977, and requested the Secretary-General, inter alia, to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Cape Verde,

Recalling a/so that in its resolutions 31/17 of 24 November 1976 and 32/99 of 13 December 1977 it noted with concern the grave economic situation existing in Cape Verde as a result of a severe and prolonged drought, the total lack of infrastructure for development and other social and economic strains on the economy of the country.

Recalling further its resolution 34/16 of 9 November 1979 concerning measures to be taken to implement the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the drought-stricken countries of the Sahelian region.

Noting that Cape Verde is classified by the United Nations as a least developed country as well as a most seriously affected country, and is a member of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel,

Recalling its resolution S-11/4 of 15 September 1980 on measures to meet the critical situation in the least developed countries,

Bearing in mind resolution 122(V) of 3 June 1979 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, entitled "Comprehensive New Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries,"

Recalling its resolutions 31/156 of 21 December 1976 and 32/185 of 19 December 1977, as well as resolution 111(V) of 3 June 1979 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, relating to specific action in favour of developing island countries,

Taking note of the development priorities of the Government of Cape Verde, which include urgent programmes for increasing agricultural production and water supplies, the development of fisheries, the promotion of manufacturing, the exploitation of minerals, the development of inter-island transport and port facilities and the improvement of educational facilities,

Drawing the attention of the international community, in particular, to paragraph 30 of the annex to the report of the Secretary-General, concerning the development programme projects for which no financing is yet available,

Noting the severe strain on the recurrent budget of Cape Verde, resulting largely from the drought, and the Government's policy of austerity to reduce the financial deficit,

Noting with satisfaction that some projects have been completed with total or partial financing by the Government of Cape Verde,

Noting the minimum food needs of Cape Verde for 1980, as described in table 6 of the annex to the report of the Secretary-General,

Gravely concerned that the expected harvest for 1981 has been lost as the result of the failure of the seasonal rains and the recurrence of drought,

Recognizing the essential role of food aid for the country at the current stage of development and the fact that the food aid made available to Cape Verde has helped to ensure a minimum availability of food and has, in addition, contributed to labour-intensive development projects through the use of sale proceeds,

Recognizing a/so the gravity and urgency of the economic and social problems confronting Cape Verde, an island country classified as a least developed country, afflicted by severe drought, with a serious food shortage, and the country's need for more effective and immediate assistance for the integral implementation of a programme of accelerated development,

Noting with satisfaction the efforts of the Government and people of Cape Verde, firmly committed to the development of their country,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance for Cape Verde:

2. Endorses fully the assessment and recommendations contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General and draws the attention of the international community to the urgent requirements for the assistance identified in it;

3. Expresses its appreciation to Member States and international organizations for the assistance provided to Cape Verde, in both development aid and food aid;

4. Expresses its concern, however, that the response of the international community has not been sufficient to meet the situation;

5. Reiterates its appeal to all States, international, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental bodies to continue to provide generous financial, material and technical assistance to Cape Verde so as to enable it to carry out a programme of accelerated development;

6. Calls upon Member States to give consideration to the early inclusion of Cape Verde in their programmes of development assistance and, in cases where assistance programmes for Cape Verde are already in force, to expand them, wherever possible;

7. Calls upon the international community to continue to contribute generously to all appeals for food and fodder assistance made by the Government of Cape Verde or on its behalf by the specialized agencies and the other competent organizations of the United Nations system to help it cope with the critical situation in the country;

8. Draws once again the attention of the international community to the special account which was established at United Nations Headquarters by the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 32/99, for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to Cape Verde;

9. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to continue, through their governing bodies, to consider the special needs of Cape Verde and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 August 1981;

10. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist Cape Verde;

11. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for implementing the programme of development assistance to Cape Verde;

(b) To keep the situation in Cape Verde under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, regional and other intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies and the international financial institutions concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1981, of the current status of the special economic assistance programme for Cape Verde;

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on assistance to the Comoros, particularly resolution 31/42 of 1 December 1976, in which it urgently appealed to the international community to assist the Comoros in an effective and continuous manner so as to enable it to face successfully the critical situation resulting from the economic difficulties experienced by that newly independent country,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 11 September 1980, to which was annexed the report of the review mission which he sent to the Comoros

Taking note of the special problems confronting the Comoros as a developing island country and as one of the least developed among the developing countries.

Noting the priority which the Government of the Comoros has assigned to the questions of infrastructure, transport and telecommunications,

Noting further the grave budget and balance-of-payments problems facing the Comoros,

Recalling its resolution 34/127 of 14 December 1979, in which it noted the appeal of the Economic and Social Council to the international community to respond generously and to continue to assist the Comoros in carrying out its short-term and long-term development programme,

A/35/663. Report of Second Committee, draft resolution XVI.

Resolution 35/99, as recommended by Second Committee, A/35/663, adopted without vote by Assembly on 5 December 1980, meeting 84.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the decision of the Government of Mozambique to implement mandatory sanctions against the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia in accordance with Security Council resolution 253(1968) of 29 May 1968,

Recognizing the substantial economic sacrifices made by Mozambique in the implementation of its decision to enforce United Nations sanctions and to close its borders with Southern Rhodesia,

Recalling Security Council resolution 386(1976) of 17 March 1976, in which the Council appealed to all States to provide, and requested the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, to organize with immediate effect, financial, technical and material assistance to enable Mozambique to carry out its economic development programme normally and to enhance its capacity to implement fully the United Nations mandatory sanctions,

Noting with deep concern the loss of life and the destruction of such essential infrastructure as roads, railways, bridges, petroleum facilities, electricity supply, schools and hospitals identified in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General of 16 August 1979,

Recalling further its resolutions 31/43 of 1 December 1976, 32/95 of 13 December 1977, 33/126 of 19 December 1978 and 34/129 of 14 December 1979, in which it urged the international community to respond effectively and generously with assistance to Mozambique,

Noting that the independence of Zimbabwe provides both an opportunity and a challenge for the international community, particularly for those neighbouring States whose economies have been so closely linked to that country,

Bearing in mind the fact that the drought which effected six out of the ten provinces of Mozambique has attained the dramatic proportions of a natural calamity,

Having examined the paper on the drought in Mozambique, which contains an assessment of the immediate requirements for urgent assistance from the international community,

Noting that a mission of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Food Programme and the World Meteorological Organization visited Mozambique in July 1980 in order to assess the emergency food situation in terms of the partial loss of cereals due to the drought which had devastated part of the country,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 30 June 1980 on assistance to Mozambique and noting with concern that the economic and financial position of that country remains grave and beset by budget and balance-of-payments deficits and that, in the absence of increased international assistance, the Government will have to reduce major imports that are essential for its development programmes and for restoring industrial production to pre-sanctions levels,

Taking into account the fact that the Committee for Development Planning at its fourteenth session recommended that the present list of the least developed countries should stand and that the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade has not yet been launched,

1. Strongly endorses the appeals made by the Security Council and the Secretary-General for international assistance to Mozambique;

2. Endorses fully the assessment and major recommendations contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General of 30 June 1980;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the measures he has taken to organize an international economic assistance programme for Mozambique;

5. Regrets, however, that the total assistance provided to date falls far short of Mozambique's pressing needs;

6. Draws the attention of the international community to the additional financial, economic and material assistance identified in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General as urgently required by Mozambique;

7. Urges Member States and organizations which are already implementing or are negotiating assistance programmes for Mozambique to strengthen them, wherever possible;

8. Appeals to the international community to provide the urgently needed external assistance in foodstuffs and medicines and technical co-operation for disaster preparedness and prevention;

9. Calls upon Member States, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Mozambique, wherever possible in the form of grants, and urges them to give special consideration to the early inclusion of Mozambique in their programmes of development assistance, if it is not already included;

10. Appeals to the international community to contribute to the special account established by the Secretary-General for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to Mozambique;

11. Requests all States to grant to Mozambique, in view of its difficult economic situation, the same treatment as that enjoyed by the least developed among the developing countries;

12. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Mozambique and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 August 1981;

13. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system in particular the

United Nations Development Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund—to maintain and increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Mozambique and to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance, and to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist Mozambique;

14. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique;

Resolution 35/93, as recommended by Second Committee, A/35/663, adopted without vote by Assembly on 5 December 1980, meeting 84.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/187 of 21 December 1976, in which, inter alia, it expressed deep concern at the serious economic and social situation in Sao Tome and Principe as a result of the total lack of infrastructure for development and appealed urgently to the international community to assist the Government of Sao Tome and Principe to enable it to establish the necessary social and economic infrastructure for development, Recalling also its resolutions 32/96 of 13 December 1977, 33/125 of 19 December 1978 and 34/131 of 14 December 1979, in which it reiterated its appeal to the international community to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Sao Tome and Principe.

Recalling further that in its resolution 33/125 it noted the recommendation of the Committee for Development Planning at its fourteenth session, that Sao Tome and Principe should be assisted during the remainder of the current decade and that the special difficulties and upheavals experienced by that country required special measures,

Bearing in mind its resolution 31/156 of 21 December 1976 in which it urged all Governments, in particular those of the developed countries, to lend their support, in the context of their assistance programmes, for the implementation of the specific action envisaged in favour of developing island countries, and its resolution 32/185 of 19 December 1977 in which it urged all organizations in the United Nations system to implement, within their respective spheres of competence, appropriate specification in favour of developing island countries,

Aware that the economic and social development of Sao Tome and Principe has been seriously hindered not only by inadequate health, educational and housing facilities but also by inadequate transport infrastructure, and that urgent improvement in these sectors is a prerequisite for the country's future progress,

Taking note of the current development priorities of the Government of Sao Tome and Principe, notably in agriculture and livestock, fisheries, manufacture, mining, transport and other infrastructure, and in education, training, health and housing,

Recalling its resolutions 32/160 of 19 December 1977 and 33/197 of 29 January 1979 on the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, Noting, in this connexion, that substantial international assistance is needed to improve the infrastructure in sea, air and land transport in Sao Tome and Principe.

Noting section I of decision 80/16 of 26 June 1980 adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme to assign a resident representative to Sao Tome and Principe on a full-time basis,

Noting also paragraph 2 of decision 80/30 of 26 June 1980 adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme,

Noting further Economic and Social Council decision 1980/161 of 24 July 1980, in which the Council requested the Committee for Development Planning to review the economic situation in Sao Tome and Principe with a view to its inclusion in the list of the least developed countries,

Also noting that the Government of Sao Tome and Principe will convene a conference of donors early in 1981,

Noting with concern that a large number of the projects and programmes identified in the report of 21 August 1980 of the Secretary-General, to which was annexed the report of the review mission to Sao Tome and Principe, have not yet been financed,

Also concerned by the conclusion of the report that, unless there is a significant increase in the volume of international assistance, the Government of Sao Tome and Principe will not be able to finance a development programme,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance to Sao Tome and Principe;

2. Endorses fully the assessment and recommendations contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Expresses its appreciation to Member States and international organizations for the assistance provided to Sao Tome and Principe, both in food aid and development assistance;

4. Regrets, however, that the assistance so far provided falls far short of the needs of Sao Tome and Principe;

5. Renews its appeal to Member States, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental bodies to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Sao Tome and Principe to permit the implementation of the projects and programmes identified in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General and to enable the Government to launch an effective programme of economic and social development;

6. Urges potential donor countries and international financial organizations to participate in and respond positively at the forthcoming conference of donors;

7. Requests Member States and the organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to take special measures on behalf of Sao Tome and Principe, pending the examination of its situation by the Committee for Development Planning;

Resolution 35/94, as recommended by Second Committee, A/35/663, adopted without vote by Assembly on 5 December 1980, meeting 84.

The General Assembly.

Recalling previous United Nations resolutions concerning the question of assistance to Zambia, in particular Security Council resolution 329(1973) of 10 March 1973 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 2012(LXI) of 3 August 1976 and 2093(LXIII) of 26 July 1977, which commended the decision of the Government of Zambia in 1966 to implement progressively United Nations mandatory sanctions against Southern Rhodesia in accordance with Security Council resolution 253(1966) of 29 May 1966,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1976/46 of 2 August 1976. In which the Council endorsed the assessment and recommendations contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General of 5 July 1976,

Recalling further Security Council resolution 455(1979) of 23 November 1979 and General Assembly resolution 33/131 of 19 December 1978, in which the Assembly strongly endorsed the appeals made by the Council and the Secretary-General for international assistance to Zambia,

Recognizing that the Government of Zambia incurred both direct costs and the costs of contingency measures as a result of its decision to apply sanctions against the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia as well as losses due to the diversion of limited financial and human resources from the country's normal development,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 19 June 1980, to which was annexed the report of the review mission which he sent to Zambia,

Noting that the present critical economic situation in Zambia has been brought about by the effects of applying mandatory sanctions and of continuous attacks and incursions by Southern Rhodesian forces,

Noting also that the disruption and reorientation of transport and trade have placed severe strains on and created complications for Zambia's development programme,

Gravely concerned about the serious damage caused by the war to the Zambian economy and the danger presented by the presence of land-mines and other remnants of war in border areas,

Regretting that the international community has not thus far provided assistance to Zambia on a scale commensurate with the costs as called for in Security Council resolutions 253(1966) of 29 May 1968, 277(1970) of 18 March 1970 and 329(1973) of 10 March 1973,

Taking note of the broad guidelines of the Government of Zambia for its future development strategy, which includes programmes for agriculture, manufacturing and mining and the long-term development projects and programmes identified by the Government as requiring international assistance,

Taking note of Zambia's need for resources to overcome its present economic problems and to implement successfully a stabilization programme directed towards the country's long-term development objectives,

Expressing concern at the critical food shortage currently being experienced in Zambia as a result of the continuing drought,

Recognizing that international assistance is urgently required to allow Zambia to develop an adequate transport capacity on its external routes for imports and exports,

1. Endorses the assessment and recommendations contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General:

2. Expresses its appreciation for the assistance provided thus far to Zambia by various States and regional and international organizations;

3. Expresses its deep concern that the assistance provided to date falls far short of Zambia's needs;

4. Draws the attention of the international community to the additional financial, economic and material assistance urgently required by Zambia, as identified in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General, and to the particular need for immediate assistance in the transport sector;

5. Appeals to the international community to provide assistance, on an urgent basis, to enable Zambia to reconstruct its transport system and to rehabilitate its destroyed infrastructure, and the means of clearing the land-mines and remnants of war in border areas;

6. Appeals also to the international community to provide, on an urgent basis, additional food aid to Zambia to enable the country to meet its current emergency food needs;

7. Calls upon Member States, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Zambia, wherever possible in the form of grants, and urges them to give special consideration to the early inclusion of Zambia in their programmes of bilateral or multilateral development assistance, if it is not already included;

8. Further calls upon Member States and organizations which are already implementing or are negotiating assistance programmes for Zambia to strengthen them, wherever possible;

9. Draws the attention of the international community to the account which was established by the Secretary-General under the United Nations Trust Fund for Special Economic Assistance Programmes to receive contributions for assistance to Zambia and urges Member States and International financial institutions to contribute generously to that account:

10. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system-in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund-to maintain and increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Zambia, in order to enable it to carry out its planned development projects without interruption, and to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance;

11. Further requests the appropriate specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist Zambia;

12. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Zambia and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 August 1981 ;

13. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to continue his humanitarian assistance programmes on behalf of refugees in Zambia, and urges Member States and the international community to provide him speedily with the necessary means to carry out those programmes;

14. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Zambia;

(b) To ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made for continuing the organization of the international programme of assistance to Zambia and the mobilization of resources;

(c) To keep the economic situation in Zambia under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, regional and other intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies and international financial institutions concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1981, of the current status of the special economic assistance programme for Zambia;

(d) To arrange for a review of the economic situation of Zambia and the progress made in organizing and implementing the special economic assistance programme for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity

Report of the Secretary-General

In a report to the General Assembly dated 15 October 1980 on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the Secretary-General reviewed developments in five areas: consultations and exchange of information; a meeting at Nairobi, Kenya, from 5 to 7 June between representatives of the OAU secretariat and the secretariats of the United Nations system; co-operation with regard to the situation in southern Africa; co-operation on economic and social development; and co-operation on information and publicity.

The report noted that the Secretary-General had addressed the first economic summit meeting of heads of State and Government of OAU (Lagos, Nigeria, 28 and 29 April) and the seventeenth session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU (Freetown, Sierra Leone, 1-4 July). During those meetings, he had talked with many African heads of State and leaders of liberation movements on matters of common concern.

The report summarized the conclusions reached at the Nairobi meeting of secretariat officials in June, which was attended by 57 representatives of 25 organizations and organs. The meeting had been arranged in response to a 1979 request by the General Assembly, which had called for its convening to study means of implementing programmes of mutual concern, including assistance to liberation movements.<sup>60</sup>

The participants in this meeting agreed to exchange documentation on a regular basis, to strengthen public information activities concerned with Africa, to intensify co-operation between United Nations specialized agencies and similar organizations in Africa, to give greater emphasis to social problems facing Africa, to study the question of African migratory workers, and to seek additional funds for assistance to national liberation movements by the United Nations Development Programme. The OAU secretariat requested advice on training and research facilities available to OAU within the United Nations system, expressed hope that United Nations agencies would review their staff recruitment policies to ensure effective African representation, appealed for United Nations support for the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa (see p. 548), appealed for assistance for the national reconstruction of Chad, requested increased aid for African refugees, and called for additional assistance for liberation movements in Namibia and South Africa. The meeting expressed hope that the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund, which had legal constraints against giving assistance to liberation movements, would do their best to ensure that their statutes were amended to permit them to provide such assistance. The participants agreed in principle to hold similar consultation meetings annually.

The conclusions of the Nairobi meeting were endorsed by the OAU Council of Ministers at its thirty-fifth ordinary session (Freetown, 18-28 June).

Describing co-operation with regard to southern Africa, the Secretary-General's report mentioned such activities as: participation by OAU in a United Nations seminar on racism (Nairobi, 19-30 May) and in meetings co-sponsored by the Special Committee against Apartheid; consultations with OAU officials in regard to the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa; a visit to United Nations Headquarters, New York, in September 1979 by a delegation of the OAU Standing Committee on Sanctions; participation by an OAU representative in the United Nations Council for Namibia; collaboration between OAU and the United Nations Children's Fund regarding support for refugee children and mothers from colonial territories; and regular consultations with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, which supported the OAU Bureau for the Placement and Education of African Refugees.

Among instances of co-operation on economic and social development, the report mentioned that the OAU economic summit meeting at Lagos in April 1980 (the second extraordinary session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU) had been jointly organized with the Economic Commission for Africa. The two bodies had also drafted the constitution of an Association of African State Trading Organizations, and had convened in January a meeting of the African Centre for Applied Research and Training in Social Development. The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization had also joined OAU in organizing meetings, as had various specialized agencies. The United Nations Development Programme had allocated $99,000 for staff training programmes at the OAU secretariat.

Consideration by the General Assembly

On 24 September 1980, the Chairman of the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government, President Siaka Stevens of Sierra Leone, addressed the General Assembly. Noting that 18 of the world's 25 poorest countries were in Africa, he appealed for support for the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa, adopted at the Lagos economic summit meeting in April. He commented on issues of concern to Africa, including Namibia,

Western Sahara, the dispute between Ethiopia and Somalia, a zone of peace for the Indian Ocean, the situation in the Middle East, economic and social development, refugees and the law of the sea. He appealed for aid for the victims of civil war in Chad and said he would explore the possibility of United Nations assistance for the peace-keeping force which OAU intended to establish there.

The declarations and resolutions of the June session of the OAU Council of Ministers, and the resolutions and decision of the July session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government, both held at Freetown, were circulated as a document of the General Assembly at the request of Sierra Leone. Also circulated as an Assembly document, at the request of Nigeria, were the Lagos Plan of Action, the Final Act of Lagos and the resolutions adopted at the April summit meeting at Lagos.

On 10 December, the Assembly adopted, without objection, resolution 35/117, providing for continued co-operation between the United Nations and OAU in a number of areas. The text was sponsored by 50 African States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) and was introduced by the Sudan on behalf of the African group of States at the United Nations.

By this resolution, the Assembly commended the continued efforts of OAU to promote co-operation among African States and to find solutions to African problems, and noted with satisfaction the increased collaboration and support of United Nations organizations. It reiterated the determination of the United Nations, in co-operation with OAU, to intensify efforts to eliminate colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid, in southern Africa.

The Assembly approved the decisions, recommendations, proposals and arrangements contained in the conclusions of the Nairobi meeting of secretariat representatives in June, in particular the decision to consult periodically on matters of mutual concern and to follow up decisions of that meeting. It requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with OAU, to arrange for a similar meeting to be held at Geneva in April 1981.

The Assembly called on Member States and organizations to participate in special economic assistance programmes for African States experiencing grave economic difficulties, and to help States cope with the situation caused by acts of aggression committed by South Africa. It requested publicity for social and economic development matters concerning Africa. Noting with profound regret that the international community had not paid sufficient attention to the plight of refugees in Africa-constituting over half the refugee population in the world- the Assembly called on Member States and organizations to increase their aid to these refugees. It also requested the Secretary-General to strengthen co-operation with OAU, particularly with regard to assistance to the victims of colonialism and apartheid in southern Africa. Calling on United Nations bodies to associate OAU closely with all their work concerning Africa, and urging other United Nations organizations to expand their co-operation with OAU and their assistance to recognized liberation movements, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to report again on this matter in 1981.

Explaining the position of the members of the European Community on this resolution, Luxembourg said they did not think the Assembly should endorse decisions taken in forums outside the United Nations. In this regard, France added that the conclusions of the Nairobi meeting gave to certain movements a role about which France had reservations of principle and led the United Nations to subsidize OAU in ways which were contrary to sound budgetary practice. The United Kingdom said it did not accept that there was a situation in southern Africa resulting from "acts of aggression" in the sense in which that expression was used in Article 39 of the Charter of the United Nations.<sup>61</sup> The United States said the reference to "acts of aggression" could not override the Security Council's discretion in that regard, and it added that the United Nations should assist the people of Africa, not liberation movements.

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

A total of 1,428 persons from Namibia, South Africa, Zimbabwe and African countries formerly under Portuguese administration held scholarships in 1980 under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa. According to a report to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General, covering the period 1 October 1979 to 30 September 1980, 590 of these were from South Africa, 556 from Zimbabwe, 215 from Namibia, 27 from Guinea-Bissau, 22 from Angola, 9 from Cape Verde, 7 from Sao Tome and Principe, and 2 from Mozambique.

The Programme granted 337 new awards and extended 1,091 existing scholarships during this period. Of those receiving new awards, 168 were from South Africa, 110 from Zimbabwe and 59 from Namibia. Of the new awards, 295 were financed under the Programme. The number of new awards was less than the 409 granted in the previous year because of a substantial increase in scholarship costs. Of the new awards, 38 per cent went to women, as compared to 33 per cent the previous year. Fifty-one per cent of the scholarship holders attended institutions in Africa.

The Programme continued to be financed by voluntary contributions. During the year ended 30 September, contributions and pledges from 46 States and the public totalled $4,218,327 (see table below). This represented an increase over the previous year's figure of $3,692,146. In addition, 21 States offered scholarships for training in their countries.

An evaluation group set up in accordance with a 1979 request by the General Assembly<sup>62</sup> studied the Programme in 1980, visiting a number of African cities and consulting with government and international officials. It reported to the Assembly's Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, which held eight meetings during the year and which drew up conclusions based on the evaluators' recommendations. Among these conclusions were: the Programme should concentrate on students from South Africa and Namibia, though for one year following Zimbabwe's independence on 18 April it should grant new awards to students from that country; it should provide remedial courses and counselling services where necessary; Governments should be asked to place students at a reasonable cost so that the Programme could cope with rising fees and increasing demand; the Programme should provide information to Governments and intergovernmental organizations on scholarship holders who were available for employment; and publicity about the Programme should be widened.

On 11 November, the Assembly adopted without objection resolution 35/30, by which it endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of the Advisory Committee, decided that new scholarship awards should continue to be granted to Zimbabweans for the year following independence, requested steps to ensure that the administration of the Programme could cope with the increased demands, and appealed to States, organizations and individuals for further contributions. The resolution, sponsored by 43 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) and introduced by Canada, was approved by the Fourth Committee without objection on 30 October, as revised by its sponsors.

(For further information on the Programme's activities, see p. 240 with regard to students from South Africa, p. 249 with regard to Zimbabwe and p. 1115 with regard to Namibia.)

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolutions on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, in particular resolution 34/31 of 21 November 1979,

Further recalling the provision in paragraph 4 of its resolution 34/31 by which it requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, to complete arrangements for an early evaluation of the Programme in order to determine its effectiveness and identify priorities for further work,

Chapter X

Questions concerning Asia

Throughout 1980, the United Nations gave special attention to several areas of international tension in Asia.

The Security Council met in January 1980 but did not adopt a proposed resolution calling for immediate and unconditional withdrawal of all foreign troops from Afghanistan. An emergency special session of the General Assembly was convened that month at which the Assembly deplored the armed intervention and called for withdrawal of foreign troops. In November, the Assembly reiterated this appeal and expressed appreciation of the Secretary-General's efforts in the search for a solution to the problem.

The Secretary-General visited Teheran in January, seeking the release of United States Embassy personnel detained there since November 1979 by a group of Iranians. A resolution to have the Security Council apply sanctions until their release was not adopted.

Deteriorating relations between Iran and Iraq led to armed conflict between them starting in late September. The Secretary-General and the Security Council appealed for an end to the conflict and for peaceful settlement of the dispute.

In South-East Asia, United Nations attention again focused on the conflict in Kampuchea, the Thai-Kampuchean border areas, and territorial disputes between China and Viet Nam. The General Assembly decided, in October, to hold a conference on Kampuchea in 1981 to seek a political settlement of the problem. Meanwhile, the Organization continued to mobilize humanitarian aid to the Kampuchean people.

In Korea, the United Nations Command continued to monitor the 1953 Armistice Agreement between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea.

The subchapters below further discuss these questions concerning Asia.

Matters concerning Western Asia

Situation in Afghanistan

During 1980, the General Assembly and the Security Council devoted a number of meetings to the Afghanistan situation.

At the request of 52 Member States, the Security Council met from 5 to 9 January to consider the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security. Those requesting the meeting stated that USSR military intervention in Afghanistan, which took place late in 1979, had destabilized the area and threatened international peace and security. Afghanistan objected to United Nations consideration, declaring that it had requested Soviet military aid because of foreign threats. Due to the negative vote of the USSR, a permanent member, the Council did not adopt a six-nation draft resolution which would have had it deplore the armed intervention in Afghanistan, affirm that the country's independence and sovereignty must be respected and call for the immediate withdrawal of foreign troops in order that it might determine its own form of government.

The Council then decided by resolution 462(1980) to call an emergency special session of the General Assembly to examine the question.

Consequently, the Assembly met from 10 to 14 January and adopted resolution ES-6/2 by which it: deplored the armed intervention in Afghanistan; appealed for respect for its sovereignty; called for withdrawal of foreign troops in order that its people might determine their own form of government; urged the concerned parties to facilitate the return of refugees; appealed to States and organizations for humanitarian aid; and called on the Security Council to consider ways to assist in implementing the resolution.

From 17 to 20 November, the Assembly again considered the situation in Afghanistan, this time at the request of 35 Member States, and adopted resolution 35/37 by which it reaffirmed the people's right to determine their own form of government, called again for foreign troop withdrawal and for creation of conditions favourable for the return of refugees, appealed for aid for Afghan refugees, and expressed hope for a political solution and guarantees for the non-use of force against neighbouring States.

Action by the Security Council

Communications to 4 January 1980

In a letter of 31 December 1979 addressed to the Secretary-General, the representative of China transmitted a statement issued the previous day by his Government charging that the USSR had invaded Afghanistan on the pretence that it was fulfilling treaty obligations at the request of the Afghan Government. China vigorously condemned this act as interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs, demanding the cessation of USSR aggression and intervention and the withdrawal of Soviet armed forces.

Similar charges were contained in a statement of the same day by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Democratic Kampuchea, transmitted to the Secretary-General on 4 January 1980. This statement also demanded the withdrawal of Soviet troops, allowing the Afghan people to decide their own destiny.

On 3 January, the President of the Security Council received a letter, eventually signed by 52 Governments, requesting an urgent meeting of the Council to consider the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security. The signatory States were: Australia, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Fiji, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Portugal, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Suriname, Sweden, Thailand, Turkey, Uganda, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Chile, in a statement of 3 January transmitted the following day to the Council President, said it had co-sponsored the request for a meeting because it believed the United Nations should adopt a firm, collective response in defence of the principle of non-intervention in a State's internal affairs. Chile charged that the USSR was seeking to extend its influence to the Persian Gulf area and its petroleum deposits.

By a letter of 4 January to the Council President, Afghanistan transmitted a telegram of 3 January from its Minister for Foreign Affairs, stating that his Government strongly protested the convening of the Security Council to consider the so-called situation in Afghanistan since it regarded this as direct and clear interference in its internal affairs.

Security Council meetings (5-9 January)

Responding to the 52-nation request, the Security Council held six meetings (one of them in two parts) between 5 and 9 January.

Speaking before adoption of the agenda, the representative of the USSR said he objected to the Council's consideration of the so-called question of the situation in Afghanistan inasmuch as it would be tantamount to intervention by the United Nations in the affairs of that country. Over the past two years, he said, Afghanistan had repeatedly appealed for support from the USSR in order to repel armed intervention from outside; the USSR's decision to send a limited military contingent to Afghanistan was taken in response to those requests and based on provisions of mutual treaty obligations.

The representative of the German Democratic Republic supported Afghanistan's position protesting the convening of the Council and added that both the treaty and military assistance were in keeping with the Charter of the United Nations, which confirmed the inalienable right of States to individual and collective self-defence.

Bangladesh and Norway pointed out that, since the request for the Council meeting had been signed by one third of the Organization's membership, it was the Council's duty to debate the question.

In its consideration of the question, the Council heard statements from Council members as well as from 32 other Member States that had asked to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. They were: Afghanistan, Australia, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Egypt, Germany, Federal Republic of, Hungary, Italy, Japan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Liberia, Malaysia, Mongolia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, Panama, Poland, Saudi Arabia, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Turkey, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Bangladesh, China, Norway, Portugal, the United Kingdom and the United States made statements to the effect that their acceptance of Afghanistan's participation in the Council's work should not be taken as recognition of, or support for, the new regime in that country.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Afghanistan recounted events in his country since the April 1978 (Saur) revolution which had brought to power Noor Mohammad Taraki, founder of the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan. On 16 September 1979, he said, Hafizullah Amin, supported by reactionary elements, had seized power, assassinated Taraki and opened an era of internal oppression during which time foreign aggression increased and the gains of the Saur revolution were threatened. On 27 December, the Afghan National Liberation Army had risen and overthrown Amin. According to the Foreign Minister, the limited contingents of Soviet armed forces had been sent to remove foreign threats to Afghanistan; in response to a request initially made during a visit by Taraki to Moscow, in December 1978, when Amin was also present; the request had been repeated during Amin's rule, and a request for Soviet aid, including military aid, was also made by the new Government, headed by Babrak Karmal, General Secretary of the Central Committee of the People's Democratic Party, President of the Revolutionary Council and Prime Minister of the Democratic Republic. This assistance was in conformity with a treaty of friendship, good-neighbourliness and co-operation, signed between the leaders of Afghanistan and the USSR on 5 December 1978. The Foreign Minister repeated his country's protests over the convening of the Security Council to discuss Afghanistan's internal affairs.

The representative of the USSR charged that since April 1978 the United States and certain other Western powers, together with China, had intervened in Afghanistan's internal affairs, fomenting counter-revolution. The USSR had acted in response to a legitimate request by Afghanistan for assistance and, after the end of the causes that had motivated the request, the USSR would withdraw its military contingents.

Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Poland and Viet Nam held the view that consideration by the Security Council of the situation in Afghanistan was legally unfounded, politically wrong and counter-productive. They believed that Afghanistan had the right to request help from a State with which it had a legally binding treaty and that the temporary presence in Afghanistan of a limited Soviet military contingent did not represent a threat to international peace and security.

Among those which stated that Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan had caused instability in the area and threatened international peace and security were Australia, Bangladesh, Canada, China, Democratic Kampuchea, Egypt, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the Niger, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Portugal, Saudi Arabia, Spain, Tunisia, Turkey, the United Kingdom, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia. Chile and Somalia added that the real motive for the USSR's aggression was furtherance of its hegemonic policies—a view shared by China which also said that the USSR was attempting to reach the Indian Ocean, control oil-transportation sea lanes and seize oil-producing areas.

Democratic Kampuchea, Pakistan, Singapore and the United Kingdom pointed out that there were estimates of up to 50,000 Soviet troops involved in the operation, and the United Kingdom questioned how this could be a limited military response to an appeal from Afghanistan. The United States accused the USSR of planning and preparing to invade Afghanistan because it was dissatisfied with Afghanistan's regime; Costa Rica, Malaysia and Singapore charged that Soviet troops had been used to depose one ruler and substitute another.

Canada said the situation in Afghanistan before and after the Soviet invasion was one of civil war, where a substantial part of the population had become alienated by the policies of a regime which came to power by undemocratic means. France stated that it would have added its signature to the letter of 3 January had it not assumed the presidency of the Security Council.

On 7 January, the Council considered a draft resolution sponsored by Bangladesh, Jamaica, the Niger, the Philippines, Tunisia and Zambia.

This draft would have had the Council: reaffirm its conviction that the preservation of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of every State was a fundamental principle of the Charter, a violation of which on any pretext was contrary to its aims and purposes; deeply deplore the armed intervention in Afghanistan, which was inconsistent with that principle; and affirm that the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and non-aligned status of Afghanistan had to be fully respected. The Council would have called for the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of all foreign troops from Afghanistan in order to enable its people to determine their own form of government and choose their economic, political and social systems free from any outside intervention, coercion or constraint, requested the Secretary-General to report within two weeks on progress in implementing this resolution, and decided to remain seized of the question.

The draft resolution was put to a vote the same day; it received 13 votes in favour to 2 against (German Democratic Republic, USSR). It was not adopted since a negative vote had been cast by a permanent member of the Council. The meeting was then suspended for two days.

When the Council resumed consideration of the question on 9 January, it had before it a procedural draft resolution sponsored by Mexico and the Philippines. Put to a vote, the draft received 12 votes in favour, 2 against (German Democratic Republic, USSR) and 1 abstention (Zambia) and was adopted as resolution 462 (1980).

By the resolution, the Security Council stated that it had taken into account that the lack of unanimity of its permanent members had prevented it from exercising its primary responsibility and decided to call an emergency special session of the General Assembly to examine the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security.

Speaking before the vote, the German Democratic Republic and the USSR said they opposed discussion of the question in the Assembly, as this would be an interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs and since the situation in that country posed no danger to any other State.

Action by the General Assembly (January)

The General Assembly considered the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security during its sixth emergency special session, held from 10 to 14 January, in the course of which 74 delegations made statements.

Before adoption of the agenda, Afghanistan, the Byelorussian SSR (speaking on behalf also of Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR) and Mongolia (speaking on behalf also of the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam) said that they objected to the convening of the session to consider the so-called situation in Afghanistan, which they regarded as artificially created by external enemies of Afghanistan and as infringing the sovereignty of that country through interference in its internal affairs.

During the debate, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Afghanistan said the holding of the session was based on a misconception of developments in his country. He emphasized that those developments, including deployment of a limited number of Soviet troops, were entirely domestic and bilateral issues, which did not constitute any threat to peace and security in the area or in the world at large. He said that, in the wake of intensified aggression and armed attacks, Afghanistan had had no alternative but to exercise its inherent right to self-defence, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and a 1978 Afghan-Soviet treaty, and to request assistance, including military aid, from the USSR. He further observed that the Soviet contingents would be withdrawn immediately after the threat had ended.

The USSR said that when it sent troops to Afghanistan, the very survival of the April 1978 revolution hung in the balance. Its military assistance was compatible with the right of individual and collective self-defence enshrined in the Charter. Not to have responded to Afghanistan's request not only would have nullified the very purpose of the mutual treaty between the two countries, the USSR continued, but also would have abandoned Afghanistan to imperialistic designs and exposed the southern border of the USSR to serious danger; the introduction of Soviet troops into Afghanistan was in no way linked to changes in the Afghan leadership.

A number of countries spoke in support of Afghanistan and the USSR, the majority of them pointing to what they considered a deliberate refusal by several speakers to recognize and accept the sovereign right of States to conclude bilateral treaties of mutual interest and to invoke their provisions. Moreover, Poland charged, external forces had been aiding and abetting an armed rebellion aimed at overthrowing Afghanistan's Government. Mongolia and Viet Nam spoke in a similar vein.

The Ukrainian SSR stated that Soviet aid to Afghanistan was not directed against any change in the political structure of the Afghan Government nor against any other countries of the region. Democratic Yemen concurred; the assistance to Afghanistan had not changed the character of that country's progressive regime, chosen after the April 1978 revolution.

According to the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the events since that revolution were that outside counter-revolutionary forces had corrupted and infiltrated Afghan Government circles, culminating with the September 1979 assassination of the leader of the revolution, Noor Mohammad Taraki, by Hafizullah Amin and his followers; led by Babrak Karmal, the real revolutionary forces had risen to overthrow the reactionary forces of Amin and guide the revolution. International imperialists had distorted the matter and were making unjustified accusations against Afghanistan and the USSR.

Hungary stated that no country or international organization could interfere with bilateral relations—a view shared by Czechoslovakia, which considered the action taken in Afghanistan to be justified.

The German Democratic Republic felt that demands for cessation of military assistance from the USSR struck at the inalienable right of the Afghan people to decide their own fate, which included choosing the ways and means of ensuring the security and independence of their country.

Bulgaria said it was regrettable that aid rendered to Afghanistan was being wrongly interpreted by some as a blow to the principle of non-alignment; that principle should not stand in the way of socio-political development.

A majority of the representatives participating in the debate nevertheless expressed doubt about the freedom of choice exercised by Afghanistan in permitting the entry of Soviet troops and regarded the USSR's action as interference in the domestic affairs of another country, in violation of international law and against the principles of the Charter.

Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic and the Ivory Coast said the apparent duplicity shown by the USSR—encamping on foreign soil while proclaiming peaceful international relations—fully justified the current discussion.

Singapore pointed out that, if Soviet forces had entered Afghanistan at the invitation of Babrak Karmal, he had had no authority to make such a request since, in July 1978, he had been dismissed from his post as Afghan Deputy Prime Minister and sent to Czechoslovakia as Ambassador. The USSR's denial that it had participated in the coup against Amin was unconvincing, Singapore added, as, according to press reports, on 27 December 1979 Soviet troops had attacked Afghan forces guarding the presidential palace and other Government installations. Kuwait declared that the USSR's contention - that its soldiers were inside Afghanistan at that country's request was invalid since the Government had been installed by the USSR. Japan stated that the international community was not convinced that Soviet intervention was in response to a request by the Afghan Government or that the USSR was exercising its right to self-defence.

Pakistan stated that no evidence had been presented to substantiate allegations of foreign interference in, or armed attacks against, Afghanistan and added that the uprising of September 1979 was a rejection of an alien ideology rooted in the people's devotion to Islam. According to the United Kingdom it was a spontaneous expression of discontent with the regime. The United Kingdom also asked why, if such external attacks had been going on, Afghanistan and the USSR had not brought the matter to the United Nations attention. Zaire said the only recent foreign armed intervention against Afghanistan had been that of the USSR.

Italy, speaking also on behalf of the nine member States of the European Community, said that the purpose of Soviet military intervention had been to overthrow the Afghan Government and replace it with a regime more responsive to Soviet interests—a view shared by New Zealand and Sweden. These States were joined by Bangladesh, Bolivia, Ecuador, the Federal Republic of Germany, Indonesia, Nepal and Uruguay in condemning the USSR's act as interference in a State's internal affairs and in calling for immediate troop withdrawal. Mexico said that departure of those troops should be complemented by strict respect on the part of other States for the obligation to prevent armed bands from invading Afghanistan.

Turkey said it was dismayed that, instead of showing sensitivity to world opinion, the deployment of foreign troops in Afghanistan was proceeding and increasing.

Venezuela said there must be respect for the principle of non-intervention and the tenets of the Charter must not be distorted or subjected to circumstantial interpretations.

Spain feared that the USSR's intervention had led to a revival of the cold war. Austria, France, Malaysia and Yugoslavia agreed that the policy of detente was threatened.

The United States said the invasion was no cold-war squabble; the United Nations should not remain silent in the face of open aggression since this would be a violation of the only principle that small nations could invoke to protect themselves from more powerful States. This viewpoint was shared by Egypt.

Brazil and Morocco also condemned the use of force in international relations. Democratic Kampuchea, the Gambia and the Philippines expressed concern at the increasing threat posed to international peace and security. Bahrain, Mauritius and Sri Lanka feared possible escalation of the conflict to the surrounding areas. Israel shared these apprehensions, and Sierra Leone cautioned that, should the Afghan people refuse to accept subjugation, their resistance would cause regional instability.

Chile believed the wealth of the subsoil had been a powerful incentive in the Soviet action, which it said had obvious geopolitical implications. Albania also charged the USSR with expansionist designs and with engineering the December 1979 coup, and said that the case of Afghanistan was a revealing indication of dangers threatening countries which signed treaties of friendship with super-powers.

Nigeria expressed disappointment at the Soviet action since it felt that no country had assisted the third world more, and Papua New Guinea said that the USSR's credibility as a champion of world peace was in question. Liberia and Oman observed that third world countries condemned foreign intervention, not because they followed one camp or the other, but because their interests were at stake.

Australia and Saudi Arabia were among those which called for the restoration of conditions in which the people of Afghanistan could choose their own Government freely and without outside interference. Malaysia, Peru and Portugal, making a similar plea, pointed out that the situation had also brought about a new wave of refugees which called for urgent, humanitarian aid.

On 14 January, the General Assembly adopted resolution ES-6/2 by which it called for the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan, to enable its people to determine their own form of government and choose their economic, political and social systems free from outside interference. The Assembly strongly deplored the armed intervention in Afghanistan, which was inconsistent with the principle of respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of every State, and appealed to all States to respect that principle and the non-aligned character of Afghanistan and to refrain from any interference in its internal affairs. All parties concerned were urged to bring about speedily conditions necessary for the voluntary return of Afghan refugees and the Assembly appealed for humanitarian aid, in co-ordination with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to alleviate their hardship. The Security Council was called on to assist in implementing this resolution and the Secretary-General was requested to keep the Council and Member States informed of progress towards that end.

Resolution ES-6/2, introduced by Pakistan on behalf of 24 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFER-ENCES below), was adopted by a recorded vote of 104 to 18, with 18 abstentions.

Several delegations explained their votes in favour. El Salvador, Greece, Kenya, Suriname and Zaire indicated that they could not accept explanations that Afghanistan had requested the presence of Soviet troops or that the USSR had acted to prevent any kind of danger; Guyana and Malta were concerned that there was danger of the situation's escalating.

Albania said it would have preferred that the resolution condemn the Soviet aggression specifically and firmly. Guatemala and Saint Lucia said they supported the resolution, although it had little more than moral value.

Iraq felt events in Afghanistan had been used by the United States as justification for intervening in the domestic affairs of the area; however, since Iraq also disapproved of intervention such as that which had taken place in Afghanistan, it had voted in favour.

France, which voted in favour, and Madagascar, which abstained, expressed reservations about a preambular reference to the General Assembly's responsibility under the 1950 "Uniting for Peace" resolution.<sup>1</sup> France repeated its reservations about that resolution, which it had always regarded as illegal because it changed the rules regarding competence set out in the Charter. Madagascar stated that it had abstained because this reference opened up the possibility for United Nations intervention, which would be inadvisable in view of the position taken by Afghanistan. There was also a danger of misinterpretation, Madagascar added, since if the sponsors had wished to organize a collective operation under the 1950 resolution they should have detailed its nature, form and conditions.

Others that abstained included Finland, which said that, although it shared the view that inviolability of frontiers and national self-determination must be respected, it had followed its policy of neutrality. Nicaragua felt the resolution was only a partial approach to the problem.

A number of States gave their reasons for opposing the text. Grenada said the presence of Soviet troops was in keeping with Charter provisions relating to the right of individual and collective self-defence and the 1978 Afghan-Soviet treaty; moreover, the events in question posed no threat to international peace and security. Mozambique spoke in a similar vein.

The German Democratic Republic felt the resolution would aggravate the danger of confrontation since it slandered both Afghanistan and the USSR and contained a reference to the

1950 resolution, which it said had been put together to justify intervention in Korea.

The USSR considered the resolution as impermissible interference in Afghanistan's affairs and a violation of the Charter.

Romania said it had not participated in the vote since it had sought a solution in keeping with the Charter which would guarantee the Afghan people the right to determine their future without outside interference and at the same time prevent increasing international tension by ensuring that détente, understanding and co-operation of the peoples of the world would not be adversely affected.

In his closing statement, the President of the General Assembly remarked upon the central theme that had emerged during the debate, namely the standard of conduct between nations which, many speakers had repeatedly emphasized, must be based on strict adherence to the fundamental principles of the Charter and the decisions of the Assembly. It was therefore incumbent on all Member States, he said, to take measures to prevent exacerbation of the situation and, with a dedication to the preservation of international peace and security, reverse the deteriorating trend in the international atmosphere.

During the Assembly's deliberations, two related communications addressed to the Secretary-General were received from Afghanistan and Mongolia.

By a letter of 10 January, the representative of Afghanistan transmitted: a policy statement of the Government of Afghanistan delivered by radio on 1 January by President Babrak Karmal; and a proclamation of general amnesty, dated 2 January, for political prisoners imprisoned by the former regime of Amin. The policy statement denounced the former regime, urged support for the new Government, and outlined its domestic and foreign policies.

On 11 January, Mongolia transmitted a statement issued the day before by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, supporting the USSR's actions in response to a legitimate request by Afghanistan and opposing discussion of the subject in the United Nations.

Report of the Credentials Committee

The Credentials Committee met on 11 January to examine the credentials of representatives to the sixth emergency special session.

The USSR stated that the credentials of the representatives of Democratic Kampuchea were invalid since it considered the People's Revolutionary Council of the People's Republic of Kampuchea to be the sole legitimate representative of that country—a position supported by the Congo. The USSR also could not recognize the representatives of Chile as they were appointed by a regime it did not recognize. The United States said that since Chile was a Member of the United Nations in good standing there was no basis to challenge its credentials, a view also held by Ecuador and Panama.

China, Ecuador, Pakistan, Panama and the United States considered that the credentials of the representatives of Democratic Kampuchea were in order, since they had been recognized at previous sessions, and stressed that their acceptance of the credentials of the representatives of Afghanistan should not be taken as acquiescing in the armed intervention in that country.

Senegal saw the Committee's task as purely technical and, therefore, did not consider it necessary to express reservations, a viewpoint shared by Belgium which pointed out that any Committee action should not be construed as approval of country policies.

On the proposal of the Chairman, the Committee approved without vote a resolution by which, after taking into account the different reservations expressed, it accepted the credentials of all the representatives to the session. Also approved without vote was a draft proposed by the Chairman to have the General Assembly approve the report of the Credentials Committee.

On 14 January, this text was similarly adopted by the Assembly as resolution ES-6/1.

Communications (16 January-17 November)

A number of communications concerning Afghanistan were received by the Secretary-General from mid-January through mid-November.

On 16 January, Afghanistan transmitted a letter addressed to the President of the United States from the widow of former Prime Minister Taraki of Afghanistan, criticizing United States acknowledgement of Amin as Afghanistan's legitimate leader in disregard of his record which, the letter said, included the murder of her husband and the torturing and killing of thousands of innocent people. The United States should not have kept silent in the face of these events, she said.

Several communications expressed concern over the situation in Afghanistan, condemned the Soviet military intervention and demanded the immediate withdrawal of its troops.

The Adviser for Foreign Affairs of Pakistan, in his capacity as Chairman of an extraordinary session of the Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Islamabad, 27-29 January), transmitted the resolutions and final communique of the session on 11 February. The Conference decided to suspend Afghanistan's membership in the Organization of the Islamic Conference, urged support for the Afghan people, invited its member States to withhold recognition of or sever diplomatic relations with what it termed the illegal regime, and called on them to withhold economic aid to that regime.

Three letters were received from Italy, on behalf of the member States of the European Community. A letter of 17 January contained a statement issued at Brussels, Belgium, on 15 January by the Foreign Ministers of the Community's members urging the USSR to conform to the Assembly's resolution of 14 January and stating that the explanations given by the USSR for its intervention in Afghanistan were unacceptable. A 5 May letter contained a declaration issued on 28 April at a meeting of heads of State and Government and the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Community, meeting as the European Council at Luxembourg. The nine States proposed that the great powers and neighbouring States should undertake to respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Afghanistan, refrain from interfering in its internal affairs and renounce any stationing of troops on its soil or any military association with it. They said they were ready to support any initiative designed to promote a solution which would allow Afghanistan to return to its position as a neutral, non-aligned State and believed the Islamic and non-aligned countries had a particularly significant role to play in this respect. The European Council issued a further declaration from Venice, Italy, on 13 June. This statement, contained in a letter of 16 June, expressed concern at the intensification of Soviet military activity in Afghanistan and repeated the Council's readiness to support any initiative towards solution of the problem in keeping with the Assembly's January resolution.

The Prime Minister of Solomon Islands, in a telegram of 16 January, said his country was greatly disturbed at the intervention in an independent country whose people should be allowed to choose their own form of government. In a statement transmitted by an 8 February telegram, the Prime Minister of Dominica condemned the USSR invasion, said that it could not be condoned and strongly deprecated the violation of Afghanistan's territorial integrity.

Communications from Afghanistan outlined aspects of the situation in that country. The Foreign Minister, in a letter of 24 February transmitted on 5 March, cited continued interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs by external forces headed by the United States in collusion with Chinese and Pakistan circles. He accused them, together with Egyptian supporters, of supplying weapons to armed bands being trained in Pakistan with the intention of disturbing the peaceful life of the Afghan people.

A 24 March letter transmitted a statement of 10 March by the Government of Afghanistan refuting what it said was a misleading propaganda campaign by the enemies of the revolution. The statement said that a large part of a so-called refugee problem was no more than the usual seasonal nomadic migrations which had taken place throughout history. Enemies of the revolution abroad could not be termed refugees; the genuine refugees were those who had left the country because of the oppressive regime of Amin, and the Government was ready to co-operate in helping them to return to their homes.

The eleventh Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Islamabad, 17-22 May) was the subject of an Afghan Government statement dated 8 April and forwarded by a note verbale of 24 April. Afghanistan thereby protested not having been invited to participate in the Conference, declared that any debate on the so-called Afghanistan issue would be considered as flagrant intervention in Afghanistan's internal affairs, and said that suspension of its membership in the Conference was illegal.

On 19 May, an Afghan Government statement charged that neighbouring territories were being used in an undeclared war against Afghanistan. On 25 March it had wiped out a subversive band sent from abroad and had seized United States-made hand grenades containing poisonous gas. The statement added that charges in the Western press that Afghanistan was using chemical weapons against terrorists were absurd and groundless. Additional charges that chemical weapons were being used against Afghanistan were contained in an Afghan Government statement of 20 August, transmitted by a note verbale dated 4 September.

A proposed programme of political settlement was put forward by the Afghan Government on 15 May and transmitted on 17 May. The proposals included: negotiations with Iran and Pakistan without pre-conditions; a general amnesty for Afghans wishing to return to Afghanistan; consideration of outstanding bilateral problems; cessation of hostile activities against Afghanistan; political guarantees from other States; resolution of the question of withdrawal of the limited Soviet military contingents within the context of a political settlement; and support for turning the Indian Ocean and the Persian Gulf into a zone of peace. Afghanistan declared that questions pertaining to its interests could not be resolved without its participation.

Letters from Afghanistan (17 November) and Pakistan (6 November) accused each other of air-space violations. The Afghan letter detailed 22 such incidents between September 1978 and October 1980, while Pakistan protested against three armed incursions by helicopter gunships in September and October 1980 which it said had caused several casualties.

A note verbale of 18 September annexed a letter of 9 September from the President and Prime Minister of Afghanistan addressed to the World Parliament of the Peoples for Peace. Only by negotiations, he said, could a solution be found to the outstanding issues of mutual interest to the region.

Action by the General Assembly (November)

A letter of 16 July to the Secretary-General requested inclusion in the agenda of the thirty-fifth (1980) session of the General Assembly of an item entitled "The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security." The letter was signed by 35 States: Bangladesh, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Egypt, Fiji, Gambia, Honduras, Indonesia, Iran, Malaysia, Maldives, Mauritania, Morocco, Nepal, Niger, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Qatar, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Singapore, Somalia, the Sudan, Suriname, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, Uruguay. They explained that, notwithstanding the adoption of resolution ES-6/2 in January, the continued presence of foreign armed forces in Afghanistan and the continued exodus of Afghan refugees into Pakistan remained a grave threat to regional as well as international peace and security.

On 17 September, the General Committee recommended that the item be included in the Assembly's agenda. Speaking in the Committee, the USSR reiterated that discussion of the question would be interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs. Mongolia spoke likewise, adding that the situation in that country had stabilized. According to Bulgaria, Afghanistan had been the victim of a threat to its peace and security.

Afghanistan said there was nothing in international law which prevented a sovereign State from appealing to a friendly country for protection; on the other hand, the sending of gangs to commit sabotage constituted an act of aggression.

Pakistan stated that world concern about events in Afghanistan was evidenced by the fact that 35 Member States had requested consideration of the item. The situation there had worsened with an increased foreign military presence and large numbers of refugees, the majority of whom were in Pakistan. Malaysia felt that the refugee problem alone justified the Assembly's consideration, while Senegal said the Afghanistan situation was typical of a non-aligned country occupied by a super-power.

China charged that the USSR had ignored the Assembly's call for immediate troop withdrawal and was reinforcing its military strength in Afghanistan with a view to further regional expansion.

The General Assembly considered the item at six meetings held from 17 to 20 November. Opening the debate, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Pakistan introduced a draft resolution sponsored by 42 Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

On 20 November, the Assembly adopted it by a recorded vote of 111 to 22, with 12 abstentions, as resolution 35/37.

By this resolution, the Assembly reiterated that preservation of the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and non-aligned character of Afghanistan was essential for a peaceful solution of the problem, reaffirmed the Afghan people's right to determine their own form of government and their economic, political and social system free from outside intervention, subversion, coercion or constraint of any kind, and called for the immediate withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan. The Assembly also called on all parties concerned to work for the urgent achievement of a political solution and creation of conditions enabling the Afghan refugees to return voluntarily to their homes in safety and honour, and appealed to all States and national and international organizations to extend humanitarian aid to the refugees, in co-ordination with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to alleviate their hardship. The Assembly expressed appreciation of the Secretary-General's efforts in the search for a solution to the problem. It hoped he would continue his assistance, including appointing a special representative, to promote a political solution in accordance with this resolution and explore ways to secure guarantees of non-use or threat of force against all neighbouring States, based on mutual guarantees and strict non-interference in each other's internal affairs and with full regard for Charter principles. The Assembly further asked him to keep Member States and the Security Council concurrently informed on progress and to report to them on the situation at the earliest opportunity.

The Pakistan Foreign Minister said that, since consideration of the question in January, there had been an alarming intensification of conflict within Afghanistan and the number of Soviet troops had increased. He pointed out that Pakistan, already burdened with 1.2 million Afghan refugees, was having to cope with a continuing influx—a situation that put great strain on its limited resources. He added that Pakistan would recognize any Afghan Government once the foreign troops were withdrawn.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Afghanistan regretted that, despite his Government's objections and in violation of the Charter, the Assembly had been induced to discuss the so-called situation in Afghanistan. He reiterated that events since the 1978 Saur uprising were entirely an internal affair, discussion of which was a regrettable waste of time and diverted the world community's attention from real issues threatening international peace and security. He emphasized that the Assembly should condemn the continuing interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs by imperialistic, hegemonic and other reactionary forces. He pointed out that Afghanistan was prepared to seek a political settlement, as evidenced by its comprehensive proposals put forward on 15 May and by recent declarations by the leaders of Afghanistan and the USSR.

The representative of the USSR said that the Assembly had chosen to ignore the real external dangers to the security of Afghanistan, as evidenced by 30 military camps and 50 bases in Pakistan from which mercenaries were trained, equipped and sent to Afghanistan. He said that, contrary to their declared intentions, the sponsors of the resolution could not hope to achieve normalization of the situation in South-West Asia through the terms of their text; in particular, the demand for withdrawal of Soviet forces without a corresponding end to the interference and armed incursions in Afghanistan lacked political realism. In keeping with declarations of the leaders and senior officials of Afghanistan and the USSR, he said, the military contingents would be withdrawn as soon as the reasons that had necessitated them had been removed.

Speaking in support of the position of Afghanistan and the USSR, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Hungary, Madagascar, Mozambique and Poland were among those which reiterated criticism of the use of the United Nations forum for interference in the internal affairs of a Member State. Czechoslovakia and the Lao People's Democratic Republic stated that the resolution was dangerous since it might set a precedent for such interference. The German Democratic Republic said a Soviet troop withdrawal would be tantamount to encouraging the counter-revolutionary forces in Afghanistan. Grenada charged that external forces were increasing their efforts to thwart the Afghan revolution.

Democratic Yemen, the Ukrainian SSR and Viet Nam felt that the May proposals of the Afghan Government could form the basis for a political solution. According to Mongolia, the refugee question had been artificially created, inasmuch as Pakistan was not allowing persons to return to Afghan territory but was forcing them to so-called centres where foreign instructors were training diversionary groups to infiltrate Afghanistan.

The large majority of States expressed grave disquiet at the continuation of the tense situation in Afghanistan and the surrounding region, calling on that country to settle its problems through peaceful negotiations and on the USSR to withdraw its forces. Concern for the increasing numbers of refugees in Pakistan was also voiced.

Luxembourg, on behalf of the European Economic Community, said the Community's member States rejected any solution that would not give the Afghan people the right to choose their own destiny and leaders. This position was shared by Australia and Sweden, which added that the international community should demonstrate that the USSR's behaviour attracted the widest possible condemnation. New Zealand and Zaire said the USSR's actions breached its special responsibilities as a Security Council member. Liberia stated that it could no longer take the USSR at its word because of its actions in Afghanistan.

Albania, China and Democratic Kampuchea were among those which accused the USSR of interference in Afghanistan. Spain and the United States pointed out that, instead of complying with the Assembly's demand for withdrawal, the USSR had increased the strength of its forces.

The Ivory Coast and Paraguay repudiated efforts to justify the invasion. Suriname could not understand how the rationalizations put forward for the armed intervention could explain the fact that more than 1.2 million refugees had left Afghanistan. Japan also voiced concern over this aspect and other implications for Pakistan of the Soviet intervention. Israel, too, said the situation had taken on further far-reaching implications which threatened the fundamental balance of the international system. Greece, among others, joined in expressing concern over the situation's effect on detente.

The United Kingdom stated that nothing that Afghanistan or the USSR had proposed contained any basis for genuine negotiation; the Afghan proposals put forward in May seemed to be aimed primarily at legitimizing the new regime.

Kenya felt that justifying the aggressor's deeds would nullify the purposes of the Charter and undermine the security of developing nations. Yugoslavia said problems could not be solved by the imposition of an alien will on independent countries; Portugal held a similar view.

India observed that its participation in the debate was to advise restraint, rather than apportion blame, and warned that a resolution unacceptable to the countries directly involved would be counter-productive.

Austria felt that the 42-power resolution dealt with the main problem succinctly-finding a political and negotiated settlement. Canada would have preferred that its wording match more closely the Assembly's previous resolution on the question.

Though they voted in favour of the resolution, several countries expressed reservations on its wording. Albania reiterated that it should have contained a more specific condemnation of the USSR's aggression; it also lacked a provision supporting the Afghan people's armed struggle for national liberation. Zambia would have liked a warning added against rivalries between power blocs in the spirit of the principles of the Non-Aligned Movement. Sri Lanka would have preferred that the resolution not be necessary since it did not wish to pass judgement on a great power.

Explaining its negative vote, Sao Tome and Principe stated that the text did not meet the reasonable requirement that it satisfy the country involved. Seychelles opposed it, believing that it ignored the existence of a Government in Afghanistan, that the withdrawal of the Soviet troops was a matter between the two Governments, and that the same guarantees and non-interference that neighbouring States were calling for should apply to their relations with Afghanistan also.

Afghanistan rejected the text as a whole as illegal and not binding, and the USSR, opposing it, said that, since Afghanistan had stated that it was prepared to negotiate, it was up to the other side to show political will for a settlement in the interests of all in South-West Asia. Madagascar said the mandate of the special representative exceeded what was generally expected of a mediator or peacemaker and seemed premature in any case.

Romania said it had not participated in the vote; its efforts to persuade the text's sponsors to include specific proposals it considered likely to lead to a political settlement had not succeeded.

Nicaragua, which abstained, felt that the resolution took no historical perspective and had many shortcomings and distortions.

Cyprus abstained in the vote in order to protest the lack of interest shown by the world community over the occupation of Cyprus by foreign forces since 1974. This explanation was contained in a letter of 20 November to the Secretary-General.

At a 22 September meeting of the Credentials Committee, appointed to examine the credentials of representatives to the thirty-fifth session, China, Singapore and the United States stated that acceptance of the credentials of the representatives of Afghanistan should in no way be taken as acquiescence to the situation created by the USSR's armed intervention in that country. Haiti said that, although it had no objection to Afghanistan's credentials, it was not prepared to recognize a régime dominated by a foreign power. The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security,"

Recalling its resolution ES-6/2 of 14 January 1980 adopted at its sixth emergency special session,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the obligation of all States to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of any State,

Reaffirming further the inalienable right of all peoples to determine their own form of government and to choose their own economic, political and social system free from outside intervention, subversion, coercion or constraint of any kind whatsoever,

Gravely concerned at the continuing foreign armed intervention in Afghanistan, in contravention of the above principles, and its serious implications for international peace and security,

Deeply concerned at the increasing outflow of refugees from Afghanistan,

Deeply conscious of the urgent need for a political solution of the grave situation in respect of Afghanistan,

Recognizing the importance of the continuing efforts and initiatives of the Organization of the Islamic Conference for a political solution of the situation in respect of Afghanistan,

1. Reiterates that the preservation of the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and non-aligned character of Afghanistan is essential for a peaceful solution of the problem;

2. Reaffirms the right of the Afghan people to determine their own form of government and to choose their economic, political and social system free from outside intervention, subversion, coercion or constraint of any kind whatsoever;

3. Calls for the immediate withdrawal of the foreign troops from Afghanistan;

4. Also calls upon all parties concerned to work for the urgent achievement of a political solution and the creation of the necessary conditions which would enable the Afghan refugees to return voluntarily to their homes in safety and honour;

5. Appeals to all States and national and international organizations to extend humanitarian relief assistance, with a view to alleviating the hardship of the Afghan refugees, in co-ordination with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

6. Expresses its appreciation of the efforts of the Secretary-General in the search for a solution to the problem and hopes that he will continue to extend assistance, including the appointment of a special representative, with a view to promoting a political solution in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution, and the exploration of securing appropriate guarantees for non-use of force, or threat of use of force, against the political independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and security of all neighbouring States, on the basis of mutual guarantees and strict non-interference in each other's internal affairs and with full regard for the principles of the Charter of the United Nations;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to keep Member States and the Security Council concurrently informed of progress towards the implementation of the present resolution and to submit to Member States a report on the situation at the earliest appropriate opportunity;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session the item entitled "The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security."

Relations between Iran and the United States

The deteriorating relations between Iran and the United States relating to the holding of United States hostages-detained by a group of Iranians since 4 November 1979<sup>2</sup>-occupied the Security Council at a meeting held in two parts on 11 and 13 January 1980 during which the Secretary-General reported on his visit to Iran earlier that month to assess the situation. A draft resolution sponsored by the United States-which would have had the Council call on Iran for the immediate release of the hostages and, pending their safe return, call on all Member States to impose sanctions on that country-was rejected owing to the negative vote of a permanent member of the Council.

Report of the Secretary-General

On 6 January 1980, the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council in pursuance of Council resolutions of 4 and 31 December 1979,<sup>3</sup> and gave an account of a visit he had made to Iran from 1 to 3 January 1980. The visit was undertaken with a view to contributing to solution of the crisis which had arisen between Iran and the United States over the seizure by Iranian students on 4 November 1979 of United States Embassy personnel and the occupation of its Embassy in Teheran. During his visit, the Secretary-General had held discussions with the Iranian Minister for Foreign Affairs, Sadegh Ghotbzadeh, and other members of the Revolutionary Council, the report said. The Secretary-General concluded that, despite difficulties encountered during his visit to Teheran owing to the particular power structure in the country, the trip had been useful and had increased his understanding of the crisis. His extensive talks had given him clearer insight into the Iranian leaders' position; at that time, they were not prepared to respond to the call of the international community for immediate release of the hostages, an issue which they continued to link to the extradition from the United States of former Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi and the return of assets allegedly illegally taken from Iran by him. At the same time, they had expressed support for the idea of establishing an international inquiry committee to investigate allegations of grave violations of human rights and of illegal acts under the previous régime in Iran, which would report to the United Nations for action. The Secretary-General had indicated that the release of the hostages should take place before or at least coincide with the establishment of such a committee.

Consideration by the Security Council (11 and 13 January)

On 11 January 1980, the Security Council resumed consideration, begun in 1979, of the situation that had arisen in relations between the United States and Iran. The Council had before it a draft resolution submitted by the United States whereby the Security Council would again urgently call on the Government of Iran to release immediately all United States hostages, provide them protection and allow them to leave the country. The Council would decide that, pending the hostages' release and safe departure from Iran, all United Nations Member States were to: prevent the sale or supply to Iran, by their nationals or from their territories, of all items except food, medicine, and supplies intended strictly for medical purposes; prevent shipment from their territories of such items by means of transport under their jurisdiction, and on vessels or aircraft registered in Iran; deny new credits, loans or payment facilities to the Iranian authorities; reduce to a minimum the personnel of Iranian diplomatic missions accredited to them; and prevent their nationals or firms from engaging in new contracts in support of industrial projects in Iran or in any activity which had the purpose of evading the decisions set out in the resolution.

The Security Council would also decide that all Member States were to give effect forthwith to the above decisions, notwithstanding any contract entered into or licence granted before the date of the resolution. It would call on Member States to carry out these decisions in accordance with their agreement to do so under Article 25 of the Charter of the United Nations,<sup>4</sup> and urge non-Member States and United Nations bodies and related agencies to conform their relations with Iran to the terms of the resolution. Finally, it would call on all Member States and members of the specialized agencies to report to the Secretary-General by 1 February on their implementation measures and request him to submit a first report to the Council by 1 March.

The Secretary-General reported on developments since his return from Iran. He had discussed his visit with the United States President and other United States officials and had sought from Iranian officials clarification of certain aspects of the talks he had had while in Teheran, but a mutually satisfactory solution to the problem had not been found. However, the Secretary-General said he would continue to make every effort towards that end.

The representative of the United States stated that, in view of Iran's non-compliance with the Security Council's resolution of 31 December 1979,<sup>5</sup> it was time for the Council to adopt effective measures under Articles 39 and 41 of the United Nations Charter. Those measures, contained in the draft resolution before the Council, would serve to demonstrate that Iran's continued defiance of international law would result in its increased isolation from the international community, he said. Failure by the Council to act would only confirm the belief of those in Iran who felt that they could act with impunity.

The USSR reaffirmed its position that violation of the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations<sup>6</sup> contradicted international law.

However, the USSR could not accept that the actions of Iran threatened international peace and security, since it considered the dispute to be bilateral and not falling within the purview of Chapter VII of the Charter. These views were shared by the German Democratic Republic, which added that imposition of sanctions would only worsen the situation. According to the USSR, the dispute should be settled through peaceful means and, since the text before the Council sought to involve the United Nations in the United States policy of pressure and threats against Iran, the USSR considered the proposal inadmissible.

Bangladesh and Mexico agreed that imposition of sanctions would be ineffective and indeed might be counter-productive. Bangladesh added that they might unleash a chain of events with far-reaching implications for the security of the region. Jamaica said it had hoped that contemplating such a drastic step would not be necessary, but said that the Council had to act and must be seen to act positively; it continued to believe, however, that parallel initiatives should be pursued, particularly a means for dealing with the concerns of Iran. The Niger, too, said it had no enthusiasm for sanctions but would vote in favour of the draft in order to uphold the Organization's credibility. Speaking as the representative of France, the Council President said he hoped that economic sanctions would quickly become unnecessary.

Tunisia stated that its initial faith in the Iranian revolution had been shaken by Iran's serious transgression of international conventions and Islamic ethics.

Zambia said it continued to believe that the primary issue was release of the hostages but that there were positive elements that could be explored by the Council, as reflected in the Secretary-General's report.

The United Kingdom, however, said that, since the conclusions reached in the report plainly indicated that the Iranian leaders were not prepared to respond to the international community's call for the hostages' release, the Council had no alternative but to resort to further measures. Norway and Portugal concurred and expressed the hope that early release of the hostages would avert any need to implement the measures.

The draft resolution was put to a vote on 13 January and received 10 votes in favour, 2 against (German Democratic Republic, USSR) and 2 abstentions (Bangladesh, Mexico) and was therefore not adopted due to the negative vote of a permanent member of the Council. China did not participate in the voting.

Speaking after the vote, China appealed to the parties concerned to exercise restraint, avoid taking any action that would aggravate the situation and refrain from blocking channels that might lead to the release of the hostages through consultation and mediation, the possibility of which continued to exist and deserved further exploration. China felt that economic sanctions might not necessarily lead to relaxation of tension and the hostages' release.

The United States stated that the USSR's vote was an irresponsible exercise of its veto power and an act of political expediency designed to buy Iranian silence on Afghanistan and Soviet advantage in the area; it demonstrated that Soviet policy conformed to international norms only on a selective and self-serving basis.

The USSR stated that it had used the veto to defend the Iranian people's interests and had undermined a United States attempt to use the United Nations for covert plans to intervene flagrantly in Iran and undertake hostile activities.

Communications (14 February- 9 June)

From February through June, the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council received several communications concerning relations between Iran and the United States.

By a letter of 11 February, Pakistan transmitted the resolutions and final communique adopted at an extraordinary session of the Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Islamabad, 27-29 January). By one of the resolutions, the Conference expressed the wish that Iran and the United States would resolve their problems peacefully, declared its opposition to the use of force, intimidation, interference or imposition of economic sanctions against Iran, and declared its solidarity with the people of Iran in choosing whatever system they preferred.

On 14 February, Iran transmitted a note of that date from its Ministry of Foreign Affairs protesting involvement by the Canadian Embassy in Teheran in what it termed the illicit and fraudulent exit from Iran of six United States nationals formerly attached to the United States Embassy in Teheran.

A letter of 8 April from the United States contained a statement made the previous day by the President of the United States on measures being taken in the light of the failure of Iran to release the hostages. These included: severing diplomatic relations; putting into effect the sanctions envisaged in the United States proposal in the Security Council (see preceding section); compiling an inventory of Iranian assets frozen by the United States and outstanding claims against Iran in order to facilitate their processing; and the invalidation of visas issued to Iranian citizens for entry into the United States.

In a further statement made on 25 April and transmitted that day, the United States President informed the Council President that late on 24 April he had cancelled, because of equipment failure, a helicopter mission which was under way in Iran to rescue the hostages. Eight crewmen of two aircraft which collided following a refuelling operation were killed and several wounded. He stated that the humanitarian mission was not directed against Iran or the Iranian people but was undertaken to protect American lives and interests and to reduce world tensions caused by the continuing crisis.

The United States action was termed by Iran as military aggression and an act of invasion-charges made in a 25 April telegram from the Iranian Foreign Minister transmitted by a note verbale of 28 April. He called on the Secretary-General to investigate and expose such acts against Member States.

The position of the heads of State and Government and the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the nine member States of the European Community, meeting as the European Council, was issued at Luxembourg on 28 April. Italy informed the Secretary-General, by a letter of 5 May, that the nine States had repeatedly condemned the hostage-taking and occupation of the United States Embassy as inadmissible violations of international law, reaffirmed their solidarity with the United States and declared full support for the steps which the Secretary-General intended to take for their release.

By a letter of 9 June, the United States transmitted the Judgment of the International Court of Justice, delivered on 24 May, in the case concerning United States Diplomatic and Consular Staff in Tehran (United States of America v. Iran) (for details, see p. 1121).

On 16 January, Costa Rica had also appealed for the hostages' release (see p. 344).

Situation between Iran and Iraq

In September 1980, an outbreak of armed conflict between Iran and Iraq caused the Secretary-General, on 22 September, to appeal to both countries for restraint and a negotiated solution, offering his assistance to this end. The following day, the Security Council President issued a statement expressing the Council's concern at the situation and appealing to Iran and Iraq to desist from armed activity.

At the request of Mexico and Norway, the Security Council considered the matter at meetings held on 26 and 28 September and adopted resolution 479(1980) calling on Iran and Iraq to cease hostilities and urging them to accept mediation or conciliation. The Council also called on other States to avoid widening the conflict and supported the Secretary-General's efforts towards resolving the situation.

Consideration of the question was resumed at Council meetings in October and the Council President issued a further statement on 5 November urging all those concerned to be guided by their obligations under the Charter of the United Nations, reiterating full support for the Secretary-General's good offices and welcoming his intention to send a representative to the region to facilitate urgent peace negotiations.

Communications (21 May-26 September)

From mid-May through mid-September, the Secretary-General received a number of communications apprising him of the worsening relations between Iran and Iraq. He also addressed several communications on this problem to the two countries and to the President of the Security Council.

In a letter of 21 May, the representative of Iraq transmitted what were said to be the confessions of a member of an Iranian-backed group, the A1-Da'awa (Call) Party, which indicated that its agents planned to transform Iraq into a Persian province and perpetrate criminal acts against the Iraqi people and their leadership.

On 20 June, Iraq rejected accusations by Iran to the effect that Iraq had expelled from its territory thousands of Iranians as well as Iraqi citizens of Iranian origin, thereby forcing them into a refugee situation in violation of the principles of human rights. Iraq stated that, on the contrary, it was the Iranians in Iraq who had committed indiscriminate acts of terrorism against the people of Iraq with the explicit blessing of Iranian authorities.

By a letter of 23 July, Iran transmitted a telegram of the same date from its Minister for Foreign Affairs who stated that, since the Islamic Republic of Iran had been established, Iraq had adopted a hostile policy towards Iran by: trying to undermine its stability through armed border incursions; supporting subversive elements in the Iranian provinces of Khuzestan and Kurdistan; and broadcasting radio messages against the Iranian leadership. The Foreign Minister pointed out that Iraq had expelled about 40,000 Shiite Moslems of Iranian origin, many of whom had lived in Iraq for generations and had acquired Iraqi nationality.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq, in a letter dated 21 September transmitted the following day, charged that Iran had violated an agreement concluded on 6 March 1975 at Algiers, Algeria, and a Treaty on State frontiers and good-neighbourliness signed by the two countries at Baghdad, Iraq, on 13 June 1975, as well as four supplementary agreements of 26 December 1975 relating to navigation in the Shatt al-Arab River and other matters. Iraq therefore understood that the pre-1975 position had been reinstated, thus rendering void the legal relationship governing the Iraqi-Iranian boundaries, including Iraq's recovery of full control and sovereignty over the Shatt al-Arab. Moreover, the Foreign Minister stated, the new regime in Iran had adopted a policy of continuous interference in the internal affairs of Iraq. He affirmed that, in spite of such provocations, the Iraqi Government wished to maintain good relations with Iran and had no intention of waging war against Iran beyond the necessity to defend its territorial integrity.

A further letter from the Iraqi Foreign Minister, dated 24 September, stated that Iraq had decided on 17 September to consider the Algiers agreement as terminated since Iran had failed to honour its obligations. Having exhausted all peaceful means of negotiation at its disposal, Iraq had decided to reassert its rights against Iran. By Iran's indiscriminate actions against the interests of Iraq, the region and the international community, Iraq was left with a narrow choice, namely to act in self-defence. Iraq was ready to present its point of view to the Security Council, he said.

A 23 September statement by the Tunisian Government, transmitted on 25 September, appealed to the two countries to cease fighting immediately and to resort to peaceful means to settle all disputes between them within the framework of Islamic solidarity and of the principles of the United Nations Charter.

In a letter of 23 September to the Security Council President, the Secretary-General recalled an appeal he had made the day before to the parties to end the fighting and make every possible effort to settle their differences by negotiation, to which end he had offered his good offices. In view of the danger that would arise from a further escalation of the conflict, he felt it was urgently necessary, and asked the President to arrange, for Council members to meet in consultation.

On 23 September, the Council President issued the following statement:

Members of the Security Council have today exchanged views in informal consultations on the extremely serious situation prevailing between Iran and Iraq. They have taken note of the sharp deterioration in relations and of the escalation in armed activity leading to loss of life and heavy material damage.

Members of the Council are deeply concerned that this conflict can prove increasingly serious and could pose a grave threat to international peace and security.

The members of the Council welcome and fully support the appeal of the Secretary-General, addressed to both parties on 22 September 1980, as well as the offer that he has made of his good offices to resolve the present conflict.

The members of the Council have asked me to appeal, on their behalf, to the Governments of Iran and Iraq, as a first step towards a solution of the conflict, to desist from all armed activity and all acts that may worsen the present dangerous situation and to settle their dispute by peaceful means.

In pursuance of the consultations held by the Council on 23 September, the Secretary-General the next day transmitted to the Council President a letter of that date he had addressed to the Presidents of Iran and Iraq. The Secretary-General recalled his appeal of 22 September and, without prejudice to the rights, claims or positions of the parties, appealed to them to end the bloodshed and avail themselves of the good offices-including his own-offered to assist them in settling their differences peacefully.

A further letter from the Secretary-General to the Council President, of 25 September, stated that, in spite of all efforts, intensified fighting between Iran and Iraq had continued on land and sea and in the air, resulting in loss of life and great property damage. The situation, he repeated, undoubtedly threatened international peace and security. He therefore suggested that the Security Council consider the matter with utmost urgency.

The President of Iraq responded to the Secretary-General's appeal in a letter of 26 September. The Iraqi President declared that his country had not interfered with interests affecting the peace, security and economy of the world, but had simply acted to adhere to and restore its legitimate rights. It was Iran that had escalated the situation by indiscriminately striking at interests vital not only to Iraq but to the region and the whole world, leaving Iraq no choice but to act in preventive self-defence in order to gain Iran's recognition of his country's rights in its lands and sovereignty over its national waters. Furthermore, Iraq wished to know Iran's position with regard to a cease-fire. The Secretary-General responded on 26 September, stating that the request for a cease-fire had been addressed in exactly the same terms to both Governments and expressing hope for their earliest possible responses. He forwarded these letters to the Security Council President on 26 September.

On 26 September, Mexico and Norway jointly requested the Council President to convene a Council meeting to consider the ongoing conflict between Iran and Iraq.

Meetings of the Security Council (26 and 28 September)

The Security Council considered the situation engendered by the conflict between Iran and Iraq at two meetings held on 26 and 28 September. At their request, the representatives of Iraq and Japan were invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

On 26 September, the Secretary-General summarized the developments leading to the meeting of the Council and said that, despite all efforts, the fighting between Iran and Iraq had continued and intensified. He informed the Council that the Organization of the Islamic Conference had met at the foreign minister level, also in New York that day, to assist in resolving the differences between the two Governments, and he had been informed that the Conference was to send a goodwill mission-to be regarded as complementary to the efforts of the Security Council-to Iran and Iraq. The Secretary-General said he welcomed this initiative, reiterated his deep concern at the escalation of the conflict and appealed to the Council to exercise its primary responsibility by finding a way to end the fighting and promote a settlement through peaceful means.

Mexico and Norway said they appreciated the ongoing efforts of the Secretary-General, the Non-Aligned Movement and the Islamic Conference to bring about a cessation of hostilities, but they also felt that nothing could relieve the Security Council of its primary responsibility for maintaining international peace and security. They had therefore decided to request direct action by the Council in the hope that it might be able to end the hostilities.

The representative of Iraq quoted from a statement by the Iraqi Foreign Minister, issued earlier that day at Baghdad, emphasizing the principles of non-interference in internal affairs of States, respect for national sovereignty and concern for maintenance of international peace and security-principles which, he said, Iraq had repeatedly tried to persuade Iran to accept. The Foreign Minister added that Iraq had no ambitions concerning Iran's territory; it aimed at Iran's acknowledgement of his country's national rights, its non-interference in Iraq's internal affairs, lasting peace on the common border and good-neighbourly relations. Iraq welcomed efforts for mediation, good offices and consideration of the problem at all levels. However, it was acting in accordance with its sense of responsibility and its belief in the principles of non-alignment and the United Nations Charter, after all political means and invocation of international law and custom had failed. The representative of Iraq concluded by requesting that, should the Council move into substantive discussion and consider draft resolutions, Iraq be given the opportunity to present its case in full through its Foreign Minister, who was prepared to travel to New York.

On 28 September, the President of the Security Council announced that the Iraqi Government had informed him that it was accepting the offer of good offices emanating from the Islamic Conference, that a mission from that organization, composed of the President of Pakistan and the Secretary-General of the Conference, had arrived in Teheran where it had been well received and that the mission was to proceed to Baghdad. He then drew attention to a draft resolution sponsored by Mexico, which the Council adopted unanimously that day as resolution 479 (1980). After calling on Iran and Iraq to refrain immediately from any further use of force and to settle their dispute by peaceful means and in conformity with principles of justice and international law, the Council, by this resolution, urged them to accept any offer of mediation or conciliation or other peaceful means that would facilitate fulfilment of their Charter obligations. The Council also called on all other States to exercise the utmost restraint and to refrain from any act that might further escalate or widen the conflict, supported the Secretary-General's efforts and his offer of good offices, and requested him to report to it within 48 hours.

The Secretary-General pointed out that his ability to report within 48 hours depended on the responses of the parties concerned. He therefore appealed to them to respond urgently to the terms of the resolution.

All those speaking after adoption of the resolution emphasized that both countries should use moderation, abandon the use of force and resort to peaceful means to settle the dispute.

The United States said it would observe strict neutrality and expected other nations to follow suit; it also stressed that freedom of navigation to and from the Persian Gulf must not be infringed-a view shared by Japan.

Bangladesh, Jamaica, the Niger and Tunisia were among those which expressed appreciation for all efforts aimed at mediation and particularly those of the Islamic Conference. The United Kingdom urged that the Conference continue its efforts and indicated, as did France, Japan and Zambia, that it was prepared to support any Council initiative towards restoring peace.

China maintained that disputes between third world countries could and must be settled peacefully through consultation or negotiation.

The German Democratic Republic cautioned against the Council's facilitating direct intervention in the affairs of the Persian Gulf and added that it believed that all means of peaceful settlement had by no means been exhausted.

The USSR thought it might have been better to hear the parties concerned state their position, in accordance with their wishes, before adopting a resolution. The Philippines agreed that Iraq's Foreign Minister should appear before the Council at the earliest opportunity and that Iran should be given the same opportunity; in the mean time, the Council should expedite measures to deal with the worsening situation.

Iraq wished to record that, despite an understanding that it would be allowed to address the Council briefly before adoption of the resolution, it had not been allowed to do so. It also regretted that its Foreign Minister had not had the opportunity to present Iraq's position before that adoption. Iraq said Iran had rejected the Secretary-General's cease-fire request, but that the President of Iraq was currently making a statement to the Iraqi people and the world to the effect that it was prepared to stop fighting immediately, should the other side reciprocate, and to negotiate a settlement directly or through a third party.

The Council President pointed out that the Council had addressed itself at the current meeting to the major principles of the Charter relating to establishment and restoration of peace and security; the substance of the problem would be studied at further meetings.

Communications and report (29 September-16 October)

In accordance with resolution 479(1980) (see preceding section), the Secretary-General, on 30 September, reported to the Security Council on the replies he had received. The President of Iraq had replied on 29 September, and on 30 September he had been informed that Iran's reply would reach him by 1 October. The Secretary-General further reported that Pakistan had informed him of the Islamic Conference's mission to Teheran and Baghdad; reports from the area indicated that the conflict was continuing.

In its reply of 29 September, Iraq said it accepted the Council's resolution, reaffirmed its readiness to halt hostilities immediately if Iran made a similar undertaking and said it was willing to negotiate directly or through a third party. Iraq also expressed the hope that the Council would urge the Iranian side to abide by the resolution.

A letter from the President of Iran, transmitted on 1 October, reiterated that, since Iran's internal revolutionary victory of 11 February 1979, Iraq had violated the terms of the 1975 Algiers agreement by armed incursions across Iran's borders to assist counter-revolutionary groups and had formed a haven for the remnants of Iran's former régime. Iraq had also expelled more than 40,000 Iraqis of Iranian origin or Shiite persuasion and, prior to its attack on Iran on 22 September 1980, Iraq had moved troops to the common border, thereby confirming premeditated hostile designs. The President added that Iran, though unprepared for an all-out war, had retaliated in self-defence to secure its sovereignty and protect its interests. He further charged that Iraqi claims were propaganda to misguide international public opinion and, therefore, while Iraq continued its aggression against Iran, the Secretary-General's proposals and those contained in the Security Council's resolution could not be considered; Iran saw no use in any discussion concerning the conflict.

A declaration of 5 October by the Revolutionary Command Council of Iraq was transmitted the following day. The declaration accused Iran of aggression by armed attacks by land, sea and air and stated that, despite Iran's rejection of a cease-fire, the President of Iraq had ordered a cessation of military operations effective at dawn that day until 8 October with certain conditions, the breach of which would give Iraq the right to resume its operations: any military activity, including reconnaissance, against Iraq; continuation of anti-cease-fire announcements and rejection of negotiations; additional military build-ups along the Iraqi borders or the line of fire; and elapse of the period without any acceptance by Iran of a cease-fire or of negotiations aimed at respect for Iraq's rights.

Concern for casualties and damage to international shipping as a result of the hostilities was expressed in a letter of 10 October to the Presidents of Iran and Iraq from the Secretary-General. He appealed to both Governments to ensure the security of peaceful shipping and lawful international commerce in the conflict area by, as a first step, allowing immobilized ships to leave safely, and suggested a local cease-fire while this was effected. He also urgently requested suggestions as to the modalities to enable the ships to leave safely and said he was available to assist in making any arrangements.

Two messages on the subject were received from the President of Iran. By the first, dated 12 October, he said he knew of no such casualties or damage to international shipping caused by Iran's defensive actions and that Iran had no intention of interfering with peaceful shipping and lawful international commerce in the conflict area. By the second communication, of the following day, he said that safe passage of all commercial vessels anchored in Shatt al-Arab or the ports of Khurramshahr, Abadan and Basra under the United Nations flag was acceptable to the Iranian Government, which would not hinder safe passage out of the Shatt al-Arab provided they did not unload cargo at any other Iraqi ports.

In a letter to the Security Council President of 16 October, the Secretary-General enclosed: a further message he had sent to the President of Iraq on 15 October informing him that a positive reply had been received from Iran regarding immobilized ships in the conflict area, and requesting an early response to his letter of 10 October and to his suggestion that ships leaving the conflict area should fly the United Nations flag; and a 16 October reply he had received from the Iraqi President stating that the Secretary-General's proposal was not acceptable, since the vessels concerned must fly the Iraqi flag as long as they were in the Shatt al-Arab which, the President added, was an Iraqi river.

Meetings of the Security Council (15 and 17 October)

The Security Council resumed consideration of the situation between Iran and Iraq at two meetings held on 15 and 17 October. At their request, the representatives of Cuba, Iran, Iraq and Japan were invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The Prime Minister of Iran maintained that the hostilities had been initiated by Iraq, which had abrogated the 1975 Algiers agreement as a pretext for war. The 1975 Treaty on State frontiers and good-neighbourliness, and the subsequent agreements concluded by both countries, he said, had made clear that Iraq admitted it had no further territorial claims and that previous disputes between the countries had been settled. Iraq's aim, by its aggression, was not to gain a few kilometres of territory but to destroy the revolutionary movement of the Islamic Iranian people, he added. Iraq's attitude had manifested itself when it had forced the leader of the Islamic revolutionary movement, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, to leave Iraq, where he had been staying during the Shah's régime. He further charged that Iraq was receiving aid from Egypt, Jordan, Morocco and the United States to fight the Islamic revolution. Iran had therefore come to the Council to convey the facts and to warn against attempts to overthrow that revolution, he said.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq said his country had welcomed the new Iranian regime which, however, had revealed territorial ambitions similar to those of the Shah. The Foreign Minister recounted alleged instances of criminal, subversive activities by members of the A1-Da'awa Party, whose objective was to overthrow the Iraqi Government. When it was discovered that these saboteurs were being aided by Iranian residents of Iraq, together with Iraqi nationals of Iranian origin, Iraq had had no alternative but to expel them in order to guarantee its national security. Further, when Iran considered itself no longer bound by the 1975 Algiers agreement, Iraq had regarded that agreement terminated by Iran. He emphasized that Iraq had no territorial ambitions against Iran and reiterated that his country was prepared to abide by Security Council decisions if Iran acted likewise. He also said that in 1976 the two countries had agreed to the mutual return of immovable property by the end of that year and the removal of Iranian claims to Iraqi territory. Despite several notes to Iran on this subject, Iraq had received no reply.

He also stated that Khomeini had been a guest in Iraq for 15 years, but had wished to invite the world's press and television to Iraq in furtherance of his activities against the Shah, and, since that might have been considered as interference by Iraq in Iran's internal affairs, Iraq had refused to allow it. Therefore, Khomeini had chosen to depart.

The representative of Cuba said, since a cardinal objective of the non-aligned countries was to ensure defence of international peace and security, the situation between Iran and Iraq had caused great concern. He observed that the President of Cuba, as head of the Non-Aligned Movement, had sent the Cuban Minister for Foreign Affairs on a peace mission to Baghdad and Teheran and that he was currently in the area for that purpose. Cuba also welcomed other peace initiatives and said it would spare no effort to contribute to a settlement.

Communications (17-27 October)

In a letter of 17 October to the Secretary-General, Iran charged that 12 of its nationals, employees of the Common Bureau for Co-ordination-set up for the joint administration of the Shatt al-Arab waterway under the 1975 Treaty between Iran and Iraq-together with their families, had been unjustifiably placed under arrest by Iraq contrary to the provisions of that Treaty. The letter annexed the names of the employees.

On 22 October, Iraq informed the Secretary-General that it had decided that the employees and their families would be allowed to travel to Iran immediately.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Iran, in a message transmitted on 21 October, reaffirmed that Iran was committed to keeping the Straits of Hormuz open to international navigation.

On 27 October, Iraq transmitted a letter of 24 October from its Minister for Foreign Affairs stating that the current conflict actually dated from 4 September 1980, when Iranian shelling and bombardment of Iraqi border posts, towns and oil targets began, rather than 22 September, the date on which Iraq exercised preventive self-defence. The only possible resolution of the current situation which would not undermine the interests of either party was one which included a cease-fire and immediate negotiations under the Secretary-General's auspices. Iraq also reaffirmed its complete sovereignty over the Shatt al-Arab and stated that it would not withdraw its forces until that sovereignty was recognized by Iran. The withdrawal by Iraq must also be guaranteed by arrangements which would make Iranian surprise-aggression impossible.

Meetings of the Security Council (23,24 and 29 October)

The Security Council continued consideration of the situation between Iran and Iraq at three meetings held on 23, 24 and 29 October. The representatives of Cuba, Iran, Iraq and Japan were again invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

All Council members again urged the combatants to seek a solution by peaceful means. Bangladesh was among those which said that the longer the war continued the greater the threat to world peace. Mexico said the confrontation was particularly absurd since the historic aspirations of both countries were similar and even complementary.

The Niger and the United Kingdom felt that there were some common elements in both countries' positions which could form the basis for negotiations.

Cuba informed the Council that, on a proposal of the Palestine Liberation Organization and with the consent of Iran and Iraq, the Coordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Movement had created an ad hoc committee, composed of Foreign Ministers of non-aligned countries, to build good faith and goodwill between the two countries.

The German Democratic Republic said attempts were being made by imperialism to take advantage of the situation and cited the presence of a large concentration of United States naval forces in the area. The USSR said there were States striving to destabilize the situation further and stressed that the USSR vigorously opposed attempts to intervene. Tunisia and Zambia urged the big powers to continue to exercise maximum restraint. China said that the international community must be vigilant in order to prevent others from taking advantage of the situation.

Though supporting the efforts to bridge the gap between the two sides, the United States said that the responsibilities which the Charter imposed could not be delegated to others—a view shared by the Philippines and the Council must work vigorously to achieve a cease-fire. France and Norway spoke in a similar vein, adding that a Council resolution should provide for the internationally supervised withdrawal of all foreign forces from territory acquired through the use of force and call again for respect for the principles of territorial integrity, sovereignty and national independence. France and Portugal added their concern for third parties, such as refugees and foreign workers caught in the combat zone and persons on vessels that were immobilized. Jamaica also felt that the Council should play the major role in ending the conflict.

Both Iran and Iraq reiterated charges as to which side had started the conflict. Iraq said it shared the strong desire of those that wished to bring it to an end and repeated that it had no territorial ambitions in Iran and it accepted resolution 479(1980) of 28 September (see section above). Iran stated that the 1975 Treaty between the two countries remained valid and that neither party had the right under international law to change its boundaries unilaterally. Iran demanded that Iraq be condemned for its aggression and that it should compensate Iran for damage suffered.

Communications (November and December)

On 5 November, the President of the Security Council issued the following statement:

During recent days, members of the Security Council have continued intensive consultations about the situation between Iran and Iraq. Their aim continues to be to bring an early end to the hostilities and to bring about a peaceful settlement of the dispute in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations.

Members of the Council are deeply concerned that hostilities continue, with resulting loss of life and material damage. They continue to urge that all concerned be guided by Member States' obligations under the Charter to settle their international disputes by peaceful means and in such a manner that international peace and security and justice are not endangered and to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State.

The Secretary-General has participated fully in the Council's consultations. Members of the Council have reiterated their full support for the use of his good offices to bring about peaceful negotiations between Iran and Iraq with a view to arriving at a just solution to their differences. Members of the Council welcome the fact that, in the exercise of his good offices, the Secretary-General is considering sending a representative to the region in order to facilitate authoritative communication with and between the Governments concerned so that negotiations for peace can proceed on an urgent basis.

Members of the Council express their hope that Iran and Iraq continue their co-operation with the Council and appeal to both parties to support the efforts of the Secretary-General.

The Security Council requests the Secretary-General to keep it fully informed about his efforts.

In this connexion, the Secretary-General announced, by a letter of 11 November to the Council President, that Iran and Iraq had agreed to his sending a representative to the area and that Olof Palme (Sweden) had accepted to serve in this capacity. On the same day, the Council President said the members of the Security Council agreed with the contents of the Secretary-General's letter.

On 12 November, Japan in a letter welcomed the Secretary-General's decision to send his representative to both countries and expressed the hope that the visit would result in a breakthrough towards a peaceful settlement.

On 10 November, Iran transmitted a reply, dated 26 October, from its Foreign Ministry to a note of 17 September from Iraq's Foreign Ministry. Iran complained of Iraq's unilateral abrogation of the 1975 Treaty between the two countries. Iran said it still considered itself bound by the Treaty and protested Iraq's violations of it by aggression and armed infiltration into Iranian territory. Iran also quoted articles of the Treaty under which, it said, action could have been taken for settlement of the territorial dispute.

To a letter of 25 November, Iraq annexed copies of two notes from its Foreign Ministry to Iran's Embassy at Baghdad and denied that any so-called unilateral abrogation of the Treaty had been suggested by Iraq. The first note, dated 17 September, stated that, in view of Iran's constant interference in Iraq's internal affairs, its meddling with Iraq's internal security, its abuse of good-neighbourly relations, its encroachment on Iraqi territories and failure to hand them over to Iraq, and the refusal of its authorities to be bound by the Algiers agreement of 6 March 1975, Iraq had decided to consider the agreement, the Treaty on State frontiers and good-neighbourliness with its protocols and annexes of 13 June 1975 and supplementary agreements of 26 December 1975 as null and void in view of their violation by Iran by word and deed. By the second note, dated 16 November, Iraq rejected discussion of the provisions of the 1975 Treaty, protocols and annexes and reiterated that Iraq regarded them as null and void in view of Iran's aggression and interference in Iraq's internal affairs. Iraq contested Iran's interpretation of the Treaty's provisions and said that Iran had omitted mention of a clause the breach of which effectively cancelled the Treaty as a whole. In view of this, the provisions for the resolution of disputes were not applicable.

On 4 December, Jordan transmitted the Final Declaration issued by 15 heads of State at the Eleventh Arab Summit Conference (Amman, 25-27 November), by which the Conference, seeking to preserve fraternal relations between Arab and Islamic countries, called on Iran and Iraq to observe an immediate cease-fire and to seek a solution to the conflict by peaceful means. The Conference supported the legitimate rights of Iraq over its territory and waterways, in accordance with the international agreements in force between the two countries, and would welcome Iraq's compliance with the appeal made by the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the United Nations and the non-aligned countries for a cease-fire and its acceptance of good offices for a solution to the conflict by means of negotiations. The Conference also called on Iran to adopt a similar position.

Communications concerning the islands of Abu Musa, the Greater Tunb and the Lesser Tunb

From the end of April through the beginning of December 1980, the Secretary-General received several communications concerning the islands of Abu Musa, the Greater Tunb and the Lesser Tunb, sovereignty over which was claimed by both Iran and the United Arab Emirates.

On 29 April, the representative of Iraq transmitted a letter of 2 April from the Iraqi Minister for Foreign Affairs calling attention to a statement made by the President of Iran, published in the periodical al-Nahar al-Arabi wa al-Dawli on 24 March, to the effect that Iran would not forgo or restore the three Arab islands. The Foreign Minister said that this statement confirmed Iran's policy of perpetuating its illegitimate occupation of the islands and he demanded Iran's immediate withdrawal.

The Foreign Minister of Iran replied, by a letter of 26 May transmitted on 6 June, that the islands had throughout history been an integral part of Iran and when the United Kingdom had withdrawn its forces from the Persian Gulf in 1971 Iran had reasserted its sovereignty over them.

The Minister of State for Foreign Affairs of the United Arab Emirates, in a letter of 6 August transmitted on 8 August, expressed regret over Iran's determination to continue occupation of the islands belonging to the United Arab Emirates. He invited the Iranian Government to demonstrate the sincerity of its desire to establish relations of good-neighbourliness based on respect for the independence and territorial integrity of the States of the region by initiating a serious dialogue with the United Arab Emirates with a view to restoring the islands to their original owners.

On 19 August, Iraq's representative said that the arguments put forward in the 26 May letter of Iran's Foreign Minister could not be substantiated either in fact or law, since at no time had any of the islands been subject to Iranian rule.

The Acting Foreign Minister of Iran, in a letter of 12 November transmitted on 26 November, called the claims asserted by the United Arab Emirates in its letter of 6 August part of a calculated plot and provocation which had materialized through pressure by the Iraqi Government. He reiterated that Iran had continuously exercised sovereignty over the islands, which had been only temporarily interrupted by the United Kingdom whose occupation had ended in 1971.

By a letter of 1 December, the representative of the United Arab Emirates referred to a statement by the President of Iran, published in the French magazine Nouvel Observateur on 13 October, in which it was claimed that the former Shah of Iran had paid certain sheikhs to keep silent regarding Iran's occupation of the islands. The United Arab Emirates called such statements fallacious and detrimental to its reputation and to relations between the Arab and Iranian Moslem peoples. The United Arab Emirates reiterated its intention to recover sovereignty over the islands and again called on Iran to enter into a dialogue on the subject.

Situation in South-East Asia

In October 1980, the General Assembly considered a new agenda item on the question of peace, stability and co-operation in South-East Asia but, since no draft resolution was submitted, adjourned consideration of the item until 1981.

During the year, the Kampuchean situation was considered by the Assembly and Economic and Social Council; the Commission on Human Rights examined human rights aspects (see p. 827).

On 1 May, the Council adopted resolution 1980/23 by which it decided to hold later that month an international meeting at the ministerial level to consider aid to the Kampuchean people.

The Assembly considered the situation in Kampuchea in October and adopted resolution 35/6 by which it decided to convene in 1981 an international conference on Kampuchea to seek a political settlement, called for the stationing of observers along the Thai-Kampuchean border, urged establishment of a zone of peace, appealed for further urgent aid for Kampucheans and called for resettlement of those displaced.

Details of these subjects as well as brief accounts of related communications and developments are to be found in this subchapter.

Communications relating to events in the region

Relations between

Democratic Kampuchea and Viet Nam

During 1980, the Secretary-General received numerous communications concerning relations between Democratic Kampuchea and Viet Nam and the continuing armed conflict in Kampuchea, including its border region with Thailand.

A report published by the Ministry of Information of Democratic Kampuchea and transmitted on 16 January said that Vietnamese forces in Kampuchea had been reinforced and currently totalled 250,000 men.

Four times in January and March, three in February, two each in April and June, and on 7 July and 16 September, Democratic Kampuchea transmitted summary accounts of developments in the continuing conflict in Kampuchea, which included the military situation, casualty figures and reported defections and mutinies by Vietnamese soldiers. The reports transmitted on 29 January, 5 and 8 February and 24 and 28 March also charged that Viet Nam was using toxic chemicals and poisonous gas in its military campaign against Kampuchea. A map transmitted in the 16 September letter reflected the military situation at the end of August.

Further charges of chemical-weapon use by Viet Nam were made by Democratic Kampuchea's Ministry of Foreign Affairs in a statement of 5 February transmitted on 11 February, in Ministry of Information documents of 11 April and 8 September, in Information Ministry statements and releases issued on 18 April, 31 May and 6 June, and in a Foreign Minister memorandum of 8 September.

On 21 January, in a memorandum transmitted the following day, Viet Nam accused the United States, in collaboration with China, of spreading false rumours that Viet Nam was using toxic weapons in Kampuchea and the Lao People's Democratic Republic. Viet Nam said the United States was trying to cover up its own use of chemical weapons against Kampuchea, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam during the period from 1962 to 1971. Viet Nam further denied that it was using such weapons in a letter of 12 May, as corroborated in a release of 5 May of the International Committee of the Red Cross quoted in the letter.

War crimes against the people of Democratic Kampuchea, including extermination by starvation, forcible enlistment, genocide, massacres, rape, pillage and the use of toxic chemicals, were alleged in communications from the Ministry of Information of Democratic Kampuchea dated 11 January and 19 March and in a text of 20 November.

A proposed solution to the conflict was outlined in two communications from Democratic Kampuchea's Foreign Ministry. By the first of these—a statement of 15 February transmitted on 20 February—Democratic Kampuchea said the key to a political solution was the total withdrawal of all Vietnamese troops, thus giving the Kampuchean people the right to determine their own future free from outside interference, in accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 14 November 1979.<sup>7</sup> The second communication, a statement of 5 May transmitted on 9 May, included these conditions in a three-point proposal to resolve the problem of Kampuchea: Hanoi must withdraw its troops from Kampuchea and let the people choose their own Government under United Nations-supervised elections; Kampuchea would remain an independent, united, non-aligned State with United Nations guarantees; and if Hanoi withdrew its troops immediately, Democratic Kampuchea would not foster any hatred or rancour against the people of Viet Nam and would not require compensation.

This position was reiterated in a communique, released on 7 June and transmitted on 17 June, from the Council of Ministers of the Government of Democratic Kampuchea, which had met from 2 to 6 June. The Council evaluated the military situation in the country and appealed to peace-loving countries to continue aid and support to Democratic Kampuchea.

The charge that the Vietnamese occupation of Kampuchea was but one component of a Vietnamese-USSR "Indo-China Federation" designed to encircle China from the south and to carry out further aggression in South-East Asia and Asia was made in a radio broadcast by the Voice of Democratic Kampuchea on 17 July, the text of which was transmitted on 21 July.

A letter of 25 September from Democratic Kampuchea transmitted an aide-mémoire of 8 September from its Ministry of Information giving a chronology of events in relations between Kampuchea and Viet Nam during the previous 50 years. Democratic Kampuchea charged that Viet Nam had pursued expansionist and annexationist designs during this time, exemplified by its absorption of the Lao People's Democratic Republic and its current occupation of Kampuchea.

The Office of the Prime Minister of Democratic Kampuchea issued a statement on 18 October on the situation in Kampuchea at the close of the rainy season and the onset of the 1980/1981 dry season. This statement, transmitted on 28 October, reviewed the military situation and appealed to the Vietnamese people to intensify their struggle against what was called the Hanoi clique of Lê Duan, First Secretary of the Politburo of the Workers' Party of Viet Nam, and reiterated that if Vietnamese troops were withdrawn Democratic Kampuchea would harbour no grudges and demand no compensation from Viet Nam.

Other communications from Democratic Kampuchea included:

- a 24 March statement by its Ministry of Economy and Finances, transmitted on 1 April, condemning the introduction by the Vietnamese occupiers of a new national currency and new national bank in Kampuchea;

- a 17 May press communique from the Prime Minister's Office, transmitted on 30 May, containing a provisional political map of Kampuchea at the end of April, evaluating the allegiance of the population in different regions of the country and estimating the verdict of the Kampuchean people in the event of an election under United Nations supervision; and

- a 2 August statement by the Foreign Ministry transmitted on 5 August, issued in conjunction with the Secretary-General's visit to the region from 2 to 6 August, reiterating that any solution to the problem must take account of Democratic Kampuchea's 5 May proposal.

Armed conflict in the Thai-Kampuchean border area was the subject of several further communications during 1980.

On 21 February, Thailand charged that its territory had been violated on 18 occasions between 22 December 1979 and 14 February 1980. These violations included air and ground incursions, shelling and clashes between Thai patrols and foreign forces, causing four deaths and resulting in several injured persons.

On 3 March, Viet Nam transmitted a statement of 28 February from what it identified as the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea. The statement said that the Thai allegations were fabricated, and countercharged that violations of Kampuchean airspace by Thai aircraft and artillery fire from the remnants of the forces of the régime of Prime Minister Pol Pot and Minister for Foreign Affairs Ieng Sary ousted from Phnom Penh in January 1979 and being harboured in Thai territory had become common and were increasing daily. Moreover, Thai authorities permitted Beijing expansionists, United States imperialists and other reactionary forces to use their territory to supply the aggressors. A 6 June statement from the same source, transmitted on 10 June, reiterated these charges and offered to meet with Thailand with a view to ending the tense situation in the border region.

On 24 June, Thailand charged that the previous day more than two companies of Vietnamese forces and those of the President of the People's Revolutionary Council of Kampuchea, Heng Samrin, had burned down houses and killed and injured a number of civilians deep inside Thai territory. Thailand reserved the right to take measures to safeguard its sovereignty.

Statements of 26 June from the Foreign Ministries of China and Democratic Kampuchea denounced the same incident and strongly supported Thailand's determination to defend its sovereignty.

A 27 June statement by Viet Nam's Foreign Ministry stated that charges of Vietnamese aggression against Thailand were false and were an attempt to cover up the fact that China, with the assistance of Thailand and the United States, was intensifying hostile activities against the People's Republic of Kampuchea.

A similar point of view was contained in a statement, also issued on 27 June, by the Foreign Ministry of the People's Republic of Kampuchea and forwarded that day by Viet Nam. The Foreign Ministry again expressed its desire for talks with Thailand to resolve their differences and observed that it had not raised the question of recognition of the People's Republic of Kampuchea as a condition for these contacts.

On 30 June, Viet Nam forwarded what it said was proof that it had been Thailand that had provoked the border incidents of the previous few days. Viet Nam cited a report in Matichon, a Thai-language newspaper, that the Commander of Thai border forces had claimed that his troops had destroyed a large base about five kilometres inside Kampuchean territory, and reports by the Saporamean Kampuchea (SPK) news agency that Thai aircraft had violated Kampuchean airspace on several occasions towards the end of June. These charges were refuted as groundless by Thailand in a statement of 15 July from its Ministry of Foreign Affairs forwarded on 23 July. Thailand said that none of its troops had intruded as deep as was claimed and that, in his interview, the Thai Commander had stated that his forces had been instructed to maintain positions along the border.

On 1 July, Thailand said that, following Viet Nam's aggression of 24 June, it had taken the necessary countermeasures. As of 1 July, fighting on its territory had ceased although the situation remained tense. Thailand urgently requested the Secretary-General to bring the authority of the United Nations to bear on the situation, including the stationing of observers along its side of the border with Kampuchea.

By his reply of 7 July, the Secretary-General informed Thailand that he could not comply with its request since normally such action would have to be carried out under the authority of the Security Council. He had therefore circulated Thailand's letter of 1 July to that organ and to the General Assembly.

Further charges of violations of Kampuchean airspace and shelling of its territory during July were contained in a 15 July statement by the Foreign Ministry of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, transmitted by Viet Nam on 18 July. It also charged that Thailand had unilaterally closed its border with the Lao People's Democratic Republic.

In a statement of 31 July, transmitted by Viet Nam on 4 August, the Foreign Ministry of the People's Republic of Kampuchea charged that tension on the Thai-Kampuchean border was caused by Thailand's rejection of proposals made by the Conference of the Foreign Ministers of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam (Vientiane, 17 and 18 July) to ease the situation and guarantee the sovereignty of the region's countries (see p. 326), by its support for the former Kampuchean régime headed by Pol Pot, by facilitating the transfer of Chinese weapons to that régime, and by allowing its territory to be used by reactionary groups opposing the People's Republic of Kampuchea.

Thailand reported 23 further armed intrusions into and shelling of its territory during July in a letter of 5 September.

The problem of Kampuchean refugees in Thailand was again the topic of several communications from Democratic Kampuchea, Thailand and Viet Nam.

On 25 February, Democratic Kampuchea transmitted a statement of 20 February by its Foreign Ministry expressing deep concern over possible repatriation of refugees to Kampuchea by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) while Vietnamese troops continued to occupy that country. Democratic Kampuchea felt that they should return only when their security could be guaranteed, and it warned of the danger of misappropriation by the Vietnamese of humanitarian aid. The Foreign Ministry reiterated this position in an 8 September aide-mémoire, transmitted on 15 September, indicating that there were over 370,000 Kampuchean refugees in Thailand at the end of May, 200,000 of them encamped near the border.

Three communications from the Foreign Ministry of the People's Republic of Kampuchea transmitted by Viet Nam contained a different viewpoint.

In the first, dated 28 February and forwarded on 6 March, the Foreign Ministry charged that the refugees had left their homes because of United States bombings from 1970 to 1975 and the subsequent genocidal policy of what it called the Chinese-backed Pol Pot-Ieng Sary clique. It further charged that hundreds of thousands of refugees had been forced to follow the former régime's remnants into Thailand to oppose the Kampuchean people, and others were lured to refugee camps in Thailand by international humanitarian relief. However, the People's Republic of Kampuchea was willing to discuss with Thai authorities the cases of those that wished to be repatriated. By the second, dated 13 June and transmitted on 26 June, the Foreign Ministry expressed concern about press reports that Thailand was preparing to repatriate Kampuchean refugees, which the Foreign Ministry charged were Pol Pot forces in disguise. The third, a message from Hun Sen as Minister for Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, dated 15 June and transmitted on 27 June, said he had learned with deep regret that UNHCR was entering into an agreement with Thai authorities to this end, and asked the High Commissioner to end his Office's participation in the undertaking.

On 11 April, Viet Nam transmitted an article published in the French newspaper Le Matin on the weekend of 15/16 March which reported that the 28,500 refugees in Sakeo camp, Thailand, were under the control of, and being terrorized by, a Pol Pot organization known as the Angkar. According to the article, the refugees feared that the Angkar might compel them to return to Kampuchea.

The modalities of relief assistance were outlined in a 16 July joint statement issued after a Bangkok meeting between Thai officials and representatives of relief agencies. This statement was forwarded by Thailand on 25 July.

Several communications concerning human rights questions were also received from Democratic Kampuchea and Viet Nam (for details, see p. 827).

Relations between China and Viet Nam

During 1980, China and Viet Nam forwarded a number of communications to the Secretary-General charging each other with continued aggressive acts in the border areas between the two countries.

Details of 12 such alleged incidents occurring between 20 December 1979 and 7 January 1980, in which 10 border guards were killed, other Vietnamese soldiers were killed or wounded and extensive damage was done, were contained in a 9 January Viet Nam News Agency report, forwarded on 14 January by Viet Nam.

On 15 February, Viet Nam transmitted its Foreign Ministry's round-up of facts during the year since the 17 February 1979 Chinese aggression against Viet Nam. The Foreign Ministry's memorandum accused China of: increasing armed activity; violating Viet Nam's territorial sovereignty; slandering Viet Nam in order to undermine its relations with other peoples of the region; eluding settlement of matters concerning relations between the two countries; and persisting with a plan to invade Viet Nam.

A 17 March note from China's Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the Vietnamese Embassy in China, transmitted on 24 March, lodged a strong protest with Viet Nam over more than 360 armed incidents in the first two months of the year. China said these provocations, which had increased in frequency at the beginning of March and had resulted in four deaths and several injuries, proved that Viet Nam was attempting to sabotage relations between the two countries. Viet Nam rejected these charges by a Ministry reply of 20 March, transmitted on 24 March, and countercharged that, during March, China had intensified sabotage activities and armed actions by land, sea and air, which it enumerated, at many parts of the border. Viet Nam also set out in a memorandum of 20 March its version of the contrasting positions of the two countries at the Viet Nam/China talks on restoring peace along the Sino-Vietnamese border, which had been conducted since 18 April 1979 at 15 plenary meetings in two rounds at Hanoi and Beijing<sup>8</sup> (see also below).

Further charges of armed violations of Vietnamese territory were contained in notes from the Vietnamese Foreign Ministry:

- on 25 March (to the Chinese Foreign Ministry), recounting incidents from 21 to 24 March in which eight Vietnamese were killed;

- on 17 May and 4 July (to the Chinese Embassy at Hanoi), condemning border crossings, shootings and airspace violations from 10 to 14 May, and shelling of populated areas between 28 June and 3 July; and

- on 11 and 18 October (to the Chinese Embassy at Hanoi and the Chinese Foreign Ministry, respectively), detailing similar armed provocations and attacks during that month in Viet Nam's border region.

These were transmitted on 27 March, 20 May, 9 July and 21 October, respectively.

Several notes from the Chinese Foreign Ministry to the Vietnamese Embassy in China charged Viet Nam with armed intrusions and military provocations:

- a note of 5 July, transmitted on 7 July, detailed intrusions and firing incidents on 1 and 2 July;

- a note of protest dated 16 October, transmitted the next day, accused Viet Nam since late September of killing and wounding several Chinese soldiers and civilians in the border areas; and

- a note of protest of 15 December, forwarded the following day, cited border crossings, shellings and firings, sabotage and bloodshed said to have been perpetrated by Viet Nam from 22 October to 18 November.

Excerpts from a 5 November communique by a Viet Nam Commission of Inquiry into crimes of aggression attributed to Chinese expansionists and hegemonists committed against Viet Nam during October were forwarded on 7 November. Together with armed incursions, artillery shellings, airspace and territorial water intrusions, incidents of sabotage were cited. A 21 November note from the Vietnamese Foreign Ministry to the Chinese Foreign Ministry, forwarded on 25 November, accused China of territorial violations, building military installations along the borderline, moving marker posts and nibbling attacks on Viet Nam during the previous months.

The deadlock which had arisen during the second round of the China/Viet Nam talks, held from June to December 1979 at Beijing,<sup>9</sup> was the topic of several communications from the two countries' Ministries of Foreign Affairs. The talks' objective was the restoration of peace along the Sino-Vietnamese border, settlement of boundary and territorial disputes and normalization of relations between the two States.

In a note of 6 March to Viet Nam, transmitted on 17 March, China suggested that, since the standpoints between the two remained wide and Viet Nam had refused to consider the Chinese eight-point proposal put forward in 1979,<sup>10</sup> the second round of talks should be concluded in order that both sides might have time to search for ways to resolve the dispute. China suggested that a new round might commence at Hanoi in the second half of 1980. The Vietnamese reply, incorporated in a note and a statement dated 8 March and forwarded two days later, said that China had tried to impose on Viet Nam by its proposal a position of hegemony and big-nation expansionism, had refused to discuss any problem put forward by Viet Nam and had tried to prolong the intervals between talks. Viet Nam suggested that, if the Chinese were not prepared to start the third round of talks in March or April, the first session of that round should begin on 15 July.

In a memorandum of 20 March (see above), Viet Nam outlined and reaffirmed its 1979 three-point proposal on the elements of a solution to problems between the two countries which it said comprised: the adoption of measures to secure peace and stability in the border areas, including not concentrating troops close to the borderline, separating the two sides' armed forces, stopping war provocations and hostile activities, establishing a demilitarized zone and setting up a joint commission to supervise implementation; restoration of normal relations based on peaceful coexistence; and settlement of border and territorial problems on the basis of respect for the status quo of the historical borderline as agreed upon by the two sides' Party Central Committees. It also reaffirmed its July 1979 five-point approach to discussing anti-hegemonism.<sup>11</sup>

A Vietnamese note of 16 June to China, transmitted the following day, expressed the hope that China would respond positively to Viet Nam's proposal to begin talks on 15 July. China replied by a note of 23 June to the Vietnamese Embassy in China, transmitted on 2 July, that, since Viet Nam had persistently refused China's proposals and increased its anti-Chinese activities, the atmosphere was not favourable for holding further talks.

On 3 July, Viet Nam addressed a note to China, transmitted on 7 July, demanding that

China honour its statement in its note of 6 March on reopening the talks during the second half of 1980. Viet Nam reiterated its proposal that they should begin on 15 July.

On 21 August, Viet Nam's Foreign Ministry issued a statement, forwarded the next day, on what it said was a war threat by the Chinese Deputy Foreign Minister who, in an interview in Beijing on 20 August, had told the Japanese news agency, Kyodo, that China reserved its right to attack Viet Nam again. Viet Nam charged that China was trying to suspend the third round of talks and sow hostility between the three Indo-Chinese nations and the other countries of South-East Asia.

Viet Nam again drew attention to China's suggestion that the talks be resumed in the second half of 1980 in a note of 3 December, forwarded two days later, and asked China's Foreign Ministry to demonstrate a clear attitude towards its own proposal. China's position on the negotiations was contained in a note of 22 December to the Vietnamese Embassy in China, transmitted the next day. China pointed out that it had suggested that both sides use the intersessional period to find ways to break the deadlock but, as Viet Nam had intensified its acts of aggression against China, had refused to withdraw its troops from Kampuchea, had increased troop concentrations along the Thai-Kampuchean border, and had acted as a tool for the southward-drive strategy of the USSR, there was no point in holding further talks until Viet Nam had demonstrated that conditions were favourable.

Relations between the United States and Viet Nam

From February to April 1980, the Secretary-General received several communications from Viet Nam concerning its relations with the United States.

On 7 February, Viet Nam forwarded a 1 February report by the Viet Nam News Agency on a statement made by a United States Congressman that Viet Nam still retained the remains of 400 Americans missing ever since the war between the two countries. Viet Nam rejected this allegation, made at a press conference in Washington, D. C. on 30 January, as a fabrication designed to sabotage United States-Vietnamese relations.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Viet Nam also issued a number statements on Vietnamese-United States relations.

Three of these refuted allegations by United States officials that Viet Nam was causing instability in South-East Asia. By these statements dated 6 and 21 February and 1 March-transmitted on 8 and 25 February and 10 March, respectively-Viet Nam asserted that the United States had increased the threat to the region's peace and security by supporting China's expansionist policies, sending war matériel to Thailand, trying to revive the South-East Asia Treaty Organization and exerting pressure on the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) to oppose Kampuchea, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam.

In a statement of 24 April, forwarded the next day, Viet Nam alleged that on 22 April two United States jet aircraft and one helicopter had intimidated a foreign vessel helping Viet Nam in scientific research in its zone of economic privileges. Viet Nam condemned this as a provocative and intimidating act and demanded that the United States stop such actions.

A 14 February statement was transmitted on 27 February. By this, Viet Nam stated that, in a report on the state of human rights in 154 countries made public on 5 February, the United States had repeated slanderous charges against Viet Nam. Viet Nam countercharged that the United States record made it unqualified to speak of human rights; its defence of human rights as a State policy was meant to doll up the face of imperialism, conceal internal difficulties, intensify its hostile policy against socialist countries and bring pressure to bear on others.

Communications concerning sovereignty over coastal islands

The Secretary-General received three communications during 1980 concerning archipelagos in the South China Sea over which sovereignty was claimed by both China and Viet Nam. The archipelagos were called Xisha and Nansha by China, and Hoang Sa and Truong Sa by Viet Nam. They were also known as the Paracels and Spratly.

On 30 January, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of China issued a document, transmitted on 11 February, on what it called China's indisputable sovereignty over the large island groups. Included in the document were a chronology of events from the second century B. C., copies of historical records, photographs and maps, which, China said, proved that the islands had been Chinese territory since ancient times.

By a statement of 5 February forwarded the next day, the Foreign Ministry of Viet Nam said the Chinese document had been issued to counter the September 1979 Vietnamese white paper testifying to Viet Nam's sovereignty over the islands.<sup>12</sup> Viet Nam charged that China's document was also designed to divert public attention from its delaying and obstructing the current Sino-Vietnamese talks in Beijing (see section above).

A further statement from the Vietnamese Foreign Ministry, dated 31 May and transmitted on 3 June, protested that China had installed a radio beacon for aircraft guidance on one of the islands in the Hoang Sa archipelago. Viet Nam charged that this was a violation of its territorial sovereignty and an illegal attempt by China to control the eastern sea, thereby causing tension in South-East Asia.

Other communications

On 8 April, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam forwarded a joint communiqué of a Conference of the Foreign Ministers of the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Viet Nam and the "People's Republic of Kampuchea," signed at Phnom Penh on 5 January. By this communiqué the Foreign Ministers said they were determined to strengthen their solidarity and close co-operation with the USSR, and their countries were prepared to sign, on a bilateral basis, non-aggression treaties with other countries in South-East Asia and were ready to discuss with Burma and the five ASEAN member States (Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand) the establishment of a South-East Asian region of peace, independence, freedom, neutrality, stability and prosperity.

A 10 January statement by the Foreign Ministry of Democratic Kampuchea, transmitted on 14 January, said that an earlier proposal that the three parties sign a non-aggression treaty between themselves was an attempt by the Lê Duan clique to camouflage efforts towards forming an "Indo-China Federation" and to try to gain recognition from South-East Asian and other countries for the puppet regime in Phnom Penh, thereby legalizing Vietnamese aggression against Democratic Kampuchea.

These points were reiterated in a 13 February statement by the Kampuchean Foreign Ministry, transmitted on 19 February, which added that a recent statement by the Lê Duan clique's Foreign Vice-Minister that Viet Nam would effect a partial troop withdrawal from Kampuchea in the next two months, and that a meeting of the three countries of Indo-China and ASEAN was to take place, was a scheme aimed at deceiving world public opinion that Viet Nam was committed to peace while it pursued a strategy of expansion in the area.

On 23 July, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam forwarded an 18 July statement adopted at Vientiane by a Conference of the Foreign Ministers of those countries and the People's Republic of Kampuchea, and a resolution of the same date addressing international problems in the Middle East, Afghanistan, Iran, the Indian Ocean, Namibia, Western Sahara and the Caribbean. By the statement, the Foreign Ministers renewed the proposals set forth in their communiqué of 5 January and supported a four-point proposal put forward by the People's Republic of Kampuchea which would have had that régime and Thailand: undertake to preserve peace and security in the border areas, including establishment of a demilitarized zone in those areas and setting up a joint commission to implement peace agreements and agree on a form of international control; co-operate towards solving the refugee problem, with camps established far from the border and reactionary refugees disarmed and not allowed to return; and negotiate either directly or indirectly to solve outstanding questions. The People's Republic of Kampuchea would also be prepared to discuss with international relief organizations the most effective way to distribute such relief, ensuring that it was not used to induce Kampuchians to become refugees or feed reactionary Khmers and was distributed on Kampuchean territory.

On 29 August, Viet Nam forwarded a 26 August memorandum by its Foreign Ministry which said that the four-point proposal was reasonable, logical and fair and respected the legitimate interests of Kampuchea and Thailand.

A 22 April statement by the Vietnamese Foreign Ministry, transmitted the following day, said that Viet Nam supported the position of the People's Revolutionary Council of Kampuchea to the effect that all international conferences held to discuss problems concerning Kampuchea must be approved by and have the participation of the Revolutionary Council. Viet Nam also said it was ready to hold bilateral discussions with South-East Asian countries on problems of mutual concern.

Further support for the People's Republic of Kampuchea was expressed in a Declaration issued by an International Conference in Support of the Kampuchean People, held at Phnom Penh on 20 May, and forwarded by Viet Nam on 26 May.

The continuing tension in South-East Asia was also discussed during the year by ASEAN and the nine member States of the European Economic Community (EEC).

On 11 March, Italy and Malaysia transmitted a joint declaration on economic co-operation and a joint statement on political issues issued at the end of the Second ASEAN/EEC Ministerial Meeting at Kuala Lumpur on 7 and 8 March. By the statement, the Foreign Ministers deplored the continuing Vietnamese armed intervention in Kampuchea and called for early implementation of the General Assembly's resolution of 14 November 1979,<sup>13</sup> which had called for immediate withdrawal of all foreign forces. They agreed that co-operation among South-East Asian States depended on a political solution to the Kampuchean question based on that withdrawal and self-determination, emphasized non-interference in the internal affairs of South-East Asian States, appealed to the Secretary-General to explore all possibilities contained in the November 1979 resolution, which included convening an international conference, and further appealed to him to increase United Nations and relief agency personnel in the critical border areas and to consider stationing United Nations observers on the Thai side.

On the eve of the Thirteenth Ministerial Meeting of ASEAN, held on 25 and 26 June at Kuala Lumpur, Democratic Kampuchea's Foreign Ministry made a statement, transmitted on 25 June, reaffirming its three-point position as set out in the statement of 5 May and communiqué of 7 June (see p. 321) and expressing the conviction that the ASEAN Governments would continue to support that position.

By the joint communiqué of the Thirteenth Ministerial Meeting of ASEAN, transmitted by the Philippines on 9 July, the ASEAN Foreign Ministers reaffirmed their commitment to the Assembly's November 1979 resolution, ASEAN joint statements on the Kampuchean conflict, and the March 1980 ASEAN/EEC joint statement on political issues, particularly their position on the total withdrawal of Vietnamese forces, the right to self-determination of the Kampuchean people and non-interference in the internal affairs of South-East Asian States. The Foreign Ministers reiterated their request to the Secretary-General to convene an international conference on Kampuchea. They also expressed their serious concern at the tension on the Thai-Kampuchean border.

On 25 July, Luxembourg transmitted a 2 July statement by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the nine member States of the European Community, expressing support for the principles which had inspired the results of the ASEAN Meeting, deploring the Vietnamese violation of Thai territory and subscribing to the Secretary-General's appeal for the re-establishment of peace and security in the area necessary for the continuation of humanitarian aid, which had received new impetus from the Meeting on Humanitarian Assistance and Relief to the Kampuchean People, held at Geneva on 26 and 27 May (see p. 337).

Two further communications from the Philippines contained statements by its Foreign Minister in his capacity as Chairman of the ASEAN Standing Committee.

The first, transmitted on 2 August, contained a letter to the Secretary-General and a statement issued in Manila, both dated the previous day. By these, the ASEAN States again urged implementation of the Assembly's November 1979 resolution and expressed concern over the use of force against Thailand and concern that the ensuing tension had spread to the Thai-Lao border. They also felt that the suffering of the Kampuchean people was being further aggravated by Viet Nam's closure of the Thai-Kampuchean border and by pressures on relief organizations to divert international relief only to Phnom Penh.

The second statement, transmitted on 19 September and issued as a press release in New York on the same date, reiterated these points, including the call for an international conference on Kampuchea, the stationing of a United Nations observer team on the Thai side of the border and establishment of demilitarized peace zones in western Kampuchea under United Nations supervision for the safety of uprooted civilians.

Differing views of the situation in Kampuchea were the topic of three further communications.

A 21 April letter from Democratic Kampuchea transmitted a statement made on 17 April by Khieu Samphan, President of the State Presidency and Prime Minister of Democratic Kampuchea, to commemorate the fifth anniversary of the founding of that country. Included in his statement was a call to the Kampuchean people to continue the struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors.

Two communications from Viet Nam transmitted statements made by Heng Samrin, identified as President of the National United Front for the Salvation of Kampuchea and President of the People's Revolutionary Council.

By the first, made at a meeting held in Phnom Penh on 7 January in commemoration of the first anniversary of his regime's victory in that city, and transmitted on 10 January, he reviewed the situation in Kampuchea since the overthrow of the Pol Pot-Ieng Sary régime.

By the second, a 23 September interview given to the Kampuchean news agency SPK and forwarded on 7 October, he outlined what he said were the successes achieved by the Kampuchean people in the economic, social and political fields since January 1979.

Situation in Kampuchea

The situation in Kampuchea-continued fighting and increased tension near the Thai-Kampuchean border areas-again occupied the attention of the Organization in 1980 and, in October, the Assembly adopted a 30-nation resolution by which it decided to convene early in 1981 an international conference aimed at a comprehensive political solution.

Question of credentials

The credentials of the delegation of Democratic Kampuchea to the General Assembly were the topic of several communications addressed to the Secretary-General and the Assembly President during 1980.

Three letters were received from Viet Nam during September transmitting telegrams from Hun Sen, identified as the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea: on 10 September (forwarded on 15 September), he asserted that the People's Revolutionary Council of the People's Republic of Kampuchea was the sole authentic and legal representative of the Kampuchean people and urged measures to end what he said was the illegal presence of the Pol Pot-Ieng Sary clique in the United Nations; on 13 September (transmitted on 15 September), he informed the Secretary-General that the Revolutionary Council had decided to send a delegation headed by himself, to the thirty-fifth (1980) session of the General Assembly; and on 19 September (forwarded on 22 September), he supplied the delegation's composition.

Democratic Kampuchea, by a letter of 17 September, said that Viet Nam, by means of the 15 September communications, was attempting to compel the international community and the United Nations to accept a fait accompli, and to legalize aggression against, Democratic Kampuchea; accordingly Democratic Kampuchea requested an urgent meeting of the Credentials Committee.

On 13 October, Viet Nam transmitted a further telegram, dated 10 October, from Hun Sen who stated that, since the General Assembly was about to discuss the so-called problem of Kampuchea, such discussions held without the consent of the Revolutionary Council and the participation of its representatives constituted a flagrant violation of Kampuchea's internal affairs and the Charter of the United Nations; there was no problem of Kampuchea nor solution required, as the people had been liberated from the former regime and were masters of their own destiny. The Revolutionary Council rejected a 13-point draft resolution put forward by, among others, the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) -Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand (see following section).

The credentials of the representatives of Democratic Kampuchea were also discussed by the Credentials Committee at other General Assembly sessions during the year: the sixth emergency special session (10-14 January) (see P.302); the seventh emergency special session (22-29 July) (see p. 385); and the eleventh special session (25 August-15 September) (see p. 499).

The credentials of the delegation of Democratic Kampuchea and 67 other Member States to the Assembly's 1980 regular session were examined by the Credentials Committee on 22 September.

Angola and the USSR said they believed that the People's Revolutionary Council was the only body entitled to act as Kampuchea's representative since it enjoyed the unanimous support of the people and had swept away a régime which had committed grievous crimes against its own people.

China, Singapore and the United States said that Democratic Kampuchea was a Member State of the United Nations and its Government was the sole legal representative of Kampuchea; therefore its credentials were in order. However, both Singapore and the United States indicated that they continued to deplore that Government's human rights record.

Haiti pointed out that Democratic Kampuchea's credentials had been accepted at previous sessions and that it would be incompatible with the United Nations Charter to seat a regime which had come to power through outside force.

The Chairman, after stating that acceptance or rejection of a representative's credentials did not imply any judgement concerning the legitimacy of a particular Government, proposed a draft resolution by which the Committee would take into account the reservations expressed and accept the credentials of the Member States concerned. This draft was adopted without vote.

The Committee also approved without vote a draft resolution, orally proposed by the Chairman, recommending that the Assembly approve the first report of the Credentials Committee.

The Assembly considered the Committee's report on 13 October and adopted the Committee's text without vote as resolution 35/4A.

Before its adoption, Angola, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Grenada, Hungary, India, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Poland, Seychelles, the Ukrainian SSR and Viet Nam submitted an amendment to have the Assembly approve the Credentials Committee's report, except with regard to the credentials of the representatives of Democratic Kampuchea.

Introducing the amendment, the Lao People's Democratic Republic said that the Committee had not considered credentials submitted by the People's Revolutionary Council, which in the sponsors' view was the sole legitimate representative of Kampuchea; support for the Committee's report would be tantamount to giving legal sanction to genocide. Democratic Yemen and Viet Nam spoke in a similar vein, adding that as the Pol Pot-Ieng Sary regime no longer existed it should be banished from the Organization.

Madagascar was also among those which expressed concern that the credentials of the People's Revolutionary Council had not been considered.

India said that, since a large number of delegations still hesitated to recognize the People's Republic of Kampuchea, it was for the moment prepared merely to disapprove the credentials of so-called Democratic Kampuchea. The USSR and those sponsoring the amendment felt that not approving the credentials of Democratic Kampuchea was a minimum step towards solving the problem of the representation of Kampuchea.

Belgium, Canada, Ecuador, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Japan, Luxembourg, Malaysia, New Zealand and Pakistan were among those which stressed that endorsement of the credentials of Democratic Kampuchea in no way implied support for that Government's past actions. The United Kingdom said it had no intention of contributing to re-establishment of that Government's authority.

Nepal said no State had the right to judge the performance of a Government and alter the destiny of its people by imposing a substitute Government by armed force.

The Assembly rejected the amendment by a recorded vote of 35 in favour to 74 against, with 32 abstentions.

Explaining their abstentions, Austria, France, Norway and Sweden said they did not consider that either regime had the right to represent Kampuchea, while Denmark, voting against, said its vote should not be taken as support for either of them. Finland perceived the situation in Kampuchea to be a conflict of interests between the great powers.

Democratic Kampuchea said that rejection of the amendment had helped to prevent Viet Nam from legalizing its invasion of Kampuchea. Thailand and Zaire shared this view.

Two letters were received by the Secretary-General protesting acceptance of the credentials of Democratic Kampuchea: on 16 October, Viet Nam transmitted a statement of 14 October from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea rejecting the Assembly's decision; and a 15 October statement by the Vietnamese Foreign Ministry, transmitted on 17 October, called it erroneous, out of touch with Kampuchean reality and contrary to the spirit of the Charter, justice, morality and international law.

General aspects

On 26 September 1980, Viet Nam transmitted to the Secretary-General a 24 September statement from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea which stated that the only problem in Kampuchea was the threat posed by China's hegemonists who, in collusion with other reactionary forces, were striving from Thai territory to arm Pol Pot gangs and send them back to Kampuchea to engage in banditry and sabotage; the solution was to reduce tension created by China on the Thai-Kampuchean border.

Pursuant to a General Assembly resolution of 14 November 1979,<sup>14</sup> the Secretary-General, on 30 September 1980, submitted a report on the situation in Kampuchea in which he recalled that, from 14 to 29 November 1979, Javier Perez de Cuéllar, Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Affairs, had visited Thailand on his behalf and confirmed the appalling human suffering of the Kampuchean people. The Secretary-General had considered it imperative that the United Nations system intensify humanitarian efforts to alleviate their plight, including those who had sought refuge in neighbouring countries. To that end, in January 1980, he had designated Sir Robert Jackson to co-ordinate United Nations humanitarian operations in Kampuchea, and all aspects of the relief programme had been considered at a Meeting on Humanitarian Assistance and Relief to the Kampuchean People, held at Geneva on 26 and 27 May (see p. 337).

The Secretary-General added that, while humanitarian operations had served to relieve the intense suffering, renewed efforts were required towards political settlements since little progress had been made in implementation of certain provisions of the November 1979 resolution, including those relating to withdrawal of foreign forces. In August 1980 he had travelled to Hanoi and Bangkok but, notwithstanding his contacts with the parties and interested Governments, a basis for an agreed solution had not been reached. The Secretary-General therefore expressed determination to continue his efforts.

The General Assembly considered the situation in Kampuchea at six meetings held between 15 and 22 October. On 22 October, it adopted resolution 35/6 on this question. Sponsored by 30 Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), the resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 97 to 23, with 22 abstentions.

The Assembly thereby took note of the Secretary-General's report and expressed grave concern that deployment of more foreign troops and weapons in Kampuchea near the Thai-Kampuchean border had heightened tension in the region, that the continued fighting had forced large numbers of Kampucheans to flee to the Thai-Kampuchean border, and that the cross-border flow of international aid had been disrupted.

After reaffirming its resolution of 14 November 1979<sup>15</sup> and calling for its implementation, the Assembly decided to convene early in 1981 an international conference, involving participation of all conflicting parties, aimed at a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean problem. The conference was to negotiate towards agreement on: total withdrawal of foreign troops from Kampuchea within a specific time-frame; United Nations measures to ensure law and order and non-interference by outside powers in Kampuchea's internal affairs; United Nations-supervised free elections; and guarantees of the non-introduction of foreign forces and of respect for the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Kampuchea, and that it would not be a threat to its neighbours.

Pending settlement of the conflict, the Assembly called for United Nations observers on the Thai side of the border and establishment of safe areas under United Nations supervision in western Kampuchea for uprooted civilian Kampucheans, and urged South-East Asian countries to renew efforts to establish a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality. The Assembly expressed appreciation to States and organizations which had rendered aid to Kampucheans and appealed for its continuance on an urgent, non-discriminatory basis. It further expressed appreciation to the Secretary-General for co-ordinating aid and monitoring its distribution, and requested him to ensure that it reached all those for whom it was intended and to report in 1981 on this resolution's implementation. The Assembly again called on all States to resettle displaced Kampucheans and urged the conflicting parties to co-operate in facilitating humanitarian aid flows and to observe the principles of human rights.

Introducing the text, the Philippines said that action was necessary because of non-implementation of the Assembly's 14 November 1979 resolution, the deteriorating situation in Kampuchea and Viet Nam's persistent pursuit of mini-hegemony, which obstructed peace in South-East Asia.

Democratic Kampuchea stated that no effective solution could be found to the humanitarian problems without a just and lasting solution to the conflict resulting from Viet Nam's aggression and withdrawal of that country's troops from Kampuchea—a view shared by Malaysia, which added that the resolution had been initiated by the ASEAN partners.

China stated that Viet Nam's armed aggression was the core of the problem and withdrawal of its troops a prerequisite for any settlement.

Several States stressed the need for a comprehensive political solution. Australia stated that its approach was based on principles affirmed by the Commonwealth heads of Government of the Asia-Pacific region at their New Delhi (India) meeting from 4 to 8 September, where such a solution had been stressed. Singapore, appealing to Viet Nam to negotiate, assured that country that any political settlement would take Viet Nam's legitimate interests into account. According to Haiti and Yugoslavia, a peaceful political solution could be achieved only on the basis of the resolution. India concurred, adding that dialogue among the concerned parties could resolve immediate problems and build towards an overall settlement.

Luxembourg, speaking on behalf of the member States of the European Economic Community (EEC), said that the 8 March ASEAN/EEC joint statement on political issues (see p. 326) remained valid, and supported ASEAN's further initiative, as reflected in the resolution.

Nigeria felt that the international community should try to narrow the gap between the peace proposals of ASEAN and those put forward by the countries nearer to Kampuchea.

A large number of States, while deprecating the invasion of Kampuchea by Viet Nam, also deprecated the Pol Pot regime for its human rights record. These included Austria, Egypt, Greece, Norway, Pakistan, Samoa, Suriname, Sweden and the United Kingdom.

Canada said it did not wish to see the return to power of that regime, although Kenya felt that its evils did not justify an invasion. Senegal said that, even if there had been past incursions into Viet Nam's territory, Viet Nam could have repelled that intrusion without going beyond its own frontiers.

The United States rejected the three Indo-Chinese Foreign Ministers' proposal of 18 July (see p. 326) as an effort by Viet Nam to divert attention from the central issue of the Kampuchean people's right to self-determination.

Thailand pointed out that it had borne the brunt of spill-overs from the conflict-armed incursions, shellings and hundreds of thousands of refugees—and said it regarded the proposed conference as the best prospect for durable peace and stability in the area. Japan felt that there was no alternative to holding the conference.

Sri Lanka viewed the resolution as an example of the only recourse, namely the United Nations, open to small States when their sovereignty and territorial integrity was violated. Mauritania spoke similarly.

Those States which spoke against adoption of the resolution argued that an international conference would constitute intervention in the internal affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, since its representatives would not be present.

Bulgaria said the resolution attempted to impose decisions not in the interests of the Kampuchean people or other people of the region and added that Vietnamese troops in that country were essential and threatened no one—a view shared by the Byelorussian SSR, which asserted that the real threat came from China's attempts to interfere in Kampuchea's internal affairs. Czechoslovakia said that the text contributed neither to regional normalization nor to the interests of the Kampuchean people, but rather served China's interests.

The USSR stated that the Pol Pot regime was not a legal Government; moreover, had revolutionary changes not removed that regime, the Khmer people would have almost totally disappeared.

Democratic Yemen and the Ukrainian SSR asserted that the situation in Kampuchea was irreversible and that manoeuvres to intervene, including attempts to use the United Nations to that end, would fail. Mongolia said the People's Republic of Kampuchea did not need outside supervision. Hungary added that even the discussion, in the absence of Kampuchea's representatives, constituted inadmissible interference in their country's affairs.

The German Democratic Republic pointed out that some of the resolution's sponsors had formally declared that they did not want the former regime to return to power; why, then, would they not leave the Kampucheans in peace?

Both the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam accused Thailand of harbouring remnants of Pol Pot's army, charged that relief supplies were falling into those forces' hands and asserted that tension prevailing in South-East Asia was caused by China's aim of dominating Indo-China.

Speaking after adoption of the resolution, Burma said it had voted in favour though it had reservations with regard to the stationing of United Nations observers and to the establishment of safe areas and a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in South-East Asia, since there was lack of common ground between the parties concerned.

On 27 October, Viet Nam transmitted a statement of 23 October by its Foreign Ministry rejecting resolution 35/6 as erroneous, illegal and useless, as blatant misrepresentation of the situation and an impudent intervention in the internal affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea.

Democratic Kampuchea, on the other hand, transmitted on 19 November an 8 November statement by its Foreign Ministry expressing appreciation to the ASEAN countries and those which had supported the resolution.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 34/22 of 14 November 1979.

Ta/ring note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 34/22.

Deeply regretting that the foreign armed intervention continues and the foreign forces have not been withdrawn from Kampuchea, thus seriously threatening international peace and security,

Gravely concerned that the hostilities in Kampuchea have not ceased, but have on several occasions spilled over into

Thailand, thus violating the sovereignty and territorial integrity of that country,

Greatly concerned that the deployment of more foreign troops and weapons in Kampuchea near the Thai-Kampuchean border has heightened tension in the region,

Recalling the conclusions reached at the Meeting on Humanitarian Assistance and Relief to the Kampuchean People, held at Geneva on 26 and 27 May 1980, as contained in the report of the Economic and Social Council to the General Assembly,

Recognizing that the assistance extended by the international community has reduced the widespread food shortages and health problems of the Kampuchean people but that, despite such assistance, hunger and disease continue to afflict them,

Gravely disturbed that the continued fighting in Kampuchea has forced large numbers of Kampucheans to flee to the Thai-Kampuchean border in search of food and safety, and that actions by outside forces in Kampuchea to seal the border have disrupted the cross-border flow of international relief aid,

Emphasizing that it is the inalienable right of the Kampuchean people who have sought refuge in neighbouring countries to return safely to their homeland,

Emphasizing further that no effective solution to the humanitarian problems can be achieved without a just and lasting political settlement of the Kampuchean conflict,

Convinced that, to bring about durable peace and stability in South-East Asia, there is an urgent need for a comprehensive political solution to the Kampuchean problem which will ensure the sovereignty and independence of Kampuchea and the right of the Kampuchean people to determine their future free from outside interference, Convinced further that, after the comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean question through peaceful means, the countries of the South-East Asian region could pursue efforts to establish a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in South-East Asia so as to lessen international tensions and to achieve lasting peace in the region.

Reaffirming the need for all States to adhere strictly to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, which call for respect for the national independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States, non-intervention and non-interference in the internal affairs of States, non-recourse to the threat or use of force, and peaceful settlement of disputes,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 34/22 and calls for its implementation;

2. Decides, taking into account paragraph 12 of resolution 34/22, to convene early in 1981 an international conference on Kampuchea which should involve the participation of all conflicting parties in Kampuchea and others concerned, with the aim of finding a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean problem;

3. Decides further that the conference should negotiate with a view to reaching agreement on, inter alia:

(a) Total withdrawal of foreign troops from Kampuchea within a specific time-frame to be verified by the United Nations;

(b) Measures by the United Nations to ensure law and order and the observance of the fundamental principles of human rights in Kampuchea;

(c) Measures by the United Nations to ensure non-interference by outside Powers in the internal affairs of Kampuchea;

(d) United Nations-supervised free elections in Kampuchea;

(e) Guarantees against the introduction of any foreign forces in Kampuchea;

(f) Guarantees to respect the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Kampuchea;

(g) Guarantees that an independent and sovereign Kampuchea will not be a threat to its neighbours;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to take all appropriate steps for the convening of such a conference;

5. Calls for, pending the settlement of the conflict:

(a) The stationing of a United Nations observer team on the Thai side of the border in order to observe the situation along the border and to verify that only civilian Kampucheans obtain international relief aid;

(b) The establishment of safe areas under United Nations supervision in western Kampuchea for the uprooted civilian Kampucheans encamped near the Thai-Kampuchean border and those in Thailand who wish to return to their homeland;

6. Urges the countries of South-East Asia, once a comprehensive political solution to the Kampuchean conflict is achieved, to exert renewed efforts to establish a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in South-East Asia;

7. Expresses its deep appreciation to donor countries, the United Nations and its agencies and other national and international humanitarian organizations which have rendered relief assistance to the Kampuchean people, and appeals to them to continue on an urgent and non-discriminatory basis such assistance to the civilian population of Kampuchea, including persons who have sought refuge in neighbouring countries;

8. Deeply appreciates the efforts of the Secretary-General in co-ordinating relief assistance and in monitoring its distribution, and requests him to strengthen such efforts so as to ensure that the assistance reaches all those for whom it is intended;

9. Calls again upon all States to provide resettlement for the displaced Kampucheans who have sought refuge in neighbouring countries and who do not wish to return to their homeland;

10. Urges all parties to the conflict to co-operate fully in facilitating humanitarian relief efforts and in ensuring that the cross-border flow of international relief aid continues uninterrupted;

11. Reiterates its appeal to all parties to the conflict to observe fully the fundamental principles of human rights;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session the item entitled "The situation in Kampuchea."

Humanitarian assistance and relief to the Kampuchean people

During 1980, the United Nations mobilized humanitarian assistance and relief to the Kampuchean people, uprooted and otherwise afflicted by the conflict surrounding them.

In 1979, the Secretary-General had designated the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) as the Organization's lead agency, in co-operation with the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), for carrying out relief aid to Kampuchea. Also associated with this programme were the World Food Programme (WFP), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). Throughout 1980, a number of meetings were held by these agencies with donor Governments and, at year's end, the Inter-Agency Working Group on Kampuchea reported that over $500 million in cash or kind had been paid or pledged to the multilateral aid programme. Substantial assistance had also been provided bilaterally and by international voluntary agencies.

For information on UNICEF's role in the Kampuchean relief operation, see p. 926.

Action by the Economic and Social Council

On 21 April 1980, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand-the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN)-informed the President of the Economic and Social Council by letter that, unless immediate large-scale humanitarian assistance was rendered, hundreds of thousands of Kampucheans might die from starvation. A 26 March meeting of donor Governments, chaired by the Co-ordinator for United Nations humanitarian operations in Kampuchea at New York, had not achieved its financial target or resolved the distribution problems, they said. Therefore, ASEAN requested that an additional item entitled "Humanitarian assistance and relief to the Kampuchean people" be included in the agenda of the Council's current (April/May) session and that the Secretary-General convene a meeting at the ministerial level to deal with aid to those people.

On 28 April, Viet Nam transmitted a 26 April message, signed by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea and addressed to the Secretary-General and the President of the Council, condemning the ASEAN proposal for an international conference in May to discuss emergency aid as a manoeuvre designed to use humanitarian assistance to interfere in the domestic affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea. Any problem pertaining to Kampuchea raised at the international level or decision adopted without the agreement of representatives of the People's Revolutionary Council would be considered null and void. The message asserted that aid thus far received had been promptly distributed and relief efforts were going well.

Communications to the Secretary-General from Mongolia (1 May), Poland (30 April) and the USSR (1 May) detailed the nature and volume of assistance provided by these States to the People's Republic of Kampuchea.

On 1 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1980/23, by which it recognized the urgency of increasing international humanitarian assistance to the large number of refugees in the region and improving distribution measures to ensure that supplies reached the needy, and noted that the financial target for April to December 1980 (some $262 million) had not been attained.

The Council decided to hold, towards the end of May, an international meeting at the ministerial level to consider aid to the Kampuchean people, requesting the Secretary-General to convene the meeting at Geneva and to invite the States which had been invited to attend the July 1979 Geneva Meeting on Refugees and Displaced Persons in South-East Asia,<sup>16</sup> as well as the socialist States of Eastern Europe and the Council members not otherwise included. The Council further decided that the proceedings of the meeting were to be governed by the rules of procedure for United Nations pledging conferences adopted in 1978.<sup>17</sup>

Resolution 1980/23, sponsored by Australia, Belgium, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Malaysia, Nepal, the Netherlands, Pakistan, the Philippines, Senegal, Singapore, Somalia, Thailand and the United Kingdom, was adopted by a roll-call vote of 41 to 4, with 4 abstentions. The roll-call vote was requested by the sponsors.

States which voted against the resolution explained their positions. The USSR felt that those in favour of the meeting were trying to establish a forum for discussion of matters exclusively within the competence of the Government of the People's Republic of Kampuchea. Bulgaria stated that such a meeting could undermine current relief efforts. Hungary said that high-level meetings were no substitute for efforts in the field by international organizations and practical Government measures. The German Democratic Republic said humanitarian aid had to be administered with the consent of that Government.

Explaining their non-participation in the vote, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said it was unnecessary to convene an international meeting and that a vote on the question would not solve the problems of Kampucheans, the United Arab Emirates had reservations with regard to the meeting's timing, and Jordan would have preferred a meeting, not at the ministerial level, to consider humanitarian aid alone. Iraq also did not participate in the vote as it felt the text contained political elements; for this reason Algeria and Ethiopia abstained.

Thailand said the sponsors wished to point out that the list of States mentioned in the text should not be taken as constituting a precedent for the future-a view shared by the United Kingdom.

Also before the Council was a draft resolution sponsored by Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Viet Nam.

By this text, the Council would have: noted with satisfaction that international aid had helped the Kampuchean people do away with famine and other grave sufferings; expressed appreciation to States and organizations concerned and for the Secretary-General's efforts in that regard; and recognized the need to maintain and increase such aid which might continue to be provided through the channels and machinery established by the organizations concerned. It would have recalled that the meeting of donor countries on 26 March 1980 had not achieved its target, anticipated a meeting of such countries scheduled for 13 May, and urged Governments to increase their financial contributions through established channels.

Nepal felt that elements of this text were incompatible with resolution 1980/23 and, on Nepal's oral proposal, the Council decided, by 23 votes to 11, with 13 abstentions, to take no decision on the draft.

Several States explained their votes against this decision. Argentina, Cyprus and Ethiopia said the Council should have been given the opportunity to decide on the draft. Hungary regretted that the Council had failed to take account of the fact that the two texts differed significantly, while the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said it did not find them incompatible. The USSR stated that certain delegations had used humanitarian assistance as a political instrument and had denied Council members the opportunity to express their views. Algeria and Bulgaria also felt the question had been politicized.

Had the 12-power draft been put to a vote, the Bahamas would have abstained in order to avoid a clash between the proposed meetings. Jordan said it had not participated in the vote owing to its strong preference for a consensus text.

Meeting on Humanitarian Assistance and Relief to the Kampuchean People (26 and 27 May)

The Meeting on Humanitarian Assistance and Relief to the Kampuchean People was held at Geneva on 26 and 27 May. Prior to this, the Secretary-General received several communications expressing opinions on the holding of the Meeting.

On 8 May, Viet Nam forwarded a 5 May statement from the Foreign Ministry of the People's Republic of Kampuchea which stated that the channelling of aid granted by socialist countries and the international community had been conducted normally. While the People's Revolutionary Council of Kampuchea had no objection to an international conference aimed at helping victims of the Pol Pot-Ieng Sary regime, it deemed the Geneva Meeting unnecessary and considered Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/23

(see preceding section) to be a grave violation of the sovereignty of the People's Republic and a brazen intervention in its internal affairs.

Viet Nam, in a note verbale of 16 May, supported the position of the People's Republic of Kampuchea concerning the Meeting and declined the invitation to participate.

The views of the People's Revolutionary Council of the People's Republic of Kampuchea on the Meeting received further support in communications from the USSR (19 May), the German Democratic Republic (21 May), and Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Poland (individually on 23 May). In giving their reasons for non-attendance, these States said they doubted that the Meeting would concern itself solely with humanitarian aspects; further, they considered that the Meeting represented interference in the internal affairs of Kampuchea since the legitimate representatives of its people- the People's Revolutionary Council-would not be present. They would, however, continue to provide aid to those people.

On the other hand, Democratic Kampuchea, by a 26 May Foreign Ministry statement transmitted the next day, fully supported the convening of the Meeting and asserted that aid intended for the Kampuchean people had been diverted to troops and officials of the Vietnamese administration in Kampuchea.

By a note of 24 June, the Secretary-General reported that, in compliance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/23 (see preceding section), he had invited 99 States to participate in the Meeting; 59 had done so. Six organizations and bodies having operational programmes of assistance to Kampuchea-UNICEF, ICRC, UNHCR, FAO, WFP and the United Nations Development Programme-as well as the European Economic Community had also attended. Andrew S. Peacock (Australia) and Patrick Bolokor (Nigeria) were elected President and Vice-President, respectively.

Annexed to the note was the closing statement by the President of the Meeting, who stressed that full co-operation from all concerned was essential if the international relief programme was to succeed. Despite the Meeting's limitations because of the absence of some bilateral donors, it would serve its purpose of promoting aid to the Kampuchean people, he said. He pointed out specific suggestions put forward to improve the operation's effectiveness, particularly those relating to delivery, transportation and distribution arrangements: the Meeting had stressed more entry points, improvement of infrastructure and logistics within Kampuchea, and the need for more international officials and medical personnel. Appreciation was expressed for the humane policies of Thailand and, in view of that country's pivotal position as host to hundreds of thousands of refugees and as the staging area for provision of supplies, it had been suggested, he said, that the Co-ordinator of the relief programmes be provided with a resident office in Bangkok. The President added that a special fund for Kampuchean relief had been proposed and the Secretary-General had been requested to study both proposals. An appeal had also been made to all parties concerned to abide strictly by the pertinent provisions of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and to respect the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.<sup>18</sup> In addition, the President said that the response to the second phase of the international relief programme-April to December 1980—had been generous and encouraging.

On 18 July, the Economic and Social Council, on an oral proposal by its President, adopted without objection decision 1980/156 by which it took note of the Meeting President's statement and decided to transmit it to all Member States and to the General Assembly at its 1980 regular session.

Report of the Special Representative to Co-ordinate Humanitarian Programmes

On 16 October 1980, the Secretary-General forwarded to the General Assembly a report by his Special Representative to Co-ordinate Humanitarian Programmes in Kampuchea—the Co-ordinator for United Nations humanitarian operations in Kampuchea—who reviewed the United Nations relief operation since its inception in 1979, initially undertaken for a six-month period from October 1979 through March 1980. The Special Representative noted that during the second phase of the relief programme, from April to December 1980, in addition to meeting urgently needed food requirements, efforts had been made to deliver as much rice seed as possible, to help improve food deliveries and distribution and to improve basic health care and education. International organizations had identified needs through December at over $500 million. The next donors meeting was scheduled for 19 November.

He observed that, from the outset, complex political factors had affected the operation and, in the border areas, the work of the international organizations endeavouring to help Kampuchians was exceptionally difficult since reasonable security conditions had never been developed and effective monitoring of the operation was virtually impossible. However, the Special Representative reported a steady improvement in monitoring distribution within Kampuchea, where 86 international relief organization staff were currently operating, and a marked improvement in the health of the population, indicating that aid was reaching the needy.

After pointing out the burdens imposed on Thailand resulting from the Kampuchean situation, he added that, by pursuing humane policies towards the refugees and by agreeing to use its facilities to move supplies to the population inside Kampuchea, Thailand had earned the international community's gratitude.

Further communications

On 24 January 1980, Viet Nam transmitted a statement of 22 January by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea protesting the organization of a proposed "March for the Survival of Cambodia." According to the statement, reports from Western sources had indicated that at a 15 January Paris press conference an organization called "Doctors without Frontiers" had announced a plan to march from Aranyaprathet (Thailand) into Kampuchea and distribute aid directly to the population. The Foreign Ministry charged that this was part of a plan to incite public opinion against Kampuchea and undermine the peaceful work of its people, and that it could not allow infringement of its territorial sovereignty.

On 8 April, Democratic Kampuchea forwarded a statement of 3 April from its Foreign Ministry claiming that aid sent via the Vietnamese régime in Phnom Penh had not reached the Kampuchean people, was being diverted to occupying troops and agents or being sold, and reiterated its request that an adequate number of United Nations and humanitarian organization personnel be sent to assure correct distribution of such aid.

From May to December, the Secretary-General received information on the nature and amount of assistance provided to the People's Republic of Kampuchea from the German Democratic Republic (27 May), Hungary (9 May and 19 September) and the USSR (2 September and 11 December).

Viet Nam detailed its assistance in a letter of 19 May and, on 22 May, forwarded a report by the Kampuchean news agency SPK on a meeting of the Kampuchean Committee for Reception and Distribution of Humanitarian Aid held on 16 May to determine measures for expediting its work.

On 13 September, China transmitted a statement by its representative at the Meeting of

Donors to the Programme of Humanitarian Assistance and Relief to the Kampuchean People, held on 3 September at United Nations Headquarters, New York. The representative charged that Vietnamese authorities had appropriated large quantities of international relief supplies earmarked for the Kampuchean people and were sabotaging relief operations on the Thai-Kampuchean border, by forbidding access to food distribution centres by hungry people or extorting fees from them. Viet Nam, in a note verbale of 5 September, rejected China's allegations as groundless and said they had been refuted by reports of United Nations officials in charge of the Programme. Annexed to the note verbale was a list of aid provided by Viet Nam during 1980.

On 11 November, Viet Nam transmitted a 21 October Le Monde newspaper article charging that the humanitarian assistance operation along the Khmer-Thai frontier was foundering because of corruption and extortion by some of those responsible for channelling aid, implicating an official of the United States Agency for International Development and officials of the Thai Government.

Two letters from Democratic Kampuchea further charged Viet Nam with misappropriating humanitarian aid. On 17 November, it transmitted what it claimed was evidence of diversion and pillaging of such aid by the Vietnamese occupying Kampuchea, and a 20 December declaration of the Presidency of the Council of Ministers of Democratic Kampuchea—transmitted on 29 December—added that Vietnamese aggressors were worsening famine conditions in Kampuchea by preventing the population from harvesting crops and by seizing or destroying the rice harvest.

Question of peace, stability and co-operation in South-East Asia

By a letter of 15 August 1980, Afghanistan, Angola, Bulgaria, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Seychelles and Viet Nam, and subsequently Czechoslovakia and Ethiopia, said that, although the countries of South-East Asia desired peace, stability and co-operation, they had been deprived of this for the past 35 years and had not reached agreements aimed at relaxing tensions and achieving those objectives. The signatories to the letter requested inclusion in the agenda of the General Assembly's thirty-fifth (1980) session of an item entitled "Question of peace, stability and co-operation in South-East Asia" with a view to enabling the international community to contribute to and enhance the efforts of the countries of the region towards those goals.

A statement of 2 September by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Democratic Kampuchea, transmitted on 8 September, charged that the request was a manoeuvre by Viet Nam intended to depict the Hanoi authorities as peace-seeking people and aimed at diverting international attention from the fact that 250,000 Vietnamese troops were occupying Kampuchea.

Support for discussion of the question of peace, stability and co-operation in South-East Asia at the current Assembly session was expressed in a 24 October telegram to the Secretary-General and the Assembly President from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, transmitted by Viet Nam on 27 October. The Foreign Minister added that a four-point proposal put forward by his country at a Conference with the Foreign Ministers of the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam, held at Vientiane, and contained in a statement of 18 July (see p. 326) should be among the proposals taken as the basis for discussion of the problem.

On 17 September, the General Committee recommended that the Assembly include the item in its agenda.

Speaking in the Committee, China said that the proposal to include the item was a manoeuvre by Viet Nam, since the root cause of turmoil in South-East Asia lay with that country, aided by the USSR, which had committed expansionist aggression against Kampuchea.

Malaysia and Thailand, though not opposed to including the item, thought it would have been more appropriate to do so once the Kampuchean conflict had ended.

Two further communications from Viet Nam, transmitted on 4 and 29 August, were included among those addressing this agenda item: these were memoranda of 31 July and 26 August from the Ministries of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea and Viet Nam, respectively, on the situation along the Thai-Kampuchean border (see p. 322) and on Thai-Kampuchean relations (see p. 326).

The Philippines, whose Minister for Foreign Affairs was Chairman of the Standing Committee of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN), transmitted three other communications (see p. 327) which were circulated in connexion with this subject: a joint communique issued on 26 June following a two-day ASEAN Ministerial Meeting at Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia; a letter and statement of 1 August, asking for United Nations assistance in rendering humanitarian aid to the Kampuchean people; and a press release statement of the ASEAN position on the situation in Kampuchea, issued on 19 September.

The question of peace, stability and co-operation in South-East Asia was considered by the General Assembly in three plenary meetings held on 23 and 24 October.

Opening the debate, the Lao People's Democratic Republic affirmed its desire for detente and understanding in the region and attributed tension in the area to China's policies which, it maintained, were aimed at restoring the Pol Pot regime in Kampuchea and pursuing a hostile policy towards other countries of Indo-China, particularly Viet Nam.

Viet Nam said the Indo-Chinese countries suggested that urgent questions related to restoration of peace and stability on the Thai-Kampuchean border and to normalization of the situation on the Thai-Lao border be examined first. Second, disagreements concerning the South China Sea, establishment of a zone of peace and stability, and the signing of treaties on non-aggression between the Indo-Chinese countries and the countries of ASEAN might be looked at.

Czechoslovakia and Ethiopia said they fully supported the positions of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam—that the situation in the region could be settled only by negotiations among the countries concerned. This view was shared by Poland.

Bulgaria and the German Democratic Republic were among those which also felt that instability in South-East Asia was caused by China's aggressive policy towards the peoples of Indo-China and its attempts to drive a wedge between them and ASEAN. According to Mongolia, imputations that the solidarity of the Indo-Chinese countries constituted a threat to the region were a Chinese propaganda campaign designed to cover its hegemonic designs. Bulgaria was joined by Democratic Yemen, Hungary and the Ukrainian SSR in expressing support for the proposals contained in the 18 July Vientiane statement.

Democratic Kampuchea charged that the current explosive situation in South-East Asia was caused by Viet Nam's invasion of Kampuchea in an attempt to absorb it into a Vietnamese "Indo-Chinese Federation," and asserted that only the total withdrawal of Vietnamese forces from Kampuchea could restore peace and stability to the region.

China supported this view and charged that the Vietnamese authorities had the direct support of the USSR. China rejected the contention that it was a threat to the area; no Chinese soldiers could be found in any South-East Asian country.

After stating that China's claims were groundless, the USSR said the only reasonable solution was that those South-East Asian countries with differing social structures should learn to coexist in peace on the basis of the established status quo. The Byelorussian SSR spoke similarly.

Indonesia and Malaysia recalled that since the late 1960s the ASEAN countries had worked towards establishment of a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in South-East Asia, and on 27 November 1971 ASEAN had proclaimed that concept; however, efforts to that end had been halted by Vietnamese intervention in Kampuchea in 1978. The key to peace in the region, therefore, was in the hands of Viet Nam, Indonesia added.

Singapore felt that if Viet Nam was sincere it should agree to the convening of an international conference to resolve the conflict in Kampuchea—a position shared by Thailand, which said it could not accept any solution imposed by military force.

As no draft resolution was submitted, the General Assembly without objection decided, by decision 35/403 of 24 October, on an oral proposal of the sponsors of the item, to adjourn consideration of the topic and to include it in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth (1981) session.

Communication concerning the question of Korea

By a letter of 1 June 1981 to the President of the Security Council, the representative of the United States transmitted, on behalf of the unified command established in accordance with a 1950 Council decision,<sup>19</sup> the report of the United Nations Command concerning the maintenance of the Korean Armistice Agreement of 27 July 1953<sup>20</sup> during the period 15 December 1979 to 16 December 1980.

The report dealt with the Armistice mechanism and procedures, and the activities of the Military Armistice Commission which had held seven meetings during the reporting period, called to protest violations of the Agreement by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, which according to the report numbered more than 8,100 during the period covered and included five instances of armed infiltrations and attacks. The report also said that on 13 March the Command had charged the Democratic People's Republic of Korea with constructing an illegal barrier system, begun in June 1979 and currently extending for more than 140 kilometres throughout the Demilitarized Zone and incorporating electrified and barbed-wire fences, anti-tank barriers and fortified positions.

The report concluded that the United Nations Command would continue to fulfil its obligations under the Agreement's mandate until the parties directly concerned were able to arrive at a more permanent arrangement for peace in Korea.

Chapter XI

Questions concerning Latin America and the Caribbean

Communications concerning relations between the Bahamas and Cuba

By a letter dated 12 May 1980, addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of the Bahamas charged that, on 10 May, Cuban Government military aircraft had violated Bahamian airspace and had attacked and sunk a Bahamian Government patrol vessel, resulting in the death of four crew members. In a note of protest to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Cuba, a copy of which was annexed to the letter, the Ministry of External Affairs of the Bahamas recounted the incident. It said that, while towing to port two Cuban fishing vessels that had been arrested for violating Bahamian fisheries laws, Her Majesty's Bahamian Ship Flamingo, an easily identifiable Government patrol vessel, was attacked without warning and sunk by Cuban aircraft. The following day, a Cuban helicopter had landed, without Bahamian permission, on Ragged Island- to where the survivors had made their way-while at the same time three Cuban aircraft had engaged in intimidating actions over that island. The Government of the Bahamas had demanded an apology, reserving its right to claim reparation for the damages and loss of life.

On 13 May, in a letter to the Council President, Cuba transmitted a note of 12 May from its Government, detailing the events of the two preceding days, and an editorial of 13 May from the newspaper Granma, constituting the official position of the Cuban Government in the matter. The note charged that the patrol vessel had attacked and seized two Cuban fishing boats in international waters, creating every appearance of a pirate attack, and the boats had radioed for help. Aircraft sighted at Ragged Island were part of an air search for the missing fishermen. The note stated that, if the vessel that had been sunk was in fact a Bahamian patrol boat, Cuba sincerely regretted the incident.

On 16 May, the Bahamian representative transmitted a note verbale dated 15 May in which his Government rejected the Cuban Government's explanations as being contrary to the facts, reiterated its charges that Cuba was responsible for the aggressive acts described in the note, and reasserted its demands for a formal and unconditional apology, guarantees of Cuban respect for Bahamian sovereignty and territorial integrity, and full compensation for the loss of lives and property.

By a letter dated 21 May, Cuba transmitted a note verbale of 19 May to the Bahamian Foreign Ministry, reiterating the charge that it was the Bahamian attack against the Cuban fishing boats that had caused the regrettable confusion in which the Cuban Air Force had mistaken the Bahamian patrol vessel for a pirate ship. The Government of Cuba deplored the unfortunate events, expressed its apologies and reiterated its willingness to offer compensation.

By a letter dated 23 May, the Bahamian representative transmitted the text of a note verbale of 21 May in which his Government accepted the apologies, acknowledgements and assurances as contained in the Cuban note of 19 May. The Bahamas Ministry of External Affairs proposed that the contents of those notes and an agreement on the amount of compensation and reparation should constitute an acceptable solution to both Governments. On 27 May, he transmitted a note verbale of the same date addressed to Cuba in which his Government expressed regret that Cuba had not replied to the Bahamian note of 21 May and restated its invitation to the Cuban Government to accept the Bahamian proposals as a basis for a settlement.

In a letter dated 2 June, the representative of the Bahamas stated that his Government and the Government of Cuba had agreed on a formula for a solution to the problem arising out of the activities of the Cuban armed forces on 10 and 11 May. The letter listed the Bahamian demands previously made of Cuba, on the basis of which it said a set of understandings, embodied in the notes exchanged on 19 and 21 May, as well as a note of 28 May, had been agreed by the two Governments. These understandings, assurances and apologies were included in the letter. An annex to the letter detailed facts pertaining to the incidents in question.

Cuba, in a letter of 16 June, stated that the Cuban and Bahamian Governments had agreed on a formula for solving the problem arising from the incidents of 10 and 11 May. As confirmation of the Cuban position, the letter reproduced a note of 28 May addressed to the Bahamas giving the Cuban Government's understanding of the Bahamian note of 21 May. It also noted that the Bahamian Government had agreed on the need to give careful consideration to the delimitation of the sea areas of the two countries. An annex to the letter detailed facts relating to the incident of 10 May.

Communication from Costa Rica

By a letter dated 16 January 1980, addressed to the Secretary-General, the representative of Costa Rica transmitted the text of a press release from his Government expressing satisfaction at the prompt release of the Costa Rican Ambassador and other diplomatic officials who had been seized and detained in the Panamanian Embassy in El Salvador. Condemning terrorism, kidnapping, hostage-taking, blackmail and sabotage as methods of political action, Costa Rica appealed to the United Nations to take all necessary steps to secure the prompt release of hostages currently being held in the United States Embassy in Teheran, Iran (see p. 309).

Chapter XII

Questions relating to the Middle East

In 1980, the situation in the Middle East continued to occupy the attention of the Security Council, the General Assembly and several other United Nations bodies.

In southern Lebanon along the border with Israel, where the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) was stationed, the cease-fire was broken a number of times. Lebanon submitted a series of complaints of attacks by Israeli forces against civilian targets. Israel, on the other hand, repeatedly charged that armed elements of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) had attempted to cross into Israel through UNIFIL lines. On 18 April, through a statement by its President, the Security Council condemned attacks on UNIFIL and the murder of two of its soldiers by the de facto forces in southern Lebanon operating outside the Government's control. By a resolution of 24 April, it condemned Israel's military intervention in Lebanon and requested action to restore Lebanon's sovereignty over all its territory. The Council extended UNIFIL'S mandate twice-first until 19 December and then for another six months, until 19 June 1981.

The situation in the Israel-Syria sector remained quiet, with no serious incidents. Twice during the year, the Council extended for six months the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, stationed in the Golan Heights. The second extension was until 31 May 1981.

The General Assembly in 1980 appropriated a total of $156,743,240 for the two United Nations peace-keeping forces in the Middle East, and approved higher reimbursement rates to troop-contributing States.

The question of Palestine was the subject of an emergency special session in July, at which the Assembly reiterated its call for complete Israeli withdrawal from all the territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and reaffirmed the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination and establishment of an independent State. The Security Council was asked to adopt effective measures under the sanctions provisions of the Charter of the United Nations. These demands were repeated in an Assembly resolution adopted in December at the regular session. By another resolution of 15 December, the Assembly rejected all separate treaties that violated Palestinian rights and contradicted the principle of just and comprehensive solutions to the Middle East problem.

In its 1980 report, the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People reaffirmed its 1976 recommendations designed to enable the Palestinian people to exercise its rights. Included in the Committee's recommendations was a call for Israeli withdrawal from the occupied territories according to a timetable to be fixed by the Security Council and the implementation of the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination and national independence.

In a resolution on the situation in the Middle East, adopted on 16 December, the Assembly reaffirmed its conviction that the question of Palestine was at the core of the Middle East conflict and that no comprehensive and lasting peace would be achieved without the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable rights, and without the equal participation of the parties, including PLO.

The situation in the territories occupied by Israel continued to occupy the attention of United Nations bodies. On 30 July, Israel passed a "basic law" declaring Jerusalem to be its capital, despite a Security Council resolution of 30 June reaffirming the non-validity of Israeli measures to alter the city's status. The Council censured on 20 August Israel's action on Jerusalem and decided not to recognize it. The Assembly took similar action by a resolution of 15 December.

On 5 December, the Assembly called for continued economic and social aid by United Nations agencies and organs to Palestinians, to be given in co-operation and consultation with local Palestinian organizations and the parties.

On 1 March, the Council determined that Israel's policy of settling parts of its population in the occupied territories constituted a serious obstruction to peace in the Middle East. At the same time, and again on 5 June, it called on States not to provide Israel with assistance to be used specifically in connexion with such settlements. The Assembly adopted a similar resolution in December.

The three-member Security Council Commission on Israeli settlements in the occupied territories reported in November 1980 that Israel's systematic settlements policy had brought drastic adverse changes to the daily life of the remaining Arab population, as well as to the geographical and demographic nature of the territories.

The Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, in its report to the Assembly, stated that Israel's annexation and settlements policy continued unabated, while acts of violence by the Israeli settlers and the military authorities against the Arab population had increased significantly.

The expulsion of the Mayors of Hebron (Al-Khalil) and Halhoul and of the Islamic Judge of Hebron was another subject of United Nations resolutions. Both the Council, on 8 and 20 May and 19 December, and the Assembly, also in December, called on Israel to rescind the illegal measures taken in expelling the three Palestinian leaders and to facilitate their immediate return.

The Assembly, on 11 December, adopted six resolutions on the Special Committee's report. It condemned Israeli policies and practices such as evacuation, deportation, expulsion and displacement of the Arab inhabitants, demolition of houses, mass arrests, and the illegal exploitation of the natural resources of the occupied territories. The Assembly determined that the Israeli measures and actions to change the status, geographical nature and demographic composition of those territories had no legal validity and called again on Israel to desist from those actions. The Assembly further determined that all Israeli legislative and administrative measures that purported to alter the character and legal status of the Golan Heights were null and void and constituted a flagrant violation of international law and the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, and called on Israel to desist from enacting such legislation. It called again on Israel to comply with that Convention and urged all States parties to it to exert all efforts to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in the occupied territories, including Jerusalem. The Assembly also condemned Israeli policies and practices against Palestinian students and the systematic repression of universities in the occupied territories, and demanded that Israel ensure the freedom of those institutions.

On 5 December, the Assembly condemned Israeli policy resulting in the deterioration of the living conditions of Palestinians and called on all States to co-operate with the United Nations and local Palestinian authorities to alleviate those conditions. It also reaffirmed the right of the Arab States and peoples subjected to Israeli occupation to permanent sovereignty over their natural resources and economic activities.

In 1980, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) maintained its education, health and relief programmes for Palestine refugees in Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic and the Israeli-occupied territories of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. To overcome a deficit of more than $56 million at the beginning of the year, the basic food ration was kept at the reduced 1978 level, and a number of capital improvements were deferred.

On 3 November, the Assembly adopted six resolutions on UNRWA. It renewed the Agency's mandate for another three years, until 30 June 1984, and urged Governments to contribute regularly and generously to meet the Agency's needs. It appealed for funds for education and training, including refugee scholarships. It endorsed continued UNRWA humanitarian assistance to other displaced persons in the area. It reaffirmed the rights of all displaced inhabitants to return to their homes or former places of residence, and called on Israel to stop removing and resettling Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip and destroying their shelters. It also requested its Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA to continue its efforts for another year.

By a resolution of 5 December, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue to help Lebanon implement its reconstruction and development plans, with assistance from United Nations specialized agencies. For its programme in the south, Lebanon designated the United Nations Children's Fund as executing agency for water-supply projects and the repair and construction of schools and hospitals.

Details of these and other related actions on Middle East questions are given in the following pages.

Situation in the Middle East: status of the cease-fire

Israel-Syria sector: United Nations Disengagement Observer Force

Communications

On 21 February 1980, the Syrian Arab Republic transmitted to the President of the Security Council a letter of the same date from its Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs, addressed to the Secretary-General, rejecting charges made by the Prime Minister of Israel to the effect that the Syrian Arab Republic was planning to launch a military action against Israel, and accusing Israel of preparing acts of aggression against his country.

In a letter of 7 March to the Council President, Israel replied that it was not contemplating an attack on the Syrian Arab Republic or any other country.

By a note verbale of 27 October, the Syrian Arab Republic transmitted to the Secretary-General a letter from its Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister, stating that the Israeli Knesset intended to discuss a bill for the annexation of the Syrian Golan Heights and re-emphasizing the need to put an end to Israel's aggressive and expansionist practices.

The first action was taken on 30 May, when the mandate due to expire on 31 May was extended to 30 November. Then, on 26 November, the Council further extended the mandate to 31 May 1981. The Council acted after receiving reports on UNDOF by the Secretary-General covering the periods from 24 November 1979 to 23 May 1980 and from 24 May to 20 November 1980. In both cases, he recommended extension of the Force for six months.

On each occasion, the Council adopted a resolution prepared in the course of consultations among its members. The texts were adopted, without debate, by 14 votes to 0, with one member (China) not participating in the vote.

By resolutions 470(1980) and 481(1980), the Council: renewed UNDOF's mandate for another six months; called on the parties to implement its resolution 338(1973), by which it had called for determined efforts to achieve a just and durable peace settlement;<sup>1</sup> and requested the Secretary-General to report again in six months.

At both meetings, the President then made virtually identical statements:

In connexion with the adoption of the resolution on the renewal of the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, I have been authorized to make the following complementary statement on behalf of the Security Council regarding the resolution just adopted:

"As is known, the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force states in paragraph 26 [paragraph 27 of the second report]: 'Despite the present quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the situation in the Middle East as a whole continues to be potentially dangerous and is likely to remain so unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem can be reached.' This statement of the Secretary-General reflects the view of the Security Council."

In his reports of 23 May and 20 November, the Secretary-General gave an account of the Force's continued supervision of the observance of the cease-fire between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic. He said that, with the cooperation of the parties, UNDOF had continued to perform its functions effectively, though restrictions on its freedom of movement still existed. The situation in the sector had remained quiet, with no serious incidents during the period under review.

As at 24 November, the strength of the Force was 1,296, with contingents drawn from Austria (529), Canada (225), Finland (389) and Poland (135), and including 18 observers from the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in Palestine (UNTSO). There had been one casualty during the reporting period; on 15 September, an Austrian soldier was seriously injured in a mine accident. Throughout 1980, the Force Commander continued to be Major-General Guenther G. Greindl of Austria, and from 1 February the Chief of Staff of UNTSO was Major-General Erkki Raine Kaira of Finland (seep. 358).

Situation in the Israel-Lebanon sector

Communications (February-24 April)

The President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General received a number of complaints during the first four months of 1980 concerning incidents in the Israel-Lebanon sector, in which the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) was deployed to assist the Lebanese Government in re-establishing its authority in the area.

By a letter of 8 February to the Secretary-General, Israel charged that terrorists from Lebanese territory had attacked civilians in Israel. Pursued by a patrol of the Israel Defence Forces, they had escaped, in all likelihood the letter said, into the area controlled by UNIFIL.

In a letter of 7 April to the President of the Council, Israel charged that terrorists of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) based in Lebanon had penetrated into Israel from the UNIFIL area of operation and seized two nursery buildings, killing an infant, a civilian and an Israeli soldier, and wounding other small children and soldiers.

In letters dated 21 and 25 March, Lebanon charged Israeli forces with continued shelling of Lebanese villages, many of them within the UNIFIL area of operation, which had caused extensive damage to property and left several persons wounded. Three soldiers of the Netherlands contingent of UNIFIL had been injured. Lebanon reserved its right to call for an urgent meeting of the Security Council should the situation further deteriorate.

In letters dated 14 and 15 April, Israel submitted a series of charges regarding the activities of PLO terrorists against southern Lebanon since the establishment of UNIFIL and against targets in Israel since the withdrawal of Israel Defence Forces units from Lebanon in June 1978.

By a letter of 18 April, the representative of the United Arab Emirates, in his capacity as Chairman of the Arab group of States at the United Nations, charged that members of an Israeli special force had raided the Sarafand area in southern Lebanon at dawn that day, killing 22 civilians and causing considerable destruction of property, and called for immediate action by the Security Council.

On 21 April, Ireland transmitted to the Secretary-General a Government statement of 20 April in connexion with the killing of three soldiers—two of which had been murdered on 18 April—from the Irish contingent of UNIFIL by irregular de facto forces of Major Saad Haddad, asking for specific measures to ensure the effective functioning of the Force and the safety of its personnel.

In a letter of 24 April to the Secretary-General, Italy set out a statement of 22 April by the nine member States of the European Community expressing profound revulsion at the recent killing of UNIFIL soldiers and reaffirming their support for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Lebanon and for UNIFIL's operations.

Consideration by the Security Council (13-24 April)

The Security Council met from 13 to 24 April to consider a letter of 10 April from Lebanon and a special report of the Secretary-General on UNIFIL.

By its letter, Lebanon charged Israel with continuing acts of aggression against southern Lebanon and with direct confrontation with UNIFIL, and requested a meeting of the Council.

In his special report dated 11 April, the Secretary-General informed the Council of the escalation of tension in and adjacent to the UNIFIL area of operation, where serious incidents had occurred, including violent harassment by the de facto forces of long-established observation posts manned by observers of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in Palestine (UNTSO). Since 6 April, the de facto forces had sought forcibly to establish a permanent armed presence in the area of deployment of the Irish battalion. During the night of 6/7 April, Palestinian armed elements had attacked the Israeli Kibbutz Misgav Am. Starting on 8 April, Israeli tanks, armoured vehicles and personnel had moved into southern Lebanon, including the UNIFIL area of deployment.

In three addenda to his special report issued on 16 and 18 April, the Secretary-General provided the Council with further information on the continuing acts of harassment of UNIFIL by the de facto forces, which had resulted in the murder of two Irish soldiers.

Fiji, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jordan, Lebanon, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Saudi Arabia and the Syrian Arab Republic were invited, at their request, to participate in the Council's debate without the right to vote.

By a letter of 13 April to the Council President, Tunisia requested that PLO be invited to participate in the discussion. The President observed that the proposal was not made pursuant to rule 37<sup>2</sup> or rule 39<sup>3</sup> of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. He added that the invitation, if approved, would confer on PLO the same rights as those conferred on a Member State when invited to participate pursuant to rule 37.

<sup>2</sup> Rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure reads: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Security Council in accordance with Article 35 (1) of the Charter." For text of Article 35, paragraph 1, of the Charter of the United Nations, see APPENDIX II.

<sup>3</sup> Rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure reads: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

At the request of the United States, the Council took a vote on the Tunisian proposal, which was adopted by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (France, Norway, Portugal, United Kingdom). The United States reiterated that it was inappropriate for the Council to couch such an invitation to PLO in terms that some might interpret as conferring rights of participation as if it were a Member State.

At requests by Tunisia of 13 and 22 April, invitations under rule 39 were extended, without objection, to the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States to the United Nations and to the Personal Representative of the Secretary-General of the League, respectively.

At the Council's meeting of 13 April, the Secretary-General made a statement concerning the latest developments in the UNIFIL area of operation, saying in particular that artillery and mortar fire by the de facto forces had caused severe damage to UNIFIL headquarters and property and the At-Tiri area and that two soldiers had suffered injuries as a result. He reported that four members of the Irish contingent had been captured by the de facto forces. At a meeting with Israeli and de facto forces, UNIFIL had agreed to withdraw its reserve from At-Tiri as soon as all de facto forces had left the village. The Secretary-General expressed his concern at the deteriorating situation and asked for Council assistance in dealing with the harassment of UNIFIL by the de facto forces.

On 14 April, the Secretary-General told the Council that Israel had informed him that it had withdrawn all its troops from southern Lebanon. However, he said, UNIFIL had been unable to confirm the extent of the withdrawal, as its freedom of movement in the enclave was still severely restricted.

The representative of Lebanon informed the Council that the Commander-in-Chief of the Lebanese Army had offered to the UNIFIL Commander that the Lebanese detachment in the UNIFIL area of operation be moved to At-Tiri in order to share in the responsibilities of peace-keeping. That, he said, was a major development in enabling Lebanon to recover its sovereignty. He voiced doubts that the Israeli withdrawal was real and total and called for measures to put an end to a situation in which Lebanon's international boundaries remained at Israel's mercy. An end must also be put to the existence of the de facto forces which had become nothing more than an accessory of Israel's occupation.

Lebanon requested from the Council a resolution which would provide for the immediate cessation of hostilities against UNIFIL and its unhindered deployment, the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of Israeli army units from southern Lebanon, the dismantling and disarming of its surrogate de facto forces, and the reactivation of the 1949 General Armistice Agreement.

France condemned the attacks by the de facto forces against UNIFIL and deplored Israel's intervention as an inadmissible infringement of Lebanon's territorial integrity and sovereignty, as well as a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and United Nations resolutions on UNIFIL. It emphasized the importance of enabling the Force to enjoy complete freedom of movement in its zone of operations.

Israel stated that its Government deeply deplored the tension in the south of Lebanon and fully supported the national sovereignty, territorial integrity and unity of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries. However, the presence of PLO and Syrian forces in Lebanon had reduced Lebanese sovereignty to shambles. The high hopes placed in UNIFIL had not been fulfilled, mainly because of the infiltration of PLO terrorists into the areas under its control.

According to information in the possession of the Israeli Government, PLO and its associates had established themselves in large numbers in about 40 locations within UNIFIL's area of operation where they carried out various activities, including frequent attempts to infiltrate into Israel. Under those circumstances, Israel said, its Government had the right and duty to take all the measures necessary to protect its citizens. Such inherent right of self-defence was recognized under Article 51 of the Charter.<sup>4</sup>

The USSR said Israel had carried out a mass invasion into Lebanese territory, thus flouting again international law and violating the numerous Council resolutions whose purpose was to preserve Lebanon's sovereignty and territorial integrity. With the help of its agents in Lebanon, namely the anti-Government forces of Major Haddad, Israel had made it impossible for United Nations troops to establish control over the Lebanese areas that bordered Israel. In the view of the USSR, Israel's aggressive and provocative actions were part and parcel of the expansionist policy of its ruling circles for which military adventures had long been used as a means to realize far-reaching plans for annexation. By stepping up military tension, Israel was endeavouring to distract international attention from the ongoing negotiations regarding so-called administrative autonomy for Palestinians, the purpose of which was to facilitate Israel's consolidation of its annexation of the Arab lands occupied in 1967. The conclusion of the Camp David accords in September 1978 and the signing in March 1979 of a separate Egyptian-Israeli treaty had given Israel free rein to pursue its increasingly aggressive and expansionist policy against Lebanon and the Palestinian refugees located in its territory. That policy could not have been pursued had Israel not enjoyed virtually unlimited support from its protectors. The United States not only provided Israel with the most sophisticated form of weaponry, but also prevented the Security Council from taking any decision that would condemn Israel's armed provocations and provide for adoption of effective measures to put an end to them.

Turning to the overall situation in the Middle East, the USSR stated that a comprehensive and just settlement was feasible only if due account was taken of the legitimate rights of all parties concerned, including the Arab people of Palestine. For that, it added, there was only one genuine basis, namely, the restoration to the Arabs of all the territories seized in 1967, the granting to the Palestinian Arabs of the right of self-determination, including the right to create their own State, and the granting to all States in the area of an independent and secure existence. Any attempts to solve the problem on the basis of separate transactions would only increase the tension in the area and further Israel's aggressiveness. The USSR believed it essential that the Security Council adopt a resolution which contained unambiguous wording that would not only call for respect for Lebanon's territorial integrity, sovereignty and political independence but would provide for forthright measures against the Israeli aggressor.

The representative of Norway said that the incursion of the Israeli forces into southern Lebanon was a clear defiance of Council decisions and a violation of Lebanon's sovereignty and territorial integrity. Norway condemned the attack on Kibbutz Misgav Am. However, that appalling act could not justify an armed incursion into southern Lebanon. Israel, in the view of the Norwegian representative, carried a heavy responsibility in the tense situation created by the de facto forces, since their activity could not be sustained without Israel's moral, financial and logistic support. He urged Israel to co-operate fully to compel the de facto forces to cease their harassment of UNIFIL and to refrain from such flagrant breaches of international law and code of conduct as had been witnessed recently.

The representative of the German Democratic Republic said the recent aggressive actions of the Israeli military and the Haddad gang could be viewed as one more link in the chain of the Israeli policy aimed against a comprehensive, just and lasting solution of the Middle East conflict. Instead of compelling Israel to observe international rules; its protectors had chosen the course of separate deals which were being used by the aggressors for further adventures. In the view of his country, the Middle East crisis could be resolved only on the basis of the withdrawal of all Israeli troops from the Arab territories occupied in 1967, implementation of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, in particular its right to its own independent State, and assurance of the security of all States of the region.

The representative of Zambia stated that Israel should be condemned in the strongest terms for its acts of aggression against Lebanon and the wanton and savage destruction and attacks against UNIFIL. The Council, he said, must act to ensure full respect for its decisions regarding the situation in Lebanon, which, in his view, could not be divorced from the general problem of the Middle East.

In Jamaica's view, the events of the past week had shown that both the Israel Defence Forces and Haddad's rebel forces, supportive of each other, had undertaken their defiant actions in the knowledge that UNIFIL's mandate ensured that its response would be limited. While Jamaica continued to regard UNIFIL's presence as vital to the prevention of all-out war in the area, it believed the Council should show determination to prevent the continued abuse and harassment of its peace-keeping troops and flagrant violations of the United Nations Charter by Israel.

The United Kingdom shared the deep concern expressed by the Secretary-General and many others about the escalation of violence in southern Lebanon. It condemned the murderous attacks on UNIFIL by Major Haddad's forces as well as the Israeli incursion into Lebanon. It also condemned the attack on Kibbutz Misgav Am, but did not regard it as a justification for the subsequent incursion of Israel into Lebanon. The United Kingdom urged all concerned to co-operate with UNIFIL and avoid any action which might obstruct the full implementation of Security Council resolution 425 (1978),<sup>5</sup> calling, inter alia, for respect for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and political independence of Lebanon.

Bangladesh and the Philippines called for a complete end to the wanton violations of UNIFIL's role as a peace-keeping force; otherwise the prestige and authority of the Organization would be seriously eroded. In Bangladesh's view, pressure must be applied, particularly by those countries best placed for that purpose, to make Israel fulfil its obligations and comply with its commitment to co-operate with UNIFIL.

Portugal called for the full re-establishment of the sovereignty of the Lebanese Government over all its territory and expressed support for any measures aimed at enhancing UNIFIL's capacity to implement its mandate fully.

In the course of the debate, the Council heard other statements by non-member States, as well as the representatives of PLO and the League of Arab States.

Jordan called on the Council to put an end to Israel's aggression and ensure the total withdrawal of all its armed forces from Lebanon. Otherwise, it said, the whole Middle East would find itself in the throes of a conflict that could pose a most serious threat to international peace.

The representative of Ireland said he had been instructed to address the Council in view of his Government's great concern regarding recent events involving UNIFIL, particularly in the area where the Irish contingent was stationed. It was essential that the difficulties placed in the way of the Force in its efforts to carry out its mandate be removed. If the full co-operation of the parties was not forthcoming, the most serious questions as to the value of the Force would arise.

The Netherlands also expressed great concern about the consistent obstruction of UNIFIL in the implementation of its mandate. It emphasized the urgent need for the extension of UNIFIL's complete control to the internationally recognized boundary of Lebanese territory, which it considered instrumental to controlling movements of armed elements and a prerequisite for the fulfilment of UNIFIL's mandate. It associated itself with the Secretary-General's call for restraint and wished to impress on Israel the absolute necessity of calling a halt to the actions of Haddad's forces. The Netherlands also believed it important that UNTSO become operational again in the internationally recognized demarcation line between Israel and Lebanon.

Italy expressed the belief that Israel must be made to realize that the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Lebanon were essential conditions for stability in the whole region and that it was in its own interest to ensure those conditions by showing greater co-operation in the implementation of Council resolution 425(1978) establishing UNIFIL, with particular regard to the deployment of UNIFIL in all its area of operations. In Italy's view, the escalation of violence in the Middle East pointed out once again the urgent need for a just and comprehensive settlement to be negotiated among all the parties concerned, including PLO.

Nigeria had offered its contribution to UNIFIL with the clear understanding that the Force would enjoy the acceptance, if not the approval, of all the parties to the Lebanese tragedy. The hostility shown to UNIFIL was an exceptionally troubling development which threatened one of the major purposes of the United Nations-peace-keeping. Nigeria condemned the harassment, torture and violence to which UNIFIL personnel were daily exposed at the hands of Major Haddad's illegal forces and deplored the fact that Israel aided and abetted those activities.

The Syrian Arab Republic stated that the Israeli actions in Lebanon, whether directly or through the so-called de facto forces, were a challenge to the Security Council, and that it was high time for its members to assume their responsibility in the matter. Peace in the area could prevail only when the Palestinians were allowed to establish their own State in their homeland.

The representative of PLO, quoting from the diaries of Moshe Sharett, a former Prime Minister of Israel, said that current Israeli activities in Lebanon were part of Zionist plans dating back to 1919 aimed at including southern Lebanon in the Jewish homeland promised under the Balfour Declaration. Turning to the latest attacks against UNIFIL, he urged the Council to condemn in the strongest possible terms the Israeli violations of the General Armistice Agreement and the territorial integrity of Lebanon and to impose sanctions on Israel.

The representative of the League of Arab States said that Israel sought to achieve final strategic military hegemony in Lebanon and prepare the ground for gaining control over the waters of the Litani River. By challenging Lebanon's authority and preventing it from deploying its forces in the south, Israel sought to keep Lebanon in a state of manageable turmoil favourable to its designs. Nothing but the imposition of economic, political and military sanctions would deter Israel from further defiance of United Nations authority.

On 18 April, the Security Council received news that two members of the Irish contingent of UNIFIL had been murdered by the de facto forces. After consultations among Council members, the President made the following statement:

I am authorized by the Security Council to make the following statement, on behalf of its members, pending action on the resolution which the Security Council is considering on the overall situation in Lebanon and on the acts of hostility against Lebanon, the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization.

The members of the Security Council are shocked and outraged at the report that the Council has received on the attacks on the Force and the cold-blooded murder of peace-keeping soldiers by the de facto forces.

This unprecedented, barbaric act against a peace-keeping force is a direct challenge to and defiance of the authority of the Security Council and to the mission of the United Nations in maintaining international peace and security.

The Security Council strongly condemns all those who share in the responsibility for this outrageous act. The Council reaffirms its intention to take such determined action as the situation calls for to enable the Force to take immediate and total control of its entire area of operation up to the internationally recognized boundaries.

The Council extends its deep-felt condolences to the Government of Ireland and the families of the victims.

The Council also commends the valiant action of the commanders and soldiers of the Force, and the courage of the United Nations observers under the most adverse circumstances.

Following that statement, members of the Council expressed shock at the murder of men serving the United Nations in the cause of peace. They called on Israel to discontinue its support to the de facto forces and to co-operate in disbanding them.

Resuming its consideration of the item on its agenda, the Council heard statements by Fiji, Saudi Arabia, Tunisia, the President, speaking as the representative of Mexico, and a representative of the League of Arab States.
