Fiji reaffirmed that its soldiers would continue to serve in southern Lebanon, even though its contingent had recorded the highest number of casualties in the history of UNIFIL. Saudi Arabia considered that Israel's encouragement of the de facto forces was a calculated attempt to undermine the Council's authority. Tunisia felt there was little hope of a lasting solution to Lebanon's difficulties if the Council confined itself to the provisional measures it had implemented over the past three years; implementation of a comprehensive Middle East settlement had not been successful because the peace proposed was not based on affirmation of the rights of the Palestinian people.

Speaking as the representative of Mexico, the Council President said the response of the contributing countries and the steps taken by the Secretary-General to facilitate compliance with the Force's mandate deserved unanimous support. But the time had come for the Council to take more far-reaching action; it had to ensure that all the parties concerned would co-operate towards placing UNIFIL in a position of being able to carry out its task, and to make perfectly clear that it was legitimate for UNIFIL to use force against any attempt to prevent it from carrying out its functions. The Council was clearly confronted with a matter of principle. All special interests and matters of temporary convenience had to be put aside.

The Personal Representative of the Secretary-

General of the League of Arab States underscored the unanimous support of the Arab States for the just cause of Lebanon and said that what they expected of the United Nations was not merely that the Israeli army end its murderous raids but also that Israel obey Security Council resolutions and cease all direct or indirect military action.

On 24 April, the Council, by 12 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions (German Democratic Republic, USSR, United States), adopted resolution 467(1980) prepared in the course of consultations. Another proposal, sponsored by Tunisia, had been circulated on 18 April but was later withdrawn.

By resolution 467(1980), the Council reaffirmed its determination to implement its previous decisions in the totality of the area of UNIFIL operations, up to the internationally recognized boundaries. It condemned all actions contrary to these decisions and, in particular, strongly deplored: any violation of Lebanese sovereignty and territorial integrity; Israel's military intervention in Lebanon; all acts of violence in violation of the General Armistice Agreement between Israel and Lebanon; provision of military assistance to the so-called de facto forces; all acts of interference with UNTSO; all acts of hostility against UNIFIL and in or through its area of operation; all obstructions of UNIFIL's ability to confirm the complete withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanon, to supervise the cessation of hostilities, to ensure the peaceful character of the area of operation, to control movement and to take measures deemed necessary to ensure the effective restoration of Lebanon's sovereignty; and acts that had led to loss of life and physical injuries among UNIFIL and UNTSO personnel, their harassment and abuse, the disruption of communication, and the destruction of property and material.

The Council condemned the deliberate shelling of UNIFIL headquarters and called attention to the provisions in UNIFIL's mandate that would allow it to use its right to self-defence. The Council requested the Secretary-General to convene a meeting, at an appropriate level, of the Israel-Lebanon Mixed Armistice Commission (ILMAC) to agree on precise recommendations and to reactivate the General Armistice Agreement, conducive to the restoration of Lebanon's sovereignty over all its territory up to the internationally recognized boundaries. Finally, it called on all parties concerned and all those capable of lending any assistance to co-operate with the Secretary-General in enabling UNIFIL to fulfil its mandate.

Among the differences between the Tunisian proposal and the text adopted were the following: the Tunisian text "strongly" condemned the actions condemned in the adopted text, and the latter text incorporated the call for a meeting of <sup>ILMAC</sup>.

A number of Council members made statements in explanation of vote. China said that the situation in southern Lebanon had been brought about entirely by Israel's armed incursions into Lebanon and provocations of incidents and conflicts by the Israeli-backed Lebanese secessionist forces. It considered the resolution on the whole conducive to support for the Lebanese and Arab peoples in opposing Israel's aggression and to the defence of Lebanon's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity. It therefore supported it, despite its deficiencies. As to references to <sup>UNIFIL</sup>, China's position had been made clear when the Security Council established that body in 1978.<sup>6</sup>

The German Democratic Republic declared that the resolution did not contain effective measures to prevent further acts of aggression by Israel. In the view of certain misgivings regarding <sup>UNIFIL'S</sup> mandate, which it had repeatedly mentioned, it abstained in the vote.

The representative of the United States announced that he would abstain because the resolution did not deal with the problems in a balanced and comprehensive way. He would have preferred a resolution which concentrated on constructive proposals rather than on condemnation. He indicated that the policy of the United States had been guided by three principles: that all parties must respect Lebanon's territorial integrity; that the authority of the Government of Lebanon must be restored up to the international border; and that a cease-fire should be respected in all quarters, including all attacks against Israel from Lebanese territory.

The USSR noted that the resolution contained a condemnation of Israel's armed intervention in Lebanon, as well as of the support provided by the Haddad separatist forces to Israel. The USSR considered that that condemnation should have been more clear-cut and the resolution should have included effective measures which would have made possible a complete cessation of all acts of Israeli aggression against Lebanon, both direct and indirect. The USSR abstained in the vote in accordance with its position of principle on <sup>UNIFIL</sup>, including the Council's administration of <sup>UNIFIL</sup>, the selection of national contingents and the method of financing.

Several other speakers were heard following the vote. Israel stated that both the deliberations of the Council and the adopted resolution had again been marked by a striking lack of balance and a selective conscience. The common denominator of this selectivity, it said, was an unwillingness even to criticize <sup>PLO</sup>. The attack against civilian targets in Israel had been ignored-the Misgav Am outrage was not even mentioned in the resolution-as had the wider dimensions of developments in southern Lebanon.

The representative of Jordan said the resolution had been so critically watered down that it was unlikely to be heeded. He found it strange that the incident of Misgav Am in Israel should have been an excuse for an attack on the territorial integrity of Lebanon, when no evidence had been produced that any infiltration had occurred across the Lebanese border.

Lebanon asked the Council to view the adopted text as a future-oriented resolution. With <sup>UNIFIL</sup>, Lebanon wished to transform southern Lebanon into an area of peace and security and not into an arena for future wars. Lebanon asked that it not be held accountable for what it had not done.

The <sup>PLO</sup> representative said he left it to the Council to decide whether there was any proof that the people who had carried out the attack on Misgav Am were infiltrators. He added that the United States, which had expressed shock at what happened in that incident, should have expressed a similar feeling at the wholesale murder of Palestinians and Lebanese.

Communications (28 April-16 June)

On 28 April, the Secretary-General informed the President of the Security Council that it was his intention to replace the Norwegian medical unit, which was soon to be withdrawn from <sup>UNIFIL</sup>, by a Swedish one, subject to the usual consultations, if and when the Council decided to extend the mandate of <sup>UNIFIL</sup>. On 29 April, the President replied that the Council members had agreed with the Secretary-General's proposal. China had dissociated itself from the matter.

By a letter dated 2 May, Fiji, Ireland and Senegal transmitted to the Secretary-General, on behalf of the 11 countries contributing troops to <sup>UNIFIL</sup>, a communique of that date following their meeting at Dublin, Ireland, to discuss the difficulties experienced by <sup>UNIFIL</sup> in carrying out its mandate. The communique expressed the conviction of the 11 States that the basic requirement to permit the Force to operate effectively was that it take immediate and total control of its entire area of operations.

By letters dated 8, 17 and 27 May to the Council President, Lebanon submitted a series of complaints of attacks by Israeli forces against civilian targets in Lebanon which had left several people killed.

On 16 and 19 May, by letters to the Secretary-

General, Israel charged that armed PLO elements had attempted to cross into Israel through UNIFIL lines and that rockets had been fired from Lebanese territory at civilian targets in northern Israel on 18 May. By a letter dated 16 June to the Council President, Israel charged that on that day three PLO members had attempted to penetrate Israel's territory from the sea. In the exchange of fire, they had been killed by an Israeli navy patrol.

In a letter of the same day to the Secretary-General, Italy transmitted a declaration on the situation in Lebanon, issued at Venice on 13 June by the heads of State and Government and the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the European Community, meeting as the European Council. The Community members reiterated their total solidarity with Lebanon and appealed to all the countries and parties concerned to put an end to all acts liable to affect Lebanon's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity as well as the authority of its Government. They stressed that it was essential for all the parties concerned to allow UNIFIL to implement its mandate fully, including control of the territory up to the internationally recognized boundaries.

Consideration by the Security Council (17 June)

Report of the Secretary-General

On 12 June 1980, the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Security Council on the functioning and activities of UNIFIL for the period from 11 December 1979 to 12 June 1980 in which he noted that, in spite of strenuous efforts at all levels, including those of the Council itself, the fifth mandate of UNIFIL had come to an end without significant progress having been achieved in implementing the objectives set forth when it was established. Not only had UNIFIL been denied the co-operation required but it had even been actively opposed or attacked in trying to perform its duties.

The Secretary-General emphasized that in the period under review the most serious problems had been with the de facto forces (Christian and associated militias). They had not only prevented a further deployment of UNIFIL in the enclave but had also maintained four positions previously established in the UNIFIL area and had attempted to establish additional encroachments. Those attempts, firmly resisted by UNIFIL, had led to serious confrontations resulting in the death of UNIFIL soldiers. The de facto forces had subjected UNIFIL headquarters at Naqoura to heavy bombardment and had restricted UNIFIL freedom of movement to the enclave.

The Secretary-General indicated that the relationship of the de facto forces to the Israeli forces and their dependency on the latter was well known. The intercession of the Israeli authorities had been sought to curb the activities of the de facto forces and to restrain hostile acts against UNIFIL or the civilian population in the UNIFIL area. However, the Israeli authorities had continued their support of the de facto forces, citing reasons of national security, and for the same reasons Israeli forces had made incursions into Lebanese territory and had maintained a number of positions in the enclave.

The Secretary-General pointed out that UNIFIL had continued to be subjected to attempts by armed elements (mainly PLO and the Lebanese National Movement) to infiltrate personnel and weapons into its area of operation which inevitably created tensions and difficulties and sometimes confrontations. The Force had made every effort to prevent such infiltration.

The Secretary-General reported that the inability of UNIFIL to control its area of operations up to the international frontier, and the internal situation in Lebanon itself, had, for the time being, limited the ability of the Lebanese Government significantly to increase its military and civilian presence in the south.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General underlined his conviction that UNIFIL was performing an indispensable service to peace, not only in Lebanon but in the Middle East as a whole. In his view, if the functioning of UNIFIL were to be seriously eroded or if the Force were to be withdrawn, a resumption and widening of hostilities would be faced very rapidly, not only in southern Lebanon but far beyond its borders. For those reasons, he recommended that UNIFIL's mandate be extended for another six months.

Deliberations of the Security Council

The Security Council met on 17 June to consider the Secretary-General's report. It invited the representatives of Ireland, Israel, Lebanon and the Netherlands, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

A draft resolution drawn up in the course of consultations was adopted, as resolution 474(1980), by 12 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions (German Democratic Republic, USSR) and with China not participating in the vote.

By that resolution, the Council renewed UNIFIL's mandate for six months, until 19 December, and reiterated its commitment to the full implementation of the mandate throughout the entire area of operation up to the internationally recognized boundaries, according to the terms of reference and guidelines as stated and confirmed in Council resolutions. It fully endorsed the conclusions and recommendations in the Secretary-General's report. It strongly condemned all actions contrary to the mandate and, in particular, continued acts of violence that prevented UNIFIL's fulfilment of it, took note of the steps taken by the Secretary-General to convene a meeting of ILMAC, and urged the parties concerned to extend their full co-operation in accordance with the relevant Council decisions.

The Council noted the efforts deployed by Member States, particularly troop-contributing States, in support of UNIFIL and urged all those in a position to do so to continue to use their influence with those concerned so that the Force could discharge its responsibilities. Finally, it reaffirmed its determination to examine practical ways to implement fully resolution 425(1978).<sup>7</sup>

In a statement following adoption of the resolution, the Secretary-General reaffirmed his conviction that, despite all the difficulties, UNIFIL was performing an indispensable service to peace, not only in Lebanon but with regard to the Middle East as a whole. He expressed his appreciation to the Government of Lebanon for its co-operation with UNIFIL and gratitude to the troop-contributing countries for their unswerving support. He indicated that, in accordance with the Council's wishes, he would pursue his contacts with the parties concerned, with a view to reactivating the 1949 General Armistice Agreement and ILMAC at the earliest possible date.

The representative of Lebanon said that a further renewal of the mandate should not be an inducement to accept the status quo as an irreversible fait accompli. Israel, he stated, must understand that it should withdraw totally and unconditionally from Lebanon, that it must at once stop all its direct and indirect activities within Lebanon's international borders, and that it must enable UNIFIL to operate effectively and with full military credibility in southern Lebanon. His Government viewed the reactivation of the General Armistice Agreement as a major step towards the achievement of a just and comprehensive settlement in the Middle East.

Israel maintained that there would be no real change for the better until all the alien elements had been removed from Lebanon so that Lebanese independence, sovereignty and unity could be restored.

France reaffirmed the value it attached to the attainment of the objectives set for the Force by the Council, namely, to confirm the withdrawal of Israeli forces, to restore international peace and security, and to help the Lebanese Government ensure the restoration of its authority.

The representative of the United States said that UNIFIL continued to make an indispensable contribution to peace. As a buffer between bitter enemies, it had worked to prevent infiltration attempts and to resist harassment and encroachment on its area of operation. His Government was pleased to support the resolution, as it condemned acts of violence which had prevented UNIFIL from implementing its mandate in full. The United States stood ready to co-operate with the Secretary-General in convening a meeting of ILMAC.

The German Democratic Republic stated that the main reasons for the situation in southern Lebanon were Israel's aggressive policies, its refusal to respect Lebanon's sovereignty and its desire to prevent a comprehensive political solution of the Middle East conflict. The German Democratic Republic had abstained in the vote because its reservations regarding the definition of UNIFIL's mandate, its composition and financing remained valid.

The representative of the USSR said that, thanks to unswerving support by the United States, Israel had managed to conclude a separate agreement at Camp David and had signed a treaty with Egypt, thus freeing itself to embark on a more aggressive and expansionist policy against Lebanon and the indigenous population in the occupied Arab territories. He noted with regret that the resolution just adopted did not contain a clear-cut condemnation of Israel for its armed provocation against Lebanon or for its support of the separatist Haddad forces. The USSR had abstained in the vote on the basis of its policy of principle in respect of UNIFIL, the mandate given to it, the principles governing the selection of national contingents and the method of financing the Force.

Ireland said that the principal, though by no means the only, source of efforts to frustrate and attack UNIFIL continued to be the de facto forces which, as the Secretary-General had pointed out, were dependent on Israel. In the preceding weeks there had not been an end to military assistance to those forces. The freedom of movement necessary for UNIFIL to carry out its duties effectively continued to be denied. This denial was clearly intolerable. Ireland insisted that, if a peace-keeping force was to operate, it must be given the conditions to do so effectively.

The Netherlands held the view that UNIFIL performed an essential peace-keeping task and that its withdrawal would create a grave risk. However, some basic requirements, including the safety of UNIFIL personnel, had to be fulfilled. It repeated the call of the 11 troop-contributing countries on all parties to co-operate fully with the Force; this meant that all attacks, harassment and infiltrations had to cease and full freedom of movement be granted up to the internationally recognized boundaries.

The Council President, speaking as the representative of Norway, said it was important for the continued functioning of UNIFIL that further progress be made towards the full implementation of its mandate. The Force performed an indispensable service to peace, not only in Lebanon but in the whole Middle East. Therefore, Norway had voted in favour of the extension of its mandate and was ready to continue to participate in UNIFIL.

Communications and reports (26 June-16 December)

In letters of 26 June, 1 July and 6, 15 and 19 August, the representative of Lebanon submitted charges concerning a series of acts of aggression by Israeli forces inside and outside the UNIFIL area of operation. He charged that the Israeli army had developed a pattern nearing occupation and annexation of territory by constructing and establishing fixed military installations, levying taxes by intimidation of the local population, appropriating and annexing land under duress, establishing military training camps, and installing prefabricated houses for Israeli soldiers.

In a special report of 21 August, the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of recent developments within and adjacent to the UNIFIL area of operation which had led to a dangerous escalation of tension. Shelling and bombarding by the Israel Defence Forces and the de facto forces between 18 and 21 August had resulted in at least 25 people killed, as well as very heavy destruction of houses and property. The Secretary-General stated that, at the time of writing his report, the situation was quiet but tense, and all possible efforts were being made to restore and maintain the cease-fire and prevent a further escalation of the conflict.

On 22 August, by a letter to the President of the Security Council, Lebanon reported on casualties and property damage caused by Israeli acts of aggression carried out on 20 and 21 August north of UNIFIL'S area of operation.

On 2 September, Tunisia transmitted to the Secretary-General a letter dated 28 August from the Deputy Permanent Observer of PLO protesting Israeli military moves in Lebanon, which he charged had placed the region in an extremely delicate situation.

In letters of 19 and 22 September, 3, 13, 18, 24 and 28 October and 3 December, the representative of Lebanon charged that Israel had launched a series of air, land and sea attacks which had caused many casualties, extensive property damage and a massive displacement of population. He also charged that the Israeli army had moved the international border northward and that it had constructed patrol roads on Lebanese territory. Lebanon considered it imperative that a meeting of ILMAC be called to discuss the situation.

In letters of 7 and 14 November and 16 December, Israel charged that on 6 November rockets had been fired from Lebanese territory at civilian targets, and that on the nights of 12/13 November and 14 December armed PLO groups had attempted to cross into Israel through UNIFIL lines.

By a letter dated 4 December, Luxembourg conveyed a statement of 2 December by the members of the European Community expressing concern about the situation in Lebanon and the position of UNIFIL, and calling again for respect for the integrity of Lebanon's international frontiers and the security of its population.

As requested by the General Assembly on 6 December 1979,<sup>8</sup> the Secretary-General, on 24 October 1980, submitted a report covering, in all aspects, the developments in the Middle East. With regard to Lebanon, he observed that, despite intense, persistent efforts, UNIFIL had not been able to make significant progress in overcoming the problems created by Israel's handing over control of the border area to Lebanese de facto forces.

As UNIFIL'S mandate was due to expire on 19 December, the Secretary-General on 12 December submitted a report on the activities of the Force for the period from 13 June to 11 December. Describing the situation in southern Lebanon, he indicated that, despite strenuous efforts at all levels during the period under review, UNIFIL had been prevented from making further progress towards implementing fully the objectives of Security Council resolution 425(1978).

He stressed that UNIFIL could successfully fulfil its mandate only with the full co-operation of all the parties concerned and that the situation in southern Lebanon could not be insulated from the developments in the region. The search for a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement in the Middle East continued to be frustrated and inevitably had a negative effect on the circumstances in which UNIFIL had to function. The Secretary-General pointed out that during the period under review the activities of armed elements, the de facto forces and the Israel Defence Forces in and near the UNIFIL area of operation had continued and, in some cases, intensified, and he gave an account of the main incidents that had taken place. The Israeli forces had established encroachments along the international border, increased their presence within the enclave, repeatedly violated Lebanese airspace and territorial waters and, on many occasions, had launched attacks against targets outside the UNIFIL area.

The Secretary-General stated that, despite the impediments it had had to face, the Force had continued its endeavour to consolidate its positions. Measures had been taken to improve the security of UNIFIL headquarters at Naqoura and to reinforce its defence capability. With the co-operation of the Lebanese Government, efforts had been made to increase the Lebanese presence, both civilian and military, in the UNIFIL area of operation.

The Secretary-General reported that the Chief of Staff of UNTSO had continued his efforts towards the reactivation of ILMAC and that a meeting had been convened under his chairmanship at UNIFIL headquarters on 1 December. While the two parties had continued to disagree on the validity of the General Armistice Agreement and the meeting had fallen short of the objective set by the Security Council, efforts were being made to convene another meeting.

The Secretary-General recommended that the mandate of UNIFIL be extended for another six months. He indicated that the Lebanese Government had agreed to the extension and stated that a determined effort must be made by all sides to make possible the consolidation of the UNIFIL area, in particular through removal of the five positions established there by the de facto forces and the two established by armed elements.

On 15 December, the representative of Lebanon submitted comments and recommendations in connexion with the Secretary-General's report and the forthcoming Security Council meeting to examine the renewal of the Force's mandate. He urged that the renewal be accompanied by articulation of the deterrent capability of the Force, reconsideration of the methods of defining its area of operation, acceleration of the reactivation of ILMAC and the unconditional observance of the 1949 General Armistice Agreement.

Consideration by the Security Council (17 December)

The Security Council met on 17 December to consider the Secretary-General's report and invited the representatives of Israel and Lebanon, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

Resolution 483(1980) drawn up in the course of consultations, was adopted by 12 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions (German Democratic Republic, USSR). China did not participate in the vote.

By that resolution, the Council: renewed UNIFIL'S mandate for six months, until 19 June 1981; reiterated its commitment to the full implementation of that mandate throughout UNIFIL'S entire area of operation up to the internationally recognized borders, and the terms of reference of the Force; expressed its support for the Lebanese Government in its efforts to strengthen its authority in UNIFIL'S zone of operation; commended the Secretary-General for his efforts to reactivate ILMAC; requested him to take the necessary measures to intensify discussions among the parties concerned, so that UNIFIL might complete its mandate, and to report periodically on the results of his efforts; and reaffirmed its determination, in the event of continuing obstruction of UNIFIL'S mandate, to examine practical ways to secure the full implementation of resolution 425(1978).

Following the resolution's adoption, the Secretary-General indicated that he would make every effort to ensure its implementation, but cautioned that in order to achieve real progress the full co-operation of all parties concerned was needed.

The representative of Lebanon expressed the hope that the resolution would be a new beginning. His Government's position remained as stated before, namely: that peace in Lebanon should not have to wait for the settlement of everyone else's problems; that UNIFIL must become sufficiently credible to deter hostile acts against it and to implement fully its mandate; and that a systematic political and diplomatic action, including the reactivation of ILMAC, must be developed.

Israel reaffirmed its position of principle with regard to Lebanon- that it continued to support Lebanese independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and unity, that it wanted peace in and with Lebanon and that it had no territorial claims on that country. It agreed that the restoration of peace in Lebanon must not be made contingent on the attainment of an overall solution of the Arab-Israeli conflict. As to the Israel-Lebanon Armistice Agreement, it was Israel's view that Lebanon, by its declarations and actions in 1967, had brought the Agreement to an end. Consequently ILMAC, established under that Agreement, had also ceased to exist.

The representatives of the USSR and the German Democratic Republic considered the resolution adopted as weak, since it contained no condemnation of the aggressive actions of Israel and the Haddad separatists acting on its orders. The Council should have unambiguously required Israel to respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Lebanon. Both the USSR and the German Democratic Republic confirmed their positions of principle regarding the control of the Force by the Council, its composition and financing.

France said that, in joining in the decision to renew UNIFIL'S mandate, it wished to emphasize the importance it attached to the mission of the Force in Lebanon. At the same time, it stressed that the objectives originally established for UNIFIL continued to be fundamental.

Tunisia believed that, by renewing the Force's mandate, the Council had taken an important step towards a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the Middle East problem, which could not be divorced from the situation in southern Lebanon.

Norway, announcing that it was ready to continue its participation in UNIFIL, expressed the hope that practical ways and means could be found to implement fully UNIFIL'S mandate up to the international borders.

The Council President, speaking as the representative of the United States, said that the meeting convened by the Chief of Staff of UNTSO on 1 December was an important step towards implementing Council resolution 425(1978). His Government, however, had noted with regret the Secretary-General's observations of a definite hardening of position towards UNIFIL by certain Palestinian groups, of increasing harassment of the Force by the de facto forces and that the border encroachments by the Israeli forces appeared to be designed to create a new defensive line forward of the Armistice demarcation line.

Further communications

By a letter of 19 December to the President of the Security Council, Lebanon charged that Israel had launched a major operation by air, land and sea against villages and towns inside the internationally recognized Lebanese boundaries and inside and beyond the UNIFIL area of operation.

Israel, in letters of 23 and 30 December to the Secretary-General, charged that Syrian forces had subjected a Lebanese town near the Israeli northern border and its civilian population to indiscriminate shelling, inflicting scores of casualties, and that PLO elements based in Lebanon had attempted to cross the border into Israel.

On 15 December, the Secretary-General informed the Council President of his intention to appoint the current Chief of Staff of UNTSO, Major-General Erkki Raine Kaira of Finland, as Commander of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force to replace Major-General Guenther G. Greindl of Austria. Major-General Emmanuel Alexander Erskine of Ghana, current Commander of UNIFIL, would be reassigned to his former post as Chief of Staff of UNTSO with the additional function of representing the Secretary-General for matters relating to United Nations peace-keeping operations in the Middle East. He would be replaced as Commander of UNIFIL by Major-General William Callaghan, Adjutant-General of the Irish Defence Forces.

On 19 December, the Council President replied that the Council members, at consultations on 17 December, had agreed with the proposals. China had dissociated itself from the matter since it had not participated in the voting on the relevant resolutions.

total consisted of $27,537,248 for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) in the Israel-Syria sector for the period 1 June 1980 to 31 May 1981 and $129,205,992 for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) from 19 December 1979 to 18 December 1980. The dates corresponded to the varying mandates of the Forces as established by the Security Council (see preceding subchapters). The Assembly also provided for financial authority to meet the expenses of UNDOF and UNIFIL for specified periods beyond these dates in the event the Council decided to continue them beyond the expiry of the six-month mandates in effect when the Assembly acted.

In each case, the Assembly apportioned the expenses for the Forces among all Member States in accordance with the special scale used for this purpose since the establishment of the United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF) in 1973.<sup>9</sup> The mandate of UNEF had lapsed in 1979 and was not renewed by the Security Council.<sup>10</sup>

According to this arrangement, the permanent members of the Council were assessed more than they would have been under the scale of assessments for the United Nations regular budget, while most developing countries were assessed 80 per cent less and the least developed countries 90 per cent less than under the regular scale. In authorizing this arrangement, the Assembly said in the preambles of its appropriation resolutions that it was taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries were in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries had a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures. In respect of the two Forces, the Assembly decided that Saint Lucia, admitted to the United Nations in 1979, would be placed in the category of least developed States for assessment purposes.

The Assembly invited voluntary contributions for UNDOF and UNIFIL, both in cash and in services and supplies, and requested the Secretary-General to ensure that the Forces were conducted with a maximum of efficiency and economy.

The Assembly acted on the basis of appropriation requests submitted in reports of the Secretary-General and of recommendations by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).

Financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force

The General Assembly made appropriations for UNDOF spanning the two six-month extensions of the Force's mandate approved by the Security Council in 1980 (1 June to 30 November 1980 and 1 December 1980 to 31 May 1981). For the year ending 30 November 1980, appropriations were at the monthly rate of $2,096,333 gross ($2,077,000 net of staff assessment). This rate rose to $2,493,208 gross ($2,466,958 net) in the financial year beginning 1 December.

By resolution 35/45 A, appropriations were made in the amounts of $12,577,998 gross ($12,462,000 net) for the six months from 1 June to 30 November 1980 and $14,959,250 for the period from 1 December 1980 to 31 May 1981. Also by this resolution, the Assembly authorized the Secretary-General to enter into financial commitments for UNDOF for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1981 should the Security Council continue the Force beyond the existing mandate. It limited such commitments to the monthly rate of expenditure approved for the six months beginning 1 December 1980, namely $2,493,208 gross ($2,466,958 net).

The resolution also contained provisions relating to the apportionment of expenses among Member States and other matters (summarized in the introduction to this subchapter).

The Assembly adopted resolution 35/45 A on 1 December 1980 by a recorded vote of 93 to 5, with 15 abstentions, following its approval in the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on 28 November, by a recorded vote, requested by the USSR, of 85 to 4, with 12 abstentions. In adopting this resolution, the Assembly accepted the recommendation of ACABQ to reduce by $948,500 the annual expenditures for UNDOF, as estimated by the Secretary-General. The sum approved included an amount of $4,324,000 for new standard rates of pay and allowances for troops.

In his report of 3 November, the Secretary-General gave cost estimates for the period from 1 December 1980 to 30 November 1981 totalling $26,543,000. He recommended that, from 1 December onwards, new standard rates for pay and allowances of troops be established at $950 per man-month for all ranks plus $280 per man-month for a limited number of specialists, which would amount to an additional $360,333 per month and increase the monthly cost figures to $2,572,250 gross ($2,546,000 net). As to the status of contributions, the Secretary-General reported a shortfall of approximately $800,000 for the period from 25 October 1979 to 30 November 1980 owing to non-payment by certain Member States. As at 30 September 1980, he had received $19.4 million; the balance due for this period amounted to $7.6 million, of which $800,000 comprised amounts apportioned among Member States which had stated they did not intend to pay. For the period 25 October 1973 to 24 October 1979, the balance due from Member States in respect of UNDOF and UNEF was $67.8 million, of which only $13.3 million could be considered collectable. No voluntary contributions had been made in response to the Assembly's 1979 appeal for voluntary contributions to UNDOF both in cash and in the form of services and supplies."

The shortfall of previous periods of UNDOF together with UNEF was estimated at $54.5 million. This situation placed a heavy burden on the troop contributors, as payments to them had not been made in time and they had not been reimbursed fully in accordance with agreed rates.

Introducing the text of what became resolution 35/45 A, Canada, on behalf of 12 sponsors (Argentina, Australia, Austria, Canada, Colombia, Denmark, Finland, Ghana, Ireland, Norway, Panama, Sweden), explained that the formula for the financing of UNDOF was essentially the same as that approved by the Assembly in 1978<sup>12</sup> and 1979.<sup>13</sup> That formula was based on a procedure separate from that applied to meet expenditures under the regular budget. It was characterized by the creation of a special category of States which contributed to the financing of the peace-keeping forces, account being taken of the special responsibilities of the permanent members of the Security Council and of the need for the economically more developed countries to provide a larger share of contributions. The sponsors of the resolution were fully aware of the fact that the measures currently being proposed for the third consecutive year had originally been measures of an exceptional and provisional character, to be applied pending a permanent solution.

Canada, Japan and the United States expressed deep concern about the status of contributions to the United Nations peace-keeping forces. Canada stated that the withholding of contributions had for several years hindered the effective functioning of United Nations peace-keeping operations and had contributed to the cumulative deficit. The sponsors firmly believed that such operations were the physical embodiment of the Organization's raison d'être and that it was essential and urgent to find a solution to the crucial problem of the withholding of contributions.

Norway, speaking on behalf of the Nordic countries, stressed the fundamental role of United Nations peace-keeping operations in maintaining international peace and security and implementing the principles of the Charter of the United Nations. In Norway's view, all Member States had an obligation to share equitably in financing those operations. Norway considered it of vital importance that a solution to the financial problems be found and that the troop contributors be assured that they would be reimbursed.

Albania, Iraq and the Syrian Arab Republic restated positions previously expressed with respect to the financing of UNDOF and said they would vote against the resolution and not accept any consequential financial obligation. The Syrian Arab Republic asked whether some Member States were not violating the Charter when they refused to compel the aggressor to withdraw, thus themselves becoming the origin of all the expenditure which they later had to meet. Iraq felt unable to endorse the existence of UNDOF since it held that the aggressor alone should bear the responsibility for its aggression.

China, reaffirming the position it had previously taken with respect to UNDOF financing, announced that it would neither take part in the vote nor accept any consequential financial obligation.

Democratic Yemen, which abstained in the voting, and Viet Nam, which announced that it would not vote, also said they would accept no such obligation. The Congo stated that it would abstain, as economic difficulties prevented it from responding favourably to the call of the United Nations. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya explained that in accordance with its position of principle it would not take part in the vote.

The USSR said it abstained in the vote as it could not approve the excessive amount to be spent for the Force.

The Assembly took another action aimed at making additional funds available to UNDOF by adopting resolution 35/45 B on 1 December by a recorded vote of 91 to 14, with 8 abstentions. The Fifth Committee had approved the text on 28 November by a recorded vote, requested by the USSR, of 82 to 13, with 5 abstentions.

By this resolution, the Assembly suspended certain provisions of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations so as to enable the United Nations to retain the unspent portion of 1979 appropriations for UNDOF, amounting to $6,825,999 as at 31 December 1979, which otherwise would have had to be surrendered as a credit against subsequent assessments of Member States. By the preamble to this resolution, the Assembly recognized that, in consequence of the withholding of contributions by certain Member States, the surplus balance in the UNEF/UNDOF account had been fully drawn upon to supplement the income received from contributions for meeting the expenses of those Forces. Applying the rules in this case, it added, would aggravate the already difficult financial situation.

The Assembly also decided that this amount was to be entered in the account which it had created in 1978 when it had taken a similar action for the first time.<sup>14</sup> The new amount was to be held in suspense pending a further decision.

Resolution 35/45 B was sponsored by Argentina, Australia, Austria, Canada, Colombia, Denmark, Finland, Ghana, Ireland, Norway, Panama and Sweden.

The Advisory Committee, noting in its report on UNDOF financing that this "surplus" balance had been fully drawn upon to meet the expenses of the Force, said the $6,825,999 should be regarded as no more than a theoretical surplus.

On a recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the Assembly on 1 December also adopted, without vote, decision 35/416. The Assembly thereby decided that the special financial period of UNDOF should be from 25 October 1979 to 30 November 1980 and that any future periods should run from 1 December for 12 months. The Fifth Committee approved the decision without objection on 28 November. It acted on a suggestion by its Chairman following a proposal submitted by the Secretary-General.

Financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon

The General Assembly, by resolution 35/115 A of 10 December 1980, appropriated funds covering the two extensions of the UNIFIL mandate approved by the Security Council for 1980—from 19 December 1979 to 18 June 1980 and from 19 June to 18 December 1980. For each six-month mandate, appropriations totalled $64,602,996 gross ($64,059,996 net of staff assessment).

By this resolution, the Assembly authorized the Secretary-General to enter into financial commitments for UNIFIL should the Council continue the Force beyond the existing mandate. This authorization covered the period from 19 December 1980 to 18 December 1981, at a monthly expenditure rate not to exceed $12,180,500 gross ($12,060,166 net). (The Council, on 17 December 1980, renewed the Force's mandate until 19 June 1981; see preceding subchapter.)

The Assembly reiterated its invitation to Member States to make voluntary contributions. It also approved provisions relating to the apportionment of expenses among all Member States according to the special scale for peace-keeping operations, and the inclusion of Saint Lucia among the States assessed at the lowest rate (see the introduction to this subchapter).

Resolution 35/115 A was sponsored in the Fifth Committee by Australia, Canada, Denmark, Fiji, Finland, Ghana, Ireland, Italy, Lebanon, Nepal, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, Panama, Senegal and Sweden, as the first part of a two-part draft resolution. The other part—resolution 35/115 B—concerning suspension of certain provisions of the United Nations Financial Regulations in respect of the "surplus" balance of $2,173,113, to be entered in a special UNIFIL account, was similar to resolution 35/45 B on UNDOF, already adopted by the Assembly (see preceding section).

The Fifth Committee approved the two parts together on 6 December by a recorded vote, taken at the request of the USSR, of 80 to 13, with 3 abstentions. The Assembly adopted resolution 35/115 A by a recorded vote of 89 to 12, with 1 abstention. It adopted resolution 35/115 B on 10 December by a recorded vote of 88 to 12, with 2 abstentions.

The authorization for the year beginning 19 December 1980 amounted to $3.9 million less than the $66,847,000 which the Secretary-General had estimated for the six months to 18 June 1981, based on an average Force strength of 6,000 troops. The $3.9 million reduction was recommended by ACABQ, which did not apply it to any particular item of expenditure but considered that strict attention to economy and efficiency should result in savings. The Advisory Committee noted that estimates of miscellaneous income had not been provided in the Secretary-General's report, and recommended that future estimates for the Force take this element into account.

As to the status of contributions, the Secretary-General reported that the shortfall attributed to Member States that had stated they did not intend to pay for UNIFIL had risen from $52.4 million in 1979 to $84.1 million as at 30 September 1980, out of the $345.8 million in assessments of Member States from the inception of the Force on 19 March 1978 to 18 December 1980. The shortfall posed a serious financial management problem. Payments due to the troop-contributing countries had never been made on time and were falling further behind. Troop contributors, which had not been currently and fully reimbursed in accordance with agreed rates, had conveyed their serious concern over the heavy burden this placed on their Governments.

In response to a resolution of 17 December 1979, by which the Assembly had established a Suspense Account to be funded through voluntary cash contributions to supplement the regular Special Account for UNIFIL<sup>15</sup> voluntary contributions totalling only $1,200 had been received. So far, the Secretary-General noted, the Suspense Account had not achieved its purpose of alleviating the financial burden on the troop contributors.

The Advisory Committee was informed by representatives of the Secretary-General that the audited accounts for the biennium 1978-1979 indicated for the UNIFIL Special Account a "surplus" balance of $2,173,113 as at 31 December 1979. This balance represented excess of income over expenditure and consisted of unencumbered balance of appropriations plus interest and miscellaneous credits. The income included assessed contributions, irrespective of whether they could be collected or not. As certain Member States had withheld their contributions, the surplus balance had been drawn upon in full to supplement the income received for meeting the expenses of the Force. The balance of $2,173,113, therefore, could be considered no more than a theoretical surplus.

Ireland, in introducing the draft resolutions on behalf of the sponsors, said it had always valued the peace-keeping role of the United Nations, and for that reason had contributed troops to almost every peace-keeping operation since 1958. The withholding of contributions, in its view, not only contravened the obligation imposed by the United Nations Charter, but transferred the financial burden to the States contributing troops, in particular the developing States. It could also undermine the principle of equitable geographical distribution in the peace-keeping forces. As less developed countries had a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations, the permanent members of the Security Council had a special responsibility.

During discussion in the Fifth Committee, Lebanon stated that the attitude of Member States withholding contributions was a matter of grave concern. Lebanon had suffered in particular from a special kind of violence which arose from the way in which the United Nations had handled the problem of Palestine since the adoption in 1947 of an Assembly resolution on the partition of Palestine.<sup>16</sup> The Member States which had participated in the vote on that resolution, and to which the current tragedy in Lebanon could largely be ascribed, bore a heavy responsibility. For that reason, their support of UNIFIL was certainly a step in the right direction. Pursuant to the Security Council's decision of 19 March 1978,<sup>17</sup> the function of UNIFIL was also to assist the Government of Lebanon in ensuring the return of its effective authority. Therefore, the political aspect could not be separated from the financial aspect. Lebanon feared that refusal to participate in the financing of UNIFIL might imply an erosion of moral and political support for the Force, with serious consequences for Lebanon and for peace in the Middle East.

The United States made a special appeal to Member States withholding their assessed contributions to reconsider their positions, and called upon those which were in arrears to pay their contributions expeditiously. In its view, non-payment might not only threaten the participation of troop-contributing States which could not afford the financial sacrifice involved in providing troops without adequate reimbursement, but was also incompatible with Charter principles.

The USSR stated that, in accordance with its position of principle that all expenses connected with the elimination of consequences of the Israeli aggression should be borne by the aggressor, it would vote against the draft resolutions and also in future would not participate in the financing of UNIFIL. Similar positions were reiterated by Afghanistan, Albania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Iraq, Mongolia, Poland and the Syrian Arab Republic. Algeria, Benin, China and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya declared that, for reasons of principle, they would not participate in the voting.

Israel said that peace-keeping operations could not be a substitute for the peaceful settlement of disputes. All Member States were duty-bound to pay their assessed share of the costs of peace-keeping operations whether or not they agreed with them. It added that it was unfortunate that some Members continued to use the Fifth Committee as a forum for unwarranted political attacks on Israel.

Review of reimbursement rates to troop contributors

By resolution 35/44, adopted on 1 December 1980 by a recorded vote of 89 to 13, with 10 abstentions, the General Assembly decided to establish new standard rates of reimbursement to the Governments of troop-contributing States of $950 per man-month for all ranks, plus $280 per man-month for a limited number of specialists, with effect from 1 December in the case of UNDOF and from 19 December in the case of UNIFIL, should the Security Council extend their mandates.

The Fifth Committee had, on 28 November, by a recorded vote of 79 to 13, with 8 abstentions, approved the text of this resolution, which was sponsored by 22 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

As requested by the Assembly in 1979,<sup>18</sup> the Secretary-General, on 11 November 1980, submitted a report reviewing the existing rates of reimbursement to troop-contributing States, with a view to ensuring equitable rates. The Secretary-General recalled that in 1974 the Assembly had established standard rates for UNEF and UNDOF.<sup>19</sup> These were revised in 1977,<sup>20</sup> and in 1978 were applied to UNIFIL.<sup>21</sup>

In 1980, four States contributed troops to UNDOF, while 11 contributed to UNIFIL. The troop contributors had pointed out that they were absorbing on the average 60 per cent-some over 70 per cent-of the cost of their contingents. The average cost in 1980 ranged between $1,201 and $3,341 per man-month. Inflation had averaged 25 per cent in 11 of the troop-contributing countries and currency fluctuations had resulted in a decrease in the United States dollar value (the currency in which the reimbursement rates were set). The troop contributors had stated that there was a demonstrable requirement for a substantial increase in the standard rates.

In view of this situation, the Secretary-General suggested new reimbursement rates at $950 per man-month, plus $280 per man-month for specialists. The new rate would cover up to 81 per cent of the cost of the troop contributor reporting the lowest expenditure, 31 per cent of the highest and 49 per cent of the average of the troop contributors. Based on an average strength of 1,275 men for UNDOF and 6,000 for UNIFIL, the additional cost would be, respectively, $4,324,000 and $20,272,000 on an annual basis. In its report of 22 November, ACABQ endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendations.

Ireland, which introduced the draft resolution in the Fifth Committee, stated that countries contributing troops to the peace-keeping forces, in a desire to contribute to the achievement of the purposes and principles of the Charter, should receive fair and reasonable compensation;

the standard rates established three years earlier did not meet that purpose. Norway, speaking on behalf of the Nordic countries, said that States contributing troops would inevitably have to absorb progressively higher proportions of their costs, due to inflation. Developments in that field should be closely monitored in order to ensure timely adjustment of reimbursement rates.

The United States considered the increases proposed by the Secretary-General, $270 and $80 per man-month, in excess of the figures which in its view would be appropriate at the time, namely $250 and $64. Panama said in explanation of vote that it supported the resolution as it regarded peace-keeping as one of the principal functions of the United Nations; the new rates should apply for all United Nations peace-keeping forces, both present and future.

Poland stated that its decision to vote for the resolution should in no way be regarded as changing its position on the United Nations peace-keeping forces in the Middle East. The USSR voted against the resolution, regarding the sums requested as excessive; it could not approve a further increase in reimbursement rates that were already unjustifiably high. The Congo said that because of its economic crisis it would abstain. Democratic Yemen, which abstained in the voting, and Viet Nam, which did not vote, reiterated that they would accept no consequential financial obligation. For reasons of principle, Benin and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said they would not take part in the vote, and Iraq announced that it would vote against.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, as well as the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 350(1974) of 31 May 1974, 363(1974) of 29 November 1974, 369(1975) of 26 May 1975, 361(1975) of 30 November 1975, 390(1976) of 28 May 1976, 396(1976) of 30 November 1976, 406(1977) of 26 May 1977, 420(1977) of 30 November 1977, 429(1978) of 31 May 1978, 441(1978) of 30 November 1978, 449(1979) of 30 May 1979, 456(1979) of 30 November 1979, 470(1980) of 30 May 1980 and 481(1980) of 26 November 1980,

Recalling its resolutions 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973, 3211 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3374 C (XXX) of 2 December 1975, 31/5 D of 22 December 1976, 32/4 C of 2 December 1977, 33/13 D of 8 December 1978, 34/7 C of 3 December 1979 and 35/44 of 1 December 1980,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by such operations, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of such operations, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963 and other resolutions of the Assembly,

I

Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in section II, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution 3211 B (XXIX) the amount of $12,577,996 gross ($12,462,000 net) authorized and apportioned by section III of Assembly resolution 34/7 C for the operation of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1980 inclusive;

The General Assembly,

Having regard to the financial position of the Special Account for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, as set forth in the report of the Secretary-General, and referring to paragraph 5 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General is continuing to face growing difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Forces on a current basis, particularly those due to the Governments of troop-contributing States,

Recalling its resolutions 33/13 E of 14 December 1978 and 34/7 D of 17 December 1979,

Recognizing that, in consequence of the withholding of contributions by certain Member States, the surplus balances in the Special Account for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force have, in effect, been drawn upon to the full extent to supplement the income received from contributions for meeting expenses of the Forces,

Concerned that the application of the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations would aggravate the already difficult financial situation of the Forces, Decides that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations shall be suspended in respect of the amount of $6,825,999, which otherwise would have to be surrendered pursuant to those provisions, this amount to be entered in the account referred to in the operative part of General Assembly resolution 33/13 E and held in suspense until a further decision is taken by the Assembly.

Decision 35/416, as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/35/667 and Corr.1, adopted without vote by Assembly.

At its 76th plenary meeting, on 1 December 1980, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, decided that the special financial period of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force should be from 25 October 1979 to 30 November 1980 inclusive and, thereafter, in line with the mandate periods of the Force thus far, should be for twelve-month periods beginning on 1 December of one year and ending on 30 November of the next, should its mandate be extended by the Security Council.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the review of the rates of reimbursement to the Governments of troop-contributing States, submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 34/166 of 17 December 1979, as well as the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling its decision of 29 November 1974, taken at its twenty-ninth session, by which it established, as from 25 October 1973, standard rates of reimbursement to the Governments of troop-contributing States for pay and allowances of their troops serving in the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, and its decision 32/416 of 2 December 1977, by which it revised those rates of reimbursement as from 25 October 1977,

Recalling also its resolution S-8/2 of 21 April 1978, by which it applied the same standard rates of reimbursement in effect for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force to those Governments of States contributing troops to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon,

Recognizing that inflation and escalating troop costs have adversely affected in real terms the existing standard rates of reimbursement,

Mindful of the need for ensuring an equitable rate of reimbursement to the Governments of troop-contributing States, Decides to establish new standard rates of reimbursement to the Governments of troop-contributing States of $950 per man per month for all ranks plus $280 per man per month for a limited number of specialists (up to 25 per cent of logistics contingents and up to 10 per cent of other contingents), with effect from 1 December 1980 in the case of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force and from 19 December 1980 in the case of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, should the Security Council decide to extend their mandates.

Search for a peaceful settlement

Situation in the Middle East

Communications

Throughout 1980, the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council received communications concerning the situation in the Middle East.

In letters dated 25 January, 5 and 11 February, 24 June, 11 and 25 August, 27 October and 28 November, Israel submitted complaints of acts of terrorism by the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), in which bombs and explosive devices had been placed or detonated in public places such as beaches, markets and bus stations, killing a number of civilians and wounding many others, among them women and children.

By a letter of 9 June, Israel charged that PLO terrorists had attempted on 7 June to enter Israel from Jordan, 12 miles south of the Dead Sea. In two letters, dated 16 and 19 June, Israel charged that on 16 June a rubber dinghy had entered Israel's coastal waters from the north and was intercepted some three miles south of its border with Lebanon. In an exchange of fire, the three PLO terrorists aboard, dispatched to carry out acts of terror in Israel, had been killed by a navy patrol.

Israel further charged, in a letter dated 29 July, that on 27 July in Antwerp, Belgium, one child had been killed and 17 other people wounded when grenades were hurled at a group of 40 Jewish children, and that the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine had taken responsibility for the attack. By a letter of 7 October, Israel charged that PLO claimed credit for a variety of incidents in Israel, ranging from industrial accidents to gas explosions in private homes. On 5 October, a home-made bomb had exploded during a domestic quarrel in Givatayim near Tel Aviv, killing three persons and wounding six others. The PLO's reaction to these incidents illustrated its eagerness to be associated with any calamity in Israel, the Israeli letter said.

By two letters, dated 2 and 8 April, Israel transmitted a photocopy of an article of 11 February from the publication El Mundo in Caracas, Venezuela, in which Yassir Arafat, Chairman of PLO, was alleged to have stated that the destruction of Israel was the goal of PLO's struggle. On 18 April, Tunisia transmitted a letter of 16 April from the Permanent Observer of PLO advising that Mr. Arafat had instructed him to inform the President of the Security Council that he had never given such an interview.

On 21 November, Israel transmitted excerpts from an article in The New York Times Magazine of 2 November, in which it was alleged that PLO served as a tool in international terrorism, supported by the USSR.

On 4 and 6 June, the Israeli representative transmitted excerpts from what he described as the political programme and resolutions adopted at the Fourth Congress of the al-Fatah organization, held at Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic, at the end of May, and charged that they called for the destruction of Israel. On 14 August, he transmitted a photocopy, in the original Arabic, of the programme and resolutions.

By a letter of 5 May, Italy transmitted a declaration issued in Luxembourg on 28 April by the heads of State and Government and the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the nine member States of the European Community, meeting as the European Council, dealing in part with the situation in the Middle East. The Community reiterated the view that only a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement could bring true peace to the Middle East.

On 16 June, Italy transmitted a declaration issued at Venice on 13 June by the European Council regarding the situation in the Middle East. The European Community members stated that the time had come to promote the recognition and implementation of the two principles universally accepted by the international community, namely, the right to existence and to security of all States in the region, including Israel, and justice for all the peoples, which implied recognition of the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people. As to Jerusalem, the nine countries stressed that they would not accept any unilateral initiative designed to change its status and that any agreement should guarantee freedom of access for everyone to the Holy Places. They also stressed the need for Israel to put an end to the territorial occupation which it had maintained since 1967, as it had done for part of Sinai, and expressed their conviction that the Israeli settlements constituted a serious obstacle to the peace process and were illegal under international law.

By a letter of 4 December, Luxembourg transmitted a statement issued at a meeting of the European Council in Luxembourg on 2 December. The statement confirmed that the principles of the Venice declaration incorporated the essential elements for a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement to be negotiated by the parties concerned. Consideration of those elements had resulted in the drafting of a report on the principal problems relating to a comprehensive settlement. The Council noted that various formulas aiming at giving substance to some of the Venice principles were possible. With a view to a more thorough exploration of those formulas and in the desire to encourage a climate more favourable to negotiations, the Council had laid down an action programme which included the establishment of new contacts with the parties concerned.

Report of the Secretary-General (24 October)

On 24 October 1980, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council a report on the situation in the Middle East, as called for by the Assembly on 6 December 1979.<sup>22</sup> The Secretary-General gave an account of United Nations efforts to deal with various aspects of the situation, namely, the status of the cease-fire, the situation in the occupied territories, the Palestine refugee problem, Palestinian rights and the search for a peaceful settlement.

The Secretary-General reiterated his view that the main aspects of the Middle East problem were interdependent and could not be separated. A continuous and determined effort had therefore to be made to achieve a comprehensive settlement through negotiations involving all the parties concerned, including PLO. Any future solution of the problem, he added, would have to be based on: the right of all States in the area to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries, free from threats or acts of force; the inalienable rights of the Palestinians, including their right to self-determination; and withdrawal from occupied territories. In that context, the question of Jerusalem was of primary importance and could not be solved through any unilateral decision. The Secretary-General continued to believe that the United Nations could do much to facilitate a settlement and hoped that it would play an increasingly important role in that vital endeavour.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The General Assembly discussed the situation in the Middle East at five plenary meetings held between 8 and 16 December. It heard the views of more than 50 Member States and, on 16 December, adopted resolution 35/207, by which it condemned the Israeli occupation, renewed its call for Israeli withdrawal and reaffirmed the inalienable national rights of the Palestinian people.

The debate reflected wide agreement that the current situation in the Middle East continued to pose a serious threat to world peace and stability. Almost all speakers considered the question of Palestine the central issue. In their opinion, the current unjust situation would continue to be fraught with potentially explosive elements of mistrust, tension and conflict, so long as there was no solution to the Palestine question.

Many Members reiterated the views that: Israel must withdraw from the territories it had occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem; the national rights of the Palestinian people, including their right to establish their own State, must be implemented; and the main aspects of the Middle East crisis were interdependent and could not be separated, and hence the settlement of the crisis should be comprehensive and negotiations should be held with equal participation of all the parties, including PLO as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

A number of representatives emphasized, at the same time, the right of all States in the area to an independent existence within secure and recognized boundaries. It was generally considered that a just and durable solution had to be found under the auspices of the United Nations, which had already established the necessary framework within the context of its resolutions.

Opening the debate, Israel said the discussion should not focus exclusively on one part of the region. The situation in the Middle East included other trouble spots such as the war in the Persian Gulf, the situation in Afghanistan and the armed stand-off between the Syrian Arab Republic and Jordan. Those situations and other factors, for instance the quantity of arms imported by many Arab countries and the nuclear development in Iraq and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, held grave implications for international peace and deserved the Assembly's urgent attention.

Jordan stated that the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East were inextricably intertwined. Jordan's position was based on decisions and resolutions adopted at recent Arab summit conferences. At the Eleventh Arab Summit Conference, held at Amman, Jordan, from 25 to 27 November, the Arab leaders had reiterated their total support for the struggle of the Palestinian people and their commitment to the liberation of Arab Jerusalem. In their view, Security Council resolution 242(1967) of 22 November 1967<sup>23</sup> was incompatible with Arab rights and did not constitute a sound basis for resolving the Middle East crisis, in particular the question of Palestine. Having reiterated their rejection of the Camp David accords, the Arab leaders had expressed their determination to confront and defeat those accords and to remove their consequences.

Luxembourg, on behalf of the nine member States of the European Community, reiterated the fundamental principles governing any global peace settlement in the Middle East, as set out in the declaration on the Middle East situation issued by the nine States at Venice on 13 June: the right to existence and to security of all States in the area and justice for all the peoples, which implied recognition of the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people. A comprehensive settlement to the Middle East problem must be based on Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973).<sup>24</sup> Further, a solution must be found to the Palestinian problem, which was not simply a refugee problem; the Palestinian people must be enabled to exercise the right to self-determination. The two principles must be the basis of negotiation leading to a settlement which presupposed the participation of all parties concerned, including PLO. As to the Camp David agreements, the nine States felt that they had not had the expected results in promoting a comprehensive settlement. One of the fundamental conditions of such a settlement was the ending of the Israeli occupation. The Community members were opposed to the settlement policies of the Israeli Government. Those policies and measures to change the demographic composition of the occupied territories, either by establishing settlements or enlarging existing ones, were illegal under international law. They were also opposed to Israel's initiatives to change the status of Jerusalem and expressed concern that legislation affecting the character and status of the Golan Heights was about to be considered by the Israeli parliament. Regarding recent events in Lebanon, the nine States had, by their 2 December statement, reaffirmed that Lebanon's unity, independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity remained an essential element of security and stability in the Middle East.

The USSR said the situation in the Middle East remained unsettled because of Israel's expansionist policy and its refusal to withdraw from all the Arab territories occupied in 1967. Israel could not have pursued such a policy without the support of the United States, which chose Israel as a channel for its own interests. The USSR had firmly and consistently favoured a political settlement on the basis of the relevant Council and Assembly decisions. A comprehensive settlement should embrace all the parties involved, including PLO, the sole legal representative of the Palestinian people. A Middle East settlement should recognize three interrelated elements ensuring: (1) the complete withdrawal of Israeli troops from all occupied Arab territories, including the eastern part of Jerusalem; (2) the right of the Arab people of Palestine to self-determination and to the establishment of their own independent State; and (3) the right of all States in the area involved in the conflict to an independent existence and security, with the necessary international guarantees. This approach determined the USSR attitude towards separate deals, like the Egyptian-Israeli treaty. The Camp David agreements had nothing in common with the establishment of a genuine and durable peace in the Middle East; they ran counter to the national interests of the peoples of that region. A just solution to the Palestinian problem, the USSR believed, could be achieved only in the context of an overall Middle East settlement based on the relevant decisions of the United Nations. The USSR supported the Security Council's censure of Israel's annexation of the eastern sector of Jerusalem (see p. 404) and affirmed that all actions taken by Israel to change the status of Jerusalem were invalid.

The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic said the purpose of Israel's policy of establishing settlements was ultimately the annexation of the occupied territories. His Government had alerted the international community to the dangerous implications of Israel's plan to consider a law declaring the annexation of the Golan Heights. The Syrian Arab Republic believed that the Security Council must take decisive action without delay to force Israel to implement the various resolutions of the Assembly which had defined the foundation of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

Egypt reiterated its view that any solution of the Middle East problem must be based on the right of all the States in the area to live in peace and security, on the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination without outside interference and on Israel's withdrawal from, above all, the Arab city of Jerusalem. Egypt accepted Council resolution 242(1967) which laid down a general framework for a settlement of the problem of the Middle East. In the Camp David agreements and the peace treaty with Israel, which were based on the principles of the United Nations Charter and on the provisions of Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973), Egypt had, for the first time, managed to get from Israel a clear and binding commitment to allow the Palestinian people to exercise their legitimate rights. Until then, Israel had never recognized the existence of those people. Egypt was working patiently and hard for the restoration of their rights.

A number of States, including Algeria, Bulgaria, Democratic Yemen, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary and Pakistan, were critical of the Camp David accords as an appropriate framework for the solution of the Palestinian question. In Hungary's opinion, those accords were futile, since their ultimate aim was not the establishment of peace, but rather the creation of a new military alliance. The autonomy offered to the Palestinians within those agreements did not apply to the territory in which they lived, but only to the inhabitants, and therefore served only the rapid annexation of the occupied territories.

The German Democratic Republic said the attempts to bring about a one-sided settlement, outside the framework of the United Nations and in violation of the Charter and United Nations decisions, were directed against the interests of the Arab people. The real intention behind the so-called autonomy talks was to perpetuate the Israeli occupation.

Algeria stated that the parties to the Camp David agreements were not qualified to settle a problem primarily of concern to the Palestinian people and its sole legitimate representative, PLO. The basic premise of those agreements represented a flagrant violation of the fundamental principles concerning the right to self-determination and independence and to the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force.

The Lebanese representative expressed the view that the beginning of the solution to the Middle East question should be in Palestine itself. Meanwhile, he added, no people, including the people of Lebanon, could be allowed to continue to suffer for ever because it was convenient to use one country or another as a dumping pit for marginal wars and the products of war. Commenting on the United Nations peace-keeping operation, he said Lebanon considered resorting to the international community the surest way of attaining peace and security, provided that the Organization could restrain those who challenged its resolutions.

Almost all speakers emphasized that peace and stability in Lebanon were essential to the attainment of peace throughout the Middle East. A number of them, Japan, Portugal and Senegal for instance, deplored Israel's repeated attacks against southern Lebanon and demanded that they be halted.

Many countries, including Austria, Botswana, Brazil, Finland, India, Portugal, Romania, the United Republic of Cameroon and Zambia, expressed opposition to Israel's policies in the occupied territories.

Brazil voiced the views of many States when it said the problems and difficulties impeding the establishment of a global and peaceful settlement had been made even more serious by a number of Israeli initiatives. First, the consolidation of the settlement policy on the West Bank had changed the demographic and physical character of the area, in violation of Security Council resolutions and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949. Second, Brazil continued, Israel's annexation of East Jerusalem and its unilateral declaration of Jerusalem as the Israeli capital did not offer encouragement for the solution of problems. Third, the reported intention to annex the Golan Heights, illegally occupied since 1967, would be an act of defiance that would undermine the creation of an atmosphere of goodwill and conciliation. Fourth, Israel's repressive measures against West Bank Palestinians, such as the detention and deportation of the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul, could hardly be regarded as positive harbingers of Israel's willingness to coexist peacefully with its Palestinian neighbours. Finally, the military attacks against Lebanon must cease and its sovereignty and territorial integrity be safeguarded.

Indonesia noted that not long ago Israel had been saying that it had no territorial designs and that all it wanted was peace. Currently, however, it was claiming the occupied West Bank as historically its own. It had become unmistakably clear that Israel was aiming at the gradual annexation of the occupied territories through demographic, religious, economic and other means. Under those circumstances, Indonesia said, it was time for the Security Council to initiate measures in accordance with the provisions of Chapter VII of the Charter.<sup>25</sup> A similar suggestion was made by the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Saudi Arabia and the Sudan.

The PLO representative declared that his organization was a liberation movement carrying out a legitimate struggle based on the principles of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.<sup>26</sup> Its armed struggle was a practical and humane contribution to the fight against Zionist terrorism. As to the Camp David agreements, PLO considered that partial solutions had merely complicated the crisis and rendered the situation even more explosive. Israeli aggression against the Palestinian people and against Lebanon had intensified. The autonomy plot that had come out of those agreements was nothing but a new way of imposing slavery on the Palestinian people and of maintaining Israeli occupation in the Palestinian homeland. Resolution 242(1967) was not a valid basis for a solution to the Middle East problem, whose very core was the problem of Palestine; PLO could not recognize a resolution which disregarded the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people.

Following the debate, the Assembly, on 16 December, voted on a draft resolution sponsored by Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, India, Indonesia, Mali, Pakistan, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia. Operative paragraph 8, calling for strict respect for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and political independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries, was voted on separately and was approved by a recorded vote of 144 to 0. The text as a whole was adopted as resolution 35/207 by a recorded vote of 101 to 13, with 30 abstentions.

By other operative provisions of the resolution, the Assembly condemned Israel's continued occupation of Palestinian and other Arab territories, renewed its call for Israel's immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal and reaffirmed its conviction that the question of Palestine was at the core of the Middle East conflict and that no comprehensive, just and lasting peace would be achieved without the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights. It reaffirmed further that a just and comprehensive settlement could not be achieved without the participation on an equal footing of the parties to the conflict, including PLO. It declared that a just and lasting settlement of the Middle East problem must be based on a comprehensive solution, under United Nations auspices, which ensured complete and unconditional withdrawal from all the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since June 1967, including Jerusalem, and enabled the Palestinian people to exercise its inalienable rights to self-determination, national independence and establishment of its independent State in Palestine under the leadership of PLO.

The Assembly rejected all partial agreements and separate treaties which violated the recognized rights of the Palestinian people, and further reaffirmed its strong rejection of Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem, alter its physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and status. The Assembly strongly condemned Israel's aggression against Lebanon and the Palestinian people as well as its practices in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, particularly the Golan Heights, including annexation, the establishment of settlements, assassination attempts and other terrorist, aggressive and repressive measures.

In explanation of its vote against the resolution, the United States said that in its view the text was irrelevant to the search for a comprehensive peace as well as to a resolution of the Palestinian problem in all its aspects, for which Camp David had provided the most realistic and practical framework. A comprehensive settlement between Israel and its neighbours could only be negotiated in accordance with the principles of Security Council resolution 242(1967), the only agreed basis for peace. The United States rejected the approach which sought to undermine that resolution by ignoring one of its central provisions. It was unrealistic to expect Israel's withdrawal from the occupied territories without endorsing its right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries.

Reservations on paragraph 5 (rejecting partial agreements and separate treaties violating the rights of the Palestinian people) were voiced by the Bahamas, Costa Rica, Jamaica, Spain and Togo. They did not reject the Camp David agreements, although they recognized their inadequacy with regard to the rights of the Palestinian people, the implementation of which represented a basic requirement for a just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

Reservations on paragraph 4 (citing, inter alia, the right of the Palestinians to establish an independent State in Palestine) were expressed by Costa Rica, Spain and Thailand which maintained that the result of the exercise of the right to self-determination by the Palestinian people should not be prejudged. Thailand also had reservations on the wording of paragraph 7 which condemned Israel's aggression against Lebanon and its practices in the occupied territories.

Ecuador explained that it had abstained because it did not agree with the wording of the resolution, though it agreed with some of its principles. Peru had felt obliged to abstain as the resolution did not provide a solution to the Middle East problem within the framework of the fundamental Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973).

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya declared that its vote in favour did not signify that it acknowledged resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973). Trinidad and Tobago stated that it had voted in favour despite the fact that the resolution contained elements with which it did not fully agree.

In connexion with the situation in Jerusalem, Pakistan addressed on 7 October a letter to the President of the General Assembly, conveying the reservation of 39 member States of the Organization of the Islamic Conference on the credentials of the delegation of Israel to the Assembly's 1980 regular session, and stating that it represented a Government that had violated international law and United Nations resolutions by declaring the Holy City of Jerusalem its capital. On 12 October, Israel replied that Pakistan's letter was an attempt to abuse the credentials procedure in order to introduce matters completely extraneous to it.

The General Assembly,

Having discussed the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East,"

Taking into account the support extended to the just causes of the Palestinian people and the other Arab countries in their struggle against Israeli aggression and occupation in order to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights, as affirmed by previous resolutions of the General Assembly relating to the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East,

Deeply concerned that the Arab and Palestinian territories occupied since June 1967, including Jerusalem, still remain under illegal Israeli occupation, that the relevant resolutions of the United Nations have not been implemented and that the Palestinian people is still denied the restoration of its land and the exercise of its inalienable national rights in conformity with international law, as reaffirmed by resolutions of the United Nations,

Reaffirming that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law and that Israel must withdraw from all the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem,

Reaffirming further the necessity of establishing a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region, based on full respect for the Charter and the principles of international law,

1. Condemns Israel's continued occupation of Palestinian and other Arab territories, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, the principles of international law and the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and renews its call for the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from all these occupied territories;

2. Reaffirms its conviction that the question of Palestine is at the core of the conflict in the Middle East and that no comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region will be achieved without the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights;

3. Reaffirms further that a just and comprehensive settlement of the situation in the Middle East cannot be achieved without the participation on an equal footing of the parties to the conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization as the representative of the Palestinian people;

4. Declares once more that peace in the Middle East is indivisible and that a just and lasting settlement of the Middle East problem must be based on a comprehensive solution, under the auspices of the United Nations, which ensures complete and unconditional withdrawal from all the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since June 1967, including Jerusalem, and enables the Palestinian people to exercise its inalienable rights, including the right of return, and the right to self-determination, national independence and the establishment of its independent State in Palestine under the leadership of the Palestine Liberation Organization, in accordance with resolutions of the United Nations relating to the question of Palestine, in particular General Assembly resolutions ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980 and 35/169 A of 15 December 1980;

5. Rejects all partial agreements and separate treaties which violate the recognized rights of the Palestinian people and contradict the principles of just and comprehensive solutions to the Middle East problem to ensure the establishment of a just peace in the area;

6. Further reaffirms its strong rejection of Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem, declare it as its "capital" and alter its physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and status, considers all these measures and their consequences null and void, requests that they should be rescinded immediately and calls upon all Member States, specialized agencies and other international organisations to abide by the present resolution and all other relevant resolutions, including General Assembly resolution 35/169 E of 15 December 1980;

7. Strongly condemns Israel's aggression against Lebanon and the Palestinian people as well as its practices in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, particularly the Syrian Golan Heights, including annexation, the establishment of settlements, assassination attempts and other terrorist, aggressive and repressive measures which are in violation of the Charter and the principles of international law;

8. Calls for strict respect for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and political independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council periodically on the development of the situation and to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session a report covering the developments in the Middle East in all their aspects.

Question of Palestine

Communications

Numerous communications were addressed during 1980 to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council on different aspects of the question of Palestine.

By a letter of 11 February to the Secretary-General, Pakistan transmitted the resolutions and final communiqué of an extraordinary session of the Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Islamabad, 27-29 January). On the question of Palestine and Jerusalem, the Conference had condemned Israeli aggression and the Egyptian policy of establishing relations with Israel as a threat to the security and independence of the Arab and Moslem countries. It called on all Islamic States to boycott Egypt and to reaffirm their solidarity with the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), and invited them to reaffirm concretely their solidarity with the Arab States for the liberation of Al-Quds (Jerusalem) and all other occupied territories.

By a letter of 28 April to the Secretary-General, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya conveyed the Declaration of the Fourth Summit Conference of the Steadfastness and Confrontation National Front (Tripoli, 12-15 April). The Conference reaffirmed the continued confrontation with Israel, resistance against the Camp David policy and support of PLO as representative of the Palestinian people.

Other communications also transmitted documents that addressed the question of Palestine.

Iraq on 2 May transmitted a letter of 2 April from, and the final statement of, the Second International Conference in Solidarity with the Peasants and People of Palestine (Baghdad, 30 March-2 April).

Jordan on 8 August forwarded the final documents of the Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers at its second extraordinary session (Amman, 11 and 12 July), devoted to the Palestinian question, at which the Ministers reaffirmed their position on Palestinian rights, Jerusalem, the Camp David accords and the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty.

On 20 August, Pakistan transmitted to the Secretary-General the resolutions and final communiqué adopted at the Eleventh Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Islamabad, 17-22 May). The Ministers had considered many aspects of the Palestine question.

By a letter of 29 September to the Secretary-General, Morocco transmitted the final communiqué of a special session of the Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers on the question of Jerusalem (Fez, 18-20 September). The Conference affirmed that its members would assist PLO against Israel and support the Palestinian people within and outside their occupied homeland.

On 14 October, Cuba transmitted the communiqué of an extraordinary meeting (New York, 2 and 3 October) of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs and heads of delegations of the non-aligned countries to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth (1980) session. The meeting had expressed satisfaction that a resolution on the question of Palestine had been adopted by an overwhelming majority at the Assembly's seventh emergency special session in July (see p. 385).

By a letter of 27 October, the German Democratic Republic transmitted to the Secretary-General the resolutions adopted on 24 September by the Sixty-seventh Inter-Parliamentary Conference (Berlin, 14-25 September). The Conference condemned Israel's aggressive policy and its initiative to change the status of Jerusalem, and reaffirmed that a just and lasting solution must be based on: the right of the Palestinians to self-determination, national independence and sovereignty and the establishment of their own State; the right of PLO to participate on an equal footing in any efforts concerning the Palestinian question and the Middle East problem; and the right of the Palestinians to repatriation and the recovery of their land and property.

By a letter dated 4 December, Jordan conveyed to the Secretary-General the Final Declaration of the Eleventh Arab Summit Conference (Amman, 25-27 November), which emphasized that the liberation of Arab Jerusalem was a national obligation and reaffirmed support for PLO.

Israel, in letters to the Secretary-General dated 27 June, 31 October and 17 November, objected to material published by the United Nations Secretariat and prepared under the aegis of the Special Unit on Palestinian Rights. Israel considered these to be pseudo-scientific publications which gave a completely misleading version of the history of the Arab-Israeli conflict and/or were filled with factual errors and tendentious material.

Consideration by the Security Council
(31 March-9 April, 29 and 30 April)

The Security Council held seven meetings between 31 March and 30 April to consider the question of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people. On its agenda were two letters to the Council President. The first, dated 6 March, from the Acting Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, referred to a 1979 General Assembly resolution,<sup>27</sup> whereby the Assembly had urged the Council to take a decision as soon as possible on the Committee's 1976 recommendations,<sup>28</sup> endorsed by the Assembly, and had requested the Committee to make the suggestions it deemed appropriate should the Council fail to act by 31 March 1980. The Acting Chairman said the Committee was convinced that concrete action by the Council to implement the Committee's recommendations would lead to tangible progress towards a solution of the Palestinian question. Action by the Council should not be delayed further in the face of the increased intransigence by Israel in establishing and strengthening its settlements in illegally occupied Arab territories.

The second letter, dated 24 March, was from the Chairman of the Committee, who wrote that developments in occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, constituted continuing violation by Israel of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and that the 31 March date envisaged by the Assembly was imminent. He therefore requested that the Council be convened urgently.

When the Council convened, the following Member States were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote: Algeria, Bahrain, Bulgaria, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Guyana, Hungary, India, Iraq, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon, Madagascar, Morocco, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Syrian Arab Republic, Ukrainian SSR, United Arab Emirates, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia.

Invitations under rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure<sup>29</sup> were extended, at their request, to the Chairman and the Rapporteur of the Committee. The Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States to the United Nations was also invited to participate under rule 39, as requested by Tunisia in a letter of 31 March.

The President drew attention to a letter of 27 March from Tunisia requesting that PLO be invited to participate in the Council's deliberations, in accordance with past practice. He added that the proposal was not made pursuant to rule 37<sup>30</sup> or rule 39 of the provisional rules of procedure, but that, if approved, the invitation would confer on PLO the same rights as those conferred on a Member State when invited to participate pursuant to rule 37.

The representative of the United States requested that the proposed invitation be put to a vote, stating that he had no objection to the participation of PLO, provided it was under rule 39. The proposal was approved by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (France, Norway, Portugal, United Kingdom).

Opening the debate, the Chairman of the Committee said the Committee's report had been before the Council since 1976. All of its recommendations were based on United Nations resolutions. On two occasions, the Council had dealt with the matter without taking any decision because a Council member had requested that a decision be deferred in view of ongoing negotiations on the Middle East problem. On both occasions, the Committee, wishing to demonstrate its goodwill and its desire to promote the restoration of peace in the region, had agreed to a suspension of the debate. Unfortunately, the Committee's patience had not been rewarded. It appeared that those who had been requesting the deferment were in fact trying to prevent the Council from acting. The General Assembly had on several occasions deplored the Council's immobility in connexion with the question of Palestine. Assembly resolutions, as well as recent developments in the occupied Arab territories, showed that it was necessary and urgent for the Council to take a speedy decision on the Assembly's recommendations.

It was heartening to note that authoritative voices had been heard recently, particularly that of the President of France, in favour of the recognition of the inalienable right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, as well as its right to have its legitimate representative participate in any negotiation to determine its future. Some other European countries had also taken that position. One permanent member, however, was still using the excuse of not wishing to damage negotiations going on outside the United Nations on the problem of the Middle East, the Chairman said.

A beginning to the solution of the Middle East conflict could be accomplished by adopting a resolution which would recognize the legitimate national rights of the Palestinian people, as defined by the Assembly. Such a decision would not signify the denial of Israel's rights. The Committee had always felt that what was essentially at stake in the Middle East was the recognition of the rights of the Palestinian people. Israel not only enjoyed its national rights but continually misused them by illegally occupying Arab territories.

Israel said the Committee had been set up for the purpose of bypassing Security Council resolution 242(1967).<sup>31</sup> Therefore, it was not surprising that its recommendations accorded fully with PLO's aims. Nineteen of the 23 members of the Committee did not have diplomatic relations with Israel and some of them did not recognize Israel's right to exist. The incontrovertible facts were that two States, Jordan and Israel, had been established on the territory which was the Palestine Mandate between the First and Second World Wars, and the Palestinians had long ago achieved self-determination in Jordan. The vast majority of Jordanian citizens were Palestinians, who constituted Jordan's administrative, intellectual and economic elite. The refusal of most Arab States to recognize Israel's right to exist was the core and cause of the Arab-Israeli conflict. Given the long record of Arab hostility and aggression, it was inevitable that before the final boundaries between Israel and Jordan were delineated, there must be a transitional period, which would in itself constitute a confidence-building measure. That was the concept embodied in the Camp David framework with regard to the future of Judaea, Samaria and the Gaza District and of the Palestinians residing in those areas.

Tunisia stated that it was time for Israel to understand that peace and security could not be brought about through the impairment of the rights of others to existence and liberty, or on any other basis than that of respect for the elementary principles of morality and international law. Force and oppression led nowhere; four wars had not reduced the people of Palestine to silence. More than ever before, they were determined to recover their rights and sovereignty. The Council had the ability to define and put into effect the terms of a peace based on justice and law and to put an end to uncertainty, which constituted the plight of the Palestinian people as well as that of all the peoples of the region.

The USSR charged that Israel was deliberately sabotaging the implementation of the resolutions relevant to a just settlement of the problem of Palestine. Along with Israel, those who had been encouraging that country's expansionist policy bore a heavy responsibility for undermining the efforts leading to a just solution. The Egyptian-Israeli treaty could only be viewed as a means of legitimizing Israel's presence on land seized by force of arms. As to the so-called administrative autonomy, it only aimed at consolidating Israel's domination over the occupied Palestinian lands, at preventing the self-determination of the Palestinian people and at excluding PLO from participation in a solution to the Palestinian problem. Israel would never have dared to disregard the demands of the Security Council had it not received all forms of assistance, in particular from the United States. By blocking the exercise of the inalienable rights of the Arab people of Palestine, the United States had been impeding a just Middle East settlement and the establishment of a lasting peace. The Council must do its duty and support the inalienable rights of those people.

China said that, since the beginning of the year, Israeli authorities had stepped up their pursuit of policies of aggression, expansion and annexation. By their statements and acts, they had made it clear that their reactionary stand on perpetuating their occupation of Arab territories and negating the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people had not changed. China strongly condemned Israel for those policies and resolutely supported the Palestinian people in their just struggle to regain their national rights, including the rights to return to their homeland, to self-determination and to establish their own State.

Bangladesh and the German Democratic Republic reviewed the principles on which a solution to the Middle East problem must be based and reaffirmed support of the recommendations of the Palestinian Rights Committee.

Zambia stated that any serious initiative to solve the Middle East question would not succeed unless it realized the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination. Also, it was imperative that PLO be both recognized and enabled to participate in that solution on an equal footing with other parties. Israel would meaningfully contribute to peace and justice in the Middle East by accepting the reality of the existence of PLO.

Jamaica thought there had been a failure to recognize, through positive action by the Council, the political rights of the Palestinian people. It was therefore necessary, in order to give impetus to the efforts towards a comprehensive solution to the Middle East problems, to remedy the deficiencies of past pronouncements and open the way to a principled and realistic approach. The Council had a serious responsibility and a duty in this matter.

The Niger said that Assembly resolutions must be followed up vigorously in the Council and translated into a courageous resolution in which the rights of the Palestinian people were finally recognized, proclaimed and protected. The Niger supported the recommendations of the Palestinian Rights Committee and called for talks, on the basis of those recommendations, between Israel and PLO, which more than 110 countries had recognized as the authentic representative of the Palestinian people.

The President, speaking as the representative of Mexico, said the international community had reached certain irreversible conclusions, namely that: there could be no just and lasting peace in the Middle East without a recognition of the right of every nation in the area to an independent existence; the self-determination of the Palestinian people entailed the full exercise of its national rights; Israel must withdraw from the territories occupied by force since 1967; and PLO was the legitimate representative of the Palestinian people. Mexico believed the Council was dealing with fundamental principles on which the existence of a nation as well as the maintenance of peace depended.

The Council also heard statements by the representatives of Algeria, Bahrain, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Guyana, Hungary, India, Iraq, Jordan, Morocco, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR, the United Arab Emirates, Viet Nam, Yemen and Yugoslavia. In addition, it heard the representatives of PLO and the League of Arab States.

These speakers supported the recommendations of the Palestinian Rights Committee. India expressed hope that the Council would act on them in order to bring peace and justice to the region. Jordan said that, in the event the Council could not reach unanimity, the international community was determined to call for an emergency special session of the General Assembly. What they saw as Israel's scorn for the decisions of the United Nations, as most recently exemplified in its action concerning Jerusalem, was pointed out by many. Morocco said Israel must have the courage to set aside its expansionist, annexationist designs; Israel's alleged desire for peace could not be reconciled with its practices that violated the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people.

Step-by-step and partial approaches, in the opinion of Guyana, Hungary, and others, had done nothing to advance the cause of Middle East peace; instead they had allowed the occupying power to consolidate its hold on the occupied territories.

Egypt, referring to criticism by a number of speakers of the Camp David accords and of the Egypt-Israel peace treaty, categorically rejected allusions calling in question its commitment to the Palestinian cause. Those accords, it stated, constituted a first step and not the final settlement.

The PLO representative said the Camp David accords had been conceived in such a way as to ignore the rights of the Palestinian people. The Council was called on to take a decision on recommendations of the Palestinian Rights Committee regarding that people's rights to self-determination, national independence and sovereignty, which had been endorsed on several occasions in the General Assembly by an overwhelming majority. At its 1979 session, the Assembly had declared that the Camp David accords and other agreements had no validity in so far as they purported to determine the future of the Palestinian people and territories occupied by Israel since 1967. Statements to that effect had also been made by conferences of the non-aligned countries and the Organization of African Unity. The President of France on 3 March 1980, he continued, had expressed his conviction that the question of Palestine was not a refugee problem but that of a people which should be enabled to exercise its right to self-determination. Such developments as well as other constructive positions on the part of a number of European leaders were appreciated by PLO. It was noteworthy that the United States had recognized that there would be no comprehensive peace in the Middle East until the Palestinian problem, in all its aspects, was resolved. While the world was moving in the right direction for peace, Israel was nullifying even the so-called autonomy in the occupied territories through practices and policies there. The Council was legally committed to restoring the rights of the Palestinian people.

On 28 April, Tunisia submitted a draft resolution whereby the Council would affirm: that the Palestinian people should be enabled to exercise its inalienable national right to self-determination, including the right to establish an independent State in Palestine; the right of Palestinian refugees to return to their homes and live in peace with their neighbours; and the right of those choosing not to return to receive equitable compensation for their property. The Council would also: reaffirm that Israel should withdraw from all Arab territories occupied since June 1967, including Jerusalem; decide that appropriate arrangements should be established to guarantee the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of all States in the area, including the sovereign independent State of Palestine, and the right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries; decide that these provisions should be taken fully into account in all international efforts and conferences organized within the United Nations framework for the establishment of a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the Middle East; and request the Secretary-General to take all the necessary steps, as soon as possible, for the implementation of the resolution and to report on the progress achieved. The Council would also decide to convene within six months to consider the Secretary-General's report and pursue its implementation responsibilities.

On 30 April the Council voted on the draft resolution, which received 10 votes in favour to 1 against (United States), with 4 abstentions (France, Norway, Portugal, United Kingdom), and was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent member.

The Council heard statements by a number of members in connexion with the vote.

The Philippines said that just as Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973)<sup>32</sup> recognized Israel's right to a secure existence as a State, so must be recognized the same right of the Palestinian people. Palestinian refugees wishing to return to their homes and live in peace with their neighbours should be able to do so and those choosing not to return should receive just compensation.

Portugal noted with regret that there remained too many different views about the best way for the Council to approach the question before it, a way that would make possible a broad consensus in support of the Palestinian cause. It considered that no all-encompassing search for peace in the Middle East could be undertaken without first taking into consideration the legitimate national and political rights of the Palestinian people.

Norway said it supported Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) as a basis for a just and lasting Middle East peace. It had given full support to the Camp David agreements as an important first step towards a comprehensive settlement. On the other hand, progress seemed to have been rather modest in the talks on autonomy for the West Bank and Gaza. Whatever their outcome, the Palestinian issue would remain the key issue which had to be solved to achieve a comprehensive settlement. The question of Palestinian participation in future negotiations raised the question of the role of PLO. No other organization, group or individual could claim to be more representative of the Palestinian people. It was difficult to envisage real progress without PLO's participation. As to the draft resolution, Norway believed it would have been advisable to await a larger measure of agreement before taking a decision. In addition, it considered the text to be unbalanced and to prejudge the outcome of future negotiations.

The United States said the Palestinian dimension was one of the crucial issues to be resolved in the context of a comprehensive settlement. Accordingly, the Camp David accords called for the solution of the Palestinian problem in all its aspects. Intensive negotiations were going on to provide for the security of Israel and to fulfil the commitment in the Camp David framework to establish full autonomy for the people of the West Bank and Gaza during a transitional period, pending further negotiations to resolve the final status of those territories. If successful, negotiations would provide the Palestinians living in those areas with a real opportunity to manage their own lives for the first time in history. On an issue of such importance, the Council should not be distracted by approaches that offered no prospect for practical progress. Nor should the Council adopt an approach which did not endorse resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973).

The United Kingdom said its decision to abstain in the vote was taken solely because of the timing of the resolution; its substance was not considered. That should not be taken as a sign that the United Kingdom was not interested in the active search for a peaceful and just settlement in the Middle East, did not accept that the right of the Palestinians to determine their own future lay at the heart of the problem, or did not believe that Israel had a right to exist within secure boundaries. On the contrary, the question had been discussed at a 28 April meeting in Luxembourg of the heads of State and Government and the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the European Community, when the Ministers were directed to submit a report on the Middle East problem to the next session of the European Council, to be held at Venice, Italy, in June (see p. 371).

The representative of France recalled that on several occasions his country had emphasized the need for a settlement of the Palestinian problem if peace and security were to be established in the Middle East. On 8 March, the President of France had stated that the right of each State in the region to live in peace within secure, recognized and guaranteed borders must be confirmed, and that France understood in that connexion the legitimate concerns of Israel. He had further stated that Israel must recognize that its occupation of Arab territories prevented it from establishing peaceful relations with its neighbours. Also, the true nature of the Palestine problem must be recognized, the problem of a people aspiring to exist. That people must be able to take a decision on their own destiny and to possess a homeland. The President of France had said that the implementation of those conditions for peace required the co-operation of all the parties concerned. As that did not currently exist, the French representative said, a postponement seemed the best course. France had been unstinting in its efforts to have that view conceded and to spare the Council a deadlock. Everything possible must be done to establish conditions that would enable the Council to take up again, under favourable conditions, the question of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people. The European Community had in mind the search for a common position leading to a new initiative when the necessary conditions had been met.

Seventh emergency special session of the General Assembly

On 1 July, Senegal requested the Secretary-General to convene an emergency special session of the General Assembly to discuss the question of Palestine, as the Security Council had again failed to take a decision on the recommendations of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People. Senegal stated that the Committee, over which it presided, had been authorized by the Assembly to make appropriate recommendations in the event the Council failed to act. The Committee had consequently decided to request the emergency special session to discuss an agenda item entitled "Question of Palestine." The Secretary-General transmitted the letter to Member States requesting them to inform him whether they concurred with the request.

By a letter of 20 July, Israel replied that the holding of such an emergency special session would be illegal as the two essential prerequisites laid down by resolution 377 A (V) entitled "Uniting for Peace"<sup>33</sup> had not been met. Those prerequisites were: deliberations by the Security Council on a matter where there appeared to be a threat to peace, breach of peace, or act of aggression; and a veto by a permanent Council member after such deliberations. In view of this, any resolution adopted at the session would be equally illegal.

On 21 July, the Secretary-General informed Member States that the majority of Members had concurred in Senegal's request.

On the same date, Israel informed the President of the General Assembly that it would not take part on 22 July in the proceedings of the emergency special session since it coincided with the Jewish fast of Tisha b'Av. Also on 21 July, Sri Lanka transmitted a message from its President restating his and his people's view that the question of Palestine was the core of the Middle East problem.

By a letter dated 22 July, Cuba transmitted the part of the Final Declaration of the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries held in 1979 which related to the situation in the Middle East and the question of Palestine.

On 25 July, Egypt conveyed a letter of 12 September 1979 from its Minister for Foreign Affairs to Fidel Castro in his capacity as President of the Sixth Conference, in connexion with certain insertions in the Final Declaration. In this letter, Egypt rejected the distortion of its foreign policy which was depicted as a violation of non-aligned principles.

By a letter of 23 July, Algeria requested that the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States be given the opportunity to address the Assembly at its emergency special session.

General Assembly discussion

The General Assembly at its seventh emergency special session considered the question of Palestine between 22 and 29 July 1980. Opening the debate, the President of the session stated that the problem of Palestine was an issue universally accepted as the core of the Middle East conflict. The objective of the session should be to put an end to the suffering of the Palestinian people by striving for a solution which would enable them to exercise their legitimate right to self-determination, including the right to an independent State. It should be the aim of the session to strive for the scrupulous application of the principle of the non-admissibility of the occupation of territory by force and consequently for Israel's total withdrawal, and to work for the creation of conditions which would guarantee independence to all States of the area.

The Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People deplored the United States veto on 30 April in the Security Council during the debate on the rights of the Palestinian people. The non-aligned countries had decided at their meeting in Havana, Cuba, in 1979 to request an emergency special session, should the Council fail to act because of a lack of unanimity among its permanent members, he said. The Committee considered that the convening of the emergency session was useful and timely. The Chairman believed that, without a solution to the Palestinian question, there would be no solution to the Middle East problem. In this context, he added, resolution 242(1967)<sup>34</sup> was inappropriate; if supplemented, it should include the right to self-determination, national independence and the creation of a sovereign State in Palestine, and the right of the refugees to return to their countries, as recognized by the Assembly.

With regard to the Camp David accords, he stated that the validity of agreements purporting to solve the problem of Palestine required that they be within the framework of the Charter of the United Nations and United Nations resolutions, on the basis of the full attainment and exercise of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people. He strongly condemned Israel's occupation of Arab and Palestinian territories and the establishment of settlements. Recourse to coercive measures under the Charter, he said, would become inevitable if Israel refused to follow the decision the emergency special session would take.

The Rapporteur of the Committee recalled the considerations that had prompted the Committee's recommendations, including: the fundamental rights of the Palestinian people; the right to existence and the legitimate security interests of all States in the region; the acceptance of all decisions taken by the United Nations on this question; and an enhanced potential role of the Organization in promoting a negotiated solution.

The PLO observer rejected the Camp David accords and the separate peace treaty between Egypt and Israel as a conspiracy against justice and peace. In his view, the emergency special session represented a last chance, before an explosion, to enable the Palestinian people to achieve their right to return, to self-determination, independence and sovereignty and to the establishment of their own State. The Palestinian people could not attain those rights through the Security Council as a result of self-interested imperialistic alliances.

The Secretary-General of the Organization of the Islamic Conference expressed the opinion that the basis for a solution to the Palestine question already existed in the partition plan of 1947 which recognized the existence of an independent Palestinian State,<sup>35</sup> in successive decisions by the Security Council and the General Assembly, in the will of the Palestinian people to establish an independent State on the land of their ancestors and, finally, in support for the Palestinian people and the recognition of PLO as their sole legitimate representative. The least that was expected by the Islamic people, he said, was an attitude that could dissuade Israel by using the sanctions set forth in Chapter VII of the Charter,<sup>36</sup> including the suspension of its membership in the United Nations if it continued to ignore the relevant decisions and refused to evacuate the Arab territories occupied after the 1967 war.

During the debate, most Members, including Guyana, India, Indonesia, Morocco and Seychelles, variously made the points that a comprehensive solution to the Middle East problem entailed: the exercise by the Palestinian people of their inalienable national rights, including their right to establish an independent State in their own homeland and their right to return to their homes; Israel's total and unconditional withdrawal from all occupied territories, including Jerusalem; and the guaranteed right of all States in the region to live within secure borders. Essential for a peaceful solution, they thought, was not only the recognition of PLO as the sole lawful representative of the Palestinian people, but also its equal participation in any peace negotiations. They urged the Assembly to examine the recommendations of the Committee on Palestinian Rights with a view to adopting and implementing them.

Pakistan said the Assembly must firmly demand that Israel withdraw from all the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, and it must establish an appropriate machinery to give effect to this demand and place the Palestinian people, led by PLO, in possession of the evacuated territories, including Jerusalem.

Kuwait, Qatar and the Sudan were among those which contended that the Camp David accords were directed against the Palestinian people and the interests of the Arab States.

Israel reiterated its opinion that the emergency special session was both illegal and preposterous since the prerequisites laid down by resolution 377 A (V)<sup>37</sup> had not been met. Therefore, any resolution adopted would be equally illegal. The Arab refusal to recognize Israel's right to exist had always been and remained the core and cause of the Arab-Israeli conflict. Because of the Arab refusal to make peace with Israel, it had not been possible in three decades to conduct serious negotiations about the conflict in all its aspects. The elements for a comprehensive solution had only come together at Camp David. The Camp David framework was based on Council resolution 242(1967), which remained the only agreed basis for peace negotiations in the Middle East. Only when the Arabs sat down and negotiated with Israel, on the basis of recognition and mutual respect, would a comprehensive solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict in all its aspects be achieved.

Austria recalled the many efforts to find a solution to the Middle East problem within as well as outside the United Nations. All had failed. Austria did not wish to belittle the Camp David accords, but the further steps for a comprehensive, just and lasting peace had not been forthcoming. In Austria's view, any lasting solution needed the following elements: first, the recognition of all States in the area to exist within safe and secure boundaries and of the national rights of the Palestinian people; second, the right of the Palestinians to choose those who should negotiate on their behalf; and third, withdrawal of Israel from the territories occupied in 1967.

For Sweden, a just solution to the Palestine question was the prerequisite for lasting peace. Any settlement must contemplate Israel's right to exist within secure borders, as well as recognize the Palestinians' national rights and include an agreement on the status of Jerusalem.

Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic, Poland, the USSR and other Eastern European countries stated that the crux of the Middle East problem was the question of restoring the full rights of the Palestinian people, including their right to return and their right to national independence and sovereignty in Palestine, in accordance with the United Nations Charter. The Palestine Liberation Organization, as their sole legitimate representative, had won general, international recognition and, further, was recognized as one of the principal parties to a Middle East settlement.

These countries denounced the Israeli settlement policy as well as the situation in East Jerusalem. In their opinion, the Camp David accords could not serve any useful purpose since PLO had not participated in those deliberations. The basis for a Middle East settlement, they said, could be no other than the unconditional withdrawal of Israel from all occupied territories, including East Jerusalem, the implementation of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, including the establishment of an independent State, and the ensurance of the right of all States in the region to a secure and independent existence and development.

The Assembly, they said, should adopt such decisions as would stress the necessity of immediate implementation of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and should demonstrate its determination to apply to Israel the strictest coercive measures provided for under Chapter VII of the Charter should Israel continue to refuse to implement relevant United Nations decisions.

Luxembourg, on behalf of the European Community members, reaffirmed the principles of the declaration they had made at Venice on 13 June (see p. 371). In their view, the right of all States in the region, including Israel, to existence and security, and justice for all peoples, which implied recognition of the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, were essential to a comprehensive settlement. They were convinced that occupation of territory by force should cease and that the Israeli settlements on occupied Arab territories were a serious obstacle to peace. Any change in the status of Jerusalem could not be accepted by the Community's members, which believed that a climate of confidence had to be created and that PLO must be involved in negotiations for a just solution. Those members had always supported resolution 242(1967) even though it was not adequate with regard to the Palestinian people. None the less, the basic principles of that resolution continued to be fundamental for any settlement.

China expressed the hope that the members of the European Community would work together with the third world countries and continue to make a positive contribution to promoting a Middle East settlement. It emphasized the right of all countries in the area to independence and existence and the right of free access to the Holy Places in Jerusalem.

The United States considered that the negotiations at Camp David were more than a start. There was a long way to go before a just and lasting peace was assured, but the United States believed a major step had been taken. What better alternative did those who opposed it suggest? The proposals circulated at the emergency special session (see following subsection) were one-sided and did not offer a realistic alternative. They were not founded on resolution 242(1967), the only agreed basis for a settlement in the Middle East. Further, they made no attempt to understand Israel's concern for its security. The United States reiterated that it was not satisfied with partial solutions; all aspects of the conflict must be resolved and the Palestinian people must be able to participate through negotiations in the determination of their future.

Lebanon stated that the Palestinian problem had the same context as the Lebanese problem and that peace in Palestine depended on peace in Lebanon and on Lebanese independence and sovereignty. There could be no peace in the Middle East at Lebanon's expense and as long as the Palestinian revolution pursued its quest for a land and a State.

For Egypt, the Camp David accords represented a means to an end and not an end in themselves. Egypt's endeavour could create a climate conducive to Palestinian self-determination. Egypt rejected all Israeli measures adopted in implementation of its colonial settlement policy and held Arab rights in Jerusalem to be incontestable. It had adopted an approach based on the following principles: the settlement had to be peaceful and comprehensive; it had to be based on the principles of justice and international law; it had to reflect the provisions of the United Nations Charter and to conform to United Nations resolutions, in particular Security Council resolution 242(1967); and it should not overlook recent diplomatic efforts.

Egypt's approval of the solution to the Palestine question was based on the following principles: Israel should withdraw to pre-June 1967 lines, including withdrawal from East Jerusalem and the Gaza Strip; its withdrawal should be complete, including military forces, the dismantling of Israeli settlements and removal of settlers; the security of the Palestinian people and of the people of Israel should be on an equal footing; and the Palestinian people should be enabled to exercise its inalienable and fundamental right to self-determination, without external interference, including the right to establish an independent State on the West Bank and Gaza.

Decisions of the General Assembly

On 29 July, the Assembly, by a roll-call vote requested by Iraq of 112 to 7, with 24 abstentions, adopted resolution ES-7/2 on the question of Palestine. The text was sponsored by 52 Members (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

The Assembly, by the preamble to this resolution, stated its conviction that the failure to solve the question of Palestine posed a grave threat to international peace and security, and noted with regret and concern that the Security Council had failed to take a decision, as a result of the negative vote of the United States, on the recommendations of the Committee on Palestinian Rights.

By the operative part, the Assembly reaffirmed: that a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East could not be established without the withdrawal of Israel from all the occupied territories, including Jerusalem, and without a just solution to the problem of Palestine on the basis of the attainment of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people; the inalienable right of the Palestinians to return to their homes and property in Palestine; their right to self-determination and to establish their own independent sovereign State; the right of PLO to participate on an equal footing in all efforts, deliberations and conferences on the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East; and the fundamental principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force. It called on Israel to start withdrawing from the occupied territories before 15 November.

The Assembly demanded that Israel comply fully with Security Council resolution 465(1980) of 1 March, which determined that all measures taken by Israel to change the character and status of the occupied territories had no legal validity (see p. 409), and with all United Nations resolutions relevant to the historic character of Jerusalem.

The Assembly expressed its opposition to the resettlement of the Palestinians outside their homeland and requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to implement the recommendations of the Committee on Palestinian Rights, as a basis for the solution to the question of Palestine. The Assembly then requested the Security Council, in the event of non-compliance by Israel, to adopt effective measures under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter.

Also on 29 July, a resolution on the work of the Committee on Palestinian Rights was adopted by a recorded vote of 112 to 5, with 26 abstentions. By this resolution—ES-7/3—which was sponsored by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Cape Verde, Cuba, Guyana, Iraq, Jamaica, Nicaragua, Qatar, the Sudan, the United Arab Emirates, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia and Zambia, the Assembly expressed great appreciation for the studies on the various aspects of the question of Palestine published by the Secretariat's Special Unit on Palestinian Rights under the Committee's guidance, and requested the Committee to study thoroughly the reasons for Israel's refusal to comply with relevant United Nations resolutions and to report to the Assembly at its regular 1980 session, which was to convene in September.

In explanation of vote on the resolutions, Luxembourg stated that the European Community members did not wish to prejudge the contacts they would be making in the near future, and had abstained. Japan emphasized that its abstentions in no way contradicted the principles it believed were essential for a just and lasting solution to the Middle East problem. Haiti, which also abstained, thought the recommendations calling for Israel's unconditional withdrawal would take the parties farther away from peaceful negotiations.

Bolivia, which voted in favour of resolution ES-7/2, expressed some reservations concerning the provisions calling for Israeli withdrawal. Trinidad and Tobago, though voting in favour, saw a certain imbalance in the text. Albania voted in favour in spite of its reservations with regard to some of the resolutions referred to in the text. Singapore, Thailand and Uruguay supported the resolution on the understanding that Israel's right to existence was recognized as irreversible.

By a letter of 22 July, Viet Nam forwarded to the Secretary-General a message of the same date from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, asking that the Credentials Committee reject the credentials submitted by Democratic Kampuchea. Democratic Kampuchea objected, by a letter of 23 July. The Credentials Committee, on 25 July, approved without vote a proposal of its Chairman to accept the credentials of all representatives. It set forth in its report the reservations expressed by some Members concerning the credentials of the delegation of Democratic Kampuchea (USSR) as well as those relating to the credentials of the delegations of Afghanistan (China, Pakistan, United States) and Chile (USSR).

On the Chairman's proposal, the Committee also approved, without vote on 25 July, a draft resolution by which the Assembly would approve the Committee's report. The Assembly adopted this text on 29 July, also without vote, as resolution ES-7/I.

Speaking after adoption of the resolution, the Ukrainian SSR, on behalf also of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland and the USSR, said they believed that the sole legitimate Government in Kampuchea was that of the People's Revolutionary Council of the People's Republic of Kampuchea—a view shared by the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam. Democratic Kampuchea said it objected to the presence of Viet Nam in the United Nations and all related bodies.

Report of the Committee on Palestinian Rights

In its 1980 report to the General Assembly, submitted on 22 September, the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People reviewed its activities during the year. It noted that the Assembly had in November 1979<sup>38</sup> again urged the Security Council to take a decision as soon as possible on the Committee's 1976 recommendations designed to enable the Palestinian people to exercise its inalienable rights.<sup>39</sup> Since the Council had not taken action on those recommendations by 31 March 1980, the deadline set by the Assembly in 1979, the Committee's Acting Chairman had initiated consultations with the Council President to urge early action by the Council. In response, the Council had considered the question of Palestine in March and April (see p. 377), when a resolution presented to the Council was not adopted because of the negative vote of a permanent member. The Committee had therefore recommended that the question of Palestine should be discussed by the Assembly at an emergency special session (see preceding section).

The Committee noted that the Assembly, by resolution ES-712 adopted at the emergency special session, had reaffirmed the principles that had guided the Committee in formulating its recommendations, which concerned, among other things: the establishment by the Security Council of a timetable for Israeli withdrawal; measures to be taken by the United Nations during and after the withdrawal, including the possibility of setting up temporary peace-keeping forces; measures to facilitate the return of displaced Palestinians to their homes; and action to be taken by the Council on the question of Israeli settlements. The Committee once more urged the Council to take action on those recommendations and drew the Assembly's attention to its opinion that the Camp David accords, to the extent that they did not take into consideration the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and had been negotiated without PLO participation, contravened Assembly resolutions of 7 December 1978<sup>40</sup> and 29 November 1979.<sup>41</sup>

The report also reviewed relevant action taken by other organizations and the Committee's representation at international meetings. It noted that two seminars on Palestinian rights had been organized by the Special Unit on Palestinian Rights, the first at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, from 14 to 18 July, and the second at Vienna, Austria, from 25 to 29 August.

International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People (29 November)

The Committee on Palestinian Rights reported to the General Assembly that the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People was commemorated in 1980 on 28 November, as the scheduled date of 29 November fell on a Saturday. The Committee had held two special meetings at United Nations Headquarters, New York, during which more than 60 statements and messages were heard. Statements were made by the Chairman of the Committee, the Secretary-General, the President of the Security Council, a PLO representative, the President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, the Chairmen of the Special Committee against Apartheid, of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories and of the regional groups of Member States at the United Nations, and others. Messages were read from the Chairman of the Non-Aligned Movement and heads of State or Government or Foreign Ministers of more than 40 countries. The Day of Solidarity was also observed at Geneva. The speakers at that meeting included the Chairmen of the Arab group of United Nations Member States and of the Islamic Conference, and the Mayor of Nablus.

Further consideration by the General Assembly

The General Assembly again considered the question of Palestine during its regular 1980 session at nine plenary meetings held between 1 and 15 December. On 15 December, it adopted five resolutions—35/169 A-E—on the question. It thereby reaffirmed the principles on which a just and lasting Middle East peace must be based, endorsed the recommendations of the Palestinian Rights Committee, demanded Israel's compliance with its resolutions, expressed opposition to partial agreements, decided not to recognize an Israeli "Basic Law" proclaiming a change in the character and status of Jerusalem and requested the Committee and the Special Unit on Palestinian Rights to continue their work.

Reports of the Secretary-General

In pursuance of Assembly resolution ES-7/2, adopted on 29 July 1980 during the seventh emergency special session (see p. 385), the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly at its 1980 regular session on the implementation of that resolution.

He had requested Israel on 30 July to inform him of the measures taken or envisaged to implement resolution ES-7/2. On 4 November, Israel had replied that Security Council resolution 242(1967) was the only agreed basis for a negotiated settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict. In this connexion, it added, its Minister for Foreign Affairs had stated during the general debate of the current session that the Camp David framework—which was based on resolution 242(1967)—was the only approach possible. In accordance with that framework, negotiations had been taking place for the attainment of full autonomy for the Palestinian Arab inhabitants of Judaea, Samaria and Gaza.

The Secretary-General stated that, in paragraph 13 of resolution ES-7/2, the Assembly had requested the Council, in the event of non-compliance by Israel, to adopt effective measures under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter. By a note of 5 August, the Secretary-General had brought this to the attention of the Council.

The Secretary-General said that in pursuance of other provisions of resolution ES-7/2 he had, in consultation with the Bureau of the Committee on Palestinian Rights, given careful consideration as to what measures he could take towards the implementation of the Committee's recommendations. He noted that, in the event of the Security Council's establishing a timetable for Israel's complete withdrawal from areas occupied in 1967, contingency plans for the setting up of temporary peace-keeping forces could be presented to the Council without delay. With regard to the return of displaced Palestinians, the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) had reiterated that, given the authority, funds and co-operation of the Governments concerned, UNRWA would be capable of providing assistance promptly, efficiently and economically. With respect to other measures referred to in the recommendations of the Committee, the Secretary-General stated that they could be taken only after Israel's withdrawal.

In another report to the Assembly, dated 24 October, the Secretary-General reviewed all aspects of the Middle East situation, including that of Palestinian rights. He described, in that connexion, the decisions of the 1979 Assembly session, the March/April 1980 meetings of the Security Council and the decisions of the Assembly's seventh emergency special session, and referred to communications on the subject received during the year.

General Assembly discussion

The Chairman of the Palestinian Rights Committee, addressing the General Assembly on 1 December, recalled that at its July session the Assembly, by resolution ES-7/2, had called on Israel to begin by 15 November 1980 to withdraw from the Arab and Palestinian territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem. Once again, he said, Israel was refusing to comply and was hiding behind the framework of the Camp David agreement. If Israel refused to heed the voice of reason, he added, the Assembly must resolve to apply the sanctions provided for in the United Nations Charter, in the event that the Security Council failed to do so.

The Committee's Rapporteur, formally introducing the Committee's report, emphasized that a start in implementing the recommended phased approach through the Council, where all the interested parties could be involved, should be delayed no longer.

The observer of PLO called for the imposition of sanctions on Israel in view of its persistent non-compliance with relevant United Nations resolutions, in particular resolution ES-7/2 which, among other things, had called for Israel to begin to withdraw from occupied territory by 15 November.

Luxembourg, on behalf of the member States of the European Community, reiterated the view that a just solution to the Palestinian question was an essential element of a global settlement in the Middle East. The nine States were opposed to Israeli settlements in occupied territories, as well as to recent Israeli laws aimed at changing the status of Jerusalem.

Egypt stated that the Camp David agreements represented an important step towards the implementation of Security Council resolution 42(1967) and constituted a corner-stone for a comprehensive settlement of the Middle East problem. They made it possible for the Palestinian people to exercise autonomy for a determined period, preparing the way for them to exercise their right to self-determination, and making it possible for contacts to exist between the Palestinian people and Israel in a framework of peaceful coexistence, co-operation and mutual respect.

The representative of Israel said the question of the Palestinian Arabs formed one of the many complex elements of the Arab-Israeli conflict as a whole. To discuss it in isolation and disregard interrelated aspects could only imperil progress. He reiterated Israel's view that Jordan was the Palestinian Arab State where the Palestinian Arabs had achieved their self-determination. The Arab States, he added, had never given up their final objective of liquidating Israel. Certain Arab States had put PLO in charge of an attempt to transform Judaea, Samaria and the Gaza District into platforms for terror, sabotage and subversion. Israel would not offer PLO a free hand in those territories. He also reiterated Israel's view that the programme of autonomy proposed for the Palestinian Arab inhabitants of those areas, as accepted in principle in the Camp David accords, was the first practical proposal advanced to provide a dignified solution for their needs.

The USSR and other Eastern European States reiterated their opposition to the Camp David accords and to the separate Egyptian-Israeli treaty. They praised the work of the Palestinian Rights Committee and considered that the Assembly should once more reaffirm that the Palestinian problem was the core of the Middle East problem and should reaffirm the inalienable rights of the Arab people of Palestine, especially their rights to return to their country and their homes, to self-determination without foreign interference, to sovereignty and national independence and to establish their own independent State under PLO leadership. The Byelorussian SSR and others of this group of States called for the imposition of sanctions against Israel under Chapter VII of the Charter. Similar views were expressed by Afghanistan, Algeria, Cuba, Viet Nam and others.

China restated its support for the principles endorsed by the Assembly in connexion with the Palestine question and expressed appreciation for the work of the Committee. The struggle of the Palestinian and Arab people for the restoration of their national rights and recovery of their lost territories was closely linked with the resistance to super-power expansion and rivalry in the Middle East. Until that was discontinued and Israel desisted from aggression, it would be difficult for genuine peace and stability to prevail there.

Many other Members, including Bangladesh, Burundi, India, Malaysia, Mali, Turkey, Uganda and Yugoslavia, endorsed the recommendations of the Committee, which they believed to constitute a realistic basis for the solution of the Palestine question.

Reaffirmation of support for the rights of the Palestinians was voiced by the majority of speakers, Japan, Nigeria and Sierra Leone among them.

Also mentioned during the debate was opposition to the support given by the United States to Israel, which Albania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Kuwait, Somalia and many others considered a major obstacle to a peaceful solution of the Palestine problem.

Decisions of the General Assembly

On 15 December 1980, the General Assembly adopted five resolutions—35/169 A-E—on aspects of the question of Palestine.

By resolution 35/169 A, the Assembly expressed grave concern that no just solution to the Palestine problem had been achieved and that Security Council resolution 242(1967) did not provide for the future and the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people. It reaffirmed that a just and lasting peace in the Middle East could not be established without the attainment of their rights, including the right to return and the right to self-determination, national independence and sovereignty in Palestine.

The Assembly stressed that PLO was the representative of the Palestinian people and called for it to be invited to participate in all United Nations deliberations on the Middle East on an equal footing with other parties. It endorsed the recommendations of the Committee on Palestinian Rights, which were annexed to the resolution, strongly reaffirmed its repeated endorsement of those recommendations, and drew the attention of the Security Council to the need for urgent action thereon. It also reaffirmed the inalienable right of the Palestinians to return to their homes and property in Palestine, their rights in Palestine to self-determination, to national independence and sovereignty and to establish an independent State.

The Assembly demanded that Israel withdraw from all territories occupied since June 1967, including Jerusalem, and that it fully comply with Security Council resolution 465(1980) of 1 March (see p. 409), which determined that all measures to change the character and status of the occupied territories had no validity, as well as with all resolutions relevant to Jerusalem.

The Assembly expressed its opposition to all policies and plans aimed at the resettlement of Palestinians outside their homeland and condemned Israel for its non-compliance with all relevant United Nations resolutions. Finally, it requested the Security Council to convene to consider adopting effective measures under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter.

Operative paragraph 13, containing this final request, was adopted by a separate recorded vote of 94 to 19, with 34 abstentions. The text of the resolution as a whole was adopted by a recorded vote of 98 to 16, with 32 abstentions; it was sponsored by 31 Members (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). An amendment by Malta to the language of the first operative paragraph was accepted by the sponsors.

By resolution 35/169 B, the Assembly reaffirmed its rejection of those provisions of the Camp David accords which ignored, infringed, violated or denied the rights of the Palestinian people. It expressed strong opposition to all partial agreements and separate treaties which constituted a flagrant violation of that people's rights, Charter principles and resolutions adopted in various international forums on the Palestinian issue, as well as the principles of international law, and declared that all agreements and separate treaties had no validity in so far as they purported to determine the future of the Palestinian people and of the Palestinian territories occupied by Israel since 1967. The Assembly declared that no State had the right to undertake any actions, measures or negotiations that could affect the future of the Palestinian people, its inalienable rights and the occupied Palestinian territories without the participation of PLO on an equal footing.

Resolution 35/169 B, sponsored by 26 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), was adopted by a recorded vote of 86 to 22, with 40 abstentions.

By resolution 35/169 C, sponsored by 31 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) and adopted by a recorded vote of 120 to 3, with 23 abstentions, the Assembly expressed appreciation to the Committee on Palestinian Rights and requested it to keep the situation relating to the question of Palestine under review and to report and make suggestions to the Assembly or the Security Council. It authorized the Committee to continue to promote the implementation of its recommendations and requested the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine and other United Nations bodies associated with the question to co-operate fully with the Committee. It decided to circulate the Committee's report to all competent United Nations bodies and urged them to take action as appropriate.

By resolution 35/169 D, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to ensure that the Special Unit on Palestinian Rights continued to discharge its tasks and to keep under constant review the question of strengthening the Special Unit. It further requested him to ensure the continued co-operation of the Department of Public Information and other Secretariat units in enabling the Special Unit to perform its tasks, invited all Governments and organizations to co-operate with the Committee and the Unit, and noted with appreciation the action taken by Member States to observe annually on 29 November the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People and the issuance by them of special postage stamps for the occasion. Resolution 35/169 D, sponsored by 32 Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), was adopted by a recorded vote of 120 to 4, with 23 abstentions.

By the preamble to resolution 35/169 E, the Assembly reaffirmed all relevant United Nations decisions on the status of Jerusalem and that the acquisition of territory by force was inadmissible, and noted the specific status of Jerusalem and the need for protection of the Holy Places in the city. It expressed deep concern over the enactment in the Israeli Knesset of a "basic law" proclaiming a change in the character and status of the Holy City.

By the operative section, the Assembly censured in the strongest terms the enactment by Israel of the "Basic Law" on Jerusalem, affirmed that the enactment constituted a violation of international law and determined that all legislative and administrative measures taken by Israel to alter the character and status of Jerusalem were null and void and a serious obstruction to peace in the Middle East. The Assembly decided not to recognize the "Basic Law" and such other actions by Israel that sought to alter the character and status of Jerusalem, called on all States, specialized agencies and other international organizations to comply with this resolution and urged them not to conduct any business not in conformity with it.

Resolution 35/169 E, sponsored by 32 Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), was adopted by a recorded vote of 143 to 1, with 4 abstentions.

A number of Members spoke in explanation of vote. In connexion with resolution 35/169 A, the following States expressed reservations at what they termed the negative reference to Security Council resolution 242(1967) which they deemed to be the only viable basis for a just and comprehensive Middle East peace: Argentina, Bolivia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Egypt, Greece, Haiti, Lesotho, Norway, Panama, Peru, Singapore, Sweden, Thailand, Uruguay, Zaire.

Reservations concerning resolution 35/169 B were based by a number of Members on their view that partial agreements should not be rejected and/or that States had a right to conclude treaties. Among those subscribing to these views were Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Costa Rica, Greece, Haiti, Peru and Togo.

France stated that it was opposed to the provision of resolution 35/169 A requesting the Security Council to convene in order to consider the Palestine question and adopt measures under Chapter VII of the Charter, as the Assembly was thereby attempting to guide the work of the Council.

Australia had voted against resolutions 35/169 A-D because it considered them incompatible with its fundamental position; among other things, the security interest of Israel was not taken into account. The United States also voted against those resolutions. It considered resolution 35/169 A to be completely one-sided, making no reference to provisions of Council resolution 242(1967) which affirmed the right of every State in the area to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries. The United States opposed the activities of the Palestinian Rights Committee and the Special Unit on Palestinian Rights. Further, it had abstained on resolution 35/169 E in consistency with its previous position; nevertheless, it opposed the action of Israel concerning Jerusalem.

Canada said that in its view resolutions 35/169 A and B prejudged negotiations, would impose a settlement not agreed to by the parties concerned and ran counter to the provisions of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973). It had therefore voted against them. It had also voted against resolution 35/169 D as it did not agree with the work programme for the Special Unit set out therein.

Assistance to the Palestinian people

As requested by the General Assembly on 14 December 1979,<sup>42</sup> the Secretary-General on 29 May 1980 submitted to the Economic and Social Council a report on assistance given to the Palestinian people by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), in consultation with other organizations of the United Nations system. The report contained information received from those organizations on action they had taken, in co-ordination with the Economic Commission for Western Asia, to identify the social and economic needs of the Palestinian people and establish projects to that end. The organizations had also been asked by the Council to consult with PLO on projects to improve socio-economic conditions.

On 23 July, the Council, adopting decision 1980/160 without vote, took note of the report and transmitted it to the Assembly. The Council acted on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, which had approved the text without vote on 15 July as orally proposed by its Chairman.

Other action taken during 1980 included a report to the UNDP Governing Council in June by the UNDP Administrator on steps taken to implement the Governing Council's 1979 decision to allocate $3.5 million for projects to aid the Palestinian people. He described his consultations with all interested parties and the resultant agreement for more precise identification and formulation of 11 of 18 project proposals.

In April 1980, the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) requested the UNEP Executive Director to ensure the implementation of the Assembly's 1979 request for assistance to the Palestinian people<sup>43</sup> within UNEP's sphere of responsibility. Similarly, the Commission on Human Settlements in May requested the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) to make every effort to ensure implementation of the Assembly request within the responsibility and competence of the Centre.

Later in the year, on 5 December, the Assembly adopted, by 125 votes to 2, with 21 abstentions, resolution 35/111, by which it urged agencies, organizations, organs and programmes of the United Nations system to take steps to implement the Economic and Social Council's resolutions of 1976<sup>44</sup> and 1977<sup>45</sup> on assistance to the Palestinian people, and requested that such assistance in the West Bank and Gaza be rendered through United Nations agencies and organs in co-operation and consultation with the local Palestinian organizations and in the Arab host countries through those agencies in consultation with the parties concerned.

On 14 October, the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee had approved the text, sponsored by 36 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), by a recorded vote of 106 to 2, with 21 abstentions.

Luxembourg said that the members of the European Community had abstained because United Nations organs were asked to take steps to implement Council resolutions on which those members had abstained. However, that did not affect their support of assistance to the Palestinian people.

The United States said it supported the assistance programme adopted by the UNDP Governing Council but had voted against the resolution because of its reference to resolutions which the United States had opposed.

relating to the search for a peaceful settlement in the Middle East.

On 14 November, by resolution 35/35 A on self-determination, the Assembly condemned Israel's expansionist activities in the Middle East, as well as the bombing of civilian Arab and Palestinian populations, and urged all States, agencies and organizations within and outside the United Nations system to support the Palestinian people through its representative, PLO, in its struggle for self-determination (see p. 837).

By resolution 35/147 of 12 December, the Assembly urged practical and urgent steps to

On the same day, by resolution 35/157, the Assembly took note of a progress report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Group of Experts to Prepare a Study on Israeli Nuclear Armament and requested him to pursue his efforts in this regard and to submit a report in 1981 (see p. 43).

Having considered the question of Palestine at an emergency special session,

Convinced that the failure to solve this question poses a grave threat to international peace and security,

Noting with regret and concern that the Security Council, at its 2220th meeting on 30 April 1980, failed to take a decision, as a result of the negative vote of the United States of America, on the recommendations of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolutions 31/20 of 24 November 1976, 32/40 A of 2 December 1977, 33/28 A of 7 December 1976 and 34/65 A of 29 November 1979,

Having considered the letter dated 1 July 1980 from the Permanent Representative of Senegal to the United Nations, Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People,

The General Assembly,

Recalling and reaffirming its resolutions 181 (II) of 29 November 1947, 194(III) of 11 December 1948, 3236 (XXIX) of 22 November 1974, 3375(XXX) and 3376(XXX) of 10 November 1975, 31/20 of 24 November 1976, 32/40 A and B of 2 December 1977, 33/28 A to C of 7 December 1978, 34/65 A to D of 29 November and 12 December 1979 and ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980.

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People,

Having heard the statement of the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people,

1. Expresses its grave concern that no just solution to the problem of Palestine has been achieved and that this problem therefore continues to aggravate the Middle East conflict, of which it is the core, and to endanger international peace and security, and that Security Council resolution 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 does not provide for the future and for the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, the attainment of which is a conditio sine qua non for a just solution of the question of Palestine;

2. Reaffirms that a just and lasting peace in the Middle East cannot be established without the achievement, inter alia, of a just solution of the problem of Palestine on the basis of the attainment of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, including the right of return and the right to self-determination, national independence and sovereignty in Palestine, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law;

3. Stresses the basic principle that the future of the Palestinian people cannot be discussed in their absence and, therefore, calls once more for the invitation of the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people, to participate, on the basis of General Assembly resolution 3237(XXIX) of 22 November 1974, in all efforts, deliberations and conferences on the Middle East which are held under the auspices of the United Nations, on an equal footing with other parties;

4. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People contained in paragraphs 45 to 48 of its report and draws the attention of the Security Council to the need for urgent action thereon;

5. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the Palestinians to return to their homes and property in Palestine, from which they have been displaced and uprooted, and calls for their return;

6. Reaffirms *a/s*o the inalienable rights in Palestine of the Palestinian people, including:

(a) The right to self-determination without external interference, and to national independence and sovereignty;

(b) The right to establish its own independent sovereign State;

7. Strongly reaffirms its repeated endorsement of the recommendations of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, as contained in paragraphs 59 to 72 of its report to the thirty-first session, and as reproduced in the annex to the present resolution;

8. Demands the complete and unconditional withdrawal by Israel from all the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since June 1967, including Jerusalem, in conformity with the fundamental principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force;

9. Demands that Israel should fully comply with the provisions, in particular, of Security Council resolution 465(1980) adopted unanimously on 1 March 1980;

10. Further demands that Israel should fully comply with all the resolutions of the United Nations relevant to the historic character of the Holy City of Jerusalem, in particular Security Council resolutions 476(1980) of 30 June 1980 and 478(1980) of 20 August 1980, and rejects the declaration of Israel that Jerusalem is its capital;

11. Expresses its opposition to all policies and plans aimed at the resettlement of the Palestinians outside their homeland;

12. Condemns Israel for its non-compliance with the provisions of General Assembly resolution ES-7/2 and Security Council resolutions 465(1980) and 478(1980) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

13. Requests the Security Council to convene in order to consider the situation and the adoption of effective measures under Chapter VII of the Charter;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session the item entitled "Question of Palestine."

ANNEX

Recommendations of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, endorsed by the General Assembly at its thirty-first session

I. Basic considerations and guidelines

59. The question of Palestine is at the heart of the Middle East problem, and, consequently, the Committee stressed its belief that no solution in the Middle East can be envisaged which does not fully take into account the legitimate aspirations of the Palestinian people.

60. The legitimate and inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to return to their homes and property and to achieve self-determination, national independence and sovereignty are endorsed by the Committee in the conviction that the full implementation of these rights will contribute decisively to a comprehensive and final settlement of the Middle East crisis.

61. The participation of the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people, on an equal footing with other parties, on the basis of General Assembly resolutions 3236(XXIX) and 3375(XXX) is indispensable in all efforts, deliberations and conferences on the Middle East which are held under the auspices of the United Nations.

62. The Committee recalls the fundamental principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force and stresses the consequent obligation for complete and speedy evacuation of any territory so occupied.

63. The Committee considers that it is the duty and the responsibility of all concerned to enable the Palestinians to exercise their inalienable rights.

64. The Committee recommends an expanded and more influential role by the United Nations and its organs in promoting a just solution to the question of Palestine and in the implementation of such a solution. The Security Council, in particular, should take appropriate action to facilitate the exercise by the Palestinians of their right to return to their homes, lands and property. The Committee, furthermore, urges the Security Council to promote action towards a just solution, taking into account all the powers conferred on it by the Charter of the United Nations.

65. It is with this perspective in view and on the basis of the numerous resolutions of the United Nations, after due consideration of all the facts, proposals and suggestions advanced in the course of its deliberations, that the Committee submits its recommendations on the modalities for the implementation of the exercise of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people.

II. Right of return

66. The natural and inalienable right of Palestinians to return to their homes is recognized by resolution 194(III), which the General Assembly has reaffirmed almost every year since its adoption. This right was also unanimously recognized by the Security Council in its resolution 237(1967); the time for the urgent implementation of these resolutions is long overdue.

67. Without prejudice to the right of all Palestinians to return to their homes, lands and property, the Committee considers that the programme of implementation of the ~~SXerCISe~~ of this right may be carried out in two phases.

Phase one

68. The first phase involves the return to their homes of the Palestinians displaced as a result of the war of June 1967. The Committee recommends that:

(a) The Security Council should request the immediate implementation of its resolution 237(1967) and that such implementation should not be related to any other condition;

(b) The resources of the International Committee of the Red Cross and/or of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, suitably financed and mandated, may be employed to assist in the solution of any logistical problems involved in the resettlement of those returning to their homes. These agencies could also assist, in co-operation with the host countries and the Palestine Liberation Organization, in the identification of the displaced Palestinians.

Phase two

69. The second phase deals with the return to their homes of the Palestinians displaced between 1948 and 1967. The Committee recommends that:

(a) While the first phase is being implemented, the United Nations in co-operation with the States directly involved, and the Palestine Liberation Organization as the Interim representative of the Palestinian entity, should proceed to make the necessary arrangements to enable Palestinians displaced between 1948 and 1967 to exercise their right to return to their homes and property, in accordance with the relevant United Nations resolutions, particularly General Assembly resolution 194(III);

(b) Palestinians not choosing to return to their homes should be paid just and equitable compensation as provided for in resolution 194(III).

III. Right to self-determination, national independence and sovereignty

70. The Palestinian people has the inherent right to self-determination, national independence and sovereignty in Palestine. The Committee considers that the evacuation of the territories occupied by force and in violation of the principles of the Charter and relevant resolutions of the United Nations is a conditio sine qua non for the exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable rights in Palestine. The Committee considers, furthermore, that upon the return of the Palestinians to their homes and property and with the establishment of an independent Palestinian entity, the Palestinian people will be able to exercise its rights to self-determination and to decide its form of government without external interference.

71. The Committee also feels that the United Nations has a historical duty and responsibility to render all assistance necessary to promote the economic development and prosperity of the Palestinian entity.

72. To these ends, the Committee recommends that:

(a) A timetable should be established by the Security Council for the complete withdrawal by Israeli occupation forces from those areas occupied in 1967; such withdrawal should be completed no later than 1 June 1977;

(b) The Security Council may need to provide temporary peace-keeping forces in order to facilitate the process of withdrawal;

(c) Israel should be requested by the Security Council to desist from the establishment of new settlements and to withdraw during this period from settlements established since 1967 in the occupied territories; Arab property and all essential services in these areas should be maintained intact;

(d) Israel should also be requested to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and to declare, pending its speedy withdrawal from these territories, its recognition of the applicability of that Convention;

(e) The evacuated territories, with all property and services intact, should be taken over by the United Nations, which, with the co-operation of the League of Arab States, will subsequently hand over these evacuated areas to the Palestine Liberation Organization as the representative of the Palestinian people;

(f) The United Nations should, if necessary, assist in establishing communications between Gaza and the West Bank;

(g) As soon as the independent Palestinian entity has been established, the United Nations, in co-operation with the States directly involved and the Palestinian entity, should, taking into account General Assembly resolution 3375(XXX), make further arrangements for the full implementation of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, the resolution of outstanding problems and the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the region, in accordance with all relevant United Nations resolutions;

(h) The United Nations should provide the economic and technical assistance necessary for the consolidation of the Palestinian entity.

Situation in the occupied territories

During 1980, the question of the violation of human rights in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of hostilities in the Middle East was again considered by the Commission on Human Rights, the General Assembly and its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories. In addition, the Security Council considered the situation resulting from Israel's adoption of a "basic law" on Jerusalem and the proclamation of that city as the capital of Israel and, at a series of meetings, specific violations of human rights in the occupied territories. The occupied territories consisted of the Golan Heights, the West Bank of Jordan (including East Jerusalem), the Gaza Strip and the Sinai peninsula. The areas of Egyptian territory under Israeli military occupancy were modified in accordance with an Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty which came into force on 25 April 1979.<sup>46</sup>

Many communications on this subject were addressed during the year to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council.

Decisions of the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission

The Commission on Human Rights, at its February/March 1980 session, and its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, at its August/September session, adopted several resolutions on the question of the violation of human rights in the territories occupied as a result of hostilities in the Middle East (for details, see p. 819).

By the first of these, adopted on 13 February, the Commission demanded that Israel desist from its annexation and settlement policies and cease all acts of torture and ill-treatment of Arab detainees and prisoners.

By the second resolution, adopted on the same day, the Commission called on Israel to abide by and respect the obligations of the Charter of the United Nations and of international law, in particular the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (the fourth Geneva Convention of 12 August 1949).

On 14 February, the Commission affirmed the rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination, to the establishment of an independent State and to their return to their homes.

On 11 September, the Sub-Commission requested its Chairman to appoint three of its members to visit Israeli prisons and detention camps and to report on the conditions of Palestinian prisoners and detainees.

The Sub-Commission also condemned Israel's violations of the Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other United Nations resolutions, and called on Israel to release all Palestinian political detainees or prisoners and to ameliorate the conditions of all detainees and prisoners held in Israeli prisons, with a view to meeting international standards.

Further, the Sub-Commission urged Israel to withdraw from all occupied territories, including the Holy City of Jerusalem, and deeply deplored the reported violations of human rights in those territories.

Status of Jerusalem

In 1980, Israel adopted several administrative measures concerning the status of Jerusalem, which were the subject of communications and reports. Two Security Council resolutions were adopted on the Holy City. Also, the General Assembly, at meetings on the question of Palestine, concerned itself with the status of Jerusalem and adopted a resolution by which it decided not to recognize actions of Israel that sought to alter the character and status of Jerusalem.

Communications (February-24 June)

In a letter of 5 February 1980, Jordan referred to press reports in Jerusalem of recurring acts of vandalism and desecration of Christian institutions in Jerusalem and to an appeal by local Christian groups for international guarantees for the city's Holy Places. On 12 February, Israel replied that it would not tolerate vandalism and charged that Jordan had repeatedly attempted to play upon religious sentiments in its campaign against Israel.

By a letter dated 12 March, the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People expressed the Committee's concern about implications of a statement by the President of the United States which concerned Security Council resolution 465(1980) of 1 March (see p. 409) and the indivisible status of Jerusalem. In the Committee's opinion, the President's statement could be interpreted as supporting Israel's insistence that Jerusalem was indivisible as long as it remained under Israel's domination.

On 16 May, Egypt transmitted a statement of 15 May by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs stating that the preparation by Israel of a basic State law regarding Jerusalem as the capital of Israel contravened the Camp David framework and made it difficult to resume negotiations for the full autonomy of the Palestinian people.

By a letter of 24 June, Bahrain, on behalf of the Arab group of States at the United Nations, condemned the Israeli Prime Minister's decision to move part of the cabinet to East Jerusalem and called on the Security Council to prevent implementation of this decision. Also on 24 June, Tunisia transmitted a statement from the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States expressing the expectation that the Council, which was currently seized of the issue (see following subsection), would adopt a resolution including measures to terminate Israel's violations in Jerusalem.

Consideration by the Security Council (24-30 June)

In response to a request of 28 May by Pakistan, in its capacity as Chairman of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the Security Council considered the situation in Jerusalem at eight meetings between 24 and 30 June.

Algeria, Bahrain, Chad, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Egypt, Gabon, the Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, Oman, Pakistan, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Somalia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, Uganda, the United Arab Emirates, the United Republic of Cameroon, the Upper Volta, Yemen and Yugoslavia were invited, at their request, to participate in the deliberations without the right to vote.

The Council extended invitations, under rule 39 of its provisional rules of procedure,<sup>47</sup> to the Rapporteur of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, at his request, and the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States, as requested by Tunisia in a letter of 20 June.

The President drew attention to another letter of 20 June from Tunisia requesting that the Palestine Liberation Organization (P.L.O.) be invited to participate in the Council's deliberations, in accordance with past practice. He added that the proposal was not made pursuant to rule 37<sup>48</sup> or rule 39 of the provisional rules of procedure, but that, if approved, the invitation would confer on P.L.O. the same rights as those conferred on Member States when invited to participate pursuant to rule 37.

The representative of the United States requested that the proposed invitation be put to the vote, stating that he had no objections to the participation of P.L.O. under rule 39. The proposal was approved by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (France, Norway, Portugal, United Kingdom).

Opening the debate, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Pakistan said the recent bill declaring Jerusalem as Israel's capital had added a new dimension to Israeli aggression. The Islamic Conference had called on the Council to examine the dangerous consequences of the Israeli measure, to declare its annulment and, in case of Israel's defiance, to impose sanctions stipulated in Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter.<sup>49</sup> The Islamic Conference had reaffirmed its commitment to sever relations with any country that accepted Israel's move to annex Jerusalem and recognized it as Israel's capital. Throughout the 13 centuries of Moslem rule over Palestine, he said, Islamic sovereignty over Jerusalem was exercised as a sacred trust. Its unique spiritual heritage, which spanned a period of more than 3,000 years, was consistently nurtured and preserved under Islamic administration. That sacred heritage was being systematically obliterated by the obsessive Zionist scheme to Judaize that city and other cities of Palestine such as Hebron and Nazareth.

Morocco, speaking on behalf of the Jerusalem Committee of the Islamic Conference, reviewed the Committee's efforts, which had been met with arrogance and a spirit of conquest on the part of Israel. Morocco expressed the hope that the Council would spare no effort to see that the Holy City regained peace, that the Palestinian people could return to their homeland and establish a respected national State, and that the whole Middle East could resume its role to consolidate international peaceful co-operation.

China fully supported the initiative of the Islamic Conference and regarded Israeli actions to change the status and character of Jerusalem as illegal and null and void. The Council must strongly condemn Israel for its unlawful acts concerning Jerusalem and declare in explicit terms that the measures taken by Israel were illegal and null and void and should be rescinded. The Council should also demand Israel's withdrawal from all the occupied territories, including Jerusalem. Should the Israeli authorities continue to defy the relevant United Nations resolutions, the Council should consider the adoption of more effective measures against Israel.

The USSR charged that the support of the United States had encouraged Israel in its policy of expansion and aggression. As a result of Camp David, the Middle East was further than ever from genuine peace and a long-term political settlement. The Council must call a halt to the intentions of Israel; the decisiveness with which the Council reacted to Israel's defiance would largely determine the success in achieving a just and comprehensive settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

The German Democratic Republic said that the issue before the Council was a new act of aggression; the idea of creating a "Greater Jerusalem" ran counter to international peace and security and was a further attempt to implement a colonialist policy, which had been intensified since Camp David. Should Israel fail to comply with the demands of the Council, the German Democratic Republic believed it would be justifiable to apply Chapter VII of the Charter.

Mexico favoured a forceful resolution so that the Council might implement the legal measures necessary to halt the flouting of the will of the international community. It called for an end to the illegal occupation, but thought that a long-term solution required a new approach leading to coexistence. If unification was to take place, it had to be done with respect to all sovereignties.

A special statute for Jerusalem, under international guarantees, with free access to the places of worship, was favoured by Portugal, which also considered that any attempt to impose control of the Holy City by force would contain the seed of new violence. Israel, Portugal added, should avoid creating a situation that would block a negotiated settlement.

France said it could not concur in the plan to annex the Arab part of Jerusalem and make the city the capital of Israel, which went beyond the measures to integrate the Arab part of Jerusalem in a unified administrative entity. Jerusalem must not be allowed to become a prize to be fought over. France held that all legislative and other measures by Israel to integrate the part of Jerusalem occupied since 1967 were, like the creation and extension of the settlements, contrary to the rules of international law. France appealed to Israel not to commit irreparable acts that would only provoke violent reactions and compromise the chances of peace.

The United Kingdom said that East Jerusalem was part of the territories occupied in the war of 1967. It was subject to the principles emphasized in Council resolution 242(1967),<sup>50</sup> including the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by war. No unilateral action should or could change the status of Jerusalem. No such action should be allowed to prejudice the future of the city. That position had most recently been reaffirmed in the Venice declaration of the European Community members (see p. 371). The United Kingdom deplored the changes which Israel had made to the physical and demographic character of Jerusalem in the years since 1967 and Israel's failure to heed earlier Council resolutions on the subject.

Tunisia noted that the United Nations had constantly stated that Israel must evacuate the whole of the occupied territories, including Jerusalem. The international community had been unanimous in considering null and void any unilateral measures taken by occupation authorities with the aim of transforming a de facto situation into a de jure one. Because of Israel's persistence in violating the status of Jerusalem, the Council was duty-bound to have recourse to the sanctions provided for in the United Nations Charter.

Jamaica also emphasized that the annexation of East Jerusalem was a clear violation of international law, in particular the 1949 fourth Geneva Convention. All illegal measures which would have the effect of altering the character and status of Jerusalem should be rescinded, followed by Israel's complete withdrawal from East Jerusalem and other occupied territories.

The Niger and Zambia held that the future of Jerusalem could not be dissociated from that of the Palestinian people. Application of the sanctions provided for by the Charter seemed to be the only weapon capable of curbing Israel in its efforts at colonial reconquest.

The Philippines observed that the special status with international guarantees envisaged for Jerusalem by General Assembly resolution 181 A (II) of 1947 called for the establishment of the city as a corpus separatum under a special international regime to be administered by the United Nations.<sup>51</sup> Since 1967, all actions having the intent of changing that status had been declared invalid by the Assembly and the Council. Cuba, Jordan and Turkey also referred to an international regime for Jerusalem in the context of the United Nations.

Bangladesh noted that Israel had been systematically taking measures in pursuit of a policy totally incompatible with its obligations under the Charter and the fourth Geneva Convention. In the context of repeated violation of its resolutions, the Council was called upon to declare as null and void the actions taken by Israel. If Israel continued its policy of defiance, all efforts must be made to compel its compliance, as its policies posed the gravest danger to international peace and security.

Israel stated that Jerusalem had always been the capital of the Jewish people. It had always been a united city except for the period between 1948 and 1967, when it was artificially divided. Modern statistics showed an uninterrupted Jewish majority in the city. In accordance with a decree enacted on 27 June 1967, Israel was empowered to apply the law, jurisdiction and administration of the State to any part of Israel. On that basis, Jerusalem was the indivisible capital. There was no substance to the allegation that Israel was altering the existing situation in Jerusalem. Under the 1967 Law on Protection of Holy Places, unrestricted access to all the Holy Places was guaranteed to members of all faiths.

In Egypt's view, Israel's policy to alter the status of Jerusalem affected the peace process. Under such conditions, Egypt had suspended the peace talks.

In the view of several other States which addressed the Council, including Algeria, Mauritania, the Sudan and Yugoslavia, the problem of Israel could not be dissociated from other aspects of the Middle East crisis. Many others, including Iraq, Jordan, Malaysia, Senegal, Somalia and the United Arab Emirates, pointed out that the application of sanctions seemed to be the only weapon to compel Israel's compliance.

The representative of PLO said that Israel's determination to transfer its seat to East Jerusalem was an indication of its insistence upon usurping Jerusalem. Israel could not pursue its aggressive policy without the unlimited support of the United States. Jerusalem was the capital of the homeland of the Palestinian people and had been its symbol since their forefathers. The liberation of Jerusalem constituted a basic issue for all believers.

The President of the Council, speaking as the representative of Norway, noted that at the outset Israel had recognized the special status of Jerusalem. Its final status could only be settled through a comprehensive solution to the Middle East conflict. He observed that the overwhelming majority of the international community opposed all unilateral steps to alter the status of Jerusalem as a serious obstacle to a comprehensive, just and lasting peace.

The United States, explaining its abstention before the vote on the draft resolution before the Council (see below), said that the series of debates in recent months relating to the Middle East had undermined the one active negotiation currently in progress among Egypt, Israel and the United States, which was designed to provide full autonomy to the inhabitants of the West Bank and Gaza and to resolve the Palestinian problem in all its aspects while fully protecting the security of Israel. The United States considered that the resolution before the Council contained a number of deficiencies. It quoted selectively 'from resolution 242(1967), affirming the need for Israeli withdrawal without any reference to other central provisions of that resolution, namely Israel's right to secure and recognized boundaries. The draft resolution, however, contained much that was consistent with United States policy because it deplored unilateral acts to change the character of the city outside a negotiated settlement.

On 30 June, the Security Council adopted, by 14 votes to 0, with 1 abstention (United States), resolution 476(1980), sponsored by 39 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCE below).

By this resolution, the Council reaffirmed the necessity to end Israel's prolonged occupation of Arab territories, including Jerusalem. It strongly deplored Israel's refusal to comply with relevant United Nations resolutions and confirmed again that all legislative and administrative measures and actions which purported to alter the character and status of the Holy City of Jerusalem had no legal validity and constituted a flagrant violation of the fourth Geneva Convention as well as a serious obstruction to peace in the Middle East.

The Council reiterated that all measures which had altered the geographic, demographic and historical character and status of Jerusalem were null and void and must be rescinded. It urgently called on Israel to abide by its resolutions and to desist forthwith from persisting in the policy and measures affecting the character and status of Jerusalem, and reaffirmed its determination, in the event of Israel's non-compliance, to examine practical ways and means to secure full implementation of this resolution.

Communications (30 June-14 August)

By a note of 30 June, the President of the Security Council circulated a letter of the same date from the Permanent Observer Mission of the Holy See, which enclosed a text, published by the Osservatore Romano on 30 June, setting out the position of the Holy See with regard to Jerusalem and the Holy Places. The text stated that the Jerusalem question could not be reduced to mere free access for all to the Holy Places. The overall character of the Holy City as a sacred heritage shared by all three monotheistic religions was required to be guaranteed by appropriate measures and by a juridical safeguard, which called for a responsibility that would go well beyond the limits of the States of the region. The significance and value of Jerusalem were such as to surpass the interests of any single State or bilateral agreements.

By a letter of 1 July, Iraq informed the Council President that its co-sponsorship of resolution 476(1980) of 30 June (see preceding subsection) did not imply its recognition of Council resolution 242 (1967).

By a letter dated 1 August, the representative of Pakistan stated that, in total disregard of the international community and in flagrant violation of Council resolutions, Israel had enacted a law proclaiming Jerusalem as the capital of Israel. On behalf of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, he requested an immediate Council meeting.

In a letter of 4 August, the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People conveyed the Committee's grave concern at Israel's latest action to make Jerusalem its capital.

Afghanistan, on 14 August, Iraq and Romania, on 11 August, and Viet Nam, on 12 August, expressed their opposition to and condemnation of that action. The Iraqi letter transmitted the section relating to Jerusalem from an Iraqi-Saudi Arabian press communiqué, strongly rejecting what they described as the new act of aggression against the Arab and Islamic nation and expressing their agreement to sever relations with any State which condoned Israel's decision or retained its embassy in Jerusalem after that decision.

Consideration by the Security Council (20 August)

The Security Council met on 20 August, at Pakistan's request of 1 August, to discuss the situation in the Middle East, in particular developments in Jerusalem.

The President, with the consent of the Council, invited Algeria, Bahrain, Chad, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Egypt, the Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, Oman, Pakistan, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Somalia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, the United Arab Emirates, the Upper Volta and Yemen, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President drew attention to a proposal of 15 August by Tunisia to invite PLO to participate in the discussion, in accordance with the Council's usual practice. Following the procedure adopted in the past, the Council approved the proposal by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (France, Norway, Portugal, United Kingdom).

The President also drew attention to a draft resolution sponsored by 35 States (Algeria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Chad, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, Niger, Oman, Pakistan, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Somalia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, Upper Volta, Yemen) and to a second draft resolution prepared in the course of the Council's consultations.

By the operative part of the 35-power text, the Council would have: condemned Israel for its refusal to comply with Council resolution 476(1980) of 30 June on the status of Jerusalem; determined that measures taken by Israel, which had altered or purported to alter the character and status of Jerusalem, in particular the "Basic Law," were null and void; affirmed that the "Basic Law" was a violation of the fourth Geneva Convention and that it constituted a serious obstruction to Middle East peace; refused to recognize the "Basic Law;" and called on all States to abide by that decision, not to deal with Israel's institutions in Jerusalem and withdraw diplomatic representation from the Holy City. Finally, the Council would have called on United Nations Members to apply sanctions against Israel under Article 41 of the United Nations Charter,<sup>52</sup> including the interruption of economic and military relations, requested the Secretary-General to report on implementation by 15 November 1980 and remained seized of the matter.

The draft resolution prepared in the course of consultations was subsequently adopted by the Council and is summarized below.

Speaking on the 35-power resolution, the representative of Pakistan, the current Chairman of the Islamic Conference, said that the provocative action to proclaim Jerusalem the capital of Israel had evoked strong condemnation by the international community. The Council, he added, must act on the obligation it had assumed under the terms of its resolution 476(1980), calling on Israel to desist from the measures affecting Jerusalem. It must seek practical ways and means to secure the implementation of that resolution. These measures were laid down in Chapter VII of the Charter.<sup>53</sup> The member States of the Islamic Conference demanded the imposition of sanctions under Chapter VII to force Israel to terminate its annexation and occupation of the Palestinian and other Arab territories, including the Holy City. The Council must strongly condemn Israel for its refusal to comply with the Council's resolutions, and call on all States to refuse to recognize the so-called Basic Law and to withdraw their diplomatic representations in Jerusalem.

Tunisia stated that the deliberate and overt violation by Israel of international law and the fourth Geneva Convention could not be cloaked in the slightest appearance of legality. Forty years ago, when Europe, brutally buffeted by an act of unjustified annexation, had finally yielded to intimidation, believing that it was safeguarding peace, it had done nothing other than pave the way to its own misfortune and to what was soon to be the collapse of world order. In such extreme situations, a clear and firm reply was the only healthy attitude. In submitting the 35-power text, the sponsors hoped to make known their profound concern to reach meaningful decisions. However, they were not calling for an immediate vote on the text.

The representative of Israel charged that the United Nations system had been mobilized into an unremitting war against his country, particularly since the signing of the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty. With regard to Jerusalem, Israel's position remained as stated on 30 June before the Council, namely, that it had always been the capital of the Jewish people. The law adopted by the Knesset on 30 July merely reaffirmed that position and a situation that had prevailed for a long time.

Egypt considered the adoption of the bill on Jerusalem by the Knesset to be contrary to the spirit of the Camp David accords and the peace process. Therefore, it stated, it had no alternative but to delay the autonomy talks until that new obstacle had been removed.

The German Democratic Republic said those who had pushed the law on Jerusalem through Israel's parliament had obviously felt encouraged to take such aggressive action because their imperialistic patrons had decided to pursue a policy of confrontation. The German Democratic Republic had supported the 35-power draft resolution as submitted by the group of Islamic States, which had included coercive measures. In its opinion, the text prepared during consultations was the minimum that should be done in the situation.

The Secretary of State of the United States remarked that the succession of resolutions before the Council and the General Assembly's seventh emergency special session (see p. 382) had neither aided the Camp David process nor offered a single alternative with the slightest chance of success. Jerusalem's future, he said, could not be determined by unilateral actions or narrow resolutions, but must be addressed in the context of negotiations for a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East. The status of Jerusalem could not simply be declared, but had to be agreed to by the parties. The United States had encouraged all parties to refrain from unilateral actions to change the character or status of Jerusalem. In line with that position, the United States would not vote against the draft text prepared in the course of consultations. However, it could not vote for it because it failed to reaffirm resolution 242(1967), and the United States considered the provision calling for the withdrawal of diplomatic missions in Jerusalem as not binding. The United States would continue to resist any attempt, as contained in the 35-power text presented but not to be voted on, to impose sanctions against Israel.

The draft resolution prepared in the course of consultations was adopted by 14 votes to 0, with 1 abstention (United States) as resolution 478(1980). The Council thereby censured in the strongest terms the enactment of the "Basic Law" on Jerusalem as well as Israel's refusal to comply with the Council's relevant resolutions. The Council affirmed that the enactment of the "Basic Law" constituted a violation of international law and did not affect the continued application of the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949, and determined that all legislative and administrative measures taken to alter or purporting to alter the character and status of the Holy City were null and void and must be rescinded. The Council also decided not to recognize the "Basic Law" and such other actions that, as a result of this Law, sought to alter the status of Jerusalem. It called on all Members of the United Nations to accept that decision and on those with diplomatic missions in Jerusalem to withdraw them, and requested the Secretary-General to report on implementation of this resolution by 15 November.

The USSR commented that the adopted resolution contained positive features, but was far from adequate since it did not envisage steps commensurate with Israel's provocative actions. The USSR had been prepared to support the resolution initially proposed by the Islamic and other States, calling for sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter. Responsibility for the fact that such a decision had not emerged lay with the United States which had for years been giving Israel political, economic, financial and military assistance, encouraging it to continue its policy of expansion and aggression. The essence of United States Middle East policy had been revealed in its attempts to substitute for a genuine solution separate deals designed to perpetuate Israel's aggression. The main problems of the Middle East remained unsolved: the withdrawal of Israel; the rights of the Arab people of Palestine, including their right to self-determination and creation of their own State; and the guaranteed right of all States in the area to a secure existence and development.

The United Kingdom was of the view that Israel's rights in East Jerusalem did not extend beyond those of an occupying power, pending an agreed solution on the city's future. It considered the declaration of Jerusalem as the capital of Israel a highly provocative act. The United Kingdom, with its partners in the European Community, had a strong desire to see progress towards a comprehensive settlement, as demonstrated in the declaration they had adopted at Venice on 13 June (see p. 371).

France said it had warned Israel against taking a decision unacceptable to the international community. It reiterated its opinion that any unilateral measures concerning Jerusalem were illegal and contrary to international law.

Jordan hoped that the watered-down resolution adopted by the Council would serve as another signal that aggression and defiance tore to shreds the fabric on which the United Nations was founded.

The representative of PLO saw some positive aspects in the adopted resolution. However, in June the Council had reaffirmed its determination to examine practical ways to secure full implementation of its resolution 476(1980) in the event Israel did not comply. In the current case, it was not only non-compliance, but defiance.

Communications and report (22 August-December)

The Secretary-General submitted, on 11 November, a report in which he included a reply of 4 November from Israel to his request for comments on the implementation of Security Council resolution 478(1980) of 20 August. Israel reiterated its position regarding Jerusalem, as stated by its Minister for Foreign Affairs during the regular 1980 General Assembly session. The Minister had reaffirmed that, since 1967, Israel had assured free and unfettered observance in Jerusalem of the religious rights of members of all faiths. Throughout recorded history, he had stated, only the Jewish people had made Jerusalem its capital.

The Secretary-General stated that, before the adoption of that resolution, Chile, Ecuador and Venezuela had announced their decision to withdraw their diplomatic missions from Jerusalem. At the time of the resolution's adoption, 10 States-Bolivia, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, the Netherlands, Panama and Uruguay-maintained diplomatic missions there. Between 22 August and 9 September, those States had informed the Secretary-General that they had decided to withdraw their missions.

By a letter dated 4 September, Morocco transmitted the Final Declaration adopted at the close of an extraordinary session of the Jerusalem Committee of the Islamic Conference Casablanca - decision ca, 16-18 August). The Committee considered the decision to annex the Holy City the most serious development in Israel's escalating campaign against Arab and Islamic Palestine. By a further letter of 29 September, Morocco transmitted the final communique of a special session of the Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers on the question of Jerusalem (Fez, 18-20 September). The communique included a resolution adopted by the Conference which affirmed the commitment of the Islamic States to utilize all their political, economic and military resources to counter Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem.

By a letter dated 29 October, Jordan transmitted a statement issued on 16 October by an official spokesman condemning what it charged was an attempt to burn down the Church of the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem on 14 October. Holding Israel responsible for the act, the statement indicated that the incident was in implementation of Israel's policy to destroy both the Islamic and Christian Holy Places and to give Arab Jerusalem a Jewish character. On 4 November, Israel replied that the fire had resulted from the toppling of a devotional candle onto the wooden floor. In reference to that reply, Jordan, on 23 December, affirmed that, as seen by witnesses, arson was involved.

On 24 October, in pursuance of a General Assembly resolution of 6 December 1979,<sup>54</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report covering developments in the Middle East in all its aspects. In part of that report, he reviewed efforts undertaken by the United Nations concerning the situation in the occupied territories and the question of Jerusalem.

Other aspects of the situation in the occupied territories

Communications (January-February)

In a letter of 9 January to the Secretary-General, Jordan expressed concern over Israel's measures to demolish historical Islamic places and evacuate Arab inhabitants, due to extensive excavations inside the walls of the Old City of Jerusalem which had recently caused the collapse of an Islamic building. Those charges were denied by Israel in a letter dated 25 January, in which it stated there was no connexion between the collapse of an old house and archaeological excavations being conducted in other parts of the city.

Tunisia on 25 January transmitted a letter of 21 January from the Permanent Observer of PLO who protested Israel's decision to take control of the Palestinian-owned East Jerusalem Electric Company by 1 January 1981, adding that such a decision was an obvious attempt to cut Jerusalem off materially from the rest of the West Bank.

Jordan, by a letter of 30 January to the Secretary-General, alleged that Israeli soldiers, on 25 December 1979, had stormed a refugee camp near Bethlehem, imposed a curfew and kept the refugees waiting in a school yard for more than 10 hours, and detained 70 Arabs for investigation. Jordan requested the Secretary-General to draw the attention of the Israeli authorities to these acts and request them to refrain from such behaviour and abide strictly by the provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention.

Israel, in its reply of 12 February, rejected these allegations. According to Israel, a four-hour curfew was placed on the camp and 20 persons were detained for investigation following an attack with stones on a public bus and a local ambulance near the refugee camp.

The situation in the city of Hebron (Al-Khalil) in the West Bank was the subject of eight communications, including requests for a meeting of the Security Council.

In a letter dated 5 February, Israel charged PLO with waging indiscriminate terror against civilians in Israel, taking responsibility for injury to six persons in Rehovot on 3 February and the murder of a resident of Qiryat Arba on 31 January in the bazaar of Hebron.

On 11 and 14 February, Tunisia transmitted

letters of 7 and 11 February from the Permanent Observer of PLO charging, in the first, that on 31 January Israel had placed a curfew on the city, which lasted for seven days, during which the Palestinian inhabitants had been subjected to provocations by armed Jewish settlers accompanied by Israeli soldiers, and, in the second, that Israel's decision to allow its nationals to settle in the city underscored its intention to continue usurpation and occupation of Palestinian land and homes.

By a letter dated 14 February, Egypt expressed concern about Israel's decision to allow its nationals to settle in Al-Khalil, in violation of Security Council resolution 242(1967) and in conflict with the Camp David agreements.

On 20 February, the Acting Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People charged that the latest decision of Israel's cabinet to authorize settlements in the Arab city of Al-Khalil was another step towards strengthening Israel's annexation of the occupied territories, in violation of international law and United Nations resolutions.

By a letter of 22 February, Morocco transmitted a message from the Secretary-General of the Organization of the Islamic Conference drawing the attention of the Security Council to the continued harassment of the inhabitants of Hebron and the desecration of the Haram Al-Ibrahimi Mosque (Mosque of Hebron).

On 15 February, Morocco, on behalf of the members of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, requested a meeting of the Council to consider the situation created by the measures recently taken by Israel's occupation authorities in Al-Khalil.

On the same day, Jordan also requested a Council meeting, to present to it additional evidence of Israel's defiance of its resolutions and to examine the situation relating to settlements in the Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem.

Consideration by the Security Council (22 February- 1 March)

In response to the requests made by Jordan and Morocco on 15 February 1980, the Security Council considered the situation in the occupied Arab territories at five meetings held between 22 February and 1 March. The Council had before it a report submitted on 4 December 1979<sup>55</sup> by the three-member Security Council Commission Established under Resolution 446(1979)<sup>56</sup> to examine the situation relating to settlements in the Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem.

Afghanistan, Algeria, Cuba, Egypt, Indonesia,

Israel, Jordan, Kuwait, Morocco, Pakistan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President drew attention to a letter of 20 February from Tunisia requesting that PLO be invited to participate in the debate, in accordance with previous practice. He added that the proposal was not made pursuant to rule 37<sup>57</sup> or rule 39<sup>58</sup> of the provisional rules of procedure, but, if approved, the invitation would confer on PLO the same rights of participation as on a Member State when invited pursuant to rule 37.

The United States requested that the proposed invitation be put to a vote, stating that, while it had no objection to POL'S participation, it believed that such could be sustained only under rule 39. The proposal was approved by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (France, Norway, Portugal, United Kingdom).

The President, with the consent of the Council, also invited under rule 39, at his request, the Acting Chairman of the Committee on Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People. At Tunisia's request, contained in letters of 22 and 20 February, respectively, invitations under rule 39 were extended to the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States and to Fahd Qawasma, Mayor of Al-Khalil (Hebron).

At Tunisia's suggestion, the President requested the Secretary-General to bring the invitation to Mr. Qawasma to Israel's attention, so that he might be permitted to address the Council and thereafter to return to his post.

By a letter of 25 February, brought to the Council's attention by its President in a note of 26 February, Israel stated that it would not permit the Mayor to travel abroad, charging that his intended trip would lend support to Israel's enemies. During the Council's debate, almost all speakers were critical of Israel's decision. The President drew attention to a letter of 29 February from Tunisia, transmitting a message that the Mayor had intended to deliver before the Council.

Opening the debate, the representative of Portugal, as Chairman of the three-member Security Council Commission, said the Commission had endeavoured to establish contact with all the parties concerned but had again been confronted by Israel's refusal to co-operate. Noting Israel's refusal to heed the Council's appeal to cease establishing and planning settlements in the territories it had occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, the Commission again emphasized the gravity of Israel's relentless settlement policy. Its effects on the local Arab and Palestinian population and the modification it had effected in the territories, including those affecting natural resources, had contributed to a dangerous deterioration of a situation already charged with tension and were incompatible with the search for peace in the area.

The representative of Jordan reviewed details of the expansion of Israel's settlements in the occupied territories, referring to a master plan according to which the settlements policy was carried out. Israel, he said, had also seized five sixths of the water resources in the West Bank, which it illegally called Judaea and Samaria. Jordan had called for an urgent meeting of the Council to deliberate on the dangerous situation which had arisen in consequence of the brutal, punitive measures that Israel's forces and the colonizers had perpetrated against the inhabitants of Al-Khalil, including desecration of the Mosque. These deeds and the resort to collective punishment, Jordan said, were in violation of the fourth Geneva Convention. Jordan urged the Council to act on the Commission's recommendation that it adopt measures in Jordan's view punitive measures under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter<sup>59</sup> to prevail on Israel to stop establishing settlements and dismantle the existing ones.

The representative of Morocco, speaking as Chairman of the Islamic group of States at the United Nations, said that Israel's settlement policy was one pillar of its strategy to annex a large part of the occupied Arab territories, particularly the West Bank of Jordan; it was tantamount to a dangerous provocation of the Islamic community as a whole. Council members would fully appreciate the indignation felt daily by millions of Moslems at the attacks against their Holy Places and the continued Israeli occupation. That was why the Moslem world was appealing to the Council speedily to put an end to the grave situation and take effective steps to prevent Israel from continuing to violate the rules of international law. The Islamic world remained convinced that Israel's policy was an obstacle to any serious search for a just and lasting solution to the problem of the Middle East and, more particularly, the Palestinian problem. A solution to those problems was to be found in the withdrawal by Israel from all the occupied Arab territories and the recovery by the Palestinian people of its inalienable rights, including the right to establish its own national and sovereign State.

Israel said that whenever there was tangible progress in the ongoing peace process or whenever the negotiations between Egypt and Israel reached a significant stage, Jordan and its allies rushed to the Council in an attempt to extract from it support for their own diversionary and belligerent purposes. With regard to the question being debated by the Council, Israel had recently re-enunciated its position of principle that Jews had the right to live in any part of the land of Israel. That mere reiteration of a position of principle had been turned into an excuse for calling for an urgent meeting of the Council. The enemies of reconciliation had deliberately created incidents in Hebron and elsewhere to further their belligerent designs. Any discussion of the situation in Judaea, Samaria and the Gaza District, which did not take Israel's right to self-preservation and its legitimate concern for its security and defence into account, was meaningless. Similarly, any United Nations commission established without regard to the background of persistent Arab aggression against Israel was detached from reality.

The representative of China saw the crux of the Arab-Israeli conflict in Israel's occupation and the question of Palestine. It was imperative, he added, to do away with super-power intervention and sabotage, to oppose firmly Israel's policy of aggression and expansion, to recover the occupied Arab territories and to realize the national rights of the Palestinian people. The Council should uphold justice and adopt a resolution strongly condemning Israel for its aggression and expansion and including effective measures to stop Israel's criminal acts in the occupied territories.

In the USSR's opinion, Israel's policy in the occupied Arab territories was intended to perpetuate the results of the aggression of 1967. That policy was contrary to peace and in line with the long-standing policy of a greater Israel. The Camp David accords and the separate Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty served only to camouflage aggression against the Palestinian and Arab people, and the so-called autonomy talks between Egypt, Israel and the United States were a violation of the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination. The USSR categorically condemned Israel's mass repression, racial discrimination and suppression of freedom in the occupied territories. That situation must be ended, for the sake of peace, including for the sake of Israel itself. Proposals for sanctions against Israel under Chapter VII of the Charter were supported by the USSR.

The United Kingdom thought that there were two separate, though interrelated, aspects of Israeli policy in the occupied territories, both of which gave rise to serious concern. The first was the illegality of Israel's settlement policy. The United Kingdom deplored Israel's 1979 decision to allow Israeli citizens to buy land in the occupied territories. It considered Israel's claim to ultimate sovereignty over those territories to be incompatible with Security Council resolution 242(1967) and the principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force. Therefore, Israel's recent decisions concerning the city of Hebron were viewed to be provocative and ill-conceived. The second aspect of concern was the effect of those Israeli policies on the search for a comprehensive peace in the area. It was difficult to understand how those policies, actions and claims of sovereignty could possibly be compatible with Israel's declared desire for an overall peace. The United Kingdom opposed any unilateral modifications of the territories in question, including those to the status of Jerusalem and the Holy Places.

In Mexico's opinion, the Council was faced with a case in which fundamental principles of the Organization were affected and objectives pursued by the international community were undermined. What was taking place in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip was unacceptable. Israel's actions were contrary to universally accepted principles and resolutions. Despite the partial solutions found so far, there would be no peace and security for the region as long as the conflict between the Jewish and the Palestinian nations was not settled. The former had, with the approval of the United Nations, constituted a State for over 30 years. The Palestinian people had the right to constitute itself politically with all the attributes of a sovereign State.

The Niger stated that Israel's settlement policy recalled the internationally condemned policy of South Africa. Israel must be made to recognize and respect the Arab entities of the region, renounce its aggressive settlement policy, recognize the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and accept PLO as their representative. In the absence of such action, tension would never decrease in the region. While the means available to the Council were limited, the Charter provided for action and its ineffectiveness had not yet been demonstrated.

Tunisia said that an official policy of colonization had been unremittingly pursued by Israel since 1967, constantly modifying the legal status, geographical nature and demographic composition of the occupied territories. More lands, including the most fertile areas, had been illegally expropriated. Water resources had been diverted to quell a population that was doomed to despair. Palestinians were expelled daily from their homeland or arbitrarily detained. That was done in contempt of numerous United Nations resolutions, international law and the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949. Nothing could impede the achievement of peace more than the repressive policies of Israel.

France stated that once again the Commission, in spite of its efforts, had not been successful in obtaining the co-operation and assistance of the Israeli authorities in the performance of its task. The conclusions in the Commission's report of 4 December 1979 were such as to substantiate the grave concern felt by many. Israel's attitude towards the occupied Arab territories constituted a violation of the provisions of international conventions and, in particular, the fourth Geneva Convention. The creation or enlargement of settlements was contrary to the norms of international law, whereby the occupying power was obliged to preserve the demographic, economic and cultural nature of the occupied regions and refrain from any interference in the life of those regions which went beyond the normal needs of administration. Recent Israeli statements in favour of settlements in Hebron were particularly alarming. The maintenance of such a situation could only serve to jeopardize further the chances of an overall settlement of the Middle East conflict by peaceful means.

The Philippines associated itself with the Commission's recommendation that the Council should urge Israel to implement fully the Council's resolutions concerning Jerusalem and regretted Israel's refusal to co-operate with the Commission. In the view of the Philippines, what was happening in the occupied Arab territories was only part of the problem; the larger problem was the occupation itself. That in turn was part of a still larger problem, which was that of restoring a homeland to the Palestinian people and guaranteeing to them their inalienable rights as a people.

Jamaica, in fully endorsing the Commission's recommendations, urged Israel to cease the establishment of settlements, which was contrary to international law and to the fourth Geneva Convention and posed a grave threat to the prospects for peace and stability in the Middle East. Above all, the settlements policy represented a gross injustice to the Palestinian people, whose inalienable rights, including their right to establish an independent homeland, had been recognized and endorsed by the overwhelming majority of Member States.

Zambia said that Israel's settlements policy in the occupied Arab territories was a euphemism for modern colonization. Exaggerated concerns about security were no justification for any country to commit acts of aggression against other States or peoples. Israel should not be allowed to advance the dangerous notion that its boundaries were elastic and shifting. Zambia called for effective enforcement measures under the Charter to ensure Israel's withdrawal without delay.

Bangladesh and Yugoslavia expressed support for the recommendations of the Commission. Its report elaborated facts, Bangladesh said, which constituted an outright indictment of Israel. The Council should take effective enforcement measures to ensure that Israel withdrew from the occupied territories without any further delay. Yugoslavia expressed the view that Israel's lack of readiness to comply with United Nations resolutions should open the eyes of those on whom it relied in its intransigence. All Council members must immediately take the necessary measures to check Israel's policy of violence.

A number of States, not members of the Council, including Afghanistan, Egypt, Kuwait, Pakistan and the Syrian Arab Republic, felt that Israel's settlement policy violated not only the relevant United Nations resolutions but also international law and constituted a serious obstruction to peace in the Middle East. Cuba and Pakistan called for sanctions in the case of Israel's non-compliance with the Council's decisions; Israel's withdrawal and the recovery by the Palestinian people of its inalienable rights was the only solution, in the view of these States as well as of Afghanistan, Algeria, Indonesia, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic, Viet Nam and Zambia. Lebanon added that, by denying the Palestinians their national rights, Israel was creating a Palestine diaspora, particularly in Lebanon.

The PLO representative said the Commission's concern over the water resources of the occupied territories was justified. He expressed the hope that the Council would consider measures aimed at investigating the matter with a view to ensuring the protection of those important resources. The only effective protection, he said, was the withdrawal of the forces of occupation, a prerequisite for the free exercise of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and for peace. As to the question of Jerusalem, the documents annexed to the Commission's report indicated that there was a consensus among Christian organizations that it was not merely a matter of protection of the Holy Places but that it was organically linked with living faiths and communities in the Holy City. By resolution 446(1979),<sup>60</sup> the Council had determined that Israel's policy in establishing settlements in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967 had no legal validity and constituted a serious obstruction to achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East. In view of Israel's rejection of that resolution and its flouting of other Council decisions, the Council must meet its responsibilities by imposing on Israel the sanctions provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter.

The Council President, speaking as the representative of the German Democratic Republic, said that Israel had for decades been protected, financed and equipped by the United States. With that support, it hoped that it could intensify its actions in the Middle East. The Camp David accords, he continued, ostensibly served the cause of peace, but their true significance was becoming increasingly clear. Taking refuge behind those accords and demagoguery about so-called autonomy, Israel was establishing further settlements and continuing the expulsion of the indigenous Palestinian population from its lands. The German Democratic Republic called for an uncompromising withdrawal by Israel to its borders as before the 1967 war, as well as participation on an equal footing for PLO in all negotiations.

On 1 March, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 465(1980), prepared in the course of consultations among members. It thereby called on Israel to dismantle the settlements in the Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and to cease the establishment and planning of new ones. The Council determined that all measures taken by Israel to change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or status of those territories had no legal validity, and that Israel's policy and practices of settling parts of its population in those territories constituted a flagrant violation of the 1949 fourth Geneva Convention and were a serious obstruction to peace in the Middle East.

The Council strongly deplored Israel's persistence in pursuing such policies and practices and called on all States not to provide it with any assistance to be used in connexion with settlements in the occupied territories. Further, the Council requested the Commission to continue to examine the situation relating to the settlements, to investigate the reported depletion of natural resources, particularly water resources, to keep under close scrutiny the implementation of the resolution and to report to it before 1 September.

Speaking in explanation of vote, Norway said it considered the settlement policy of Israel as inconsistent with international law and the fourth Geneva Convention, as an obstacle to peace, as undermining ongoing negotiations and as prejudging the outcome of negotiations on the future of the occupied territories. A just and lasting peace in the Middle East must be based on recognition of Israel's right to exist within secure and recognized boundaries and of the legitimate national rights of the Palestinian people. The final status of the territories could be established only through a comprehensive solution negotiated by representatives of all the parties concerned, including the Palestinian people. To achieve such a solution, all parties must refrain from actions which might complicate the search for peace.

The United States said that one positive trend in the area was reflected in the current series of negotiations for a comprehensive settlement which had resulted from the historic breakthrough at Camp David. A peace treaty had been signed and large areas of occupied Arab territories had been evacuated by Israel. Yet, there could be no comprehensive peace in the Middle East until the Palestinian problem in all its aspects was resolved. The United States regarded the settlements in the occupied territories as illegal-under international law, and an obstacle to a successful outcome of the current negotiations. The United States supported resolution 465(1980) despite reservations with regard to certain of its provisions which it considered to be recommendatory. It did not read the reference to changes in the institutional structure of the occupied territories as in any way prejudicing the outcome of the autonomy negotiations. The basic framework for all efforts, including the Camp David accords, was resolution 242(1967), calling for negotiations to resolve the many and difficult aspects of the Arab-Israeli conflict. One issue which the negotiators would have to address was the matter of existing settlements. There were a number of factors of a practical character, such as the need for housing, making it impractical to call for the dismantling of existing settlements.

The USSR representative drew attention to the appeal in the resolution to all States not to provide Israel with any assistance which might be used in connexion with the establishment of settlements in the occupied territories. He said it was important that all States heed that appeal and implement it. At the same time, the USSR considered that the resolution did not fully respond to the demands made of the Council by the very serious and peace-threatening situation which prevailed in the territories. The Council should more decisively condemn Israel's colonization and acquisition of Arab lands. It was time for the Council to ponder steps which would make it possible for its resolutions to be implemented.

Communications and report (12 March-6 May)

In a letter of 12 March, the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People expressed to the President of the Security Council the Committee's satisfaction with the Council's adoption of resolution 465(1980) (see preceding subsection) and its unanimity in deploring Israel's settlement policy.

Between 14 and 25 March, the Council received six communications relating to the expropriation of Arab lands by Israel.

By a letter of 14 March, the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian Rights expressed the Committee's concern about the expropriation by Israel of vast areas of Arab-owned land in the vicinity of Jerusalem, in order to establish new Israeli settlements.

By a letter of the same date, Jordan, in its capacity as current Chairman of the Arab group of Member States at the United Nations, protested the expropriation of 4 million square metres of Arab land north of Jerusalem. Also on that day, Egypt transmitted a statement by a cabinet spokesman expressing dismay at Israel's decision to confiscate Arab land in East Jerusalem which, he said, created serious obstacles to a comprehensive and just peace.

By a letter of 19 March, the Acting Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian Rights conveyed the Committee's serious concern about Israel's further expropriation of Arab land near Bethlehem.

On 21 March, Tunisia transmitted a letter of 19 March from the Deputy Permanent Observer of PLO who charged that Israel's recent confiscation of land in the vicinity of Bethlehem was for the purpose of establishing another illegal settlement.

By a letter of 25 March, Morocco, as Chairman of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, expressed grave concern about the expropriation of additional Arab lands north of Jerusalem and near Bethlehem and the proposed establishment of two Jewish religious institutions in Al-Khalil.

Two additional communications dealt with an Israeli decision to establish two schools in Al-Khalil. In a letter of 24 March, the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian Rights said that decision was a clear indication of Israel's intention to annex the occupied Arab territories through a policy of faits accomplis. In a letter dated 25 March, Egypt quoted a statement of 23 March by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, describing the Israeli decision as an act of defiance of international legitimacy and the spirit of peace.

By letters of 27 and 28 March to the President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General, respectively, Jordan conveyed a statement by the Mayor of Arab Jerusalem who deplored the latest act of aggression in the Jerusalem area by the Israeli occupation authorities who had closed the Arab Science College in Abu Dees on the ground that there were sufficient colleges in the occupied territories. In a reply of 3 April, Israel stated that that institution consisted of one class with a limited number of students and, since there were 13 institutions of higher learning on the West Bank, it had seen no reason for maintaining a single-unit institution.

On 2 May, the representative of Democratic Yemen, in his capacity as current Chairman of the Arab group, transmitted a letter of 1 May from the PLO observer, who complained of a series of provocations by Israeli forces against Palestinian students who had been staging protests in a number of cities in the occupied territories.

Developments in Hebron were the subject of further communications and a request for a meeting of the Security Council.

By a letter dated 4 May, Israel complained of a terrorist attack by PLO against Jewish worshippers in Hebron, which resulted in the death of six Israelis and the injury of 16 others, among them women and children.

On 6 May, Democratic Yemen, as Chairman of the Arab group, transmitted a letter of 5 May from the PLO observer who charged that on 2 May the Mayors of Al-Khalil and Halhul and the Islamic Judge of Al-Khalil had been expelled by the Israeli forces; PLO asked the Secretary-General to use his good offices to ensure their return to their towns.

On 6 May, Tunisia requested an urgent Security Council meeting to consider those expulsion measures.

Consideration by the Security Council (8 May)

On 8 May, the Security Council met to consider the expulsion of the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul and the Islamic Judge of Hebron, as requested by Tunisia on 6 May. Israel and Jordan were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President drew attention to a letter of 8 May from Tunisia requesting that PLO be invited to participate in the Council's deliberations, in accordance with the usual practice. He added that the proposal was not made pursuant to rule 37<sup>61</sup> or rule 39<sup>62</sup> of the provisional rules of procedure, but that, if approved, the invitation would confer on PLO the same rights of participation as those conferred on a Member State when invited pursuant to rule 37.

The United States reiterated its opposition to the manner in which the invitation had been phrased. Tunisia's proposal was approved by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (France, Norway, Portugal, United Kingdom).

The Council then proceeded to vote on a draft resolution prepared in the course of consultations among Council members. It was adopted, by 14 votes to 0, with 1 abstention (United States), as resolution 468(1980). The Council thereby recalled the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949 and expressed its deep concern at the expulsion of the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul and the Sharia Judge of Hebron. It called on Israel to rescind these illegal measures and to facilitate the immediate return of the expelled Palestinian leaders so that they could resume their functions, and requested the Secretary-General to report on implementation of the resolution.

Following the vote, the United States said that those deportations were contrary to the provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention which applied to the conduct of Israeli military authorities in the West Bank and Gaza. However, the Council had been dealing with a tragic cycle of violence and could not focus on a single act. The United States regretted that the resolution did not refer to the killing of six Israelis and the wounding of 16 others in Hebron, which preceded the deportations.

The USSR had supported the resolution, although it did not contain a decisive condemnation of Israel for its illegal actions against the Palestinian leaders which should be immediately repealed. Nor could the USSR overlook any attempts to place on the same footing the actions of the Israeli occupiers who had committed atrocities in the Arab lands and the heroic struggle of the Palestinians fighting to drive out the occupiers and to restore their internationally recognized inalienable rights.

Israel stated that following the attack in Hebron on 2 May, for which PLO had taken responsibility, it had taken steps for the preservation of law and order and the maintenance of security. Those steps included the deportations of the Mayors and the Judge who, on the instruction of PLO, had been systematically engaged in inciting the local Arab population to acts of violence and subversion, abusing their public offices. The deportation orders were carried out on the basis of the Defence (Emergency) Regulations of 1945, which had been issued by the British Mandatory authorities and which had been applied in the West Bank by Jordan. The Palestine Liberation Organization had recently stepped up its campaign against the peace process and the current talks aimed at achieving full autonomy for the Palestinian people. Prominent among those involved in this campaign were the officials whom Israel had deported, only after their words and activities had led to bloodshed.

The representative of PLO said the Palestinians, being denied the rights to return to their homes, to self-determination and to life, were fighting for survival. By resolution 465(1980) of 1 March (see p. 409), the Council had deplored Israel's policies and practices in the occupied territories and called on it to rescind those measures. Israel's response had been further confiscation of Arab lands and the pursuance of its measures against the Palestinian people, many of which the PLO representative detailed.

Communications and report (12- 16 May)

By letters of 12 May 1980 to the Security Council President and the Secretary-General, Jordan transmitted a statement of 9 May pertaining to the deportation of the Mayors of Al-Khalil and Halhul and the Moslem Sharia Judge of Al-Khalil, Rajab Tamimi, in which it refuted the allegations on that issue made by Israel in the Council on 8 May.

In a letter dated 14 May, the Acting Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian Rights expressed the Committee's concern about Israel's defiance of Council resolution 468(1980) of 8 May (see preceding subsection) in refusing to readmit those officials.

On 13 May, the Secretary-General submitted a report on the implementation of resolution 468(1980). He stated that on 9 May Israel had informed him that it was unable to allow the expelled Mayors and Judge to return, for reasons indicated in its statement before the Council. The Secretary-General added that he had noted reports that those officials had been denied re-entry into the West Bank by Israel on 11 May.

On 16 May, Jordan, referring to Israel's defiance of resolution 468(1980), requested that the Council be convened to explore ways of ensuring full implementation of that resolution.

Consideration by the Security Council (20 May)

On 20 May 1980, the Security Council placed on its agenda Jordan's letter of 16 May concerning the non-compliance of Israel with Council resolution 468(1980) of 8 May. Israel and Jordan were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President drew attention to a letter of 16 May from Tunisia, requesting that PLO be invited to participate in the debate, in accordance with previous practice. The United States reiterated its view that it was inappropriate to invite PLO on terms that would confer on it the right of participation as a Member State. Tunisia's proposal was adopted by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (France, Norway, Portugal, United Kingdom).

Also the Council extended invitations, under rule 39, to the Mayors of Al-Khalil and Halhul, as well as to the Islamic Judge of Al-Khalil, as requested by Tunisia on 16 May.

Before the debate, the President called attention to a draft resolution prepared in the course of consultations among Council members.

Jordan, the first speaker, charged that not only those three Palestinian leaders but 1,600 others had been deported, including the Mayor of Arab Jerusalem, as a prelude to the annexation of the Holy City. At the grass-roots level, almost 300,000 persons from the Gaza Strip and the West Bank were currently displaced in the East Bank awaiting the implementation of United Nations resolutions which, since 1967, had called for their return to their homes. There were also tens of thousands of young people who had endured the ordeal of torture chambers and windowless cells, and thousands in Israel's jails. Jordan hoped the Council would not allow itself to be foiled once again.

Israel said the three individuals concerned had made no secret of their views and had encouraged acts of violence. As public officials entrusted to fulfil functions which included maintaining public order and peace, they had subverted the very source of their authority. As to the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949, Israel did not recognize its formal application in the administered area, but nevertheless did apply, on a de facto basis, its humanitarian provisions. Israel would have been fully within its legal rights had it limited freedom of speech, assembly, expression and other basic freedoms. Proceedings had been initiated in Israel's Supreme Court on behalf of the three individuals regarding their deportation; the Court had decided to grant the petitioners a hearing.

In his statement before the Council, the Mayor of Halhul said the three officials had been expelled because they had rejected the autonomy plan proposed in the Camp David accords. Autonomy meant no rule over land, sources of water or power, but the perpetuation of occupation. Contrary to the statements made to the Council by Israel's representative, there was no freedom of expression, assembly or otherwise. The only way to peace was through recognition of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to return to their homes, to self-determination and the establishment of their sovereign State in their homeland, Palestine.

The Mayor of Al-Khalil stated that Israeli acts of violence and terror had involved every Palestinian city and town. Neither the population nor the land had been spared violent mutilation by the occupying power. The peaceful protests by the people went unheard. Israel had intensified its oppression by imposing curfews, limiting freedom of movement, enforcing collective punishment, destroying houses and restricting the political activities of the elected officials and community leaders. The decision to expel him and the two other officials had to do with their opposition to the Camp David agreements and the autonomy plan and their fight against Israel's policy of settlement.

On 20 May, the Council, by 14 votes to 0, with 1 abstention (United States), adopted the text before it as resolution 469(1980). By this text, it deplored Israel's failure to implement its resolution 468(1980) of 8 May, and called again on Israel, as the occupying power, to rescind the illegal measures taken by its military authorities in expelling the three officials and to facilitate their immediate return. The Council also requested the Secretary-General to continue his efforts in order to implement this resolution and to report at the earliest possible date.

Following the vote, the United States said its position, as set forth before the Council on 8 May, had not changed.

Commenting on the abstention of the United States, PLO charged it with flouting its commitment under the fourth Geneva Convention.

Zambia expressed the view that all States, especially Members of the United Nations, were obliged to accept and give effect to Council decisions. Israel, by its actions, was bent on provoking a catastrophe in the Middle East by continuing to pursue its provocative and aggressive policies.

Communications and report (24 May-24 June)

On 24 May 1980, the Secretary-General submitted a report, as called for by the Council in resolution 469(1980) of 20 May (see preceding subsection). He stated that on 21 May he had addressed an appeal to the Prime Minister of Israel to respond to the call of the Council. In a reply of 23 May, the Prime Minister, expressing regret that Council resolutions had failed to mention the attack by PLO on Jewish worshippers in Hebron, stated that a petition to allow the return of the three men had been submitted to the High Court of Justice for consideration. The Prime Minister added that the judgement of the Court would be carried out by the Government.

In a letter dated 2 June, Jordan stated that on that day time-bombs planted in cars belonging to the Mayors of Nablus, Ramallah and Al Bireh had exploded, causing one of them the loss of both his legs and another the loss of one leg and injury to one hand. Jordan held the occupation authorities responsible for those acts. Condemnation of these incidents was expressed in two other communications: the first, dated 2 June, from the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian Rights; and the second, dated 3 June, from Egypt.

On 3 June, Bahrain, as current Chairman of the Arab group, transmitted a letter of the same date from the Chairman of the PLO Executive Committee charging that recent Israeli actions in the occupied Palestinian territories constituted an attempt to deprive those territories of their national leaders. He called on the United Nations to take the necessary steps to ensure the protection of the Palestinian people.

On the same date, Bahrain, acting for the Arab group, requested an immediate meeting of the Security Council to consider the assassination attempts and the arbitrary detention of a great number of Palestinian students.

By a letter of 4 June, the representative of Israel transmitted excerpts from the political programme and resolutions adopted at the Fourth Congress of al-Fatah (Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic, end of May), which, he charged, called for the liquidation of Israel.

Consideration by the Security Council (5 June)

On 5 June, the Security Council met, as requested by Bahrain on 3 June, to consider the assassination attempts on the three Palestinian Mayors. Bahrain, Egypt, Israel and Jordan were invited, at their request, to participate in the debate without the right to vote.

The President drew attention to a 4 June letter from Tunisia requesting that PLO be invited to participate in the debate, in accordance with previous practice. The Council extended an invitation to PLO after adopting the proposal by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (France, Norway, Portugal, United Kingdom).

The representative of Bahrain, as Chairman of the Arab group, said that recent developments in the occupied West Bank were alarming. He called urgently on the international community to end Israel's violation of the human rights of the Palestinian people and its occupation of Arab territories. While Israel had claimed its readiness to withdraw within the framework of a comprehensive settlement which guaranteed peace and security to all parties concerned, it was evident that it had no such intention. The United States, he said, bore great responsibility for the suffering of the Palestinian people. It not only supplied Israel with sophisticated weapons that allowed it to continue its occupation of the Palestinian homeland but it also was one of the signatories of the Camp David agreement and a party to the negotiations which aimed at perpetuating the occupation of Arab territories and legalizing Israel's presence in Palestine.

Israel said it condemned the use of terror. The acts of terror against the Arab Mayors on 2 June had evoked widespread revulsion in Israel, which stood in stark contrast to the virtual absence of similar condemnations by Arab Governments and public opinion of PLO terror acts. Israel, remaining firm in its quest for a comprehensive peace in the area, was entitled to expect that the Council would refrain from adopting any position which might be interpreted by the enemies of peace as encouragement to further violence.

Following these statements, the Council adopted, by 14 votes to 0, with 1 abstention (United States), resolution 471(1980), prepared in the course of consultations among Council members.

By this resolution, the Council condemned the assassination attempts and expressed deep concern that Israel, the occupying power, had failed to provide adequate protection to the civilian population in the occupied territories in conformity with the 1949 fourth Geneva Convention. The Council called on Israel to provide the victims with adequate compensation for the damages suffered, called again on all States not to provide Israel with any assistance to be used in connexion with settlements in the occupied territories, and reaffirmed the necessity to end the prolonged occupation of Arab territories, including Jerusalem. In addition, the Council called again on Israel to comply with the provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention as well as with the relevant resolutions of the Council.

The German Democratic Republic said it was time for the Council to take urgent measures to put an end to Israel's expansionist policy. Otherwise, acts of violence against the Palestinian people would become ever more frequent. The most recent events in the Arab territories gave an idea of what awaited the Arab people of Palestine under the so-called autonomy.

The United States said the brutal crimes perpetrated on the West Bank were cowardly acts, the latest in a spiral of acts which had brought more distress to the West Bank than it had suffered at any time since the occupation began. That sad situation and the equally sad murder of Israeli citizens at Hebron were part of a broader tragedy-the continuing Arab-Israeli conflict. The Council had the responsibility to keep in mind the full range of those events and other factors bearing on the dispute, which had not been done in this resolution. The United States continued to believe that resolution 242(1967), a change in which it opposed, provided the basis for a just settlement. On that basis, it had pursued a settlement through the Camp David accords. The United States appealed most earnestly to those with influence and authority to exercise leadership and restraint.

The United Kingdom condemned unreservedly the assassination attempts on the Mayors. Shocking as they were, they were but the latest link in a chain of violence. The United Kingdom therefore wished to make it clear that it deplored and wished to see an end to all violence in the area. It called for restraint by all concerned. Recent events only underlined the need for a just and lasting peace in the Middle East, which must involve, among other things, Israeli withdrawal from occupied territories.

France expressed its deep concern at all the acts of violence which had taken place in recent months, and condemned the assassination attempts, which made more necessary than ever before the quest for and implementation of a just and lasting peace settlement.

The USSR said the barbarous acts committed with the clear-cut connivance of the Israeli authorities and directed against the elected Palestinian officials were the direct extension of Israel's campaign of terror, violence and intimidation to force the indigenous Arab population to resign themselves to the military occupation régime and to impose, in the guise of autonomy, the final annexation of their ancestral lands. Violence in the Middle East was the result of the occupation by Israel of those lands and the expulsion therefrom of the indigenous Arab population. The only way to eliminate that violence was by Israel's withdrawal from all the Arab territories occupied in June 1967. The Council should consider the question of what Israel's aggressive policy would ultimately lead to and take all necessary measures to call a halt to that dangerous turn of events.

The representatives of Egypt and Jordan condemned the criminal acts against Palestinian leaders. Egypt commented that those acts were incriminating testimony to the evils of Israel's military occupation and provided further evidence of the need to terminate it. Jordan reiterated the conviction that the security and safety of the civilian population in the occupied Arab territories were the responsibility of Israel as the occupying power.

The PLO representative charged that Israel was resorting to organized terrorism in the territories. Those acts of armed vigilantes were encouraged by a climate of licentiousness created by the authorities, by arbitrary legislation for the requisitioning of property and by the deployment of the Israeli army to defend the illegal settlement.

Communications (6 June-December)

By a letter of 6 June, Yemen transmitted a statement by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs denouncing the recent Israeli terrorist acts against the Mayors of Nablus, Ramallah and Al Bireh.

In a letter dated 12 June, the Acting Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian Rights referred to a declaration by the Israeli Prime Minister concerning the establishment of 10 new settlements on the West Bank, as well as to reports concerning the implementation of a plan to establish a "barrier zone" of new settlements in Gaza. He expressed the Committee's belief that the Security Council should take urgent and decisive measures to prevent the deterioration of the situation.

On 29 July, Tunisia transmitted a letter of 25 July from the PLO observer to the United Nations who said that on 14 July 76 Palestinian detainees had launched a hunger strike in protest of the abhorrent, inhuman conditions at the Nafha prison in the Negev Desert. As a result, 25 detainees became critically ill and were transferred on 21 July to Ramle prison. Prison officials attempted to break their fast by force-feeding which resulted in the death of two of them.

On 30 July, Tunisia transmitted another letter, dated 29 July, from the PLO observer stating that several hundred detainees in West Bank and Gaza prisons had joined the hunger strike. He urged the Security Council President to take every possible action to ensure that not one more Palestinian would suffer the same agonizing death as the other two victims.

On the conditions in Israel's prisons, two communications were received: the first dated 4 August from the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian Rights and the second dated 7 August from Qatar, drawing attention to what they described as the inhuman treatment of imprisoned inhabitants of the occupied territories.

In a letter of 15 August, the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian Rights drew attention to reports that Israel had decided to make it impossible for the Palestinian people in the occupied territories to open any institution for higher education without a special permit. Meanwhile, Israel had authorized the military authorities to strip Arab school curricula of any reference to Palestinian national character and history.

By a letter of 29 September, the Chairman drew the Secretary-General's attention to the latest developments in the case of the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul and the Sharia Judge of Hebron. The Supreme Court of Israel had upheld their expulsion for considerations of security and had ruled that the Mayors, though not the Judge, could appeal to an Israel Military Review Committee. On 10 October, the Secretary-General advised the Chairman that Israel had decided to allow the Mayors to return to the West Bank to appeal their deportation order. On 24 October, the Chairman advised the Secretary-General that the Mayors had been confined at a border post where the hearing was held and, it was reported, had gone on a hunger strike following rejection of their appeal.

By a letter of 29 October, the Secretary-General stated that, according to information he had received, the Israeli Supreme Court was scheduled to hear the appeal submitted by the lawyer for the Mayors on 30 October. The Mayors had been transferred to Ramle prison in Israel. The Secretary-General added that he was following closely the developments in that matter.

In a letter dated 9 December, the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian Rights said that Israel had maintained its defiance of Council resolutions by confirming its previous illegal decisions to expel the two Mayors. He therefore requested the Council to take firm action to implement the relevant resolutions.

By another letter, of 19 November, the Chairman expressed the Committee's deep concern at reports from the occupied territories indicating that 11 students from Bir Zeit University, who had been demonstrating against the closure of the University by the Israeli military authorities to prevent the students from observing Palestine Week, had been wounded by gunfire.

On 20 November, Tunisia transmitted a letter of 18 November from the Permanent Observer of PLO, charging that, on that date, Israeli soldiers had fired at unarmed students from Ramallah, Bethlehem and Al Bireh while they were demonstrating against the arbitrary closing of the University.

By a letter dated 8 December, the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian Rights expressed the Committee's serious concern at the arrest of Gabbi Baramki, President of the University, under the pretext that he had allowed the students to observe a Palestine Week.

In a letter of 20 November, the Israeli representative charged that PLO was carrying out a campaign of intimidation and subversion in Judaea, Samaria and the Gaza District, adding that the campaign had intensified recently and had taken the form of political assassinations and public disturbances. In another communication, dated 26 November, he stated that since 1966 PLO had frequently threatened, terrorized and intimidated Arab leaders who did not carry out its orders.

Report of the Security Council Commission (25 November)

In March 1979, the Security Council had established a three-member Commission to examine the situation relating to settlements in the Arab territories, including Jerusalem.<sup>63</sup> The Commission had reported twice in 1979;<sup>64</sup> its second report was taken up by the Council in February/March 1980 (see p. 406). On 1 March, the Council set 1 September as the date for submission of the Commission's third report (see p. 409).

On 16 June, the Council President announced that, following informal consultations, the Council had decided to maintain the Commission's original composition. By a note dated 20 August, he further stated that the Council had no objection to a request from the Chairman of the Commission to extend the date of submission of the third report until 25 November.

On 25 November, the Commission submitted that report. It observed that Israel was actively pursuing its systematic large-scale process of establishing settlements in the occupied territories and that a correlation existed between the establishment of those settlements and the displacement of the Arab population. The Commission concluded that the settlement policy had brought drastic and adverse changes to the economic and social pattern of the daily life of the remaining Arab population as well as profound changes of a geographical and demographic nature in the occupied territories, including Jerusalem.

The Commission stated that available evidence had shown that Israel continued to deplete the natural resources, particularly water resources, in the occupied territories for its own advantage and to the detriment of the Palestinian population.

As to the situation in Jerusalem, the Commission noted with grave concern that tension and confrontation between Israel and the Islamic world had increased, especially following the enactment of the "Basic Law" which proclaimed a change in the city's character and status.

The Commission expressed the view that the problem of the settlements and occupation raised fundamental problems for peace and that Israel's persistent refusal to heed the repeated appeals of the Security Council should be censured. The Commission reiterated its earlier recommendations that the Council, bearing in mind the inalienable rights of the Palestinians to return to their homeland, again draw Israel's attention to the disastrous consequences its settlement policy was bound to have on any attempt to reach a peaceful solution in the Middle East.

It recommended that appropriate measures be sought for an equitable allocation of water resources in the area, outside of any political considerations, in view of the vital importance of those resources. Their serious depletion was a result of intensive exploitation by Israeli authorities, mainly for the benefit of Israeli settlers.

With regard to Jerusalem, the Commission recommended that the Council urge Israel to implement fully its resolutions on that question.

Consideration by the General Assembly

Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices

The General Assembly in 1979 had renewed the mandate of the three-member Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories and requested it to submit a report in 1980.<sup>65</sup> The Committee's twelfth report, approved on 25 July and submitted to the Secretary-General on 26 July, covered the period since 9 November 1979. It contained a representative cross-section of information received by the Committee and an assessment in the context of applicable international law. The Committee noted that its special effort to secure the co-operation of Israel had been to no avail. The Committee heard the testimonies of a former detainee in an Israeli prison, the three Palestinian leaders expelled by Israel- the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul and the Islamic Judge of Hebron-and the Mayor of Nablus, who had been the subject of an assassination attempt. It also heard two persons from the occupied territories in closed meetings.

The information presented by the Committee was grouped in four categories: Israel's settlement policy; the treatment of civilians in the occupied territories; the situation of detainees in those territories; and the consequences of recourse to judicial remedies on the human rights of the local population. The report gave samples of incidents occurring during the period covered.

The report stated that Israel's annexation and settlement policy continued unabated. The rate and extent of expropriation were considerable; over 27 per cent of the land in the occupied territories had been taken over by Israel. Another significant measure was the purchase of property in the occupied territories, authorized by Israel. A particular feature observed by the Committee was the considerable amount of money spent on the settlement programme. The construction of new settlements and the expansion of existing ones had become part of a regular programme. As at 26 July, over 127 settlements had been established. This policy and the measures taken, the Committee pointed out, were in violation of the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949.

Regarding the treatment of the civilian population, the Committee noted that acts of violence had remarkably increased and bloodshed had reached unprecedented levels. As noted in the past, the military occupation had generated a strong spirit of resistance among the civilians, and the reaction by the military authorities to the increasing number of demonstrations, strikes and other actions was severe. Israel, the Committee observed, continued to allow extreme provocation of the civilian population and severe repression of any reaction. One of the more striking developments was the activist role of the Israeli settlers who engaged in violent acts against the civilian inhabitants, causing damage to property, personal injury and sometimes even death. The military authorities, according to information available to the Committee, did not control those settlers.

Concerning the situation in prisons and the treatment of detainees, the Committee had received extensive reports of inhuman conditions and noted that no serious efforts had been undertaken to improve them. Interrogation procedures continued to be accompanied by violence, according to numerous reports. The Committee had examined cases where detainees had suffered severe bodily and mental damage as a result of conditions of detention; it called for an end forthwith to such practices and held that drastic measures should be taken to ensure against a recurrence.

The Committee noted an increasing trend in the resort to the High Court of Justice of Israel by the inhabitants of the occupied territories. In virtually all cases, this Court had been impotent in controlling the arbitrary behaviour by the military occupation authorities. There were no judicial remedies available to the civilian population other than making an application to the High Court. The Committee noted that the right to make such application became meaningless if the Court's judgement was not implemented. The administration of justice, the Committee pointed out, had been transferred from civil courts to military forums, by virtue of the promulgation of over 850 military orders changing the law governing the occupied territories.

In conclusion, the Committee said the military occupation in all its facets was at the core of the violation of fundamental human rights. The practices thereunder also constituted a systematic effort to change the status of the occupied territories in pursuit of Israel's "homeland" policy and its avowed intention to perpetuate its domination there and deny the inhabitants the right to self-determination. While the international community pursued the major goal of ending the occupation, it should immediately set in motion efforts to modify conditions by the kind of mechanism urged by the Committee in previous reports (the protecting-power formula based on the fourth Geneva Convention).

The Committee's report was considered by the General Assembly's Special Political Committee which also had before it a series of communications (see sections above), including a letter of 24 April from Jordan transmitting a Government statement on Israel's modification of Jordanian labour law in the West Bank in order to curb trade union activity.

The Secretary-General, reporting on 4 November to the Assembly, described steps taken by the Department of Public Information to secure wide dissemination of the Committee's report and activities.

The Special Political Committee discussed the Committee's report at seven meetings between 7 and 21 November. On 18 and 21 November, it approved the texts of five resolutions-35/122 A-E-which it recommended to the Assembly for adoption. A sixth resolution, adopted as resolution 35/122 F, was not submitted in the Special Political Committee but in a plenary meeting on 11 December (see following subsection).

ADOPTION OF RESOLUTIONS

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted the texts recommended by the Special Political Committee. By resolution 35/122 A, adopted by a recorded vote of 141 to 1, with 1 abstention, the Assembly reaffirmed that the fourth Geneva Convention was applicable to Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem. It deplored Israel's failure to acknowledge that applicability and called on it to do so and to comply with the provisions of the Convention. The Assembly again urged all States parties to that Convention to exert all efforts to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in the occupied territories, including Jerusalem.

The text was sponsored by Bangladesh, India, Indonesia, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Nigeria, Pakistan and Yugoslavia. The Special Political Committee, on 18 November, had approved it by a recorded vote of 109 to 1.

By resolution 35/122 B, adopted by a recorded vote of 140 to 1, with 3 abstentions, the Assembly determined that the measures and actions taken by Israel to change the legal status, geographical nature and demographic composition of the occupied territories had no legal validity and constituted a serious obstruction to a just and lasting peace in the Middle East, deplored Israel's persistence in carrying out such measures and called again on it to comply with its international obligations and desist from any such action.

The resolution, sponsored by Bangladesh, Cuba, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Indonesia, Mali, Pakistan and Zambia, was approved by the Special Political Committee on 18 November, by a recorded vote of 110 to 1, with 2 abstentions.

By resolution 35/122 C, adopted by a recorded vote of 118 to 2, with 23 abstentions, the Assembly commended the Special Committee to investigate Israeli practices for its work and called again on Israel to allow the Committee access to the occupied territories. It deplored Israel's continued violation of the fourth Geneva Convention, condemning those violations which the Convention designated as grave breaches. It then condemned the following Israeli policies and practices: annexation of parts of the occupied territories, including Jerusalem; establishment of new settlements and expansion of existing ones on Arab lands, and transfer of an alien population thereto; evacuation, deportation, expulsion, displacement and transfer of Arab inhabitants of the occupied territories and denial of their right to return; confiscation and expropriation of Arab property and all other transactions for the acquisition of land involving the Israeli authorities, institutions or nationals on the one hand, and inhabitants or institutions of the occupied territories on the other; destruction and demolition of Arab houses; mass arrests, administrative detention and ill-treatment of the Arab population; ill-treatment and torture of persons under detention; pillaging of archaeological and cultural property; interference with religious freedoms and practices, as well as family rights and customs; and illegal exploitation of the natural wealth, resources and population of the occupied territories.

The Assembly reaffirmed that all measures by Israel to change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or status of the occupied territories, including Jerusalem, were null and void, and that Israel's settlement policy constituted a flagrant violation of the fourth Geneva Convention and of relevant United Nations resolutions. It demanded that Israel desist from those policies and practices, and reiterated its call on all States, international organizations and specialized agencies to avoid actions, including those in the field of aid, which might be used by Israel in its policies of annexation and colonization.

The Assembly requested the Special Committee to continue its investigations, to consult with the International Committee of the Red Cross in order to ensure the safeguarding of the welfare and human rights of the population of the occupied territories, and to continue to investigate the treatment of civilians detained in the Arab territories. The Secretary-General was requested inter alia to ensure the widest circulation of the Committee's reports and of information regarding its activities and findings.

The draft was sponsored by Bangladesh, Cuba, Guinea-Bissau, Indonesia, Malaysia, Mali, Pakistan and Zambia and was approved by the Special Political Committee on 18 November by a recorded vote of 91 to 2, with 22 abstentions.

By resolution 35/122 D, adopted by a recorded vote of 140 to 1, with 3 abstentions, the Assembly called on Israel to rescind the illegal measures taken in expelling and imprisoning the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul and in expelling the Sharia Judge of Hebron, and to facilitate their immediate return.

Bangladesh, Cuba, India, Indonesia, Mali, Pakistan, Yugoslavia and Zambia sponsored the text in the Special Political Committee, where it was approved on 18 November by a recorded vote of 117 to 1, with 2 abstentions.

Resolution 35/122 E was adopted by a recorded vote of 119 to 2, with 23 abstentions. The Assembly thereby condemned Israel's persistence in changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the Syrian Arab Golan Heights, and determined that all legislative and administrative measures and actions which might be taken by Israel that purported to alter the character and legal status of the Golan Heights were null and void, constituted a flagrant violation of international law and the fourth Geneva Convention and had no legal effect. It called on Member States not to recognize such measures and actions and called on Israel to desist from enacting such legislation.

Algeria, Cuba, India, Indonesia, Jordan, Mali, Pakistan, Qatar and Yemen sponsored the resolution, which was approved by the Special Political Committee on 21 November by a recorded vote of 97 to 2, with 21 abstentions.

By resolution 35/122 F, adopted by a recorded vote of 117 to 2, with 25 abstentions, the Assembly again reaffirmed the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the territories occupied by Israel. It condemned Israeli policies and practices against Palestinian students and faculty and the systematic repression of universities in the occupied Palestinian territories, and demanded that Israel rescind those actions and measures and ensure the freedom of those institutions. It requested the Security Council to convene urgently to take the necessary measures to ensure that Israel rescinded the illegal measures against the Palestinian Mayors and the Sharia Judge and to facilitate their immediate return.

The text was sponsored in the plenary Assembly by Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Iraq, Jordan, Maldives, Mauritania, Pakistan, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY DISCUSSION

The representative of Sri Lanka introduced the report of the Special Committee in the Special Political Committee. He said that, in view of the events which had taken place since the adoption of the Committee's report on 25 July, the Special Committee had wished to submit a special report on the treatment of detainees, but had been unable to do so for reasons beyond its control. The events in question had taken place during August and September in the Israeli Nafha prison. The Special Committee had gathered information from numerous sources, including eyewitnesses. Conditions in that prison were so deplorable that detainees had declared a hunger strike soon after being transferred there. The protest had spread to all other prisons where Palestinians were detained, and a number of incidents had taken place. To date, three detainees had died as a result of measures to force-feed them. An investigation by Israel had exonerated the prison authorities from responsibility for those deaths, but the facts available to the Special Committee had led to quite a different conclusion.

Another development since the adoption of the report was the publication of a study by the International Commission of Jurists on the rule of law in the occupied territories. The study covered a number of fields, including military legislation in areas as diverse as land rights and town planning, which appeared to extend far beyond the needs of Israel's security. The study illustrated the extent to which the occupation authorities were pursuing efforts to annex those territories in defiance of the fourth Geneva Convention. In the preface to the study, it was stated that the occupation would probably continue for an indefinite period and that the military governments had exercised powers akin to those of sovereign Governments by altering existing laws in such a way as to make the economy of the West Bank dependent on Israel and to facilitate the establishment of Jewish settlements.

The representative of Israel said the report had provided further proof that the Special Committee served as an instrument of the hatred and propaganda campaign against Israel by certain Arab States. Israel rejected the distorted picture which the Special Committee had given and denounced the deliberate use of the United Nations for purposes contrary to the United Nations Charter and detrimental to international peace. The Special Committee had completely ignored the circumstances which necessitated Israel's presence in the territories, and had conveyed misguided concepts about security issues and regional political developments. The representative addressed in detail various statements and conclusions in the Special Committee's report, making such points as: Israel held that the fourth Geneva Convention was not applicable to the territories it administered but that it nevertheless applied the Convention's principles and even granted privileges not laid down in it; detainees were common criminals and were not detained for their political beliefs; Israel's legal system provided numerous safeguards for its citizens and the inhabitant of territories under its administration; and the Geneva Convention recognized the right to impose administrative detention where security considerations so demanded.

In the view of PLO, the current report of the Special Committee had special importance since it covered a period of intensification by Israel of its aggressive, criminal oppression, encroaching on every aspect of the lives of the Palestinian people both inside and outside the occupied territories. Israel's settlement policy aimed at depriving that people of the source of their livelihood, thus compelling them to leave, and at undermining the geographical base on which they as a nation would assert their right to self-determination and statehood.

Members agreed that the Israeli settlement practices were designed to alter unilaterally the demographic and physical character of the occupied territories with a view to perpetuating Israel's domination, and as such constituted a flagrant violation of the fourth Geneva Convention. They also condemned Israel's practices with respect to the civilian population in the occupied territories and considered the proclamation of Jerusalem as the capital of Israel an act of aggression. Egypt, the USSR, the members of the European Community and many others called for Israel's total withdrawal as the basis for a just and lasting peace.

Greece said a peaceful solution of the Palestinian problem was unthinkable when settlements were continually being established and extended, the demographic composition of the territories changed, the judicial status unilaterally modified and the Palestinian people deprived of their legitimate right to self-determination.

The representative of the League of Arab States said the report of the Special Committee illustrated the ever-increasing violations by Israel of all legal, human, national and territorial rights of the population of the occupied territories.

Hungary associated itself with all those who supported the determination of the Arab inhabitants of the territories not to accept the conditions under which they were forced to live.

Malaysia appealed again to all countries which supported and sustained Israel to co-operate with the United Nations by taking steps that would ensure Israel's compliance with the accepted principles of international law.

Luxembourg, speaking on behalf of the nine member States of the European Community, reiterated their position calling for a comprehensive settlement and supporting the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention. They urged Israel to refrain from expelling 'Palestinian officials and preventing them from carrying out their functions; such measures could only increase tension. They were also opposed to certain practices of the military occupation authorities with respect to the civilian population which were violations of the most fundamental human rights. The Community members, however, reiterated their reservations with respect to the establishment of the Special Committee and the manner in which it carried out its work. Since the Committee had not had adequate access to first-hand information, its report could not be considered absolutely authoritative.

The USSR reiterated its support for the struggle of the Arab peoples to eliminate the effects of Israel's aggression and achieve a comprehensive settlement with the participation of all parties concerned, including PLO. Such a settlement must provide for the unconditional return to the Arabs of all lands seized by Israel in 1967, including the eastern part of Jerusalem, and the full implementation of the national rights of the Palestinian people, including their right to create an independent State.

The representative of Indonesia, who introduced the text of resolution 35/122 A on the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the occupied territories, said that the international community must assume its responsibility to ensure the human rights of the population of those territories and to end the occupation.

Austria thought that the changes introduced by Israel in the occupied territories were unacceptable since they had not only increased tension and complicated the search for a peaceful settlement, but could also be viewed as an indication that Israel intended to perpetuate its domination.

The representative of China said that the Government and people of his country strongly condemned the Israeli authorities for their crimes against the Palestinian and other Arab peoples in the occupied territories, and for their flagrant violations of the fourth Geneva Convention and the United Nations Charter. The Chinese people had always resolutely supported the just struggle of the Palestinian and other Arab peoples, which would finally triumph. Israel must withdraw from all the occupied Arab territories and the Palestinian people must regain its national rights.

Kenya said it was strongly opposed to the acquisition of land by force; it deplored Israel's practices in the occupied territories and once more called on it to heed the opinion of the world community and change its policies in those territories. In Kenya's view, the United Nations had a historical duty and responsibility to protect the rights of the Palestinians, which were guaranteed in internationally recognized conventions.

In Nigeria's opinion, Israel's concept of "coexistence" was not one of equals but one between a dominant invader and the subordinate indigenous population, kept docile by a combination of military force and political and economic inducements.

EXPLANATIONS OF VOTE

Israel considered that resolution 35/122 C endorsed various false allegations made by the Special Committee and completely disregarded the actual circumstances. It said the text also ignored the principle of international law to the effect that the authorities, in addition to ensuring the welfare of the local population, had the clear obligation to protect that population against disorder and terrorism.

Regarding resolution 35/122 D, Israel stated that the Supreme Court, having heard the appeal of the two Mayors, would issue its decision in due course. The resolution was, therefore, totally unwarranted and sought to interfere with the due process of law.

Israel said resolution 35/122 E was unacceptable because it was based on the false premise that Israel's presence on the Golan Heights was illegal, and because it was designed to draw the United Nations into the campaign against the peace process in the Middle East. Israel considered resolution 35/122 F an unacceptable attempt to interfere with the judicial system of a sovereign Member State.

Luxembourg said the members of the European Community had voted for resolutions 35/122 A, B and D, thus reaffirming their position that the fourth Geneva Convention was applicable to the occupied territories. Their support for resolution 35/122 B reflected their feeling that the Israeli settlements and the demographic and land-ownership changes were in violation of international law. The Community members had abstained in the vote on resolution 35/122 C because of their reservations on the establishment of the Special Committee and certain inappropriate elements. The condemnation of Israeli policies and practices was unjustified in view of the lack of conclusive proof of the use of torture by Israel.

As for resolution 35/122 E, the Community members had abstained because of reservations particularly in connexion with certain operative paragraphs and some technical aspects of the preamble. In their view, however, any unilateral change in the status of the occupied territories would be contrary to international law and to the fourth Geneva Convention, and would constitute a new source of tension. Luxembourg added that the Community members would have liked to vote in favour of resolution 35/122 F, but were unable to do so because of their reservations with respect to some of the wording. On the other hand, they strongly disapproved of Israel's measures, particularly against Palestinian students and faculty, and strongly deplored the expulsion of the two Mayors for the second time.

Finland had abstained on resolution 35/122 C because of its reservations with respect to certain formulations, especially in those paragraphs regarding Israeli policies and practices. It had voted for resolutions 35/122 A, B and D, because it felt that they fully complied with Security Council resolutions 242(1967)<sup>66</sup> and 338(1973).<sup>67</sup> In view of the urgent need to obtain reliable information on the situation in the occupied territories, Finland deplored Israel's continued refusal to allow the Special Committee access to them.

The United States said it had voted for resolution 35/122 A since it felt that Israel's settlements in the occupied territories were inconsistent with international law, particularly the fourth Geneva Convention. The United States had abstained in the vote on resolution 35/122 B solely to make clear its objections to the use of the phrase "Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem." It considered that the reference to Jerusalem was to that part of the city which had been occupied in 1967. The United States reiterated its position that the final status of Jerusalem must be settled in the context of negotiations for a final peace. Whatever solution was eventually agreed upon should preserve Jerusalem as an undivided city, with free access to the Holy Places, and should safeguard the basic rights of the city's residents.

The United States had voted against resolution 35/122 C, which contained unfounded charges against the conduct of Israeli authorities. It had abstained in the vote on resolution 35/122 D, as it believed that the deportation of the Mayors was contrary to the fourth Geneva Convention; but it could not vote for that resolution because the text should have contained a reference to the attack on Israeli citizens in Hebron which preceded the deportation.

The United States said it had voted against resolution 35/122 E, first, because Israel had not enacted any legislation changing the legal status of occupied Syrian Arab territory, and second, because the resolution did not contain specific reference to Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) which set forth the principles on which a peaceful settlement of the question must be based. With reference to resolution 35/122 F, the United States, though very concerned about the measures taken by Israel, could not accept the resolution, principally because it purported to dictate to the Security Council what measures it should take, but also because it used unbalanced language and made no mention of the broader context in which events to which it related had occurred.

Australia said it had voted for resolutions 35/122 A, B and D, but had abstained in the vote on resolution 35/122 C. Although it was firmly opposed to Israeli actions which violated the human rights of the inhabitants of the occupied territories, that resolution condemned Israel for actions which had not been proved.

Declaring its support for resolution 35/122 E, Egypt condemned the attempt by extremist elements which sought to annex the Golan Heights and halt the peace process.

Austria said it supported resolution 35/122 E because it would not only categorically reject an act of annexation of the Golan Heights as a serious violation of international law but was also opposed to any preparatory steps and initiatives which might result in an annexation. However, Austria had serious reservations about the resolution, and considered that the question of the Golan Heights was a separate problem which should have been dealt with in the Security Council. It would have preferred more balanced wording for a resolution of a preventive character.

The Bahamas and Austria stated that their affirmative votes on resolution 35/122 F did not imply that they did not have serious reservations with regard to certain formulations. Austria and Portugal interpreted the reference to Palestinian and other Arab territories to apply to those territories which were occupied in 1967.

Canada said it had abstained in the vote on resolution 35/122 E because, although it strongly opposed any move by Israel to annex the Golan

Heights, it felt that the determination of the borders must be decided in negotiations between the parties and not by unilateral action. Canada also had particular reservations regarding a preambular paragraph recalling previous resolutions in which the Assembly had called on Israel to put an end to its illegal occupation and to withdraw, and regarding the condemnation of Israel's refusal to comply with the relevant resolutions. With respect to resolution 35/122 F, Canada had abstained since it could not subscribe to the emotive charges in parts of the text.

Norway stated that, although it shared the concern of the sponsors, it had abstained on resolution 35/122 E because it seemed to imply that the legal status of the Golan Heights had already been changed. Norway, as well as Finland and Portugal which had abstained, voiced particular reservations on the first two operative paragraphs condemning Israel's persistence in making changes in the Golan Heights and its refusal to comply with relevant United Nations resolutions.

Sweden said it could not support resolution 35/122 E because it dealt in a sweeping way with legislation not yet enacted; however, Sweden hoped Israel would desist from enacting such a law. Because of certain inappropriate formulations, Sweden abstained on resolution 35/122 F though it called on Israel to rescind all actions and measures contrary to the fourth Geneva Convention.

New Zealand abstained on resolution 35/122 E because Israel had not taken any action with regard to the Golan Heights, and it expressed the hope that Israel would not do so. Japan also abstained on that resolution, yet believed that Israel must withdraw from the Golan Heights; it maintained its objection to any annexation measures. Japan abstained on resolution 35/122 F because it included some elements Japan could not support.

Portugal and Venezuela said they would vote in favour of resolution 35/122 F to show support for the Palestinian cause, yet they wished to place on record reservations on the wording of certain paragraphs, in particular that which claimed that Israel pursued a deliberate policy of opening fire on defenceless students.

Uruguay expressed reservations with regard to the operative paragraph of resolution 35/122 C condemning specific policies and practices of Israel, on the grounds that it had not been proved that the practices and policies listed were in fact engaged in by Israel. For the same reason, it abstained on resolution 35/122 F.

Chile abstained on resolution 35/122 F because of its doubts about the language used and about the propriety of dealing with such matters in conjunction with situations of a different kind.

Tunisia said it had voted in favour of resolution 35/122 F, yet had some doubt whether measures decided on by the Security Council would be effective, given the prevailing situation in the Council.

Living conditions of the Palestinian people

In response to a General Assembly request of 14 December 1979,<sup>68</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly on 17 October 1980 a report on the social and economic impact of Israel's occupation on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied territories. As permission to visit those territories had not been granted by Israel, the three experts appointed to prepare the report had had to rely on secondary sources of information from Governments, PLO and United Nations organs and specialized agencies. Two of the experts visited Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, where they held discussions with government officials, Palestinian refugees, persons deported from the occupied territories, residents of the occupied territories visiting those countries, visitors to the occupied territories and PLO representatives.

The experts reported that no human settlements policy had been adopted for the occupied territories to ensure a rational distribution of the Palestinian people, as a consequence of the lack of an overall economic and social development policy and planning. Very little planning had been devoted to the resettlement of refugees in the West Bank, who constituted 46 per cent of the population. No public housing seemed to have been initiated commensurate with the magnitude of needs. In the Gaza Strip and northern Sinai, there was a resettlement policy, yet only a fraction of refugees had been provided with housing units. The dwelling units were overcrowded, both in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank, especially in the rural areas and refugee camps.

Over the years, the occupied territories had witnessed a deterioration of the infrastructure. The appropriation by Israel of over a quarter of the land in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip had meant that less land was available to the Palestinian people for their housing and agricultural needs. Similarly, the diversion of water for the needs of the Israeli settlements had adversely affected the traditional habitat of the Palestinian people. Environmental health services had not improved commensurate with population increase. As a consequence, gastro-intestinal diseases had been a major cause of morbidity and mortality. One significant development had been the increase of the number of educational institutions both in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, and enrolment had also increased significantly. However, the political climate and actions of the occupying authorities had not provided a learning environment free from insecurity among both teachers and students. Concerning social welfare services, the occupying authorities had increased the number of welfare bureaux and social workers. The number of recipients of services, particularly financial assistance, had decreased considerably, due to the high level of employment in the occupied territories and to the rehabilitative services introduced by the occupying authorities, with financial resources made available by international organizations.

Having considered the Secretary-General's report, the Assembly on 5 December adopted resolution 35/75, by which it deplored Israel's refusal to allow the Group of Experts to visit the occupied territories, condemned Israel's policy resulting in the deterioration of the living conditions of the Palestinian people in those territories and called on all States to co-operate with the United Nations and local Palestinian authorities to alleviate the tragic living conditions caused by the Israeli occupation.

Resolution 35/75 was adopted by a recorded vote of 118 to 2, with 26 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, where the draft, sponsored by 40 Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), was approved on 14 November by a recorded vote of 110 to 2, with 23 abstentions.

Before the vote in Committee, Israel said that one-sided resolutions would not bring peaceful solutions any closer and, therefore, it would vote against the resolution.

In explanation of vote, Bulgaria, which voted in favour of the text, endorsed the struggle for independence led by PLO and said it would continue to support the Palestinian people. Bolivia, which also voted in favour, would have preferred a different wording of the paragraph which condemned Israeli policy resulting in the deterioration of the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied territories. Austria said it had voted in favour with considerable hesitation and was not convinced that the condemnation of Israel was justified on the basis of the Secretary-General's report; if a separate vote had been taken on that paragraph, it would not have voted for it. Japan said it abstained because that paragraph concerned a matter which, it felt, could not appropriately be considered by the Second Committee.

Luxembourg, on behalf of the nine members of the European Community, said they had abstained because of certain reservations. The United States said it had voted against the resolution because of unjustified criticism of Israel and references to resolutions which the United States had opposed.

Permanent sovereignty over national resources in the occupied Arab territories

On 5 December 1980, the General Assembly adopted another resolution relating to the situation in the territories occupied by Israel. By resolution 35/110, on permanent sovereignty over national resources in the occupied Arab territories, the Assembly emphasized the right of the Arab States and peoples whose territories were under Israeli occupation to full and effective permanent sovereignty over their natural and all other resources, wealth and economic activities. It reaffirmed that measures taken by Israel to exploit those resources were illegal, called on Israel to desist from such measures, reaffirmed the right of the Arab States and peoples subjected to Israel's occupation to restitution of and compensation for such exploitation, and called on Israel to meet their just claims. The Assembly called on all States to support the Arab States and peoples in the exercise of these rights and called on all States, international organizations and institutions not to co-operate with Israel in this matter. It regretted that the report it had requested in 1979 on this subject<sup>69</sup> was not completed and asked the Secretary-General to prepare a report for the 1981 session.

The Assembly adopted resolution 35/110 by 122 votes to 2, with 23 abstentions. It acted on the recommendation of the Second Committee which had approved the text, sponsored by 36 Members (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), on 14 October by a recorded vote of 101 to 2, with 22 abstentions.

After the vote, Luxembourg, speaking on behalf of the European Community members, said they had abstained because they felt the issue was not within the competence of the Second Committee. The United States said it had voted against the resolution on the basis of its position on the question of permanent sovereignty and because the matter was not within the Committee's competence. Portugal, which voted in favour, expressed reservations with regard to the paragraph reaffirming the right to compensation.

Related General Assembly decisions

The General Assembly, on 14 November, adopted two additional resolutions relating to the Middle East problem.

By resolution 35/33, on the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, the Assembly expressed its satisfaction to the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People for its contribution of the implementation of the Programme for the Decade (for details, see p. 798).

By resolution 35/35 A, on the importance of the right to self-determination, the Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, national independence, territorial integrity, national unity and sovereignty without external interference (for details, see p. 837).

Further consideration by the Security Council

Meetings of the Security Council (19 December)

On 19 December, the Security Council met, for the third time, to consider the expulsion of the three Palestinian leaders. Egypt, Israel and Kuwait were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

By 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (France, Norway, Portugal, United Kingdom), the Council approved a Tunisian proposal to invite PLO to participate in the debate. The invitation conferred on PLO the same rights of participation as those conferred on Member States when invited under rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.<sup>70</sup> Upon Tunisia's request, the Council also invited, under rule 39 of the provisional rules of procedure,<sup>71</sup> the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States and the two Mayors.

Opening the debate, the Secretary-General gave an account of developments in the case since 24 May. He told the Council that on 4 December the Supreme Court of Israel had upheld the expulsion order but recommended that the Government review the matter, in the mean time allowing the Mayors to stay. On 5 December, the Secretary-General had learned that Israel planned to deport the Mayors forthwith. Despite his intervention, Israel had deported them that day.

Israel said that it had a primary duty to preserve law and order and safeguard human life. The three individuals concerned had been systematically engaged over the preceding months in inciting the local Arab population to acts of violence and subversion. Over the past few months, they had had full recourse to the Israeli judicial system. Israel could not accept any attempt to interfere with its judicial process.

Tunisia noted that Article 25 of the United Nations Charter<sup>72</sup> made it binding on Members of the United Nations to carry out Council decisions. Israel did not comply with that Article. The expulsion of the three Palestinian leaders was part of Israel's systematic defiance of international law and unanimously acknowledged rules.

The USSR said it had long been clear that the real sources of tension in the Middle East were Israel's occupation of Arab lands, the expulsion of the indigenous population and its acts of terror, violence and intimidation. The USSR believed that the Council should most resolutely demand that Israel strictly comply with the 1949 fourth Geneva Convention. In the case of Israel's non-compliance, the Council should take appropriate measures in accordance with the Charter.

Zambia said Israel had no legal right to expel any Palestinian from Palestine. Since 1967, the indigenous people had been dispossessed of their land and property. The Council should prevail on Israel to allow the Mayors to return to their homeland.

China noted that Israel's acts had aroused strong condemnation from the international community and vigorous resistance by Palestinians. In China's opinion, Israel could only make itself even more isolated, should it persist in its aggression and expansion and the persecution of the Palestinian and other Arab peoples. If Israel refused to implement the Council's decision on this matter, the Council would have to take stronger and more effective measures.

The German Democratic Republic said that, along with many other States, it condemned the policy of separate deals pursued under the protection of the United States, since that policy had increased obstacles to a comprehensive and just peace settlement in the Middle East and had already led to dangerous complications.

Bangladesh noted that the Council had recently met twice on the expulsion of the Palestinian leaders; it felt grave concern over Israel's latest action.

The Council also heard statements on the matter by Egypt, Kuwait, the representatives of PLO and the League of Arab States, and the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul.

The President, speaking as the representative of the United States, said that the views of the United States on the deportation of the Mayors were well known. The fourth Geneva Convention applied to the West Bank and prohibited deportations. While supporting the resolution which was before the Council, the United States continued to believe that the Council should take the entire situation in the occupied territories into account. It hoped that any future incidents of violence would be brought to the attention of the Council, which should condemn violence against Israel as promptly as it condemned Israel's actions.

On 19 December, the Security Council adopted unanimously resolution 484(1980), prepared in the course of consultations among Council members. It thereby reaffirmed the applicability of the 1949 fourth Geneva Convention to all the Arab territories occupied by Israel in 1967, called on Israel to adhere to the Convention, and declared it imperative that the Mayors be enabled to return to their homes and resume their responsibilities.

Further communications

On 23 December, Cuba transmitted the communiqué of a plenary meeting of the non-aligned countries, held at New York that day to consider the situation of the two Palestinian Mayors. The meeting declared its full solidarity with them and the Sharia Judge of Al-Khalil and called on the Security Council to ensure full implementation of its resolutions adopted on this matter in 1980.

By a letter of 24 December, Tunisia transmitted a message of the same date from the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States, calling on the Council to undertake all measures that would ensure the safe return of the two Mayors.

Resolution 465(1980), as proposed in S/13827, adopted unanimously (15-0) by Council on 1 March 1980, meeting 2203.

The Security Council,

Taking note of the reports of the Security Council Commission established under resolution 446(1979) to examine the situation relating to settlements in the Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, contained in documents S/13450 and Corr.1 and Add.1 and S/13679,

Taking note also of letters from the Permanent Representative of Jordan and the Permanent Representative of Morocco, Chairman of the Islamic Group,

Strongly deploring the refusal by Israel to co-operate with the Commission and regretting its formal rejection of resolutions 446(1979) and 452(1979),

Affirming once more that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Deploping the decision of the Government of Israel officially to support Israeli settlements in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967,

Deeply concerned by the practices of the Israeli authorities in implementing that settlements policy in the occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem, and its consequences for the local Arab and Palestinian population,

Taking into account the need to consider measures for the impartial protection of private and public land and property, and water resources,

Bearing in mind the specific status of Jerusalem and, in particular, the need to protect and preserve the unique spiritual and religious dimension of the Holy Places in the city,

Drawing attention to the grave consequences which the settlements policy is bound to have on any attempt to reach a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East,

Recalling pertinent Security Council resolutions, specifically resolutions 237(1967), 252(1968), 267(1969), 271(1969) and 298(1971), as well as the consensus statement made by the President of the Council on 11 November 1976,

Having invited Mr. Fahd Qawasma, Mayor of Al-Khalil (Hebron), in the occupied territory, to supply it with information pursuant to rule 39 of the provisional rules of procedure,

1. Commends the work done by the Security Council Commission established under resolution 446(1979) in preparing the report contained in document S/13679;

2. Accepts the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Commission;

3. Calls upon all parties, particularly the Government of Israel, to co-operate with the Commission;

4. Strongly deplores the decision of Israel to prohibit the free travel of Mayor Fahd Qawasma in order to appear before the Security Council and requests Israel to permit his free travel to United Nations Headquarters for that purpose;

5. Determines that all measures taken by Israel to change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or status of the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, or any part thereof have no legal validity and that Israel's policy and practices of settling parts of its population and new immigrants in those territories constitute a flagrant violation of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War and also constitute a serious obstruction to achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East;

6. Strongly deplores the continuation and persistence of Israel in pursuing those policies and practices and calls upon the Government and people of Israel to rescind those measures, to dismantle the existing settlements and in particular to cease, on an urgent basis, the establishment, construction and planning of settlements in the Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

7. Calls upon all States not to provide Israel with any assistance to be used specifically in connexion with settlements in the occupied territories;

8. Requests the Commission to continue to examine the situation relating to settlements in the Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, to investigate the reported serious depletion of natural resources, particularly the water resources, with a view to ensuring the protection of those important natural resources of the territories under occupation, and to keep under close scrutiny the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Requests the Commission to report to the Security Council before 1 September 1980 and decides to convene at the earliest possible date thereafter in order to consider the report and the full implementation of the present resolution.

S/13982. Letter of 4 June from Tunisia (request to extend invitation to participate in Council discussion).

S/13984. Draft resolution prepared in course of consultations.

Resolution 471(1980), as proposed in S/13984, adopted by Council on 5 June 1980, meeting 2226, by 14 votes to 0, with 1 abstention (United States).

The Security Council,

Recalling once again the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and in particular article 27, which reads,

"Protected persons are entitled, in all circumstances, to respect for their persons.. They shall at all times be humanely treated, and shall be protected especially against all acts of violence or threats thereof. .,"

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War to the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Recalling a/s/o its resolutions 468(1980) and 469(1980),

Reaffirming its resolution 465(1980), by which the Security Council determined "that all measures taken by Israel to change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or status of the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, or any part thereof have no legal validity and that Israel's policy and practices of settling parts of its population and new immigrants in those territories constitute a flagrant violation of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War and also constitute a serious obstruction to achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East" and strongly deplored the "continuation and persistence of Israel in pursuing those policies and practices,"

Shocked by the assassination attempts against the Mayors of Nablus, Ramallah and Al Bireh,

Deeply concerned that the Jewish settlers in the occupied Arab territories are allowed to carry arms, thus enabling them to perpetrate crimes against the civilian Arab population,

1. Condemns the assassination attempts against the Mayors of Nablus, Ramallah and Al Bireh and calls for the immediate apprehension and prosecution of the perpetrators of these crimes;

2. Expresses deep concern that Israel, as the occupying Power, has failed to provide adequate protection to the civilian population in the occupied territories in conformity with the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War;

3. Calls upon the Government of Israel to provide the victims with adequate compensation for the damages suffered as a result of these crimes;

4. Calls again upon the Government of Israel to respect and to comply with the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, as well as with the relevant resolutions of the Security Council;

5. Calls once again upon all States not to provide Israel with any assistance to be used specifically in connexion with settlements in the occupied territories;

6. Reaffirms the overriding necessity to end the prolonged occupation of Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Questions pertaining to refugees in the Near East

In 1980, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) maintained its education, health and relief programmes for Palestine refugees in Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic and the Israeli-occupied territories of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. In spite of the continuing insecure situation, programmes were almost fully maintained.

As had been the case many times since UNRWA began operations in 1950, it did not receive enough voluntary contributions during the year to meet all budgetary expenditures. Income for 1980 was just over $190 million against budget expenditures of $211 million. To overcome this deficit, the basic food ration had had to be kept at the reduced 1978 level, a number of capital improvements were deferred, and improvements in local staff remuneration to keep pace with inflation were not fully implemented. A survey of conditions of employment in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip by the International Civil Service Commission did, however, lead to an upward adjustment of staff remuneration in those areas late in the year.

Activities in 1980

The number of refugees registered with UNRWA rose through natural increase by 41,229 since 31 December 1979, to 1,863,162 at 31 December 1980. Of these, about 834,000 were eligible to receive food rations and approximately 1.5 million were eligible for health and education services. However, 565,036 registered eligible persons, mostly children, did not receive rations because of ceilings put on the number of recipients.

The Agency also distributed rations to about 230,000 displaced persons and displaced refugee children (registered for services only) in Jordan at the expense of the Jordanian Government.

About 35 per cent of the registered population lived in camps. At 31 December, there were 656,485 refugees in 61 camps.

The Agency continued its efforts, in co-operation with the World Health Organization, in health education and integrated family health care, with emphasis on preventive medicine, including supplementary feeding for nutritionally vulnerable groups. Despite money shortages, specialized medicine programmes and laboratory facilities were improved. In 1979, UNRWA had extended its hot-meal programme to all children under the age of eight, but for financial reasons had to limit it again in 1980 to the age of six. Expenditure on health services totalled $31.0 million in 1980.

Expenditure on relief services in 1980 was $44.1 million, which represented mainly the value of food commodities donated in kind and a small programme of assistance to hardship cases. Spending on education was over $100.1 million. The programme, operated with the technical assistance of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), included the first nine years of general education

(10 years in Lebanon), some assistance for refugee pupils in government and private secondary schools, vocational and teacher training in eight centres, and 354 university scholarships (for the 1979/80 academic year). Of UNRWA'S 16,700 employees, almost all Palestine refugees themselves, more than 11,000 were working in the educational field, and most of them were teachers (9,479).

In the 1979/80 school year, some 314,000 children were enrolled in the 627 UNRWA elementary and junior secondary schools, an increase of approximately 3,000 over 1978/79. There were also 87,641 refugee pupils enrolled in government and private schools. Double shifts were necessary in 74 per cent of UNRWA schools as only 13 prefabricated classrooms, 77 standard class- and administration-rooms and eight specialized rooms were completed during the year.

The eight UNRWA/UNESCO training centres had places for 4,695 young persons. By the end of 1980, more than 33,500 trainees had graduated from these centres. The UNRWA/UNESCO Institute of Education continued to emphasize refresher courses for qualified teachers and courses in educational techniques to meet special needs and new curricula developments.

The Department of Education opened education development units in Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic. An Education Development Centre was established in the West Bank during the year, joining centres established in Jordan and Gaza in 1974.

Consideration by the General Assembly

As in previous years, the Assembly considered the question of refugees in the Near East both in its Special Political Committee and in plenary meetings.

The Committee, which discussed the matter between 15 and 22 October, had before it six reports- the annual report of the Commissioner-General of UNRWA, three reports by the Secretary-General, a report of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine and a report by the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA.

Report of the Commissioner-General

In his report covering the period from 1 July 1979 to 30 June 1980, the Commissioner-General of UNRWA, after detailing the various activities of the Agency, indicated that the year under review had been a very difficult one, primarily because of the insufficiency of income in the face of ever-rising costs. The precariousness and unpredictability of UNRWA'S finances were likely to affect not only the future of its services but also its very existence.

Referring to the political factors affecting UNRWA'S work, the Commissioner-General indictated that Israeli military operations against Palestinian targets in southern Lebanon had caused massive and repeated displacement of refugees which had led to serious interruptions of Agency operations and necessitated emergency assistance to some 50,000 displaced refugees. In the occupied West Bank, measures of collective punishment imposed by the Israeli authorities, particularly on students in UNRWA educational establishments, had affected the Agency's services.

Reports of the Secretary-General

In September and October 1980, the Secretary-General submitted three reports pursuant to three Assembly resolutions of 23 November 1979.<sup>73</sup>

The first report included the substance of responses by Member States and United Nations agencies to an Assembly appeal for allocations, scholarships and grants to refugee students. Australia had indicated that it intended to offer scholarships to Palestine refugees for higher-education studies in Australia, and the Sudan had informed that it had consistently offered 25 to 30 scholarships annually to Palestinian students, and that 30 scholarships were being allocated to Palestinians for higher-education studies in 1980/81. Egypt advised that in 1979/80 it had awarded 13,239 scholarships to Palestinian students. These included 739 scholarships to students from the Gaza Strip and 549 distributed by PLO.

Several United Nations specialized agencies had also informed the Secretary-General of the assistance they were providing to the Palestinians, including training facilities and fellowships for higher studies.

The Secretary-General's second report concerned Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip. The Assembly, by a resolution of 23 November 1979, had called on Israel to stop removing and resettling those refugees and destroying their shelters." The Secretary-General reported that he had requested Israel to forward to him information on the implementation of that resolution. Israel replied on 2 September 1980 that, thanks to measures it had taken in Gaza, refugees in that District for the first time since 1948 had been given the opportunity to leave the camps and take possession of new homes in housing projects. In Israel's view, the Assembly resolution in question did not stem from genuine humanitarian concern for the refugees. The only rational explanation for it was that its initiators sought to perpetuate the misery of the refugees as a propaganda tool in their political warfare against Israel.

At the same time, the Secretary-General reported that information received from the Commissioner-General indicated that in Gaza there had been two occasions of punitive demolition of refugee shelters. The Agency had presented claims to Israel for compensation, but had had no response, nor had it secured any settlement in respect of its claims for compensation for refugee shelters demolished on punitive grounds in previous years. With regard to continuing references by Israel to "squalid and cramped conditions" in the refugee camps, the Commissioner-General had again noted that such references were more generalized than was warranted by the facts.

The Secretary-General submitted his third report, concerning the return of displaced inhabitants of territories occupied by Israel since 1967, in response to an Assembly request for a report on Israel's compliance with its directive that Israel take immediate steps for their return and desist from obstructing that return.<sup>75</sup>

He reported that, replying to his request for information, Israel had maintained that its policy with regard to persons who had left the area as a result of the 1967 hostilities remained unchanged; it allowed freedom of movement in both directions across the Jordan River. However, in implementing that policy, Israel had to be guided by certain security considerations.

The Secretary-General reported that information from the Commissioner-General indicated that the number of displaced registered refugees who were known by UNRWA to have returned to the occupied territories since June 1967 was about 9,600. The Agency was unable to estimate their total number since its records accounted only for UNRWA-registered refugees.

On 24 October, the Secretary-General reported on the developments in the Middle East, in all their aspects, as requested by the Assembly on 6 December 1979.<sup>76</sup> In that report, he reviewed the developments of the past year in relation to Assembly actions on the Palestine refugee problem.

Report of the United Nations

Conciliation Commission for Palestine

In accordance with an Assembly resolution of 23 November 1979,<sup>77</sup> the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine submitted to the Assembly a report covering the period from 1 October 1979 to 30 September 1980. Under that resolution, the Commission had been requested to exert continued efforts towards the implementation of paragraph 11 of Assembly resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948<sup>78</sup> and to report to the Assembly by 1 October 1980.

The Commission noted that circumstances limiting its possibilities of action had remained essentially unchanged. It expressed the hope, however, that the situation in the region would improve, enabling it to carry forward its work.

Report of the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA

In its report, submitted to the Assembly on 10 October 1980, the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA reiterated its conviction that, as long as a just and lasting settlement of the problem of the Palestine refugees had not been achieved, the Agency's humanitarian services remained indispensable.

It emphasized the gravity of the continuing critical financial situation of UNRWA. Only through the continued generous support of a relatively few donors, a drastic reduction of services during 1980 had been avoided, and the outlook for 1981 gave rise to serious concern. Therefore, the Working Group reiterated its call on all countries to participate in the financing of UNRWA.

General Assembly discussion

The Commissioner-General of UNRWA, in presenting his report to the Special Political Committee on 15 October, noted that year after year the Agency had to reduce services, defer maintenance of installations, withhold compensation from the staff for rising costs of living, and cover the remaining deficit by reducing working capital to practically nil. Unless Governments came to UNRWA's aid and the annual pledging conference resulted in a marked increase of income, further reductions, especially in the education programme, were unavoidable. The health programme was already at a minimum level, while the main component of the relief programme, the basic ration, was limited to the distribution of foodstuffs contributed by Governments.

The representative of Norway, speaking as Rapporteur of the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA, presented the Group's report to the Committee. He pointed out that at the beginning of 1980 estimated expenditures of $211.5 million had left a deficit of $56.3 million in the regular budget; in addition, $6 million were needed to replenish the Agency's working capital. By October 1980, the revised budget estimates amounted to $211.3 million, while pledged or expected income had risen to $174.2 million, resulting in a reduction in the budgetary deficit to $37.1 million. Unless further substantial contributions were received by the end of the year, it would not be possible for the Commissioner-General to approve expenditures on the remaining suspended budgetary items. The Agency's financial needs in 1981 were estimated at $236.9 million. Unless income was increased substantially over the 1980 level, the Agency would again face the possibility of having to reduce the education programme.

During discussion in the Special Political Committee, there was general concern at UNRWA's continued financial crisis and the possibility that it might have to curtail essential services due to insufficient funds. Jordan, in particular, expressed deep concern that the Agency's continuing diminution of services might result in the host countries' having to bear the entire burden.

While recognizing the importance and urgency of providing immediate assistance to the Palestine refugees, many Members emphasized other aspects. A number, including the Arab States, expressed the view that the refugee problem should be dealt with in all its dimensions.

Romania, the USSR, Yugoslavia and several others pointed out that the Palestine refugee problem was not merely a humanitarian issue, but rather a major political problem whose solution resided in a just and lasting settlement. The USSR added that the problem had its origin in Israeli aggression, strengthened by the separate Camp David agreement, which was contrary to the interest of the Palestinian people.

Speaking on behalf of the member States of the European Community, Luxembourg stressed the humanitarian aspect, but said that only a comprehensive settlement would bring about a definite solution.

The United States, affirming its commitment to the ongoing negotiations in the Camp David framework, said it aimed at a comprehensive peace in which legitimate Palestinian rights would be realized. In the mean time, it would continue to give full support to UNRWA's essential programmes.

Burundi and India were among Members which expressed the view that a lasting solution to the Palestine refugee problem could only be found on the basis of the realization of Palestinian national rights and Israel's withdrawal. Meanwhile, the international community had a moral obligation to assist UNRWA.

The representative of the Palestine Liberation

<sup>78</sup> Paragraph II of resolution 194(III) states, in part, that "the refugees wishing to return to their homes and live at peace with their neighbours should be permitted to do so at the earliest practicable date, and that compensation should be paid for the property of those choosing not to return and for loss of or damage to property..." See Y.U.N., 1948-49, p. 174, for full text of resolution.

Organization said the problem of the refugees was only one aspect of the question of Palestine as a whole. The only solution was the exercise of their inalienable rights by the Palestinian people, especially the right to return to their homeland and property and the right to sovereign national independence in an independent Palestinian State. Responsibility for the situation, he said, rested with Israel and the States which supported it, particularly the United States.

Concerning UNRWA'S financial situation, some European countries, particularly the European Community members, felt that too small a group of nations supported the Agency. They expressed the hope that all Member States would respond to its appeal by increasing their financial support as much as possible.

As a means of putting UNRWA'S finances on a firmer basis, the United Arab Emirates proposed an objective study of UNRWA'S financing in an international framework. Voluntary contributions, it said, could be supplemented with an allocation from the United Nations regular budget.

The USSR, on the other hand, reiterated its position favouring retention of the voluntary system of financing.

Some States pointed out difficulties other than financial facing UNRWA. Thus, Lebanon observed that continuing Israeli aggression hindered the Agency's work in the occupied territories and in the Arab countries of asylum, especially in southern Lebanon. Egypt condemned Israel's continuing policy of demolishing the houses of refugees as an arbitrary, punitive measure.

A number of Members, referring to legal matters dealt with in the Commissioner-General's report, expressed the view that certain Israeli policies vis-à-vis UNRWA'S staff seriously interfered with the Agency's work. Austria considered it totally unacceptable that staff should be detained for a prolonged period without charge or trial, that travel restrictions should be imposed on them, and that UNRWA schools in the West Bank should be adversely affected by security measures.

Israel called for an adjustment of UNRWA lists of refugees to remove those who had become self-supporting, thus alleviating the Agency's financial burden. Further, Israel considered that account must be taken of the situation which had developed in UNRWA camps in Lebanon. When it was clear that a camp had passed under the control of a terrorist organization, UNRWA was not obliged to continue administering it and supplying it with relief. The United Nations could not give assistance to persons engaged in warfare against a Member State. Israel believed that in the Camp David framework the prospects of achieving real progress towards peace were better than ever before and in that framework the refugee problem would find its proper and agreed solution.

Decisions of the General Assembly

On 3 November 1980, the General Assembly adopted six resolutions dealing with the Palestine refugees. They had been approved by the Special Political Committee on 22 October.

By resolution 35/13 A, on assistance to Palestine refugees, the Assembly noted with deep regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees as provided for in paragraph 11 of its resolution 194(III)<sup>79</sup> had not been effected and that no substantial progress had been made either by repatriation or resettlement. It also noted with regret that the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine had been unable to find a means to implement that resolution and called for continued Commission efforts.

The Assembly drew attention to UNRWA'S financial position and called on all Governments as a matter of urgency to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the Agency's anticipated needs, particularly in the light of its budgetary deficit. It urged them to contribute regularly and to increase their contributions, and renewed UNRWA'S mandate for three years, until 30 June 1984. The Assembly also repeated its request for relocation of UNRWA'S headquarters within its area of operations.

The resolution, sponsored by the United States, was approved by the Committee by a recorded vote of 119 to 0, with 1 abstention; the Assembly adopted it by a recorded vote of 109 to 0, with 1 abstention.

By resolution 35/13 B, the Assembly appealed to all States, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to augment the special allocations for scholarships and grants to Palestine refugees, to contribute generously to the Palestinian universities in the occupied territories, and to contribute towards the establishment of vocational training centres for Palestine refugees. It requested UNRWA, to act as recipient and trustee for such special allocations and scholarships. The Assembly also asked the Secretary-General to study ways and means to establish at Jerusalem a university of arts and sciences for the Palestine refugees in the area.

Resolution 35/13 B, sponsored by Bangladesh, Jordan, Lebanon, Oman, Pakistan and Qatar, was approved by the Committee by a recorded vote of 116 to 1, with 2 abstentions; the Assembly adopted it by a recorded vote of 109 to 1, with 1 abstention.

By resolution 35/13 C, on assistance to persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 hostilities, the Assembly endorsed the efforts of the Commissioner-General to continue to provide humanitarian assistance, on an emergency basis and as a temporary measure, to other displaced persons in the area who were in need of assistance. It appealed for generous contributions for this purpose.

Sponsored by Austria, Bangladesh, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Malaysia, the Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, the Philippines and Sweden, resolution 35/13 C was approved without objection by the Committee and adopted without vote by the Assembly.

By resolution 35/13 D, the Assembly commended the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA for its efforts to assist in ensuring the Agency's financial security and requested it to continue those efforts for another year.

The Committee approved the text, sponsored by Austria, Bangladesh, Canada, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Indonesia, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, the Philippines, Spain, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, Yugoslavia and Zaire, without objection. The Assembly adopted it without vote.

By resolution 35/13 E, the Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable rights of all the displaced inhabitants to return to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967. It considered that any agreement embodying any restriction on that right was null and void. Deploing Israel's continued refusal to take steps for the return of the displaced inhabitants, the Assembly called on it to take immediate steps for their return and to desist from all measures obstructing that return, including measures affecting the physical and demographic structure of the occupied territories.

The draft, sponsored by Bangladesh, India, Indonesia, Madagascar, Pakistan and Yugoslavia, was approved by the Committee by a recorded vote of 100 to 3, with 18 abstentions. The Assembly adopted it by a recorded vote of 96 to 3, with 16 abstentions.

By resolution 35/13 F, adopted by a recorded vote of 112 to 1, with 3 abstentions, the Assembly called once more on Israel to desist from removal and resettlement of Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip and from destruction of their shelters. The Committee had approved the text by a recorded vote of 116 to 1, with 4 abstentions; it was sponsored by Bangladesh, India, Indonesia, Madagascar, Pakistan and Yugoslavia.

Explanations of vote

Following the votes on the six draft resolutions in the Special Political Committee, a number of Member States explained their votes. Most of those speaking referred to the text proposing a study of the possibility of an arts and sciences university for Palestinians in Jerusalem or to the text on the return of persons displaced since 1967. With regard to the latter, Australia believed the matter could only be settled in the framework of an overall settlement. Portugal and Spain interpreted the resolution as not excluding the possibility of a negotiated settlement, while Luxembourg, on behalf of the European Community members, said they had abstained because the text seemed to exclude that possibility. Sweden had abstained because of ambiguities in the text and Suriname said its favourable vote should not be construed as a repudiation of the treaties concluded between Egypt and Israel.

As for the proposed university, the United States considered that it constituted an inappropriate attempt to introduce the question of Jerusalem. Austria and Canada thought it would be better to make use of outside educational establishments, while Japan and Sweden noted respectively their understanding that the resolution called only for a study and would not burden the UNRWA budget. Jordan, on the other hand, felt the establishment of a university at Jerusalem would give the city a universal character.

Pledges and contributions

For the calendar year 1980, governmental and intergovernmental contributors provided the equivalent of $152,930,127 towards UNRWA's budget. In addition, contributions were received from the United Nations, specialized agencies, non-governmental organizations, private individuals and business corporations. Total income from all sources in 1980 was $166,850,554.

On 17 November, the Ad Hoc Committee of the General Assembly for the Announcement of Voluntary Contributions to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East met at United Nations Headquarters, New York, where 39 States pledged contributions for 1981 in cash or kind. Pledges announced were estimated at $103.9 million.

Assistance to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly.

Recalling its resolution 34/52 A of 23 November 1979 and all previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948,

Taking note of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1979 to 30 June 1980,

1. Notes with deep regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees as provided for in paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III) has not been effected, that no substantial progress has been made in the programme endorsed by the Assembly in paragraph 2 of its resolution 513(VI) of 26 January 1952 for the reintegration of refugees either by repatriation or resettlement and that, therefore, the situation of the refugees continues to be a matter of serious concern;

2. Expresses its thanks to the Commissioner-General and to all the staff of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, recognizing that the Agency is doing all it can within the limits of available resources, and also expresses its thanks to the specialized agencies and private organizations for their valuable work in assisting the refugees;

3. Reiterates its request that the headquarters of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East should be relocated within the area of its operations as soon as practicable;

4. Notes with regret that the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine has been unable to find a means of achieving progress in the implementation of paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III) and requests the Commission to exert continued efforts towards the implementation of that paragraph and to report to the Assembly as appropriate, but no later than 1 October 1961;

5. Directs attention to the continuing seriousness of the financial position of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, as outlined in the report of the Commissioner-General;

6. Notes with profound concern that, despite the commendable and successful efforts of the Commissioner-General to collect additional contributions, this increased level of income to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East is still insufficient to cover essential budget requirements in the present year and that, at currently foreseen levels of giving, deficits will recur each year;

7. Calls upon all Governments as a matter of urgency to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the anticipated needs of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, particularly in the light of the budgetary deficit projected in the report of the Commissioner-General, and therefore urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions;

8. Decides to extend until 30 June 1984, without prejudice to the provisions of paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III), the mandate of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East.

A/SPC/35/L.4 and Rev.1. Bangladesh, Jordan, Lebanon, Oman, Pakistan, Qatar: draft resolution and revision, approved by Special Political Committee on 22 October, meeting 13, by recorded vote of 116 to 1, with 2 abstentions, as follows:

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon

At its April/May 1980 session, the Economic and Social Council considered a report of the Secretary-General on assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon under a co-ordinated programme authorized by the General Assembly in 1978.<sup>80</sup>

In his report, dated 20 February, the Secretary-General observed that since 1974 war and civil disturbances in Lebanon had cost the lives of over 60,000 people, led to a large-scale exodus of persons and caused widespread destruction of property. He noted that a general deterioration of services across all sectors had occurred and that the Government was experiencing serious problems in extending its authority throughout the country. These conditions necessitated an emergency programme of assistance for overall reconstruction and development. The report outlined international assistance given and pledged to Lebanon by the United Nations as well as bilaterally.

On 25 April 1980, the United Nations Coordinator, appointed by the Secretary-General in 1979 to help and advise the Lebanese Government in matters relating to reconstruction and development, presented an oral report to the Council, providing additional information on the prevailing situation, the plans and programmes of the Lebanese Government for the country's reconstruction and development and its request for United Nations assistance.

The Council adopted without vote on 29 April a resolution on the matter, sponsored by 22 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). By that resolution - 1980/15 - the Council appealed to all Governments to contribute to the reconstruction and development of Lebanon, requested the specialized agencies, organizations and programmes within the United Nations system in a position to help in this field to do so, and requested the Secretary-General to continue to render support.

In a second report, submitted on 3 October, the Secretary-General gave the General Assembly a comprehensive account of developments through mid-1980 and of the activities of the United Nations agencies and others concerned with reconstruction efforts in Lebanon. The report outlined a short-term reconstruction and development programme prepared by Lebanon's Council for Development and Reconstruction, to be financed mainly with assistance pledged by the League of Arab States at the Tenth Arab Summit Conference (Tunis, Tunisia, November 1979). At that Conference, it had been decided that the contribution of the Arab countries would be $2 billion over a five-year period, with half of that amount to be spent in the south. In addition, the Conference of Arab Ministers for Social Affairs (Beirut, Lebanon, May 1980) offered $64 million for immediate rehabilitation and relief projects in the south.

The Council for Development and Reconstruction based its programme on three criteria: economic and social priorities; whether a given project could be carried out in the existing unsatisfactory security conditions; and whether the Government could implement the different projects as well as the programme as a whole. In order to stay within the limited funds available, the Government adopted an abridged programme and provided for an expenditure of $298.5 million for 12 months, with half this amount to be spent in the south.

For its programme in the south, Lebanon designated the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) as executing agency for water-supply projects and the repair and construction of schools and hospitals. On 14 October, UNICEF and the Council for Development and Reconstruction signed an agreement according to which UNICEF would provide assistance in identifying, drawing up and implementing those projects in 1980-1981.

At its regular 1980 session, the Assembly, with the adoption of resolution 35/85 on 5 December, requested the Secretary-General to continue to render assistance which could be mobilized within the United Nations system to help Lebanon in its reconstruction and development plans and in their implementation. It noted with satisfaction the assistance already provided or pledged by a number of countries and called on the specialized agencies, organs and other bodies of the United Nations to intensify their efforts in this field.

The Assembly adopted resolution 35/85, without vote, on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee which had approved, on 19 November, also without vote, a text sponsored by 30 Members (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Chapter XIII

Situation in Cyprus

In 1980, the Security Council twice extended, by resolutions 472(1980) and 482(1980) of 13 June and 11 December, the mandate of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP).

Throughout the year, efforts to narrow the political differences between the two communities in Cyprus and to find a just, negotiated solution to the Cyprus problem continued. The Secretary-General, in pursuance of the mission of good offices entrusted to him by the Security Council, continued his efforts, directly and through his Special Representative in Cyprus, to bring the parties closer together. By August, agreement was reached by the parties, and the intercommunal talks resumed formally on 9 August and entered their substantive phase on 16 September. The Secretary-General also continued to draw attention to the worsening financial situation of the United Nations operation in Cyprus.

Having received a report of the Secretary-General on the resumption of the talks, the General Assembly in December deferred consideration of the question of Cyprus to its regular 1981 session.

In conformity with Security Council resolutions, UNFICYP continued to discharge its mandate of preventing the recurrence of fighting, as well as efforts to discharge its humanitarian functions and to promote normalization of the living conditions of citizens of both communities in Cyprus.

Details of these and other related matters are to be found in the following subchapters.

Political and related developments

Communications (January-May)

Between January and May 1980, the Secretary-General received from Cyprus and Turkey a number of communications charging provocative actions or containing statements on behalf of one or the other of the two communities in Cyprus. Those from Turkey transmitted letters from representatives of the Turkish Cypriot community.

By letters of 16 January and 22 February, Turkey transmitted letters of the same dates from Nail Atalay, identified in the covering letters as the representative of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. Mr. Atalay forwarded in the first communication a letter of 10 January from Rauf R. Denktash, who signed it as President of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, protesting against what he said were Greek Cypriot moves to exploit international forums against the Turkish Cypriot side, in particular by inviting the inter-Parliamentary Union's sub-committee on the prevention of pollution in the Mediterranean to hold a meeting in the south of Cyprus between 25 and 27 February. The invitation, he charged, had been issued to the sub-committee in the so-called capacity of the Cyprus Group of the Inter-Parliamentary Union, ignoring the Turkish Cypriot wing of the binational Republic of Cyprus, and wrongly presenting the Greek Cypriot administration as the "Government." Attached to the second letter was a communication of 14 February from Kenan Atakol, identified as Minister for Foreign Affairs, Defence and Tourism of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, charging that the Greek Cypriot administration was disseminating propaganda designed to prevent tourists from going to the north of Cyprus.

In a letter of 18 March, Cyprus charged that the Turkish Cypriot leader, Mr. Denktash, had in recent statements threatened to declare an independent State and to reopen Greek Cypriot hotels in Varosha -located outside the old walled city of Famagusta, in the vicinity of the buffer zone.

Turkey forwarded a response of 2 April from Mr. Atalay, recounting events leading to the current Turkish Cypriot administration in the north and Greek Cypriot administration in the south of the island. He stated that until a legitimate binational Government of Cyprus was established, with the two administrations united in a federal system, the Government of the Turkish Federated State of Kibris-Kibris being the Turkish name for Cyprus-had full competence to take decisions on all issues and matters within its boundaries.

In a letter of 23 April, Cyprus charged that two Turkish jet fighters had violated the airspace of the Republic of Cyprus on 17 April and strongly protested those actions. The charges were rejected in a communication of 30 April from Mr. Atalay, transmitted by Turkey in a letter of that date, who contended that the areas of overflight were under the full control and sovereignty of the Turkish Federated State of Kibris.

On 22 May, Turkey transmitted a communication of that date from Mr. Atalay forwarding a letter of 6 May from Mr. Atakol, who accused the Greek Cypriot administration of preventing aircraft rented by Turkish Cypriot Airlines from flying to and from the Turkish Federated State of Kibris, thus curtailing the freedom of travel of the Turkish people of Cyprus.

Note and reports of the Secretary-General (April and June)

By a note of 15 April 1980, the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his decision to appoint Hugo J. Gobbi of Argentina as his Special Representative in Cyprus. Mr. Gobbi, who took up his post on 8 May, succeeded Reynaldo Galindo-Pohl (Argentina) who, the note added, was relinquishing the post, as planned, after two years.

In pursuance of a General Assembly request of 20 November 1979 for a report on progress in negotiations between the two communities,<sup>1</sup> the Secretary-General reported on 2 April 1980. He thereby informed the Assembly that, despite continued intensive consultations by him and his Special Representative with those concerned, owing to the divergent and firmly held positions of the parties, efforts to bring the two communities in Cyprus to the negotiating table on the basis of a 10-point agreement for resumption of the talks, reached on 19 May 1979,<sup>2</sup> had not been successful. Intercommunal talks had been suspended since 22 June 1979.

The Secretary-General had suggested that at the opening of the resumed round of talks a statement be made by his representative, making it clear that both parties had reaffirmed the validity of the 10-point agreement and that both had submitted proposals providing for a bi-zonal territorial arrangement in respect of the bicomunal federal system referred to in a set of four principles agreed on 12 February 1977<sup>3</sup> during talks between the leaders of the two communities, Archbishop Makarios and Mr. Denktash. The opening statement would also set forth the Secretary-General's August 1979 understanding of the matters to be discussed,<sup>4</sup> which included the resettlement of Varosha, measures to promote goodwill, mutual confidence and return to normal conditions, as well as constitutional and territorial aspects. The Greek Cypriot side, he reported, said it could accept his overall approach-having in mind that the opening statement was not binding and provided that the Greek Cypriot side was given the opportunity to reserve its position on certain terms, such as bi-zonality and security, to which the parties had given conflicting interpretations-but rejected a modified approach suggested by the Turkish Cypriot side for amending the opening statement and expressing willingness to resume the talks provided that the statement describing the Secretary-General's understanding was negotiated and agreed upon as binding by both sides. The Turkish Cypriot approach, in the Greek Cypriot view, constituted a demand for pre-negotiating the basic elements of the Cyprus problem and entering into commitments consistent with the Turkish Cypriot position.

During the period under review, the Secretary-General reported, Mr. Denktash had made a number of public statements criticizing the terms of the Assembly's 1979 resolution on Cyprus<sup>5</sup> as impeding resumption of the intercommunal talks.

On 4 and 7 February, the Secretary-General had briefed the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Cyprus on his efforts to bridge the gap between the positions of the two communities. The Foreign Minister had outlined certain steps that his Government was prepared to take, including financial grants to the Turkish Cypriot community, public utility works throughout the island under the auspices of the United Nations Development Programme, and reopening the question of reactivating Nicosia International Airport. He had suggested that the Turkish Cypriot side reciprocate by agreeing to the resettlement of Varosha under United Nations auspices and by reopening the Nicosia-Larnaca road.

On 21 February, Mr. Denktash had criticized those suggestions as a "hand-out" being offered to a so-called minority, and charged that the Greek Cypriots were attacking his community in international forums and intensifying economic restrictions.

It was the Secretary-General's view that contentious issues such as the bi-zonal territorial arrangement and Turkish Cypriot security could only be dealt with productively within the framework of the intercommunal talks. He had therefore once again urged the parties to resume the talks.

On 25 and 26 March, the Greek and Turkish Cypriot leaders had reiterated their positions against and for, respectively, the notion that the opening statement of the Secretary-General's representative would have to be a binding agreement. They had also maintained their opposition to and support for, respectively, the textual modifications proposed by the Turkish Cypriots for the opening statement to reflect their position concerning bi-zonality, security and the partnership status of the communities.

On 28 March, the Secretary-General had suggested a new plan for a revised opening statement containing elements of his August 1979 proposals which would be noted by the interlocutors; the Greek Cypriot interlocutor would be able to put on record his reservation concerning the interpretation of such controversial terms such as bi-zonality and security, and thereafter the interlocutors would proceed to substantive consideration of the matters on the agenda.

On 29 March, the Cypriot Foreign Minister had indicated that this suggestion was acceptable, provided that certain changes were made in the opening statement. If those changes were accepted by the Turkish Cypriots, the Greek Cypriots would agree to consider the opening statement as binding.

On 30 March, Mr. Denktash had announced that his authorities accepted the Secretary-General's proposals and, if the Greek Cypriots also accepted them without conditions or reservations, talks could resume. He had rejected the Foreign Minister's suggestions, which, he said, would introduce the Greek Cypriot reservations into the body of the opening statement.

The Foreign Minister had criticized the Turkish Cypriot acceptance of the Secretary-General's proposals as misleading since, in opposing expression of the Greek Cypriot reservations, the Turkish Cypriots had rejected an essential component of the proposals.

The Secretary-General reported that intensive consultations had taken place from 30 March to 2 April. On 2 April, it had been ascertained that the Turkish Cypriot position remained that neither party should make any reservations. The Secretary-General continued to hold the view that intercommunal talks were the best available method for negotiating a just and lasting political settlement and would therefore pursue the mission of good offices entrusted to him by the Security Council to that end.

Before the mandate of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) expired on 15 June, the Secretary-General submitted, on 3 June, a report on the United Nations operation in Cyprus covering the period from 1 December 1979 to 31 May 1980. The report outlined UNFICYP'S work in preserving the peace in the country and in helping to maintain through its civilian police element, UNCIVPOL, law and order in areas where intercommunal problems existed. The Force also marked and recorded minefields, facilitated visits by Cypriots to relatives in opposite communities and performed other humanitarian tasks.

The report also contained information on the humanitarian assistance programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to displaced and needy persons on the island and on progress towards setting up a committee on missing persons (see following subchapter).

The Secretary-General also described in detail the efforts undertaken, within the framework of his good offices mission, to initiate an effective negotiating process, with a view to achieving a just and lasting settlement of the Cyprus problem. Those efforts, he said, had succeeded in narrowing somewhat the gap between the positions of the parties and he expressed the hope that the remaining difficulties impeding a resumption of the negotiating process might be resolved as rapidly as possible.

In light of the situation on the ground and political developments, the Secretary-General concluded that the continued presence of UNFICYP remained necessary, both in helping to maintain calm in the island and in creating the conditions in which the search for a peaceful settlement could go forward. He recommended a six-month extension of the mandate of UNFICYP, and, drawing attention to its financial situation, appealed for voluntary contributions.

In an addendum issued on 12 June, the Secretary-General stated that, following consultations, the parties concerned had signified their agreement to the proposed extension.

Consideration by the Security Council (13 June)

The Security Council met on 13 June to consider the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus. The representatives of Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also extended an invitation, under rule 39 of its provisional rules of procedure,<sup>6</sup> to Nail Atalay to participate.

Before hearing the parties, the Council, by 14 votes to 0, adopted as resolution 472(1980) a text that had been prepared in the course of consultations among Council members. China did not participate in the vote.

By that resolution, the Council, noting that the Government of Cyprus agreed that it was necessary to retain UNFICYP in Cyprus beyond 15 June, extended the stationing of the Force for a further period ending 15 December. It also urged the parties to resume the intercommunal talks, without delay, within the framework of the 10-point agreement of 19 May 1979,<sup>7</sup> in a continuing, sustained and result-oriented manner. The Secretary-General was requested to continue his good offices mission, keep the Council informed of progress, and report by 30 November.

The Secretary-General then reported orally to the Council on the results of high-level consultations that Javier Pérez de Cuéllar, Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Affairs, had undertaken in Nicosia, Ankara and Athens on his behalf from 5 to 12 June, to try to find a mutually acceptable procedural device that would enable the parties to return to the negotiating table. The Under-Secretary-General had explored the possibility of instituting the following procedural arrangement: the Secretary-General's representative would deliver the opening statement; the interlocutors would remain silent; his representative would then point out that the statement represented the Secretary-General's understanding, and that both sides would have the opportunity to express their opinion in depth about certain concepts in the context of the discussion of constitutional and territorial aspects.

On 7 June, the President of Cyprus, Spyros Kyprianou, had informed the Under-Secretary-General that the Greek Cypriot side had decided to accept the arrangement. However, Mr. Denktash had informed him that the Turkish Cypriot side was unable to accept the additional remark by the Secretary-General's representative, which it felt would diminish the significance of the opening statement by introducing de facto reservations. The Turkish Cypriots would accept the procedure of the opening statement, to which the two interlocutors would refrain from responding; however, the omission of the additional remark continued to be unacceptable to the Greek Cypriots.

The Secretary-General said he would continue to pursue his mission of good offices.

Cyprus said that, in the light of the rejection by the Turkish side of the Secretary-General's latest formula, it was high time the Council demanded resumption of the talks without pre-conditions and simply on the basis of the 10-point agreement. The interpolation into the talks of two unacceptable pre-conditions-bizonality and security-in view of the interpretation given to them by their proponents, had become the resultant of the basic differences in the approaches of the two sides. Cyprus also expressed the hope that the Council would not lose sight of the gravity of the situation created by Turkey's colonization policies-its continuing implantation of colonist settlers from Turkey in the occupied areas-which contradicted the letter and the spirit of numerous United Nations resolutions on Cyprus, the 1977 Makarios/Denktaş guidelines* and the 10-point agreement. Cyprus also stressed that if Turkey persisted in its intransigence and continued its military occupation, along with efforts to consolidate faits accomplis, then the Council would be duty-bound to consider effective measures to solve the Cyprus problem, principally by ensuring compliance with its decisions and those of the Secretary-General.

Greece expressed regret that, despite the efforts of the Secretary-General and the readiness of the Government of Cyprus, the Turkish Cypriot leaders persisted in refusing to sit at the negotiating table. Both that leadership and the Turkish Government continued to disregard a long series of United Nations resolutions calling for the withdrawal of all foreign troops from the territory of the Republic of Cyprus, the return of the 200,000 refugees to their homes and respect for the independence, territorial integrity and non-alignment of the Republic. As Greece saw it, an equitable solution of the problem of Cyprus resided in the implementation of the many Assembly and Council resolutions on the subject and in negotiations between the two communities, conducted without outside interference and without pre-conditions, on the basis of the 10-point agreement.

Mr. Atalay, representing the Turkish Cypriot community, said that so long as the Greek Cypriot leadership continued its attempts to take the peace-making efforts off their normal track, namely the intercommunal talks, the continued presence of UNFICYP in the island, without a change in its modus operandi or mandate to adapt to circumstances currently prevailing there, would not be effective in facilitating intercommunal negotiations but would merely consolidate the claims and the position of the Greek Cypriot administration. He objected to the use of the term "Government of Cyprus" in the resolution to describe the administration, a reference which, he said, made the resolution completely unacceptable. He charged that the Greek Cypriots were waging an intense economic and political campaign against the Turkish Cypriots with a view to bringing about their eventual collapse. It was time, he said, that the Greek Cypriots and their leaders realized that the realistic approach of the Turkish Cypriot people, calling for a lasting solution based on the equal partnership of the two communities of the island in an independent, non-aligned, bicomunal and bi-zonal federal republic, deserved a serious and reasonable expression of goodwill.

Turkey expressed the view that the key to progress towards a comprehensive settlement lay in the conduct of the intercommunal talks within the framework of the good offices mission of the Secretary-General. Turkey was determined to encourage all efforts designed to achieve a viable solution within the framework of the Denktash/Makarios guidelines and the 10-point agreement, which, in its view, had laid the foundation for a solution based on the fundamental and legitimate rights of the two communities within an independent, non-aligned, bicomunal and bi-zonal federal republic. Turkey continued to believe that Greece and Turkey should assist and encourage the two Cypriot communities to find a just and lasting solution of their problem through intercommunal talks. Turkey said its compliance or co-operation with the peace-keeping effort that was the subject of the resolution just adopted would be conditional upon the exclusion of the concept of an existing Government of Cyprus.

The USSR said it supported the solution of the Cyprus question on the basis of ensuring the genuine independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Cyprus and strict observance of its policy of non-alignment. Favouring the demilitarization of the island, the USSR vigorously condemned foreign intervention in the internal affairs of Cyprus and opposed any attempts to infringe its sovereignty or to resolve the problem behind the backs of its people or through the imposition of plans and decisions alien to them or detrimental to their vital interests. The USSR also stressed that any positive results of the intercommunal talks should be consolidated either in Council decisions or by means of a United Nations-sponsored international conference.

The German Democratic Republic supported the convening of such a conference. It added that the withdrawal of all foreign troops from and the cessation of foreign presence in the island would constitute decisive steps towards a solution of the problem, and at the same time promote the cause of detente and strengthen the security of peoples in the Mediterranean area. While it had agreed to the extension of UNFICYP's mandate, it wished to point out that continual extension did not solve the problem.

France, the United Kingdom and the United States expressed gratitude for the Secretary-General's efforts to bring peace to Cyprus. France emphasized that a settlement should be achieved on the basis of justice and in accordance with international law; it could not be achieved unless the parties made an effort at compromise. The United Kingdom and the United States echoed the concern expressed by the Secretary-General about the financial situation of UNFICYP. Noting the disproportionate burden placed on troop contributors and on some other States that had responded to appeals for funds, they urged a generous response to the Secretary-General's latest appeal for voluntary contributions.

The United Kingdom expressed the hope that the intercommunal talks would be resumed promptly, as it agreed with the Secretary-General that they represented the best available method for negotiating a political settlement of the Cyprus problem. The United States urged the parties to the dispute to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General and to agree to resume sustained and serious negotiations.

Mexico said that the near-ritual renewal of the mandate, for more than 15 years, should not be allowed to perpetuate the division of Cyprus. It had been intended to encourage the parties to reach a solution, prevent clashes and facilitate contacts; however, its current primary task was overseeing the cease-fire. Mexico wondered whether the problems of the Force's deficit might be solved by adapting UNFICYP to its practical functions. Mexico feared that the sense of nationality in Cyprus was being lost; should the tendency continue, it added, Cyprus might become a nation divided under the auspices of the United Nations.

Jamaica agreed with the view that direct intercommunal talks under the Secretary-General's auspices and based on the lo-point agreement constituted the best possible approach to a just settlement.

Communications (June-August)

In a letter of 30 June to all States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies, the Secretary-General appealed for additional voluntary contributions for the financing of UNFICYP. Because voluntary contributions consistently fell short of needs, there was an accumulated deficit of more than $58 million up to 15 December 1979. Still required was an estimated $10.8 million of the $13.2 million needed to meet costs for the six-month period ending 15 June 1980, leaving about $25.5 million to be met by troop-contributing countries.

In July and August, Cyprus and Turkey sent a series of communications to the Secretary-General, most of which protested against unfriendly actions or statements by representatives of one community against the other. ;

In letters of 25 and 29 July, Cyprus protested the content and purport of, respectively, a press statement referring to the strategic importance of Cyprus to Turkey, made by the former Minister for Foreign Affairs of Turkey on 20 July, and a statement that there existed two independent States in Cyprus, made by Mr. Denktash on 25 July. Cyprus charged that such statements revealed Turkey's expansionist aims and undermined current efforts to bring about the resumption of intercommunal talks.

On 4 August, Turkey transmitted a communication of that date from Mr. Atalay, forwarding a letter of 25 July from Mr. Denktash. The Turkish Cypriot leader expressed concern that recent statements by President Kyprianou cast doubt on the latter's intentions of seeking a bicomunal and bi-zonal federal solution because of his continuing insistence on a biregional solution-giving local regional powers to the Turkish Cypriots within a unitary State-and speaking about the return of all refugees to their homes. Public statements by Mr. Denktash of 23 and 24 July contrasting the concepts of biregionality and bizonality were appended to his letter.

On 26 and 27 August, Turkey transmitted two letters of the same dates from Mr. Atalay, forwarding messages of 4 and 26 August from Mr. Denktash. In these, Mr. Denktash charged that the Greek Cypriots were planning to exterminate the Turkish Cypriots and expressed concern and disappointment that the United Nations Secretariat had expressed regret to the Foreign Ministry of Cyprus about the use, in a recent issue of the UNFICYP magazine Blue Beret, of the Turkish names "Lefkosa" instead of "Nicosia" and "Kibris" instead of "Cyprus."

In a letter of 20 August, Cyprus rejected the allegations by Mr. Denktash that its Government had plans to exterminate the Turkish Cypriots-allegations which, Cyprus said, had subsequently been published in the Turkish Cypriot Special News Bulletin on 19 August.

Report of the Secretary-General (11 August)

On 11 August, the Secretary-General reported that on 6 August his Special Representative in Cyprus had informed him that agreement had been reached by the two parties to resume the talks formally on 9 August; with the substantive phase to begin in Nicosia on 16 September.

At the 9 August meeting, held at Nicosia, the Special Representative had delivered the following opening statement on the Secretary-General's behalf.

I note that both parties have indicated their readiness to resume the intercommunal talks, which were recessed in consultation with the parties on 22 June 1979, and to do so within the framework of the good offices mission entrusted to the Secretary-General by the Security Council and on the basis of the high-level agreements of 12 February 1977 and 19 May 1979.

Both parties have, in this regard, signified their intention to carry out the resumed talks in a continuing and sustained manner, to get down to concrete negotiations, discussing constructively, and giving full consideration to, all aspects of the Cyprus problem. In this connexion, I should like to outline the Secretary-General's understanding of the common ground that was worked out in the course of consultations which have taken place over the past several months:

(a) both parties have reaffirmed the validity of the high-level agreements of 12 February 1977 and 19 May 1979;

(b) both parties have reaffirmed their support for a federal solution of the constitutional aspect and a bi-zonal solution of the territorial aspect of the Cyprus problem;

(c) both parties have indicated that the matter of security can be raised and discussed in the intercommunal talks; it is understood that this matter will be discussed, having regard to certain practical difficulties which may arise for the Turkish Cypriot community, as well as to the security of Cyprus as a whole;

(d) both parties have appealed to the Secretary-General for the continuation of the intercommunal talks.

The practical implementation of the concepts in (b) and (c) above will be dealt with in the context of the substantive consideration of the constitutional and territorial aspects and will be reflected in the substantive positions and proposals of the parties concerning the various items of the agenda.

Concerning the matters to be discussed, the Secretary-General understands, on the basis of the 19 May agreement, that these will include the following subjects:

(a) reaching agreement on the resettlement of Varosha under United Nations auspices, in accordance with the provisions of point 5 of the 19 May agreement;

(b) initial practical measures by both sides to promote goodwill, mutual confidence and the return to normal conditions, in accordance with the provisions of point 6, which states that special importance will be given to this matter;

(c) constitutional aspects;

(d) territorial aspects.

Concerning procedure, it is understood that the four items above should be dealt with concurrently in rotation at consecutive meetings. At an appropriate early stage, committees or working groups will be set up by the interlocutors.

Action by the General Assembly

By a letter of 11 September, Turkey forwarded a communication of the same date to the President of the General Assembly from Mr. Atalay who requested that, in view of the resumption of talks on 16 September, the item on the question of Cyprus not be included in the agenda of the current session. Should the Assembly decide otherwise, he requested a revision of the procedure followed the previous year, i.e. he asked that the item be allocated to an appropriate committee, rather than to the plenary Assembly, so as to enable the Turkish Cypriot side to participate in the debate on the basis of equality with the Greek Cypriot side.

The following day, Turkey transmitted to the Secretary-General a letter of 12 September from Mr. Atalay forwarding a letter of that date from Mr. Denktash, who protested the representation of Cyprus at the Assembly's 1980 regular session by a delegation composed exclusively of Greek Cypriots. Anything said or done by such a delegation, he said, would not be binding on the Turkish people of Cyprus.

In pursuance of the Assembly's 1979 resolution on the question of Cyprus,<sup>9</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report, dated 25 November 1980, in which he informed the Assembly of the formal resumption of the intercommunal talks. It had been agreed, he said, that the proceedings would be kept confidential. At nine private meetings held between 16 September and 19 November, each of the four items of the agenda had been discussed at least twice, the parties having stated their initial positions and first substantive responses. While progress had been slow, the discussions had been constructive. It seemed evident, he said, that all concerned had accepted the process of the talks, carried out under his auspices, as the best available way of working towards a freely negotiated, just and lasting settlement and towards the objectives of the United Nations concerning the Cyprus problem.

The Assembly did not take up the question of Cyprus at its 1980 session. Instead, on 10 December by decision 35/428, orally proposed by the Assembly President and adopted without vote, the Assembly deferred consideration of the question, deciding to include it in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth (1981) session.

Report of the Secretary-General (1 December)

On 1 December, before the mandate of UNFICYP expired (on 15 December), the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report on the United Nations operation in Cyprus covering the period from 1 June to 30 November.

He reported that UNFICYP had continued to perform its peace-keeping functions along the cease-fire lines and provide escorts for civilians in the area between the lines, as well as its humanitarian functions (see following subchapter). Its activities, with the co-operation of the parties, had contributed to keeping the situation in the island calm.

The Secretary-General reported on the resumption of intercommunal talks, as he had reported to the Assembly on 25 November (see preceding section).

Surveillance over the area between the lines, he continued, was based on a system of 136 observation posts—63 permanently manned with standing patrols deployed as required. In cases of complaints about overflights, UNFICYP used available liaison channels with the parties to prevent worsening of the situation. It also continued to mark suspected minefields. A new set of guidelines issued by the Turkish Cypriot side in December 1979 had led to improvement of the freedom of movement of UNFICYP, he said, although routes and hours remained limited.

The financial situation continued to be a cause for growing concern. Voluntary contributions of about $262.2 million had been paid to the UNFICYP special account by 66 States since its inception on 27 March 1964, and $7.3 million from other sources; however, the deficit of the account was currently over $80 million, and claims of troop contributors, sometimes only a fraction of the actual costs incurred, had been paid only up to March 1976. Costs for an additional six-month period, from 15 December, were estimated at $14.8 million.

The Secretary-General also reported that he had established in May a Secretariat Survey Team in response to the serious concerns of troop contributors over their disproportionate financial burden. It met in New York during May and June and visited Cyprus for nine days from 17 June. In the Team's report, annexed to the Secretary-General's report, the Team indicated certain courses of action to reduce the cost of UNFICYP. These included: across-the-board reductions in manpower levels; withdrawal of certain units; a one-year experimental reorganization involving alternating contingents at six-month intervals, or withdrawal of one contingent and adding two companies to another; and negotiating arrangements under which Cyprus would assume a share of the costs of economic and humanitarian services, in which the two sides would absorb utility costs for UNFICYP, and in which the Turkish Cypriot community would reduce or eliminate restrictions on UNFICYP's freedom of movement and deployment. Should UNFICYP's mandate be extended, the Secretary-General said he intended to proceed along these lines, in consultation with the parties.

In light of the situation on the ground and of political developments, the Secretary-General again concluded that the continued presence of UNFICYP remained necessary, both in helping to maintain calm in the island and in creating the conditions in which the search for a peaceful settlement could best be pursued. He therefore recommended that its mandate be extended for another six months. In an addendum issued on 11 December, the Secretary-General stated that, following consultations, the parties concerned had signified their concurrence in such an extension.

Security Council (11 December)

The Security Council met on 11 December to consider the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus. The representatives of Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were again invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also extended an invitation, under rule 39 of the provisional rules of procedure,<sup>10</sup> to Nail Atalay, representative of the Turkish Cypriot community.

Before hearing the parties, the Council adopted, as resolution 482(1980), a text which had been prepared in the course of consultations among its members. The resolution received 14 affirmative votes; China did not participate in the voting.

By the resolution, the Council-noting that the Government of Cyprus had agreed that it was necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 December-noted with satisfaction the resumption of the intercommunal talks, urged their continuation, extended UNFICYP's mandate until 15 June 1981 and requested the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices and to submit a report by 31 May 1981.

Speaking after the adoption of the resolution, the Secretary-General assured Council members that UNFICYP would continue to carry out its function of helping to maintain calm in the island and creating conditions in which the search for a peaceful settlement could best be pursued. Since the resumption of the intercommunal talks, the two interlocutors had met almost weekly and had discussed the four items on the agenda in a good and businesslike atmosphere. He expressed his intention of maintaining direct personal contact with the parties to review progress and, when appropriate, to explore procedures that might facilitate the conduct of the negotiations.

Cyprus said the dialogue, while conducted in a constructive and cordial atmosphere, had been limited mostly to reiteration of positions. There had been no tangible progress on important matters of substance, although there had been limited indications of possible agreement in limited areas. He stated that his Government would do nothing that might adversely affect the ongoing negotiating process.

Greece said that the essence of the problem consisted in applying the fundamental principles of the Charter, which had been reaffirmed in a long series of Assembly and Council resolutions stressing the need to respect the sovereignty, territorial integrity, constitutional unity and non-alignment of Cyprus and asking for the withdrawal of all foreign occupying troops, as well as the return of all refugees to their homes. Greece reiterated its concern over the fact that it had not been possible to shed light on the fate of some 2,000 missing persons in Cyprus (see following subchapter).

Mr. Atalay said that direct intercommunal talks on an equal footing under the auspices of the Secretary-General were the best approach to a just and final settlement of the question of Cyprus. He expressed the hope that the Greek Cypriots would show an earnest desire for fruitful co-operation between the communities. For their part, the Turks of Cyprus continued to be prepared to help in the creation of the feeling of mutual trust. He objected again to the use of the term "Government of Cyprus" in resolution 482(1980).

Turkey expressed gratitude to the Secretary-General, who had succeeded in persuading both Cypriot communities to resume the talks which, in its view, remained the best route to a peaceful, just and lasting solution. Turkey reaffirmed its full support for his good offices mission. It again expressed its reservation on the use of the term "Government of Cyprus" in resolution 482(1980), and maintained its reservations and positions on earlier resolutions mentioned in the text. Turkey also expressed regret that reference had not been made to the opening statement of the Secretary-General of 9 August (see section above), on which, it said, additional to the 1977 and 1979 agreements, the talks had been resumed.

Further communications by the Secretary-General

In a letter of 15 December, the Secretary-General informed the President of the Security Council of his intention to appoint Major-General Guenther G. Greindl of Austria as Commander of UNFICYP in replacement of Major-General James Joseph Quinn of Ireland. On 19 December, the Council President replied that the members of the Council, at consultations on 17 December, had agreed with the proposal; China, not having participated in the voting on the relevant resolutions, had dissociated itself from the matter.

In a letter of 24 December, the Secretary-General made a new appeal to all States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies for additional voluntary contributions for the financing of UNFICYP.

Humanitarian matters

Humanitarian assistance

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees continued during 1980 to act as Co-ordinator of United Nations Humanitarian Assistance for Cyprus, as he had been doing since 1974. The High Commissioner, in consultation with the Government of Cyprus and with the support of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP), assured the provision of aid to some 200,000 Cypriots displaced by the military operations of August 1974.

Contributions for humanitarian assistance channelled through the Office of the High Commissioner from 1974 to 30 November 1980 amounted to approximately $131 million in cash and kind, according to the Secretary-General's report of 1 December on the United Nations operation in Cyprus (see subchapter above). Obligations in 1980 totalled $15,240,223, of which $7,927,760 was for shelter, $4,215,000 for health and medical supplies, $1,693,844 for forestry and agriculture, $546,165 for construction and equipment of educational facilities, and $272,831 for supplementary assistance to diverse groups.

Particular emphasis was given in 1980 to developing and improving medical facilities and supplies, wherever possible in co-operation with the World Health Organization. Assistance was continued for agriculture, small businesses and handicrafts with the aim of re-establishing the self-sufficiency of the population in their traditional occupations. Special attention was given to the elderly and handicapped and to improving educational facilities, mainly in the field of vocational training. More low-cost housing was built to replace temporary shelters.

Reporting to the Security Council in June and December on the United Nations operation in Cyprus (see preceding subchapter), the Secretary-General said that the 1980 humanitarian assistance programme, co-ordinated by the Cyprus Red Cross Society, provided $15,101,000 to finance 17 projects. Contributions since 1974 had come from 38 Governments ($121.7 million), non-governmental organizations and other donors ($382,417), and the European Economic Community ($8.9 million in kind). Another major contributor had been the World Food Programme, while UNFICYP continued its support, delivering 699 tons of food and other relief supplies in northern Cyprus during the year ended 30 November 1980: 513 tons to Greek Cypriots and Maronites and 186 tons to Turkish Cypriots. Delivery of medicines to the Turkish Cypriot community was made on a regular basis.

Among the activities of the civilian police element of UNFICYP—UNCIVPOL—was the distribution of social welfare payments to Greek Cypriots in the north. In addition, it assisted in the control of movement of civilians in the area between the cease-fire lines, escorted travellers, inquired into complaints of certain criminal activity, and continued to maintain a missing persons bureau at UNFICYP headquarters in Nicosia.

Missing persons in Cyprus

The Secretary-General reported in December that he had continued his efforts during 1980 to find a solution to the problem of setting up an investigatory body to trace and account for missing persons of both communities in Cyprus. He acted in accordance with a 1978 resolution by which the General Assembly had urged the establishment of such a body to include representatives of the parties, chaired by a representative of the Secretary-General with the co-operation of the International Committee of the Red Cross.<sup>11</sup> This resolution also empowered the Secretary-General's representative, in case of disagreement among the body's members, to reach a binding decision which was to be implemented.

In his 3 June report to the Security Council on the United Nations operation in Cyprus (see p. 450), the Secretary-General noted that he had been unable to proceed further in implementing that resolution, since the two parties had not appointed their representatives. On 21 March, the Turkish Cypriots submitted a paper, requesting that it be passed to the Greek Cypriots, in which they reiterated their view that the decisions of the Committee on Missing Persons should be taken by consensus.

At the end of April, in an exchange of public statements on the establishment of the Committee, the two sides restated their original positions: the Government of Cyprus reaffirmed its support for the 1978 resolution, while the Turkish Cypriot community stressed its adherence to an Assembly resolution of 16 December 1977 on missing persons in Cyprus,<sup>12</sup> which also supported the establishment of an investigatory body but made no reference to the powers of the Secretary-General's representative. The Secretary-General continued to explore ideas for overcoming the impasse, and, in his December report to the Security Council (see p. 454), noted renewed intensive consultations between himself and his representatives and the parties.

Other matters

The question of human rights in Cyprus was on the 1980 agendas of the Commission on Human Rights and the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination.

On 7 March, the Human Rights Commission postponed consideration of the item until 1981, with due priority at that session, with the understanding that action required pursuant to its previous resolutions on this subject would continue to remain operative, including a request to the Secretary-General to provide a report to the Commission concerning their implementation.

The sixth periodic report of Cyprus was considered by the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination at its March/April session, together with an introductory statement made by the Cypriot representative, who affirmed that no cases of racial discrimination had been brought before the courts in Cyprus during the reporting period. On 8 April, the Committee approved a decision reiterating its expectation and hope that the Government of Cyprus would soon be enabled to exercise its full responsibility for implementing all its obligations under the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination<sup>13</sup> on its whole national territory and expressed again its hope for the success of United Nations measures to put an end to the unacceptable state of affairs in Cyprus.

Equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council

In 1980, as in 1979, the General Assembly postponed consideration of a proposal to increase the membership of the Security Council from 15 to 21 States.

In 1979, after having discussed the question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Council, the Assembly had decided to transmit to its 1980 session the documents submitted in 1979 on that subject.*

On 17 September 1980, the General Committee recommended, by 15 votes to 7, with 1 abstention, that the Assembly include the item in the agenda of its current session. France, Greece, Mauritius, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States spoke in opposition to this proposal. The Assembly noted the Committee's action when it adopted the agenda on 19 September.

India introduced in the Assembly a draft resolution which, twice revised, was sponsored also by Algeria, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Cuba, Ghana, Grenada, Guyana, Iraq, Kenya, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nepal, Nigeria, Seychelles, Sri Lanka, Tunisia, the United Republic of Cameroon, and Zambia. It called for the Charter of the United Nations' to be amended to increase the membership of the Security Council from 15 to 21, and to raise from 9 to 14 the number of affirmative votes needed to effect Council decisions. In the election of the 16 non-permanent members, five were to be drawn from African States, four from Asian States, one from Eastern European States, three from Latin American States and two from Western European and other States; one seat would alternate between Latin American States, on the one hand, and three of the four other regional groups of States at the United Nations, on the other, in the following sequence: Latin American States, African States, Latin American States, Western European and other States, Latin American States, Eastern European States, and so on.

India recalled that since the Charter had last been amended in 1963 to enlarge the Council membership from 11 to 15, total United Nations membership had increased from 113 to 154, with the new Members coming almost entirely from Asia, Africa and Latin America. Those regions remained glaringly under-represented in the Council. One solution was to redistribute the existing non-permanent seats in stricter proportion to the number of countries represented in the regional groups; the other, which the sponsors supported, was to increase the number of non-permanent seats by six. The proposal impinged only on the composition of the Council and did not seek in any way to alter the substantive aspects of its role and functions or the position of its permanent members.

Historically, India said, the capacity of the Council to discharge its functions had been governed by factors involving the interests of the great powers; it had almost never been due to the size of that body. Further, States of the non-aligned movement within the Council had time and again played a constructive role in evolving solutions to crucial problems deadlocked because of the predispositions of one or other of the great powers.

The need for an increase in the size of the Council was also voiced by Japan, Mauritius, Nigeria, the United Republic of Cameroon, and Zambia. Japan, however, believed a decision should be taken only after thorough deliberations among all United Nations Member States, and, while it would go along with an increase of six, it believed four would be more appropriate. Both Japan and Mauritius cautioned that any revision of the Charter involved matters which must be considered further.

Those speaking in favour of the increase shared the view that the current composition of the non-permanent members of the Council deviated from the principle of equitable geographic distribution as stipulated in the Charter. Nigeria asked how the current membership of the Council could represent or compensate for the emergence of more than 50 African States. Mauritius said that the permanent members, when unable to act in concert, had at times given over the drafting of a resolution to non-aligned, non-permanent members and, by this procedure, had managed to have a workable Council in certain delicate situations. That process should work even more effectively with greater numerical latitude, to the advantage of the permanent members, whose power of veto was in no way affected by the number of votes cast against them. In the view of the United Republic of Cameroon, the Council's lack of effectiveness resulted not from the number of members but from the tendency of the great powers to base their decisions on crucial problems facing international society on their own geostrategic interests.

Countering the argument that all States had access to the Council whenever they wished to express their views, Nigeria said those from Africa and other non-aligned countries wanted to be part of the decision-making process; they did not want to be invited to be guests at the master's table. All States had a duty to participate in the search for world peace and security, agreed Zambia, rejecting the notion that only certain States had the wisdom to know what was good for all countries and peoples.

Czechoslovakia, France, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States opposed any increase in the size of the Council.

Czechoslovakia was among those which held that the provisions of the Charter were fully adequate for fulfilling the principal task of the United Nations—the maintenance and strengthening of international peace and security; if anything should be revised or increased, it should be the political will of States to comply with those provisions. All social and economic groups were represented in the Council in such a way that it was impossible for any decision to be taken against their will, the German Democratic Republic observed.

Addressing the question of effectiveness, Hungary said the larger an organ like the Council became, the less apt it was to act quickly and to take whatever measures might be necessary. An increase in membership would have an adverse effect on the efficient functioning of the Council, which was required to take urgent and agreed decisions in complex and swiftly developing circumstances, the USSR said. Any increase was bound to be at the cost of efficiency and decisiveness, concurred the United States.

Disputing the view that an increase in the Council's membership would strengthen the role of the United Nations, France said the Council must pay attention to the balance which existed in the world, from the economic and military point of view in particular. If the Council were to adopt decisions unacceptable to the States that had special responsibilities under the Charter, those decisions would not be implemented because they could not be imposed on those States against their will; hence the authority of the Council and of the Organization as a whole would be weakened. A similar point was made by the USSR, which said an increase in the Council's membership could only be detrimental to the effectiveness of the Organization, weakening and undermining its authority. To imagine a situation in which effective decisions could be imposed on those States with special responsibilities was to ignore the economic, political and military realities of the world, said the United States. Such a development would severely undermine the ability of the United Nations to act in situations that threatened international peace and security.

If the proposal were adopted, the United Kingdom said, it would mean that for the first time in the history of the United Nations a single political group would by itself command the number of votes required for the Council to adopt decisions; the balance which had existed since 1945 would be destroyed. That could provoke a constitutional crisis which would not only paralyse the Council but could also call into question the very basis of the whole Organization.

On behalf of the sponsors and supported by the Sudan, speaking on behalf of the African group—India orally proposed postponing the voting on the draft resolution until January

1981, to give representatives time to consult their Governments. The Assembly agreed, without vote. It incorporated this action in decision 35/450 of 17 December by which, in suspending its 1980 session, the Assembly decided to meet again on 15 January 1981 for the sole purpose of considering this and three other agenda items: the election of two members of the International Court of Justice, the question of Namibia, and the launching of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development.

The subject was again postponed on 15 January, at the sponsors' request, until the following day, when the Assembly President orally proposed, following consultations with the sponsors, that the item be postponed and reconsidered at an unspecified later date, to be announced after further consultations. The Assembly so decided, without objection.

Composition of relevant organs

On 3 November 1980, the General Assembly adopted without objection decision 35/404, by which it decided to include in the provisional agenda of its regular 1981 session the question of the composition of the relevant organs of the United Nations. The Assembly acted on the recommendation of its Special Political Committee, which discussed the matter concerning the representative character of organs of the United Nations within the framework of the geographical regions on 30 October. The Committee then accepted without objection an oral proposal of its Chairman that the item be postponed.

Rationalization of the procedures and organization of the General Assembly

Continuing in 1980 consideration of the rationalization of its procedures and organization, the General Assembly on 20 October adopted without vote resolution 35/5, by which it declared as a temporary measure, with some exceptions, a one-year moratorium on the establishment of new subsidiary organs. Preparatory work for special United Nations conferences was to be carried out by existing organs and the duration of the sessions of Assembly subsidiary organs reduced whenever possible. The Assembly requested such organs to make a greater effort to schedule their meetings on a biennial basis.

The resolution was recommended by the Assembly's Ad Hoc Committee on Subsidiary Organs, which, on 28 July, had approved a draft submitted by its Chairman. Before it was adopted, the Committee's text was amended in the Assembly by Nigeria, Romania and Venezuela to incorporate exceptions to the one-year moratorium on new Assembly subsidiaries: the moratorium would not apply to Assembly resolutions which envisaged the preparation of documents for which new organs might be necessary, to previous Assembly resolutions which envisaged the establishment of subsidiary organs, or to the necessary arrangements for global economic negotiations. The three-power amendment was adopted without vote.

While not opposing the consensus, France felt that the amendment would remove all content and meaning from the Ad Hoc Committee's recommendations.

The Ad Hoc Committee on Subsidiary Organs, appointed by the Assembly in 1979 to review the question of the continuation of subsidiary organs with a view to making recommendations thereon to the Assembly," had held two meetings in 1980, on 27 February and 28 July, as well as informal consultations.

When organizing the work of its thirty-fifth (1980) session, the General Assembly adopted without vote on 19 September decision 35/401, approving recommendations of the General Committee with respect to the duration of the general debate, the closing date of the session, issuance of verbatim and summary records for the Main Committees and discontinuance of the practice of issuing statements as separate documents, and authorization for the United Nations Council for Namibia, the Committee on Relations with the Host Country and the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People to hold meetings during the session.

The General Committee had approved the recommendations without vote on 17 September, based on suggestions and proposals contained in a memorandum by the Secretary-General.

Complaint by Malta against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

Communications

In a letter dated 1 September 1980, addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of Malta requested an urgent meeting of the Council to consider what he charged was illegal action taken by the Libyan Government on 20 August. Libyan warships, he said, had surrounded a Maltese oil rig and forcefully halted its drilling operations. The representative of the drilling company in Tripoli had also been threatened. Malta considered the incident to be potentially dangerous to international peace and security, and asked the Council to ask the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to desist from making further provocative threats and from taking menacing actions.

The representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, in a communication to the Council President dated 3 September, stated that his Government viewed the Maltese-Libyan dispute over the continental shelf as a bilateral issue that could be settled through, and remained the subject of, negotiations between the two countries. The Libyan Government, he said, was still considering an unratified agreement of 23 May 1976 to submit the matter to the International Court of Justice. That being the case, oil drilling operations were unexpected and should not have taken place before the Court's resolution. Nevertheless, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya affirmed that it had not taken any measure likely to disturb peace and security and therefore it was unnecessary to convene the Security Council. It also noted that it had welcomed current mediation efforts of the Chairman of the Non-Aligned Movement.

On 4 September, Malta charged in a further letter that the Libyan representative had misrepresented the facts. The Libyan side had delayed signing the 1976 agreement for four years. To call the Maltese drilling unexpected was inaccurate; notice had been given in November 1979, without Libyan protest or comment. Moreover, Malta said it was absurd to give the impression that the Libyan Government was seeking a peaceful solution when currently a Libyan naval vessel was moored to one of the rig's buoys, approximately 130 miles from the Libyan coastline, to enforce Libyan demands.

Security Council meeting (4 September)

The Security Council met on 4 September in response to Malta's request of 1 September. The representatives of Malta and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The representative of Malta gave a detailed account of the incidents which had led to his country's request. Malta, he said, had authorized a United States company to commence off-shore exploration activities well within Malta's half of the dividing line between Malta and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. An Italian rig, Saipem Due, under subcontract had undertaken drilling operations in the area.

On 20 August, following a threatening message to quit the area from the Libyan Secretary of Oil to the concessionaires, Libyan warships had appeared and ordered a halt to drilling operations, threatening the use of force in the case of non-compliance. A continuing show of force by Libyan warships had escalated since that time to the point where the master of the rig had had to solicit the protection of the Italian Navy.

Malta found the Libyan attitude not only dangerous but inexplicable, particularly in view of Malta's policy of fostering good relations with all countries. Having anticipated that the resources of the sea-bed separating the two countries might be an element of discord, Malta had in 1972 taken the initiative of negotiating the agreement finally signed in 1976 under which any competing claims of national jurisdiction over the continental shelf would be referred to the International Court of Justice for adjudication.

While Malta had lost no time in completing the necessary legal processes, the Libyan Government, despite frequent assurances, had not ratified it. The delays were having disastrous repercussions on Malta's economy, finally forcing its Government to authorize previously licensed drilling operations to begin, in an area that had not been contested by Libya when details of the licences were first made public in 1974, and which were limited to a zone more than 15 miles north of the median line between the two countries.

Malta did not expect the Security Council to pronounce itself on the legal merits of the case, nor was it asking for reprimands. All it wanted was that it be allowed, without harassment, to carry out legitimate activities in accordance with international law.

The representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said his Government was anxious to maintain friendly relations with Malta and requested that the Council postpone consideration of the matter in order that he might study the Maltese statement and consult his Government.

The Council agreed to the Libyan request and adjourned without fixing a date for resumption of the meeting.

Further communications

In a letter dated 11 September, Malta stated that, since the adjournment of the Council meeting, the threat of force by Libyan warships had continued until the drilling rig had been compelled to withdraw to Italian waters. Furthermore, the Libyan Government had given no assurances that it would not harass or threaten oil firms enjoying concessions from the Maltese Government. Malta was concerned that, should recourse to the Council prove to have been futile, it would have no other choice but to ask for help from third countries.

On 19 September and 13 October, Malta again charged that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya refused to renounce the use of force and was looking for excuses to avoid referring the matter to the International Court of Justice. It urged the Council to undertake the necessary deliberations so that Malta would avoid having to take its own defensive actions at the risk of endangering peace and security in the area.

In a letter dated 16 September, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya reaffirmed the main points of its letter of 3 September and added that, since the criteria for delimitation of the continental shelf was a subject of negotiations at the ongoing Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, it was not permissible for either party to carry out exploration activities in a disputed area before the issue was resolved. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya reiterated that the issue of the continental shelves of the two countries was a technical issue that could be resolved through bilateral agreements, including resort to the International Court of Justice.

On 17 October, the Secretary-General informed the President of the Security Council that, following consultations with the parties and with their agreement, he intended to send a special representative to both countries to assist in the search for a mutually acceptable solution.

On 22 October, the Secretary-General was informed by the President that the Council members agreed to his proposal.

Report of the Secretary-General

The Secretary-General, on 13 November, submitted to the Security Council a report prepared on the basis of consultations held in Malta and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, from 29 October to 2 November, by his Special Representative, Diego Cordóvez.

The Secretary-General had conveyed his view to the two Governments that the early ratification of the 1976 agreement would be an essential first step towards an easing of tensions between the two countries. He observed that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya did not accept unilateral responsibility for delay in ratification. The terms of the agreement had been periodically subjected to further discussion and complex negotiations in which modifications were discussed, and subsequent exchanges between the two Governments had led to a deterioration in their relations.

The Secretary-General reported that the Libyan Government had undertaken unconditionally to submit the original text of the agreement to the Libyan Popular Congresses for ratification at their current session, with a view to formulating a joint notification to the International Court of Justice in early December. While rejecting any legal justification of Malta's decision to commence drilling operations in the disputed area, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had reaffirmed its willingness to continue and strengthen relations of friendship and co-operation with that country.

The Secretary-General said Malta had informed him that it would expect, in that context, to work out an arrangement with the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya that, as an expression of goodwill, would enable Malta to conclude the one drilling operation which had been suspended on 20 August.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference

At the request of Pakistan, the General Assembly included in the agenda of its thirty-fifth (1980) session an item entitled "Co-operation between the United Nations and the Islamic Conference."

In an explanatory memorandum attached to its request of 1 August, Pakistan recalled that the Assembly had granted observer status to the Islamic Conference in 1975,<sup>2</sup> and the Conference was also co-operating in various areas with the specialized agencies.

With a view to promoting further the co-operation between the two organizations, Pakistan considered that it would be appropriate and highly desirable to authorize the Secretary-General to continue his contacts with the Conference, discuss with it the modalities for fruitful and closer co-operation in fields of common interest, and make specific measures to strengthen this co-operation.

Pakistan submitted to the Assembly a draft resolution on the subject, which it said had been prepared by the members of the Islamic group of Member States at the United Nations, revised to take account of suggestions and recommendations by others. The Assembly adopted the text without a vote on 14 November as resolution 35/36. Deciding thereby to promote further the co-operation between the two organizations, the Assembly urged them to co-operate in their common search for solutions to global problems. It asked the Secretary-General to strengthen his contacts with the Conference, seek ways to strengthen co-operation further, and report in 1980.

Several States said they would have abstained had the resolution been put to a vote. India could not support any formulation that specified a particular perspective on international issues to the exclusion of other points of view. Cuba did not consider that the United Nations should have relations of co-operation with regional bodies of such narrow scope as religious organizations. Israel had reservations about attempts further to institutionalize differentiations and groupings among Member States.

The USSR did not think the Conference should have some special privileged position in comparison with regional bodies- the Organization of African Unity, for example. The Lao People's Democratic Republic warned of the danger of adopting resolutions which might seem to favour some organizations at the expense of others; the United Nations must comply strictly with the principle of equality. Ethiopia agreed in principle to closer co-operation, but cautioned that it could lead to an unnecessary conflict of loyalties and outlook. All three of these States said they would have voted against the resolution if it had been put to a vote.

Cuba, Ethiopia, India and the USSR observed that, not being signatories of the Conference's charter, they did not feel bound by its decisions; adoption of the resolution on co-operation should not be construed as blanket endorsement or approbation of the Conference's resolutions.

Recalling its resolution 3369(XXX) of 10 October 1975, by which it granted observer status to the Islamic Conference,

Noting that the Organization of the Islamic Conference has reaffirmed its support for the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the purposes and principles of which constitute the basis for a fruitful co-operation between all peoples,

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session an item entitled "Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference."

Participation of observers in the work of the General Assembly

Observer status for the

Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee

On 13 October 1980, by resolution 35/2, adopted without vote, the General Assembly invited the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee to participate in its sessions and its work in the capacity of observer.

The resolution, sponsored by 23 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), derived from a proposal by India in a letter of 10 July to the Secretary-General.

In an explanatory memorandum, India said the New Delhi-headquartered Committee had emerged in 1956 as an outcome of the Asian-African Conference held the year before at Bandung, Indonesia. As a forum for Asian-African co-operation, it had expanded its activities from international law to economic relations and trade law. It had, in 1960, entered into official relations with the International Law Commission and, since 1970, had functioned as a consultation forum on important issues before the United Nations. India felt the relationship between the United Nations and the Committee, which currently had 39 participating States and three associate members, should be formalized and strengthened.

India's request was subsequently co-sponsored by Bangladesh, Egypt, Ghana, Indonesia, Iraq, Japan, Jordan, Mauritius, Nigeria, Oman, the Philippines, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Turkey and the United Arab Emirates.

Observer status for the

Latin American Economic System

The Latin American Economic System was invited to participate in the sessions and the work of the General Assembly in the capacity of observer by Assembly resolution 35/3, adopted without vote on 13 October 1980.

The resolution was sponsored by the 26 States of the Latin American group of Members at the United Nations which were members of the System (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). On their behalf, the group's Chairman for the month of July, Barbados, had made the request in a letter of 21 July to the Secretary-General. An explanatory memorandum noted that the System, also known by its Spanish acronym SELA (Sistema Económico Latinoamericano), had been constituted by the Panama Convention signed on 17 October 1975. With headquarters at Caracas, Venezuela, it was a permanent regional body for consultation, co-ordination and joint economic and social Promotion. One of its fundamental objectives was to adopt common positions and strategies in international bodies and forums. The System had enjoyed observer status with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development since 1977.

Questions relating to information

On 16 December 1980, the General Assembly adopted resolution 35/201, a negotiated, comprehensive resolution on information questions in the United Nations system. The Assembly recalled the need for all to collaborate in the establishment of a new world information and communication order and affirmed that the establishment of such an order was linked to the new international economic order and was an integral part of the international development process.

By this resolution, the Assembly expressed satisfaction at the establishment within the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) of an International Programme for the Development of Communication aimed at helping developing countries develop their communication infrastructures, and invited support for the Programme. By another provision, the Secretary-General was asked to implement a series of recommendations drawn up in 1980 by an Ad Hoc Working Group of the Committee on Information. The Assembly also approved guidelines for a training programme for journalists and broadcasters; these guidelines were set forth in a report of the Secretary-General.

The Assembly increased the membership of the Committee on Information by one member, to 67, sought improved co-ordination of and resources for United Nations information activities, established priorities for the orientation of the work of the Secretariat's Department of Public Information (DPI), and requested a series of reports on various DPI information activities.

By a decision of 17 December, contained in section XI of resolution 35/217, the Assembly voted an appropriation to ensure publication of Development Forum, an interagency periodical aimed at mobilizing public opinion for development, until long-term financial support could be ensured.

A United States complaint and a USSR reply pertaining to radio-broadcast jamming were received in August and September.

Details of these and other information questions are detailed in the sections below. Related questions pertaining to United Nations information activities, dealt with in other chapters, concerned the dissemination of information on apartheid (see p. 232) and on decolonization (see p. 1054). Public information activities in the human rights field are discussed on p. 853.

Report of the Committee on Information

The Committee on Information, enlarged and redesignated in 1979,<sup>3</sup> reported to the General

Assembly's regular 1980 session. Its report covered its organizational session on 11 April 1980 and two substantive sessions in New York: from 9 to 16 May and from 4 to 22 August.

The Committee devoted several meetings to consideration of the staffing, operation, role and budgets of the network of 60 United Nations information centres serving 132 Member States and territories. It also discussed efforts of the interagency Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC) to improve its co-ordinating, planning and implementing functions. At the Committee's request, JUNIC supplied a preliminary inventory of its member organizations' activities relating to the establishment of a new, more just and effective world information and communication order. A final report was being prepared for the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC).

With reference to efforts to disseminate information on development problems, the Committee adopted a French proposal, supported by Algeria, Denmark and Yugoslavia, that it indicate the importance it attached to initiatives such as that taken by several major newspapers to pursue among themselves, in the form of a joint quarterly supplement (World Press Supplement), an in-depth dialogue on problems related to the new international economic order, and that it urge public and private organizations to support such initiatives.

At its second session, the Committee established a sessional Ad Hoc Working Group which met from 5 to 20 August under the chairmanship of Miguel A. Alborno (Ecuador). The Group dealt primarily with three topics assigned to the Committee on Information by the Assembly in 1979:<sup>4</sup> examining United Nations public information policies and activities in the light of international relations during the past two decades and of the imperatives of the establishment of a new international economic order and a new world information and communication order; evaluating progress in the information and communication fields by the United Nations system; and promoting a more effective world information and communication order.

The Group's discussions were held in the light of several reports by the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee on Information in accordance with Assembly directives of 18 December 1979.<sup>5</sup> The reports concerned: priorities and programmes of DPI in the context of the need to establish a new world information and communication order; current information and mass communication activities of the United Nations system towards that goal; co-ordination of United Nations public information activities; use of the most effective modern techniques for producing and disseminating information; an interim review of the distribution of regional units within the Radio Service of DPI; two consultant studies, one on intensification and expansion of United Nations short-wave broadcasts and the other on United Nations frequency modulation (FM) broadcasts in the Headquarters area; a review of progress in implementing the 1979 recommendations of the Ad Hoc Working Group of the Committee to Review United Nations Public Information Policies and Activities;<sup>6</sup> and a programme of fellowships and scholarships for the training of journalists and broadcasting personnel. The Group's report containing its recommendations was adopted by the Committee on 22 August and annexed to the Committee's report to the General Assembly.

The Group submitted specific recommendations to the Committee for the programmes and priorities of DPI. Priority areas were: anti-apartheid activities; promotion of the Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace;<sup>7</sup> strengthening mass media infrastructures in developing countries; accuracy and objectivity in press releases; language balance in publications; preparation of information materials directed to non-governmental organizations and educational groups; a regional approach in producing such materials; augmenting the Feature Service; DPI co-production of films and television programmes with developing countries; and more funds for information activities.

The Group also recommended that the Information Service at Geneva be provided with equipment for electronic news coverage. The members of JUNE should give special emphasis to an interdependent global view of the world situation, improve their methods of work, strengthen their co-ordination, give more importance to communication and education activities and promote inclusion of an information communication component in every relevant development project in the United Nations system.

For its consideration of the United Nations information centres, the Group had before it a 1979 report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU).<sup>8</sup> The Group recommended that the centres' role and functions continue to be reviewed and an overall plan drawn up on the relationship between DPI and the centres, giving special consideration to: reallocation of personnel and finances; increased flexibility in their daily work; regionalizing activities and material; upgrading the status of directors; taking geographical and linguistic balance into account in staff assignments; improving career prospects for locally recruited staff; giving more publicity to joint United Nations/national development activities; and the need for more funds.

The Group felt the Assembly should invite support and co-operation to implement measures to promote a new world information and communication order, encourage mass media organizations to promote understanding of the international community's efforts to achieve social justice and economic development, and invite United Nations organizations to continue harmonizing their information and mass communication activities.

Reports of the Secretary-General

The Secretary-General commented on several of the Ad Hoc Working Group's recommendations in a report to the Assembly. His report provided background on and indicated his intentions with respect to some of the recommendations. Among them:

- he observed that the process of redressing geographical imbalance in DPI's staff, based as it was on attrition or recruitment, was necessarily slow but proceeding;

- he commented that increased resources had not accompanied the expansion of DPI's activities;

- he felt that implementation of the recommendation that the regional structure of the Radio Service be strengthened should await a final report on a review of the Service currently being prepared;

- he proposed to carry out the necessary studies for undertaking international short-wave broadcasts over United Nations-owned facilities and frequencies and would make specific proposals in 1981;

- he noted the Committee's recommendation that he clarify the legal, technical and financial questions associated with FM broadcasts;

- he noted Committee approval of his recommendation to engage a consultant to study DPI needs for increased use of modern information-production and -dissemination techniques, and that the Committee had suggested expanding the scope of the proposed study to include an assessment of benefits and estimation of financial and personnel consequences;

- he indicated that he would continue the "World Chronicle" radio/television programme, to which the Committee had given encouragement, and report to the Committee;

- he noted that the question of improved career prospects of locally recruited staff at information centres was currently being examined;

- he reported the establishment, in order to ensure that DPI remained the focal point for co-ordination and implementation of United Nations information activities, of a Planning, Programming and Evaluation Unit in the Office of the Under-Secretary-General for Public Information, to monitor resolutions, formulate work programmes, co-ordinate task forces and compile and analyse data;

- he noted DPI's practice of granting to least developed countries facilities for information transmission without charge during the Assembly's sessions or important conferences; and

- he noted progress in co-operative broadcasting of programmes to South Africa.

Development Forum (see section below) and the establishment of a fellowship and scholarship programme for training journalists and broadcasters from developing countries, subjects on which the Committee's Ad Hoc Group had also formulated recommendations, were the subject of separate reports to the Assembly.

Responding to an Assembly resolution of 18 December 1979,<sup>9</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee on Information and to the Assembly in 1980 his recommendations on the establishment of a programme of fellowships and scholarships for training journalists and broadcasting personnel from developing countries in the Radio and Visual Services Division of DPI. Interpreting the resolution more broadly than applying only to radio and visual services, the report indicated that journalists and broadcasters should be trained in all communication media and sensitized to all aspects of United Nations work.

The report reviewed existing training capabilities in DPI—including the graduate Student Intern Programme, the Triangular Fellowship Programme, the periodic Journalists Encounters and the yearly Editors Roundtables—all of which aimed at improving coverage of United Nations events and programmes through developing an informed group of redisseminators. Training had thus far been undertaken mainly by national and regional centres, institutes and universities, with technical aid from the United Nations system.

In accordance with guidelines he had drawn up as goals for journalist training, the Secretary-General envisaged two training programmes—one for broadcasters and one for journalists. On-the-job training might be provided for six months a year to 12 radio or television broadcasters from the African, Latin American, Asian and Pacific, and Western Asian regions. In addition, broadcasters could attend periodic workshops headed by DPI senior staff at existing regional training centres at Kuala Lumpur (Malaysia), Abidjan (Ivory Coast), Damascus (Syrian Arab Republic) and Mexico City. A two-part, six-month training programme for four journalists was also proposed, half the time at New York Headquarters and half at the headquarters of the regional commission serving their respective countries. United Nations organizations and programmes should be invited to co-operate with DPI in sponsoring trainees and field trips. Costs for the programme were estimated at $175,000 per year.

The Secretary-General also reported receipt, on 10 April, of the Assembly President's announcement of the appointment of 25 additional members of the newly enlarged Committee on Information, from 41 to 66 (see APPENDIX III). The President had also stated that, in the course of consultations, it had been agreed by all groups to recommend that the Assembly authorize appointment of an additional member from the group of Western European and other States, on the understanding that it would not constitute a precedent regarding interpretations of the principle of equitable geographical distribution.

Report of the Director-General of UNESCO

On 25 September, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. The report had been prepared in response to a 1979 Assembly request<sup>10</sup> that the Director-General pursue his efforts to prepare an integrated model plan for co-operation and assistance in applying and improving national information and mass communication systems for social progress and development. It covered the work of the Intergovernmental Conference for Co-operation on Activities, Needs and Programmes for Communication Development, which met under UNESCO auspices in Paris from 14 to 21 April 1980 and in which the Committee on Information participated.

One of the Conference's two major issues encompassed the problems, needs and priorities of communication infrastructure development, information flow, training, and equipment and technologies. The second concerned international co-operation for communication development, including problems, obstacles, co-operative measures in identifying needs and priorities, resources, and collaborative mechanisms for implementing communication development programmes.

The Conference invited the Director-General to submit a project for the establishment, within the framework of UNESCO, of an International Programme for the Development of Communication, aimed at developing communication infrastructures for developing countries and, at their request, helping them elaborate and implement their information and communication development plans, identify needs and priority areas and obtain or identify financial and other help for proposed projects. The proposed Programme aimed at narrowing the gap in information and communication among developing countries and between developed and developing countries, while maintaining close working links with the United Nations, the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental, non-governmental and professional organizations.

The Director-General submitted a supplementary report in November containing the texts of two resolutions adopted by the General Conference of UNESCO at its session in Belgrade, Yugoslavia, from 23 September to 28 October 1980. By one of them, the Conference established the International Programme for the Development of Communication, recommended by the Intergovernmental Conference, and set up an Intergovernmental Council to co-ordinate the Programme, implement its objectives and administer and allocate funds.

The other resolution commended a report of the Director-General on the findings of the 16-member International Commission for the Study of Communication Problems (known as the MacBride report after the Commission's Chairman, Sean MacBride (Ireland)), as a valuable contribution to the study of information and communication problems and a possible stimulant to the participation of Governments, professional circles and the public in establishing a new world information and communication order.

Some considerations on which such an order could be based were: elimination of existing imbalances, of the negative effects of monopolies, and of obstacles to a freer, wider and better balanced flow of information and ideas; plurality of sources and channels of information; freedom of the press, of information, of journalists and of all other professionals-a freedom inseparable from responsibility; the capacity of developing countries to provide their own equipment, train their own personnel, improve their infrastructures and make their media suitable to their needs and aspirations; the will of developed countries to help; respect for cultural identities and for the right of each nation to inform the world about its interests, aspirations and values; and respect for the right to participate in international information exchanges, on the basis of equality, justice and mutual benefit, and in the communication process. Further, the new order should be based on the fundamental principles of international law as laid down in the Charter of the United Nations.

Decision of the General Assembly

On 16 December, the Assembly adopted, without vote, resolution 35/201 on questions relating to information. The text had been proposed in the Special Political Committee by Venezuela, on behalf of Member States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries. The draft, which Venezuela said had emerged from long consultations with a view to reaching consensus, had been similarly approved by that Committee on 9 December.

By this resolution, the Assembly affirmed that the establishment of a new world information and communication order was linked to the new international economic order and was an integral part of the international development process.

By the first section of the resolution, dealing with UNESCO activities, the Assembly expressed satisfaction at the establishment of the International Programme for the Development of Communication-for which it invited financial and technical support from Governments, non-governmental organizations and other entities-called on the Secretary-General to encourage interagency co-operation and support for the Programme, and asked the UNESCO Director-General for a progress report in 1981 on its implementation.

The Assembly also expressed satisfaction with the General Conference's resolution on the findings of the International Commission for the Study of Communication Problems, and invited Member States to facilitate circulation of the Commission's final report and take its recommendations into account when considering their national communication capabilities and development strategies.

It took note of UNESCO's work on the effects of transnational corporation activities in developing countries, reaffirmed the vital need for operational co-operation and co-ordination between UNESCO and other United Nations organizations, and took note of the UNESCO Director-General's invitation to initiate studies on the fundamental principles underlying a new world information and communication order as a possible basis for a declaration on the establishment of such an order.

By the second section of the resolution, the Assembly approved the report of the Committee on Information. It increased the Committee's membership from 66 to 67, the new member to be appointed by the Assembly President after consulting the regional groups of States (see APPENDIX III), and asked the Committee to seek the cooperation and participation of all organizations in the United Nations system, particularly UNESCO. It also asked the Committee to continue examining how DPI co-operation with those and other international and regional information organizations might be further developed.

The Assembly called on JUNIC to strengthen interagency co-operation and co-ordination, reporting through ACC to the Committee on Information on its extent and prospects.

The Assembly noted with satisfaction that DPI had established constructive relations with specialized bodies for co-operation on information and communication between the non-aligned countries as well as with other international and regional information organizations that disseminated information from United Nations sources. It asked DPI to continue examining ways to use Governments, non-governmental organizations and other entities for disseminating DPI material and ways to use its own resources more efficiently, recommending at the same time that DPI be given the resources needed for its increased public information activities. The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination was asked to report in 1981 on DPI's relative growth rate.

The Assembly expressed its appreciation for the JIU report on United Nations information centres and for the Secretary-General's comments thereon for the purpose of making the necessary improvements. It invited mass media organizations to promote understanding of United Nations efforts to achieve international social justice and economic development, international peace and security and the elimination of international inequities and tensions.

By the third section of resolution 35/201, the Assembly listed the fundamental international problems towards which DPI was to orient its dissemination work, with special attention to be given to United Nations activities against apartheid and the work of the United Nations Council for Namibia, and continuation of efforts to provide broadcast programmes on women.

Having approved in the preceding section of this resolution the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Working Group of the Committee on Information, the Assembly in this section asked the Secretary-General to implement them, as well as those of its predecessor, the Ad Hoc Working Group of the Committee to Review United Nations Public Information Policies and Activities, and to report in 1981. It also asked the Secretary-General to: take urgent measures to redress the current geographical imbalance in DPI staff, particularly in senior posts, in order to ensure equitable representation from developing countries; ensure that DPI remained the focal point for co-ordination and implementation of United Nations public information activities; ensure a balance in the use of official languages in DPI publications and programmes and strengthen the effectiveness of the adaptation unit established for that purpose; initiate as soon as possible in-service training programmes for the greatest possible number of journalists and broadcasters from developing countries, as envisaged in his report, to coincide as far as possible with Assembly sessions; improve the DPI Radio Service regional structure, paying particular attention to programming in regional languages; initiate television programmes in Spanish; explore the possibility of increasing United Nations radio broadcasts to southern Africa; provide the Information Service at Geneva with electronic visual-information recording and dissemination equipment; provide resources for full press-release coverage of all important United Nations meetings and events; ensure adequate coverage and transmission facilities for journalists during Assembly sessions; and allot permanent working space equitably at Headquarters, with special attention to the needs of developing countries' representatives.

In addition, the Secretary-General was asked to provide the Committee on Information with reports and studies covering: a plan for regionalizing the Radio and Visual Services Division of DPI to permit each regional section to be responsible for all broadcast and film productions for their respective regions; a plan for the priority establishment of a Caribbean Unit of the Radio Service and expansion of the African Unit; specific proposals for increasing United Nations short-wave broadcasts to a daily schedule; technical, financial and legal aspects of short-wave broadcasts using the Organization's own facilities and frequencies; clarification with the host country of the legal questions involved in introducing FM broadcasts in the Headquarters area, including technical and financial aspects; and recommendations for strengthening developing countries' use of satellites for television broadcasting of United Nations programmes to various regions.

With regard to the system of United Nations information centres, the Secretary-General was asked to: report to the Committee on Information on an overall plan on the system, focusing on the evolving relations between DPI and the centres; improve the network by reviewing the centres' role and functions and by establishing new ones where necessary-in particular in Zimbabwe and Bangladesh-to the extent possible within existing resources; provide staff commensurate with the centres' increased responsibilities, particularly those with large jurisdictions; and improve the availability of technical equipment, including telex systems, to them for increased information dissemination.

The German Democratic Republic, speaking after approval of the text, on behalf also of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said the resolution reflected those countries' position on the objectives of the new world information and communication order. Poland, however, expressed several reservations: the text was not sufficiently explicit in recognizing the role of national opinion-makers in promoting the image of the United Nations; it did not address the problem of respect for the international character of United Nations premises; and real progress in establishing the new order would come about only under improved conditions of international detente.

The expression of satisfaction with the resolutions of UNESCO's Belgrade Conference, in the view of Australia, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States, should not be construed to mean that those States were satisfied with all the resolutions adopted there. Japan and the United Kingdom recalled that they had voted against-and Finland that it had abstained on-the UNESCO resolution concerning a possible declaration on the establishment of a new world information and communication order. Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States felt that UNESCO's examination of the effects of transnational corporation activities fell within the province of the Commission on Transnational Corporations.

The United States regretted that the private media sector was not explicitly included among those invited to support UNESCO's International Programme. Moreover, while it did not oppose the co-operation noted in the text between DPI and non-aligned countries' media organizations, the United States felt that singling out that one particular group of countries meant excluding some of the developing countries. Both the United States and Sweden expressed reservations on some of the 1979 recommendations of the Ad Hoc Working Group.

The Federal Republic of Germany said it would have preferred-with reference to a preambular paragraph indicating awareness of the need to collaborate in the establishment of a new world information and communication order-wording which based that order on the free circulation and wider and better-balanced dissemination of information, without widening its scope by including the phrase "inter alia." Ecuador, on the other hand, felt the reference to be inadequate; it would have included explicit reference to human rights, particularly freedom of information and expression, and to the freedom of movement of journalists and their right of free access to information sources. In addition, Ecuador felt that United Nations organs should have been pressed to inform public opinion better of the values and objectives of the United Nations and its economic and social work. It would also have liked to include mention of contacts in the field between the information centres and the United Nations Development Programme.

Canada also regretted that the text did not adequately reflect its concerns regarding the reinforcement of human rights and fundamental freedoms; Canada would continue to attach the utmost importance to freedom of expression, of mass media from censorship and of access to all sources of information.

Australia, Canada, Luxembourg (speaking on behalf of the nine member States of the European Economic Community (EEC)), the United Kingdom and the United States expressed concern over the considerable financial implications of the resolution. Luxembourg also regretted that the Committee on Information had not been able to draw up a list of priorities to guide DPI's work.

Australia, Canada and the United States felt it was inappropriate to invite DPI to publicize the issue of the integration of women in the struggle for peace and development, since the Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee had deferred consideration of that item until 1981 and the subject was therefore not currently a central theme of the United Nations.

With reference to a preambular paragraph recalling article 20 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights<sup>11</sup> prohibiting by law any propaganda for war, Finland, Norway and Sweden recalled their reservations on that article.

Sweden considered that the principle of equitable geographical distribution applied to the Secretariat as a whole rather than to every single department or unit. Canada regretted that the provision asking the Secretary-General to redress the geographical imbalance did not include a reference to the need to recruit qualified personnel.

General Assembly discussion

During the debate in the Special Political Committee, developing countries generally argued that the inequity in the flow of information between them and the developed countries reinforced existing disparities in the economic field, that the news media did not objectively report the news, and that the power in news presentation was increasingly concentrated because of the importance of technology and the large-scale resources involved. They questioned the standards on which news choices were made and perceived a new world information and communication order in which the handling, treatment and dissemination of information did not suffer from prejudices and lack of balance and objectivity.

Many of the developing countries argued that, although development of communication infrastructures and training of media professionals were badly needed, such practical and operational activities by themselves could not fully meet their needs; a mere transfer of technology was not a satisfactory reply to the conceptual, theoretical and policy-oriented questions that required answers. There was also a greater need for endogenous development, focused on the varying social, cultural and economic situations and adapted to the needs of each country.

These countries sought world information media coverage for their economic, social and cultural development efforts. Mauritania and the United Republic of Tanzania said it was deplorable that so little attention was given to those efforts and so much to conflicts and other sensational events. Togo added that news agencies must cease projecting an absurd and tendentious image of the third world.

Egypt said it must be borne in mind that information was a social need and not simply a merchandise. Nationally, the Niger observed, the general task assigned to information was to inform, motivate, educate, contribute to the enhancement of national culture and strengthen national unity; internationally, it should promote peace, understanding and harmony and the struggle against racism. Senegal felt that the two-fold objective of a new world information and communication order should be to heighten awareness of a country's own cultural identity and provide less privileged cultures with the means needed to express themselves fully. Trinidad and Tobago believed that any attempt by national or transnational entities to subvert national priorities or derogate from nationally set standards must be vigorously resisted. Small, weak countries, according to Nepal, should not be subjected to social and cultural invasions by powerful foreign media in the name of the free flow of information.

Colombia, Guinea, Pakistan and the Sudan said communication and information should not be conceived as a monopolistic system in which circulation was in one direction, from an active centre to passive receivers; there must be a two-way flow of traffic between developing and developed countries. This view was also expressed by Yugoslavia, which noted that four fifths of all the world's news was distributed by five major news agencies.

Chile agreed that the media had definite responsibilities in such matters as preserving the identity of States and promoting friendship and co-operation; however, its primary responsibility was a commitment to truth, which could be disseminated only if the principles of freedom of expression, opinion and information were fully observed. The basic aim of the new information order, Uruguay said, should be to strengthen peace and promote the progress and development of all peoples, based on such principles as diversity of the media, multiplicity of information sources, the international right of reply and the exclusive competence of each State to determine its own communication policies.

China also felt a new order must be conducive to world peace and to the establishment of a new international economic order, and must promote a proper understanding of friendly exchanges among peoples based on mutual respect for territorial integrity, sovereignty, non-interference, equality, mutual benefit and peaceful coexistence.

Guyana said developing countries were unable to exercise fully the right to freedom of opinion and expression because of their limited means of imparting information, thus seriously limiting their capacity to influence opinion in favour of the causes critical to their development.

Singapore's approach was to strive to eliminate its dependent status, not by curtailing mass media organization activities of industrialized countries but by learning from them.

The value of regional organizations created to co-operate for greater independence in the information field through information pools was noted by Guyana, India, Sri Lanka and Yugoslavia, which referred to the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies, and by Mali, which also mentioned the Pan-African News Agency. Bulgaria, Indonesia, the USSR and Uruguay supported such efforts.

The socialist countries of Eastern Europe and several other States generally held that the current system of information exchange was contrary to the interests of most countries and did not promote friendly international relations, and that information should also serve the ideals of peace and security and the liberation of peoples; they stressed that the concept of freedom must be coupled with that of responsibility. They agreed that the developing countries needed to build their own information and communication systems to free themselves from their dependence on transnational information monopolies.

In Hungary's words, a proper system for disseminating information could not be achieved as long as mass communications were monopolized by international corporations and the large Western news agencies. Invoking freedom of the press and of information, the USSR added, certain Western and other countries were using mass communications systems for systematic misinformation, pursuing a policy of information imperialism and cultural invasion of the developing countries. This view was shared by Benin, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR and others.

Czechoslovakia emphasized the responsibility of Governments to exert a positive influence on the media to promote international understanding and present a correct picture of United Nations efforts. While Czechoslovakia recognized freedom of information as a fundamental human right, that freedom entailed special duties and responsibilities; there was a need to subject the exercise of that freedom, like other rights and freedoms, to certain limits and Czechoslovakia rejected the philosophy of States where freedom of the press and of information was understood primarily as freedom of enterprise.

The Byelorussian SSR charged that the forces of imperialism were using their mass media to hinder the struggle of national liberation movements, thwart progressive initiatives and interfere in internal affairs of other States. The German Democratic Republic added that those media were used to wage psychological warfare against the USSR and other socialist countries. The Western information monopoly, according to Mongolia and the USSR, was marked by lack of objectivity, misinformation, sensationalism and interference in internal affairs. The Byelorussian SSR was opposed to using mass media, especially radio broadcasting, to interfere in other States' affairs and incite hatred among peoples; each State should have the sovereign right to disseminate information on its own territory and to take steps to end hostile propaganda.

The Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia and the Ukrainian SSR said that international exchanges of information should be based on recognized legal principles; the elaboration of norms governing such exchanges was just as necessary as in other fields and should be based on principles regulating other inter-State relations: peaceful coexistence, sovereign equality, renunciation of the use or threat of force, inviolability of frontiers, territorial integrity, peaceful settlement of disputes, non-interference, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, the right to self-determination and international cooperation. The international exchange of information should be brought into line with the provisions of the United Nations Charter and the Final Act of the 1975 Helsinki Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe.

Western countries stressed that the press had the right and duty to inform society, emphasized the need for a free flow of information, and supported the right of a free press to report and criticize freely when dealing with international as well as domestic issues.

Luxembourg, speaking on behalf of EEC, reaffirmed the unswerving commitment of the Community to the principles of freedom of opinion, expression and information- principles which they held must be kept in mind in efforts to formulate and establish a new world information and communication order. They rejected any restriction of the free flow of information with a view to imposing State control on the media so as to meet the needs of Government propaganda.

Ireland and the Netherlands said it was necessary to take as a basis article 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights<sup>12</sup>-everyone had the right to freedom of opinion and expression, including freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media regardless of frontiers. While it could not be argued that the current situation in regard to international news reporting was completely satisfactory, Ireland added, unbalanced reporting could be improved only by increasing the information provided, not by restricting or suppressing it.

The principle of freedom of expression was the key to all information systems, in Spain's view. The United Kingdom added that it could not agree with the concept that saw the media simply as an instrument of government to promote disarmament, peace and understanding, worthy though those aims might be; the notion that communication was subservient to Governments' policies was unacceptable. This view was shared by Portugal. Mutual understanding was advanced by more rather than less communication, Italy asserted, and values such as truthfulness, accuracy and respect for human rights were best guaranteed through diversity and choice in the content of communication. Canada, the Netherlands and Sweden observed that Governments should facilitate conditions so that information and communication systems and material that flowed through them could flourish, but they should not be allowed to interfere with the content of the mass media.

Australia and Austria held that freedom of information, opinion and expression and the unfettered circulation of news and ideas were fundamental human rights which must be kept in the forefront of any consideration of a new world information and communication order.

Sweden said the international community should support developing countries in building up the needed infrastructure for a wide and balanced flow of information. Spain also felt that greater emphasis should be placed on endogenous development, focusing on different cultural and economic situations and adapting such development to the real needs of each society. Belgium cautioned, however, that the communication gap could not be eliminated merely by the physical development of infrastructure or by the transfer of technologies, but in the long run by the elimination of obstacles impeding the development of truly independent communication systems and freer and wider flow in information at all levels. Free access to both unofficial and official news sources and unfettered media at both national and international levels was also stressed by the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, the Netherlands and New Zealand.

Freedom of expression was a pre-condition for democracy, Denmark and the Netherlands stated. Free debate and a well-informed public were needed to control and balance political, economic and other types of power and promote development, Sweden added.

Australia, Japan, Turkey and the United States were among States which considered it important to proceed by consensus in action to establish the new information and communication order. Turkey cautioned, however, that efforts to achieve consensus should not force States to accept compromise solutions or make concessions with regard to basic principles on freedom of information and opinion.

Differing views were expressed on the relationship between the concept of freedom of the press and that of responsibility.

Freedom and responsibility were indivisible, Poland stated, and freedom of the press was not a fixed and isolated value but varied according to the social context. The right of the information media to free expression must be based on the duty to serve the common good.

Bulgaria considered that professional ethics should be based on the indivisibility of freedom and responsibility. It recalled that article 20 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights<sup>13</sup> had tempered rights with responsibility, stipulating that propaganda for war was to be prohibited as well as advocacy of national, racial or religious hatred that constituted incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence.

Bangladesh held that every Government had the right to guard its people against libel and obscenity, and that developing countries trying to mobilize for nation-building and national development should have some means of communication with the people.

Nigeria, the Philippines and the United Republic of Tanzania subscribed to the view that freedom of information, while a valid concept, must be used responsibly. Venezuela said information was not a merchandise but a social asset, implying a serious responsibility which must be constantly reconsidered and redefined.

Morocco cautioned that placing too much stress on the concept of responsibility alone led to political and administrative restrictions and ultimately to censorship.

Countries that valued a free press were not defending freedom without responsibility, the United States said, but it believed that it was not the role of government to dictate what constituted responsible journalism, which should be ensured by increasing the diversity of the media and improving the professional training of journalists.

The role and contributions of UNESCO, as well as other specialized agencies, in the communication and information fields were generally commended, and closer co-operation with the United Nations encouraged. The debate on the new order, in Australia's and Italy's view, should be conducted as far as possible in UNESCO, although Australia said it should not have the sole responsibility for implementing it. Sweden felt the programmes of international organizations in the communication and information fields should be concentrated on the activities for which they were best qualified with a clear division of responsibilities between them.

Burundi said UNESCO was the forum, starting-point and catalyst of the world debate on communications and on the programme of action for establishment of a new world information and communication order. That task, however, was beyond the capabilities of a single organization and required close co-operation among the organizations and agencies of the United Nations system. Chile and Italy noted UNESCO's key role in providing assistance and training.

Austria, the Congo, Guinea, Indonesia, Japan, Mexico, Poland, Trinidad and Tobago, and EEC members were among those which commented that the UNESCO Belgrade Conference had made a significant contribution to the promotion of international co-operation in information and communications, had taken a first step towards the establishment of a new information order to promote a wider and better balanced dissemination of information and had identified some of the main components on which that order could be based.

The German Democratic Republic said it supported all efforts by the United Nations and UNESCO towards codifying the relevant norms for mass communications activities and towards democratizing international information relations. Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Mongolia and the USSR felt the Assembly should support UNESCO's contribution in developing principles and norms for the new information order.

Norway felt the best way of dealing with practical and technical questions relating to the new world information and communication order was through UNESCO's new International Programme for Development of Communication. The United States said the Programme would provide for the first time a comprehensive means of identifying communication and development needs and matching them with available bilateral, multilateral and private assistance. Although Turkey and the United Kingdom said they had found some of the MacBride Commission's recommendations not acceptable or applicable, they had joined the consensus on UNESCO's resolution on the Programme, considering it a positive step towards a new information order. Japan considered the resolution on the Commission's final report to be fairly balanced, since it emphasized the need to safeguard the freedom of opinion and expression and to ensure the widest and most democratic access to the mass media.

The role of the United Nations, and particularly that of DPI, in information activities and in the new world information and communication order elicited numerous comments.

The most valuable function of DPI was to publicize the activities of the United Nations itself in order to gain the support of world public opinion on the issues with which it dealt, in the view of Ireland and Romania. United Nations information activities should contribute every possible means to achieving the objectives of the Organization, according to the Ukrainian SSR. United Nations organs and services dealing with public information must objectively reflect the work of the Organization and its resolutions, the USSR said. Singapore believed it was the duty of the Organization to counter and explain misconceptions about the United Nations. It could help counterbalance information which often presented a distorted picture of developing countries' achievements, Indonesia added.

Noting that publicizing United Nations activities was the traditional approach, Egypt said it and many other States had concluded that integrated and harmonized information policies geared to a better understanding of the information needs of developing countries were needed.

Saturating the world with information about the United Nations would not automatically create better understanding, the United States said; that could be achieved by selectivity, high professional standards and close co-operation with national and regional bodies.

Pakistan hoped DPI would strengthen its programmes and activities to find new ways to enable developing countries to share in the advances in mass communication technology.

Togo said DPI should give the widest possible publicity to United Nations activities, above all in international peace and security, economic and social development, the new international economic order and disarmament. These last two issues were Mexico's choices for priority. Bulgaria and Czechoslovakia said the United Nations should concentrate its information activities on the following key issues: the search for peace, international detente, development, disarmament, decolonization and the struggle against racial discrimination. The Ukrainian SSR said there was still a lack of balance in the approach to these all-important United Nations functions, which should be the centre of DPI's attention at all times.

China felt United Nations information activities should give greater attention to reporting struggles and achievements of the developing countries, to training more information and communications personnel and to providing economic and technical assistance.

There was widespread support expressed for the recommendations annexed to the report of the Committee on Information. Portugal considered them a useful basis for the continuation of United Nations activities in the field. Several States, however, held the view expressed by the Federal Republic of Germany that careful analysis and evaluation was required before any decisions were taken on their implementation.

The United States said it should be made clear that the recommendations referred to were actually those of the Ad Hoc Working Group, which the Committee had annexed to its report but had not adopted owing to insufficient time for delegations to consider them.

The Byelorussian SSR said that a number of the Ad Hoc Group's recommendations had been made without due consideration of their serious financial implications. Brazil, Burundi and Luxembourg (on behalf of the EEC member States) said those that had financial implications and introduced changes in the United Nations information system should be studied in detail before priorities for activities and programmes were set.

There was widespread concern expressed on the matter of resources for United Nations information activities. Egypt and Japan pointed out that since 1946 the share of the total regular budget devoted to public information activities had decreased by more than 50 per cent, even though demand for such activities continued to expand. Nigeria and Turkey said DPI could not be expected to continue undertaking new mandates without added resources. Bangladesh, Chile, Malaysia and Sri Lanka felt that additional resources should be provided in proportion to the increase in the total programmes which DPI was required to service.

Several States cautioned that, as programmes increased and diversified, more effective use of resources was necessary. This view was shared by Bulgaria, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Poland, Spain, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and the United Kingdom. This could be done, the German Democratic Republic said, by eliminating marginally effective and obsolete programmes, redeploying funds, focusing attention on priority projects and improving co-ordination. The Congo and Tunisia agreed with this viewpoint but felt the budget for information activities should be increased as well.

The future work of the Committee on Information should be directed towards further elaborating and giving concrete expression to the concept of a new world information and communication order, in Yugoslavia's view. Without renouncing that broad mandate, Spain said, the Committee might achieve more positive results by limiting activities to a few specific objectives and establishing a realistic order of priorities.

The Committee should deal with all aspects of questions relating to information, Poland said, and not just those directly pertaining to the work and functioning of DPI and some specialized agencies.

Development Forum

Development Forum, a periodical aimed at mobilizing public opinion in support of development, is issued in two editions: a general edition funded from voluntary contributions from a number of organizations and agencies of the United Nations system, and a business edition financed through subscriptions.

The General Assembly, at its regular 1979 session, had approved a subvention of $200,000 for Development Forum for 1980 but had declined at that time to appropriate funds for 1981 pending receipt of a report of the Secretary-General on long-term financing.

The Committee on Information, affirming in its 1980 report that the Forum was a very useful publication, recommended that the Assembly continue to review its financial status to ensure its continued publication, and that the system's organizations should consider committing long-term financial support to it.

In a report which the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly on 14 November 1980, he indicated that income and expenditures for the Forum were expected to balance at about $1,500,000 in 1980. For 1981, in anticipation of slightly reduced income, he estimated expenditures of $1,487,700 and requested $200,000 from the Assembly as the United Nations share for financing the periodical.

The Secretary-General reported that JUNIC, at its 1980 regular and special sessions, reviewed the long-term financing of the Forum, as ACC had requested in 1979,<sup>14</sup> and drew up a proposal for a system of predictable voluntary contributions for 1982 and beyond. The proposal was based on a division of the organizations of the United Nations system into three groups, determined by their involvement in development activities and the size of their information and other programmes bearing on world development and humanitarian issues; they would be invited to contribute on a voluntary basis to cover, respectively, a 65, 25 and 10 per cent share of the publication's annual costs.

The Secretary-General at the same time indicated that ACC had urged the executive heads of the organizations to make appropriate provision for the periodical in their 1982-1983 budgets, taking JUNIC's proposals into account.

The Assembly voted an appropriation of $200,000 for Development Forum and, on 17 December 1980, by section XI of resolution 35/217, which it adopted without objection, took note of the comments of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions that the Assembly need not pronounce itself at that time on whether to provide a permanent contribution from the Organization's regular budget, and that the Secretary-General explore the possibility of charging a nominal subscription for the general edition of the Forum.

These actions were orally proposed by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee Chairman and approved without vote by that Committee on 8 December. The USSR and the United States stated that, had the additional appropriation been put to a vote, they would have voted against meeting costs of the Forum from the regular budget.

Communications

In an exchange of communications addressed to the Secretary-General on 26 August and 16 September 1980, respectively, the United States and the USSR referred to provisions of the Final Act of the 1975 Helsinki Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, by which signatory States had undertaken to promote improvement and dissemination of broadcast information. The United States transmitted a statement of 20 August by its Department of State deploring the fact that the USSR had resumed jamming Voice of America radio broadcasts to that country, an act the United States held was in clear disregard of the Final Act. In reply, the USSR said that United States broadcasts transmitted to the USSR had nothing to do with illustrating various aspects of life in the United States or meeting the interest of mutual understanding among peoples, in accord with the relevant provisions of the Final Act. The USSR denied that it had done anything incompatible with those provisions.

Chapter I

Questions concerning development and international economic co-operation and the establishment of a new international economic order

On 5 December 1980, the General Assembly proclaimed the Third United Nations Development Decade, to start on 1 January 1981, and adopted an International Development Strategy for the Decade. The Strategy set out goals and objectives, and policy measures for their implementation, supplementing those for the Second United Nations Development Decade (the 1970s).

Previously, at its eleventh special session held in August/September, the Assembly had reached a consensus on the text of the Strategy, a generally agreed draft of which had been submitted by the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy, while, in January, the Economic and Social Council's expert Committee for Development Planning had concluded that early establishment of the new international economic order should be a major goal of the Strategy. In March, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development had transmitted an account of the deliberations of a high-level inter-governmental group as its contribution to the Strategy's formulation. Input for the Strategy was also received from bodies and organizations throughout the United Nations system as well as from many outside.

At its special session, the Assembly was informed by the intersessional Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174—acting as the preparatory committee for a round of global negotiations on economic co-operation for development, also scheduled to be launched at that session—that no agreement had been reached on an agenda, procedures or time-frame for the negotiations. Subsequently, at its regular session, which opened in September, the Assembly decided that its President should continue consultations on launching such negotiations and report to a resumed session of the Assembly in 1981.

In other action, the Assembly: called for implementation of its action programmes to aid the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries and urged additional assistance to the most seriously affected of them; urged specific action related to the particular needs of land-locked developing countries and made a further appeal for contributions to the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries; prepared for the 1981 United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries; and authorized the Economic and Social Council to update the list of least developed countries. A further Assembly resolution called for preparation of a list of principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order, as contained in texts adopted by United Nations bodies.

The Economic and Social Council called for a review of United Nations emergency assistance operations to ensure the best use of available resources. Both the Council and the Assembly, together with other United Nations bodies, continued to mobilize economic aid to a number of countries and territories in Africa, Asia, the Caribbean and the Pacific, while the Assembly called for special measures for the economic and social development of Africa.

Other Council resolutions sought to strengthen the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance for development, and supported international co-operation in tax matters, including consultations on the feasibility of establishing a direct tax co-operation council and an increase in the size of its expert tax group.

Details of these and other decisions concerning development and international economic co-operation are set out below.

Establishment of a new international economic order

During 1980, the General Assembly held its eleventh special (August/September) session to assess progress made by the United Nations system towards establishing a new international economic order in accordance with resolution 32/174 of 19 December 1977.<sup>1</sup> By that resolution, the Assembly had established an intersessional Committee of the Whole to act as a focal point for monitoring progress and, on 14 December 1979,<sup>2</sup> decided that the committee should act as the preparatory committee for global negotiations relating to international economic co-operation for development, also to be launched at the special session.

At its June/July 1980 session, the Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174 recommended that the Assembly consider at its special session two main items, dealing with the proposed new international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade, and the global negotiations.

The work of the Organization on preparations for the special session, a new international development strategy for the 1980s and the global negotiations are further discussed in the following subchapters.

Preparations for the eleventh special session

The eleventh special session of the General Assembly was held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 25 August to 15 September 1980. The session was convened to assess progress made in various United Nations forums towards establishment of a new international economic order and, based on that assessment, to take action for the development of the developing countries and international economic co-operation, including adoption of a new international development strategy for the 1980s. By its resolution of 14 December 1979,<sup>3</sup> the Assembly had further decided to launch, at the special session, global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development (see subchapter below).

Organizational arrangements

Pursuant to an Assembly resolution of 19 December 1979,<sup>4</sup> the intersessional Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174, at its sixth (third substantive 1980) session held at United Nations Headquarters from 23 June to 4 July, considered the organizational arrangements for the special session. (For details of the Committee's consideration of global negotiation issues at this and its other 1980 sessions, see p. 519.)

Having considered preparation aspects of the special session at four meetings of an ad hoc group it established for that purpose, the Committee recommended that the Assembly consider at that session two main substantive items, dealing with the new international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade, and the global negotiations.

The Committee also recommended<sup>5</sup> that the basic documentation for consideration of these items should include the analytical report on developments in international economic co-operation since 1974, requested from the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation (DIEC) on 29 January 1979,<sup>5</sup> and the final reports of the Prepara-

Committee for the New International Development Strategy (see p. 489) and the Committee of the Whole, requested by the Assembly on 14 December 1979.<sup>6</sup>

The Committee further proposed that the Assembly establish an ad hoc committee of the special session to deal with the two main substantive items, except that debate on these subjects should take place in plenary meetings.

Report of the Director-General

In his report, transmitted by the Secretary-General on 7 August—a preliminary version of which had been submitted to the Assembly in 1979<sup>7</sup>—the Director-General for DIEC assessed developments in international economic co-operation since the Assembly's sixth special session in April/May 1974, with particular emphasis on intergovernmental deliberations and negotiations of a global nature within the United Nations system in the key areas of: primary commodities; international monetary and financial issues; industrialization and trade in manufactured products; transnational corporations and science and technology; transport and insurance; economic co-operation among developing countries; particularly disadvantaged countries;

For each of these areas, the report focused on the nature of new institutions created to deal with problems of particular concern to developing countries, such as the Common Fund of the Integrated Programme for Commodities, the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD), the World Food Council (WFC), the United Nations Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development, the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, the Commission on Transnational Corporations and the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries. The report noted steps taken for the transformation of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) into a specialized agency and the considerable progress achieved in negotiation of an institutional framework for exploitation and management of seabed resources. Changes in the "rules of the game" for international economic co-operation—the framework of rules and principles established by agreement, law, custom and administrative action to govern international flows of trade, technology, money and finance—and adjustments in the operation of existing international institutions were also outlined in the report.

The report singled out changes in the trade sector, including agreements and non-tariff barriers and the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices approved by the April 1980 session of the United Nations Conference on Restrictive Business Practices (see p. 626) and, in the area of transport, the May 1980 United Nations Convention on International Multimodal Transport of Goods (see p. 1020) and the intergovernmental declaration of intent to implement the Convention on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences,<sup>8</sup> concluded in 1974. The report pointed out the advances registered at the April/May 1980 United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology (see p. 634), the negotiations towards revision of the industrial property system (see p. 1333) and efforts towards drawing up a code of conduct for transnational corporations (see p. 666).

Adjustments of existing institutions, the report said, had been implemented notably by the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank). Generally, terms of concessional flows had improved and flows to, least developed countries expanded. Economic and technical co-operation among developing countries had received new impetus, while international understanding of the multifaceted nature of the development process had markedly improved and steps had been taken to strengthen the role of the United Nations system in that process.

The report indicated, however, that these changes were insufficient as measured against the required structural reforms implicit in the new international economic order. Despite their potential economic and financial strength, the developing countries continued to exert limited influence in international trade, financial and monetary policies, and no institutional framework existed to ensure just and remunerative prices for their commodity exports. The ongoing recession which had started in 1974 had been accompanied by increasing unemployment and widespread balance-of-payments problems which had led to a new wave of protectionism. The international trade system had yet to take fully into account the interests of the developing countries and movement on food security had been inadequate. Most international monetary objectives—reduction of the role of national currencies and gold as international reserves, the use of special drawing rights as central reserve assets and their linkage to additional development finance, international monetary stability and maintenance of the real value of currency reserves of the developing countries—remained to be met. The record of official development assistance, particularly of concessional flows, had been disappointing and the potential for economic co-operation between countries with different economic and social systems had not been realized. Agreement on new mechanisms and rules of the game had proved more rhetorical than substantive, the report continued. The world economy had been operating under increasing strains and its short-term management had been divorced from the restructuring of world production and of markets for goods and services which was required to accelerate and invigorate international economic growth and ensure the fullest utilization of the world's productive potential.

The report stressed that future global economic management should be based on a decision-making process that was both multisectoral in its coverage and universal in its participation. Through such a process, the report concluded, the world economic recovery and the structural changes required by the new international economic order could be achieved; global negotiations would serve as a major and concrete step in that direction.

Related organizational reports

Also in accordance with the General Assembly's resolution of 29 January 1979,<sup>9</sup> various bodies of the United Nations system submitted comprehensive reports complementing the report of the Director-General for D.I.E.C. These bodies pointed to a number of positive achievements in their respective areas of competence and noted the key objectives of the new international economic order that, since 1974, had not been achieved.

Among documents submitted to the Secretary-General in connexion with the special session were:

-a letter of 15 May from Norway transmitting a resolution adopted by the Inter-Parliamentary Council at its session held at Oslo from 7 to 12 April, calling for active participation in the special session and support for the new international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade;

—a letter of 24 June from Denmark enclosing a communique approved at a ministerial meeting of the Council of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), held on 3 and 4 June, outlining the ministers' views on the world economic and energy situation and relations with developing countries, and annexing an OECD declaration on trade policy;

-a letter of 10 July from Yugoslavia forwarding the Declaration of the World Trade Union Conference on Development, held at Belgrade from 22 to 25 April, on Conference-recommended action to be taken to solve world economic and social development problems and to introduce into daily practice the new international economic order;

-a letter of 12 August from Australia, Jamaica and Zambia enclosing the summary and conclusions of a report on the world economic crisis by a Commonwealth group of experts, set up at the request of Commonwealth heads of Government which had met at Lusaka, Zambia, in August 1979 (see p. 491);

-a letter of 15 August from Nigeria forwarding the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa, the Final Act of Lagos and the resolutions adopted by the second extraordinary session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity devoted to the economic problems of Africa, held at Lagos in April (see p. 548); and

-a letter of 22 August from India enclosing a communique issued at the end of a ministerial meeting of the "Group of 77" developing countries, held in New York on 21 and 22 August, assessing progress in the establishment of the new international economic order and proposing action to promote the development of developing countries.

On 22 and 26 August, the Secretary-General also transmitted to the special session: the Programme of Action for the Second Half of the United Nations Decade for Women and the resolutions adopted by the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, held at Copenhagen, Denmark, from 14 to 30 July (see p. 890); and the report of a Seminar on the Effects of the Existing Unjust International Economic Order on the Economies of the Developing Countries and the Obstacle that this Represents for the Implementation of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, held at Geneva from 30 June to 11 July (see p. 863).

Concluding its preparations for the Assembly's special session, the Committee for Development Planning gave further consideration to elements of the new international development strategy at its January session in New York (see p. 489).

The Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD, at its eleventh special session, held at Geneva in March, took note of two reports of a high-level intergovernmental group which, at sessions in January/February and March had considered but had not achieved consensus on a formulation for UNCTAD's contribution to the preparation of the new strategy; the Board transmitted the reports to the Assembly's Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy (see p. 616).

New international development strategy

The International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade was adopted on 5 December 1980, when the General Assembly proclaimed the Decade, to start on 1 January 1981. The Strategy had been finalized at the Assembly's eleventh special session held from 25 August to 15 September, following more than two years of work by the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy, assisted by the Economic and Social Council's Committee for Development Planning and by other bodies of the United Nations system. The Strategy set out goals and objectives for the 1980s and policy measures for their implementation, supplementing and extending those for the Second United Nations Development Decade (the 1970s) in the light of periodic reviews and appraisals and changing global socio-economic circumstances.

Action by the Preparatory Committee

The Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy, established in accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 29 January 1979,<sup>10</sup> held three sessions at United Nations Headquarters, New York, during 1980: 11 to 29 February; 14 to 25 April; and 2 to 20 June and 14 August.

An account of the Preparatory Committee's work was contained in a three-part report submitted to the Assembly's eleventh special session. At its February session, the Committee was informed, in a report by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination's Task Force on Long-term Development Objectives, of the Task Force's meetings on 17 and 18 December 1979 focusing on issues of structural change and institutional reform in major economic areas such as primary commodities, energy, trade, money, science and technology. The discussions of the Task Force pertaining to the new development strategy, since its first meeting in 1977, were summarized in a separate report to the Preparatory Committee.

The report of the Committee for Development Planning on its session held in New York from 7 to 16 January 1980 was also considered. The Committee had examined the strategy's general premises and basic objectives, priority areas for action and means of implementation, and summarized key goals and needed changes. The Committee concluded that, from its experience of the Second Development Decade, a broader, more flexible approach was required for the third development decade, giving less attention to rigid, quantitative targets and more attention to a broader range of objectives, including structural and institutional change. However, a few quantitative targets might help to focus on key goals, the Committee observed. The most important of these targets were: acceleration of the rate of economic development in developing countries, especially those with low incomes (7 per cent rate of growth of gross domestic product (GDP) for developing countries as a group was suggested, with a 6 per cent rate for the low-income developing countries to double their per capita income by the year 2000); satisfaction of individual and community human needs; international structural change, including the early establishment of the new international economic order to be a major goal of the new international development strategy; and changes in international institutions and mechanisms.

After considering an informal working paper, submitted by India on behalf of the "Group of 77" developing countries, on the goals and objectives of the proposed strategy, the Preparatory

Committee prepared a synoptic table compiling all suggestions and amendments made during its informal discussions on the paper. New informal papers were also submitted by: Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, on strategy goals and objectives; Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Sweden, on women and the new strategy; Japan, on human resources development in the strategy; and the United States, to include a provision on population growth relevant to the goals and objectives.

During its April session, the Committee continued its informal discussions of the strategy's goals and objectives on the basis of the Group of 77's paper. It also considered policy measures for the new strategy, having before it informal papers submitted on this subject by: India, on behalf of the Group of 77; Hungary, on behalf also of other socialist States of Eastern Europe and Mongolia; and the United States. The Committee also had before it two reports of a high-level group on the contribution of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) to the preparation of the new strategy (see p. 616). A synoptic table on policy measures, compiling suggestions and amendments to the Group of 77's paper, was prepared by the Committee at this session.

For its June session, the Committee Chairman had prepared- in accordance with a request made by the Committee in April-an informal consolidated text of the strategy's preamble, goals and objectives, policy measures, and a review and appraisal of the strategy. India, on behalf of the Group of 77, also introduced an informal working paper on review and appraisal. A first reading of the consolidated text was held in informal meetings; meetings of "friends of the Chairman" and "friends of the Rapporteur" undertook second readings on different sections of that text. In order to finalize the draft text of the strategy, the Committee decided to continue informal meetings of the "friends of the Chairman" at Geneva from 7 to 18 July and to resume the session in August. It requested the Chairman to present an oral report to the Economic and Social Council.

In his statement to the Council's second regular session of 1980, on 18 July, the Chairman of the Preparatory Committee said that his text had been found acceptable by all sides as a basis for its future work. Apart from quantitative targets, the most important outstanding issues related to the financial, monetary and energy fields; the most important progress yielded by the negotiations had been on the social aspects of development. Although there was not complete agreement in the Committee, he was optimistic that there would be an effective international development strategy at the end of the Assembly's special session.

On 18 and 24 July, on oral proposals of its President, the Council adopted, respectively: decision 1980/154, without vote, by which it took note of the report of the Preparatory Committee on its February and April sessions and the statement by its Chairman; and decision 1980/162, without objection, by which it took note of the report of the Committee for Development Planning on its January session.

On 14 August, at its resumed sixth session, the Preparatory Committee decided to transmit to the General Assembly the draft of the new international development strategy containing agreed and tentatively formulated paragraphs.

Action at the eleventh special session of the General Assembly

At the first plenary meeting of its special session, held from 25 August to 15 September, the General Assembly established an Ad Hoc Committee of the Eleventh Special Session, as recommended by the Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174 (see preceding subchapter). It was to assess progress made in the establishment of the new international economic order and action to promote the development of developing countries and international economic co-operation, including (1) a new international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade, and (2) global negotiations relating to international economic co-operation for development. The Assembly decided, however, that debate on the item would take place in plenary meetings.

The Ad Hoc Committee held five meetings between 27 August and 13 September and a number of informal meetings. The Committee established two working groups to deal with the two substantive items allocated to it: Working Group I, under the chairmanship of Niaz A. Naik (Pakistan) was to consider the strategy; and Working Group II, chaired by Bogdan Crnobrnja (Yugoslavia), the global negotiations. The Groups met between 28 August and 12 September. Their Chairmen also held informal consultations during that period with the Chairman of a contact group, headed by Jorge Enrique Illueca (Panama), established to deal with two draft resolutions submitted by the Group of 77 (see pp. 543 and 547).

In addition to the reports of the Preparatory Committee and the Committee of the Whole (see p. 519), the Ad Hoc Committee had before it several communications addressed to the Secretary-General.

Belgium on 4 September transmitted an explanatory note on and draft of a proposed pact for interdependent growth (see p. 537).

Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Viet Nam forwarded in a letter of 2 September a declaration on the contribution of those member countries of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance to the achievement of the goals and tasks of the new international development strategy. Their contribution would be in keeping with their socio-economic structure and the underlying principles of their foreign economic ties—complete equality, non-discrimination, mutual benefit, co-operation among all States irrespective of their economic systems, non-interference in internal affairs, and respect for sovereignty.

Australia, Jamaica and Zambia transmitted on 12 August the summary and conclusions of a report on "The World Economic Crisis: A Commonwealth Perspective" by a group of independent experts commissioned at the request of the Commonwealth Heads of Government at their Lusaka, Zambia, meeting in August 1979. Submitted as a contribution to consideration of key issues to be discussed at the special session and during the prospective global negotiations, the report focused on balance-of-payments problems, protectionism and structural adjustment, inflation, energy, ODA, food, commodity exports, manufacturing, and disarmament and development.

Jamaica and the United Republic of Tanzania in a letter of 27 August enclosed the Arusha Initiative: A Call for a United Nations Conference on International Money and Finance, adopted at the South-North Conference on the International Monetary System and the New International Order (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 30 June-3 July). In support of its call for a conference, the Initiative outlined: mutual interest in ending monetary disarray; the collapse of the Bretton Woods system; inadequacies and inequities of International Monetary Fund (IMF) prescriptions; the impact of monetary disorder and IMF's impotence; characteristics of a new international monetary system; urgent transitional measures; and the need for new financial mechanisms.

A note verbale of 8 September from the Lao People's Democratic Republic contained a statement by the Central Committee of the Lao Federation of Trade Unions made at a 25 August meeting celebrating the International Day of Trade Union Action for Development. The statement charged that capitalist companies and Governments had been plundering the natural resources of developing countries and exploiting the labour force.

Yugoslavia enclosed in a note verbale of 25 August the Final Document of the Second World Scientific Banking Meeting on International Financing of Economic Development (Dubrovnik, 26-31 May), attended by some 300 scholars, bankers and financial experts from 46 countries. The Final Document, dated 1 June, reviewed: the international financial, monetary and trade systems; collective self-reliance among developing countries; financing the exploration and development of energy resources; inter-bank co-operation; institutional requirements for more efficient development financing; expectations for the Assembly's special session; and the role and contribution of the Meeting to development.

The Ad Hoc Committee also had before it four reports submitted by the Secretary-General, pursuant to various General Assembly resolutions: on developments in the field of international economic co-operation since the sixth special (1974) session of the Assembly" (see p. 486); on immediate measures in favour of the countries most seriously affected by economic crises<sup>12</sup> (see p. 546); on accelerating the transfer of real resources to developing countries<sup>13</sup> (see p. 536); and on economic co-operation among developing countries<sup>14</sup> (see p. 562).

In a statement to the Ad Hoc Committee, the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation reviewed some of the shortcomings in international co-operation since the Assembly's sixth special session. One of the most important of these was the deliberate separation of the process of restructuring international economic relations from that of responding to the crisis in the world economy, he said. It was the international community's task not to manage the crisis, but to manage the world economy and thereby resolve the crisis. He also set out the policy measures needed for successful global negotiations relating to international co-operation for development (see p. 524).

During the debate in the plenary Assembly, the Assembly President said the new international development strategy could not afford to omit, as had previous strategies, specifications for concrete measures for structural change and management of the world economy. He added that it should provide for acceleration of the economic development of developing countries. It was imperative to finalize a strategy that would be both new and effective, and it would be wise to listen to the voices of the poor, the excluded and the oppressed, he said.

The Secretary-General said the preparatory work for the session had been disappointing with many questions unresolved; the Assembly must therefore bridge the gap between declarations and intentions.

The Chairman of the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy pointed to the areas where differences remained to be resolved. Foremost among them, he said, was the question of quantitative targets of growth for developing countries during the coming decade, in connexion with which he had proposed an overall growth rate of 7 per cent. The next most important issues he identified as those relating to energy and to money and finance, expressing concern that so little progress had been made concerning commitments to the internationally accepted targets and their time-frames for official development assistance (ODA). He further reported that agreement had yet to be reached on how to reflect the need for far-reaching policies of structural adjustment and change, especially in the areas of trade and industrialization, and on how best to define the concept of countries in special categories.

At the request of Nigeria, the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) was invited to address the Assembly. He urged consideration for the plight of African nations which not merely faced stagnation but whose very survival was in question, and identified four interrelated areas in which immediate action was needed—energy, indebtedness, aid and international monetary reform. He called for an energy policy that would ensure supplies and provide for consistent recycling of the surplus through establishment of a collective system of guarantees at either global or regional levels. Similarly, he called on the developed countries to increase their financial assistance and adopt measures leading to gradual reduction of the debt burden of the developing countries. In connexion with monetary reform, he argued for regionalization of the powers of IMF through formation of regional centres and stressed the need to establish a link between creation of international liquidity and development assistance. The OAU Secretary-General also suggested that third world nations unite along regional lines in order to embark on a development path that preserved their cultural identity and strengthened their negotiating position in the North-South dialogue.

Representatives from the developing countries generally expressed frustration at the lack of progress towards a new international economic order and what they saw as a continuing lack of political will on the part of the developed countries. The developing countries charged that those who controlled the current economic system were more concerned with their immediate interests than with accepting the fundamental reforms needed to bring about a just economic order beneficial to all.

India, speaking also as Chairman of the Group of 77, said the developed countries could no longer escape the consequences of the current economic situation. It was in their best interests to sustain and support development of the developing world through a massive transfer of real resources and a refashioning of the international economy so as to give the developing countries their rightful place in the structure of production and trade. These points, according to India, had been underscored in the report, published in 1980, of the Independent Commission on International Development Issues (the Brandt Commission), an investigation into world economic problems by a group of 18 international statesmen and leaders from five continents-headed by Willy Brandt, a former Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany. Failure to effect the transfer of resources was clearly the result of a lack of political will and there had been little evidence in the developed countries of the far-sightedness necessary to take hard decisions in their long-term interest, India said. Zaire contended that certain developed countries did not wish to recognize the character of the outdated order. Brazil believed that virtually no international economic co-operative action would have been taken but for the initiative of the Group of 77.

Panama was among those which warned that the intransigence and inflexibility which had hampered the work of the Preparatory Committee and the Committee of the Whole might threaten the Ad Hoc Committee's work.

Singapore accused the developed countries not only of being unreceptive but of resorting to protectionist measures which were having serious adverse effects on the world economy in general and the developing countries in particular. Argentina spoke in a similar vein. Thailand, sharing this view, added that protectionism distorted the pattern of investment and postponed abolition of inefficient industries. Thailand also regretted that the proposed ODA target remained the same as in the previous strategy and that some developed countries continued to overlook the fact that the strategy was intended to encompass the entire global community regardless of differences in social and economic systems. El Salvador said the goal should be to raise the target to 1 per cent of gross national product (GNP).

China said that, although reforms in the international economic field would give rise to temporary difficulties for the developed countries, all would benefit in the long term.

The concept of massive transfers of real resources could be viewed as nothing more than a channelling of financial surpluses, according to Sri Lanka. Together with Bangladesh and Mali, Sri Lanka also drew attention to the Brandt Commission's findings on the interdependence of North and South. Fiji and Kenya urged that commitments with regard to transfer of resources and ODA be honoured, while Nepal and the Upper Volta voiced disappointment at the decline of ODA.

The Philippines felt that the projected 7 per cent annual average rate of growth in GDP of the developing countries during the 1980s seemed ambitious for some of those countries in the light of current economic difficulties; however, those that could afford to sustain a higher rate should not be constrained by the global objective since the benefits transcended national boundaries. It added that those countries should have a greater voice in decisions governing the international monetary system—an opinion shared by Tunisia which, in addition, welcomed inclusion of the social aspects of development in the draft strategy.

Algeria stressed that, unless genuine reforms of the international monetary system were undertaken, other sectoral changes were useless. Iran suggested establishment in a developing country of an international bank run by third world nations.

Indonesia stated that earlier strategies had not only failed to address the need for structural reform, but tended to perpetuate the dependency relationships of the developing countries. Costa Rica and Malaysia pointed out that the developing countries were not seeking charity but were trying to dispense with such a centre/periphery relationship; their focus had shifted from aid to trade and they were seeking changes in the economic order to help expand their international economic role. Mauritius, too, referred to the current economic situation as one of interdependence.

Ecuador pointed out that the views of the Group of 77 reflected those of two thirds of the world. Development of the third world could, Ecuador believed, eliminate inflation in the developed countries. Iraq and Liberia warned of the grave consequences for both developing and industrial nations should agreement not be reached during the session.

Chad said the weaker nations continued to be oppressed and not aided. Senegal claimed that cultural contempt was preventing rich countries from making the effort to understand that the misery afflicting 40 per cent of the third world had nothing in common with poverty in the rich countries, which was due to poor distribution of national wealth; the same remedies could not be applied to such inherently different concepts. For the United Republic of Tanzania, it was imperative that the strategy address the plight of the developing countries, since the survival of millions was at stake.

Ghana was among those which felt that the strategy's priority should be the accelerated development of the developing countries rather than the health of the world economy. Mozambique added that previous programmes and strategies had failed to take the interests of developing countries in account.

Measures to redress the fundamental imbalance of international trade and indebtedness, world food supply and other basic aspects of the world economy had yet to be taken, Madagascar said. This view was shared by Tunisia which, together with Mozambique, stated that the international community was duty-bound to co-operate with the developing countries. The Lao People's Democratic Republic said that, as long as the current international economic order persisted, attempts at development by the developing countries would remain illusory.

Guatemala said some of the principles of the new international economic order had served as a pretext for at least one developed country to interfere in the internal affairs of other countries.

The Central African Republic and the Gambia were among those calling for urgent implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the least developed countries, adopted by UNCTAD in 1979.<sup>15</sup> The Gambia was joined by Bhutan, Burundi, Ethiopia, Haiti, the Sudan and Uganda in calling for priority to be given to UNCTAD's Immediate Action Programme for 1979-1981 to meet the critical situation of the least developed countries.<sup>16</sup> Somalia said that that Programme should neither be delayed nor receive reduced commitments. Morocco also called for special attention to be given to the least developed countries.

The establishment of a Common Fund for commodities (see p. 621) was termed a positive step by Swaziland, which joined Grenada in calling for speedy implementation of the Fund.

Zambia pointed out that the developing world held an important key to future world raw material resources. As to energy resources, Venezuela said the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) was not to blame for world inflation, since oil prices had not been artificially raised; on the contrary, they had been kept artificially low for a long time. The major portion of the high prices paid for fuel went to consumer-country taxes and to middlemen. Venezuela pointed out that industrialized countries' manufactures and technology costs had also risen. Kuwait stated that it was a mistake to lump the oil-producing countries together, since some were barely above the level of the least developed nations.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya contended that the world economic crisis had begun before the major increases in the price of oil; the Syrian Arab Republic reiterated that it had been caused by a fundamental imbalance in the world economic order. Nicaragua was among those which attributed the crisis to an economic structure inherited from the colonial past. Angola charged that increased oil prices were but a logical consequence of unbridled age-old plundering by transnational corporations. Bangladesh proposed that OPEC cut the price of oil to developing countries by 50 per cent and invest a part of their assets in those countries. Jordan pointed out that the Arab oil-producing countries were contributing over 5 per cent of their annual GNP to the developing countries, compared to a third of 1 per cent from the developed world. The United Arab Emirates said its contribution was more than 16 per cent, while Qatar said the Arab oil producers had exceeded the target by figures ranging from six to 22 times. Kuwait observed that it was offering soft terms and long grace periods in its financial operations with developing countries.

Delegations from developed market-economy countries agreed on the seriousness of the world economic situation and the need for a comprehensive, far-sighted strategy based on mutual advantage and common interest in which all would share responsibility commensurate with economic capacity. While agreeing that the least developed countries deserved special attention, it was stated that ultimately it was up to the developing countries themselves to be responsible for their own development by creating conditions that would attract private external resources.

Speaking for the member States of the European Economic Community (EEC), Luxembourg said the existing gap between rich and poor countries could not be allowed to grow without risking serious political disruption. However, the industrialized market-economy countries could not bear sole responsibility for the growth of the world economy and development assistance, which should be shared by all, particularly the oil-producing countries. Similarly, industrialized countries with planned economies must bear their share of the responsibility. These views were restated by France, which reaffirmed its commitment to reaching the ODA target of 0.7 per cent of GNP.

Denmark, the Netherlands and Norway urged that all industrialized countries—including the socialist countries of Eastern Europe—commit themselves to reaching the ODA target in the strategy about to be adopted. Denmark pointed out that only four countries had reached the target set for the previous Development Decade and felt that an increasing share of ODA should be channelled to the poorest developing countries. The Netherlands considered that the Group of 77's proposal to raise the target to 1 per cent deserved serious consideration, since it considered that ODA was a significant sign of the political will of developed countries to implement the strategy as a whole. This view was shared by Finland.

Sweden also pointed to the widely diverging performance in individual countries' ODA, giving as examples the United States, whose aid it said was stagnating or diminishing, and the centrally planned economy countries where, Sweden said, aid was almost invisible.

Israel was among those which felt that future ODA would be insufficient to meet the mounting capital needs of the oil-importing developing countries, and urged that supplementary additional resources be made available from the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and IMF and that development projects be funded by commercial banks through international financial institutions. Greece proposed the creation of an international loan insurance fund to guarantee loans to developing countries.

New Zealand said that, although the proposed strategy contained elements many Governments might find difficult to accept, it was convinced that a spirit of accommodation would prevail. In this regard, Spain called upon those that were benefiting from the current economic order to make concessions.

Canada, Japan and the United States were among those which urged a recycling of the surplus oil funds of OPEC to the oil-importing developing countries. Australia spoke similarly, adding that it was in favour of more direct channels leading to this end. Italy observed that unjustified increases in the price of oil penalized expansion and hence development; energy demand policies should be co-ordinated by ensuring that oil-producing countries' export earnings were protected so that those countries were not induced to raise prices by restricting production. The United Kingdom felt that those able to do so should adjust their economies to higher prices while assistance should be concentrated on the relatively few nations which had little scope for adjustment.

Belgium said the non-oil-producing countries of both North and South had to accept slower growth in order to reabsorb balance-of-payments deficits.

Recognizing the desperation of the least developed countries, particularly the African countries south of the Sahara, Austria said that a cessation of the arms race would release significant sums for development, and added that the development strategy for the 1980s must stress the link between the security of energy supply and the prospects for world-wide development.

Ireland said that, though there was a need for the developing world to industrialize, nothing was more urgent than increasing food and agricultural production.

The United States felt that the developing countries must: make more efficient use of domestic and external resources, concentrating on such priority areas as food; support family planning; take more responsibility for common management of international economic problems; and open up their economies to free flows of world trade.

Representatives of States with centrally planned economies stressed that primary responsibility for development lay with the developing countries themselves and that external economic relations, including aid, were but a complementary element to domestic efforts. They pledged continuing assistance to the developing countries on a scale compatible with both the donors' economic capacity and their political and social systems, such as planning expertise and technical co-operation. They denied that their aid to the developing countries was lower than that of the developed market economies, on grounds that a substantial part of the latter's so-called aid was merely compensation for colonial exploitation for which centrally planned economy States shared no responsibility. They further opposed recommendations that developing countries attempt to create favourable conditions for foreign private investment, stating that no amount of foreign aid would lead to any breakthrough unless the developing countries exercised control over their own natural resources and severed ties of dependence.

The USSR said that lack of real progress towards a new international economic order was due mainly to the capitalist States' practice of keeping the developing countries in a dependent status; it added that the most important current problem was the arms race, cessation of which would immediately increase the possibilities of channelling additional funds to promote the development of all countries.

Bulgaria and Czechoslovakia also urged a return to detente in order that progress in restructuring economic relations might be achieved; they held that the new strategy must contribute to the elimination of neo-colonialist interference in internal affairs, apartheid, racial discrimination, the use of force and protectionism. According to Afghanistan, unfavourable terms of trade, protectionism and exploitation by transnational corporations had caused large economic losses for it and other developing countries, and added that existing economic relations met the interests of only a small group of States and their monopolies.

Hungary and the Ukrainian SSR felt that the new strategy should reflect such important documents as the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order<sup>17</sup> and the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States.<sup>18</sup> Hungary also urged support for a 1973 proposal put forward by the USSR which would provide for a reduction in the military budgets of the permanent members of the Security Council and of other States with significant military and economic potential and allocation of part of the resources thus released to accelerate growth in the developing countries—a position shared by, among others, the Byelorussian SSR, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Mongolia. The Byelorussian SSR added that the Eastern European socialist States were not guilty either of plundering the countries of the third world or of exploiting the detrimental consequences of the upheavals in the Western economies. Mongolia, too, believed that responsibility for backwardness rested with those which had created colonialism.

A number of Eastern European socialist States expressed interest in restructuring the international division of labour. Poland wished to include the productive, particularly industrial, potentials of developing countries as well as of the countries of Eastern Europe in such an exercise. The German Democratic Republic said all States could develop successfully only if they participated in the international division of labour under equal conditions and only if infringement of sovereignty and interference in internal affairs were excluded. The USSR stressed that it would continue to oppose concepts which sought to perpetuate the old international division of labour, which reduced newly independent nations to the status of agrarian and raw-material appendages to developed capitalist countries.

The German Democratic Republic stated that transnational corporations were currently plundering the resources of developing countries more extensively than in colonialist days. Democratic Yemen observed that these corporations had evolved in subtle form to replace conventional colonialism. Viet Nam said the relative industrial growth of a small number of countries was not balanced, complete or independent, since it had been made possible only by dependence on transnational corporations.

According to Romania, the targets proposed by the Group of 77 covered only minimum requirements for correcting some of the most severe deficiencies of the current economic situation.

International Development Strategy

The text of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, agreed on by the General Assembly at its eleventh special session and subsequently adopted on 5 December, was based on the draft submitted by the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy. Changes made by the Assembly resulted from deliberations in Working Group I of the Ad Hoc Committee, which produced a consensus text of the entire Strategy, including agreement on various issues on which the Preparatory Committee had been unable to reach agreement.

Annexed to resolution 35/56, the Strategy was organized into four sections: a preamble; goals and objectives; policy measures; and review and appraisal of its implementation.

By the preamble, Governments recalled the adoption of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade<sup>19</sup> as an important step in the promotion of international economic co-operation for development, but considered its goals and objectives largely unfulfilled. Current and continuing negative trends in the world economy were viewed as impairing the growth prospects of developing countries, particularly the least developed among them. The international economy remained in a state of structural disequilibrium and, in an interdependent world, problems such as high inflation, unemployment, monetary instability, protectionism, maladjustment and uncertain growth prospects could not be resolved without resolving the particular problems of developing countries, whose more rapid development was of vital importance for steady global growth and for world peace, as well as for reducing disparities between developing and developed countries and eradicating poverty and dependence. Governments pledged themselves to fulfil their commitment to establish a new international economic order based on justice and equity, resolving to translate the Strategy's goals and objectives into reality.

The goals and objectives of the Strategy, outlined in section II, called for special attention to be given to the accelerated development of developing countries, particularly those whose needs were greatest—requiring more equitable distribution of economic opportunities and changes in the framework of international economic relations—and their equitable, full and effective participation in all decisions affecting international economic co-operation for development.

In order to achieve the development goals and objectives proposed for the 1980s, the average annual growth rate of GDP for the developing countries as a whole should be 7 per cent, which would lead to an annual increase in per capita GDP of about 4.5 per cent, thereby doubling income per capita in developing countries around the middle of the 1990s. Such growth was considered necessary for progress towards raising their share in world production of goods and services, eliminating the growing gap between their living standards and those of developed countries, increasing employment and income and consumption levels, and improving housing, health and education.

Among other economic goals suggested were annual growth rates of 7.5 and 8 per cent for exports and imports, respectively, of developing countries as well as improved terms of trade. The level of gross investment was to reach an average of about 28 per cent of GDP by 1990 and gross domestic saving was to reach about 24 per cent of GDP. Agricultural production should expand at 4 per cent annually and manufacturing output at 9 per cent, laying the basis for achieving the target of a 25 per cent share of world production for the developing countries by the year 2000.

It was pointed out that further reform of the international monetary system would benefit the entire international community. The Strategy called for an increase in real terms in the concessional and non-concessional flows of finance to developing countries, with a view to reaching and where possible surpassing the agreed ODA target of 0.7 per cent of GNP of developed countries.

In the energy field, the Strategy called for: an intensified search for a long-term solution to the energy problem; conservation of fossil fuels; aid towards development of new and renewable energy sources for the needs of developing countries; and developed countries to facilitate access to all energy technologies.

Other specific topics covered under goals and objectives were: improved physical and institutional infrastructure in developing countries; provision of basic shelter for all people; pursuit of the aims of the Integrated Programme for Commodities adopted by UNCTAD in 1976;<sup>20</sup> strengthening of the scientific and technological capacity of developing countries; special measures to promote the development of the least developed, land-locked, island and most seriously affected developing countries; use of resources released by disarmament for economic and social development; economic and technical co-operation among developing countries based on collective self-reliance; and an environmentally sustainable development process.

The reduction and elimination of poverty, a fair distribution of the benefits of development and full employment were primary objectives, and full and effective participation by the entire population at all stages of a country's development process was also to be ensured. Mention was also made of the need to eradicate illiteracy or reduce it considerably, to realize as closely as possible universal primary-education enrolment, and to attain a productive level of health by the year 2000. There was also agreement on the need to integrate the disabled in the development process.

The reduction of mortality rates was a major objective; life expectancy in all countries should reach at least 60 years and infant mortality rates should be reduced to a maximum of 50 per 1,000 live births, and to no more than 120 per 1,000 in the poorest countries by the year 2000. Respect for family planning was urged and the need to foster the welfare of children was emphasized, as was the need to integrate youth and secure the equal participation of women and men in development.

Recommended policy measures were set out in section III of the Strategy under the headings: international trade; industrialization; food and agriculture; financial resources for development; international monetary and financial issues; technical co-operation; science and technology for development; energy; transport; economic and technical co-operation among developing countries; least developed, most seriously affected, land-locked and island developing countries; environment; human settlements; disaster relief; and social development. (For further details, see under the pertinent chapters and subchapters of this volume.)

Countries would commit themselves to work for an open and expanding trade system. The Common Fund, an instrument for attaining the agreed objectives of the Integrated Programme for Commodities, was to be brought urgently into full and effective operation; international commodity agreements as indicated in that Programme should be concluded (see p. 621). A framework of international co-operation was to be established for expanding in developing countries the processing of primary commodities and export of processed goods, as well as of manufactures and semi-manufactures, and for improving competitiveness of natural products with developed countries, synthetics and substitutes. Action was to be taken to reduce and eliminate barriers to trade in agricultural products. The Strategy reaffirmed the importance of the generalized, non-reciprocal and non-discriminatory system of preferences for the expansion and diversification of the export trade of developing countries; they were to promote trade among themselves, and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe were asked to increase trade with the developing countries. Measures to enhance the role of the developing countries in invisibles, to regulate the operations of transnational corporations and to control restrictive business practices were also included.

The Strategy looked to the adoption of policies to raise the developing countries' share in world industrial production, including redeployment of industrial capacities from industrial to developing countries, increased market access for manufactures, a strengthened United Nations Industrial Development Organization system of consultations, and an enlarged United Nations Industrial Development Fund for increased technical assistance. Highest priority was to be accorded to the implementation of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, to be observed in the 1980s (see p. 658). Industrialization measures which aimed at generating employment, which would give equal opportunities to women and which took into account environmental aspects, were to be encouraged.

The Strategy outlined national and international action to be taken to achieve increased food and agricultural production. This included measures to support increased investment in agriculture in developing countries, agrarian reform, expanded resources for agricultural technology such as greater use of fertilizers, improved seeds and pesticides. Efforts were to be directed to prevention of food losses and control of desert locusts and African trypanosomiasis. The Strategy called for: continual replenishment of the International Fund for Agricultural Development; implementation of the 1979 Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations five-point Plan of Action on World Food Security;" efforts to enlist new contributors and increase contributions to the Food Aid Convention (see p. 687); augmenting resources of the World Food Programme to reach $1 billion by 1981/1982; and realization of the target of 500,000 metric tons of cereals for the International Emergency Food Reserve.<sup>22</sup>

Developing countries would continue to bear the main responsibility for financing their development, but the indispensable external financial resources should be increased, and steps to that end were outlined. Bilateral and multilateral flows would be made on an increasingly assured, continuous and predictable basis: an increase in ODA by developed countries was to aim at surpassing the target of 0.7 per cent of their GNP; a target of 1 per cent should be reached as soon as possible after mid-Decade.

Priority in assistance should be given to the poorer developing countries and efforts were to be made to double the flow of ODA to the least developed countries as soon as possible. Means for improving the terms and conditions of ODA were indicated, such as an increased rate of concessionality and united aid, and recommendations for debt relief were included. Other measures concerned export credit guarantees, long-term financing, non-concessional flows, and new forms of expanding developing-country access to the international financial markets and to foreign investment. A proposal for a world development fund should be examined by the Secretary-General and a report submitted to the Assembly before its 1981 session.

To increase the responsiveness of the international monetary system to the need of developing countries, the Strategy set out the principal features of a stable, effective and equitable monetary and financial system. These included an effective and equitable adjustment process, periodic review of the terms and conditions of IMF facilities, assistance to countries with structural imbalance in their external accounts and balance-of-payments difficulties, the establishment of a link between special drawing rights (SDRs) and development assistance, and participation by developing countries in decision-making in international monetary issues. Renewed emphasis on technical co-operation and a significant increase in resources for that purpose would be required.

All countries agreed to give high priority to increasing the developing countries' scientific and technological capacities, in accordance with the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development,<sup>23</sup> and to encouraging technology transfer. The Strategy referred also to the need to find and adopt an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology and to revise the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property. Included were calls for mobilization of resources for the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development established in 1979,<sup>24</sup> equal access of men and women to training, minimization of the negative impact of trained personnel migration, and development of a global information network for the exchange of data.

Measures to be taken for the long-term solution of the energy problem were included: rationalization of consumption and energy conservation; rational exploitation of energy resources in accordance with national priorities; access to energy-related technology by developing countries; establishment of national action programmes; greater financial support for energy projects, in particular in the least developed countries; and improvement of the investment climate in interested developing countries.

In the transport sector, steps were to be taken to enable developing countries to compete more effectively and expand their merchant fleets, with a view to increasing their share of the dead-weight tonnage of the world merchant fleet to 20 per cent by 1990. Other assistance was called for to expand ports and related facilities, air transport infrastructures, roads and railways, and to implement the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, proclaimed in 1977 for 1978-1988.<sup>25</sup>

Environmental management assistance was to be provided, and financial and technical support given to drought-stricken countries suffering from desertification. The quality of life and the environment should be improved and a better balance between rural and urban development achieved, by human-settlement planning and improvement. Disasters were to be mitigated by disaster relief and aid in disaster prevention and preparedness.

With support from the international community, developing countries would promote economic and technical co-operation among themselves, for which purpose they were committed to a number of regional and interregional action plans they had drawn up for economic development.

The Strategy included special support measures and envisaged substantial financial-assistance increases for the least developed, most seriously affected, land-locked and island developing countries. Specifically mentioned was the need to implement the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the least developed countries, adopted by UNCTAD in 1979.<sup>26</sup>

Each country would freely determine its own policies for social development to further the Strategy's human and social goals, with the international community providing needed assistance. The importance of a comprehensive system of primary health care was emphasized, as was the need to improve education and to integrate population policies into socio-economic strategies.

Section IV contained the review and appraisal process of the Strategy. To carry out this process, the evaluation-including the statistical-capacity of countries should be strengthened. Regional commissions would conduct the review and appraisal at the regional level, and the General Assembly would do so at the global level, with the assistance, as appropriate, of a body of universal membership which would report through the Economic and Social Council. The process would take into account the results achieved at the sectoral, regional and national levels, observations of the Committee for Development Planning, and results of the global negotiations relating to international economic co-operation for development, of a number of United Nations conferences and of relevant regional and interregional meetings. The first review and appraisal would be carried out in 1984.

Among the various issues on which the Preparatory Committee had been unable to reach agreement were quantitative targets; these had therefore been left for negotiation in the Assembly. The Committee had, however, suggested alternative figures for the percentage targets indicated as among the goals and objectives in section II of the Strategy. The targets in question were the average annual rate of growth in GDP for developing countries as a whole (7 per cent), their annual increase in per capita GDP (4.5 per cent) if the population increase remained at 2.5 per cent, the annual rate of expansion in output of their manufactures (9 per cent), the annual rate of expansion of their exports (7.5 per cent) and imports (8 per cent), and their share of gross investment (28 per cent of GDP) and of gross saving (24 per cent) by 1990.

Agreement was not reached in the Committee on the time-frame for the target for ODA; not all countries accepted the suggested target of 1 per cent to be reached as soon as possible in the second half of the Decade.

The Committee was not able to reach agreement on several provisions of paragraph 26 of the Strategy, calling for further reform of the international monetary system during the Decade, although a number of areas in which reform might be made were sketched.

The Assembly also reformulated the Committee's suggestions on energy needs and problems (paragraphs 34 and 35) and revised the specific policy measures and guiding principles for action in this field (paragraphs 126 and 127).

Although there was agreement in principle in the Committee on the need for improving the terms of ODA, there was no agreement on specific proposals, including the rate of concessionality and the tying of such aid, and a paragraph stipulating that developed countries set aside at least 0.15 per cent of their GNP for ODA to the least developed countries during the first half of the Decade and 0.2 per cent during the second half; the Assembly's formulations of these proposals were contained in paragraphs 103 and 146.

Since no agreement was reached on debt-relief actions, the Assembly revised proposed measures to this end in paragraph 112, together with a provision (paragraph 113) calling for alleviation of financial burdens of the developing countries resulting from price rises in vital imports. The Assembly also dealt with a call to use resources released through disarmament for development (paragraph 114).

The Assembly reformulated paragraph 70 relating to transnational corporations and several provisions relating to trade, including the multi-lateral safeguard system (paragraph 54), restrictive sectoral agreements (paragraph 62) and the generalized system of preferences for goods exported by developing countries (paragraph 63).

In the transport sector, the Committee could not agree on a specific figure for the developing countries' share of the world merchant fleet (paragraph 128).

On 13 September, at its fifth formal meeting, the Ad Hoc Committee-acting on a proposal of India, speaking on behalf of Member States belonging to the Group of 77—approved without objection a draft decision by which the General Assembly would take note with satisfaction of the consensus reached on the text of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, to come into effect and be implemented as from 1 January 1981. On 15 September, the Assembly adopted the text without vote as its decision S-11/23.

The consensus text had been introduced by Pakistan on behalf of the Chairman of Working Group I. At the same time, Pakistan orally added to paragraph 179 specific reference to three conferences-on the least developed countries, on energy, and on peaceful uses of nuclear energy-the results of which were to be taken into account in the review and appraisal of the Strategy.

Question of credentials

The Credentials Committee examined the credentials of representatives to the General Assembly's eleventh special session on 3 September and approved without vote its Chairman's proposal to accept the credentials of all representatives. Reservations were expressed in the Committee regarding the credentials of the delegations of Afghanistan (by China, Pakistan and the United States) and Chile and Democratic Kampuchea (by the USSR).

On 5 September, the Assembly adopted resolution S-11/2 by which it approved the Committee's report. After adoption of the resolution, Bulgaria, on behalf of the Eastern European socialist States, said they recognized the People's Revolutionary Council of the People's Republic of Kampuchea as the sole legitimate Government of Kampuchea, a view shared by Cuba, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam. Democratic Kampuchea said it objected to the presence of Viet Nam at the special session.

Action at the 1980 regular session of the General Assembly

On 5 December 1980, at its thirty-fifth session, the General Assembly adopted resolution 35/56 by which it proclaimed the Third United Nations Development Decade, to start on 1 January 1981, and adopted the International Development Strategy for the Decade, annexed to the resolution. The text had been drawn up at the Assembly's eleventh special session in August/September.

Resolution 35/56, as recommended by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, was adopted without vote. The draft resolution, as proposed by the Chairman, had been approved without objection by the Committee on 11 November.

Interpretive statements or statements of position or understanding regarding certain elements of the Strategy were made in both the Second Committee and the plenary Assembly. Those made in the Committee were annexed to the Committee's report to the Assembly.

Luxembourg, on behalf of EEC members, stated that the Community regretted that the availability of energy resources and the predictability of market conditions had not, in its opinion, been reflected adequately in the Strategy. Canada interpreted reference to facilitating developing countries' fullest possible access to scientific and technological processes, in paragraph 126, to mean that this would be in accordance with Canada's nuclear non-proliferation policies. Finland also stressed that nuclear proliferation and peaceful uses of nuclear energy should be viewed as closely interrelated issues. France and the United States spoke in a similar vein. The United States felt that energy had been inadequately, even subordinately, treated in the Strategy, virtually ignoring the close relationship between energy and development prospects. New Zealand regretted the absence of a reference to recycling processes and, with regard to energy, of a reference to pricing and supply. Japan said paragraphs 34 and 126 did not emphasize sufficiently the importance of adequate availability of energy and predictability of market conditions.

According to Australia, Canada, the United States and EEC members, the rights mentioned in paragraphs 6, 32 and 126, relating to the principle of full and permanent sovereignty over natural resources, must be exercised in accordance with the principles of international law.

With regard to giving developing countries the opportunity to expand agricultural exports through the liberalization of developed countries' agricultural and trade policies, Japan felt that the concept addressed in paragraph 60 should be directed to trade policies on agricultural products rather than to domestic agricultural policies. New Zealand would have preferred a fuller treatment of agricultural protectionism. Norway pointed out that factors such as geographical location, climate and national/regional policies limited the extent to which agricultural and trade policies could be liberalized.

Finland and Sweden supported the general idea in paragraph 62 that existing sectoral agreements which hampered trade growth should not be extended and should eventually be eliminated, but felt that there might be situations where such agreements would be preferable to other forms of trade restrictions, such as import restrictions.

The United States said that nothing in paragraphs 67 or 72, referring to the 1979 Arusha Programme for Collective Self-Reliance and Framework for Negotiations<sup>27</sup> and the 1975 Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation,<sup>28</sup> should be construed as implying United States support for all features of those documents. Moreover, the international distribution of service industries, including transport and insurance, should in its view be determined by market forces, as was the structural adjustment of the industrial sector.

The Federal Republic of Germany stressed that commodity agreements should take into account the particular circumstances of each individual commodity; in respect of paragraph 61, it also felt that governmental interference with the commodity processing structure was neither expedient nor acceptable. The United Kingdom was in agreement and added that, where feasible, agreements should be cost-effective and of benefit to producers and consumers alike. Canada accepted the proposals in paragraphs 33 and 56 related to commodity agreements on the understanding that they would have to be concluded where feasible and appropriate.

Iraq said it interpreted references in paragraph 101 to donor countries which were to make efforts to double ODA as meaning developed countries.

Luxembourg said EEC considered that the burden of ODA expected of developed countries should be shared in a more equitable way, regardless of those countries' economic and social systems. This opinion was shared by Norway and the United States; the latter country, which did not accept the target, reiterated its view that ODA was not necessarily the most appropriate remedy for the problems of special categories of countries. The members of EEC also considered it inopportune to fix subtargets for ODA, as indicated in paragraph 146, since this could lead to inappropriate rigidities in ODA distribution.

Belgium and Luxembourg stated that an objective of 1 per cent of GNP mentioned in paragraphs 24 and 98 was unrealistic, considering the difficult budgetary situation they were experiencing. The Federal Republic of Germany also said it could not currently accept the higher objective in view of uncertain world economic developments. France and Ireland did not feel that the figure could be considered as an agreed international target; Italy said it should be taken into account only as a future indicator. Japan, too, had reservations on the specific time-frame for achieving the target, as well as on the 1 per cent goal.

On the other hand, Denmark, the Netherlands and Sweden welcomed and said they fully accepted the target. Norway would have preferred that the targets be more ambitious with regard to time-frames. Austria and New Zealand accepted the ODA target as an indicative one but, given current economic circumstances, saw little likelihood of expansion of their ODA in the near future.

In connexion with multilateral guarantees under paragraph 110, Canada felt that these were not necessary to enable developing countries to borrow on international financial markets, since such mechanisms could distort the structure of existing international capital markets.

The Federal Republic of Germany also said that it did not see any scope for additional debt-relief measures, since its conversions of loans into grants had already been substantial and comprehensive. Debt-adjustment measures referred to in paragraph 112 should, in EEC's view, be considered in exceptional circumstances, at the request of the party concerned and on a case-by-case basis.

Austria, Finland and Sweden felt that proposals in paragraph 113 to alleviate the financial burden resulting from price rises of developing countries' vital imports had not been sufficiently clarified. Canada said it could not accept that special and favourable criteria be applied only to protect countries in particular categories—an opinion shared by the United States and EEC. Troublesome ideas in that paragraph, the United States said, were possible differential treatment of certain IMF members, revision of how IMF regarded its members' balance-of-payments positions, and price indexing.

Australia said the IMF link between SDRs and development assistance proposed in paragraph 115 did not imply Australia's commitment to establishment of such a link. Canada and the United States were not convinced of its desirability; the United States was concerned that any such link might damage efforts to make SDR the principle reserve asset of the international monetary system. New Zealand also expressed reservations about some of the proposals for monetary reform.

Turning to the transfer of technology called for in paragraph 118, Denmark, on behalf of EEC, said it was necessary to distinguish between transfers which were the subject of decisions by the private sector and those relating to the public sector.

Luxembourg stated that EEC members could not accept the principle, defined in paragraph 128, of a precise target figure for the share of developing countries in world dead-weight tonnage. This position was shared by Australia, Canada, Norway, Sweden and the United States. Greece and the United Kingdom added that fleet expansion should be determined by competition within a free market. Finland accepted the endeavour but did not see the relevance of the time-bound percentage target, a view shared by Japan.

The United States said it could not agree, as recommended in paragraph 135, to the provision of conference and secretariat services for meetings if they violated the principle of universality.

Member States of EEC would have preferred that the mechanisms for regional review and appraisal of the Strategy, in paragraph 173, be more clearly defined.

Mexico, as well as Venezuela speaking on behalf of the Group of 77, agreed that the Strategy did not fully reflect the needs or expectations of the developing countries; nevertheless it was a step forward whose significance would depend on the commitment of Governments. The Philippines called for its implementation to be given political impetus. The Philippines and Venezuela, as well as Brazil, believed the text reflected the immobility shown by the developed countries during negotiations, compounded by interpretive statements or reservations. Brazil added that the text showed a perilous tendency to include development problems only within the overall picture of world economic problems, placing them all on an equal footing, which Brazil rejected, for it purported to eliminate the preferential treatment that developing countries must be given.

China also considered that the Strategy had failed to meet initial expectations, but was an improvement over the previous one; China called on all countries, whatever their economic system, to undertake its implementation.

The German Democratic Republic, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, characterized the new Strategy as weaker than the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order<sup>29</sup> and the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States.<sup>30</sup> These countries noted the absence of provisions such as those to ensure full inalienable sovereignty over natural resources and all economic activity, including the right to nationalization, the end of interference by foreign capital and multinational corporations in internal affairs, equal participation by all States in economic relations, and the inadmissibility of discrimination based on differences in social or economic systems. Further, the Strategy should have incorporated concrete proposals aimed at limiting the arms race, thus making available supplementary means for development, and provisions on the right to compensation for exploitation and damage caused by policies of colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism and apartheid. Moreover, quantitative targets were calculated outside the context of national development programmes, and there was no consideration of the harmful consequences of the outflow of profits and trained personnel to capitalist countries and multinational corporations.

With regard to quantitative targets for assistance, the Eastern European socialist States said it was unjust to extend to them the demands and criteria addressed to developed capitalist countries. In addition, expansion of access by the developing countries to the technology of production of energy, including nuclear energy, must be in accordance with agreed international guarantees applied by the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Question of credentials

On 22 September, the Credentials Committee met to examine the credentials of representatives to the General Assembly's 1980 regular session. It approved a proposal by its Chairman, which recommended that the Assembly approve the Committee's first report setting forth reservations expressed by some members concerning the credentials of the delegations of Afghanistan (China, Haiti, Singapore, United States), Chile (USSR) and Democratic Kampuchea (Angola, USSR). On 13 October, the Assembly adopted the Committee's text without vote as resolution 35/4 A. (See p. 331.)

I. Preamble

1. In launching the Third United Nations Development Decade, starting on 1 January 1981, Governments rededicate themselves to the fundamental objectives enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations. They reaffirm solemnly their determination to establish a new international economic order. To this end, they recall the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order of the sixth special session of the General Assembly, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and the resolution on development and international economic co-operation adopted by the Assembly at its seventh special session, which laid down the foundations for the establishment of the new international economic order.

2. The adoption of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade was an important step in the promotion of international economic co-operation for development. However, the limitations of a strategy, when conceived within the framework of the existing System of international economic relations, soon became obvious. Inequities and imbalances in these relations are widening the gap between developed and developing countries, constitute a major obstacle to the development of the developing countries and adversely affect International relations and the promotion of world peace and security. Midway through the Decade, the world community called for a fundamental restructuring of international economic relations and embarked upon its quest for a new international economic order.

3. The goals and objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Second Development Decade remain largely unfulfilled. In addition, the present negative trends in the world economy have adversely affected the situation of developing countries and, as a result, have impaired their growth prospects. Developing countries have been hit particularly hard by the continuing economic crisis owing to the greater vulnerability of their economies to external factors. The present difficult international economic environment has particularly aggravated the special problems facing the least developed countries and other developing countries, particularly those in the special categories, where development needs and problems are greatest, and the poorest sections of the population. The stark reality confronting mankind today is that close to 850 million people in the developing world are living at the margin of existence-enduring hunger, sickness, homelessness and absence of meaningful employment.

4. The international economy remains in a state of structural disequilibrium. It is characterized by a slower growth rate accompanied by a continuing trend of high inflation and unemployment, prolonged monetary instability, intensified protectionist pressures, structural problems and maladjustment and uncertain long-term growth prospects. In an interdependent world economy, these problems cannot be solved without resolving the particular problems facing the developing countries. Furthermore, accelerated development of developing countries is of vital importance for the steady growth of the world economy and essential for world peace and stability.

5. The current difficulties should not deter the world community from the imperative to restructure international economic relations. The challenge of development calls for a new era of effective and meaningful international co-operation for development responsive to the needs and problems of the developing countries.

6. The International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade is an integral part of the continuing efforts of the international community to accelerate the development of developing countries and to establish a new international economic order and is directed towards the achievement of its objectives. These call, in particular, for equitable, full and effective participation by developing countries in the formulation and application of all decisions in the field of development and international economic co-operation with a view to bringing about far-reaching changes in the structure of the present international economic system on a just and equitable basis and the full and permanent sovereignty of every State over its resources and economic activities.

7. The new International Development Strategy aims at the promotion of the economic and social development of the developing countries with a view to reducing significantly the current disparities between the developed and developing countries, as well as the early eradication of poverty and dependency, which, in turn, would contribute to the solution of international economic problems and sustained global economic development, and would also be supported by such development on the basis of justice, equality and mutual benefit. The International Development Strategy is a vast undertaking, involving the entire international community, for the promotion of international development co-operation.

8. The development process must promote human dignity. The ultimate aim of development is the constant improvement of the well-being of the entire population on the basis of its full participation in the process of development and a fair distribution of the benefits therefrom. In this context, a substantial improvement in the status of women will take place during the Decade. In this perspective, economic growth, productive employment and social equity are fundamental and indivisible elements of development. The International Development Strategy should, therefore, fully reflect the need for the adoption of adequate and appropriate policies, to be defined by each country within the framework of its development plans and priorities, for movement towards the realization of this ultimate goal of development. The pace of development in the developing countries as a whole should be accelerated substantially in order to enable them to achieve these objectives.

9. The primary responsibility for the development of developing countries rests upon those countries themselves. Effective action by the international community, however, is indispensable for the creation of an environment that is fully supportive of the national and collective efforts of the developing countries for the realization of their development goals. For their part, the developing countries will continue to place increasing emphasis on collective self-reliance as a means of accelerating their development and contributing to the establishment of a new international economic order.

10. The most pressing problems and deteriorating situations of the least developed countries require particular attention, and special and effective measures will be taken for the elimination of the basic constraints facing these countries and to ensure their accelerated development. Likewise, specific measures and actions will be taken to meet the special and pressing problems of the land-locked, island and most seriously affected developing countries.

11. Specific regional problems of developing countries, where they exist and are included in regional development strategies, such as the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa, will also be taken into account through effective and adequate measures within the framework of the general policy measures adopted in favour of all developing countries.

12. Urgent action should be taken by all the members of the international community to end without delay colonialism, imperialism, neo-colonialism, interference in internal affairs, apartheid, racial discrimination, hegemony, expansionism and all forms of foreign aggression and occupation, which constitute major obstacles to the economic emancipation and development of the developing countries.

13. Full respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of every country, abstention from the threat or use of force against any State, non-interference in the internal affairs of other States and the settlement by peaceful means of disputes among States are of the utmost importance for the success of the International Development Strategy. There should be concrete progress towards the goals of general and complete disarmament under effective international control, including the urgent implementation of measures of disarmament, which would release substantial additional resources which could be utilized for social and economic development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries.

14. It is essential to mobilize public opinion in all countries, particularly the developed countries, in order to obtain their full commitment to the goals and objectives and the implementation of the present Strategy. Recognizing the important role of legislative bodies in contributing to realistic preparation and effective implementation of national economic and social development plans, the support of members of legislative bodies will be essential for the implementation of the International Development Strategy.

15. Organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system will assist appropriately in the implementation of the Strategy and in the search for new avenues of international co-operation for development.

16. Governments designate the decade starting on 1 January 1981 as the Third United Nations Development Decade and pledge themselves, individually and collectively, to fulfil their commitment to establish a new international economic order based on justice and equity. They subscribe to the goals and objectives of the Strategy and firmly resolve to translate them into reality by adopting a coherent set of interrelated, concrete and effective policy measures in all sectors of development. These goals and objectives and policy measures are set out below.

II. Goals and objectives

17. The International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, as an integral part of the efforts of the international community to establish a new international economic order, aims at the accelerated development of the developing countries. In contributing to the solution of international economic problems, it will greatly help sustained global economic development and promote the achievement of the ultimate aim of development—the improvement of the conditions of all. It will involve and require changes in the world economy and in the economies of the developed and developing countries themselves; and it calls for institutional and structural changes in international economic relations. In an interdependent world economy, it is the responsibility of all Governments to contribute to the achievement of the goals and objectives of the Strategy. The experience of the 1970s clearly indicates that the goals and objectives of the world community can only be attained through a substantially greater effort in the 1980s than was made in the Second United Nations Development Decade.

18. Particular attention should be given to the need for accelerated development of the least developed countries and other developing countries, particularly those in the special categories, where the development needs and problems are greatest. Special and effective measures should be taken to alleviate their pressing problems and lessen the basic economic constraints facing them.

19. Accelerated development calls for a more equitable distribution of economic opportunities among nations. In an interdependent world this will be a source of economic strength. It entails changes in the patterns of global production, consumption and trade arising in particular from the industrialization of developing countries; it requires effective control by those countries over the use of their own resources; and it calls for changes in the framework of international economic relations so as to ensure the equitable, full and effective participation of those countries in the formulation and application of all decisions in the field of international economic co-operation for development.

20. Each developing country will set its own target for growth in the light of its particular circumstances. In order to achieve the goals and objectives of the International Development Strategy, the average annual rate of growth of gross domestic product for the developing countries as a whole during the Decade should be 7 per cent and, in the early part of the Decade, as close as possible to this rate. This target and those derived from it are a broad indication of the scope of concerted efforts to be made during the Decade at the national and international levels. On the basis of regional needs, circumstances and patterns of growth, more specific regional goals may be elaborated in the framework of the regional commissions. Special efforts are required to ensure that the low-income developing countries attain the average rate of 7 per cent.

21. If the average annual rate of growth of population in the developing countries were to remain at about 2.5 per cent, an average annual increase of 7 per cent in gross domestic product would lead to an annual increase of about 4.5 per cent in per capita gross domestic product. This would double income per capita in developing countries around the middle of the 1990s. Such a growth in income is necessary if real progress is to be made towards raising substantially the share of the developing countries in world production of goods and services and towards eliminating the growing gap between the standards of living of developing and developed countries. Such growth is equally essential if the people of developing countries are to benefit from development through expanding employment opportunities, rising levels of income and consumption, better housing and expanding facilities for health and education. Accelerated growth in the developing countries is also needed in order to support national policies aimed at achieving a more equitable distribution of income and benefits from development. Further, such growth will contribute significantly to a more balanced growth of the world economy.

22. An acceleration in the tempo of production in developing countries will require a rapid expansion and diversification of their international trade. For developing countries in general, exports and imports of goods and services should expand at annual rates of not less than 7.5 per cent and 8 per cent, respectively. The attainment of such rates of growth and the improvement of the terms of trade of developing countries will necessitate equitable participation of developing countries in international trade, inter alia, through improved market access for their products, and extending to them special and preferential treatment where feasible and appropriate, in the context of the general effort to liberalize world trade, particularly in their favour, and vigorous efforts to resist protectionism, as steps towards promoting equity in trade relations between the developing and developed countries. The industrialized countries will take fully into account the industrialization and development objectives of the developing countries when shaping their trade policies, in particular by continuing and accelerating the implementation of effective adjustment policies based on mutual benefit and dynamic comparative advantage.

23. The acceleration of production will require that gross investment reaches the level of about 28 per cent of gross domestic product by 1990. The developing countries, therefore, must fully mobilize their domestic financial resources. To this end, for developing countries in general, gross domestic saving should be increased to reach about 24 per cent of gross domestic product by 1990. The developing countries that have a saving ratio of less than 15 per cent should make vigorous efforts to raise it to 20 per cent as early as possible. The countries that have or will soon have a saving ratio of 20 per cent should raise it significantly during the Decade.

24. The rising investments and imports needed for an acceleration of growth commensurate with the attainment of the goals and objectives of the International Development Strategy require a substantially greater flow of financial resources in real terms to developing countries. In this context, recent major proposals made by heads of State and Government, and other important proposals to increase substantially concessional and non-concessional flows in real terms to developing countries, should be given urgent consideration by the international community. A major objective of the Decade must be to make possible in the context of continued changes and improvements in the international financial system an enhanced flow of financial resources on terms and conditions that are better attuned to the development aims and economic circumstances of developing countries. A rapid and substantial increase will be made in official development assistance by all developed countries, with a view to reaching and where possible surpassing the agreed international target of 0.7 per cent of the gross national product of developed countries. To this end, developed countries which have not yet reached the target should make their best efforts to reach it by 1985, and in any case not later than in the second half of the Decade. The target of 1 per cent should be reached as soon as possible thereafter. The efforts of developed countries will be greater, the lower their relative performance. Developing countries in a position to do so should also continue to provide assistance to other developing countries within the framework of this general increase to all developing countries, and in order to meet the most pressing problems and correct the deteriorating situation of the least developed countries and developing countries in the other special categories where the development needs and problems are greatest, the flows of official development assistance will increasingly be directed towards those countries.

25. Efforts should be made to encourage an increase in net flows of non-concessional capital which is required for the overall financing needs of the developing countries, taking into account their national plans and legislations.

26. In order to create conditions more favourable to the development of the developing countries and the growth of the world economy in general, efforts to increase the responsiveness of the international monetary system to the needs and interests of the developing countries should be intensified through further reform of the system to be pursued and carried out expeditiously early in and throughout the Decade to the benefit of the entire international community. To these ends, the international monetary system should provide for the equitable and effective participation of developing countries in decision-making, taking into account, inter alia, their growing role in the world economy, as well as a symmetrical and efficient adjustment process, stability of exchange rates of international currencies, and further strengthening and expansion of the special drawing rights as the central reserve asset in order to ensure better international control over the creation and equitable distribution of international liquidity. In stipulating the conditions attached to the use of its resources, the International Monetary Fund will pay due regard to the social and political domestic objectives of member countries, to their economic priorities and circumstances, including the causes of their balance-of-payments problems. The international and multilateral financial institutions are urged to continue to expand and improve their lending facilities, and to create new ones where necessary, with a view to assisting their members, including in particular the developing countries which face balance-of-payments difficulties.

27. The persistence of inflation in the world economy, particularly in developed countries, impedes growth and development and renders the situation of developing countries even more precarious. The rate of inflation should be substantially reduced and its adverse effects should be mitigated as far as possible so as to help to ensure a sustained, increased and real economic growth, particularly in the developing countries. Rapid economic growth in developing countries will help rationalize productive structures and decrease inflationary pressures.

28. Hunger and malnutrition must be eliminated as soon as possible and certainly by the end of this century. Substantial progress should be made during the Decade towards food self-sufficiency and food security in developing countries so as to ensure an adequate level of nutrition for everybody. Agricultural production in developing countries as a whole should expand at an average annual rate of at least 4 per cent so that it will be possible to meet the nutritional needs of the populations, to enlarge the base for industrialization and the diversification of economic structures, and to redress current imbalances in world production. The share of developing countries in world exports of food and agricultural products should increase substantially. To those ends, developing countries should continue to strengthen the formulation and implementation of food and agricultural development plans within the framework of their national development priorities and programmes. These objectives should be supported by additional external resource transfers in the context of overall greater flows of financial resources to developing countries. An improved international framework for the agricultural development of developing countries is also necessary, including increased market stability, greater security of agricultural supplies and, in order to enlarge the export potential of developing countries, improved access for their agricultural products to world markets.

29. Developing countries as a whole should expand manufacturing output at an average annual rate of 9 per cent, thereby making a significant contribution during the Decade towards raising the share of developing countries in world manufacturing production and laying the basis for achieving the target of a 25 per cent share of world production by the year 2000 as set out in the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation. Industrialization should be aimed at meeting in an integrated way the overall requirements of the development of the national economies of developing countries. Manufacturing activities should be geared towards not only satisfying growing domestic demand and employment requirements but also, as a component of independent national economies, increasing the share of developing countries in world exports of manufactured goods. A fundamental objective of the world community is to achieve a system of trade based on a dynamic pattern of comparative advantage reflecting a more effective international division of labour. Far-reaching changes should, therefore, be brought about in the structure of world production, in the spirit of mutual benefit, so as to increase and diversify the production of the developing countries and create new sources of employment there. In this context, improved access to markets for products of export interest to developing countries and continued attention to the formulation and implementation of positive adjustment policies in the industrialized countries are important objectives of international co-operation.

30. The physical and institutional infrastructure in developing countries should be expanded at rates that fully support the rate of expansion of the economy as a whole, and adequate financial and technical resources should be provided for that purpose. Special attention should be given to overcoming the bottle-necks and constraints of transport and communication facing the developing countries, particularly with a view to strengthening intraregional and interregional links.

31. Due account should be taken of the positive role of the public sector in mobilizing internal resources, formulating and implementing overall national development plans and establishing national priorities.

32. In a growing world economy and without prejudice to the principle of full and permanent sovereignty of each State over its natural resources, the rational development, management and utilization of natural resources should be encouraged in order, inter alia, to prevent early exhaustion of finite resources and overburdening of renewable resources. It will be necessary, particularly for the industrialized countries, which bear the heaviest responsibility for the use of natural resources, to encourage new patterns of consumption and production.

33. In the field of raw materials, the agreed objectives of the Integrated Programme for Commodities should be actively pursued. In this context, international commodity agreements should be concluded and a more equitable distribution of activities related to the processing of raw materials should be achieved with the aim of increasing the location of those activities in developing countries. Developing countries should also acquire improved capacity to explore and develop their natural resources and to ensure closer integration of the sector in the overall development of their economies.

34. In order to create conditions more favourable to the development of the developing countries and the growth of the world economy in general, efforts for the development and expansion of all energy resources of the world should be intensified in search of a long-term solution to the energy problem. The international community will have to make substantial and rapid progress in the transition from the present international economy based primarily on hydrocarbons. It will have to rely increasingly on new and renewable sources of energy, seeking to reserve hydrocarbons for non-energy and non-substitutable uses. In view of the finite supply of fossil fuels in the world economy and the often wasteful and inefficient utilization of those resources, effective measures for their conservation will have to be urgently adopted and/or improved, in particular by developed countries which consume the major share of the world's hydrocarbon production.

35. In view of the increasing energy requirements of the developing countries during the Decade and beyond, which will limit their ability to reduce energy use significantly without hindering their development, concerted and adequate measures commensurate with their development goals and their immediate and longer-term needs will be adopted by the international community. In this context, the exploration, development, expansion and processing of all energy resources of the developing countries will be promoted at a rate commensurate with their development objectives and adequate financial and technical resources will be provided for the purpose. The international community will devote serious attention to the effective implementation of the results of the United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy. Adequate financial and technical resources will be devoted to the development of new and renewable sources, to conventional forms of energy and to the adaptation of technology to the needs of developing countries. Developed countries should give or facilitate, as appropriate, the freest and fullest possible access to all energy technologies, particularly those related to the development of new and renewable forms. The problem of energy will be considered within the global negotiations relating to international economic co-operation for development, as agreed to by the General Assembly at its thirty-fourth session.

36. The strengthening of the scientific and technological capacities of developing countries is essential for their sustained and accelerated development. The international community will implement the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development principally in order to strengthen the scientific and technological capacities of developing countries, to restructure the existing pattern of international scientific and technological relations and to strengthen the role of the United Nations system in science and technology and the provision of increased financial resources. Efforts will be made at national and international levels to enable developing countries to have easier access to the technology-including advanced technology-they require and to facilitate the transfer of such technology on a substantially increased scale.

37. The most pressing problems and the deteriorating situation of the least developed countries must receive special attention. In order to remove the basic constraints to their development and thereby transform their economies, efforts by the least developed countries themselves and by the international community must be immediately and substantially expanded. Measures should be focused on promoting a self-sustained process of development, on accelerating agricultural and industrial progress and on ensuring the development of human resources and broadly based participation in development. The international community will devote serious attention to the effective preparation and conclusion of and follow-up to the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries.

38. The special and pressing problems of the landlocked, island and most seriously affected developing countries need to be met through specific measures and actions.

39. There is a close relationship between disarmament and development. Progress in the former would help greatly in the realization of the latter. Therefore, resources released as a result of the implementation of disarmament measures should be devoted to the economic and social development of all nations and should contribute to the bridging of the economic gap between developed and developing countries.

40. Economic and technical co-operation among developing countries based on the principle of collective self-reliance constitutes a dynamic and vital component of an effective restructuring of international economic relations. While the main elements of economic and technical co-operation among developing countries will be determined by those countries themselves, the international community should accord high priority and urgency to supporting the efforts of developing countries to strengthen and implement their programmes of mutual economic and technical co-operation. Such programmes will contribute to reducing their external dependence and vulnerability, achieving equitable and balanced international economic relations and strengthening their role in the world economy, their self-reliance and autonomous growth and development.

41. Accelerated development in the developing countries could enhance their capacity to improve their environment. The environmental implications of poverty and underdevelopment and the interrelationships between development, environment, population and resources must be taken into account in the process of development. It is essential to avoid environmental degradation and give future generations the benefit of a sound environment. There is need to ensure an economic development process which is environmentally sustainable over the long run and which protects the ecological balance. Determined efforts must be made to prevent deforestation, erosion, soil degradation and desertification. International co-operation in environmental protection should be increased.

42. Development is an integral process, embodying both economic and social objectives. National development plans and targets of the developing countries should be formulated on the basis of a unified approach to economic and social development, which is essential for balanced development of all sectors of the economy, should provide for both accelerated growth and increased effectiveness of production and should fully take into account not only immediate but also long-term social and economic objectives of development of the developing countries. It is for each country to establish adequate national objectives for the promotion of human and social development within the framework of its development plans, priorities and resources and in accordance with its socio-economic structure and existing circumstances. The final aim of development must be the continuing increase in the well-being of the entire population on the basis of its full participation in the process of development and a fair distribution of the benefits therefrom. As part of the efforts to implement the International Development Strategy, the international community will provide technical and financial support to achieve those goals, in the context of an overall substantial increase in resources for development, paying due respect to the cultural identities of nations and peoples.

43. The reduction and elimination of poverty and a fair distribution of the benefits of development are primary objectives for the international community during the Decade. Great numbers of workers remain underemployed or unemployed. Many millions are illiterate. High infant mortality rates, poor housing and environmental degradation in urban slums and depressed rural areas continue to afflict the people of the developing countries. More resources for production, higher productivity and accelerated development are essential for progress towards higher and more equitable standards of living. These are continuing challenges to the international community, and Governments accordingly reaffirm their commitment to the broad aim of development.

44. The achievement of full employment by the year 2000 remains a primary objective. Intensive efforts will have to be made to increase the opportunities for productive employment, especially for the new entrants to the labour force, as this is expected to increase by 2.5 per cent per annum, and to reduce and eliminate the present massive unemployment and underemployment.

45. The international community recognizes the need for countries to continue to strengthen their implementation of the recommendations of the World Population Plan of Action. Consistent with the World Population Plan of Action, all countries should respect and ensure the right of parents to determine the number and spacing of their children and should, as a matter of urgency, make universally available advice on and means of achieving the desired family size.

46. The development of human resources provides a broad basis for development: it enhances the capacity of people to participate constructively in the development process. In this context, education is an important element, and the provision of universal education on the broadest possible scale, the eradication or considerable reduction of illiteracy, and the closest possible realization of universal primary enrolment by the year 2000 remain major goals of all countries during the Decade. A parallel and harmonious expansion of all levels and types of education is equally necessary, keeping in view the decisive role of education and training for national development and individual fulfilment.

47. The absence or shortage of trained and qualified national personnel often limits the capacity of developing countries to take full advantage of existing or potential development opportunities. The provision of the required trained and qualified personnel on a scale assuring national self-sufficiency in this respect would constitute an important contribution to the achievement of the development goals of the developing countries. The international community should provide adequate financial and technical resources to support the training of national personnel in all sectors of social and economic activities in the developing countries.

48. The attainment by the year 2000 of a level of health that will permit all peoples of the world to lead a socially and economically productive life is an important objective of the international community. Primary health care is a key measure for the attainment of this objective. All countries will broaden the access of the poorest groups in their populations to health facilities and, with the assistance of the international community, will ensure immunization against major infectious diseases for all children as early as possible during the Decade. Safe water and adequate sanitary facilities should also be made available to all in rural and urban areas by 1990. The reduction of mortality rates will be a major objective. In the poorest countries, infant mortality should be reduced to less than 120 per 1,000 live births. Life expectancy in all countries should reach 60 years as a minimum, and infant mortality rates should reach 50 per 1,000 live births, as a maximum, by the year 2000. Particular efforts should be made to integrate the disabled in the development process. Effective measures of prevention and rehabilitation are therefore essential.

49. The provision of basic shelter and infrastructure for all people, in rural as well as urban areas, is a long-term goal. A balanced network of cities, towns and villages is needed for harmonious development, for the emergence of mutually supportive linkages between industrial and agricultural activities, and for the adequate provision of infrastructure and services. Well-balanced programmes for the development of human settlements are necessary so as to provide greater benefits to low-income groups.

50. In pursuit of the objectives highlighted during the International Year of the Child, the welfare of children will be fostered. The essential role of the family in the balanced development of the child should be stressed. Efforts should be made to improve the living conditions of children and to eliminate child labour in conformity with the relevant international labour conventions; special attention should be paid to the large number of children under 15 years of age living in poor rural and urban areas.

51. Full and effective participation by the entire population at all stages of the development process should be ensured. In line with the Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, women should play an active role in that process. Appropriate measures should be taken for profound social and economic changes and for the elimination of the structural imbalances which compound and perpetuate women's disadvantages. To this end, all countries will pursue the objective of securing women's equal participation both as agents and as beneficiaries in all sectors and at all levels of the development process. This should include women's greater access to nutrition, health services, education and training, employment.

and financial resources and their greater participation in the analysis, planning, decision-making, implementation and evaluation of development. Changes that will lead to the sharing of responsibilities by men and women in the family and in the management of the household should be encouraged. Institutional and administrative mechanisms to accomplish these objectives should be strengthened. All countries should give high priority to the objectives of mobilizing and integrating youth in development.

III. Policy measures

A. International trade

52. All countries commit themselves to an open and expanding trade system to further progress in the liberalization of trade and to the promotion of structural adjustment which will facilitate the realization of the dynamic pattern of comparative advantage. The rules and principles governing the functioning of international trade will be kept under review so as to ensure the steady growth of trade under equitable and secure conditions. To this end, there should be more effective implementation, as far as possible, of the principle of differential and more favourable treatment, on a non-reciprocal basis, of developing countries in order to enhance their market access and to increase their share of world trade, taking into account their trade, development and financial needs.

53. As an immediate measure, the agreements reached in the multilateral trade negotiations will be promptly and fully implemented by the parties to those agreements. Steps will be taken early in the Third United Nations Development Decade to reduce or to eliminate existing restrictions on imports from developing countries. Developed countries will implement fully and adhere strictly to the standstill provisions that they have accepted. Concerted efforts will be made, particularly by developed countries, to reduce non-tariff barriers progressively and even abolish them, especially in the case of products or sectors of export interest to the developing countries.

54. Efforts will be pursued to reach an agreement on a multilateral safeguard system based on and subject to objective internationally agreed criteria relating to, inter alia, adequate testing of serious injury in order to provide greater uniformity and certainty in implementation and to ensure that the safeguard clause, if used, is not applied for protectionist reasons or to hinder structural change.

55. The Common Fund, as a new entity serving as a key instrument for the attainment of the agreed objectives of the Integrated Programme for Commodities, will urgently be brought into full and effective operation.

56. International commodity agreements, with initial emphasis on the core commodities included in the indicative list of the Integrated Programme for Commodities, should be concluded.

57. A framework of international co-operation will be established within the overall context of the Integrated Programme for Commodities for expanding in developing countries the processing of primary commodities and exports of processed goods, as well as for the increased participation of developing countries in the marketing, distribution and transportation of their primary commodities.

58. Additional measures for the improvement and stabilization of commodity export earnings of developing countries should be considered as soon as possible.

59. International organizations and developed countries and others in a position to do so should assist developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, through the provision of capital and technology and of training skills for developing, processing and manufacturing capacities and for setting up and strengthening finance, commerce, transport, various services and other infrastructures in developing countries to facilitate and promote their production and exports of manufactured and semi-manufactured goods.

60. Developed countries should exert their best efforts to improve access to their markets for exports of agricultural products on a stable and predictable basis. They should accord developing countries the opportunity to expand their agricultural exports through a continued and accelerated liberalization of agricultural and trade policies. Urgent action will be taken in relevant negotiating forums to move towards the approval and implementation of proposals to bring about the reduction and elimination of barriers to trade in agricultural products, in particular in relation to those of export interest to developing countries, and thus to facilitate, inter alia, more efficient patterns of production. Developed countries will make their best efforts to adjust those sectors of their agricultural and manufacturing economies which require protection against exports from developing countries, thus facilitating access to the markets of food and agricultural products. The developed countries should exert their best efforts to avoid adverse effects on the economies of the developing countries while formulating and implementing their domestic agricultural policies.

61. In the context of the framework for international co-operation, measures should be taken, including internationally agreed programmes for research and development, in order to improve the competitiveness of natural products produced in developing countries with the synthetics and substitutes of developed countries. Furthermore, measures should be considered to harmonize, where appropriate, the production of such synthetics and substitutes with the supply of natural products produced in developing countries.

62. Sectoral agreements which result in hampering the growth in the trade of developing countries should be avoided to the maximum extent. Efforts should be made to avoid extending such existing agreements with a view to their eventual elimination.

63. The generalized system of preferences should be continued as an important long-term instrument for promoting trade and development co-operation and, in particular, for bringing about an increased share of developing countries in world trade. The international community reaffirms the importance of the generalized, non-reciprocal and non-discriminatory system of preferences for expansion and diversification of the export trade of developing countries and for acceleration of the rates of their economic growth. To this end, the preference-giving countries will implement fully the agreement reached by the Special Committee on Preferences of the Trade and Development Board at its ninth session. A comprehensive review of the generalized system of preferences should be held in 1990.

64. Efforts should be pursued and intensified by developed countries to take special unilateral measures further to reduce trade barriers facing developing countries in respect of tropical products, including those products in their processed forms, on a non-reciprocal basis. Those reductions should be urgently considered and carried out.

65. The International Trade Centre should be further supported by technical and financial assistance from donor countries in order to increase and strengthen its technical co-operation programme with developing countries in trade promotion and export development activities.

66. Socialist countries of Eastern Europe, in the context of their long-term economic plans, will continue to adopt and implement appropriate measures, in order to increase their trade with developing countries, commensurate with the trade needs of the developing countries, including in particular their production and export potential.

67. Developing countries will promote and expand trade among themselves in accordance with the relevant decisions taken by those countries in the Arusha Programme for Collective Self-Reliance and Framework for Negotiations, adopted by the Fourth Ministerial Meeting of the Group of 77, held at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, from 12 to 16 February 1979, and in other international forums. The international community will provide appropriate support and assistance to the efforts of developing countries.

Invisibles

68. Measures will be devised during the Decade to encourage a more balanced international distribution of service industries and to assist developing countries in minimizing as far as possible their net outflow of foreign exchange from invisible transactions, including transport. Developing countries will expand their tourist industry. Developed countries will assist in this endeavour as far as possible.

69. The international community will take appropriate measures to help the establishment and growth of local insurance markets in developing countries where such potential exists. As regards those insurance operations that cannot be carried out without using external insurance services, it is essential that the terms and conditions of international insurance and reinsurance transactions are equitable for, and meet the needs of, all parties concerned, in particular those of the developing countries.

Transnational corporations

70. Negotiations on a United Nations code of conduct on transnational corporations will be concluded in 1981 and the code will be adopted expeditiously by all members of the international community soon afterwards, aimed at preventing with a view to eliminating the negative effects of activities of transnational corporations and promoting the positive contribution of transnational corporations to the development efforts of the developing countries, consistent with the national development plans and priorities of those countries. National policies which enable Governments to deal with and regulate effectively the operations of the transnational corporations will also be developed and pursued.

Restrictive business practices

71. The principles and rules for the control of restrictive business practices which adversely affect international trade, particularly that of the developing countries, and their economic development, approved by the United Nations Conference on Restrictive Business Practices, will be actively implemented.

B. Industrialization

72. The rapid industrialization of developing countries constitutes an indispensable element and a dynamic instrument of the sustained self-reliant growth of their economies and of their social transformation. It is for each developing country to determine its own industrial development goals and priorities. The attainment of the targets for the industrialization of the developing countries contained in the present Strategy, aimed at, inter alia, raising the share of the developing countries in world industrial production in accordance with the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action, calls for far-reaching changes in the structure of world production. To this end, developing and developed countries will consider and adopt appropriate policies and programmes at the national, regional and international levels for the strengthening and expansion of the developing countries' industrial capacities as an essential element of their development process.

73. These policies and programmes include, as a crucial element, the redeployment of industrial capacities. This redeployment will primarily consist of the creation of new industrial capacities in developing countries, as well as the redeployment of industrial capacities from industrialized to developing countries on the principle of dynamic comparative advantage, in conjunction with structural adjustment, and taking fully into account the overall national objectives and priorities in particular of developing countries. This involves the transfer of financial, technological, managerial, personnel and other resources to developing countries, including the provision of the necessary training and expert services. While economic, institutional, social and other pertinent factors have an important bearing on this process, Governments, in particular those of the developed countries, should encourage and intensify the process by actively pursuing policies with a view to encouraging the continued reallocation of resources and encouraging domestic factors of production to move from internationally less competitive to more viable lines of production or into other sectors of the economy. These policies should be accompanied, to the maximum extent possible, by increased access to their markets of the manufactured products of developing countries.

74. Attention will be given to strengthening the developing countries' industries as a means of independent and autonomous industrial development, working out long-term industrialization plans and programmes, including plans and programmes for the discovery, exploitation and more complete processing of natural resources; a balanced industrial development with heavy and light industries, basic industries, large-scale, intermediate-scale and small-scale production; and the establishment of agro-industrial complexes. Assistance should be given to the developing countries in forms which suit the interests of their self-sustained development.

75. The system of consultations established in the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as permanent activity will be strengthened, developed and made more effective so that it may make a substantial contribution to the industrialization of developing countries and contribute effectively to the achievement of the objectives and targets set out in the present Strategy as well as in the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action.

76. Both multilateral and bilateral sources of finance should respond, while taking into account the priorities of developing countries, to the need for a substantial increase in the transfer of financial and other resources, including official development assistance transfers, as appropriate, to developing countries to support and reinforce their industrialization programmes. The arrangements for industrial financing should be reviewed early in the Decade, keeping in mind recent proposals with a view to strengthening existing international financing facilities, including appropriate ways to extend or modify those facilities and other measures required towards this end. The United Nations Industrial Development Fund should be strengthened and enlarged to provide a significant increase in the technical assistance necessary for accelerating the industrialization of developing countries.

77. As part of an integrated industrial structure, it is necessary to encourage, inter alia, labour-intensive, medium-scale and small-scale industries which are efficient and generate more employment opportunities. The use of appropriate technology and effective policies to increase investments for the development of human resources should be further strengthened and broadened. Industrialization policies should have as one of their aims productive employment generation and the integration and equal participation of women in industrial development programmes.

78. Industrialization policies in developing countries will require vigorous domestic policies supported by international assistance and investment. Those policies could provide for, inter alia, increased domestic investment, taking into account the role of the public sector in this process, measures to encourage domestic savings and mutually beneficial foreign direct investment and other sources of private capital. It is for the developing countries to set their own investment priorities and take appropriate decisions regarding admission of foreign investment and private capital in the light of those priorities.

79. Consideration should be given by all countries to environmental aspects of industrialization in the formulation and implementation of their industrial policies and plans. Donor countries, suppliers of technology and the relevant international organizations should assist developing countries, at their request, with a view to enhancing their capacities in this respect.

80. The international community will accord highest priority to measures, including adequate financial provisions, as required, for the effective implementation of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa,<sup>a</sup> to be observed in the 1980s.

C. Food and agriculture

81. Agricultural and rural development and the eradication of hunger and malnutrition are among the essential aims of the Third United Nations Development Decade. Developing countries, in the context of their national development plans and priorities, firmly supported by the international community, will take all necessary measures to accelerate food and agricultural production in order to improve national and collective self-sufficiency in food as early as possible. To this end, effective policies should continue to be pursued and invigorated in relation to the provision of appropriate price incentives, distribution of credit, the improvement of storage and transport and reduction of food losses, in particular post-harvest losses. In the efforts to achieve the 4 per cent average annual growth in agricultural production, particular attention should be paid to low-income, food-deficit countries so as to allow them to attain this level of growth as early as possible. The implementation of national policies should take into account the need to mobilize fully the domestic resources of developing countries. Adequate consideration should be given to the implementation of agrarian reforms as one of the important factors for promoting increased agricultural production and rural development in conformity with the national plans and priorities of each developing country. In accordance with their national plans, they will give priority to programmes for adaptation of institutional frameworks so as to allow wider and more equitable access to land and water resources, as well as effective management of forests, pastures, water and other natural resources in their national interests, with wider dissemination and use of new and improved technology, including greater use of fertilizers, improved seeds and pesticides, utilization of irrigation potential and the development of forests and fisheries. They will make the necessary efforts to develop and promote social and economic services and adequate public utilities in rural areas. They will expand non-agricultural employment opportunities in rural areas, particularly in industries related to agriculture. All countries will take appropriate measures, on a priority basis, to restore and improve water resources and the capacity of the land to produce necessary agricultural products. Extensive reforestation programmes will be carried out to prevent soil erosion, as well as to satisfy local needs for wood as a raw material and source of energy.

82. All countries will take appropriate measures, on a priority basis, to implement the conclusions and recommendations set forth in the Declaration of Principles and the Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development, as well as taking fully into account the conclusions and recommendations made by the relevant United Nations bodies and organizations concerned.

83. In support of measures in developing countries to increase substantially investment in agriculture, donor countries and international financial institutions will take all possible steps to increase the flow of financial resources to the developing countries. The resources of the International Fund for Agricultural Development should be replenished on a continuing basis at a level sufficient to attain its objectives as and when recommended by its Governing Council, taking into consideration the increasing needs of developing countries for external resources, with consultations relating to the first replenishment to be concluded, on a priority basis, before the end of 1980. Furthermore, donors should commit adequate funds for local costs and should meet requests wherever possible for financial participation in recurrent costs of the implementation of development Projects in the agricultural sector.

84. Additional resources should be provided for the adaptation and dissemination of agricultural technologies and for the intensification of research into techniques that rely less on costly inputs and to an increasing extent on renewable inputs. High priority will be accorded to strengthening the network of international and regional research, including research training institutions, agricultural extension services and the exchange of information and experience, and to improving their relationship with national research systems. Special attention will be given to the implementation of the results of research at the level of the people concerned.

85. The international community will support measures to provide agricultural inputs, especially fertilizers, improved seeds and pesticides, and efforts directed towards the prevention of food losses, control of the desert locust and control of African trypanosomiasis.

86. Urgent measures will be taken early in the Decade to establish effective world food security. To this end, world cereal stocks should be maintained at an adequate level, which has been estimated at from 17 to 18 per cent of annual work consumption. It is essential that concerted efforts be made to conclude a new international grain agreement aimed at evolving an internationally co-ordinated system of nationally held food reserves. As an interim measure, early steps will be taken by countries to implement, on a voluntary basis, the Five-Point Plan of Action on World Food Security of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, and the resources of the Food Security Assistance Scheme of that organization will be expanded. Bilateral assistance will be co-ordinated with the Scheme where appropriate.

87. Long-term measures are needed to step up food production in the developing countries, which is the only lasting way to obtain food security. At the national level and, in appropriate cases, at the regional level, developing countries should set up, as a complement to production policies, the facilities necessary for stocking, conservation, transport and distribution of food, to enable them to meet emergency situations, to reinforce the stability of their markets and to reduce avoidable post-harvest losses. In doing so, they should be supported by the international community by financial and technical assistance, as well as by food aid.

88. Since the Food Aid Convention agreed upon recently for 7.6 million tons falls considerably short of the target of 10 million tons, every effort should be made both to enlist new contributors and to increase the commitments of existing ones so that the new Convention can be renewed by mid-1981 with a firm assurance that the target will be the absolute minimum flow of assistance, even in times of high prices and food shortage. Urgent consideration will be given to a revision of the target, taking into account the estimated requirements of 17 to 18.5 million tons of cereals which provide a useful indicator of the overall requirement of food aid by 1985. This estimate will be reviewed periodically. In order to ensure continuity, the Food Aid Convention should be extended to three years, if possible, and should provide for a revision of the minimum target to meet growing food aid requirements. Efforts should be made by donor countries and international organizations to meet food aid requirements, especially in the low-income, food-deficit countries.

89. While considering annual requirements of food aid by 1985, estimates of 300,000 tons of dairy products and 350,000 tons of vegetable oil, which also provide useful indicators of annual requirements, should be taken into account.

90. Resources of the World Food Programme will be augmented and every effort will be made to reach the current minimum agreed target of $1 billion for 1981/82 and the target agreed upon for each subsequent biennium during the Decade for this programme.

91. The International Monetary Fund should consider urgently, within the context of its financing facilities, the feasibility of providing additional balance-of-payments support for meeting the rise in food imports bills of low-income, food-deficit countries.

92. The target of 500,000 tons of cereals for the International Emergency Food Reserve should be realized immediately. All countries, particularly those which are not yet contributing to it, should make or increase their contributions to the Reserve. The Reserve should be maintained at 500,000 tons. Early consideration should be given to proposals for strengthening the Reserve, including the possibility of making a legally binding convention. Any proposals agreed upon should, inter alia, make provision for increasing the size of the Reserve so as to meet future emergency needs.

93. The eradication of hunger and malnutrition calls for concerted efforts, national food policies, plans and commitments by Governments, as well as appropriate programmes on the part of the United Nations system during the Decade and beyond. A positive commitment to nutrition policies will require efforts at the production and distribution levels to ensure that requisite food supplies are available for those whose consumption of food is inadequate. A special national commitment to the nutritional needs of children should be undertaken. Donor countries are strongly called upon to do their utmost to ensure a high nutritional value of their food aid.

94. Special attention will continue to be given to the impact of food trade on the levels of food production in the world, in particular with reference to the economies of the developing countries.

95. In the context of integrated rural development, Governments will encourage rural industrialization, the establishment and strengthening of agro-industrial complexes, the modernization of agriculture, better integration of women in all stages of the production process and the ensuring thereby of increased production of food and other agricultural products, and employment for the rural population. Governments should encourage and support the establishment of agricultural co-operatives.

D. Financial resources for development

96. Developing countries will continue to bear the main responsibility for financing their development and will adopt vigorous measures for a fuller mobilization of their domestic financial resources. External financial resources, particularly official development assistance, constitute an indispensable element of support for the developing countries' own efforts. International financial flows, particularly public flows, should be improved and adapted consistent with the needs of developing countries as regards volume, composition, quality, forms and distribution of flows.

97. Bilateral and multilateral flows will be made on an increasingly assured, continuous and predictable basis.

98. A rapid and substantial increase will be made in official development assistance by all developed countries, with a view to reaching and, where possible, surpassing the agreed international target of 0.7 per cent of the gross national product of developed countries. To this end, developed countries which have not yet reached the target should exert their best efforts to reach it by 1985, and in any case not later than in the second half of the Decade. The target of 1 per cent should be reached as soon as possible thereafter. The efforts of developed countries will be greater, the lower their relative performance. Developing countries in a position to do so should also continue to provide assistance to other developing countries. In the context of this general increase and in order to meet the most pressing problems and the deteriorating situation of the least developed countries and developing countries in the other special categories where the development needs and problems are greatest, the flows of official development assistance will increasingly be directed towards those countries.

99. All developed donor countries should announce annually their plans or intentions, in the light of measures outlined in resolution 129(V) of 3 June 1979 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, as regards an increase in official development assistance for the longest period ahead and, where possible, for a minimum period of three years. They should provide full information on their official development assistance flows.

100. The international community will give priority consideration to the immediate and urgent needs of poorer developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, and in this context urgent consideration should be given to establishing emergency programmes of assistance to those countries. The measures of assistance and volume of the programmes will be determined, taking into account their present economic difficulties and longer-term development needs.

101. In the context of the general increase of official development assistance, equitable efforts will be made by donor countries with a view to doubling as soon as possible the flow of official development assistance to the least developed countries, taking into account the relative performance of the donor countries. All donor countries will give all due consideration, not later than at the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, to be held in 1981, to the proposals for further measures to provide an adequate minimum flow of official development assistance, including those proposals for tripling the net disbursement of concessional assistance by 1984 and quadrupling it by 1990 at 1977 prices.

102. Within the context of this general increase to developing countries as a whole, specific efforts should be undertaken to meet the needs of other special categories of developing countries. To this end, official development assistance to these categories of countries will be increased substantially during the Decade, as appropriate.

103. The terms and conditions of official development assistance should be significantly improved. In particular:

(a) The current overall average rate of concessionality of official development assistance should be further increased. Official development assistance to least developed countries should, as a general rule, be in the form of grants and at high concessionality to other developing countries, particularly those in the special categories, which depend primarily on concessional flows;

(b) The official development assistance should, as a general rule, be untied. The share of programme assistance and local and recurrent cost financing in official development assistance should be increased substantially when necessary.

104. Furthermore, sudden and important deterioration in the external conditions of developing countries, beyond their control, will be appropriately taken into account in determining the concessionality and grant element of official development assistance.

105. All developed donor countries will continue to improve their aid-giving procedures, in consultation with the beneficiary countries, so as to reduce obstacles to rapid aid disbursements and effective aid uses, without any discrimination.

106. In the field of export credits, the needs of the developing countries should be recognized by developed countries. To this end, the export credit guarantee agencies of the developed countries should, as appropriate, improve the guarantee conditions, including in particular increasing the guarantee periods granted, within the relevant international arrangements.

107. Flows from international and regional development finance institutions should be increased significantly in response to the growing needs of developing countries, in particular of those eligible for concessional lending from those institutions. The policies as well as the resource base of the multilateral institutions should be reviewed in a regular, timely and co-ordinated fashion and modified, where necessary, so as to avoid any interruption in their activities and to ensure the expansion of their resources in real terms to adequate levels. In particular, the agreements reached with regard to the increase in the capital of the World Bank and the sixth replenishment of the International Development Association will be speedily implemented. Ways and means should also be considered to achieve long-term financing, including multiyear pledges of programmes of United Nations development assistance organizations. Special attention will be paid by all donors to timely and substantial increases in soft resources through multilateral institutions. The policies of those institutions should further evolve so as to be more responsive to the changing needs and socio-economic objectives of recipient countries, in particular as far as programme assistance, including sectoral assistance, and local cost and recurrent cost financing are concerned.

108. Consideration should be given by the World Bank and regional development banks to ways and means of strengthening their lending capacities, taking into account, inter alia, the proposals to raise the lending-capital ratio of those institutions.

109. The World Bank should consider steps in establishment of a long-term financing facility to finance the purchase of capital goods by developing countries, taking into account the related proposal for a subsidy account for the poorer developing countries.

110. Non-concessional flows will continue to be an important source of development finance for many developing countries. Substantially increased transfer of resources largely raised on the financial markets and, without prejudice to official development assistance, through new and innovative means will be further explored in depth to allow action-oriented decisions. In this context, several approaches, including co-financing with private resources and other existing and possible new mechanisms, will be taken into account. Attention should be given, inter alia, to multilateral guarantees for borrowing on international financial markets and borrowing in significant measure under the guarantee of members of the international community, taking into account the possibilities of interest-subsidy mechanisms. The appropriate international financial institutions, in their consideration of new forms of lending as a means of channelling external resources to developing countries, should also consider greater reliance on programme or non-project loans. Direct private investments that are compatible with the national priorities and legislation of developing countries will be encouraged. Developing countries interested in foreign direct investments should make efforts to create and maintain a favourable investment climate in the framework of their national plans and policies. The access of developing countries to private capital markets should be improved, further facilitated and encouraged. New ways and forms of lending should be compatible with the development priorities of developing countries and should take due account of their debt-servicing capacity over the longer term. New approaches should be considered to ensure the growth and stability of new types of flows, including available funds in financial and capital markets. New ways and forms of lending should reflect the principles of universality and equity in decision-making. The proposal for a world development fund should be examined by the Secretary-General so that a report can be made available as soon as possible and submitted to the General Assembly at the latest at its thirty-sixth session for its consideration and appropriate action.

111. Negotiations regarding internationally agreed features for future operations related to debt problems of interested developing countries should be brought to an early conclusion in the light of the general principles adopted by the Trade and Development Board in section B of its resolution 165(S-IX) of 11 March 1978.

112. Governments should seek to adopt the following debt-relief actions or equivalent measures:

(a) Commitments undertaken in pursuance of section A of Trade and Development Board resolution 165(S-IX) should be fully implemented as quickly as possible;

(b) Retroactive adjustment of terms should be continued in accordance with Trade and Development Board resolution 165(S-IX), so that the improvement in current terms can be applied to outstanding official development assistance debt, and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development should review the progress made in that regard.

113. In order to alleviate the financial burden of developing countries resulting from price rises in their vital imports, urgent consideration should be given by the international community, through the International Monetary Fund and other relevant international financial institutions, to special and favourable criteria relating to the level of dependence of, and financial burden on, developing countries when they receive balance-of-payments support from those institutions.

114. There is a close relationship between disarmament and development. Progress in the former would help greatly in the realization of the latter. Taking into consideration the recommendations of the tenth special session of the General Assembly, devoted to disarmament, relating to the relationship between disarmament and development, effective measures should be taken, following disarmament measures, to use resources thus released for economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries.

E. International monetary and financial issues

115. The international community should work for stable international monetary conditions supportive of a balanced and equitable development of the world economy and the accelerated development of developing countries. In order to create conditions more favourable to the development of the developing countries and the growth of the world economy in general, efforts to increase the responsiveness of the international monetary system to the needs and interests of the developing countries should be intensified through further reform of the system to be pursued and carried out expeditiously early in and throughout the Decade to the benefit of the entire international community. The principal features of a stable, effective and equitable international monetary and financial system should include:

(a) An effective, symmetrical and equitable adjustment process consistent with high sustainable employment and growth, price stability and the dynamic expansion of world trade. An effective adjustment process, both cyclical and structural, must be accompanied by access to official credit facilities on terms and conditions adapted to the nature of the balance-of-payments problems of the countries concerned, taking into account their social and political domestic objectives, and their economic priorities and circumstances, including the causes of their balance-of-payments problems;

(b) The terms and conditions of existing International Monetary Fund facilities, including the compensatory financing facility, to be reviewed periodically to ensure that these facilities are adequate and adapted to the needs of member countries, taking fully into account the interests of the developing countries, in coping adequately with changing world economic conditions. In this connexion, the Fund should give due consideration to such characteristics as the setting of conditionality associated with the use of its resources, taking into account the causes of deficits, the lengthening of repayment periods, where appropriate, adequate level of assistance and its increase when appropriate and the need to maintain an adequate level of Fund liquidity. The Fund should conclude at an early date its consideration of mechanisms to reduce the cost of using the supplementary financing facility;

(c) Assistance to countries, particularly developing countries, with structural imbalance in their external accounts and consequent balance-of-payments difficulties, including immediate action to be taken to improve and expand collaboration between the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, particularly as regards medium-term balance-of-payments financing. Such action should improve the effectiveness and enhance the level of their support over the medium term for countries facing external cyclical as well as structural disequilibria and consequent international difficulties and lay the foundations for the achievement of high levels of sustainable growth and price stability. In this context, consideration should be given to the need for additional resources, the conditionality attached to those resources and the maturity periods involved. Consideration should also be given to measures to reduce the cost of borrowing for the low-income developing countries to improve their access to the balance-of-payments financing programmes of the International Monetary Fund;

(d) Over the Decade, a more stable, equitable and effective international monetary system, which should be sustained by and promote:

- (i) The restoration of high sustainable growth with price stability;
- (ii) The reduction of inflation, which imposes a substantial, real and financial cost on all countries, and a particular burden on developing countries, which have vulnerable economies; effective action at both the national and international levels should, therefore, be taken to bring inflation under control;
- (iii) A stable, yet sufficiently flexible, exchange-rate regime;
- (iv) Equitable and symmetrical treatment by the International Monetary Fund of surplus and deficit countries in exercising its surveillance over exchange rates and balance-of-payments policies;
- (v) Arrangements for the creation of international liquidity through collective international action in line with the liquidity requirements of an expanding world economy;
- (vi) The development of the special drawing rights as the principal reserve asset of the system; to this end, consideration will be given periodically by the International Monetary Fund to the allocation of new special drawing rights;

(e) The establishment of a link between the special drawing rights and development assistance which should form part of the consideration by the International Monetary Fund of the creation of new special drawing rights as and when they are created according to the needs of international liquidity;

(f) Provision by the international monetary system for equitable and effective participation of developing countries in decision-making, taking into account, inter alia, their growing role in the world economy.

F. Technical co-operation

116. In the implementation of the International Development Strategy, intensified emphasis must be accorded to the important role of technical co-operation in the development process. Technical co-operation makes an essential contribution to the efforts of developing countries to achieve self-reliance through its broad role of facilitating and supporting, inter alia, investment, research, training and development. Realization of the goals and objectives of the new International Development Strategy will therefore require a renewed emphasis upon technical co-operation and a significant increase in the resources provided for this purpose.

G. Science and technology for development

117. Access to and mastery of modern scientific and technological knowledge are essential for the economic and social progress of developing countries. Accordingly, high priority must be given to increasing the developing countries' scientific and technological capacities. The transfer of technology, which is of the utmost importance in this respect, must be encouraged and improved. International co-operation in those fields must be broadened and intensified. Special attention must be given to the development of technologies adapted to the specific conditions of developing countries.

118. Action will be taken by the international community to restructure the existing patterns of international scientific and technological relations affecting the transfer and development of technology. Developed countries should take adequate specific measures to give or facilitate as appropriate to the developing countries the freest and fullest possible access to technologies. To this end, all countries should take steps for the early finalization, adoption and effective implementation of the international code of conduct on the transfer of technology. Efforts should also be made to bring the negotiations on the revision of the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property to a successful conclusion as early as possible. The international community should continue to review the ways in which the industrial property system can become a more effective instrument for the economic and technological development of all countries, particularly developing countries.

119. In technology planning and policies, special attention should be given to sectors of critical importance to developing countries. They should also take into account the need to arrive at a reasonable balance between labour-intensive and capital-intensive technologies with a view to achieving the fundamental aim of maximizing growth and employment and satisfying special needs of developing countries.

120. To assist developing countries and to contribute to reducing the imbalances between developed and developing countries in research and development, developed countries and international financial institutions should support these efforts. Developed countries should increase substantially and progressively during the course of the Decade the proportion of their research and development expenditure and efforts to be devoted to the solution of jointly identified specific problems of prime importance to developing countries with the active participation of researchers and institutions of developing countries. Technologically more advanced countries should facilitate the acquisition by developing countries of skills, especially high-level skills, through international exchanges. Developed countries should intensify their support of developing countries' efforts towards greater self-reliance in the field of technological development by taking other specific measures recommended, particularly those in resolution 112(V) of 3 June 1979 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on strengthening the technological capacity of developing countries including accelerating their technological transformation.

121. In accordance with the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development, developing countries, with the necessary support of developed countries and international financial institutions, will intensify their efforts to strengthen their scientific and technological infrastructure and develop their endogenous technological and inventive capacities, in order to enhance their capacity to design and generate new technologies as well as to select, acquire, apply and adapt existing technology, inter alia, through:

(a) Substantially increasing the resources devoted to education and training in technical, managerial and inventive skills, as well as to research and development, and directing those efforts towards the solution of problems in the areas and sectors of critical concern to those countries;

(b) Taking measures aimed at the efficient acquisition and optimum utilization of technology by establishing close and effective linkages between the generators of technology, productive sectors and technology users;

(c) Supplementing their efforts at the national level by initiating or strengthening such co-operative measures among themselves as exchanges of skilled personnel, information and experience through the establishment of regional, sub-regional and national centres for the transfer and development of technology.

122. All countries should seek to ensure that scientific and technological development will involve and benefit men and women equally and measures should be taken to facilitate equal access for men and women to scientific and technological training and to the respective professional careers.

123. Concerted efforts will be made by the international community early in the Decade to take comprehensive and effective action, as recommended by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its fifth session, at the national, regional and international levels, aimed at minimizing the negative impact of the migration of skilled personnel so that such migration from developing countries will constitute an exchange in which the interests of all parties concerned are adequately protected. The international community should consider examining, early in the Decade, in the light of relevant United Nations decisions, arrangements whereby developing countries experiencing large-scale outflows of their skilled nationals, which cause economic disruption, could secure assistance in dealing with the adjustment problems arising therefrom.

124. Substantial resources should be mobilized for the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development, established by the General Assembly in section VI of its resolution 34/216 of 19 December 1979, to support actions needed for the development of science and technology in developing countries. In determining the nature and level of the resources of the Financing System, the following considerations should, inter alia, be taken into account:

(a) The need for a predictable and continuous flow of resources;

(b) The need for substantial resources in addition to those that exist within the United Nations system;

(c) The need for untied external resources for the scientific and technological development of the developing countries.

The long-term arrangements of the Financing System will be brought into operation in January 1982, as agreed by the General Assembly at its thirty-fourth session. To this end, the study of the long-term arrangements of the Financing System should proceed expeditiously.

125. As provided for in the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development, the development of the global and international information network should be expedited and, in this context, the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development should consider urgently the establishment of such a system. The existing information systems within the United Nations and other international bodies set up for the exchange of scientific and technological information, which are also serving as industrial technology data banks, should form an integral part of the proposed global network. The network should be designed to meet the urgent needs of the developing countries. Priority should be given to covering alternative sources of technology and scientific, technical, socio-economic, legal and other aspects needed for decision-making in the selection and transfer of technology.

H. Energy

126. Effective and urgent measures will be taken by the international community for the attainment of the goals and objectives in the field of energy, as spelt out in paragraph 34 of the present Strategy. These measures will include, inter alia, the following:

(a) All countries, in particular the developed countries, will undertake immediate measures to rationalize their energy consumption through, inter alia, conservation, improved efficiency of their energy systems, especially of hydrocarbons, improved energy management and increased technical manpower training;

(b) In conformity with the principle of the full and permanent sovereignty of each country over its natural resources, the exploration and rational exploitation of energy resources, both conventional and non-conventional, should be promoted in accordance with the national plans and priorities of each country. The international community should support and facilitate the effective participation of developing countries in the production, processing, marketing and distribution of those resources;

(c) To advance towards the development of indigenous energy resources of developing countries and the satisfaction of their energy needs, developed countries should facilitate the fullest possible access by developing countries to scientific and technological processes to enable them to develop energy sources, including nuclear technology for the production of energy in accordance with the principles set forth in General Assembly resolution 32/50 of 8 December 1977. In this context, developed countries and others with a capacity to do so, as well as international institutions, should assist developing countries in preparing comprehensive assessments of energy needs, uses and resources and facilitating their planning and review of the energy needs implicit in their development goals;

(d) The establishment and strengthening of medium-term and long-term national action programmes on new and renewable sources of energy. For this purpose, programmes of development, testing and training co-operation between developed and developing countries with testing centres in similar geophysical and climatic conditions will be established and supported;

(e) Much greater participation by the international, national and regional financial institutions in the financing of energy projects, in particular those sited in the least developed countries, so as to bring about an increase in the flow of different types of resources;

(f) The improvement of the investment climate in interested developing countries so as to stimulate flows of foreign investment in the framework of their national plans and policies in the field of energy;

(g), Meeting the needs of energy-deficient developing countries through co-operation, assistance and investment in relation to conventional as well as new and renewable sources of energy. The United Nations system should strengthen its information services in the field of natural resources.

127. The question of co-operation in the field of energy will be dealt with within the overall framework of international economic co-operation for development so as to encourage and accelerate energy conservation and the development of world energy resources by, inter alia, facilitating and improving access to energy-related technologies, expanded energy research and development and increased investment flows into energy exploration and development.

I. Transport

128. In the transport sector, national and international action will promote the development of world sea-borne trade and other transportation systems and the increase in the participation by developing countries in world transport of international trade and, to this end, appropriate structural changes will be carried out where necessary. The international community will continue to take the necessary steps to enable developing countries to compete more effectively and to expand their national and multinational merchant fleets so as to increase their share substantially with a view to reaching as close as possible to 20 per cent of the dead-weight tonnage of the world merchant fleet by 1990. The Convention on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences will be implemented by its signatories. Early in the Decade, the Convention on International Multimodal Transport will come into force, which will facilitate the development of multimodal transport operations by developing countries.

129. The international community will assist the developing countries in their efforts to expand their capabilities in ports and related inland transport facilities and infrastructure in the training of maritime personnel. It should also, where appropriate, assist in the development of their shipbuilding and ship-repairing capacities.

130. Developing countries will be enabled to make major advancements in air transport, particularly in air cargo transport, inter alia, through the increase of the air transport fleets and the development of suitable airports and related infrastructures. Particular attention will be given at the international level to the elimination of discriminatory and unfair practices, where they exist, in civil aviation which are detrimental to the growth of the air sector in developing countries.

131. The road and railway transport sectors, which are recognized as important parts of the physical infrastructure in developing countries, will receive considerable support from the international community in order substantially to increase and improve the road and railway networks of the developing countries.

132. The international community will give adequate support, to the extent possible, to regional co-operation in the transport and communication sector, especially to the implementation of the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, 1978-1988.

133. The international community will explore ways and means of increasing the availability of financing for the development of the transport sector.

J. Economic and technical co-operation among developing countries

134. Developing countries will pursue actively the promotion of economic and technical co-operation among themselves as a basic component of the efforts towards the establishment of the new international economic order which, as such, is based on co-operation among all States. In this context, they are committed to the effective implementation of the Arusha Programme for Collective Self-Reliance as well as to the programmes in those fields agreed at Mexico City, Havana and Buenos Aires and regional programmes, including the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa, which was adopted at the second extraordinary session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, held at Lagos, on 28 and 29 April 1980. The implementation of these programmes in the 1980s would first of all help the developing countries, through their own efforts, to strengthen their economic potential, accelerate their economic growth and improve their position in the system of international economic relations.

135. On the basis of the proposals of developing countries in competent bodies, the international community will take measures to provide, as appropriate, support and assistance to developing countries in strengthening and enlarging their mutual co-operation, at the subregional, regional and interregional levels, including additional technical support, as well as conference and secretariat services for the holding of meetings in accordance with the established procedures and practices of the United Nations.

K. Least developed countries, most seriously affected countries, developing island countries and land-locked developing countries

1. Least developed countries

136. As an essential priority within the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, the least developed countries-the economically weakest and poorest countries with the most formidable structural problems-require a special programme of sufficient size and intensity consistent with their national plans and priorities to make a decisive break from their past and present situation and their bleak prospects. Efforts must therefore be immediately and substantially expanded in order to transform their economies, to promote a self-sustained process of development, to accelerate agricultural and industrial progress and to ensure development of human resources and broadly based participation in the development process concurrent and consistent with equitable distribution of the gains of socioeconomic development. Therefore, the international community will take urgently the necessary steps to finalize and implement the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the least developed countries, which was launched by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its fifth session in its resolution 122(V) of 3 June 1979. The Programme is to be finalized, adopted and supported by the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, to be convened in 1981.

137. To meet the objectives of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s, national plans will identify and cost major priority projects and programmes. The details for each country in terms of structural change in agriculture and industry, improved physical, social and institutional infrastructure, and improved performance in connexion with, inter alia, nutrition, literacy, health, employment and the development of human resources will be clearly specified. The goals to be achieved will require greater efforts by the least developed countries themselves, together with a substantial expansion of support from the international community.

138. Every possible effort will be made to develop programmes that will enable each least developed country to increase its national income substantially-even doubling it in appropriate cases-by 1990.

139. To help the least developed land-locked countries to alleviate their geographical handicap, specific assistance will be provided for the development and improvement of a transit transport infrastructure, both administrative and physical. Similar specific assistance will be provided to least developed island countries for the development of their transport infrastructure.

140. The expanded planning efforts at the national, subregional and regional levels will be strongly backed by firm international commitments to expand resource flows to the least developed countries by substantial amounts. Commitments already undertaken will be implemented effectively, within the framework of an equitable sharing of effort, taking into account the relative performance of donor countries. The United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries will take note of those measures which have already been taken, and consider necessary further measures to ensure an adequate minimum flow of external assistance to each least developed country.

141. To meet the pressing problems of the least developed countries, the modalities by which concessional aid is provided to them will become much more flexible and responsive to their special needs.

142. In national development efforts, high priority will be given to increasing production and export earnings as rapidly as is feasible. The aim should be to make progress towards self-reliance and self-sustained growth by reducing significantly the degree of dependence on foreign assistance flows during the 1990s. The international community will strongly support such efforts through financial and technical assistance and through commercial policy measures.

143. To meet the special needs of the least developed countries, the international community will support efforts towards strengthening the technological and productive capacity of those countries, increasing their absorptive capacity by building up their infrastructure, particularly in transportation, communication and electrification and assistance in the establishment of comprehensive inventories of their resources and preparation of industrial surveys, supporting their full industrialization and full participation in the processes of redeployment and in the international consultations on industrial growth, including the system of consultations, strengthening their import-substitution processes and their manufactures-export performance, setting up joint enterprises under regional co-operation and preferential treatment of the least developed countries within international agreements for industrial products and processed commodities. Financial flows to the least developed countries will be substantially increased on highly concessional terms, inter alia, with a view to implementing these measures.

144. To bring about an increase in agricultural production and the structural transformation of agriculture in the least developed countries, the level of annual investments in land development, including flood control, soil and water conservation measures and the establishment of permanent crops, in irrigation, machinery and equipment, livestock development, storage and marketing, transport and first-stage processing of primary agricultural production will be substantially increased. Commitments of external resources to agriculture in the least developed countries will be raised substantially and in real terms. The agreed recommendations of the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries in this regard will be fully implemented.

145. It will also be especially important, in elaborating the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the least developed countries, to make maximum use of co-operation arrangements among developing countries, particularly at the regional and subregional levels. In elaborating their programme for greater collective self-reliance and economic and technical co-operation among themselves, the developing countries will pay particular attention to the special difficulties of the least developed countries and to expanding substantially support for the least developed countries as a further important contribution to the above-mentioned programmes.

146. Serious consideration will be given by developed countries to increasing substantially and in real terms official development assistance to the least developed countries during the Decade. The proposals made by the Group of High-level Experts on the least developed countries for the allocation by developed countries to the least developed countries of a minimum of 0.15 per cent of their gross national product as official development assistance by the first half of the 1980s, rising to 0.20 per cent during the second half of the 1980s, will be appropriately considered by the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries in 1981 within the context of an overall increase in official development assistance with a view to achieving the internationally accepted targets.

2. Most seriously affected countries

147. The current world economic situation has given rise to deep concern at the deterioration of the economic and financial situation of those developing countries whose relatively weak economies make them particularly vulnerable to economic crises caused by sharp increases in the prices of their essential imports. The international community will consider extending relief and assistance to those countries which may be most seriously affected by the current economic crisis, bearing in mind immediate balance-of-payments and development needs. To this end, urgent consideration should be given to immediate relief measures in favour of those countries. Concrete measures will need to be urgently considered by the international community with a view to the implementation of recommendations agreed by the General Assembly on the basis of the Secretary-General's report. In the mean time, urgent consideration should be given to the implementation of the measures set out in General Assembly resolution 34/217 of 19 December 1979.

3. Developing is/and countries

146. During the Decade, further specific action will be taken to assist developing island countries in offsetting major handicaps due to geographical and other constraints. In order to lower their vulnerability to economic instability, every effort will be made by the international community to assist them in diversifying their economies, taking into account overall prospects for, as well as existing levels of, development.

149. Efforts of developing island countries in actively seeking foreign investment will be supported by the international community, including investment in their infrastructural projects, especially in the sectors of water, electricity, industrial estates and transport. The establishment of joint ventures and assistance in strengthening the capacity of developing island countries to negotiate with foreign investors should also be explored during the Decade. Their access to foreign markets will be facilitated by assistance, both technical and financial, in their trade promotion efforts and by the simplification of preference procedures, where appropriate, so that small administrations and enterprises can take full advantage of preferential access to markets where it is in principle available. Assistance will be given in the establishment of appropriate technical education and training programmes, including the areas of marketing and management.

150. Financial and other assistance to developing island countries by multilateral and bilateral institutions will be augmented as appropriate. Assistance procedures should be simplified to the extent possible.

151. The developed countries and international Organizations should be ready to take action to ensure that the full benefit of general measures in favour of developing countries is shared by developing island countries.

4. Land-locked developing countries

152. An integrated planning approach for the improvement and development of transit transport facilities and services will be encouraged, particularly through more effective co-operation between land-locked countries and the transit countries. Such co-operation will involve the harmonization of transport planning and the promotion of joint ventures in the field of transport at regional, subregional and bilateral levels.

153. The international community will give, in accordance with the priorities of the land-locked countries and accepted development criteria, strong financial and technical assistance support, through specific actions, in accordance with resolution 123(V) of 3 June 1979 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

154. In addition, multilateral and bilateral financial institutions will further intensify their efforts to raise the flow of resources to the land-locked developing countries to alleviate their geographical handicaps through diversification of their economies, giving particular priority to the establishment of industries and the development of natural resources.

155. In order to implement the above-mentioned measures, the international community, in particular the developed countries, is invited to contribute significantly and generously to the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries. Those donor countries which have not yet contributed to the Fund should urgently consider reviewing their positions with a view to extending their full support to the Fund.

L. Environment

156. Because health, nutrition and general well-being depend upon the integrity and productivity of the environment and resources, measures should continue to be developed and carried out to promote the environmental and ecological soundness of developmental activities. Methods will be devised to assist interested developing countries in environmental management and in the evaluation of the costs and benefits, quantitative and qualitative, of environment protection measures with a view to dealing more adequately with the environmental aspects of development activities. This method will be developed taking fully into account the existing knowledge of interrelationships between development, environment, population and resources. To that end, research on these interrelationships will be intensified. The capacity of the developing countries will be strengthened to facilitate their making appropriate scientific and technical choices relating to environment in their development process.

157. Bilateral and multilateral donors will consider, within the overall financing of projects in developing countries, at their request, meeting the costs of taking environmental aspects into account in the design and completion of such projects. They will furthermore provide assistance, including in the field of training, to develop the endogenous capacity of developing countries to follow the methods enumerated in paragraph 156 above, thereby also facilitating technical co-operation among developing countries.

158. The international community, in particular the developed countries, will substantially increase its financial and technical support to drought-stricken countries suffering from desertification. In this context, support to the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification will be augmented.

M. Human settlements

159. The quality of life and the environment should be improved through, inter alia, the formulation and implementation of appropriate planning and development policies designed to ensure a better interregional balance between rural and urban development, as well as through the strengthening, in the context of human settlements planning, of measures to improve housing conditions for the most disadvantaged regions and communities-access to services, land and employment-and, in particular, through housing rehabilitation programmes.

160. Developing countries will formulate policies for the provision of basic shelter and infrastructure. To this end, and so as to benefit from the multiplying effect of investment in the field of human settlements, countries will develop their construction industry, particularly for low-cost housing, support relevant financing institutions, stimulate research and disseminate findings on efficient methods of construction, low-cost design and technology for infrastructure, indigenous building materials and environmental protection.

N. Disaster relief

161. Recognizing the detrimental effects of disasters on the development of developing countries, the international community will take measures to improve and strengthen arrangements to provide developing countries with adequate and timely assistance in matters of disaster relief, prevention and preparedness.

O. Social development

162. Each country will freely determine and implement appropriate policies for social development within the framework of its development plans and priorities and in accordance with its cultural identity, socio-economic structure and stage of development. The necessary financial and technical assistance will be provided by the international community through, inter alia, specific international programmes to support the national endeavours of the developing countries in key areas of social policy. To this end, an important role should be played by the United Nations system. Each country shall intensify measures for the full utilization of human resources, especially for the training of national personnel, within the framework of its national plans and its present and long-term requirements for qualified national personnel at all levels and in all important sectors of socio-economic activity.

163. Countries will pursue the objectives of the reduction of poverty, promotion of employment opportunities and the provision of the right to work through enhanced economic growth and measures to ensure a fair distribution of the benefits of development and institutional reforms. As development requires productive and adequately remunerative employment, development planning will pay due attention to this aspect. Countries will seek policies to reconcile gains in productivity with increase of employment in the industrial, agricultural, service and other sectors of their economies as well as policies to promote improved working and living conditions in these sectors. Measures to that effect include access to land, credit and know-how, as well as an increase in training facilities adapted to the needs of the various sectors. The creation of producer co-operatives, including credit, marketing and processing, as well as consumer co-operatives will be encouraged. Countries will adopt effective measures to enhance the involvement of women in the development process. Likewise, measures for the benefit of youth will be formulated and adopted. Prompt measures will be taken to eliminate child labour in conformity with relevant international labour conventions and to promote the general welfare of children. In this regard, national development efforts, including policies, programmes and services that affect children, should be reviewed regularly with a view to extending and strengthening the basic services benefiting children, including water and sanitation, health, nutrition and education. International co-operation in support of these measures should be enhanced and strengthened.

164. Countries will formulate and implement education policies appropriate to their economic and social requirements. Each country will determine the balance between the necessary efforts and resources required to promote universal education, including the goal of free education at all levels, non-formal education of adults, cultural development and scientific and technological ability. Increased and equitable access to educational and training facilities will help to reduce income inequalities and to enhance the capability of the society for economic and social progress. Particular attention will be devoted to the transmission by the educational system of the cultural heritage and of universal values of mankind.

165. To attain an acceptable level of health for all by the year 2000, countries will establish an adequate and comprehensive system of primary health care as an integral part of a more general health system and as part of a general improvement in nutrition and living standards and basic infrastructure for supplying such needs as safe water and basic sanitation. The development of appropriate health technologies, the provision of essential drugs, the prevention of the introduction of dangerous and hazardous drugs, the promotion of health-related research and the training of qualified health personnel at all levels, including highly qualified physicians, will complement the results expected from a multiplication of primary health care centres. Measures to reduce infant and general levels of mortality will include proper nutrition, education of parents, immunization of children and better environmental health. Countries will establish the requisite infrastructure and also introduce, expand and improve access to health care services and will strive to achieve the goal of providing health protection to the entire population, if possible free of charge.

166. Population policies will be considered as an integral part of overall development policies. All countries will continue to integrate their population measures and programmes into their social and economic goals and strategies. Within the framework of national demographic policies, countries will take the measures they deem necessary concerning fertility levels in full respect of the right of parents to determine in a free, informed and responsible manner the number and spacing of their children. The international community will increase the level of population assistance in support of those measures. In addition, due consideration should be given to the need for increased biomedical and social science research into safer, more efficient and more widely acceptable techniques of fertility regulation.

167. It is for each developing country to decide, within the framework of a unified approach to development, the possible content of a national programme for the development of its human resources. Such a programme would include the improvement of primary and secondary education for the entire population, which provide a broad manpower basis for future development, acceleration of community activities and the development of skilled personnel. On the other hand, the developed countries should place increased emphasis on co-operation for the development of human resources in the developing countries. They should explore the most effective means of extending assistance in response to the development needs in specific areas as requested. In this context, the use of the mass media, which will reach a broader section of society, can be an effective measure for the development of human resources. Assistance in the areas of extension services and teacher training will also eventually affect a large part of the population.

168. The important set of measures to improve the status of women contained in the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year, adopted at Mexico City in 1975, and the important agreed measures relating to the sectors of the International Development Strategy in the Programme of Action for the Second Half of the United Nations Decade for Women, adopted at Copenhagen in 1980, should be implemented.

IV. Review and appraisal of the implementation of the new International Development Strategy

169. The process of review and appraisal forms an integral part of the International Development Strategy. Its aim will be to ensure the effective implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade and to strengthen it as an instrument of policy. The process will be undertaken within the United Nations system at the global, sectoral and regional levels, and at the national level by the respective Governments, making full use of existing mechanisms and facilities and avoiding as far as possible duplication or proliferation of review activities.

170. The process will consist of systematic scrutiny, within the context of an overall review of the international economic situation, of the progress made towards achieving the goals and objectives of the Strategy and the identification and appraisal of the factors which account for shortfalls that may be countered.

171. This process should provide an occasion, in the light of this overall review, to see how the implementation of the Strategy can be strengthened and the necessary political impulses given and to carry out, if necessary, the adjustment, intensification or reformulation of the policy measures in the light of evolving needs and developments.

172. At the national level, Governments will, in accordance with their national priorities and plans, appropriately reflect the goals and objectives and the policy measures of the International Development Strategy in their policy formulation. Where necessary, the evaluation capacity, comprising also the statistical capability, of the countries concerned should be strengthened, including through assistance, upon their request, from appropriate multilateral and bilateral sources.

173. At the regional level, the review and appraisal will be conducted by the respective regional commissions. Development banks, regional and subregional groups and organizations could collaborate with the regional commissions for this purpose. Furthermore, the regional commissions should carry out, as part of their regular activity of preparing economic surveys of the region, periodic reviews of major aspects of development in the evolving development experiences in their regions.

174. The regional commissions should consider the feasibility of preparing action programmes to support the efforts of developing countries in the implementation of the International Development Strategy in their respective areas. Furthermore, the regional commissions, in conjunction with relevant United Nations specialized agencies and multilateral development institutions, might suggest ways of improving United Nations assistance efforts and enhancing their co-ordination in the context of the particular economic and social development needs of each region.

175. At the sectoral level, the relevant specialized agencies, organs and organizations of the United Nations will contribute from the experience of their respective sectors to the process of review and appraisal at both the global and regional levels.

176. At the global level, review and appraisal will be carried out by the General Assembly, with the assistance, as appropriate, of a body of universal membership, which would report through the Economic and Social Council. The process will take into account the results achieved at the sectoral, regional and national levels. The Committee for Development Planning will be invited to submit its observations and recommendations. The Secretary-General will prepare and submit a comprehensive report and other appropriate documentation in order to assist the process of review and appraisal.

177. Developed countries, individually or through their relevant organizations, are invited to transmit reports of their development assistance efforts in the light of the commitments undertaken by them in the International Development Strategy and in relevant international forums.

178. The process of review and appraisal should, based on an assessment as provided for in General Assembly resolution 33/201 of 29 January 1979, ensure that the operational activities of the United Nations system contribute effectively to the implementation of the International Development Strategy.

179. The review and appraisal will, at all levels, take into account the results of the global negotiations relating to international economic co-operation for development, the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, the United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, the International Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy, and of such United Nations conferences as effectively contribute to the implementation of the Strategy, as well as the results of relevant regional and interregional meetings. The agreed results will be incorporated in the Strategy by the General Assembly when and as appropriate, with a view to contributing to its effective implementation.

180. The first review and appraisal will be carried out by the General Assembly in 1984, on which occasion a decision as to the timing of a subsequent review or reviews will be taken.

Global negotiations relating to international economic co-operation for development

In 1980, despite numerous consultations in a variety of meetings in the Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174<sup>31</sup> and by the General Assembly at two sessions- its eleventh special (August/September) session and, immediately afterwards, its 1980 regular (September/December) session-no agreement was reached on launching global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development.

During the 1980 sessions of the Committee of the Whole, several delegations introduced draft agendas and made suggestions on procedures and a time-frame for the negotiations. These proposals were considered by the Assembly's Ad Hoc Committee of the Eleventh Special Session which, on 13 September, informed the Assembly that, with the exception of three delegations, all Committee members had accepted a text proposed by the "Group of 77" developing countries as the procedural framework for the negotiations and, on 15 September, the Assembly decided to transmit all relevant documents to its 1980 regular session, which opened the following day.

During this session, the President of the Assembly established an informal consultative group and, on 17 December, he announced that, although progress had been made in the ensuing discussions, no text on procedures and agenda had been agreed upon. Subsequently, the Assembly requested him to continue consultations on the launching of global negotiations and to report to its resumed session on 15 January 1981. On that date, he was again requested to pursue the consultations and report to the Assembly at a later, unspecified date.

Report of the Committee of the Whole

The intersessional Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174 was created in 1977 to act as a focal point in negotiations towards the establishment of a new international economic order, and designated by the Assembly, in resolution 34/138 of 14

December 1979,<sup>32</sup> to act also as the preparatory committee for global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development to be launched at the eleventh special session of the Assembly in August/September 1980.

During 1980, the Committee held an organizational session from 14 to 16 January and three substantive sessions (31 March to 11 April, 5 to 16 May and 23 June to 4 July), all at United Nations Headquarters, New York.

At its January session, the Committee agreed that its work should be as flexible as possible and that additional consultations would take place prior to the convening of the March/April session.

The three substantive sessions of the Committee were devoted primarily to consideration of an agenda, procedures and time-frame for the global negotiations, to be conducted under two Assembly resolutions of 14 December 1979,<sup>33</sup> and major issues in the fields of raw materials, energy, trade, development, and money and finance. In addition to formal meetings, informal consultations were held in an open-ended negotiating group and other informal meetings to consider proposals submitted on these items.

At its June/July session, the Committee conducted its work primarily as an open-ended drafting group, in closed meetings. At that session, the issues of procedures and a time-frame for the negotiations were considered at six informal group meetings composed of representatives of States or groups that had submitted written proposals on those issues. However, the Committee reported that no agreement was reached on a number of fundamental issues on agenda and procedures.

(EEC) were presented by India and Italy, respectively. In addition, working papers were submitted by Japan, Norway, Switzerland and the United States, and written statements of position by all the above States or groups (except Switzerland), as well as by Austria, China, Spain, Sweden, Turkey and the Ukrainian SSR, on behalf of the Eastern European States and Mongolia, were presented to the Committee.

The Committee regretted to have to report to the Assembly's eleventh special session that it had been unable to agree on proposals for the agenda, procedures and time-frame for global negotiations. The Committee annexed to its report to the Assembly all the written proposals and statements made during its sessions.

Though the concept of global negotiations and the necessity for concerted action were generally acknowledged, there were significant differences as to the proposed related procedures, agenda and objectives.

With regard to procedures and objectives, the Group of 77 proposed that a universal conference be convened at United Nations Headquarters from 5 January to 11 September 1981 to ensure a simultaneous, coherent and integrated approach to all issues under negotiation; the result should be a "package agreement," encompassing the major agenda issues defined in Assembly resolution 34/138, to which all participating States would be committed. The Group of 77 also suggested that the conference might create ad hoc groups to facilitate negotiation of the elements of the package.

In EEC's opinion, a central body should be established at Headquarters, open to all States; negotiations would commence in January 1981, be concluded before the Assembly's 1981 regular session and result in a consensus global agreement. General recommendations might be made to existing specialized bodies to the extent that they referred to the work of these bodies, while special measures should be made to ensure that the secretariats of the United Nations system might contribute to the negotiations.

The United States favoured extension of the Committee of the Whole as the central oversight body for the negotiations, open to all nations, to take place in United Nations specialized forums meeting from January to September 1981, though not necessarily in New York.

For Norway, the central negotiating body would be a conference with negotiating powers of its own. Norway saw difficulties in a package agreement if the specialized agencies were excluded from the negotiations, which would take place in a three-phase United Nations conference: conceptual four to five weeks), negotiating (eight to nine months) and concluding (six to eight weeks from the beginning of January 1982). Austria felt that these proposals appeared to be the most promising starting-point for a meeting of minds.

Japan agreed that the central body be a United Nations conference with a limited time period, open to all States; it suggested that this body establish a sub-committee on energy and other sub-committees to monitor the progress of negotiations in other, existing forums.

China also favoured a central body with the highest authority, although it did not preclude contributions from existing bodies.

Switzerland thought that the central body should be responsible for formulating specific interrelated objectives for subsequent stock-taking.

With regard to an agenda, the Group of 77 proposed including a call for more rapid development of the developing countries and for restructuring international economic relations, with special attention to the particular problems and needs of the least developed, land-locked, island and other developing countries most seriously affected by the world economic crisis. According to the Group, major issues in the fields of raw materials, energy, trade, development, and money and finance would be covered.

According to the United States, a notable omission from the Group's proposal was the need for national efforts by individual countries to improve their own development and self-reliance.

The main items for the agenda suggested by EEC encompassed the areas of food, energy and external balances.

The United States felt that EEC's agenda reflected the best potential for mutual benefit. However, in the United States view, greater emphasis should be given to the role of agricultural trade in economic development; since there were close relationships among world food needs, global energy requirements, development, other international economic issues and world population pressures, it proposed consideration of demographic issues. The United States also proposed an agenda item to cover the impact of population on economic growth and development and said it wished to select, from an agreed agenda, items on which there might be a consensus for an early action programme for the global round, with the remaining items being dealt with on the basis of agreed priorities. Neutral wording of a comprehensive agenda was both desirable and possible, according to the United States, and it would also accept a preamble or chapeau for the global negotiations setting out their importance.

Switzerland's approach to the agenda was thematic and problem-oriented rather than sector-oriented.

In a statement of position at the end of the June/July session of the Committee of the Whole, India, on behalf of the Group of 77, accused the developed countries of using stalling tactics: when formulations were arrived at in the negotiating group, it said, those countries had invariably suggested further changes to weaken the text. India stated that, though the developed countries had conceded that export earnings of developing countries needed to be protected from inflation or exchange-rate fluctuations, that goal had not been accepted as a negotiable objective. The developed countries had admitted that there should be greater access to their markets for developing countries' products but refused to acknowledge that protectionism existed, India said. It added that, though rapid industrialization and concomitant restructuring was recognized as a desirable goal and vehicle of development, the whole concept became unacceptable when it came to including it in the agenda. The vague proposals of the Western industrialized countries seemed to suggest that they were trying to halt or reverse the transfer of resources and, on the questions of supply, demand and price of energy, the formulations lumped together all countries without regard for the special and urgent problems of the developing nations, India said.

Developed countries also seemed determined to keep current institutional arrangements and decision-making processes intact, India continued. Those countries had also argued that global round problems were so technical that they required the attention of specialized forums, but when it was suggested that technical experts be sent to the central forum, the autonomy of the specialized agencies was raised.

Italy, on behalf of EEC, said that with regard to raw materials EEC's proposals dealt with the problem from a broader angle-increasing developing countries' export earnings-and in this context EEC had suggested development of natural resources. With regard to energy, a number of questions needed to be settled, such as growing requirements of the international community, particularly of the developing countries, and downstream activities. The predictability of energy supply, demand and prices was, in EEC's opinion, a fundamental topic for a balanced agenda.

Concerning development, EEC attached great importance to proposals on food security-storage, transport and distribution policies of developing countries, stability of markets, supply of essential food products to developing countries, and an international emergency food reserve. The Community felt that industrialization and trade were fully covered under an agenda item on "external balances" and it was prepared to accept the Group of 77's wording on these topics on the understanding that those points which had prevented the Third General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization from reaching a consensus would be omitted (see p. 648). It should also be possible to obtain rapprochement on the transfer of technology, and find wording to reflect agreement reached on international action to benefit the least developed countries in line with United Nations Conference on Trade and Development resolution 122(V) of 3 June 1979,<sup>34</sup> Italy said.

Turning to financial and monetary matters, which in EEC's view were closely linked to procedure, Italy said that agreement on official development assistance was near. For non-concessional flows, EEC had proposed a text covering recycling, direct investment, co-financing and access to capital markets. It was also prepared to include indebtedness in the negotiations, but was pressing for wording which would not prejudice the final outcome. With the same aim in mind, EEC had proposed that contributions by the international financial institutions to the adjustment programmes be discussed.

Japan felt that the Assembly had asked the Committee of the Whole simply to select the agenda issues of five areas, based on resolution 34/138; it went beyond the Committee's mandate to give direction or prejudice the global negotiations, which should be decided by the negotiations themselves. A decision on procedure would determine the structure of the negotiations, according to Japan, and more serious attention should be paid to the nature of the package agreement.

Sweden stated that, after discussions at the Assembly's special session, everyone must have a clearer picture of the issues to be negotiated in order that the global round be finalized within the time-space envisaged; very few Governments had defined their positions or knew what they wished to obtain. Sweden added that, once the relationship between the global round and the specialized agencies was determined, it did not think there would be any difficulty on agreeing on a wording under monetary issues.

Turkey and Spain stressed their opposition to the limited-membership groups established during the Committee's sessions which dealt with matters of crucial importance to all. Such practices were inimical to the spirit of universality, Turkey said, and it observed that the Committee did not go into details of the crucial items of the agenda in conjunction with their procedural aspects, but remained at the level of broad generalizations. Monetary questions should be taken up by the central forum as far as they were affected by energy or vice versa; in this respect, Turkey did not preclude a decentralized approach when issues fell entirely within the jurisdiction of the specialized agencies.

The Ukrainian SSR, on behalf also of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland and the USSR, said they did not object to the holding of global negotiations and in principle supported the Group of 77's agenda proposals. The solution to the problems was not one of creating new organs or different forums for negotiations. The substance of the problem was the political position of the principal participants, primarily the developed countries.

During the general debate at the General Assembly's eleventh special session, continuing world economic problems, the growing interdependence of national economies and the need to establish a new type of relationship between developing and industrialized countries were widely recognized as major factors underlining the urgent necessity of negotiations of a global nature between North and South.

Opening the debate, the President of the Assembly said he did not believe that there was any viable alternative to the proposed negotiations, which could be meaningful only if the various groups of countries confronted the imperative of an evolving international co-operation that recognized the interdependence of problems in the fields of raw materials, energy, trade, development, and money and finance, as stipulated by the Assembly in resolution 34/138.

The Secretary-General noted that the preparatory process towards global negotiations had yielded some positive results, for example the general consensus that simultaneous and action-oriented negotiations would contribute to the solution of international problems and that such negotiations should cover both structural and current issues. Therefore, the current session should at least resolve the questions of agenda and procedure, he said.

There were differing opinions as to why the Committee of the Whole had become deadlocked on the questions of agenda and procedure.

The Chairman of the Committee stated that responsibility for lack of agreement lay with States which held the steering wheel of the world economy. Although members remained far apart on several crucial items, there was general agreement that global negotiations should be held and a central body established. The real problems arose, he said, when the Committee discussed the character and nature of the negotiations; it had become clear that agenda and everything else depended on their character. He deplored the lack of mutual confidence shown and added that, although some developed countries had suggested flexible and helpful proposals, it was the developing countries which were ready to make considerable concessions.

The developing countries held that lack of agreement in the Committee was due to the developed countries' failure to abide by Assembly resolution 34/138 calling for the new round of negotiations to include issues in the five areas of raw materials, energy, trade, development, and money and finance. By that resolution, the Assembly had also decided that the negotiations should proceed in a coherent, integrated fashion, without isolating one area from another; thus the centrality of the Assembly should not be controversial, the Chairman said.

According to Tunisia, the Group of 77's expressed willingness to exclude some agenda items in order to avoid duplication with ongoing dialogues and its flexibility on procedural matters had not been favourably received by the developed countries, which seemed determined to maintain the status quo. El Salvador said tentative concessions by the Group of 77 had been met only by further demands from the developed countries. A number of delegations, including Cyprus, Guinea, Jamaica, Kenya, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Suriname, Uganda, the United Arab Emirates and the United Republic of Tanzania, accused the developed countries of a lack of political will.

The Philippines and Rwanda saw the beginnings of consensus through current international dialogue. Democratic Yemen called for regional negotiations to support those at the global level, a call repeated by Cuba.

Iraq, Oman and Uruguay were among those which pointed out that resolution 34/138 had stipulated that the global negotiations should include major issues in the five main areas. Brazil added that although the Group of 77's draft agenda, submitted in the Committee of the Whole, had been limited to issues in those five areas, it had been deemed too broad. Chile and Thailand referred to the consensus on global discussion of the various subjects at the time of adoption of resolution 34/138. An agenda encompassing food, energy and balance-of-payments problems was, according to Zaire, contrary to that resolution. Madagascar shared this view and termed the developed countries' text sectoral and subject-oriented. Algeria and Ecuador thought the negotiations could not adapt themselves to a piecemeal approach. Mozambique was convinced that only through dealing with agenda items in an integrated and consistent manner would a package agreement, binding on all Member States, be arrived at.

Benin said that to seek to give preference to certain agenda items or to undertake short-term actions would be to avoid the true problems facing humanity. Nicaragua and Tunisia also felt that the developed countries were concerned only about current economic problems. Tunisia added that those countries favoured a decentralized approach which meant scattering the issues among the specialized agencies and thereby stripping the global round of any meaning or scope.

Lebanon considered it important that the negotiations encompass issues in the field of food and agriculture, such as world food security, food aid, international emergency food reserves and an international grains agreement. Egypt stressed that early agreement which might be reached in specific areas should not be a substitute for more fundamental solutions, but an encouragement to further co-operation.

Algeria stated that the non-discriminatory participation of all States in the negotiating and decision-making process was essential, a position held also by Mali and Sierra Leone. Algeria could not conceive of genuine global negotiations which excluded the important area of the world monetary and financial system. Sri Lanka felt that, if the developed countries acknowledged that protection of the real value of the financial assets and exports of the developing countries and the financing of their deficits were two sides of the same coin, the stage would be set for detailed talks. Yugoslavia held a similar view.

Somalia called for an all-out effort by countries of both North and South to negotiate the modalities for the transfer of resources. Madagascar and the Sudan also called for greater North-South co-operation.

Mexico referred to a joint decision by Mexico and Venezuela to establish a programme of energy co-operation for the countries of Central America and the Caribbean, aimed at meeting the oil-import requirements of the area, and said it was important to ensure consideration of such decisions during the global round.

The United Arab Emirates said that attempts by developed countries to discuss oil prices separately from raw materials and manufactured goods were unjust and unrealistic.

Botswana stressed that the new round must cover elements not covered in other international forums. For Zambia, it was crucial that negotiations be conducted within the framework of the United Nations system without prejudice to the specialized forums. Ghana, Guyana and the United Republic of Tanzania were among those which would have preferred that the specialized agencies play only a supporting role in the negotiations. The United Republic of Cameroon said the agencies should be called on for technical assistance, while Morocco stressed that the General Assembly was the only body where a consensus might be achieved. Honduras felt that sectoral negotiations were necessary at a certain stage, but co-ordination and centralization were needed to bring about a successful conclusion.

Indonesia urged that the negotiations take the form of a package agreement, a view shared by Egypt. For this agreement, according to Israel, there would be a principal body controlling overall supervision of the negotiations which, at the final stage, would be charged with consolidation of all acceptable elements.

Turkey said that issues which, under international law, came within the jurisdiction of the agencies should be negotiated by them, with the central body co-ordinating the results into a final document. Argentina also felt the final package could contain commitments for the solution of questions that had been entrusted to the competence of the international organizations.

Burundi and Yugoslavia said they saw no alternative to global negotiations, which must be a joint endeavour for resolving major international economic problems for the benefit of all. This point was shared by Malaysia. Mauritius and Somalia also noted the importance of international interdependence.

The developed market-economy countries agreed on the need to launch integrated global negotiations under a central organ, but urged avoidance of duplication of effort by infringement on the fields of competence of the specialized agencies.

Canada said that, in adapting international institutions to meet new needs, the vital role of those forums should not be ignored—a view shared by EEC members and Japan. Belgium said that specialized agencies, such as the International Monetary Fund, should not be deprived of their areas of competence.

Norway recalled its proposal with regard to procedures which it hoped might bridge diverging views (see p. 520).

Luxembourg said EEC would approach negotiations in a spirit of compromise, favouring the poorest members of the international community; it had agreed to hold discussions on the basis of the agenda proposed by the Group of 77. Compromise could be achieved if solutions were found in the areas of energy and money and finance and the negotiating procedures themselves. The Netherlands said there were three interrelated major fields of importance—energy, financial issues and trade-not necessarily exclusive in importance, which might constitute elements for a package agreement.

Australia felt that the negotiations should focus on protectionism and the implementation of positive adjustment policies.

The Federal Republic of Germany urged concentration on those urgent topics on which results could be achieved in the common interest. A similar position was held by Canada, Norway and the United States. Norway added that there must be possibilities for trade-offs between different sectors and issues.

The United Kingdom said it wished to see an agenda that was relevant, practical and, above all, likely to achieve results, Austria thought there had been considerable rapprochement in the Committee of the Whole in the areas of food, trade and some aspects of energy. Norway and Sweden felt that a summit meeting might give political impetus to the procedures.

Finland pointed out that one of the guiding principles for negotiations was that account be taken of the economic capability of each donor country. The Netherlands spoke in like manner and also stressed the importance of bearing in mind the economic differences of the various groups of developing countries by focusing on the needs of those countries which had not built up a position of strength.

Denmark stressed that care must be taken not to become too preoccupied with the global round, thereby attaching less importance to the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade.

The centrally planned economy countries agreed in principle with the proposals of the developing nations concerning the agenda of the global negotiations, but reiterated that existing economic problems would not be solved by creation of new organs or negotiating machinery.

According to the Byelorussian SSR and Czechoslovakia, the problem lay not in the machinery for the negotiations but with the sincerity of all countries to achieve progress. For the Ukrainian SSR, the political positions of the developed capitalist countries were the essence of the problems.

The Byelorussian SSR, Hungary, Mongolia and Poland stressed the need for the interests of all to be treated justly. Romania held a similar view.

Bulgaria and the USSR said that a final decision as to the nature of their participation in the negotiations would depend on the specific agreement reached on agenda and procedure.

Various aspects of the global negotiations were also evaluated at the July 1980 session of the Economic and Social Council (see p. 528).

In his statement to the Ad Hoc Committee of the Eleventh Special Session (see preceding subchapter), the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation said the global negotiations should arrive at integrated policy measures commanding political commitment in order to ensure their full and effective implementation. At the core would be measures regarding money, finance and energy, together with other appropriate measures to deal with short-, medium- and long-term problems in a balanced manner, fully respecting their independent character and meeting the concerns of all groups, bearing in mind their differences in capabilities and strengths. The central negotiating process would involve the specialized forums and allow for them to follow up without impeding the integrated approach, the Director-General said.

On 13 September, the Ad Hoc Committee received a proposal on procedures and a time-frame for global negotiations submitted by the Chairman of that Committee's Working Group II, set up to consider the agenda item on global negotiations relating to economic co-operation for development. This was a revised version of a proposal he had earlier introduced, modified following informal consultations. By the revised proposal, the Assembly would convene a United Nations conference with universal participation at a high political level to be the forum for co-ordinating and conducting global negotiations-with a view to ensuring a simultaneous, coherent and integrated approach to the issues negotiated and to result in a package agreement. The conference would entrust detailed negotiations of specific agenda items to specialized forums within the United Nations system or to such ad hoc groups as it would create and would receive results from them within a specific time-frame, to be indicated by the conference, with a view to reaching the package agreement, all parties to which would be committed to its implementation. Implementation action by specialized forums would be accomplished by the parties' acting through the intergovernmental bodies of those forums. The conference-which was to be held in New York beginning on 12 January 1981 and which would try to conclude by 11 September-was to reach agreement by consensus on all important matters.

Finland and Japan commented that although the text contained ambiguities it was acceptable as a basis for launching global negotiations. Bulgaria, on behalf of eight Eastern European countries and Mongolia, said that group supported the adoption of the proposal by consensus, as did Australia, Austria, Canada, Greece, Jordan, Norway, Spain and Sweden.

The United States, however, said the text had not resolved conceptual differences regarding division of responsibility between the proposed conference and the specialized agencies; provisions of the proposal might be interpreted as permitting the conference to renegotiate agreements reached in the agencies. Luxembourg, speaking on behalf of EEC, pointed out that two of its member States also had reservations on the text. Further, EEC felt that a balance should be struck between the central body and the agencies: the conference should be responsible for co-ordination and its role should not adversely affect the competence of the specialized forums, which should be parties to the negotiations on matters within their competence, and their autonomous decision-making powers had to be respected in drawing up the package agreement.

The United States said it could not accept the proposal because a consensus on it did not exist. The Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom associated themselves with that view.

India, speaking on behalf of the Group of 77, said the Group would have preferred a more forthright statement of what the conference would do once it had received the results of the detailed negotiations. However, it considered that aspects relating to the specialized forums had been adequately taken into account in the text.

Also on 13 September, on an oral proposal by India, on behalf of the Group of 77, the Ad Hoc Committee decided without objection to inform the General Assembly that, with the exception of three delegations, all Committee members had expressed readiness to accept the text of the Group's proposal as the procedural framework for the global negotiations. on the basis of an agenda to be agreed upon at the Assembly's thirty-fifth (1980) session.

On 15 September, the General Assembly took note of the text and decided to transmit to its 1980 session all documents relevant to the global negotiations. The Assembly took this action in adopting without vote decision S-11/24, the text of which was proposed by India.

The Ad Hoc Committee also approved two further draft resolutions, subsequently adopted by the Assembly on 15 September as resolutions S-11/3 and S-11/4; these concerned suggestions by the Secretary-General to overcome the critical economic situation of many developing countries, and measures to meet the critical situation in the least developed countries. Both texts had been introduced in the Committee by India on behalf of the Group of 77. (For details, see pp. 547 and 543.)

Inclusion in the agenda of the Assembly's thirty-fifth session of an item on launching global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development was requested in a letter of 1 October 1980 from the Chairman (Venezuela) of the Group of 77 developing Member States. In an explanatory memorandum annexed to the letter, the Group noted the failure of the eleventh special session to launch global negotiations and requested that the item be discussed in plenary meetings.

On 22 October, the Assembly President announced that, as a result of consultations, he intended to set up an informal consultative group under his chairmanship prior to the Assembly's consideration of the launching of global negotiations, with a view to the Assembly's being able to record general agreement on the item.

Progress in discussions held in this "group of friends of the President" was outlined to the Assembly on 20 November. The President said that there was a consensus that at least four subjects be addressed: objectives of the global negotiations; the question of competence; relationships between the central body and the specialized agencies; and the approach to be adopted for the negotiations. There was a general wish to begin discussion with the objectives of the global negotiations and there was a reaffirmation of the consensus reached when Assembly resolution 34/138 on the global round's purpose and the objectives for the negotiations had been adopted.

In the light of this consensus, the "group of friends" had related these objectives to the five subject areas of the agenda, he continued, and there had been a positive will to accommodate all views. Regarding trade and raw materials, the views of the various groups had been thoroughly explored and he did not think it would be difficult to reach an accommodation on these areas. Concerning food questions, there appeared to be a substantial basis for agreement on the formulation of an agenda. Similarly, on development issues, a close understanding had been reached on the nature of the problems and measures required to address them. Concerning energy, he felt it was possible to resolve remaining divergences of view and, although money and finance was a complicated area, the President said that the discussions had pointed to several possibilities for resolving differences. He was confident therefore that, given a spirit of accommodation and a degree of political will to persevere, the group was close to an agenda in which all parties would feel that their points of view were reflected.

The President said he also felt that procedural problems were not insurmountable; all sides had expressed willingness to achieve a meeting of minds to launch the negotiations and he believed that the remaining ground to achieve agreement on agenda, procedure and time-frame could be covered.

On 25 November, in an informal meeting, the Assembly agreed that the President should continue with the consultations; however, on 17 December, he announced that, despite substantial progress, no text on procedures and agenda had been agreed. He therefore proposed that the Assembly request him to continue consultations on the launching of global negotiations, with a view to reporting on the results to the Assembly at a resumed session in January 1981. The Assembly adopted this proposal without vote as its decision 35/443.

Also on 17 December, the President announced that the Assembly would resume its thirty-fifth session on 15 January 1981 to consider the subject in question, as well as three other agenda items: the election of two members of the International Court of Justice; the question of Namibia; and the question of equitable representation on and an increase in the membership of the Security Council. This action was formalized in decision 35/450, adopted without vote.

On 15 January 1981, the Assembly decided, without formal decision, on an oral proposal by its President, to request that he pursue his consultations on the subject and report on their outcome to the Assembly at a later, unspecified date.

Reports and discussion of international economic and social policy

At its July 1980 session, the Economic and Social Council continued to discuss international economic and social policy, including regional and sectoral developments, and had before it several documents on the topic.

The World Economic Survey, 1979-1980 provided a synthesized appraisal of current world economic trends and an outlook for 1980-1985. The Survey noted the slowing in the rate of growth of world output from 4.4 per cent in 1978 to 3.4 per cent in 1979 and forecast a decline to 2.5 per cent in 1980. It also noted the acceleration of global inflation during 1979 with the majority of developing countries recording rates in excess of 20 per cent per annum.

With regard to world trade and international payments, the Survey pointed to sizable shifts in current-account balances in 1979: improvements of over $60 billion for the oil-exporting developing countries and nearly $6 billion for the centrally planned economies (Eastern Europe and China); a deficit increase for the non-oil-exporting developing countries of more than $15 billion, to over $50 billion; and a deficit for the developed market economies of nearly $12 billion. Further, the outlook for 1980 was one of sluggish growth in trade with the external financing of current-account deficits for non-oil-exporting developing countries remaining critical.

The Survey said that prospects for the world economy in 1980-1985 were gloomy, with the current downward movement in the economic cycle being followed by one of relatively slow growth (3.3-3.5 per cent). Inflation rates were likely to remain high with increases in world military expenditure and decelerated labour productivity in the developed market economies adding to inflationary pressures. Oil-exporting developing countries were expected to maintain or increase their rates of economic growth, but the immediate prospects for non-oil-exporting developing countries were not encouraging. In the centrally planned economies of Eastern Europe, external deficits and increasing energy costs would continue to constrain economic growth.

The Survey said that two interrelated adjustment policies in developing countries were called for: more control over the current account to cope with external imbalances, and stabilization measures to reduce inflationary pressures.

The Economic and Social Council also had before it summary reports by its five regional commissions which analysed each region's recent economic performance and future prospects. The report by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, covering 1978-1979, argued that world recession had delayed progress in overcoming the region's abiding development problems. Difficulties which had emerged or become more serious included inflation, slower agricultural growth, deterioration in the income terms of trade, higher international indebtedness, diminished flows of concessional aid and a slackening of foreign investment. The survey by the Economic Commission for Africa for 1978-1979 drew attention to wide disparities between the favourable economic performance of the region's major oil-exporting countries (a 7 per cent growth rate in gross domestic product in 1979) and the poor performance of its non-oil-exporting countries (3 per cent), with 1980 prospects even worse. The report of the Economic Commission for Europe noted that in 1979 growth was modest in historical perspective in the region's market-economy countries-a 3 per cent average growth rate-and centrally planned economies, where labour shortages and structural shifts in investments impeded speedier growth. The survey by the Economic Commission for Western Asia observed that the area had been playing a bigger role in the world economy, mainly because of oil, but that it had been a major victim of imported inflation, transmitted through higher prices of imports and domestic inflationary pressures. The Economic Commission for Latin America reported the region's substantial acceleration in economic growth during 1979 (6.5 per cent) over 1978 (4.7 per cent), in spite of the unfavourable world economic situation. Since capital inflow was mainly in the form of loans, however, there was a marked increase in the region's external indebtedness, and inflation pushed the regional average of consumer prices up from 41 per cent in 1978 to 55 per cent in 1979.

During the debate in the Council, the majority of delegations expressed broad agreement with the World Economic Survey's assessments, particularly with the position of the low-income developing countries. However, differing views were expressed on the principal causes of the difficult world economic situation.

The developed market-economy countries stressed the inflationary effects of oil price rises during 1978 and 1979. Belgium, speaking on behalf of the member States of the European Economic Community (EEC), said EEC felt those increases had had no objective justification but had dangerously affected international economic stability and created disturbing effects on development policies-a viewpoint shared by Spain, among others.

Japan and the United States expressed interest in the Secretary-General's suggestions to overcome the critical economic situation of many of the low-income, oil-importing developing countries (see p. 546).

According to many developing countries, inflationary impulses in the world economy came from the developed countries; inflation had begun in the mid-1960s and become more generalized at the beginning of the 1970s. Venezuela said its fundamental causes were lack of appropriate long-term monetary policy, creation of excessive domestic liquidity and various structural difficulties which had arisen in the industrialized countries. Venezuela added that the developing countries were being affected by a deterioration in their terms of trade and by protectionist barriers raised against their exports. Argentina said that without those barriers the developing countries would have slowly penetrated international markets and brought about healthy changes in world trade patterns.

Kenya was among those which felt that the oil price revolution was largely responsible for world-wide inflation and unemployment and the serious payment problems of the developing countries and that it was essential to seek new and renewable sources of energy. Bulgaria, Romania and the USSR were among those with centrally planned economies attributing the deterioration in the world economic situation to the arms race, which was using resources needed for economic development, and to other phenomena inherent in the developed market economies. The USSR said these phenomena—recession, monetary and financial instability, inflation and chronic unemployment—had become particularly evident in 1979, and the resulting economic crisis and rise in protectionism in the developed market economies had adversely affected the developing countries. This view was shared by the German Democratic Republic, Hungary and Viet Nam.

Lack of progress in the preparation of a new international development strategy and in the discussions on global negotiations in the Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174<sup>35</sup> was noted with regret by most speakers. Many felt that the growing interdependence of the world's economies made the search for a common solution to economic problems imperative. Yugoslavia felt that the failure of the Committee of the Whole was because the major developed countries had shown no genuine desire to compromise or enter into negotiations.

Developing countries felt that the insufficient headway in negotiations was the fault of the developed economies. Indonesia was among those which attributed it to lack of political will on their part, and Nigeria felt that they did not recognize the need for structural adjustments, financial and monetary reforms, fair prices for raw materials and the transfer of adequate resources, and appeared reluctant to negotiate. India stressed that the ongoing deliberations must not become a pretext for the existing system of economic exploitation and current imbalances in international economic relations. Chile said that the industrialized countries' monetary and fiscal policies were forcing imported inflation on the developing countries—a view shared by Morocco.

The developed market-economy countries had a different viewpoint of the current international economic situation. Finland and Italy deplored the inability of the international community to focus on priorities; energy and international monetary reform were major issues for the global negotiations—a view supported by Japan. Finland attributed the failure of the Committee of the Whole not only to difficulties of substance but also to the way in which the drafting of the agenda for the global negotiations had proceeded and to efforts which had been made to prejudice their outcome. Referring to the difficulties that had arisen in connexion with the role of the United Nations in monetary reform, Finland stated that decision-making in international monetary policy was the constitutional responsibility of the International Monetary Fund (IMF). The United Kingdom spoke in like manner and also mentioned the crucial role of the World Bank Group. France felt consideration should be given to IMF's suggestion for: improving existing international financing facilities; setting up new, better-adapted facilities; and extending conditionality to enable particularly disadvantaged countries to achieve some growth and allow sufficiently long periods for economic recovery.

The Federal Republic of Germany felt that the socialist countries of Eastern Europe should be much more actively engaged in the North-South dialogue for the solution of global economic problems.

Czechoslovakia argued that relations between the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and the developing countries were basically different from relations between the latter and the developed market-economy countries. It rejected attempts to evaluate development aid by using an over-simplified methodology. In this connexion, several of the centrally planned economy States criticized the role of transnational corporations in the developing countries. The United Kingdom, however, felt these corporations were acquiring more respectability and that their role was appreciated by host countries.

Brazil, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Nepal were among those which pointed out that at the end of two development decades the objectives of the 1970s had remained unfulfilled and the commitments made had not been respected, particularly with regard to official development assistance (ODA). Norway pointed out that it and a few others had achieved the target set for ODA and called on the developed countries to make a serious effort to this end.

On 24 July 1980, the Council adopted, without objection, decision 1980/162, on an oral proposal by its President. By this decision, the Council took note of the World Economic Survey, 1979-1980 and of the summary reports of the five regional commissions.

By a letter dated 18 August, Czechoslovakia transmitted a communique outlining the work at a meeting of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (Prague, 17-19 June). The session, held as member countries were completing implementation of their economic plans for 1976-1980, evaluated results of their five-year plans and discussed areas and tasks to be given attention in the future.

Other aspects of the implementation of decisions on a new development strategy and the establishment of a new international economic order

Consolidation and progressive development of international economic law

At the 1980 regular session of the General Assembly, the Sixth (Legal) Committee continued consideration of the consolidation and progressive development of the principles and norms of international economic law relating in particular to legal aspects of the new international economic order. The Committee had before it a preliminary report by the Secretary-General on the topic, submitted in accordance with an Assembly resolution of 17 December 1979,<sup>36</sup> by which he was asked to study the question with a view to embodying those principles and norms in one or more instruments. The report consisted of: observations by the Secretary-General on how he was approaching the tasks entrusted to him under the resolution; his observations on the concept of the consolidation and progressive development of the principles and norms as applied to international economic law; and a review of the work of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) in this field and a survey of related activities of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR)- the two bodies with which the Secretary-General had been asked to examine the question.

The Secretary-General observed that, in relation to the "progressive development of international economic law," he intended to be guided by the definition contained in the 1947 statute of the International Law Commission,<sup>37</sup> where the expression was used for convenience as meaning the preparation of draft conventions on subjects not regulated by international law or on which the law had not been sufficiently developed in State practice. Since neither the statute nor the Charter of the United Nations included any indication as to what might be considered as "consolidation" of principles and norms of international law, he felt that the concept was in need of clarification.

It was also important to determine what were the current state and status of the principles and norms to be consolidated and developed. He suggested that a number of principles embodied in relevant international instruments, such as the 1974 Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order<sup>38</sup> and the 1974 Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,<sup>39</sup> might be developed and consolidated through the elaboration of an appropriate legal instrument.

Annexed to the report were the views of nine Member States which had responded to the Assembly's invitation for opinions on this question.<sup>40</sup>

The Philippines believed there was an urgent need to consolidate the norms and principles of international economic law in a unified and binding undertaking to achieve the goals of the new international economic order, and proposed that the work be undertaken in 1980 by an ad hoc working group of governmental experts. The Byelorussian SSR, Hungary, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR considered that the progressive recommendations in a number of important United Nations documents-including the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order<sup>41</sup>-might form the basis for the codification of legal norms defining the obligations of those involved in international economic relations, but only after a thorough and comprehensive study and analysis covering all aspects of the question; work on this question by UNCITRAL might serve as the basis for such analysis and codification. The United Republic of Cameroon considered the international code of conduct on the transfer of technology, currently under negotiation, to be among those important documents.

The Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and Norway felt that the question of codification was premature in view of various ongoing international negotiations on development issues; the Federal Republic of Germany added that UNCITRAL should not deal with material issues of public law, since its province was primarily the private sector, and the Netherlands felt it was important to try first to reach agreement on non-binding rules, for example codes of conduct.

The Sixth Committee also had before it a note verbale of 20 October from Yugoslavia transmitting the resolutions adopted by the fifty-ninth Conference of the International Law Association (Belgrade, 18-23 August). One Conference recommendation was that, in view of the considerable number of United Nations bodies engaged in the elaboration of legal rules relating to international economic law and the new international economic order, the General Assembly should ensure that co-ordination and review was carried out by a competent organ such as UNCITRAL or the Sixth Committee, and all information on such activities should be published.

On 15 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 35/166 by which it requested UNITAR to prepare: a list of existing and evolving principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order concerning the economic relations among States, international organizations and other entities of public international law, and the activities of transnational corporations; and an analytical study on the subject for submission to the Assembly's 1981 regular session. A list of documents to be examined was included in the resolution. The Assembly also urged Member States, United Nations bodies and other organizations to submit information and to co-operate fully with UNITAR.

The Philippines, which introduced the text, made a number of oral revisions on behalf of the sponsors, following consultations with the "Group of 77" developing Member States: the request for a list of principles and norms was made to UNITAR rather than to the Secretary-General; references to principles and norms of "international economic law" relating to the new international economic order were changed to those of "international law;" declarations adopted by all United Nations conferences relevant to that order were included in the list of documents to be analysed; a request was added that the study be completed in time for submission to the Assembly's 1981 session; rather than urging only Members which had not done so to submit views, the Assembly urged Member States to submit relevant information for the study; and UNITAR rather than the Secretary-General was to determine which organizations active in this field were to be asked to submit information.

Resolution 35/166 was adopted by a recorded vote of 119 to 6, with 16 abstentions. On 5 December, the Sixth Committee had approved the text, sponsored by Bangladesh, Bolivia, Ecuador, Egypt, the Philippines, Romania, Sri Lanka and Zaire, by a recorded vote, requested by the Philippines, of 92 to 6, with 16 abstentions.

Speaking in explanation of vote, France, the United Kingdom and the United States, which opposed the text, and Australia, Canada, Italy and New Zealand, which abstained, felt that it was premature to crystallize negotiations in progress in numerous other forums. They considered it inappropriate to entrust UNITAR with passing value judgements on whether or not elements in the documents listed in paragraph 1 for analysis by UNITAR, on which fundamental disagreement existed, constituted evolving principles or norms of international law.

International co-operation in tax matters

Responding to an Economic and Social Council decision of 8 May 1978,<sup>42</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Council in February 1980 on international taxation issues. The report took stock of the work on international double taxation carried out by the Group of Experts on Tax Treaties between Developed and Developing Countries and the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat. That work had culminated in two publications—a Manual for the Negotiation of Bilateral Tax Treaties between Developed and Developing Countries and a United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries. The report also analysed bilateral tax treaties concluded between developed and developing countries between 1968 and 1976. Suggestions by the Group of Experts for future action included renaming the Group, which would act as a forum for discussion of international tax issues and for formulating tax policy suggestions for strengthening national tax administrations. The Group also suggested that the Secretariat prepare a number of specific studies and surveys in the international tax field, particularly concerning tax evasion and avoidance, as well as a study on the impact of direct taxation on international trade and the transfer of technology.

It was further recommended that the feasibility of establishing a direct tax co-operation council be studied. Its functions would include: studying variations in tax policies, looking to their harmonization; formulating a model tax code; encouraging exchange of information among tax administrators and co-operation in combating tax evasion and avoidance; updating norms, definitions, classifications, rules, recommendations and guidelines; and reconciling disputes in the international taxation field.

Among the Secretary-General's recommendations was that dissemination of information contained in the two publications through regional symposia would increase the negotiating skills of tax officials in developing countries and their understanding of international taxation issues, and he called for extrabudgetary resources for such symposia. He also felt that the proposed studies and surveys would be useful in formulating guidelines to combat tax evasion and avoidance. He supported establishment of a direct tax co-operation council, in connexion with which he intended to obtain the views of Governments and interested international organizations.

On 28 April 1980, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1980/13 by which it commended the work of the Group of Experts, approved the Secretary-General's recommendations concerning the Group's suggestions, endorsed his recommendations on dissemination of material contained in the two publications and shared his hope that extrabudgetary financing would be made available. The Council requested him to report to its second regular session of 1981 on his consultations regarding establishment of a direct tax co-operation council and on the Group's progress—renamed the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Co-operation in Tax Matters—to the Council session following each meeting of the Group. It further requested him to submit to its July 1980 session a report on the question of increasing the Group's membership from 20 to 25, in order to ensure more equitable geographical representation.

Resolution 1980/13 was adopted without vote. On 23 April, the Council's First (Economic) Committee had approved by consensus the text, sponsored by Chile, Ethiopia, Nigeria, Pakistan, Spain, the United Kingdom, the United States and Zambia. Having revised their original text, the sponsors accepted a further oral amendment by the USSR to change the title of the resolution from "International taxation issues" to "International co-operation in tax matters," which the USSR felt better reflected its content.

Speaking after approval of the text in the First Committee, Japan said it was not convinced of the need to continue the work of the Group of Experts under another name since its main tasks—issuance of the Manual and the Model Convention—had been achieved. Belgium and the USSR expressed reservations on the proposal to establish a direct tax co-operation council; the USSR felt that international tax evasion and avoidance were political questions which could be considered by existing bodies.

Pursuant to resolution 1980/13, the Secretary-General reported to the Council's July session that a membership increase would, in his opinion, contribute to expanded international co-operation in tax matters and would also ensure more equitable geographical representation.

On 18 July, the Council adopted, without vote, decision 1980/155 by which it decided to increase the Group's membership from 20 to 25.

Relationship between disarmament and development

On 27 September 1980, at its twenty-first session, the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) took note of an oral progress report by the UNCTAD Secretary-General on a meeting of the Group of Governmental Experts on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development, currently being held at Geneva, at which UNCTAD was represented as an observer. The Board requested him to assist and continue to follow carefully the Group's work as it bore on the objectives of UNCTAD.

The close relationship between disarmament and development was recognized by the General Assembly in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, annexed to Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980 (see p. 499). Progress in the former would help greatly in realization of the latter, according to the Strategy, and effective measures should be taken, following disarmament measures, to use resources thus released for economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries.

Long-term trends in the economic development of regions

In its report on its January 1980 session, the Committee for Development Planning stressed that the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade should not only create an international economic environment conducive to accelerated development but also spur the developing countries to formulate their own development perspectives and pursue vigorous implementation policies. Noting that considerable work had been done by organizations of the United Nations system and elsewhere on development perspectives for the 1980s and 1990s, the Committee felt that the focus in the immediate future should be on consolidating and strengthening the base for such work and on improving the methodology and statistical information required. Since such perspectives were designed to serve as a framework for concerted policy action, the focus after adoption of the Strategy should be on speedy implementation of the measures specified therein. At its 1981 session, the Committee intended to elaborate the Strategy's regional and subregional aspects and to this end hoped that the regional commissions for the developing areas would prepare papers on how the international community could help implement their development priorities. It proposed that Committee working groups or teams meet at those commissions' headquarters to discuss this topic with officials and regional specialists.

By a General Assembly resolution of 29 November 1979,<sup>43</sup> the Secretary-General had been asked to prepare a socio-economic perspective of the development of the world economy up to the year 2000, with special emphasis on the period up to 1990 and, in particular, on the problems of the developing countries. In pursuance of that request, he submitted a report to the Assembly in September 1980 outlining the method of preparation and the contents of such a perspective: it would present a cross-sectoral overview and provide sectoral or functional and regional details; its focus would be on attaining the goals and objectives and on carrying out the policy measures of the new Strategy; the structural changes involved in the establishment of the new international economic order would be a central feature; and implications of other United Nations long-term objectives and the long-term socio-economic implications of disarmament would also be examined. A preliminary draft of the perspective was to be considered by the Economic and Social Council at the end of 1981, according to the Assembly's 1979 resolution.

On 24 July 1980, Poland transmitted to the President of the Council a working paper containing suggestions for examining long-term trends in economic development including components which might be included in the outline of the perspective, a methodological approach and a possible procedure for preparing the perspective.

On 7 November, the Council took note of and transmitted to the Assembly the report of the Secretary-General. It requested him, when preparing the preliminary draft of the socio-economic perspective for the Council's 1981 resumed second regular session, to take into consideration the Polish working paper as well as the views expressed during the current Council and Assembly sessions. These actions were incorporated in Council decision 1980/190, adopted, without objection, on an oral proposal by the Council President.

The Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report and invited him to continue his work on the examination of long-term trends in economic development when, on 5 December, it adopted decision 35/420 without vote. The Second (Economic and Financial) Committee had approved the text, sponsored by Poland, on 14 November, also without vote.

Specific development questions

In addition to the goals, objectives and policy measures set out in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, a number of other decisions concerning specific development questions were adopted by United Nations bodies during 1980.

The General Assembly: reiterated calls for measures to meet the critical situation in the least developed countries, continued preparations towards a 1981 United Nations conference on those countries and authorized the Economic and Social Council to update the list of least developed countries; considered immediate measures for countries most seriously affected by the current economic crisis; took special measures for the social and economic development of Africa in the 1980s; appealed for further contributions to the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries and acted to answer their particular needs; and appealed for the urgent implementation of specific actions in favour of developing island countries.

The Economic and Social Council recognized the need to review United Nations emergency operations and again appealed for aid to Nicaragua. While the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) also acted to help that country overcome the effects of civil strife, the Organization mobilized emergency humanitarian and economic assistance for several countries in Africa, the Caribbean and the Pacific. In other action, the Economic and Social Council moved to improve public administration and finance for development.

The Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) adopted: a set of agreed conclusions on improving international financial flows to developing countries; decisions on developing countries' access to capital markets and export credit guarantee facilities; and a resolution on requirements for an effective system of international financial co-operation.

Other subjects dealt with during the year included economic co-operation among developing countries and co-ordination of action in rural development.

Finance questions

Transfer of real resources to developing countries

Accelerating the transfer of real resources

Pursuant to a General Assembly resolution of 18 December 1979,<sup>44</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Assembly's eleventh special (August/September 1980) session on the acceleration of the transfer of real resources to developing countries, with conclusions based on proposals for expanding the volume of resource transfers to those countries. The report drew on consultations with Governments and international organizations and the conclusions of a number of studies prepared by the secretariat of UNCTAD. The proposals for increased resource transfers were examined under four broad categories: suggestions to improve the process of long-term structural transformation in the international economy; proposals to provide counter-cyclical boosts to demand in developed countries through expanded transfer of resources to developing countries; ideas to expand the supply of key commodities from developing countries; and proposals designed to improve the process of channelling resources from international capital markets for long-term investment in developing countries.

The current world economic outlook, particularly as it affected developing countries and their prospects for economic growth, was examined in the report. In this connexion, it looked at their immediate financing requirements, and concluded that a plan for massive transfer of resources would have to address a number of related needs, including: measures to increase developing countries' access to capital markets and to expand official intermediation; improvements in the maturity structure of their external debt; measures to enhance and liberalize access to official payments finance; and the adoption of mechanisms such as interest subsidies to improve terms of capital flows to developing countries.

At the first part of its ninth session, held from 3 to 11 July at Geneva, UNCTAD's Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade also considered financial flows to developing countries and adopted on 11 July a set of agreed conclusions, calling on developed donor countries which had not attained the internationally agreed official development assistance (ODA) annual target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product (GNP) to redress the situation under the agreed terms of UNCTAD resolution 129(V) of 3 June 1979.<sup>45</sup> The Committee stressed the importance of obtaining comprehensive information concerning ODA, called on all developed donor countries to provide such information and recommended that a sessional committee be established at the Committee's next session to review all aspects of the recommendations contained in resolution 129(V).

Also on 11 July, the Committee adopted two related decisions. By the first, on access to capital markets by developing countries, the Committee recognized the importance of improved access and agreed to keep the subject on its agenda, including a draft resolution on the transfer of real resources to developing countries, submitted in 1979 at the fifth session of UNCTAD on behalf of the "Group of 77" developing countries,<sup>46</sup> and requested studies and recommendations for consideration by the Committee. By the second decision, the Committee requested UNCTAD's Secretary-General to consult with member States and financial and other institutions on proposals for an export credit guarantee facility for consideration by an intergovernmental expert group to be convened by the Trade and Development Board.

The Board on 27 September endorsed these decisions.

In the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, annexed to General Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980 (see p. 499), the Assembly noted that external financial resources, particularly ODA, constituted an indispensable element of support for the developing countries' own efforts. International financial flows should be improved and adapted consistent with those countries' needs as regards volume, composition, quality, forms and distribution. Bilateral and multilateral flows were to be made on an increasingly assured, continuous and predictable basis; annual announcements of ODA intentions should cover the longest period ahead—a minimum of three years where possible. The terms and conditions of ODA should be significantly improved; in particular its overall average rate of concessionality should be increased and it should be untied as a general rule.

Developed countries were to increase ODA with a view to reaching and surpassing the target of 0.7 per cent of GNP not later than the second half of the Decade, and as soon as possible reaching 1 per cent, directing ODA increasingly towards countries whose needs and problems were greatest. Developing countries able to do so should aid other developing countries. The international community should also give priority particularly to the immediate needs of the least developed countries, giving urgent consideration to establishing emergency assistance programmes for them. Donor countries were to try to double ODA to those countries, and specific efforts should also be undertaken to meet the needs of other special categories of developing countries. Developed donor countries were to continue improving their aid-giving procedures.

Export credit guarantee agencies should improve guarantee conditions within international arrangements. Flows from development finance institutions should be increased significantly, in particular to those eligible for concessional lending. Multilateral institutions' policies and resource bases should be regularly reviewed and modified if necessary. Agreements reached regarding an increase in the capital of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) and the sixth replenishment of the International Development Association were to be speedily implemented and ways considered to achieve long-term financing, including multiyear pledges for aid programmes. Special attention was to be paid to increases in soft resources through multilateral institutions. Consideration should be given to ways to increase World Bank and regional development bank lending capacities; the Bank should consider establishing a long-term financing facility to finance capital goods purchases.

Ways to increase non-concessional flows were also to be explored, including approaches such as co-financing with private resources or direct private investments that were compatible with national priorities and legislation. A proposal for a world development fund should be examined by the Secretary-General for report to the Assembly's 1981 regular session. Debt-relief action would include speedy implementation of, and retroactive adjustment of terms in accordance with, Trade and Development Board resolution 165(S-IX) of 11 March 1978.<sup>47</sup> Measures should be taken to use resources released by disarmament for the economic and social development of the developing countries.

By a letter of 4 September, Belgium transmitted to the Secretary-General an explanatory note on a proposed pact among industrialized or wealthy countries for interdependent growth which formed part of a search for ways of organizing a massive transfer of resources to developing countries. The proposal was based on the urgent need to restore balance in interdependence between rich and poor countries and to consolidate North-South co-operation by providing criteria for the mobilization and distribution of ODA. The plan aimed to increase financial assistance substantially in order to achieve the objectives of the new International Development Strategy.

Belgium sponsored a draft decision in the General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee at the 1980 regular session by which the Assembly would take note with interest of the draft pact for interdependent growth. In addition, it would request the Secretary-General to study the draft pact in consultation with competent United Nations organs and within existing resources, and report to the Assembly's 1981 session. However, on 20 November, the Committee was informed that the text was no longer before it for consideration.

International monetary reform

In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 19 December 1979,<sup>48</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report on international monetary reform to the Assembly's 1980 regular session containing replies received from specialised agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, which had been asked to examine, implement the measures in, and report on the Outline for a Programme of Action on International Monetary Reform, prepared by the Group of 77's Intergovernmental Group of Twenty-four on International Monetary Affairs and endorsed by the Group of 77 in September 1979.<sup>49</sup>

By a note of 22 October 1980, the Secretary-General observed that, pursuant to the same 1979 resolution, the report of a July/August 1980 meeting of UNCTAD'S Ad Hoc Intergovernmental High-Level Group of Experts on the Evolution of the International Monetary System, together with the Trade and Development Board's comments thereon, was currently before the Assembly (see p. 620).

On 5 December, the Assembly adopted, without vote, decision 35/419, by which it took note of the Secretary-General's report and note on international monetary reform. On 20 November, the Second Committee had approved the text, without objection, as orally proposed by its Chairman.

In the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, annexed to General Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980 (see p. 499), the Assembly noted that the international community should work for stable international monetary conditions supportive of a balanced and equitable development of the world economy and the accelerated development of developing countries. Efforts to increase the responsiveness of the international monetary system to the needs and interests of the developing countries should be intensified through further reform of the system to be pursued and carried out expeditiously early in and throughout the Decade. The Assembly also outlined the principal features required for a stable, effective and equitable international monetary and financial system:

- an effective, equitable adjustment process' consistent with high, sustainable employment and growth, price stability and world trade expansion, accompanied by access to official credit facilities on terms adapted to the nature of balance-of-payments problems;

- periodic review of International Monetary Fund (IMF) facilities to ensure that they were adequate and adapted to members' needs, with IMF duly considering such characteristics as setting conditionality, causes of deficits, lengthening repayment periods, adequate and increased aid, the need to maintain liquidity, and early consideration of mechanisms to reduce the cost of using the supplementary financing facility;

- aid particularly for developing countries with structural imbalance in their external accounts and with balance-of-payments difficulties, and expansion of collaboration between IMF and the World Bank, particularly for medium-term balance-of-payments financing, giving consideration to the need for additional resources, conditionality, maturity periods and reduction of low-income countries' borrowing costs;

- restoring high, sustainable growth with price stability, reducing inflation, promoting a stable yet flexible exchange-rate régime, equitable treatment by IMF of surplus and deficit countries in overseeing exchange rates and balance-of-payments policies, collective international action to create international liquidity in line with requirements, and development of special drawing rights (SDRs) as the principal reserve asset of the system;

- establishment of a link between SDRs and development aid, to be considered by IMF when periodically considering allocation of new SDRs; and

- equitable and effective participation by developing countries in international monetary decision making.

Financial co-operation for development

On 11 July, UNCTAD'S Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade adopted a resolution on the requirements for an effective system of international financial co-operation. The Committee thereby agreed that the subject was to be a major concern of its future work. Review of current co-operation should include the volume, direction and conditions of financial flows and their interrelations in order to analyse how they could meet the needs of developing countries, taking into account trade and development policies.

On 11 September, the Trade and Development Board took note of the Committee's report and endorsed its resolution.

In response to an Assembly request of 18 December 1979,<sup>50</sup> the Secretary-General summarized in a note dated 29 August 1980 UNCTAD'S ideas on a review of the current system of international financial co-operation in the context of world trade and development. They had been set before the Committee on Invisibles in a policy paper and a number of supporting papers. Considerations to be taken into account were: consistency between the different constituents of financial flows to developing countries; reduction of fluctuations in such flows resulting from the annual decision-making process in developed countries, which should provide development finance on an assured and predictable basis; and filling gaps in the existing system for meeting developing countries' financing requirements.

On 5 December, in adopting decision 35/419 (see preceding section), the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note.

(See also p. 632.)

Debt problems of developing countries

By a decision of 21 March 1980, the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to report to the Board's September session on implementation of its 1978 resolution dealing with adjustment of terms of past ODA to developing countries,<sup>51</sup> together with an analysis of the effects of such implementation on their debt problems. He was also requested to report on consultations on the subject with Governments and multi-lateral institutions.

On 27 September, the Trade and Development Board adopted resolutions 222 A and B (XXI) on debt and development problems of developing countries. To the second of these texts was annexed a set of detailed features for future operations relating to the debt problems of developing countries. (See also p. 616.)

Capital Development Fund

On 26 June 1980, the Governing Council of UNDP resolved that the United Nations Capital Development Fund should assume financing its own administrative costs and requested that the Economic and Social Council recommend General Assembly endorsement of this decision.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1980/65 (see p. 607), took note of the decision and transmitted it to the Assembly for consideration.

On 5 December, the Assembly, by decision 35/422 (see p. 607), deferred a decision on the question until 1981 and decided that meanwhile the Fund would continue to operate in conformity with measures laid down in 1967.<sup>52</sup>

Emergency and special economic assistance

International efforts to meet humanitarian emergency assistance

At its July 1980 session, the Economic and Social Council considered international efforts to meet humanitarian needs in emergency situations and, on 23 July, adopted resolution 1980/43 on the subject.

By this resolution, the Council recognized the need for a review of United Nations emergency operations, without prejudice to any General Assembly action, with a view to ensuring that available resources were applied in an effective and flexible manner. The Secretary-General was requested to prepare, in consultation with concerned organizations and bodies, and within existing financial resources, a summary report on how the United Nations over the past decade had co-ordinated and implemented humanitarian emergency assistance in cases other than those caused by natural disasters. He was to circulate that report in time to allow a decision to be taken no later than at the Council's April/May 1981 session on how best to proceed to consider the report, making use of existing organs, including the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination.

Resolution 1980/43, as proposed by Australia, Denmark, Finland, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway and Sweden, was adopted without objection. The sponsors further orally amended their once-revised text to take account, in a preambular paragraph, of the role played by intergovernmental organizations, in addition to the International Committee of the Red Cross and other non-governmental organizations, and to add a clause stipulating that the requested report was to be prepared within existing financial resources.

Introducing the text, Sweden pointed out that it was a starting-point in addressing the adequacy of the United Nations relief system.

Speaking after adoption of the resolution, Brazil said it interpreted the reference to flexible use of resources as relating to those available for emergency aid and not those for other purposes, such as United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) technical assistance funds. Speaking on behalf of European Economic Community members, Belgium noted with satisfaction that no new institutions or permanent new arrangements were contemplated.

Assistance to Nicaragua

During 1980, assistance to Nicaragua, which continued to suffer from the effects of civil strife, was recommended by both the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly.

Responding to an Assembly resolution of 25 October 1979<sup>53</sup> by which the Assembly had expressed deep concern at the economic situation in that country and called for aid for its rehabilitation, reconstruction and development—the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly in October 1980 on information received from the international community on assistance provided. State aid had been reported by Austria (for resettlement of refugees and health care), Brazil and Peru (food aid and medicines), Mexico (aid of all kinds) and the Philippines (financial assistance). Replies had also been received from United Nations organs and programmes, nine specialized agencies, the Organization of American States, the Fund of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries and the Commission of the European Communities. The report indicated that Nicaragua still needed considerable aid and the Secretary-General expressed the hope that Member States and international organizations would respond generously.

At its 1980 regular session, the Assembly incorporated a similar appeal in resolution 35/84, adopted without vote on 5 December. It recommended that Nicaragua should receive treatment adequate to its needs until the situation was normalized, and requested the Secretary-General to report in 1981 on measures taken to implement the resolution.

The Second (Economic and Financial) Committee had approved the text-sponsored by 42 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) and introduced by Venezuela on 19 November, also without vote.

Earlier, on 21 July, the Economic and Social Council was orally informed by the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes, reporting on assistance to a number of countries, that further aid was vital for Nicaragua's early economic recovery. While still suffering from the effects of a 1972 earthquake, the country had been plunged into a civil war causing damage estimated at over $480 million, a drop in national income of 30 per cent in 1979 and the highest per capita foreign debt in the world.

On 23 July, the Council took note of this oral report, made on behalf of the Secretary-General, when it adopted decision 1980/158. The decision was adopted, without objection, as orally proposed by the Council President following a suggestion by Nigeria.

The Governing Council of UNDP had also approved measures in 1980 aimed at assisting Nicaragua. On 20 February, during a special meeting held to review preparations for UNDP's third programming cycle (1982-1986), the Governing Council agreed to allocate $323,300 as an addition to the current indicative planning figure (IPF) for Nicaragua and approved the borrowing of $3 million against that country's third-cycle IPF for technical co-operation to be undertaken in 1980-1981. On 20 June, the Council authorized the UNDP Administrator to postpone from the third to the fourth (1987-1991) cycle repayment of Nicaragua's borrowing.

Emergency humanitarian and economic assistance programmes

During the year, the United Nations continued to mobilize assistance for a number of countries suffering from a variety of economic difficulties. Remedial action was taken by the General Assembly at its 1980 regular session, by the Economic and Social Council at its July session, and by the Governing Council of UNDP at its June meetings.

Aid to African countries

In December, the General Assembly adopted resolutions by which it called for economic assistance to Benin (resolution 35/88), Botswana (35/98), Cape Verde (35/104), the Comoros (35/99), Djibouti (35/89), Guinea-Bissau (35/95), Lesotho (35/96), Mozambique (35/99), Sao Tome and Principe (35/93), Zambia (35/94) and Zimbabwe (35/100). It also called for assistance for the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of the Central African Republic (35/87), Chad (35/92 A), Equatorial Guinea (35/105) and Uganda (35/103) following civil strife and unsettled economic and social conditions. In the case of Chad, the Assembly also called for emergency humanitarian assistance (35/92 B). (For details of these decisions, see the subchapter commencing on p. 267; for action concerning Zimbabwe, see p. 249.)

Other Assembly resolutions sought aid for refugees in Djibouti (35/182), Somalia (35/180) and the Sudan (35/181), and for displaced persons in Ethiopia (35/183) (see p. 935).

The Assembly took note of several reports of the Secretary-General on assistance programmes in the region by adopting decision 35/423 (see p. 267). Problems facing Zaire with regard to transport, transit and access to foreign markets were dealt with in resolution 35/59 (seep. 618).

In addition, drought-stricken areas in Djibouti, Ethiopia, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda were being aided under related programmes, and the Sudano-Sahelian region was being assisted by a medium- and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme (see p. 970).

By resolution 35/106 of 5 December, the Assembly authorized a review by the Economic and Social Council's Committee for Development Planning of the economic situation of Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Sao Tome and Principe, and Seychelles, with a view to their inclusion in the list of least developed countries. This action had been requested by the Council on 24 July by decision 1980/161 (see p. 548). The Council also took note of an oral report made on behalf of the Secretary-General on the status of economic assistance programmes to those countries and to Botswana, Cape Verde, the Comoros, Lesotho, Mozambique, Uganda and Zambia (decision 1980/158, see ASSISTANCE TO NICARAGUA above). Earlier, on 26 June, the Governing Council of UNDP specified the action it was taking in response to the Assembly's request for increased assistance to all of these countries and to Chad (see p. 267).

Aid to Caribbean countries

By decision 1980/158 of 23 July 1980 (see ASSISTANCE TO NICARAGUA above), the Economic and Social Council took note of an oral report on programmes of assistance for the rehabilitation, reconstruction and development of Dominica and the Dominican Republic, struck by a hurricane in 1979. The Assembly called for continued aid for Dominica (resolution 35/102, see p. 973) and Saint Lucia (resolution 35/101, see p. 552), which suffered additional hurricane damage in 1980. It also took note of a report of the Secretary-General on assistance to the Dominican Republic (decision 35/423, see p. 973).

The Secretary-General reported in October on aid to Antigua, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, Saint Lucia, and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines (see p. 552). On 26 June, the UNDP Governing Council had approved increased aid to Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, from $800,000 to $1.42 million.

Aid to Pacific countries

The UNDP Governing Council decided on 27 June to provide Fiji with up to $1 million to help it recover from the effects of a cyclone. The Council also authorized the UNDP Administrator to increase projected assistance to Tonga by $128,000, and authorized allocations from the Special Measures Fund for Least Developed Countries and the United Nations Capital Development Fund.

After taking note of an oral report on the status of special economic assistance to Tonga (decision 1980/158, see ASSISTANCE TO NICARAGUA above), the Economic and Social Council requested the Committee for Development Planning to expedite review of the economic situation in Tonga, with a view to including it in the list of least developed countries; it asked the General Assembly to authorize the Council to consider the Committee's recommendations at its April/May 1981 session (decision 1980/161, see p. 548). Authorization was granted on 5 December, by resolution 35/106. (See also pp. 548 and 552.)

Other assistance programmes

Humanitarian assistance and relief programmes were also maintained during 1980 for student refugees in southern Africa (see p. 238), refugees in the Near East (see p. 436), other refugees and displaced persons (see p. 939), the Kampuchean people (see p. 335), Lebanon (see p. 446) and Cyprus (seep. 458).

The Economic and Social Council.

Concerned at the increasingly heavy losses of life and property that result from emergency situations arising primarily from non-natural causes,

Recognizing the important function of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator with respect to natural disasters,

Noting that on many occasions emergency situations arising primarily from non-natural causes have made great demands on the United Nations system and its components for assisting and meeting the requirements of affected countries, in particular developing countries, in mitigating the human misery caused by such situations,

Aware of the implications that such emergency situations have for the development efforts of developing countries,

Noting that the organs and bodies of the United Nations system have had to meet the humanitarian demands presented by such situations, in addition to the discharge of their regular activities, with inevitable negative effects on those activities,

Recognizing the essential role played by specialized agencies, programmes and other entities of the United Nations system in such emergency situations,

Recognizing also the essential role played by intergovernmental organizations, the International Committee of the Red Cross and other non-governmental organizations,

1. Recognizes the need, without prejudice to any action which may in the mean time be considered by the General Assembly, for a review of the emergency operations of the United Nations system, with a view to ensuring that the resources available are applied in an effective and flexible manner in this area;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, in consultation with the organizations and bodies concerned, and within existing financial resources, a summary report providing factual information on the ways and means by which the United Nations system has carried out, over the last decade, its role of co-ordinating and implementing humanitarian emergency assistance in cases other than those caused by natural disasters, and to circulate that report as early as possible, so that a decision can be taken not later than at the first regular session of the Council of 1981 on how best to proceed with the substantive consideration of the report, making use of existing organs, including the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 34/8 of 25 October 1979,
Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Nicaragua, Taking note with satisfaction of the support which Member States and the organizations and specialized agencies of the United Nations system have given to the efforts of the Government of Nicaragua for the reconstruction of the country.

Considering that the economic situation of Nicaragua has not yet returned to normal and continues to require the assistance of the international community,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts regarding assistance to Nicaragua;

2. Urges all Governments to continue contributing to the reconstruction and development of Nicaragua;

3. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to continue and increase their assistance in this sphere;

4. Recommends that Nicaragua should receive treatment which is adequate to the needs of the country until the situation is normalized;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session of the measures taken to implement the present resolution.

Developed Countries in two phases: an Immediate Action Programme (1979-1981) and a Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s<sup>54</sup>

During 1980, at sessions held at Geneva from 4 to 16 February and from 9 to 17 October,

UNCTAD'S Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries-designated by the General Assembly in 1979 to act as the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries,<sup>55</sup> to be held in 1981-considered the two-phase Programme in detail.

At its February session, the Preparatory Committee reviewed the November 1979 recommendations of the Group of High-level Experts on the Comprehensive New Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries<sup>56</sup> and studies of the requirements and special measures for an improved strategy to assist least developed countries, and prepared recommendations for the operation of the Substantial New Programme for Action, which was to be finalized, adopted and supported by the Conference. The Preparatory Committee also monitored progress under the Immediate Action Programme in response to an Assembly resolution of 19 December 1979<sup>57</sup> and decided to ask donor countries how they were implementing the Assembly's call in that resolution for aid to the least developed countries. It invited international donors urgently, before the Committee's October 1980 session, to indicate their action on commitments undertaken in the UNCTAD resolution, especially doubling as soon as possible official development assistance (ODA) to the least developed countries. Donors were also invited to indicate their action in respect of the much larger flows required for the Substantial New Programme of Action and were requested to review their aid policies and commitments to ensure that aid was extended on flexible and advantageous terms. The Committee invited donor Governments to consider the studies and recommendations submitted to it, including those dealing with promotion of structural change in least developed countries, removal of internal constraints, doubling national income over the coming decade, planning procedures, and levels of external concessional flows. The regional commissions were also invited to monitor the Immediate Action Programme at their level.

The Preparatory Committee also recommended that a number of considerations concerning least developed countries be included in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, including urgent implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action, doubling national income by 1990, expanding resource flows, more flexible and responsive modalities for providing concessional aid, high priority for increasing production and export earnings, maximum use of co-operative arrangements between developing countries, and aid for transit-transport infrastructure for land-locked countries.

At its special session in March, convened to consider UNCTAD'S contribution to the Strategy, the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD took note of the reports of the Preparatory Committee and the Group of High-level Experts and transmitted them to the Preparatory Committee for its October session.

Measures to meet the critical situation in the least developed countries were considered by the General Assembly at its eleventh special (August/September) session, held to draw up the new International Development Strategy and launch global negotiations for international development co-operation. On 15 September, it adopted resolution S-11/4 on the subject.

The Assembly thereby expressed regret that, more than a year after its adoption, very limited progress had been made in implementing the Immediate Action Programme for 1979-1981. The Assembly urged all developed countries, developing countries in a position to do so, multilateral development institutions and other sources to implement immediately commitments undertaken in that Programme, as well as to assist the least developed countries to develop their energy resources. The Assembly also urged donor countries to double ODA flow to those countries in real terms within the next five years- to be provided as a general rule in grant form and normally untied-and, before the 1981 Conference, to consider further measures to provide an adequate minimum ODA flow, including tripling net disbursement of concessional assistance by 1984 and quadrupling it by 1990 at 1977 prices. The Assembly requested multilateral development agencies and funds to give priority to the least developed countries when allocating resources, and asked the Secretary-General to monitor implementation of measures adopted in favour of those countries and to report thereon to the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly in 1981.

Resolution S-11/4, adopted without vote, was recommended by the Assembly's Ad Hoc Committee of the Eleventh Special Session. The text, submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman after informal consultations on a draft introduced by India, on behalf of Member States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries, was approved without objection by the Committee on 13 September.

During the consultations, preambular paragraphs were added by which the Assembly recognized that primary responsibility for their development rested with the least developed countries themselves, and noted with appreciation that

Speaking in the Ad Hoc Committee, Japan said that loans accounted for a sizable share of its ODA and it would find it difficult to provide all such aid in the form of grants.

Iraq understood that "donor countries" in the text referred solely to developed countries since the provisions relating to ODA were addressed to that group alone. Luxembourg, speaking on behalf of the European Economic Community (EEC), considered that that expression had been defined by the text's reference to all developed countries and developing countries in a position to do so. Moreover, EEC countries considered that "all developed countries" included the socialist countries of Eastern Europe.

France was concerned that the untying of aid might lead to reduced assistance efforts on the part of donors.

Bulgaria, on behalf also of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said the principles governing co-operation between the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance and developing countries had been set forth in a declaration on those States' contribution to the achievement of the goals of the new International Development Strategy (see p. 491), together with a joint statement made at the time of adoption of UNCTAD resolution 122(V) to the effect that they did not, on principle, assume any financial obligations towards granting assistance to developing countries, over and above direct bilateral agreements.

The very slow progress in implementing the Immediate Action Programme was recognized by the Preparatory Committee at its October session when the Group of 77 strongly urged donor countries to double as soon as possible, and no later than December 1981, and to go beyond if possible, the flow of ODA as called for in UNCTAD resolution 122(V).

On 16 December 1980, the General Assembly adopted resolution 35/205 on the Conference on the Least Developed Countries. By section I, the Assembly reiterated several provisions of resolution S- 11/4 (see above), including its call for implementation of the Immediate Action Programme without further delay. It urged the least developed countries to submit information on their implementation action and expressed satisfaction at the readiness of other developing countries to give particular attention to and assist in meeting the development needs of the least developed countries on a priority basis, and to ensure that they could participate in and benefit from economic and technical co-operation among developing countries. The Assembly also invited all countries and the bodies of the United Nations system to accord due priority to implementing the provisions of the new International Development Strategy which related to accelerated development of the least developed countries.

Those provisions of the Strategy, which was annexed to Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December (see p. 499), indicated that, in order to meet the objectives of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s, national plans were to identify and cost major priority projects and programmes. Details for each country in terms of structural change in agriculture and industry, improved physical, social and institutional infrastructure and improved performance in nutrition, literacy, health, employment and the development of human resources would be clearly specified. Goals to be achieved would require greater efforts by the least developed countries themselves, together with substantially more international community support.

Other policy measures for the least developed countries included: efforts to increase or double their national income by 1990; firm international commitments to expand resource flows substantially; more flexible and responsive modalities for providing concessional aid; rapidly increasing production and export earnings through financial and technical assistance and commercial policy measures, and significantly reducing dependence on foreign assistance during the 1990s; strengthening technological and productive capacity, increasing their absorptive capacity by building up their infrastructure, helping them to inventory their resources and prepare industrial surveys, supporting full industrialization and participation in redeployment processes and industrial consultations, strengthening import-substitution processes and manufactures-export performance, setting up joint enterprises regionally, and giving preferential treatment for industrial products and processed commodities-financial flows for which would be substantially increased on highly concessional terms; raising substantially and in real terms annual investments in and commitments of external resources for agriculture; maximum use of co-operative arrangements among developing countries, particularly at the regional and subregional levels; and aid to improve transit-transport infrastructure for the least developed land-locked and island countries. Developed countries were also to consider increasing ODA substantially, in real terms.

(For text of relevant provisions (section III K 1) of the Strategy, see p. 515.)

Resolution 35/205, which comprised four sections, was adopted by the Assembly without vote. (For details concerning sections II-IV, see following section.) The text-as submitted by a Second (Economic and Financial) Committee Vice-Chairman after informal consultations on a draft introduced by Venezuela, on behalf of the Group of 77-had been approved without objection by the Committee on 20 November. The Group's draft was then withdrawn.

In addition to approving several oral drafting changes during the informal consultations on section I, the sponsors agreed to the insertion of two operative paragraphs by which the Assembly urged donor countries to double, within the first half of the 1980s, the flow of ODA to the least developed countries and, not later than at the 1981 Conference, to consider providing an adequate minimum flow of ODA, including tripling net disbursement of concessional assistance by 1984 and quadrupling it by 1990. These paragraphs had previously appeared as paragraphs 2 and 3 of resolution S-11/4 of 15 September (see above). Also added was a preambular paragraph to note with appreciation that some developed countries had moved towards implementation of UNCTAD resolution 122(V).

United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries

During 1980, at sessions held at Geneva from 4 to 16 February and 9 to 17 October, UNCTAD's Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries, designated by the Assembly to act as the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries,** reviewed preparations for the Conference to be held in 1981.

At its February session, the Preparatory Committee recommended that Conference preparations should include specific plans and programmes of national action of the individual least developed countries themselves. It invited them to hold country and/or subregional consultations with aid partners prior to the Conference to review their programmes before finalizing them, and invited donors and multinational agencies to provide institutional and financial support for, and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and other organizations to assist in, the holding of such consultations.

At its October session, the Committee examined progress in the preparation of individual country presentations, made recommendations on the organization of individual country review meetings with aid partners and recommended that the Conference be held from 1 to 14 September 1981, preceded by consultations of senior officials on 27 and 28 August. The Committee recommended that an offer by France to host the Conference in Paris be accepted. It further considered the Conference's organizational structure and financial implications and recommended that a third, final session of the Preparatory Committee be held in June/July 1981. The Committee also heard views on elements of the Substantial New Programme of Action and follow-up action to the Conference.

On 16 December 1980, the General Assembly adopted resolution 35/205 on the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (for details of section I, see preceding section).

By section II, the Assembly endorsed the recommendations of the Preparatory Committee at its October session with regard to the Conference's date, venue and preliminary consultations, and the dates for the Committee's third session in 1981-at which the draft agenda and draft rules of procedure for the Conference were to be finalized.

Least developed countries were requested to submit their individual country presentations no later than 1 March 1981, and the Secretary-General was requested to invite as participants: all States; organizations with standing invitations to participate in United Nations conferences as observers; national liberation movements recognized nixed by the Organization of African Unity (OAU), as observers; Namibia, represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia; specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and interested United Nations organs; intergovernmental bodies in consultative status with UNCTAD, as observers; and non-governmental organizations in consultative status (general category) with UNCTAD and the Economic and Social Council, as observers.

The Secretary-General was requested to ensure the least developed countries' participation by seeking extrabudgetary funds to finance travel expenses for three representatives from each of them and to ensure financial provisions, to the maximum extent possible within existing resources, for the Conference's success. He was further requested to entrust the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, working with the Conference Secretary-General, with full mobilization of the United Nations system in the preparations. Together with that system and using, inter alia, existing resources to the extent possible, the United Nations Secretary-General was asked and Governments were invited to provide technical and other assistance to the least developed countries in their preparations, if they requested it. The Assembly urged donor countries to provide bilateral or multilateral aid through such organs as UNDP, its Special Measures Fund and the United Nations Capital Development Fund, if the least developed countries requested it, for preparing country programmes and other inputs for the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s, as envisaged in UNCTAD resolution 122(V).<sup>59</sup>

By section III of resolution 35/205, the Assembly requested the United Nations Secretary-General, the Conference Secretary-General and all United Nations bodies to undertake public information activities to ensure world-wide awareness of the importance of the Conference and its objectives, as far as possible within existing resources. It requested the United Nations Postal Administration to issue special commemorative stamps and invited Member States to do likewise. It also invited Member States to promote public awareness by mass-media dissemination of information; in this regard, the Assembly suggested an exchange of high-level national delegations. The Assembly also stated the view that an international year of the least developed countries could focus international attention on those countries, without prejudice to existing guidelines for future international years (see p. 1028).

By section IV of the resolution, the Secretary-General was requested to report to the Assembly's 1981 regular session on the outcome of the Conference and on progress made in implementing the Immediate Action Programme (1979-1981).

Resolution 35/205 was adopted without vote. The text as submitted by a Second Committee Vice-Chairman after informal consultations on a draft introduced by Venezuela, on behalf of the Group of 77-had been approved without objection by the Committee on 20 November.

During the informal consultations, the sponsors agreed to a number of oral drafting changes to sections II and III; among them, the request that the Secretary-General ensure financial provisions for the Conference within existing resources was qualified by adding the words "to the maximum extent possible." The request for a programme of public information activities to ensure, within existing resources, world-wide awareness of the Conference was similarly qualified, and reference to United Nations guidelines for future international years was added.

Several States expressed reservations on the agreed text.

Israel repeated its views with regard to representation of the Palestine Liberation Organization in the Conference; had paragraph 4, referring to invitations, been put to a separate vote, Israel would have voted against it. The United States held a similar view; moreover, it considered that Conference costs should be defrayed from the regular budget. Japan and the United Kingdom expressed reservations on the financial implications.

Canada, on behalf also of France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States, reaffirmed reservations with respect to the Council for Namibia representing that territory as its lawful administrative authority. Canada added that it considered that proposals to hold international years should follow the criteria established by the Economic and Social Council (see p. 1028), a view shared by Czechoslovakia and Eastern European socialist countries. In addition, Czechoslovakia repeated those socialist countries' position that the economic problems of the least developed countries were the result of exploitation by capitalist societies; financial aid should come fundamentally from the States responsible for such exploitation. Financing of the Conference should be met from existing resources, Czechoslovakia added.

By provisions contained in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade-annexed to Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December (see p. 499) -the Conference was to consider measures to ensure adequate flows of external assistance to the least developed countries, proposals of the UNCTAD Group of High-level Experts for allocation by developed countries of at least 0.15 per cent of their gross national product as ODA by the first half of the 1980s, rising to 0.2 per cent during the second half, and measures to transform agriculture and increase production. (For text of relevant provisions (paragraphs 140, 144 and 146) of the Strategy, see p. 516.)

Immediate measures in favour of the most seriously affected countries

In an address to the Economic and Social Council on 3 July 1980, the Secretary-General suggested that, at its forthcoming eleventh special (August/September) session, the General Assembly consider adopting immediate measures to overcome the critical economic situation of many of the developing countries. These measures included: external resources to finance current balance-of-payments deficits of oil-importing countries; launching a special operation to benefit low-income countries with serious external balance problems; and increased investments for exploration, development and exploitation of conventional and renewable sources of energy in non-oil-exporting developing countries.

The Secretary-General also responded to an Assembly request of 19 December 1979<sup>60</sup> by submitting a report to the eleventh special session on immediate measures in favour of the countries most seriously affected by the current world economic crisis.

A preliminary version of this report had been submitted to the March/April 1980 session of the Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174<sup>61</sup>-an oversight committee for decisions on the new international economic order-and to the April session of the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy. The report examined changes in the prices of imports and exports of low-income developing countries identified in 1974 and 1975 as the most seriously affected, and concluded that the continuing deterioration in the terms of trade and a stagnant level of capital inflow were putting a severe strain on many of those countries. Since the situation was expected to deteriorate further during 1981, urgent additional assistance, on concessional terms, was needed to protect their modest rate of economic growth. At least $5 billion would be required in 1981 to offset the expected trade gap of non-oil-exporting countries with a per capita income below $600 in 1978.

The General Assembly noted with great interest the Secretary-General's oral suggestions to the Council and requested that he further elaborate them, in consultation with concerned United Nations organizations, for submission to its 1980 regular session.

The Assembly took this action when, on 15 September, it adopted resolution S-11/3 without vote. Two days earlier, the Ad Hoc Committee of the Eleventh Special Session had approved without objection the text, which was submitted by one of its Vice-Chairmen. This text was based on informal discussions on a draft introduced by India, on behalf of the Group of 77.

After consulting UNCTAD, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), the Secretary-General elaborated his earlier suggestions in a note dated 10 November, submitted to the Assembly's 1980 regular session.

On 16 December, the Assembly took note of his note by adopting decision 35/438, without vote. The Second Committee had approved the draft, without objection, on 9 December, as orally proposed by its Chairman.

During consideration in Committee of the agenda item on development and international economic co-operation, Venezuela, on behalf of the Group of 77, introduced a draft resolution to deal with the acute problems facing most developing countries because of their inability to protect themselves. The text would have had the Assembly launch in 1981 a special operation to alleviate their balance-of-payments problems comprising, inter alia, additional ODA and an increase in the lending capacity of IMF and the World Bank, which would have been urged to implement the operation. The Secretary-General would have been requested to estimate the magnitude of balance-of-payments deficits of each developing country in 1981, arrange a pledging conference and establish an account through which contributions would be channelled and monitored. Also by the text, the Assembly would have agreed that implementation of UNCTAD's Immediate Action Programme (1979-1981) for the least developed countries would not be affected by the special operation. Progress would have been reviewed in 1981.

Speaking after informal consultations on the text, Venezuela said that the Group of 77 did not agree with the argument, which, it said, was advanced by the industrialized countries, to the effect that the draft had not dealt with the root of the problem. The action proposed would merely have been one step in tackling the developing world's problems. Venezuela added that the Group wished to place on record its concern at the lack of vision and courage evidenced.

Although the draft was not pressed to a decision, the Second Committee decided to include the text in its report to the Assembly.

Immediate relief measures for the countries most seriously affected by the current economic crisis were also called for in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, annexed to Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980 (see p. 499). The international community would consider extending relief and assistance to those countries, with urgent consideration to be given to immediate concrete relief measures, both to implement the Secretary-General's suggestions and in the mean time to implement the immediate measures in their favour recommended in 1979.<sup>62</sup> (For text of relevant provision (paragraph 147) of the Strategy, see p. 516.)

Additions to the list of least developed countries

At its February 1980 session, the Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries reviewed the economic situation in Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles and Tonga with a view to their inclusion in the General Assembly's list of countries identified as least developed. The Group decided that preparations for the 1981 United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries should include action on behalf of all such countries, and invited the Economic and Social Council to request the Committee for Development Planning to expedite its review of the economic situation of the above six countries for inclusion in the current list of least developed countries and to make recommendations on them to the Assembly's 1980 regular session through the Council.

On 24 July, the Council took note of the Group's invitation, and requested the Committee for Development Planning to include in its review certain newly independent countries and to make its recommendations to the Council's first regular session of 1981. The Council also requested authorization to consider those recommendations and to adopt an updated list of least developed countries based on existing criteria and the most recent data.

This action resulted from a proposal by Bangladesh, China, Djibouti, Ethiopia, Iraq, Jordan, Nigeria, Senegal, Somalia, the Sudan, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania, adopted without vote by the Council as decision 1980/161.

On 5 December, the Assembly authorized the Council, after considering the Committee for Development Planning's recommendations, to add any of the countries mentioned in decision 1980/161 to the list of least developed countries. The Assembly took this action without vote, in adopting resolution 35/106. The Assembly also decided that the exercise would be without prejudice to any future overall review of the list. This provision was orally added by the sponsors to their text, which had earlier been revised following informal consultations. The sponsors were Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Lebanon, Mozambique, and Sao Tome and Principe; their draft was approved without vote by the Second Committee on 20 November.

Special measures for the development of Africa

At a meeting held at Monrovia, Liberia, in July 1979, the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU, had adopted the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa, based on socio-economic recommendations made that year at the Rabat, Morocco, meeting of the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA).<sup>63</sup>

By a letter of 15 August 1980 to the Secretary-General, Nigeria, on behalf of States members of the African group of Member States at the United Nations, forwarded the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa, adopted at the OAU Assembly's second extraordinary session (Lagos, 28 and 29 April), devoted to economic matters. Also transmitted were the Final Act of Lagos, by which African States confirmed full adherence to the Plan of Action and established steps to be taken to create an African economic community by the year 2000, and the resolutions adopted at the April session.

The Lagos Plan of Action also contained recommendations put forward at the April session of ECA at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia (see p. 755). The Plan proposed measures to develop viable economies based on the principles of national and collective self-reliance and self-sustainment in order that African countries might contribute to and benefit from the new international economic order. Action was outlined in the fields of food and agriculture, industry, natural and human resources, science and technology, transport and communications, trade and finance, environment and energy. The Plan also contained measures to build up and strengthen: economic and technical co-operation; women's contribution to development; development planning, statistics and population programmes; and the least developed African countries.

On 5 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 35/64 on special measures for the social and economic development of Africa in the 1980s. Towards implementing the Lagos Plan of Action, the Assembly made several suggestions. It invited organizations of the United Nations system, in consultation with OAU and ECA, and non-governmental organizations to indicate in reports to the Economic and Social Council the contributions they could make, and requested the Secretary-General to report to the Assembly in 1981 on such action. The Assembly invited IMF, UNDP, the World Bank and other development banks or funds to consider providing resources to implement the Plan of Action, and urged Governments, in the context of an increase in ODA envisaged in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, to take into account the need for resources.

Resolution 35/64 was adopted, without vote, as recommended by the Second Committee. On 20 November, the Committee had similarly approved the text, submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman after informal consultations on a draft presented by Venezuela on behalf of the Group of 77. Further oral revisions by the Vice-Chairman were also incorporated before approval of the text, and the Group's draft was withdrawn.

The United States supported the text, although it did not accept the ODA target in the Strategy; however, it recognized the need for an adequate flow of resources. Tunisia felt that changes by the Vice-Chairman, whereby non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council were to submit recommendations through the Secretary-General rather than through the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations, still implied a prejudgement of the permanence of existing institutional structures in the economic and social sectors, changes in which were currently under discussion.

Land-locked developing countries

Measures in favour of land-locked developing countries

Specific action to answer the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries was taken by the General Assembly on 5 December when it adopted resolution 35/58.

By this resolution, the Assembly reaffirmed the rights of those countries to free access to and from the sea and to freedom of transit. It appealed to all States, international organizations and financial institutions to implement urgently the measures envisaged by UNCTAD<sup>64</sup> and in other United Nations resolutions to assist those countries and to raise the net flow of resources to them to help offset the effects of their disadvantageous geographical situation.

The Assembly urged donor countries and international organizations to provide financial and technical aid in grant form or concessional loans for transport and transit infrastructures. Transit countries were invited to co-operate with land-locked developing countries in harmonizing transport planning and promoting other joint transport ventures. The international community was invited to help finance the construction of alternative routes to the sea. After commending UNDP, UNCTAD and other United Nations agencies for their assistance and inviting them to continue providing it, the Assembly recommended intensified studies and action programmes, including economic co-operation among developing countries and activities envisaged in UNCTAD'S programme of work and in regional and subregional programmes.

Resolution 35/58 was adopted by a recorded vote of 140 to 2, with 5 abstentions. On 20 November, the Second Committee had approved the text by a recorded vote, requested by Pakistan, of 124 to 0, with 9 abstentions. The sponsors were Afghanistan, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Burundi, the Central African Republic, Chad, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mali, Nepal, Paraguay, Rwanda, the Sudan, Uganda and Zambia, on whose behalf Nepal introduced the text.

A separate recorded vote was taken in the Committee on paragraph 1, also at the request of Pakistan. Paragraph 1, reaffirming the rights of free access and freedom of transit, was adopted by 50 votes to 9, with 71 abstentions.

In Pakistan's view, the provision was prejudicial to the sovereignty of States; problems relating to transit trade should be dealt with bilaterally. Pakistan also understood that the invitation in paragraph 5 to transit countries to co-operate with land-locked developing countries in harmonizing transport planning in no way prejudiced the right of transit countries to determine their own national policies.

The Congo, India, Thailand and Viet Nam also opposed paragraph 1 for similar reasons, while the Sudan objected that it did not reflect regional and interregional decisions. India added that its endorsement of paragraph 3, urging aid for infrastructure and facilities, as it applied to transit States, was also subject to the position it held in respect of paragraph 1.

Several States explained their abstentions on paragraph 1. Algeria felt the wording lent itself to dangerous interpretations. Mauritania thought the right of free access should be considered in the context of the United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea; Democratic Yemen, Ecuador, Egypt, the Gambia, Japan, Morocco, Mozambique and Senegal spoke in a similar vein. Tunisia felt that the text prejudged the outcome of the Conference; Brazil and Peru voted affirmatively, on the understanding that no such prejudgement was implied. Bangladesh, which also voted in favour, said the text should be interpreted in the light of existing international law.

Luxembourg, speaking on behalf of EEC members, stated that, although they supported the resolution as a whole, they maintained their reservations with regard to their intention of directing aid through other existing channels.

The USSR said it had voted in favour of the text on the understanding that it referred to the particular needs of land-locked developing countries in a spirit of co-operation with developing countries. It understood that no new obligations would be imposed on the USSR other than by existing bilateral agreements.

Speaking in the Assembly, Angola, the Congo, Gabon, India, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Pakistan, Thailand and the Sudan said that, had paragraph 1 been put to a separate vote, they would have voted against it; Algeria, Chile, China, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Fiji, the Gambia, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Guinea, Haiti, the Ivory Coast, Jordan, Kenya, Lebanon, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mauritania, Morocco, Mozambique, Nigeria, Oman, Romania, Senegal, Turkey, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Yemen and Zimbabwe stated that they would have abstained.

An integrated planning approach to assist the land-locked developing countries was also encouraged in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, annexed to Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December (see p. 499). Measures envisaged included: co-operation in transport ventures between those countries and transit countries; strong financial and technical assistance through actions taken in accordance with UNCTAD resolution 123(V),<sup>65</sup> increased resource flows by multilateral and bilateral financial institutions for diversification of their economies; and generous contributions to the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries. (For text of relevant provisions (section III K 4) of the Strategy, see p. 517.)

United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries

The United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries was established by the General Assembly in 1975<sup>66</sup> and its statute approved in 1976<sup>67</sup> to help land-locked developing countries overcome transport and communications problems severely limiting their trade and growth potentials.

At its June 1980 session, the Governing Council of UNDP considered a March report of the UNDP Administrator on the Fund, which he was managing on an interim basis in collaboration with the Secretary-General of UNCTAD. The report indicated that the Fund's resources remained very low and virtually all had been programmed or spent.

The Administrator reported that projects had been completed in Bhutan (a timber ropeway feasibility study), in Botswana (a feasibility study on a national airline) and the Lao People's Democratic Republic (improvement of transit services). During 1980, projects were also completed in Malawi (establishment of a shippers' council) and Paraguay (improvement of navigability and dredging of the Paraguay River), while for Burundi a project was approved to help the Government improve air freight operations.

Commitments against the Fund as at 31 December 1980 totalled $676,100, of which $67,700 represented executing agency costs.

On 26 June, the UNDP Governing Council took note of the Administrator's report and again appealed to Governments and international organizations to contribute urgently and generously to the Fund.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Administrator's report and the Governing Council's action when it adopted, without vote, decision 1980/177, as recommended by its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, which had similarly approved the text on 22 July on an oral proposal of its Chairman.

On 5 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 35/82 on the Special Fund. It thereby expressed concern at the low level of contributions for 1980 ($27,367) announced at the 1979 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities<sup>68</sup> and subsequently, and urged all Member States to give due consideration to the special constraints affecting the economic and social development of land-locked developing countries. The Assembly appealed to all countries to review their position with respect to the Fund and to consider having representatives of land-locked developing countries as members of the Fund's Board of Governors. It further appealed to all—particularly developed—Member States, international organizations and multilateral financial institutions to contribute generously in the context of the 1980 Pledging Conference held in November. The Assembly also requested the UNDP Administrator, in consultation with the Secretary-General of UNCTAD and heads of other institutions, to assist land-locked developing countries within the framework of the interim arrangements.

Resolution 35/82 was adopted by 126 votes to 0, with 21 abstentions. On 31 October, the Second Committee approved the draft, introduced by Venezuela on behalf of the Group of 77, by 106 votes to 0, with 22 abstentions.

Speaking in explanation of their abstentions in the vote, Luxembourg said the nine EEC members and Greece preferred to assist the countries in question through bilateral and multilateral channels such as UNDP. Spain stated that it was against setting up special funds and accounts within the United Nations system.

Also on 5 December, the Assembly, by decision 35/316, deferred to its 1981 regular session the election of members of the Board of Governors of the Fund, since no candidate had been put forward by the regional groups. The text, as orally proposed by the Assembly President, was adopted without objection. On 15 December, the Assembly adopted without vote decision 35/320, by which it took note of information contained in a note by the Secretary-General to the effect that, because of continuing interim arrangements for the Fund's management, no appointment for the post of its Executive Director would currently be submitted for the Assembly's confirmation.

PLEDGES TO THE SPECIAL FUND

As at 31 December 1980, pledges for 1981 to the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries totalled $63,548 from twelve countries, while $115,505 was collected during 1980.

Action programme in favour of developing island countries

By a resolution of 27 September 1980, the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD reiterated a decision contained in UNCTAD resolution 111 (V) of 3 June 1979<sup>69</sup> that UNCTAD, in co-operation with other institutions, should analyse common problems of developing island countries and constraints inhibiting their development, particularly economic and geographical factors, distance from market centres, smallness of their economies and markets, low resource endowment and heavy dependence on trade in few commodities and services. The Board requested that UNCTAD'S work programme on their needs and problems<sup>70</sup> be carried out rapidly and efficiently and that UNCTAD and the International Trade Centre (sponsored jointly with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade) increase technical aid programmes. It urged UNDP and other aid and development institutions to support fully UNCTAD'S technical and advisory services for those countries. The Board recommended that it consider convening an inter-governmental expert group in 1981 to examine the specific problems of developing island countries.

On 5 December 1980, by resolution 35/61, the General Assembly noted with concern that very few significant initiatives had been taken to implement UNCTAD'S work programme in favour of developing island countries, and appealed to all States, international organizations and financial institutions to implement urgently the specific actions envisaged by UNCTAD and in other resolutions on the subject. The Assembly invited organizations of the United Nations system to enhance their capacity to respond positively to the specific needs of developing island countries during the Third United Nations Development Decade and decided to review at its 1982 regular session measures taken by the international community in this respect.

Resolution 35/61 was adopted without vote. On 20 November, the Second Committee had similarly approved the draft, submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman following informal consultations on a text proposed by Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Cape Verde, Cyprus, Fiji, Jamaica, Madagascar, Malta, Saint Lucia, Sao Tome and Principe, Singapore, and Trinidad and Tobago.

A preambular paragraph of the 13-power draft, which would have stated that the Assembly was mindful that further specific action was needed to assist developing island countries in offsetting the major handicaps they faced in their development process, was expanded in the compromise text to include mention of a number of specific handicaps facing those countries, which had also been cited in the Trade and Development Board's 27 September decision.

Czechoslovakia, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said that, while they understood the special needs of the countries in question and supported recommendations to accelerate their development, they continued to hold their position on the negative consequences of foreign private capital.

Among measures to aid developing island countries outlined in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations

Development Decade-annexed to Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December (see p. 499)-were: support by the international community for island countries seeking investment in infrastructure such as water, electricity, industrial estates and transport; strengthening their capacity to negotiate with foreign investors; facilitating their access to foreign markets by assisting their trade promotion efforts and simplifying preference procedures; aid for the establishment of technical education and training programmes, including marketing and management; and augmentation of financial and other aid and simplification of assistance procedures. (For text of relevant provisions (section III K 3) of the Strategy, see p. 516.)

Assistance to Tonga

On 26 June 1980, the UNDP Governing Council, after considering a report by the UNDP Administrator on assistance to Tonga, authorized him to extend to that country, for the remainder of the 1977-1981 planning cycle: an increase in the second-cycle (1982-1986) indicative planning figure (IPF) for future projects of 6.4 per cent, or $128,000; allocation from the Special Measures Fund for the Least Developed Countries from resources made available during 1980 and 1981; and access to United Nations Capital Development Fund aid.

On 21 July, the Economic and Social Council was orally informed by the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes that the Secretary-General was arranging to send a mission to Tonga to assess its immediate aid requirements. On 23 July, the Council took note of this oral report when it adopted, without objection, decision 1980/158, as orally proposed by its President following a suggestion by Nigeria.

In related action the following day (decision 1980/161), the Council requested the Committee for Development Planning to expedite review of the economic situation in Tonga with a view to its inclusion in the list of least developed countries, and requested the General Assembly to authorize the Council to consider the Committee's recommendation. The Assembly gave such authorization on 5 December, when it adopted resolution 35/106. (See p. 552.)

On 7 October, in response to an Assembly request of 14 December 1979,<sup>71</sup> the Secretary-General forwarded replies received from agencies and organs of the United Nations system on aid provided or action taken to bring Tonga's special needs to the attention of their governing bodies. With regard to the proposed mission, the Secretary-General informed the Assembly in a report dated 26 September that he was awaiting word from Tonga on the most appropriate time for such a visit.

On 5 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's September report on assistance to Tonga when it adopted without vote decision 35/423. On 20 November, the Second Committee had approved the text in like manner, as orally proposed by its Chairman.

Assistance to Saint Lucia and Saint Vincent

Responding to a General Assembly request of 19 December 1979, the Secretary-General in <sup>72</sup> October 1980 submitted a report containing replies received from the United Kingdom, international organizations and agencies on the type and quantity of assistance they had rendered to Saint Lucia and the then territory of St. Vincent, which became Saint Vincent and the Grenadines on its independence in October 1979. The United Kingdom reported that it had given Saint Lucia £843,900 and St. Vincent £2,526,000 in capital aid and technical co-operation in 1979, all on grant terms. The report recalled that these newly independent island States had been victims of natural disasters-volcanic eruptions in April/May 1979 in St. Vincent and a hurricane in both islands in August 1980. The report also dealt with aid to the territories of Antigua and St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla (see p. 1091).

Previously, on 26 June 1980, the UNDP Governing Council had also considered assistance to Saint Vincent and decided to increase the 1977-1981 IPF for that country from $800,000 to $1.42 million.

On 5 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 35/101 by which it expressed gratitude for the support that Member States and United Nations agencies had given to aid the reconstruction and rehabilitation efforts of Saint Lucia. The Assembly emphasized the urgent need for aid to Saint Lucia to enable it to develop and strengthen its economy as well as to insulate it from natural disasters, and urged the United Nations system, particularly UNDP and international financial institutions, as well as aid donors to expand aid to that country. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to mobilize international community aid to meet Saint Lucia's short- and long-term development needs, and to report in 1981.

Resolution 35/101 was adopted without vote. On 19 November, the Second Committee had likewise approved the draft, introduced by Jamaica and sponsored by 31 nations (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Assistance to other developing island countries

During 1980, the Assembly adopted other resolutions calling for various forms of assistance to other developing island countries, including Cape Verde (35/104, see p. 269) thecomoros (35/97, see p. 270), Dominica (35/102, see p. 973) and Sao Tome and Principe (35/93, see p. 272).

A/35/592/Add.3. Report of Second Committee (part IV). draft resolution I, Resolution 35/64, as recommended by Second Committee, A/35/592/Add.3, adopted without vote by Assembly on 5 December 1980, meeting 83.

The General Assembly,

Gravely concerned at the critical condition of the economies of most African countries in the past two decades and the gloomy prospects for their economic development arising from the current crisis in the world economy,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recognising the useful contribution that the effective execution of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa, adopted on 29 April 1980 by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its second extraordinary session devoted to economic matters, held at Lagos on 28 and 29 April 1980, can make to the rapid overall social and economic development of Africa,

Noting, in particular, that successive international development strategies and international economic negotiations have contributed only marginally to an improvement in the economic situation of the developing countries and, particularly, to the African continent, and that Africa remains highly vulnerable to the instability in the world economy,

Realizing that the African continent will benefit more if special economic measures are adopted for its development and are executed in a co-ordinated, consistent and sustained manner,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa;

2. Recognizes that special measures should be adopted by the international community for the social and economic development of African countries, taking into account, inter alia, the contributions that the comprehensive and co-ordinated programme of special measures called for in the Lagos Plan of Action can make;

3. Invites the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity and the Economic Commission for Africa, to indicate in a comprehensive manner in their next annual reports to the Economic and Social Council the contributions that they can make, within their areas of competence and within the indicated time-frames, to the achievement of the aims and objectives set out in the Lagos Plan of Action;

4. Also invites the non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council to submit to the Secretary-General, for transmission to the Council at its second regular session of 1982, suggestions for contributions that they may be able to make to the implementation of the Lagos Plan of Action;

5. Urges Governments, in the context of a general increase in official development assistance, as envisaged in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, to take into account the need for an adequate flow of resources for the effective implementation of the Lagos Plan of Action;

6. Invites the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank and the United Nations Development Programme, as well as other development banks or funds, actively to consider assisting in providing adequate resources which could contribute to the implementation of the Lagos Plan of Action;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to prepare a comprehensive interim report for submission to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session regarding the steps which have been taken to implement paragraph 3 above;

8. Requests the Secretary-General in this regard to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

The General Assembly,

Reiterating the specific actions related to the particular needs of the land-locked developing countries stated in resolutions 63(III) of 19 May 1972, 98(IV) of 31 May 1976 and 123(V) of 3 June 1979 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, Recalling the provisions of its resolutions 31/157 of 21 December 1976, 32/191 of 19 December 1977, 33/150 of 20 December 1978 and 34/198 of 19 December 1979 and other resolutions of the United Nations relating to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries.

Bearing in mind various other resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, its related organs and the specialized agencies, emphasizing special and urgent measures in favour of land-locked developing countries.

Recognizing that the lack of territorial access to the sea, aggravated by remoteness and isolation from world markets, and the great transit, transport and trans-shipment costs impose serious constraints on their socio-economic development,

Noting with concern that the measures taken so far in favour of land-locked developing countries and the assistance given fall far short of their needs.

1. Reaffirms the right of land-locked developing countries to free access to and from the sea and their right to freedom of transit;

2. Appeals to all States, international organizations and financial institutions to implement, as a matter of urgency and priority, the specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing Countries envisaged in resolutions 63(III), 98(IV) and 123(V) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and in other relevant resolutions of the United Nations:

3. Urges all donor countries, as well as those in a position to do so and the international organizations concerned, to provide land-locked developing countries with appropriate financial and technical assistance in the form of grants or concessional loans for the construction and improvement of their transport and transit infrastructures and facilities;

4. Urges also the international community and multilateral and bilateral financial institutions to intensify efforts in raising the net flow of resources to land-locked developing countries to help offset the adverse effects of their disadvantageous geographical situation on their economic development efforts, in keeping with the overall economic situation of each land-locked country;

5. invites the transit countries to co-operate effectively with the land-locked developing countries in harmonizing transport planning and promoting other joint ventures in the field of transport at the regional, subregional and bilateral levels;

7. Further invites the international community to give financial support to interested transit and land-locked developing countries in the construction of alternative routes to the sea;

8. Recommends continued and intensified activities relating to the conducting of necessary studies and the implementation of special actions and action programmes for the land-locked developing countries, including those in the area of economic co-operation among developing countries, as well as those that have been envisaged in the programme of work of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the regional commissions and other programmes and activities at the regional and subregional levels.

Resolution 35/82, as recommended by Second Committee, A/35/628. adopted by Assembly on 5 December 1980. meeting 84, by 126 votes to 0, with 21 abstentions.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/177 of 21 December 1976, by which it approved the statute of the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries,

Recalling also its resolutions 32/113 of 15 December 1977, 33/85 of 15 December 1978 and 34/209 of 19 December 1979,

Recalling further resolution 123(V) of 3 June 1979 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and taking note of decision 80/21 of 26 June 1980 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme,

Convinced that access to the world market at the least possible cost is an integral part of meaningful economic development of land-locked developing countries,

Bearing in mind that the majority of countries classified as least developed are land-locked developing countries,

Expressing deep concern at the very low level of contributions for 1980 announced at the 1979 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities,

Noting that, according to the report of the Secretary-General prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 34/207 of 19 December 1979, contributions to the Fund must increase significantly if it is to be effective in meeting the large requirements for reducing the real costs of transit for land-locked developing countries,

Noting further that the demands for assistance from the Fund are related to activities additional to, and generally different from, the types of activities financed from other sources of the United Nations system,

1. Urges all Member States to give due consideration to the special constraints affecting the economic and social development of land-locked developing countries:

2. Appeals to all countries to review their position with respect to the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries and to give serious consideration to having representatives of land-locked developing countries as members of the Board of Governors of the Fund;

3. Further appeals to all Member States, in particular developed countries, to international organizations and to multilateral financial institutions to contribute generously to the Fund in the context of the 1980 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities;

4. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the executive heads of other related institutions, to pursue action in favour of land-locked developing countries within the framework of the interim arrangements, taking into account that each country concerned should receive appropriate technical and financial assistance.

Decision 35/316, by which the General Assembly decided to defer to its thirty-sixth session the election of the members of the Board of Governors of the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries, since no candidate had been put forward by the regional groups, as orally proposed by Assembly President, adopted without objection by Assembly on 5 December 1980. meeting 84.

A/35/745. Note by Secretary-General.

Decision 35/320. by which the General Assembly took note of the information contained in the note by the Secretary-General, adopted without vote by Assembly on 15 December 1980. meeting 95.

A/35/592/Add.2 and Corr.1. Report of Second Committee (part III), draft resolution V.

Resolution 35/61, as recommended by Second Committee, A/35/592/Add.2 and Corr.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 5 December 1980, meeting 83.

The General Assembly,

Reiterating the programme of specific action in favour of developing island countries envisaged in resolutions 98(IV) of 31 May 1976 and 111(V) of 3 June 1979 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Recalling its resolutions 31/156 of 21 December 1976, 32/165 of 19 December 1977 and 34/205 of 19 December 1979 and other resolutions of the United Nations relating to the special needs and problems of developing island countries,

Mindful that further specific action is needed to assist developing island countries-in particular those which suffer handicaps due especially to smallness, remoteness, constraints in transport and communications, great distances from market centres, highly limited internal markets, lack of marketing expertise, low resource endowment, lack of natural resources, heavy dependence on a few commodities for their foreign exchange earnings, shortage of administrative personnel and heavy financial burdens-in offsetting the major handicaps that they face in their development process,

Bearing in mind the goals and objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

1. Notes with concern that very few significant initiatives have so far been taken for the implementation of the specific actions envisaged in resolutions 98(IV) and 111(V) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

2. Appeals to all States, international organizations and financial institutions to take urgent and effective steps to implement specific actions in favour of developing island countries, as envisaged in resolutions 98(IV) and 111(V) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, as well as in other resolutions on this subject;

3. Invites the competent organizations of the United Nations system to take further measures as necessary to enhance their capacity to respond positively to the specific needs of developing island countries during the Third United Nations Development Decade;

4. Decides to undertake at its thirty-seventh session a comprehensive review of the implementation of the measures taken by the international community in favour of the specific needs of the developing island countries, as called for in the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and other resolutions on this subject.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/186 of 19 December 1977, 33/152 of 20 December 1978 and 34/194 of 19 December 1979, in which it, inter alia, stressed the urgency of rendering all necessary assistance to Saint Lucia in its efforts to strengthen and develop its national economy,

Noting the recent attainment of independence by Saint Lucia,

Mindful of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Antigua, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, Saint Lucia and Saint Vincent, Bearing in mind that Saint Lucia requires the continued attention and assistance of the United Nations in the achievement by its people of its development objectives,

Recalling resolution 111(V) of 3 June 1979 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in which specific action in a number of identified areas was urged in respect of island developing countries,

Emphasizing the special problems faced by Saint Lucia with regard to territorial size, geographical location, highly limited internal markets and limited economic resources, as well as the serious adverse effects of recent world-wide economic and financial problems,

Gravely concerned at the recent damage incurred by Saint

Lucia as a result of hurricane "Allen," which created immeasurable economic hardship,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Antigua, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, Saint Lucia and Saint Vincent;

2. Expresses its gratitude for the support that Member States and agencies of the United Nations have given during this emergency, which aided the people of Saint Lucia in their reconstruction and rehabilitation efforts;

3. Emphasizes the urgency of rendering all necessary assistance to Saint Lucia in its efforts to develop and strengthen its economy, with particular reference to the sectoral redevelopment of its infrastructure, consistent with insulation from disasters of this nature;

4. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme and international financial institutions, as well as aid donors, to continue to increase and intensify their assistance to Saint Lucia within their respective spheres of competence;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to mobilize the financial, technical and economic assistance of the international community, in particular that of the developed countries and the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, with a view to helping to meet the short-term and long-term development needs of Saint Lucia;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session an analytical report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic co-operation among developing countries

In June 1979, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) had adopted resolution 127(V) by which it decided to convene a special session of its Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries to examine UNCTAD studies and assess work and proposals in three priority areas: establishment of a global system of trade preferences among developing countries, co-operation among State trading organizations and establishment of multinational marketing enterprises.<sup>73</sup>

On 25 March 1980, the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board allocated up to four weeks for meetings by governmental experts of regional groups, particularly from developing countries, on specific aspects of interregional economic co-operation among developing countries.

Prior to the Committee's special session, a Preparatory Meeting of Governmental Experts of Developing Countries was held at Geneva from 17 March to 8 April to draw up recommendations covering the three priority areas as well as on support measures for related programmes. Governmental experts of industrialized market-economy countries also held a pre-session meeting at Geneva on 19 and 20 June at which they pledged co-operation for the efforts of the developing countries and reaffirmed the principle that all UNCTAD activities should be based on sovereign equality and universality.

The Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries held its first special session at Geneva from 23 June to 2 July. During the session, two proposals were submitted for consideration: the first, submitted by Yugoslavia on behalf of the "Group of 77" developing countries, would have requested UNCTAD's Secretary-General to urge developed countries and invite United Nations organizations to support implementation of the recommendations outlined at the developing countries' Preparatory Meeting; the second, submitted by the United Kingdom on behalf of developed market-economy countries, would have had the Committee request authorization to resume the special session, at which the UNCTAD secretariat-which would have been called on to complete its ongoing work programme in this field-would report.

No action was taken on either of the proposals, but they were annexed to the Committee's report to the Trade and Development Board. The Board took note of this report on 27 September and, inasmuch as UNCTAD, by resolution 127(V), had asked the Board to decide on future meetings of governmental experts, allocated two weeks in November 1980 and another two weeks in May 1981 to sessions of a Meeting of Governmental Experts of Developing Countries on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries.

The Governmental Experts held their first session at Geneva from 3 to 14 November and commenced work on elaboration of a framework for negotiations of a global system of trade preferences (GSTP) among developing countries, establishment of a timetable and preparation for the institutional mechanisms for such negotiations, and implementation and review of GSTP.

On 5 December, the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee rejected a proposal to the effect that the meetings of governmental experts on economic co-operation among developing countries, for which the Trade and Development Board had decided to allocate a place on the UNCTAD calendar (see above), not be financed from the United Nations budget (for details, see p. 637).

Responding to an Assembly request of 19 December 1979,<sup>74</sup> the Secretary-General reported on major developments in economic co-operation among developing countries to the Assembly's eleventh special (August/September) session. These developments were: the Arusha Programme for Collective Self-Reliance and Framework for Negotiations, adopted at the Fourth Ministerial Meeting of the Group of 77 (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 6-16 February 1979);<sup>75</sup> UNCTAD resolution 127(V); a Technical Consultation on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries in Food and Agriculture, convened by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (June/July 1979); policy guidelines to reinforce collective self-reliance adopted at the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Havana, Cuba, 3-9 September 1979); ad hoc consultations in October 1979 on trade expansion among developing countries, convened by the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), and agreements reached within the framework of the multilateral trade negotiations; the activities of the Joint Advisory Group on the UNCTAD/GATT International Trade Centre; a ministerial meeting of the Group of 77 (New York, 11-14 March 1980) which set up an ad hoc intergovernmental group to elaborate recommendations for early implementation of the objectives of economic co-operation among developing countries; and that group's recommendations (Vienna, 3-7 June 1980) which dealt with trade, raw materials, energy, food, industrialization, technology and finance, concluding that economic co-operation in those areas would be one of the best means to consolidate integration and collective self-reliance among developing countries.

The report also noted intersecretariat co-ordination arrangements, including action by the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities) of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination at its 26 February to 6 March meeting at Geneva on four aspects of economic co-operation among developing countries, such as: defining such co-operation in operational terms to permit system-wide co-ordination; intersecretariat co-ordination mechanisms; participation of intergovernmental organizations in future co-ordination arrangements (to be considered later); and reporting arrangements (the UNCTAD secretariat would continue such activities in collaboration with United Nations organizations). The United Nations Development Programme/UNCTAD programme of economic and technical co-operation among developing countries agreed to in 1979<sup>76</sup> was also outlined in the report; a particular aspect of the programme was the use of technical co-operation among developing countries to promote greater economic co-operation.

On 30 September 1980, India transmitted to the Secretary-General a declaration by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 issued at the end of their fourth annual meeting, held at New York on 29 and 30 September to assess the results of the Assembly's eleventh special session, discuss issues to be considered at the current (1980 regular) session and review progress in economic co-operation among developing countries since their March meeting. The Ministers reported that they had agreed to convene a high-level conference of developing countries in 1981 to ensure implementation of the various programmes and decisions on economic co-operation among developing countries.

At the Assembly's 1980 regular session, the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee had before it a draft resolution introduced by Venezuela, on behalf of the Group of 77, which would have had the Assembly: welcome the convening of the high-level conference of developing countries; take note of the report of the special session of the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries and of the recommendations on support measures adopted at the March/April Preparatory Meeting of Governmental Experts of Developing Countries; request UNCTAD's Secretary-General to provide assistance to relevant economic co-operation programmes; and urge the bodies of the United Nations system to support measures in this field, including continued secretariat support services to facilitate the holding of meetings by developing countries to pursue economic co-operation objectives.

Luxembourg, speaking on behalf of the nine member States of the European Economic Community, said that, while they supported the concept of economic co-operation among developing countries, they could not agree to compromising the principle of universality of the United Nations system. Similar views were expressed by Australia, Canada, Japan and the United States.

Venezuela said that, since it had not been possible to reach agreement on the draft, the Group of 77 was orally proposing a draft decision which set forth views already expressed in previously adopted resolutions. By this text, the Assembly would have urged the United Nations system to support measures of economic co-operation among developing countries, including, as and when requested, continued secretariat support services to facilitate the holding of meetings by developing countries in pursuance of economic co-operation objectives.

Canada stated that, while similar texts had gained consensus in previous years, there had even then been difficulties in accepting the wording, as it was vague, imprecise and ambiguous. Since then, there had been an opportunity to see how those resolutions were being implemented, particularly in UNCTAD, and this experience showed that a more thorough study of the question was required.

The sponsors observed that, having recognized that there was no chance of reaching a consensus on their texts, they did not wish to submit them to a vote. The proposals were included in the Second Committee's report to the Assembly.

Promotion of economic and technical co-operation among developing countries was called for in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, annexed to Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December (see p. 499). The Strategy noted that developing countries were committed to implementation of the Arusha Programme, programmes agreed by developing countries at conferences in Mexico City, Havana (Cuba) and Buenos Aires (Argentina), and regional programmes including the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa (see p. 548). On the basis of proposals by developing countries in competent bodies, the international community was to give them support and assistance for strengthening and enlarging their mutual co-operation, from the subregional to the interregional level, including technical support and conference and secretariat services for holding meetings in accordance with established procedures and practices.

Other development questions

Rural development and agrarian reform

At its twentieth session, held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 5 May to 14 June 1980, the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) considered across-organizational programme analysis of rural development activities of the United Nations, prepared in collaboration with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) as the lead agency and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) Task Force on Rural Development. The analysis was based on over 3,600 activities, primarily operational, undertaken or to be undertaken during 1980 and 1981 to benefit less-advantaged sectors of the rural population and covered seven categories: policies and planning; agriculture; industrial development; physical infrastructure, natural resources and environment; application of science and technology; health and social services; and human resources development and institutions. It was undertaken to help assure that the activities of the United Nations system in support of national efforts in rural development were responsive to Governments' objectives and priorities and were efficiently provided to optimize benefits.

The Committee did not find completely acceptable the working definition of rural development -which attempted to interpret a wide variety of mandates in this sector from a large number of bodies-and suggested a modified definition. Thus, rural development must be defined in the context of the strategy to achieve the establishment of a new international economic order and respond to national priorities, and all development activities could be defined in terms of intended beneficiaries. Their impact should be assessed, particularly Acc-co-ordinated activities.

Since joint action at the country level had been limited to rural development activities in Bolivia, Lesotho, Liberia, Samoa and Somalia-the five countries chosen by the ACC Task Force for analysis of the activities of the United Nations system in this sector-the Committee observed that a more specific evaluation based on a larger number of countries was required before expanded action could be fully justified. The Governments themselves should evaluate the impact of the country-level exercise; the Task Force should seek to determine whether the quality of the service provided by the United Nations system had improved as a result of the project.

Drawing on this exercise, CPC made several recommendations on general methodology to be employed and follow-up action required. These included: a recommended two-year lead time for preparation of future cross-organizational analyses to allow for data collection and analysis; careful selection and delimitation of the areas to be analysed, for which CPC would lay down the conceptual framework and give clearer guidance; physical infrastructure, natural resources and environment appeared to offer the best joint planning potential within the system; and sectors should be refined into subsectors in order to identify duplication, overlap and gaps in coverage by the system.

In a report to the Economic and Social Council's July 1980 session, ACC provided additional information on interagency action in rural development. The report, submitted in response to a Council decision of 3 August 1979,<sup>77</sup> described major developments in the joint planning exercise in this sector since the 1979 ACC report,<sup>78</sup> particularly country-level action, monitoring, evaluation, and harmonization of programme proposals. The major effort continued in five countries: in Bolivia, Lesotho and Liberia, they centred on technical co-operation projects funded by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP); in Somalia, further actions following from a September 1979 national workshop were defined; and in Samoa, Government activities in rural development continued.

In order to evaluate the results of the five-country exercise, a workshop was held at Copenhagen, Denmark, in July, when representatives of the organizations involved met with those of the Governments. Following the workshop, the Task Force decided to undertake a full appraisal of all work undertaken since its inception and formulate a reoriented work programme.

Joint planning costs since 1975, included in the ACC report, showed that approximately one third of estimated expenditure had been in direct support of the experimental country-level co-ordination effort. Total direct costs were estimated at $1,331,205, averaging $266,241 per year.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1980/181, took note of ACC's report and the comments made by CPC and in the Council. Its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee had approved the text on 22 July on an oral proposal by its Chairman and as orally amended by the USSR to add the reference taking note of the comments made at the Council's current session. Both actions were taken without vote.

Speaking in the Committee, the USSR said that, despite a five-year, $1.5 million effort, little had been done to promote the rural development of developing countries; ACC had ignored such essential questions as implementation of democratic agrarian reforms, creation of co-operative forms of agriculture, restriction of the activities of foreign monopolies and training of national cadres, and international activities in the field had not gone beyond the organizational stage. France felt that the analysis submitted to CPC was more a catalogue of what had been done and questioned its tangible benefits. The United Kingdom expressed concern that support costs were approximately 80 per cent of the exercise's total costs, while the technical assistance component had amounted to only $384,000; until a review was completed, the United Kingdom could not agree to any new activities being undertaken by the Task Force-a view shared by Belgium.

Previously, on 6 February, in adopting without vote decision 1980/100 on its basic programme of work for 1980 and 1981, the Council had decided to discontinue submission to it of progress reports on land reform, prepared on a regular basis since 1951. It decided, instead, that at its 1981 organizational session it would establish the type of report required for its consideration of land reform and rural development in the light of organizational arrangements made since 1951. Decision 1980/100 was proposed by the Council President in the light of consultative meetings of Council members.

In follow-up action to the July 1979 World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development, the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) on 20 March 1980 took note of an invitation by the FAO Conference to the organizations of the United Nations system to work together with FAO in elaborating and implementing activities called for by the Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference,<sup>79</sup> and agreed that possible complementary action by UNCTAD should be pursued by the ACC Task Force on Rural Development.

Similarly, the Governing Council of UNDP, by a resolution of 26 June, recognized the importance of agriculture and the rural sector in the economic and social development of developing countries, expressed satisfaction with its working relationship with FAO to aid those countries' food production and rural development, and invited them, when preparing programmes and projects, to give due attention to the Declaration of Principles and the Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference.<sup>80</sup>

and finance for development

At the Fifth Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance-held at United Nations Headquarters from 17 to 25 January 1980, in accordance with a 1978 Economic and Social Council resolution<sup>81</sup>-major recommendations were made relating to main elements of public administration and finance for development in new national and international development strategies for the 1980s, international support measures, and the future work programme of the United Nations in this field.

The Meeting recommended including in the new International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade measures to: strengthen institutional development; educate and train personnel; improve the productivity of public sector enterprises; balance centralized and decentralized functions; improve financial management; and increase the responsiveness of public administration and finance systems to development demands. It also recommended that the United Nations give priority to the Strategy's implications for public administration systems at the national level and assist developing countries to meet those implications. In this connexion, an intergovernmental meeting of political leaders was suggested to consider institutional and managerial requirements.

The Meeting further recommended that resources for international support measures for development administration be augmented through UNDP and other aid-giving agencies. To this end, the Secretariat might compile a directory of multilateral and bilateral sources of aid in development administration. The Organization should aid developing countries to strengthen their co-ordination mechanisms and act as a clearing-house for information on ongoing technical and related research programmes. Another proposal was that the Programme in Public Administration and Finance establish an international centre for accounting and auditing for development to promote training of public officials. The Meeting recommended that its next Programme review meeting be convened in 1982.

On 28 April, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1980/12, on public administration and finance for development in the 1980s, by which it requested the Secretary-General to transmit the major recommendations of the Fifth Meeting to Member States for consideration. It recommended that the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy consider reflecting those recommendations in the Strategy, and invited the UNDP Governing Council to consider providing additional assistance to developing countries to improve their institutional infrastructure and managerial capabilities. The Council requested the Secretary-General to consult with Member States on the establishment of an international centre for public accounting and auditing for development to train public officials, requested him to strengthen, within available resources, the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance in order to promote technical assistance to developing countries, and asked him to make preliminary plans for a 1982 Expert Meeting.

Resolution 1980/12, recommended by the Council's First (Economic) Committee, was adopted without vote. The draft, sponsored by Algeria, Cyprus, Ecuador, Ghana, India, Kenya, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Pakistan, the Sudan, the United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zambia, as orally revised by the sponsors following oral proposals by several members, including Chile and the USSR, was approved without vote by the First Committee on 23 April.

Belgium had proposed that the Secretary-General be requested in paragraph 5 to ensure that the quality of the United Nations Programme was strengthened rather than the Programme itself.

France had proposed adding a new paragraph to request the Secretary-General to study and report in 1981 on how to decentralize United Nations public administration and finance activities at the regional commission level. France had also proposed reinstatement of a sponsor-deleted phrase specifying especially the least developed and most seriously affected countries in paragraph 4 inviting UNDP aid to developing countries for improving institutions and managerial capabilities.

Sweden had suggested adding a new paragraph by which the Secretary-General would have been requested, in consultation with ACC, to study, for report to the Council in 1982, the possibility of conducting a system-wide examination of United Nations public administration programmes.

The USSR withdrew its proposal to insert a reference in paragraph 6 to the discussion which had taken place in the Council on the establishment of a research centre in public accounting and auditing. However, its proposal to add, in the same paragraph, a phrase to have the Council bear in mind its 1979 resolution on public administration and finance for development** asking for study of the feasibility of organizing training activities to support national efforts to improve accounting and auditing-was accepted by the sponsors.

Chile's oral amendment, to a preambular paragraph, reiterated the importance of improving, rather than strengthening, developing countries' public-sector administrative and managerial capabilities.

Belgium, Spain and the USSR expressed reservations concerning the establishment of an international centre for public accounting and auditing. Finland, on behalf also of Denmark, Norway and Sweden, said the Council should examine public administration programmes to improve co-ordination and make the most rational use of resources. The USSR felt that the Meeting of Experts should have recommended strengthening the public sector in order to mobilize developing countries' national resources, assist agrarian reform and the co-operative movement, and improve foreign trade and other foreign economic relations.

Restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system

The process of restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system of organizations continued in 1980, as various bodies acted to put in place reforms envisaged by the General Assembly in 1977.

To strengthen regional bodies, the Assembly approved funds for a small addition to the staffs of the regional commissions in developing areas, and asked them to present their own ideas on the implications of restructuring for their role and functions. As the first resident co-ordinators were appointed for development assistance activities of the United Nations system in the field, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) acted to involve developing countries more closely in priority-setting for regional programmes. Informal consultations were held to improve communications between government representatives to the Economic and Social Council and secretariat officials of various

United Nations organizations. The Assembly welcomed plans by the Secretary-General to set up two high-level bodies in the Secretariat whose purpose would be to enhance the coherence and responsiveness of United Nations activities—one to deal with economic and social policy issues and the other with planning, programming, budgeting and evaluation.

The Assembly adopted two resolutions on restructuring in December, both concerning the Secretariat. By resolution 35/203, it welcomed the Secretary-General's plans for new consultative machinery and reaffirmed the policy-level responsibilities of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation. By resolution 35/223, it indicated guidelines for a projected study by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) of the impact of restructuring on the Secretariat.

The Assembly adopted three other decisions relating to restructuring. After a second year of inconclusive discussion on a proposal to make the Economic and Social Council a body of the entire United Nations membership, it agreed, by decision 35/439, to resume consideration of the proposal in 1981. By decision 35/440, it endorsed programme priorities for 1981 approved by the regional commissions and invited them to consider the implications of restructuring for their role and functions. By decision 35/441, it took note of a report of the Secretary-General on suggestions to improve planning, programming, budgeting and evaluation in the United Nations system.

These activities by the Assembly, the Council, UNDP, the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC), the Secretariat and other United Nations organizations were a follow-up to a series of reforms endorsed by the Assembly in 1977, on the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System. They were annexed to the Assembly's 1977 resolution on restructuring.<sup>1</sup>

The purpose of restructuring had been defined by the Assembly in 1975: to enhance the capacity of the United Nations system to deal with problems of international economic co-operation and development in a comprehensive and effective manner, and to make it more responsive to the requirements of the new international economic order.<sup>2</sup>

Details follow on restructuring developments in 1980.

Membership, structure and work programme of the Economic and Social Council

In the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, during the 1980 regular session of the General Assembly, Jamaica introduced, also on behalf of Argentina, a revised version of a draft resolution the two countries had originally submitted in 1979, proposing that the Charter of the United Nations be amended to enlarge the 54-member Economic and Social Council so that it would be composed of all United Nations Member States. The draft also contained a number of other proposals for restructuring the Council, including the discontinuation of half of its functional commissions and several of its standing committees. The Assembly had decided in 1979 to defer consideration of the draft until its 1980 session.<sup>3</sup>

The text introduced on 3 November 1980 and revised on 14 November differed in several details from the 1979 version. For example, in addition to the request that the Council discontinue various subsidiary bodies— the list of which was modified—the 1980 draft would have had the Assembly decide not to establish subsidiary bodies to undertake permanent or ongoing functions but to assign such functions to the Council. Another new paragraph listed a number of topics which the Assembly would consider only once every two years, while the Council would deal with them in the intervening years. Also, the Assembly would decide to consider which questions on its agenda it could assign to the Council for final decision. In addition, the revised text set out a work programme for the Council for 1981 and 1982, in place of the programme for 1980 proposed in the earlier draft.

Some speakers expressed objections to this draft during the Committee's discussion. Ecuador opposed the proposal to discontinue subsidiary bodies, feared that there would be duplication of work between an enlarged Council and the Assembly, and considered that making Council membership universal would diminish the importance of the Second Committee. Czechoslovakia, on behalf of the group of socialist countries of Eastern Europe and Mongolia, reaffirmed the position they had taken in regard to the 1979 draft, in opposition to amending the Charter in order to transform the Council into an organ composed of all United Nations Members. The USSR thought that tripling the Council's membership would only increase costs and make it more difficult to take decisions.

On the other hand, Yugoslavia said that, while the relationship between the Assembly and an enlarged Council would have to be clarified, the proposal to make the Council a universal body was in conformity with the trend to democratize United Nations bodies. Pakistan supported the basic approach of the draft but thought action should be deferred to allow further study.

Following consultations, the Committee approved without vote on 20 November and the Assembly adopted in like manner on 16 December decision 35/439, by which the Assembly decided to resume consideration of the two-nation proposal in 1981 with a view to taking substantive action. It requested its President to arrange consultations on the matter before the 1981 session in order to facilitate such consideration. The text of the draft resolution was annexed to the Assembly's decision. This decision was submitted by a Vice-Chairman of the Second Committee.

Following approval of the decision in Committee, Jamaica, expressing hope that the Assembly would decide on the substantive proposal in 1981, said it must be taken as a whole, with none of its elements deleted. After the Assembly adopted the decision, Argentina stated on behalf of the sponsors of the two-nation draft that it would be impossible to carry out the provisions of the 1977 restructuring resolution relating to the Council<sup>4</sup> without revising the Charter, though their proposal was unrelated to any other proposal for Charter amendment.

Structures for regional and interregional co-operation

As requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1979,<sup>5</sup> CPC began in June 1980 a review of policy and programme issues relating to the distribution of tasks and responsibilities between the regional commissions and other United Nations units, programmes and organs, in the context of the implementation of restructuring recommendations of the General Assembly.<sup>6</sup>

The Committee discussed the criteria to be utilized in distributing tasks and responsibilities, and the procedures and time-frame to be followed. It suggested that the report on this subject which the Secretary-General was to submit to the Assembly at its 1980 session (see below) should concentrate on the immediate requirements of the regional commissions for assuming the functions assigned to them in the restructuring process and on the type of work for which they were best suited. The Committee decided to continue its review of the matter in 1981, concentrating initially on human settlements, environment and water, and it requested analyses of these areas by the Secretariat, including proposals for resource transfer. It reiterated the need for the intergovernmental bodies of the regional commissions to participate fully in planning activities, as well as the need to keep Governments in each region informed.

Both the Council, by decision 1980/179 of 25 July (see p. 992), and the Assembly, by resolution 35/9 of 3 November (see p. 1202), deleted human settlements from the list of areas to be reviewed by CPC in 1981.

In his report to the Assembly, dated 23 October, the Secretary-General analysed the expanded functions which the regional commissions had been called on to perform as part of the restructuring process. The report discussed their role in the United Nations system, their responsibilities for regional co-ordination and co-operation, their participation in programme planning, their contribution to global policy-making, the problems of defining regions and subregions that were common to several organizations, the operational responsibilities of the commissions for technical co-operation, regional and interregional economic co-operation among developing countries, the streamlining of conference and secretariat structures, and the delegation of authority and provision of resources to the commissions.

The report went on to identify immediate priorities of the regional commissions for the implementation of their expanded functions. It stated that the four commissions in developing regions - Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Latin America and Western Asia - saw a need to strengthen the capacity of their secretariats in regard to inter-agency co-operation in their regions and expanded regional co-ordination in general. They also sought to participate more fully in global planning and co-ordination. In addition, two of the commissions wanted to strengthen their work in specific areas: mineral and other natural resources development in Asia and the Pacific, and transport planning and low-cost road construction in arid areas in Western Asia.

Taking note of this report, the Assembly, by decision 35/440 of 16 December, endorsed the immediate programme priorities for 1981 approved by the commissions. It invited them to consider in 1981 the implications of restructuring for their role and functions, and to report on the matter to the Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council. This decision was adopted without a vote, after having been approved by the Second Committee in similar fashion on 20 November.

The text had been submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on an earlier draft submitted by Venezuela on behalf of the States Members of the United Nations belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries. It differed from the earlier draft by having the Assembly endorse programme priorities approved by the commissions, rather than those set out in the Secretary-General's report.

After the Committee approved the decision, Czechoslovakia said the group of socialist countries of Eastern Europe and Mongolia had joined the consensus on the understanding that it would not entail any increase in the United Nations budget.

The Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee later informed the Assembly that adoption of this decision would require an additional appropriation of $148,000 in the 1980-1981 budget, including the cost of six additional posts. This amount was included in the revised budget adopted by the Assembly in resolution 35/226 A of 17 December (see p. 1197).

Operational activities

In its annual report to the Economic and Social Council, dated 15 April 1980, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) noted that its Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities) had emphasized three issues in its review of progress in restructuring the operational activities of the United Nations system. First, the approach proposed by UNDP for continuous programming of its country-level activities (see p. 580) was felt to enhance the participation and support of the agencies executing its programmes. Second, the Committee would review at a later session recommendations to solve the perennial problem of improving linkages between technical co-operation pre-investment and investment. Third, it would review in 1981 what United Nations organizations had done to implement earlier ACC recommendations aimed at making the United Nations system more responsive to the needs of developing countries, with particular attention to intercountry programming and co-operation with regional commissions.

The UNDP Governing Council adopted several decisions in June relevant to the restructuring of operational activities. On 17 June, it endorsed proposals by the UNDP Administrator for a consultative process aimed at involving developing countries more closely in priority-setting for regional programmes during the programming cycle of UNDP activities covering 1982-1986. On 27 June, it invited the Economic and Social Council to give due attention to ways of ensuring the speedy implementation by all organizations concerned of the recommendation in the 1977 Assembly resolution on restructuring suggesting that the UNDP country-programming process should be used as a frame of reference for the operational activities carried out and financed by United Nations organizations from their own resources.<sup>7</sup> It transmitted to the General Assembly, by a decision of 17 June, a report by the Administrator on UNDP and the new international economic order. It requested the Administrator on 26 June to keep it informed of subsequent action taken to implement restructuring decisions.

The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1980/65 of 25 July on the Governing Council's annual report (see p. 593), brought these decisions to the attention of the Assembly.

Action was also taken during 1980 in pursuance of three other recommendations contained in the part of the 1977 restructuring resolution relating to operational activities<sup>8</sup> the Secretary-General appointed the first resident co-ordinators of operational activities for development (see p. 613); he submitted his first report on policy issues pertaining to operational activities for development in the United Nations system (see p. 607); and the Assembly took note of a document he submitted listing the programmes and funds to be included under future United Nations pledging conferences for development activities (see p. 601).

By resolution 35/81 of 5 December, on a comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development, the Assembly urged Governments and United Nations organizations to accelerate the implementation of the restructuring recommendations in this area, and requested the heads of those organizations to continue to improve coherence of action and effective integration at the country level of the various inputs from the United Nations system (see p. 609).

Planning, programming, budgeting and evaluation

At its May/June 1980 session, CPC made a number of recommendations relevant to the further implementation of the General Assembly's 1977 restructuring recommendations concerning planning, programming, budgeting and evaluation in the United Nations system.<sup>9</sup> Among its recommendations were that sectoral and regional intergovernmental bodies should review relevant chapters of the next United Nations medium-term plan (1984-1989) and that, in formulating the United Nations programme budget for 1982-1983, the Secretary-General should follow the priorities suggested by CPC in its 1980 report. The Committee also evaluated selected sectors of United Nations activity and analysed programmes in two areas-energy and rural development-in which several United Nations organizations were active. The Committee did not reach agreement on the criteria and methods to be used in setting priorities among different activities. (See also pp. 994 and 1201.)

In a brief report to the General Assembly on implementation of the restructuring recommendations in this area, dated 17 October, the Secretary-General referred to the above activities of CPC and noted that prior consultations with the specialized agencies had been undertaken in respect of the United Nations programme budget for 1980-1981, as called for in the restructuring resolution. The report also called attention to the need for further study of procedures for assessing the total financial impact of decisions having system-wide implications taken by central United Nations organs, as well as the availability of resources for implementing those decisions.

The Assembly took note of this report by decision 35/441, adopted without vote on 16 December. The Second Committee approved the text without objection on 20 November, as orally proposed by the Chairman.

In a related action of 17 December, the Assembly, by resolution 35/223 on restructuring Secretariat support services (see section below), endorsed arrangements envisaged by the Secretary-General for a high-level advisory group of Secretariat officials to advise him on policy issues arising in connexion with the elaboration of medium-term plans and programme budgets. These arrangements were outlined in a report by the Secretary-General stating that the group would be composed of the heads of Secretariat units covered by the budget and plan. It would be chaired by the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation or the Under-Secretary-General for Administration, Finance and Management, depending on the nature of the discussion.

Resolution 35/223 was adopted on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee. The Secretary-General's arrangements were also welcomed by the Assembly in resolution 35/203 of 16 December, also dealing with Secretariat support services (see section below).

Interagency co-ordination

Informal consultations took place in July 1980 between members of the Economic and Social Council and representatives of United Nations organizations and programmes on ways to improve communication between intergovernmental bodies and ACC. They were a follow-up to a 1979 request by the General Assembly, which had asked the Council to work out mutually convenient procedures for improving such communication.<sup>10</sup>

Informal discussions on this matter before the Council took it up had been suggested by CPC at its May/June 1980 session. They were chaired by a Vice-President of the Council, José Luis Xifra (Spain), and took place during the Council's second regular 1980 session at Geneva. The subject of improving interorganizational communication was also discussed in the Council's Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee; however, on an oral proposal by its Chairman on 17 July, the Committee referred consideration of the question to the Council.

Summing up the conclusions drawn from the informal exchange of views, the Vice-President said in an oral report to the Council on 25 July that improved communication required a deliberate effort on both sides and the simultaneous and constant operation of a set of mechanisms at various levels. While new solutions should be sought, attention should be concentrated initially on improving existing machinery.

On the same date, the Council adopted without vote, as decision 1980/185, a text proposed by the Vice-President. By this decision, after informing the Assembly that the informal consultations had been held, the Council stated that improved communication should be sought in the first place in the operation of existing mechanisms, especially the Joint Meetings held annually between CPC and ACC. To that end, informal consultations between the two bodies would take place early in 1981, on an experimental basis, to discuss the subjects, timing, venue, preparation and organization of future Joint Meetings. The Council added that it would keep this matter under review and inform the Assembly of the outcome.

The decision incorporated an oral amendment suggested by UNDP to add that representatives of United Nations programmes as well as of specialized agencies had participated in the informal consultations.

Secretariat support services

In response to a 1979 request of the General Assembly,<sup>11</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a progress report, dated 21 October 1980, on the implementation of previous Assembly recommendations on the restructuring of Secretariat support services in the economic and social sectors. The report dealt with the functions of the Office of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, and with adjustments of other Secretariat units.

The report described a number of new arrangements which the Secretary-General intended to establish in the Secretariat to enhance the coherence and responsiveness of the economic and social activities of the Organization and to strengthen the Director-General's capacity to ensure the efficient management and co-ordination of those activities. Two groups of high-level Secretariat officials, would be set up—an advisory group on planning, programming, budgeting and evaluation (described in a section above) and a consultative mechanism on policy issues pertaining to economic and social activities. The consultative mechanism would be chaired by the Director-General with the participation of the heads of all Secretariat departments, organs and programmes concerned, including the regional commissions. Its functions would be to provide for the co-ordinated follow-up of decisions taken by United Nations intergovernmental bodies and for coherent approaches to the formulation of policy recommendations for consideration by those bodies, and to work out common Secretariat positions for the purpose of intergovernmental and interagency meetings. In addition, the Secretary-General intended to convene annual meetings of senior officials to review developments, discuss issues arising in the Assembly and consider any matters arising from the consultative mechanism.

The report also described experience with arrangements for reporting by senior Secretariat officials within the restructured Secretariat. As indicated to the Assembly in a 1978 report of the Secretary-General, senior officials would continue to have direct access to the Secretary-General as appropriate, but they should keep the Director-General fully informed and report to him, or through him to the Secretary-General, on matters affecting the Director-General's responsibilities. According to the 1980 report, only a few of the Secretariat units concerned had done so. Therefore, existing arrangements needed to be adjusted in order better to reflect the accountability of the units concerned.

The report went on to discuss difficulties and jurisdictional concerns that had arisen as a result of differences in approach by organizations to the issue of centralization in the United Nations system, and the implications of this issue for the leadership role of the Director-General in the area of development and international economic co-operation. The underlying purpose of Assembly decisions in regard to the Director-General's functions, the report said, was to ensure greater coherence and partnership in the system. The report also indicated that the Secretary-General was studying possible additional staffing needs for the Director-General's Office.

With respect to other Secretariat units, the report suggested no changes in the three main units established as a result of restructuring—the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development, and the Office of Secretariat Services for Economic and Social Matters. It described co-operative arrangements being established between these units and the Department of Administration, Finance and Management.

After consideration of this report in the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 35/203 on 16 December, concerned with implementation of the 1977 restructuring recommendations relating to Secretariat support services.<sup>12</sup> By this resolution, adopted without vote, the Assembly welcomed the new consultative arrangements envisaged for the Secretariat and requested the Secretary-General to arrange for all units concerned to co-operate with and assist the Director-General in the effective functioning of those arrangements. The Assembly further requested the Secretary-General to adjust reporting arrangements within the Secretariat in order to reflect fully the authority and responsibilities envisaged for the Director-General, and to submit a report in 1981 containing a revised organizational chart incorporating those adjustments. It reaffirmed the Director-General's responsibilities, under the direction of the Secretary-General, for establishing policy guidelines for all United Nations economic and social activities in order to ensure their coherence, co-ordination and efficient management, and for exercising a general oversight of Secretariat proposals and actions, particularly from the point of view of their policy and institutional implications.

This resolution had been recommended by the Second Committee, which approved it without vote on 20 November in a version submitted by a Vice-Chairman following consultations on an earlier draft introduced by Venezuela on behalf of the United Nations Member States belonging to the Group of 77. In presenting this text, the Vice-Chairman said it contained no significant changes from the earlier draft.

In another action, the Assembly endorsed a recommendation made by CPC at its May/June session that JIU be invited to assess the impact of restructuring on the Secretariat. The Committee envisaged this as the first stage of an appraisal by the Assembly of the extent to which restructuring had begun to meet the requirements of the new international economic order. This endorsement was contained in resolution 35/9 of 3 November (see p. 1202), by which the Assembly endorsed most of CPC's 1980 recommendations.

Explicitly excluded from the Assembly's endorsement was a CPC proposal that it formulate guidelines for a questionnaire designed to elicit information from United Nations organizations for the overall appraisal. The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1980/179 of 25 July (see p. 992), had recommended that this proposal be ignored.

In a further decision with regard to the study requested of JIU, the Assembly, by resolution 35/223 of 17 December, asked the Unit to be guided by the priorities identified in resolution 35/203 (summarized above) and to take the Secretary-General's report into account. It decided to revert in 1981 to the question of adjustments in the Secretariat. It also endorsed the consultative arrangements envisaged by the Secretary-General regarding planning, programming, budgeting and evaluation policy.

This resolution was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, which approved it in similar fashion on 15 December. It was sponsored by Barbados, Ghana, Jamaica, Kenya, Panama and Saint Lucia. On a suggestion by the United States, the sponsors orally revised the reference to the JIU study: instead of the original mention of a study on restructuring, the revised version spoke of a study on the impact of restructuring on the Secretariat.

At its 97th plenary meeting, on 16 December 1980, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, decided:

(a) To resume consideration of the text of the draft resolution annexed to the present decision at its thirty-sixth session, with a view to taking substantive action;

ANNEX

Draft resolution on the implementation of section II of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197 on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of

Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, and 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Recalling its resolution 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975, by which it, inter alia, established the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System for the purpose of preparing detailed action proposals with a view to initiating the process of restructuring the United Nations system so as to make it more fully capable of dealing with problems of international economic co-operation and development in a comprehensive and effective manner, and to make it more responsive to the requirements of the provisions of the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, as well as those of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Recalling also its resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977, by which it, inter alia, endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee,

Recalling further its resolution 33/202 of 29 January 1979, in which it, inter alia, requested certain actions and measures within the framework of the implementation of the conclusions and recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee,

Reaffirming that the process of restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system is an integral part of the efforts required to ensure the equitable, full and effective participation of the developing countries in the formulation and application of all decisions within the United Nations system in the field of development and international economic co-operation,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1979/57 of 2 August 1979, concerning the implementation of section U of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197,

Recalling, in particular, paragraph 13 of the annex to its resolution 32/197,

Taking into account the provisions of paragraph 7 of its resolution 34/212 of 19 December 1979,

1. Notes with regret paragraph (a) of Economic and Social Council decision 1979/57, concerning the implementation of section II of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197;

2. Recognizes the imperative need to enable the General Assembly to focus its attention on the major global issues relating to development and international economic co-operation, and to deal with other issues on a less frequent basis;

3. Recognizes also that expansion of the membership of the Economic and Social Council to include all States Members of the United Nations as full members would make the Council a more effective organ for carrying out the functions assigned to it in the Charter of the United Nations and for discharging the responsibilities laid down in section II of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197, as well as for assisting the Assembly as may be requested by it;

4. Decides therefore to adopt, in accordance with Article 108 of the Charter, the following amendment to the Charter and to submit it for ratification by the States Members of the United Nations:

5. Urges all Member States to ratify the above amendment in accordance with their respective constitutional processes as soon as possible and to deposit their instruments of ratification with the Secretary-General;

6. Decides to delete, as from the date of the entry into force of the above amendment, rules 145 and 146 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly;

7. Recommends that the Economic and Social Council should decide at its organizational session for 1981 that, as from 1981, its sessional committees should be open to the participation of all States as full members;

8. Recommends further that, until the amendment to the Charter set out in paragraph 4 above enters into force, the consideration of all substantive questions should be entrusted by the Economic and Social Council to its sessional committees;

9. Decides to discontinue the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development and the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy;

10. Decides also that the General Assembly will be directly assisted by the Council in respect of the review and appraisal of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, and accordingly requests the Council to make adequate time provisions to that end;

11. Decides, in pursuance of the provisions of paragraph 11 (d) of the annex to its resolution 32/197, that the preparation of all future ad hoc conferences in the economic and social fields will be directly assumed by the Economic and Social Council;

13. Requests the Economic and Social Council to discontinue the Commission for Social Development, the Population Commission, the Commission on the Status of Women, the Committee on Natural Resources and the Commission on Transnational Corporations, while retaining the Intergovernmental Working Group on a Code of Conduct until completion of its mandate;

14. Requests the Economic and Social Council, in adopting its biennial programme of work for 1981 and 1982 at its organizational session for 1981, to make provision for the consideration of the following questions on the dates and at the venues indicated:

17. Decides, in accordance with paragraph 7 of its resolution 34/212, that beginning in 1981, it will give consideration to the following questions in accordance with the schedule outlined and that, in the intervening years, the Economic and Social Council will give substantive consideration and action to those items in the context of its own programme of work:

Chapter

Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States

Concerned by limited and partial progress in the implementation of the provisions of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, adopted in 1974,<sup>1</sup> the General Assembly in 1980 decided to hold, at its regular 1981 session, a comprehensive, in-depth review of the implementation of the Charter.

The Charter's purpose was to promote the establishment of a new international economic order; the Charter and the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, adopted the same year,<sup>2</sup> were principal sources for international economic co-operation for development. Charter provisions were directed towards more just and equitable economic relations and towards structural changes to promote the development of developing countries.

The Assembly's decision to review the Charter in 1981 was contained in resolution 35/57, adopted on 5 December. The Assembly thereby also urged Member States to take all appropriate measures for the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s) (see p. 495), and for launching and successfully concluding the round of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development sought as a contribution to the Strategy.

The resolution was introduced in the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee by Venezuela on behalf of the Member States of the United Nations belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries. Following informal consultations co-ordinated by a Committee Vice-Chairman, the sponsors revised their text. The Committee approved it on 20 November by a recorded vote, requested by the United States, of 106 to 1, with 14 abstentions. The Assembly adopted it by a recorded vote of 134 to 1, with 12 abstentions.

Speaking in explanation of their votes, Austria, Japan, Luxembourg (on behalf of the member countries of the European Economic Community), Sweden and the United States referred to reservations they had previously expressed with regard to certain provisions of the Charter and said their positions on it remained unchanged.<sup>3</sup> Czechoslovakia, speaking on behalf also of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, stressed the importance those countries attached to the implementation of the Charter; they felt that only through faithful compliance with it could economic restructuring be achieved.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974, and the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in its resolution 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, which laid down the foundations of the new international economic order,

Bearing in mind article 34 of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and General Assembly resolution 3486 (XXX) of 12 December 1975, relating to the review of the implementation of the Charter,

Concerned by the limited and partial progress in the attainment of the aims and objectives established in the resolutions on the new international economic order and in the implementation of the provisions contained in the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States which are directed towards more just and equitable economic relations and towards the structural changes needed to promote the development of developing countries,

Reaffirming solemnly the determination to establish a new international economic order,

Mindful of the great importance that the international community attaches to the launching and successful conclusion of the round of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development and to the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the assessment of the progress made in the establishment of the new international economic order and appropriate action for the promotion of the development of developing countries and international economic co-operation,

1. Reaffirms the role of the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order and of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States as principal sources for international economic co-operation for development;

2. Urges Member States, in this context, to take all appropriate measures for the launching and successful conclusion of the round of global negotiations and the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade;

3. Decides, in the light of the results of the negotiations on international economic co-operation for development, to hold at its thirty-sixth session a comprehensive, in-depth review of the implementation of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, as provided for in article 34 thereof.

Chapter IV

United Nations operational activities for development

Total contributions in 1980 to the operational activities of the United Nations system for development amounted to $5,181 million, an increase of 11 per cent in current prices over the previous year. Expenditures on such activities amounted to $4,628 million, an increase of about 14 per cent in current prices, but substantially less than half of that increase was growth in real terms after discounting the effects of inflation.

These figures cover the three forms of operational activities for development—technical co-operation, commodity aid and capital assistance, including net lending by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) and the International Development Association (IDA).

During 1980, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)—the main source of funds for technical co-operation in the United Nations system—decided that it would emphasize even more strongly in future the needs of the poorest among the world's developing nations. It spent $934 million in 1980 for projects and administrative and support costs, but its income, mainly from voluntary contributions by States, rose by only 3 per cent—well below its 14 per cent annual target.

Expenditure on technical co-operation projects in more than 156 countries and territories financed by UNDP and by the regular budgets of United Nations organizations totalled $709 million in 1980 (see table, p. 602). The technical co-operation activities of the United Nations proper—funded by UNDP, the United Nations regular budget and special-purpose trust funds—amounted to $275 million. By the end of 1980, the United Nations Capital Development Fund had committed $165 million since 1975 in 35 countries, mainly for rural areas.

About $713 million for 12 United Nations development funds and programmes was pledged by Governments at the 1980 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, held in November to receive pledges for 1981.

The United Nations Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation submitted his first report on policy issues pertaining to operational activities for development. After reviewing it, the General Assembly in December strongly urged donor countries to increase their contributions and established a scheme for a regular review of the matter by the Assembly every third year (resolution 35/81).

To promote more coherent planning and delivery of technical co-operation, the Secretary-General appointed the first resident coordinators, responsible for operational activities for development carried out by the United Nations system in individual countries.

Except for the subchapter on the policy review of operational activities for development, this chapter is concerned mainly with multisectoral technical co-operation activities. Details of such activities in individual sectors may be found in other chapters, such as those dealing with population questions and non-agricultural resources. Also described in other chapters are the operational and humanitarian activities of the United Nations Children's Fund, and the commodity assistance rendered by the World Food Programme. The capital assistance activities of the World Bank and IDA are covered in the chapters of part II of this volume concerned with those agencies.

Aside from its operational activities for development, the United Nations conducts a number of emergency and humanitarian relief programmes for refugees and disaster victims, also dealt with in separate chapters.

United Nations Development Programme

Working in more than 150 countries and territories, and through 28 international bodies and agencies which executed its projects, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) was helping to support almost 5,000 development projects in 1980. With expenditures of $934 million and receipts of $898 million, UNDP remained by far the largest multilateral source of technical co-operation. However, the 3 per cent rise in income recorded over 1979 levels fell far short of the annual increase of 14 per cent which had been fixed as a target for the current period (1977-1981), and the UNDP Governing Council, the Economic and Social Council (resolution 1980/65) and the General Assembly (resolution 35/83) urged all Governments to increase their voluntary contributions to the desired level.

Looking to the future, the Governing Council, meeting at Geneva from 2 to 30 June, agreed to place an even greater emphasis on the needs of the world's poorest nations by deciding to allocate nearly 80 per cent of all country programme resources to countries with an annual per capita income of less than $500. This change in UNDP allocations, from the current proportion of less than 65 per cent, was to take place in the Programme's third development cycle, 1982-1986.

The first session of the High-level Meeting on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, held at Geneva in May/June, made recommendations to Governments and international organizations on ways to advance this rapidly growing area of mutual assistance. The Economic and Social Council commended the Meeting's report to the General Assembly (resolution 1980/64), which urged all States to implement the Meeting's decisions (resolution 35/202). On a related issue, both the Council (resolution 1980/63) and the Assembly (resolution 35/80) called for action to enlarge the role of qualified national personnel in the social and economic development of developing countries.

The Governing Council, in an action endorsed by the Assembly, lowered from 14 to 13 per cent of total project costs the rate by which UNDP would reimburse agencies executing its projects for their administrative and related support costs. The effect would be to increase the proportion of UNDP money spent directly on field activities.

Decisions were taken on the activities of special funds managed by UNDP, including the United Nations Volunteers and the United Nations Capital Development Fund.

The Programme continued to target its assistance on the basis of five-year development co-operation cycles, under which its funds were allocated to both country and intercountry programmes mainly on the basis of need and size of population.

Country programmes were drawn up by recipient Governments in consultation with the UNDP field network of resident representatives and specialists on the staffs of the agencies executing its programmes. Besides defining the needs of each country for UNDP support, country programmes served as a vehicle for formulating specific project requests and a framework for all other development activities of the United Nations system.

Regional programmes, designed to promote intercountry development co-operation particularly in the joint use of shared resources, were drafted by UNDP headquarters regional bureaux and finalized in consultation with the Governments, agencies, regional commissions and UNDP resident representatives concerned. They were funded through special allocations approved by the Governing Council.

Interregional and global programmes were devoted to basic research on development problems of world-wide significance and the application of innovative technologies to such problems. Often initiated by UNDP headquarters in response to needs identified by global conferences, they were also financed out of special allocations determined by the Governing Council.

Country and intercountry programmes were fitted into the framework of indicative planning figures for each country and region. These figures, set by the Governing Council, represented targets for UNDP aid during the current and future planning cycles.

On average, some 40 per cent of the cost of UNDP's work was met through voluntary contributions by almost every Government in the world to the Programme's central resources. The remaining 60 per cent was provided by recipient Governments in the form of counterpart support for UNDP-assisted projects.

Activities in 1980

For the third successive year, field expenditures of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) advanced by more than 20 per cent in 1980, to $677.6 million. In addition, at the direction of the General Assembly, UNDP assumed responsibility for the management of the Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development. With the approval of the Governing Council, it opened a special energy account to help meet growing demands for technical assistance and pre-investment planning in that field. At the request of the United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, UNDP undertook to service the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women. The Programme also held its first global meeting of resident representatives in almost a decade (Tunis, Tunisia, 7-12 July) to prepare for the new directions in the Programme mandated by the Governing Council, including a major shift in emphasis towards low-income and least developed countries during the third development co-operation (programming) cycle (1982-1986).

Some 830 new country and intercountry projects with UNDP inputs of $50,000 or more were approved during 1980. The value of all project approval actions, including net revisions in ongoing projects, declined from the $701.1 million recorded during 1979 to $668.1 million. The number of approval actions declined in every region except Asia and the Pacific, as well as for regional and global projects.

The Programme assisted countries by paying the salaries and related expenses of project personnel recruited by 28 executing agencies, supplying or paying for specialized equipment, subcontracting some services and training nationals of developing countries abroad. During 1980, the value of each of these project components increased substantially. The number of experts recruited for field service by executing agencies and Governments totalled 9,960, up from 8,445 in 1979. Project personnel accounted for slightly more than 50 per cent of field expenditures, equipment delivered to projects constituted 23 per cent, subcontracts 12 per cent and training 10 per cent, with miscellaneous project inputs of 4 per cent. Almost 8,400 developing country nationals received training abroad under UNDP-financed projects in 1980, compared to some 6,500 in 1979.

New, more flexible and responsive methods of programming, proposed by the UNDP Administrator and endorsed by the Governing Council in 1979, were beginning to take effect for the planning of third-cycle programmes. These reflected the "continuous programming" approach to country programming, including continuous monitoring and periodic reviews, designed in part to facilitate the use of country programming as a frame of reference for other operational activities of the United Nations system. The new programming methods were also aimed at improving UNDP's responsiveness by enhancing the involvement of developing countries in setting priorities for regional programmes and in identifying and initiating regional projects.

Other steps were also being prepared in 1980 to improve UNDP's operational effectiveness. These included proposals to expand government execution of UNDP-supported projects, rationalize programming and project design, improve periodic project reviews, evaluate individual projects on a selective basis, make greater use of qualified national personnel, and standardize development procedures within the United Nations system, particularly among funds and programmes administered by UNDP.

Investors committed more than $4 billion to projects aided by UNDP in 1980, according to incomplete data in the Administrator's report for the year. The Programme provided three major types of assistance in this area: pre-investment studies for one or more specific projects, general studies covering an entire region or sector, and direct technical or training support for an investment project. As in previous years, most of the follow-up investment came from domestic sources.

To promote such pre-investment activities, the Governing Council authorized additional expenditures for co-operative arrangements with agencies and for training its senior field officials in investment development.

Many of UNDP's activities were aimed at generating support for particular projects from a number of donors. In Africa, for example, it helped finance an action plan for the development of the Gambia River, to be submitted to a multilateral donors' conference in 1981. Following a 1979 consultative conference of donors for the Kagera River basin in East Africa, it co-ordinated a multi-donor mission in 1980 to formulate an action programme to help pave the way for a second donors' conference in 1981. When Zimbabwe attained independence in April 1980, UNDP helped the Government organize a meeting of United Nations organizations in May to prepare projects for financing by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) and the African Development Bank, and it proposed a donors' conference in Salisbury in 1981. It led a multi-donor mission to Lesotho in April/May which culminated in a donors' conference in October on aid to that country's agriculture.

Among Arab States, UNDP helped co-ordinate public and private follow-up investments under the Suez Canal feasibility and design studies project. It sponsored a symposium in May, on the Arab world in the year 2000, held at Tangiers, Morocco, to develop guidelines for an approach to the region's development problems and opportunities.

In Asia and the Pacific, several UNDP projects served as the nuclei of broader efforts involving national, international and private sources. The Programme financed the main management training services for an Indonesian programme to resettle 2.5 million people, involving six ministries and 53 directors-general. In Nepal, the UNDP country programme served as the basis for a Government effort to examine anticipated funding from a number of intergovernmental organizations for its relevance to the country's five-year plan. In Singapore, a project emphasizing waste management, pollution control and energy production from factory-style pig farming generated support from donors in several countries as well as the free installation of a $150,000 chemical treatment plant by a Japanese company.

In Latin America, UNDP played a co-ordinating role in programming some $115 million in aid to Nicaragua from United Nations sources since 1979. It was involved in a major project for the development of low-income areas in Guayaquil, Ecuador, funded mainly by the Netherlands. In Haiti, it helped draw together resources from several United Nations institutions for one of the largest UNDP-supported country programmes in the hemisphere. The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries contributed $3.5 million to UNDP-supported projects for a Caribbean food plan and a Central American energy project. As Chairman of the Technical Assistance Steering Committee of the Caribbean Group on Co-operation for Economic Development, UNDP co-ordinated regional technical co-operation from other funding sources.

The Programme played a similar co-ordinating role in the Tagus estuary project in Portugal, in which 17 Government departments and three United Nations agencies were involved, and a malaria eradication project in Turkey, for which four Governments provided $325,000 in additional funding.

The Programme's network of 114 field offices was assisting 3,445 projects funded by sources other than UNDP, with a total estimated expenditure in 1980 of $852.2 million, greater than UNDP's own expenditures. One such scheme was the highland agricultural marketing and production project in Thailand, funded by the Thai Government and the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, which provided services to scores of villages in northern Thailand in a concerted drive to end opium traffic in the area by encouraging substitute cash crops.

With the World Bank, UNDP co-sponsored a major technical co-operation effort of the entire United Nations system, the National Household Survey Capability Programme. Implemented through country projects, its aim was to help Governments of developing countries obtain, through household surveys and in conjunction with data from censuses and administrative records, a continuing flow of integrated statistics for their development plans and policies.

Programme planning

The Governing Council agreed on 26 June 1980 on the allocation of UNDP resources during the third programming cycle (1982-1986). Reiterating that the greatest share of technical assistance should be channelled to developing countries most in need, it decided that 80 per cent of all country indicative planning figure (IPF) amounts should go to countries with a per capita gross national product (GNP) of $500 a year or less, with special treatment for those whose GNP was below $250. At the same time, it agreed that all efforts should be made to ensure that no country with a per capita income below $3,000 would receive less UNDP aid than in the current cycle, and that no country with a higher income would have a new IPF less than 80 per cent of the current figure.

Based on these criteria, the Council approved IPFS for each country receiving UNDP aid, on the understanding that all IPFS would be cut by a flat percentage if resources failed to meet expectations. The calculations were based on the assumption that the funds available would increase by 14 per cent a year. Figures for each country were arrived at by using the same basic criteria as in the past—per capita GNP and population size.

As a guide to planning, the Council decided that 81 per cent of IPFS should be used for individual countries and the remaining 19 per cent for intercountry (regional and global) activities.

The Council endorsed illustrative IPFS for each region, as follows: Africa, $283.4 million; Asia and the Pacific, $296.1 million; Latin America, $76.5 million; Arab States, $57.8 million; and Europe, $16.2 million.

On the income side, the Council urged all participants to help it achieve an annual average growth target of at least 14 per cent in voluntary contributions. It strongly urged all countries, especially those which had previously made only modest contributions, to increase their voluntary contributions and to continue doing so at a level necessary to maintain the Programme's momentum. All recipient countries in a position to do so were urged to surrender their country IPFS or utilize UNDP resources on a fully reimbursable basis. The Council established voluntary-reimbursement targets for recipient countries with per capita incomes of $1,500 or more.

The Council was unable to reach consensus on a proposal according to which nations making part or all of their contributions in non-convertible currencies would be requested to pay a gradually increasing share in convertible currencies.

The above action on allocations was preceded by a special meeting of the Council in New York from 11 to 20 February, devoted largely to a review of preparations for the third programming cycle. As it did not complete negotiations on the matter at that time, the Council asked the Administrator to provide certain calculations, requested by several countries, of how variants of the basic suppositions of growth and expenditure would affect the distribution of IPF resources.

In another action, affecting current programming, the Council authorized a limited borrowing from the third cycle in order to make additional funds available in 1980 and 1981 to countries whose IPFS were expected to increase by at least 50 per cent starting in 1982. It also agreed to borrow $15 million from China's third-cycle IPF for use in that country's programme in 1980-1981.

The Council took several decisions in June affecting particular sectors of development assistance. It authorized acceptance of voluntary contributions for projects to help developing countries meet urgent energy needs (see p. 704), and it increased the allocation for industrial development activities (see p. 656). It invited countries, in preparing their country programmes, to give due attention to the Declaration of Principles and the Programme of Action adopted by the 1979 World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development,<sup>1</sup> and to ensure that the priorities identified in the 1977 Mar del Plata Action Plan for the development of water resources<sup>2</sup> were met by the end of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990). It clarified aspects of UNDP's role in response to natural disasters (see p.975).

Programme and project approvals

Eleven new country programmes were approved by the UNDP Governing Council in 1980—for the Comoros, Ethiopia, Guatemala, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malawi, Niue, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka and Viet Nam. It also approved six global projects—to test rural water-supply hand pumps and small-scale solar-powered systems, develop low-cost water and sanitation techniques, promote technology transfer on root and tuber crops and research and development on cotton, and assess world renewable marine resources.

While field programme expenditures rose sharply for the third consecutive year, the volume of project commitments declined for the first time since the financially constrained year of 1976, dropping by 5 per cent to $668.1 million. The projected costs of country projects approved in 1980 are shown in the following table by region, together with the costs of approved regional, interregional and global projects (in millions of United States dollars).

Asia and the Pacific	233.1
Africa	188.1
Arab States	66.3
Latin America	51.0
Europe	12.6
Regional	99.4
Interregional	13.1
Global	4.5
Total	668.1

The Council established an IPF of $5.6 million for newly independent Zimbabwe for 1980-1981. In response to critical economic problems faced by several countries, it authorized increased aid during the current programming cycle for Djibouti ($1,295,000), Equatorial

Guinea ($258,000), Nicaragua ($323,300), Saint Vincent and the Grenadines ($620,000) and Tonga ($128,000). As a consequence of a cyclone which struck Fiji, it authorized $1 million in additional assistance for that country. It authorized continued allocations for recovery and rehabilitation of drought-stricken countries in the Sudano-Sahelian region of Africa (see p. 969), and it requested the establishment of a special programme to reconstruct the economies of drought-stricken African countries and shield them from the consequences of drought (see p. 969). It decided to review Uganda's situation in 1981.

Provision of operational, executive and administrative personnel

Under a plan for providing operational, executive and administrative personnel in the field of public administration, experts were appointed as officials of recipient Governments, while at the same time remaining in the employ of the United Nations or of the specialized agencies participating in the scheme. The experts trained nationals to take over from them as quickly as possible.

In 1980, UNDP financed 131 operational experts in the following 40 developing countries and territories: Angola (5), Bahrain (2), Bangladesh (3), Barbados (1), Bolivia (3), Botswana (13), Burundi (1), Cayman Islands (1), Comoros (1), Cook Islands (4), Cyprus (2), Ethiopia (1), Fiji (5), Ghana (7), Haiti (3), Jamaica (1), Jordan (4), Kenya (2), Lebanon (1), Lesotho (2), Malawi (6), Malaysia (5), Mozambique (4), Nigeria (5), Niue (3), Oman (4), Saint Vincent and the Grenadines (1), Samoa (5), Singapore (1), Solomon Islands (3), Sri Lanka (2), Swaziland (7), Tonga (5), Trinidad and Tobago (2), Turks and Caicos Islands (1), Tuvalu (1), Uganda (1), United Arab Emirates (1), United Republic of Tanzania (11), Zambia (1).

Special funds and activities

The number of special funds and activities administered under UNDP auspices continued to expand in 1980, as the Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development began operational activities and as UNDP assumed country-level responsibility for project expenditures under the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women. An interim energy account was also initiated to help accommodate the rapidly increasing need for pre-investment and exploration work on energy resources. Taken together, the number of special funds and activities administered under the Programme, including trust funds for Bangladesh, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zaire, totalled 16, not including the Programme's emergency assistance activities.

In accord with the General Assembly's 1977 resolution on restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system, designating the UNDP country-programming process as a frame of reference for other funding programmes within the United Nations system,<sup>3</sup> the Administrator, early in 1980, instructed the field office network to include the work of each of the allied funds in country programming and in periodic programme reviews. The activities of the United Nations Capital Development Fund, the United Nations Volunteers, the Interim Fund for Science and Technology, and the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration were singled out for particular attention in this respect.

United Nations Capital Development Fund

The United Nations Capital Development Fund, which provided small-scale capital assistance mainly to least developed countries, registered continued growth in resources and programme activities in 1980. The restructuring of the Fund's management, increased donor support and a doubling of Fund expenditure permitted a significantly rising level of delivery. Voluntary contributions of $29.5 million for 1980 were received from 31 developed and developing countries, and pledges for 1981 totalled an estimated $27.5 million. The 1980 contributions represented a 16 per cent increase in Fund resources over 1979, bringing total cumulative contributions to more than $121 million.

The system of partial funding of projects approved by the Governing Council in 1979 enabled the Fund to increase its programming capacity beyond immediately available resources. New commitments approved in 1980 amounted to about $53 million, bringing total cumulative commitments to over $165 million. At year's end, the Fund was financing 168 development projects in 35 least developed countries. (See also p. 606.)

United Nations Volunteers

The United Nations Volunteers programme, which completed its first decade in 1980, continued to respond to developing countries' increasing requests for middle- and upper-level operational expertise. A record number of 421 volunteers were placed in the field, bringing the total in active service to 863 by 31 December. These volunteers represented 79 nationalities on assignment in 87 developing countries. They were serving in more than 325 projects and working with some 20 executing and participating United Nations agencies. They included engineers, agronomists, vocational teachers, medical doctors, economists, statisticians and representatives of nearly 50 other professional categories. Contributions from 14 Governments and other income for these activities came to $1.8 million for 1980, including $500,000 from UNDP revenue reserves; expenditures totalled $1.4 million. Pledges for 1981, from 13 countries, exceeded $525,000. (See also p. 592.)

United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration

Six projects became operational in 1980 under the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration—in Guyana, Kenya, Liberia, the Philippines, the Sudan and Suriname. This brought to nine the number of operational projects under way at the end of the year. Six new projects—more than in any prior year—were approved in 1980, for Benin, the Congo, Egypt, Guyana, the Philippines and the Upper Volta.

The Fund's income in 1980 amounted to $6.2 million, including contributions of $3.5 million from two countries, and expenditures totalled $4.8 million. The Fund had a balance of $20.5 million at the end of 1980.

The Fund, established in 1973 to provide risk capital for natural resources exploration in developing countries, demonstrated a growing capacity to implement projects in a timely manner: the average time-lag between ratification by Governments of the project agreements and the initiation of project activities was two months. (See also p. 710.)

United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries

Handicapped by a low level of resources, the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries could assist on only a very modest scale in overcoming the special transit and transport problems of land-locked developing countries related to their geographic situation. As sufficient funds for additional programming did not become available until November 1980, only one new project was approved in the year. Ten projects were operational in 1980, for two of which field activities were completed. Income during the year was $199,197, including $115,505 contributed by seven countries. Expenditures were $176,457. (See also p. 550.)

Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development

The UNDP Administrator declared the Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development operational on 19 May 1980. In its first year, the Fund received more than 800 project proposals from 80 Governments, and an initial 19 projects were approved for developing countries in all parts of the world, with another 24 near readiness. The Fund's core staff appraised and approved projects covering such areas as remote sensing, metallurgy technology, photovoltaic material, energy-related technologies, tea production, low-cost housing, agricultural research, the utilization of chemical wastes and geological cartography. The Fund's component in the cost of these projects totalled $16 million.

On 27 March 1980, a Pledging Conference for the Interim Fund was held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, at which 35 Governments pledged $25.8 million for 1980-1981. In addition, 39 countries announced their decision to contribute but did not specify the amount or timing. Pledged and indicated resources by 31 December totalled about $50 million—one fifth of the target of $250 million for the biennium initially agreed at the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development in 1979.<sup>4</sup> Income in 1980 was $7.2 million, of which $7 million was contributed by 19 countries. Expenditures totalled $880,000. (See also p. 678.)

Assistance to national liberation movements

Following the independence of Zimbabwe in April 1980, most UNDP assistance to African national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity was extended to the South West Africa People's Organization (12 projects) in Namibia, and to the African National Congress (6 projects) and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (6 projects) in South Africa. Included were projects of educational assistance, community development, postal, telecommunication, agricultural and vocational training, and health services.

For UNDP'S second programming cycle (1977-1981), contributions and interest accrued under the Trust Fund for Assistance to Colonial Countries and Peoples amounted to $4.5 million as at 31 December 1980. Of this amount, more than $3.5 million was committed to projects. In addition, under the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, UNDP was financing nine projects from combined Namibia IPF and Trust Fund resources at a total commitment of $5.4 million. Another 36 projects managed by UNDP were funded exclusively by the United Nations Fund for Namibia. (See also pp. 1063 and 1112.)

United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office

Established in 1973, the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office had been mandated by the General Assembly to act as the central coordinating mechanism of the United Nations for implementing the medium- and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programmes of the drought-stricken Sahelian countries. It was also responsible for assisting, on behalf of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), a group of countries of the Sudano-Sahelian and adjacent regions in the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification,<sup>5</sup> a joint UNDP/UNEP venture.

Under its first mandate, the Office continued in 1980 to assist the eight member countries of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel—Cape Verde, Chad, the Gambia, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger, Senegal and the Upper Volta. Three countries—Djibouti, Guinea and Guinea-Bissau—were added to the original list of 15 countries which the Office assisted under its second mandate: Cape Verde, Chad, Ethiopia, Gambia, Kenya, Mali, Mauritania, Niger, Nigeria, Senegal, Somalia, Sudan, Uganda, United Republic of Cameroon, Upper Volta.

The number of projects under the first mandate increased to 113 (25 regional and 88 national), requiring financing of $646 million. By the end of 1980, approximately $368 million of this amount had become available from bilateral and multilateral sources, including more than $51 million contributed by and through the United Nations Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities.

A total of 118 anti-desertification projects, some of them already operational, costing $644 million, were identified and formulated with the Governments of the region and submitted to the Office for assistance in resource mobilization. Of this total, $401 million was already available, including $22.4 million mobilized by the Office for 40 projects (33 national and 7 regional). The Trust Fund provided $7.8 million of this sum, mainly as seed money to initiate projects capable of attracting and stimulating the flow of additional funds and to promote complementary, joint or parallel financing. (See also pp.729 and 968.)

Energy account

The UNDP Governing Council authorized the Administrator in June 1980, on an interim basis, to seek and accept voluntary contributions in cash or kind to undertake specific projects in the energy field designed to meet urgent needs for assistance to developing countries, especially the poorest among them. The Administrator accordingly addressed a letter to major donors inviting contributions, and followed this by a special appeal to all Governments prior to the November 1980 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities. Two contributions were pledged, and several Governments indicated an interest in contributing but did not notify the Administrator of the amount. (See also p. 704.)

Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women

Late in 1980, the Secretary-General delegated to UNDP responsibility for managing and administering international and regional projects of the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women. The Programme had already been assisting the Fund in developing project proposals and appraising requests for financing. The Fund's resources were used for technical co-operation activities, regional, international and joint interorganizational programmes, research, communication support and public information activities. Priority was given to the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries, and special consideration was given to projects in rural areas. (See also p. 907.)

Emergency activities

Each year, UNDP'S network of country offices is called on to assist in emergency or disaster relief operations on behalf of the United Nations system, often co-ordinating the system's response on behalf of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator. During 1980, UNDP assisted in emergency situations in Algeria, Djibouti, the Caribbean, Ethiopia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Uganda and Viet Nam, as well as aid to Kampucheans. (See also UNITED NATIONS DISASTER RELIEF, p. 967.)

United Nations Trust Fund for Operational Programme in Lesotho

Established to finance operational and administrative experts' posts in Lesotho, the United Nations Trust Fund for Operational Programme in Lesotho covered a variety of fields, from industrial development and educational planning to road transportation and tourism. These activities aimed at helping Lesotho develop sound government infrastructures. Allocations of $2,115,530 were issued in 1980. Sweden was the sole contributor to the Fund, giving $1.2 million in 1980 and pledging another $1.4 million for 1981.

United Nations Trust Fund for Operational Personnel in Swaziland

With purposes similar to the Trust Fund for Lesotho, the United Nations Trust Fund for the Provision of Operational Personnel in Swaziland received $364,078 from Sweden in 1980 and a $345,981 pledge from that country for 1981. No allocations were issued in 1980.

Funds for Bangladesh and Zaire

Funds transferred to the UNDP Administrator in 1973 from the former United Nations Special Relief Office in Bangladesh continued to be used for projects proposed by the Bangladesh Government within the framework of relief and rehabilitation activities. Unspent allocations from these funds stood at $602,564 as of 31 December 1980.

A balance of $16,336 remained as of 31 December in the Trust Fund Programme for the Republic of Zaire. Full-scale operations under this Fund ended in 1971.

Finances

Expenditures

Expenditures of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) totalled $934.1 million in 1980. Of this, $889.5 million was from the main UNDP account, $39.3 million was from special-purpose trust funds and $5.3 million was spent on the Junior Professional Officers' Programme.

The field programme accounted for $677.6 million in expenditures from the main account, up from $547.6 million in 1979. Most of the rest of the outlay was for support costs, including the expenses involved in administering the programme from UNDP and agency headquarters.

While developing country Governments executed $8 million in UNDP project expenditure in 1980, executing agencies—most of them belonging to the United Nations system—continued to account for the preponderance of project delivery. The table below details expenditure by executing agency (amounts are in millions of United States dollars; totals may disagree due to rounding).

In addition, the African Development Bank, UNEP and the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations had the status of executing agency in 1980.

Income

Total UNDP income from all sources in 1980 amounted to $897.5 million, of which $691.8 million came from voluntary contributions received from Governments for the main account. While voluntary contributions were less than 2 per cent above the 1979 level, total income rose by almost 3 per cent, due in large measure to a continued increase in cost-sharing arrangements under which Governments and other organizations financed in whole or in part the foreign-exchange costs of UNDP-supported projects and programmes. Cost-sharing rose by 39 per cent to a record $58.2 million in 1980, mostly from developing countries.

During 1980, UNDP holdings of accumulated non-convertible currencies amounted to $45.1 million, an increase of $900,000 compared to 1979. The balance was some $3.9 million more than anticipated, due to inability to arrange conversion of the Programme's holdings in Iran and receipt of additional Iranian rials in payment of the 1979 pledge, and also to the fact that the conversion of roubles as agreed in 1979 with the USSR was not completed. The Administrator continued his efforts to resolve these problems.

The Governing Council, on 27 June, after reviewing the Administrator's reports on UNDP programmes and finances for 1979, appealed to Governments to renew their efforts to enable the Programme to achieve its target for the 1977-1981 development cycle of a 14 per cent annual growth rate, and to make their contributions in readily usable or convertible currencies. It requested the Administrator to consult with Governments on the modalities for improved resource planning for the future financing of the Programme. It decided that 25 per cent of what UNDP expected to receive or spend in any given year during the 1982-1986 cycle should be set aside in an Operational Reserve, to be used to tide the Programme over periods when expected funds were slow in arriving or when costs rose above planned outlays.

The Economic and Social Council (resolution 1980/65) and the General Assembly (resolution 35/83) also appealed for contributions to enable UNDP to meet its 14 per cent annual growth target (see p. 593).

Contributions for 1980 and 1981

Voluntary contributions paid by 132 Governments to the main UNDP account totalled $691.8 million in 1980, an increase of 1.8 per cent over collections for 1979.

Pledges for 1981 totalling $480.3 million were announced by 107 countries as of 31 December 1980. This included pledges by 97 Governments at the 1980 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, on 6 and 7 November.

Decisions of intergovernmental bodies

among developing countries

The High-level Meeting on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries held its first session at Geneva from 26 May to 2 June 1980. Attended by 116 countries and by representatives of organizations taking part in the United Nations development system, and open to all States participating in the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the Meeting was authorized by the General Assembly in 1978<sup>6</sup> in response to a recommendation contained in the Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, adopted earlier that year by the United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, held at Buenos Aires, Argentina.<sup>7</sup>

The purpose of the Meeting, as defined by the Conference, was to review progress in implementing the tasks entrusted to the United Nations development system by the Buenos Aires Plan of Action, ensure that efforts to strengthen technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC) were sustained within that system, support new policies and approaches to further the development of TCDC, consider the availability of funds and their effective use by the United Nations system, and ensure co-ordination of TCDC activities in that system.

The Meeting adopted eight decisions by consensus on 2 June. In the first of these, it urged United Nations organizations to give sufficient attention to programming and implementing TCDC activities, and invited Governments of developing countries to promote and publicize them, give special attention to their potential in controlling the "brain drain" of skilled personnel, disseminate information on national experiences and needs in this sphere, and give attention to the important role of voluntary agencies and the private sector in supporting governmental activities. It invited developed countries to supply information to UNDP on what they had done to implement the Buenos Aires Plan.

By another decision, the Meeting made several suggestions for enhancing the capacities of developing countries for technical co-operation. Re-affirming that the use and enhancement of such capacities was an important means of strengthening TCDC, it invited developing countries to exchange information on available expertise, use a result-oriented approach in planning and carrying out projects, give stronger emphasis to TCDC in designing and implementing their development plans, and establish or strengthen national focal points or co-ordinating mechanisms for TCDC. It invited development banks and funds to make broader use of the capacities and supplies of developing countries, and requested United Nations organizations to ensure a flow of information on TCDC to developing countries, make it easier for TCDC to form part of technical co-operation country programmes, play a catalytic and innovative role in promoting TCDC, ensure that their field officials were in a position to help, identify opportunities for using developing countries' expertise and supplies, help in identifying and promoting joint ventures among developing countries, and arrange for co-operation on training. The UNDP Administrator was requested to recommend further steps in this area at the next session of the High-level Meeting, scheduled for 1981.

On the issue of funding, the Meeting recommended that developing countries consider earmarking for TCDC activities a percentage of the aid given them by UNDP and study the availability of funds from non-governmental sources. Developed countries were invited to provide additional financial support for TCDC and use part of their development aid to that end when requested. Development banks and funds were invited to supplement national efforts for TCDC and make greater use in their projects of the capacities of developing countries. The governing bodies of United Nations organizations were urged to allot more of their technical co-operation funds for TCDC. The UNDP Governing Council was requested to review the possibility of making more money available for TCDC, facilitate the flexible use of country indicative planning figures (IPFS) for such activities, and consider having UNDP finance local currency costs. The Administrator was asked to collect and disseminate information on all potential sources for financing TCDC.

With a view to establishing and strengthening national research and training centres of multi-national scope, the Meeting requested developing countries to identify new and existing centres capable of participating in TCDC, asked UNDP and other United Nations bodies to help compile and disseminate such information, requested that such centres be strengthened through mutual support of developing countries as well as support from international organizations and developed countries, and requested

To promote the sharing of experience among developing countries on urbanization and poverty, the Meeting called on those countries to share what they had learned about planning and dealing with rural and urban problems, called on United Nations organizations and developed countries to provide financial and technical support, and recommended that international organizations carry out regional and interregional studies.

With regard to transport and communications, the Meeting invited developing countries to co-operate in strengthening their linkages, called on United Nations organizations to mobilize their efforts to expand work in this sphere, urged UNDP to make maximum use of TCDC for projects in this area and requested it to prepare a paper on possible interregional TCDC activities in support of the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1978-1988), recommended that specific and practical efforts be taken to strengthen the infrastructures of the least developed and other disadvantaged countries, and urged the international community to respond to requests from developing countries.

Reaffirming the importance of women's role in development, the Meeting called on the UNDP Administrator to support private and public organizations in the developing countries in the preparation of studies and reports on their experience in this regard.

Finally, the Meeting decided to give attention at its next session to identifying economic potentials which could be developed through joint ventures between developing countries, and to defining existing and possible structures for co-operation on TCDC in the United Nations system.

After examining these recommendations at its June session, the UNDP Governing Council endorsed the proposal for the flexible use of country IPFS for TCDC purposes, on the understanding that this be regarded only as a supplement to financing by developing countries themselves, that a country's IPF could be used for financing its own inputs in TCDC projects or inputs of other developing countries, that local costs could be absorbed by the Programme only for projects designated by the Administrator, and that UNDP procedures would be used for project approval, hiring and procurement. As recommended by the Meeting, the Council invited the Administrator to submit proposals for policy and rules changes in this regard to the 1981 session of the Meeting and then to the Council. It decided as an exceptional measure to allocate an additional amount of up to $500,000 for TCDC studies.

By resolution 1980/64 of 25 July, adopted without vote, the Economic and Social Council took note with satisfaction of the Meeting's report and commended it and the decisions therein to the General Assembly's attention. This resolution was approved without vote on 18 July by the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, where it was sponsored by Argentina, Romania, Spain and the United Republic of Tanzania.

The Assembly acted on this matter by urging all States to take immediate steps to implement the decisions adopted by the Meeting. By resolution 35/202, adopted without vote on 16 December, it also decided that the Meeting would henceforth be called the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, as the Meeting had recommended. It requested the UNDP Administrator to convene the next session in June 1981, invited all UNDP participants to be represented at a high level and requested the executive heads of United Nations organizations to participate actively.

This resolution was approved by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 20 November, also without vote. The text was submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of consultations on an earlier draft submitted by Venezuela on behalf of the United Nations Member States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries. The Venezuelan draft was withdrawn after the Vice-Chairman's text was submitted. The operative provisions of the drafts were essentially the same, except that a reference was added to the renamed Committee's having the same frame of reference and functions as those outlined in the Buenos Aires Plan of Action.

Czechoslovakia, speaking on behalf of the group of socialist countries of Eastern Europe, recalled the position taken by that group at the 1979 Assembly session that the costs of the High-level Meeting should be borne by voluntary contributions rather than the United Nations regular budget.

The subject of TCDC was also dealt with in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (1981-1990), adopted by the Assembly on 5 December 1980 and annexed to resolution 35/56 (see p. 499). According to the Strategy, developing countries would promote economic and technical co-operation among themselves as a basic component of efforts to establish the new international economic order, and the international community would support and assist those efforts on the basis of proposals of developing countries. (For text of relevant provisions (section III J) of the Strategy, see p. 515.)

Role of national personnel in the development of developing countries

Suggestions for enhancing the role of qualified national personnel in the social and economic development of developing countries were set out in a report by the UNDP Administrator dated 21 March 1980. Requested by the General Assembly in 1978,<sup>8</sup> the report was submitted to the UNDP Governing Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly.

The report suggested that Governments foster links between human resources development and other economic and social objectives, and promote complementary formal and non-formal education and training and the effective use of qualified national personnel in all economic areas and at all levels of skill and responsibility. To enhance human resources development, they should review their employment, investment, education, social and cultural, science and technology, and planning policies. They should ensure that national policies and programmes were formulated in a long-term perspective and integrated in development planning, and should plan and monitor human resources development on the basis of a comprehensive manpower management system. Special care should be taken to provide equal opportunities for women and men. While the bulk of resources would have to be mobilized internally, partly through savings realized by greater efficiency, external resources would be increasingly needed. Governments might make maximum use of expertise in other developing countries and might review the role of the civil service in training and utilizing qualified personnel.

The report also contained specific recommendations on the role of national personnel in industry, science and technology, public health, rural development and foreign trade. In addition, it suggested a variety of approaches to improve general, technical and vocational training, to reverse the brain drain from developing countries, and to make effective use of the skills of workers who had voluntarily migrated.

The report proposed ways in which United Nations technical co-operation might help, by establishing "skills data banks" to keep a country informed of the availability of trained national personnel, making greater use of national experts, helping national institutions to ensure their proper execution of contracted activities, recognizing the need for long-term funding for training, and institutionalizing ad hoc training at available institutions. United Nations organizations could also collaborate in analyses and planning to identify needs for human resources development in different sectors.

The UNDP Governing Council endorsed these conclusions on 17 June and transmitted the Administrator's report to the Economic and Social Council, which likewise endorsed them. By resolution 1980/63 of 25 July, adopted without vote, the Economic and Social Council recommended that United Nations organizations, within their established procedures, continue giving due attention to the urgent need for qualified national personnel in activities to expand TCDC. It invited developing countries to strengthen their national capacities to pursue a balanced policy for enhancing the role of national personnel in development. It transmitted the report to the Assembly for consideration of possible United Nations action.

This resolution was approved without objection by the Third Committee on 18 July. Sponsored by Bulgaria, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, Hungary, Mongolia and Poland, it incorporated oral amendments by the United Kingdom, accepted by the sponsors, adding the paragraph inviting national efforts as well as adding the phrase "within their established procedures" to the paragraph on the role of United Nations organizations.

Democratic Kampuchea expressed concern about this resolution, stating that effective control was needed to ensure that occupation forces in countries where puppet regimes had been established did not make use of international assistance for their own purposes. Mongolia, which had introduced the text, stated that this comment was unrelated to the resolution.

The General Assembly, by resolution 35/80 adopted without vote on 5 December, commended the Administrator's report and recommendations to the developing countries and invited United Nations organizations to give the recommendations due attention with a view to contributing to their implementation within established procedures and possibilities. It called on developed countries to help developing countries increase their national training capacities and strengthen the role of trained national personnel in development. It invited developing countries, in accordance with their development priorities and programmes, to continue to pay special attention to achieving educational equality for all, eliminating illiteracy, increasing the role of government in education, instituting compulsory education for all school-age children, and achieving the planned development of national educational and training systems. It invited recipient Governments and the UNDP Governing Council to take account of the urgent need for qualified national personnel while identifying UNDP inter-country projects. It requested the Director-

General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to arrange for the dissemination of information on the experience of countries in this area and to submit a progress report in 1982.

This resolution was approved without vote by the Second Committee on 31 October. It was submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on an earlier draft presented by Mongolia on behalf of 23 countries (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). The earlier text was then withdrawn by its sponsors. It was essentially the same as the approved text, except that the latter included the phrase "in accordance with their national development priorities and programmes" in paragraph 5, by which the Assembly invited developing countries to continue to pay special attention to certain measures for improving their training systems.

United Nations Volunteers

The Governing Council of UNDP took note on 27 June 1980 of a report by the UNDP Administrator on the activities of the United Nations Volunteers programme in 1979. Noting with satisfaction that some 800 volunteers were serving in 82 developing countries, the Council acknowledged the programme's increasing role in technical co-operation. In the expectation that the programme would play a significant role in preparations for the International Youth Year (1985) (see p. 1012), it requested the United Nations Volunteers to take account of the need to co-operate with agencies having youth programmes. It asked the Administrator to submit proposals in 1981 for adequate staffing of the programme, taking account of its expansion. It again invited Governments to contribute or increase their contributions so that the United Nations Volunteers could continue to expand.

The Governing Council requested the Administrator, after consulting delegations, to recommend to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, that the title of the programme's Co-ordinator should be more appropriately named to reflect his responsibilities and functions. The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1980/65 of 25 July on the report of the Governing Council (see p. 593), took note of this decision and requested the Administrator to pursue his consultations and submit to the Assembly his recommendations on the Co-ordinator's title.

On 5 December, the Assembly noted that the title of the programme's head would be changed from Co-ordinator to Executive Co-ordinator. This provision was part of decision 35/421, the text of which, as submitted by a Vice-Chairman of the Second Committee, was approved by that Committee on 31 October. Action in both bodies was taken without vote. (See also p. 584.)

Agency support costs

The General Assembly approved on 17 December 1980 a new formula to determine the amounts paid by UNDP to agencies executing its projects, to reimburse them for their costs in providing administrative and other support for project execution. Under this formula, approved by the UNDP Governing Council on 27 June, on the recommendation of its Intergovernmental Working Group on Support Costs, the reimbursement rate was fixed at 13 per cent of annual project expenditures, down from the previous 14 per cent. The new rate was to apply for the period 1982 to 1991.

According to the Governing Council's decision, some executing agencies would continue to be granted flexibility, in the form of a higher reimbursement rate, but the UNDP Administrator was to review those arrangements and recommend guidelines, including eligibility ceilings. As a safeguard applicable through 1986, no agency would receive less reimbursement in United States dollar terms than it received in 1981, except that the reimbursement would never be allowed to rise above 14 per cent. Also, where actual support costs could be identified, they would establish the upper limit for reimbursement. Hardship cases due to currency exchange fluctuations would be dealt with on an ad hoc basis under guidelines to be recommended by the Administrator. The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) would continue to be reimbursed at the rate of 11 per cent. Each agency was requested to present details of what it had spent to support UNDP projects during the previous year.

Governments and agency governing bodies were urged to apply this formula to other technical co-operation activities, including those financed from trust funds. The Administrator was requested to review reimbursement arrangements for activities where a percentage formula did not currently apply.

Expressing deep concern that support costs continued to be high and stating that they should be reduced without adding to the regular budgets of agencies, the Governing Council invited the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly to recommend that agencies review their operational support systems, working methods, arrangements and staffing with a view to making significant cost reductions. It requested the Administrator to continue to control and reduce such costs for UNDP, and to set 12 per cent of total programme costs as an initial policy objective for programme support and administrative services budgets.

The Economic and Social Council endorsed this decision in resolution 1980/65 of 25 July, which dealt with various matters raised in the Governing Council's report (see following section). As the UNDP Council had proposed, it recommended that the Programme's executing agencies review their operational support systems, working methods, arrangements and staffing with a view to making significant reductions in support costs.

The Assembly's decision to approve the new formula was taken by 128 votes to 10, and was included as section V of resolution 35/217, on miscellaneous budgetary matters. The Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee approved this decision on 3 November by a recorded vote, requested by the USSR, of 84 to 10. Approval had been recommended by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions. The text, which included taking note of the Advisory Committee's report, was proposed orally by the Fifth Committee Chairman.

The USSR, which voted against the decision, reiterated its position that the United Nations should be fully reimbursed for the services it provided for the execution of UNDP programmes. The reduction of the reimbursement rate would increase the burden on the regular budget, which would have to make up the difference.

By resolution 35/83 of 5 December, dealing with various matters raised in the Governing Council's annual report (see next section), the Assembly noted with approval the Council's decision on reimbursement rates and its recommendation that executing agencies should review their operational support systems, working methods, arrangements and staffing with a view to significant reductions in support costs. An earlier version of this text would have had the Assembly note this decision rather than note it with approval.

Report of the Governing Council

The Governing Council of UNDP held two sessions in 1980—a special meeting at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 11 to 20 February, concerned mainly with preparations for the third programming cycle (see p. 582), and the twenty-seventh regular session, held at Geneva from 2 to 30 June.

The Governing Council's report was examined by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly. Both adopted resolutions dealing with a number of matters contained in that report, notably the need for more voluntary contributions to UNDP.

The Council, by resolution 1980/65 of 25 July, adopted without vote, urged Governments to renew their efforts to provide UNDP with the resources it needed to achieve the target of a 14 per cent annual growth rate for the 1977-1981 development cycle, thereby providing a sound financial basis to plan for the following cycle and strengthening the Programme's role as the central funding and co-ordinating body for multi-lateral technical co-operation in the United Nations system.

On other matters, the Council commended to the Assembly's attention UNDP actions to involve developing countries more closely in determining priorities for intercountry programmes and in identifying and initiating regional activities, and drew to its attention several other decisions on restructuring operational activities (see p. 570). It took note of a Governing Council decision on agency expenditures on technical co-operation from sources other than UNDP, transmitted to the Assembly for consideration a Governing Council decision on the United Nations Capital Development Fund (see p. 607), and endorsed the decision on reimbursement of support costs (see previous section).

This resolution was approved without objection by the Third Committee on 21 July, on the basis of a text sponsored by Indonesia, Kenya, Nepal, Senegal, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania, as orally revised by the sponsors and incorporating oral amendments by the United Kingdom and the United States which the sponsors accepted. The changes affected the paragraph on the Capital Development Fund (see p. 607).

By resolution 35/83 of 5 December, adopted without vote, the General Assembly expressed deep concern that the rate of increase in 1980 resources had fallen far short of the UNDP target. The Assembly urged all Governments to give UNDP the resources it needed for its current programming cycle (1977-1981), which was based on an annual resource growth rate of 14 per cent. Such action, the Assembly added, would provide the sound financial basis needed for planned activities in the next cycle (1982-1986), which assumed the same growth rate. It stressed that realization of the goals and objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (1981-1990) (see p. 503, esp. section II) would require renewed emphasis on technical co-operation and a significant increase in resources.

The Assembly also noted with approval the Governing Council's decision on reimbursement of agency support costs (see preceding section).

This resolution was approved without vote by the Second Committee on 31 October. It was submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of consultations on an earlier draft sponsored by Denmark, Finland, the Netherlands, Norway and Sweden, and by Venezuela on behalf of the Group of 77. The earlier draft was withdrawn by its sponsors after the Vice-Chairman's text was submitted. The main difference between the two texts concerned the paragraph on support costs.

After approval of this text by the Second Committee, Hungary, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Poland and the USSR, reiterated their reservation with regard to the Governing Council's decision on the 1982-1986 programming cycle that World Bank data could not be used for determining IPFS of countries which were not members of that agency. Also, they attached great importance to the need to observe fully the voluntary nature of contributions to UNDP.

The Economic and Social Council.

Having considered the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on its twenty-seventh session and the record of the special meeting on preparations for the third programming cycle, 1982-1986, held in New York from 11 to 20 February 1980,

8. Urges all Governments to renew their efforts to provide the United Nations Development Programme with the necessary resources to enable it to achieve the target set for the 1977-1981 development cycle, which is predicated on an annual growth rate of 14 per cent, thereby providing a sound financial basis for the planning of activities for the third programming cycle and strengthening the role of the Programme as the central funding and co-ordinating body for multilateral technical co-operation within the United Nations system.

A/35/628. Report of Second Committee, draft resolution V.

Resolution 35/83, as recommended by Second Committee, A/35/628, adopted without vote by Assembly on 5 December 1980, meeting 84.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also its resolution 32/114 of 15 December 1977, in which it, inter alia, urged all States to take measures to provide the United Nations Development Programme with the necessary resources to fulfil the aims, objectives and programmes established in the second programming cycle, 1977-1981, and especially to achieve and even exceed the overall annual growth rate of 14 per cent for voluntary contributions, on which the indicative planning figures for the cycle were based,

Recalling further Economic and Social Council resolution 2024(LXI) of 4 August 1976 on operational activities for development,

Reaffirming the validity of the consensus of 1970, as set forth in the annex to General Assembly resolution 2688(XXV) of 11 December 1970,

Considering that the United Nations Development Programme is making an important contribution to the accelerated development of developing countries,

Noting with appreciation the continuing increase in programme delivery and the measures taken by the Governing Council and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to improve the quality and efficiency of programme operations and to enhance proper harmonization and complementarity in the technical co-operation activities of the organizations of the United Nations system,

Deeply concerned that the rate of increase in the resources for 1980 of the United Nations Development Programme fell far short of the target,

Having considered the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on its twenty-seventh session,

1. Takes note of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on its twenty-seventh session:

2. Notes, in particular, decisions 80/6 of 20 February, 80/7 of 13 June and 80/9 of 17 June 1980, taken by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on the preparation for the third programming cycle, 1982-1986, on the strengthening of the country programming process through continuous programming and on the arrangements for enhancing the involvement of the developing countries in the planning of the regional programmes;

3. Notes with approval Governing Council decision 80/44 of 27 June 1980 concerning the reimbursement by the United Nations Development Programme of agency support costs and the recommendation that the executing agencies of the Programme should review their operational support systems, working methods, arrangements and staffing with a view to bringing about significant reductions in overall support costs;

4. Urges all Governments to renew their efforts to provide the United Nations Development Programme with the resources necessary for the implementation of activities for the second programming cycle, 1977-1981, which are based on an overall annual growth rate of resources of 14 per cent, thereby providing the sound financial basis needed to implement the Programme's planned activities during the third programming cycle, 1982-1986, which for the purpose of forward planning also assumes an overall average annual growth of resources of at least 14 per cent;

5. Stresses that the realization of the goals and objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade will require a renewed emphasis on technical co-operation and a significant increase in the resources provided for this purpose.

United Nations programmes of technical co-operation

The United Nations continued in 1980 to supply experts, award fellowships, provide advisory services, and organize workshops and study tours as part of the technical co-operation efforts of the United Nations system. In most cases, these activities were in fields not dealt with by any specialized agency, ranging from development planning and statistics to social development and human rights.

For much of this activity, the United Nations acted as an executing agency for the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), using UNDP funds to carry out projects approved by the Programme. It also received money from special-purpose trust funds, the largest of which was the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA). Its third main source of finance was the United Nations regular budget, which has had a technical assistance component since the early years of the Organization, known as the regular programme of technical co-operation.

The United Nations Secretariat's Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD), established in 1978 as part of the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system,<sup>9</sup> was responsible for just under half of United Nations technical co-operation expenditures in 1980, including all such activities managed from United Nations Headquarters, New York. The United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), through its Special Industrial Services programme, accounted for more than a quarter of the total. Also participating were the five United Nations regional commissions; in order of their technical co-operation expenditures during 1980, these were (1) the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, (2) the Economic Commission for Africa, (3) the Economic Commission for Latin America, (4) the Economic Commission for Western Asia and (5) the Economic Commission for Europe. The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements were the other suppliers of technical co-operation.

Activities during 1980

In 1980, the United Nations delivered a technical co-operation programme totalling $275 million, of which $185 million came from UNDP, $30 million from UNFPA, $48 million from other special-purpose trust funds and $12 million from the regular programme of technical co-operation, financed under the United Nations regular budget.

During 1980, 4,944 expert assignments were made and 5,524 fellowships were awarded, mainly by DTCD and UNIDO (see table, p. 600).

(For details of activities in particular sectors, such as human settlements, natural resources, population, social development and statistics, refer to listings in the SUBJECT INDEX under "Technical co-operation: sectors.")

Activities managed by DTCD

The Secretariat's main unit for technical co-operation, DTCD, expanded its project delivery by $34 million above the 1979 level. It executed a number of projects and provided advisory services focusing on the dissemination of information, the development of networks and the exchange of experience to promote technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC). Having transferred most regional projects to the regional commissions, it continued to co-operate with them on operational and administrative matters. It helped Governments prepare requests for assistance from UNDP and other technical co-operation sources, and it gave priority to the least developed countries in this and other sectors. It drew up an agreement with the World Health Organization establishing procedures to ensure that technical co-operation funds were used to promote projects with investment potential. The new Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development approved, for execution by DTCD, projects relating to remote sensing in China, water desalination in Cape Verde and energy planning in Seychelles.

Projects in Africa accounted for 39 per cent of DTCD expenditures. For other regions, the percentages were: Asia and the Pacific, 22; the Americas, 21; Arab States, 7; and Europe, 5. Of the remainder, interregional projects absorbed 5 per cent of the total and global projects 1 per cent (see table, p. 599).

The leading field of activity was natural resources, to which DTCD devoted 35 per cent of its expenditures. Other major fields included development planning and statistics, 19 per cent each; public administration and finance, 9 per cent; population, 6 per cent; human settlements, 3 per cent; and social development, 2.5 per cent (see table, p. 599). Activities under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa (see p. 294) made up 6 per cent of the total.

In co-operation with host Governments, DTCD organized a number of study tours, seminars and workshops in various fields. These included: a workshop on econometric model techniques for Costa Rica, at United Nations Headquarters; a study tour on groundwater exploration and development, a study tour/workshop on flood-loss prevention and control, and an interregional study tour on multidisciplinary demonstration projects in people's communes, all in China; and an interregional seminar on rural water supply, in Sweden. New institutional arrangements and emerging patterns of agreement between mineral-producing countries were examined by experts from developing countries and institutions concerned with mining finance at a meeting in the Federal Republic of Germany.

Noting that technical co-operation on a country level had been studied only infrequently, the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) submitted to the July 1980 session of the Economic and Social Council a report evaluating the technical co-operation activities of the United Nations in Sri Lanka. Out of some 500 United Nations-assisted projects active there during 1972-1978, JIU selected a sample of 79 for assessment. The Unit offered recommendations for enhancing the effectiveness of technical co-operation projects and technical assistance of the United Nations both in Sri Lanka and in general.

Regular programme of technical co-operation

The resources of the regular programme of technical co-operation were used in 1980 to assist the least developed countries and to promote TCDC, in implementation of new guidelines endorsed by the UNDP Governing Council (see next section). Advisory and other staff services were provided to assist least developed countries in preparing for the 1981 United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (see p. 545).

Missions were organized to help Governments prepare country programmes for UNDP financing and present technical co-operation requirements to other sources of funding. Other missions to least developed countries assessed mineral and energy exploration needs, and operated in such fields as water resources, tax reform, government information systems, geologic mapping, integrated rural development and use of non-conventional energy sources. The regular programme's funds were also used to enable technicians and officials in the least developed and other developing countries to participate in United Nations seminars, workshops and study tours, as well as to finance advisory services to Governments in a number of fields. For example, the programme of advisory services on human rights was financed from this source (see p. 870).

Decisions of intergovernmental organs

Following its annual review of United Nations technical co-operation activities, the Governing Council of UNDP decided in June 1980 to endorse guidelines proposed by the Secretary-General for the use of the regular programme of technical co-operation for the benefit of the least developed countries and for promoting TCDC. It invited the UNDP Administrator to take account of the special competence, experience and expertise of DTCD when designating executing agencies for UNDP-supported projects in the Department's fields of specialization. It also endorsed the use of such experience or expertise in support of the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration, and invited him to use DTCD for other funds and activities within its competence. Endorsing DTCD's proposals for strengthened ties between pre-investment activities and investment, it recommended that closer

In adopting the United Nations revised programme budget for 1980-1981, contained in resolution 35/226 A of 17 December 1980 (see p. 1197), the General Assembly increased the appropriation for the regular programme of technical co-operation, included in the budget when it was first adopted in 1979,<sup>10</sup> by $786,700 to a total of $28,034,800 for the biennium. In his performance report on the budget, the Secretary-General ascribed the increase to the effects of monetary inflation and changes in currency exchange rates.

United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities

1980 Pledging Conference

Government pledges to 12 United Nations funds and programmes for development activities were announced at the 1980 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, on 6 and 7 November. The Conference was attended by 135 States, of which 132 announced pledges or stated that their countries would do so in the near future. Written pledges by two other countries were announced at the Conference. The pledges were for 1981.

Total pledges for each of the funds and programmes, as announced at the Conference, are shown in the following table. (These figures are approximate and do not represent total contributions or confirmed pledges for the year; for revised tables of pledges and payments by country as of 31 December 1980, refer to SUBJECT INDEX for page reference to fund or programme.)

Some pledges were also announced at the Conference to the United Nations Environment Programme, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and the World Food Programme, which, like the funds and programmes for development activities, are financed from voluntary contributions.

Arrangements for future pledging conferences

The General Assembly, on 16 December 1980, took note of a note by the Secretariat listing 19 funds and programmes that would fall within the scope of future annual pledging conferences. In addition to the 12 for which pledges were made at the 1980 Conference (see preceding section), the list included the following: Special Account for Financing the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, Trust Fund for the Economic Commission for Western Asia Regional Activities, Trust Fund for the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, United Nations Trust Fund for African Development Activities, United Nations Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities. The note added that the list would be revised on the basis of future Assembly decisions.

The text of decision 35/441, which contained the provision taking note of the list, was approved, without objection, by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 20 November, on an oral proposal of its Chairman. The Assembly adopted it without vote.

Technical assistance received and provided during 1980 through the United Nations and related agencies

The technical co-operation activities of the United Nations system were carried out in more than 160 countries and territories during 1980. Countries with a per capita gross national product of less than $250 per year accounted for over one third of such expenditures.

Slightly over 50 per cent of the technical co-operation activities of the United Nations system were financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Extrabudgetary resources placed directly at the disposal of the specialized agencies and other organizations were the next most important source of funding, amounting to about 23 per cent. Three organizations (Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, World Health Organization, United Nations Department of Technical Cooperation for Development) accounted for about 50 per cent of total expenditures on technical co-operation. Four other organizations (International Labour Organisation, United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, United Nations Industrial Development Organization, UNDP) accounted for a further 25 per cent.

The following table, based on data compiled by UNDP, shows the cost of technical co-operation activities in individual countries financed by UNDP and by the regular budgets of the United Nations and related agencies, as well as the number of experts supplied by and to each country, the number of fellows sent to and from each country, and the cost of equipment ordered from and for each country. Information is also provided for intercountry activities.

<sup>d</sup>The figures given under the heading "Supplied by" are based on orders placed in the various countries during 1980, whereas the figures given under the heading "Received by" are based on estimated expenditure within the year. Consequently the totals of the two equipment columns differ somewhat.

United Nations Capital Development Fund

Activities in 1980

By the end of 1980, its sixth year of operations, the United Nations Capital Development Fund had committed $165.2 million since 1975 (see table) to 168 development projects in 35 countries identified by the General Assembly as among the least developed. Commitments of $52.8 million were approved in 1980 for 39 new projects. Programme expenditure totalled $19.3 million, a significant increase over 1979 expenditure of $8.9 million. Cumulative disbursements since 1975 totalled $53.9 million.

The major portion of the Fund's assistance in 1980 continued to be devoted to the rural sector, with emphasis on two areas: basic social infrastructure, such as provision of drinking water, schools and training institutions, health clinics, and low-cost housing and slum rehabilitation; and economic infrastructure and production inputs, such as feeder roads, water resources development and irrigation schemes, crop storage and distribution facilities, and small-scale agro-based and agriculture-related industries. Emphasis was also given to creating or strengthening credit facilities for subsistence farmers, fishermen and rural artisans through co-operative and other credit institutions. Other priority areas receiving increasing attention were energy in rural areas, and reforestation and rehabilitation of grazing and crop lands as a means of increasing revenue and combating desertification.

Of project commitments in 1980, 42 per cent were for water resources development. This included five projects in Africa and two in Asia aimed at development of both groundwater and surface water resources, and five projects in Africa and two in Asia for the provision of safe drinking water, primarily in rural areas. Other major sectors for which assistance was approved in 1980 were: construction of feeder roads (14 per cent of commitments), three projects in Africa; and crop storage and food distribution infrastructure (10 per cent of commitments), four projects in Africa and three in Asia.

Financial contributions

The resources of the United Nations Capital Development Fund came from voluntary contributions, most of them pledged by Governments at the annual United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (see p. 600). Contributions paid in 1980 totalled $29.5 million from 31 countries, and 37 countries pledged a total of $27.5 million for 1981 as of 31 December 1980 (see table).

Decisions of intergovernmental bodies

On 26 June 1980, the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), following its annual review of the activities of the United Nations Capital Development Fund, resolved that, as a matter of principle, the Fund should assume the financing of its own administrative costs. Until it could do so, it should reimburse UNDP for those expenses, with effect from 1 January 1980, from its earnings from interest on investments and foreign exchange transfers, unless those earnings were insufficient. The Governing Council requested the Economic and Social Council to recommend General Assembly endorsement of this decision.

By resolution 1980/65 of 25 July, on the Governing Council's report, the Economic and Social Council took note of this decision and transmitted it to the Assembly for its specific consideration.

In the Council's Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, the original draft of the resolution, sponsored by Indonesia, Kenya, Nepal, Senegal, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania, would have had the Council recommend that the Assembly endorse the Governing Council's decision. However, this was orally revised by the sponsors to have the Economic and Social Council simply take note of the decision. It was further altered by an oral amendment by the United Kingdom, accepted by the sponsors, adding the phrase by which the decision was transmitted to the Assembly for its specific consideration-the word "specific" being added as the result of a United States oral subamendment.

(For further details of resolution 1980/65, see p. 593.)

On 5 December, by decision 35/422, adopted without vote, the Assembly deferred until 1981 a decision on the administrative costs of the Fund and decided that meanwhile the Fund would continue to operate in conformity with measures laid down by the Assembly in 1967,<sup>11</sup> under which the Fund was administered by the UNDP Administrator and the Governing Council acted as its Executive Board.

This decision was approved without vote by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 4 November. It included an oral amendment by the Netherlands, accepted by the sponsor, the Upper Volta, to have the Assembly "take a decision" on the question in 1981, rather than "consider" it.

Comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development

Report by the Director-General

The Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation submitted in 1980 a report on policy issues pertaining to operational activities of the United Nations system. The report, circulated under a covering note by the Secretary-General dated 9 June, had been requested by the General Assembly in 1979.<sup>12</sup> It was discussed in 1980 by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC), the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly, and was the subject of Assembly resolution 35/81.

The report, prepared in consultation with the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), identified 20 major policy issues, mainly affecting technical co-operation for development. The first five of these were concerned with ways to secure and channel additional resources for development activities on a more predictable and continuous basis. In this area, the report recommended that consideration be given to introducing multiyear pledging, informing Governments of the total magnitude of resources likely to be made available from the United Nations system over a particular period, negotiating the shares which various contributors would provide to United Nations development activities, shifting resources to the least developed and other low-income countries, and developing a more concerted approach to the mobilization of funds for different activities.

The report drew attention to gaps in operational activities affecting priority areas defined by internationally agreed strategies, notably the restructuring of international economic relations, the strengthening of the bargaining capacity of the developing countries in all aspects of intergovernmental negotiations aimed at such restructuring, and the promotion of their collective self-reliance in pursuit of their objectives for mutual co-operation. More attention should also be paid to such areas as trade and industry, energy, technology and relations with transnational corporations. Future reviews of operational activities might be related to the review and appraisal of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (1981-1990) (see p. 489).

The report stated that policy and practice should be brought together by linking research and analysis more closely to operational activities. It also suggested that Governments, with United Nations assistance, should strengthen their programming of all external inputs, integrating them into their own programming and planning. United Nations organizations, to make their activities in individual countries more coherent, should introduce more systematic continuous programming by objectives, systematically inform Governments of how much they could expect from the United Nations during a particular period, and keep under review the new system of resident co-ordinators representing the United Nations system in each country (see following subchapter).

To achieve closer links between technical co-operation and investment, the report recommended that these activities be treated as an operational continuum. With the aim of promoting self-reliance among developing countries, it suggested that Governments progressively and rapidly assume responsibility for executing projects supported by the United Nations system. The capacities of United Nations regional commissions needed strengthening so that they could play an effective role in operational activities, especially in regard to regional, subregional and interregional co-operation.

Turning to measures to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of operational activities, the report suggested that greater attention be paid to the concept of partnership between funding organizations, such as the United Nations Development Programme, and the agencies that executed their programmes, as well as to the importance of interaction between operational activities and the organizations' other work. Also, States might agree to raising assessed budgets of organizations in some proportion to the increase in the level of operational activities. Perhaps the most promising path to economies lay in the progressive take-over by Governments of project management, including procurement, contracting and recruitment. Benefits could also result from greater uniformity in the administrative, financial, budgetary, personnel and planning procedures followed by different organizations.

Finally, the report suggested that future policy reviews focus on one or more system-wide issue, dealing with institutional or policy gaps in operational activities.

Decisions by intergovernmental bodies

The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, which considered a draft of the Director-General's report at its May/June session, welcomed it as the first attempt to see, in a comprehensive, objective and balanced manner, the progress made in attaining the objectives laid down by the General Assembly for restructuring operational activities.<sup>13</sup> The Committee discussed a number of the issues raised in the report, and several of its members voiced observations and reservations on individual points.

As CPC had recommended, the report was the main topic at the annual Joint Meetings of ACC and CPC, held at Geneva on 1 and 2 July. The participants generally supported the desirability of increasing resources for operational activities but differed as to whether this should be done by raising regular budgets or purely through voluntary contributions. The two Committees endorsed the need to ensure that international strategies were reflected in United Nations operational activities, and to strengthen interaction between those activities and the organizations' research and analysis functions. They called for the progressive assumption by Governments of the responsibility for executing projects supported by the United Nations system, and endorsed the need to improve links between technical co-operation, pre-investment activities and investment. Members of CPC urged that administrative and support costs be reduced to achieve maximum efficiency without impairing quality, while ACC members warned against the risk that quality could be reduced if overhead costs were cut too much.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, after considering the Director-General's report, adopted without vote resolution 1980/66, sponsored by Denmark, Finland, the Netherlands, Norway and Sweden. The text was approved without vote on 22 July by the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee.

By the resolution, the Council took note with appreciation of the report and its suggested approach to policy issues, recommended that the General Assembly should at its 1980 regular session select issues for action in the light of the report's recommendations and the Council's discussion, and invited the Assembly to agree on the contents of and procedures for regular policy reviews in future years, with particular reference to technical co-operation and bearing in mind the long-term orientation of operational activities of the United Nations. Taking up a recommendation by the Director-General, the Council invited the Assembly to consider grouping within a single analytical framework all types of operational activities for development performed by the United Nations system, without prejudice to the relationship agreements between the United Nations and the specialized agencies. Finally, the Council invited the Assembly to request such reports biennially.

This resolution incorporated a number of changes made orally by the sponsors following consultations, including the following:

- two preambular paragraphs were added, by which the Council recalled Assembly resolutions on the establishment of a new international economic order (suggested by Algeria) and referred to the importance of implementing the restructuring recommendations;

- paragraph 2 was changed, from an invitation to the Secretary-General to transmit the report to the specialized agencies for their information, to a recommendation that the Assembly invite him to transmit the report to the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system;

- paragraph 3 was added, containing the recommendation that the Assembly should select issues for action, and, on the suggestion of Pakistan, was revised to specify that this should be done in 1980; and

- to paragraph 4, on future policy reviews, were added phrases stating that the Assembly should take account of the Director-General's recommendations and the Council's current discussion, and that future reviews should make particular reference to technical co-operation supported by statistical material.

The revised text omitted a paragraph from the original draft suggesting a list of seven issues which the Assembly might select for priority consideration: increasing the flow of resources on a continuous and assured basis; strengthening operational capacities in areas critical for a balanced international economy; improving links between research and analysis functions; helping developing countries plan for external aid by informing them in advance of what resources they were likely to get from the United Nations system; strengthening links between technical co-operation and investment; making it easier for Governments progressively to assume responsibility for executing projects supported by the United Nations; and intensifying efforts to enhance efficiency and harmonization of procedures and to evaluate activities. Aspects of this list had been questioned by France and the United Kingdom.

The sponsors accepted a consequential change suggested by Pakistan that future reports by the Director-General should pay particular attention to issues selected by the Assembly, rather than those selected for priority consideration, and a suggestion by the United Kingdom that the clause in paragraph 4 by which the Assembly would be invited to bear in mind the long-term orientation of operational activities should be clarified by limiting the reference to activities of the United Nations system. On a suggestion of the Federal Republic of Germany, as modified by the Chairman, the sponsors agreed to add to paragraph 5, on the possibility of grouping all United Nations system operational activities in a single analytical framework, a phrase stating that this should be without prejudice to the relationship agreements between the United Nations and the specialized agencies.

After consideration of the Director-General's report in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the Assembly adopted without vote on 5 December resolution 35/81, reflecting the main themes of the discussion and in the light of the recommendations contained in the report.

Taking note of the report with appreciation, the Assembly affirmed that United Nations operational activities for development should contribute to the accelerated development of developing countries and to the implementation of the new International Development Strategy for the 1980s and thereby to the establishment of the new international economic order.

Expressing grave concern that financial contributions for such activities had not increased substantially and had, generally, fallen short of targets, the Assembly strongly reiterated the need for a substantial and real increase in the flow of resources on an increasingly predictable, continuous and assured basis. It strongly urged all donor countries, particularly those developed countries whose performance was not commensurate with their capacity, to increase their contributions rapidly and substantially, and it urged all countries able to do so to indicate their probable contributions for a multiyear period. It invited governing bodies of United Nations organizations to consider new and specific ways of mobilizing increased resources for operational activities.

With the aim of increasing efficiency and effectiveness in the management of operational activities, the Assembly invited United Nations organizations and bodies to develop recommendations on measures to reduce administrative and other support costs, to achieve maximum uniformity and harmonization of procedures, and to improve project procedures. It also invited the Secretary-General and the heads of United Nations organizations and bodies to adopt, in the mean time, all possible measures to improve management, reduce support costs and enhance efficiency so as to increase the proportion of resources available for assistance. It reaffirmed that recipient countries should increasingly be made responsible for executing projects. The Assembly established a scheme for reporting, consisting of an annual report containing comprehensive statistical information covering all operational activities for development conducted by the United Nations system, and decided to undertake a triennial policy review of operational activities for development, beginning in 1983.

The Second Committee approved this resolution without vote on 4 November, on the basis of a text submitted by a Vice-Chairman following informal consultations. This replaced an earlier draft, submitted by Venezuela on behalf of the United Nations Member States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries, which the sponsors withdrew after the Vice-Chairman's text was submitted.

The agreed text included a new operative paragraph by which the Assembly urged Governments and United Nations organizations to accelerate the implementation of the restructuring recommendations pertaining to operational activities, and requested the heads of those organizations to improve coherence of action and effective integration at the country level of the various inputs from the United Nations system. Another new provision contained a request that the Secretary-General complete as soon as possible the designation of resident co-ordinators (see also following subchapter). A paragraph in the earlier text was omitted, by which the Assembly would have urged developed donor countries to supply information regularly on their development assistance efforts in the area of United Nations operational activities, in the light of commitments undertaken by them.

The approved text differed from the earlier one in several other respects, including the following:

- the call in paragraph 5 for increased contributions was addressed to all donor countries, particularly those developed countries whose overall performance was not commensurate with their capacity, rather than to "all developed donor countries;"

- the request in paragraph 8 for the development of specific measures to reduce support costs was addressed to United Nations organizations and bodies rather than to the Secretary-General, and it specified measures to maximize uniformity and to harmonize and improve project procedures in place of a general reference in the earlier text to measures identified in the Director-General's report;

- in paragraph 9, inviting adoption of steps by organization heads to improve efficiency, the aim of increasing the proportion of resources available for assistance was added;

- the annual report on operational activities requested in paragraph 17 was to be entrusted by the Secretary-General to the Director-General (the earlier text had mentioned only the Secretary-General); and

- the Assembly's comprehensive policy review of operational activities was to take place every three years rather than every four and, it was added, the next one was to take account of views expressed in 1980 in both the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly.

After this resolution was approved in Committee, Belgium expressed regret that it excluded any reference to project evaluation and control procedures. Speaking on behalf of the Nordic countries (Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway, Sweden), Denmark welcomed the references in the text to the need to optimize efficiency, improve project procedures and reduce support costs. Endorsing this statement, the Netherlands added that the resolution nevertheless failed to place sufficient emphasis on efficiency. Japan favoured steps to narrow the gap between requirements and resources by effectively utilizing resources and containing administrative costs; it was not in a position to make a multi-year pledge. The United Kingdom supported the resolution on the understanding that all Governments had the right to decide how much to contribute. China, while not objecting to a preambular paragraph by which the Assembly called for disarmament measures that would increase the possibility of diverting arms expenditure to development purposes, said the responsibility should be assumed by the super-powers with the largest arsenals.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1768(LIV) of 18 May 1973,

Mindful of the importance of implementing fully and without undue delay the recommendations contained in its resolution 32/197.

Recalling its resolutions 33/201 of 29 January 1979 and 34/213 of 19 December 1979,

Reaffirming the validity of the consensus of 1970, as set forth in the annex to its resolution 2688(XXV) of 11 December 1970, and of the guidelines on new dimensions in technical co-operation, as set forth in the annex to its resolution 3405(XXX) of 28 November 1975, Reaffirming also the importance of the full and speedy implementation of its resolution 3405(XXX).

Considering that the operational activities of the United Nations system can contribute significantly to the accelerated development of the developing countries and to the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade and thus to the establishment of the new international economic order,

Having examined the report of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation and noting with interest paragraph 8 thereof, relating to the categorization of operational activities for development,

Concerned by the fact that a significant part of the resources for the technical co-operation activities of the United Nations system is absorbed in administrative and other support costs of the funding and executing agencies,

Having considered Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/66 of 25 July 1980 on operational activities for development, Considering that operational activities for development encompass, inter alia, those activities of a development co-operation character that seek to mobilize or increase the potential and capacities of countries to promote economic and social development and welfare, including the transfer of resources to developing countries or regions in a tangible or intangible form.

Considering also that a substantial part of world resources, material as well as human, continues to be diverted to armaments with a detrimental effect on international security and on efforts to achieve the new international economic order, including operational activities of the United Nations system for development, and calling upon Governments to take effective measures in the field of real disarmament that would increase the possibility of allocation of resources now being used for military purposes to economic and social development, especially the development of developing countries,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation;

2. Affirms that the operational activities for development of the United Nations system should make an effective contribution to the accelerated development of developing countries and to the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development

Decade, and thereby to the establishment of the new international economic order;

3. Expresses its grave concern that financial contributions to the system's operational activities for development have not increased substantially and have generally fallen short of targets which have been set by the relevant intergovernmental bodies;

4. Strongly reiterates the need for a substantial and real increase in the flow of resources for operational activities on an increasingly predictable, continuous and assured basis;

5. Strongly urges all donor countries, particularly those developed countries whose overall performance is not commensurate with their capacity, to increase rapidly and substantially their contributions to the system's operational activities for development on an increasingly predictable, continuous and assured basis;

6. Urges all countries that are able to do so to indicate, while making their pledges, their probable contributions to the system's operational activities for development for a multiyear period, taking into account the need to ensure increased resources in real terms on an increasingly predictable, continuous and assured basis;

7. Invites the governing bodies of the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, as appropriate, to consider new and specific ways and means of mobilizing increased resources for operational activities for development on an increasingly predictable, continuous and assured basis;

8. Invites the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to develop, in the light of section V of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197, specific recommendations on measures to reduce administrative and other support costs, to achieve maximum uniformity and harmonization of administrative, financial, budgetary, personnel and planning procedures and to improve the project procedures in the execution of operational activities for development of the United Nations system;

9. Invites the Secretary-General and the heads of organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to adopt, in the mean time, all possible measures to improve management procedures, to reduce administrative and other support costs, and to enhance overall efficiency in the execution of programmes and projects in the field of operational activities for development with a view to increasing the proportion of resources available to meet the assistance requirements of developing countries;

10. Reaffirms that, as set forth in the annex to its resolution 3405(XXX), Governments and institutions of recipient countries should be increasingly entrusted with the responsibilities for executing projects and, to this end, that the operational activities of the United Nations system should, inter alia, effectively contribute to the training of the personnel of recipient countries;

11. Urges Governments and the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to accelerate their efforts for the effective implementation of section V of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197 and, in this context, requests the heads of the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to continue to take all necessary measures to improve coherence of action and effective integration at the country level, in accordance with the objectives and priorities of the Governments concerned, of the various sectoral inputs from the United Nations system;

12. Welcomes the progress being made in the implementation of paragraph 34 of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197 and requests the Secretary-General to complete as expeditiously as possible the process of designation of resident co-ordinators, taking fully into account the provisions of Assembly resolution 34/213;

13. Decides to undertake a comprehensive policy review of operational activities in 1983, and thereafter every three years, on the basis of a coherent, integrated and systematic approach;

14. Further decides to consider, at its next comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development, the question of the establishment of a single governing body for United Nations operational activities for development, in accordance with paragraph 35 of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197;

15. Requests the Secretary-General, for the purpose of the next policy review, to entrust the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation with the preparation of a report on policy issues pertaining to operational activities for development undertaken by the United Nations system, based on the methodology utilized in his report to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session, and the provisions of the present resolution, as well as the views and comments of delegations on the issue of operational activities for development at the second regular session of 1980 of the Economic and Social Council and at the thirty-fifth session of the Assembly, for submission to the Assembly through the Council;

16. Requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation also to include in his report:

(a) Recommendations arising from paragraph 7 above, together with his own recommendations;

(b) An elaboration of the suggestion that gaps exist in the operational activities of the United Nations system, especially in relation to the restructuring of international economic relations, and suggestions as to ways and means of filling such gaps, thereby strengthening the United Nations system and making it more responsive to the needs of the developing countries;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to entrust to the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation the submission to the General Assembly of an annual report on operational activities for development, which should also be made available to the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, containing comprehensive statistical information concerning all operational activities for development of the United Nations system, including the information requested by the Assembly in paragraph 31 of the annex to resolution 32/197 and contained in appendices II and III to the report of the Director-General, with a further elaboration thereof in the light of commitments undertaken;

18. Further requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to include in his annual report to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session information on progress made concerning the invitations set forth in paragraph 9 above and to include in his annual report to the Assembly at its thirty-seventh session the recommendations requested in paragraph 8 above, together with his own.

Designation of resident co-ordinators

The first resident co-ordinators, responsible for operational activities for development carried out by the United Nations system in individual countries, were appointed by the Secretary-General in 1980.

In a progress report to the Economic and Social Council dated 24 June, the Secretary-General described the action he was taking to appoint resident co-ordinators in implementation of a provision in the General Assembly's 1977 resolution on restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system.<sup>14</sup> The initial appointments were of officials who were already serving in the countries concerned as resident representatives of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Names proposed by the UNDP Administrator had been used as the basis of a list which the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation submitted to other United Nations organizations belonging to the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) to ensure that the proposed designees commanded the confidence of the entire United Nations system. The consent of Governments was then sought before the officials were appointed. The same procedure was to be followed for future appointments.

The Secretary-General reported that an inter-agency review was envisaged, perhaps in 1981, to see whether there was a need to change the provisional arrangements for the exercise of the resident co-ordinators' functions, agreed to by ACC in 1979.<sup>15</sup> Once the new system was operative, he intended to consult with Governments and organization heads on the best way of enabling the co-ordinators to exercise their functions in the light of guidelines laid down by the Assembly in 1979.<sup>16</sup> The co-ordinators themselves would undertake the consultations with Governments, with the assistance of country representatives of United Nations organizations. The Secretary-General would inform ACC of the outcome, in connexion with the review of arrangements for the exercise of the co-ordinators' functions.

The subject was further discussed informally at a global meeting of UNDP resident representatives held at Tunis, Tunisia, from 7 to 12 July 1980, convened to plan their work in the coming decade.

On 25 July, by decision 1980/178, adopted without vote, the Economic and Social Council took note of this report. The text was similarly approved by the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee on 22 July, based on an oral proposal by the Chairman, as amended by the United States to add a phrase by which the Council decided to transmit the report to the General Assembly.

The UNDP Governing Council, on 26 June, welcomed the action taken on this matter by the Assembly and the Secretary-General, noted with satisfaction the Assembly's affirmation that

UNDP resident representatives would normally be designated as resident co-ordinators, and emphasized that through that designation the resident representatives could play an even more important role at the country level for the success of operational activities for development.

On 5 December, the Assembly, in adopting resolution 35/81 following discussion of a comprehensive policy review of operational activities (see preceding subchapter), welcomed the progress made in implementing this aspect of the Assembly's 1977 restructuring resolution and asked the Secretary-General to complete designation of resident co-ordinators as expeditiously as possible, taking its 1979 guidelines fully into account.

Chapter V

Trade and development

The problems of international trade in a troubled world economy were discussed during 1980 in the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and in various specialized conferences and bodies. The Board held three sessions, all at Geneva: its eleventh special session (14 and 20 March), on UNCTAD's contribution to the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s); and its twentieth (17-26 March) and twenty-first (15-27 September) regular sessions. Much of its work was devoted to implementing the decisions taken by UNCTAD at its fifth session, held in May/June 1979.<sup>1</sup>

A report by the UNCTAD secretariat on the economic outlook concluded that the world economy was likely to decline further in 1980 before recovering slightly in 1981. A related report on obstacles to growth in the 1980s stated that the adoption of restrictive monetary and fiscal policies by developed market-economy countries might worsen their own structural problems and shift a heavier burden to the developing countries.

A highlight of the year was the adoption in June, after four years of negotiation, of the statute of the Common Fund for Commodities. The purpose of the Fund was to help stabilize the commodities market and finance stocks set up under international agreements. A Preparatory Commission began meeting to deal with the establishment of the Fund.

Also in the area of commodities, an UNCTAD-sponsored conference approved a new agreement on cocoa and another conference worked towards an agreement on tin, while preliminary work on other commodities continued under the Integrated Programme for Commodities. The Committee on Commodities, at a session in September/October, discussed a secretariat report which detailed the effects of price instability, slow growth and unstable volume in the commodity trade of developing countries.

A Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices was approved in April by the United Nations Conference on Restrictive Business Practices, and the Principles and Rules were adopted by the General Assembly in December. Among their purposes was to ensure that business enterprises, through efforts to restrain competition, did not interfere with benefits that should arise from liberalization of trade barriers.

The threat of protectionism was discussed in the Trade and Development Board and the General Assembly, but neither could agree on what action to take. Both bodies scheduled further consideration of the problem in 1981. Nor was the Board able to reach agreed conclusions on the results of the multilateral trade negotiations which had ended in December 1979 under the auspices of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Both the Trade and Development Board and the Industrial Development Board of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization authorized a second session, in 1981., of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on Trade and Trade-related Aspects of Industrial Collaboration Arrangements.

The Committee on Manufactures, meeting in July, adopted a set of agreed conclusions in which it pointed to the need for concerted efforts to increase the developing countries' production and export capacities in manufacturing. In June, the Special Committee on Preferences recommended extension of the generalized system of preferences, aimed at liberalizing tariffs on imports from developing countries.

The Board completed two years of negotiations in September by adopting an agreed set of features for future operations to deal with the debt problems of interested developing countries. In another area of UNCTAD activity, the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, at its first special session, was unable to agree on action to be taken in support of efforts by developing countries to expand economic co-operation among themselves.

The Conference contributed to the formulation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (for text, see p. 496) through discussions in a High-level Intergovernmental Group on the Contribution of UNCTAD to the Preparation of a New International Development Strategy and at a special session of the Trade and Development Board in March.

The Board requested States to continue efforts to expand trade among countries having different economic and social systems. It also recommended that the United Nations system mobilize adequate resources to aid national liberation movements. Following submission of a report by the Economic Commission for Africa on problems faced by Zaïre with regard to transport, transit and access to foreign markets, the General Assembly, in December, requested continued efforts to enable United Nations organs to provide technical assistance to that country.

The Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade held a two-part session. In July, it concentrated on financial questions, calling for increased official development assistance. In September/October, it dealt with insurance, urging efforts to promote the insurance business in developing countries.

The Committee on Shipping, meeting in September, requested the convening of a meeting to study whether major importers and exporters were impeding the shipping lines of developing countries from competing in the bulk-cargo trade of iron ore, phosphate rock and bauxite/alumina. It also recommended a special session in 1981 on the topic of flags of convenience (open-registry vessels), following an inconclusive meeting in January of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group on the Economic Consequences of the Existence or Lack of a Genuine Link between Vessel and Flag of Registry.

A number of measures to improve technology transfer between developed and developing countries were recommended in November by the Committee on the Transfer of Technology. One of them called for a report by the UNCTAD Secretary-General on the feasibility of measuring human resource flows in connexion with the "brain drain" of skilled personnel from developing to developed countries. The United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology continued work in April/May on drafting a code, and the General Assembly, at the Conference's request, decided to convene a further session in 1981.

In 1980, UNCTAD carried on a $14.1 million technical co-operation programme, more than doubling the volume of such assistance to the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries.

Efforts to agree on measures aimed at rationalizing the intergovernmental bodies and secretariat of UNCTAD continued throughout the year, first in the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Committee on the Rationalization of UNCTAD's Machinery and then at both regular sessions of the Trade and Development Board.

Following its annual review of UNCTAD activities, the General Assembly, in December, adopted a resolution by which it urged Governments to adhere to the new UNCTAD-sponsored agreements on commodities and reaffirmed UNCTAD's role in regard to evolution of the international monetary system.

The Board took note of the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) on the work of its thirteenth session. (For information on the work of UNCITRAL, see p. 1133.)

Details of these and other activities follow.

General trade and development questions

Contribution of UNCTAD to the new International Development Strategy

A number of policy measures relating to trade and development were recommended in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (1981-1990), adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980. The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) contributed to the formulation of the Strategy through discussions in a High-level Intergovernmental Group on the Contribution of UNCTAD to the Preparation of the New International Development Strategy, open to all States members of UNCTAD, and at a special session of the Trade and Development Board.

According to the Strategy's section on international trade, all countries were committed to an open and expanding trade system, trade liberalization and the promotion of structural adjustment, giving more favourable treatment to developing countries on a non-reciprocal basis. Steps would be taken early in the Decade to reduce or eliminate restrictions on imports from developing countries. Agreement on a multilateral safeguard system would be sought. The generalized system of trade preferences for developing countries should be continued and sectoral agreements that hindered the growth in their trade should be avoided.

Other provisions dealt with commodities, invisibles, restrictive business practices, international monetary and financial issues, transport, and the special problems of the least developed, most seriously affected, and island and landlocked developing countries. These topics are dealt with in detail later in this chapter.

The Intergovernmental Group which the Trade and Development Board had set up to prepare the UNCTAD contribution to the Strategy held two sessions at Geneva, from 28 January to 5 February and from 10 to 13 March. Separate papers were submitted on behalf of the States members of the "Group of 77" developing countries, Group B (developed market economies) and Group D (centrally planned economies). At the end of the second session, the Chairman, Jamsheed K. A. Marker (Pakistan), announced that the discussions had remained inconclusive owing to lack of time.

At its eleventh special session, held at Geneva on 14 and 20 March and devoted exclusively to this matter, the Trade and Development Board decided to transmit the Intergovernmental Group's reports, along with their annexes containing the regional group papers, to the General Assembly's Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy as the UNCTAD contribution to the formulation of the Strategy.

(See p. 499 for details on the adoption of the Strategy.)

Debt problems of developing countries

The Trade and Development Board endorsed on 27 September 1980 an agreed set of detailed features for future operations to deal with the debt problems of interested developing countries. These features, which had been under negotiation since the Board set up in 1978 an intergovernmental group of experts to deal with the matter,* were to guide UNCTAD members, including developing countries which believed that they faced debt difficulties.

The agreed text said that future operations relating to debt problems should be expeditious and timely, should enhance the debtor's development prospects, should aim at restoring its capacity to service its debts and reinforce its efforts to strengthen its balance-of-payments situation, and should protect the interests of debtors and creditors equitably. International consideration of a developing country's debt problem would be initiated only at its specific request. Analysis of the problem would give special attention to short-term economic and financial policies, prospects and requirements in the case of acute balance-of-payments difficulties, and to the financing of long-term investment and associated resource transfers in the case of longer-term problems. In the light of the analysis, a comprehensive action programme would be agreed upon, involving international measures varying from debt reorganization to the provision of additional financial resources, and measures by the debtor country to strengthen its balance-of-payments situation or, where longer-term problems were involved, to undertake viable domestic policies. It was agreed that finding a means to avoid debt-servicing difficulties was one of the most important tasks facing the international community.

This set of features was annexed to a Board resolution, by which the Board also: invited the heads of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund, in consultation with the UNCTAD Secretary-General, to consider procedures for a co-ordinated response to requests for analyses of debt problems; agreed that such analyses would be provided only at the request of the debtor country; and welcomed the invitation extended to the UNCTAD Secretary-General to participate in meetings of the multilateral creditor group known as the Paris Club.

The resolution also dealt with retroactive adjustment of terms for official development assistance (ODA) extended bilaterally in the past. The Board urged all developed donor countries to implement fully its 1978 resolution on this matter<sup>3</sup> and agreed that they should seek to continue to adopt retroactive adjustment of terms or equivalent measures so that the improvement in terms could be applied to outstanding ODA debt. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was invited to report in 1981 on the coverage and degree of retroactive adjustment granted by developed countries, and those countries were invited to supply data.

The Board had previously, on 21 March, requested a report from the UNCTAD Secretary-General on implementation of retroactive adjustment of terms of ODA, as called for by its 1978 resolution, along with an analysis of the effects of such implementation on the debt problems of developing countries and a report on consultations on the subject which he was asked to conduct with Governments and multilateral institutions. A representative of the Secretary-General informed the Board in September that this information would be presented in 1981.

The Board's resolution of 27 September was welcomed by the General Assembly when it discussed UNCTAD's work late in 1980. By resolution 35/60 of 5 December (see p. 637), the Assembly urged all developed donor countries to implement fully and immediately the part of the Board's 1978 resolution concerned with retroactive adjustment.

Debt problems of developing countries were also dealt with in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, adopted by the General Assembly on 5 December and annexed to resolution 35/56. The Strategy stated that Governments should seek to implement as quickly as possible their commitments in pursuance of the Board's 1978 resolution relating to retroactive adjustment, that such adjustment should be continued, and that urgent consideration should be given to special and favourable criteria relating to the level of dependence of, and financial burden on, developing countries receiving balance-of-payments support from international financial institutions. (For text of relevant provisions (paragraphs 111-113) of the Strategy, see p. 512.)

Economic co-operation among developing countries

The UNCTAD Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, at its first special session, held at Geneva from 23 June to 2 July 1980, was unable to agree on action to be taken in support of efforts by developing countries to expand economic co-operation among themselves. Proposals for specific action were drawn up prior to the session by a Preparatory Meeting of Governmental Experts of Developing Countries on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries (Geneva, 17 March- 8 April). The Trade and Development Board took note of the Committee's report on 27 September. (For details, see p. 561.)

Least developed, land-locked and island developing countries

Special measures for the least developed among the developing countries, as well as for land-locked and island developing countries, were considered by the General Assembly and UNCTAD during 1980.

By resolution S-11/4, adopted on 15 September at its special session on development and international economic co-operation, the Assembly urged donor countries to try to double ODA to the least developed countries by 1985 (see p. 543). Also, the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, annexed to Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December (for details see p. 409), contained provisions (section III K) outlining measures to assist these countries (see p. 515). Plans for the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (Paris, 1981) were set out in resolution 35/205 of 16 December (see p. 545). In these resolutions, the Assembly called for implementation of UNCTAD's Substantial New Programme of Action<sup>4</sup> for these countries for the 1980s.

With regard to land-locked developing countries, the Assembly, by resolution 35/58 of 5 December, reaffirmed their right to free access to the sea and freedom of transit through neighbouring States, and urged countries and organizations to help them build and improve transport and transit facilities (see p. 549). By resolution 35/82 of the same date, the Assembly appealed for contributions to the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries (see p. 550). International assistance for the transport infrastructure of these countries was also urged in the International Development Strategy, which contained a special subsection on the needs of the land-locked.

For developing island countries, the Trade and Development Board, by a resolution of 27 September, requested rapid and efficient implementation of the UNCTAD work programme aimed at analysing the special needs of this group, and recommended that the Board consider further action in 1981. The Assembly, by resolution 35/61 of 5 December, appealed to States, organizations and institutions to implement UNCTAD and other resolutions in favour of developing island countries (see p. 551). The International Development Strategy also pledged further-action during the 1980s, including international assistance to diversify their economies, encourage foreign investment and facilitate their access to markets.

Trade problems of Zaire

In a report dated 15 October 1980, the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly, in response to a 1979 request,<sup>5</sup> of the status of planned studies by the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) on the particular problems facing Zaire with regard to transport, transit and access to foreign markets.

Outlining the conclusions drawn from a preliminary ECA study in 1978, the report suggested that the country's problems could be solved in the long run (1990 and beyond) by the construction of 1,090 kilometres of railway from the mining region of Shaba to the Atlantic coast, and of a deep-water seaport at Banana on the coast. The cost of building the port and 150 kilometres of railway, along with a feasibility study of the rest of the proposed rail link, was estimated at $451.5 million. In the mean time, the existing route, utilizing two rail lines connected by the Zaire River, would have to be improved. The report added that a mission of transport specialists and others would have to visit Zaire to analyse costs and benefits, but nothing had been done for lack of funds.

In response to a question by Zaire, a representative of the UNCTAD Secretary-General told the Trade and Development Board on 25 March that ECA had been sent a letter offering the full co-operation of UNCTAD in this matter. He also outlined various technical assistance activities involving Zaire's transport sector, including aid to its foreign trade centre.

On 5 December, by resolution 35/59, adopted without vote, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue efforts to enable the appropriate United Nations organs to provide technical assistance to Zaire as soon as possible, and to report back in 1981.

This resolution was approved without vote on 14 November by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. The text was proposed by a Committee Vice-Chairman on the basis of consultations held on an earlier draft sponsored by Belgium, Benin, Bolivia, Burundi, the Central African Republic, China, the Congo, France, Morocco, Nigeria, Rwanda, Senegal, Somalia, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zaire. The earlier text was then withdrawn. The approved text was essentially the same as the earlier one, with the addition of a preambular paragraph by which the Assembly expressed regret that the measures provided for in its 1979 resolution had not been implemented.

Before the resolution was approved in Committee, Algeria said it would join in the consensus although it had wanted to see the matter dealt with under the agenda item on special economic and disaster relief assistance.

Trade among countries having different economic and social systems

The Trade and Development Board, by a resolution of 27 September 1980, requested UNCTAD member States to continue efforts aimed at the further expansion of trade among countries having different economic and social systems, bearing in mind the need to promote the economic development of developing countries. It decided to continue consideration of this matter in 1981.

The Board said its continued work on this subject would be based, as appropriate, on a draft, annexed to its resolution, which resulted from discussions in a contact group during its September session. This unfinished draft was intended as a comprehensive policy statement on means to achieve expansion of East-West trade (between developed market economies and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe), as well as of trade between the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and the developing countries. It also contained recommendations to the UNCTAD Secretary-General for expanded technical co-operation activities and consultations on specific issues.

Assistance to national liberation movements

By a resolution of 25 March 1980, the Trade and Development Board recommended that the United Nations system, including the United Nations Development Programme, mobilize adequate resources for assistance to national liberation movements recognized by regional intergovernmental organizations and to the peoples under colonial domination and foreign occupation. The resolution was adopted as a follow-up to UNCTAD resolution 109(V) of 1 June 1979, by which UNCTAD requested its Secretary-General to initiate studies on those peoples and report periodically to the Board.<sup>6</sup>

In a progress report dated 20 August 1980, the UNCTAD Secretary-General informed the Board that two studies were under way, on assistance to the peoples of Namibia and South Africa and to the Palestinian people. The Board took note of this report on 27 September.

Financing related to trade and the international monetary system

The interdependence of problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system was discussed by the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) at its September 1980 session. A report by the UNCTAD secretariat on the world economic outlook for 1980-1981 stated that the economy was likely to decline further in 1980 before recovering slightly in 1981. It projected a slower growth rate in the volume of world exports coupled with rapid price increases, leading to further deterioration in the terms of trade of non-oil-exporting developing countries and a substantial increase in current account deficits.

Coupled with this bleak economic outlook, said the UNCTAD Secretary-General in a related report analysing obstacles to growth in the 1980s, was the adoption by developed market-economy countries of restrictive monetary and fiscal policies which might worsen their own structural problems and shift a heavier burden to the developing countries. This report was prepared with the assistance of a Meeting of Governmental Experts on Interdependence of Problems of Trade, Development Finance and the International Monetary System, held at Geneva from 21 to 23 May.

According to calculations in a report by the UNCTAD secretariat on aspects of the outlook for resource transfer requirements in the 1980s, annual transfers from developed to developing countries would have to exceed 2 per cent of the gross domestic product of the developed market-economy countries (compared to the average net transfer of 0.43 per cent in 1978-1979) if the developing countries were to achieve a 7 per cent rate of economic growth.

The Ad Hoc Intergovernmental High-Level Group of Experts on the Evolution of the International Monetary System met at Geneva from 28 July to 5 August 1980. In its report to the Trade and Development Board, it concluded that the current international monetary system was inadequate, inefficient and inequitable. In its view, a reformed system should be characterized by universality and by equitable decision-making and adjustment processes. Such a system should support the economic development of developing countries, and should create and distribute liquidity supportive of an expanding volume of world trade and responsive to the needs of developing countries, with special drawing rights as the principal reserve asset and currency unit. Exchange rates should be flexible and capable of promoting adequate stability. Special attention should be paid to the problems of the least developed and other disadvantaged countries. Finally, a reformed monetary system should maintain the real value of the financial assets of developing countries. No representatives of countries from Group B (developed market economies) took part in the Group's work.

The Trade and Development Board took note of the Group's report on 27 September, as did the General Assembly on 5 December. By resolution 35/60, the Assembly also reaffirmed the role of UNCTAD in contributing to efforts towards the evolution of the international monetary system, particularly regarding the interaction between that system and world trade and development. It urged countries that had not participated in the Group's work to do so in the future.

The paragraph containing these provisions was approved by recorded votes, in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee by 97 to 15, with 9 abstentions, and in the Assembly by 123 to 15, with 9 abstentions. (For further details on resolution 35/60, see p. 637.)

In explanation of vote, Luxembourg, speaking on behalf of the member States of the European Economic Community, which had requested the separate vote in Committee, regretted the inclusion of a highly controversial paragraph. Voting against the paragraph, Sweden said it questioned the usefulness of the Group's work and would not take part in it, though it did not oppose study by UNCTAD of general aspects of problems of particular relevance to trade. The United States opposed the involvement of United Nations bodies in monetary matters and attempts by UNCTAD to move into an area within the competence of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank). Among the countries that had abstained, Italy said the paragraph could be interpreted as interference in the activities of other international agencies, and added that it would not participate in the Group. The Netherlands believed that UNCTAD could discuss monetary matters only if it respected the competence of IMF and the World Bank and if the Group did not deal with matters on which the decision-making power rested with those agencies. Spain reserved the right to decide whether to participate in the Group, while Turkey said its abstention did not mean that it would not participate in future.

Commodities

Following four years of negotiation, the statute of the Common Fund for Commodities was adopted in June 1980 by a Negotiating Conference of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD). The Fund was intended to help stabilize the commodities market and make it possible to mobilize the resources needed to finance commodity stocks set up under international agreements on specific commodities.

One such agreement was approved in 1980, covering cocoa, to replace an existing agreement that expired in March 1980. Negotiations for a new agreement on tin were adjourned in December, to resume in 1981.

Preparatory or expert meetings were held on a number of commodities- bananas, copper, cotton, hard fibres, jute, manganese, meat, tropical timber, and vegetable oils and oilseeds - under UNCTAD's Integrated Programme for Commodities. The Programme was established in 1976<sup>7</sup> with a view to promoting international arrangements on individual commodities, especially those in which developing countries were interested. Work on tungsten continued in a Committee which predated the Programme. None of this work reached the stage of negotiation on a formal agreement.

The UNCTAD secretariat concluded, in its annual report on the world commodity situation, that economic instability, inflation and recession, which had characterized the world economy since 1975, had had profoundly adverse effects on the commodity trade of developing countries. They had experienced more price instability and slow growth in real prices, together with unstable volumes at generally depressed levels.

This report was discussed at the ninth session of the Committee on Commodities, held at Geneva from 29 September to 7 October. The Committee - a standing body of the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board - assumed responsibility for the work of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Committee for the Integrated Programme for Commodities, which held its tenth and final session concurrently with the Committee on Commodities.

Common Fund for Commodities

The Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities was adopted on 27 June 1980 by the United Nations Negotiating Conference on a Common Fund under the Integrated Programme for Commodities. The objectives of the Fund, as stated in the Agreement, were that it was to serve as a key instrument in attaining the agreed objectives of the Programme and to facilitate the conclusion and functioning of international commodity agreements, particularly concerning commodities of special interest to developing countries.

The Fund was to perform three functions: to contribute, through its First Account, to the financing of international buffer stocks and internationally co-ordinated national stocks of commodities, within the framework of international commodity agreements; to finance, through its Second Account, commodity development measures other than stocking, including research and development, productivity improvements, marketing, and assistance for vertical diversification; and to promote co-ordination and consultation on measures other than stocking, and their financing.

The First Account was to be funded by direct government contributions of $400 million, mainly in the form of capital subscriptions. The Second Account was to have an initial $350 million, of which $280 million would come from voluntary contributions and the remainder from direct government contributions. Additional resources would come from cash deposits and guarantee capital provided through international commodity agreements associated with the Fund.

The Agreement, which was opened for signature at United Nations Headquarters, New York, on 1 October, was to enter into force when at least 90 States representing two thirds of the directly contributed capital of $470 million had ratified or acceded to it.

The Agreement was approved at the fourth session of the Negotiating Conference, held at Geneva from 5 to 27 June. Fundamental elements of the Fund had been agreed to by the Conference in March 1979,<sup>8</sup> at which time an Interim Committee of the Conference was set up to seek consensus on outstanding issues. At its fourth and fifth sessions, held in 1980 at Geneva from 18 February to 5 March and from 8 to 19 April, the Committee agreed on some issues related to the Fund's financial structure and mode of operation, and it remitted the remaining issues to the Conference.

The Conference resolved the outstanding issues at its final session. One of these was the manner in which the Fund would have access to the guarantee capital to be provided by participants in international commodity agreements. It had been agreed previously that if any such agreement defaulted on a loan made to it by the Fund, the guarantees provided by its participants should be called if needed to meet the Fund's liabilities. At the 1980 session, the Conference agreed that, if such a measure proved insufficient, the guarantees provided by participants in the defaulting agreement by virtue of their participation in other international commodity agreements should also be called. It was also agreed that, if the Fund was unable to meet its liabilities after it had used up all those guarantees, the directly contributed capital of the Fund would be increased by the amount needed to meet such liabilities, with the modalities for the increase to be decided at an emergency session of the Fund's Governing Council.

Another issue resolved at the final session concerned the timing of payment of capital subscriptions by participating States. It was agreed that these would be paid in three tranches: first, 30 per cent of the total subscription in cash; second, 20 per cent in cash and 10 per cent in promissory notes, to be provided one year later; and third, the remaining 40 per cent in promissory notes. The notes would be cashed as and when decided by the Fund's Executive Board.

The majorities by which the Fund's organs would take different types of decisions were also determined in 1980. Some decisions would require a simple majority, others a two-thirds majority and still others a three-fourths majority. According to the fundamental elements agreed in 1979, votes were to be distributed as follows: 47 per cent for "Group of 77" developing countries, 42 per cent for Group B (developed market-economy countries), 8 per cent for Group D (countries with centrally planned economies) and 3 per cent for China.

The Conference, on 27 June, established a 28-member Preparatory Commission for bringing the Fund into operation. The Commission was to submit to the Fund's Governing Council proposals on rules of procedure, rules and regulations for the conduct of the Fund's business, and working papers on policies, criteria and regulations to govern financing operations. It held its first session at Geneva in October, at which it recommended that its membership be expanded to include all States allocated votes in the Fund— a list which included all States Members of the United Nations or members of any specialized agency.

On the Commission's recommendation, the General Assembly appropriated $1,750,500 in the 1980-1981 programme budget as a loan to enable the Fund to finance its initial activities. The sum was to be repaid once the Fund began collecting contributions from its member States. The decision in this regard was taken by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on 3 November by a recorded vote, requested by the USSR, of 86 to 0, with 9 abstentions. Also included in the decision was a similar arrangement for the new International Natural Rubber Council (see p. 623).

The Governing Council was to decide on the head quarters of the Fund. Amsterdam (Netherlands), London (United Kingdom) and Manila (Philippines) were offered by their Governments during the final session of the Negotiating Conference.

The Committee on Commodities, on 7 October, noted with satisfaction the adoption of the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund and urged Governments to take the steps necessary for its early entry into force. The General Assembly included a similar provision in its resolution 35/60, on the work of UNCTAD, adopted on 5 December (see p. 637).)

Commodity committees

The Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Committee for the Integrated Programme for Commodities

held its tenth and final session at Geneva from 29 September to 3 October 1980. In accordance with a resolution adopted by the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board in October 1979, responsibility for further work under the Programme beyond the end of 1980 had been entrusted to the Committee on Commodities. The Ad Hoc Committee adopted agreed conclusions whereby it noted the lack of substantial progress in negotiations relating to individual commodities, emphasized the need for instilling a greater sense of urgency in the negotiations on individual commodities and recommended that the Committee on Commodities arrange for an annual review of the progress of such negotiations as part of its regular work programme.

The Committee on Commodities, at its ninth session held at Geneva from 29 September to 7 October, decided to reconvene its Permanent Sub-Committee to identify, and propose steps to deal with, the problems impeding greater participation by developing countries in the production and export of processed commodities and in the marketing and distribution of their export commodities. The Sub-Committee would make recommendations to the Committee for institutional arrangements to be negotiated, and any other suitable action. The Committee also requested authorization to hold a special session in 1981 to agree on measures to expedite the completion of negotiations on individual commodities under the Integrated Programme.

Commodity agreements and negotiations

COCOA

The United Nations Cocoa Conference, 1980, meeting at Geneva from 27 October to 19 November, adopted the International Cocoa Agreement, 1980, to replace the 1975 Agreement, which expired on 31 March 1980. The new Agreement provided for a minimum cocoa price of $1.00 per pound and a maximum of $1.60, with lower and upper intervention prices of $1.10 and $1.50. If market prices dropped to or below $1.10, cocoa would be purchased for an international buffer stock. Conversely, cocoa would be sold from the buffer stock if market prices rose to or above $1.50. The capacity of the buffer stock could not exceed 250,000 metric tons for the first three years of the Agreement and 350,000 tons if the Agreement was extended by two years. The Agreement provided for a mechanism of semi-automatic adjustments of the intervention prices, linked to the volume of buffer stock transactions. The buffer stock would be financed by the resources accumulated under the two preceding agreements, transferred to the buffer stock account under the new Agreement, and by a first import or first export levy of 1 cent per pound.

The Agreement would be administered by the International Cocoa Organization, established by the 1972 Cocoa Agreement. That organization, with headquarters in London, functioned through an International Cocoa Council and an Executive Committee.

The Agreement was to enter into force definitively in April or May 1981 if it was adhered to by at least five exporting countries accounting for at least 80 per cent of total cocoa exports and by importing countries having at least 70 per cent of total imports.

Prior to the Conference, a Meeting on Cocoa was held at Geneva from 28 July to 1 August 1980 under the aegis of the Integrated Programme for Commodities. Following a discussion of prospects for international co-operation on cocoa, the Chairman, Martin Huslid (Norway), said in a statement on 1 August summarizing the results of the Meeting that there was a common desire among cocoa-producing and -consuming countries to continue their co-operation in the world cocoa economy.

RUBBER

The International Natural Rubber Agreement, 1979, entered provisionally into force on 23 October 1980, after having been ratified by countries accounting for 65 per cent of world rubber production and 65 per cent of consumption. The Agreement had been adopted under UNCTAD auspices in October 1979.<sup>9</sup>

Both the Committee on Commodities, on 7 October 1980, and the General Assembly, by resolution 35/60 of 5 December (see p. 637), noted with satisfaction the adoption of the Agreement and urged Governments to adhere to it so that it could enter into force definitively at an early date.

On the proposal of the Secretary-General, and with the endorsement of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, the Assembly authorized an advance of $200,000 from the United Nations programme budget for 1980-1981 to enable the new International Natural Rubber Council to begin work in accordance with the Rubber Agreement. The sum was included in the budget after the Fifth Committee, on 3 November, decided to inform the Assembly that that amount would be required if it approved the Secretary-General's proposal. The Committee acted at the same time on a similar request for a loan to the Common Fund for Commodities (see p. 622).

The Council held its first session at Geneva from 17 to 21 November. It adopted an administrative budget and extended to 31 October 1981 the deadline for deposit of instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval of the Agreement.

TIN

The United Nations Tin Conference, 1980, met at Geneva from 14 April to 14 May and again from 1 to 18 December, without completing its task of negotiating a Sixth International Tin Agreement to replace the one concluded in 1975.<sup>10</sup> The main issues remaining to be decided concerned the size of the buffer stock, its financing, and the conditions under which participating countries would be entitled to apply export controls. The Conference agreed to reconvene in March 1981.

During the second part of the Conference in December, the Chairman, Peter Lai (Malaysia), introduced a compromise proposal envisaging a normal buffer stock of 30,000 metric tons to be financed by direct government contributions and an additional stock of 20,000 tons to be financed from borrowing, using as security stock warrants and, where necessary, government guarantees. Under this proposal, export controls could be authorized by a two-thirds distributed (votes allotted and votes proportionally allocated) majority in the International Tin Council when the buffer stock contained at least 35,000 tons of tin; a simple distributed majority would suffice when at least 40,000 tons were held.

Other meetings on individual commodities

The second part of the seventh preparatory meeting on copper was held at Geneva from 18 to 22 February 1980. It considered, without reaching a decision, a proposal put forward by its Chairman at the first part of the meeting (September 1979). The proposal envisaged a three-stage international agreement on copper providing for: (1) machinery for systematic consultations, data collection and an exchange of views on the market situation; (2) international stocking systems; and (3) other supporting measures, including supply management and rationalization. The meeting agreed that the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Committee for the Integrated Programme for Commodities should be invited to consider the question of further preparatory work on copper, including the possibility of reconvening the preparatory meeting. The Ad Hoc Committee, on 30 September, requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to consult with the main consuming and producing countries on the question of further preparatory work, and then to decide what further steps would be appropriate.

The Committee on Tungsten, at its twelfth session held at Geneva from 25 to 29 February, reviewed earlier discussions, proposals and work on the question of stabilizing the tungsten market. The positions of producing and consuming countries represented on the Committee remained unchanged from those taken at previous meetings. Producing countries, whose spokesman was Thailand, continued to favour steps to negotiate an international agreement with economic provisions. Along with some consuming countries (Italy, Netherlands), they urged that fresh consideration be given to a proposal made by France in 1978 advocating a two-stage approach-collection of market information and negotiation of an international arrangement, followed by the progressive establishment of a minimum of economic mechanisms for market intervention. However, other major consuming countries (Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States) reiterated their objection to the proposal on the ground that it would commit countries to measures on which previous agreement had not been reached. The Committee recommended that provision be made for it to pursue the discussion at a further session.

The fourth preparatory meeting on hard fibres, held at Geneva from 25 February to 6 March, considered matters relating to abaca, coir, sisal and henequen. It endorsed lists of technical improvement project groups for abaca and coir as a basis for an initial programme to be implemented by whatever international bodies might be set up on those fibres, but was unable to agree on a similar list for sisal and henequen, postponing further consideration to the next preparatory meeting. Regarding price stabilization, the meeting requested the UNCTAD secretariat, in co-operation with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), to study the feasibility, costs and benefits of a buffer stock system for sisal and henequen. As for institutional arrangements for hard fibres, the meeting requested the UNCTAD secretariat to prepare, in co-operation with FAO, a study of the implications of a proposal by the European Economic Community (EEC) to establish a Hard Fibres Council with mainly administrative tasks. The meeting agreed that the fifth preparatory meeting should consider pending issues in regard to all fibres involved, with the objective of moving towards negotiation.

At the fifth preparatory meeting on cotton, held at Geneva from 24 to 28 March, discussion centred mainly on four informal proposals for international action, advanced respectively by Turkey, the USSR, the United States and a group of Nordic countries (Finland, Norway, Sweden). The proposal by Turkey was based on a declaration made by a group of developing cotton-producing countries at a seminar held at Izmir, Turkey, in March; it called for continued efforts to negotiate a comprehensive international agreement on cotton, including measures to reduce price instability in the world cotton market. The USSR proposal also called for continued negotiations on an international cotton agreement, aimed at ensuring a stable market. The United States proposal envisaged an agreement to establish a comprehensive international cotton organization which would provide an expanded programme of promotion, research and development, improved market information, the development of more complete statistical information, and a permanent joint producer/consumer forum to discuss stabilization and other issues. The proposal by the Nordic countries envisaged an agreement covering research and development, marketing and promotion, and including a commitment to discuss stabilization measures with a view to solving the problem of price instability. The meeting did not reach agreement on any of the proposals and decided that discussions should be continued at a further preparatory meeting whose principal task would be to consider the four informal proposals and any others made by Governments.

A preparatory meeting on bananas was held at Geneva from 21 to 25 April. It requested the UNCTAD and FAO secretariats to prepare a research and development programme for submission to the second preparatory meeting, to be convened in consultation with Governments. It also called for several studies in other areas, including marketing and transport. Price stabilization was not discussed, as the topic was under consideration in the FAO Intergovernmental Group on Bananas.

A pre-negotiating meeting on jute and jute products was held at Geneva from 28 April to 9 May. It discussed key issues with respect to the negotiation of an international agreement covering such aspects as research and development, market promotion and cost reduction. Outstanding issues included criteria for project approval, financing and voting, cost reduction and arrangements for an International Jute Organization. The meeting did not resolve these issues but decided to request the UNCTAD Secretary-General to arrange for a negotiating conference.

The second preparatory meeting on meat was held at Geneva from 19 to 23 May. The meeting recognized the need for greater efforts and further action as appropriate, both national and international, in research and development, market promotion and other development measures. It deferred a decision on the need for an international action programme of developmental measures, pending a review of activities already being undertaken by international organizations. It called for submission of project proposals in such fields as research and development and market promotion, for consideration at the next preparatory meeting.

At the second part of the fifth preparatory meeting on tropical timber, held at Geneva from 7 to 18 July, agreed conclusions were drawn up on steps to prepare a research and development programme, improve market intelligence, and study reforestation and forest management needs. The meeting requested the convening of two intergovernmental groups of experts, one on research and development and one on market intelligence, whose reports would be considered in 1981 at a sixth preparatory meeting.

A panel of experts on vegetable oils and oilseeds, meeting at Geneva from 11 to 15 August, considered proposals for research and development for groundnuts and coconuts. The panel requested the UNCTAD and FAO secretariats to revise and reformulate the draft programmes in the light of comments and suggestions made at the meeting. It agreed that the revised programmes should be submitted to the fourth preparatory meeting on vegetable oils and oilseeds, which the panel suggested should be held as soon as possible.

The second preparatory meeting on manganese, held at Geneva from 27 to 31 October, recommended that further work on identifying and examining problems in international trade in manganese should be carried out in several phases. First, the UNCTAD Secretary-General would invite Governments to present their views and circulate them. An intergovernmental group of experts would then discuss the problems identified. Finally, another preparatory meeting would be held within six months of the meeting of experts to consider possible approaches to these problems.

Manufactures

Committee on Manufactures

The Committee on Manufactures of the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board, at its ninth session held at Geneva from 14 to 25 July 1980, reviewed trends and developments in trade in manufactures. An UNCTAD secretariat report on trade in manufactures and semi-manufactures of developing countries and territories showed that the share of such countries in world exports of manufactures had risen from 5.1 per cent in 1970 to 7.7 per cent in 1978, accounting for 17.2 per cent of their total merchandise exports. However, while they sold an estimated $40 billion of manufactures to developed market-economy countries in 1978, they bought some $170 billion of manufactures from those countries.

The Committee adopted a set of agreed conclusions following its review. It saw a need for concerted efforts to increase the developing countries' production and export capacities in manufacturing. To that end, it noted the importance of providing those countries with capital, technology and training, and of helping them establish and expand industries.

The Committee also considered the effects of environmental policies relating to trade in manufactures and semi-manufactures. Noting the various studies undertaken on this subject, it welcomed the joint efforts of UNCTAD and the United Nations Environment Programme in this regard, and agreed that those efforts should continue.

The Committee also adopted agreed conclusions on the multilateral trade negotiations (see p. 628) and welcomed efforts in regard to industrial collaboration arrangements (see p. 628).

Generalized system of preferences

Extension of the generalized system of preferences (GSP), aiming at liberalizing tariffs on imports from developing countries, was recommended on 4 June 1980 by the Special Committee on Preferences of the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board.

At its ninth session, held at Geneva from 27 May to 4 June, the Committee carried out the fifth periodic review of the scheme, which was initially established for a 10-year period ending in 1981. In the resolution by which it recommended extension of the scheme, the Committee also called for another comprehensive review in 1990.

The Committee reaffirmed the importance of a generalized, non-reciprocal and non-discriminatory system of preferences to expand and diversify the export trade of developing countries and accelerate their economic growth. While recognizing that GSP had played a positive role in improving those countries' access to the markets of preference-giving countries, it agreed that the objectives of the scheme, as set out by UNCTAD in 1968,<sup>11</sup> would not be fully met by 1980.

By the resolution, the Committee agreed that preference-giving countries remained committed to a continuous improvement of their individual schemes, giving higher priority to products of interest to the least developed countries. The preference-giving countries and UNCTAD were asked to continue their technical assistance to enable beneficiary countries to draw maximum advantage from the scheme.

In reports prepared for the Committee, the UNCTAD secretariat estimated that almost $13 billion in developing country exports had benefited from preferences in 1977, even though tariff and non-tariff barriers limited the extent to which beneficiaries actually obtained preferential treatment on products eligible for such treatment. But it warned that the margins of preferential treatment would be eroded across the board by tariff cuts resulting from the latest round of multilateral trade negotiations (see p. 628).

Restrictive business practices

A Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices was approved in 1980 by the United Nations Conference on Restrictive Business Practices and adopted by the General Assembly.

The objectives of the rules, as set out in that text, were to ensure that restrictive business practices did not impede or negate the realization of benefits that should arise from the liberalization of tariff and non-tariff barriers, to attain greater efficiency in international trade and development, to protect and promote social welfare, and to eliminate the disadvantages which might result from such practices by transnational corporations or other enterprises. Restrictive business practices were defined as acts, or behaviour of enterprises-or agreements or arrangements among them-which, through an abuse or acquisition and abuse of a dominant position of market power, limited access to markets or otherwise unduly restrained competition, having or being likely to have adverse effects on international trade, particularly that of developing countries, and on the economic development of those countries.

Among its general principles, the text called for national, regional and international action to eliminate or deal with such practices, as well as collaboration between Governments, international exchange of information and multilateral consultations on policy issues. It specified particular acts from which enterprises should refrain, including predatory behaviour towards competitors, discriminatory pricing, acquisition of other enterprises and price fixing in overseas markets, when those practices unduly restrained competition through abuse of a dominant position in the market, with adverse effects on international trade.

States were enjoined to adopt, improve and enforce legislation, and implement judicial and administrative procedures, to control such practices. At the international level, action would include the annual publication by UNCTAD of information to be submitted by States on their legislation and policies, consultation among States on issues concerning control of such practices, continued work by UNCTAD on a model law or laws that would help developing countries devise legislation, and technical assistance and training.

An Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices, operating within the framework of an UNCTAD committee, would be established to provide a forum for consultation on matters related to the Principles and Rules, undertake studies and research, collect and disseminate information, and make recommendations to States, without passing judgement on individual Governments or enterprises with regard to a specific business transaction. A United Nations conference would review the Principles and Rules five years after their adoption.

The United Nations Conference on Restrictive Business Practices adopted these Rules in the form of a resolution at the end of its second session, held at Geneva from 8 to 22 April 1980. The Conference had been convened by the General Assembly in 1978<sup>12</sup> and had held its first session in 1979.<sup>13</sup>

The Assembly adopted the Principles and Rules by resolution 35/63, adopted without vote on 5 December 1980. In doing so, it also decided to convene in 1985, under UNCTAD auspices, a United Nations conference to review all aspects of the text. It requested the Trade and Development Board to establish an intergovernmental group of experts on restrictive business practices, operating within the framework of an UNCTAD committee, to perform the functions designated for such a body in the Principles and Rules.

The resolution was recommended by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved it without vote on 20 November. The text was submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman, on the basis of informal consultations on an earlier draft submitted by Venezuela on behalf of the Group of 77 developing Member States, which was withdrawn after the new draft was presented. The two texts were essentially the same, except that the approved version added a preambular paragraph recalling past Assembly resolutions on international economic policy.

Czechoslovakia, Japan and the United States, though joining in the consensus on this text, voiced reservations as to its financial implications. Czechoslovakia-speaking also for the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR-and the United States said that any costs should be met by redeploying UNCTAD resources rather than adding to its budget. Japan said that the need for any additional resources should be examined in accordance with procedures specified in a document of the 1980 Conference. The observer for Switzerland said that, though the Principles and Rules could not automatically apply to Switzerland because it was not a United Nations Member, his country supported them and would participate in UNCTAD work on the subject.

In the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, annexed to resolution 35/56 of 5 December (see p. 499), the Assembly decided that the Principles and Rules would be actively implemented. (For relevant provision (paragraph 71) of the Strategy, see p. 509.)

Protectionism

The Trade and Development Board and the General Assembly considered in 1980 the problem of protectionism and structural adjustment, and scheduled further consideration in 1981.

In a January report to the Board on this topic, the UNCTAD secretariat concluded that there had been a sliding back of efforts to liberalize world trade. While many developed market-economy countries had taken measures to liberalize imports, whatever progress had been achieved appeared to have been more than offset by the introduction of new restrictions or the intensification of existing restrictions, including anti-dumping and countervailing actions.

In the Board's discussion in March, these conclusions were challenged by the spokesman for Group B, speaking for the developed market-economy countries except for Spain and Turkey. He stated that, despite protectionist pressures, developing country exports to members of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development had continued to grow. However, the Group of 77 spokesman declared that the efforts of developing countries to expand their production and exports were encountering artificial obstacles which prohibited their proper development. Those obstacles could be removed only by policies and measures that improved access to the markets of developed countries and facilitated the restructuring of world industry and trade. The spokesman for Group D (centrally planned economies) held that the widespread application of protectionist measures and of various forms of trade restrictions by a number of developed Western countries was detrimental to international trade and affected the interests of all countries.

The Board decided on 25 March to carry out an annual review of the patterns of production and trade in the world economy, and also to review developments involving restrictions of trade, with a view to making recommendations on the general problem of protectionism. It further decided to establish at its twenty-first session, later in 1980, a sessional committee which would give these items priority as part of its work programme.

Presenting to the Board in September an UNCTAD secretariat report on structural adjustment related to trade, a representative of the UNCTAD Secretary-General stated that, because of existing or new obstacles to trade, the developing countries had been prevented from expanding the profitable production of a wide range of goods, particularly products based on the processing of domestic raw materials. The developing countries enjoyed their main comparative advantage in labour-intensive products, yet these were the very products that were traditionally protected in developed market-economy countries.

Both the Group of 77 countries and Group B members presented draft resolutions to the Board calling for future action in this field. The Group of 77 draft was described by its sponsors as an endeavour to move towards concrete measures to combat protectionism and facilitate structural adjustment. The spokesman for Group B said its proposal emphasized the need for further studies and proposals by the secretariat. As the Board could not reach agreement on these proposals, it decided on 27 September to annex them to its report to the General Assembly and give further consideration to the issue in 1981.

In November 1980 at the Assembly session, Venezuela, on behalf of the States Members of the United Nations belonging to the Group of 77, introduced in the Second Committee a draft resolution by which the Assembly would, among other things: call on developed countries to eliminate barriers to the exports of developing countries and to implement long-term industrial structural adjustment policies aimed at an equitable and effective international division of labour; and call on UNCTAD to review and make recommendations on developments, including the evolution of the industrial capacity of developed countries, with a view to recommending measures to avoid protectionist demands in those countries.

By decision 35/418, adopted without vote on 5 December, the Assembly transmitted this draft resolution (annexed to the decision) to its 1981 session with a view to taking substantive action. This action was taken on a proposal by a Vice-Chairman of the Second Committee following informal consultations. The Committee approved it without vote on 20 November.

Speaking after the Committee acted, Venezuela, on behalf of the Group of 77, said that the drastic changes which developed countries had proposed to the draft resolution submitted on the Group's behalf had been unacceptable because they would have distorted its form and substance. The USSR, stating that the socialist countries were in the vanguard of the struggle against protectionism, said it would have voted for the draft if the text had been considered.

Industrial collaboration arrangements

An expert group jointly convened by UNCTAD and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO- the Ad Hoc UNCTAD/UNIDO Group of Experts on Trade and Trade-related Aspects of Industrial Collaboration Arrangements-at its first session in 1979,<sup>14</sup> had held preliminary discussions on aspects of enterprise-to-enterprise arrangements and on the role of Governments in industrial collaboration. It had agreed that industrial co-operation and trade between developed and developing countries needed to be encouraged to facilitate industrialization, and recommended that the secretariats of UNCTAD and UNIDO jointly undertake a work programme.

As the Group did not complete its work, the Trade and Development Board and the Industrial Development Board of UNIDO approved its recommendation for a further session. Following consultations between the two secretariats, this was set for June 1981.

The Trade and Development Board's action was taken by a resolution of 25 March 1980, by which it requested the Group to prepare its final recommendations, including future action if necessary. It stated the understanding that funds for the work leading to the next session, including secretariat studies, would be provided from within existing resources of the two organizations. On 19 May, the Industrial Development Board also authorized preparations for and the convening of a second session. The report of the Group was also considered and noted by the UNCTAD Committee on Manufactures on 25 July.

Multilateral trade negotiations

Twice during 1980, the Trade and Development Board examined the results of the multilateral trade negotiations launched in 1973 and concluded in December 1979 within the framework of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).<sup>15</sup> However, although it decided in March 1980 to complete a global evaluation of the negotiations at its second session of the year, it was unable to reach agreement in September and decided to deal with the question further in 1981.

Presenting to the Board in March an assessment of the results of the trade negotiations as seen by the UNCTAD secretariat, a representative of the UNCTAD Secretary-General stated that they could be viewed as an important step in dealing with a number of significant problems in international trade, if they were implemented in a positive and dynamic manner. However, in the context of their objectives, the results seemed modest and wanting in many respects. Many proposals by the developing countries for differential and more favourable treatment had not been fully met. Moreover, the tariff reductions resulting from the negotiations would erode the preferential margins which those countries enjoyed on many of their exports, and the institutionalization of the concepts of conditionality and graduation could lead to discriminatory treatment of those countries.

During the Board's discussion, the spokesman for the Group of 77 referred to a number of issues left unresolved in the negotiations and stressed the need for solutions. He pointed in particular to the issue of revising the multilateral safeguards system, which defined circumstances under which countries could take emergency action of a non-discriminatory character to restrict imports of particular products when they caused or threatened serious injury to domestic producers.

In the view of Group D (centrally planned economies), the trade negotiations had failed to stop the spread of protectionist measures in the developed market-economy countries. However, the Group D countries were still studying the codes worked out in the negotiations and attached great importance to implementing them in full compliance with the most-favoured-nation principle.

The EEC spokesman held that the successful conclusion of the negotiations had been of the utmost importance for the maintenance and improvement of an open trading system. The least developed countries had benefited substantially. The United States said that, contrary to the UNCTAD secretariat's analysis, the developing countries had derived substantial benefits which far outweighed any potential loss brought about by the narrowing of preferential margins.

On 25 March, the Board decided to complete the global evaluation of the negotiations at its next session. To aid in this task, it requested its committees to examine developments in international trade arising from the implementation of the results of the negotiations, particularly the impact on developing countries. In addition, the

Board requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General and the United Nations Development Programme to continue assisting the developing countries in the consultations and negotiations on the unresolved issues, and also asked the UNCTAD Secretary-General to follow closely the work of GATT in the post-negotiation framework.

The Committee on Manufactures adopted some agreed conclusions concerning the negotiations on 25 July. Confirming the importance of the most-favoured-nation principle, the Committee urged countries to work towards the goal of maximum participation in the resulting codes and agreements, and stressed the importance of maximum transparency in the working of the bodies that would implement them. It further urged countries to give priority to areas identified in the GATT work programme, particularly those of interest to developing countries. It emphasized trade liberalization and special attention to the problems of the least developed countries.

The Committee agreed that negotiations on the safeguards issue should be intensified as a matter of urgency, with a view to providing greater uniformity and certainty. It recognized the importance of improving individual schemes under the generalized system of preferences, taking due account of the interests of preference-receiving developing countries. The Committee agreed to examine developments in international trade arising from the implementation of the results of the negotiations, in particular the impact on the trade of developing countries and the need to further their interest.

Following further consideration of this subject, the Trade and Development Board noted on 27 September that it had not been able to reach agreement, one of the factors being a lack of time. It decided to deal with the matter further at its March 1981 session.

Decision 35/418, as recommended by Second Committee, A/35/592/Add.2 and Corr.1. adopted without vote by Assembly.

At its 83rd plenary meeting, on 5 December 1980, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, decided to transmit to its thirty-sixth session, for consideration with a view to taking substantive action, the following draft resolution:

"Protectionism and structural adjustment

"The General Assembly,

"Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and International economic co-operation, 31/163 of 21 September 1976 and 33/198 of 29 January 1979,

'Bearing in mind the relevant resolutions adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, particularly resolution 96(IV) of 31 May 1976, entitled 'A set of interrelated and mutually supporting measures for expansion and diversification of exports of manufactures and semi-manufactures of developing countries,'

"Recalling also resolution 131(V), adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on 3 June 1979, entitled 'Protectionism and structural adjustment,'

"Recognizing that international trade should play an essential role in economic growth and development, particularly that of developing countries, and that the expansion of international trade on an equitable basis should be beneficial to all countries,

"Noting with concern the increase in many developed countries of subsidies to inefficient and internationally less competitive lines of production which are of particular export interest to developing countries,

"Noting also that increasing domestic subsidies to agricultural productions in developed countries, a matter which is not sufficiently negotiated in the multilateral trade negotiations, disrupts international trade and seriously affects production in and export from developing countries,

"Recognizing also that a healthy world economy would require, inter alia, the establishment of long-term industrial structural adjustment policies and measures to facilitate a greater transfer of industrial capacities from developed to developing countries, in order to attain an equitable and effective international division of labour, as well as the promotion of a substantial increase in the share of developing countries in world industrial production and exports of manufactures and semi-manufactures, in the light of the targets set out in the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation,

"Noting the deep concern of all countries about intensified protectionist pressures and that of the developing countries in particular about the serious consequences which the increase in recent years of protectionist measures in developed countries may have for them by affecting their exports, particularly in sectors in which the comparative advantage has shifted in their favour and opened up important perspectives for growth in their economies,

"Recognizing further that the current economic problems of developed countries cannot be solved by concealed or open protectionism and that trade-restrictive measures could touch off chain reactions involving a widening series of actions by an increasing number of countries,

"Noting with deep concern that such measures, by delaying the process of necessary structural change in the developed countries and consequently limiting the market access for agricultural, manufactured and semi-manufactured exports of developing countries, have adverse effects on the economies of developing countries,

"Realizing that increasing protectionist measures have, inter alia, aggravated inflation in the developed countries, which is, in turn, transferred to the developing countries,

"Emphasizing the importance of structural adjustment for the elimination of protectionism and for the promotion of greater international trade, taking into account the interests of developing countries and with a view to the early attainment of their development objectives,

"1. Urges developed countries to implement fully and to adhere strictly to the standstill provisions they have accepted by refraining from introducing new tariff and non-tariff barriers affecting the exports of developing countries and to reduce substantially tariff escalation so as to provide improved access to exports of manufactures, semi-manufactures and processed primary products from the developing countries;

"2. Calls upon developed countries to eliminate promptly their existing tariff and non-tariff barriers, particularly quantitative restrictions and other measures having an equivalent effect on the exports of developing countries;

"3. Agrees that structural adjustment should be a constant and global process which the international community, in particular the developed countries, should facilitate by conscious efforts aimed at ensuring accelerated and sustained overall growth of the developing countries, including the development and diversification of their economies and an effective international division of labour involving both interindustry and intra-industry specialization, enabling developing countries to secure an increase in their share of world trade, of processed goods and of manufacturing;

"4. Calls upon developed countries to implement long-term industrial structural adjustment policies with a view to facilitating the establishment of an equitable and effective international division of labour;

"5. Regrets that the Trade and Development Board, at its twenty-first session, was unable to make any headway in its follow-up action to section A, paragraph 2, of resolution 131(V) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and to Board decision 217(XX) of 25 March 1980 on the issues of protectionism and structural adjustment, and urges all countries, in particular developed countries, to exercise the necessary political will to enable those resolutions to be implemented;

"6. Calls upon States members of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to undertake sectoral reviews within the framework of the annual review referred to in resolution 131(VI) with a view to the effective and full implementation of section A, paragraph 3, of that resolution, and invites the Conference to formulate general recommendations on the basis of those reviews which national Governments would take into account in implementing section A, paragraph 3, of resolution 131(V);

"7. Requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to review continuously developments involving restrictions of trade affecting exports of developing countries with a view to examining and formulating appropriate recommendations, and to ensure that this comprehensive review also deals with the monitoring of the evolution of the industrial capacity in the developed countries in order to recommend the necessary measures that would avoid protectionist demands in those countries."

Invisibles, including shipping

The Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade and the Committee on Shipping met during 1980, and their reports were acted on by the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development [UNCTAD] in September.

The Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade held its ninth session at Geneva in two parts, from 3 to 11 July and from 29 September to 3 October. The first part was devoted to financial questions, including financial resources for development, export credits as a means of promoting exports from developing countries, and the requirements for an effective system of international financial co-operation (see p. 538). On these topics, the Committee adopted agreed conclusions calling for increased official development assistance and adopted resolutions requesting studies and recommendations by the UNCTAD secretariat on improved access to capital markets by developing countries, asking the UNCTAD Secretary-General to consult States and financial institutions on operational features of a proposed export credit guarantee facility, and agreeing to make a review of international financial co-operation, including financial flows, a major concern of its future work.

At the second part of its session, the Committee dealt with aspects of insurance. On 3 October, it adopted a resolution by which it agreed on the need for greater efforts to retain more insurance business in the national markets of developing countries. To this end, it urged those countries to intensify efforts to promote and consolidate their domestic insurance sectors, and recommended regional and interregional co-operation in the field of reinsurance. It requested the developed nations of East and West to help in this endeavour, requested the UNCTAD secretariat to render technical assistance and urged international development agencies to give adequate priority to insurance projects.

The UNCTAD secretariat was also asked to report on implementation of the Committee's past decisions on insurance questions, to continue work on loss prevention in fire and marine-cargo insurance, to explore schemes to support national crop insurance, and to study other insurance sectors, including ways of covering losses due to natural catastrophes. Finally, the Committee requested that the UNCTAD review of insurance events in developing countries be published annually rather than biennially.

The Committee on Shipping held its ninth session from 1 to 12 September at Geneva. It adopted five resolutions and three decisions concerning merchant fleet development, technical co-operation, flags of convenience, ports, shipping insurance, multimodal transport and the membership of the Working Group on International Shipping Legislation.

By its resolution on merchant fleet development, the Committee requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene a 13 -member group of experts on bulk cargoes, to study whether major importers and exporters were impeding the shipping lines of any developing countries from competing in the iron ore, phosphate rock and bauxite/alumina trades. On broader issues, it called on developed countries to give technical assistance in such fields as fleet development, ship and port management, chartering, and training of personnel. It recommended that international financial institutions consider setting aside adequate funds for the shipbuilding and ship repair industries of developing countries, and took note of those countries' wish that soft terms for such lending should include a repayment period of 15 years, with a two- to three-year moratorium at the start. It endorsed joint ventures between shipping lines of developing and developed countries, and decided to review regularly the subject of ship financing. Finally, it called for improved shipping statistics, including continued study of a uniform system.

By a separate resolution on technical co-operation, the Committee urged the United Nations Development Programme to allocate more funds for UNCTAD projects and requested the UNCTAD secretariat to establish an experimental inquiry service to help developing countries assess their assistance needs. It suggested that developing countries engage in technical co-operation to develop transport links among them.

It recommended that a special session of the Committee be held in 1981 on the topic of open-registry vessels, also known as flags of convenience. In preparation for this meeting, the UNCTAD secretariat was asked to study the socio-economic consequences of any phasing out of open registries, the accountability of shipowners under the open-registry system, the extent to which such vessels applied international safety and labour conventions, and fiscal advantages and disadvantages.

On this subject, the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group on the Economic Consequences of the Existence or Lack of a Genuine Link between Vessel and Flag of Registry held its second session at Geneva from 14 to 22 January 1980. Unable to reach agreement, the Group annexed to its report the two proposals that had been presented to it. The first, offered on behalf of the States members of the "Group of 77" developing countries, would have had the Ad Hoc Group conclude that open registries should be phased out within a reasonable period of time, with the aid of an international instrument to be worked out by the Committee. The second document, submitted on behalf of most of Group B (developed market-economy countries), expressed doubt that such phasing out would benefit developing countries in general and called for efforts to increase the competitiveness of developing country fleets.

With regard to ports, the Committee on Shipping recommended the establishment of an UNCTAD advisory service, coupled with continued

secretariat assistance to Governments and port authorities. It invited countries to make financial contributions for these activities. It also asked for a pilot study of the feasibility of setting up a port data bank and for preparation of a series of monographs on port management and operations. In a separate decision, it recommended that port congestion surcharges be imposed only after adequate notice and on the basis of an agreed formula.

In accordance with a decision by the Committee in September, its Working Group on International Shipping Legislation devoted its seventh session, held at Geneva from 1 to 19 December, to the subject of marine hull insurance, with the aim of drawing up a set of standard clauses as a non-mandatory international model for insurance contracts. In light of the progress made, the Group recommended that the work be completed at its 1981 session, at which it would also seek to prepare a similar set of standard clauses for cargo insurance.

The Committee decided that, as from the convening of the Working Group's 1980 session, the Group's membership would be the same as that of the Committee.

Finally, the Committee adopted a work programme on multimodal and container transport (see p. 1021), following the adoption in May of the United Nations Convention on International Multimodal Transport of Goods (see p. 1020).

On 27 September, the Trade and Development Board took note of the Committee's report and endorsed its resolutions on open-registry fleets, merchant fleet development and the membership of the Working Group on International Shipping Legislation, as well as its decision on multimodal transport.

Transfer of technology

The Committee on Transfer of Technology of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) held its third session at Geneva from 17 to 28 November 1980, adopting seven resolutions and two decisions on the final day.

Expressing the need to formulate a strategy for the technological transformation of developing countries, the Committee requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to prepare a report on measures to implement the science and technology section of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (for details, see p. 676). It also asked for further information from Governments on implementation of past UNCTAD resolutions on strengthening the technological transformation of developing countries, so that it could review the matter at its next session.

The Committee requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to implement the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development, approved by the 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development<sup>16</sup> (see p. 676), and endorsed an appeal for contributions to the Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development (see p. 678.)

An appeal for additional funds for the UNCTAD Advisory Service on Transfer of Technology, a facility set up to provide technical and operational assistance to developing countries on request, was contained in another resolution (see p. 680).

The Committee decided that UNCTAD should pursue studies on certain specific aspects of technology transfer. Thus, it requested further studies on the role of small and medium-sized enterprises in the international transfer of technology, which was the subject of a paper submitted to it in 1980. It asked that a group of governmental experts be convened in 1982 to continue to examine the economic, commercial and developmental aspects of industrial property (including patents and trade marks) in the transfer of technology to developing countries. In addition, it asked for completion of ongoing studies on environmental aspects of the transfer and development of technology, and for a report on the UNCTAD work programme for technology transfer.

With regard to development aspects of the reverse transfer of technology ("brain drain"), the Committee requested a comprehensive study from the UNCTAD Secretary-General on the feasibility of measuring human resource flows and proposed that an intergovernmental group of experts be set up to pursue the subject (for details, see p. 680).

The United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology continued work on drafting a code at its third session, held at Geneva from 21 April to 6 May (see p. 682). At the Conference's request, the General Assembly, by resolution 35/60 of 5 December (see p. 637), decided to convene a fourth session of the Conference in 1981.

Technical co-operation

Total project expenditures by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) on technical co-operation during 1980 amounted to some $14.1 million (see table). Three fourths of the expenditures were for inter-country projects, affording greater opportunities to spread resources among a number of developing countries. Some 87.4 per cent of the total was financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

During 1980, the volume of UNCTAD technical assistance to the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries more than doubled in comparison with 1979, in response to the adoption that year of the Comprehensive New Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries.<sup>17</sup> A number of such countries received help in preparing their country presentations for the 1981 United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries.

The growing importance of the concept of collective self-reliance among developing countries was reflected in a 26.5 per cent increase over 1979 for operational activities in support of economic co-operation among developing countries. These consisted of regional and inter-regional advisory services, support for economic integration schemes in developing countries and assistance to several commodity producers' associations.

The adoption by the General Assembly of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices (resolution 35/63 of 5 December; see p. 626) led to the formulation of project proposals with a view to providing developing countries with advisory services and training for the implementation of this new instrument.

Another development in 1980 was the launching of an UNCTAD Research and Training Programme, with financial support from UNDP and the Fund of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. This programme was designed to enhance the analytical framework of trade and development policies, to explore the implications of alternative remedial policies and to strengthen the negotiating capabilities of developing countries with regard to trade and development issues.

A sizable technical co-operation programme was also carried out by the International Trade Centre, jointly financed by UNCTAD and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (for details, see p. 639). On 19 September the Trade and Development Board took note of the annual report of the Centre's Joint Advisory Group.

The UNCTAD secretariat's first annual report on the technical co-operation activities of UNCTAD was examined in March by the Board's Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget. The Working Party discussed the report but drew no conclusions.

Organizational questions

Rationalization of UNCTAD machinery

Proposals to improve the functioning of the intergovernmental bodies and secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) were presented and discussed during 1980 at meetings of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Committee on the Rationalization of UNCTAD's Machinery and at both regular sessions of the Trade and Development Board. The proposals were presented by the three main regional groups-the "Group of 77" developing countries, Group B (developed market economies) and Group D (centrally planned economies). Following efforts to reach a common position, the Board decided in September to deal further with the matter in 1981.

The initial work was done by the Ad Hoc Committee, established by UNCTAD in 1979 (resolution 114(V) of 3 June).<sup>18</sup> At the closing meeting of its first session, held from 5 to 9 November 1979 at Geneva, the Committee agreed to establish an intersessional Working Party to make conclusions and recommendations on a number of subjects which it identified as needing further consideration. These subjects were considered in four working groups set up by the Working Party. Their conveners reported to the Working Party at its closing meeting on 24 January 1980, and the reports, which were informal and committed no one, were transmitted to the Committee.

The Ad Hoc Committee held a second and final session at Geneva from 4 to 15 February, at which the regional groups stated their position or made proposals. These were annexed to the Committee's report to the Trade and Development Board.

The subject was further considered in an informal group open to all UNCTAD members, established on 18 March by the Board's Sessional Committee. The three regional groups each presented a draft resolution to this group, whose Chairman reported its conclusions to the Committee on 20 March. These were that, while the drafts contained a number of common ideas representing a convergence of views, the group had not had time to prepare a consolidated text. Accepting the group's recommendation that work should continue at the next session, the Board agreed on 25 March to remit the three draft resolutions to its September session and to establish a working group to prepare a final text.

The sessional Working Group in September conducted intensive negotiations on the basis of the three draft resolutions submitted by the regional groups and a further draft by the Working Group's Chairman. The Chairman's draft, annexed to the Board's annual report to the General Assembly, contained proposals on most of the issues dealt with in the proposals by the regional groups. They included provisions for a better organization of the sessions of UNCTAD and the Board, additional functions for the Board's Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget, a strengthening of the main committees, a review of the structure of subsidiary bodies, preference for intergovernmental expert groups over those whose members served in a personal capacity, a more rational calendar of meetings, improved information services to member States, more regularized intergovernmental consultations, strengthened UNCTAD research activities, and improved documentation, translation and interpretation services.

Although the Group was able to agree on a number of issues, it could not complete negotiations on a few points. Consequently, the Board, by a decision of 27 September, decided to deal further with the matter at its March 1981 session. By the same decision, it requested that the supplementary conference services that had been provided to facilitate the work of UNCTAD meetings continue to be made available on a trial basis.

The Board also took note of suggestions made by the UNCTAD Secretary-General for an annual concentration of main committee meetings just before sessions of the Board, and invited him to elaborate their substantive and logistical implications in the light of consultations with Governments. In presenting these suggestions-initially to the Ad Hoc Committee and later to the Board- the Secretary-General said they were intended to meet the concern for greater co-ordination among the main committees through the exercise of stronger guidance by the Board.

At the close of the Board's discussion in September, the spokesman for Group B expressed doubts about the feasibility of the Secretary-General's suggestions and favoured an arrangement under which sessions of main committees dealing with related subjects would be held in a six-month period prior to a Board session. The other regional groups did not state a position on the suggestions.

Transfer of the Experts Servicing Unit

The Experts Servicing Unit was transferred from the Administrative and Financial Services of the United Nations Office at Geneva to the Administrative Service of UNCTAD on 15 September 1980. Reporting this action in a note to the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the Secretary-General said he anticipated that the transfer would improve co-ordination between the recruitment and servicing of experts.

The Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note on 17 December by adopting, without objection, section XVI of resolution 35/217. The Fifth Committee recommended this action on 15 December, also without objection, on an oral proposal of its Chairman.

UNCTAD medium-term plan

The draft medium-term plan outlining projected UNCTAD activities from 1980 through 1983 was examined by the Trade and Development Board's Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget at its first session, held at Geneva from 3 to 12 March 1980. The Working Party discussed each UNCTAD programme but drew no conclusions. The Board, after considering the Working Party's report, requested on 20 March that it be transmitted to the appropriate United Nations bodies, together with the comments of Board members.

The Working Party's report and revisions by the Secretariat to the original draft plan were accordingly sent to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and to the General Assembly in connexion with its consideration of the United Nations medium-term plan for 1980-1983. By resolution 35/9 of 3 November, the Assembly endorsed the revisions accepted by the Working Party (see p. 1202).

At its second session, held at Geneva from 8 to 17 September, the Working Party studied the feasibility, as well as the procedural and methodological aspects, of programme evaluation in relation to the work of UNCTAD. It also considered principles and guidelines for future medium-term plans. Two sets of proposals on these topics were presented on behalf of States of Group B and the Group of 77, respectively, and these were annexed to the Working Party's report. The Board took note of that report on 27 September.

Report of the Trade and Development Board

Aspects of current UNCTAD work were dealt with by the General Assembly in resolution 35/60 of 5 December 1980, adopted by a recorded vote of 129 to 0, with 19 abstentions. The resolution was recommended by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved it on 20 November by a recorded vote of 104 to 0, with 18 abstentions, 'on the basis of a text submitted by Venezuela on behalf of United Nations Member States belonging to the Group of 77. It was approved following consideration of the report of the Trade and Development Board, which was transmitted directly to the Assembly in accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 1980/187, adopted, without vote, on 25 July on an oral proposal of the Council President.

By resolution 35/60, the Assembly urged Governments to adhere to the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities (see p. 621) and the International Natural Rubber Agreement, 1979 (see p. 623), and to consider becoming parties to the United Nations Convention on International Multimodal Transport of Goods (see p. 1021). It welcomed the Board's 27 September resolution on the debt and development problems of developing countries (see p. 538), and reaffirmed the role of UNCTAD in contributing to efforts towards the evolution of the international monetary system (see p. 620). It decided to convene a fourth session in 1981 of the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology (see p. 682).

At the request of Luxembourg (on behalf of the members of the European Economic Community (EEC)), the Committee voted separately on paragraph 5, pertaining to the international monetary system, adopting it by a recorded vote of 97 to 15, with 9 abstentions. The paragraph was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 123 to 15, with 9 abstentions. Luxembourg, speaking for the EEC members, explained the votes of most of them against this paragraph, as did France, Sweden and the United States; Italy, the Netherlands, Spain and Turkey explained their abstentions (for details, see p. 620).

Reservations on paragraph 3, concerning the Convention on Multimodal Transport, were voiced by France, Greece, Japan, the Netherlands, Spain and the United Kingdom (for details, see p. 1021).

Also in connexion with the report of the Trade and Development Board, the General Assembly, by section IX of resolution 35/217, adopted without objection on 17 December, took note of the Secretary-General's report on revised budget estimates resulting from the Board's resolutions and decisions during 1980. According to this report, the cost of servicing additional meetings decided on by the Board for the 1980-1981 biennium was estimated at $808,400. The Fifth Committee had approved, without vote on 5 December, the text of section IX, as orally proposed by its Chairman.

When the Secretary-General's report was examined by the Fifth Committee, Belgium proposed, on behalf of EEC members, that meetings of governmental experts on economic co-operation among developing countries, proposed by the Board for 1980 (see p. 562), should not be financed from the United Nations budget. This proposal was rejected on 5 December by a recorded vote of 30 in favour to 63 against, with 1 abstention.

International Trade Centre

Activities in 1980

During 1980, the International Trade Centre (ITC) at Geneva, under the joint sponsorship of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), continued to expand its technical co-operation activities, serving as the focal point for United Nations assistance to developing countries in the formulation and implementation of trade promotion programmes.

The total ITC assistance programme in 1980 amounted to $14.83 million, an 8.5 per cent increase over the 1979 programme. Almost 72 per cent ($10.66 million) was financed by trust fund contributions; the remainder ($4.17 million) was financed by the United Nations Development Programme. These figures excluded support costs accruing to ITC, which were applied to headquarters-based activities not included in the regular budget. Approximately 33 per cent of this programme was used for export-market development of selected products; 29 per cent for establishing and strengthening national trade promotion institutions and services; 28 per cent for training government officials, businessmen and instructors in trade promotion and export marketing; 5 per cent for multinational product-promotion; 3 per cent for import operations and techniques; 2 per cent for a special programme for least developed countries; and the remainder for special programmes of technical co-operation with chambers of commerce and for export-oriented rural development. Activities for the least developed countries, including the special programme and other trade promotion activities, accounted for 20.3 per cent of ITC's total programme.

The programme expanded in value in all regions except Africa, where a decrease of $240,000 was largely due to unexpected changes in the organization and staffing of co-operating government bodies and the need for longer-than-expected preparation and programming periods for several projects. Asia and the Pacific maintained the largest share of the programme (39 per cent), followed by Africa (18.5 per cent), Latin America (12.9 per cent), and Europe; the Mediterranean and the Middle East (7.7 per cent); the remaining 21.9 per cent went to interregional projects.

Integrated assistance projects, mainly national in scope, accounted for 51.2 per cent of the total programme. They sought to provide a balanced mix of assistance for institution building, trade promotion strategy formulation, market information, training, and marketing and import techniques, with particular attention to the needs of the least developed countries. The Centre carried out 36 integrated assistance projects, 33 in individual countries and three for regional groupings. In addition, nearly all developing countries received ITC assistance through regional, interregional and global projects, provided mainly through 583 technical co-operation experts, a decrease of 25 from 1979.

The technical assistance management of ITC's programme was exercised by its Division of Technical Co-operation, through the support and direction of experts working in the four developing regions, and by its Division of Interregional Programmes, which was responsible for global programmes such as training, import operations and techniques, co-operation with national chambers of commerce, assistance to the least developed countries and export-oriented rural development. The Technical Division continued to give assistance in identifying products offering favourable export prospects, undertaking research on export markets and helping formulate market development plans. This assistance was provided through various types of market surveys and marketing publications, advisory missions of market development officers and functional advisers, and the dissemination of trade information and statistical data.

Market research surveys were undertaken during the year on several agro-based products and manufactures, and monographs on trade channels were prepared for a series of products in individual markets. All ITC publications, including its quarterly magazine, International Trade FORUM, were available free of charge to exporters and trade officials in developing countries. In addition, ITC continued to carry out market research for individual countries, either as part of integrated country projects or as special projects, and to answer inquiries for trade information. It also undertook an analysis of trade between developing countries and disseminated the results.

The Centre continued to be active in the multi-lateral trade promotion of primary commodities, co-operating with interested developing countries and international organizations working in this field. In co-operation with UNCTAD, ITC helped formulate market development programmes within the context of UNCTAD's Integrated Programme for Commodities. It also worked with commodity groups of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and with regional and international commodity bodies concerning market development activities. Three intercountry projects on sisal and henequen, coir and tea were implemented by ITC.

In 1980, 2,787 participants from developing countries took part in ITC's training activities, including seminars, workshops, courses and study missions. A major portion of these activities were held in developing countries on a regional, subregional and individual country basis. The training programme focused on helping developing countries establish their own framework for training in export marketing and trade promotion through an assessment of long-term needs and the development of national programmes. Local training resources were strengthened through instructors' workshops and through the issuance of ITC training packs.

The Joint Advisory Group on ITC reported on its 3 to 7 March session to the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board, which took note of the report on 19 September in connexion with its discussion of export promotion. The Group had reviewed ITC's 1979 technical co-operation programme, its relations with United Nations organizations and other bodies, manpower development for trade promotion, the evolution of ITC and its work programme during 1968-1979, and its future role within the United Nations system.

Secretariat

In 1980, ITC headquarters staff consisted of 85 Professional and 122 General Service employees, including those financed from the regular budget and extrabudgetary resources and by developed countries, and excluding project-financed staff. The Centre's regular budget of $8.82 million, covering headquarters operations, was contributed in equal portions by UNCTAD and GATT.

Chapter VI

Industrial development

The United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) continued in 1980 to assist developing countries to accelerate their industrial advancement. The value of UNIDO's technical assistance to these countries amounted to $76.3 million in 1980, barely keeping up with the 1979 performance figure of $70.5 million because of inflation.

The year began with the Third General Conference of UNIDO at New Delhi, India, from 21 January to 9 February, when new measures for world industrial co-operation were considered. The Conference adopted a New Delhi Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrialization of Developing Countries and International Co-operation for their Industrial Development which sought to advance the third world towards the targets set by the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation adopted at UNIDO's Second General Conference in 1975—a 25 per cent share of world industrial production for developing countries by the year 2000. On the Conference's recommendation, the General Assembly proclaimed the 1980s as the Industrial Development Decade for Africa. The 1980 activities of UNIDO focused on implementation of the New Delhi Declaration and Plan of Action and related mainly to industrial and energy-related technology, industrial production, development of human resources, special measures for the least developed countries, the flow of financial resources, and regional and global industrial co-operation.

The year witnessed an expansion in the system of consultations, which provided a forum for Governments, labour and industry to discuss industrial sectors and problems as well as their implications for the international community and were designed to help bring about a re-deployment of certain productive capacities. There was also an expansion in UNIDO's investment promotion services, whose tasks included promoting the flow of external financial resources and technology to the developing countries; during 1980 three new services, in Paris, Tokyo and Vienna, were added to the four already operating (Brussels, Cologne, New York and Zurich).

The Constitution of UNIDO on its establishment as a United Nations specialized agency, adopted in April 1979, remained open for signature in 1980 at United Nations Headquarters, New York. By the end of the year, 98 States had signed the Constitution and 28, of the 80 necessary for its entry into force, had ratified it.

Activities in 1980

Technical assistance

Technical assistance expenditures by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) in 1980, including administrative and research expenditures under the United Nations regular budget, totalled $123.3 million (see table on following page).

Field activities involved a total of 1,330 projects, including 93 valued at more than $1 million. New technical assistance programmes dealt mainly with projects in energy and technology and with special measures for the least developed countries. In the energy sector, they covered bio-fuels technology, coal conversion, solar energy, refinery operations, utilization of flared and natural gas, and mini-hydroelectric power generation.

Of total resources expended on projects, 47.4 per cent was spent on project personnel, 35.9 per cent on subcontracts and equipment, and 14.8 per cent on fellowships and training; the remainder covered miscellaneous expenses. A breakdown of technical assistance by region showed that Africa received 26.1 per cent of total resources, the Americas and Arab States 12.8 per cent each, Asia and the Pacific 30.5 per cent, Europe 7.6 per cent, and interregional and global operations 10.2 per cent.

In Africa, where the value of technical assistance delivered was 22.1 per cent higher than in 1979, nearly $20 million was provided in 1980 to meet Government requests for assistance to strengthen institutional, technological and human resources capabilities, and to promote industries using local raw materials. Countries in the region were assisted in industrial planning, feasibility studies, industrial management, energy programmes, investment and technology transfer.

Help to the least developed countries, 20 of which were in Africa, focused on the development of small and medium-sized industries, particularly agro-based foundries, building materials, feasibility studies, preparation of industrial project profiles and training. In drought-affected areas, the emphasis was on the design and manufacture of water-lifting devices and agricultural implements adapted to the land, and on energy programmes.

At the regional and subregional levels, assistance was provided mainly for identifying possibilities for multinational investment and in formulating multinational industrial co-operation projects. The Organization of African Unity was assisted in preparing its first economic summit meeting in April and a document on the stages of integration of African economies.

In the Americas, there was a decrease of 4.9 per cent in the total value of projects executed during the year. Energy continued to be the dominant subject of technical assistance requests, as was development of the metallurgical sector. Requests for engineering advisory services increased and, in sectoral planning, help was provided for strengthening the capacity for manufacturing capital goods. At the regional level, assistance continued to be provided in standardization, quality control, technology transfer, investment promotion, energy and computer-aided manufacturing projects.

In the Arab States, where expenditure decreased by 1 per cent, most of the assistance provided was for institutional infrastructure and chemical industries. Another important field was industrial information. The organization continued to act as a servicing organization, providing technical assistance against payment. Trust funds and cost-sharing arrangements financed 39 per cent of all UNIDO projects in these countries.

The largest share of technical assistance again went to Asia and the Pacific, with total delivery amounting to $23.2 million, an increase of 16.9 per cent over 1979. Help was provided for projects ranging from chemical and engineering industries to reorganizing rural industrial structures, with particular attention paid to needs of the least developed countries.

In Europe, where a decrease of 14.7 per cent in technical assistance delivery was registered, the focus was on the engineering and chemical industries. Aid was provided to some countries for the development of low-cost building materials based on industrial and agricultural wastes. Other project areas included shipbuilding, pulp and paper, energy, and electronics and telecommunications.

Important features of the year were development projects in China and the inauguration at Andhra Pradesh, India, of a sponge iron demonstration plant, the largest project to date in which UNIDO had been involved.

During the year, 143 expert group meetings, symposia, seminars, courses and other meetings were convened by UNIDO. It serviced 50 other United Nations meetings held at the Vienna International Centre.

The following tables show the number of experts received and provided, fellowships awarded, and cost of assistance provided, by country or territory, as well as UNIDO expenditures for direct technical co-operation projects and support activities. The United Nations Development Programme provided 75.1 per cent of the finance for field activities in 1980, mainly for experts, fellowships, contractual services and equipment. The rest, which came from the United Nations Industrial Development Fund and other sources, was used to finance, among other things, special measures for the least developed countries and training programmes.

Third General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization

The Third General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), held at New Delhi, India, from 21 January to 9 February 1980, adopted the New Delhi Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrialization of Developing Countries and International Co-operation for their Industrial Development, outlining measures to increase the industrial output of the developing countries.

The Conference was attended by representatives of 133 States, seven specialized agencies and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), as well as United Nations bodies and the Secretariat. Also in attendance were observers from 25 intergovernmental organizations, 24 non-governmental organizations and four national liberation movements- the African National Congress (South Africa), the Palestine Liberation Organization, the Pan-Africanist Congress of Azania, and the South West Africa People's Organization. (For participants and officers, see APPENDIX III.)

On 9 February, it adopted the reports of its Committees I and II, before adopting its report as a whole, containing the New Delhi Declaration and Plan of Action, which was then submitted through the Economic and Social Council to the General Assembly. The Conference also adopted two resolutions: one on women and industrialization and another recommending to the General Assembly that the 1980s be proclaimed as the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (see subsection below on OTHER DECISIONS OF THE CONFERENCE). Position papers by Group B (market-economy) and Group D (centrally planned economy) countries on the industrialization of developing countries were annexed to the Conference's report.

Consideration by the Conference

On 21 January, the United Nations Secretary-General noted that the developing countries, with 70 per cent of the world's population, accounted for only 9 per cent of world manufacturing output. Their aspiration to use their resources for development offered an opportunity to help sustain the growth of the industrially advanced countries while accommodating third world needs. Progress towards the new international economic order must be the major objective of the Conference.

The Prime Minister of India, Indira Gandhi, said that the development and absorption of technology must be in tune with society, which made sharing of technologies among developing countries particularly relevant. New mechanisms would have to be created to increase financial and technological flows.

Other inaugural speakers were President Neelam Sanjiva Reddy of India, the President of the thirty-fourth (1979) session of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of UNIDO. Speeches were made during the Conference by the heads of State or Government of Austria and Bangladesh, and messages received from those of China, Cuba, Poland and Tunisia.

Work of Committee I

Committee I reviewed at 12 meetings progress in implementing UNIDO's 1975 Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation,<sup>1</sup> problems and obstacles affecting their implementation and steps taken or proposed to resolve them. It considered: industrialization policies and strategies to achieve the Lima target of a 25 per cent share for developing countries of total world industrial output by the year 2000; improved mechanisms to promote the flow of integrated technical and financial aid; creation of industrial structures in developing countries to accelerate their economic growth; and the role of foreign investment, including transnational corporations.

Many delegations felt that progress towards attaining the Lima target was slow and disappointing. Although since UNIDO's Second General Conference in 1975 the developing countries as a whole had achieved a higher average rate of growth than the developed countries (7.5 per cent compared with 4.5 per cent), their share in total world industrial production was still exceedingly low, and the benefits of industrial development and concomitant growth had accrued only to a limited number of them.

Among the problems highlighted were: the increasing debt and debt-servicing burdens of developing countries, and the need to cancel the debts of the least developed of them and those most seriously affected by the current world economic crisis; the market protectionist measures of certain developed countries, with negative effects on the trade and growth prospects of developing countries; the inadequate flow of investment capital and official development assistance (ODA) to developing countries; inappropriate industrial development policies; the sharply escalating costs of energy; the activities of transnational corporations; inflation; and difficulties in acquiring advanced technology.

States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries urged developed countries to show political goodwill and greater understanding of the problems confronting the developing countries and supported the setting up of a monetary, financing and trading system aligned to the new international economic order.

Group D countries observed that the economies of some developing countries were too closely linked to those of the market-economy countries, which had undergone a period of recession; that had been compounded by the absence in certain developing countries of government control in essential industrial sectors.

The view was also advanced that the developing countries themselves bore the main responsibility for industrialization, which had to be based primarily on domestic savings, although external finance played a significant supplementary role and a climate conducive to foreign investment should be ensured. Several speakers, mainly from Eastern European States, called for strengthening State participation in the industrialization process, increased economic planning and due regard for social factors.

Some developing countries felt that achievement of the Lima target could not be left to market forces alone. Their growth rate should be twice that of the developed countries and investments of the order of $400 billion to $500 billion would have to be made by the end of the century. Collective self-reliance, redeployment of industry from developed to developing countries, structural change, a permanent system of industrial consultations, increased financial resources for the developing countries, and transfer of technology on acceptable terms were called for.

Group of 77 countries said disaggregation of the Lima target by region and sector, with interim time-frames, would provide a clearer vision of the target's objectives and of progress towards its achievement. The view was expressed that the ODA target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product should be observed by all industrialized countries, including those with centrally planned economies. Several developed countries emphasized the importance of using and improving existing financial institutions, cautioning against proliferation of institutions. Some opposed setting new development targets.

In introducing a Group of 77 proposal for the creation of a North-South global fund for the promotion of industrialization of developing countries, the Group's spokesman pointed out that the fund should not replace existing funds, since it would in fact satisfy only one tenth of the investments required to meet the Lima target; the rest would have to be met through existing commercial and multilateral channels.

Developing countries reiterated the need for foreign enterprises, in particular transnational corporations, to ensure that their investments were in line with the development objectives of the developing nations. A number of speakers said direct foreign investment supplemented domestic savings and national efforts in the industrialization process and helped promote the transfer of know-how and technology. However, in the view of Group D countries, foreign private investment practices, especially those of transnational corporations, had adverse effects on the industrialization process in developing countries and led to a substantial outflow of resources.

Work of Committee II

Committee II discussed, at 10 meetings, ways to foster domestic industrial processing of natural resources, industrial skills and the transfer and development of industrial technologies. It also examined the promotion of co-operation among developing countries, the system of consultations, redeployment of industries to developing countries, and a review of UNIDO's institutional arrangements for its long-range strategy and of the effectiveness of co-ordination and follow-up on industrial development issues covered by other United Nations organizations.

Developed countries generally supported increased processing of raw materials by the developing countries, taking into account, however, the processing capacities of the developed countries and the energy, financial and technological implications in the creation of production facilities in the developing countries. The processing of natural resources should be seen, according to a Group D view, as a fundamental and inherent element of the developing countries' industrial development.

The sovereign right of States over their natural resources was reaffirmed by all participants; some emphasized that the right of sovereignty should be exercised taking other rights into account and in accordance with international law.

With regard to financial, marketing and other requirements for closing the processing gap, it was generally recognized that substantial efforts were needed to support efforts of developing countries at the national, regional and international levels. There was also agreement on the need for more resources to be channelled to that sector by development finance institutions.

The Group of 77 spokesman mentioned the importance that developing countries attached to industrial training. Intensification of such activities received support from a number of States. Other speakers referred to the potential of co-operation among developing countries in the area of technical training. It was recognized that developing industrial manpower was directly related to the educational systems in the developing countries. In addition, the problem of the "brain drain"- the outflow of trained personnel -was recognized as requiring special attention, and there was agreement on the need for greater involvement of women.

Stating that they attached great importance to strengthening their technological capabilities, the developing countries called for the allocation of more resources and suitable institutional arrangements to enable UNIDO to promote technological co-operation among developing countries through the identification of their existing technological expertise and capabilities. Group D States saw a need for mechanisms to ensure the development and transfer of technologies that corresponded to actual needs and for strengthening the capabilities of the recipients to absorb technology. In the view of Group B States, the lack of an adequate infrastructure, including information and expertise, prevented the better utilization of imported technology and, while the greater part of technology transfer from market economies was through private firms, international co-operation could contribute a great deal to encouraging and facilitating the flow of technologies and strengthening technological infrastructure.

There was agreement that, instead of establishing new institutions, some of the tasks should be pursued within the framework and responsibilities of existing institutions, particularly UNIDO.

The link between energy and industrialization was recognized, and most Governments requested UNIDO to assign a high priority to promoting energy-related technologies and to providing technical assistance, including training, in that field. Assistance in the design, development and manufacture of equipment for energy generation, transmission and distribution was a task to which UNIDO should accord particular importance.

While economic co-operation among developing countries was essentially a primary concern of those countries themselves, several speakers said, the support of the developed countries and the international community at large would greatly enhance their efforts and reinforce co-operation between them and the developed countries. A call was made for developed countries to adopt special measures to facilitate the flow of financial, technical and technological aid to the developing countries. The UNIDO secretariat was urged to intensify and expand its operational and promotional programmes in this area.

With respect to UNIDO's system of consultations between developed and developing countries in the industrial area, Group of 77 spokesmen said results thus far achieved during the experimental phase had not fully met the expect-tations and needs of the developing countries, due to inadequate governmental representation from the industrialized countries. The system should urgently be put on a permanent basis to provide a forum for industrial negotiations.

Broad support was voiced for placing the system on a permanent and continuing basis. Group B States, however, emphasized the need for pragmatism and flexibility in the system and voiced preference for retaining it as an informal forum for exchange of views and not for negotiations among Governments. Group D countries cautioned against the use of the system to promote neo-colonialism and said it should be based on long-term trends of world industrial development, taking into account the pressing problems of the developing countries and the question of access to the industrial experience accumulated by all countries. It endorsed Group B's proposal for a continuing evaluation of the system.

Most countries urged that financial and human resources should be made available for follow-up action to the consultation meetings, particularly in the context of UNIDO's technical assistance activities. Speakers emphasized the need to include other industrial sectors, particularly those of interest to a large number of developing countries, and to consider methods allowing developing countries to increase the use of energy-conservation technologies, industrial planning and policy development, finance and technology. The organization was urged to arrange consultations at the regional, interregional and global levels, in co-operation with the regional commissions, with greater efforts made to secure the participation of the least developed countries. Most speakers felt government participation should be at a senior level to facilitate decision-making and definite commitments.

Another view held by the Group of 77 was that the developed countries had not taken steps to facilitate industrial redeployment, but had adopted protectionist measures instead. Redeployment, it was stated, implied access to the developed-country markets, positive adjustment of their economies based on long-term considerations, and national policies to facilitate the process. Group D States said the concept of redeployment should be seen in broad terms; a balanced international division of labour would benefit all members of the international community.

Group B countries viewed redeployment as a means by which uncompetitive lines of production gave way to more competitive counterparts, particularly in the developing countries. Redeployment, some of these States added, could proceed at a greater pace in an open international market. They saw it as a continuous process, primarily induced by private-enterprise decisions, with the role of Governments basically confined to policies supporting structural adjustment and removing impediments to trade.

Most participants agreed on the need for more effective measures to be taken to redeploy industrial capacities to developing countries, based on the principle of dynamic comparative advantage and in accordance with their overall national objectives, priorities and aspirations. The needs of the least developed, land-locked, island and most seriously affected developing countries should be given special consideration. Redeployment should primarily consist of transfer of existing industrial productive capacity, creation of new industrial facilities, transfer of technology and financial resources, and access to the markets of developed countries.

The Group of 77 favoured extending UNIDO's autonomy on budgetary and personnel matters. Support was voiced for the Senior Industrial Development Field Adviser (SIDFA) programme and for strengthening the technology programmes and the Special Industrial Services (SIS) programme.

Decisions of the Conference

New Delhi Declaration and Plan of Action

On 9 February 1980, the Third General Conference of UNIDO adopted, by a roll-call vote of 83 to 22, with 1 abstention,<sup>2</sup> the New Delhi Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrialization of Developing Countries and International Co-operation for their Industrial Development. The Plan sought to advance developing countries towards the target set by UNIDO's 1975 Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation<sup>3</sup>—at least a 25 per cent share of world industrial production by the year 2000.

The Conference failed to achieve North-South agreement, despite efforts in an informal contact group to reach a consensus on a compromise text drafted under the auspices of the Conference President, who subsequently withdrew that draft. The text adopted was a draft submitted in the first week of the Conference by the UNIDO member States belonging to the Group of 77. The Group's spokesman, who requested the roll-call vote, placed responsibility for the inability to reach agreement on the absence of flexibility and the lack of political will of some developed countries. He noted that certain proposals essential to the Group, regarding industrial financing, the system of consultations, industrial redeployment, trade in manufactured and semi-manufactured products, and disaggregation of the Lima target, had not met with a positive response.

The New Delhi Declaration had been adopted previously as the Havana Declaration at a ministerial meeting of the Group of 77 held in Cuba from 17 to 22 December 1979, preparatory to the UNIDO Conference. A summary of the New Delhi Declaration and the Plan of Action follows.

NEW DELHI DECLARATION

By its Declaration, the Conference expressed concern at the difficult situation confronting the developing countries and stated the need to find new ways to eliminate the industrial development problems confronting the least developed, the most seriously affected, island and land-locked developing countries and those affected by national liberation struggles. It expressed awareness that the vast majority of developing countries had been forced into poverty by alien occupation, racial discrimination including apartheid and zionism, colonialism and neo-colonialism, and that it was the duty of the international community, particularly the developed countries, to help them emerge from those circumstances.

In two parallel sections of the Declaration, the Conference reviewed the world industrial situation since 1975 and offered a strategy for further industrialisation of the developing countries.

The Conference expressed concern at a steadily worsening world economic crisis, emanating from several developed countries, which adversely affected developing countries' efforts for economic and social emancipation in their industrial development efforts. It also expressed deep concern at the uncooperative attitude of some developed countries, unacceptable practices of transnational corporations, inflation and pressures exerted on developing countries' balance-of-payments positions by unequal trade relations and debt increases. It deplored increasing use of protectionist measures and domestic subsidies, expressed dismay at the widening gap between the two groups of countries and viewed with profound dissatisfaction the fact that most developed countries had not evinced the political will to conclude negotiations for a fundamental restructuring of the international economic system.

The Conference reaffirmed the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action and deplored the lack of progress in their implementation. While in 1975 the developing countries had generated 8.6 per cent of world industrial production, by 1979 their estimated share barely exceeded 9 per cent.

The Conference called for the immediate adoption by the developed countries of special additional measures to enable the developing countries to attain the Lima target and its related objectives, and strongly emphasized the responsibility of the developed countries fully to contribute financially and technologically to those efforts.

The Conference noted that the impact of measures by the developing countries to promote industrial development had been limited by the current world economic crisis and by the lack of supporting measures by developed countries, most of which had not only failed to eliminate tariff and non-tariff barriers, but had instituted rules further to restrict access to their markets of manufactures and semi-manufactures and failed to implement measures designed to increase exports of those products from developing countries and to make the necessary structural adjustments in their economies to redeploy industrial capacity, make greater use of processing materials within developing countries, achieve a favourable balance between synthetics competing with natural products, and regulate transnational corporations. Their measures to increase financial contributions and expand technical co-operation programmes were also unsatisfactory, as was participation by their enterprises in approved national investment projects.

The Conference noted with satisfaction the growing efforts and welcomed the progress of developing countries in co-operating among themselves in the field of industrialization.

In reviewing financial matters, the Conference said the lack of adequate financing and the world financial crisis, brought about by the short-sighted policies of many developed countries, were developing countries' major obstacles. Official development assistance had fallen far short of the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product, dropping from 0.35 per cent in 1975 to 0.34 per cent in 1978. The escalating debt burden of developing countries was a major impediment, with servicing estimated at over $40 billion a year, or more than 20 per cent of their annual export earnings.

The international community and particularly the developed countries had a responsibility to work for a basic revision of the international monetary, financial and commercial systems, taking fully into account the interests of the developing countries. The Conference urged the market-economy countries to implement the Programme of Action on International Monetary Reform adopted at a ministerial meeting of the Group of 77 (Belgrade, Yugoslavia, 29 September 1979).<sup>4</sup>

The Conference deplored continuing limitations on fair access to scientific and technological know-how and expressed concern that the developing countries' share of world research was extremely small, much of it devoted to the military and areas of little importance to them. More resources, it said, should also be devoted to research and development of indigenous technology by developing countries themselves.

Developed countries' trade policies also hampered developing countries' industrialization efforts. Concepts such as access to supplies, graduation, selectivity, the basic-needs strategy and differentiation that shifted focus from the new international economic order, distorted national priorities or breached the unity of the developing countries were rejected.

The Conference noted that the real per capita gross domestic product of the least developed countries in the 1970s had grown at a lower average rate than in the 1960s; a quarter of these countries had experienced an actual decline. It urged implementation of the various United Nations programmes of specific action in favour of the land-locked, island and most seriously affected developing countries.

The Conference also stressed the importance of converting UNIDO into a specialized agency, attached particular importance to the system of consultations, welcomed the decision to make the Industrial and Technological Information Bank (INTIB) an ongoing activity, emphasized the importance of redeployment of industry, expressed concern that annual contributions to the United Nations Industrial Development Fund (UNIDF) were less than a quarter of the agreed $50 million funding level, and stated that UNIDO should be the principal United Nations instrument to co-ordinate, implement and serve as a forum of negotiations for industrialization efforts.

Agreeing on a strategy for further industrialization of the developing countries in the 1980s and beyond, the Conference affirmed the developing countries' right to introduce essential structural changes, to guarantee full sovereignty over their natural resources in production, pricing and marketing, and to remove all obstacles that hindered development. It also reaffirmed its strong commitment to the strategy of collective self-reliance, supported designation of the 1980s as the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, emphasized the importance of an integrated approach for carrying out world industrial restructuring, and reiterated concern over the insignificant progress made in negotiations aimed at implementing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order.<sup>5</sup>

Attainment of the Lima target and its related objectives required exceptional and integrated measures at the national, subregional, regional and interregional levels by the developing countries themselves. That target should be disaggregated into mid-term, major industrial sectoral and regional targets. By the year 2000, a balance between the value of manufactured imports from industrialized countries and exports of manufactures from developing countries should be attained. To establish mid-term targets for 1990 and ways of achieving them, the Conference recommended establishment of an intergovernmental committee to report through the Industrial Development Board to the General Assembly in August/September 1980.

The Conference stressed the need for UNIDO to identify and propose steps for redeployment of industries from developed countries. It decided to place the system of consultations on a permanent basis, with representation at a level at which definite commitments could be made, and stressed the need to widen the scope of the consultations, to draw up rules of procedure for the system, and to assure financing for wider participation. It considered it necessary that UNIDO serve as a forum for negotiation of agreements in industry.

The Conference called for full implementation of the Comprehensive New Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries, adopted at the 1979 session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD).<sup>6</sup> It stressed that it was the duty of all States to support and assist those subjected to and affected by colonialism, imperialism, neo-colonialism, interference in internal affairs, racial discrimination, aggression, occupation, domination, hegemony, expansionism and exploitation. It reiterated support for the struggle of the people of Namibia, Zimbabwe, South Africa, Palestine and Western Sahara to achieve their liberation, and stressed the right to restitution and full compensation for exploitation or depletion of their natural and other resources. It stressed that the parts of national territories of developing countries usurped by colonial powers must be returned, upheld the right to demand the return of colonial enclaves on their territories, supported unconditionally the right of the people of Belize to independence, expressed total solidarity with the front-line States in southern Africa, demanded that adequate compensation for attacks be paid to Zambia, Mozambique and Angola by those responsible and their collaborators, and urged developed countries and others to give special financial and technical aid to those countries. It strongly condemned South Africa's policy of economic constellation and welcomed the recent victories of the peoples of Nicaragua and Iran.

The Conference held the view that financial aid for industrial development should be in the form of grants and soft loans and that resources squandered on the arms race should be devoted to development. It supported a 12 October 1979 proposal made in the General Assembly by the President of Cuba, the then Chairman of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, to transfer to the developing countries at least $300 billion in 1977 dollars in material, financial and technical aid during the 1980s, at a rate of $25 billion annually during the initial years. It called for cancellation of debts of the least developed and most seriously affected countries. Use of funds should be determined by the developing countries themselves and channelled through their own financial institutions. A North-South global fund for promoting industrialization should be established immediately, the bulk of whose resources, administered and controlled by the developing countries, would come from developed countries, to reach $300 billion by the year 2000. Responsibility for preparing and justifying funding requirements annually for Governments would be UNIDO's. One third of the funds should be earmarked for the least developed, land-locked, island and most seriously affected developing countries, and financing should be provided on soft terms.

Measures should be adopted to foster the transfer and prohibit the withholding of technology; developing countries should take measures to increase their collective negotiating strength for acquiring technology; national, regional and interregional industrial technology institutions and INTIB should be strengthened; regional centres should give particular attention to strengthening the technological capability of the least developed countries; action was needed for relocating industrial research and development activities in developing countries; industrial countries were called on to facilitate early adoption of the International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology; and there was a need for urgent improvement of the international patent system.

The Conference stressed the need for using alternative sources and for rational consumption of energy and called for removal of arbitrary restrictions on the transfer of nuclear technology to developing countries.

It considered that long-term industrial co-operation agreements between developing countries should be extended to cover the entire process from extraction to processing and marketing, with special attention to measures of co-operation in production; it endorsed a Group of 77 proposal for a meeting of governmental experts of the Group to recommend such measures. It emphasized the need to promote endogenous industrialization and agro-industries and stated that particular attention should be devoted to small- and medium-scale industry.

Developed countries should make greater efforts to improve the availability of human resources for industrialization in the developing countries, the importance of full involvement of their populations in the development process was stressed, UNIDO's programmes in human resource development should be strengthened, and the "brain drain" problem needed to be corrected.

Developed countries should take steps to eliminate protectionist measures, and the commitment of the 1973 Tokyo Declaration<sup>7</sup> should be fully achieved through trade negotiations within the United Nations system. Transnational corporations must be subject to the laws, regulations and exclusive jurisdiction of the host country.

Developed countries were strongly urged to contribute or increase their contributions to UNIDF; UNIDO should use the Fund mainly to finance operational activities in priority areas. The Conference stressed the need for increasing financial resources available to the SIS programme and urged strengthening of the SIDFA programme and increasing the number of developing country SIDFAS.

NEW DELHI PLAN OF ACTION

The Plan of Action contained the various measures which the Conference adopted towards restructuring world industry in the context of the establishment of a new international economic order. Towards that end, it set forth action to be taken by the developing countries, by the developed countries and by the UNIDO secretariat in the areas of industrial financing, industrial technology, energy, industrial production, development of human resources, trade in manufactures and semi-manufactures, and special measures for the least developed, land-locked, island and most seriously affected developing countries, as well as for the Palestinian and Namibian peoples and for Zaire. It also indicated institutional arrangements for UNIDO to accomplish the goals and measures set out in the Plan of Action.

The Plan included initiation of the process of disaggregation of the Lima global target by establishing sectoral targets for major industrial sectors, and redeployment of industrial capacities from industrialized to developing countries on the principle of dynamic comparative advantage and in accordance with national objectives, in the process of which the public sector should play a significant role.

It decided to place the system of consultations on a permanent basis, stated that UNIDO, through the system, must serve as a forum for the negotiation of agreements in industry, and invited the Industrial Development Board to adopt rules of procedure for the system.

Industrial financing. In the field of industrial financing, developing countries were to strengthen and promote co-operation between their financial institutions, formulate national plans and policies regulating private foreign investment, train personnel and enlarge financial flows between themselves. The 1979 proposal by the Cuban President for the transfer of resources was to be taken into account to increase resource flow. Also included in the Plan was the establishment of a North-South global fund for the promotion of industrialization of developing countries in accordance with the principles mentioned in the Declaration; further arrangements should be worked out at a UNIDO intergovernmental conference in 1981. Other measures were: debt cancellation of the least developed and most seriously affected countries; establishing a link between special drawing right allocation and additional development assistance; adoption of the Group of 77's 1979 Belgrade Programme of Action for reform of the international monetary system; substantial increase in ODA, with financing institutions' activities oriented more towards industrialization and channelled through developing country institutions; changes in regulatory measures having adverse effects on debt and management; and alleviation of adverse effects of currency fluctuations on finance and trade. A UNIDO expert meeting during the year should consider recommendations regarding risk-capital financial instruments and barter or buy-back arrangements, and submit studies on the subject.

Industrial technology. Developing countries were to formulate national plans to strengthen their capacities and institutions, co-ordinate their activities, provide incentives to promoters and users of those capacities, increase research and development capabilities and take measures to apply the results rapidly, encourage endogenous technologies, facilitate transfer to and receipt from other developing countries, and undertake joint efforts to solve problems.

Developed countries should give special treatment to developing countries in technology transfer, eliminate arbitrary restrictions, encourage activities more relevant to developing countries and joint research and development activities, provide technology on concessionary terms, help with assimilation and improvement of technology, provide adequate funding to strengthen institutions, help revise the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property on patent legislation, make information available, increase technical assistance programmes, and help extend the activities of INTIB.

Action by UNIDO was to aim towards making greater use of developing countries' technological capabilities, helping diffuse their technologies, strengthening INTIB's capability, preparing for a global consultation on industrial technology, reporting on mechanisms to generate technology flows, keeping under review implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development,<sup>8</sup> strengthening patent co-operation with the World Intellectual Property Organization and UNCTAD, and strengthening its activities as a co-ordinating and executing agency in industrial technology.

Energy. Developing countries were to strengthen national energy-development programmes, improve the efficiency of energy use, make greater use of the potential of the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, establish multinational enterprises in the energy field, promote regional and subregional co-operation through plans and centres, and intensify joint research, training and exchange of skills and information.

Developed countries were to rationalize their energy consumption, intensify research and use of non-conventional sources, adapt technology to developing countries' needs and support their energy-development activities, make available on concessionary terms their research and development, assist in identifying alternative sources, remove arbitrary restrictions on nuclear technology transfer, and promote bilateral development, testing and training programmes.

Higher priority should be assigned by UNIDO to promoting energy-related technologies for industrial development; it should prepare operational projects in the field, prepare a report on transnational corporation practices in using energy resources of the developing countries, make state-of-the-art reports on energy technologies and projections of developing countries' energy requirements for achieving the Lima target, and strengthen co-operation with other United Nations organizations on energy matters.

Industrial production. Developing countries were to act to increase their industrial production by establishing long-term programmes of national resource use, increase endogenous processing, co-operate among themselves in joint industrial projects and arrive at common positions regarding exploitation, identify possibilities for other joint efforts, enter into long-term agreements on strengthening manufacturing capacities, set up multinational production enterprises among themselves, strengthen their transportation and communication links, establish industrial-development and export-promotion zones, monitor national and international mineral issues and increase standardization efforts.

Developed countries could make more information available on production processes, assure spare parts and maintenance facilities for their machinery, increase pilot and demonstration production units to adapt technology, ensure availability of high technology equipment and processes, take measures to ensure a favourable balance for developing countries between synthetics production and competing natural products, make quality-control standards available and assist in improving skills in this field, consider the impact of norms and standards on developing-country production when establishing them, help optimize and enlarge production units through technical assistance, safeguard the environment when disposing of wastes, and co-operate in ensuring fulfilment of commodity agreements to protect developing countries.

The UNIDO secretariat was to provide support for the governmental expert meeting of the Group of 77 on production co-operation measures, assign high priority in technical assistance programmes to industrial production, undertake training courses in quality control, put INTIB to full use, encourage establishment of technology research centres, and suggest remedial action for production constraints.

Human resources development. To develop human resources for industrialization, developing countries were to formulate national strategies to train and upgrade human resources, paying special attention to engineering and managerial skills, improve training facilities, exchange experience and skills among themselves, and intensify measures for the participation of women and youth and to correct the reverse transfer of technology.

Developed countries should expand access to their training facilities, tapping the potential of their small and medium-sized enterprises, adapt programmes to the backgrounds and experience of trainees, support firms performing training activities, ensure that suppliers of equipment and technology provided operation and maintenance training, extend training of high-level technical and management personnel, and support training institutions in developing countries which served other developing countries.

The UNIDO secretariat was to structure training courses to meet needs, promote greater use of training capabilities in developing countries, support "centres of excellence" of industrial training and skills in developing countries, prepare for a global consultation on training of industrial manpower, and propose projects for implementing decisions of United Nations and other conferences relating to development of human resources for industrialization.

Trade in manufactures and semi-manufactures. To increase trade in this sector, developing countries should conclude long-term agreements on the basis of complementarity, accord preferential treatment to such trade among themselves, strengthen machinery for exchange of experience to obtain better terms of trade, and eliminate adverse effects of triangular trade.

The Commission on Transnational Corporations was called on to study the establishment of a system of guarantees to ensure that transnational corporations adhered to the laws of recipient countries or indemnified them for damages; developing countries were to prepare collective action guidelines and exchange information on those corporations' modus operandi to increase the countries' negotiating potential.

Developed countries should expand access to their markets and grant preferential treatment to developing countries' exports, eliminate protectionist barriers and other obstacles, co-operate to achieve the objectives and commitments of the 1973 Tokyo Declaration and to implement agreed targets giving developing countries a just share in world trade in manufactured goods, and help finalize an international code of conduct for the activities of transnational corporations.

The UNIDO secretariat was to establish an intergovernmental committee to consider ways of increasing developing countries' share in world trade in industrial products by the year 2000 to a target of 30 per cent, as stated in the Group of 77's 1979 Arusha Programme for Collective Self-Reliance and Framework for Negotiations,<sup>9</sup> and setting up mid-term targets therefor, and ways to balance the value of imports and exports of manufactures. It should also strengthen co-operation with the International Trade Centre, UNCTAD, GATT and other United Nations bodies in carrying out studies and other industrial trade activities.

Special measures. Special measures to assist the least developed, land-locked, island and most seriously affected developing countries included: a bigger share for them of UNIDF; cancellation of debts; strengthening their technological and productive capability; building up their infrastructure with special attention to transportation and communications; taking inventory of their resources, particularly energy resources; promoting small- and medium-scale industry; establishing an industrial project preparation facility; strengthening import substitution processes; considering aid to them as a priority area; supporting their participation in the redeployment process; and financing their participation in the system of consultations. The UNIDO secretariat was to submit annual progress reports on their industrialization and problems and devise remedial programmes, increase pilot and demonstration production units, and increase financial flows on highly concessionary terms; UNIDO, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), specialized agencies and donor countries were called on to at least triple their aid, allocate SIDFAS to each least developed country, and give preferential treatment in agreements for products and processed commodities from these countries.

For the most seriously affected developing countries, the Plan called for implementation in toto of the Assembly's Special Programme adopted in 1974<sup>10</sup> and of its resolution of 19 December 1979 on immediate measures in favour of those countries." The informal education sector should be promoted, with particular emphasis on extension services.

For all these groups of countries, a multilateral compensatory facility should be established to mitigate the negative effects of externally induced deficits, such as rapid increases in their import bill.

Measures should be taken to accelerate implementation of the Industrial Development Board's 1978 decisions on sending an expert group to the West Bank and the Gaza Strip to study industrial development and prospects there, on implementation of projects on industrial development training and exploitation regulation in Namibia, and on a resource-based industry-oriented study of Namibia, as well as of UNCTAD's 1979 decision on special measures for Zaire.<sup>12</sup>

Institutional arrangements. States were urged to hasten the process of signature and ratification of the Constitution of UNIDO, on its establishment as a specialized agency, and the UNIDO Executive Director was invited to report on that matter to the Assembly's special session devoted to international economic development in August/September 1980; he was also invited to extend and report on the interim arrangements on greater autonomy for UNIDO. Member States were committed to the annual $50 million funding level for UNIDF, increases in contributions and greater flexibility in their use were urged, and use of the Fund was to be optimized mainly in operational activities in priority areas, with the Industrial Development Board invited to play a more active role in its use. In addition, UNDP was urged to double the annual level of financial resources available to the SIS programme and hold consultations with UNIDO for facilitating technical assistance financing in developing countries in the industrial field.

Other arrangements included strengthening the SIDFA programme, strengthening national and joint bodies for dialogue between member States and UNIDO, and taking steps to make UNIDO the principal instrument to co-ordinate, implement and serve as a forum of negotiations within the United Nations system for industrialization efforts. The organization was to keep the Lima and New Delhi Declarations and Plans of Action under constant review and report regularly, with a comprehensive report at the next General Conference, and co-operate with the Organization of African Unity and individual countries in preparing and implementing programmes for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa.

Before the Conference adopted the text, it rejected, by 10 votes in favour to 28 against, with 19 abstentions, a Moroccan amendment to delete a reference to Western Sahara in a paragraph of the Declaration by which the Conference reiterated its unswerving support for the heroic struggle of various peoples to achieve their liberation. Reservations to this reference were expressed by the Central African Republic, Gabon, the Ivory Coast, Jordan, Nigeria, Senegal, Turkey and Zaïre.

Before the vote, the Group D spokesman said that the absence of political will on the part of some countries had made it impossible for the President's compromise text to be adopted, and the Group reaffirmed its willingness to continue to co-operate in the solution of tasks assigned to UNIDO. The positive vote of Group D members, he added after the vote, should not be construed as implying total acceptance of all provisions of the document. These included certain assessments of the causes of the deterioration in the economic position of the developing countries and failure to attain the Lima targets, provisions calling for establishment of a global fund to promote industrialization, higher funding levels for some UNIDO activities and structural expansions in its secretariat, and provisions dealing with matters whose examination lay within the competence of other organizations or should be settled bilaterally.

The Group B spokesman said the Group's members regretted that attention to issues more appropriately dealt with elsewhere, the presentation of issues, even technical ones, in political terms, and the introduction of contentious political issues had created obstacles which gave them no option but to vote against the text. They would continue their efforts to find the broadest possible measure of agreement on solutions to the problems of industrial development in the developing countries.

Reservations concerning references to Zionism in the Declaration were expressed by Chile, the Ivory Coast, Singapore and Suriname. Reservations on establishment of a global fund for industrialization were held by Kuwait and by Saudi Arabia, which said that while it had refrained from participating in the vote, it could be regarded as accepting the Declaration and Plan of Action as a whole.

Other decisions of the Conference

In separate resolutions, both adopted by consensus on 9 February, the Third General Conference called on all Governments to eliminate discriminatory attitudes and practices hampering the effective participation of women in the development process and recommended that the General Assembly proclaim the 1980s as the Industrial Development Decade for Africa.

The resolution on women stressed the essential role of UNIDO in the integration of women in industrial development, welcomed the establishment of a UNIDO Interdivisional Working Group on Integration of Women in Industrial Development, requested data on participation of women in UNIDO's activities, recommended their more effective participation in decision- and policy-making in UNIDO, and requested studies of the impact on women of selected industries and industrial redeployment.

The text was sponsored by Denmark, Finland, Hungary, India, Mexico, the Netherlands, Norway, Peru, the Philippines, Portugal, Sweden, Tunisia, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Yugoslavia.

The second resolution was introduced by Tunisia on behalf of the member States of the Group of 77. The Conference thereby recommended that the General Assembly proclaim the 1980s as the Industrial Development Decade for Africa with the purpose of focusing greater attention and mobilizing greater political commitment and financial support for the industrialization of the continent. It also called for financial support and other arrangements for the successful launching of the Decade. (See also p. 658.)

Follow-up to Conference recommendations

Action by the Industrial Development Board

At its fourteenth session, held from 12 to 19 May 1980 at Vienna, the Industrial Development Board of UNIDO identified priority areas for UNIDO's 1981 and 1982-1983 work programme for follow-up action to decisions and recommendations of UNIDO's Third General Conference: energy-related and other industrial technology, industrial production, development of human resources, special measures for the least developed countries, and the system of consultations in the industrial field. It also agreed on the importance of industrial restructuring, including the social aspects of industrialization. The Board asked the UNIDO Executive Director to submit a work programme for 1981 reflecting those priorities for consideration by the Permanent Committee at its October 1980 session and by the Board at its special session immediately afterwards.

The Board also adopted by consensus on 19 May a resolution, submitted by its President on behalf of an informal contact group chaired by Tunisia, by which it invited all Governments to take all possible appropriate measures to accelerate the industrialization of the developing countries and recommended that the General Assembly consider inviting all United Nations bodies to do the same. It requested the UNIDO Executive Director to prepare reports on the follow-up of the recommendations of the Third General Conference and on progress towards ratification of the UNIDO Constitution. It recommended to the Assembly that UNIDO's programme budget should be in keeping with the programme priorities established by the Board and it stressed the need for early implementation of the Board's decisions on the Conference recommendations. These included decisions on the global negotiations and the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (see following subchapter).

Recognizing the need to intensify measures for the full participation and integration of the population, especially women, in the industrialization process—a role stressed by the Third Conference—the Board on 19 May called for a report on progress made by the secretariat's Interdivisional Working Group on Integration of Women in Industrial Development. It agreed that expert groups should meet on topics highlighted at a 1978 preparatory meeting for the Conference, called for a policy/technical meeting as a follow-up to the 1978 meeting, asked the Executive Director to report on the integration of women in the industrial development process to the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women (Copenhagen, Denmark, 14-30 July 1980) and to UNIDO on the World Conference's impact, and stressed the need for accelerating the recruitment of women at all levels of the UNIDO secretariat.

On 17 October, at its one-day second special session, held at Vienna, the Board adopted that part of the report of the fourteenth session of the Permanent Committee, and its conclusions and recommendations, dealing with UNIDO's revised work programme for 1981. The Permanent Committee had met from 13 to 17 October. The Board thereby again recommended to the Assembly that the 1981 programme budget for UNIDO be in keeping with the programme priorities established by the Board following the Conference, and recommended the inclusion of development of human resources and industrial production in the Secretary-General's budget proposals for 1981. (For Assembly action on the revised programme budget for UNIDO for 1981, see p. 663.)

Action by the Economic and Social Council

On 24 July 1980, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1980/61, strongly urged early implementation of the Board's resolution of 19 May relating to follow-up of the Third General Conference, urged the prompt and effective implementation of the Conference's resolution on women and industrialization, and invited the Board to consider proposals for promoting endogenous industrialization, taking into account a report on a Conference proposal for an industrial project-preparation facility. (For details of the Council's resolution, see p. 656.)

Action by the General Assembly

The General Assembly, by resolution 35/66 A of 5 December 1980, took note of the report of the Third General Conference, endorsed the programme priorities adopted by the Board on Conference follow-up decisions, and decided to ensure adequate resources to enable UNIDO to carry out its mandate. Proper measures should be taken for all agreed priority areas, including the development of human resources and industrial production, agreed to by the Board at its May and October sessions. The Assembly also stressed the need for continuing co-operation to ensure optimal follow-up to the Conference and decided to review the question at its 1982 regular session. (For further details of the resolution, see p. 657.)

Paragraph 6, containing the Assembly's decision to ensure adequate resources for implementing UNIDO's mandate, was orally revised by a Second (Economic and Financial) Committee Vice-Chairman when introducing the text in Committee: rather than ensure that the funds came from within existing resources of UNIDO, account was to be taken of restraints under which the United Nations budget had to operate.

Before approval of the text, the United States said it maintained a position critical of the New Delhi Declaration and Plan of Action and felt the necessary funds should be obtained by eliminating UNIDO's marginal activities.

Programme questions

At its fourteenth session, held from 12 to 19 May 1980 at Vienna, the Industrial Development Board of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) invited the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to increase allocations to the Special Industrial Services (SIS) programme and prepared for a UNIDO response to the global economic negotiations scheduled for a special August/September 1980 session of the General Assembly.

By a series of decisions of 19 May on UNIDO's work programme, and others taken at a one-day second special session on 17 October-adopted in the light of the decisions of the Third General Conference of UNIDO in January/February (see subchapter above) - the Board dealt with interim arrangements regarding greater autonomy for UNIDO, transfer of technology, industrial redeployment, the Industrial and Technological Information Bank (INTIB), the role of the public sector in industrialization, and the system of industrial consultations among developing and developed countries. Further Board decisions dealt directly with follow-up action on Third General Conference decisions and with the integration of women in the industrial development process (see p. 654). It also approved further work on industrial collaboration arrangements, in co-operation with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) (see p. 628).

On 5 December, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on industrial development co-operation. By resolution 35/66 A, it endorsed Board decisions on follow-up activities to the Third Conference, including a decision to establish the system of consultations on a permanent basis, and emphasized the need to facilitate restructuring of world industrial production through measures to promote industrialization of developing countries, several of which had been earlier endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1980/61. The Assembly also urged signature of the new UNIDO Constitution and an increase in contributions to the United Nations Industrial Development Fund (UNIDF).

By resolution 35/66 B, the Assembly proclaimed the 1980s as the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, a decision recommended by the Third Conference and supported by the Board and the Economic and Social Council.

Details of these and other decisions appear in this subchapter.

Industrial development co-operation

Decisions of the Industrial Development Board

By a resolution of 19 May, the Industrial Development Board reiterated the usefulness of the SIS programme and, noting that the value in real terms of its annual $3.5 million allocation had diminished considerably, invited the UNDP Governing Council to consider increasing the allocation in 1980 and 1981 and to at least double it for 1982-1986.

This decision was recommended by the Permanent Committee, which had held its thirteenth session from 5 to 12 May.

Regarding the global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development, which the General Assembly had decided to launch at its forthcoming special session in August/September,<sup>13</sup> the Board by a resolution of 19 May requested the UNIDO Executive Director to follow their progress; UNIDO should be ready to respond to any requests the Assembly might make at that session (see p. 522).

After reviewing a report concerning greater autonomy for UNIDO, the Board recommended that the Executive Director should continue to explore with the Secretary-General the possibility of extending UNIDO's autonomy so as to pave the way for its smooth conversion into a United Nations specialized agency, and report again to the Board in 1981. It expressed the view that a greater number of UNIDO staff should be recruited from developing countries.

Following examination of a secretariat report on development and transfer of technology, the Board stressed that high priority should be accorded to UNIDO activities in the development, selection, acquisition, adaptation, transfer and use of industrial technology so as to generate increased and more appropriate technology flows to the developing countries and strengthen their technological capabilities, with particular attention to the needs of the least developed countries. The Board recommended that the Assembly provide appropriate resources and that UNIDO should present appropriate projects for funding by the Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development and by UNIDF. It requested the Executive Director to strengthen and report regularly on institutional arrangements in this area.

Having considered a secretariat report on redeployment of industries from developed to developing countries, the Board decided that the secretariat should continue to strengthen its programme in this area and undertake studies on developing countries and on the contribution of the public sector to redeployment of industry, calling for a progress report in 1981.

After reviewing the 1979 activities of INTIB and prospects for the future, the Board recommended that the Assembly provide resources for its tasks during 1980-1981. It also requested the Executive Director to develop proposals and seek resources from the Interim Fund for strengthening INTIB and to take into account views on extending INTIB's activities to sectors covered by the system of industrial consultations and to sectors examined by the 1978 International Forum on Appropriate Industrial Technology.<sup>14</sup>

The Board requested the, Executive Director to take note, in the future work of the secretariat, of the views expressed during the Board's debate on the role of the public sector in industrial development.

In considering UNIDO's system of consultations in the industrial area, the Board at its May session reviewed preparations for consultations in 1980-1981 on leather and leather products, fertilizers, pharmaceuticals, petrochemicals, capital goods and food processing and authorized the convening of a regional consultation on the agricultural machinery industry in Africa.

The second consultation meeting on the leather and leather products industry was held at Cologne, Federal Republic of Germany, from 23 to 27 June, the third such meeting on the fertilizer industry was held at São Paulo, Brazil, from 29 September to 4 October, and the first on the pharmaceutical industry was held at Estoril, Portugal, from 1 to 5 December.

Also in May, the Board decided that the system of consultations should be an instrument through which UNIDO would serve as a forum for contacts directed towards the industrialization of developing countries and would also permit negotiations among interested parties at their request at the same time as, or after, consultations. The Board also decided that participants should include government officials as well as representatives of industry, labour, consumer groups and others. The Board decided to establish the system of consultations on a permanent basis, to revise its rules of procedure and to consider further a proposal to establish a committee on consultations as a subsidiary organ of the Board.

Meeting again on 17 October, the Board endorsed a recommendation of its Permanent Committee to continue consultations to resolve outstanding issues on revising the system's rules of procedure.

The Board authorized convening in early 1981 a second meeting of the Ad Hoc UNCTAD/UNIDO Group of Experts on Trade and Trade-related Aspects of Industrial Collaboration Arrangements; the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board had given its approval for this meeting on 25 March (see p. 628).

Senior Industrial Development Field Advisers

At its June 1980 session, the UNDP Governing Council increased the allocation to cover the net additional costs for the services of Senior Industrial Development Field Advisers (SIDFAS) to $7,962,000 in 1980-1981. Also by this decision, of 27 June, it decided to review the entire question of sectoral support and requested the UNDP Administrator to consult Governments about financing part of SIDFA costs for 1982-1986 from national indicative planning figures and/or other national sources.

The Council invited UNIDO to provide the necessary finances for SIDFA travel. It requested a revision of the list of possible SIDFA services and asked UNIDO and UNDP to give primary consideration to technical competence and experience when recruiting, but also to recruit from as wide a range of countries as possible, particularly developing countries.

Action by the Economic and Social Council

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted, without vote, resolution 1980/61 by which it invited all States which had not signed or accepted the Constitution of UNIDO as a specialized agency to do so as soon as possible and urged all countries, in particular the developed ones, to contribute or increase contributions to UNIDF.

The Council endorsed the Board's recommendations on work programme priorities, on the programme on development and transfer of technology and on INTIB activities, and requested appropriate resources for 1981. Further, it endorsed the Board's decisions on the system of consultations, notably its decision to establish it on a permanent basis as a forum for consultations which would also permit negotiations.

The Council agreed that the Board should consider further the proposal to establish a subsidiary committee on consultations, urged the international community to consider strategies for restructuring world industrial production, emphasized the need for support for increased industrial production in developing countries, for differential treatment in favour of developing countries and for trade liberalization, in relation to increased market access. It recommended that the Assembly provide adequate resources in the 1981 budget for the early implementation of the Board's decisions.

The resolution was adopted on the recommendation of the First (Economic) Committee, which approved it without objection on 18 July. The text was submitted by a Vice-Chairman following informal consultations on a draft introduced by India on behalf of States members of the Council belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries; the Group's text was withdrawn. India made some oral editorial corrections to the text and, by a United States oral amendment to operative paragraph 3, the system of consultations, rather than serve as a forum for negotiations, was to serve as a forum for consultations and contacts and would also permit negotiations among interested parties. Another United States oral amendment pertained to paragraph 7 on the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (see section below).

The text adopted differed from the original mainly in the following respects: the Council agreed that the Board should consider further the establishment of a committee on industrial consultations, rather than urging it to consider the proposal favourably; a reference was added concerning the Third Conference's resolution on women and industrialization (see p. 653); and the funds requested for 1981 were to be provided within the overall budgetary resources of the United Nations.

Paragraph 8 -urging the international community to consider concrete measures where appropriate for restructuring world industrial production that would facilitate redeployment of industry, expand and strengthen developing countries' industrial capacities and promote processing of their natural resources-originally would have urged effective measures to ensure restructuring, with the increased participation of developing countries in production and trade of manufactures and semi-manufactures through, among other measures, the transfer of financial and technical resources and redeployment on the basis of the dynamics of comparative advantage. A provision to urge developed countries to take special measures to liberalize trade barriers, particularly those affecting the exports of manufactures and semi-manufactures of developing countries, was recast, as paragraph 9, to emphasize the need to facilitate industrial restructuring through various means, one of which was special and differential treatment where feasible and appropriate in the context of a general effort to liberalize world trade, particularly in developing countries' favour.

Belgium recalled the position of the European Economic Community (EEC) and Greece, as expressed to the Board: UNIDO should give high priority to the development of industrial technology, intensify its activities in the industrial skills and training fields, strengthen its assistance to the least developed countries, encourage the efficient use of energy and promote energy-related technology, and extend its industrial project-preparation efforts.

Bulgaria, speaking also for the German Democratic Republic, Hungary and the USSR, said their position on the system of consultations remained unchanged: Bulgaria had previously observed that those countries accepted such a new type of activity as long as it did not replace others already undertaken, and stress should be on the quality rather than the number of consultations, bearing in mind the experience of countries with different social and economic systems.

With regard to the reorganization of UNIDO's work, the United States maintained that no new budgetary resources beyond those already provided should be requested.

Action by the General Assembly

The General Assembly incorporated the thrust of several operative provisions of Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/61 into its resolution 35/66 A, adopted on 5 December. These were provisions pertaining to endorsing the Board's programme priorities on follow-up to the Third General Conference decisions and Board decisions on the system of consultations, urging consideration of restructuring strategies, emphasizing the need to facilitate such restructuring, appealing for signature and acceptance of the new UNIDO Constitution (adding preferably no later than mid-1981) and urging contributions to UNIDF. In addition, the Assembly requested UNIDO to implement and report annually on UNCTAD's Comprehensive New Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries<sup>15</sup> and asked the Board to decide on further action to promote the industrialization of developing countries. Other paragraphs concerned co-operation and provision of resources for carrying out Board decisions (see p. 654).

The Assembly adopted the text, without vote, together with resolution 35/66 B on the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (see section below), on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved both texts without objection on 20 November. The resolution was submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations held on a draft submitted by Venezuela on behalf of the Group of 77, which subsequently withdrew its draft. In the adopted version, a reference to a North-South global fund for the promotion of industrialization of developing countries was dropped. By the earlier draft, UNIDO would have been asked to make arrangements for an intergovernmental conference on such a fund, as had been suggested by the Executive Director. This paragraph was replaced by one requesting UNIDO to consider further industrialization proposals (paragraph 10). Also added was a decision to review the follow-up of the Third General Conference in 1982, and, in introducing the text, an oral revision was made by the Vice-Chairman to paragraph 6 on providing resources for UNIDO (see p. 654).

Introducing the text, Venezuela said it was essential to restructure world industrial production to boost industrial capacity as a fundamental factor in the developing countries' development process; the resolution provided measures to facilitate that process.

With respect to the system of consultations in the industrial area, the USSR, speaking at the time of approval of the text, said such activities should not become a permanent part of UNIDO's machinery but should be based on separate one-time decisions, with the participation of interested countries on a governmental level and with voluntary financing.

Czechoslovakia, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said the consultations should be subject to control by the Industrial Development Board and should be based on strict observance of the interests of the developing countries, with a view to protecting them from the activities of foreign private capital. These countries confirmed that they did not take special measures for industrial redeployment in specific economic fields although they contributed towards the solution of the industrialization problems of the developing countries. Also, they did not agree with the principle of setting fixed objectives for voluntary funds and they reserved their position with respect to the financial implications of the resolution, stressing that the new orientation should be implemented with available funds and their more rational use. It was also necessary, they felt, that UNIDO base its activities on experiences of countries having different economic and social systems, with special attention given to the role of the public sector, industrial development planning and adverse effects of transnational corporations.

Luxembourg, speaking for EEC members, expressed satisfaction at the agreement reached on operative paragraph 10 and reiterated their position concerning the financing of industrial development in the developing countries. The United States affirmed its critical attitude towards the New Delhi Declaration and Plan of Action. It would continue to strive for trade liberalization to the advantage of all countries rather than to that of a select group.

In a related action, concerning the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s), adopted by the Assembly on 5 December and annexed to resolution 35/56 (see p. 499), the Assembly recommended policy measures to be taken with respect to industrialization. (For relevant provisions (section III B) of the Strategy, see p. 509.)

Industrial Development Decade for Africa

Recalling the resolution of the Third General Conference of UNIDO on proclaiming the 1980s as the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (see p. 653), the Industrial Development Board of UNIDO on 19 May adopted a resolution recommending that the General Assembly take the necessary decisions for the Decade at its August/September special session devoted to international economic development.

On 17 October, the Permanent Committee of the Board, noting that no formal resolution was passed on the matter at the special session, asked that attention be drawn to the situation at the Assembly's regular 1980 session. It endorsed a proposal for establishment of a co-ordination group for the Decade within UNIDO. It also recommended that a report requested by the Board, with proposals on UNIDO's contribution to fulfilling the Decade's objectives, be made in 1981.

The Board adopted these recommendations on 17 October.

By its resolution 1980/61 of 24 July on industrial development co-operation (see section above), the Economic and Social Council welcomed the Board's decision.

The Assembly proclaimed the 1980s as the Industrial Development Decade for Africa in its resolution 35/66 B of 5 December, adopted without vote, and it called on UNIDO and the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), in close co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, to formulate proposals to implement the programme for the Decade and monitor its progress. It supported the establishment within UNIDO of a co-ordination unit for the Decade and requested resources to enable UNIDO to perform its role. The Executive Director of UNIDO and the Executive Secretary of ECA were asked to report on their contacts with other United Nations bodies on action taken to contribute to the Decade's success.

Resolution 35/66 B was approved by the Assembly and its Second Committee simultaneously with resolution 35/66 A, whose sponsorship was also the same (see preceding subsection).

The USSR, speaking before adoption of the resolution, said that UNIDO participation in the Decade, and the creation of a co-ordination unit for such work, should be of an auxiliary nature and should be based on the resources available to the United Nations. The United States trusted that no increase in UNIDO'S budgetary resources was entailed in the unit and that the necessary funds would be obtained by eliminating UNIDO'S marginal activities.

In the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, annexed to Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December (see p. 499), the international community was to accord the highest priority to measures, including adequate financial provisions, for the effective implementation of the Industrial Development Decade. (For relevant provision (paragraph 80) of the Strategy, see p. 510.)

4. Urges the international community to consider concrete measures, where appropriate, for restructuring world industrial production through positive strategies, thus establishing a more effective international division of labour which would, inter alia, facilitate the redeployment of industry, expand and strengthen the industrial capacities of developing countries and promote the domestic industrial processing of the natural resources of developing countries;

Organizational and other questions

Establishment of UNIDO as a specialized agency

The Constitution of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) as a specialized agency of the United Nations system, opened for signature in Vienna on 8 April 1979,<sup>16</sup> remained open in 1980 at United Nations Headquarters, New York. By 31 December, the Constitution had been signed by 98 Governments and ratified, accepted or approved by 28. The organization was to become a specialized agency when at least 80 States that had deposited instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval notified the Secretary-General of their agreement that it should enter into force.

The following States had deposited such instruments: Algeria, Bangladesh, Barbados, Brazil, China, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Japan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mexico, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Romania, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Yugoslavia.

Responding to a 1979 General Assembly request,<sup>17</sup> the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote on 6 February decision 1980/104, proposed by the Council President after consultations with Council members. It thereby decided to arrange for the negotiation of an agreement to bring the proposed new specialized agency into relationship with the United Nations, in accordance with Articles 57 and 63 of the Charter of the United Nations,<sup>18</sup> as soon as a competent organ, acting on behalf of that organization, was prepared to enter into consultations.

The Council invited, by resolution 1980/61 of 24 July, and the Assembly appealed to, by resolution 35/66 A of 5 December, all Governments to sign and ratify, accept or approve the new UNIDO Constitution as early as possible, preferably no later than mid-1981. (For details and texts of resolutions, see preceding subchapter.)

Membership in UNIDO

On 5 December 1980, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 35/65, by which it included the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, and Zimbabwe in the lists of States eligible for membership in UNIDO's Industrial Development Board (see APPENDIX III).

The text, submitted in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee by Venezuela on behalf of the United Nations Member States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries, was approved without vote on 14 November, as orally revised by the sponsors to add the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

Revised programme budget of UNIDO for 1981

Following the revision of UNIDO's 1981 work programme to conform to the programme priorities established by the Industrial Development Board after the Third General Conference of UNIDO (New Delhi, India, 21 January-9 February 1980), the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee a revised 1981 programme budget for UNIDO. The proposal called for additional appropriations of $396,300 for 16 new Professional and General Service posts for five programme areas: energy-related industrial technology, special measures for the least developed countries, the system of continuing consultations on the equitable distribution of world industry, development and transfer of technology, and institution-building and training operations.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) recommended approval of all the posts except one at the P-5 level for the programme on continuing consultations, entailing a reduction of $37,800 in the Secretary-General's estimates, from $396,300 to $358,500. On a proposal by Morocco, the Fifth Committee approved $396,300 on 4 December by a vote, requested by the United States, of 57 to 29, with 13 abstentions.

This amount was in addition to an ACABQ-approved request for $78,900 for three posts, and $15,000 for staff travel, for the new UNIDO co-ordination unit for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa; the unit's establishment was endorsed by the Assembly in resolution 35/66 B of 5 December (for details, see p. 658).

The total revised budget appropriations for UNIDO for 1980-1981, approved by the Assembly on 17 December in resolution 35/226 A, was $75,369,300, an increase of $5,252,100 over the amount appropriated in 1979.<sup>19</sup> (For text of resolution, see p. 1206.)

Contributions to UNIDO voluntary fund

At the 1980 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (New York, 6 and 7 November), Governments announced voluntary contributions to the United Nations Industrial Development Fund for 1981 (see p. 600).

Questions concerning transnational corporations

During 1980, the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations continued to function as the central unit of the United Nations system at the Secretariat level for work on matters related to transnational corporations, including technical co-operation activities and research.

The Centre's activities were reviewed by the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its June/July session in Mexico City. The Commission continued work on the formulation of a code of conduct for transnational corporations, development of a comprehensive system of information on those corporations and the establishment of international standards of accounting and reporting on them.

After reviewing the Commission's work and recommendations, the Economic and Social Council in July adopted two resolutions—one dealing with the activities of transnational corporations in southern Africa and their collaboration with the racist minority regimes there (resolution 1980/59) and the other on progress towards and obstacles impeding the establishment of the new international economic order, with particular reference to the contribution that the code of conduct would make in that regard (resolution 1980/60).

References to the role of transnational corporations in developing countries, as well as condemnation of their collaboration with South Africa, appeared in a number of General Assembly resolutions; these are discussed primarily in chapters dealing with the subjects of the resolutions, e.g. the question of apartheid, human rights, and activities impeding implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

Details of the work of the Centre, the Commission and the Economic and Social Council in 1980 are given below.

Activities of the Centre

The technical co-operation expenditures of the Centre on Transnational Corporations in 1980, financed mainly by voluntary contributions, were approximately $1.5 million, compared to $1.1 million in 1979.

Of the 45 advisory projects completed in 1980, 12 were in response to requests from four African countries, 20 from eight Asian countries, 10 from five Latin American countries, and three from three European countries. The projects dealt with such sectors as coal, uranium, gold, diamond and deep-sea mining, food processing, petroleum and telecommunications, as well as assistance on foreign investment laws and regulations in general.

Training workshops organized by the Centre were interdisciplinary and involved economic, legal and administrative elements, covering the legislative and administrative framework within which transnational corporations operated in host countries, their structure and operations, ownership and control, fiscal and financial matters, transfer pricing, technology acquisition, regional co-operation, and negotiating procedures and techniques. National workshops were held in Angola, China (3), Egypt, Jamaica, Kenya, Malaysia, the Philippines and the Sudan. Regional workshops were convened in Kenya, Sri Lanka and Thailand (2).

Research studies completed in 1980 included analyses of the role of transnational corporations in the industrial, military and nuclear sectors of South Africa, in international tourism and in food and beverage processing. Reports on transnational linkages in developing countries, transnational banks and reinsurance operations were also issued. Research in progress during the year covered topics such as the direct effects of transnational corporations on balance of payments and on transborder data flows, their social and cultural impact, transnational corporations in the pharmaceutical industry of developing countries, and an updating of the role of transnational corporations in South Africa.

The Centre also completed industry studies on transnational corporations in the bauxite/aluminium and copper industries, as well as a supplement to a study of national legislation and regulations on transnational corporations in 18 countries.

As in previous years, the Centre reported on the development of the comprehensive information system, detailing progress achieved in each of its components: policies, laws and regulations on matters related to transnational corporations; trends in their activities; industry analyses; information on individual corporations; information on financial and structural practices, technology transfer and socio-political impact; contracts and agreements between such corporations and host country entities; data on information sources and expertise; and international standards of accounting and reporting.

A Users Guide to the Information System on Transnational Corporations was issued in 1980, describing the sources of information, nature of the system and manner in which information could be disseminated to, or obtained by, users.

The activities of the Centre were reviewed by the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its sixth session, held in Mexico City from 23 June to 4 July. The Commission expressed its appreciation of work undertaken and stressed that resources should be commensurate with that work programme.

Reaffirming the importance of the technical co-operation programme, especially for the least developed countries, the Commission asked the Centre to continue strengthening its co-operative arrangements with United Nations organizations in this field, stressed that full use should be made of experts, especially from developing countries, and welcomed links being developed between the Centre and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), expressing the hope that more of the Centre's projects would be financed from UNDP funds. It also reaffirmed the vital importance of voluntary contributions for such activities.

The Commission took note with appreciation of the research work of the Centre and of the usefulness of the semi-annual publication The CTC Reporter, which gave information on the Centre's work and the activities of transnational corporations. It reiterated the importance it attached to research on the economic, political, social and legal effects of those activities and reaffirmed that research should be action-oriented, contribute to the work on the code of conduct and strengthen the negotiating capacity of host, particularly developing, countries.

Reiterating the importance of the comprehensive information system, the Commission stated that special attention should be given to legal information, macro-data, industry studies of selected sectors and corporate profiles, stressed the need for national information systems-for which the Centre should provide assistance- to complement the Centre's system, and urged the Centre to ensure accuracy of the data collected.

Code of conduct

In 1980, the Intergovernmental Working Group on a Code of Conduct for transnational corporations held its eighth to eleventh sessions, the first three at United Nations Headquarters, New York-7 to 18 January, 17 to 28 March and 12 to 21 May-and the last at Geneva, 13 to 24 October.

At its January session, the Group began a discussion of the preamble to a draft code of conduct on the basis of a composite text of formulations by the Chairman and elements prepared by the Centre on Transnational Corporations, and began drafting provisions dealing with a section on activities of transnational corporations.

The Group also discussed the definition of the term "transnational corporation." A paper by the Centre on this issue presented three elements basic for the definition of the term, according to which a transnational corporation was a commercial enterprise comprising economic entities which operated: in two or more countries, regardless of legal form or sector of operation; under a decision-making system based on effective control by one or more decision-making centres over the entities leading to coherent or common policies which might reflect a global strategy, which influence might be exercised through ownership or other links between the entities; and through the sharing of information, resources and responsibilities among the entities.

The Commission on Transnational Corporations, at its mid-year session, accepted the three elements identified in the Group's paper as basic for the definition of a transnational corporation and decided that further work should be done by the Group on a possible elaboration of the definition.

The Group continued drafting general and political provisions at its March session, as well as economic, financial and social provisions. A paper containing draft provisions for a code was submitted on 26 March by India on behalf of the "Group of 77" developing countries.

In May, the Working Group drafted provisions relating to balance of payments and financing, transfer pricing and taxation. Informal consultations were also held on provisions on which disagreement remained.

Although a number of words and phrases remained to be agreed upon, the Group during these sessions had concluded about half the provisions of the code. These related to: respect for national sovereignty and observance of domestic laws, regulations and administrative practices; adherence to economic goals and development objectives, policies and priorities; adherence to socio-cultural objectives and values; respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms; non-interference in internal political affairs; non-interference in intergovernmental relations; ownership and control; balance of payments and financing; transfer pricing; taxation; and employment and labour. The Group expressed the hope that its work could be accelerated and felt that, to complete the code, it would need three more sessions.

The Commission, at its mid-year session, took note of the Group's progress and of its report on the three sessions, reconfirmed that it attached the highest priority to the code, and asked the Economic and Social Council to authorize three further sessions of the Group before the Commission's August/September 1981 session.

By decision 1980/171, adopted without vote on 24 July, the Council gave its authorization, indicating that the first of the three sessions would be held before the end of 1980. The text, which had been proposed by the Commission, was approved by the First (Economic) Committee, also without vote, on 18 July.

The Working Group met again in October, when it concluded provisions relating to consumer and environmental protection and received proposals for provisions on the disclosure of information.

In response to a General Assembly invitation in January 1979 to United Nations bodies to assess, within their respective fields, progress towards and obstacles to the establishment of the new international economic order,' the Centre on Transnational Corporations reported to the Commission in 1980 on the role of transnational corporations in the new order.

The report documented the new order's approach to transnational corporations, relating it to the aim of bringing about the structural changes needed to allow self-sustained development. It examined progress in recent years in changing patterns of interactions in finance for development, industrialization, trade, science and technology, and food and agriculture between developed and developing countries, and progress in strengthening the capacity of developing host countries to deal with transnational corporations. While the task of drawing conclusions was left to the Commission, a tentative conclusion of the report was that, given the appropriate policies and institutions, experience suggested that developing countries could benefit from transnational corporation activities and harness them for their development efforts, although recent advances in harnessing their resources were uneven in terms of host countries, sectors and dimensions of North-South relations. Moreover, to what extent the advances resulted in appreciable progress towards redressing economic imbalances between developed and developing countries and enhancing the latter's capacity for self-sustained development awaited further evidence. Continued efforts were needed to assure that activities were fully compatible with development policies of developing host countries.

The Commission took note of this report and transmitted it to the Economic and Social Council, with the recommendation that it and the Commission's report be forwarded to the Assembly at its August/September special session on development and international economic cooperation. The Commission also forwarded for the Council's consideration a draft resolution on this question.

On 24 July, the Council adopted without vote, as resolution 1980/60, the Commission's text, which had been approved without vote by the First Committee on 18 July. The Council thereby recommended that self-reliance of developing countries should be enhanced by strengthening their negotiating, regulating and monitoring capacities in their dealings with transnational corporations, particularly in financing and investment, science and technology, management, production and marketing. Efforts should also be intensified to enhance the contribution of those corporations towards the establishment of the new international economic order.

Considering that a code of conduct would make an essential contribution to that order and to the goals of the new International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s) (see p. 489), and stressing the need for the early conclusion of such a code, the Council affirmed that the code should: be effective, comprehensive, generally accepted and universally adopted; effectively associate transnational corporation activities with efforts to establish the new order and their capabilities with developing countries' developmental objectives; reflect the principle of respect for the national sovereignty, laws, regulations and established policies of countries in which transnational corporations operated, and the right of States to regulate and monitor their activities; foster the contribution they could make towards achieving developmental goals of those countries, particularly developing countries; proscribe subversion, interference and other inadmissible activities aimed at undermining political and social systems; deal as effectively as possible with the issue of their activities in South Africa and Namibia; include provisions on the treatment of transnational corporations, jurisdiction and related matters; provide implementation arrangements; and be considered as an integrated whole.

The Council invited the Assembly at its August/September special session, which was to launch the new International Development Strategy, to bear in mind the importance of the work on the code of conduct, and affirmed that the draft should be completed before the Commission's 1981 session and should be adopted as soon as possible by all members of the international community.

By decision 1980/174, also of 24 July, the Council transmitted to the Assembly for consideration at its forthcoming regular session, beginning in September, a draft decision containing a provision by which the Council would decide to convene, in the last quarter of 1981, a United Nations conference to adopt a code of conduct on transnational corporations. On 14 November, the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, after consultations, reported to the Assembly that no decision would be taken on the draft decision, and the Assembly took note of that information in adopting decision 35/425 on 5 December. (For details of the Council's and Assembly's decisions, see following section.)

The code of conduct on transnational corporations was among the policy measures envisaged for the international community for the 1980s set out in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development

Decade, which the Assembly adopted on 5 December and annexed to its resolution 35/56 (see p. 499). Following completion of negotiations on the code in 1981, the code was to be adopted expeditiously by all members of the community soon afterwards, aimed at preventing, with a view to eliminating, the negative effects of transnational corporation activities and promoting a positive contribution to developing countries' development efforts, consistent with their national programmes. National policies that enabled Governments to deal with and regulate those corporations' activities were also to be developed.

(For relevant provision (paragraph 70) of the Strategy, see p. 509.)

International agreement on illicit payments

When the First Committee of the Economic and Social Council took up the question of transnational corporations in July, India, on behalf of Council members which were members of the Group of 77, submitted a draft decision by which the Council would decide to convene two United Nations conferences in the last quarter of 1981 to adopt a code of conduct on transnational corporations (see preceding section) and to adopt an international agreement on illicit payments, the latter to be convened only after completion of the former. India orally corrected the draft to correspond to what it said was the sponsors' original wording before an editorial deletion of the infinitive "to adopt," indicating the purposes of the conferences, and a change in when the second conference was to begin—rather than after the "closure" of the first, it was to have been convened only after its "completion."

The United States proposed a draft resolution whereby the Council would decide to convene a conference of plenipotentiaries, and invite all States to participate, to conclude an international agreement on illicit payments, to meet no later than 30 June 1981.

The First Committee Chairman orally proposed, and the Committee so decided without objection on 22 July, that both texts be transmitted to the General Assembly for consideration. They were annexed to decision 1980/174, adopted without vote on 24 July, by which the Council transmitted them. On 14 November, after consultations, the Assembly's Second Committee reported to the Assembly that it had agreed to take no decision on either text. On 5 December, by decision 35/425 adopted without vote, the Assembly took note of the Second Committee's report, as the Assembly President had orally proposed.

Transnational corporations in southern Africa

An in-depth analysis of the role of transnational corporations in the industrial, military and nuclear sectors of South Africa was submitted by the Centre on Transnational Corporations to the Commission on Transnational Corporations in 1980. It examined the contributions of transnational corporations to the development of South Africa's economic and industrial infrastructure, their role as employers and their trade union practices, updating the list of those which recognized and negotiated with non-white and multiracial trade unions.

Following its discussion of the report at its June/July session, the Commission adopted a draft resolution on the activities of transnational corporations in southern Africa and their collaboration with the racist minority regimes in that area. The text, which it recommended for adoption by the Economic and Social Council, had been introduced by India on behalf of the Group of 77.

Following approval of the text by the Council's First Committee on 18 July, by a roll-call vote of 32 to 5, with 7 abstentions, the Council adopted it on 24 July, by 28 votes to 5, with 6 abstentions, as resolution 1980/59.

By this resolution, the Council strongly condemned both the exploitation of the natural resources of Namibia by transnational corporations without the sanction of the United Nations Council for Namibia, and the continued investments and operations of those corporations in southern Africa, their exploitation of black labour and their continued collaboration with the racist minority régime of South Africa, in contravention of United Nations resolutions. It recognized the need for further measures, including sanctions, to end that collaboration, which was detrimental to the interests of the oppressed people of South Africa and Namibia. It deplored South Africa's manœuvres and those of companies in South Africa and Namibia to weaken the African trade union movement, and urged transnational corporations to terminate further investments in the area.

The Council called on Governments which had not done so to take legislative, administrative, judicial and other measures to end the activities of their nationals and transnational corporations of their nationality which owned or operated enterprises in the area and called on all States to terminate all collaboration by those nationals and corporations with South Africa. In particular, States were called on to: refrain from extending loans, investments and technical assistance to, and prohibit economic and financial interests from co-operating with, the South African régime or corporations registered in South Africa and Namibia; refrain from exploiting Namibia's natural resources in contravention of United Nations decisions; deny tariff and other preferences or trade inducements to South African and Namibian exports; and prohibit payment of royalties, taxes or other trade- or investment-facilitating resources to South Africa and Namibia in contravention of United Nations resolutions.

The Secretary-General was requested to continue research, data collection and publicity activities in this field and to update reports on this topic for submission to the Commission on Transnational Corporations in 1981.

Explaining their abstentions in the voting, Finland and Sweden said that, although they shared the concern expressed in the text, they felt it was not in keeping with certain fundamental principles of the Charter of the United Nations. Spain also believed that the text raised legal difficulties.

Belgium, speaking on behalf of the European Economic Community (EEC) countries that were Council members, observed that EEC had adopted a code of conduct in 1979 for enterprises operating in South Africa, which sought to promote deep and peaceful evolution towards justice and freedom. While they shared the concern of the resolution's sponsors, they had voted against it because in their view the Council was going beyond its terms of reference and intruding into the field of competence of the Security Council.

The General Assembly at its 1980 regular session, and during the year other United Nations bodies as well, adopted resolutions with provisions condemning or seeking termination of collaboration by transnational corporations with the South African regime.

By resolution 35/32 of 14 November, on adverse consequences for human rights of assistance given to colonial regimes in southern Africa, the Assembly vigorously condemned the collaboration of certain States, multinational corporations and other organizations which maintained or were increasing their economic and other collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa (see p. 809).

A similar condemnation was contained in Assembly resolution 35/206 C of 16 December on comprehensive sanctions against South Africa; the Secretary-General and United Nations organizations were urged to withhold facilities from or investment in banks, financial institutions and corporations which continued to invest in or give loans to the South African regime and to deny contracts or facilities to transnational corporations collaborating with it (see p. 211).

Condemnation of certain countries and transnational corporations which continued to invest in, and supply armaments, oil and nuclear technology to, the regime was also contained in Assembly resolution 35/28 of 11 November, on activities of foreign economic and other interests impeding implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (see p. 1071).

The Assembly in resolution 35/32 also called on Governments of countries where banks, transnational corporations and other organizations, listed in a report presented to the Commission on Human Rights as assisting the racist regimes of southern Africa, to stop their trading, manufacturing and investments in South Africa and Namibia. The Commission had adopted a resolution with a parallel provision on 26 February (see p. 809).

By resolution 35/206 F of 16 December, on the role of transnational corporations in South Africa, the Assembly invited all Governments to prohibit collaboration by transnational corporations within their jurisdiction, to deny contracts or facilities to them, to encourage non-governmental organizations to campaign against such collaboration, and to expose their influence on news media; it also requested various United Nations bodies to intensify efforts to halt activities by transnational corporations in that country (see p. 218).

The Assembly also adopted on 16 December resolution 35/206 L, on dissemination of information on apartheid, by which it invited all Governments, information media and organizations to counteract the propaganda of the apartheid regime and co-operate with the Special Committee against Apartheid in exposing the activities of groups and transnational corporations assisting in such propaganda (see p. 232).

Standards of accounting and reporting

The Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting, established in 1979,<sup>2</sup> held two sessions in 1980, pursuing a basic objective- the promotion of accounting and reporting standards to improve the availability and comparability of information concerning the operations of transnational corporations.

After its first session, held in New York from 11 to 22 February, the Group submitted an interim report to the mid-year session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations. Responding to a request from the Intergovernmental Working Group on a Code of Conduct (see section above), the Ad Hoc Group prepared for the draft code a paragraph on regular disclosure by transnational corporations of financial and other information to the public in countries in which they operated.

At its second session, held at Geneva from 3 to 14 November, the Ad Hoc Group responded to the Working Group's request for technical comments on a redraft of that paragraph.

At both sessions, the Ad Hoc Group discussed a number of the items of financial and non-financial information recommended for disclosure in general-purpose reports by business enterprises, as contained in a 1977 report of the Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting.<sup>3</sup>

At its June/July session, the Commission noted with appreciation the first interim report of the Ad Hoc Working Group and asked the Economic and Social Council to authorize the Group to hold three further sessions before the Commission's August/September 1981 session. The Council, without vote on 24 July 1980, endorsed the text the Commission had recommended to that effect. The Council adopted it as decision 1980/172; the text had been approved by the First Committee, also without vote, on 18 July.

Provisional agenda for the seventh session of the Commission

By decision 1980/170, the Economic and Social Council approved the provisional agenda and proposed documentation for the seventh session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations, scheduled to be held in August/September 1981. The text was proposed by the Commission, endorsed by the First Committee on 18 July without vote and similarly adopted by the Council on 24 July.

Report of the Commission

By decision 1980/173, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Commission on Transnational Corporations on its sixth session, held from 23 June to 4 July in Mexico City, and transmitted it to the General Assembly for consideration at its eleventh special session, held from 25 August to 15 September to consider the new International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade. The decision was adopted by the Council without vote on 24 July, as recommended by the First Committee, where it had been orally proposed by the United States and approved, also without vote, on 18 July.

In addition to detailing the actions previously described in this chapter, the Commission's report noted the Commission's selection of 16 expert advisers-persons selected on the basis of their practical experience, particularly from trade unions, business, public interest groups and universities, who assisted the Commission in a private consultative capacity. The Commission decided that each expert adviser would be selected for a two-year term and be eligible for re-election for only one additional two-year term.

In 1980, expert advisers participated in the Commission's work as well as that of the Intergovernmental Working Group on a Code of Conduct.

The Economic and Social Council.

Recalling that, in paragraph 3 of General Assembly resolution 33/198 of 29 January 1979 on preparations for its special session in 1980, the Assembly invited "the governing bodies of the organs and organizations concerned within the United Nations system to assess, within their respective areas of competence, the progress made towards the establishment of the new international economic order, as well as to indicate the obstacles that impede its establishment.. with a view to submitting comprehensive reports to the Assembly at its special session in 1980,"

Recalling a/so General Assembly resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation.

Recalling further its resolutions 1908(LVII) of 2 August 1974 and 1913(LVII) of 5 December 1974 establishing the Commission on Transnational Corporations and the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations,

Recalling a/so its resolutions 1978/73 of 12 October 1978 and 1979/75 of 3 August 1979 on the activities of transnational corporations in southern Africa and their collaboration with the racist minority regimes in that area,

Recognizing that the fundamental purpose of the new international economic order is based on equity, sovereign equality, interdependence, common interest and co-operation among all States, irrespective of their economic and social systems, which will correct inequalities and redress existing injustices, making it possible to eliminate the widening gap between the developed and developing countries and ensure steadily accelerating economic and social development and peace and justice for present and future generations,

Recognizing further the importance of the fundamental principles of the new international development strategy,

Having considered the report of the Secretariat entitled "Progress made towards the establishment of the new international economic order: the role of transnational corporations,"

Noting the value of providing a framework in the countries in which transnational corporations operate by which generally beneficial relations among all parties concerned can be enhanced,

Noting also that, although the interests of transnational corporations and of the countries in which they operate can be divergent, transnational corporations play a significant role in the areas of industrialization, financial resources, commodities, trade, science and technology, and food and agriculture,

Noting that the pattern of the activities of transnational corporations has not yet changed so as to realize their full potential to contribute to progress towards redressing the economic imbalance between developed and developing countries and towards enhancing the capacity of developing countries for self-reliant development, and recognizing therefore that substantial adaptation is called for to achieve the necessary change,

Convinced that the capacity of countries in which transnational corporations operate, particularly developing countries, to deal with those corporations has to be strengthened,

Aware of the right of each Government to have a regulatory system in order to ensure that the activities of transnational corporations are carried out in accordance with national objectives,

Recognizing that national action in this regard should be supplemented by effective intergovernmental co-operation and appropriate international arrangements,

Convinced that a universally accepted, comprehensive and effective code of conduct is an important element in such national and international efforts and that it will make an essential contribution to the new International economic order,

Considering that the progress made in the formulation of a code of conduct has not met the expectations of all, and stressing the need for its early conclusion,

1. Takes note of the report entitled "Progress made towards the establishment of the new international economic order: the role of transnational corporations," prepared by the United Nations Secretariat, and decides to submit it to the General Assembly for consideration at its eleventh special session;

2. Recommends that efforts should be intensified by all parties concerned, with the aim of enhancing the contribution of transnational corporations towards the establishment of the new international economic order, thereby also contributing towards the achievement of the individual and collective self-reliance of developing countries;

3. Also recommends that the individual and collective self-reliance of developing countries should be enhanced, inter alia, by strengthening their negotiating capacity in their dealings with transnational corporations, particularly in financing and investment, science and technology, management, production and marketing, and by improving their capacity to regulate and accordingly to monitor the activities of transnational corporations;

4. Invites the General Assembly at its eleventh special session to bear in mind the importance of the work on the code of conduct and the results achieved so far in this regard, as reflected in the report of the Commission on Transnational Corporations on its sixth session;

5. Considers in particular that the code of conduct, which is of the highest priority in the work of the Commission, will be an essential contribution to the accomplishment of the goals of the new international development strategy and the new international economic order;

6. Affirms that the code of conduct should, inter alia:

(a) Be effective, comprehensive, generally accepted and universally adopted;

(b) Associate effectively the activities of transnational corporations with the efforts to establish the new international economic order and their capabilities with the developmental objectives of the developing countries;

(c) Reflect the principle of respect by transnational corporations for the national sovereignty, laws and regulations of the countries in which they operate, and for the established policies of those countries and the right of States to regulate and accordingly to monitor the activities of transnational corporations;

(d) Encourage the contribution that transnational corporations can make towards the achievement of developmental goals and the established objectives of the countries in which they operate, particularly the developing countries;

(e) Proscribe subversion, interference in the internal affairs of countries and other inadmissible activities by transnational corporations which aim to undermine the political and social systems of the countries in which they operate;

(f) Deal in the most effective and appropriate manner with the issue of the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia, recognizing that concern was widely expressed in the Commission on Transnational Corporations, in the context of the struggle against apartheid, at the collaboration of transnational corporations with the racist minority regime;

(g) Include provisions relating to the treatment of transnational corporations, jurisdiction and other related matters;

(h) Provide appropriate arrangements for the effective implementation of the code;

(i) Be considered as an integrated whole in which all the parts are related to each other;

7. Affirms also that the draft code should be completed before the seventh session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations in 1981 and that the code should be expeditiously adopted by all members of the international community;

8. Reaffirms that the Commission on Transnational Corporations is the forum within the United Nations system for the comprehensive and in-depth consideration of issues relating to transnational corporations, and for the promotion of the exchange of views among all parties concerned, as mentioned in paragraph 3 (b) of Council resolution 1913 (LVII) of 5 December 1974;

9. Further reaffirms that, under the guidance of the Commission on Transnational Corporations, the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations is the central unit in the United Nations system at the Secretariat level for work on matters related to transnational corporations, having due regard to the need for co-ordination, that it should pursue its important activities in accordance with its programme of work and that its resources should be commensurate with its work programme.

Noting the substantial preparatory work for a conference of plenipotentiaries which was completed by the Committee on an International Agreement on illicit Payments and recorded in the Committee's report on its first and second sessions, Resolution 1980/59, as recommended by First Committee, E/1980/96, adopted by Council on 24 July 1980, meeting 44, by 28 votes to 5, with 6 abstentions.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling a/s/o the resolutions adopted by the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its third, fourth and fifth sessions on the activities of transnational corporations in southern Africa and their collaboration with the racist minority régimes in that area,

Recalling further the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid and General Assembly resolution S-9/2 of 3 May 1978,

Having considered the report of the Secretariat entitled "In-depth analysis of the role of transnational corporations in the industrial, military and nuclear sectors of South Africa,"

Gravely concerned at the continued collaboration by transnational corporations with the racist minority régime of South Africa in contravention of United Nations resolutions,

Also gravely concerned about the adverse trends in the policies of some home Governments of transnational corporations which encourage such corporations to continue to collaborate with the racist minority régime of South Africa in violation of United Nations resolutions and in defiance of the legitimate aspirations of the oppressed peoples,

Considering that the cessation of the activities of transnational corporations in the area would constitute an important step in the struggle against the racist minority régime, Conscious of the heroic resistance currently mounted by various sections of the oppressed people of southern Africa against the racist minority régime of South Africa,

Gravely concerned at the recent intensification of repressive measures by the racist minority régime to entrench the inhuman apartheid system and to thwart the legitimate aspirations of the oppressed peoples of southern Africa,

Conscious of the continued need to enlist the active support of the home Governments of transnational corporations which operate in South Africa and Namibia,

We/coming as a positive step measures taken by some home Governments to curtail the activities of their transnational and other corporations in southern Africa,

Mindful of the imperative need to maintain and strengthen international solidarity in support of the legitimate struggle of the oppressed peoples in southern Africa for self-determination and independence,

Gravely concerned further at the defiant refusal of the racist minority régime of South Africa to co-operate with the Security Council and the international community generally in the solution of the Namibian problem,

Recognizing the importance of mobilizing world public opinion against the involvement and collaboration of transnational corporations with the racist minority régime of South Africa,

1. Notes with appreciation the report of the Secretariat entitled "In-depth analysis of the role of transnational corporations in the industrial, military and nuclear sectors of South Africa;"

2. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the oppressed peoples of southern Africa to self-determination and permanent sovereignty over their natural resources and all economic activities;

3. Strongly condemns the exploitation of the natural resources of Namibia by transnational corporations without the authority or sanction of the United Nations Council for Namibia, in contravention of its Decree No. 1, enacted on 27 September 1974, and General Assembly resolution 32/9 of 4 November 1977;

4. Reiterates that the activities of transnational corporations in the area and their collaboration with the racist minority régime are detrimental to the interests of the oppressed peoples in South Africa and Namibia;

5. Recognizes the urgent need to take further and effective measures, including sanctions, in order to terminate the continuing collaboration by transnational and other corporations with the racist minority régime of South Africa;

6. Calls upon all Governments to adhere strictly to and ensure the effective implementation of sanctions and decisions adopted by the General Assembly and the Security Council relating to South Africa;

7. Strongly condemns the continued investments and operations of transnational corporations in southern Africa, their exploitation of black labour and their continued collaboration with the racist minority régime of South Africa in contravention of United Nations resolutions, thereby contributing to the perpetuation of oppression and other inhuman practices perpetrated against the majority of the population of southern Africa by the racist minority régime;

8. Deplores the manoeuvres of the racist minority régime of South Africa and companies and transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia to weaken the existing African trade union movement through the establishment of so-called parallel trade unions and the harassment and persecution of officials of independent African trade unions;

9. Urges all transnational corporations to comply fully with the relevant United Nations resolutions by terminating all further investments in the area and by ending their collaboration with the racist minority régime;

10. Calls upon all Governments which have not yet done so to take legislative, administrative, judicial and other measures in respect of their nationals and transnational corporations of their nationality owning or operating enterprises in the area, in order to put an end to such activities;

11. Calls further upon all States to terminate all forms of collaboration by their nationals and by transnational and other corporations of their nationality with the racist minority régime of South Africa and, in particular:

(a) To refrain from supplying petroleum, petroleum products or other strategic materials to the racist minority régime;

(b) To refrain from extending loans, investments and technical assistance to the racist minority régime of South Africa and to corporations registered in South Africa and Namibia;

(c) To prohibit economic and financial interests under their national jurisdiction from co-operating with the racist minority régime and enterprises registered in South Africa and Namibia;

(d) To refrain from exploiting the natural resources of Namibia in contravention of the decrees of the United Nations Council for Namibia and the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

(e) To refrain from all activities which may directly or indirectly contribute to the strengthening of the military capability of the racist minority régime;

12. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To instruct the Secretariat to continue its useful research on the activities of transnational corporations in southern Africa and their collaboration with the racist minority régime of South Africa;

(c) To continue to collect and publicize information on the activities of transnational corporations which collaborate directly or indirectly with the racist minority régime of South Africa in contravention of United Nations resolutions;

(d) To organize symposia, workshops, seminars and other programmes of enlightenment, in collaboration with other United Nations bodies concerned, with a view to educating the general public in the home countries of transnational corporations on the activities of those corporations in southern Africa and the extent of their collaboration with the racist minority régime of South Africa.

Chapter VIII

Science and technology for development

The new United Nations machinery established by the General Assembly in 1979 to help make the advantages of science and technology more accessible to developing countries began operating in 1980. The Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, set up to formulate policy guidelines for international activities in this field and with a membership open to all States, held two sessions at United Nations Headquarters, New York: its first, from 28 January to 1 February, and the first part of its second, from 22 May to 4 June. The United Nations Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development became operational and approved its first projects of assistance to countries in a variety of scientific disciplines. The Centre for Science and Technology for Development began work as the central unit of the United Nations Secretariat in this sphere.

One of the main tasks of these bodies was to implement the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development,<sup>1</sup> approved by the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, held at Vienna in August 1979, and endorsed by the Assembly in December 1979.<sup>2</sup> The Programme contained a series of recommendations for national and international action to strengthen the scientific and technological capacities of developing countries, restructure existing patterns of international scientific and technological relations, strengthen the role of the United Nations system and make more financial resources available.

The Intergovernmental Committee replaced the Economic and Social Council's Committee on Science and Technology for Development. The decision to abolish the latter Committee was taken by the Council by decision 1980/101 of 6 February 1980, adopted, without vote, on a proposal of the President. The action had been recommended by the General Assembly in 1979 when it established the new Committee."

The recommendations of the Intergovernmental Committee were considered in 1980 by the Council and the Assembly, both of which adopted resolutions on the subject, all without vote.

The Council, by resolution 1980/48 of 23 July, requested the Secretary-General and all United Nations organizations and bodies to support the activities of the Centre for Science and Technology for Development, and appealed for contributions to the Interim Fund. This resolution was approved without objection by the First (Economic) Committee on 18 July, on the basis of a text proposed by India on behalf of the member States of the Council belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries.

The Assembly adopted two resolutions together on 5 December, recommended by its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 20 November. By resolution 35/67 A it endorsed the resolutions and decisions of the Intergovernmental Committee, decided that the Committee could hold a two-part session in 1981, recommended that United Nations organizations and bodies support the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation in formulating an operational plan for implementing the Vienna Programme, and decided that the Centre for Science and Technology should be allocated the resources it needed for its work programme. By resolution 35/67 B it urgently appealed for contributions to the Interim Fund.

Both resolutions were approved together without vote in the Second Committee on the basis of drafts submitted by a Vice-Chairman following consultations on texts submitted by Venezuela on behalf of Member States belonging to the Group of 77. The approved texts were substantially the same as the earlier drafts, which were withdrawn after the Vice-Chairman submitted new versions.

Two aspects of the "brain drain" of trained personnel from developing to developed countries- the measurement of human resource flows and the feasibility of an international labour compensatory facility- were the subject of studies called for by the General Assembly on the topic also known as the reverse transfer of technology. The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) made plans for the measurement study, while the United Nations Secretary-General presented a progress report on the compensatory facility suggestion, which would involve indemnities to labour-exporting countries.

At Geneva, the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology made progress on a draft code, and the Assembly authorized a fourth session of the Conference in 1981.

Details of these and other developments follow.

Implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action

The Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development set in motion preliminary work on an operational plan for implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action. By a resolution of 4 June 1980, it decided that the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, assisted by the head of the Centre for Science and Technology for Development, should submit to it proposals for a detailed operational plan for each of the eight major programme areas: policies and plans, infrastructure, technology transfer, human resources, financing, information, research and development, and international co-operation. He was asked to consult Governments and United Nations organizations before submitting the proposals to the Committee in 1981.

The Committee decided that the operational plan would be the framework for the scientific and technological activities of the United Nations system, as well as an indicative framework for countries seeking United Nations support. The types of activities to be covered would be financial and technical support, studies and analyses, development and negotiation of codes and agreements to restructure international co-operation in science and technology, and development of a systematic process for consulting countries about their needs and plans. The Director-General, with the help of the head of the Centre, would be responsible for co-ordinating all activities of the United Nations system in this sphere.

The Committee also asked for a Secretariat report on the levels of attainment of scientific and technological development among different countries, and decided that an early start should be made on analyses of the common goals and objectives of science and technology in development and of the contribution which non-governmental organizations could make.

By another resolution of 4 June, the Committee requested the Centre to arrange for the large-scale distribution of the Vienna Programme and the General Assembly's 1979 resolution on the results of the Vienna Conference, and to plan the publication of a newsletter to keep national authorities and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations informed of the progress made in implementing the Programme.

Also on 4 June, the Committee decided that it would discuss at a sessional working group in 1981 the issues that had not been resolved at the Vienna Conference. These issues included proposals for strengthening the scientific and technological capacities of the developing countries through such means as the transfer of technology and the provision of financing, and for restructuring the existing pattern of activities in this sphere.

The General Assembly, by resolution 35/67 A of 5 December, recommended that all United Nations organizations and bodies should fully support the Director-General in formulating the operational plan for implementation of the Vienna Programme.

On 28 November, the UNCTAD Committee on Transfer of Technology requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to submit to the Intergovernmental Committee's member States an aide-mémoire listing the outstanding issues on which agreement had not been reached at Vienna but on which consensus had been achieved in UNCTAD negotiations. It also requested him to take steps to implement the Vienna Programme in accordance with UNCTAD's mandate. (For further information on the Committee's work in 1980, see p. 633.)

International Development Strategy

A section on science and technology for development was included in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s), adopted by the General Assembly by resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980 (see p. 499). Stressing the importance of modern scientific and technological skills to economic and social progress, the Strategy sketched various approaches to enable developing countries to gain access to those skills.

In the area of technology transfer, developed countries should give or facilitate the freest and fullest possible access by developing countries to technologies. In technology planning and policies, special attention should be given to sectors of critical importance to developing countries. Research and development efforts should be assisted, along with an exchange of skills. In accordance with the Vienna Programme, developing countries, with support from outside, should build up their scientific and technological infrastructure by devoting more effort to training and research, establishing close links between those who generated technology and those who used it, and exchanging skilled personnel and information with other developing countries. Men and women should benefit equally from scientific and technological development. Action should be taken to minimize the negative impact of the migration of skilled personnel, and arrangements should be considered to help countries whose economies were disrupted by such outflows. Substantial resources should be mobilized for the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development (see following section). Development of a global information network should be expedited.

or relevant provisions (section III G) of the Strategy, see p. 513.)

The UNCTAD Trade and Development Board's Committee on Transfer of Technology, by a resolution adopted on 28 November, requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to prepare a report on a set of interrelated and supporting measures for implementing the science and technology section of the Strategy. It decided to determine at its next session, scheduled for 1982, whether that report or another set of measures should be submitted to the sixth session of UNCTAD (1983) or whether the Committee should take an alternative course.

The UNCTAD Secretary-General was asked, in preparing his report, to take account of comments by Governments and United Nations bodies and organizations on proposals he had drawn up for an outline for the formulation of a strategy for the technological transformation of developing countries. These proposals, requested by UNCTAD (resolution 112(V) of 3 June 1979),<sup>4</sup> were noted by the Trade and Development Board by a decision of 25 March 1980 and transmitted to the Committee. (For further information on the Committee's work in 1980, see p. 633.)

Activities of the United Nations system

By resolution 35/67 A of 5 December 1980, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, endorsed the broad framework of a study of the system-wide efficiency of the United Nations system in the field of science and technology. This framework was suggested in a report to the Assembly by the Secretary-General, dated 25 April. It envisaged a three-part study that would contain factual information about the United Nations bodies involved in this field, review objectives and strategies, and suggest policy guidelines and measures to improve harmonization. The study had been requested by the Assembly in 1979,<sup>5</sup> based on a proposal in the Vienna Programme.

On 4 June 1980, the Committee invited United Nations organizations to provide information on their activities, for use by the Centre for Science and Technology for Development in annual reports to the Committee.

United Nations machinery

Three new bodies on science and technology were established in 1980: an advisory body of experts on science and technology for development, established by the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development; an Intergovernmental Group of Experts on the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development (see following section); and an interagency Task Force on Science and Technology for Development, set up by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC).

The advisory body's terms of reference were fixed by the Intergovernmental Committee on 4 June (see APPENDIX III). It was to provide scientific and technical expert advice to United Nations bodies, the Secretary-General and the Administrator of the Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development. The advice was to be based on national and regional discussions, with the participation of a wide cross-section of possible users of science and technology. The 28 appointees were to include persons involved in policy-making in their countries, specialists in economics and the social sciences, persons knowledgeable in the problems of the productive sectors, and persons illustrative of other science and technology users. (Members of the advisory body were appointed on 29 January 1981 at the Intergovernmental Committee's resumed second session.)

Following the Committee's decision to establish this body, the Economic and Social Council decided, by resolution 1980/48 of 23 July, to discontinue the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development, which had performed advisory functions under the former organizational scheme.

The Task Force was established by ACC at its first regular session of 1980 (Vienna, 31 March-3 April). It was to serve as the essential mechanism of interagency co-operation in the implementation of tasks assigned to the Intergovernmental Committee, support ACC committees in their consideration of science and technology issues, and assist the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation. It would be open to all United Nations organizations.

Surendra K. Jain, a Deputy Director-General of the International Labour Organisation, was appointed by ACC as Chairman of the Task Force for its first year. The Intergovernmental Committee expressed its view on 4 June that the Chairman should be the head of the Centre for Science and Technology for Development, in view of the central role of the United Nations in co-ordinating activities of the United Nations system.

During 1980, the Centre began work as the Secretariat unit responsible for support to the Intergovernmental Committee and for co-ordinating secretariat activities in science and technology throughout the United Nations system. By resolution 35/67 A of 5 December, the General Assembly decided that the Centre for Science and Technology for Development should be allocated the necessary resources to carry out its work programme.

United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development

Steps were taken in 1980 to set in motion the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development, established by the General Assembly in 1979<sup>7</sup> on the recommendation of the Vienna Conference. Pending the establishment of long-term arrangements, the Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development began operations. An Intergovernmental Group of Experts began a study of long-term arrangements for the System.

Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development

The Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development was declared operational on 19 May 1980. Its first 19 projects, to which it committed $16 million, were approved in November. Selected from among 800 requests for assistance, they covered such areas as remote sensing, metallurgy technology, photo-voltaic material, energy-related technologies, research and development in tea production, low-cost housing, agricultural research, the utilization of chemical wastes and geological cartography.

Project selection followed principles laid down in the initial prospectus for the Fund<sup>8</sup> as well as additional guidelines approved on 4 June by the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development. The additional guidelines specified that, pending substantial increases in contributions, the Fund would provide assistance only at the request of or through Governments or groups of States. It would: be used primarily to support projects congruent with national development policies and priorities and related research and development programmes; encourage countries to submit long-range projects for building their national capacities, with full account for the need for links between scientific and technological institutions on the one hand and productive and service sectors on the other; spend no more than 15 to 20 per cent of its resources on intercountry projects, with due emphasis on technical co-operation among developing countries; and concentrate on the programme areas identified in the operational plan to be adopted by the Committee (see preceding section).

These guidelines were approved on the basis of a note by the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), prepared in consultation with the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, which the Committee had requested on 1 February. In establishing the Fund, the Assembly had decided that it was to be administered by UNDP under the guidelines approved by the Assembly and those to be established by the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development.

The Secretary-General, in a report to the Assembly dated 3 December, noted that the UNDP Administrator had requested authority to spend up to $1,145,140 for staff and other administrative costs for the Fund in 1981. The Assembly granted this authorization by section XIX of resolution 35/217, adopted without objection on 17 December. The Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee approved this text, without vote, on 15 December, on an oral proposal by the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

PLEDGES FOR THE INTERIM FUND

On 27 March 1980, a United Nations Pledging Conference for the Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development was held at United Nations Headquarters. Thirty-five Governments made pledges for 1980-1981 totalling $25.8 million. The total rose to about $30.7 million from 53 countries as at 31 December 1980 (see table), including additional pledges made at the 1980 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (New York, 6 and 7 November). Pledged and indicated resources by that date, according to the UNDP Administrator, totalled about $50 million, i.e. only 20 per cent of the target of $250 million for the biennium, agreed by the Vienna Conference and the General Assembly in 1979.<sup>9</sup>

Appeals for additional contributions were issued in 1980 by: the Intergovernmental Committee on 4 June; the UNDP Governing Council on 27 June; the Economic and Social Council on 23 July, by resolution 1980/48; the Committee on Transfer of Technology of the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board on 28 November; and the General Assembly on 5 December, by resolution 35/67 B.

Noting with concern that the money available to the Fund was inadequate to meet the demonstrated needs and aspirations of developing countries, the Assembly, by its resolution, urgently appealed to Governments, particularly of developed countries, to contribute substantially so that the agreed target could be reached as soon as possible.

In the Economic and Social Council and in its First Committee, Belgium, speaking on behalf of the members of the European Economic Community, recalled a statement made at the 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development expressing the reservations of several of these States (Belgium, France, Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Luxembourg, United Kingdom) on the efficacy of any sectoral fund for science and technology. This statement was also recalled by Belgium and the United Kingdom in the Assembly's Second Committee. France, in the Second Committee, said that, while it had not changed its general position with regard to the Interim Fund, it would study with care the results of efforts to increase the number of contributors.

on the United Nations Financing System

The Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development decided on 4 June 1980 on the 27 States which would constitute the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development, a body whose establishment was decided on by the Assembly in 1979.<sup>10</sup> According to the Assembly decision, the System was to be brought into operation in January 1982.

The Group held two sessions in 1980: at United Nations Headquarters from 11 to 15 August, and at Geneva from 24 November to 3 December. It prepared a tentative outline for its report and, at its second session, studied Secretariat papers on various aspects of funding and institutional arrangements.

The Assembly, by resolution 35/67 A of 5 December, decided that, if the Group's report was ready for consideration, the Intergovernmental Committee would hold the second part of its 1981 session in late August or early September, mainly to consider the report. Following the approval of this resolution by the Second Committee, France said it generally favoured having intergovernmental committees meet only once each year, while the United States said the second part of the session should not lead to additional expenditures.

The provision on science and technology for development contained in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (see subsection above) stated that, in determining the nature and level of resources of the Financing System, consideration should be given to the need for a predictable and continuous flow of resources, for substantial resources in addition to those existing within the United Nations system, and for untied external resources for the scientific and technological development of the developing countries.

Transfer of technology

Network for exchange of technological information

The General Assembly, in its International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, adopted on 5 December 1980 (see subsection above), recommended that the development of a global and international information network for science and technology should be expedited and that the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development should urgently consider the establishment of such a system. Existing information systems in the United Nations and other international bodies, which were also serving as industrial technology data banks, should form an integral part of the proposed global network.

One such information system- the Industrial and Technological Information Bank (INTIB), established by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) -ended its first full year of regular operation in 1980, following completion of its pilot phase. It had access to more than 70 computerized data bases on applied science and technology, technology suppliers, patents and related subjects. On 19 May, the Industrial Development Board of UNIDO recommended that the Assembly provide the resources INTIB needed and that funds to strengthen it be sought from the Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development.

The Economic and Social Council endorsed the Board's recommendations when it adopted resolution 1980/61 on 24 July (see p. 656).

Advisory Service on Transfer of Technology

The UNCTAD Advisory Service on Transfer of Technology continued in 1980 to provide technical and operational assistance to developing countries at their request. It worked in four main areas: (1) helping Governments, primarily in Africa, with their technology planning and policy; (2) assisting in the establishment of regional and subregional centres for technology transfer; (3) responding to requests for co-operation in critical sectors, through such activities as a workshop on trade and technology policies and planning in the pharmaceutical sector (Georgetown, Guyana, 18-29 August); and (4) organizing workshops and training courses, including a workshop for English-speaking Africans on technology policies and planning for technological transformation (Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania, 13-24 October).

An appeal for additional funds for the Service's work was made on 28 November by the UNCTAD Committee on Transfer of Technology. The Committee suggested UNDP, the Interim Fund, the United Nations regular programme of technical assistance and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development as possible sources to finance the Service's activities on technology policies and planning and on sectors of critical importance to developing countries, as well as to pay for regional and interregional advisers. It also urged all countries, particularly the developed countries, to contribute to the Service.

The Committee endorsed specific aspects of UNCTAD work in this area, including co-operation with regional and subregional centres, assistance in the formulation and implementation of national technology plans and policies, help and advice in strengthening national institutions, and training of personnel, including workshops on policies and planning in critical sectors. It requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to make recommendations for the establishment of links among regional and subregional centres.

UNIDO activities

In addition to seeking funds for INTIB (see subsection above), UNIDO strengthened elements of its technology programme in 1980, in response to programme directions laid down by its Third General Conference (New Delhi, India, 21 January-9 February; see p. 644). The fifth meeting of heads of technology transfer registries (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 15-19 September) explored ways of expanding the UNIDO Technological Information Exchange System, which assisted Governments to improve their negotiating capabilities for technology transfer. Projects were undertaken to promote technology development and technological co-operation in small-scale industries. A symposium on industrial technology in Africa was organized from 5 to 12 November at Khartoum, Sudan, in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity; it recommended that each country formulate and implement a basic national technology programme.

On 19 May, the Industrial Development Board of UNIDO endorsed the broad programme directions outlined by the secretariat in this area and urged high priority for operational and promotional activities in the development, selection, acquisition, adaptation, transfer and use of industrial technology. It recommended that appropriate resources be provided by the General Assembly and sought from the Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development and the United Nations Industrial Development Fund.

The Economic and Social Council endorsed the Board's recommendations when it adopted resolution 1980/61 on 24 July (see p. 656).

Reverse transfer of technology

Aspects of the reverse transfer of technology- the so-called brain drain of skilled personnel from developing to developed countries- were under study in 1980 by UNCTAD and the United Nations Secretary-General.

An UNCTAD study, on the feasibility of measuring human resource flows, was requested on 28 November by the Committee on Transfer of Technology of the Trade and Development Board. It was to be carried out by the UNCTAD Secretary-General, in consultation with other United Nations organizations. At the same time, the Committee requested the Board to authorize the convening of an intergovernmental group of experts on the same subject, no earlier than three months after the study had been submitted to Governments.

In referring this matter to the Committee on 27 September, by resolution 219(XXI), the Board had acted in response to a 1979 request by the General Assembly that it consider arrangements, including the necessity of convening a group of experts, to examine the feasibility of measuring human resource flows.<sup>11</sup>

The Secretary-General's study, also requested by the Assembly in 1979,<sup>12</sup> was on the feasibility of proposals to establish an international labour compensatory facility that would indemnify labour-exporting countries for their loss of highly trained personnel. A progress report dated 3 October 1980, issued in advance of a final report to be submitted in 1981, noted that there was a consensus on the seriousness of the problem but not on its precise causes or on measures to deal with them. The Group of 77 developing countries had proposed to UNCTAD in 1978 the creation of a facility to which each United Nations Member State would make an annual contribution commensurate with its gains from the reverse transfer of technology. According to some proposals, a compensatory facility would continuously assess the problem, collect and evaluate data, evolve policy measures for national and international consideration, help implement steps to reduce the adverse effects of migration, and assist developing countries to meet their development goals, thereby indirectly leading to the reduction and elimination of the generic causes of migration.

Taking note of this progress report, the Assembly by resolution 35/62 adopted without a vote on 5 December-expressed concern at the adverse effects of the reverse transfer of technology on the capacity and potential of scientific and technological development in the developing countries and, thus, on their economic and social development. It reiterated its request to the Secretary-General for a final report in 1981 on a compensatory facility, and asked that he keep under continuing review the co-ordination of work on the question of the reverse transfer of technology. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was requested to continue to keep the problem under review as necessary, and the Trade and Development Board was asked to conclude consideration at its March 1981 session of recommendations on arrangements for a study, including the convening of a group of experts, on the feasibility of measuring human resource flows.

This resolution was approved by consensus by the Second Committee on 20 November, on the basis of a text introduced and orally revised by a Vice-Chairman following informal consultations on a draft introduced earlier by Venezuela on behalf of the United Nations Member States belonging to the Group of 77. The earlier draft was then withdrawn.

In addition to a number of drafting changes, differences between the two texts included the following: in the preamble of the Group's text, a reference to considering the brain drain as constituting a gratuitous and reverse transfer of technology was changed to considering that the outflow of skilled manpower constituted a reverse transfer of technology; the Group's text had expressed the conviction instead of the awareness that the search for solutions to transfer was a responsibility rather than an important concern of the international community; and by the earlier draft the United Nations system should play a role in the elimination of, rather than could play a role in the alleviation of the adverse effects of, the reverse transfer of technology.

In the operative paragraphs: the Secretary-General's report was, previously, to be considered as an adequate basis for work in this field rather than to be taken into account as a basis for completion of the final report; a request was added that the Secretary-General keep co-ordination of work on the question under continued review; the UNCTAD Secretary-General would have been asked to pursue vigorously work on measures to eliminate reverse transfer rather than to keep the problem under continued review as necessary; and the Trade and Development Board would have been requested to conclude consideration of the adoption of measures contributing to the elimination of reverse transfer, instead of consideration of recommendations on appropriate arrangements as called for in Board resolution 219(XXI).

Several representatives made statements of position at the time of approval. Canada and the United States expressed grave doubts that the problems of the adverse effects of the transfer of technology could be solved through multilateral agreements such as the establishment of an international labour compensatory facility. Czechoslovakia, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, stated that the problem had resulted from neo-colonialist policies in the developed countries and the activities of transnational corporations which had sought to transfer trained workers away from developing countries; they joined in the consensus on the understanding that the membership of the UNCTAD group of experts would be geographically balanced. The German Democratic Republic said that, at the suggestion of developing countries, it would not press its informal amendments, one of which would have requested exploration of the possibility of drafting legal instruments to prevent human resource flows from developing countries, but it hoped the proposal would be taken into account in the Secretary-General's report. Bulgaria and the USSR separately endorsed these comments.

Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology

The United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology continued efforts to draft a code at its third session, held at Geneva from 21 April to 6 May 1980. The Conference, called by the General Assembly, held its first session in 1978, under the auspices of UNCTAD.<sup>13</sup> At its 1980 session, it recorded progress on a chapter concerning guarantees, responsibilities and obligations, but was unable to complete the code as called for by the Assembly in 1979.<sup>14</sup> On 6 May, it adopted a resolution by which it requested that the Conference be reconvened.

The main outstanding issues were summarized by the Conference President, Miroslav Pravda (Czechoslovakia), to the Committee on Transfer of Technology on 21 November. With regard to the code's legal status-binding or voluntary—he felt that the Conference could not decide the matter and should leave it for a future review conference. As to the scope of the code, there was agreement that it should apply to the transfer of technology across national borders but agreement had not been reached on whether it should extend to transactions involving other international elements. Still unresolved were critical issues relating to restrictive practices, including the question of which practices should be covered. No progress had been made on rules for determining which law was applicable to a technology transfer transaction and how disputes should be settled.

By resolution 35/60 of 5 December, dealing with the 1980 reports of UNCTAD (see p. 637), the General Assembly, noting with concern that the Conference had not completed its task, decided to convene a fourth session of the Conference in March/April 1981, and reiterated its call for political will and flexibility by all Governments in order to reach agreement on the outstanding issues and to take all decisions necessary for the adoption of the code.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, which gave prominence to the role of science and technology in promoting the development of developing countries,

Recalling also its resolution 34/218 of 19 December 1979, in which it endorsed the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development and decided, inter alia, to establish the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, the Centre for Science and Technology for Development, as a new and organizationally distinct entity within the Secretariat, and the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development, including the United Nations Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/48 of 23 July 1980,

Having heard the statement by the Executive Director of the Centre for Science and Technology for Development,

Reaffirming the paramount need for and importance of the application of science and technology to development in establishing a new international economic order and in carrying out the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

2. Endorses the broad framework of a study of the system-wide efficiency of the United Nations system in the field of science and technology for development, as recommended by the Committee in its decision 4(II) of 4 June 1980;

3. Recommends that all the organs, organizations and bodies concerned in the United Nations system should support fully the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation and the Centre for Science and Technology for Development in the formulation of the operational plan for the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development, as contained in resolution 1(II) adopted by the Committee on 4 June 1980;

5. Decides that in 1981 the Committee shall, if necessary, hold its session in two parts, the first part in May and, if the report of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development is ready for consideration, the second part late in August or early in September for not more than a week, mainly for the purpose of considering that report.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development, Recognizing the vital importance of science and technology to the development of developing countries as an area of international co-operation and as a central component of the new international economic order and of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Bearing in mind the provisions of its resolution 34/218 of 19 December 1979, by which it established, inter alia, the United Nations Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development, and of Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/48 of 23 July 1980,

Noting that on 19 May 1980 the Interim Fund was declared operational,

Taking note of the report of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development on its first and second sessions and of the first meeting of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development,

Recognizing that the conclusions of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts, together with the practical progress achieved through the activities of the Interim Fund, will contribute to the long-term arrangements of the Financing System,

Recognising also the unprecedented efforts of developing countries in submitting more than seven hundred projects for financing by the Interim Fund,

Concerned that, at the United Nations Pledging Conference for the Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development, held on 27 March 1980, the agreed target of $250 million was not attained,

Convinced that both the Vienna Programme of Action and General Assembly resolution 34/218 provide a basis for future consensus and collaboration in an area of vital importance to all countries,

1. Notes with concern that the financial resources currently available to the United Nations Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development are grossly inadequate to meet the already demonstrated needs and aspirations of developing countries for science and technology for development;

2. Emphasizes the importance of ensuring that the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development, as endorsed by the General Assembly, is respected and fully implemented;

3. Urgently appeals to all Governments, particularly those of developed countries, to contribute substantially to the Interim Fund so that the agreed target of no less than $250 million may be reached by the earliest possible date, and expresses its thanks to those Governments that have contributed to the Interim Fund.

3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also its resolutions 32/192 of 19 December 1977 and 33/151 of 20 December 1978, entitled "Reverse transfer of technology," as well as its resolution 34/200 of 19 December 1979 on development aspects of the reverse transfer of technology,

Noting the Economic Declaration adopted by the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana from 3 to 9 September 1979,

Noting also the report of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on its fifth session, particularly resolution 102(V) of 30 May 1979, the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development and the resolutions and decisions of the Trade and Development Board on the reverse transfer of technology, in particular decision 193(XIX) of 20 October 1979 and resolution 219(XXI) of 27 September 1980,

Chapter IX

Questions relating to food problems

Measures to alleviate hunger and malnutrition were taken in 1980 by the World Food Council and the World Food Programme (WFP), supported by decisions of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly.

The World Food Council at its June session discussed ways of correcting the growing imbalances in the world food economy. As before, it put special emphasis on country-by-country food-sector strategies, bearing in mind that in the final analysis the responsibility for food and agricultural production lay with the developing countries themselves and that they were increasingly committed to speeding up development of those sectors. The Council stressed that the pattern of income and food distribution was directly connected to hunger and malnutrition and that multilateral development agencies were particularly well equipped to assist developing countries to make their increased food production widely available through a more equitable distribution system.

Since the Council's September 1979 session, 32 developing countries, with a total population exceeding 500 million, had begun to prepare food strategies, and more than half that number had received firm offers of assistance from developed countries and international agencies. About two thirds of the developing countries were in Africa. A number of major development assistance agencies, such as the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the International Labour Organisation, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the Inter-American Development Bank and the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, had indicated strong interest in helping developing countries formulate and implement their food strategies.

During 1980, WFP continued to provide food aid in support of development and emergency activities in developing countries, valued at some $500 million.

The Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly took several decisions relating to world food problems. Both bodies welcomed the conclusions and recommendations of the World Food Council. The Assembly placed added emphasis both on increasing food production in developing countries and on improving international trade in food and agricultural products for solving world food problems (resolution 35/68); it welcomed the observance of World Food Day, to be held for the first time on 16 October 1981 and annually thereafter (resolution 35/70); and it set forth measures aimed at improving the food situation in Africa (resolution 35/69).

Details of these and other actions are described in this chapter.

World Food Council

Report of the World Food Council

The World Food Council held its sixth ministerial session at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, from 3 to 6 June 1980, preceded by a preparatory meeting from 28 to 30 April at Rome, Italy. Meeting for the first time in Africa, the Council expressed its deep concern over the region's critical food situation. It appealed to all countries and international agencies to provide as quickly as possible additional food assistance to countries in the region (see also section below on the FOOD AND AGRICULTURAL SITUATION IN AFRICA).

The Council termed the food outlook for many countries in the 1980s more serious than ever before and expressed its concern at the unsatisfactory progress made by the international community towards achieving the general objectives and implementing the recommendations of the 1974 World Food Conference.<sup>1</sup>

The Council noted that there had been several positive developments since its 1979 session, including: the heightened awareness of food and hunger issues at the international level; a substantial response to the Council's food-strategy initiative<sup>2</sup> by 32 developing countries, 10 developed countries and international assistance agencies; and a new, more adequate Food Aid Convention. The Council pointed out, however, that imbalances and dependency in the world food economy had continued, and hunger and deprivation in many developing countries had grown, placing them at a serious disadvantage in realizing their development potential as well as constituting a destabilizing political factor.

The Council said it recognized that progress on food and other major social and economic issues was constrained by such adverse trends as the rapid increase in military expenditures, inflation, the energy situation and slow world-wide economic growth. While these adverse trends required urgent attention and resolution, the Council urged priority for economic development programmes for the developing countries, particularly those addressing food and hunger problems.

In its report, adopted by consensus, the Council expressed its firm view that at the core of a new International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s) should be intensive plans to increase food production in developing countries and to overcome hunger and malnutrition within a world economy appropriately structured to ensure security and justice for all.

Noting that the implementation of food strategies, plans or systems depended on more resources, both internal and external, the Council called for increases in external resource flows to the food sectors of developing countries.

The Council stressed that investment in food production and distribution programmes for developing countries remained far short of the level required to reach the agreed annual 4 per cent growth rate of agricultural production. It reaffirmed its appeal to the international community to increase substantially its assistance to food and agriculture in developing countries in order to realize the estimated annual requirement (in 1975 prices) of $8.3 billion, with $6.5 billion on concessional terms, keeping in mind FAO's projection that by 1990 requirements for such external assistance would be about $12.7 billion. It also reaffirmed its call to all developed countries to take urgent steps to reach the official development assistance target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product so as to increase substantially the flow of resources to food and agriculture and to other sectors.

In addition, the Council stressed that the resources of the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) should be replenished sufficiently to provide for its operations.

Noting the waste of human and development potential involved in chronic hunger affecting some 500 million people in developing countries, the Council emphasized the importance of supplementing food-strategy efforts by national and international support for appropriate food-entitlement or other direct distribution programmes. It encouraged interested developing countries to evolve food-entitlement programmes within their national plans, including food strategies, and called on donor countries to support these efforts.

The Council noted the establishment by the International Wheat Council's Food Aid Committee of a new Food Aid Convention on 6 March 1980 (see subsection below), as proposed at the Council's 1979 session. The new Convention, which entered into force on 1 July 1980, replacing the 1971 Convention, increased the guaranteed minimum annual level of food aid from grain-exporting countries to developing countries in need from 4.2 million to 7.6 million metric tons. The Council, however, regretted that the new minimum level was still short of the 10-million-ton target recommended by the World Food Conference and strongly urged that every effort be made to enlist new contributors and to increase the commitments of existing ones so that at the Convention's expiry in July 1981 it could be renewed at the target level.

The Council recalled that the International Monetary Fund (IMF) had been invited in 1979 to consider, within the context of its financing facilities, the feasibility of providing additional balance-of-payments support to assist low-income, food-deficit countries to meet sudden increases in their food-import bills.<sup>3</sup> The Council urged its member Governments to give careful and urgent consideration to the outcome of the IMF study.

The Council endorsed an initiative of WFP's Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes to examine an FAO proposal that the International Emergency Food Reserve (IEFR) be made the subject of a legally binding convention.

Reiterating its position that a new international wheat agreement with legally binding provisions for the constitution of reserves together with other related economic provisions should constitute the core of world food security, the Council called on all concerned to work for an early conclusion of this agreement within the International Wheat Council. If by mid-1981 a new agreement could not be concluded, the Council stated that serious consideration should be given to alternative ways of establishing at least a contingency reserve of adequate size.

The Council urged developed and other countries in a position to do so, and international agencies, particularly FAO and the World Bank, to intensify their assistance to developing countries to build up their food security infrastructure and food stocks.

The report noted consideration by the Council of a proposal for a food crisis contingency pledge, under which a code of conduct among interested Governments would be accepted in order to avoid actions which would destabilize the international food-grain market in times of tight conditions. The Council directed its secretariat to explore possible modalities with appropriate agencies.

Devoting particular attention to the growing geographical concentration of grain production and to imbalances in the world food economy, the Council suggested exploring measures to promote increased and more regionally balanced food production and trade, and urged all countries to make greater efforts to avoid growing protectionist policies.

Decision of the Economic and Social Council

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1980/58 welcoming the World Food Council's conclusions and recommendations and recommending that the General Assembly call on all Governments and appropriate international organizations to give earnest attention to their implementation.

The Council recognized the role of food-sector strategies, supported by the World Food Council, as a means for developing countries to take an integrated approach in increasing food production, improving consumption and attracting necessary resources. It called on the international community to support developing countries' efforts to increase food and agricultural production with increased technical and capital assistance, and strongly urged those able to provide development assistance to increase such aid on concessional terms to the food sector. Expressing deep concern at the current critical food shortages in Africa, it appealed to all countries and international agencies to undertake additional food assistance on a special emergency basis, particularly to Botswana, Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, the Sahelian countries, Somalia, the Sudan, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia.

The Council called on donor countries and international financial institutions to support efforts of interested developing countries to initiate or expand food-entitlement programmes and national food strategies, called for renewal of the 1980 Food Aid Convention at a 10-million-ton level, welcomed the World Food Council's endorsement of the initiative to examine a proposal to make IEFR the subject of a legally binding convention and its request that IMF consider the feasibility of providing additional balance-of-payments support to help low-income, food-deficit countries to pay increased food bills, stressed the urgent need for a new international wheat agreement, and called for further exploration of possible modalities for a food-crisis contingency pledge.

Expressing concern over the increase in protectionist trade practices affecting the economic development of the international community, particularly since they reduced developing countries' export possibilities, economic potential and capacity to import food, the Council urged all countries to prevent the extension of protectionist policies, recommended immediate implementation of resolution 105(V) of the 1979 United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) urging increased investment and technical aid to accelerate international food trade and production,<sup>4</sup> and recognized the desirability of exploring measures to promote increased and more regionally balanced food production and trade.

Resolution 1980/58 was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the First (Economic) Committee which, on 22 July, had similarly approved a draft resolution submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman. The text had resulted from informal consultations held on an earlier draft-submitted by India on behalf of member States of the Council belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries-which was subsequently withdrawn in favour of the agreed text.

The two texts differed in a number of respects. Among preambular changes, to the text which was adopted paragraphs had been: added, noting with concern the strong impact of imports of foodstuffs on the balance of payments of food-importing developing countries; amended, to delete a phrase noting the deterioration of developing countries' terms of trade and their inability to finance essential food imports; substituted, to reaffirm the international community's strong commitment to overcome hunger and malnutrition and, in that context, the need for greater international action to improve food production and distribution, particularly in low-income countries with food deficits (replacing a paragraph recognizing the urgent need for community measures to step up considerably its commitment and support to food and agriculture, particularly in those countries); and expanded, i.e. the paragraph noting the conclusion of a new Food Aid Convention (adding that it was more adequate, at almost double the earlier level, although regrettably still short of the target).

An expression of thanks to the United Republic of Tanzania as host to the World Food Council's 1980 session was added to the operative section, and paragraphs were either recast, added or deleted: expressing concern over the critical food shortages in Africa and appealing for emergency food aid to several African countries (added); calling on donor countries and financial institutions to support developing countries' efforts to initiate or expand food-entitlement programmes and national food strategies (added); expressing concern over the increase in protectionist trade practices and urging all countries to prevent their extension (added); calling for the renewal of the Food Aid Convention (recast); welcoming endorsement of the proposal to examine making IEFER the subject of a convention (changes included deletion of a call on all Governments to approach the proposal in a constructive spirit and at the same time consider the need for a major increase in IEFER resources); stressing the need for a new wheat agreement (recast to refer to relevant paragraphs in the World Food Council's report); calling for further exploration (rather than studies) of possible modalities of an arrangement for a food-crisis contingency pledge (recast and expanded to refer to the work of the ad hoc working group established by the Committee on World Food Security); welcoming the request that IMF should consider the feasibility of providing balance-of-payments support to food-deficit countries (recast); and expressing the view that the moral and political imperative of overcoming hunger and malnutrition within a world economy structured to ensure greater equity and justice for all should be recognized as a common human responsibility (deleted).

At the time of approval of the text in Committee, the United Republic of Tanzania said the operative part of the resolution corresponded to the World Food Council's recommendations, but regretted that it did not fully reflect that Council's concern with regard to the conclusion of a new international wheat agreement, in the absence of which the creation of a contingency reserve was of vital importance.

Argentina reiterated its view that any reserve system would have to be based on a wheat agreement, and any decision taken before the conclusion of such an agreement would be liable to prejudice the outcome of the negotiations. As the only developing country participating in the Food Aid Convention, Argentina thought that fresh contributions were needed. It reserved its position on the paragraph stressing the need for a new international wheat agreement.

The USSR said it also had reservations with regard to provisions that were liable to prejudice the conclusion of a wheat agreement. The USSR said it maintained the reservations it had expressed in the World Food Council, where it had confirmed its conviction that the normalization and expansion of world food trade on a mutually beneficial basis were impossible without strict adherence to principles such as respect for national sovereignty, non-interference in internal affairs, equality among nations and rigorous observance of international agreements and understandings.

Algeria repeated its reservations on the strategies formulated by the World Food Council for the food sector; they were an infringement of State sovereignty in that they were imposed from outside and did not necessarily correspond to needs and priorities.

Belgium, on behalf of European Economic Community (EEC) member States, said they had taken part in the informal consultations on the first draft with some hesitation, since they felt it was not for the Economic and Social Council to renegotiate texts adopted by the World Food Council. The EEC countries also thought that the question of IMF providing additional balance-of-payments support to aid food-deficit countries in meeting increases in food-import bills was entirely an IMF matter and that the wording in no way implied a favourable position on the substance of the proposal.

Chile felt that the resolution did not go far enough on the subject of the abolition of protectionism.

Brazil said food-sector strategies should not constitute a condition for assistance from the international community to developing countries in the matter of food problems, and it rejected the view that world food security should rest on the mandatory establishment of stocks.

Decision of the General Assembly

On 5 December 1980, by resolution 35/68, the General Assembly also welcomed the conclusions and recommendations of the World Food Council's sixth session and called on all Governments and appropriate international organizations to give earnest attention to their implementation. The resolution was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. On 14 November, the Committee had similarly approved a draft resolution submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman after informal consultations were held on an earlier draft submitted originally by the United Republic of Tanzania on behalf of 26 States see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) and subsequently- as announced by Venezuela on 5 November-by Member States belonging to the Group of 77. The earlier draft was then withdrawn.

For the most part, the Assembly's resolution reflected the major concerns and recommendations of resolution 1980/58 of the Economic and Social Council and contained identical or similar provisions to those of the Council's text: expressing appreciation to the host country of the World Food Council's 1980 session; calling for adaptation of food production policies to national development plans; recognizing the role of food-sector strategies in an integrated approach for increasing food production; calling for increased international technical and capital assistance for national efforts, increased aid on concessional terms to the food sector, and donor support for efforts to initiate or expand food-entitlement programmes and national food strategies; urging prevention of extension of protectionist policies; calling for renewal of the Food Aid Convention; examining making IEFRR the subject of a convention; examining modalities of an arrangement for a food-crisis contingency pledge; stressing the need for a new wheat agreement; recommending implementation of UNCTAD resolution 105(V); and recognizing the desirability of studying ways to promote increased and more regionally balanced food production and trade.

The Assembly, in addition, urged all developing countries with food deficits to implement, in accordance with their national development programmes and priorities, measures to increase substantially their food and agricultural production. It recognized that it was the common responsibility of the international community to overcome hunger and malnutrition, that immediate action should focus on the problems of developing countries with inadequate food production and that solving those problems required the determined action of developing countries with the increased support of the international community. It expressed concern that only limited progress had been achieved towards solving the long-term problems of international trade in agricultural products, which adversely affected exports, particularly of developing countries, and whose solution could make an important contribution to improving overall world food production.

It also recommended that the World Food Council give continuing attention to the impact of food trade on levels of world food production, in particular with reference to the economies of developing countries, using as much as possible inputs from the United Nations system.

These provisions were paragraphs added as the result of the informal consultations in the Second Committee.

Further, the Assembly commended the World Food Council's appeal for additional food assistance on an emergency basis to countries in Africa experiencing critical food shortages, and the prompt action taken by FAO and WFP in convening a special meeting of donor countries and development and aid institutions to review the situation with a view to undertaking increased emergency assistance for that area (see section below on the FOOD AND AGRICULTURAL SITUATION IN AFRICA).

The Assembly welcomed a decision by the Interim Committee of the Board of Governors of IMF to urge prompt consideration by the Fund's Executive Board of the feasibility of providing additional balance-of-payments support to assist low-income, food-deficit countries to meet increases in their food-import bills. The Assembly also supported the World Food Council's call for the replenishment of IFAD resources.

Speaking in explanation of its position after approval of the text, Algeria said the fact that it had joined the consensus in no way prejudiced its position regarding food-sector strategies, previously stated in the Economic and Social Council.

Brazil said that, although it supported the content of the resolution as a whole, it was of the view that paragraph 3, urging developing countries to increase food production, was incomplete and biased and might be interpreted as unacceptable interference in internal affairs. As Brazil understood it, that paragraph related only to the question of finding solutions to the hunger problem and should not be construed as including the concept of food-sector strategies, and implementation of the measures urged therein should not be deemed a pre-condition of international food aid.

Czechoslovakia, speaking also on behalf of six other Eastern European countries and Mongolia, said they believed in progressive national and international measures to solve world food problems, based on a radical social transformation in developing countries and the restructuring of international economic relations on a basis of equity and mutual respect. Their stated positions with regard to particular points in the resolution remained valid.

By resolution 35/56 of 5 December, the Assembly adopted the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s) (see p. 499). It thereby proclaimed agricultural and rural development and the eradication of hunger and malnutrition as among the essential aims of the Decade.

Stating that the eradication of hunger and malnutrition called for concerted efforts, national food policies, plans and commitments by Governments as well as appropriate United Nations programmes during the Decade and beyond, the Strategy emphasized the importance of measures undertaken by developing countries, firmly supported by the international community, to accelerate food and agricultural production in order to improve national and collective self-sufficiency in food as early as possible. It called for particular attention to low-income, food-deficit countries to allow them to attain a 4 per cent average annual growth in agricultural production as soon as possible. It also called for adequate consideration to be given to the implementation of agrarian reforms.

In support of measures to invest more substantially in agriculture, the Strategy called on donor countries and international financial institutions to take all possible steps to increase the flow of financial resources to developing countries. It stated that the resources of IFAD should be replenished on a continuing basis at a level sufficient to attain its objectives.

The Strategy called for additional resources for the adaptation and dissemination of agricultural technologies, for the intensification of agricultural research and for the provision of agricultural inputs to developing countries. It stressed that concerted efforts should be made to conclude a new international grain agreement aimed at evolving an internationally coordinated system of nationally held food reserves. The only lasting way to obtain food security, however, according to the Strategy, was by stepping up food production in developing countries and by taking long-term measures to that end.

Every effort should be made both to enlist new contributors and to increase commitments so that the Food Aid Convention could be renewed by mid-1981 with a minimum target of 10 million tons a year; to ensure continuity, the Convention should be extended to three years if possible and provide for revision of the minimum target. The Strategy also called for the meeting of the $1 billion target of WFP for 1981/1982, consideration of the establishment of an IMF food-financing facility, and the meeting of the 500,000-ton IEF target.

The importance of nutrition policies was emphasized; these would require efforts at the production and distribution levels to ensure food availability for those whose consumption was inadequate. Special attention was to be given to the impact of food trade on the levels of world food production, in particular with reference to the economies of the developing countries. Governments were to encourage rural industrialization, agro-industrial complexes, modernization, integration of women, rural employment and agricultural co-operatives.

(For text of relevant provisions (section III C) of the Strategy, see p. 510.)

1980 Food Aid Convention

Negotiations for the Food Aid Convention, 1980, were completed by a conference of the Food Aid Committee, which administers the Convention, at a special session held at the headquarters of the International Wheat Council in London on 6 March 1980. The objective of the Convention was to reach, through a joint effort by the international community, the 1974 World Food Conference target of at least 10 million tons of food aid annually to developing countries in the form of wheat and other grains suitable for human consumption.

Contributions (or their equivalent in cash) were to be made by members and needs estimated by recipient countries on a forward planning basis, to enable recipients to take account in their development programmes of the likely flow of food aid they would receive each year.

Minimum annual contributions established by the Convention were as follows:

Member	Metric tons
Argentina	35,000
Australia	400,000
Austria	20,000
Canada	600,000
EEC and its member States	1,650,000
Finland	20,000
Japan	300,000
Norway	30,000
Sweden	40,000
Switzerland	27,000
United States	4,470,000
Total	7,612,000 <sup>a</sup>

<sup>a</sup>includes a minimum annual contribution of 20,000 metric tons from Spain, whose accession as a new donor, as from 1 July 1980, was approved by the Food Aid Committee.

The Convention entered into force on 1 July 1980 and was to run until 30 June 1981, replacing the Food Aid Convention, 1971, as one of the constituent instruments of the International Wheat Agreement, 1971, as extended (the other instrument being the Wheat Trade Convention, 1971).

At a session on 27 and 28 November 1980, the International Wheat Council, which provides administrative services for the Food Aid Committee, which itself comprises all the members of the Convention, took the view that wheat supplies in major exporting countries were likely to be sufficient to meet currently foreseeable demand and unforeseen contingencies on a global basis during the rest of the current crop year (July 1980/June 1981)-an assessment borne out by subsequent developments.

World Food Day

On 5 December 1980, the General Assembly welcomed the observance of an annual World Food Day, to be held for the first time on 16 October 1981 as decided by the 1979 Conference of FAO. It urged maximum commemoration by Governments and national, regional and international organizations. This decision was set forth in resolution 35/70, adopted without vote.

On 14 November, the Second Committee had similarly approved a draft, submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman, based on informal consultations held on an earlier text, to which some drafting changes were made; the former text, sponsored by Bangladesh, Guinea, Hungary, Mali, Mauritania, the Philippines and the Sudan, was withdrawn.

Food and agricultural situation in Africa

On 5 December 1980, the General Assembly, with the adoption of resolution 35169, noted with concern the drastic deterioration of the food and agricultural situation in Africa, which had resulted in a decline of food production per capita and a reduction of average dietary standards below essential requirements.

The Assembly noted with satisfaction the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa-in particular the provisions relating to food and agriculture-adopted on 29 April by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) (Lagos, Nigeria, 28 and 29 April) (see p. 548). The Assembly urged all African countries to implement, in accordance with their national development programmes and priorities, measures to increase substantially their national food and agricultural production, and called on the international community to support those efforts as well as to provide urgently additional food aid to African countries. It urged the international community to assist African countries to achieve the following goals by 1985: (a) a significant improvement in their food situation and the laying of the foundations for the attainment of self-sufficiency in cereals, livestock and fish products; (b) progress towards a 50 per cent reduction in post-harvest losses through, among other things, construction of storage facilities; (c) an improved physical infrastructure to facilitate food distribution at the national, subregional and regional levels; and (d) greater and effective agronomic research, emphasizing the development of seeds, fertilizers and pesticides suitable for African conditions.

The Assembly further urged the United Nations system to expand training programmes for building up national capabilities to prepare, execute, monitor and evaluate agricultural development projects.

Moreover, the Assembly urged Governments and international organizations concerned to provide the necessary technical, financial and food assistance to food security projects in the region, especially in the Sahel and the Sudano-Sahelian countries, urgently appealed for international assistance to carry out locust control efforts, and recommended that an FAO-endorsed programme for trypanosomiasis control be implemented.

It also requested the Secretary-General to co-operate with OAU in undertaking a study on the establishment of regional food trade and distribution organizations in Africa and to submit a report, together with a preliminary progress report on implementing this resolution, to the Assembly's 1981 regular session.

Resolution 35/69 was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which, on 14 November, had similarly approved a draft resolution submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations held on an earlier draft introduced by Venezuela on behalf of the Group of 77. The Group's text was withdrawn.

Among the changes in the text arising from the consultations was the deletion of a preambular paragraph expressing deep concern that the minimum annual 500,00-ton IEFER grain target and the 10-million-ton cereal-aid target had not been achieved. Two preambular paragraphs were added: one recognizing that the responsibility for developing food and agricultural production lay mainly with the developing countries themselves and that they were increasingly committed to speeding up the development of those sectors, and another recognizing the role of food-sector strategies, which had emerged from the World Food Council, as a means for developing countries to adopt an integrated approach for increasing food production, improving consumption and attracting needed international resources. A preambular paragraph regretting that food aid had not been adequate to cope with serious food shortages in many African countries was substituted for one that had expressed regret that inadequate availability of food aid to meet serious shortages had aggravated food crises in many African countries.

Operative paragraphs were added to: urge all African countries to implement measures to increase their food and agricultural production in accordance with their national development plans; and call on the international community to continue supporting those countries' efforts to increase food production by providing additional financial and technical aid by IFAD, UNDP and the African Development Bank and by an increase in lending by the World Bank. A request for a study on the establishment of subregional food security arrangements was omitted.

After approval of the text in Committee, Czechoslovakia, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said that, although they had joined in the consensus and were co-operating actively with a number of African States in developing agriculture and would continue that policy in a spirit of mutual respect, they maintained the position on food aid they had explained in other bodies concerning the matter.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, as well as the agreed conclusions of the Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174 on some aspects concerning food and agriculture,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 3348(XXIX) of 17 December 1974, by which it established the World Food Council to serve as a co-ordinating mechanism to provide overall integrated and continuing attention to the successful co-ordination and follow-up of policies concerning food production, nutrition, food security, food trade and food aid, as well as other related matters, by all organizations of the United Nations system,

Further recalling the Programme of Action to Eradicate Hunger and Malnutrition, contained in the Manila Communiqué of the World Food Council, which was adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 32/52 of 8 December 1977, and the Mexico Declaration of the World Food Council, adopted by the Assembly in its resolution 33/90 of 15

December 1978, and Assembly resolution 34/110 of 14 December 1979 on the report of the Council on the work of its fifth ministerial session, held at Ottawa from 3 to 7 September 1979.

Expressing its concern about the unsatisfactory progress made by the international community towards achieving the general objectives of the Universal Declaration on the Eradication of Hunger and Malnutrition, adopted by the World Food Conference in 1974,

Noting that the food outlook for many developing countries in the 1980s particularly in Africa, is even more critical than in the past,

Noting also the growing imbalances in the world food economy,

Noting with concern the strong impact of imports of food-stuffs on the balance of payments of food-importing developing countries, in particular the least developed countries,

Reaffirming the strong commitment of the international community to overcome hunger and malnutrition everywhere and, in that context, the need for greater international action to improve the production and distribution of food, particularly in low-income countries with food deficits,

Emphasizing the vital importance of increased benefits from International trade to the developing countries in accelerating their process of development, which is now endangered by growing protectionist pressures,

Noting the conclusion of a more adequate new Food Aid Convention at almost double the level earlier achieved, although regrettably still short of the target of 10 million tons,

Acknowledging with satisfaction the increasing efforts and growing commitment by developing countries to accelerate the development of their food and agricultural sectors, in particular through integrated national planning,

1. Welcomes the conclusions and recommendations adopted by the World Food Council at its sixth ministerial session and recommends that the General Assembly should call upon all Governments and appropriate international organizations to give earnest attention to their implementation:

2. Expresses its appreciation and thanks to the Government and people of the United Republic of Tanzania for the excellent facilities and the generous hospitality provided to the World Food Council at its sixth ministerial session;

Calls upon all countries, particularly those with serious and growing food-import deficits, to continue to implement their food production policies and, as appropriate, adapt them to their circumstances and needs within the framework of their overall national development objectives and priorities;

4. Recognizes the role of food-sector strategies, which emerged from the World Food Council, as a means for interested developing countries of adopting an integrated approach for increasing food production. Improving consumption and attracting the necessary additional international resources;

5. Calls upon the international community to support the national efforts of developing countries to increase their food and agricultural production with increased technical and capital assistance, in particular for food-sector strategies which have already been adopted by interested developing countries, taking into account at the same time that the existence of a food-sector strategy should not be a precondition for the granting of development assistance;

6. Strongly urges developed countries, international institutions and others able to provide development assistance to increase substantially their assistance on concessional terms to the food sector, in order to facilitate for developing countries the achievement of the agreed target of a 4 per cent annual growth rate in agricultural production, for which an estimated necessary element of external assistance is $6.3 billion, with $6.5 billion on concessional terms, at 1975 prices, as mentioned in the Programme of Action to Eradicate Hunger and Malnutrition contained in the Manila Communiqué of the World Food Council;

7. Expresses deep concern at the critical food shortages currently being experienced in Africa and appeals to all countries and international agencies to undertake, on a special emergency basis, additional food assistance, particularly to Botswana, Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, the Sahelian countries, Somalia, the Sudan, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia;

6. Calls upon developed and other donor countries and international financial institutions to support, in recognition of their commitment to a world without hunger, the efforts of interested developing countries to initiate or expand food-entitlement programmes, within the context of their national plans and policies, as appropriate, and national food strategies, and looks forward to the results of the consultations envisaged in paragraphs 30 and 31 of the report of the World Food Council on its sixth ministerial session;

9. Expresses its concern over the increase in protectionist trade practices that affect the economic development of the whole international community, particularly since they reduce the export possibilities of developing countries, affect their economic potential and reduce their capacity to import the food they need and, in that context, urges all countries to use their best efforts to prevent the extension of protectionist policies;

10. Calls for the immediate renewal of the Food Aid Convention on the expiry of the current Convention in July 1961, and strongly urges that every effort should be made both to enlist new contributors and to increase the commitments of existing ones, so that the Convention can be renewed by mid-1961 with a firm assurance that 10 million tons will be the absolute minimum flow of assistance, even in times of high prices and food shortage;

11. Welcomes the endorsement by the World Food Council of the initiative of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes in proposing to examine at its next session the proposal of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations that the international Emergency Food Reserve be made the subject of a legally binding convention;

13. Calls for the further exploration by the secretariat of the World Food Council, in collaboration with the appropriate agencies, of possible modalities of an arrangement for a food-crisis contingency pledge, taking into account, inter alia, the work of the ad hoc working group established by the Committee on World Food Security;

10. Calls upon developed and other donor countries and international financial institutions to support, in recognition of their commitment to a world without hunger, the efforts of interested developing countries to initiate or expand food-entitlement programmes, within the context of their national plans and policies, as appropriate, and national food strategies, and looks forward to the results of the consultations envisaged in paragraphs 30 and 31 of the report of the World Food Council;

Welcomes the request of the World Food Council that the international Monetary Fund should consider, within the context of its financing facilities, the feasibility of providing additional balance-of-payments support to assist low-income, food-deficit countries to meet increases in their food-import bills and welcomes the decision by the interim Committee of the Board of Governors of the Fund to urge prompt consideration of this matter by the Executive Board of the Fund;

17. Recommends that the international community should take the necessary steps for the immediate implementation of resolution 105(V) of 1 June 1979 on international food trade of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

18. Recognizes the desirability of studying measures to promote increased and more regionally balanced food production and trade within the wider framework of trade and its impact on the food situation of developing countries;

19. Notes with deep concern that only limited progress has been achieved towards the solution of the long-standing problems of international trade in agricultural products which adversely affect exports, particularly of developing countries, and whose solution could make an important contribution to improving overall food production in the world;

20. Recommends that the World Food Council, in accordance with its mandate, should give continuing attention to the impact of food trade on levels of food production in the world. In particular with reference to the economies of the developing countries, using to the maximum extent possible the necessary inputs which the different organs and organizations of the United Nations system should provide;

21. Fully supports the call of the World Food Council, in paragraph 21 of its report, for the replenishment of the resources of the international Fund for Agricultural Development at a level sufficient to provide a realistic attainment of its operations, in accordance with the recommendations of its Governing Council.

The General Assembly,

Considering that food is a requisite for human survival and well-being and a fundamental human necessity.

1. Welcomes the observance of World Food Day, to be held for the first time on 16 October 1981 and annually thereafter, as unanimously decided by the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations at its twentieth session:

2. Urges Governments and national, regional and international organizations to contribute to the effective commemoration of World Food Day to the greatest possible extent.

Food and agricultural situation in Africa

A/S-11/14. Letter of 15 August from Nigeria (transmitting Lagos Plan of Action for implementation of Monrovia Strategy for Economic Development of Africa, Lagos Final Act and resolutions of 2nd extraordinary session of Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU. Lagos, 28 and 29 April, Annex I (Lagos Plan of Action)).

A/C.2/35/L.35. Venezuela (on behalf of Member States of United Nations belonging to "Group of 77"): draft resolution.

A/C.2/35/L.102. Draft resolution submitted by Second Committee Vice-Chairman on basis of informal consultations on draft resolution introduced by Venezuela. A/C.2/35/L.35. approved without vote by Second Committee on 14 November, meeting 43.

A/35/592/Add.3. Report of Second Committee (part IV) (on development and international economic co-operation), draft resolution VI.

Resolution 35/69, as recommended by Second Committee, A/35/592/Add.3, adopted without vote by Assembly on 5 December 1980, meeting 83.

The General Assembly,

Noting with concern that, over the last two decades, the situation of food and agriculture in Africa has undergone a drastic deterioration, resulting in a decline of food production per capita and a reduction of average dietary standards below essential requirements,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New international Economic Order, 3261 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also the relevant decisions and the recommendations of the World Food Conference,

Grave/y concerned at the critical food shortages currently affecting many countries in the African region,

Recalling, in particular, Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/58 of 24 July 1980 relating to the report of the World Food Council on the work of its sixth ministerial session.

Taking into account the deep concern reflected in the decisions on the food situation and agriculture outlook in Africa adopted by the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations at its twentieth session,

Recognizing that the responsibility for the development of food and agricultural production lies primarily with the developing countries themselves and that there is an increasing effort and growing commitment by the developing countries to accelerate the development of their food and agricultural sectors,

Stressing that the current shortages demonstrate the continued vulnerability of many countries in the region to food crises owing to, inter alia, crop failures, drought, soil erosion, low reserves and the high level of post-harvest losses,

Recognizing the role of food-sector strategies, which emerged from the World Food Council, as a means for interested developing countries to adopt an integrated approach for increasing food production, improving consumption and attracting the necessary additional international resources,

Regretting that food aid has not been adequate to cope with the serious food shortages in many African countries,

Deeply concerned at the unabated encroachment of the desert in many countries of Africa, which has continued to accentuate the food problem on that continent,

Recognizing the useful contribution that the effective execution of the Lagos Plan of Action for the implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa adopted on 29 April 1980 by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its second extraordinary session devoted to economic matters, held at Lagos on 28 and 29 April 1980, can make to the improvement of the food situation, in particular, and to rapid overall development of Africa,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa and, in particular, of the provisions related to food and agriculture;

2. Urges all the countries of Africa to implement, in accordance with their national development programmes and priorities, measures to increase substantially their national food and agricultural production;

3. Calls upon the international community to continue to support efforts undertaken by African countries at the national, subregional and regional levels to increase food production through, inter alia, the provision, on a priority basis, of additional financial and technical assistance to Africa by the international Fund for Agricultural Development, the African Development Bank and the United Nations Development Programme and an increase in lending by the World Bank to the agricultural sector in Africa;

4. Appeals to the international community to provide urgently additional food aid to African countries to meet the current emergency needs in the region, particularly as called for by the Economic and Social Council in paragraph 7 of its resolution 1980/58;

5. Calls upon current and prospective donor countries to achieve without delay the minimum target of the Food Aid Convention of 1980, of 10 million tons of cereal aid annually, as well as the minimum target of 500,000 tons of grains for the international Emergency Food Reserve, as agreed upon in the relevant decisions of the General Assembly;

6. Urges Governments and the international organizations concerned to provide the necessary technical, financial and food assistance to food security projects in the region, especially in the countries of the Sahel and the Sudano-Sahelian countries, in the framework of their own activities, including strengthening the Food Security Assistance Scheme of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations through the participation of current and prospective donors;

7. Urgently appeals to the international community to offer its immediate assistance for the effective suppression of the present upsurge of the African migratory locust, which, if not immediately controlled, may engulf a large part of the continent;

8. Urges the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to continue to play its leading role in the co-ordination of the locust control efforts in the region;

9. Recommends that the Programme for the Control of African Animal Trypanosomiasis and Related Development, endorsed by the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations at its twentieth session in its resolution 8/79 of 28 November 1979, should be implemented on an urgent basis under the overall co-ordination of that organization and with the active financial and technical support of the international community;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to co-operate with the Organization of African Unity in undertaking a study on the establishment of regional food trade and distribution organizations in Africa and to submit a report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session through the Economic and Social Council;

11. Urges all relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to intensify their activities in Africa to assist Governments, inter alia, in the areas of direct government participation in food production, agricultural processing, integrated research and extension services;

12. Also urges the international community to assist countries in the African region to achieve, between 1980 and 1985, the following goals:

(a) A significant improvement in their food situation and the laying of the foundations for the attainment of self-sufficiency in cereals, livestock and fish products;

(b) Significant progress towards attaining a 50 per cent reduction in post-harvest losses, through, inter alia, the construction of storage facilities;

(c) An improved physical infrastructure to facilitate food distribution at the national, subregional and regional levels;

(d) Greater and effective agronomic research, with special emphasis on improved seeds and an adequate supply of fertilizers, pesticides and other chemicals suitable for African conditions;

13. Further urges all relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to expand their training programmes in the building up of national capabilities for the preparation, execution, monitoring and evaluation of agricultural development projects;

14. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity and organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to submit a preliminary report on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session.

World Food Programme

The World Food Programme (WFP), a joint undertaking of the United Nations and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), continued in 1980 to provide food aid in support of development projects and to meet emergency needs. Since its inception in 1963, WFP had, by the end of 1980, provided support valued at $4.8 billion for some 1,052 development projects and 495 emergency operations in about 122 countries. Its activities included: improving the health and nutrition of about 12.5 million malnourished mothers and children; food-for-work schemes for reclaiming land and building roads, houses, schools, health centres, bridges, dikes and irrigation systems in developing countries; feeding some 14 million school-children and students; a Kampuchean emergency operation; feeding 1.5 million Afghan refugees in Pakistan, 1.3 million refugees in Somalia and 250,000 in Uganda; and, in answering emergencies, feeding victims of earthquakes, floods, volcanic eruptions and drought.

The Programme, governed by the 30-member Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes (CFA) which provided general guidance on policy, administration and operation, reported, as it did annually, to the Economic and Social Council and the FAO Council and presented periodic and special reports to the World Food Council. The resources of WFP were provided mainly from voluntary contributions in commodities, cash or services pledged by Governments at biennial pledging conferences.

At its 1979 session, the General Assembly had set a $1 billion target for voluntary contributions to WFP over the 1981-1982 biennium, of which not less than one third was to be in cash and/or services.

A Pledging Conference was held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, on 21 February 1980 at which 50 countries announced pledges for '1981-1982 totalling approximately $333 million. The figure had risen to $717 million as at 31 December (see table on p. 699).

Activities in 1980

As at 31 December 1980, total pledges for the biennium 1979-1980 amounted to $801.5 million, 84 per cent of the target of $950 million. Pledges included $585.1 million in commodities, $182.4 million in cash and $34 million in services. In addition, the 13 parties to the 1980 Food Aid Convention contributed to developing countries, for the 1979/80 and 1980/81 crop years, 499,223 metric tons of grain valued at $82 million as well as cash grants of $24.9 million. (For contributions made available to WFP under the Convention, see table on p. 700.)

Total expenditure in 1980 was $570 million: $380 million (67 per cent) for development projects and $159 million (28 per cent) for emergency operations, including $110 million out of International Emergency Food Reserve (IEFR) contributions channelled through WFP. During 1980, WFP received $146 million in cash from all sources, disbursing and obligating $157 million. The largest single item ($113 million) was for transportation, both ocean and overland. Expenditure on special measures to help the least developed countries meet their internal costs related to WFP food aid was $8.6 million. Commodity purchases from WFP's own cash resources amounted to $5 million.

Development assistance

At its 1980 sessions, held at Rome, Italy, from 14 to 24 April and from 13 to 21 October, CFA approved 31 new assistance projects for economic and social development at a total cost to WFP of $411 million. Also during the year, the Executive Director approved WFP assistance for a further 27 projects at a cost of $41.5 million; this included four projects in China, the first attempt by WFP to use project food aid in support of development efforts in that country. In addition, he authorized $7 million to the second phase of a project which CFA had earlier approved in principle.

The total number of projects for which WFP assistance was approved was 59, and the total value of commitments to those projects was $460 million. (For list of development projects approved in 1980, see table on p. 700.)

In line with the guidelines and criteria for food aid adopted in 1979 by CFA, WFP reported its assistance to priority countries in terms of low-income, food-deficit countries.

Commitments went to development projects in various regions in the following proportions: 36 per cent to Asia and the Pacific, 35 per cent to Africa south of the Sahara, 19 per cent to North Africa and the Near East, and 10 per cent to Latin America and the Caribbean. While there was some reduction in the proportion of WFP commitments to agricultural and rural development projects in 1980, mainly due to the stage of preparation of requests for approval, 40 per cent ($184 million) of commitments was for projects of that type. The second largest group of projects, to which about a quarter of total WFP commitments was devoted, was for the supplementary feeding of the vulnerable groups of expectant and nursing mothers and pre-school children. Another 19 per cent went to feeding projects for primary schools.

Emergency operations

During 1980, the Director-General of FAO approved, on the recommendation of the WFP Executive Director, 62 operations for meeting emergency food needs covering 15.5 million beneficiaries in 26 countries. The assistance amounted to about 480,000 tons of food commodities valued at approximately $178 million, including transportation, superintendence, handling and related costs. About 63 per cent of total emergency food aid commitments was for refugees and displaced persons affected by man-made disasters. Almost 32 per cent was for drought-affected persons in Africa and Asia and 5 per cent for persons afflicted by sudden natural disasters. More than half (57 per cent) of total emergency assistance approved, in value terms, was committed to emergency operations in Asia and the Pacific, and 42 per cent in Africa. (See table on p. 701.)

As co-ordinator of the international food relief aspects of the Kampuchean emergency operation, in co-operation with other United Nations and non-governmental organizations, WFP sent about 223,000 tons of food to Kampuchea itself, and about 137,000 tons to Kampucheans and affected Thai villagers on the Thai/Kampuchean border. In addition, it arranged shipments to Kampuchea of fertilizers, seeds, trucks and agricultural tools on behalf of FAO, the United Nations Children's Fund and the International Committee of the Red Cross.

The Programme also carried out a similar role in Pakistan where it co-ordinated emergency food supplies to about 1.5 million Afghan refugees. More than 258,000 metric tons of food contributions had been announced by donors by the end of 1980 at a total cost of approximately $100 million. In Somalia, WFP co-ordinated emergency food assistance to a camp population that currently numbered 1.3 million people. About 163,000 tons of food were pledged by donor countries, organizations and agencies. In Uganda, WFP co-ordinated relief efforts to provide emergency food aid to an estimated 250,000 people in the Karamoja area of that country.

The Programme also assisted in monitoring the response to an FAO appeal to supply emergency food to 26 countries in Africa south of the Sahara with a total population of more than 150 million. The Executive Director informed potential donors that WFP was prepared to co-ordinate multilateral and bilateral emergency food-aid shipments to the afflicted countries. By the end of 1980, contributions amounted to 900,000 tons of food, valued at $225 million.

The Programme transported overland a total of 152,000 tons of food commodities to land-locked countries in 1980, representing about 10 per cent of the year's total deliveries. Overland transport posed considerable problems in reaching most land-locked countries, usually requiring several modes of transport with more handling, thereby adding to costs; however, WFP was able to economize in some instances by borrowing from stocks in neighbouring countries.

The Programme shipped some 1.5 million tons of food during 1980, significantly more than the record 1.2 million tons moved the previous year. Fourteen per cent of that transported was on behalf of bilateral donors and other United Nations agencies. More than 358,000 tons of food commodities were purchased, at a total cost of $117.5 million, compared with about 138,000 tons in 1979, mainly on behalf of bilateral donors and United Nations agencies and from cash contributions to IEFr.

The regular resources of WFP increased, at current prices, from $160 million in 1969 to $399 million in 1979. However, as the Executive Director pointed out at CFA's October 1980 session, in real terms pledges went up from 829,000 to 846,000 metric tons, an increase of only 17,000 tons over the same 10-year period. The increase in WFP's resources in real terms, i.e. the quantity of commodities available, came mainly from IEFr contributions channelled through WFP; resources from regular pledges and Food Aid Convention contributions increased only marginally and, for some years, showed an absolute decrease, especially during the world food crisis of the early 1970s.

The level of resources for food aid, in particular resources for project food aid of the type provided by WFP, remained far short of estimated requirements. The International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s), adopted by the General Assembly by resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980 (see p. 499), called for attainment of the $1 billion target for 1981-1982 and the agreed target for each subsequent biennium. (For text of relevant provision (paragraph 90) of the Strategy, see p. 511.)

Decisions of deliberative bodies

In its fifth and sixth annual reports to the Economic and Social Council, the FAO Council and the World Food Council, CFA summarized development and emergency food-aid activities for 1979 and 1980 respectively. On the basis of a comprehensive review of food aid policies and programmes undertaken at its April 1980 session, CFA noted that allocations by donors for 1979-1980 indicated a reduction of cereal food-aid shipments to an estimated level of 9.2 million tons (compared with the 10-million-ton target set by the 1974 World Food Conference<sup>5</sup>) that coincided with a decline in grain production by many of the low-income, food-deficit countries. As a result, per capita cereal supplies declined significantly in that group of countries, although some States-notably India-were able to mitigate the effects on consumption by drawing on domestic stocks. In the light of previous experience, CFA urged current and potential donor countries, especially those from the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries and the industrialized, centrally planned economies, to attain the 10-million-ton target under the new Food Aid Convention during 1980.

Food aid allocations for 1979 of dairy products remained virtually at the 1978 level. The allocated volume of fats and oils, however, declined sharply and remained considerably short of estimated requirements. In consequence, CFA urged donors to make greater efforts to increase non-cereal food aid on a more stable basis.

The Committee pointed out that contribution targets to WFP and IEFER resources must be met if WFP was to continue to play a significant role in providing development assistance and emergency food aid. It also encouraged increased use by donor countries of triangular transactions involving the purchase of food aid commodities from developing countries other than the recipients and appealed for more cash contributions to be made to WFP to allow it to increase its purchases in developing countries.

Noting that a number of recipient countries had developed or improved their governmental machinery for food aid, CFA encouraged further steps in that direction, chiefly in planning and programming food aid within the broad framework of food supplies, nutrition and development policies, and the food plans and strategies of recipient countries.

At its October session, CFA considered a proposal of the FAO Director-General for developing IEFER into a legally binding convention. Broad agreement was reached on the need for: more resources for emergency food aid in cereals, other commodities and cash; greater predictability and forward planning of such resources; a larger proportion of emergency food aid to be channelled through WFP; and qualitative improvements in the operations of IEFER to enhance its speed and efficiency of delivery. The Committee decided to continue discussion of the subject at its May 1981 session.

By the end of 1980, only 2 per cent of minimum contributions to the 1980 Food Aid Convention for the crop year 1980/81 had been announced for channelling through WFP. Contributors were urged to take special note of the Convention's provision that members should give full consideration to the advantages of directing a greater proportion of food aid through multilateral channels, in particular WFP.

The Economic and Social Council took note of CFA's fifth annual report by decision 1980/169, adopted without vote on 24 July, the text having been similarly approved by the First (Economic) Committee on 22 July, on an oral proposal by its Chairman.

Chapter X

Use and development of natural (non-agricultural) resources

The Economic and Social Council, the General Assembly and various bodies of the United Nations system were again actively involved in management policy formulation for the use and development of natural (non-agricultural) resources during 1980.

In November, the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990) was proclaimed by the Assembly (resolution 35/18), while follow-up action to the 1977 United Nations Water Conference in water resources policy and planning continued to be monitored by the Council.

Preparations intensified towards the 1981 United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy with the Assembly adopting a resolution (35/204) aimed at accelerating the process. The energy programmes of the United Nations system were also kept under review and the Assembly included a set of policy measures in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s), adopted in December.

Multilateral assistance for natural resources development was assessed, and the co-ordination of aid in technology transfer in the field was examined by the Assembly.

Technical co-operation programmes in natural resources also continued, and the Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration announced increases in its activities.

In other action, possible uses of the sea in the development process were investigated.

Details of these and other related activities are to be found in this chapter.

Water

Water resources policy and planning

At its first regular 1980 session, in April/May, the Economic and Social Council had before it a report of the Secretary-General on water resources policy and planning as a follow-up to and on implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan<sup>1</sup> adopted at the 1977 United Nations Water Conference. The report, submitted in accordance with a 1979 Council request,<sup>2</sup> presented proposals to promote planning techniques and procedures and policy formulation for water resources development and management in developing countries, in response to the Action Plan's recommendations, and envisaged intersecretariat interdisciplinary missions which would assist Governments, upon request, in formulating water policies, in setting up legislative and administrative arrangements, and in formulating national or basic master plans and programmes.

Annexed to the report were details of current and planned activities related to water resources policy and planning being carried out within the United Nations system.

On 28 April, the Council adopted without vote decision 1980/115, by which it took note of the Secretary-General's report and requested him, in consultation with the interagency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), to submit to the 1981 session of the Committee on Natural Resources a detailed report on the means of implementing the proposals in the current report within the overall framework of the follow-up to the Mar del Plata Action Plan. The Council's First (Economic) Committee approved the text-proposed by Argentina-without vote on 17 April.

International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade

At its June 1980 session, the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) considered preparations for launching the General Assembly's International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990) with a goal of adequate water supply and sanitation for all by Decade's end. It had before it a report of the UNDP Administrator on international co-operative action during 1979 and 1980 in support of the Mar del Plata Action Plan, which had been prepared in response to a 1979 Governing Council request.<sup>3</sup>

The report stated that Governments had been asked to set up national action committees to deal with water supply and sanitation development, and UNDP resident representatives were to co-ordinate these activities with technical support teams, composed of United Nations field experts. At the international level, a Steering Committee for Co-operative Action composed of concerned organizations of the United Nations system had been established.

On 26 June, the Governing Council took note of the Administrator's report and called on Governments to ensure that the Action Plan priorities were met by the end of the Decade.

The World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women (Copenhagen, Denmark, 14-30 July) adopted a resolution strongly encouraging States and organizations to promote the objectives of the Decade, commit funds and co-ordinate programmes to make it more effective, and promote women's participation in water supply projects (see p. 898).

The Secretary-General submitted two reports to the Assembly in 1980 specifically concerned with preparations for and activities pertaining to the Decade. In 1979, the Assembly had decided to hold a special one-day meeting during its 1980 session to launch the Decade.<sup>4</sup> At this meeting - on 10 November - the Assembly discussed the reports of the Secretary-General; both were submitted in September pursuant to a 1979 Economic and Social Council resolution.<sup>5</sup>

The first of these presented regional reviews of preparatory activities for the Decade from the five United Nations regional commissions, based on information received from Governments on drinking water supply and sanitation.

The summaries reviewed each region's current situation and national plans and programmes for the Decade, including financial and manpower requirements, the need for mobilization of internal and external resources, and constraints in the way of progress. However, the situation in the region of the Economic Commission for Europe, and therefore its approach to the review, was different.

An October addendum to the report noted that a regional meeting on problems and needs in community water supply and sanitation was held under the auspices of the Economic Commission for Africa from 4 to 8 August at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, attended by representatives of 30 member States and by observers from the United Kingdom, the World Health Organization (WHO), the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, UNDP, the United Nations Children's Fund and the African Development Bank. The meeting adopted a series of recommendations which envisaged a review of the current status of services and related future requirements for technical and financial co-operation, manpower training, prevention and control of water-borne diseases and related environmental problems, and institutional support at the national and regional levels.

The second report of the Secretary-General concerned the current situation regarding community water supply and sanitation and prospects for the Decade. As the Economic and Social Council had requested him to guide Governments, on request, in the preparation of national reports for the Decade,<sup>6</sup> he had requested them to supply information organized under four main topics of the drinking water supply and sanitation sector: their current sector status and policy, national plans for the Decade, mobilization of internal resources, and external inputs sought. As of 30 June 1980, 74 countries had sent reports. The Secretary-General's report also contained details of current levels of investment in drinking water supply and sanitation (an estimated $6 billion to $7 billion world-wide in 1979, up from an average of $3 billion a year during 1971-1975), and Decade targets and strategies, including investment requirements (possibly as high as $600 billion). It also indicated the level of involvement of donor countries and organizations in order that the goals of the Decade might be reached.

On 10 November, the General Assembly adopted without vote decision 35/405, by which it took note of the Secretary-General's two reports on the Decade. It had been approved, without objection, by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 4 November, on an oral proposal by a Committee Vice-Chairman.

Also on 10 November, the Assembly, by resolution 35/18, proclaimed the period 1981-1990 as the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade during which Member States would assume a commitment to bring about a substantial improvement in standards and levels of services in drinking water supply and sanitation by 1990. The Assembly called on Governments to develop policies and set targets to this end, to take all steps for their implementation, to set sufficiently high priorities for these activities and to mobilize adequate resources. It urged Governments to strengthen their institutional frameworks for carrying out these activities, to mobilize technical expertise and to heighten popular awareness and support through education and public participation programmes.

The Assembly also called on Governments and bodies within the United Nations system as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue and, if possible, to increase their technical and financial co-operation with developing countries in order to enable them to attain their targets, and to continue to co-ordinate their activities so as to maximize the impact of this assistance. The Assembly called on the regional commissions to review periodically, on the basis of national reports, progress in their respective regions in attaining national objectives. The Assembly decided to review in 1985 progress towards attainment of the Decade's national and international goals, and requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with ACC, to prepare a comprehensive analysis of the situation on the basis of progress reports by Governments and by international organizations concerned and to submit it to the Assembly's 1985 session through the Economic and Social Council.

Resolution 35/18 was adopted without vote. The draft, sponsored by 38 Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), had been likewise approved by the Second Committee on 4 November.

Energy

Energy programmes of the United Nations system

At its May/June 1980 session, the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC), for its consideration of the energy programmes of the United Nations system, had before it an updated report of the Secretary-General on a cross-organizational analysis, originally prepared for the Committee's 1979 session but not discussed for lack of time.

Focusing its discussion on the report's structure, the system's activities in relation to the needs of Governments, the establishment of objectives to achieve a more integrated system-wide programme and energy co-ordination, CPC recommended that the General Assembly consider strengthening United Nations energy programmes to make them more responsive to the needs of Member States. The Committee also recommended that the Economic and Social Council: undertake a review-without prejudice to mandates that might emerge from the 1981 United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, and within the framework of the new International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (see below) and of discussions of the Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174 (see p. 519) — to set system-wide energy objectives, distribute related tasks among the organizations of the system and emphasize the need for co-ordination; request the Secretary-General and ACC to ensure that these measures were achieved, particularly through closer co-operation among United Nations bodies concerned with planning and carrying out energy-resources activities; recommend increased priority for the regional commissions' energy programmes; and recommend that United Nations bodies, when expanding energy activities, consider all energy sources. The Committee further recommended that the Secretary-General's report be brought to the attention of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy at its July/August session.

At its June session, the UNDP Governing Council authorized the UNDP Administrator on an interim basis to seek and accept voluntary contributions for undertaking energy-assistance projects in developing countries, especially the poorest among them, and emphasized that these contributions should be used to complement country and intercountry energy programmes funded from indicative planning figures and other sources. The Administrator was requested to use existing administrative and technical services to carry out these activities and to consult interested Governments and organizations informally on future UNDP energy-exploration activities and related pre-investment surveys, taking into account a recent review by a group of experts of the operation of the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration and the activities of the United Nations Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development.

In the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development

Decade-adopted on 5 December by resolution 35/56 (see p. 499) -the Assembly called for urgent measures to be taken by the international community in the field of energy. Such measures would include: rationalization of energy consumption by all countries; exploration and rational exploitation of energy resources in accordance with national plans and priorities and support for participation by developing countries in producing, processing, marketing and distributing those resources; facilitation by developed countries of full access by developing countries to scientific and technological processes to enable them to develop energy sources, including nuclear technology, and assistance in assessing their energy requirements; development of medium- and long-term national action programmes on new and renewable sources of energy and co-operation between developed and developing countries with testing centres in similar geophysical and climatic conditions; greater participation by financial institutions in financing energy projects; stimulation of foreign investment in developing countries' energy programmes by improving the investment climate; and strengthening the United Nations information services relating to natural resources.

(For text of relevant provisions (section III H) of the Strategy, see p. 514.)

United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy (1981)

During 1980, preparations continued towards the United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy to be held at Nairobi, Kenya, in August 1981. Two sessions of the Preparatory Committee for the Conference were held, from 4 to 8 February at United Nations Headquarters, New York, and from 21 July to 1 August at Geneva.

At its February session, the Committee made a number of requests for documentation for its July/August session. It requested a progress report from the Secretary-General on Conference preparations, including: information on technical assistance requests received and aid provided to interested developing countries; public information activities; overall guidance, orientation and co-ordination of secretariat contributions; a suggested calendar of preparatory activities; information on ad hoc expert groups; and a list of interested intergovernmental, regional and non-governmental bodies and their proposals. The Committee requested the Conference Secretary-General to consult States regarding guidelines and standard formats for individual national documents, and to prepare a report on the work of the technical panels appointed pursuant to a 1978 Assembly resolution.<sup>7</sup> It reiterated a recommendation that Member States designate national focal points to co-ordinate preparations, urging that information on such designations be communicated by 31 March 1980.

At its July/August session, the Committee had before it the requested information, as well as a cross-organizational analysis of the energy programmes of the United Nations system together with CPC's findings thereon (see preceding subsection).

To a progress report submitted in July on the status of preparations, the Secretary-General annexed: (a) an account of arrangements made by the Conference secretariat to provide technical aid to developing countries, which included the regional commissions' sending senior regional advisers on visits to Member States; (b) a calendar of preparatory activities envisaged or under consideration; (c) draft terms of reference for proposed ad hoc expert groups; and (d) details of the information programme, estimated to cost $700,000, covering international (e.g. radio, television, film, press releases, fact sheets, features, third world press agencies and publications, and pre-conference study tours), regional or national and interagency activities, directed at the energy community, media representatives and the general public. With regard to contributions of secretariats of the United Nations system, the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation was to provide overall guidance and orientation and had established a co-ordinating committee to this end. Four interagency meetings were convened in 1980 to continue co-ordination of preparations. The report said that ACC had discussed preparations at its March/April session and would be briefed on further developments, while the Conference secretariat had participated in meetings of the Executive Secretaries of the regional commissions (Santiago, Chile, in February) when regional preparations were discussed, and in May meetings of ACC's Task Force on Long-term Development Objectives when the relationship between energy and development had been considered. The report added that the Conference secretariat was also holding extensive informal consultations with the co-ordinating committee and senior officials of United Nations bodies.

On 1 August, the Preparatory Committee adopted two resolutions and eight decisions. By one resolution, it expressed concern at the slow progress of the preparatory process and called on all concerned to intensify preparations; to this end, it requested the United Nations Secretary-General to make available additional personnel and technical expertise, called on him to seek aid for this purpose from United Nations bodies having special competence in Conference matters, called on Member States to co-operate with the Conference secretariat and requested the Secretary-General to report to the Assembly's 1980 regular session on the results of these efforts.

By its second resolution, the Committee recommended that the ad hoc expert groups be established to deal with financing, information flows, research and development and transfer of technology, education and training, rural energy, including utilization of energy in agriculture, and industrial issues, including utilization of energy in transportation and allied sectors.

By decisions, the Committee recommended to the Assembly that the Conference be held at Nairobi from 10 to 21 August 1981, with pre-conference consultations in the preceding week, recommended that a group be formed to synthesize the findings of the technical panels and expert groups, and established a schedule for meetings of those panels and groups, for finalization of regional commission contributions and for the Committee's 1981 sessions.

The Committee recommended that concise national papers, with summaries, be submitted before 31 December 1980 in accordance with an indicative outline prepared by the Committee.

Technical panel reports should, where possible, be based on a standard format, and the Conference Secretary-General was asked to synthesize them and those of consultants and include a bibliography of existing studies in the field.

The Committee recommended that the public information programme should accord highest priority to national and regional activities, particularly exhibitions-cum-demonstrations, and fully involve United Nations and other organizations; the Assembly should receive a report in 1980 on the proposed reallocation of the programme's resources.

The Committee felt that regional adviser visits to Member States were not an appropriate method of promoting Conference preparations and reiterated the need to provide technical assistance to interested developing countries; it requested a report for the Assembly's 1980 session in this regard.

Further, the Committee recommended: that United Nations bodies report on their relevant activities, including technical assistance; that the regional commissions strengthen their participation, organize seminars and submit regional papers and a comprehensive report on their preparations; and that the Conference consider adopting a programme of action reflecting the objectives of the Assembly's 1978 resolution by which it had been decided to convene the Conference,<sup>8</sup> and containing measures for co-operation at all levels.

Welcoming the establishment of the coordinating committee, the Committee requested its Chairman to monitor preparatory work closely.

In accordance with an Economic and Social Council authorization—contained in decision 1980/187, orally proposed by the Council President on the recommendation of the Secretariat and adopted without vote on 25 July—the Secretary-General transmitted the Preparatory Committee's report on its 1980 sessions directly to the Assembly's 1980 regular session, where it was considered mainly in the Second Committee.

In a November addendum to his July progress report, the Secretary-General pointed out that many technical assistance requirements had been fulfilled directly by regional commission advisers and in several other cases they were aiding in carrying out initial phases of projects. The report added that only 12 formal requests for technical assistance had been received: four for help in preparing national papers (Dominica, Ethiopia, Kenya, Viet Nam); and eight project-oriented (Bahamas, Barbados, Burundi, Ecuador, Grenada, Guyana, Kenya, Peru), which would be processed in accordance with modalities agreed upon between the Conference Secretary-General and the UNDP Administrator at a meeting at Geneva from 8 to 10 October.

The Assembly also had before it a report by the Secretary-General on ways in which, before the Conference, the United Nations system could more effectively assist Member States in the area of new and renewable sources of energy, submitted in accordance with an Assembly request of 18 December 1979.<sup>9</sup> The report provided summary information of the cross-organizational analysis of the energy programmes of the United Nations system (see preceding subsection) and related activities of concerned United Nations organs, organizations and specialized agencies. It noted that interagency co-ordination would be continued and intensified throughout the Conference's preparatory process and concluded that the decisions of the Conference and subsequently those of the Assembly would better determine the system's objectives and priorities in this area.

On 16 December 1980, the Assembly adopted resolution 35/204 by which it decided that the Conference was to be held at Nairobi from 10 to 21 August 1981, preceded by pre-conference consultations and meetings. It strongly urged the Secretary-General of the Conference to intensify and accelerate Conference preparations, urged concerned bodies of the United Nations system to strengthen their participation in and continue contributing fully to the preparatory process, and urged Member States to promote the Conference's importance and intensify national, subregional and regional preparations. The Assembly invited the co-ordinating committee to ensure implementation of the preparatory work programme. The United Nations Secretary-General was requested, consistent with United Nations rules and regulations, to ensure utilization of co-operation offered, taking fully into account the interests of all country groups, to ensure that financial and other arrangements were made for the continuation of regional preparations, and to provide any required additional personnel and technical expertise and any requested technical assistance for developing countries, using inter alia existing resources to the greatest extent possible. The Assembly called on States wishing to do so to submit national papers and brief summaries of them by 31 December for distribution in all working languages of the Conference.

The Assembly endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of the Preparatory Committee's July/August session, decided to extend the Committee's March/April 1981 session by one week and to hold its following session in June 1981. The Committee was requested, at its March/April session, to finalize the Conference's draft agenda and rules of procedure and provide guidance on elaborating the preliminary draft programme of action, an outline of which the Conference Secretary-General was to prepare reflecting the conclusions and recommendations of the technical panels, ad hoc expert groups, the synthesis group and United Nations organizations. He was also requested to provide to the Committee by 15 May 1981 a report containing additional information for the draft programme, such as proposals and recommendations arising in national and regional papers, and a synoptic table classifying them into those of common concern, those of concern to some regions and those specific to one region, with an indication of origin.

The Assembly indicated in its resolution the States and organizations it wished the Secretary-General to invite to the Conference, including the United Nations Council for Namibia as Namibia's legal Administering Authority; participation of representatives of organizations with standing invitations to participate in United Nations conferences and those of national liberation movements recognized in its region by the Organization of African Unity was to be ensured by arranging the requisite financial provisions for travel expenses and subsistence allowances.

The Secretary-General was also requested: to mobilize the aid of the Department of Public Information and other services of the United Nations system in implementing the information programme for the Conference; to ascertain immediately Member States' views on planned exhibitions-cum-demonstrations at Nairobi during the Conference; and to ensure that all documentation in all Conference working languages-which were to be those of the Assembly and its Main Committees-was available well in advance.

Resolution 35/204 was adopted without vote. On 20 November, the Second Committee had approved the text by consensus, as submitted and orally revised by a Committee Vice-Chairman, based on informal consultations on a draft proposed by Venezuela on behalf of United Nations Member States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries. The Group's text was then withdrawn.

In addition to drafting changes, the adopted text differed in several respects from that proposed by the Group. The Group's text would have had the Assembly welcome contributions provided by Member States and others to facilitate Conference preparations and call on other Members and organizations of the United Nations system to contribute further to strengthening preparations, rather than welcome co-operation provided by Member States and others to facilitate the preparations and call on them to contribute further to their strengthening.

Two requests to the Secretary-General were added: to ensure, consistent with United Nations rules and regulations, utilization of co-operation offered; and to ascertain Members' views on the planned exhibitions-cum-demonstrations at Nairobi. The request for Conference documentation was amended to ensure that it would be available in all working languages.
