In Belarus (16-26 August) [E/CN.4/2005/6/Add.3], the Group, acknowledging efforts to improve the conditions of persons deprived of their liberty, expressed concern about the excessive powers granted to prosecutors and investigators during the pre-trial detention phase and the lack of effective proceedings to challenge the legality of such detention, the lack of independence of the judiciary, the pre-trial detention regime, detention as a means of repressing the freedom of expression, the jurisdiction of military courts over civilians, unsatisfactory protection of vulnerable detainees, and the lack of safeguards regarding detention in psychiatric hospitals. The Group recommended that the Government reconsider the role and place of the actors in a criminal procedure in order to ensure their independence, establish a balance between parties at trial and ensure the effective protection of the rights of persons deprived of their liberty. It should consider priority measures to guarantee the independence of judges and lawyers, and amendments to the provisions of internal criminal laws in the light of international and constitutional norms, to bring to an end the arrest of persons for peaceful demonstrations, for distributing information or for exercising their right to the freedom of expression.

In China (18-30 September) [E/CN.4/2005/6/Add.4], the Group focused on developments since its 1997 visit to the country [YUN 1997, p. 653]. While acknowledging a number of positive developments, the Group found that none of its previous recommendations had been followed, particularly regarding the definition of such ambiguous terms as “endangering national security” in criminal law, legislative measures exempting from criminal responsibility those who peacefully exercised their rights as guaranteed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 217 A (III) [YUN 1948-49, p. 535], and judicial control over the procedure to commit someone to re-education through labour. Also, the rules and practice concerning judicial deprivation of liberty were still not in keeping with international law and standards and there existed no genuine right to challenge administrative detention. As no law provided a clear definition of “State secrets”, the Group was concerned about possible restriction on the right to defence in circumstances involving State security or secrets. The Group recommended, among other things, that the authorities examine the possibility of instituting a simplified emergency procedure to allow persons detained to be brought before a judge and not only a procurator. All conduct subject to sanction should be described in detail and persons deprived of their liberty on account of administrative offences should be guaranteed due process. Persons placed against their will in a psychiatric hospital or detoxification centre should enjoy an effective remedy and there was a need to amend all legal provisions that could be used to sanction the peaceful exercise of rights and freedoms enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Communication. On 1 November [A/C.3/59/6], Belarus drew attention to its cooperation with the Working Group during the Group’s visit to the country (see above).

Impunity

Note by Secretary-General. In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 734], the Secretary-General, by a 27 February note [E/CN.4/2004/88], transmitted the independent study conducted by Diane Orentlicher (United States) on best practices to assist States in strengthening their domestic capacity to combat impunity, taking into account the application of the 1997 set of principles for the protection and promotion of human rights through action to combat impunity [YUN 1997, p. 655]. The report, which was based on information provided by 20 Governments, reviewed recent developments regarding the 1997 principles under the themes of the right to know the truth, the right to justice and the right to reparation. A recurring theme in the study was that domestic efforts to combat impunity had been significantly enhanced by States’ adherence to human rights treaties and their acceptance of optional complaint procedures. The study observed that, although some aspects of the principles, notably those pertaining to the creation of an international criminal court, might need to be updated, recent developments in international law had strongly affirmed the principles as a whole. The principles had provided an influential framework for domestic measures aimed at combating impunity. The study recommended that the Commission appoint an independent expert to update the principles with a view to their adoption.

Commission action. On 21 April [res. 2004/72], the Commission asked the Secretary-General to invite States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to provide information on steps taken to combat impunity for human rights violations and on remedies available to victims, and to appoint an independent expert to update the 1997 set of principles to reflect developments in international law and practice, taking into account the independent study (above) and comments received pursuant to the resolution, for consideration in 2005.

On 15 June (decision 2004/223), the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to appoint an independent expert.

Ms. Orentlicher was appointed independent expert in September.

Independence of the judicial system

Report of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, Leandro Despouy (Argentina), submitted his first report [E/CN.4/2004/60], which provided an overview of his activities, his understanding of the mandate and his methodology for approaching relevant issues. He had transmitted 70 urgent appeals, communications and press releases to 40 Governments and the Palestinian Authority, replies to which were received from 5 countries. An addendum to the report [E/CN.4/2004/60/Add.1] contained summaries of the communications sent and replies thereto. The Special Rapporteur observed that the number of allegations received indicated the extent to which the independence of the judiciary, the legal profession and their members continued to be threatened in many countries. He was persuaded that the institutional weaknesses and functional problems affecting the work of judges and lawyers were a direct cause of violations of the right to a fair trial and, in addressing that, he recommended the allocation of adequate resources to the justice system, and hoped to develop fruitful cooperation with Governments.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2004/32], the Commission called on States that used military courts to try criminal offenders to ensure that such courts were an integral part of the general judicial system and that they applied internationally recognized due process procedures.

Also on 19 April [res. 2004/33], the Commission called on Governments to respect and uphold the independence of judges and lawyers and asked the High Commissioner to continue to provide technical assistance to train them. The Special Rapporteur was asked to report in 2005 and the Secretary-General was asked to assist him.

Further reports of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur visited Kazakhstan (11-17 June) [E/CN.4/2005/60/Add.2] at the invitation of the Government, following increasing allegations that the judiciary was compromised by political pressure, administrative directives and corruption. The Special Rapporteur found that Kazakhstan, since achieving independence in 1991, had taken steps to move from a situation where the administration of justice was governed by political priorities and administrative instructions, and even by personal connections, but the executive continued to play a dominant role in the judiciary. The Special Rapporteur observed that if Kazakhstan was to be considered a truly democratic State, it needed to introduce legal adjustments that might include constitutional reforms, in order to achieve a fairer balance of power between the branches of Government and to increase the independence of the judiciary. Crucial issues in that regard included the process of nominating judges, the powers of the prosecutor, the composition and functioning of the Higher Judicial Council and the weakness of the Constitutional Council. Further recommendations addressed related issues undermining human rights and the justice system.

In Brazil (13-25 October) [E/CN.4/2005/60/Add.3 & Corr.1], the Special Rapporteur aimed to examine the independence of the judicial system and to determine whether justice was properly served and whether the most needy members of the population had access to justice. The visit, which took place as the country prepared to adopt major judicial reforms, enabled the Special Rapporteur to comment on the feasibility of those reforms. He found that the system was plagued by such structural problems as delays in the administration of justice, the lack of access to justice—particularly for poor or marginalized groups in society—impunity, especially for crimes against young people, discriminatory practices that often resulted in the further victimization of certain groups and a marked trend towards the criminalization of social movements. The justice system was also undermined by very low representation of women at top levels, threats and acts of violence against judges, lawyers and defence attorneys working on cases that involved social issues concerning indigenous, environmental and land questions, insufficient resources and a lack of transparency in the mechanisms that regulated key aspects of the functioning of the judiciary. The Special Rapporteur recommended strengthening the Office of the Public Defender; establishing special courts to deal with crimes against children and young persons; limiting the jurisdiction of military justice to military offences; addressing discrimination against vulnerable groups; monitoring the effectiveness of judicial services in order to measure the impact of the changes introduced by the reforms; and implementing international human rights instruments ratified by Brazil.

Communication. In February [E/CN.4/2004/G/26], Austria transmitted “The Vienna Declaration on the Role of Judges in the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms”, adopted at an international symposium (Vienna, 24 November 2003) organized jointly by Austria, OHCHR and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime. The symposium highlighted the pivotal role of judges in human rights and drew attention to their need for support regarding their independence, impartiality, competence and integrity.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 735], the Secretary-General, in a January report [E/CN.4/2004/86], supplemented information in his sixth quinquennial report [YUN 2000, p. 672] on capital punishment and implementation of the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, covering the period from January to December 2003. The report summarized information received from 12 countries relating to the use of capital punishment, changes in law and practice concerning the death penalty and implementation of the safeguards, with special attention to the imposition of the death penalty against persons younger than 18 years of age at the time of the offence. Additional information was provided by eight intergovernmental organizations and NGOs. During the reporting period, no country abolished the death penalty for all crimes, one ratified an international instrument abolishing it in peacetime, one limited its use, 26 acceded to or ratified instruments that abolished it, three established a moratorium and one reintroduced the death penalty. The only figures available suggested that at least 3,248 persons were sentenced to death in 67 countries and at least 1,526 people were executed in 31 countries during 2002. The Secretary-General concluded that the trend towards abolition had continued, as the number of countries that could be considered de facto abolitionist rose from 33 to 37, while the total number of retentionist countries decreased from 71 to 66. The number of countries that had ratified international instruments abolishing the death penalty also increased markedly. However, during the reporting period, Amnesty International reported three executions of juveniles in one country. The report also highlighted initiatives by the Commission and its mechanisms regarding relevant international developments and the implementation of safeguards.

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 29 to 19, with 5 abstentions, the Commission, on 21

April [res. 2004/67], called on States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights that had not done so to consider acceding to or ratifying the Second Optional Protocol thereto on the abolition of the death penalty (see p. 662). Among other measures, States that maintained the death penalty were urged not to impose it for crimes committed by persons below 18 years of age; to exclude pregnant women and mothers with dependent infants; not to impose it on a person suffering from mental disorder; to establish a moratorium on executions; to restrict the number of offences for which the death penalty might be imposed; and to provide the Secretary-General and relevant UN bodies with information relating to the use of capital punishment and the observance of the safeguards guaranteeing the rights of those facing the death penalty, as contained in Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/50 [YUN 1984, p. 709]. The Secretary-General was asked to submit his quinquennial report, paying special attention to the imposition of the death penalty against persons younger than 18 years of age at the time of the offence.

Communication. On 21 April [E/CN.4/2004/G/54], Saudi Arabia, also on behalf of 63 other States, dissociated itself from the Commission’s resolution.

Subcommission action. On 12 August [res. 2004/25], the Subcommission, by a roll-call vote of 20 to 1, with 3 abstentions, called on States in which the death penalty had been imposed on a civilian tried by military tribunal or a tribunal whose composition included one or more members of the armed forces to re-try the suspect before a competent, independent and impartial tribunal. They were further called on to refuse requests for extradition or other form of transfer to any State where there was a risk that civilians could be tried by a military court.

Right to democracy

Report of High Commissioner. In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 736], the High Commissioner submitted a February report [E/CN.4/2004/54], which summarized the views of three UN departments, two UN system organizations, two regional organizations and two intergovernmental organizations on the role they had played in promoting and consolidating democracy.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2004/30], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 45 to none, with 8 abstentions, called on OHCHR to stimulate dialogue and interaction within the UN system and between the system and interested intergovernmental regional, subregional and other organizations and arrangements on the means of promoting democratic values and principles, and to report in 2005. The High Commissioner was asked to continue promoting and consolidating democracy, in collaboration with other organizations, by strengthening programmes for assistance to countries seeking technical advice, by continuing to cooperate with Member States, with a view to identifying challenges to democratic governance at the country level, and by designating a focal point in OHCHR to that effect.

Note by Secretariat. A July note [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/10] of the Secretariat stated that, as at 23 July, it had not received from Manuel Rodríguez Cuadros (Peru) the extended working paper on measures to promote and consolidate democracy, requested by the Subcommission in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 736].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/59/503/Add.2], adopted resolution 59/201 by recorded vote (172-0-15) [agenda item 105 (b)].

Enhancing the role of regional, subregional and other organizations and arrangements in promoting and consolidating democracy

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolution 55/96 of 4 December 2000 and all relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, in particular resolutions 1999/57 of 27 April 1999, 2000/47 of 25 April 2000, 2001/41 of 23 April 2001, 2002/46 of 23 April 2002, 2003/36 of 23 April 2003 and 2004/30 of 19 April 2004,

Recalling also that all peoples have the right to self-determination, by virtue of which they can freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development,

Reaffirming its resolve, expressed, inter alia, in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, to implement the principles and practices of democracy, and recognizing the diverse nature of the community of the world's democracies,

1. Declares that the essential elements of democracy include respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, inter alia, freedom of association and peaceful assembly and of expression and opinion, and the right to take part in the conduct of public affairs, directly or through freely chosen representatives, to vote and to be elected at genuine periodic free elections by universal and equal suffrage and by secret ballot guaranteeing the free expression of the will of the people, as well as a pluralistic system of political parties and organizations, respect for the rule of law, the separation of powers, the independence of the judiciary, transparency and accountability in public administration, and free, independent and pluralistic media;

2. Reaffirms that the promotion and protection of all human rights is a basic prerequisite for the existence of a democratic society, and recognizes the importance of the continuous development and strengthening of the United Nations human rights mechanisms for the consolidation of democracy;

3. Recognizes the importance of all actions taken at the regional and subregional levels that are aimed at facilitating the establishment, development and consolidation of democratic institutions, based on democratic values and principles and capable of responding to the specific needs of the countries in each region;

4. Acknowledges the importance of better awareness of democratic values and principles in all regions and for all people;

5. Reaffirms that democracy, development and respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms are interdependent and mutually reinforcing, that democracy is based on the freely expressed will of the people to determine their own political, economic, social and cultural systems and their full participation in all aspects of their lives and, in that context, that the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms at the national, regional and international levels should be universal and conducted without conditions attached; the international community should support the strengthening and promoting of democracy, development and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in the entire world;

6. Acknowledges that democracy contributes substantially to preventing violent conflict, to accelerating reconciliation and reconstruction in post-conflict peacebuilding and, in peacetime, to resolving disputes that may impede economic and social progress;

7. Recognizes the need for Member States to pay further special attention and contribute to democratic institution-building by including relevant objectives to this effect in the mandates of peacemaking, peacekeeping and post-conflict peacebuilding operations and by providing adequate resources in that regard;

8. Invites intergovernmental regional, subregional and other organizations and arrangements, as well as non-governmental organizations, to engage actively in work at the local, national, subregional and regional levels for the constant promotion and consolidation of democracy and to initiate exchanges with the United Nations system on their experiences, inter alia, by:

(a) Identifying and disseminating best practices and experiences at the regional, subregional and cross-regional levels in promoting and protecting democratic processes;

(b) Establishing and supporting regional, subregional and national civic education programmes that provide access to information on democratic governance and stimulate dialogue on the functioning of democracy;

(c) Encouraging the study, in schools and universities, of democracy, human rights, good governance and the functioning of public administration, political institutions and civil society organizations;

(d) Elaborating and widely distributing reports, assessments, training material, handbooks, case studies and documentation on alternative types of democratic constitutions, electoral systems and administration so as to assist populations in making more informed choices;

(e) Encouraging the use of democratic consultative mechanisms in disputes as an opportunity for the parties involved to advance their interests within institutional frameworks;

(f) Working with the focal point for democracy of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights;

9. Invites States members of intergovernmental regional organizations and arrangements to include or reinforce the provisions of the constitutive acts of the organizations and arrangements that are aimed at promoting democratic values and principles and protecting and consolidating democracy in their respective societies;

10. Welcomes the adoption by various regional, sub-regional and other organizations and arrangements of institutional rules designed to prevent situations that threaten democratic institutions;

11. Invites intergovernmental regional organizations and arrangements to institutionalize dialogue among themselves on joint actions to promote and consolidate democracy and democratic practices in all areas;

12. Encourages Member States and intergovernmental regional and cross-regional organizations and arrangements, as well as non-governmental organizations, to initiate networks and partnerships with a view to assisting the Governments and civil society in their respective regions in disseminating knowledge and information about the role of democratic institutions and mechanisms in meeting the political, economic, social and cultural challenges in their respective societies;

13. Urges the continuation and expansion of activities carried out by the United Nations system, inter-governmental organizations and Member States to promote and consolidate democracy within the framework of international cooperation;

14. Invites the United Nations system to identify, develop and coordinate effective policies of assistance in the field of democracy and, in this context, to support programmes of technical assistance to States, upon their request, aimed at:

(a) Developing a competent, independent and impartial judiciary and accountable government institutions;

(b) Strengthening political party systems, free and independent media and civil society organizations;

(c) Fostering a democratic culture;

15. Calls upon the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to stimulate dialogue and interaction within the United Nations system and between the United Nations system and interested intergovernmental regional, subregional and other organizations and arrangements on the ways and means of promoting democratic values and principles, on the basis of the present resolution and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Commission on Human Rights, and, to this end, to invite, inter alia, the Department of Political Affairs of the Secretariat, including its Electoral Assistance Division, and the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat, the United Nations Development Programme, the International Labour Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and regional organizations to inform the Commission on Human Rights, at its sixty-first session, of action taken to promote and consolidate democracy;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of Member States.

Electoral processes

By a recorded vote of 28 to 14, with 11 abstentions, the Commission, on 19 April [res. 2004/31], urged States to foster a democracy that promoted people's welfare and invited Commission mechanisms and human rights treaty bodies to continue taking into account, in the discharge of their respective mandates, the question of strengthening popular participation, equity, social justice and non-discrimination as foundations of democracy.

Other issues

Extralegal executions

Reports of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, Asma Jahangir (Pakistan), in her annual report [E/CN.4/2004/7 & Corr.1 & Add.1], updated developments since her 2003 report [YUN 2003, p. 739]. Between 2 December 2002 and 1 December 2003, she transmitted 97 urgent appeals to 35 countries and the Palestinian Authority, of which 45 were transmitted jointly with other Commission mechanisms. In addition, she transmitted 61 communications containing allegations of violations of the right to life of a large number of individuals and groups to 43 countries. The report summarized the cases transmitted and the replies received. The Special Rapporteur expressed concern at the lack of improvement in the situation relating to extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions. Governments were using excessive force on the justification of defending security, and a pattern of extrajudicial executions had emerged, carried out mainly in conflict and post-conflict situations; under authoritarian regimes; in situations of transition from dictatorship to democracy; in circumstances of serious lapses in governance, particularly in countries with a high crime rate; in corrupt government institutions; and in countries with weak and inefficient judicial systems. In addition to the recommendations contained in her 2003 report, the Special Rapporteur proposed that the UN strengthen early warning mechanisms against genocide and crimes against humanity, and that Governments not resort to aerial bombing, the use of snipers or pre-emptive strikes against people, but should review their policies and withdraw "shoot on sight" orders to security forces. She further recommended, among other things, that all deaths in custody be investigated, that law enforcement officials receive human rights training and that all retentionist Governments impose a moratorium on executions.

The Special Rapporteur visited the Sudan (1-13 June) [E/CN.4/2005/7/Add.2] following reports of alleged violations of the right to life in the country. As part of the mission, she also visited Cairo and Nairobi, where she met with interlocutors on developments in the Sudan. The mission took place at a time when, despite ongoing peace negotiations in southern Sudan to end a protracted civil war between the Government and opposition forces, most notably the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army (see p. 233), escalating conflict in the Darfur region in the west resulted in a humanitarian crisis in which an estimated 1 million civilians were displaced, of whom many were allegedly targeted and killed extrajudicially by government agents. Further allegations of extrajudicial killings were reported elsewhere in the country. Against that background, the Special Rapporteur focused on problem areas in order to investigate the reported killings and on the application of the death penalty. She found evidence that extrajudicial killings of civilians had occurred in Darfur, and that the scale of the violations of the right to life could be termed a crime against humanity. Moreover, the manner in which the death penalty was imposed and carried out did not conform to the safeguards and restrictions under international customary law. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government accord priority to ensuring effective humanitarian assistance and protection of the rights of the vulnerable population in Darfur and in southern Sudan, in order to safeguard their right to life; that all militias be disarmed and that the actions of the Popular Defence Forces remain under control. The Government should, in addition, maintain accountability in the peace process, end the culture of impunity and revise the national legislation concerning the death penalty to ensure that it conformed to international standards.

In September [A/59/319], the Secretary-General transmitted the interim report of the Special Rapporteur, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 57/214 [YUN 2002, p. 706]. The report focused on activities she had undertaken between 1 July 2002 and 1 June 2004 and on issues of concern requiring urgent attention. The Special Rapporteur transmitted 115 communications containing allegations of violations of the right to life of a large number of individuals and groups, of which 64 were transmitted to 63 Governments jointly with other special rapporteurs. The report also summarized the activities undertaken by the Special Rapporteur, situations involving violations of the right to life of special groups and issues of special focus. She had transmitted communications to Governments or taken other forms of action in relation to violations of the right to life regarding: non-implementation of existing international standards on safeguards and restrictions relating to the imposition of capital punishment; genocide and crimes against humanity; violations of the right to life during armed conflicts; deaths due to excessive use of force by law enforcement officials; deaths in custody; death threats and violations of the right to life of persons carrying out peaceful activities in defence of human rights; expulsion and return of persons to a country or place where their lives were in danger (refoulement); and impunity. The Special Rapporteur concluded that there was no indication that violations of the right to life decreased during the reporting period and that the increasing number of communications relating to alleged violations indicated the magnitude of the incidence of extrajudicial, summary and arbitrary executions worldwide. She recommended that retentionist States impose a moratorium on executions and establish national commissions to report on the situation to enable States to ensure that applicable standards and guarantees were observed, and encouraged Governments to ratify relevant international instruments.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2004/37], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 39 to none, with 12 abstentions, strongly condemning all extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, demanded that States end the practice in all its forms. The Commission asked the Secretary-General and High Commissioner to use their best endeavours in cases where the minimum standard of legal safeguards provided for in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (see p. 662) appeared not to be respected. The Secretary-General was also asked to provide the Special Rapporteur with adequate resources, and to ensure that personnel specialized in human rights and humanitarian law formed part of UN missions, in order to deal with extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions. The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for three years.

In July, the Commission appointed Philip Alston (Australia) as Special Rapporteur.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2004/23], adopted decision 2004/259 by recorded vote (45-0-9) [agenda item 14 (g)].

Extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions

At its 48th plenary meeting, on 22 July 2004, the Economic and Social Council took note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2004/37 of 19 April 2004 and endorsed the decision of the Commission to extend for three years the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with adequate human, financial and material resources in order to enable her or him to continue to carry out her or his mandate effectively.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2004/259:

In favour: Armenia, Australia, Azerbaijan, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Burundi, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Congo, Cuba, Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, France, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Mauritius, Mozambique, Namibia, Nicaragua, Panama, Poland, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Senegal, Sweden, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Bangladesh, China, Kenya, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Nigeria, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates.

Subcommission action. On 9 August [dec. 2004/103], the Subcommission adopted a statement recalling that the extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary execution of a human being was unlawful in all circumstances.

Communications. In March [E/CN.4/2004/G/33], Brazil transmitted information on measures of investigation and protection it had adopted regarding witnesses interviewed by the Special Rapporteur during her 2003 visit to the country [YUN 2003, p. 739].

In April [E/CN.4/2004/G/51], Jamaica, commenting on the Special Rapporteur's report following her visit to the country [YUN 2003, p. 739], stated that it was committed to ensuring that the rights of its citizens were protected in accordance with its obligations under the country's Constitution and under international agreements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/59/503/Add.2], adopted resolution 59/197 by recorded vote (142-0-43) [agenda item 105 (b)].

Extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which guarantees the right to life, liberty and security of person, and the relevant provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Having regard to the legal framework of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, including the provisions contained in Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1992/72 of 5 March 1992 and 2001/45 of 23 April 2001, as well as General Assembly resolution 47/136 of 18 December 1992,

Noting its resolutions on the subject of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and the resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights on the subject,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/50 of 25 May 1984 and the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, annexed thereto, and Council resolution 1989/64 of 24 May 1989 on their implementation, as well as the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 40/34 of 29 November 1985,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/65 of 24 May 1989, in which the Council recommended the Principles on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-legal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions,

Convinced of the need for effective action to combat and to eliminate the abhorrent practice of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, which represent a flagrant violation of the right to life,

1. Strongly condemns once again all the extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions that continue to occur throughout the world;

2. Demands that all Governments ensure that the practice of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions is brought to an end and that they take effective action to combat and eliminate the phenomenon in all its forms;

3. Notes with grave concern that situations of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions may, under certain circumstances, result in genocide or crimes against humanity, as defined in the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide and other relevant international instruments;

4. Notes with deep concern that impunity continues to be a major cause of the perpetuation of violations of human rights, including extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions;

5. Reiterates the obligation of all Governments to conduct exhaustive and impartial investigations into all suspected cases of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, to identify and bring to justice those responsible, while ensuring the right of every person to a fair and public hearing by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal established by law, to grant adequate compensation within a reasonable time to the victims or their families, and to adopt all necessary measures, including legal and judicial measures, to put an end to impunity and to prevent the further occurrence of such executions;

6. Acknowledges the establishment of the International Criminal Court as an important contribution to ending impunity concerning extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and the fact that ninety-seven States have already ratified or acceded to and one hundred and thirty-nine States have signed the Rome Statute, and calls upon all other States to consider becoming parties to the Statute;

7. Calls upon all States in which the death penalty has not been abolished to comply with their obligations under relevant provisions of international human rights instruments, including in particular articles 6, 7 and 14 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and articles 37 and 40 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, bearing in mind the safeguards and guarantees set out in Economic and Social Council resolutions 1984/50 and 1989/64;

8. Urges all Governments:

(a) To take all necessary measures to prevent the occurrence of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, including those occurring in custody;

(b) To take all necessary and possible measures, in conformity with international human rights law and international humanitarian law, to prevent loss of life, in particular that of children, during public demonstrations, internal and communal violence, civil unrest and public emergencies or armed conflicts, and to ensure that the police, law enforcement agents and security forces act with restraint and in conformity with international human rights law and international humanitarian law;

(c) To ensure the effective protection of the right to life of all persons under their jurisdiction and to investigate promptly and thoroughly all killings, including those targeted at specific groups of persons, such as racially motivated violence leading to the death of the victim, killings of members of national, ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities, of refugees, internally displaced persons, migrants, street children or members of indigenous communities, killings of persons for reasons related to their peaceful activities as human rights defenders, lawyers, journalists or demonstrators, killings committed in the name of passion or in the name of honour, all killings committed for any discriminatory reason, including sexual orientation, as well as all other cases where a person's right to life has been violated, and to bring those responsible to justice before a competent, independent and impartial judiciary and to ensure that such killings, including those committed by security forces, police and law enforcement agents, paramilitary groups or private forces, are neither condoned nor sanctioned by State officials or personnel;

9. Encourages Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to organize training programmes and to support projects with a view to training or educating military forces, law enforcement officers and government officials in human rights and humanitarian law issues connected with their work and to include a gender perspective in such training, and appeals to the international community and requests the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to support endeavours to that end;

10. Reaffirms Economic and Social Council decision 2004/259 of 22 July 2004, by which the Council endorsed the decision of the Commission on Human Rights to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions for three years;

11. Takes note of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur to the General Assembly;

12. Commends the important role that the Special Rapporteur plays towards the elimination of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, and encourages the Special Rapporteur to continue, within his mandate, to collect information from all concerned, to respond effectively to reliable information that comes before him, to follow up on communications and country visits and to seek the views and comments of Governments and to reflect them, as appropriate, in his reports;

13. Urges the Special Rapporteur to continue, within his mandate, to bring to the attention of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and, as appropriate, the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on the Prevention of Genocide, situations of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions that are of particularly serious concern or in which early action might prevent further deterioration;

14. Welcomes the cooperation established between the Special Rapporteur and other United Nations mechanisms and procedures relating to human rights, as well as with medical and forensic experts, and encourages the Special Rapporteur to continue efforts in that regard;

15. Urges all Governments, in particular those that have not yet done so, to respond in a timely manner to the communications and requests for information transmitted to them by the Special Rapporteur, and urges them and all others concerned to cooperate with and assist the Special Rapporteur so that he may carry out his mandate effectively, including, where appropriate, by issuing invitations to the Special Rapporteur when he so requests;

16. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments that have invited the Special Rapporteur to visit their countries, asks them to examine carefully the recommendations made by the Special Rapporteur, invites them to inform the Special Rapporteur of the actions taken on those recommendations, and requests other Governments to cooperate in a similar way;

17. Again requests the Secretary-General to continue to use his best endeavours in cases where the minimum standards of legal safeguards provided for in articles 6, 9, 14 and 15 of the International Covenant on

Civil and Political Rights appear not to have been respected;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with adequate human, financial and material resources to enable him to carry out his mandate effectively, including through country visits;

19. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue, in close collaboration with the High Commissioner, in conformity with the mandate of the High Commissioner established by the General Assembly in its resolution 48/141 of 20 December 1993, to ensure that personnel specialized in human rights and humanitarian law issues form part of United Nations missions, where appropriate, in order to deal with serious violations of human rights, such as extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions;

20. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session on the situation worldwide in regard to extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and his recommendations for more effective action to combat this phenomenon.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 59/197:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chile, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Estonia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lesotho, Liberia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Mozambique, Namibia, Nauru, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Palau, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Sao Tome and Principe, Serbia and Montenegro, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Switzerland, Tajikistan, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Timor-Leste, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Venezuela, Zambia

Against: None.

Abstaining: Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belarus, Brunei Darussalam, China, Colombia, Comoros, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Egypt, Ethiopia, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Maldives, Mauritania, Morocco, Myanmar, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Singapore, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkmenistan, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zimbabwe.

The Third Committee adopted, by separate recorded votes, paragraph 7 by 84 to 41, with 39 abstentions, and the words "including sexual orientation" after the words "for any discriminatory reason" in paragraph 8 (c), by 93 to 42, with 29 abstentions. The Assembly retained that paragraph and those words by recorded votes of 86 to 44, with 39 abstentions, and 95 to 41, with 26 abstentions, respectively.

In accordance with Security Council resolution 1366(2001) [YUN 2001, p. 50], the Secretary-General, in July [S/2004/567], appointed Juan Méndez as his Special Adviser on the Prevention of Genocide, with a mandate to: collect information on massive and serious violations of human rights and humanitarian law of ethnic and racial origin that, if not prevented or halted, might lead to genocide; act as an early warning mechanism to the Secretary-General, and through him to the Council, by bringing to their attention potential situations that could result in genocide; make recommendations to the Council on actions to halt genocide; liaise with the UN system on activities to prevent genocide; and work to enhance the Organization's capacity to analyse and manage information regarding genocide or related crimes. The Special Adviser would not be required to make a determination on whether genocide had occurred, within the definition of the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (see p. 669). His activities would be intended to enable the United Nations to act in a timely fashion and would help the Secretary-General define steps necessary to prevent the deterioration of existing situations into genocide.

Disappearance of persons

Draft instrument. Pursuant to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 740], the intersessional open-ended working group established to prepare a draft legally binding instrument for the protection of all persons from enforced disappearance held its second (12-23 January) [E/CN.4/2004/59] and third (4-8 October) [E/CN.4/2005/66] sessions, both in Geneva. In January, the group reviewed the Chairman's working paper containing a draft preamble and articles, which took into account observations made at the group's first session [YUN 2003, p. 740] and incorporated the language of international instruments. Relevant issues discussed included the definition of enforced disappearance, the phenomenon as a crime against humanity, offences and penalties, protection against impunity, prosecution in domestic courts, international cooperation, prevention of enforced disappearances, victims of enforced disappearance, children of disappeared persons, a monitoring body and the final provisions of the draft instrument. The group, having considered that it made major progress in January, considered in October a revised version of the Chairman's working paper, which it decided to continue discussing at its fourth (2005) session.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2004/40], the Commission urged States to promote and give full effect to the 1992 Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 47/133 [YUN 1992, p. 744], and to cooperate with the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances (see below). The Commission decided to extend the Group's mandate for three years and asked it to report in 2005. States were invited to provide the Group with information on preventive measures and in giving effect to the Declaration. The Secretary-General was asked to assist it, to provide the requisite resources to update the database on cases of enforced disappearance and to inform the Commission of steps taken to disseminate and promote the Declaration. The Commission asked the intersessional working group (see above) to meet for 15 working days before the Commission's 2005 session and to report at that session.

On 22 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision to extend the Group's mandate for three years, as well as its request to the intersessional working group to meet (decision 2004/260).

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances held three sessions in 2004: its seventy-second (24-28 May), seventy-third (16-20 August) and seventy-fourth (8-15 November), all in Geneva [E/CN.4/2005/65]. In addition to its original mandate, which was to act as a channel of communication between families of disappeared persons and the Governments concerned, with a view to ensuring that sufficiently documented individual cases were investigated, the Working Group monitored States' compliance with the 1992 Declaration. Cases under active consideration by the Group totalled 41,909, while countries with outstanding cases of alleged disappearance numbered 79. During the period under review, up to 15 November, the last day of its seventy-fourth session, the Group transmitted 595 new cases of disappearance to 20 States, 131 of which allegedly occurred in 2004. It also sent 152 urgent action appeals to 12 countries and clarified 23 cases. The Group's report summarized information regarding disappearances received from 51 countries. The Group, regretting that the phenomenon of enforced disappearances had continued in many States, expressed concern that in a number of cases children had been affected. While in the past the phenomenon was mainly associated with the State policies of authoritarian regimes, it currently occurred in the context of much more complex situations of internal conflict or tensions generating violence, humanitarian crisis and human rights violations. The Group called on Governments to comply with their obligations under relevant provisions of the 1992 Declaration.

Two Working Group members visited Nepal (6-14 December) [E/CN.4/2005/65/Add.1] to examine alleged cases of enforced or involuntary disappearance, following reports of a marked increase in the number of such incidents and of other human rights violations, within the context of the conflict between the Government and the Communist Party of Nepal (Maoist). There were currently some 267 outstanding cases of disappearances in the country reported to the Group, which occurred between 1998 and 2004, and the perpetrators, which included Maoist insurgents and Nepalese security forces, were often shielded by political and legal impunity. Among the reported victims were women, students, businessmen, farmers, workers, journalists and human rights defenders. The Group concluded that resolving the underlying conflict in the country was the best means to guarantee a reduction in human rights and humanitarian law violations, including disappearances, and recommended, among other measures, amending the Nepalese criminal law, to create a specific crime of enforced and involuntary disappearance, and the Army Act, to ensure that security forces personnel accused of the crime against a civilian would be tried in civilian courts. The Government and the security forces were asked to keep up-to-date lists of detainees and ensure that human rights defenders were protected from persecution for their work.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 57/215 [YUN 2002, p. 710], the Secretary-General, in a September report [A/59/341], presented replies received from six Governments in response to his request for information on steps they had taken to combat enforced or involuntary disappearance. The report highlighted the 2003 activities of the Working Group on the phenomenon [YUN 2003, p. 740], and of the UN Secretariat, including efforts by DPI and OHCHR to promote the 1992 Declaration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/59/503/Add.2], adopted resolution 59/200 without vote [agenda item 105 (b)].

Question of enforced or involuntary disappearances

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and the other relevant international human rights instruments,

Recalling its resolution 33/173 of 20 December 1978 concerning disappeared persons and its resolutions on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances, in particular resolution 57/215 of 18 December 2002,

Recalling also its resolution 47/133 of 18 December 1992 proclaiming the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance as a body of principles for all States,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 2004/40 of 19 April 2004,

Deeply concerned, in particular, by the intensification of enforced disappearances, including arrest, detention and abduction, where these are part of or amount to enforced disappearances, in various regions of the world and by the growing number of reports concerning the harassment, ill-treatment and intimidation of witnesses of disappearances or relatives of persons who have disappeared,

Taking note with interest of the initiatives taken at the national and international levels in order to end impunity,

Acknowledging the fact that acts of enforced disappearance, as defined in the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, come within the jurisdiction of the Court as crimes against humanity,

Convinced that further efforts are needed to promote wider awareness of and respect for the Declaration, and taking note in this regard of the report of the Secretary-General,

Taking note of the report of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances of the Commission on Human Rights,

1. Reaffirms that any act of enforced disappearance is an offence to human dignity and a grave and flagrant violation of the human rights and fundamental freedoms proclaimed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and reaffirmed and developed in other international instruments in this field, as well as a violation of the rules of international law; and that no State shall practise, permit or tolerate enforced disappearances as proclaimed in the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance;

2. Urges all Governments to take appropriate legislative or other steps to prevent and suppress the practice of enforced disappearances, in keeping with the Declaration, and to take action to that end at the national and regional levels and in cooperation with the United Nations, including through the provision of technical assistance;

3. Calls upon Governments to take steps to ensure that, when a state of emergency is introduced, the protection of human rights is ensured, in particular with regard to the prevention of enforced disappearances;

4. Reminds Governments that impunity with regard to enforced disappearances contributes to the perpetuation of this phenomenon and constitutes one of the obstacles to the elucidation of its manifestations, and in this respect also reminds them of the need to ensure that their competent authorities conduct prompt and impartial inquiries in all circumstances in which there is a reason to believe that an enforced disappearance has occurred in territory under their jurisdiction, and that, if allegations are confirmed, perpetrators should be prosecuted;

5. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments that are investigating, are cooperating at the international and bilateral levels, have developed or are developing appropriate mechanisms to investigate any cases of enforced disappearances that are brought to their attention and to prevent any such occurrences, and urges all the Governments concerned to expand their efforts in this area;

6. Once again urges the Governments concerned:

(a) To take steps to protect witnesses of enforced disappearances, human rights defenders acting against enforced disappearances, and the lawyers and families of disappeared persons against any intimidation or ill-treatment to which they may be subjected;

(b) To continue their efforts to elucidate the fate of disappeared persons;

(c) To make provision in their legal systems for machinery for victims of enforced or involuntary disappearances or their families to seek fair and adequate reparation;

7. Reaffirms that all persons deprived of liberty must be released in a manner permitting reliable verification that they have actually been released and, further, have been released in conditions in which their physical integrity and ability to exercise their rights are assured;

8. Encourages States, as some have already done, to provide concrete information on measures taken to give effect to the Declaration, as well as obstacles encountered;

9. Requests all States to consider the possibility of disseminating the text of the Declaration in their respective national languages and to facilitate its dissemination in local languages;

10. Notes the action taken by non-governmental organizations to encourage implementation of the Declaration, and invites them to continue to facilitate its dissemination;

11. Stresses the importance of the work of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances of the Commission on Human Rights, and encourages it in the execution of its mandate to continue to promote communication between the families of disappeared persons and the Governments concerned, in particular when ordinary channels have failed, with a view to ensuring that sufficiently documented and clearly identified individual cases are investigated and to ascertaining whether such information falls under its mandate and contains the required elements;

12. Invites the Working Group to continue to seek the views and comments of all concerned, including Member States, in preparing its reports;

13. Also invites the Working Group to identify obstacles to the realization of the provisions of the Declaration, to recommend ways of overcoming those obstacles and, in this regard, to continue a dialogue with Governments and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

14. Encourages the Working Group to continue to consider the question of impunity, in the light of the relevant provisions of the Declaration;

15. Requests the Working Group to pay the utmost attention to cases of children subjected to enforced disappearance and children of disappeared persons and to cooperate closely with the Governments concerned to search for and identify those children;

16. Appeals to the Governments concerned, in particular those that have not yet replied to the communications transmitted by the Working Group, to cooperate fully with it and, in particular, to reply promptly to its requests for information so that, while respecting its working methods based on discretion, it may perform its strictly humanitarian role;

17. Encourages the Governments concerned to give serious consideration to requests for visits to their countries by the Working Group so as to enable the Group to fulfil its mandate even more effectively;

18. Expresses its profound thanks to the many Governments that have cooperated with the Working Group and replied to its requests for information and to the Governments that have invited the Group to visit their countries, requests them to give all necessary attention to the recommendations of the Group, and invites them to inform the Group of any action they take on those recommendations;

19. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to continue to study this question as a matter of priority and to take any steps it may deem necessary to the pursuit of the task of the Working Group and to the follow-up to its recommendations when it considers the report to be submitted by the Group to the Commission at its sixty-first session;

20. Renews its requests to the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Working Group with all of the facilities it requires to perform its functions, especially for carrying out missions and following them up;

21. Recalls Economic and Social Council decision 2001/221 of 4 June 2001, in which the Council endorsed the decision of the Commission on Human Rights to create an intersessional open-ended working group, with the mandate to prepare a draft legally binding normative instrument for the protection of all persons from enforced disappearance;

22. Welcomes the decision of the Commission on Human Rights to convene the intersessional working group before its sixty-first session, with a view to the prompt completion of its work and the submission of its report to the Commission at its sixty-first session;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to keep it informed of the steps he takes to secure the widespread dissemination and promotion of the Declaration;

24. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to it at its sixty-first session a report on the steps taken to implement the present resolution;

25. Decides to consider the question of enforced disappearances, in particular the implementation of the Declaration, at its sixtieth session, under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Torture and cruel treatment

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 741], the Special Rapporteur on torture, Theo van Boven (Netherlands), described his activities from 15 December 2002 to 15 December 2003 [E/CN.4/2004/56]. He had sent 154 letters to 76 countries on alleged torture of individuals, 71 letters reminding Governments of a number of cases transmitted in previous years and 369 urgent appeals to 80 Governments on behalf of individuals who, it was feared, might suffer torture and other forms of ill-treatment. A summary of the communications sent by the Special Rapporteur and of replies received were contained in an addendum to the report [E/CN.4/2004/56/Add.1]. The Special Rapporteur drew attention to a number of guarantees for individuals deprived of their liberty, with a view to protecting them from the risk of torture and other forms of ill-treatment, examined the question of HIV/AIDS and the right to freedom from cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment or punishment, and provided information on the follow-up to his 2003 preliminary study [YUN 2003, p. 741] on the situation of trade in and production of equipment specifically designed to inflict torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, its origin, destination and forms. Annexed to the report was a list of issues of particular concern regarding torture and other forms of ill-treatment examined by the Special Rapporteur and his predecessors between 1986 and 2004.

In a further report [E/CN.4/2005/62/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur summarized follow-up to recommendations made regarding visits to Azerbaijan [YUN 2000, p. 682], Chile [YUN 1995, p. 756], Mexico [YUN 1997, p. 666], the Russian Federation [YUN 1994, p. 1016], Spain [YUN 2003, p. 742], Turkey [YUN 1998, p. 681] and Uzbekistan [YUN 2002, p. 712].

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2004/41], the Commission, condemning all forms of torture, urged States to become parties to the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (see p. 666). Governments were called on to eliminate the practice and to prevent and prohibit the production, trade, export and use of equipment specifically designed to inflict torture. The Commission decided to extend for three years the Special Rapporteur's mandate and called on States and NGOs to provide the information requested by the Special Rapporteur and to combat the proliferation of torture equipment; the Special Rapporteur was asked to report on the proliferation of the equipment and to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 2004 and a report to the Commission in 2005.

On 22 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for three years (decision 2004/261).

In November, the Commission appointed Manfred Nowak (Austria) as Special Rapporteur.

Subcommission action. On 9 August [res. 2004/1], the Subcommission recommended that all States develop independent and effective domestic mechanisms as concrete means of combating torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Further report of Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 58/164 [YUN 2003, p. 742] and to Commission resolution 2004/41 (see p. 733), the Secretary-General, in September, transmitted the interim report of the Special Rapporteur [A/59/324], which further described his activities from 16 December 2003 to 31 July 2004 and covered issues of special concern to him. In addition to communications contained in his report to the Commission (see above), the Special Rapporteur had transmitted 94 letters concerning allegations of torture to 42 Governments and 237 urgent appeals to 58 Governments on behalf of persons who might be at risk of torture or other forms of ill-treatment. As a follow-up to his previous reports to the Assembly on the prohibition of torture and other forms of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment in the context of anti-terrorism measures, the Special Rapporteur drew attention to attempts to circumvent the absolute and non-derogable nature of the prohibition. The report also discussed the principle of non-refoulement, highlighting the jurisprudence underlying it and increasing efforts to undermine it. Also examined was the impact of torture on victims. Noting that the consequences of torture went beyond the damage caused to victims and also affected their families and community at large, the Special Rapporteur advocated a holistic understanding of the impact on victims, so as to develop adequate assistance.

Communications. In January [E/CN.4/2004/G/19], Spain stated that the provisional report of the Special Rapporteur on his 2003 visit [YUN 2003, p. 742] contained factual errors that undermined the report's conclusions.

In May [A/59/96], Uzbekistan transmitted the text of the action plan it had adopted to comply with the 1984 Convention (see p. 666).

Voluntary fund for torture victims

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2004/41], the Commission, recognizing the need for international assistance to victims of torture, appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute annually to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture and, if possible, to increase their contributions. The Secretary-General was asked to continue to include the Fund among the programmes receiving donations at the annual UN Pledging Conference for Development Activities and to ensure adequate staffing and technical facilities for UN bodies and mechanisms dealing with torture. The Fund's Board of Trustees was asked to report in 2005.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to a 2003 Commission resolution [YUN 2003, p. 742], the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.4/2004/53], which supplemented and updated information contained in his previous report on the Fund's operation [YUN 2003, p. 742].

An addendum to the report [E/CN.4/2004/53/Add.1] described progress made on the evaluation of the Fund. The UN Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) had finalized the terms of reference for the evaluation and recruited two consultants for the project. The evaluation team visited Geneva (23-27 February) and was to conduct on-site evaluations of projects from March to May (see below).

Note by Secretariat. A September note of the Secretariat [A/59/353] stated that the Secretary-General would not submit his annual report on the activities of the Fund to the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth (2004) session because the Board's meeting had been postponed. A comprehensive report would be submitted in 2005.

Further report of Secretary-General. A November report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/2005/54 & Corr.1] provided information on the recommendations of the Fund's Board of Trustees at its twenty-third session (4-8 October). Contributions received during the year totalled $7,763,701 from 32 States, three individuals and three NGOs. The total available for new grants to assist victims of torture amounted to some $165,376 against requests amounting to $13.2 million. The Board recommended a total of $6.7 million in grants to 172 organizations in 61 countries, which were approved on 11 October by the High Commissioner on behalf of the Secretary-General. New grants totalling $6,765,668 were also allocated to 179 projects in numerous countries. The Board estimated that $14 million would be needed to cover new requests at its next session. Annexed to the report was a list of organizations and activities financed by the Fund in 2004.

OIOS report. By a November note [E/CN.4/2005/55], the Secretariat transmitted an OIOS report on its review of the Fund's functioning, in accordance with a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 742]. The report said that the Fund was fulfilling its mandate and having a positive impact on victims of torture. OIOS stated that it was encouraged by the work of 16 projects financed by the Fund, which it had reviewed in Austria, Bangladesh, Canada, Chile, Rwanda and the United States. Opportunities existed for enhancing and expanding the Fund; currently it was inadequately financed in relation to the needs it met and the requests it received. Many of its existing management systems were no longer adequate, and its impact was not well communicated to stakeholders, including donors. With additional funding, the Fund had a great potential to increase its impact. Further measures recommended for improving the Fund's functioning related to its policy and mode of operation, staffing status, management system and funding.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/59/503/Add.1], adopted resolution 59/182 without vote [agenda item 105 (a)].

Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment

The General Assembly,

Recalling that freedom from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment is a non-derogable right that must be protected under all circumstances, including in times of internal or international disturbance or armed conflict, and that the prohibition of torture is explicitly affirmed in all relevant international instruments,

Recalling also that a number of international, regional and domestic courts, including the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, have recognized that the prohibition of torture is a peremptory norm of international law,

Recalling further the definition of torture contained in article 1 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,

Recalling the recommendation contained in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993 that high priority be given to providing the necessary resources to assist victims of torture and effective remedies for their physical, psychological and social rehabilitation, inter alia, through additional contributions to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture, and noting with satisfaction the existence of a considerable international network of centres for the rehabilitation of victims of torture,

Commending the persistent efforts by non-governmental organizations to combat torture and to alleviate the suffering of victims of torture,

1. Condemns all forms of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including through intimidation, which are and shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever and can thus never be justified, and calls upon all Governments to implement fully the prohibition of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

2. Condemns in particular any action or attempt by States or public officials to legalize or authorize torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment under any circumstances, including on grounds of national security or through judicial decisions, and calls upon Governments to eliminate any practices of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

3. Urges Governments to take effective measures to prevent torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including their gender-based manifestations;

4. Stresses that all allegations of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment must be promptly and impartially examined by the competent national authority, that those who encourage, order, tolerate or perpetrate acts of torture must be held responsible and severely punished, including the officials in charge of the place of detention where the prohibited act is found to have been committed, and takes note in this respect of the Principles on the Effective Investigation and Documentation of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (the Istanbul Principles) as a useful tool in efforts to combat torture;

5. Stresses also that all acts of torture must be made offences under domestic criminal law, and emphasizes that acts of torture are serious violations of international humanitarian law and can constitute crimes against humanity and war crimes and that the perpetrators of all acts of torture must be prosecuted and punished;

6. Urges States to ensure that any statement that is established to have been made as a result of torture shall not be invoked as evidence in any proceedings, except against a person accused of torture as evidence that the statement was made;

7. Stresses that States must not punish personnel who are involved in the custody, interrogation or treatment of any individual subjected to any form of arrest, detention or imprisonment for not obeying orders to commit or conceal acts amounting to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

8. Recalls that States shall not expel, return ("refouler") or extradite a person to another State where there are substantial grounds for believing that the person would be in danger of being subjected to torture;

9. Stresses that national legal systems must ensure that victims of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment obtain redress, are awarded fair and adequate compensation and receive appropriate social and medical rehabilitation, urges Governments to take effective measures to this end, and in this regard encourages the development of rehabilitation centres;

10. Calls upon all Governments to take appropriate effective legislative, administrative, judicial and other measures to prevent and prohibit the production, trade, export and use of equipment that is specifically designed to inflict torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment;

11. Notes with appreciation that one hundred and thirty-nine States have become parties to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, and urges all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the Convention as a matter of priority;

12. Invites all States parties to the Convention that have not yet done so to consider making the declarations provided for in articles 21 and 22 of the Convention and to consider the possibility of withdrawing their reservations to article 20, and urges all States parties to notify the Secretary-General of their acceptance of the amendments to articles 17 and 18 of the Convention as soon as possible;

13. Urges States parties to comply strictly with their obligations under the Convention, including, in view of the high number of reports not submitted, their obligation to submit reports in accordance with article 19 of the Convention, and invites States parties to incorporate a gender perspective and information concerning children and juveniles when submitting reports to the Committee against Torture;

14. Calls upon States parties to give early consideration to signing and ratifying the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, which was adopted on 18 December 2002 by the General Assembly in its resolution 57/199 and which provides further measures for use in the fight against and prevention of torture, and notes in this context that ratifications by twenty States parties are required for the Optional Protocol to enter into force;

15. Welcomes the work of the Committee against Torture and the report of the Committee, submitted in accordance with article 24 of the Convention;

16. Calls upon the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in conformity with her mandate established by the General Assembly in its resolution 48/141 of 20 December 1993, to continue to provide, at the request of Governments, advisory services for the preparation of national reports to the Committee and for the prevention of torture, as well as technical assistance in the development, production and distribution of teaching material for this purpose;

17. Urges States parties to take fully into account the conclusions and recommendations made by the Committee after its consideration of their reports;

18. Notes with appreciation the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment on the overall trends and developments with regard to his mandate, and encourages the Special Rapporteur to continue to include in his recommendations proposals on the prevention and investigation of torture, including its gender-based manifestations;

19. Requests the Special Rapporteur to continue to consider including in his report information on the follow-up by Governments to his recommendations, visits and communications, including progress made and problems encountered;

20. Calls upon all Governments to cooperate with and assist the Special Rapporteur in the performance of his task, to supply all necessary information requested by the Special Rapporteur, to respond appropriately and expeditiously to his urgent appeals and to give serious consideration to responding favourably to requests by the Special Rapporteur to visit their countries, and urges them to enter into a constructive dialogue with the Special Rapporteur with respect to the follow-up to his recommendations;

21. Stresses the need for the continued regular exchange of views among the Committee, the Special Rapporteur and other relevant United Nations mechanisms and bodies, as well as for the pursuance of cooperation with relevant United Nations programmes, notably the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, with a view to enhancing further their effectiveness and cooperation on issues relating to torture, inter alia, by improving their coordination;

22. Expresses its gratitude and appreciation to the Governments, organizations and individuals that have already contributed to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture;

23. Stresses the importance of the work of the Board of Trustees of the Fund, and appeals to all Governments and organizations to contribute annually to the Fund, preferably by 1 March before the annual meeting of the Board, if possible with a substantial increase in the level of contributions;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to all Governments the appeals of the General Assembly for contributions to the Fund, to continue to include the Fund on an annual basis among the programmes for which funds are pledged at the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities and to assist the Board of Trustees of the Fund in its appeal for contributions and in its efforts to make better known the existence of the Fund;

25. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure, within the overall budgetary framework of the United Nations, the provision of adequate staff and facilities for the bodies and mechanisms involved in combating torture and assisting victims of torture, commensurate with the strong support expressed by Member States for combating torture and assisting victims of torture;

26. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-first session and to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session a report on the status of the Convention and a report on the operations of the Fund;

27. Calls upon all Governments, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and other United Nations bodies and agencies, as well as relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to commemorate, on 26 June, the United Nations International Day in Support of Victims of Torture;

28. Decides to consider at its sixtieth session the reports of the Secretary-General, including the report on the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture, the report of the Committee against Torture and the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Freedom of expression

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In accordance with a 2002 Commission request [YUN 2002, p. 716], the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, Ambeyi Ligabo (Kenya), described his 2003 activities [E/CN.4/2004/62]. He had sent allegation letters and urgent appeals to 99 countries, on behalf of numerous individuals whose right to the freedom of opinion and expression was reportedly threatened or violated. The texts of the communications he sent and replies received from Governments were summarized in an addendum [E/CN.4/2004/62/Add.1]. The Special Rapporteur updated information contained in his previous report [YUN 2003, p. 745] relating to access to information, particularly regarding the prevention of HIV/AIDS, and the safeguard of human rights, especially the right to freedom of opinion and expression while adopting and implementing counter-terrorism measures. The Special Rapporteur concluded that, although positive measures had been taken in a number of countries to better protect and promote the right to freedom of opinion and expression, the situation remained grim, as violations continued. Of particular concern were continuing attacks against journalists and media practitioners in many countries, including killings, for which perpetrators were often not punished adequately. Urging Governments to take measures to protect journalists from attacks and to end the impunity of the perpetrators, the Special Rapporteur said an in-depth study on the security of journalists, particularly in situations of armed conflict, was necessary, and he would welcome a request from the Commission to undertake the study. Also, in the legitimate effort to prevent and eliminate terror, the right to information was vulnerable and susceptible to restrictions. Thus, he would consider reporting annually on the subject. The Special Rapporteur, cautioning against the concentration of large media groups in the hands of a few business corporations, advocated a pluralistic approach to information, as well as a survey of the scope of accessible information held by parliaments and the development of initiatives aimed at monitoring the implementation of the right to information. He would welcome the opportunity of gathering information on proposals to enhance the right by the adoption of a global and/or regional binding instrument.

The Special Rapporteur visited Côte d'Ivoire (28 January–5 February) [E/CN.4/2004/62/Add.3, E/CN.4/2005/64/Add.2] at the invitation of the Government, where he determined that the main obstacle to the right to freedom of opinion and expression was the conflict that had plagued the country since 2002 (see p. 170). Human rights violations, including violence against women, children and migrants, had reached an intolerable level, as had attacks and death threats against journalists and media offices, which hampered the circulation of publications and impeded the exercise of the right to freedom of opinion and expression. Highlighting the negative role played by the media in the conflict, the Special Rapporteur noted that, owing to the lack of regulatory mechanisms entailing obligations, responsibility and discipline among newspaper publishers and editors, journalists tended to write without following their professional ethics. With little or no professional training, they remained vulnerable to the pressure of political power. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government accord priority to the fight against impunity and abide by the decisions in the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement [YUN 2003, p. 166], particularly with regard to the disarmament process and national reconciliation and reconstruction, as well as the establishment of national human rights mechanisms. As decided in the Agreement, article 35 of the Constitution should be reformulated in order to guarantee the right to freedom of expression and the right to vote in a pluralistic environment. The Government should join efforts with civil society to reactivate and reinforce existing media institutions and professional associations, which had been overwhelmed by the political conflict.

In Colombia (22–29 February) [E/CN.4/2005/64/Add.3], the Special Rapporteur found that the 40-year civil war between the Government and rebel groups had created a highly violent environment that undermined freedom of opinion and expression. The most common targets included human rights defenders, trade union leaders, church dignitaries and media representatives, as well as women, children, indigenous people and all those who, in the exercise of their right to freedom of opinion and expression, were perceived to be against one of the parties to the conflict. Infringement of the right had been encouraged by such government strategies as the “democratic security” policy, under which government forces arrested and detained persons accused of terrorism or criticisms and remarks interpreted as an attack on the State, and by related anti-terrorism legislation. Other factors included the existence of paramilitary groups who impinged on people's lives and rights, the stigmatization of persons and the concentration of the media in the hands of a few owners. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government and all parties to the conflict restart the process of national reconciliation and reconstruction; prepare and implement a national plan on human rights; and ensure the protection of journalists, trade unionists, human rights defenders and teachers. All ethnic groups should be granted access to comprehensive and impartial information and the opportunity of expressing themselves freely.

During his visit to Serbia and Montenegro (10–20 October) [E/CN.4/2005/64/Add.4], the Special Rapporteur found that, in the aftermath of past conflicts, the polarization of opinions, stigmatization of ethnic groups and the use of hate speech had continued to aggravate instability and to undermine the development of freedom of opinion and expression. The situation was particularly difficult in the province of Kosovo, where, despite the work of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (see p. 404), much remained to be done to achieve sustainable peaceful coexistence and tolerance among all the ethnic groups and to create an environment where freedom of opinion and expression could be fully exercised. The media, in particular, faced numerous difficulties relating to hostile and restrictive legislation, among other things. The Special Rapporteur recommended a series of measures, including the establishment of a mechanism to monitor regularly the status of minorities' freedom of opinion and expression and a consistent strategy against the dissemination of hatred and hate speech.

The Special Rapporteur visited Italy (20-29 October) [E/CN.4/2005/64/Add.5], where he found that the concentration of media control in the hands of government officials, and the related issue of conflict of interest, constituted the most worrisome challenge to the full enjoyment of the right to freedom of opinion and expression. The problem was illustrated by several incidents in which media professionals were dismissed or relieved of their jobs for criticizing the Government. Also of concern were the situation of migrants and children, and potential problems relating to the role of ombudspersons in monitoring abuses and deficiencies in provincial and municipal public administrations. The Special Rapporteur, noting the need for the Government to review its policy and facilitate professionalism and independence of the media, recommended that it take measures to ensure the full enjoyment of the right to freedom of opinion and expression and work closely with civil society in that regard. There was a need for the Government to ensure the participation of multiple actors in television broadcasting, depoliticize the media sector, address the issue of conflict of interest, particularly concerning the President of the Council of Ministers, facilitate migrants' access to information and establish a national institution for human rights protection.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2004/42], the Commission called on States to ensure respect for the right to freedom of opinion and expression; end violations of the right and create conditions to prevent such violation; ensure that victims of violations had an effective remedy and that persons exercising the right were not discriminated against, particularly in employment, housing, the justice system, social services and education; respect freedom of expression in the media; encourage a diverse ownership of media and information sources; create an enabling environment for the training and professional development of the media; and refrain from the use of imprisonment or imposition of fines for offences relating to the media and from using counter-terrorism as a pretext to restrict the right to freedom of opinion and expression. The Commission stressed the importance of the active participation of the Special Rapporteur and the High Commissioner in the second phase of the World Summit on the Information Society, scheduled for 2005 (see p. 845), in order to provide information and expertise on matters relating to the right to freedom of opinion and expression. The Special Rapporteur was asked to report in 2005, and the Secretary-General was asked to assist him.

Report of High Commissioner. A February report of the High Commissioner [E/CN.4/2004/55], submitted in response to a 2002 Commission request [YUN 2002, p. 716], summarized information regarding conscientious objection to military service received from 22 Governments, 10 national human rights institutions, one inter-governmental organization and six NGOs. The report identified trends in national laws regulating conscientious objection and described the development of the right and the jurisprudence of various international human rights bodies. The High Commissioner said that the report indicated that the right to conscientious objection to military service was grounded in existing human rights norms guaranteeing the right to freedom of conscience and religion, and there were indications that an increasing number of Member States were continuing to develop or improve provisions for the right.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2004/35], the Commission called on States to review their laws and practices relating to conscientious objection to military service and asked OHCHR to prepare an analytical report providing supplementary information on best practices regarding the right, for consideration in 2006.

Terrorism

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 746], the Secretary-General, in a January report [E/CN.4/2004/50], presented replies received from two Governments in response to an OHCHR questionnaire seeking the views of Member States on the implications of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations for the full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, the possible establishment of a voluntary fund for victims of terrorism and ways to rehabilitate them.

Also in response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 746], the Secretary-General, in a March report [E/CN.4/2004/91], summarized comments received from four Governments on the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism, as well as action taken in that regard by the Security Council and its Counter-Terrorism Committee, UN human rights special procedures, treaty bodies and OHCHR. The report reviewed the OHCHR publication Digest of Jurisprudence of the United Nations and Regional Organizations on the Protection of Human Rights while Countering Terrorism, which compiled relevant excerpts from the jurisprudence of UN human rights bodies and others in Europe, Africa and the Americas. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 58/187 [YUN 2003, p. 748], requesting the High Commissioner to submit a study on the extent to which human rights special procedures and treaty-monitoring bodies were able to address the compatibility of national counter-terrorism measures with international human rights obligations (see p. 740), the report summarized the replies of five Governments, in response to an OHCHR communication seeking Member States' views on the subject. The Secretary-General concluded that international concern remained high over the continuing menace of terrorism and the importance of protecting human rights while countering it. Although international law and Security Council resolutions had set out Governments' obligations in countering terrorism, international cooperation, involving regional organizations, was essential, and OHCHR had initiated important cooperation with key partners. Regarding possibilities for future action by the Commission, two options could be considered: the designation of an independent expert to gather and analyse information and provide recommendations or the appointment of a special rapporteur or representative to examine the question.

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 31 to 14, with 8 abstentions, the Commission, on 19 April [res. 2004/44], urged States to enhance cooperation in the fight against terrorism and asked human rights mechanisms and procedures to address the consequences of the acts, methods and practices of terrorist groups in their reports. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Special Rapporteur to consult with competent UN system bodies in finalizing her report. OHCHR was asked to respond to requests from interested Governments for assistance and advice regarding compliance with international human rights standards when undertaking measures to combat terrorism, and to circulate in all official UN languages the Special Rapporteur's reports on terrorism and human rights.

On 21 April [res. 2004/87], the Commission asked the High Commissioner to examine the question of the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism, to make general recommendations to States and provide them with assistance and advice upon their request, to complete the study requested in General Assembly resolution 58/187 [YUN 2003, p. 748] and to report to the Assembly in 2004 and to the Commission in 2005. The Commission decided to designate for a one-year period an independent expert to assist the High Commissioner and to report in 2005 on ways of strengthening the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism.

On 15 June, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision to designate an independent expert and its request to the expert to report in 2005 (decision 2004/227).

In July, Robert Goldman (United States) was appointed independent expert.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 2003 Subcommission request [YUN 2003, p. 746], the Special Rapporteur on terrorism and human rights, Kalliopi K. Koufa (Greece), submitted a June final report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/40], which built on a 1999 preliminary report [YUN 1999, p. 642] and 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 648], 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 717] and 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 746] progress reports. The final report discussed previously identified issues that needed further consideration and clarification, notably, the problem of a clear and precise definition of terrorism, and related human rights and humanitarian law concerns. Also addressed were issues that had not been developed, such as accountability for acts of terrorism, focusing on the questions of State-sponsored terrorism (State actors) and the applicability of human rights norms to non-State terrorist operatives. The Special Rapporteur concluded that, owing to the complexity of the issue of terrorism and human rights, there was a need to draw on disciplines other than international law to better understand the phenomenon and to design responses to it. As the most important issues to address in that regard, said the Special Rapporteur, were an examination of the many root causes of terrorism and a review of strategies for reducing or preventing it, she recommended that the Subcommission undertake a study of those questions. In her conclusions and recommendations, she addressed issues relating to extradition, impunity, the periodic review of national counter-terrorism measures, undue fear of terrorism, the distinction between armed conflict and terrorism, and between terrorism and other criminal activities, bringing perpetrators of terrorist acts to justice, the work of the Counter-Terrorism Committee, and international guidelines for counter-terrorism measures. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Subcommission consider requesting her to draw up a comprehensive document based on her work.

An August working paper of the Special Rapporteur [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/47] contained a preliminary framework draft of principles and guidelines concerning human rights and terrorism, in accordance with a 2003 Subcommission resolution [YUN 2003, p. 747].

Note by Secretariat. By a July note [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/39], the Secretariat stated that the final report of the Special Rapporteur (see above) had exceeded the maximum page limit allowed for such reports, as did her 2003 progress report. Owing to the fact that a waiver was granted for the final report, but not for the progress report, it was not possible to proceed with the translation of both into all UN official languages, as requested in Commission resolution 2004/44 (see above). Consequently, only the final report was being issued in all official languages as a document.

Subcommission action. On 12 August [res. 2004/21], the Subcommission asked OHCHR to transmit and ensure the distribution of the Special Rapporteur's final report (see above) to the Commission in 2005. The Secretary-General was asked to ensure that the final report and all previous reports and documents submitted by the Special Rapporteur could be accessed by those seeking information on the activities of the Economic and Social Council on the website "UN action against terrorism". The Special Rapporteur was asked to compile all her reports in one study, reflecting important points, aspects and recommendations contained therein. The Subcommission recommended that the Commission recommend to the Council that a compilation into a comprehensive document of all reports and documents submitted by the Special Rapporteur be published as a UN publication as part of the human rights study series.

On the same date [dec. 2004/109], the Subcommission decided to establish in 2005 a sessional working group with the mandate to develop detailed principles and guidelines, with relevant commentary, regarding human rights promotion and protection when combating terrorism, based on, among other things, the preliminary framework draft of principles and guidelines contained in the working paper prepared by the Special Rapporteur (see above).

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 58/187 [YUN 2003, p. 748], the Secretary-General, in October [A/59/404], provided an overview of UN action to implement the resolution. The report described activities to counter terrorism undertaken by the Security Council's Counter-Terrorism Committee, OHCHR, special procedures and treaty bodies. The Secretary-General said that UN human rights mechanisms, treaty bodies and the High Commissioner had further clarified the international human rights foundation on which counter-terrorism action must be based, including full respect for the principles of necessity and proportionality, for the non-derogability of certain rights even in time of national emergency, and for the role of the courts and national human rights institutions in ensuring the compatibility of counter-terrorism measures with national and international human rights obligations. He hoped that the Commission's appointment of an independent expert (see above) to assist the High Commissioner in addressing the issue would lead to a more integrated and coherent understanding of it.

Report of High Commissioner. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 58/187 and Commission resolution 2004/87 (see p. 739), the High Commissioner submitted an October report [A/59/428] containing the completed study on the extent to which human rights special procedures and treaty monitoring bodies were able, within their existing mandates, to address the compatibility of national counter-terrorism measures with international human rights obligations. The report presented the views of 13 States on the issue, which, together with earlier views summarized in the Secretary-General's interim report (see p. 738), indicated that States strongly condemned terrorist acts but also agreed that counter-terrorism measures should respect human rights. New proposals put forward included the idea of a code for the protection of human rights against terrorism. However, varying views were expressed on the question of the extent to which special procedures and treaty monitoring bodies were able to address the subject. Some States were open to considering new ways of dealing with the matter, while others considered that the existing mechanisms were adequate for the task and the establishment of a new mechanism could lead to duplication. The report described national counter-terrorism measures and the related activities of the Commission's special procedures and of the Subcommission and treaty monitoring bodies, as well as the work of the Counter-Terrorism Committee. The High Commissioner concluded that, owing to the wide range of rights under pressure from counter-terrorism measures, the analysis provided by special procedures was fragmented rather than being a coherent and integrated treatment of the compatibility of those measures with international human rights obligations. Also, the capacity of treaty monitoring bodies to address the issue was limited by several factors, including the fact that many States had not ratified the treaties most directly relevant to counter-terrorism, and that the treaty bodies, in the course of a year, were often able to address only a fraction of national counter-terrorism measures taken worldwide. Thus, there were significant gaps in the consideration of national counter-terrorism measures by the UN human rights system. Effective measures might require steps that affected mandates, processes and resources.

On 20 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/59/503/Add.2], adopted resolution 59/191 without vote [agenda item 105 (b)].

Protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming also the fundamental importance, including in response to terrorism and the fear of terrorism, of respecting all human rights and fundamental freedoms and the rule of law,

Recalling that States are under the obligation to protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms of all persons, and deploring violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the context of the fight against terrorism,

Recognizing that the respect for human rights, the respect for democracy and the respect for the rule of law are interrelated and mutually reinforcing,

Noting the declarations, statements and recommendations of a number of human rights treaty monitoring bodies and special procedures on the question of the compatibility of counter-terrorism measures with human rights obligations,

Recalling its resolutions 57/219 of 18 December 2002 and 58/187 of 22 December 2003 as well as Commission on Human Rights resolutions 2003/68 of 25 April 2003 and 2004/87 of 21 April 2004 and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights,

Recalling also its resolution 48/141 of 20 December 1993 and, inter alia, the responsibility of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to promote and protect the effective enjoyment of all human rights,

Reaffirming that acts, methods and practices of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations are activities aimed at the destruction of human rights, fundamental freedoms and democracy, threatening the territorial integrity and the security of States and destabilizing legitimately constituted Governments, and that the international community should take the necessary steps to enhance cooperation to prevent and combat terrorism,

Noting the declaration on the issue of combating terrorism contained in the annex to Security Council resolution 1456(2003) of 20 January 2003, in particular the statement that States must ensure that any measures taken to combat terrorism comply with all their obligations under international law and should adopt such measures in accordance with international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law,

Reaffirming its unequivocal condemnation of all acts, methods and practices of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, wherever and by whomsoever committed, regardless of their motivation, as criminal and unjustifiable, and renewing its commitment to strengthen international cooperation to prevent and combat terrorism,

Deploring the suffering caused by terrorism to the victims and their families, and expressing its profound solidarity with them,

Stressing that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms recognized in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights without distinction of any kind, including on the grounds of race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

1. Reaffirms that States must ensure that any measure taken to combat terrorism complies with their obligations under international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law;

2. Also reaffirms the obligation of States, in accordance with article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to respect certain rights as non-derogable in any circumstances, recalls, in regard to all other Covenant rights, that any measures derogating from the provisions of the Covenant must be in accordance with that article in all cases, and underlines the exceptional and temporary nature of any such derogations;

3. Calls upon States to raise awareness about the importance of these obligations among national authorities involved in combating terrorism;

4. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to resolution 58/187, in which it is stated that it is imperative that all States work to uphold and protect the dignity of individuals and their fundamental freedoms, as well as democratic practices and the rule of law, while countering terrorism;

5. Takes note with appreciation of the study of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights submitted pursuant to resolution 58/187;

6. Encourages States to make available to relevant national authorities the "Digest of Jurisprudence of the United Nations and Regional Organizations on the Protection of Human Rights while Countering Terrorism" and to take into account its content, and requests the High Commissioner to update and publish it periodically;

7. Welcomes the ongoing dialogue established in the context of the fight against terrorism between the Security Council and its Counter-Terrorism Committee and the relevant bodies for the promotion and protection of human rights, and encourages the Security Council and its Counter-Terrorism Committee to strengthen the links and to continue to develop co-operation with relevant human rights bodies, in particular with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, giving due regard to the promotion and protection of human rights in the ongoing work pursuant to relevant Security Council resolutions relating to terrorism;

8. Requests all relevant special procedures and mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights, as well as the United Nations human rights treaty bodies, to consider, within their mandates, the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the context of measures to combat terrorism, and encourages them to coordinate their efforts where appropriate, in order to promote a consistent approach on this subject;

9. Encourages States, while countering terrorism, to take into account relevant United Nations resolutions and decisions on human rights, and encourages them to consider the recommendations of the special procedures and mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights and the relevant comments and views of United Nations human rights treaty bodies;

10. Notes with appreciation the appointment of an independent expert on the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism pursuant to Commission on Human Rights resolution 2004/87, and encourages States to cooperate fully with him;

11. Requests the High Commissioner, making use of existing mechanisms, to continue:

(a) To examine the question of the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism, taking into account reliable information from all sources;

(b) To make general recommendations concerning the obligation of States to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms while taking actions to counter terrorism;

(c) To provide assistance and advice to States, upon their request, on the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism, as well as to relevant United Nations bodies;

12. Requests the independent expert to take into account the debate held during the fifty-ninth regular session of the General Assembly in finalizing the report mandated by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 2004/87, to be presented through the High Commissioner to the Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-first session;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-first session and to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session.

Also on 20 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/59/503/Add.2], adopted resolution 59/195 by recorded vote (127-50-8) [agenda item 105 (b)].

Human rights and terrorism

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recalling the Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations, as well as the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism,

Recalling also the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, in which the Conference reaffirmed that the acts, methods and practices of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, as well as its linkage in some countries to drug trafficking, are activities aimed at the destruction of human rights, fundamental freedoms and democracy, threatening the territorial integrity and the security of States and destabilizing legitimately constituted Governments, and that the international community should take the necessary steps to enhance cooperation to prevent and combat terrorism,

Recalling further the United Nations Millennium Declaration adopted by the General Assembly,

Recalling, in this regard, the reference in the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Millennium Declaration to the fact that terrorism itself is a violation of human rights and must be combated as such and that efforts at combating it must be pursued, however, in full compliance with established international norms,

Recalling also its resolutions 48/122 of 20 December 1993, 49/185 of 23 December 1994, 50/186 of 22 December 1995, 52/133 of 12 December 1997, 54/109 and 54/110 of 9 December 1999, 54/164 of 17 December 1999, 55/158 of 12 December 2000, 56/160 of 19 December 2001, 57/219 and 57/220 of 18 December 2002 and 58/174 of 22 December 2003,

Recalling in particular that, in its resolution 52/133, it requested the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States on the implications of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations for the full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling previous resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights on the issue of human rights and terrorism, as well as on hostage-taking,

Bearing in mind all other relevant General Assembly resolutions,

Bearing in mind also relevant Security Council resolutions,

Aware that, at the dawn of the twenty-first century, the world is witness to historic and far-reaching transformations, in the course of which forces of aggressive nationalism and religious and ethnic extremism continue to produce fresh challenges,

Alarmed that acts of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations aimed at the destruction of human rights have continued despite national and international efforts,

Convinced that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, wherever and by whomever committed, can never be justified in any instance, including as a means to promote and protect human rights,

Concerned that, despite the efforts of the international community, acts of hostage-taking in different forms and manifestations, inter alia, committed by terrorists and armed groups, continue to take place and have even increased in many regions of the world,

Bearing in mind that the right to life is the basic human right, without which a human being can exercise no other right,

Bearing in mind also that terrorism creates an environment that destroys the right of people to live in freedom from fear,

Reiterating that all States have an obligation to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms and to ensure effective implementation of their obligations under international law,

Seriously concerned about the gross violations of human rights perpetrated by terrorist groups,

Expressing its deepest sympathy and condolence to all the victims of terrorism and their families,

Alarmed in particular at the possibility that terrorist groups may exploit new technologies to facilitate acts of terrorism, which may cause massive damage, including huge loss of human life,

Emphasizing the need to intensify the fight against terrorism at the national level, to enhance effective international cooperation in combating terrorism in conformity with international law, including relevant State obligations under international human rights and international humanitarian law, and to strengthen the role of the United Nations in this respect,

Emphasizing also that States shall deny safe haven to those who finance, plan, support or commit terrorist acts or provide safe havens,

Reaffirming that all measures to counter terrorism must be in strict conformity with international law, including international human rights standards and obligations,

Mindful of the need to protect the human rights of and guarantees for the individual in accordance with the relevant human rights principles and instruments, in particular the right to life,

Noting the growing consciousness within the international community of the negative effects of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations on the full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms and on the establishment of the rule of law and democratic freedoms as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Concerned by the tendencies to link terrorism and violence with religion,

Noting the developments that have occurred since its fifty-eighth session on addressing the issue of human rights and terrorism at the national, regional and international levels,

1. Reiterates its unequivocal condemnation of the acts, methods and practices of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations as activities aimed at the destruction of human rights, fundamental freedoms and democracy, threatening the territorial integrity and the security of States, destabilizing legitimately constituted Governments, undermining pluralistic civil society and having adverse consequences for the economic and social development of States;

2. Strongly condemns the violations of the right to life, liberty and security;

3. Rejects the identification of terrorism with any religion, nationality or culture;

4. Profoundly deplores the increasing number of innocent persons, including women, children and the elderly, killed, massacred and maimed by terrorists in indiscriminate and random acts of violence and terror, which cannot be justified in any circumstances;

5. Expresses its solidarity with the victims of terrorism;

6. Reaffirms the decision of the Heads of State and Government, as contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, to take concerted action against international terrorism and to accede as soon as possible to all the relevant regional and international conventions;

7. Urges the international community to enhance cooperation at the regional and international levels in the fight against terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, in accordance with relevant international instruments, including those relating to human rights, with the aim of its eradication;

8. Calls upon States to take all necessary and effective measures, in accordance with relevant provisions of international law, including international human rights standards, to prevent, combat and eliminate terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, wherever and by whomever it is committed, and also calls upon States to strengthen, where appropriate, their legislation to combat terrorism in all its forms and manifestations;

9. Urges all States to deny safe haven to terrorists;

10. Calls upon States to take appropriate measures, in conformity with relevant provisions of national and international law, including international human rights standards, before granting refugee status, for the purpose of ensuring that an asylum-seeker has not planned, facilitated or participated in the commission of terrorist acts, including assassinations, and to ensure, in conformity with international law, that refugee status is not abused by the perpetrators, organizers or facilitators of terrorist acts and that claims of political motivation are not recognized as grounds for refusing requests for the extradition of alleged terrorists;

11. Urges States and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to review, with full respect for legal safeguards, the validity of a refugee status decision in an individual case if credible and relevant evidence comes to light which indicates that the person in question has planned, facilitated or participated in the commission of terrorist acts;

12. Condemns the incitement to ethnic hatred, violence and terrorism;

13. Stresses that every person, regardless of nationality, race, sex, religion or any other distinction, has a right to protection from terrorism and terrorist acts;

14. Expresses concern about the growing connection between terrorist groups and other criminal organizations engaged in the illegal traffic in arms and drugs at the national and international levels, as well as the consequent commission of serious crimes such as murder, extortion, kidnapping, assault, the taking of hostages and robbery, and requests the relevant United Nations bodies to continue to give special attention to this question;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to seek the views of Member States on the implications of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations for the full enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms and on the possible establishment of a voluntary fund for the victims of terrorism, as well as on ways and means to rehabilitate the victims of terrorism and to reintegrate them into society, with a view to incorporating his findings in his report to the General Assembly;

16. Takes note of the work of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights on the issue of terrorism and the final report of the Special Rapporteur of the Subcommission on terrorism and human rights;

17. Requests the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in the course of the examination of the question and in the conduct of any study on terrorism that may be mandated, and in its activities relating to the issue of terrorism, to adopt a comprehensive approach, in particular by giving full and equal attention to the issues raised in the present resolution with relation to the grave impact of terrorism on the enjoyment of the human rights of individuals;

18. Decides to consider the question at its sixtieth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 59/195:

Peace and security

By a recorded vote of 32 to 15, with 6 abstentions, the Commission, on 21 April [res. 2004/65], affirming that States should promote international peace and security, urged them to respect and put into practice the principles and purposes of the UN Charter in their relations with other States.

Small arms

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 49 to 2, with 2 abstentions, the Commission, on 21 April [dec. 2004/124], approved the Subcommission's 2003 request [YUN 2003, p. 752] to the Secretary-General to transmit a questionnaire drawn up by the Special Rapporteur on the prevention of human rights violations committed with small arms and light weapons (see below) to Governments, national human rights institutions and NGOs to solicit information in connection with her study.

vention of human rights violations committed with small arms and light weapons (see below) to Governments, national human rights institutions and NGOs to solicit information in connection with her study.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 2002 Subcommission request [YUN 2002, p. 720] and to a 2003 Commission decision [YUN 2003, p. 752], the Special Rapporteur on the prevention of human rights violations committed with small arms and light weapons, Barbara Frey (United States), submitted a June progress report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/37], which addressed the humanitarian consequences of small arms in situations of armed conflict, international law protections regarding the availability, misuse and transfer of those weapons, and the gender implications of small arms availability and use. The Special Rapporteur concluded that the international community had not taken the necessary steps to keep small arms out of the hands of those who used them to violate human rights and international humanitarian law. As such, the human rights community, including the Subcommission, should call for human security and human rights to be at the centre of international action regarding small arms. It was critical for States to provide training to their armed forces on basic principles of international human rights and humanitarian law, particularly with regard to the use of small arms. The international community needed to strengthen the design and enforcement of arms embargoes, and States should enforce criminal sanctions against violators of those embargoes. Those who knowingly supplied small arms used to commit genocide, war crimes and crimes against humanity should be investigated and prosecuted, and women should be involved in policy-making regarding the availability and use of the weapons.

An addendum to the report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/37/Add.1] presented draft principles on the prevention of human rights violations committed with small arms and commentary thereto.

Subcommission action. On 13 August [dec. 2004/123], the Subcommission asked the Special Rapporteur to report in 2005.

Economic, social and cultural rights

Right to development

Reports of Secretary-General. The Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/2004/38], submitted in accordance with a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 670], describing activities undertaken by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (see p. 663), the Committee on the Rights of the Child (see p. 667), the Commission's special procedures and OHCHR, which contributed to the realization of economic, social and cultural rights. The Secretary-General concluded that progress continued to increase understanding of those rights, marked by higher levels of cooperation among UN agencies and a greater focus on the rights in technical cooperation and in the follow-up to the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance [YUN 2001, p. 615].

An August report of the Secretary-General [A/59/255] updated and complemented information contained in the High Commissioner's report (see below). OHCHR had organized, in February, a high-level seminar on global partnership for development (see p. 746). The Office was providing support to the Working Group on the Right to Development to establish a high-level task force for a one-year period to help the Group fulfil its mandate.

On 20 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report (decision 59/528).

Report of High Commissioner. In response to a 1998 Commission request [YUN 1998, p. 683], the High Commissioner submitted a January report [E/CN.4/2004/22], which summarized the activities undertaken by OHCHR to implement the right to development and provided information on the implementation of related General Assembly and Commission resolutions, as well as inter-agency cooperation within the UN system to implement Commission resolutions.

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/172 [YUN 2003, p. 754], the Secretary-General, in a January note of the Secretariat [E/CN.4/2004/116], drew attention to the High Commissioner's report.

Reports of independent expert. In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 753], the independent expert on the right to development, Arjun Sengupta (India), submitted his sixth report [E/CN.4/2004/WG.18/2] in February to the Working Group on the Right to Development, which considered the impact of international economic and financial issues on the enjoyment of the right. Building on his 2003 preliminary study on the topic [YUN 2003, p. 752], the expert outlined the characteristics of the current phase of globalization and discussed how it had impacted on the desired development outcomes and the methods of realizing them. Related issues discussed in that context were growth performance and prospects, poverty incidence and distributional inequalities, technology transfer and intellectual property rights, capital mobility and financial instability, globalization and the implications for policy-making, the loss of policy autonomy, the constraints of institutional capacity, the speed of adjustment and the need for coordinated policies. The expert observed that globalization had not always resulted in increased economic growth for developing countries, and where it had, it had not always been associated with increased equity and social justice, nor with reduced poverty. Thus, there was a need to regulate and guide the market to make the production of goods and services correspond to the desired outcomes consistent with the realization of the right to development. States needed to adopt appropriate policies that harnessed the opportunity provided by the global economy, and a development policy framework that would enable them to realize all human rights and fundamental freedoms progressively and sustainably. The expert outlined policy measures and steps at the national and international levels that could help in managing the process of globalization, with a view to realizing human rights, including the right to development. In that context, he revisited his proposal of a development compact [YUN 2001, p. 657] as a possible means of implementing a country-level right to development programme.

The independent expert visited Argentina, Brazil and Chile [E/CN.4/2004/WG.18/3] to assess progress in implementing the right to development. He focused on identifying and evaluating constraints and elements conducive to realizing the right, and on assessing the role of development cooperation in complementing national development initiatives. In that connection, he studied the interplay of national and international economic and financial developments affecting the development process, the institutional framework for planning and policy formulation, and mechanisms for implementing and monitoring development outcomes consistent with the realization of human rights. The expert found that the three South American economies, although they had common developmental concerns and a similar policy approach, experienced different outcomes from the liberal model of economic reform. Each of them had something to offer in terms of a human rights perspective on development: the success of the social safety net in Argentina, the rights-based approach to social protection in Brazil and the long-term perspective on the social development strategy and its anchoring in a sound macroeconomic balance and fiscal prudence in Chile. Yet, none of them offered complete working models for implementing the right to development.

Seminar. In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 753], OHCHR organized a high-level seminar on global partnerships for development (Geneva, 9-10 February) [E/CN.4/2004/23/Add.1], which addressed the contribution of UN agencies and programmes to the right to development, country experience in operationalizing the right, partnership for development, international trade and development, and national perspectives on the right. The seminar adopted points for consideration by the Working Group on the Right to Development (see below), which emphasized, among other things, the need to focus deliberations relating to the right on operational steps more than on general debate, building and strengthening effective partnerships, ensuring that free trade was fair trade and improving the well-being of the vulnerable, the marginalized, minorities, the disadvantaged, women and children.

Working Group activities. The open-ended Working Group on the Right to Development, at its fifth session (Geneva, 11-20 February) [E/CN.4/2004/23 & Corr.1], considered the High Commissioner's report (see p. 745), the independent expert's study and report on country visits (see p. 745), and information provided jointly by the NGOs Europe-Third World Centre and the American Association of Jurists [E/CN.4/2004/WG.18/CRP.1]. The Group agreed on the importance of establishing partnerships between the Commission, UN agencies, funds and programmes, multilateral financial and development institutions and the World Trade Organization (WTO) for implementing the right to development. It held that its focus and follow-up would be on mainstreaming and implementing the right as established in the Declaration on the Right to Development, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 41/128 [YUN 1986, p. 717]. The Group adopted a series of conclusions, noting, among other things, that there was an emerging consensus among Member States and development institutions regarding the need to strengthen the global partnership for development, taking into account the principles of accountability, transparency, non-discrimination, equal participation, the rule of law, good governance and international cooperation. The Group recommended that the Commission consider renewing the Group's mandate for one year, and establish a high-level task force on the implementation of the right, for an initial period of one year, to assist the Group to fulfil its mandate. The participation of the Group's Chair would ensure continuity between the task force and the Group, and Member States would participate as observers. The task force would meet for five days and submit a report of its findings and recommendations for the Group's consideration. For its first report, the task force would consider obstacles and challenges to the implementation of the Millennium Development Goals [YUN 2000, p. 51] in relation to the right to development; social impact assessments in the areas of trade and development at the national and international levels; and best practices in implementing the right.

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 49 to 3, the Commission, on 13 April [res. 2004/7], referring to its 2003 request to the Subcommission to prepare a concept document for its consideration in 2005, asked OHCHR to continue to support the Subcommission in its work on the document and to provide support to the proposed high-level task force on the implementation of the right to development, established within the framework of the Working Group (see above). The High Commissioner was asked to undertake effective activities aimed at strengthening the global partnership for development between Member States, development agencies and international development, financial and trade institutions, and to reflect those activities in her 2005 report to the Commission. Endorsing the conclusions and recommendations of the Working Group, the Commission decided to renew the Group's mandate for one year and to convene its sixth session before the Commission's 2005 session to consider the findings and recommendations of the task force. The Commission decided to consider the renewal of the mandate of the independent expert in 2005.

On 19 April [res. 2004/29], by a recorded vote of 48 to none, with 5 abstentions, the Commission called on States to guarantee economic, social and cultural rights without discrimination of any kind; to secure through national development policies and with international assistance, full realization of those rights, giving particular attention to the most vulnerable and disadvantaged, most often women and children, especially girls, and communities living in extreme poverty; and to promote the effective participation of civil society in decision-making processes related to those rights. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 2005 on the implementation of the Commission's resolution.

Notes by Secretariat. In a June Secretariat note [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/13], the Secretary-General drew the Subcommission's attention to the High Commissioner's report (see p. 745) containing information on OHCHR activities relating to the implementation of the right to development, and to his 2003 report to the General Assembly on the right [YUN 2003, p. 754].

By a July note [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/14], the Secretariat, referring to a 2003 Subcommission request [YUN 2003, p. 754], noted that Florizelle O'Connor (Jamaica) was unable to submit the working paper identifying and analysing possible alternatives that would enable the Subcommission to respond to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 753].

Additional notes by the Secretariat transmitted, for consideration by the Subcommission, studies on existing bilateral and multilateral programmes and policies for development partnership [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/15 & Corr.1]; on the legal nature of the right to development and enhancement of its binding nature [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/16]; on mainstreaming the right to development into international trade law and policy at WTO [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/17]; on policies for development in a globalizing world: what can the human rights approach contribute? [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/18]; and on a human rights approach to development: concepts and implications [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/19], all commissioned by OHCHR, in accordance with a 2003 Commission request to the Subcommission to prepare a concept document, and to OHCHR to assist it [YUN 2003, p. 753].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2004/23], adopted decision 2004/249 by recorded vote (51-3) [agenda item 14 (g)].

The right to development

At its 48th plenary meeting, on 22 July 2004, the Economic and Social Council took note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2004/7 of 13 April 2004 and approved the decision of the Commission to extend for one year the mandate of the Working Group on the Right to Development and to convene its sixth session before the sixty-first session of the Commission for a period of ten working days; of those ten working days, five should be allocated to the high-level task force established within the framework of the Working Group to hold its meetings and submit its findings and recommendations to the Working Group well in advance of its session; the Working Group in turn would meet for a period of five working days to consider the findings and recommendations of the task force and further initiatives in accordance with its mandate.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2004/249:

In favour: Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Burundi, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Cuba, Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, France, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Kenya, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mozambique, Namibia, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Panama, Poland, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sweden, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Japan, United States.

Subcommission action. On 9 August [dec. 2004/104], the Subcommission recommended that the Commission ask Ms. O'Connor to submit in 2005 the working paper requested by the Subcommission in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 754].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/59/503/Add.2], adopted resolution 59/185 by recorded vote (181-2-4) [agenda item 105 (b)].

The right to development

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, which expresses, in particular, the determination to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, as well as to employ international mechanisms for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Recalling that the Declaration on the Right to Development, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 41/128 of 4 December 1986, confirmed that the right to development is an inalienable human right and that equality of opportunity for development is a prerogative both of nations and of individuals who make up nations, and that the individual is the central subject and beneficiary of development,

Stressing that the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action reaffirmed the right to development as a universal and inalienable right and an integral part of fundamental human rights, and the individual as the central subject and beneficiary of development,

Reaffirming the objective of making the right to development a reality for everyone, as set out in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted by the General Assembly on 8 September 2000,

Welcoming the framework modalities agreed at the General Council meeting of the World Trade Organization in Geneva on 1 August 2004 in key areas such as agriculture, market access for non-agricultural products, trade facilitation, development and services,

Welcoming also the outcome of the eleventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held at São Paulo, Brazil, from 13 to 18 June 2004, on the theme "Enhancing the coherence between national development strategies and global economic processes towards economic growth and development, particularly of developing countries",

Recalling all its previous resolutions and those of the Commission on Human Rights on the right to development, in particular Commission resolution 1998/72 of 22 April 1998, on the urgent need to make further progress towards the realization of the right to development as set out in the Declaration on the Right to Development,

Recalling also the Thirteenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Kuala Lumpur from 20 to 25 February 2003, and the Fourteenth Ministerial Conference of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Durban, South Africa, from 17 to 19 August 2004,

Reiterating its continuing support for the New Partnership for Africa's Development as a development framework for Africa,

Recognizing that historical injustices have undeniably contributed to the poverty, underdevelopment, marginalization, social exclusion, economic disparity, instability and insecurity that affect many people in different parts of the world, in particular in developing countries,

Stressing that poverty eradication is one of the critical elements in the promotion and realization of the right to development and that poverty is a multifaceted problem that requires a multifaceted and integrated approach in addressing economic, political, social, environmental and institutional dimensions at all levels, especially in the context of the millennium development goal of halving, by 2015, the proportion of the world's people whose income is less than one dollar a day and the proportion of people who suffer from hunger,

1. Endorses the agreed conclusions and recommendations adopted by the Working Group on the Right to Development at its fifth session, and calls for their immediate, full and effective implementation by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and other relevant actors;

2. Welcomes the establishment of a high-level task force on the implementation of the right to development within the framework of the Working Group to assist the Working Group to fulfil its mandate, and looks forward to the consideration by the Working Group of its concrete recommendations at its next session;

3. Calls upon the Working Group and, through it, its high-level task force, to contribute actively towards the mainstreaming of the right to development at the high-level event to be held in New York at the commencement of the sixtieth session of the General Assembly, at which a comprehensive review will be undertaken of the progress made in the fulfilment of all the commitments contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, including the internationally agreed development goals and the global partnership required for their achievement;

4. Stresses the importance of the core principles contained in the conclusions of the Working Group at its third session, congruent with the purpose of international human rights instruments, such as equality, non-discrimination, accountability, participation and international cooperation, as critical to mainstreaming the right to development at the national and international levels, and underlines the importance of the principles of equity and transparency;

5. Notes with concern that the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights at its fifty-sixth session did not consider the working paper identifying and analysing possible alternatives, and requests the Subcommission, without further delay, to submit to the Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-second session the concept document establishing options for the implementation of the right to development and their feasibility;

6. Takes note of the convening and outcome of the second Social Forum held at Geneva on 22 and 23 July 2004 on the theme "Poverty, rural poverty and human rights" and the strong support extended to it by the

Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, and invites all stakeholders, including Member States, to participate actively in its subsequent sessions;

7. Reaffirms the commitment to implement the goals and targets set out in all the outcome documents of the major United Nations conferences and summits and their review processes, in particular those relating to the realization of the right to development, recognizing that the realization of the right to development is critical to achieving the objectives, goals and targets set in those outcome documents;

8. Also reaffirms that the realization of the right to development is essential to the implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, which regards all human rights as universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated, places the human person at the centre of development and recognizes that, while development facilitates the enjoyment of all human rights, the lack of development may not be invoked to justify the abridgement of internationally recognized human rights;

9. Stresses that the basic responsibility for the promotion and protection of all human rights lies with the State, and reaffirms that States have the primary responsibility for their own economic and social development and that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized;

10. Reaffirms that States have the primary responsibility for the creation of national and international conditions favourable to the realization of the right to development and their commitment to cooperating with each other to that end;

11. Also reaffirms the need for an international environment that is conducive to the realization of the right to development;

12. Stresses the need to strive for greater acceptance, operationalization and realization of the right to development at the international and national levels, and calls upon States to institute the measures required for the implementation of the right to development as a fundamental human right;

13. Emphasizes the critical importance of identifying and analysing obstacles impeding the full realization of the right to development at both the national and the international levels;

14. Affirms that, while globalization offers both opportunities and challenges, the process of globalization remains deficient in achieving the objectives of integrating all countries into a globalized world, and stresses the need for policies and measures at the national and global levels to respond to the challenges and opportunities of globalization if this process is to be made fully inclusive and equitable;

15. Recognizes that, despite continuous efforts on the part of the international community, the gap between developed and developing countries remains unacceptably wide, that developing countries continue to face difficulties in participating in the globalization process and that many risk being marginalized and effectively excluded from its benefits;

16. Underlines the fact that the international community is far from meeting the target set in the Millennium Declaration of halving the number of people living in poverty by 2015, reaffirms the commitment made to meet that target, and emphasizes the principle of international cooperation, including partnership and commitment, between developed and developing countries towards achieving the goal;

17. Urges developed countries that have not yet done so to make concrete efforts towards meeting the targets of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product for official development assistance to developing countries and 0.15 to 0.2 per cent of their gross national product to least developed countries, and encourages developing countries to build on the progress achieved in ensuring that official development assistance is used effectively to help to meet development goals and targets;

18. Recognizes the need to address market access for developing countries, including in agriculture, services and non-agricultural products, in particular those of interest to developing countries;

19. Calls for the implementation of a desirable pace of meaningful trade liberalization, including in areas under negotiation; implementation of commitments on implementation-related issues and concerns; review of special and differential-treatment provisions, with a view to strengthening them and making them more precise, effective and operational; avoidance of new forms of protectionism; and capacity-building and technical assistance for developing countries as important issues in making progress towards the effective implementation of the right to development;

20. Recognizes the important link between the international economic, commercial and financial spheres and the realization of the right to development, stresses, in this regard, the need for good governance and broadening the base of decision-making at the international level on issues of development concern and the need to fill organizational gaps, as well as strengthen the United Nations system and other multilateral institutions, and also stresses the need to broaden and strengthen the participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in international economic decision-making and norm-setting;

21. Also recognizes that good governance and the rule of law at the national level assist all States in the promotion and protection of human rights, including the right to development, and agrees on the value of the ongoing efforts being made by States to identify and strengthen good governance practices, including transparent, responsible, accountable and participatory government, that are responsive and appropriate to their needs and aspirations, including in the context of agreed partnership approaches to development, capacity-building and technical assistance;

22. Further recognizes the important role and the rights of women and the application of a gender perspective as a cross-cutting issue in the process of realizing the right to development, and notes in particular the positive relationship between women's education and their equal participation in the civil, cultural, economic, political and social activities of the community and the promotion of the right to development;

23. Stresses the need for the integration of the rights of children, girls and boys alike, in all policies and programmes, and for ensuring the promotion and protection of those rights, especially in areas relating to health, education and the full development of their capacities;

24. Also stresses that further and additional measures must be taken at the national and international levels to fight HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases, taking into account ongoing efforts and programmes, and reiterates the need for international assistance in this regard;

25. Recognizes the need for strong partnerships with civil society organizations and the private sector in pursuit of poverty eradication and development, as well as for corporate social responsibility;

26. Emphasizes the urgent need for taking concrete measures to fight against all forms of corruption at the national and international levels, to prevent, detect and deter in a more effective manner international transfers of illicitly acquired assets and to strengthen international cooperation in asset recovery, stresses the importance of a genuine political commitment on the part of all Governments through a firm legal framework, and in this context urges States to sign and ratify as soon as possible, and States parties to implement effectively, the United Nations Convention against Corruption;

27. Also emphasizes the need to strengthen further the activities of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in the promotion and realization of the right to development, including ensuring effective use of the financial and human resources necessary to fulfil its mandate, and calls upon the Secretary-General to provide the Office of the High Commissioner with the necessary resources;

28. Reaffirms the request to the High Commissioner, in mainstreaming the right to development, to undertake effectively activities aimed at strengthening the global partnership for development between Member States, development agencies and the international development, financial and trade institutions, and to reflect those activities in detail in her report to the Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-first session;

29. Calls upon the United Nations agencies, funds and programmes, as well as the specialized agencies, to mainstream the right to development in their operational programmes and objectives, and stresses the need for the international financial and multilateral trading systems to mainstream the right to development in their policies and objectives;

30. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of Member States, United Nations organs and bodies, specialized agencies, funds and programmes, international development and financial institutions, in particular the Bretton Woods institutions, and non-governmental organizations;

31. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session and an interim report to the Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution, including efforts undertaken at the national, regional and international levels in the promotion and realization of the right to development, and invites the Chairperson of the Working Group on the Right to Development to present a verbal update to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session.

Human rights and international solidarity

Note by Secretariat. A note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/2004/84], referring to a 2002 Commission request [YUN 2002, p. 722] to the Subcommission to undertake a study on the implementation of the Commission's resolution, noted that the Subcommission, by a 2003 decision [YUN 2003, p. 754], had asked Rui Baltazar Dos Santos Alves (Mozambique) to prepare a working paper on human rights and international solidarity, for consideration in 2004 (see below).

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 37 to 15, with 1 abstention, the Commission, on 21 April [res. 2004/66], urged the international community to consider concrete measures to promote and consolidate international assistance to developing countries in their endeavours for development and for the promotion of conditions that made possible the full realization of human rights. It recognized that the "third-generation rights" or "right to solidarity" needed further progressive development within the UN human rights machinery to respond to the increasing challenges to international cooperation in that area.

Further note by Secretariat. A June Secretariat note [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/43] transmitted a preliminary report on human rights and international solidarity prepared by Mr. Dos Santos Alves. The paper pointed out that one of the greatest challenges currently facing humanity was the widening gulf between the developed and the developing countries. International solidarity as an instrument for the attainment of human rights needed new development, with the objective of building a more just and equitable international order that favoured human rights. To facilitate a better understanding of the principle, the paper proposed a preliminary work plan for the Subcommission's consideration.

Subcommission action. On 12 August [dec. 2004/111], the Subcommission asked Mr. Dos Santos Alves to prepare, without financial implications, an expanded version of his working paper for consideration in 2005.

Democratic and equitable international order

By a recorded vote of 31 to 15, with 7 abstentions, the Commission, on 21 April [res. 2004/64], urged States to continue efforts to establish a democratic and equitable international order. The Commission asked human rights treaty bodies, OHCHR and Commission and Subcommission mechanisms to contribute to the implementation of its resolution. The Secretary-General was asked to bring the resolution to the attention of Member States, UN organs and bodies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs and to disseminate it widely.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/59/503/Add.2], adopted resolution 59/193 by recorded vote (125-55-6) [agenda item 105 (b)].

Promotion of a democratic and equitable international order

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 57/213 of 18 December 2002, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2004/64 of 21 April 2004,

Reaffirming the commitment of all States to fulfil their obligations to promote universal respect for, and observance and protection of, all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, other instruments relating to human rights and international law,

Affirming that the enhancement of international cooperation for the promotion and protection of all human rights should continue to be carried out in full conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter and international law as set forth in Articles 1 and 2 of the Charter and, inter alia, with full respect for sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence, the non-use of force or the threat of force in international relations and non-intervention in matters that are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State,

Recalling the Preamble to the Charter, in particular the determination to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small,

Reaffirming that everyone is entitled to a social and international order in which the rights and freedoms set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights can be fully realized,

Reaffirming also the determination expressed in the Preamble to the Charter to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, to practice tolerance and good-neighbourliness, and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Considering the major changes taking place on the international scene and the aspirations of all peoples for an international order based on the principles enshrined in the Charter, including promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, peace, democracy, justice, equality, the rule of law, pluralism, development, better standards of living and solidarity,

Considering also that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaims that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set out therein, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

Reaffirming that democracy, development and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms are interdependent and mutually reinforcing, and that democracy is based on the freely expressed will of the people to determine their own political, economic, social and cultural systems and their full participation in all aspects of their lives,

Emphasizing that democracy is not only a political concept but that it also has economic and social dimensions,

Recognizing that democracy, respect for all human rights, including the right to development, transparent and accountable governance and administration in all sectors of society, and effective participation by civil society are an essential part of the necessary foundations for the realization of social and people-centred sustainable development,

Noting with concern that racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance may be aggravated by, inter alia, inequitable distribution of wealth, marginalization and social exclusion,

Underlining the fact that it is imperative for the international community to ensure that globalization becomes a positive force for all the world's people, and that only through broad and sustained efforts, based on common humanity in all its diversity, can globalization be made fully inclusive and equitable,

Stressing that efforts to make globalization fully inclusive and equitable must include policies and measures, at the global level, that correspond to the needs of developing countries and countries with economies in transition and are formulated and implemented with their effective participation,

Having listened to the peoples of the world, and recognizing their aspirations to justice, to equality of opportunity for all, to the enjoyment of their human rights, including the right to development, to live in peace and freedom and to equal participation without discrimination in economic, social, cultural, civil and political life,

Resolved to take all measures within its power to secure a democratic and equitable international order,

1. Affirms that everyone is entitled to a democratic and equitable international order;

2. Also affirms that a democratic and equitable international order fosters the full realization of all human rights for all;

3. Calls upon all Member States to fulfil their commitment expressed in Durban, South Africa, during the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance to maximize the benefits of globalization through, inter alia, the strengthening and enhancement of international cooperation to increase equality of opportunities for trade, economic growth and sustainable development, global communications through the use of new technologies, and increased intercultural exchange through the preservation and promotion of cultural diversity, and reiterates that only through broad and sustained efforts to create a shared future based upon our common humanity and all its diversity can globalization be made fully inclusive and equitable;

4. Affirms that a democratic and equitable international order requires, inter alia, the realization of the following:

(a) The right of all peoples to self-determination, by virtue of which they can freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development;

(b) The right of peoples and nations to permanent sovereignty over their natural wealth and resources;

(c) The right of every human person and all peoples to development;

(d) The right of all peoples to peace;

(e) The right to an international economic order based on equal participation in the decision-making process, interdependence, mutual interest, solidarity and cooperation among all States;

(f) Solidarity, as a fundamental value, by virtue of which global challenges must be managed in a way that distributes costs and burdens fairly, in accordance with basic principles of equity and social justice, and ensures that those who suffer or benefit the least receive help from those who benefit the most;

(g) The promotion and consolidation of transparent, democratic, just and accountable international institutions in all areas of cooperation, in particular through the implementation of the principles of full and equal participation in their respective decision-making mechanisms;

(h) The right to equitable participation of all, without any discrimination, in domestic and global decision-making;

(i) The principle of equitable regional and gender-balanced representation in the composition of the staff of the United Nations system;

(j) The promotion of a free, just, effective and balanced international information and communications order, based on international cooperation for the establishment of a new equilibrium and greater reciprocity in the international flow of information, in particular correcting the inequalities in the flow of information to and from developing countries;

(k) Respect for cultural diversity and the cultural rights of all, since this enhances cultural pluralism, contributes to a wider exchange of knowledge and understanding of cultural backgrounds, advances the application and enjoyment of universally accepted human rights across the world and fosters stable, friendly relations among peoples and nations worldwide;

(l) The right of every person and all peoples to a healthy environment;

(m) The promotion of equitable access to benefits from the international distribution of wealth through enhanced international cooperation, in particular in economic, commercial and financial international relations;

(n) The enjoyment by everyone of ownership of the common heritage of mankind;

(o) The shared responsibility of the nations of the world for managing worldwide economic and social development as well as threats to international peace and security that should be exercised multilaterally;

5. Stresses the importance of preserving the rich and diverse nature of the international community of nations and peoples, as well as respect for national and regional particularities and various historical, cultural and religious backgrounds in the enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights;

6. Also stresses that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that the international community must treat human rights globally in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis, and reaffirms that, while the significance of national and regional particularities and various historical, cultural and religious backgrounds must be borne in mind, it is the duty of States, regardless of their political, economic and cultural systems, to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms;

7. Urges all actors on the international scene to build an international order based on inclusion, justice, equality and equity, human dignity, mutual understanding and promotion of and respect for cultural diversity and universal human rights, and to reject all doctrines of exclusion based on racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

8. Reaffirms that all States should promote the establishment, maintenance and strengthening of international peace and security and, to that end, should do their utmost to achieve general and complete disarmament under effective international control, as well as to ensure that the resources released by effective disarmament measures are used for comprehensive development, in particular that of the developing countries;

9. Recalls the proclamation by the General Assembly of its determination to work urgently for the establishment of an international economic order based on equity, sovereign equality, interdependence, common interest and cooperation among all States, irrespective of their economic and social systems, which shall correct inequalities and redress existing injustices, make it possible to eliminate the widening gap between the developed and the developing countries, and ensure steadily accelerating economic and social development and peace and justice for present and future generations;

10. Reaffirms that the international community should devise ways and means to remove the current obstacles and meet the challenges to the full realization of all human rights and to prevent the continuation of human rights violations resulting therefrom throughout the world;

11. Urges States to continue their efforts, through enhanced international cooperation, towards the promotion of a democratic and equitable international order;

12. Requests the Commission on Human Rights, the human rights treaty bodies, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights and the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights to pay due attention, within their respective mandates, to the present resolution and to make contributions towards its implementation;

13. Calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner to build upon the issue of the promotion of a democratic and equitable international order, to take into account the present resolution in the preparations and development of the expert seminar to examine the interdependence between democracy and human rights that it will convene in February 2005, and to invite all Governments, specialized agencies, United Nations funds and programmes and interested non-governmental organizations to attend that seminar;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of Member States, United Nations organs, bodies and components, intergovernmental organizations, in particular the Bretton Woods institutions, and non-governmental organizations, and to disseminate it on the widest possible basis;

15. Decides to continue consideration of the matter at its sixty-first session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 59/193:

In favour: Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Philippines, Qatar, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, Timor-Leste, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkmenistan, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Globalization

Report of High Commissioner. In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 757], the High Commissioner submitted a January analytical study [E/CN.4/2004/40], which considered how globalization had brought new attention to the principle of non-discrimination—on the one hand providing opportunities for increasing commercial and cultural exchange, while on the other highlighting inequalities within and between countries. The prohibition of discrimination therefore provided an essential principle for globalization. The report focused on the interaction between the principle in human rights and trade law, and addressed the question of clarifying the principle and other key issues concerning government procurement, agricultural trade and social labelling. It concluded that respect for the principle was a fundamental means of promoting a more inclusive globalization that reduced inequalities within and between nations. To better integrate and implement the principle in the debate on globalization, the High Commissioner recommended measures relating to the human rights implications of general exceptions to trade rules, agricultural trade, the need to promote institutional coordination and human rights impact assessments.

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 38 to 15, the Commission, on 16 April [res. 2004/24], reaffirmed the commitment to create an environment conducive to development and to the elimination of poverty through good governance, transparency in the financial, monetary and trading systems and commitment to an open, equitable, rule-based, predictable and non-discriminatory multilateral trading and financial system. The High Commissioner was asked to bring her analytical report (see above) to the attention of WTO and other relevant international organizations, with a view to operationalizing its conclusions and recommendations. The High Commissioner was further asked to study and clarify the fundamental principle of participation and its application at the global level, with a view to recommending measures for its integration and effective implementation in the debate on globalization and to submit a comprehensive analytical study in 2005.

By a recorded vote of 51 to none, with 2 abstentions, the Commission, on 16 April [dec. 2004/107], approved the Subcommission's 2003 request [YUN 2003, p. 758] to publish in UN official languages the Special Rapporteur's preliminary report [YUN 2000, p. 696], progress report [YUN 2001, p. 663] and final report [YUN 2003, p. 757].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2004/23], adopted decision 2004/275 by recorded vote (49-1-1) [agenda item 14 (g)].

Globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of human rights

At its 49th plenary meeting, on 22 July 2004, the Economic and Social Council took note of Commission on Human Rights decision 2004/107 of 16 April 2004 and endorsed the Commission's request that the reports of the Special Rapporteurs on globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of human rights be published in the official languages of the United Nations.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2004/275:

In favour: Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Burundi, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Cuba, Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, France, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mozambique, Namibia, Panama, Poland, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Sweden, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 58/193 [YUN 2003, p. 758], the Secretary-General, in September [A/59/320], submitted a report summarizing the views of seven Governments on globalization and its impact on human rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/59/503/Add.2], adopted resolution 59/184 by recorded vote (129-53-4) [agenda item 105 (b)].

Globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and expressing in particular the need to achieve international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as well as the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Recalling also the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, Recalling further the Declaration on the Right to Development adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 41/128 of 4 December 1986,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the outcome documents of the twenty-third and twenty-fourth special sessions of the General Assembly, held in New York from 5 to 10 June 2000 and in Geneva from 26 June to 1 July 2000, respectively,

Recalling also its resolution 58/193 of 22 December 2003,

Recalling further Commission on Human Rights resolution 2004/24 of 16 April 2004 on globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights,

Recognizing that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that the international community must treat human rights globally in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis,

Realizing that globalization affects all countries differently and makes them more exposed to external developments, positive as well as negative, inter alia, in the field of human rights,

Realizing also that globalization is not merely an economic process, but that it also has social, political, environmental, cultural and legal dimensions, which have an impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights,

Realizing further the need to undertake a thorough, independent and comprehensive assessment of the social, environmental and cultural impact of globalization on societies,

Recognizing in each culture a dignity and value that deserve recognition, respect and preservation, convinced that, in their rich variety and diversity and in the reciprocal influences that they exert on one another, all cultures form part of the common heritage belonging to all humankind, and aware that the risk of a global monoculture poses more of a threat if the developing world remains poor and marginalized,

Recognizing also that multilateral mechanisms have a unique role to play in meeting the challenges and opportunities presented by globalization,

Expressing concern at the negative impact of international financial turbulence on social and economic development and on the full enjoyment of all human rights,

Deeply concerned that the widening gap between the developed and the developing countries, and within countries, has contributed, inter alia, to deepening poverty and has adversely affected the full enjoyment of all human rights, in particular in developing countries,

Noting that human beings strive for a world that is respectful of human rights and cultural diversity and that, in this regard, they work to ensure that all activities, including those affected by globalization, are consistent with those aims,

1. Recognizes that, while globalization, by its impact on, inter alia, the role of the State, may affect human rights, the promotion and protection of all human rights is first and foremost the responsibility of the State;

2. Reaffirms that narrowing the gap between rich and poor, both within and between countries, is an explicit goal at the national and international levels, as part of the effort to create an enabling environment for the full enjoyment of all human rights;

3. Reaffirms also the commitment to create an environment at both the national and the global levels that is conducive to development and to the elimination of poverty through, inter alia, good governance within each country and at the international level, transparency in the financial, monetary and trading systems and commitment to an open, equitable, rule-based, predictable and non-discriminatory multilateral trading and financial system;

4. Recognizes that, while globalization offers great opportunities, the fact that its benefits are very unevenly shared and its costs unevenly distributed represents an aspect of the process that affects the full enjoyment of all human rights, in particular in developing countries;

5. Welcomes the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of human rights, which focuses on the liberalization of agricultural trade and its impact on the realization of the right to development, including the right to food, and takes note of the conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

6. Calls upon Member States, relevant agencies of the United Nations system, intergovernmental organizations and civil society to promote equitable and environmentally sustainable economic growth for managing globalization so that poverty is systematically reduced and the international development targets are achieved;

7. Recognizes that only through broad and sustained efforts, including policies and measures at the global level to create a shared future based upon our common humanity in all its diversity, can globalization be made fully inclusive and equitable and have a human face, thus contributing to the full enjoyment of all human rights;

8. Underlines the urgent need to establish an equitable, transparent and democratic international system in which poor people and countries have a more effective voice;

9. Affirms that globalization is a complex process of structural transformation, with numerous interdisciplinary aspects, which has an impact on the enjoyment of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, including the right to development;

10. Affirms also that the international community should strive to respond to the challenges and opportunities posed by globalization in a manner that ensures respect for the cultural diversity of all;

11. Underlines, therefore, the need to continue to analyse the consequences of globalization for the full enjoyment of all human rights;

12. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and requests the Secretary-General to seek further the views of Member States and relevant agencies of the United Nations system and to submit a substantive report on this subject to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session.

Structural adjustment policies

Report of independent expert. The Commission considered a February report [E/CN.4/2004/47] of the independent expert on the effects of structural adjustment policies and foreign debt on human rights, Bernard Mudho (Kenya). The report reviewed progress made in implementing the heavily indebted poor countries (HIPC) initiative, explored the integration of human rights into national budgeting processes and analysed the impact of structural adjustment policies and foreign debt on the enjoyment of those rights, pointing out the need to examine interlinkages with such economic and social issues as multilateral trade and global initiatives to achieve the MDGs. The expert advocated increased support to the HIPC initiative, consideration to the role that national human rights institutions could play in monitoring the public expenditure performance and the implementation of the HIPC initiative, poverty reduction strategy papers and other initiatives and further cooperation between the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank. The Commission should encourage the expert to further explore the interlinkages with other issues, contribute to the follow-up process of the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development [YUN 2002, p. 953] and cooperate with other Commission mechanisms and human rights treaty bodies in further reviewing the effects of the foreign debt burden and related policies on the capacity of developing countries to adopt programmes for the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights.

Note by Secretariat. The Commission had before it a note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/2004/47/Add.2], which stated that the expert's visit to Kyrgyzstan had been postponed to an undetermined date.

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 29 to 14, with 10 abstentions, the Commission, on 16 April [res. 2004/18], asked the independent expert to explore further the interlinkages with trade and other issues, including HIV/AIDS, when examining the impact of structural adjustment and foreign debt, and to contribute to the follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development, with a view to bringing to the Commission's attention the effects of structural adjustment and foreign debt on the enjoyment of human rights. The expert was requested to draft general guidelines to be followed by States and by private, public, national and international financial institutions in the decision-making on and execution of debt repayments and structural reform programmes, to ensure that compliance with the commitments related to foreign debt would not undermine the obligations for the realization of fundamental economic, social and cultural rights, and to present a preliminary draft in 2005 and a final draft in 2006. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him.

Working paper. A July working paper, prepared by El-Hadji Guissé (Senegal) in response to a 2003 Subcommission request [YUN 2003, p. 760], highlighted the adverse effects of the debt owed by developing countries, evoking its origins and legal aspects and emphasizing ways in which it had contributed to extreme poverty and constituted an obstacle to human development. The debt burden, the paper concluded, rendered insurmountable problems affecting third world countries, including disease, famine, underdevelopment and lack of education and employment opportunities, among others. Thus, it constituted a serious impediment to the realization of all human rights.

Subcommission action. On 9 August [dec. 2004/106], the Subcommission asked Mr. Guissé to prepare, without financial implications, an expanded working paper on the effects of debt on human rights and to submit it in 2005.

Social Forum

Note by OHCHR. In June [E/CN.4/Sub.2/SF/2004/2], OHCHR presented the organizational details of the 2004 Social Forum, held in accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 2004/217.

Social Forum session. At its second session (Geneva, 22-23 July) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/26 & Corr.1], the Social Forum held panel discussions on the empowerment of people living in poverty; the voice of affected groups on rural poverty and extreme poverty; the role of human rights in the development of operational strategies to address poverty; and recommendations on elements for incorporating human rights into poverty reduction strategies. It adopted conclusions on the first three discussion topics. Regarding the challenge of extreme poverty, it recommended that Governments and international institutions recognize that poverty needed to be addressed from a human rights perspective, which emphasized the importance of empowerment and non-discrimination involving the poor. Other recommendations advocated measures for empowering the poor and for national-level responsibility and national ownership in overcoming poverty. At the international level, the Forum recommended that all human rights bodies and mechanisms include in their studies and reports the examination of situations of poverty and poverty eradication programmes implemented by States and other actors. There was a growing need to include the human rights dimension in international economic decisions, such as those relating to debt cancellation, commodity price regulation or multilateral and bilateral free trade treaties and other economic arrangements as a way of preventing the occurrence of poverty. The Forum proposed a stronger focus on poverty prevention, through a more systematic and rigorous assessment of the human rights impacts of economic policies, and that poverty impact assessment processes and mechanisms be made compulsory. It adopted recommendations regarding its activities and methodology for fulfilling its role as the “intellectual antechamber” to the Subcommission in matters within its competence.

Subcommission action. On 9 August [res. 2004/3], the Subcommission, noting that the selection of issues relating to economic, social and cultural rights had to be restricted because of the two-day limitation to the Social Forum’s meeting, recommended that the Commission study the possibility of extending the Forum’s annual intersessional meeting.

Also on 9 August [res. 2004/8], the Subcommission decided that the next meeting of the Forum would be held in 2005 in Geneva and that the theme would be “Poverty and economic growth: challenges to human rights”, to be addressed within the context of the five-year assessment of the goals set in the Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49]. The Forum was invited to submit in 2005 a separate report containing a summary of the discussions, including recommendations and draft resolutions. Governments, NGOs, international organizations, UN bodies and specialized agencies were invited to submit to the High Commissioner their views on the theme, and to submit to OHCHR information about best practices in poverty-eradication policies and programmes incorporating a human rights perspective. The High Commissioner was asked to maintain a database of those practices in the Forum’s web page. UN bodies and specialized agencies, relevant functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council, regional commissions, international financial institutions, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, special rapporteurs and independent experts, NGOs, scholars and workers’ associations were invited to submit studies to the Forum. Governments were asked to consider submitting reports to it on the obstacles encountered in their efforts to eradicate poverty. Gudmundur Alfredsson (Iceland), José Bengoa (Chile) and Antoanella-Iulia Motoc (Romania) were each asked to prepare a working paper for consideration in 2005. The Subcommission asked the Commission to recommend to the Economic and Social Council the establishment of a voluntary fund to facilitate the participation of grass-roots groups and disadvantaged organizations in the Forum. The Secretary-General was asked to disseminate information about the Forum, invite relevant individuals and organizations to attend it and to take practical measures for its success.

Transnational corporations

Commission action. On 20 April [dec. 2004/116], the Commission, taking note of a 2003 Subcommission resolution [YUN 2003, p. 761] and document on norms on the responsibilities of transnational corporations (TNCs) and other business enterprises with regard to human rights [ibid.], adopted recommendations relating to the activities of those corporations and the work of the Subcommission, which it submitted to the Economic and Social Council for approval (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July (decision 2004/279), the Council confirmed the importance and priority it accorded to the question of the responsibilities of TNCs with regard to human rights; and requested OHCHR to compile a report setting out the scope and legal status of existing initiatives and standards relating to the responsibility of TNCs and related business enterprises regarding human rights, including the draft norms, and to submit the report to the Commission in 2005. It affirmed that the draft norms [YUN 2003, p. 761] had not been requested by the Commission and, as a draft proposal, had no legal standing, and that the Subcommission should not perform any monitoring function in that regard.

Working group activities. The working group on the working methods and activities of TNCs, at its sixth session (Geneva, 29-30 July) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/21], continued to work on the draft norms on the responsibilities of TNCs and other business enterprises, towards the elaboration of a binding instrument. The group had before it a number of relevant background documents, including the draft norms approved by the Subcommission in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 761] and commentary thereto [ibid., p. 762]. The group considered current standards and standard-setting activities and comments by its members, Subcommission experts, Member States and NGOs. It adopted recommendations on its future work.

Subcommission action. On 26 July [dec. 2004/102], the Subcommission decided to establish a sessional working group to examine the working methods and activities of TNCs (see above).

On 12 August [res. 2004/16], the Subcommission decided to extend the mandate of the group for a three-year period, to enable it to fulfil its mandate, and asked it to report on its seventh (2005) session.

Coercive economic measures

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 36 to 14, with 3 abstentions, the Commission, on 16 April [res. 2004/22], requested the open-ended working group established to monitor and review progress made in the promotion and implementation of the right to development (see p. 744) to consider the question of human rights and the negative impact of unilateral coercive economic measures. The Commission decided to consider the negative impact of such measures in its work regarding the implementation of the right to development, and asked the High Commissioner to give urgent consideration to its resolution and the Secretary-General to bring the resolution to the attention of States, to seek their views on the implications and negative effects of those measures and to report in 2005.

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 762], the Secretary-General summarized information received from one State (Cuba) on the implications and negative effects of unilateral coercive economic measures [E/CN.4/2004/37].

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 58/171 [YUN 2003, p. 762], the Secretary-General, in an October report [A/59/436], presented further information received from five States regarding such measures.

On 20 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report (decision 59/528).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/59/503/Add.2], adopted resolution 59/188 by recorded vote (132-53) [agenda item 105 (b)].

Human rights and unilateral coercive measures
The General Assembly,

Recalling all its previous resolutions, the most recent of which was resolution 58/171 of 22 December 2003, and Commission on Human Rights resolution 2004/22 of 16 April 2004,

Reaffirming the pertinent principles and provisions contained in the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States proclaimed by the General Assembly in its resolution 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, in particular article 32 thereof, in which it declared that no State may use or encourage the use of economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, submitted pursuant to Commission on Human Rights resolution 1999/21 of 23 April 1999, and the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolutions 52/120 of 12 December 1997 and 55/110 of 4 December 2000,

Recognizing the universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated character of all human rights, and, in this regard, reaffirming the right to development as an integral part of all human rights,

Recalling that the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, called upon States to refrain from any unilateral coercive measure not in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations that creates obstacles to trade relations among States and impedes the full realization of all human rights,

Bearing in mind all the references to this question in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development, adopted by the World Summit for Social Development on 12 March 1995, the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women on 15 September 1995, the Istanbul Declaration on Human Settlements and the Habitat Agenda, adopted by the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) on 14 June 1996, and their five-year reviews,

Expressing its concern about the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures on international relations, trade, investment and cooperation,

Expressing its grave concern that, in some countries, the situation of children is adversely affected by unilateral coercive measures not in accordance with international law and the Charter that create obstacles to trade relations among States, impede the full realization of social and economic development and hinder the well-being of the population in the affected countries, with particular consequences for women and children, including adolescents,

Deeply concerned that, despite the recommendations adopted on this question by the General Assembly and recent major United Nations conferences, and contrary to general international law and the Charter, unilateral coercive measures continue to be promulgated and implemented with all their negative implications for the social-humanitarian activities and economic and social development of developing countries, including their extraterritorial effects, thereby creating additional obstacles to the full enjoyment of all human rights by peoples and individuals under the jurisdiction of other States,

Bearing in mind all the extraterritorial effects of any unilateral legislative, administrative and economic measures, policies and practices of a coercive nature against the development process and the enhancement of human rights in developing countries, which create obstacles to the full realization of all human rights,

Noting the continuing efforts of the open-ended Working Group on the Right to Development of the Commission on Human Rights, and reaffirming in particular its criteria, according to which unilateral coercive measures are one of the obstacles to the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development,

1. Urges all States to refrain from adopting or implementing any unilateral measures not in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations, in particular those of a coercive nature with all their extraterritorial effects, which create obstacles to trade relations among States, thus impeding the full realization of the rights set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other international human rights instruments, in particular the right of individuals and peoples to development;

2. Also urges all States to take steps to avoid and to refrain from adopting any unilateral measures not in accordance with international law and the Charter that impede the full achievement of economic and social development by the population of the affected countries, in particular children and women, that hinder their well-being and that create obstacles to the full enjoyment of their human rights, including the right of everyone to a standard of living adequate for their health and well-being and their right to food, medical care and the necessary social services, as well as to ensure that food and medicine are not used as tools for political pressure;

3. Invites all States to consider adopting administrative or legislative measures, as appropriate, to counteract the extraterritorial applications or effects of unilateral coercive measures;

4. Rejects unilateral coercive measures with all their extraterritorial effects as tools for political or economic pressure against any country, in particular against developing countries, because of their negative effects on the realization of all the human rights of vast sectors of their populations, in particular children, women and the elderly;

5. Calls upon Member States that have initiated such measures to commit themselves to their obligations and responsibilities arising from the international human rights instruments to which they are party by revoking such measures at the earliest possible time;

6. Reaffirms, in this context, the right of all peoples to self-determination, by virtue of which they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development;

7. Urges the Commission on Human Rights to take fully into account the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures, including the enactment of national laws and their extraterritorial application, in its task concerning the implementation of the right to development;

8. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in discharging her functions relating to the promotion, realization and protection of the right to development and bearing in mind the continuing impact of unilateral coercive measures on the population of developing countries, to give priority to the present resolution in her annual report to the General Assembly;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Member States, to continue to collect their views and information on the implications and negative effects of unilateral coercive measures on their populations and to submit an analytical report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session, highlighting the practical and preventive measures in this respect;

10. Decides to examine the question on a priority basis at its sixtieth session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 59/188:

In favour: Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nauru, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, Timor-Leste, Togo, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkmenistan, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Corruption

Commission action. On 16 April [dec. 2004/106], the Commission endorsed the Subcommission's 2003 decision [YUN 2003, p. 764] to appoint Christy Mbonu (Nigeria) as Special Rapporteur with the task of preparing a comprehensive study on corruption and its impact on the enjoyment of human rights, and the request to her to submit reports and to the Secretary-General to assist her.

On 22 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision (decision 2004/274).

Report of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 2003 Subcommission request [YUN 2003, p. 764], the Special Rapporteur submitted a July preliminary report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/23], which built on her 2003 working paper. The report explored some of the manifestations of corruption and identified the victims, the poor being the most vulnerable. It discussed the consequences of corruption in human rights terms and considered the campaign against impunity for perpetrators of corruption, covering national and international mechanisms relating to the subject. The Special Rapporteur found that all organizations worldwide lost about 6 per cent of their annual revenue to fraud and corruption and concluded that the first step in tackling the problem lay in realizing that it existed, and that it posed serious threats to peaceful coexistence among nations and violated people's rights embodied in international instruments. The Special Rapporteur emphasized the importance of the political will of leaders in combating corruption and encouraged States to sign and ratify the United Nations Convention against Corruption, adopted in General Assembly resolution 58/4 [YUN 2003, p. 1128]. She proposed the establishment and enforcement of national anti-corruption mechanisms; cooperation between States, including with regard to the role of the International Criminal Police Organization; and safety net mechanisms to protect citizens from corporate corruption resulting in bankruptcy and the collapse of companies.

Subcommission action. On 9 August [res. 2004/4], the Subcommission called on OHCHR, in cooperation with specialized agencies, to organize periodic high-level meetings, under the auspices of the Subcommission, to create greater awareness on the part of the international community, particularly States, of the importance of eliminating corruption. It asked the Secretary-General to facilitate the Special Rapporteur's work by enabling her to attend the meetings of the "Friends of the Convention".

Extreme poverty

Report of independent expert. In accordance with a 2002 Commission request [YUN 2002, p. 732], the independent expert on the question of human rights and extreme poverty, Anne-Marie Lizin (Belgium), submitted a February final report [E/CN.4/2004/43], which stated that extreme poverty was still a long way from being overcome and that numerous initiatives by the international community and development bodies could not hide the fact that the phenomenon continued to pose enormous problems. She recommended measures relating to the responsibility of affected States; effective legislation; restructuring of States and public governance; minimum income and employment opportunities; access to schools and health care; the role of women; microcredit as a policy component to combat extreme poverty; and continuing dialogue with affected populations. The expert said that it was vital for the Commission to remain attentive to the question of extreme poverty in connection with human rights, recommended the renewal of her mandate and advocated the idea of decentralization for the benefit of the poorest, first evaluated in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 660] and in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 732].

Commission action. On 16 April [res. 2004/23], the Commission asked OHCHR to give high priority to the relationship between extreme poverty and human rights and to pursue further work in that area, notably with regard to the draft guidelines on the integration of human rights into poverty reduction strategies (see below). It called on States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to take into account, in activities carried out under the United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006), proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 50/107 [YUN 1995, p. 844] (see p. 833), the links between human rights and extreme poverty, and efforts to empower people living in poverty to participate in decision-making processes on policies affecting them. The United Nations was called on to strengthen poverty eradication as a priority throughout the system. The Commission decided to extend for a period of two years the independent expert's mandate and asked her to report in 2005.

On 22 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision to extend the expert's mandate and its request to her to report (decision 2004/253).

Working paper. In response to a 2003 Subcommission request [YUN 2003, p. 761], José Bengoa (Chile) submitted a working paper [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/44], which discussed poverty, particularly extreme poverty resulting in social exclusion, as a violation of human rights. The paper examined a number of current initiatives and advocated a conception of poverty as the absence or underdevelopment of human capabilities and freedoms. It emphasized the need to empower the poor as a poverty-reduction human rights strategy.

International declaration

Ad hoc group of experts. In response to a 2003 Subcommission request [YUN 2003, p. 765], Mr. Bengoa, in his capacity as coordinator of the ad hoc group of experts to prepare a study on the draft of an international declaration on extreme poverty and human rights, presented a June progress report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/25] on the need to develop guiding principles on the implementation of human rights norms and standards in the context of the fight against extreme poverty. The report considered the challenge of poverty eradication and summarized discussions emanating from the International Experts Meeting on Women and Justice (Pune, India, 26-30 January), which covered draft guidelines on women and justice, presentations and discussions on women and poverty, and the need to develop guiding principles on human rights and extreme poverty within the framework of the ad hoc group's mandate. Based on those discussions, the group's previous work and consultations with people living in poverty, the group agreed on the need to draft a text on human rights and extreme poverty, which would serve as an empowerment tool for people living in poverty and those working with them. The group, recognizing that a number of outstanding issues needed to be more closely examined and resolved, recommended, for consideration by the Subcommission, broad consultations with regional and international organizations, NGOs, grass-roots organizations, academics and others to consider possible elements of a text, with particular efforts made to include in the process people living in poverty. It further recommended clarification of such outstanding issues as the nature of the document, the definition of poverty, the distinction between poverty and extreme poverty, the indivisibility of human rights versus the prioritization of certain rights in the context of poverty eradication or reduction, and a careful examination of a possible right-by-right approach. The group proposed to submit a final report in 2005. Annexed to the report was the outcome document of the Experts Meeting on Women.

A July addendum [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/25/Add.1] contained draft initial elements for discussion on possible guiding principles on human rights, poverty and extreme poverty, as well as preliminary comments received thereto from various counterparts.

Subcommission action. On 9 August [res. 2004/7], the Subcommission asked Ms. Motoc, Mr. Decaux, Mr. Yokota, Mr. Guissé and Mr. Bengoa to prepare, without financial implications, a progress report in 2005 and a final report in 2006 on the need to develop guiding principles on the implementation of existing human rights norms and standards in the context of the fight against extreme poverty. They were also asked to study the application of the human rights covenants and conventions in the context of poverty, in order to identify gaps and obstacles to their implementation; to consider situations of poverty in various parts of the world, as well as the policies of the World Bank, WTO, the International Monetary Fund and other international bodies for fighting poverty; to adopt an approach towards extreme poverty that strengthened bonds of solidarity and social inclusion mechanisms; and, with the assistance of the population groups concerned, to identify a range of indicators for keeping track of situations of extreme poverty and changes therein, pinpointing related needs. Governments and regional specialized bodies in Africa, Asia, Europe and Latin America, as well as international agencies, such as the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, UNDP and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), were asked to provide the experts with information. NGOs were asked to contribute to the study and OHCHR was asked to support it.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/59/503/Add.2], adopted resolution 59/186 without vote [agenda item 105 (b)].

Human rights and extreme poverty

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and other human rights instruments adopted by the United Nations,

Recalling its resolution 47/196 of 22 December 1992, by which it declared 17 October the International Day for the Eradication of Poverty, and its resolution 50/107 of 20 December 1995, by which it proclaimed the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006), as well as its resolution 57/211 of 18 December 2002 and its previous resolutions on human rights and extreme poverty, in which it reaffirmed that extreme poverty and exclusion from society constitute a violation of human dignity and that urgent national and international action is therefore required to eliminate them,

Recalling also its resolution 52/134 of 12 December 1997, in which it recognized that the enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights was essential for the understanding, promotion and protection of all human rights,

Deeply concerned that extreme poverty persists in all countries of the world, regardless of their economic, social and cultural situation, and that its extent and manifestations, such as hunger, trafficking in human beings, disease, lack of adequate shelter, illiteracy and hopelessness, are particularly severe in developing countries, while acknowledging the significant progress made in several parts of the world in combating extreme poverty,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 2004/23 of 16 April 2004, as well as resolution 2004/7 of 9 August 2004 of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights,

Welcoming the Summit of World Leaders for Action against Hunger and Poverty of 20 September 2004, convened in New York by the Presidents of Brazil, Chile and France and the Prime Minister of Spain with the support of the Secretary-General,

Recognizing that the eradication of extreme poverty is a major challenge within the process of globalization and requires coordinated and continued policies through decisive national action and international co-operation,

Reaffirming that, since the existence of widespread extreme poverty inhibits the full and effective enjoyment of human rights and might, in some situations, constitute a threat to the right to life, its immediate alleviation and eventual eradication must remain a high priority for the international community,

Reaffirming also that democracy, development and the full and effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms are interdependent and mutually reinforcing and contribute to the eradication of extreme poverty,

Noting with interest the extension for a period of two years of the mandate of the independent expert on the question of human rights and extreme poverty,

1. Reaffirms that extreme poverty and exclusion from society constitute a violation of human dignity and that urgent national and international action is therefore required to eliminate them;

2. Also reaffirms that it is essential for States to foster participation by the poorest people in the decision-making process in the societies in which they live, in the promotion of human rights and in efforts to combat extreme poverty, and that it is essential for people living in poverty and vulnerable groups to be empowered to organize themselves and to participate in all aspects of political, economic and social life, in particular the planning and implementation of policies that affect them, thus enabling them to become genuine partners in development;

3. Emphasizes that extreme poverty is a major issue to be addressed by Governments, civil society and the United Nations system, including international financial institutions, and in this context reaffirms that political commitment is a prerequisite for the eradication of poverty;

4. Reaffirms that the existence of widespread absolute poverty inhibits the full and effective enjoyment of human rights and renders democracy and popular participation fragile;

5. Recognizes the need to promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in order to address the most pressing social needs of people living in poverty, including through the design and development of appropriate mechanisms to strengthen and consolidate democratic institutions and governance;

6. Reaffirms the commitments contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in particular the commitments to spare no effort to fight against extreme poverty and to achieve development and poverty eradication, including the commitment to halve, by 2015, the proportion of the world's people whose income is less than one United States dollar a day and the proportion of people who suffer from hunger;

7. Invites the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, within the framework of the implementation of the United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty, to continue to give appropriate attention to the question of human rights and extreme poverty;

8. Welcomes the efforts of entities throughout the United Nations system to incorporate the Millennium Declaration and the internationally agreed development goals set out therein into their work;

9. Requests the independent expert on the question of human rights and extreme poverty to forward his reports on his activities, which he will submit to the Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-first and sixty-second sessions, to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session;

10. Calls upon States, United Nations bodies, in particular the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations Development Programme, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to continue to give appropriate attention to the links between human rights and extreme poverty;

11. Decides to consider the question further at its sixty-first session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Right to food

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 766], the Special Rapporteur on the right to food, Jean Ziegler (Switzerland), in a February report [E/CN.4/2004/10], reviewed his 2003 activities to promote and monitor the right. During the year, he transmitted a number of communications regarding alleged violations of the right to seven countries and received responses from three of them. The report described the Special Rapporteur's efforts to further develop the conceptual background to the right and considered the emerging concept of food sovereignty, which emphasized national and individual ability to determine food and agricultural policies. Addressing the concept in relation to trade and the right to food, the Special Rapporteur reviewed the reasons why international trade in food and agriculture was not benefiting the vast majority of poor and marginalized people, but was instead worsening marginalization and inequality. He concluded that it was time to examine new and alternative models for agriculture and trade, and to develop binding legal norms that held TNCs to human rights standards and prevented potential abuses of their growing power. The Special Rapporteur recommended that Governments take action to meet commitments made at the 1996 World Food Summit [YUN 1996, p. 1129] to realize the right to food, and in the Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49] to halve the number of hunger victims by 2015. Efforts should be made to ensure the livelihoods of poor peasant farmers who made up 75 per cent of the world's 1.2 billion poorest people, and States should monitor the activities of TNCs to ensure that they did not violate the right to food. The Commission should adopt the Subcommission's draft norms on the responsibilities of TNCs and other business enterprises with regard to human rights (see p. 756).

The Special Rapporteur visited Ethiopia (16-27 February) [E/CN.4/2005/47/Add.1], where he sought to understand the persistent hunger, malnutrition and famine that afflicted the country. The Special Rapporteur reviewed the sources, nature and impact of famine, food insecurity, hunger and malnutrition in the country, examined the legal framework governing the right to food, and evaluated government policies and programmes for realizing the right. He said Ethiopia remained one of the world's poorest countries and that half of its people continued to be affected by hunger. Food shortages struck regularly, and an estimated 5-6 million people depended on food aid yearly, regardless of the rains or harvest. During the 2003 famine, the number needing food aid had increased markedly to 13 million. Although the Government was making progress in realizing the right to food, through programmes and policies that sought to increase availability and access to food and water, it was not acceptable that nearly half of the population still did not get enough to eat daily and that more than two thirds of Ethiopians lacked access to safe clean water, said the Special Rapporteur. He recommended that a shift from an emergency to a development perspective be made a priority for food security and for realizing the right to food, and advocated, among other measures, increased donor funding support to the Government for long-term development in both rural and urban sectors.

In Mongolia (14-24 August) [E/CN.4/2005/47/Add.2], which, according to the statistics of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), had the highest level of undernourishment in Asia, the Special Rapporteur examined the impact of severe winters and other natural disasters, and reviewed the situation of hunger and poverty in the country, and the legal and policy frameworks governing the right to food. Although he was encouraged by the Government's efforts to improve food supply and quality, he believed that the lack of access to food and consequent undernourishment deserved more attention, as did early warning mechanisms and preventive measures against natural disasters. The Special Rapporteur was particularly concerned that chronic undernourishment appeared to have increased over the past decade, with over a third of the population chronically undernourished. Other areas of concern related to violations of the right to food, including reports of people having starved to death, and to obstacles affecting the Government's capacity to guarantee the progressive realization of the right.

The Special Rapporteur recommended a comprehensive study of the situation of food insecurity and chronic undernourishment in the country to determine the urgency of the problem, and proposed a series of measures to strengthen protection of the right and to reverse the apparent regression in efforts to realize it.

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 51 to 1, with 1 abstention, the Commission, on 16 April [res. 2004/19], considering it intolerable that there were some 840 million undernourished people in the world, asked States, private actors and international organizations to promote the effective realization of the right to food for all. The Commission encouraged the Special Rapporteur to continue mainstreaming a gender perspective in his work and asked him to report to the General Assembly in 2004 and to the Commission in 2005. The High Commissioner was asked to assist him, while Governments, UN agencies, funds and programmes, treaty bodies and NGOs were invited to cooperate with him by submitting suggestions on ways to realize the right to food.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2004/23], adopted decision 2004/252 by recorded vote (52-1-1) [agenda item 14 (g)].

The right to food

At its 48th plenary meeting, on 22 July 2004, the Economic and Social Council took note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2004/19 of 16 April 2004 and approved the request to the Special Rapporteur on the right to food to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session and to report to the Commission at its sixty-first session on the implementation of resolution 2004/19.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2004/252:

In favour: Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Burundi, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Cuba, Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, France, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mozambique, Namibia, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Panama, Poland, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sweden, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia.

Subcommission action. On 9 August [dec. 2004/105], the Subcommission, reiterating the recommendations contained in its 2003 resolution [YUN 2003, p. 766] and welcoming progress made in elaborating voluntary guidelines to support the progressive realization of the right to food under FAO auspices, called on Governments and interested parties to continue the drafting process and to renew efforts to reach consensus on outstanding issues, to make it possible to complete and adopt the guidelines.

Further report of Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 58/186 [YUN 2003, p. 767] and to Commission resolution 2004/19 (above), the Secretary-General, in September, transmitted a report of the Special Rapporteur [A/59/385], which further described his activities and considered situations of concern in the Darfur region of western Sudan, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Cuba and the Occupied Palestinian Territory. The report also updated information regarding the drafting of voluntary guidelines to assist Governments in implementing the right to food and examined the increasing dependence of communities in Africa, Asia and Latin America on fish and fishery resources for food and livelihood, which was a newly emerging issue in the struggle for food security. The Special Rapporteur said hunger levels were rising and had increased every year since the 1996 World Food Summit when Governments promised to reduce the level. Hunger killed more people than any contemporary war or terrorist attack, and one child below the age of 5 died from a hunger-related disease every five seconds. He recommended measures to reverse the trend of increasing world hunger and undernourishment, to address alleged violations of the right to food of people in some countries and to complete negotiations on the voluntary guidelines and ensure that they would be an enabling tool for the realization of the right to food. Governments should not implement policies countering their legal obligations to realize the right, and should ensure that their activities did not impact negatively on the capacity of people in other countries to realize the right, particularly regarding those reliant on fish and fishery products.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/59/503/Add.2], adopted resolution 59/202 by recorded vote (182-3) [agenda item 105 (b)].

The right to food

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 58/186 of 22 December 2003, as well as all Commission on Human Rights resolutions in this regard, in particular resolution 2004/19 of 16 April 2004,

Recalling also the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which provides that everyone has the right to a standard of living adequate for her or his health and well-being, including food, the Universal Declaration on the Eradication of Hunger and Malnutrition, and the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Recalling further the provisions of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in which the fundamental right of every person to be free from hunger is recognized,

Bearing in mind the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the World Food Summit Plan of Action and the Declaration of the World Food Summit: five years later, adopted in Rome on 13 June 2002,

Reaffirming that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated,

Reaffirming also that a peaceful, stable and enabling political, social and economic environment, at both the national and the international levels, is the essential foundation that will enable States to give adequate priority to food security and poverty eradication,

Reiterating, as in the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the Declaration of the World Food Summit: five years later, that food should not be used as an instrument of political or economic pressure, and reaffirming in this regard the importance of international cooperation and solidarity, as well as the necessity of refraining from unilateral measures that are not in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations and that endanger food security,

Convinced that each State must adopt a strategy consistent with its resources and capacities to achieve its individual goals in implementing the recommendations contained in the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the World Food Summit Plan of Action and, at the same time, cooperate regionally and internationally in order to organize collective solutions to global issues of food security in a world of increasingly interlinked institutions, societies and economies where coordinated efforts and shared responsibilities are essential,

Recognizing that the problems of hunger and food insecurity have global dimensions and that they are likely to persist and even to increase dramatically in some regions unless urgent, determined and concerted action is taken, given the anticipated increase in the world's population and the stress on natural resources,

Expressing its concern about the adverse impact on the realization of the right to food caused by many humanitarian emergencies, including plagues and natural disasters,

Stressing the importance of reversing the continuing decline of official development assistance devoted to agriculture, both in real terms and as a share of total official development assistance,

1. Reaffirms that hunger constitutes an outrage and a violation of human dignity and therefore requires the adoption of urgent measures at the national, regional and international levels for its elimination;

2. Also reaffirms the right of everyone to have access to safe and nutritious food, consistent with the right to adequate food and the fundamental right of everyone to be free from hunger, so as to be able to fully develop and maintain their physical and mental capacities;

3. Considers it intolerable that there are about 842 million undernourished people in the world, that every five seconds a child under the age of 5 dies from hunger-related diseases and that more than 2 billion people throughout the world suffer from "hidden hunger" or micronutrient malnutrition when, according to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the world produces more than enough food to feed its entire population;

4. Expresses its concern that women are disproportionately affected by hunger, food insecurity and poverty, in part as a result of gender inequality, that in many countries, girls are twice as likely as boys to die from malnutrition and preventable childhood diseases, and that it is estimated that almost twice as many women as men suffer from malnutrition;

5. Encourages all States to take steps with a view to achieving progressively the full realization of the right to food, including steps to promote the conditions for everyone to be free from hunger and, as soon as possible, to enjoy fully the right to food, and to create and adopt national plans to combat hunger;

6. Requests all States and private actors, as well as international organizations within their respective mandates, to take fully into account the need to promote the effective realization of the right to food for all, including in the ongoing negotiations in different fields;

7. Encourages all States to take action to address discrimination against women, particularly where it contributes to the malnutrition of women and girls, including measures to ensure the realization of the right to food and ensuring that women have equal access to resources, including income, land and water, to enable them to feed themselves;

8. Stresses the need to make efforts to mobilize and optimize the allocation and utilization of technical and financial resources from all sources, including external debt relief for developing countries, and to reinforce national actions to implement sustainable food security policies;

9. Welcomes the meeting of world leaders for action against hunger and poverty, convened by the Presidents of Brazil, Chile and France and the Prime Minister of Spain, with the support of the Secretary-General, and the resulting New York Declaration on Action against Hunger and Poverty, which has been supported by one hundred and ten countries to date, and recommends the continuation of efforts aimed at identifying additional sources of financing for the fight against hunger and poverty;

10. Recognizes that the promises made at the World Food Summit in 1996 to halve the number of persons who are undernourished are not being fulfilled, and invites once again all international financial and developmental institutions, as well as the relevant United Nations agencies and funds, to give priority to and provide the necessary funding to realize the aim of halving by 2015 the proportion of people who suffer from hunger, as well as the right to food as set out in the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the United Nations Millennium Declaration;

11. Urges States to give adequate priority in their development strategies and expenditures to the realization of the right to food;

12. Takes note of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the right to food, and commends the Special Rapporteur for his valuable work in the promotion of the right to food;

13. Supports the realization of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur as extended by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 2003/25 of 22 April 2003;

14. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur for his effective contribution to the medium-term review of the implementation of the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the World Food Summit Plan of Action through the submission to the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights of his recommendations on all aspects of the right to food, and his participation in and contribution to the proceedings of that event;

15. Encourages the Special Rapporteur to continue mainstreaming a gender perspective in the activities relating to his mandate;

16. Requests the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner to provide all the necessary human and financial resources for the effective fulfilment of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur;

17. Welcomes the work already done by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in promoting the right to adequate food, in particular its general comment No. 12 (1999) on the right to adequate food (article 11 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights), in which the Committee affirmed, inter alia, that the right to adequate food is indivisibly linked to the inherent dignity of the human person and is indispensable for the fulfilment of other human rights enshrined in the International Bill of Human Rights, and is also inseparable from social justice, requiring the adoption of appropriate economic, environmental and social policies, at both the national and the international levels, oriented to the eradication of poverty and the fulfilment of all human rights for all;

18. Takes note of general comment No. 15 (2002) of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on the right to water (articles 11 and 12 of the Covenant), in which the Committee noted, inter alia, the importance of ensuring sustainable water resources for human consumption and agriculture in realization of the right to adequate food;

19. Welcomes the adoption by the Intergovernmental Working Group, as mandated by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, of a set of voluntary guidelines to support the progressive realization of the right to adequate food in the context of national food security, as well as the endorsement by the Committee on World Food Security of the voluntary guidelines as submitted and its decision to transmit them to the Council for final adoption, and in this regard encourages States members of the Council to adopt the voluntary guidelines;

20. Also welcomes the continued cooperation of the High Commissioner, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Special Rapporteur, and encourages them to continue their cooperation in this regard;

21. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit a comprehensive report to the Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-first session and an interim report to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

22. Invites Governments, relevant United Nations agencies, funds and programmes, treaty bodies, civil society actors, including non-governmental organizations, as well as the private sector, to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur in the fulfilment of his mandate, inter alia, through the submission of comments and suggestions on ways and means of realizing the right to food;

23. Decides to continue the consideration of the question at its sixtieth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 59/202:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nauru, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Serbia and Montenegro, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Switzerland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Timor-Leste, Togo, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Tuvalu, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, Palau, United States.

Right to adequate housing

Reports of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur on the right to adequate housing, Miloon Kothari (India), in a March report [E/CN.4/2004/48], focused on forced evictions, a priority issue that had emerged with respect to the question of adequate housing as a component of the right to an adequate standard of living. The report examined the legal basis for protection against forced evictions at the international, regional and national levels, considered the causes and impact of the practice and discussed strategies to counter it. Despite efforts by treaty bodies, special procedures, UN agencies and programmes and civil society organizations to counter forced evictions, the phenomenon continued, resulting in displacement, loss of livelihood, property and belongings, and physical and psychological injury to those affected, which often included persons already living in extreme poverty. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Commission call for an expert seminar to develop guidelines or principles for States on forced evictions, based on general comment No. 7 on forced evictions, adopted in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 599] by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and other relevant international instruments. Although existing instruments provided useful guidance for States and the international community, new standards were required to capture comprehensive preventive and compensatory measures that needed to be taken to tackle forced evictions. The Special Rapporteur also urged the Commission to include forced evictions more explicitly in his mandate, to enable him to respond to related problems effectively, to request OHCHR to develop indicators on the phenomenon based on existing indicators from the UN housing rights programme, developed jointly with the United Nations Programme on Human Settlements (UN-Habitat), to support the programme, and to urge States to adopt policies and legislation on forced evictions based on the provisions of international human rights instruments. Further recommendations addressed measures to protect women from forced evictions.

The Special Rapporteur visited Kenya (9-22 February) [E/CN.4/2005/48/Add.2] to examine the status of the realization of the right to adequate housing and related rights in the country, with particular attention to gender equality and non-discrimination. He found that previous Kenyan Governments had failed to protect the right to adequate housing and access to related services, such as potable water, electricity, sanitation and land, particularly with respect to the poorest segments of society, and that failure had been accentuated by corruption, resource mismanagement, land-grabbing, increasing poverty and growing slums. He recommended the integration of a human rights perspective in sectoral policies and housing programmes, and a government review of existing programmes, policies and laws, in order to orient them towards the poorest, vulnerable and marginalized segments of the population, including indigenous peoples, persons living with HIV/AIDS or disabilities, destitute persons and forest dwellers. A comprehensive approach was needed to address the issues of forced evictions, security of tenure, legalization of informal settlements and slum upgrading, and to ensure close consultation with those affected.

In Brazil (29 May-13 June) [E/CN.4/2005/48/Add.3], the Special Rapporteur focused on women with regard to the realization of the right to adequate housing, highlighting positive developments implemented by the Government, while noting that the challenges facing the country in the housing and land sector were overwhelming. The failure to realize the land rights of the poor was driven by widespread poverty, inequalities, an enormous housing deficit and historical discrimination against indigenous peoples and Afro-Brazilians. The country's housing deficit was estimated at 7 million housing units and some 6.6 million Brazilian families had nowhere to live. The Special Rapporteur pointed to an urgent need for a comprehensive national housing policy encompassing both urban and rural considerations, and equally comprehensive national housing legislation binding together existing laws and programmes. Further recommendations related to the convening of an expert seminar to develop guidelines on forced evictions, the development of a new national housing policy, the reconciliation of macroeconomic and social objectives, the reorientation of existing housing finance programmes to meet the needs of the poor, legislation to harmonize and simplify the issuing of title deeds and increased inter-ministerial cooperation on such issues as indigenous peoples' rights.

Commission action. On 16 April [res. 2004/21], the Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to emphasize practical solutions regarding the right to adequate housing as a component of the right to an adequate standard of living, facilitate the provision of technical assistance, pay specific attention to the needs of persons with disabilities, further review the interrelatedness of adequate housing and other human rights, continue to apply a gender perspective in his work and report in 2005 and 2006. OHCHR and UN-Habitat were asked to strengthen cooperation, to continue developing a joint UN housing rights programme and to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur. States were called on to give full effect to housing rights, paying particular attention to those living in extreme poverty, most often women and children; to ensure indigenous peoples and other minorities non-discriminatory access to adequate housing; and to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur and submit to him information on national experiences, notably on best practices.

Also on 16 April [res. 2004/28], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 45 to 1, with 7 abstentions, reaffirming that the practice of forced eviction violated a broad range of human rights, particularly the right to adequate housing, recommended that Governments provide restitution, compensation or sufficient alternative accommodation to persons forcibly evicted. The High Commissioner was asked to give attention to the practice and States were invited to study the Comprehensive Human Rights Guidelines on Development-based Displacement, adopted at the 1997 expert seminar on the practice of forced evictions [YUN 1997, p. 676], with a view to considering further action.

Right to education

Report of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur on the right to education, Katarina Tomasevski (Croatia), in January, submitted her final report [E/CN.4/2004/45], which focused on the financial obstacles to the realization of the right to education, the elimination of gender discrimination in and through education, and the content of education. It summarized the lessons learned in the past five years of the Special Rapporteur's mandate, noting that there was an urgent need for a contribution by UN human rights actors. The report presented tabular information regarding countries with school fees in public primary education, by region; key obstacles to girls' education: marriage and pregnancy; and adolescent childbearing: births per 1,000 girls aged 15-19. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Commission not renew her mandate.

Commission action. On 16 April [res. 2004/25], the Commission urged States to give full effect to the right to education and to guarantee that the right was recognized and exercised without discrimination. The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for three years and invited him/her to intensify efforts aimed at identifying ways to overcome obstacles and difficulties in realizing the right, to apply a gender perspective in his/her work and to report in 2005. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Special Rapporteur.

On 22 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate and its requests to him/her to report and to the Secretary-General to assist him/her (decision 2004/254).

In August, the Commission appointed Vernor Muñoz Villalobos (Costa Rica) as Special Rapporteur.

Environmental and scientific concerns

Toxic wastes

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 771], the Special Rapporteur on the adverse effects of the illicit movement and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes on the enjoyment of human rights, Fatma-Zohra Ouhachi-Vesely (Algeria), submitted a report [E/CN.4/2004/46 & Corr.1] describing her activities. The report also described new national, regional and international developments and trends in the illicit traffic and dumping of those wastes, the role of TNCs and the human rights impact of the phenomenon.

An addendum to the report [E/CN.4/2004/46/Add.1] summarized general observations and information received from Governments on the adverse effects of the phenomenon on the enjoyment of human rights, new allegations transmitted to the Special Rapporteur and replies thereto, and updates on cases contained in previous reports.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that the nature of the problem had not changed, despite efforts by the international community to combat it. Countries of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development continued to be the main producers and exporters of those wastes, as the stringent legislation they adopted had increased the costs of waste-processing within their own countries and given rise to transboundary movements to other countries. The communications she received illustrated the adverse impact of the practice and the difficulties the victims faced in obtaining justice and reparation. The Special Rapporteur recommended stringent laws to control the phenomenon and that domestic and international regulations be provided with effective monitoring and implementation mechanisms. She addressed a series of further recommendations to Governments, including administrative, civil and criminal penalties for individuals, enterprises and TNCs involved in illicit trafficking. She proposed strengthening cooperation between OHCHR, the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and the secretariats of multilateral environmental conventions in order to give impetus to the environmental approach to human rights and the human rights dimension of environmental standards.

The Special Rapporteur visited Turkey (10-20 March) [E/CN.4/2005/44] to review, among other matters, relevant laws and practice, governmental policy and the impact on human rights of multilateral agreements on the transboundary movement of toxic waste and hazardous materials. While encouraged by legislative reforms undertaken by the Government, the Special Rapporteur expressed concern regarding numerous attempts of illegal transfers of dangerous waste and products to Turkey and advocated that the countries of origin accept the return of the products. She recommended that the secretariat of the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1989, p. 420] continue to assist Turkey to find solutions to the situation. Further concern related to the issue of ship dismantling, which, although it had some economic advantages, also carried social, human and environmental costs and posed health hazards. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government maintain prohibition on the entry and demolition of contaminated ships for as long as the country lacked the capacity to ensure optimal protection of workers and rational ecological management during the dismantling and final disposal of toxic wastes recovered. Countries of origin should decontaminate ships before exporting them for dismantling, and, on the multilateral level, States should develop binding norms managing and controlling related activities.

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 38 to 13, with 2 abstentions, the Commission, on 16 April [res. 2004/17], welcoming the entry into force in February of the 1998 Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade [YUN 1998, p. 997] (see p. 767), called on countries that had not done so to consider ratifying it. The Governments of developed countries and international financial institutions were asked to provide financial assistance for the implementation of the Programme of Action adopted at the First Continental Conference for Africa on the Environmentally Sound Management of Unwanted Stocks of Hazardous Wastes and Their Prevention [YUN 2001, p. 972]. The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate and asked him/her to study existing problems of and solutions to illicit trafficking, particularly in developing countries, and to report in 2005. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him/her.

In July, the Commission appointed Okechukwu Ibeanu (Nigeria) as Special Rapporteur.

Communication. In March [E/CN.4/2004/G/27], the United Kingdom transmitted its response to enquiries received from the Special Rapporteur regarding the Baku-Tbilisi-Ceyhan pipeline and the issue of human rights and the environment.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2004/23], adopted decision 2004/251 by recorded vote (35-17-2) [agenda item 14 (g)].

Adverse effects of the illicit movement and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes on the enjoyment of human rights

At its 48th plenary meeting, on 22 July 2004, the Economic and Social Council took note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2004/17 of 16 April 2004 and endorsed the decision of the Commission to extend for a further three years the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the adverse effects of the illicit movement and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes on the enjoyment of human rights.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2004/251:

In favour: Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Burundi, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Cuba, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ghana, Guatemala, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Kenya, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mozambique, Namibia, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Panama, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Poland, Senegal, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.
Abstaining: Armenia, Ukraine.

Environmental protection and sustainable development

Report of Secretary-General. In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 772], the Secretary-General submitted a February report [E/CN.4/2004/87], which summarized information received from Governments, UN bodies, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs on their consideration of the relationship between the environment and human rights as part of sustainable development. The report took into consideration the views expressed at the 2002 expert seminar organized jointly by OHCHR and UNEP [YUN 2002, p. 741], and also identified links between the environment and human rights in a number of international and regional documents and instruments, including the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (see p. 663).

Commission action. On 21 April [dec. 2004/119], the Commission asked the High Commissioner and UNEP to continue to coordinate their efforts in capacity-building activities, in cooperation with other relevant bodies and organizations. The Secretary-General was asked to update his report (see above). The Commission decided to continue consideration of the issue in 2005.

Disappearance of States for environmental reasons

Commission action. On 21 April [dec. 2004/122], the Commission called on the Subcommission to prepare a report on the legal implications of the disappearance of States for environmental reasons, including the implications for the human rights of their residents, with particular reference to the rights of indigenous people.

Working paper. In accordance with a 2003 Subcommission [YUN 2003, p. 772] resolution and with Commission decision 2004/122 (see above), Françoise Hampson (United Kingdom) submitted a July working paper [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/2004/CRP.1] on the human rights implications, particularly for indigenous populations, of the disappearance of States for environmental reasons. The paper determined that potentially affected States included States that might disappear totally; those that might lose a significant part of their territory, with the remainder unable to sustain the surviving population; and those that might lose portions of their territory with serious implications for the population. The paper focused on the category most likely to disappear entirely, among them being the Bahamas, Kiribati, Maldives, Nauru and Tuvalu, all of which were islands or groups of islands with a combined total population of 0.5 million. The paper discussed legal issues which might arise from the disappearance of such States, highlighted current efforts to address the problem in the international community and raised questions regarding the scope and analysis of a proposed study on the subject.

Subcommission action. On 9 August [res. 2004/10], the Subcommission invited Ms. Hampson to update her working paper (above) and to submit it in 2005. It asked the Secretary-General to assist her and recommended that the Commission endorse its requests.

Right to physical and mental health

Note by Secretariat. A Secretariat note [E/CN.4/2004/42], referring to a 2003 Commission resolution [YUN 2003, p. 772] and to Economic and Social Council resolution 2003/45 [ibid.], drew attention to the fact that the General Assembly had taken no action during its fifty-eighth (2003) session regarding the Council's recommendation that it declare 2007 the United Nations Year for Violence Prevention. OHCHR had transmitted communications to Governments, NGOs and UN bodies soliciting proposals on possible activities to be undertaken during the year, to which replies were received from five Governments, one UN body and three NGOs.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur on the right to the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health, Paul Hunt (New Zealand), in a February report [E/CN.4/2004/49], described his activities. Between 1 December 2003 and 1 December 2004, he transmitted 36 communications, including urgent appeals, to 21 Governments regarding alleged violations of the right to physical and mental health. The communications sent and replies received were summarized in a separate document [E/CN.4/2005/51/Add.1]. In the February report, the Special Rapporteur reviewed the right to sexual and reproductive health; poverty and the right to health, illustrated with a case study of the Niger's poverty reduction strategy; neglected diseases; and the right to health and violence prevention. Regarding the human rights dimensions of neglected diseases, he wished to explore international assistance and cooperation, which were needed to develop new drugs, vaccines and diagnostic tools. The Special Rapporteur concluded that the right to health, like all human rights, was governed by a set of global norms or standards giving rise to governmental obligations, which required effective monitoring and accountability mechanisms. The combination of globally legitimized norms, obligations, monitoring and accountability empowered disadvantaged and marginalized individuals and communities. Policies that were based on human rights norms, including the right to health, were more likely to be effective.

Subsequent to his preliminary report [YUN 2003, p. 773] regarding his visit to Mozambique in 2003, the Special Rapporteur submitted a further report [E/CN.4/2005/51/Add.2]. He addressed, among other issues, access to health services and facilities, user fees, the role of donors and intergovernmental organizations, the situation of health professionals, access to water and sanitation, sexual and reproductive health, HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria. Noting Mozambique's legacies of colonization, civil war and natural disasters that had destroyed part of the country's health infrastructure, the Special Rapporteur concluded that, although the situation was improving, health indicators remained weak. He recommended that the Government integrate the right to health into all its national and international policies, with particular attention to such key human rights principles as non-discrimination, equality, access to information, transparency, monitoring and accountability. The Government needed to develop an integrated and coordinated approach to the health sector that was comprehensive, simple and efficient, and to increase health resources, including more health professionals and improved terms and conditions of work.

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 52 to 1, the Commission, on 16 April [res. 2004/27], recommended that States establish effective mechanisms to ensure that they took account of the realization of the right to the enjoyment of the highest standard of physical and mental health in formulating their national and international policies. The Commission invited the Special Rapporteur to explore how efforts to realize the right could reinforce poverty reduction strategies; to continue analysis of the human rights dimensions of neglected diseases, particularly those affecting developing countries; and to submit annually a report to the Commission and an interim report to the General Assembly on his activities. The High Commissioner was asked to assist him and Governments were called on to cooperate with him, provide him with information and respond promptly to his communications.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2004/23], adopted decision 2004/255 by recorded vote (53-1) [agenda item 14 (g)].

The right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health

At its 48th plenary meeting, on 22 July 2004, the Economic and Social Council took note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2004/27 of 16 April 2004 and approved the Commission's request to the Special Rapporteur on the right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health to submit annually a report to the Commission and an interim report to the General Assembly on the activities performed under his mandate.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2004/255:

In favour: Armenia, Australia, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Burundi, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Cuba, Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, France, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mozambique, Namibia, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Panama, Poland, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sweden, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Further reports of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur visited Peru (6-15 June) [E/CN.4/2005/51/Add.3], where he found significant obstacles to the realization of the right to health, despite the commitment of the Ministry of Health and of related public institutions and civil society organizations to promote and protect the right. Many health-related problems were linked to problems of poverty and discrimination. Issues of particular concern were the potential impact of a trade agreement with the United States on access to essential medicines in Peru; environmental health problems arising from the lack of access to safe water, inadequate sanitation and industrial pollution; health care for people with mental disabilities and the mental health legacy of two decades of internal armed conflict; inadequate access to sexual and reproductive health facilities; and disparities in access to health services for marginalized groups, including indigenous peoples and ethnic minorities. The Special Rapporteur recommended measures to resolve those concerns and to improve the prospects for realizing the right to health, including that the Government formulate a comprehensive pro-poor and equity-based health policy underpinned by the right to health and that the international community cancel a significant portion of Peru's foreign debt, on the understanding that the funds released would be reallocated towards the implementation of the proposed policy.

In Romania (23-27 August) [E/CN.4/2005/51/Add.4], the Special Rapporteur found that the transition from communism to democracy and to a market economy, as well as preparations for accession to the European Union in 2007, were affecting the prospects for realizing the right to health. Notable problems in Romania included the highest prevalence of HIV/AIDS and tuberculosis in Europe, corruption, inadequate budgetary allocations to the health sector, low level of participation of the population in health policy-making and increasing poverty levels. Other issues of concern related to access to sexual, reproductive and mental health care, environmental health problems arising from limited access to safe drinking water, inadequate sanitation, air pollution, the contamination of water by industrial effluents and the situation of the Roma ethnic group. In addition to recommendations targeting those problem areas, the Special Rapporteur urged the Government to ensure the implementation of the health policies and programmes it had adopted, according particular attention to realizing the right to health of marginalized groups, to accountability and to remedies regarding related abuses.

Pursuant to Commission resolution 2004/27 (above), the Secretary-General, by an October note [A/59/422], transmitted the Special Rapporteur's interim report, which discussed the health-related MDGs and illustrated how the right to health could contribute to the achievement of those goals, by ensuring that vertical health interventions strengthened health systems and by reinforcing the goal for a global partnership for development. The report highlighted the disparities between the health situation of indigenous peoples and non-indigenous peoples in many countries and called for urgent efforts to reverse the trend. It addressed issues relating to the right to health, child survival and indicators, and applied in that context the methodology for the use of the right to health indicators and benchmarks, a concept first introduced in the Special Rapporteur's previous interim report to the Assembly [YUN 2003, p. 773].

By decision 59/528 of 20 December, the Assembly took note of the Special Rapporteur's report.

Access to medication

Report of Secretary-General. In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 807], the Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/2004/39], which summarized information received from Governments, one UN body and NGOs on steps they had taken to promote access to medication in the context of pandemics, such as HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria.

Commission action. On 16 April [res. 2004/26], the Commission recognized that access to medication in the context of pandemics such as HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria was fundamental to achieving the full realization of the right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health. It called on States to effectively deliver prevention, treatment, care and support to respond to the pandemics. The Secretary-General was asked to solicit comments from Governments, UN organs, programmes and specialized agencies, international organizations and NGOs on steps they had taken to implement the Commission's resolution, and to report in 2005.

Water and sanitation services

Report of Special Rapporteur. As requested by the Subcommission in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 674] and the Commission in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 743], the Special Rapporteur on the right to adequate water and sanitation, El-Hadji Guissé (Senegal), submitted a July final report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/20] on a study of the relationship between the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights and the promotion of the realization of the right to drinking water supply and sanitation. The report summarized information received from Governments, UN bodies and international organizations on steps taken to realize the right, examined the right's legal basis and analysed related implementation issues. The report found that, although there was sufficient water to meet the needs of people in almost all countries, some 1.1 billion persons worldwide did not have access to safe drinking water and about 2.4 billion lacked adequate means of personal sanitation. The main challenges related to distribution and insufficient water infrastructure to carry water inside or close to households. The Special Rapporteur proposed measures to advance the realization of the right to drinking water and sanitation, including the establishment by States of a plan of action and programme to promote, realize and protect the right, and to avoid action that impeded it. In order to ensure availability without discrimination, public authorities should facilitate access for deprived persons by improving the quality of water and establishing reasonable pricing for household supplies. There was also a need for States, international organizations and civil society to jointly develop tools to implement the right.

Subcommission action. On 9 August [res. 2004/6], the Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of States, NGOs and international organizations the recommendations contained in the Special Rapporteur's final report (above) and in general comment No. 15 on the right to water, adopted in 2002 by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights [YUN 2002, p. 628]. The Subcommission recommended that the Commission approve its request to issue the Special Rapporteur's 2002 preliminary report [YUN 2002, p. 743], 2003 progress report [YUN 2003, p. 775] and 2004 final report in the UN official languages.

Also on 9 August [dec. 2004/107], the Subcommission asked Mr. Guissé to prepare, without financial implications, a set of draft guidelines for the realization of the right to drinking water supply and sanitation, for submission in 2005.

Bioethics

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 50 to 2, with 1 abstention, the Commission, on 21 April [dec. 2004/120], approved the Subcommission's appointment of Iulia-Antoanella Motoc (Romania) [YUN 2003, p. 775] as Special Rapporteur to undertake a study on human rights and the human genome, based on her 2003 working paper [ibid.], and asked her to submit a preliminary report to the Subcommission in 2004 and a final report to the Commission in 2005. The Secretary-General was asked to assist her.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2004/23], adopted decision 2004/280 by recorded vote (52-1) [agenda item 14 (g)].

Human rights and bioethics

At its 49th plenary meeting, on 22 July 2004, the Economic and Social Council took note of Commission on Human Rights decision 2004/120 of 21 April 2004 and approved the decision of the Commission to appoint Iulia-Antoanella Motoc as special rapporteur to undertake a study on human rights and the human genome, based on her working paper; the Special Rapporteur was requested to submit her preliminary report to the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights at its fifty-sixth session and her final report to the Commission at its sixty-first session.

The Council also approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with the necessary assistance to enable her to carry out her study.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2004/280:

In favour: Armenia, Australia, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Burundi, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Cuba, Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, France, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mozambique, Namibia, Nigeria, Panama, Poland, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sweden, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Zimbabwe.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In response to Commission decision 2004/120 (above), the Special Rapporteur on human rights and the human genome, Ms. Motoc, submitted a July preliminary report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/38], which considered the question of discrimination in genetics. The report explored the definition of genetic discrimination and examined the phenomenon in international and domestic instruments, as well as the right to privacy over medical information, employment and insurance questions, and the interests of vulnerable groups, including indigenous peoples and persons with disabilities. The Special Rapporteur concluded that the possible use of personal genetic information against individuals might stifle acceptance of further genetic inquiry. Therefore, failure to protect privacy and prevent discrimination threatened to diminish the potential for genetics to improve health care. The key to benefiting from genetic information while avoiding its negative aspects lay in determining how information would be used beyond the health-care needs of the person to whom the information pertained. The Special Rapporteur advocated regulation and/or prohibition of secondary uses of personal genetic information, legislation to address specific issues relating to genetic testing and public education to protect genetic privacy and prevent discrimination. Governments had a duty to explain to the public and researchers the uses of genetic information, their possible impact on society and the precise meaning of the results of genetic studies.

Subcommission action. On 12 August [dec. 2004/112], the Subcommission asked the Special Rapporteur to submit an interim report in 2005 and a final report in 2006. The Secretary-General was asked to assist her.

Genetic privacy

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to Economic and Social Council decision 2003/232 [YUN 2003, p. 776], the Secretary-General submitted an April report [E/2004/56] containing information from Governments and OHCHR on measures taken to promote the development and implementation of standards relating to genetic privacy and to support research in human genetics and biotechnology. The report supplemented information contained in the Secretary-General's 2003 report on the subject [YUN 2003, p. 775].

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report (decision 2004/317).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2004/9 [draft: E/2004/L.13/Rev.1] without vote [agenda item 14 (i)].

Genetic privacy and non-discrimination

The Economic and Social Council,

Guided by the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and also by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and the other relevant international human rights instruments,

Recalling the Universal Declaration on the Human Genome and Human Rights adopted on 11 November 1997 by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and General Assembly resolution 53/152 of 9 December 1998 endorsing the Declaration,

Recalling also the Programme of Action of the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance adopted in Durban, South Africa, on 8 September 2001,

Welcoming the International Declaration on Human Genetic Data adopted on 16 October 2003 by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which, inter alia, considers discrimination based on genetic characteristics as acts intended to infringe or to have the effect of infringing the human rights, fundamental freedoms or human dignity of an individual or for purposes that lead to stigmatization of an individual, a family or a group or communities,

Recalling its resolution 2001/39 of 26 July 2001, as well as its decision 2003/232 of 22 July 2003,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolution 2003/69 of 25 April 2003 on human rights and bioethics,

Recalling further the decision taken on 7 May 1998 whereby the Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization established the International Bioethics Committee, which is carrying out work on confidentiality and genetic data,

Reiterating that the life and health of individuals are inevitably related to developments in life sciences and social areas,

Acknowledging the importance of advances in genetic research, which have led to the identification of strategies for the early detection, prevention and treatment of diseases,

Bearing in mind that the genetic revolution has far-reaching implications and consequences for all humankind and that its evaluation and applications should therefore be conducted in an open, ethical and participatory manner,

Recognizing the contribution that civil society involved in this matter can make to the protection of genetic privacy and to the fight against discrimination based on genetic information,

Reaffirming that the information obtained from genetic tests, which is personal, should be held confidential, based on the conditions set by law,

Recognizing that genetic data associated with an identifiable person can in some instances be relevant to other members of the individual's family or to other persons and that the rights and interests of such persons must also be taken into account in the handling of such data,

Stressing the fact that revealing genetic information belonging to individuals without their consent may cause harm and discrimination against them in such areas as employment, insurance, education and other areas of social life,

Recalling that, in order to protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, the limitations to the principles of consent and confidentiality may be prescribed only by law, for compelling reasons consistent with international law, including international human rights law,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on information and comments received from Governments and relevant international organizations and functional commissions pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 2001/39;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments, relevant international organizations and functional commissions that have responded to the request for information formulated by the Council in its resolution 2001/39;

3. Urges States to ensure that no one shall be subjected to discrimination based on genetic information;

4. Also urges States to protect the privacy of those subject to genetic testing and to ensure that genetic testing and the subsequent processing, use and storage of human genetic data is done with the prior, free, informed and express consent of the individual or authorization obtained in the manner prescribed by law consistent with international law, including international human rights law, and to ensure that limitations on the principle of consent are prescribed only for compelling reasons, such as forensic medicine and related legal proceedings, by domestic law consistent with international law, including international human rights law;

5. Calls upon States to take appropriate specific measures, including through legislation, to prevent the misuse of genetic information leading to discrimination against, or stigmatization of, individuals, members of their families or groups in all areas, particularly in insurance, employment, education and other areas of social life, whether in the public or the private sector, and in this respect calls upon States to take all appropriate measures to ensure that the results and interpretations of population-based genetic studies are not used for purposes that discriminate against the individual or group concerned;

6. Also calls upon States to promote, as appropriate, the development and implementation of standards providing appropriate protection with regard to the collection, storage, disclosure and use of genetic information taken from genetic tests that might lead to discrimination, stigmatization or invasion of privacy;

7. Urges States to continue to support research in the area of human genetics, subject to accepted scientific and ethical standards and to the potential benefit of all people, emphasizing that such research and its applications should fully respect human rights, fundamental freedoms and human dignity, as well as the prohibition of all forms of discrimination based on genetic characteristics;

8. Recognizes, in this context, that international efforts to ensure non-discrimination on genetic grounds need to be pursued and that, in the context of international cooperation, States should endeavour to assist developing countries to build their capacity to participate in generating and sharing scientific knowledge concerning human genetic data and the related know-how, with full respect for all human rights;

9. Decides to continue considering the various implications of the question of genetic privacy and non-discrimination for ethical, legal, medical, employment, insurance-related and other aspects of social life, consistent with public international law and international human rights law;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Governments, relevant international organizations and functional commissions, to collect the comments received pursuant to it, and other relevant information, and to submit a report to the Council at its substantive session of 2007.

Slavery and related issues

Working group activities. The five-member Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, at its twenty-ninth session (Geneva, 28 June–2 July) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/36 & Corr.1], reviewed developments in contemporary forms of slavery and measures to prevent and repress all its forms, including corruption and international debt as factors that promoted the phenomenon. It devoted priority attention to forced labour, in the light of the ILO Programme of Action on forced labour [YUN 2001, p. 1404], and co-organized with ILO a discussion on various aspects of the phenomenon, particularly the challenges associated with new manifestations of forced labour in the light of globalization and technological change. Further issues considered related to the activities of the United Nations Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery (see p. 774), the status of slavery conventions (see below), the Programme of Action for the Prevention of the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography (see p. 785) and the activities of the Special Rapporteur on that issue, the Programme of Action for the Elimination of the Exploitation of Child Labour, migrant and domestic workers, bonded labour and debt bondage, and child labour (see below). Also considered were sexual exploitation, trafficking in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others, including children, forced and child marriage, the activities of the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences (see p. 775), illegal activities of certain religious and other sects, trafficking in organs and tissues of children and slavery-like practices related to armed conflicts. The Group observed that the treaties forbidding slavery and slavery-like practices and other instruments relevant to its work had not been universally ratified and recommended that States ratify them. It adopted recommendations on the issues it considered during the session and decided to focus in 2005 on a review of the status of ratification of relevant treaties and the identification of gaps and challenges remaining in areas covered by its mandate. Also in 2005, it would assess its activities since its creation in 1975 [YUN 1975, p. 639]. It would devote priority attention in 2006 to the impact of the media and the Internet on contemporary forms of slavery.

Documents considered by the Group included May notes by the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.2/2004/2, E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.2/2004/3] updating the status of the slavery conventions (1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery [YUN 1956, p. 228] and 1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 317(IV) [YUN 1948-49, p. 613]) and a June report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.2/2004/4] containing information submitted by Governments, UN bodies and specialized agencies on measures they had taken to prevent and repress all forms of slavery.

Subcommission action. On 12 August [res. 2004/19], the Subcommission recommended States' ratification of treaties on slavery-related issues and closer international cooperation for the prevention, punishment and suppression of corruption and money-laundering resulting from trafficking and sexual exploitation, particularly of women and children. It called on the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the World Health Organization (WHO), ILO, UNDP and other competent UN organs, specialized agencies, development banks and intergovernmental agencies to develop programmes in order to break the cycle of poverty, social exclusion and discrimination which made people vulnerable to exploitation through forced labour. UN human rights bodies were called on to address violations relating to sexual exploitation and trafficking in persons, while UN bodies and NGOs were called on to develop and implement codes of conduct that prohibited all forms of sexual exploitation by UN employees and contract workers and humanitarian aid workers. The Subcommission welcomed ILO's participation in the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery (see above) and invited Governments, international organizations, national institutions and NGOs that had information relating to the Group's agenda to assist it by providing it with information.

Trafficking in human organs

On 20 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 59/156 (see p. 1127), alarmed at the potential growth of trafficking in human organs, encouraged Member States to exchange experience in and information on preventing, combating and punishing the practice.

1993 Programme of Action

In response to a 2003 Subcommission request [YUN 2003, p. 776], the Secretary-General, in a June report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/34], presented information received from Governments and UN agencies on action they had taken to implement the 1993 Programme of Action for the Elimination of the Exploitation of Child Labour [YUN 1993, p. 965].

Sexual exploitation during armed conflict

Report of High Commissioner. The High Commissioner, in a June report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/35], supplemented information contained in a previous report [YUN 2003, p. 776] regarding steps taken by human rights treaty bodies, the Commission and its mechanisms, the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY) and the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR) to address the problem of systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during armed conflicts. The High Commissioner concluded that the problem remained widespread, despite legal advances, exemplified by judgments by ICTY, ICTR, the Special Court for Sierra Leone, the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, and the adoption of Security Council resolution 1325(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 1113] on women, peace and security, sexual gender-based violence, systematic rape and various forms of enslavement. Constraints included women's poor representation at decision-making levels; the persistence of violence against women, which hindered many of them from reaching their potential; the lack of access to resources, including finances and information; and persistent stereotypes on the roles and expected behaviour of women. As the situation of women could be improved only through concrete and effective policies and programmes addressing prevailing gender relations and persistent gender-based stereotypes, a key challenge concerned the effective implementation of Council resolution 1325 (2000) and general recommendation No. 25 of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (see p. 1169). To end the cycle of violence and prevent armed conflicts, the equal rights of women to participate fully in all aspects of life needed to be promoted and protected.

Working paper. In response to a 2003 Subcommission request [YUN 2003, p. 777], Françoise Hampson (United Kingdom) submitted a July working paper [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/12] on the criminalization, investigation and prosecution of acts of serious sexual violence, which was considered by the sessional working group on the administration of justice (see p. 714). The paper, which addressed the definition of relevant international crimes and charging practice, explored the definitions of rape and other forms of sexual violence and raised questions relating to the scope of the subject.

Subcommission action. On 12 August [res. 2004/22], the Subcommission asked the High Commissioner to submit an updated report in 2005 on the issues of systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during armed conflicts. States were encouraged to promote human rights education on those issues.

Fund on slavery

Reports of Secretary-General. In February [E/CN.4/2004/78/Add.1] and August [A/59/309], the Secretary-General reported on the status of the United Nations Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery.

The Fund's Board of Trustees, at its ninth session (Geneva, 26-30 January), recommended 20 project grants amounting to $150,700 to assist NGOs in 15 countries in Africa, the Americas, Asia and Europe, and nine travel grants amounting to $30,000 to enable NGO representatives to participate in the deliberations of the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery (see p. 773). The Board estimated that, in order to fulfil its mandate satisfactorily, the Fund would need at least $325,000 before its tenth session, scheduled for January 2005. On 23 February, the High Commissioner, on behalf of the Secretary-General, approved the Board's recommendations. The Secretary-General reported that contributions available to the Fund as at 2 November 2004 stood at $93,295 [E/CN.4/2005/86].

On 20 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's August report (decision 59/528).

Subcommission action. On 12 August [res. 2004/20], the Subcommission urged Governments, NGOs and other private or public entities to contribute to the Fund.

Vulnerable groups

In an August report [A/59/282] on progress made to implement the UN Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49] (see also p. 1362), the Secretary-General drew attention to efforts to protect vulnerable people in emergency situations, such as disasters resulting from and during conflicts. He noted that increased attention had been paid to ensuring local preparedness and building response capacities to natural hazards. Although some progress had been made to stabilize some of the countries affected by conflicts, much remained to be done. There was a need for the international community to harmonize its transition planning and fund-raising tools, address more coherently needs assessments and construct more local institutions to enable national actors to be involved in their own transition from the beginning. Increased levels of timely, predictable and flexible funding were also required to ensure adequate and equitable financial assistance when necessary.

Women

Violence against women

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 50/166 [YUN 1995, p. 1188], the Secretary-General submitted in January to the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on the Status of Women the report of the United Nations Development Fund for Women regarding the Fund's activities to eliminate violence against women [E/CN.6/2004/8-E/CN.4/2004/117] (see p. 1170).

Reports of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, Yakin Ertürk (Turkey), in her annual report [E/CN.4/2004/66], assessed developments of the past decade and focused on violence against women as manifested within a broad spectrum from the domicile to the transnational arena. She discussed gaps and challenges relating to the problem, considered the connection between HIV/AIDS infection and sexual violence against women and elaborated guidelines for developing strategies for the effective implementation of international standards to end the violence. The Special Rapporteur proposed a three-tiered intervention strategy involving the State, the community and the individual woman; while the State was bound by international human rights law, it was suggested that the human rights discourse at the level of the community and the individual woman needed to be complemented by a culture and an empowerment discourse, respectively. The Special Rapporteur identified critical issues that required further attention, including measures to address the adverse impact of religious extremism on women's rights, further research to understand how sexual violence against women related to the HIV/AIDS pandemic, the adoption of a gender perspective in policy-making to help protect women's rights, an analysis of the obstacles to women's access to justice at all levels of social experience, further exploration of gender budgeting as a means of monitoring States' compliance with international law to eliminate violence against women, and the development of indices and States' accountability to serve as frameworks for monitoring violence against women and State initiatives to tackle it globally.

An addendum to the report [E/CN.4/2004/66/Add.1] summarized communications and urgent appeals on alleged cases of violence or threats of violence against women, which the Special Rapporteur had transmitted to 30 Governments, and the replies received thereto, and on cases transmitted by her predecessor.

The Special Rapporteur visited El Salvador (2-8 February) [E/CN.4/2005/72/Add.2], at the invitation of the Government, following allegations of an emerging pattern of murders of young women in the Central American region. She found that socio-economic pressures, a weak legal sector that fostered impunity and male dominance had combined to reinforce a general state of violence against women and girls. The most pervasive included murder, domestic violence and sexual abuse of girls, violence and sexual harassment in the workplace, police-related violence and violence relating to commercial sexual exploitation. The Special Rapporteur recommended measures to the Government relating to the need to create an information and knowledge base; ensure legislative, investigative and judicial reforms; strengthen institutional infrastructure; initiate training and awareness-raising programmes; and enforce and monitor international labour standards. Recommendations were addressed to the international community and civil society, including women's NGOs, human rights groups and the media.

In Guatemala (9-14 February) [E/CN.4/2005/72/Add.3], the Special Rapporteur found that violence against women was widespread and that the impunity enjoyed by the perpetrators sustained structures of power, resulting in fear and the lack of confidence in State apparatuses. The major problem confronting the State was its inability to provide women with legal, judicial and institutional protection. The Special Rapporteur recommended measures to the Government, civil society and the international community, including the need to end impunity for violence against women through legal reforms; provide protection and support services to women facing actual or potential violence; create a gender-sensitive information and knowledge base; strengthen institutional infrastructure; and promote training and operational and awareness-raising programmes.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2004/46], the Commission stressed the importance of efforts to eliminate impunity for violence against women and girls in situations of armed conflict, including by prosecuting gender-related crimes and crimes of sexual violence, providing protective measures, counselling and other appropriate assistance to victims and witnesses in international and internationally supported courts and tribunals, and integrating a gender perspective into all efforts to eliminate impunity. The Special Rapporteur was invited to report, as appropriate, on those mechanisms, and the Secretary-General was asked to assist her and to ensure that her reports were brought to the attention of the Commission on the Status of Women in 2005 and the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women. Relevant UN bodies, States, the Special Rapporteur and NGOs were called on to cooperate in the preparation of the Secretary-General's in-depth study on all forms of violence against women, called for in General Assembly resolution 58/185 [YUN 2003, p. 1172].

Further reports of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur visited the Occupied Palestinian Territory (13-18 June) [E/CN.4/2005/72/Add.4], where she reviewed the impact of the conflict and occupation on violence against women. She found that women suffered violence from Israeli security forces and from the family and the community. Security measures enforced included restrictions on freedom of movement, house demolitions, detention and injuries and loss of lives. Regarding violence within the family and the community, the Special Rapporteur focused on how violence against women was justified and sustained under the occupation. She highlighted how the situation had placed women at the centre of the conflict, the legitimization of violence against them as a weapon of patriarchy and the impact of culturally inherited values, under which women were killed or threatened with death for tarnishing family honour. The Special Rapporteur, in a series of recommendations, asked the Government of Israel and the Palestinian Authority (PA) to take measures to end the conflict and occupation and to ensure that women's needs and interests were addressed in the negotiations. Israel should observe international human rights and humanitarian law in undertaking security measures and include in its reports to treaty bodies on compliance with obligations in the occupied territories information on the protection and promotion of women's rights. The PA, on its part, should adopt legislation to punish and redress the situation of women subjected to violence, adopt the bill of rights for women, eliminate structural discrimination against women and increase their representation in the PA.

In the Darfur region of the Sudan (25-26 September) [E/CN.4/2005/72/Add.5], which had witnessed intense fighting in civil war for over two decades, the Special Rapporteur found that women and girls had suffered and continued to suffer multiple forms of violence during attacks on their villages, including rape, killings, the burning of homes and pillaging of livestock, allegedly perpetrated by government-backed militia and security forces (see p. 233). The atrocities were also inflicted on women in camps and victims faced numerous obstacles in access to justice and health care. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government facilitate the full involvement of women in peace efforts and ensure that their needs and interests were addressed in all negotiations; ensure the security of civilians and introduce protection measures to reduce women's risk of rape, beatings and abduction; investigate allegations of violence against women and prosecute perpetrators; and initiate dialogue for improving the legal protection of women's rights and effectively implement current obligations under international law.

Communication. On 22 July [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/G/1], Iraq transmitted a study it had undertaken on follow-up to the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170], which highlighted its experience.

Security Council action. On 28 October, the Security Council President, in statement S/PRST/2004/40 (see p. 1152), stated that the Council strongly condemned the continued acts of gender-based violence and violations of women's and girls' rights in situations of armed conflict and urged the cessation by all parties of such acts.

General Assembly action. On 20 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 59/167 (see p. 0000), invited the Special Rapporteur to devote further attention to all forms of violence against women, including crimes identified in the outcome document of the Assembly's twenty-third special session on women [YUN 2000, p. 1082].

Also on 20 December, the Assembly, in resolution 59/165 (see p. 1150), expressing concern that women continued to be victims of crimes committed in the name of honour and at the continuing occurrence in all regions of such violence, called on States to prevent and eliminate the practice and invited relevant UN human rights treaty bodies and the Special Rapporteur to address the issue.

Women migrant workers

Note by Secretary-General. In response to a 2002 Commission request [YUN 2002, p. 746], the Commission had before it a note by the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/2004/71] drawing the Commission's attention to his 2003 report on violence against women migrant workers [YUN 2003, p. 1172]. The Commission's attention was also drawn to the report of the Special Rapporteur on the human rights of migrants (see p. 668), which reviewed the situation of women migrant domestic workers and trafficking in persons, particularly women.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2004/49], the Commission called on Governments to ensure the full enjoyment of human rights by women migrant workers and to establish penal sanctions to punish perpetrators of violence against women migrant workers and to assist victims. States, particularly countries of origin and destination, were invited to adopt legal measures against intermediaries who deliberately encouraged the clandestine movement of workers and who exploited women migrant workers.

Traditional practices affecting the health of women and girls

Commission action. On 20 April [dec. 2004/111], the Commission, taking note of a 2003 Subcommission resolution [YUN 2003, p. 778], decided to approve the Subcommission's decision to renew the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on traditional practices affecting the health of women and the girl child and its request to her to report.

On 22 July (decision 2004/276), the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 2003 Subcommission request [YUN 2003, p. 778], the Special Rapporteur on traditional practices affecting the health of women and the girl child, Halima Warzazi (Morocco), in a June report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/41], described progress made to implement the 1994 Plan of Action for the Elimination of Harmful Traditional Practices Affecting the Health of Women and Children [YUN 1994, p. 1123]. She noted that the year was marked by activities focusing on the elimination of female genital mutilation, culminating in the observance of 6 February as the international day of zero tolerance of the practice. The report summarized measures taken by Governments to ensure the criminal prosecution of perpetrators and by UN system organizations to promote action against the practice. Further initiatives included training, workshops, seminars, information-sharing and cultural exchange programmes designed to raise public awareness about the harmful effects of the practice. The Special Rapporteur concluded that harmful traditional practices were persistent owing to respect for tradition, particularly when affected communities did not have contact with the outside world and suffered from illiteracy and ignorance. Policies and actions aimed at eradicating harmful practices should be directed towards strengthening the status of women in society from the earliest age.

Subcommission action. On 12 August [res. 2004/23], the Subcommission called on Governments to give full attention to the implementation of the 1994 Plan of Action and asked the Secretary-General to invite them to submit information regularly to the Subcommission on the situation regarding harmful traditional practices in their countries. The Subcommission reiterated its 2003 proposal [YUN 2003, p. 778] that three seminars be held in Africa, Asia and Europe to review progress achieved and to explore ways of overcoming obstacles in implementing the Plan of Action, and asked the High Commissioner to help raise funds to organize the seminars. The Special Rapporteur was asked to report in 2005 and the High Commissioner was asked to assist her.

Women and girls in Afghanistan

On 21 July, the Economic and Social Council, in resolution 2004/10 (see p. 1163), urged the Afghan Transitional Administration and future Government to enable the full, equal and effective participation of women and girls in civil, cultural, economic, political and social life throughout the country at all levels, and to strengthen efforts to prevent and eliminate violence against them. The Council encouraged continuing efforts of the United Nations and its agencies, donors and civil society, guided by Security Council resolution 1325(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 1113], to support capacity-building for Afghan women to enable them to participate in all sectors, particularly in the 2004 electoral process.

The girl child

On 20 April [res. 2004/48], the Commission called on States to take measures, including legal reforms, to ensure girls' enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms and to eliminate discrimination against them, and all forms of violence, harmful traditional practices, the root causes of son preference and forced and early marriages.

Mainstreaming women's rights

Reports of Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 780], the Secretary-General, in a March report [E/CN.4/2004/64], described measures to integrate a gender perspective into the UN system, taken by Commission mechanisms and procedures, human rights treaty bodies, OHCHR and UN human rights field presences. The report noted continuing progress in efforts to improve the integration of gender and women's rights issues into the UN human rights system, but that those efforts remained uneven. An assessment of technical cooperation activities by OHCHR and human rights field presence agents indicated a wide diversity in terms of efforts and achievements. The Secretary-General stated that systematic monitoring of the integration of gender and women's rights into technical cooperation activities was essential and asked the Commission to consider that possibility. He proposed similar preliminary assessment of efforts in other areas and consideration of the results by the Commission. Given that women experts had often led treaty body efforts to integrate gender perspectives into their work, the Secretary-General said the Commission might wish to emphasize the importance of the relevant provisions of the Beijing Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170] and of Commission resolutions, and to ask him to bring gender trends to the attention of States parties when inviting their nominations for the election of treaty bodies' members. The Secretary-General further suggested that the Commission consider ways to ensure greater attention to gender balance and relevant expertise in the designation of experts. Increased participation of women in human rights activities could be an effective way to improve attention to women's rights, and relevant actors, including Governments, UN agencies, OHCHR and NGOs, should be encouraged to work for more gender-balanced participation in human rights activities.

A further report [E/CN.4/2004/65-E/CN.6/2004/7] of the Secretary-General presented the joint work plan of the UN Division for the Advancement of Women and OHCHR in 2004. Both entities would continue to cooperate to advance women's human rights and the mainstreaming of gender perspectives in all activities, particularly regarding support for human rights treaty bodies and for intergovernmental bodies and special procedures, technical cooperation, advisory services and meetings, awareness-raising and outreach, and inter-agency cooperation. They planned to continue cooperation in the exchange of documents, reports and the results of the work of treaty bodies and the circulation of those documents; in the exchange of information and collaboration among their staff regarding communications and inquiry procedures; in supporting mutual participation of the Chairpersons of the Commission on the Status of Women and of the Commission on Human Rights in each other's work, and the participation of the Chairperson of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women; in the preparation of reports on similar issues; in efforts to improve early information exchange and coordination in technical cooperation activities; and in preparing and piloting training packages on international human rights instruments. Cooperation would continue in convening a proposed joint meeting of the bureaux of the Commission on the Status of Women and the Commission on Human Rights, in organizing a workshop on the integration of gender perspectives into the work of thematic mandates and in organizing a joint meeting of the Division and OHCHR on national human rights institutions and machineries for the advancement of women regarding strategies to eliminate sexual discrimination. Joint efforts would focus on ensuring that the electronic database covering the main human rights treaty bodies was updated, operational and accessible, and on updating and improving their web sites to enhance information about human rights, particularly women's. They would collaborate in publishing materials on the gender dimensions of racial discrimination, and prepare a guide on human rights and legislative practices to combat trafficking in women.

Commission action. On 19 April [dec. 2004/108], the Commission decided to consider in 2005 the issue of integrating the human rights of women throughout the UN system on a biennial basis, and asked the Secretary-General to update his March report (see above).

Trafficking in women and girls

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 2004/45], the Commission invited Governments, donors, OHCHR, international and regional organizations and NGOs to consider the need for comprehensive anti-trafficking strategies, greater allocation of resources and better coordination of activities in tackling the problem of trafficking in persons, particularly women and children. Governments were further encouraged, in cooperation with intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, to study the vulnerable situation of potential victims and to undertake information campaigns targeted at them, especially women and girls, aimed at clarifying opportunities, limitations and rights in the event of migration, to enable them to make informed decisions to prevent them from becoming trafficking victims. The High Commissioner was invited, in cooperation with participating organizations of the Intergovernmental Organization Contact Group on Human Trafficking and Migrant Smuggling, to brief delegations and other interested parties on OHCHR's trafficking programme and the Contact Group's activities during the Commission's 2006 session.

Also on 19 April [dec. 2004/110], the Commission decided to appoint for a period of three years a Special Rapporteur whose mandate would focus on the human rights aspects of the rights of victims of trafficking in persons, especially women and children. The Commission requested that the Special Rapporteur report annually, starting in 2005, with recommendations on measures to uphold the rights of victims and cooperate with other relevant special rapporteurs, particularly the Special Rapporteur on violence against women (see p. 775) and with relevant UN bodies, regional organizations and victims and their representatives. The Special Rapporteur might, as appropriate, respond to reliable information on possible violations, with a view to protecting the rights of actual or potential victims. Governments and international organizations were asked to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur and the Secretary-General was asked to assist in fulfilling the mandate.

On 15 June, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision to appoint the Special Rapporteur and its requests to the Special Rapporteur and the Secretary-General (decision 2004/228).

In October, Sigma Huda (Bangladesh) was appointed Special Rapporteur on trafficking in persons, especially women and children.

General Assembly action. On 20 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 59/166 (see p. 1160), urged Governments to devise, enforce and strengthen effective measures to combat and eliminate all forms of trafficking in women and girls, including for sexual exploitation, as part of a comprehensive anti-trafficking strategy that integrated a gender and human rights perspective, and to draw up national action plans in that regard.

Children

By a recorded vote of 52 to 1, the Commission, on 20 April [res. 2004/48], called on States to ensure children's registration immediately after birth; to respect children's rights and preserve their identity; and to ensure children's right to know and be cared for by their parents and not be separated from their parents against their will, except when competent authorities determined that such separation was in the best interests of the child. Among other things, States were also called on to support and participate in global poverty eradication efforts and to promote the rights of the child in that context; ensure children's access, without discrimination, to health; support and rehabilitate children and their families affected by HIV/AIDS and ensure the prevention of HIV infections; ensure that children had access, without discrimination, to quality education; protect children from violence and ensure they did not suffer discrimination; protect the rights of minority children, and those of children with disabilities, migrant children, street children and refugee and internally displaced children; eliminate child labour; and ensure children were not deprived of their liberty except as a last resort, and ensure that those arrested, detained or imprisoned were provided legal assistance and not sentenced to forced labour, corporal punishment or deprived of access to health care.

(Other aspects of the Commission's resolution—child labour, the prevention and eradication of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, the protection of children affected by armed conflict and violence against children—are covered below.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 76], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/59/499], adopted resolution 59/261 by recorded vote (166-2-1) [agenda item 101].

Rights of the child

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the rights of the child, the most recent of which is resolution 58/157 of 22 December 2003, as well as Commission on Human Rights resolution 2004/48 of 20 April 2004,

Emphasizing that the Convention on the Rights of the Child must constitute the standard in the promotion and protection of the rights of the child, and bearing in mind the importance of the Optional Protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict and on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, as well as other relevant human rights instruments,

Welcoming the entry into force on 25 December 2003 of the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime,

Reaffirming the outcome documents of the special session of the General Assembly on children, entitled "A world fit for children", and the commitments contained therein to promote and protect the rights of each child, every human being below the age of 18 years, including adolescents, and of all major United Nations conferences, and the integration of child rights issues into the outcome documents of all major

United Nations conferences, special sessions and summits,

Welcoming the reports of the Secretary-General on the status of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and on progress achieved in realizing the commitments set out in the document entitled "A world fit for children",

Welcoming also the work of the Committee on the Rights of the Child in examining the progress made by States parties to the Convention in implementing the obligations undertaken in the Convention and in providing recommendations to States parties on the implementation of the Convention and, in cooperation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in enhancing awareness of the principles and provisions of the Convention,

Profoundly concerned that the situation of children in many parts of the world remains critical as a result of the persistence of poverty, social inequality, inadequate social and economic conditions in an increasingly globalized economic environment, pandemics, in particular HIV/AIDS, malaria and tuberculosis, environmental damage, natural disasters, armed conflict, displacement, exploitation, illiteracy, hunger, intolerance, discrimination, gender inequality, disability and inadequate legal protection, and convinced that urgent and effective national and international action is called for,

Underlining the need to mainstream a gender perspective in all policies and programmes relating to children,

Implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocols thereto on the involvement of children in armed conflict and on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography

1. Reaffirms that the general principles of, inter alia, the best interests of the child, non-discrimination, participation and survival and development provide the framework for all actions concerning children, including adolescents;

2. Urges States that have not yet done so to sign and ratify or accede to the Convention on the Rights of the Child as a matter of priority, and urges States parties to implement it fully, while stressing that the implementation of the Convention and the achievement of the goals of the World Summit for Children and the special session of the General Assembly on children are mutually reinforcing;

3. Expresses its concern about the great number of reservations to the Convention, and urges States parties to withdraw reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and to consider reviewing other reservations with a view to withdrawing them;

4. Urges States that have not yet done so to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Optional Protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict and on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, and urges States parties to implement them fully;

5. Urges States parties to take all appropriate measures for the implementation of the rights recognized in the Convention by, inter alia, putting in place effective national legislation, policies and action plans, by strengthening relevant governmental structures for children and by ensuring adequate and systematic training in the rights of the child for professional groups working with and for children;

6. Encourages States to strengthen their national statistical capacities and to use statistics disaggregated, inter alia, by age, gender and other relevant factors that may lead to disparities and other statistical indicators at the national, subregional, regional and international levels to develop and assess social policies and programmes so that economic and social resources are used efficiently and effectively for the full realization of the rights of the child;

7. Also encourages States to strengthen their partnership with United Nations organs, within their respective mandates, the Bretton Woods institutions and other multilateral agencies, and affirms the important role of international cooperation for the purposes of the promotion and protection of the rights of the child, in particular with regard to economic, social and cultural rights;

8. Calls upon States to strengthen their cooperation with the Committee on the Rights of the Child, to comply in a timely manner with their reporting obligations under the Convention and the Optional Protocols thereto, in accordance with the guidelines elaborated by the Committee, and to take into account the recommendations made by the Committee in the implementation of the provisions of the Convention;

9. Welcomes the efforts of the Committee to reform its working methods so as to consider the reports of States parties in a timely manner, including its proposal to work in two chambers, as an exceptional and temporary measure, for a period of two years, in order to clear the backlog of reports, taking due account of equitable geographical distribution, urges the Committee to continue to review its working methods in order to enhance its efficiency, and requests it to assess the progress made after two years, taking into account the wider context of treaty body reform;

10. Calls upon all States and relevant actors concerned to continue to cooperate with the special rapporteurs and special representatives of the United Nations system in the implementation of their mandates;

11. Requests all relevant organs of the United Nations system, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and United Nations mechanisms regularly and systematically to incorporate a strong child rights perspective as well as a gender perspective throughout all activities in the fulfilment of their mandates, as well as to ensure that their staff is trained in child protection matters, and calls upon States to cooperate closely with them;

Promoting and protecting the rights of children and non-discrimination against children, including children in particularly difficult situations

Identity, family relations and birth registration

12. Urges all States to intensify their efforts in order to ensure the implementation of the right of the child to birth registration, preservation of identity, including nationality, and family relations, as recognized by law, by:

(a) Providing, at minimal cost, simplified, expeditious and effective procedures for birth registration;

(b) Raising awareness at the national, regional and local levels, whenever necessary, of the importance of birth registration;

(c) Guaranteeing, to the extent consistent with each State's obligations, the right of a child whose parents reside in different States to maintain, on a regular basis, save in exceptional circumstances, personal relations and direct contact with both parents by providing means of access and visitation in both States and by respecting the principle that both parents have common responsibilities for the upbringing and development of their children;

(d) Where alternative care is necessary, promoting family and community-based care in preference to placement in institutions;

13. Calls upon States to take all necessary measures to prevent and combat illegal adoptions;

14. Calls upon all States to adopt and enforce laws and improve the implementation of policies and programmes to protect children growing up without parents and caregivers, in particular orphaned and other vulnerable children, from all forms of violence, neglect, abuse and exploitation, and to ensure their access to education, health and social services;

15. Calls upon States to take all necessary measures to ensure the full enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms by orphaned and other vulnerable children and to take effective measures against violations of those rights;

16. Calls upon all States to address cases of international abduction of children, and encourages States to engage in multilateral and bilateral cooperation so as to facilitate, inter alia, the return of the child to the country in which he or she resided immediately before the removal or retention and, in this respect, to pay particular attention to cases of international abduction of children by a parent or by other relatives;

Poverty

17. Calls upon States and the international community to cooperate, support and participate in the global efforts for poverty eradication at the global, regional and country levels, recognizing that strengthened availability and effective allocation of resources are required at all of these levels, in order to ensure that all the internationally agreed development and poverty eradication goals, including those set out in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, are realized within their time framework, and reaffirms that investments in children and the realization of their rights are among the most effective ways to eradicate poverty;

Health

18. Calls upon all States to take all necessary measures to ensure the right of the child, without discrimination, to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of health and to develop sustainable health systems and social services, to ensure access to such systems and services without discrimination and to pay particular attention to adequate food and nutrition to prevent disease and malnutrition, to prenatal and postnatal health care, to the special needs of adolescents and to reproductive and sexual health;

19. Urges all States to assign priority to activities and programmes aimed at preventing the abuse of narcotic drugs, psychotropic substances and inhalants as well as preventing other addictions, in particular addiction to alcohol and tobacco, among children and young people, especially those in vulnerable situations, and to counter the use of children and young people in the illicit production of and trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

20. Calls upon all States to give support and rehabilitation to children and their families affected by HIV/AIDS and to involve children and their caregivers, as well as the private sector, to ensure the effective prevention of HIV infections through correct information and access to voluntary and confidential care, treatment and testing, including pharmaceutical products and medical technologies, affordable to all, giving due importance to the prevention of mother-to-child transmission of the virus;

Education

21. Also calls upon all States:

(a) To recognize the right to education on the basis of equal opportunity and non-discrimination by making primary education compulsory and available free to all children, by ensuring that all children have access to education of good quality, as well as by making secondary education generally available and accessible to all, in particular by the progressive introduction of free education, bearing in mind that special measures to ensure equal access, including affirmative action, contribute to achieving equal opportunity and combating exclusion;

(b) To design and implement programmes to provide social services and support to pregnant adolescents and adolescent mothers, in particular by enabling them to continue and complete their education;

(c) To take all appropriate measures to prevent racism and discriminatory and xenophobic attitudes and behaviour through education, keeping in mind the important role that children play in changing those practices;

(d) To ensure that children, from an early age, benefit from education programmes, materials and activities that develop respect for human rights and reflect fully the values of peace, non-violence against oneself and others, tolerance and gender equality;

(e) To harness the rapidly evolving information and communication technologies to support education at an affordable cost, including open and distance education, while reducing inequality in access and quality;

(f) To enable children, including adolescents, to exercise their right to express their views freely, according to their evolving capacity, and build self-esteem, acquire knowledge and skills, such as those for conflict resolution, decision-making and communication, to meet the challenges of life;

22. Invites the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to continue to implement its mandated role in coordinating Education for All, as a means of reaching the commitments contained in the Millennium Declaration in this regard;

23. Urges States:

(a) To take measures to protect schoolchildren from violence, injury or abuse, including sexual abuse and intimidation or maltreatment in schools, to establish complaint mechanisms that are age-appropriate and accessible to children and to undertake thorough and prompt investigations of all acts of violence and discrimination;

(b) To take measures to eliminate the use of corporal punishment in schools;

Freedom from violence

24. Calls upon States:

(a) To take all appropriate measures to prevent and protect children from all forms of violence, including physical, mental and sexual violence, torture, child abuse, domestic violence, and abuse by police, other law enforcement authorities and employees and officials in detention centres or welfare institutions, including orphanages;

(b) To investigate and submit cases of torture and other forms of violence against children to the competent authorities for the purpose of prosecution and to impose appropriate disciplinary or penal sanctions against those responsible for such practices;

25. Calls upon all States to end impunity for perpetrators of crimes committed against children, recognizing in this regard the contribution of the establishment of the International Criminal Court as a way to prevent violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, in particular when children are victims of serious crimes, including the crime of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes, to bring perpetrators of such crimes to justice and not grant amnesties for these crimes and to strengthen international cooperation towards the goal of ending impunity;

26. Requests all relevant human rights mechanisms, in particular special rapporteurs and working groups, within their mandates, to pay attention to the special situations of violence against children, reflecting their experiences in the field;

27. Invites the independent expert for the United Nations study on violence against children to report to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session;

Non-discrimination

28. Calls upon all States to ensure that children are entitled to their civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights without discrimination of any kind;

29. Notes with concern the large number of children, particularly girls and children belonging to minorities, who are among the victims of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, stresses the need to incorporate special measures, in accordance with the principle of the best interests of the child and respect for his or her views, in programmes to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and calls upon States to provide special support and ensure equal access to services for all children;

30. Calls upon all States to take all necessary measures, including legal reforms where appropriate:

(a) To ensure the full and equal enjoyment by girls of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, to take effective actions against violations of those rights and freedoms and to base programmes and policies on the rights of the child, taking into account the special situation of girls;

(b) To eliminate all forms of discrimination against girls and all forms of violence, including female infanticide and prenatal sex selection, rape, sexual abuse and harmful traditional or customary practices, including female genital mutilation, the root causes of son preference, marriages without free and full consent of the intending spouses, early marriages and forced sterilization, by enacting and enforcing legislation and, where appropriate, formulating comprehensive, multidisciplinary and coordinated national plans, programmes or strategies protecting girls;

Children with disabilities

31. Also calls upon all States to take the necessary measures to ensure the full and equal enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms by children with disabilities in both the public and the private spheres, including access to good quality education and health care and protection from violence, abuse and neglect, and to develop and, where it already exists, to enforce legislation to prohibit discrimination against them to ensure their dignity, promote their self-reliance and facilitate their active participation and integration in the community, taking into account the particularly difficult situation of children with disabilities living in poverty;

32. Encourages the Ad Hoc Committee on a Comprehensive and Integral International Convention on the Protection and Promotion of the Rights and Dignity of Persons with Disabilities to continue to consider the issue of children with disabilities in its deliberations;

Migrant children

33. Calls upon all States to ensure, for migrant children, the enjoyment of all human rights as well as access to health care, social services and education of good quality and to ensure that migrant children, and especially those who are unaccompanied, in particular victims of violence and exploitation, receive special protection and assistance;

Children working and/or living on the street

34. Also calls upon all States to prevent violations of the rights of children working and/or living on the street, including discrimination, arbitrary detention and extrajudicial, arbitrary and summary executions, torture, all kinds of violence and exploitation, and to bring the perpetrators to justice, to adopt and implement policies for the protection, social and psychosocial rehabilitation and reintegration of these children and to adopt economic, social and educational strategies to address the problems of children working and/or living on the street;

Refugee and internally displaced children

35. Further calls upon all States to protect refugee, asylum-seeking and internally displaced children, in particular those who are unaccompanied, who are particularly exposed to risks in connection with armed conflict, such as recruitment, sexual violence and exploitation, to pay particular attention to programmes for voluntary repatriation and, wherever possible, local integration and resettlement, to give priority to family tracing and reunification and, where appropriate, to cooperate with international humanitarian and refugee organizations, including by facilitating their work;

36. Calls upon all States to translate into concrete action their commitment to the progressive and effective elimination of child labour that is likely to be hazardous to or interfere with the child's education or to be harmful to the child's health or physical, mental, spiritual, moral or social development, to eliminate immediately the worst forms of child labour, to promote education as a key strategy in this regard, including the creation of vocational training and apprenticeship programmes and the integration of working children into the formal education system, and to examine and devise economic policies, where necessary, in cooperation with the international community, that address factors contributing to these forms of child labour;

37. Urges all States that have not yet done so to consider ratifying the Convention concerning Minimum Age for Admission to Employment, 1973 (Convention No. 138) and the Convention concerning the Prohibition and Immediate Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour, 1999 (Convention No. 182) of the International Labour Organization, and calls upon States parties to those instruments to implement them fully and to comply in a timely manner with their reporting obligations;

Children alleged to have infringed or recognized as having infringed penal law

38. Calls upon:

(a) All States, in particular States in which the death penalty has not been abolished, to comply with their obligations as assumed under relevant provisions of international human rights instruments, including, in particular, articles 37 and 40 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and articles 6 and 14 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, keeping in mind the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty and the guarantees set out in Economic and Social Council resolutions 1984/50 of 25 May 1984 and 1989/64 of 24 May 1989, and calls upon those States to abolish by law, as soon as possible, the death penalty for those below the age of 18 years at the time of the commission of the offence;

(b) All States to ensure that no child in detention is sentenced to forced labour or corporal punishment or deprived of access to and provision of health-care services, hygiene and environmental sanitation, education, basic instruction and vocational training, taking into consideration the special needs of children with disabilities in detention, in accordance with their obligations under the Convention;

Recovery and social reintegration

39. Encourages States to promote actions, including through bilateral and multilateral technical cooperation and financial assistance, for the social reintegration of children in difficult situations, considering, inter alia, views, skills and capacities that these children have developed in the conditions in which they lived and, where appropriate, with their meaningful participation;

40. Recognizes that children affected by the severe impact of natural disasters must be provided with access to basic social services;

Prevention and eradication of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography

41. Calls upon all States:

(a) To criminalize and penalize effectively all forms of sexual exploitation and sexual abuse of children, including all acts of paedophilia, including within the family or for commercial purposes, child pornography and child prostitution, child sex tourism, trafficking in children, the sale of children and their organs and the use of the Internet for these purposes, and to take effective measures against the criminalization of children who are victims of exploitation;

(b) To ensure the prosecution of offenders, whether local or foreign, by the competent national authorities, either in the country in which the crime was committed, or in the country of which the offender is a national or resident, or in the country of which the victim is a national, or on any other basis permitted under domestic law in accordance with due process of law, and for these purposes, to afford one another the greatest measure of assistance in connection with investigations or criminal or extradition proceedings;

(c) To increase cooperation at all levels to prevent and dismantle networks trafficking in children;

(d) To consider ratifying or acceding to the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime;

(e) In cases of trafficking in children, the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, to address effectively the needs of victims, including their safety and protection, physical and psychological recovery and full reintegration into their family and society;

(f) To combat the existence of a market that encourages such criminal practices against children, including through the adoption, effective application and enforcement of preventive, rehabilitative and punitive measures targeting customers or individuals who sexually exploit or sexually abuse children, as well as by ensuring public awareness;

(g) To contribute to the elimination of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography by adopting a holistic approach, addressing the contributing factors, including underdevelopment, poverty, economic disparities, inequitable socio-economic structures, dysfunctional families, lack of education, urban-rural migration, gender discrimination, irresponsible adult sexual behaviour, harmful traditional practices, armed conflicts and trafficking in children;

Children affected by armed conflict

42. Reaffirms the essential roles of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights in promoting and protecting the rights and welfare of children, notes the importance of the debates held by the Security Council on children and armed conflict and its resolutions, and takes note of other recent documents on this issue and of the importance of the undertaking by the Council to give special attention to the protection, welfare and rights of children in armed conflict when taking action aimed at maintaining peace and security, including provisions for the protection of children in the mandates of peacekeeping operations, as well as the inclusion of child protection advisers in those operations;

43. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the comprehensive assessment of the United Nations system response to children affected by armed conflict;

44. Also takes note of the report of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict;

45. Recognizes the inclusion in the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, as a war crime, of crimes involving sexual violence and crimes of conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years or using them to participate actively in hostilities in both international and non-international armed conflicts;

46. Strongly condemns any recruitment and use of children in armed conflict contrary to international law, and urges all States and other parties to armed conflict that are engaged in such practices to end them;

47. Recognizes the efforts of States, the United Nations system and civil society to end the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict;

48. Calls upon States:

(a) When ratifying the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict, to raise the minimum age for voluntary recruitment of persons into the national armed forces from that set out in article 38, paragraph 3, of the Convention, bearing in mind that under the Convention persons under 18 years of age are entitled to special protection, and to adopt safeguards to ensure that such recruitment is not forced or coerced;

(b) To take all feasible measures to ensure the demobilization and effective disarmament of children used in armed conflicts and to implement effective measures for their rehabilitation, physical and psychological recovery and reintegration into society, taking into account the rights and the specific needs and capacities of girls;

(c) To take all feasible measures, as a matter of priority, to prevent the recruitment and use of children by armed groups, as distinct from the armed forces of a State, including the adoption of legal measures necessary to prohibit and criminalize such practices;

(d) To protect children affected by armed conflict, in particular from violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law and to ensure that they receive timely, effective humanitarian assistance in accordance with the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and international humanitarian law;

49. Calls upon the United Nations system and the international community to cooperate with States in the development of projects to build capacity and to educate and train demobilized children in order to reintegrate them into society;

Follow-up

50. Urges those States that have not yet done so to complete as soon as possible a national action plan incorporating the goals agreed at the special session of the General Assembly on children, as reflected in its outcome document entitled “A world fit for children”, and to place those goals within the framework of the Convention on the Rights of the Child;

51. Decides:

(a) To request the Secretary-General to prepare an updated report on the progress achieved in realizing the commitments set out in the document entitled “A world fit for children”, with a view to identifying new challenges and making recommendations on the action needed to achieve further progress;

(b) To request the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session a report on the rights of the child, containing information on the status of the Convention and the issues addressed in the present resolution;

(c) To request the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict to continue to submit reports to the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights and to ensure that they contain relevant, accurate and objective information on the situation of children affected by armed conflict, taking into account the views of Member States and the outcome document adopted by the General Assembly at its special session on children and bearing in mind existing mandates and reports of relevant bodies;

(d) To invite the Chairman of the Committee on the Rights of the Child to present an oral report on the work of the Committee to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session;

(e) To focus its general debate regarding the promotion of the rights of the child, at future sessions, on specific challenges, beginning, at its sixtieth session, with the contribution that the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child can make to the eradication of poverty and hunger;

(f) To continue its consideration of the question at its sixtieth session under the item entitled “Promotion and protection of the rights of children”.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 780], the Secretary-General submitted a January progress report [E/CN.4/2004/68] on the study on violence against children, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 56/138 [YUN 2001, p. 681]. He noted that the independent expert appointed to lead the study, Paulo Sérgio Pinheiro (Brazil), had undertaken a number of related activities, including the development of a concept paper, which was annexed to the report and outlined the scope of the study. In addition, a questionnaire had been circulated requesting Governments to submit information on the issue of violence against children. As the lead UN bodies designated to support the study, OHCHR, UNICEF and WHO had agreed to establish a secretariat in Geneva, headed by a Director, to support the expert. The Director had been hired, but since no provision was made in the regular budget for the study, the secretariat and other aspects of the study would be financed through voluntary contributions. UNICEF regional directors had been invited to consider modalities for regional consultations that would provide input for the study, and NGOs had also taken steps to facilitate their input.

Oral report of independent expert. As called for in General Assembly resolution 58/157 [YUN 2003, p. 781], the independent expert leading the study on violence against children, Mr. Pinheiro, in an October oral report to the Third Committee [A/C.3/59/SR.17], discussed the work he had undertaken to provide an in-depth, global picture of violence against children, documenting its causes, magnitude, incidence and consequences. He had focused on gathering information on measures to prevent and respond to the problem, and, in that regard, he was working to identify best practices, including those developed by children themselves. The objective was to heighten attention at the national, regional and international levels to the problem, and to put forward recommendations to improve national legislation, policy and programmes, and for consideration by the Assembly, the UN system and civil society. In accordance with the definition of a child contained in the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child [YUN 1989, p. 561] (see p. 667), the study would be concerned with violence against girls and boys under 18 years of age and would take a broad view of violence, covering physical and mental violence, injury and abuse, maltreatment or exploitation, including sexual abuse. He would focus on children as both victims and perpetrators of violence and would address violence that was less visible, such as that in the family and community, including schools, care and residential institutions, detention facilities, prisons and in the administration of justice. Existing knowledge, documentation and research would form the basis of the study, and inputs were expected from Governments, regional mechanisms, NGOs, other parts of civil society and children themselves. It was hoped that the study, scheduled for submission in 2006, would provide concrete tools to prevent and combat all forms of violence against children.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2004/48], by a recorded vote of 52 to 1, the Commission invited Member States, UN bodies and organizations and relevant intergovernmental organizations to provide financial support, including through voluntary contributions, for the conduct of the study on violence against children. NGOs were invited to contribute to the study, while the independent expert was encouraged to seek children's participation. The Secretary-General was asked to submit a progress report in 2005 and a final in-depth study in 2006.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 780], the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, Juan Miguel Petit (Uruguay), submitted a January report [E/CN.4/2004/9] on the prevention of child sexual exploitation, based on information received from Governments, international organizations and NGOs, in response to a questionnaire he had circulated. The report focused on international instruments, programmes and measures aimed at identifying strategies to prevent child sexual exploitation. Using as a basis the 1996 Stockholm Agenda for Action against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, adopted by the first World Congress against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children [YUN 1996, p. 660], the Special Rapporteur described initiatives relating to international instruments, legislation, enforcement mechanisms, institutions and networks, national plans of action, programmes and projects, the role of the media, sex tourism: the business sector and codes of conduct, the right to education, peer education, participation and empowerment, gender issues, and groups discriminated against and exposed to higher risks. The Special Rapporteur concluded that child sexual exploitation was a multifaceted and evolving phenomenon and that targeted measures were necessary to address its various manifestations. He recommended better programmes and policies for intervention, particularly regarding the areas discussed in the report. He further recommended, among other things, the development of monitoring tools and indicators to set benchmarks and measure achievements, encouraging behavioural change by persons who engaged in child sexual exploitation, and policies and programmes to prevent commercial sexual exploitation of children, including through the Internet.

Between 1 January and 31 December, the Special Rapporteur sent 47 communications to 30 Governments regarding alleged cases relating to the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, of which over 60 per cent were sent jointly with other special rapporteurs. Of those, replies were received from 18 Governments. The communications sent and replies received were summarized in a separate report [E/CN.4/2005/78/Add.3].

The Special Rapporteur visited Paraguay (23 February–5 March) [E/CN.4/2005/78/Add.1] at the invitation of the Government, where he found that, against the backdrop of poverty and inequality, the sexual exploitation of children and young persons had grown to alarming levels. Information he had received suggested that about two out of every three sex workers in the country were minors, who began working in the sex trade between the ages of 12 and 13, and that girls as young as 8 years of age were involved. The non-registration of children at birth raised cause for concern, as children without birth certificates accounted for a large proportion of people deprived of an identity or rights and who were vulnerable to exploitation. The Special Rapporteur, pointing to limited progress in efforts to protect children's rights, determined that new social programmes and preventive measures were required, and proposed that the State and civil society pool their resources to build a system to protect children's rights in situations of social risk. Priority should be accorded the full implementation of the Government's Code on Children and Young Persons, care for victims of sexual exploitation and the eradication of the system of servant girls.

In Romania (1–10 September) [E/CN.4/2005/78/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur found that, despite some achievements regarding some child protection issues, other problems affecting children had not been addressed adequately, including internal trafficking and child prostitution. The Special Rapporteur pointed out that internal trafficking opened doors to international trafficking and that anti-trafficking strategies would work only if the problem was also addressed internally. He found that social exclusion, discrimination and stigmatization were the root causes of vulnerability to trafficking and sexual exploitation, and that those at risk included street children, Roma children, victims of sexual abuse and domestic violence, children in institutions and children with dysfunctional and poor families. The Special Rapporteur recommended measures relating to relevant legislation, law enforcement, the protection of migrants' interests, anti-trafficking programmes and the transformation of residential institutions for children.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2004/48], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 52 to 1, called on States to take measures to prevent and combat the trafficking and sale of children and to criminalize and penalize all forms of sexual exploitation and abuse of children, child pornography and child prostitution, child trafficking and child sex tourism, the sale of children and their organs and the use of the Internet for those purposes, and to address the needs of victims. The Special Rapporteur was asked to report in 2005.

On 22 July, the Economic and Social Council, noting the Commission's resolution, decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for a further three years (decision 2004/285).

Child labour

By a recorded vote of 52 to 1, the Commission, on 20 April [res. 2004/48], called on States to eliminate child labour that was hazardous, interfered with a child's education or was harmful to the child's health, and to promote education as a key strategy. It also called on them to consider ratifying and implementing ILO Convention No. 182 concerning the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour (Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention), adopted in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 1388], and Convention No. 138 concerning the minimum age for admission to employment (Minimum Age Convention), adopted in 1973 [YUN 1973, p. 885].

Children and armed conflict

Report of Special Representative. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 51/77 [YUN 1996, p. 665], the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict, Olara A. Otunnu (Côte d'Ivoire), in a January report [E/CN.4/2004/70], updated information on violations against children in situations of armed conflict, which supplemented his 2003 report and that of the Secretary-General on the subject [YUN 2003, p. 790]. Annexed to the report were lists of parties to armed conflict that recruited and used children in combat. Violations discussed in the report included abduction, maiming and killing, sexual and gender-based violence, denial of humanitarian access, attacks on schools and hospitals and the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict. The Special Representative concluded that, at the level of application and enforcement, the international community possessed the means and influence that could be brought to bear on parties to conflict to ensure their compliance with international standards. The most pressing challenge facing the international community was to galvanize and unify the two assets of normative tools and the power of collective influence into a coherent and concerted project: an effective regime of protection for war-affected children. That was the purpose of the “era of application” campaign and agenda for action proposed in the Secretary-General’s 2003 report [ibid.]. The Commission had an important role to play with regard to monitoring and reporting on violations against children’s rights in situations of armed conflict and should review the information in the Secretary-General’s report and take action in accordance with its mandate, procedures and mechanisms.

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 52 to 1, the Commission, on 20 April [res. 2004/48], called on States to end the use of children in armed conflicts and, together with parties to armed conflict, to respect international humanitarian law. It asked States, UN bodies and agencies and regional organizations to integrate the rights of the child into all activities in conflict and post-conflict situations and to support national and international mine action efforts. It recommended that the impact on children of sanctions imposed in the context of armed conflict be assessed and monitored, in order to address possible adverse effects.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 April [meeting 4948], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1539(2004). The draft [S/2004/314] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 1261(1999) of 25 August 1999, 1314(2000) of 11 August 2000, 1379(2001) of 20 November 2001 and 1460(2003) of 30 January 2003, which provide a comprehensive framework for addressing the protection of children affected by armed conflict,

Recalling its resolution 1308(2000) of 17 July 2000 on the responsibility of the Security Council in the maintenance of international peace and security: HIV/AIDS and international peacekeeping operations, and its resolution 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000 on women and peace and security,

Noting the advances made for the protection of children affected by armed conflict, particularly in the areas of advocacy and the development of norms and standards, while remaining deeply concerned over the lack of overall progress on the ground, where parties to conflict continue to violate with impunity the relevant provisions of applicable international law relating to the rights and protection of children in armed conflict,

Recalling the responsibilities of States to end impunity and to prosecute those responsible for genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and other egregious crimes perpetrated against children,

Reiterating its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security and, in this connection, its commitment to address the widespread impact of armed conflict on children,

Underlining the importance of the full, safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel and goods and the delivery of humanitarian assistance to all children affected by armed conflict,

Noting the fact that the conscription or enlistment of children under the age of 15, or using them to participate actively in hostilities in both international and non-international armed conflict, is classified as a war crime by the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, and noting also that the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict requires States parties to set a minimum age of 18 for compulsory recruitment and participation in hostilities and to raise the minimum age for voluntary recruitment from that set out in article 38, paragraph 3, of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and to take all feasible measures to ensure that members of their armed forces who have not attained the age of 18 years do not take a direct part in hostilities,

Stressing its determination to ensure respect for its resolutions and other international norms and standards for the protection of children affected by armed conflict,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 10 November 2003 submitted pursuant to paragraph 16 of its resolution 1460(2003), and stressing that the present resolution does not seek to make any legal determination as to whether situations referred to in the report of the Secretary-General are or are not armed conflicts within the context of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, nor does it prejudge the legal status of the non-State parties involved in those situations,

1. Strongly condemns the recruitment and use of child soldiers by parties to armed conflict in violation of international obligations applicable to them, the killing and maiming of children, rape and other sexual violence mostly committed against girls, abduction and forced displacement, denial of humanitarian access to children, attacks against schools and hospitals, as well as trafficking, forced labour and all forms of slavery and all other violations and abuses committed against children affected by armed conflict;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, taking into account the proposals contained in his report as well as any other relevant elements, to devise urgently, and preferably within three months, an action plan for a systematic and comprehensive monitoring and reporting mechanism, which utilizes expertise from the United Nations system and the contributions of national Governments, regional organizations, non-governmental organizations in their advisory capacity and various civil society actors, in order to provide timely, objective, accurate and reliable information on the recruitment and use of child soldiers in violation of applicable international law and on other violations and abuses committed against children affected by armed conflict, for consideration in taking appropriate action;

3. Expresses its intention to take appropriate measures, in particular while considering subregional and cross-border activities, to curb linkages between illicit trade in natural and other resources, illicit trafficking in small arms and light weapons, cross-border abduction and recruitment, and armed conflict, which can prolong armed conflict and intensify its impact on children, and consequently requests the Secretary-General to propose effective measures to control this illicit trade and trafficking;

4. Calls upon all parties concerned to abide by the international obligations applicable to them relating to the protection of children affected by armed conflict, as well as the concrete commitments they have made to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, the United Nations Children's Fund and other United Nations agencies, and to cooperate fully with the United Nations peacekeeping missions and United Nations country teams, where appropriate in the context of the cooperation framework between the United Nations and the concerned Government, in the follow-up to and implementation of those commitments;

5. Takes note with deep concern of the continued recruitment and use of children, by parties mentioned in the report of the Secretary-General, in situations of armed conflict on the agenda of the Council, in violation of applicable international law relating to the rights and protection of children and, in this regard:

(a) Calls upon those parties to prepare, within three months, concrete time-bound action plans to halt the recruitment and use of children in violation of the international obligations applicable to them, in close collaboration with United Nations peacekeeping missions and United Nations country teams, consistent with their respective mandates;

(b) Requests the Secretary-General, in order to promote an effective and coordinated follow-up to the present resolution, to ensure that compliance by those parties is reviewed regularly, within existing resources, through a process involving all stakeholders at the country level, including Government representatives, and coordinated by a focal point to be designated by the Secretary-General and who would be in charge of engaging parties in dialogue leading to time-bound action plans, so as to report to the Secretary-General through his Special Representative by 31 July 2004, bearing in mind lessons learned from past dialogues as contained in paragraph 77 of the report of the Secretary-General;

(c) Expresses its intention to consider imposing targeted and graduated measures, through country-specific resolutions, such as, inter alia, a ban on the export or supply of small arms and light weapons and other military equipment and on military assistance, against those parties if they refuse to enter into dialogue, fail to develop an action plan or fail to meet the commitments included in their action plan, bearing in mind the report of the Secretary-General;

6. Also takes note with deep concern of the continued recruitment and use of children by parties in other situations of armed conflict mentioned in the report of the Secretary-General, in violation of applicable international law relating to the rights and protection of children, calls upon those parties to halt immediately their recruitment or use of children, and expresses, on the basis of timely, objective, accurate and reliable information received from relevant stakeholders, its intention to consider taking appropriate steps to further address this issue, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, its resolutions 1379(2001) and 1460(2003) and the present resolution;

7. Decides to continue the inclusion of specific provisions for the protection of children in the mandates of United Nations peacekeeping operations, including, on a case-by-case basis, the deployment of child protection advisers, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the need for and the number and roles of child protection advisers are systematically assessed during the preparation for each United Nations peacekeeping operation;

8. Reiterates its request to all parties concerned, including United Nations agencies, funds and programmes as well as financial institutions, to continue to ensure that all children associated with armed forces and groups, as well as issues related to children, are systematically included in every disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process, taking into account the specific needs and capacities of girls, with a particular emphasis on education, including the monitoring through, inter alia, schools, of children demobilized, in order to prevent re-recruitment, and bearing in mind the assessment of best practices, including those contained in paragraph 65 of the report of the Secretary-General;

9. Calls upon States and the United Nations system to recognize the important role of education in conflict areas in halting and preventing recruitment and re-recruitment of children contrary to the obligations of parties to conflict;

10. Notes with concern all the cases of sexual exploitation and abuse of women and children, especially girls, in situations of humanitarian crisis, including those cases involving humanitarian workers and peacekeepers, requests contributing countries to incorporate the six core principles of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee on emergencies into pertinent codes of conduct for peacekeeping personnel and to develop appropriate disciplinary and accountability mechanisms, and welcomes the promulgation of the Secretary-General's bulletin on special measures for protection from sexual exploitation and sexual abuse;

11. Requests the agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations, with support from contributing countries, to implement HIV/AIDS education and offer HIV testing and counselling services for all United Nations peacekeepers, police and humanitarian personnel;

12. Welcomes recent initiatives by regional and sub-regional organizations and arrangements for the protection of children affected by armed conflict, and in this regard notes the adoption by the Economic Community of West African States of a peer review framework on the protection of children and the adoption of "Guidelines on Children and Armed Conflict" by the European Union, and encourages such organizations and arrangements, in cooperation with the United Nations, to pursue their efforts, by, inter alia:

(a) Mainstreaming the protection of children affected by armed conflict into their advocacy, policies and programmes, paying special attention to girls;

(b) Developing peer review and monitoring and reporting mechanisms;

(c) Establishing, within their secretariats, child protection mechanisms;

(d) Including child protection staff and training in their peace and field operations;

(e) Undertaking subregional and interregional initiatives to end activities harmful to children in times of conflict, in particular, cross-border recruitment and abduction of children, illicit movement of small arms, and illicit trade in natural resources;

13. Encourages support for the development and strengthening of capacities of national and regional institutions and local and regional civil society networks to ensure the sustainability of local initiatives for the advocacy, protection and rehabilitation of children affected by armed conflict;

14. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to ensure that, in all his reports on country-specific situations, the protection of children is included as a specific aspect of the report, expresses its intention to give its full attention to the information provided therein when dealing with those situations on its agenda, and in this regard stresses the primary responsibility of United Nations peacekeeping missions and United Nations country teams, consistent within their respective mandates, to ensure effective follow-up to the present resolution and the other resolutions;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report by 31 October 2004 on the implementation of the present resolution and its resolutions 1379(2001) and 1460(2003) which would include, inter alia:

(a) Information on compliance and progress made by parties mentioned in his report in situations of armed conflict on the agenda of the Security Council, in accordance with paragraph 5 above, as well as by parties in other situations of armed conflict mentioned in his report, in accordance with paragraph 6 above, in ending the recruitment or use of children in armed conflict in violation of applicable international law relating to the rights and protection of children, bearing in mind all other violations and abuses committed against children affected by armed conflict;

(b) Information on progress made regarding the action plan requested in paragraph 2 above that calls for a systematic and comprehensive monitoring and reporting mechanism;

(c) The incorporation of best practices for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes outlined in his report;

16. Decides to remain actively seized of this matter.

to the issue of children and armed conflict. The assessment, undertaken by the Office of Internal Oversight Services, had focused on the development and application of international standards relating to children affected by armed conflict; the degree of mainstreaming of those issues within relevant UN entities; and the effectiveness of coordination within the United Nations of concerns relating to children affected by armed conflict. Guidance was provided by the 1996 study [YUN 1996, p. 663] by Graça Machel (Mozambique/South Africa) on the impact of armed conflict on children. Pointing out that significant progress had been made in efforts to strengthen international standards and to protect affected children, the Secretary-General noted that the inclusion of related concerns on the agendas of the Assembly and Security Council had enhanced child protection initiatives, while the Office of the Special Representative had helped in raising the profile of the problem. UNICEF and NGOs had also contributed to the development of a robust framework for norms and standards addressing children affected by armed conflict. Nonetheless, more needed to be done, particularly regarding the application of accepted norms and standards and to put in place an effective monitoring and reporting mechanism. The Secretary-General made recommendations for improving and sustaining efforts for children affected by armed conflict, through continued advocacy, the development of an effective and credible monitoring and reporting system on child rights violations, enhanced mainstreaming and improved coordination of the issue in the UN system.

Further report of Special Representative. In an October report [A/59/426], the Special Representative assessed progress made in mainstreaming the concerns of war-affected children in the UN system. The report examined the integration of the issue into the work of: the Security Council, UN peacekeeping operations, relevant thematic activities, UN executive coordination mechanisms, key UN-led institutional processes, and relevant UN entities and offices, including at the country level. The report noted that, although some progress had been made, particularly in mainstreaming the issue in the peace and security sector, conspicuous gaps existed and the gains made remained fragile and might dissipate if not consolidated and institutionalized. To ensure that the question of children affected by armed conflict became a consistent cross-cutting issue in UN policies and programmes, system-wide commitment and action were necessary, as were the commitment of the leaders of key UN entities and the mobilization of the requisite resources.

Communication. On 26 July [A/59/184-S/2004/602], Colombia, Myanmar, Nepal, the Philippines, Sri Lanka, the Sudan and Uganda, referring to the Secretary-General's 2003 report [YUN 2003, p. 790], expressed concern about the corrigenda to the report, particularly the use of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 relating to the protection of victims of armed conflict and the two 1977 Additional Protocols [YUN 1977, p. 706] thereto in the definition of "armed conflict" when those legal instruments did not provide for an internationally agreed definition of armed conflict.

Abduction of children in Africa

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2004/47], the Commission, deeply alarmed at the spread of the practice of abduction of children during armed conflict in many African countries, demanded the immediate demobilization and disarmament of all child soldiers and the unconditional release and safe return of those abducted. The Commission called on African States to prohibit and criminalize such practices, and asked them, in cooperation with UN agencies, to assist the victims and their families and to support sustainable rehabilitation and reintegration programmes for them, taking into account the special needs of abducted girls. OHCHR was asked to organize subregional consultations to provide a framework for gathering research, expertise and information from each subregion, and for sensitizing political actors and networking among public authorities and civil society, including NGOs, and to report in 2005. States were urged to submit observations on the implementation of the resolution, while relevant intergovernmental organizations were called on to submit reports on the issue to OHCHR.

Subregional consultations. In response to Commission resolution 2004/47 (above), OHCHR participated in two conferences which discussed the abduction of children in Africa [E/CN.4/2005/74]. The first, the International Conference on the Transatlantic Slave Trade: Landmarks, Legacies and Expectations (Ghana, 30 August–2 September), considered, among other things, the links to slavery and how abductions could be addressed. The second, the Arab-African Conference on exploitation, violence and sexual abuse against children (Rabat, Morocco, 14–16 December), discussed issues relating to the vulnerability of children in situations of armed conflict. In further consultations, OHCHR circulated a questionnaire among NGOs to collect data.

Internally displaced persons

Reports of Secretary-General's Representative.

In March [E/CN.4/2004/77], the Secretary-General's Representative, Francis M. Deng (Sudan), updated developments regarding the promotion, dissemination and application of the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement [YUN 1998, p. 675] and efforts to develop an institutional framework for internally displaced persons (IDPs). He reviewed persisting challenges and the successes achieved in the past 10 years, noting that despite progress in the areas of norm-setting, institutional arrangements and operational responses to internal displacement, there remained a significant gap between those areas and the needs of displaced populations for protection and assistance. Although the estimated number of the displaced remained at about 25 million, internal displacement posed a continuing crisis in 2004, as millions of those affected were unable to return home owing to protracted conflicts, and millions of returnees continued to face hardships. There was a need to reinvigorate efforts to overcome both pessimism and complacency in confronting the challenge of internal displacement. Together with Governments, UN agencies had a key role to play in addressing internal displacement, and a consensus was currently emerging that indicated a readiness to increase efforts to make the collaborative approach work and to better protect and assist IDPs worldwide. The United Nations would need to demonstrate its capacity to improve the operational response to the issue, which would depend on adequate financial support from donor countries and the political backing of all States.

In accordance with a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 793], the Representative summarized the deliberations of a regional seminar (Mexico City, 18–20 February) [E/CN.4/2005/124] he had organized, in collaboration with Mexico and the Brookings Institution–Johns Hopkins project on internal displacement. The seminar examined current trends in internal displacement in the region and responses thereto. Participants adopted a Framework for Action, which outlined issues for improved national response and steps to be taken at the regional and international levels to reinforce national responsibility.

In the Sudan (25 July–1 August) [E/CN.4/2005/8], the Representative focused on the internal displacement crisis in Darfur, where an estimated 1.2 million people had been displaced and 200,000 others were forced to flee to neighbouring Chad as refugees. He said the crisis in Darfur remained acute, and issues needing urgent attention included the security situation and the protection of IDPs and the civilian population at large; the provision of humanitarian assistance

(see p. 235); and political issues, especially the challenges posed by armed groups, particularly the Janjaweed. Also warranting attention were the linkages of the Darfur crisis to the war in southern Sudan, the impending peace agreement between the Government and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement and Army, and the options open to the international community for responding to the situation in Darfur. The Representative recommended according priority to the security situation, and advocated cooperation on security and protection to create the requisite environment for humanitarian activities, facilitate access by UN and other humanitarian workers, and encourage the donor community to provide adequate financial support. Other recommendations addressed the political dimension, particularly with regard to dealing with the threat posed by armed groups, and the need for sustainable peace and security in the Darfur region and for effectively addressing the root causes of the conflict as a whole.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2004/55], the Commission called on the High Commissioner, in cooperation with Governments, the Representative and other relevant entities of the UN system, to promote the rights of internally displaced persons, enhance their protection and develop projects to address their plight as part of the programme of technical cooperation and advisory services, and to provide information thereon. The Secretary-General was asked to establish a mechanism that would address internal displacement, particularly by mainstreaming the rights of IDPs into all relevant parts of the UN system; to assist the mechanism and ensure the support of OHCHR and cooperation with the offices of the Emergency Relief Coordinator and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees; to review the mechanism's performance and effectiveness two years after its inception and report in 2006; and to ensure that the mechanism reported annually to the Commission and the General Assembly. The Commission recommended that the mechanism work towards strengthening the international response to internal displacement and engage in coordinated international advocacy and action for improving protection and respect for the rights of IDPs.

On 22 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's requests to the Secretary-General to establish a mechanism and to ensure that the mechanism reported annually (decision 2004/263).

In September [A/59/389], the Secretary-General appointed Walter Kälin (Switzerland) as his new Representative on the human rights of IDPs. He would report to the Commission and to the Assembly in 2005.

Communication. On 25 March [E/CN.4/2004/G/32], the Russian Federation transmitted its comments regarding the Representative's report on his visit to the country [YUN 2003, p. 794], stating that the report's recommendations were one-sided and did not fully cover the latest trends.

Housing and property restitution

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 2002 Subcommission request [YUN 2002, p. 761], the Special Rapporteur on housing and property restitution in the context of the return of refugees and IDPs, Paulo Sérgio Pinheiro (Brazil), submitted a June progress report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/22]. The report contained draft principles designed to provide guidance on international standard setting and to guide States seeking to implement restitution programmes, and intergovernmental organizations and NGOs addressing issues of population displacement, post-conflict peace-building and restitution. The draft principles, developed in consultation with various agencies and organizations involved in restitution processes, reflected the view that a human rights-based approach to return and restitution would achieve equitable and sustainable results in restoring housing and property rights for refugees and displaced persons and in creating long-term stability. They addressed key universal principles regarding the right to housing and property restitution; the rights necessary to ensure protection from displacement; the protection of the rights of refugees and displaced persons, including the right to safe, voluntary and dignified return and to a remedy in cases of human rights violations; policy guidelines for housing and property restitution; guidance on strengthening restitution procedures, institutions, mechanisms and legal frameworks in order to facilitate the restitution process; and the role of international organizations.

An addendum to the report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/22/Add.1] contained a commentary designed to guide the interpretation of the draft principles and to identify the international legal basis for the standards articulated in the principles. The Special Rapporteur hoped to expand consultations to benefit from the experience and knowledge of relevant UN agencies and organs, Governments and NGOs, in order to facilitate the development of the draft principles, and suggested convening an international meeting in 2005 to discuss them.

Subcommission action. On 9 August [res. 2004/2], the Subcommission urged States to ensure the free and fair exercise of the right to return to one's home and place of habitual residence by all refugees and IDPs and to develop effective and expeditious legal, administrative and other procedures to ensure the exercise of the right. The Subcommission, welcoming the Special Rapporteur's progress report (see p. 791), asked OHCHR to circulate the draft principles widely among NGOs, Governments, specialized agencies and other interested parties for comment. The Special Rapporteur was asked to take the comments into account in preparing his final report in 2005.

Indigenous people

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 798], the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people, Rodolfo Stavenhagen (Mexico), submitted a January report [E/CN.4/2004/80] on the obstacles, gaps and challenges faced by indigenous peoples in the administration of justice and the relevance of indigenous customary law in national legal systems. He noted that the major concerns involving indigenous rights related to land, territory, the environment, natural resources, language, culture and education, and examined the situation in the courts and indigenous peoples' rights, discrimination and the justice system, the criminalization of indigenous protest activities and indigenous law and culture and alternative dispute resolution mechanisms. The Special Rapporteur found that a human rights protection gap with regard to indigenous peoples was evident in various communities around the world, particularly in the area of criminal justice. In many countries, indigenous peoples did not have equal access to the justice system and often suffered discrimination, partly due to racism and to the non-acceptance of indigenous law and customs. He recommended that States review and, if possible, reform their justice systems to better protect indigenous peoples' rights, and invited the Commission to take up the issue with Member States. Judicial reform should include respect for indigenous legal customs, language and culture in the courts and the administration of justice; indigenous peoples' participation in the reform process; and the establishment of alternative justice mechanisms.

A separate report of the Special Rapporteur [E/CN.4/2005/88/Add.1] summarized communications, including urgent appeals, he had sent to 17 Governments on alleged violations of indigenous peoples's rights between 15 December 2003 and 31 December 2004, and the responses received.

The Special Rapporteur visited Colombia (8-17 March) [E/CN.4/2005/88/Add.2], home to an estimated 1 million indigenous peoples, comprising 90 ethnic groups. He found that, although its 1991 Constitution recognized Colombia's multi-ethnic composition and established an institutional framework for protecting indigenous peoples' rights, enormous challenges remained. He heard alleged violations of indigenous peoples' rights within the context of the ongoing armed conflict affecting Colombia, including reports of murder and torture, mass displacement, forced disappearance, forced recruitment into combat units, the rape of women and the militarization of indigenous communities (see p. 805). A particular cause for concern was the situation of small indigenous communities that were at the brink of extinction owing to the murder of their leaders, massacres, threats and the forced dispersal of their members. The Special Rapporteur recommended the establishment of an independent commission to ensure that the State and armed groups fulfilled their obligations to comply with international humanitarian law and respect human rights. He advocated that priority be given to indigenous peoples' demand that all armed groups respect their neutral and demilitarized zones, and proposed the creation of indigenous peace zones free from all military operations and subject to international supervision. Further recommendations were addressed to the Government, armed groups, the country's indigenous population and the international community.

Commission action. On 21 April [res. 2004/62], the Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for a further period of three years and asked him to request, receive and exchange information on violations of indigenous people's rights from Governments, UN human rights treaty bodies, specialized agencies, Commission and Subcommission special mechanisms, international organizations, relevant UN system organizations and civil society, and to respond to the information; to consider the recommendations of the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance [YUN 2001, p. 615], of the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues (see p. 798) and of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations (see p. 793); to continue working on the topics included in his first report [YUN 2002, p. 762]; and to report to the General Assembly in 2004 and to the Commission in 2005. The Secretary-General and the High Commissioner were asked to assist him. The Commission noted OHCHR's intention to organize, with the participation of indigenous and governmental and non-governmental experts, a seminar on indigenous education (see p. 793) to assist the Special Rapporteur in examining the main topic of his annual report for 2005. The World Summit on the Information Society was encouraged to take indigenous issues into account in its declaration of principles and action plan and in all other relevant programmes to be adopted by the Summit in its second phase in 2005 (see p. 844).

On 22 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate and its requests to him to submit reports, and to the Secretary-General and High Commissioner to assist him (decision 2004/267).

Further reports of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur visited Canada (21 May–4 June) [E/CN.4/2005/88/Add.3 & Corr.1], where Aboriginal people accounted for some 4.4 per cent of the total population of 30 million. He observed that Canada's indigenous people had been progressively dispossessed of their lands, resources and culture, a process that led them into destitution, deprivation and dependency and generated an assertive and occasionally militant social movement in defence of their rights. While encouraged by Canada's commitment to ensuring that the country's prosperity was shared by Aboriginal people, the Special Rapporteur noted that economic, social and human indicators of well being, quality of life and development were consistently lower among them than other Canadians. He recommended that the Government enact new legislation on Aboriginal rights and adopt measures to close the human development indicator gaps between Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal Canadians in the areas of health care, housing, education, welfare and social services. The Special Rapporteur emphasized the need to secure Aboriginal rights with regard to treaties and other constructive arrangements, lands and resources, human rights promotion and protection, sustainable economic development, the welfare of Aboriginal women, the administration of justice, and international policy on indigenous peoples.

In response to Commission resolution 2004/62 (see above), the Secretary-General, by an August note [A/59/258], transmitted a report of the Special Rapporteur, which reviewed activities he had undertaken between 10 August 2001 and 10 August 2004 and highlighted issues of concern he viewed as requiring urgent attention. The report described the progress made and the major human rights problems affecting indigenous peoples, regarding the rights to land, territory and access to natural resources; social organization and local government; the conflict between legislation and customary law in the administration of justice; poverty and access to basic services; political representation, autonomy and self-determination; education and culture; and indigenous women and girls. The Special Rapporteur concluded that, although the problem of violations of indigenous peoples' rights was being adressed through specific programmes and proposals, rhetoric often failed to result in action, leaving their needs neglected, particularly those relating to protection. He recommended that Governments take steps to combat discrimination against indigenous people; end impunity; explore cooperation with native peoples to resolve ongoing conflicts regarding land, territory and access to natural resources; adopt specific measures to benefit indigenous women and their families; and protect the lives and dignity of indigenous children.

On 20 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's August note (decision 59/526).

Expert seminar. The Special Rapporteur transmitted to the Commission the report of an expert seminar on indigenous peoples and education (Paris, 18–20 October) [E/CN.4/2005/88/Add.4], organized by OHCHR in cooperation with UNESCO, pursuant to Commission resolution 2004/62 (see p. 792). The experts discussed issues relating to indigenous peoples' access to quality education and participatory approaches and higher education. They identified, among other issues, a range of concerns relating to indigenous peoples' access to quality education and some of the barriers they faced, and emphasized that indigenous peoples' cultural diversity was not always respected and that discrimination and xenophobia remained the main impediment to their enjoyment of the right to education in all regions of the world. The experts proposed recommendations to Governments, UN bodies, specialized agencies and human rights mechanisms and indigenous peoples.

Communications. On 11 March [E/CN.4/2004/G/22], Mexico, referring to the Special Rapporteur's visit to the country [YUN 2003, p. 797], described action it would take to implement the Special Rapporteur's recommendations, measures aimed at resolving high priority conflicts related to agricultural land, its policy regarding IDPs and information pertaining to a national public hearing for indigenous peoples.

On 7 April [E/CN.4/2004/G/47], Chile transmitted its comments regarding the Special Rapporteur's report on his visit to the country [YUN 2003, p. 797].

Working Group on Indigenous Populations

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 38 to 15, the Commission, on 20 April [res. 2004/57], taking into account that, in accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 2003/307 [YUN 2003, p. 804], the Council would consider in 2004 the review mandated in Council resolution 2000/22 [YUN 2000, p. 731] regarding all existing mechanisms, procedures and programmes within the United Nations concerned with indigenous issues, including the Working Group on Indigenous Populations, reaffirmed its 2003 recommendation [YUN 2003, p. 798] that the Council take into account the contents of the Commission's 2003 resolution [ibid.], which considered the continuing need for the Working Group.

Also on 20 April [res. 2004/58], by a recorded vote of 38 to 2, with 13 abstentions, the Commission recommended that the Council authorize the Group to meet for five working days prior to the Subcommission's 2004 session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2004/23], adopted decision 2004/264 by recorded vote (35-2-17) [agenda item 14 (g)].

Working Group on Indigenous Populations of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, and the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People

At its 48th plenary meeting, on 22 July 2004, the Economic and Social Council took note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2004/58 of 20 April 2004 and endorsed the Commission's recommendation that the Working Group on Indigenous Populations be authorized to meet for five working days prior to the fifty-sixth session of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2004/264:

In favour: Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Burundi, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Cuba, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ghana, Guatemala, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Kenya, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritius, Mozambique, Namibia, Nicaragua, Panama, Qatar, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Tunisia, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, United States.

Abstaining: Bangladesh, Belgium, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Malaysia, Nigeria, Poland, Republic of Korea, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom.

Working Group activities. The Working Group on Indigenous Populations held its twenty-second session (Geneva, 19-23 July) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/28] to review developments pertaining to the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous populations and to give special attention to the evolution of the relevant standards. In annotations to the provisional agenda [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/2004/1/Add.1], the Secretariat presented background information on indigenous peoples and conflict resolution, the principal theme of the Group's session; globalization and indigenous peoples; cooperation with other UN bodies in the sphere of indigenous issues; follow-up to the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance [YUN 2001, p. 615]; the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People (1995-2004) (see p. 796); and standard-setting activities.

The Group had before it June working papers on globalization and indigenous peoples [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/2004/3], prepared by Mr. Guissé, and on guidance regarding the review of the draft principles and guidelines on the heritage of indigenous peoples [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/2004/5], submitted by Mr. Yokota and the Saami Council (an NGO concerned with indigenous peoples' interests), as well as July working papers on the principle of free, prior and informed consent of indigenous peoples in relation to development affecting their lands and natural resources [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/2004/4], prepared by Ms. Motoc and the Tebtebba Foundation (an indigenous peoples' organization), and on indigenous peoples' rights in States and territories threatened with extinction for environmental reasons [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/2004/CRP.1], submitted by Ms. Hampson (see also p. 795). Regarding the session's principal theme, the Group considered a July working paper [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/2004/2 & Corr.1], submitted by Miguel Alfonso Martínez (Cuba), which examined the character of conflict and conflict resolution and prevention within the context of indigenous peoples' rights and put forth recommendations for the Group's consideration.

In its recommendations, the Group decided to maintain on its agenda for 2005 a sub-item on indigenous peoples and conflict prevention and resolution; asked Mr. Alfonso Martínez to submit in 2005 a working paper on indigenous peoples and the prevention and resolution of conflict; and requested OHCHR to organize a workshop on indigenous peoples and conflict resolution in 2005 and a seminar on the implementation of treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between States and indigenous peoples in 2006. OHCHR was also asked to continue to organize further seminars and workshops on indigenous issues in Africa, Asia and Latin America. The Group accepted an invitation by representatives of indigenous peoples in Canada to hold a seminar on the implementation of treaties, agreements and constructive arrangements in 2006. In other action, the Group recommended that Mr. Yokota and the Saami Council prepare, without financial implications, a further working paper containing proposals on the draft principles and guidelines relating to indigenous peoples' heritage, for consideration in 2005, and that OHCHR facilitate consultation with them and other interested parties on the principles and guidelines; that Ms. Motoc, the Tebtebba Foundation and other interested indigenous sources prepare guidelines on the principle of free, prior and informed consent, for submission in 2005; and that OHCHR request information on standard-setting activities from Governments, indigenous organizations, the UN system and NGOs, and invite UN system representatives to recommend ways of improving cooperation. The Group further recommended that the High Commissioner, in her capacity as Coordinator of the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, take steps to ensure submission to the General Assembly in 2005 of a substantive programme of action for a possible second Decade; that OHCHR organize a second workshop on indigenous peoples, mining companies and human rights, the first having been held in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 688]; and that Ms. Hampson prepare another working paper, developing further the information and ideas contained in her first paper on the human rights of indigenous peoples in States and territories threatened with extinction for environmental reasons (see p. 794). The Group decided to adopt as the principal theme for its 2005 session indigenous peoples and the international and domestic protection of traditional knowledge, and invited Governments, indigenous peoples, the UN system and NGOs to provide relevant information on the theme. In particular, the Group asked the World Intellectual Property Organization and UNESCO to contribute to the debate.

Subcommission action. On 9 August [res. 2004/15], the Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to transmit the Working Group's report on its 2004 session to the High Commissioner, indigenous organizations, Governments, inter-governmental organizations, concerned NGOs, treaty bodies and all thematic rapporteurs, special representatives, independent experts and working groups, and asked that it be made available to the Commission in 2005. It recommended that the Group, upon request, assist the open-ended intersessional working group to elaborate further the draft UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples (see p. 798). The Subcommission decided that the Group, in 2005, should adopt as its principal theme "Indigenous peoples and the international and domestic protection of traditional knowledge" and review the revised draft principles and guidelines on the heritage of indigenous people [YUN 1995, p. 780]. It decided on the Group's agenda for 2005 and asked the Secretary-General to prepare an annotated agenda for the 2005 session. The Subcommission endorsed the Group's request to OHCHR to organize, possibly in 2005, a workshop on indigenous peoples and conflict resolution and prevention, and a seminar, preferably in 2006, on possible ways to implement treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between States and indigenous peoples. The Subcommission called for working papers in 2005 by: Mr. Yokota, in cooperation with the Saami Council, on the draft principles and guidelines related to indigenous peoples' heritage; Ms. Motoc, in cooperation with the Tebtebba

Foundation and other interested indigenous sources, on guidelines to govern the practice of implementation of the principle of free, prior and informed consent; Ms. Hampson, on the human rights implications, especially for indigenous populations, of the disappearance of States for environmental reasons; and Mr. Alfonso Martínez, on the issue of indigenous peoples and conflict prevention and resolution. OHCHR was asked to organize, as a matter of priority and in consultation with the Group's Chairperson/Rapporteur, a second workshop on indigenous peoples' mining and other private sector companies and human rights. The Subcommission emphasized that the Economic and Social Council, in reviewing all UN mechanisms relating to indigenous peoples, should take into account the fact that the mandates of the Group, the Special Rapporteur and the Permanent Forum were distinct and complementary. It requested the Commission to endorse that view and the participation of the Group's Chairperson/Rapporteur at the Forum's fourth (2005) session, and recommended that the Council approve that participation and that the Commission request the Council to authorize the Group to meet for five working days prior to the Subcommission's 2005 session.

Also on 9 August [res. 2004/11], the Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to ensure that the Special Adviser for the Prevention of Genocide, appointed under the Action Plan to Prevent Genocide (see p. 730), took into consideration the need to protect indigenous peoples and their territories; that forces present under a UN mandate protected vulnerable indigenous peoples, their territories and objects indispensable to their survival; and that the mandates of UN authorized operations included a requirement to protect indigenous populations and their territories. The Special Rapporteur on the human rights and fundamental principles of indigenous people (see p. 792) was asked to liaise with the Special Adviser regarding the protection of indigenous peoples from genocide and to develop an emergency response mechanism as part of his mandate.

Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations

The Board of Trustees of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations, at its seventeenth session (Geneva, 11-19 March) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/2004/8], recommended travel grants totalling $154,212 to enable 47 representatives of indigenous communities and organizations to attend the Working Group on Indigenous Populations (see p. 794), $249,700 to allow 46 indigenous representatives to attend the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues (see p. 798), and $56,316 to enable 13 other representatives of indigenous communities to attend the working group on the draft UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples (see p. 798). The Board's recommendations were approved by the High Commissioner on the Secretary-General's behalf on 22 April.

An August note [A/59/257] of the Secretary-General presented an overview of the Fund's activities in 2003 and 2004. The Board had approved its revised cost plan for 2005 and envisaged expenditure amounting to $777,000. It expressed concern that there was a discrepancy with the figures that appeared in the OHCHR annual appeal for 2004 and hoped that its cost plan would be reflected in the appeal. The Board discussed the future direction of the Fund. Taking note of the review of UN mechanisms relating to indigenous issues, to be undertaken by the Economic and Social Council (see p. 800), the Board underlined the importance of the Fund as an independent body that provided direct assistance to indigenous peoples and allowed them to participate in UN activities. The Board further underlined the fact that all its current members were indigenous representatives, expressed its commitment to the Fund, requested that any proposed changes be discussed with its members before implementation, and emphasized the need to prioritize indigenous peoples' interests. The Board scheduled its eighteenth session for 21 to 25 February 2005 to discuss the allocation of travel grants to attend the Permanent Forum.

On 20 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note (decision 59/526).

Subcommission action. On 9 August [res. 2004/15], the Subcommission appealed to Governments, organizations, NGOs, indigenous groups and other potential donors in a position to do so to contribute to the Fund.

International Decade of the World's Indigenous People

Commission action. By a recorded vote of 38 to 2, with 13 abstentions, the Commission, on 20 April [res. 2004/58], invited the Working Group to continue its review of activities undertaken during the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People (1995-2004), proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 48/163 [YUN 1993, p. 865]. The High Commissioner, in her capacity as Coordinator of the Decade, was asked to submit in 2005 a final report reviewing activities within the UN system under the Decade's programme of activities, to ensure that OHCHR's indigenous people's unit was adequately staffed and resourced, and to give due regard to developing human rights training for indigenous people. UN financial and development institutions, operational programmes and specialized agencies were asked to give increased priority and resources to improving the conditions of indigenous people and to launch special projects to strengthen their community-level initiatives and facilitate information exchange and expertise among indigenous people and other relevant experts. The Secretary-General was requested to begin implementing the evaluation of the Decade, as called for by the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance [YUN 2001, p. 615].

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to Economic and Social Council decision 2003/306 [YUN 2003, p. 804], the Secretary-General submitted a June report [E/2004/82] on the preliminary review of the Decade. The report summarized OHCHR activities undertaken between 1995 and 2004 to implement the Decade, and related information received from departments and organizations of the UN system, Member States, indigenous peoples and NGOs. The Secretary-General noted positive developments during the Decade, including an increase in programmes, projects and activities relating to indigenous peoples in some UN organizations and agencies. Indigenous peoples had been better integrated into UN system operational activities; information about the work of the UN system regarding them was more widely available through increased publications and particularly on web sites. Seminars and workshops undertaken within the context of the Decade had placed lesser-known indigenous issues on the international agenda. Furthermore, the Decade had witnessed advances in inter-agency cooperation on indigenous issues, and positive institutional developments, including the establishment of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on indigenous peoples and the growing jurisprudence of the treaty bodies on indigenous peoples' rights. It was also evident that indigenous representatives were better aware of the wider system of human rights protection and were increasingly using the opportunities available to them in that regard. However challenges remained, particularly the lack of implementation of human rights standards at the national level and the failure to adopt the draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples (see below), as recommended in the Decade's programme of activities. A further challenge related to the implementation by Member States of programmes that promoted the development and rights of indigenous peoples and the UN role in assisting them. Whether or not Member States decided to establish a second decade, it would be important to maintain the momentum generated, establish an operational framework for further international action and, in countries where indigenous people lived, set out realizable targets for the medium term.

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report (decision 2004/317).

Note by Secretary-General. In an August note [A/59/277], the Secretary-General summarized implementation of the Decade's programme of activities undertaken by OHCHR during the period from August 2003 to July 2004. Of particular note were the third session of the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues (see p. 798), the twenty-second (2004) session of the Working Group (see p. 794) and the activities undertaken by the Special Rapporteur (see p. 792). OHCHR continued to promote inter-agency cooperation within the Decade's framework, through participation in inter-agency consultations, cooperation in human rights training and joint activities. Other ongoing programmes included the Indigenous Fellowship Programme.

On 20 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note (decision 59/526).

Subcommission action. On 9 August [res. 2004/14], the Subcommission, welcoming the observance in 2004 of the International Day of the World's Indigenous People (22 July), recommended that it be held on the fourth day of the Working Group's 2005 session to ensure as large a participation of indigenous peoples as possible. It recommended that the Decade's Coordinator appeal to Governments and other donors to contribute to the Voluntary Fund for the Decade and stressed the need to give particular attention to improving the extent of indigenous peoples' participation in planning and implementing the Decade's activities. It also recommended that the High Commissioner, in consultation with interested Governments and indigenous peoples and organizations, organize meetings, particularly in Africa, Asia, Oceania and Latin America, in order to raise public awareness about indigenous issues. Welcoming the proposal for a second international decade of the world's indigenous peoples contained in Economic and Social Council decision 2004/290 (see p. 799), the Subcommission invited the High Commissioner, in her capacity as Coordinator of the first Decade, to organize early in 2005 consultations with the purpose of developing a preliminary draft programme of activities for a possible second decade, for consideration by the General Assembly.

Report of High Commissioner. A final report of the High Commissioner [E/CN.4/2005/87], which completed the review of activities undertaken within the context of the Decade, provided information on the Indigenous Fellowship Programme in 2004 (3 May–1 October), in which 13 fellows participated. As part of the practical work experience in the UN system, five fellows from Greenland, Kenya, Myanmar, the Solomon Islands and Ukraine assisted the Working Group (see p. 796). OHCHR, in cooperation with the University of Deusto (Bilbao, Spain), provided training for four fellows from Argentina, Brazil, Colombia and Mexico, and, in collaboration with the University of Burgundy (Dijon, France), similar training was offered to four other fellows from Canada, France (New Caledonia), Mali and Morocco.

In August, OHCHR undertook an independent evaluation of the Programme as part of the overall assessment of the Decade. The evaluation, aimed at assessing how the fellowship had helped promote indigenous peoples' human rights, was undertaken during the Barcelona Cultural Forum (9 May–26 September), attended by 43 former fellows to whom questionnaires were distributed. The evaluation concluded that the Programme was greatly appreciated by indigenous peoples and organizations, and provided evidence of individual initiatives which the fellows had attributed to new knowledge, experience and confidence obtained through the Programme.

The report also described activities regarding inter-agency cooperation on indigenous issues and the work of the Voluntary Fund for the Decade (see below) and the Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations (see p. 795).

The High Commissioner concluded that progress was made during the Decade, particularly regarding the considerable increase in UN system activities relating to indigenous peoples, greater opportunities for participation by indigenous organizations in international and regional processes and positive institutional developments, such as the establishment of the Special Rapporteur's mandate and the Permanent Forum. In her capacity as Coordinator for the Decade, she urged that the momentum generated be maintained and recommended that the Commission request a further six weeks of meetings over a two-year period to complete negotiations on a draft UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples (see p. 798). The goals during a second decade should be the rapid adoption of the declaration and of a binding legal instrument.

Voluntary Fund for International Decade

The Advisory Group of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, at its ninth session (Geneva, 22–26 March) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/2004/9], recommended 35 project grants, which were approved for a total of $243,500. It recommended the allocation of $92,800 to activities of the High Commissioner as the Decade's Coordinator, of which $56,800 would be spent on a publication entitled The International Decade of the World's Indigenous People: 10 Years of Partnership in Action, designed to disseminate the results of Decade projects financed by the Fund and OHCHR activities. The remainder would fund three community-led human rights training courses, at $12,000 each. The Group proposed holding a seminar during 2004 to assess the impact of the Fund and of the Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations (see p. 797), and recommended that $30,788 be allocated for that purpose. Regarding the Fund's future in the light of developments within the context of the Secretary-General's reform agenda and of the planned review of UN mechanisms relating to indigenous issues (see p. 800), the Group requested that any changes be discussed with its members.

Seminar. As requested by the Advisory Group (see above), OHCHR organized a technical seminar (Geneva, 15-16 July) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/2005/CRP.1], which evaluated the impact of the Fund for the Decade and the Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations (see p. 797) in achieving the Decade's goals. Participants concluded that both Funds had made a contribution by empowering indigenous peoples and promoting and protecting their rights through support for relevant activities and projects. The seminar recommended that the High Commissioner encourage the General Assembly to proclaim a second international decade, that both Funds continue to function separately and that the High Commissioner ensure that their activities did not overlap.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2004/59], the Commission recommended that the working group established to consider a draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples (see p. 794) meet for 10 working days prior to the Commission's 2005 session and asked the group to report in 2005.

On 22 July, the Economic and Social Council authorized the group to meet (decision 2004/265).

Subcommission action. On 9 August [res. 2004/14], the Subcommission recommended the adoption of the draft declaration as early as possible, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/157 [YUN 1995, p. 772], and appealed to participants in the working group and others concerned to accelerate the draft's preparation.

Working group activities. The working group established to consider a draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples, at its tenth session (Geneva, 13-24 September, 29 November-3 December) [E/CN.4/2005/89], discussed proposed amendments to articles of the draft declaration relating to lands, territories and natural resources, self-determination and treaties, agreements and constructive arrangements with States, as well as the provisional adoption of articles and cross-cutting issues. Addenda to the report contained a list of the documentation and communications considered by the group, and of Governments and NGOs that participated in its meetings [E/CN.4/2005/89/Add.1], and proposals by the group's Chairperson/Rapporteur relating to the draft and a summary of the status of all provisions of the draft [E/CN.4/2005/89/Add.2]. The meeting ended on the understanding that the group had made substantial progress towards consensus. The Chairperson/Rapporteur would recommend that the Commission allocate additional time in order to conclude the process in 2005.

Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues

Report of Permanent Forum. The 16-member Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues, established by Economic and Social Council resolution 2000/22 [YUN 2000, p. 731] to address indigenous issues relating to economic and social development, the environment, health, education and culture, and human rights, at its third session (New York, 10-21 May) [E/2004/43], considered as its theme "Indigenous women" and recommended five draft decisions for adoption by the Council (see below). Matters brought to the Council's attention related to indigenous women, education, culture, human rights, economic and social development, environment, health and the Forum's future work.

On 22 July, the Council took note of the Forum's report and asked it to take into account in its work the concerns and reservations on paragraph 52 of document [E/2004/SR.48], which covered voting records within the Council on the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right to self-determination (decision 2004/291); authorized a three-day pre-session meeting of the Forum in 2005 to prepare for its fourth (2005) session (decision 2004/286); authorized a technical three-day workshop on free, prior and informed consent and asked the workshop to report to the Forum in 2005 (decision 2004/287); decided that the Forum's fourth session would be held in New York from 16 to 27 May 2005 (decision 2004/288) and approved that session's provisional agenda and documentation (decision 2004/289); and decided to transmit to the General Assembly the Forum's recommendation for a second international decade of the world's indigenous people, to begin in January 2005, recommending that the Assembly, in considering the item, identify goals and a coordinator of activities for the decade and also address the question of human and financial resources to be made available to support those activities (decision 2004/290).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/59/500], adopted resolution 59/174 without vote [agenda item 102].

Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that, in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights recognized the inherent dignity and the unique contribution of indigenous people to the development and plurality of society and strongly reaffirmed the commitment of the international community to their economic, social and cultural well-being and their enjoyment of the fruits of sustainable development,

Reaffirming that States should, in accordance with international law, take concerted positive steps to ensure respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people, on the basis of equality and non-discrimination, and recognizing the value and diversity of their distinctive identities, cultures and social organization,

Recalling its resolution 48/163 of 21 December 1993, in which it proclaimed the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, commencing on 10 December 1994, with the goal of strengthening international cooperation for the solution of problems faced by indigenous people in such areas as human rights, the environment, development, education and health,

Recalling also its resolution 58/158 of 22 December 2003 and all previous resolutions on the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People,

Welcoming all achievements during the Decade, in particular the establishment of the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues, and the contributions to the realization of the goals of the Decade made by the Permanent Forum, the Working Group on Indigenous Populations of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights and the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people, such as the comprehensive work programme that the Permanent Forum is carrying out for the benefit of indigenous peoples in the areas of culture, education, environment, health, human rights and social and economic development,

Taking due note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2004/62 of 21 April 2004, in which the Commission expressed its deep concern about the precarious economic and social situation that indigenous people continue to endure in many parts of the world in comparison to the overall population and the persistence of grave violations of their human rights, and reaffirmed the urgent need to recognize, promote and protect more effectively their rights and freedoms,

Recalling that in its resolution 49/214 of 23 December 1994 it expressly put on record its expectation of achieving the adoption of a declaration on indigenous rights within the International Decade and that in its resolution 50/157 of 21 December 1995 it decided that the adoption by the General Assembly of a declaration on the rights of indigenous people constituted a major objective of the Decade, and noting the progress made in the recent rounds of negotiations in the open-ended intersessional working group of the Commission on Human Rights charged with elaborating a draft declaration on the rights of indigenous people, established pursuant to Commission resolution 1995/32 of 3 March 1995,

Recognizing the importance of consultation and cooperation with indigenous people in planning and implementing the programme of activities for the Decade and the need for adequate financial support from the international community,

1. Proclaims the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, commencing on 1 January 2005;

2. Decides that the goal of the Second Decade shall be the further strengthening of international cooperation for the solution of problems faced by indigenous people in such areas as culture, education, health, human rights, the environment and social and economic development, by means of action-oriented programmes and specific projects, increased technical assistance and relevant standard-setting activities;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to appoint the Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Affairs as the Coordinator for the Second Decade;

4. Requests the Coordinator to fulfil the mandate in full cooperation and consultation with Governments, the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues and other relevant bodies and mechanisms of the United Nations system, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, other members of the Inter-Agency Support Group on Indigenous Issues and indigenous and non-governmental organizations;

5. Invites Governments to ensure that activities and objectives for the Second Decade are planned and implemented on the basis of full consultation and collaboration with indigenous people;

6. Appeals to the specialized agencies, regional commissions, financial and development institutions and other relevant organizations of the United Nations system to increase their efforts to take special account of the needs of indigenous people in their budgeting and in their programming;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to establish a voluntary fund for the Second Decade, which to all juridical purposes and effects should be set up and should discharge its functions as a successor to the already existing voluntary fund established for the present Decade pursuant to General Assembly resolutions 48/163, 49/214 and 50/157;

8. Authorizes the Secretary-General to accept and administer voluntary contributions from Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, indigenous organizations and private institutions and individuals for the purpose of funding projects and programmes during the Second Decade;

9. Urges Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute to the voluntary fund for the Second Decade established by the Secretary-General, and invites indigenous organizations and private institutions and individuals to do likewise;

10. Urges the competent United Nations organs, programmes and specialized agencies, in planning activities for the Second Decade, to examine how existing programmes and resources might be utilized to benefit indigenous people more effectively, including through the exploration of ways in which indigenous perspectives and activities can be included or enhanced;

11. Decides to continue observing in New York, Geneva and other offices of the United Nations every year during the Second Decade the International Day of Indigenous People, to request the Secretary-General to support the observance of the Day from within existing resources, and to encourage Governments to observe the Day at the national level;

12. Urges all parties involved in the process of negotiation to do their utmost to carry out successfully the mandate of the open-ended intersessional working group established by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1995/32 and to present for adoption as soon as possible a final draft United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to give all the assistance necessary to ensure the success of the Second Decade;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session on a comprehensive programme of action for the Second Decade based on the achievements of the first Decade;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixtieth session an item entitled "Indigenous issues".

Review of existing mechanisms on indigenous issues

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council decision 2003/307 [YUN 2003, p. 804], the Secretary-General, in July [E/2004/85], summarized information received from three Governments, seven indigenous NGOs and three UN system bodies in response to his request for information on the Council's planned review of all existing UN mechanisms, procedures and programmes concerning indigenous issues. Based on the information received, the Secretary-General reviewed those mechanisms, of which the most notable were the Working Group on Indigenous Populations (see p. 793), the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people (see p. 792), the working group on the draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples (see p. 798) and the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues (see p. 795). The Secretary-General concluded that, although views differed on the various mechanisms, it was clear that every effort should be made to ensure coordination among them, while recognizing the specific task that each was mandated to perform. It was also crucial that the scarce resources of indigenous peoples and organizations and the voluntary contributions by Member States were utilized with maximum efficiency and effectiveness. The United Nations should continue to mainstream indigenous issues and to expand its programmes and activities for the benefit of indigenous peoples in a coordinated manner. The Economic and Social Council should play a leading role in ensuring greater coherence, improved coordination and effectiveness in the various mechanisms, and UN efforts in that regard should be consistent with the broader reform objectives endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 57/300 [YUN 2002, p. 1353]. Reflecting on ongoing work on the draft declaration and on support for a second international decade (see p. 799), the Secretary-General acknowledged the importance of the current period in the history of indigenous peoples. They were often among the most disadvantaged people in the world and 1994 was a pivotal year in their struggle to end marginalization. They hoped for full UN support in that struggle and the international community should endeavour to respond to their expectations.

On 23 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report (decision 2004/317).

Indigenous peoples' permanent sovereignty over natural resources

Report of Special Rapporteur. As requested by the Subcommission in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 771], the Special Rapporteur on indigenous peoples' permanent sovereignty over natural resources, Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece), submitted a July final report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/30], which discussed the history of the concept of permanent sovereignty over natural resources within the UN system, considered the trend in international law and practice and analysed the nature and scope of indigenous peoples' right to own, use, control and manage their lands, territories and resources. The report built on a 2001 working paper of the Special Rapporteur [YUN 2001, p. 693]. It concluded that, although indigenous peoples' permanent sovereignty over resources had not been explicitly recognized in international legal instruments, the right existed, nonetheless, owing to the recognition of a broad range of indigenous rights, most notably the right to own property, to ownership of the lands they historically or traditionally used or occupied, to self-determination or autonomy, to development and to be free from discrimination, among other rights. The right might therefore be articulated as a collective right by virtue of which States were obligated to respect, protect and promote the governmental and property interests of indigenous peoples. However, further studies of the issue were needed. She recommended, among a series of measures, that States, in consultation with indigenous peoples, take necessary legislative and administrative action to ensure that indigenous peoples enjoyed ownership of and benefits from the natural resources on, under or otherwise pertaining to the land they historically occupied and used. The Subcommission should recommend the establishment of an ad hoc committee to study, implement and promote indigenous peoples' rights in that context, and to monitor States' progress in recognizing and implementing them. In addition, the Subcommission should request the Special Rapporteur to prepare an updated and consolidated study on the subject, for submission in 2005. The Special Rapporteur further recommended that the Secretariat convene an expert seminar to give further attention to related issues that needed to be adequately researched and considered, and that the Permanent Forum also accord the issue regular attention.

An addendum to the report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2004/30/Add.1] provided examples of legal regimes regarding indigenous peoples and natural resources in various parts of the world, an analysis of international law concerning permanent sovereignty over natural resources and indigenous peoples, relevant conclusions, guiding principles and recommendations contained in the 2001 working paper of the Special Rapporteur and select bibliography, UN resolutions, relevant cases and legal standards concerning indigenous peoples' permanent sovereignty.

Subcommission action. On 9 August [res. 2004/9], the Subcommission decided to submit the Special Rapporteur's report (see above) to the Commission in 2005 and recommended that the Commission and the Economic and Social Council authorize OHCHR to convene an expert seminar to further address the many political, legal, economic, social and cultural questions relating to the topic and to the Special Rapporteur's 2001 working paper. The Subcommission further recommended that the studies entitled "Indigenous peoples and their relationship to land" and "Indigenous peoples' permanent sovereignty over natural resources" be issued as UN publications as part of the human rights study series.

Report of OHCHR. In accordance with a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 806], a report of OHCHR [E/CN.4/2004/74] provided information on progress made to implement the recommendations contained in the 2002 study on Human Rights and Disability: The Current Use and Future Potential of United Nations Human Rights Instruments in the Context of Disability [YUN 2002, p. 771]. The report examined efforts by States, treaty bodies, the Commission, national human rights institutions and civil society, and also assessed progress made on OHCHR's programme of work relating to the human rights of persons with disabilities. The report concluded that, despite encouraging developments in the way in which disability issues were addressed within the human rights treaty system, more needed to be done to ensure the equal and effective enjoyment by persons with disabilities of the protection afforded by existing human rights treaties. As recommended by the 2002 study, OHCHR supported the idea of drafting a new convention on the human rights of persons with disabilities, which would represent an additional tool for promoting and protecting their rights. Thus, the Office welcomed the decision by the Ad Hoc Committee to establish a working group to prepare a draft text (see below), pledged support to the Committee and the group and encouraged national human rights institutions and civil society organizations to participate in discussions on the new treaty.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2004/52], the Commission asked the Secretary-General to make the OHCHR report available to the Ad Hoc Committee and to include in relevant reports to the General Assembly information on progress made to ensure the full recognition and enjoyment of the human rights of persons with disabilities. OHCHR was called on to report to the Commission in 2005 on progress made to implement the recommendations contained in the study on Human Rights and Disability and on the objectives set forth in its programme of work. The Special Rapporteur on disability of the Commission for Social Development was invited to address the Commission on Human Rights in 2005 on the human rights dimension gained through monitoring the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 48/96 [YUN 1993, p. 978]. The Commission urged Governments to cover the human rights of persons with disabilities in their reporting obligations under relevant UN human rights instruments, and called on UN organizations and agencies and intergovernmental institutions for development cooperation to integrate disability measures into their activities and to reflect that in their reports.

Report of Ad Hoc Committee. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 58/246 [YUN 2003, p. 1108], the Secretary-General, in September [A/59/360], transmitted the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on a Comprehensive and Integral International Convention on the Protection and Promotion of the Rights and Dignity of Persons with Disabilities, established in Assembly resolution 56/168 [YUN 2001, p. 1012], on its fourth session (New York, 23 August–3 September). The Committee, mandated to consider proposals for the convention, recommended that it continue its work in 2005.

In resolution 59/198, the General Assembly invited Member States and observers to participate actively in the Committee, in order to present to the Assembly the draft text of a convention (see p. 1100).

Chapter III

Human rights violations

Alleged violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in a number of countries were examined in 2004 by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights and its Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, as well as by special rapporteurs, special representatives of the Secretary-General and independent experts appointed to examine the allegations.

General aspects

In accordance with a procedure established by Economic and Social Council resolution 1503 (XLVIII) (1503 procedure) [YUN 1970, p. 530] to deal with communications alleging denial or violation of human rights, the Working Group on Situations of the Commission on Human Rights, in closed meetings during March, examined the human rights situations in Bolivia, Djibouti, Honduras and Uzbekistan to decide whether or not to refer any of those situations to the Commission. The Commission decided to discontinue consideration of the situation of human rights in Bolivia, Djibouti and Honduras. Regarding Uzbekistan, it decided to keep the situation in the country under review and to appoint an independent expert to report in accordance with the 1503 procedure and Council resolution 2000/3 [YUN 2000, p. 596].

The Commission, on 31 March [E/2004/23 (dec. 2004/103)], made public a decision regarding Paraguay, which recommended to the Council that relevant documentation the Commission had examined between 1978 and 1990 should no longer be considered confidential, as requested by the Government.

On 22 July, the Council took note of the Commission's decision and endorsed its recommendation (decision 2004/273).

Sudan

Commission action. On 23 April [E/2004/23 (dec. 2004/128)], the Commission on Human Rights, by a recorded vote of 50 to 1, with 2 abstentions, expressing deep concern about the situation in the Sudan and particularly in Darfur, shared the Secretary-General's concern regarding the scale of reported human rights abuses and the humanitarian situation in Darfur, and welcomed his decision to send a high-level team there (see p. 233). The Commission requested its Chairman to appoint an independent expert on the situation of human rights in the Sudan for a one-year period and asked the expert to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 2004 and a report to the Commission in 2005. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the expert.

On 15 June, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's request to appoint an independent expert and for the Secretary-General to assist the expert (decision 2004/229).

Report of Acting High Commissioner. A May report [E/CN.4/2005/3] of the Acting United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights summarized the findings of two missions dispatched by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in response to reports of allegations of serious human rights violations in the Darfur region of western Sudan. The first mission (5-15 April) visited the border areas with Chad where refugees had fled the violence; the same team visited Khartoum and Darfur (21 April-2 May), where it met with government officials, UN agencies and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), and interviewed displaced persons. In response to actions by rebel forces, notably the Sudan Liberation Army and the Justice and Equality Movement, who demanded that the Khartoum authorities address the marginalization and underdevelopment to which the region was reportedly subjected, the Government sponsored a militia composed of a loose collection of fighters, including an Arab militia known as the Janjaweed. With the support of the regular army, the Janjaweed attacked villages, targeting those suspected of supporting the rebels and committing numerous human rights violations. While it appeared that the Government employed different tactics to counter the rebellion, the mission found consistent allegations that government and militia forces carried out indiscriminate attacks against civilians; rape and other serious forms of sexual violence; destruction of property and pillage; forced displacements; disappearances; and persecution and discrimination. The mission recommended disarming and disbanding the Janjaweed and other militias; a government policy of national reconciliation, the end of impunity, the rule of law and the protection of minorities; the voluntary return of refugees and displaced persons to their lands and homes with restitution or fair compensation for their losses; and the establishment of an international commission of inquiry to identify the crimes that had been committed, assess the responsibility of the authorities and recommend measures for securing accountability.

Communication. On 13 May [E/CN.4/2005/G/3], the Sudan said that its President had issued a decree establishing a Commission of Inquiry into the allegations of human rights violations by armed groups in Darfur. (See also p. 235.)

Reports of independent expert. In a 29 October oral report [A/C.3/59/SR.30] to the General Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the expert said there were strong indications that war crimes had been committed in Darfur, including murder, torture, rape and intentional attacks against civilians, and that crimes against humanity had also been committed, comprising killings, forcible displacements and rapes as part of a systematic attack on civilians. He said that the Government was unable or unwilling to disarm the militias and was therefore unable to protect displaced persons and civilians. Consideration should be given to broadening the mandate of the troops deployed so as to allow them to disarm the militias, which could be done with the backing of the United Nations and the entire international community. The Sudan said it took exception to the expert's report, which it found to be an oversimplified presentation of the situation, giving too much weight to the political dimensions of the problems.

On 20 December, the Assembly took note of the oral report (decision 59/528).

In a later report [E/CN.4/2005/11] covering his visit to the Sudan (19-29 August) and Nairobi, Kenya (30 and 31 August), the independent expert focused on the ongoing crisis in the Sudan's Darfur region and on human rights related developments in Kassala and Upper Nile states.

The expert stated that following attacks by the Sudanese Liberation Movement/Army against government forces, reportedly in protest at what they perceived as their marginalization, the intensity of the conflict increased. To flush out the rebel groups from their stronghold in Darfur, the Government deployed the military, the Popular Defence Forces and the Janjaweed militia, against civilians belonging to the same tribal groups as the rebels. The militia's indiscriminate attacks against civilians resulted in widespread killing and incidents of rape. There were strong indications that war crimes and crimes against humanity had occurred. The rebels had grown more intransigent and security on the ground had worsened. The peace process between the Government and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army (SPLM/A) continued (see p. 233), with the two parties pledging to end the war by 31 December. On that day, the Government and SPLM/A signed the final two protocols of the peace accord, paving the way for the signing in January 2005 of a comprehensive peace agreement. The expert recommended repeal of the National Security Forces Act, which allowed up to nine months' detention outside the control of the judiciary, and of immunity from prosecution of the national security forces; independent investigation of reports of detainees held incommunicado and holding those responsible accountable; and ratification by the Sudan of the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 39/46 [YUN 1984, p. 813]. He called for compensation to victims of torture, the end of incommunicado detention and prompt notification to families of detainees of their arrest and place of detention. Annexed to the expert's report was the text of his statement before the Assembly's Third Committee (see above).

Zimbabwe

During the sixtieth session of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2004/23], the Congo, on behalf of the Group of African States, moved that the Commission take no action on a draft resolution on the human rights situation in Zimbabwe, which would have expressed deep concern at the continuing human rights violations in the country and requested the relevant special rapporteurs and special representatives to examine alleged human rights violations and to report thereon. The motion was carried by a vote of 27 to 24, with 2 abstentions.

Colombia

The Commission Chairperson, in a 23 April statement, said the Commission appreciated the priority placed by the Government of Colombia on the development of a fully functioning democratic State that was more capable of protecting the most basic human rights of its citizens [E/2004/23]. Welcoming the conviction and sentencing of senior army officers for complicity in a massacre, the Commission called for stepping up the fight against impunity. It also called for further progress regarding the investigation of collusion between members of the public service and illegal armed groups. The Commission condemned all breaches of international humanitarian law arising from the conflict in Colombia, terrorism and other criminal attacks committed by illegal armed groups, the recruitment of a large number of children by those groups and kidnapping. Although the situation of some vulnerable groups had improved, trade unionists, human rights defenders, journalists, departmental officials, community leaders and local government officials continued to be particularly affected by the armed conflict. The Commission deplored the increase in selective violence against Afro-Colombian communities and violations of the right to life of large numbers of children. The High Commissioner was asked to report in 2005.

Report of High Commissioner. The High Commissioner reported on the 2004 human rights situation in Colombia, based on information gathered by OHCHR/Bogotá [E/CN.4/2005/10 & Corr.1].

In 2004, the Office carried out 226 field missions and received 1,211 complaints, of which 827 were admitted as referring to conduct in violation of human rights and/or breaches of international humanitarian law. The Office maintained an ongoing dialogue with civil society organizations and issued several publications. It was engaged in developing a national plan of action on human rights, institutional strengthening and human rights training. On 30 March, OHCHR/Bucaramanga, covering the north-eastern part of the country, was inaugurated to complement the offices in Bogotá, Cali and Medellín.

The High Commissioner stated that during 2004, the human rights situation continued to be critical. Violations continued to be recorded of the rights to life, personal integrity, freedom and security, due process and privacy, as well as of the fundamental freedoms of movement, residence, opinion and expression. No significant progress was observed regarding economic, social and cultural rights. Reports of extrajudicial executions attributed to the security forces and other public officials increased, and high levels of torture and forced disappearances continued, as did reports of arrests and mass searches carried out without an appropriate legal basis by the army and the Attorney-General's Office. The downward trend of various indicators of breaches of international humanitarian law continued, particularly multiple homicides and hostage-taking, although their incidence remained high. Illegal armed groups, particularly the Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia-Ejército del Pueblo (FARC-EP) and the paramilitaries, continued to commit serious and numerous breaches such as attacks on civilians, indiscriminate attacks, homicides, massacres, hostage-taking, terrorist acts, forced displacements, the use of anti-personnel mines, the recruitment of minors and acts of sexual violence against women and girls. Allegations against members of the security forces, particularly the army, included homicides, indiscriminate attacks, forced displacements and attacks on the personal integrity and dignity of women. The vulnerability of human rights defenders continued. The number of newly displaced persons continued to decrease, although the total number of internally displaced persons increased. The indigenous and Afro-Colombian communities continued to be threatened by the illegal armed groups.

The High Commissioner proposed 27 recommendations addressed to the Government, the supervisory bodies responsible for human rights promotion and protection, representative sectors of civil society, the international community and the illegal armed groups, regarding prevention and protection, the internal armed conflict, the rule of law and impunity, economic and social policies, the promotion of a culture of human rights, and technical cooperation and advisory services provided by OHCHR.

Communication. Colombia, in observations on the High Commissioner's report [E/CN.4/2005/G/29], presented its comments regarding the evolution of the armed conflict, public policy and implementation of the High Commissioner's recommendations, economic and social policies, and the situation of human rights and international humanitarian law.

(See pp. 737 and 792 respectively for details of visits to Colombia by the Special Rapporteurs on the right to freedom of opinion and expression and on the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous peoples.)

Cuba

Commission action. On 15 April [res. 2004/11], by a recorded vote of 22 to 21, with 10 abstentions, the Commission stated that Cuba should refrain from adopting measures that could jeopardize the fundamental rights, the freedom of expression and the right to due process of its citizens, and, in that regard, deplored the events which occurred in 2003 relating to verdicts pronounced against certain political dissidents and journalists. It urged the Government to cooperate with the Personal Representative of the High Commissioner.

Report of Personal Representative. A report of the High Commissioner's Personal Representative [E/CN.4/2005/33 & Corr.1], Christine Chanet (France), reviewed the factors hindering the realization of human rights in Cuba, particularly in terms of the impact of the economic, trade and financial embargo (see p. 305) on economic, social and cultural rights. She said the difficulties the population had encountered as a result of the embargo were compounded in 2004, particularly as a result of tighter economic and financial restrictions imposed by the United States in May. Despite an unfavourable environment, the Government maintained a sound health system and school success rates, and made improvements in combating discrimination against women and in the exercise of freedom of religion. Subjects of concern were the arrest of some 80 persons, in March/April 2003, while working as journalists, writers, members of associations, human rights defenders or members of political parties and opposition trade unions. Moreover, in 2004 more people were arrested and convicted for openly expressing dissident political opinions. Although the Government had released 18 prisoners on humanitarian grounds, the releases did not signify the end of the period of repression which began in 2003, nor an improvement in civil and political rights. According to the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention (see p. 721), 61 people were still in arbitrary detention. The Personal Representative was alarmed at the allegations of ill-treatment in detention made by prisoners' families. She recommended that the Government release detainees who had not committed violent acts against individuals or property; review laws which led to criminal prosecutions of persons exercising their freedom of expression, demonstration, assembly and association; uphold the moratorium on the application of the death penalty introduced in 2000; establish an independent body to receive complaints from persons claiming violation of their fundamental rights; review the regulations relating to travel into and out of the country; authorize NGOs to enter Cuba; foster pluralism in respect of associations, trade unions, organs of the press and political parties; and accede to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, pp. 423 & 419], as well as the Second Optional Protocol of the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, relating to the abolition of the death penalty, adopted by Assembly resolution 44/128 [YUN 1989, p. 484]. Annexed to the report was a list of civilians arrested in March/April 2003 and still imprisoned.

Communications. During the course of the year, Cuba submitted to the Commission a series of documents regarding human rights and fundamental freedoms [E/CN.4/2004/G/30, E/CN.4/2004/G/41, E/CN.4/2004/G/46, E/CN.4/2005/G/4, E/CN.4/2005/G/6, E/CN.4/2005/G/8, E/CN.4/2005/G/10].

China

On 15 April [E/2004/23], China motioned that the Commission take no action on a draft resolution on the human rights situation in China that would have expressed concern at continuing reports regarding severe restrictions of the freedoms of assembly, association, expression, conscience and religion, legal processes that continued to fall short of international norms of due process and transparency, and arrests and other severe sentences for those seeking to exercise their fundamental rights, including those in Tibet and Xinjiang. The motion was carried by 28 votes to 16, with 9 abstentions.

(For information on a visit to China by the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, see p. 722.)

Democratic People's Republic of Korea

Commission action. On 15 April [res. 2004/13], by a recorded vote of 29 to 8, with 16 abstentions, the Commission, expressing deep concern about continuing reports of systemic, widespread and grave human rights violations in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK), regretted that the DPRK authorities had not permitted the international community to examine the reports in an independent manner and called on the Government to do so. The Commission Chairperson was requested to appoint a Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the DPRK. The Special Rapporteur was asked to establish direct contact with the Government and people of the DPRK, report on the human rights situation in the country, seek and receive reliable information, including through country visits, and report to the General Assembly in 2004 and to the Commission in 2005. The Secretary-General was requested to assist the Special Rapporteur and the High Commissioner to engage in a dialogue with the DPRK authorities with a view to establishing human rights technical cooperation programmes and to report thereon. Relevant special rapporteurs and special representatives were requested to examine alleged human rights violations in the DPRK and to report in 2005; the Secretary-General was asked to assist them.

The Economic and Social Council, on 15 June, approved the Commission's request to its Chairperson to appoint a Special Rapporteur and to the Secretary-General to assist him/her (decision 2004/221).

In July, Vitit Muntarbhorn (Thailand) was appointed Special Rapporteur.

Notes by Secretariat. A February note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/2004/31] described efforts to provide human rights advisory services and technical cooperation to the DPRK and provided information on the broad range of recommendations that the Commission addressed to the Government. Annexed to the note was a note verbale of 4 February from the DPRK to OHCHR, in which it objected to the Commission's 2003 resolution [YUN 2003, p. 816], which, it said, lacked fairness and objectivity, and contained wording designed to impair its image.

A September Secretariat note [A/59/316] stated that, owing to his late appointment, the Special Rapporteur was unable to provide a written report to the General Assembly; instead he would present an oral statement.

Report of Special Rapporteur. On 28 October, in an oral report to the General Assembly's Third Committee [A/C.3/59/SR.29], the Special Rapporteur said there were key human rights challenges in the DPRK regarding implementation of the right to food and the right to life. He pointed to the continuing debates on how much of the food aid provided to the country from abroad actually reached the target population. There were alleged violations of the right to security of person, humane treatment, non-discrimination and access to justice. The right to freedom of movement was also of concern, as were the rights to the freedom of information, expression and opinion, association and religion. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government abide by international human rights standards to which it was party and reform laws and practices inconsistent with those standards. He called for respect for the rule of law, and for measures addressing the root causes of displacement and ensuring humanitarian assistance.

Responding to the Special Rapporteur's report, the DPRK said it was the ultimate manifestation of prejudice, unfairness and interference in the internal affairs of the country. The report was the result of a political plot on the part of Western countries to isolate the DPRK under the pretext of human rights protection.

On 20 December, the Assembly took note of the report (decision 59/528).

Iran

(For details of the visit to Iran by the Special Rapporteur on the human rights of migrants, see p. 697.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/59/503/Add.3], adopted resolution 59/205 by recorded vote (71-54-55) [agenda item 105 (c)].

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other international human rights instruments,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Mindful that the Islamic Republic of Iran is a party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject, the most recent of which is resolution 58/195 of 22 December 2003, and recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolution 2001/17 of 20 April 2001,

Noting the commitment made by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to strengthen respect for human rights in the country and to promote the rule of law,

1. Welcomes:

(a) The open invitation extended by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to all human rights thematic monitoring mechanisms in April 2002;

(b) The visit of the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention of the Commission on Human Rights to the Islamic Republic of Iran in February 2003 and its subsequent report;

(c) The visit of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression to the Islamic Republic of Iran in November 2003 and his subsequent report;

(d) The visit of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the human rights of migrants to the Islamic Republic of Iran in February 2004;

(e) The recommendation by the head of the judiciary of the Islamic Republic of Iran to judges in December 2002 that they choose alternative punishment in cases where the sentence of stoning would otherwise be imposed;

(f) The announcement by the head of the judiciary in April 2004 of the ban on torture and the subsequent passage of related legislation by the Parliament, which was approved by the Guardian Council in May 2004;

(g) The efforts of the elected Government to foster the growth of civil society;

(h) The human rights dialogues between the Islamic Republic of Iran and a number of countries;

(i) The cooperation with United Nations agencies in developing programmes in the field of human rights, good governance and the rule of law;

2. Expresses its serious concern at:

(a) The continuing violations of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran;

(b) The worsening situation with regard to freedom of opinion and expression and freedom of the media, especially the increased persecution for the peaceful expression of political views, including arbitrary arrest and detention without charge or trial; crackdowns by the judiciary and security forces against journalists, parliamentarians, students, clerics and academics; the unjustified closure of newspapers and blocking of Internet sites; the targeted disqualification of large numbers of prospective candidates in the Majlis elections as well as the intimidation and harassment of opposition activists in the run-up to the elections held in February 2004;

(c) The continuing executions in the absence of respect for internationally recognized safeguards, and in particular deplores the execution of persons below 18 years of age, contrary to the obligations of the Islamic Republic of Iran under article 37 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, as well as public executions;

(d) The use of torture and other forms of cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment, in particular the practice of amputation and flogging, noting in this context the rejection by the Guardian Council in August 2003 of the proposal of the elected parliament to accede to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

(e) The continued restrictions on free assembly and the forcible dissolution of political parties;

(f) The failure to comply fully with international standards in the administration of justice, the absence of due process of law, the refusal to provide fair and public hearings and right to counsel, the use of national security laws to deny the rights of the individual and the lack of respect for internationally recognized legal safeguards, inter alia, with respect to persons belonging to religious minorities, officially recognized or otherwise;

(g) The systemic discrimination against women and girls in law and in practice, despite some minor legislative improvements, and the refusal of the Guardian Council to take steps to address this systematic discrimination, noting in this context its rejection, in August 2003, of the proposal of the elected parliament to accede to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women;

(h) The continuing discrimination against persons belonging to minorities, including Christians, Jews and Sunnis, and the increased discrimination against the Baha'is, including cases of arbitrary arrest and detention, the denial of free worship or of publicly carrying out communal affairs, the disregard of property rights, the destruction of sites of religious importance, the suspension of social, educational and community-related activities and the denial of access to higher education, employment, pensions and other benefits;

(i) The continuing persecution, including through the systematic and arbitrary use of prolonged solitary confinement, and arbitrary sentencing to prison of human rights defenders, political opponents, religious dissenters and reformists;

(j) The postponement of the visit of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances of the Commission on Human Rights to the Islamic Republic of Iran;

3. Calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran:

(a) To abide by its obligations freely undertaken under the International Covenants on Human Rights and other international human rights instruments, including provisions relating to freedom of opinion and expression, the use of torture and other forms of cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment or punishment, the promotion and protection of the human rights of women and girls and the rights of the child, and to continue its efforts to consolidate respect for human rights and the rule of law;

(b) To implement the recommendations of the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression and the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on freedom of religion or belief;

(c) To cooperate with United Nations mechanisms, including by setting a date for a visit by the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, and to respond fully to their recommendations;

(d) To implement fully the ban on torture, announced in April 2004 by the head of the judiciary, and the related parliamentary legislation of May 2004;

(e) To expedite judicial reform, to guarantee the dignity of the individual and to ensure the full application of due process of law and fair and transparent procedures by an independent and impartial judiciary, and in this context to ensure respect for the rights of the defence and the equity of verdicts in all instances, including for members of religious minority groups, officially recognized or otherwise;

(f) To appoint an impartial prosecutor and to expedite the creation of offices of the Prosecutor in all provinces, in keeping with the decision taken in November 2002 for their re-establishment;

(g) To eliminate all forms of discrimination based on religious grounds or against persons belonging to minorities, including the Baha'is, Christians, Jews and Sunnis, and to address this matter in an open manner, with the full participation of the minorities themselves, and to ensure respect for the freedom of religion or belief of all persons;

(h) To end amputation and flogging and all other forms of punishment that are cruel, inhuman or degrading;

(i) To abolish the punishment of execution by stoning and, in the meantime, to end the practice of stoning, as recommended by the head of the judiciary;

(j) To comply with its obligations under article 37 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights not to impose the sentence of death for offences committed by persons below 18 years of age;

(k) To vigorously pursue penitentiary reform;

4. Encourages the thematic mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights, including the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, the Special Rapporteur on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, the Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on the situation of human rights defenders to visit the Islamic Republic of Iran, and encourages the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to cooperate with these special mechanisms and to respond fully to their subsequent recommendations;

5. Decides to continue its examination of the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran at its sixtieth session, under the item entitled "Human rights questions", in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights.

Iraq

Report of Special Rapporteur. A March report [E/CN.4/2004/36/Add.1] of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Iraq, Andreas Mavrommatis (Cyprus), covered the situation in the country from 10 February to 7 March. Its findings were based mainly on substantive consultations he had held in Amman, Jordan, with eyewitnesses and high-level officials of the Iraqi Ministries of Human Rights, of Immigration and of Justice, and the Minister for Human Rights of the Kurdistan Regional Government. The consultations focused on oppression, discrimination, religious persecution, mass executions of persons belonging to the majority Shi'ah community, expulsions, mass executions of Faili (Shi'ah Iraqi Kurds) and misappropriation of their properties, eyewitness evidence on the Anfal campaigns and the Halabcha bombings in 1988, and the draining of the Marshes, including the consequent violations of a wide range of rights of the Marsh people. The Special Rapporteur urged all concerned to accelerate criminal investigations regarding grave human rights violations and to prosecute those responsible; to secure all mass graves and accelerate the identification of remains; and to continue and enhance cooperation with him. He called on all countries of asylum not to press refugees to return to Iraq and called on the Iraqi authorities to ensure that all laws and practices adopted were consistent with the country's international obligations. The Special Rapporteur urged the Iraqi authorities to ratify the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 39/46 [YUN 1984, p. 813].

Report of Acting High Commissioner. A June report of the Acting High Commissioner [E/CN.4/2005/4] focused on the human rights situation in Iraq. He said that human rights gains had been made during the period since Coalition forces took control of the country, including an internal debate on a constitutional architecture mindful of international human rights norms; the establishment of an Iraqi Ministry of Human Rights; enhanced freedoms for ordinary Iraqis; increased participation of women in public life; and greater freedom of opinion and expression. Nevertheless, serious human rights problems were evidenced by the fact that large numbers of people were incarcerated without public knowledge of their number, nor the reasons for, place of and conditions of their detention. Ordinary Iraqis suffered privations in respect of basic economic and social rights, but that situation had improved. The treatment of Iraqi detainees was, as recognized by Coalition leaders at the highest levels, a stain on the effort to bring freedom to Iraq. The Acting High Commissioner recommended regular inspections of places of detention, the appointment of an international ombudsman or commissioner, the establishment of an independent Iraqi national human rights commission, bringing to justice members of the Coalition forces responsible for serious human rights violations and the creation by the Coalition authorities of a human rights fund for Iraq. Recommendations to the Iraqi Interim Government included promulgating a human rights policy for Iraq, establishing an Iraqi legal and judicial reform commission, developing a strategy for addressing the legacy of brutal authoritarian rule and massive human rights abuses, and reviewing the statute of the Iraq Special Tribunal. Recommendations were also made for consideration to be given to the need to establish an Iraqi truth and reconciliation commission, for designating a reparations commission for past crimes, ensuring the effective security of legal actors, defendants, victims and witnesses, supporting human rights civil society organizations and supporting the Ministry of Human Rights. The United Nations should continue to provide human rights training for government officials, judges, prosecutors, lawyers, and representatives of NGOs and civil society. Annexed to the report were submissions by the Coalition Provisional Authority, the United Kingdom and the United States; and a list of documents used to prepare the report.

Communication. In a July note [E/CN.4/2005/G/12], Iraq, responding to a 6 May letter of the Acting High Commissioner addressed to Iraqi senior officials regarding the situation of human rights and humanitarian law in the country, described aspects of the functioning of the Iraqi Interim Government, the situation of women and children, health concerns, education enrolment, the economic, social and cultural situation, and civil and political rights.

Myanmar

Commission action. On 21 April [res. 2004/61], the Commission, while welcoming some positive developments regarding human rights in Myanmar, expressed grave concern at the ongoing systematic human rights violations in the country. It called on the Government to restore the independence of the judiciary and due process of law, and to further reform the justice system; eradicate the practice of forced labour; ensure safe and unhindered access for the United Nations and international humanitarian organizations; cooperate with the Secretary-General's Special Envoy for Myanmar and the Special Rapporteur; consider becoming party to international human rights instruments; suspend and permanently end conflict with ethnic groups; conclude a ceasefire agreement with the Karen National Union (KNU) and ensure that the rights of ethnic nationalities were respected fully; and establish a national human rights commission in accordance with the Principles relating to the establishment of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights (the Paris Principles), adopted in General Assembly resolution 48/134 [YUN 1993, p. 899]. The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for a further year and asked him to report to the Assembly in 2004 and to the Commission in 2005 and to integrate a gender perspective in his work. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him.

On 22 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate and its request to him to submit reports (decision 2004/266).

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 58/247 [YUN 2003, p. 820], the Secretary-General submitted a March report [E/CN.4/2004/30] on his good offices efforts and those of his Special Envoy, Razali Ismail, in facilitating national reconciliation and democratization in Myanmar. Discussions focused on the reconvening of the Government's National Convention in order to draft a new constitution, with the participation of representatives of other political parties. The Secretary-General called for the release of those detained for engaging in peaceful political activities and took note of the peace talks that had resumed between the Government and KNU, the largest armed opposition group. He urged the Government to start dialogue with Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, leader of the National League for Democracy (NLD), and representatives of Myanmar's other political parties.

In an August report [A/59/269], the Secretary-General said that his Special Envoy visited Myanmar (1-4 March) where he stressed to all parties that a democratic transition in Myanmar should be all-inclusive, open and transparent. Following the Envoy's visit, several NLD Central Executive Committee (CEC) members were released from house arrest, the NLD headquarters in Yangon were reopened and several meetings between Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and NLD CEC members were allowed to take place at her residence. Optimism dissipated on 14 May when the Government informed CEC members that the remaining restrictions on Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and NLD would not be lifted. NLD announced that it would not participate in the National Convention. The National Convention reconvened on 17 May with the participation of ethnic nationality ceasefire groups but without NLD and some other ethnic nationality political parties, including the Shan National League for Democracy. On 22 May, meetings of the groups began to prepare proposals on the draft chapters of the constitution on the legislature, executive and judiciary already laid down at the previous Convention. In plenary sessions (24 June-9 July), delegates put forward proposals for sharing power in the legislative, executive and judicial sectors to be included in the new constitution. The National Convention was adjourned on 9 July with no firm date for reconvening. A government statement of 10 July affirmed that when the Convention resumed, detailed basic principles on the legislature, executive and judiciary, as well as the sharing and distribution of legislative power and the formation of a financial commission, would be laid down with the consent of a majority of the delegates.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to Commission resolution 2004/61 and Economic and Social Council decision 2004/266 (above), the Secretary-General, by an August note [A/59/311], transmitted a report of Special Rapporteur Paulo Sérgio Pinheiro (Brazil) on the human rights situation in Myanmar, based on information received by him up to 30 July.

Regarding civil and political rights, the Special Rapporteur said that the situation in Myanmar had not substantially changed. There remained large numbers (over 1,300) of security detainees and there were no indications as to when Daw

Aung San Suu Kyi would be released. Since the beginning of 2004, he had received reports about continuing arrests and harsh sentences for peaceful political activities. There were still restrictions on political activity, with all NLD party offices remaining shut except for its headquarters in Yangon. Regarding the situation in the border areas, the resumption of peace talks between the Government and KNU was a significant development. The two sides planned to meet in August for a fourth round of negotiations aimed at ending the armed conflict. The Special Rapporteur received credible reports of human rights violations in certain counter-insurgency areas. As to children's rights, the Committee for the Prevention of the Recruitment of Child Soldiers was established in January, and the Government had invited a delegation of the Committee on the Rights of the Child to visit Myanmar.

A December report [E/CN.4/2005/36] of the Special Rapporteur, based on information received by him up to 29 November, said there was a change of Prime Minister on 19 October. The Government, under the new Prime Minister, had given public assurances that all commitments made under the previous Government would be honoured. Regarding the human rights situation, the Special Rapporteur reported that there had been no change in the situation of fundamental rights and freedoms. Recent cases of arrests, trials and prison sentences for peaceful political activity had been brought to his attention. The Special Rapporteur expressed concern that the number of persons imprisoned for exercising their fundamental rights to freedom of expression, opinion, information, religion, association and assembly had remained unchanged during the reporting period, and political prisoners had been detained beyond the expiry of their sentences. With the recent leadership changes, the 1983 law on the National Intelligence Bureau was repealed on 22 October. The Special Rapporteur remained disturbed by continuing allegations of human rights violations in ethnic minority areas, where civilians had witnessed widespread violations of economic, social and cultural rights. There continued to be credible reports about the recruitment and use of minors by the Myanmar armed forces and a range of non-State armed opposition groups. The Special Rapporteur recommended the unconditional release of political prisoners, the restoration of freedom for political parties and ceasefire partners to operate and pursue peaceful political activity, the establishment by the Government of mechanisms for determining the accountability of army personnel for human rights violations, the coordination of political, humanitarian and human rights initiatives by UN and international community actors and agencies, and that priority be given to the ratification of human rights instruments.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 76], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/59/503/Add.3], adopted resolution 59/263 without vote [agenda item 105 (c)].

Situation of human rights in Myanmar

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all States Members of the United Nations have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and the duty to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Reaffirming also its previous resolutions on the human rights situation in Myanmar, the most recent of which is resolution 58/247 of 23 December 2003, those of the Commission on Human Rights, the most recent of which is resolution 2004/61 of 21 April 2004, and the conclusions of the special sitting of the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference of 5 June 2004,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 1460 (2003) of 30 January 2003 and 1539(2004) of 22 April 2004,

Recognizing that good governance, democracy, the rule of law and respect for human rights are essential to achieving sustainable development and economic growth,

1. Welcomes:

(a) The report of the Secretary-General and the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Myanmar;

(b) The personal engagement of the Secretary-General with the situation in Myanmar and his statement of 17 August 2004, in which he calls upon the Government of Myanmar to release Daw Aung San Suu Kyi immediately and to engage in substantive dialogue with the National League for Democracy and other political parties;

(c) The establishment by the Government of a committee for the prevention of military recruitment of underage children and its discussions with the United Nations Children's Fund towards concluding a plan of action, and stresses the need for the Government to work closely with the Fund;

(d) The resumption of peace talks between the Government of Myanmar and the Karen National Union;

(e) The access to the eastern part of Myanmar of the International Committee of the Red Cross and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

2. Expresses its grave concern at:

(a) The ongoing systematic violation of the human rights, including civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, of the people of Myanmar, in particular as outlined in previous resolutions concerning the situation of human rights in Myanmar, the most recent of which are General Assembly resolution 58/247 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 2004/61;

(b) The events of 30 May 2003 and the continuing detention and house arrest of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and members of the National League for Democracy;

(c) The fact that the Myanmar authorities have yet to implement recommendations contained in the aforementioned resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights;

(d) The fact that the Myanmar authorities have not permitted the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Myanmar to visit for over six months, or the Special Rapporteur to visit for almost twelve months, despite repeated requests;

(e) The continuing restrictions placed on the National League for Democracy and other political parties which prevented them from participating in the National Convention;

3. Calls upon the Government of Myanmar:

(a) To end the systematic violations of human rights in Myanmar, including extrajudicial killings, the use of torture, the use of rape and other forms of sexual violence persistently carried out by members of the armed forces, discrimination and violations suffered in particular by persons belonging to ethnic minorities, women and children and violations of the right to an adequate standard of living; to ensure full respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms; to end impunity; and to investigate and bring to justice any perpetrators of human rights violations, including members of the military and other government agents in all circumstances;

(b) To ensure that the next session of the National Convention is fully inclusive of all political parties and representatives and all major ethnic nationalities not represented by a political party, and that participants are guaranteed freedom of association and freedom of expression, including freedom of the media and unlimited access to information for the people of Myanmar, and guarantees the safety of all participants;

(c) To restore democracy and respect the results of the 1990 elections by, inter alia, releasing immediately and unconditionally the leadership of the National League for Democracy, including Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, and members of the League detained on or after 30 May 2003, as well as other prisoners of conscience, and to cease the ongoing harassment of the League and other political parties and allow the reopening of the offices of the League throughout the country;

(d) To release immediately and unconditionally all detained or imprisoned political prisoners;

(e) To initiate a full and independent inquiry, with international cooperation, into the Depayin incident of 30 May 2003, as called for by the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session;

(f) To cooperate fully with the Special Envoy and the Special Rapporteur in order to help to bring Myanmar towards a transition to civilian rule and to ensure that they are both granted without further delay full, free and unimpeded access to Myanmar and that no person cooperating with the Special Envoy, the Special Rapporteur or any international organization is subjected to any form of intimidation, harassment or punishment, and to review as a matter of urgency the case of those undergoing punishment in this regard;

(g) To consider as a matter of high priority becoming a party to all relevant human rights instruments;

(h) To take immediate action to implement fully concrete legislative, executive and administrative measures to eradicate the practice of forced labour by all organs of Government, including the armed forces, to cooperate with the International Labour Organization, and to implement fully the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry established to examine the observance by Myanmar of the Convention concerning Forced or Compulsory Labour, 1930 (Convention No. 29), of the International Labour Organization;

(i) To put an immediate end to the recruitment and use of child soldiers and to extend full cooperation to relevant international organizations in order to ensure the demobilization of child soldiers, their return home and their rehabilitation in accordance with recommendations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child;

(j) To end the policy of the systematic enforced displacement of persons and other policies leading to displacement within Myanmar and refugee flows to neighbouring countries, to provide the necessary protection and assistance to internally displaced persons and to respect the right of refugees to voluntary, safe and dignified return monitored by appropriate international agencies;

(k) To immediately ensure the safe and unhindered access to all parts of Myanmar of the United Nations and international humanitarian organizations so as to ensure the provision of humanitarian assistance and to guarantee that it reaches the most vulnerable groups of the population, including internally displaced persons and returnees;

(l) To pursue through dialogue and peaceful means an immediate end to conflict with all remaining ethnic groups with which ceasefire agreements have not yet been signed;

(m) To formulate a clear and detailed plan for the transition to democracy, which includes concrete timing and the involvement of all political groups and ethnic nationalities in a way that ensures the process is transparent and inclusive;

4. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue to provide his good offices and to pursue his discussions on the situation of human rights and the restoration of democracy with the Government and people of Myanmar, including all relevant parties to the national reconciliation process in Myanmar;

(b) To give all necessary assistance to enable his Special Envoy and the Special Rapporteur to discharge their mandate fully and effectively;

(c) To report to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session and to the Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-first session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Decides to continue the consideration of the question at its sixtieth session.

Turkmenistan

Commission action. On 15 April [res. 2004/12], by a recorded vote of 25 to 11, with 17 abstentions, the Commission expressed grave concern at the Government of Turkmenistan's policy based on the repression of political opposition activities; abuse of the legal system through arbitrary detention, imprisonment and surveillance of those who tried to exercise their freedoms of thought, expression, assembly and association, and harassment of their families; restrictions on the freedoms of information and expression, thought, conscience, religion and belief; employment and education discrimination against ethnic Russian, Uzbek and other minorities; and poor prison conditions. The Government was urged to ensure full respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms, end forced displacement and guarantee freedom of movement, remove new restrictions on the activities of public associations, develop further a constructive dialogue with OHCHR and submit reports to relevant UN treaty bodies and ensure full implementation of their recommendations. The Commission requested the Special Rapporteurs on the independence of judges and lawyers, on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, on the right to freedom of opinion and expression and on freedom of religion or belief, the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, the Representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on the situation of human rights defenders to consider visiting the country, and called on the Government of Turkmenistan to facilitate the visits.

Communication. On 20 April [E/CN.4/2004/G/53], Turkmenistan said that the Commission's resolution (above) did not correspond to reality and it felt it necessary to present information regarding the implementation of guarantees of personal, political, economic, social and other rights of its citizens.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/59/503/Add.3], adopted resolution 59/206 by recorded vote (69-47-63) [agenda item 105 (c)].

Situation of human rights in Turkmenistan

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all States Members of the United Nations have the obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and the duty to fulfil the obligations that they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Recalling its resolution 58/194 of 22 December 2003,

1. Welcomes:

(a) The limited increase in the ability of members of certain religious minority groups, including members of the Baha'i faith, the Baptist church, the Hare Krishna movement and the Seventh Day Adventist church, to practise their religion;

(b) The release in June 2004 of a number of Jehovah's Witnesses who had made conscientious objections to undertaking military service, but notes with concern that other Jehovah's Witnesses continue to be jailed on the same charge;

(c) The comments of the Government of Turkmenistan in May 2004 that interested representatives of the international community were welcome to visit Turkmen prisons, and notes with satisfaction that the Government has begun preliminary discussions with representatives of the International Committee of the Red Cross regarding prison access;

(d) The fact that the Personal Envoy of the Chairman-in-Office of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe for Participating States in Central Asia has been given the opportunity for further dialogue with the Government of Turkmenistan, and expresses the hope that a constructive dialogue on human rights issues is to be continued soon;

(e) The submission of the national report under the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the recent submission of the report under the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women to the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat and the announcement by the Government of Turkmenistan that it intends to submit the reports due under the Convention on the Rights of the Child by the end of 2004;

(f) The amendment of 2 November 2004 to the Criminal Code of Turkmenistan rescinding article 223/1, which stipulated criminal penalties for unregistered activities of public associations, including non-governmental organizations;

(g) The invitation by the Government of Turkmenistan to the High Commissioner on National Minorities of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, which was extended on 16 November 2004, to visit the country by the end of 2004;

2. Expresses its grave concern at the continuing and serious human rights violations occurring in Turkmenistan, in particular:

(a) The persistence of a governmental policy based on the repression of all political opposition activities;

(b) The continuing abuse of the legal system through arbitrary detentions, imprisonment and surveillance of persons who try to exercise their freedom of expression, assembly and association, and by harassment of their families;

(c) Further restrictions on the freedom of expression and opinion, including the loss of local retransmissions of Russian language programmes on Radio Mayak, and serious harassment endured by local correspondents and collaborators of Radio Liberty;

(d) Continued restrictions on the exercise of the freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief;

(e) Continued discrimination by the Government of Turkmenistan against ethnic minorities in the fields of education and employment and by forced displacements, despite assurances by the Government that it will stop this discrimination;

(f) Constraints faced by civil society organizations, including the slow progress in the registration of non-governmental organizations;

3. Regrets the decision of the Government of Turkmenistan not to renew the accreditation for the Head of the Centre of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe at Ashgabat, but hopes that the Turkmen authorities will cooperate fully with her successor;

4. Calls upon the Government of Turkmenistan:

(a) To ensure full respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms and, in this regard, to implement fully the measures set out in Commission on Human Rights resolutions 2003/11 of 16 April 2003 and 2004/12 of 15 April 2004;

(b) To work closely with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights with regard to the areas of concern and to cooperate fully with all the mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights and all the relevant United Nations treaty bodies;

(c) To implement fully the recommendations outlined in the report of the Rapporteur of the Moscow Mechanism of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and to work constructively with the various institutions of the Organization, in particular following the visit of the Personal Envoy of the Chairman-in-Office of the Organization for Participating States in Central Asia, to work towards implementation of those recommendations and to make the necessary arrangements to facilitate fully a visit by the High Commissioner on National Minorities of the Organization by the end of 2004;

(d) To release immediately and unconditionally all prisoners of conscience;

(e) To give real substance to the May 2004 offer of the Government of Turkmenistan for interested representatives of the international community to visit Turkmen prisons by providing appropriate independent bodies, including the International Committee of the Red Cross, with full access to all places of detention in accordance with the usual modalities for those organizations and ensuring that lawyers and relatives have full and repeated access to all those in detention, including those convicted of involvement in the attempted coup d'état of 25 November 2002;

(f) To ensure that the forthcoming parliamentary elections will be held consistent with the commitments of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and other international standards for democratic elections;

(g) To remove the remaining restrictions on the activities of public associations, including non-governmental organizations, and to enable those organizations, in particular human rights organizations, and other civil society actors to carry out their activities without hindrance, building upon the amendment of 2 November 2004 to the Criminal Code of Turkmenistan abolishing criminal penalties for unregistered activities of public associations;

Europe

Belarus

Commission action. On 15 April [res. 2004/14], by a recorded vote of 23 to 13, with 17 abstentions, the Commission expressed deep concern at reports from credible sources implicating senior Belarus government officials in the forced disappearance and/or summary execution of three political opponents of the incumbent authorities and of a journalist; the electoral process and legislative framework in Belarus, which remained fundamentally flawed; continued reports of arbitrary arrest and detention; persistent reports of harassment and closure of NGOs, national minority organizations, independent media outlets, opposition political parties and independent trade unions, and the harassment of those engaged in democratic activities; increased restrictions on the activities of religious organizations; reports of harassment of independent and internationally oriented educational establishments; the failure of the Government to cooperate with the Commission's mechanisms; and the criminal prosecution of a leading opposition figure. The Commission decided to appoint a special rapporteur to report in 2005.

On 15 June, the Economic and Social Council approved that decision (decision 2004/222).

In July, Adrian Severin (Romania) was appointed Special Rapporteur.

Report of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur submitted a report on the human rights situation in Belarus, based on his missions to Poland, Lithuania and Latvia (30 November–4 December) [E/CN.4/2005/35].

The Special Rapporteur said that the regime in Belarus was of an authoritarian nature. It was also a bureaucratic State, lacking a strong civil society and a well-developed middle class. The Special Rapporteur said that Belarus still imposed the death penalty and, while it was not illegal under international law, the practice potentially was linked with other human rights violations, such as abuses of the right to a fair trial and of torture and ill-treatment used to extract confessions; certain convictions resulting in the death penalty might be unsound owing to judicial errors or due process violations. He expressed concern about reports of disappearances; torture used routinely to extract confessions and used systematically on prisoners on death row; detention; irregularities in the judicial system; allegations of violations of the freedom of expression; attacks on human rights defenders and political opposition members; allegations of violations of workers' rights; violations of freedom of religion and the principle of equality of religions; and irregularities regarding a referendum to change the Constitution with a view to eliminating limits to the term of office of the President.

The Special Rapporteur called for a deep reform of the political system and a dramatic restructuring of the society in order to promote human rights in the country, a programme of public education and public awareness regarding human rights, and the creation of an international fund for human rights education in Belarus, under the supervision of the Commission on Human Rights. The High Commissioner should convene an international conference on the human rights situation in Belarus.

Communications. Referring to Commission resolution 2004/14 (above), Belarus, in a December communication [E/CN.4/2005/G/11], said it had always been committed to the cause of human rights protection and rejected the resolution, including the Special Rapporteur's mandate. In further communications, Belarus, in view of the Special Rapporteur's report (above), submitted information on measures it had taken to strengthen international security, arms control and disarmament [E/CN.4/2005/G/27] and on social and economic developments in the country [E/CN.4/2005/G/28].

Cyprus

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 2003 request of the Commission [YUN 2003, p. 824], the Secretary-General transmitted an April OHCHR report [E/CN.4/2004/27], which gave an overview of human rights issues in Cyprus covering the period up to 2 April 2004.

Human rights concerns stemmed predominantly from the persisting division of the island and the political situation, which had consequences for the enjoyment of the freedoms of movement, association and expression, property rights and religion and the rights to education and health. Also affected were voting rights and the human rights issues pertaining to missing persons. The report said that, although there were some positive developments, the persisting de facto partition of the island constituted a major obstacle to human rights enjoyment throughout the island.

Commission action. On 21 April [dec. 2004/126], the Commission retained the item on Cyprus on its agenda, on the understanding that previous resolutions would continue to remain operative, including its request to the Secretary-General to report on their implementation.

(See also p. 434.)

Russian Federation

A draft resolution [E/2004/23], introduced in the Commission on 15 April, would have expressed deep concern about human rights, the humanitarian situation and security in Chechnya. It would have called on the Russian Federation to cooperate with human rights mechanisms; facilitate the delivery of humanitarian aid; stop and prevent violations of human rights and international humanitarian law; and ensure free, unimpeded and secure access to Chechnya for international organizations, NGOs and the media. By a recorded vote of 23 votes to 12, with 18 abstentions, taken at the request of the Russian Federation, the draft was rejected.

Middle East

Lebanon

Report of Secretary-General. In response to a 2003 Commission resolution on the human rights situation of Lebanese detainees in Israel [YUN 2003, p. 825], the Secretary-General said he had asked Israel for information on the status of implementation of the resolution but had received no reply [E/CN.4/2004/28].

A March addendum to the Secretary-General's report [E/CN.4/2004/28/Add.1] stated that, on 29 January, 23 Lebanese detainees were released. He had further requested information on the extent of the implementation of the Commission's 2003 resolution but had received no reply.

Communications. On 24 March [E/CN.4/2004/G/36], Israel said that it was not holding any Lebanese detainees as so-called hostages or for bargaining purposes. It submitted a list of those currently held in Israel and the reasons for their detention. On 25 March [E/CN.4/2004/G/37], Israel submitted a list of names of some Lebanese detainees and those reorded as missing.

Commission action. On 15 April [dec. 2004/105], the Commission decided to defer to its 2005 session consideration of a draft resolution on the human rights situation of Lebanese detainees in Israel.

Territories occupied by Israel

During 2004, the question of human rights violations in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of the 1967 hostilities in the Middle East was again considered by the Commission on Human Rights. Political and other aspects were considered by the General Assembly, its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli Practices) and other bodies (see PART ONE, Chapter VI).

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 826], the Secretary-General reported that he had brought the Commission's resolution on the occupied Syrian Golan to the attention of all Governments, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations [E/CN.4/2004/24]. It was also communicated to the Committee on Israeli Practices, the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian Rights) and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA).

The Secretary-General, in a further report [E/CN.4/2004/25], submitted in response to a 2003 Commission request [YUN 2003, p. 826], said he had brought the Commission's resolution on the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories to the attention of the Government of Israel and all other Governments, UN organs, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, the Committee on Israeli Practices, the Committee on Palestinian Rights and UNRWA. He had received no reply from Israel.

A note of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/2004/26] listed all General Assembly reports issued since 25 April 2003 on the situation of the population living in the occupied Arab territories.

Commission action. On 23 March [dec. 2004/102], the Commission, by a recorded vote of 34 to 3, with 14 abstentions, called for an urgent special sitting to consider the situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory resulting from the assassination of Sheikh Ahmed Yassin on 22 March (see p. 457). At the special sitting [E/CN.4/2004/SR.18], on 24 March [res. 2004/1], by a recorded vote of 31 to 2, with 18 abstentions, the Commission strongly condemned the continuing grave human rights violations in the Territory, particularly the assassination of Sheikh Yassin. Noting with grave concern the implications of such targeted assassinations, liquidation and murder of political leadership by the Israeli occupation forces, the Commission called on Israel to respect the principles of international humanitarian law and to desist from all forms of human rights violation in the Territory.

On 15 April [res. 2004/8], by a recorded vote of 31 to 1, with 21 abstentions, the Commission called on Israel to comply with UN resolutions on the Syrian Golan and demanded that it rescind its decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied territory. It also called on Israel to desist from changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the area and to desist from imposing Israeli citizenship and identity cards on the Syrian citizens of the Syrian Golan and from its repressive measures against them. The Secretary-General was requested to bring the Commission's resolution to the attention of all Governments, UN organs, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, to widely publicize the resolution and to report in 2005.

On 15 April [res. 2004/9], by a recorded vote of 27 to 2, with 24 abstentions, the Commission, expressing grave concern at the continued escalation of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict (see p. 453), Israeli settlement activities in the occupied territories, the restriction of freedom of movement of the Palestinians and the construction of the so-called security fence, and condemning all violent acts, including terrorist attacks, urged Israel to comply with the Commission's previous resolutions, reverse its settlement policy, prevent any new installation of settlers, implement the High Commissioner's recommendations [YUN 2000, p. 777] and guarantee the safety and protection of Palestinian civilians. The Commission demanded that Israel stop and reverse the construction of the so-called security fence. The parties were urged to resume negotiations on a political settlement in accordance with UN resolutions.

On the same date [res. 2004/10], by a recorded vote of 31 to 7, with 15 abstentions, the Commission condemned the human rights violations of the Israeli occupation authorities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem; the war launched by the Israeli army against Palestinian towns and camps; the practice of liquidation or extrajudicial executions carried out by the Israeli army against Palestinians; torture against Palestinians during interrogation; and the mass killing of Palestinians by the occupation authorities. The Secretary-General was asked to bring the Commission's resolution to the attention of all Governments, competent UN organs, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, to disseminate it widely and to report on its implementation by Israel in 2005. He was also asked to provide the Commission with all UN reports issued between the Commission's sessions that dealt with the conditions of the Palestinian and other Arab territories under Israeli occupation. The Special Rapporteur was requested to report to the General Assembly in 2004 and to the Commission in 2005.

On 22 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of Commission resolution 2004/10 and approved the Commission's request to the Special Rapporteur (decision 2004/250).

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In a February addendum [E/CN.4/2004/6/Add.1] to a report submitted in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 826], Special Rapporteur John Dugard (South Africa), following his visit to the Occupied Palestinian Territory and Israel (8-15 February), focused on the wall being built by Israel in the West Bank, which had resulted in the creation of a zone between the Green Line (the de facto border between Israel and Palestine) and the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory. He concluded that, based on evidence made available to him and the benefit of on-site inspection, the wall did not serve a legitimate security purpose when it entered into Palestinian land. Thus, it had to be seen as an instrument of annexation, in violation of international law. The wall interfered with the Palestinian right of self-determination as it substantially reduced the size of the self-determination unit within which the right was to be exercised; violated the right to freedom of movement and the rights to family life, to work, to health, to an adequate standard of living and to education; violated principles of international humanitarian law; and constituted de facto annexation of Palestinian territory by forcible means. He recommended that the Commission call on States to respond to such violations by explicit non-recognition of the acquisition of territory by forcible means occasioned by the wall and by condemning the ensuing violation of human rights and international humanitarian law. He also proposed expanding OHCHR's mandate in the region to include monitoring of human rights violations in addition to technical assistance.

An August note of the Secretary-General [A/59/256] transmitted a report of the Special Rapporteur, in response to Commission resolution 2004/10 (above), based on his visit to the Occupied Palestinian Territory (Gaza and the West Bank, 18-25 June). The report focused on the consequences of military incursions into the Gaza Strip, violations of human rights and humanitarian law arising from the construction of the wall and the pervasiveness of restrictions on freedom of movement. The Special Rapporteur pointed out that the International Court of Justice held that the wall was contrary to international law (see p. 1272). Thus, the unlawfulness of the wall was now made clear under international law. Israel was legally and morally obliged to bring its practices and policies into line with international law, said the Special Rapporteur. He reminded States of their obligation not to recognize the illegal situation resulting from the construction of the wall and not to render aid or assistance in maintaining the situation created by its construction.

On 20 December, the General Assembly took note of the report (decision 59/528).

Communications. Israel, in a 29 March letter [E/CN.4/2004/G/42], responding to the Special Rapporteur's February report (above), said that his allegations were based almost entirely on rumour and speculation. The report was rife with unsubstantiated and unattributed reports and made no mention of Israel's efforts to ease the impact of the wall on the lives of affected Palestinians. Referring to the Special Rapporteur's August report (above), Israel, on 25 October [E/CN.4/2005/G/9], said it distorted both fact and law, all in the service of a narrow and extreme political agenda. Israel made a number of general observations on the report.

The Commission also received communications from Palestine regarding alleged violations of human rights and the principles of international law and international humanitarian law [E/CN.4/2004/G/20, E/CN.4/2004/G/21, E/CN.4/2005/G/5].

PART THREE

Economic and social questions

Chapter I

Development policy and international economic cooperation

Global economic growth in 2004, at 4 per cent, was not only the highest for many years, but was also unusually widespread and well balanced. The broadening of the economic recovery was reflected in the fact that almost half the developing countries, accounting for over 80 per cent of the developing world's population, increased per capita output by more than 3 per cent. Per capita output also increased by more than 3 per cent in all the economies in transition except one. Among the developed countries, performance was more varied. Growth was strong in North America, moderate in Japan but weak in Europe.

Achieving the Millennium Development Goal (MDG), adopted by the General Assembly in 2000, of halving by 2015 the proportion of the world's people living in extreme poverty was a major focus of the work of several UN bodies in 2004. The high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council was devoted to the question of resource mobilization and enabling environment for poverty eradication in the context of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries (LDCs) for the Decade 2001-2010, and a ministerial declaration on the subject was adopted. The Council's coordination segment considered the promotion of rural development in developing countries, with due consideration to LDCs, for poverty eradication and sustainable development. After considering the role of microcredit and microfinance in the eradication of poverty, the Assembly adopted a December resolution in which it recognized that access to microcredit and microfinance could contribute to the achievement of the goals and targets of major UN conferences and summits in the economic and social fields, including the MDGs, and decided to devote one plenary meeting at its sixty-first (2006) session to the outcome of and follow-up to the International Year of Microcredit, 2005. The Assembly also adopted a resolution on the implementation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006).

Reaffirming that information and communication technologies were powerful tools to foster socio-economic development and contribute to the realization of the MDGs, the Assembly endorsed the Declaration of Principles and the Plan of Action adopted at the first phase of the World Summit on the Information Society in 2003. It also took note of progress in the preparations for the second phase, to be held in 2006. The Commission on Science and Technology for Development, in May, had as its main theme the question of promoting the application of science and technology to meet the MDGs.

The Commission on Sustainable Development, in overseeing the follow-up to the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development, which reviewed progress in implementing Agenda 21, the action plan on sustainable development adopted by the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, focused on the thematic cluster of water, sanitation and human settlements. It also continued preparations for the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the 1994 Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (SIDS). The International Meeting, which had been scheduled to take place in 2004, was postponed until January 2005.

In addition to SIDS, other groups of countries in special situations that were of concern to the Organization during 2004 included LDCs, landlocked developing countries, economies in transition and poor mountain countries. The need for a smooth transition for countries graduating from the list of LDCs so that the graduation would not result in a disruption of development plans, programmes and projects was addressed by the Assembly, the Council and the Committee for Development Policy.

International economic relations

Development and international economic cooperation

A number of UN bodies addressed development and international economic cooperation issues during 2004, including the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.

On 22 December, the Assembly took note of the report of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on its discussion of macro-economic policy questions [A/59/481] (decision 59/533).

Economic and Social Council consideration.

On 26 April, the Economic and Social Council held its seventh special high-level meeting with the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund) and the World Trade Organization [A/59/3/Rev.1]. It had before it an 8 April note [E/2004/50] by the Secretary-General on coherence, coordination and cooperation in the context of the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, adopted at the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development [YUN 2002, p. 953] (see p. 978).

At its high-level segment (28-30 June and 6 July) [A/59/3/Rev.1], the Council considered resource mobilization and enabling environment for poverty eradication in the context of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010 (see p. 855).

During its coordination segment (1, 2, 6, 7 and 23 July) [A/59/3/Rev.1], the Council considered a coordinated and integrated UN system approach to promoting rural development in developing countries, with due consideration to LDCs, for poverty eradication and sustainable development (see p. 839).

Globalization and interdependence

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/225 [YUN 2003, p. 832], the Secretary-General submitted a 31 August report on globalization and interdependence [A/59/312], which focused on ways to forge greater coherence in order to advance the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49]. The report attempted to identify the impact of globalization on various dimensions of the development goals and the areas that required greater policy coherence, and explored ways of forging policy coherence at the national, regional and global levels to address the challenges of integrating the three dimensions of development and managing the uneven impact of globalization. It was noted that the report should be read in conjunction with the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Millennium Declaration [A/59/282 & Corr.1] (see p. 1362), the international financial system and development [A/59/218] (see p. 973), the external debt crisis and development [A/59/219] (see p. 977), the state of implementation of the Monterrey Consensus [A/59/270] (see p. 979) and international trade and development and developments in the multilateral trading system [A/59/305] (see p. 959).

In the report's conclusions and recommendations, the Secretary-General observed that there were two main aspects for forging coherence in advancing the development goals in a globalizing world economy—promoting coherence among the economic, social and environmental dimensions of the goals and achieving harmony and consistency between those goals and the policies for integration into the global economy while managing the risks involved. At the national level, the challenges needed to be addressed by building stronger institutions, enhancing coordination among various parts of government, investing in economic and social infrastructure, including education and health, generating employment, providing opportunities for training and skill acquisition, addressing environmental sustainability concerns and promoting broader participation. At the regional level, the Secretary-General proposed broadening and deepening regional integration and fostering coherence through greater coordination of policies and through peer reviews. At the global level, there was a need to strengthen multilateral institutions and to enhance coordination and dialogue among them, promote consistency in aid, trade, external debt and development cooperation policies, launch policy coherence initiatives and provide policy space for developing countries, provide a forum for dialogue among policy makers dealing with the economic, social and environmental aspects of development, and facilitate broad-based participation in international decision-making.

The Assembly also had before it for consideration the reports of the World Commission on the Social Dimension of Globalization, established by the International Labour Organization (ILO), entitled A Fair Globalization: Creating Opportunities for All [A/59/98-E/2004/79], which it took note of by resolution 59/57 of 2 December (see p. 1091), and of the Commission on the Private Sector and Development, established by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), entitled Unleashing Entrepreneurship: Making Business Work for the Poor [Sales No. E.04.III.B.4].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/485/Add.1], adopted resolution 59/240 without vote [agenda item 87 (a)].

Role of the United Nations in promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 53/169 of 15 December 1998, 54/231 of 22 December 1999, 55/212 of 20 December 2000, 56/209 of 21 December 2001, 57/274 of 20 December 2002 and 58/225 of 23 December 2003 on the role of the United Nations in promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence,

Recalling also its resolution 58/291 of 6 May 2004,

Reaffirming the resolve expressed in the United Nations Millennium Declaration to ensure that globalization becomes a positive force for the people of the world,

Recognizing that globalization and interdependence have opened new opportunities for the growth of the world economy and development, that globalization offers new perspectives for the integration of developing countries into the world economy and that it can improve the overall performance of the economies of developing countries by opening up market opportunities for their exports, by promoting the transfer of information, skills and technology and by increasing the financial resources available for investment in physical and intangible assets, acknowledging that globalization has also brought new challenges for growth and sustainable development and that developing countries have been facing special difficulties in responding to them, recognizing that some countries have successfully adapted to the changes and benefited from globalization but that many others, especially the least developed countries, have remained marginalized in the globalizing world economy, and recognizing also that, as stated in the Millennium Declaration, the benefits and costs of globalization are very unevenly distributed,

Recognizing also that a universal, rule-based, open, non-discriminatory and equitable multilateral trading system, as well as meaningful trade liberalization, can substantially stimulate development worldwide, benefiting countries at all stages of development, reaffirming its commitment to trade liberalization and to ensuring that trade plays its full part in promoting economic growth, employment and development for all, welcoming in that regard the decisions taken by the World Trade Organization to place the needs and interests of developing countries at the heart of its work programme, and committing itself to their implementation,

Recognizing further that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated,

Noting that an overall commitment to multiculturalism helps to provide an environment preventing and combating discrimination and promoting solidarity and tolerance in our societies,

Recognizing that an enabling economic environment should, inter alia, foster a dynamic and well-functioning business sector and include efforts to further promote good corporate and public sector governance, to combat corruption in the public and private sectors and to promote the strengthening of and respect for the rule of law,

Noting that particular attention must be given, in the context of globalization, to the objective of protecting, promoting and enhancing the rights and welfare of women and girls, as stated in the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action,

Taking note of the report of the World Commission on the Social Dimension of Globalization entitled A Fair Globalization: Creating Opportunities for All as a contribution to the international dialogue towards a fully inclusive and equitable globalization,

Noting the report of the Commission on the Private Sector and Development entitled Unleashing Entrepreneurship: Making Business Work for the Poor,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reaffirms that the United Nations has a central role in promoting international cooperation for development and in promoting policy coherence on global development issues, including in the context of globalization and interdependence;

3. Reaffirms also that each country has primary responsibility for its own economic and social development and that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized;

4. Invites the international community, including all Member States, to devote special attention to improving resource flows for development, including public and private, foreign and domestic, to assist the developing countries, particularly the least developed countries, to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration;

5. Stresses that, in the common pursuit of growth, poverty eradication and sustainable development, a critical challenge is to ensure the necessary internal conditions for mobilizing domestic savings, both public and private, sustaining adequate levels of productive investment and increasing human capacity, while a crucial task is to enhance the efficacy, coherence and consistency of macroeconomic policies and an enabling domestic environment is vital for mobilizing domestic resources, increasing productivity, reducing capital flight, encouraging the private sector and attracting and making effective use of international investment and assistance, and in this regard stresses also that efforts to create such an environment should be supported by the international community;

6. Underlines the fact that, in addressing the linkages between globalization and sustainable development, particular focus should be placed on identifying and implementing mutually reinforcing policies and practices that promote sustained economic growth, social development and environmental protection and that this requires efforts at both the national and international levels;

7. Reiterates that success in meeting the objectives of development and poverty eradication depends, inter alia, on good governance, both within individual countries and at the international level, sound economic policies, solid democratic institutions that are responsive to the needs of the people and improved infrastructure, which are the basis for sustained growth, poverty eradication and employment creation, and that transparency in financial, monetary and trading systems and commitment to an open, equitable, rule-based, predictable and non-discriminatory multilateral trading and financial system are equally essential;

8. Stresses that improved coherence between national and international efforts and between the international monetary, financial and trading systems is fundamental for sound global economic governance; in this context reaffirms the commitment to improving the coherence between those systems in order to enhance their capacities to better respond to the needs of development and recognizes that the institutional dimension in terms of development is central; emphasizes that development should be at the centre of the international economic agenda and that coherence between national development strategies, on the one hand, and international obligations and commitments, on the other, contributes to the creation of an enabling economic environment for development; and stresses the need to broaden and strengthen the participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in international economic decision-making and norm-setting;

9. Stresses also that development strategies have to be formulated with a view to minimizing the negative social impact of globalization and maximizing its positive impact, while ensuring that all groups of the population, in particular the poorest, benefit from it, and that at the international level, efforts have to converge on the means to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration;

10. Underlines the fact that the increasing interdependence of national economies in a globalizing world and the emergence of rule-based regimes for international economic relations have meant that the space for national economic policy, i.e., the scope for domestic policies, especially in the areas of trade, investment and industrial development, is now often framed by international disciplines, commitments and global market considerations, that it is for each Government to evaluate the trade-off between the benefits of accepting international rules and commitments and the constraints posed by the loss of policy space and that it is particularly important for developing countries, bearing in mind development goals and objectives, that all countries take into account the need for appropriate balance between national policy space and international disciplines and commitments;

11. Reaffirms that education, employment creation and improvement of working conditions, which are some of the indispensable elements of poverty eradication, social integration, gender equality and overall development, should be at the centre of development strategies and international cooperation in support of national policies, and recognizes the need to promote employment that takes into account labour standards as defined in the relevant instruments of the International Labour Organization and other international instruments;

12. Urges all Governments to ensure women's equal rights with men and their full and equal access to education, training, employment, technology and economic and financial resources, including credit, in particular for rural women and women in the informal sector, and to facilitate, where appropriate, the transition of women from the informal to the formal sector;

13. Stresses the importance of migration as a phenomenon accompanying increased globalization, including its impact on economies, and underlines further the need for greater coordination and cooperation among countries as well as relevant regional and international organizations;

14. Recognizes the special needs of the least developed countries, the small island developing States and the landlocked developing countries within a new global framework for transit transport cooperation for landlocked and transit developing countries, and reaffirms continued support and assistance for their endeavours, particularly in their efforts to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, and the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010, the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, and the Almaty Programme of Action;

15. Emphasizes the importance of recognizing and addressing the specific concerns of countries with economies in transition so as to help them to benefit from globalization, with a view to their full integration into the world economy;

16. Invites all relevant agencies of the United Nations system, through, inter alia, the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination, within existing resources, to continue to review the impact of their work on the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration;

17. Welcomes the decision taken by the General Council of the World Trade Organization on 1 August 2004, which rededicates and recommits members to fulfilling the development dimensions of the Doha Development Agenda, which places the needs of developing and least developed countries at the heart of the Doha work programme;

18. Stresses the need to build an inclusive information society, which is intrinsically global in nature, and that therefore national efforts need to be supported by effective international and regional cooperation among Governments, the private sector, civil society and other stakeholders, including the international financial institutions, in order, inter alia, to assist in bridging the digital divide, promoting access to information and communication technologies, creating digital opportunities and harnessing the potential of information and communication technologies for development, and invites the World Summit on the Information Society to encourage all stakeholders in this regard;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session a report on globalization and interdependence;

20. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixtieth session the item entitled "Globalization and interdependence".

Also on 22 December, the Assembly, by decision 59/535, took note of the report of the Second Committee on its consideration of the agenda item on globalization and interdependence [A/59/485].

New global human order

On 18 August [A/59/283], Guyana, in response to General Assembly resolution 57/12 [YUN 2002, p. 817], submitted a memorandum on the role of the United Nations in promoting a new global human order.

By decision 59/543 of 23 December, the Assembly deferred consideration of the item on the role of the United Nations in promoting a new global human order and included it in the provisional agenda of its sixty-first (2006) session.

Industrial development

In response to General Assembly resolution 57/243 [YUN 2002, p. 819], the Secretary-General transmitted a July report of the Director-General of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) on industrial development cooperation [A/59/138]. The report focused on the critical role of productivity factors and industrial development for the achievement of the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51], contained in the Millennium Declaration adopted by Assembly resolution 55/2 [ibid., p. 49], and emphasized the fact that productivity enhancement was a main factor in promoting sustained growth, which was essential for poverty alleviation. It described UNIDO's response to the challenges posed by the MDGs and how the services offered by UNIDO covered a wide range of activities related to the Goals. The report provided information on UNIDO's cooperation with other parts of the UN system in working towards the MDGs and on its programmes for Africa and LDCs, which remained at the core of UNIDO's priorities. In addition, the report summarized some of the findings of the Industrial Development Report, 2004, which focused on sub-Saharan Africa, and described the work of UNIDO's field offices.

The report concluded, among other things, that the poorest countries, especially in sub-Saharan Africa, posed the greatest challenges in terms of required growth rates in order to achieve the MDGs. Industrial development had a critical role to play in helping to raise growth rates and was the motivating force for applying new technologies to production and the most important source and diffuser of technological innovation. Successful industrialization helped to create the employment that poor economies needed as they released labour from agriculture. Given the critical role of industrial development for achieving the MDGs, there was a stronger need for an intergovernmental body like UNIDO to provide international public goods that promoted productivity growth. UNIDO had made a comprehensive review of its services to ensure their alignment with the requirements of the MDGs, thus enhancing the impact of its activities and their contribution to the achievement of the Goals.

Annexed to the report was an information note on the Global Biotechnology Forum, held in Concepción, Chile, in March.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second

Committee [A/59/487/Add.3], adopted resolution 59/249 without vote [agenda item 89 (c)].

Industrial development cooperation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/151 of 18 December 1991, 49/108 of 19 December 1994, 51/170 of 16 December 1996, 53/177 of 15 December 1998, 55/187 of 20 December 2000 and 57/243 of 20 December 2002 on industrial development cooperation,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration adopted by Heads of State and Government on 8 September 2000,

Reaffirming the outcomes of the Fourth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization, held in Doha from 9 to 14 November 2001, the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Brussels from 14 to 20 May 2001, the International Conference on Financing for Development, held in Monterrey, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002, and the World Summit on Sustainable Development, held in Johannesburg, South Africa, from 26 August to 4 September 2002,

Recognizing the role of the business community, including the private sector, in enhancing the dynamic process of the development of the industrial sector, and underlining the importance of the benefits of foreign direct investment in that process,

Recognizing also the importance of the transfer of technology to the developing countries and countries with economies in transition as an effective means of international cooperation in the pursuit of poverty eradication and sustainable development,

Taking note of the corporate strategy of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, which aims at, inter alia, promoting productivity growth as a means of supporting the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, and the measures being taken to operationalize this strategy,

Taking note also of the signing of the cooperation agreement between the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the United Nations Development Programme on 23 September 2004 and that the agreement should lead to the improvement of the field presence of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and a better fulfilment of its primary objective, which is to promote and accelerate industrial development in the developing countries while retaining its identity, visibility and core competencies, and noting that it establishes, inter alia, a basis for both institutions to develop joint technical cooperation programmes in support of private-sector development in developing countries,

Taking note further of the signing of a memorandum of technical cooperation between the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the World Trade Organization, at Cancun, Mexico, on 10 September 2003, aiming at the joint development and implementation of trade-related technical cooperation programmes,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and welcomes the conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

2. Reaffirms that industrialization is an essential factor in the sustained economic growth, sustainable development and eradication of poverty of developing countries and countries with economies in transition as well as in the creation of productive employment, income generation and the facilitation of social integration, including the integration of women into the development process;

3. Stresses the critical role of productive capacity-building and industrial development for the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration;

4. Takes note of the comprehensive review of the activities of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization conducted in line with its corporate strategy, which has enabled it to become a more focused, effective and efficient organization, especially for developing countries and countries with economies in transition, capable of delivering concrete outcomes and providing valuable contributions to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration;

5. Emphasizes the necessity of favourable national and international measures for the industrialization of developing countries, and urges all Governments to adopt and to implement development policies and strategies to unleash the productivity growth potential through private-sector development, the diffusion of environmentally sound and emerging technologies, investment promotion, enhanced access to markets and the effective use of official development assistance to enable developing countries to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, and to make this process sustainable;

6. Underlines the importance of industrial development cooperation and of a positive investment and business climate at the international, regional, sub-regional and national levels in promoting the expansion, diversification and modernization of productive capacities in developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, landlocked developing countries and countries with economies in transition;

7. Takes note with appreciation of the organization of the Global Biotechnology Forum, held in Concepción, Chile, from 2 to 5 March 2004, which was organized jointly by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the Government of Chile, with support from the International Centre for Genetic Engineering and Biotechnology, and takes note of decision IDB.28/Dec.6 of the Industrial Development Board of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization;

8. Confirms the contribution of industry to social development, especially in the context of the linkages between industry and agriculture, and notes that, within the totality of these interlinkages, industry serves as a powerful source of employment generation, income creation and social integration required for the eradication of poverty;

9. Calls for the continuing use of official development assistance for industrial development in the developing countries and countries with economies in transition, calls upon donor countries and recipient countries to continue to cooperate in their efforts to achieve greater efficiency and effectiveness of the official development assistance resources devoted to industrial development cooperation and to support the efforts of developing countries and countries with economies in transition to promote industrial development cooperation among themselves, and underlines the importance of mobilizing funds for industrial development at the country level, including private funding and funds from relevant development finance institutions;

10. Also calls for, in this regard, the continuing use of all other resources, including private and public, foreign and domestic resources, for industrial development in the developing countries and countries with economies in transition;

11. Reiterates the importance of cooperation and coordination within the United Nations system in providing effective support for the sustainable industrial development of developing countries and countries with economies in transition, and calls upon the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to continue to carry out its central role in the field of industrial development according to its mandate;

12. Encourages the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to continue to enhance its effectiveness, relevance and development impact by, inter alia, strengthening its cooperation with other institutions of the United Nations system at all levels;

13. Calls upon the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to participate actively in coordination at the field level through the common country assessment and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework processes and sector-wide approaches;

14. Emphasizes the need to promote the development of microenterprises and small and medium-sized enterprises, including by means of training, education and skills enhancement, with a special focus on agro-industry as a provider of livelihoods for rural communities;

15. Stresses the need for the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to promote, within its mandate, the development of competitive industries in developing countries and countries with economies in transition, as well as in landlocked developing countries;

16. Reaffirms the need to support the survival and expansion of industrial manufacturing activity in developing countries, and in this regard calls upon the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to continue to improve its technical cooperation activities through, inter alia, the areas of technology diffusion and capacity-building for market access and development;

17. Welcomes the active role played by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization in the High-Level Committee on Programmes of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination, and encourages it to continue promoting enhanced coordination and coherence within the United Nations system with a view to reinforcing the quality and relevance of the United Nations in the field of economic development;

18. Requests the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to facilitate industrial development with emphasis on the priority areas outlined in its medium-term programme framework, 2004-2007;

19. Encourages the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to increase its contributions to achieve the objectives of the New Partnership for Africa's Development with a view to further strengthening the industrialization process in Africa;

20. Also encourages the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to develop further its global forum capacity according to its mandate, with the aim of enhancing, in the context of the globalization process, a common understanding of global and regional industrial sector issues and their impact on poverty eradication and sustainable development, and calls for further strengthening of the demand-driven integrated programme approach at the field level.

21. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Coercive economic measures

In response to General Assembly resolution 57/5 [YUN 2002, p. 832], the Secretary-General submitted a 16 August report [A/59/266] containing replies received from 10 Governments in response to his request for information on the elimination of unilateral extraterritorial coercive economic measures as a means of political and economic compulsion.

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on elimination of unilateral extraterritorial coercive economic measures as a means of political and economic compulsion would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session (decision 59/552).

Economic rights and duties of States

In an 18 June report [A/59/99-E/2004/83], the Secretary-General suggested to the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council that they consider whether the mandated quinquennial review of the implementation of the 1974 Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 3281(XXIX) [YUN 1974, p. 403], should be implicit in the overall framework of the integrated and coordinated implementation of the outcomes of, and follow-up to, major UN conferences and summits, in particular as part of the biennial high-level dialogue to monitor the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus of the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development [YUN 2002, p. 953].

By decision 2004/312 of 23 July, the Council deferred consideration of the Secretary-General's report to a resumed session. On 16 September, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report and referred it to the Assembly's fifty-ninth session for action (decision 2004/319).

Sustainable development

Implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation

In 2004, several UN bodies, including the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Sustainable Development, considered the implementation of the outcomes of the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821], particularly the Johannesburg Declaration and the Plan of Implementation, which outlined actions and targets for stepping up implementation of Agenda 21—a programme of action for sustainable development worldwide, adopted at the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 672]—and of the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by the Assembly at its nineteenth special session in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 792].

CEB consideration. In a 23 February report [E/2004/12], the Secretary-General described the work being carried out within the framework of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB) to enhance inter-agency cooperation and coordination in the follow-up to the World Summit on Sustainable Development, focusing on collaborative arrangements relating to freshwater, water and sanitation, energy, oceans and coastal areas, and changing unsustainable patterns of consumption and production.

While the arrangements were being tailored to the different requirements of each thematic area, the key cross-cutting objectives included strengthening inter-agency participation and involvement, and enhancing system-wide synergy in support of the follow-up to the Summit and the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development. CEB's High-Level Committee on Programmes (HLCP) would keep under review the overall contribution of the UN system to Summit follow-up and would seek to ensure mutual reinforcement between that effort and inter-agency processes in the follow-up to other global conferences and the Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49].

HLCP reviewed the Summit follow-up at its seventh (Beirut, Lebanon, 26-27 February) [CEB/2004/4] and eighth (Florence, Italy, 15-17 September) [CEB 2004/7] sessions and at an intersessional meeting (Frascati, Italy, 31 May-1 June) [CEB/2004/5].

Commission on Sustainable Development consideration. As the main body responsible for coordinating and monitoring implementation of the Summit outcomes, the Commission on Sustainable Development, at its twelfth session (New York, 14-30 April) [E/2004/29], discussed, in line with the multi-year programme adopted by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 2003/61 [YUN 2003, p. 842], the thematic cluster for the 2004-2005 implementation cycle—water; sanitation; and human settlements (see below).

The Commission had before it a February report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.17/2004/2] that provided an overview of progress towards sustainable development: a review of the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation. It was noted that, since the World Summit in 2002, progress had been made mostly in terms of process, including capacity-building in developing countries, development of action plans and refinement of the framework for global environmental governance. However, only halting progress had been made at the international level towards addressing challenges such as that of climate change, though regional, national and local initiatives were numerous.

There were very mixed outcomes in terms of social and economic progress. On the one hand, the world's two largest countries by population had made significant strides in poverty reduction and in improving various social indicators. On the other, many other developing countries had stagnated or even experienced periods of economic crisis. Outside Asia, few were on track to meet the MDGs concerning poverty reduction, and in parts of sub-Saharan Africa, hunger remained a very serious problem. That subregion was also heavily burdened by the HIV/AIDS epidemic, which had multiple, profound implications for its socio-economic development prospects. Child mortality had fallen in the 1990s, but only accelerated progress would achieve the relevant MDGs, and maternal mortality had seen little improvement. In education, some regions had made significant progress in expanding enrolments, particularly at the secondary level, and in moving towards gender parity.

Progress had been especially slow in the international economic arena, as evidenced by the stalling of international trade negotiations (see p. 958). Also, while foreign direct investment had been considered a relatively stable source of financing to developing countries at the height of the financial crises of the late 1990s, more recently some regions had experienced sharp declines in inflows, while overseas remittances had proved more stable—at least for countries with large populations resident abroad. Bright spots were the recent increases in real official development assistance flows from member countries of the Development Assistance Committee of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, and substantially increased funding for the fight against HIV/AIDS.

A further report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.17/2004/16] discussed partnerships for sustainable development—voluntary, multi-stakeholder initiatives that were specifically linked to the implementation of commitments outlined in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, Agenda 21 and/or the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21. It summarized information on the 266 partnerships for sustainable development registered with the secretariat of the Commission on Sustainable Development and provided more detailed information on partnerships focusing on water, sanitation and human settlements.

In a review of the thematic issues, the Commission Chairman summarized the opening statements and the oral reports by delegations on the outcomes of seven intersessional events held in preparation for the session.

Intersessional events. The Commission had before it reports on the following intersessional events that were held in preparation for its twelfth session: International Expert Meeting on a 10-Year Framework of Programmes for Sustainable Consumption and Production (Marrakech, Morocco, 16-19 June 2003) [E/CN.17/2004/11]; International Freshwater Forum (Dushanbe, Tajikistan, 29 August-1 September 2003) [A/58/362]; Workshop on Governance for World Summit on Sustainable Development Implementation in Countries with Economies in Transition (Istanbul, Turkey, 16-18 September 2003) [E/CN.17/2004/13]; international conference on the theme "Water for the poorest" (Stavanger, Norway, 4-5 November 2003) [E/CN.17/2004/14]; International Forum on Partnerships for Sustainable Development (Rome, Italy, 4-6 March 2004) [E/CN.17/2004/15]; United Nations Asia-Pacific Leadership Forum: Sustainable Development for Cities (Hong Kong, China, 25-26 February 2004) [E/CN.17/2004/19]; and the eighth special session of the United Nations Environment Programme Governing Council and the Global Ministerial Environment Forum (Jeju, Republic of Korea, 29-31 March 2004) [A/59/25] (see p. 1036).

Thematic issues. For its consideration of the thematic issues to be considered in 2004 and 2005 (water, sanitation and human settlements), as established in the multi-year programme of work adopted by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 2003/61 [YUN 2003, p. 842], the Commission on Sustainable Development had before it reports of the Secretary-General on progress in meeting the goals, targets and commitments of Agenda

21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation covering freshwater management [E/CN.17/2004/4], sanitation [E/CN.17/2004/5] and human settlements [E/CN.17/2004/6]. It also considered discussion papers reflecting the views of major groups (youth and children; business and industry; the scientific and technological community; indigenous people; farmers' organizations; non-governmental organizations (NGOs); workers and trade unions; local authorities; women) on the status of implementation of commitments made related to the thematic areas [E/CN.17/2004/10 & Add.1-9]. The Commission also considered reports on the outcomes of regional implementation meetings [E/CN.17/2004/7 & Add.1-5], organized by the five UN regional commissions, to contribute to advancing the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, focusing on the thematic cluster of issues: African Regional Implementation Meeting (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 8-12 December 2003); Regional Implementation Meeting for Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, Thailand, 27-28 October 2003); Regional Implementation Forum on Sustainable Development within the Economic Commission for Europe region (Geneva, 15-16 January 2004); three regional meetings in the Latin America and the Caribbean region (La Paz, Bolivia, 5-7 November 2003; Santiago, Chile, 17-18 November 2003; Panama City, 20-25 November 2003); and the Joint Committee on Environment and Development in the Arab World (Cairo, Egypt, 19-21 October 2003).

Implementation activities

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/218 [YUN 2003, p. 840], the Secretary-General submitted an August report on the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development [A/59/220], which provided an update on actions taken by Governments, organizations and bodies of the UN system and major groups to ensure the effective implementation of and follow-up to the commitments and time-bound goals and targets in the area of sustainable development, including through partnerships for sustainable development.

The report showed that there was encouraging progress at all levels in pursuing sustainable development. At the intergovernmental level, the Commission on Sustainable Development, at its twelfth session, carried out an in-depth review of water, sanitation and human settlements, and enhanced the understanding of priority concerns by identifying key constraints and obstacles in implementation. Within the UN system, efforts to ensure a coordinated follow-up to the World Summit were bearing concrete results. At the regional level, there was great support for a regional implementation track to complement global action and, at the national level, the sharper focus on implementation established at the Summit was inspiring Governments to take renewed action in various areas. Over 50 countries had submitted national information on such action to the Commission's twelfth session and the composite picture emerging from those updates pointed to a strong commitment to implementation.

The report concluded that the challenge ahead was to sustain the momentum by tackling the policy options and possible actions required to address constraints and obstacles in implementation. The international community needed to transform the mutual accountability and the spirit of global partnership between developed and developing countries into concrete results. To that end, the Secretary-General made a number of recommendations for action by the Assembly (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/483/Add.1], adopted resolution 59/227 without vote [agenda item 85 (a)].

Implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 55/199 of 20 December 2000, 56/226 of 24 December 2001, 57/253 of 20 December 2002 and 57/270 A and B of 20 December 2002 and 23 June 2003, respectively, as well as its resolution 58/218 of 23 December 2003,

Recalling also the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"),

Reaffirming the commitment to implement Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, including the time-bound goals and targets, and the other internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Recalling the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits, including the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development,

Reaffirming the continuing need to ensure a balance between economic development, social development and environmental protection as interdependent and mutually reinforcing pillars of sustainable development,

Reaffirming also that eradicating poverty, changing unsustainable patterns of production and consumption and protecting and managing the natural resource base of economic and social development are overarching objectives of and essential requirements for sustainable development,

Recognizing that good governance within each country and at the international level is essential for sustainable development,

Noting with satisfaction that the Commission on Sustainable Development at its twelfth session undertook an in-depth evaluation of progress in implementing Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, focusing on the thematic cluster of issues on water, sanitation and human settlements, and identified best practices, constraints and obstacles in the process of implementation,

Noting that the organization of work of the twelfth session of the Commission included plenary sessions, an interactive plenary dialogue and regional meetings, as well as a partnership fair, learning centres and side events,

Recalling the decision of the Commission at its eleventh session, endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 2003/61 of 25 July 2003, that the Commission, at its policy sessions, to be held in April/May of the second year of the cycle, would take policy decisions on practical measures and options to expedite implementation in the selected thematic cluster of issues, taking account of the discussions of the intergovernmental preparatory meeting, the reports of the Secretary-General and other relevant inputs,

Recalling also the decision of the Commission at its eleventh session that the discussions of the intergovernmental preparatory meeting would be based on the outcome of the review session and reports of the Secretary-General, as well as other relevant inputs, and that, on the basis of those discussions, the Chair would prepare a draft negotiating document for consideration at the policy session,

Looking forward to the upcoming cycles of the work programme of the Commission as adopted at its eleventh session and their contributions to the further implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the activities undertaken in the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development;

2. Reiterates that sustainable development is a key element of the overarching framework for United Nations activities, in particular for achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration and in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation;

3. Calls upon Governments, all relevant international and regional organizations, the Economic and Social Council, the United Nations funds and programmes, the regional commissions and specialized agencies, the international financial institutions, the Global Environment Facility and other intergovernmental organizations, in accordance with their respective mandates, as well as major groups, to take action to ensure the effective implementation of and follow-up to the commitments, programmes and time-bound targets adopted at the World Summit on Sustainable Development, and encourages them to report on concrete progress in that regard;

4. Calls for the implementation of the commitments, programmes and time-bound targets adopted at the Summit and, to that end, for the fulfilment of the provisions relating to the means of implementation, as contained in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation;

5. Encourages Governments to participate, at the appropriate level, with representatives from the relevant departments and agencies in water, sanitation and human settlements, as well as finance, in the intergovernmental preparatory meeting and the thirteenth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development;

6. Recalls the decision of the Commission at its eleventh session to invite the regional commissions, in collaboration with the secretariat of the Commission, to consider organizing regional implementation meetings in order to contribute to the work of the Commission, and in this regard urges the regional commissions to take into account the relevant thematic clusters contained in the programme of work of the Commission and to provide inputs as specified by the Commission at its eleventh session;

7. Recalls also the decision of the Commission at its eleventh session that activities during Commission meetings should provide for the balanced involvement of participants from all regions, as well as for gender balance;

8. Welcomes the contributions of the regional commissions to the work of the Commission at its twelfth session, including the regional meetings focusing on the thematic cluster of issues on water, sanitation and human settlements, and their inputs to the reports of the Secretary-General;

9. Invites donor countries to consider supporting the participation of experts from the developing countries in the areas of water, sanitation and human settlements in the thirteenth session of the Commission;

10. Takes note with interest of the establishment of the Advisory Board on Water and Sanitation by the Secretary-General, and looks forward to its contribution to the mobilization of efforts and resources towards the implementation of the commitments, goals and targets agreed upon in these areas;

11. Requests the Secretary-General, in reporting to the Commission at its thirteenth session on the state of the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, on the basis of appropriate inputs from all levels, to submit thematic reports on each of the three issues contained in the thematic cluster of issues on water, sanitation and human settlements, taking into account their interlinkages, while addressing the cross-cutting issues identified by the Commission at its eleventh session;

12. Requests the Commission, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 47/191 of 22 December

1992 and as specified by the Commission at its eleventh session, to examine the cross-cutting issues related to the thematic cluster of issues on water, sanitation and human settlements;

13. Stresses the importance of the success of the Commission at its thirteenth session in:

(a) Taking policy decisions on practical measures and options to expedite implementation in the thematic cluster of issues on water, sanitation and human settlements;

(b) Mobilizing further action by all implementation actors to overcome obstacles and constraints in the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation;

14. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on inter-agency cooperation, and requests him to continue his efforts to strengthen system-wide inter-agency cooperation and coordination for the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, and in this regard to report on such inter-agency cooperation and coordination activities and their terms of reference to the Economic and Social Council in 2005;

15. Recalls its resolution 58/291 of 6 May 2004 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 2004/44 of 22 July 2004 and 2004/63 of 23 July 2004, and in this regard requests the Commission, without prejudice to the decisions adopted at its eleventh session, to contribute through the Council to the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly in 2005, in accordance with the modalities to be set out by the Assembly at its fifty-ninth session;

16. Requests the secretariat of the Commission to make arrangements to facilitate the balanced representation of major groups from developed and developing countries in the sessions of the Commission;

17. Notes the convening of the second international expert meeting on a ten-year framework of programmes for sustainable consumption and production, to be held in Costa Rica in September 2005, and in this regard, while acknowledging their ongoing support, urges Member States to consider further support for those activities;

18. Encourages Governments and organizations at all levels, as well as major groups, including the scientific community and educators, to undertake results-oriented initiatives and activities to support the work of the Commission and to promote and facilitate the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, including through voluntary multi-stakeholder partnership initiatives;

19. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixtieth session the item entitled "Implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development", and requests the Secretary-General, at that session, to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Commission on Sustainable Development

The Commission on Sustainable Development held its twelfth session in New York on 9 May 2003 and from 14 to 30 April 2004 [E/2004/29]. On 30 April, the Commission held the first meeting of its thirteenth session, at which it elected the members of its Bureau [E/2005/29]. The high-level segment of the twelfth session focused on the thematic cluster for the implementation cycle of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, 2004-2005: water; sanitation; and human settlements (see p. 828). The Commission discussed preparations for the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (SIDS) (see p. 858). A partnerships fair was held during the session, during which six interactive discussion sessions took place.

In addition to the reports on the review of Agenda 21 and preparations for the International Meeting on SIDS, the Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General on progress in implementing its decisions related to improvements in national reporting and further work on indicators of sustainable development [E/CN.17/2004/17] and a note by the Secretary-General on the proposed strategic framework for 2006-2007 [E/CN.17/2004/18]. By a 13 April note [E/CN.17/2004/20], the Secretary-General drew the Commission's attention to his report on human rights and the environment as part of sustainable development, which was submitted to the Commission on Human Rights [E/CN.4/2004/87] (see p. 768).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 6 February, by decision 2004/212, the Economic and Social Council decided that, subject to their approval by the Council, NGOs and other major groups accredited to the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821] could participate in the first two-year implementation cycle of the Commission on Sustainable Development in accordance with the rules of procedure of the Council's functional commissions. The Council emphasized that the decision was taken on an exceptional basis and that it applied to those NGOs that had submitted their applications for consultative status with the Council or that expressed their wish to participate in the first two-year implementation cycle. The Council decided that the established UN rules of procedure on the accreditation and participation of NGOs and other major groups in the work of the Council and its subsidiary bodies would apply to NGOs and other major groups accredited to the World Summit that wished to participate in future sessions of the Commission beyond the first two-year cycle, stressing, in that context, that early submission of applications to the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations would enhance the possibility of their review in time for the Commission's future sessions. The Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations was invited to consider such applications, in accordance with the rules of procedure, as expeditiously as possible, and the Secretary-General was asked to make the Council's decision widely known in order to facilitate the involvement of NGOs from all regions and areas of the world.

On 13 February (decision 2004/216), the Council adopted the list of NGOs and other major groups accredited to the World Summit for participation in the Commission's twelfth and thirteenth sessions, in accordance with the provisions set forth in decision 2004/212.

Also on 13 February (decision 2004/214), the Council took note of the decision adopted by the Commission on Sustainable Development in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 842], by which it asked the Council to consider the term of the Commission's Bureau for future sessions, taking into account the Commission's two-year work cycle, and decided to give further consideration to the term of the Bureau for future sessions after the completion of the first two-year implementation cycle in 2005.

The Council, on 20 July, took note of the report of the Commission on its twelfth session [E/2004/29] and approved the provisional agenda for the thirteenth (2005) session (decision 2004/234).

Education for sustainable development

In accordance with resolution 58/219 [YUN 2003, p. 848], the General Assembly, in the Second Committee, considered the question of the United Nations Decade of Education for Sustainable Development (2005-2014), proclaimed by the Assembly in resolution 57/254 [YUN 2002, p. 826]. The Committee, on 18 October [A/C.2/59/SR.14], heard an oral report by the Assistant Director-General for Education of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)—the lead agency for promoting the Decade—regarding preparations. It also considered the report of the Secretary-General on implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction [A/59/228], adopted in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 859], particularly with reference to the need to focus on education and awareness (see also p. 945).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second

Committee [A/59/483/Add.7], adopted resolution 59/237 without vote [agenda item 85 (g)].

United Nations Decade of Education for Sustainable Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling chapter 36 of Agenda 21, on promoting education, public awareness and training, adopted at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 3 to 14 June 1992,

Recalling also the work programme on education, public awareness and training initiated by the Commission on Sustainable Development at its fourth session in 1996 and elaborated upon at its sixth session in 1998,

Recalling further the relevant provisions of the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation") on education to promote sustainable development, in particular its provision 124,

Recalling its resolutions 57/254 of 20 December 2002 and 58/219 of 23 December 2003,

Underlining in this regard the fact that the United Nations Decade of Education for Sustainable Development will begin on 1 January 2005,

Welcoming the fact that the Commission on Sustainable Development, at its eleventh session, identified education as one of the cross-cutting issues of its multi-year programme of work,

Reaffirming the internationally agreed development goal of achieving universal primary education, in particular that by 2015 children everywhere, boys and girls alike, will be able to complete a full course of primary schooling and that boys and girls will have equal access to all levels of education,

Taking note of the oral report presented on 18 October 2004 at the fifty-ninth session of the General Assembly by the Assistant Director-General for Education of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization regarding its preparations for the Decade,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, in particular the reference to the issue "Learning to live with risk", as regards the need to focus on education and awareness, linked with the Decade, to be considered at the World Conference on Disaster Reduction, to be held in Kobe, Japan, from 18 to 22 January 2005,

Emphasizing that education is an indispensable element for achieving sustainable development,

1. Reaffirms that education for sustainable development is critical for promoting sustainable development;

2. Requests the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, as the designated lead agency, to promote the United Nations Decade of Education for Sustainable Development, in coordination with other relevant United Nations organizations and programmes, while taking into account the special needs of developing countries;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to call upon the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to finalize the draft international implementation scheme for the Decade as soon as possible, preferably by the beginning of the Decade, in consultation with Governments, the United Nations and relevant international organizations, non-governmental organizations and other stakeholders, while clarifying its relationship with the existing educational processes, in particular the Dakar Framework for Action adopted at the World Education Forum and the United Nations Literacy Decade;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to call upon the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to submit the draft international implementation scheme to the governing bodies of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for their final consideration and adoption;

5. Encourages Governments to consider the inclusion, especially upon completion and adoption of the international implementation scheme, of measures to implement the Decade in their respective educational systems and strategies and, where appropriate, national development plans;

6. Invites Governments to promote public awareness of and wider participation in the Decade, inter alia, through cooperation with and initiatives engaging civil society and other relevant stakeholders, especially at the beginning of the Decade;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to invite the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to prepare a mid-term review of the implementation of the Decade, for submission to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session under the sub-item entitled "United Nations Decade of Education for Sustainable Development".

Tourism

On 13 September, the General Assembly decided to consider the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 56/212 [YUN 2001, p. 752] on the Global Code of Ethics for Tourism, which was adopted by the General Assembly of the World Tourism Organization in 1999, at its sixtieth (2005) session, instead of at its fifty-ninth session (decision 58/573).

Triennial review

By a March note [E/AC.51/2004/4], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the triennial review of the implementation of the recommendations made by CPC in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 748] on the in-depth evaluation of sustainable development.

OIOS concluded that progress had been made over the preceding three years towards promoting and strengthening the sustainable development agenda. The Division for Sustainable Development of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, together with the Department of Public Information, had increased access to information by both government representatives and the public. The quality of that information had also improved. Through its regional and global meetings, the Division had facilitated the exchange of national experiences and provided guidance for national sustainable development strategies. It had also provided technical assistance to countries. However, greater efforts were needed to address a number of issues, including continuing dissemination of the concept of sustainable development, efforts to streamline national reporting, further facilitation and support of national Governments' monitoring of their own sustainable development strategies and strengthening of the Division's technical cooperation programme. The Secretary-General concurred with those recommendations.

At its forty-fourth session (New York, 7 June–2 July) [A/59/16], CPC recommended approval of the triennial review's recommendations. It stressed the need for the Division for Sustainable Development to enhance efforts to ensure that a common understanding of sustainable development, incorporating its social, economic and environmental pillars, was achieved in accordance with General Assembly resolution 57/253 [YUN 2002, p. 825]. CPC emphasized that the Division should focus on promoting multisectoral approaches in the area of sustainable development and stressed that achieving sustainable development objectives depended on the effective collection and analysis of data on national progress towards goals in the social, economic and environmental areas.

Eradication of poverty

UN Decade for Eradication of Poverty

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/222 [YUN 2003, p. 849], the Secretary-General submitted a September report and October addendum [A/59/326 & Add.1] on the implementation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997–2006) and on preparations for the International Year of Microcredit, 2005 (see p. 837).

In view of the upcoming International Year of Microcredit, the report discussed the implementation of the Decade through the lens of microcredit and microfinance, highlighting the increasing recognition of the important role that they could play in poverty eradication strategies. It provided a brief overview of the contribution of microcredit and microfinance to poverty reduction and the achievement of the MDGs. The report also examined the challenges to the future growth, expansion and outreach of the microfinance sector, while discussing the policies and programmes needed to provide greater access by poor people to microcredit and microfinance and to promote sustainable microfinance institutions.

For its consideration of the implementation of the Decade, the Assembly also had before it the report of the Commission on the Private Sector and Development entitled Unleashing Entrepreneurship: Making Business Work for the Poor [Sales No. E.04.III.B.4].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/487/Add.1], adopted resolution 59/247 without vote [agenda item 89 (a)].

Implementation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/196 of 22 December 1992, 48/183 of 21 December 1993, 50/107 of 20 December 1995, 56/207 of 21 December 2001, 57/265 and 57/266 of 20 December 2002 and 58/222 of 23 December 2003,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted by Heads of State and Government on the occasion of the Millennium Summit, and their commitment to eradicate extreme poverty and to halve, by 2015, the proportion of the world's people whose income is less than one dollar a day and the proportion of people who suffer from hunger,

Underlining the priority and urgency given by the Heads of State and Government to the eradication of poverty, as expressed in the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development and in the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development,

Recalling the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields,

Bearing in mind the outcomes of the World Summit for Social Development and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly,

Expressing its deep concern that the number of people living in extreme poverty in many countries continues to increase, with women and children constituting the majority and the most affected groups, in particular in the least developed countries and in sub-Saharan Africa,

Welcoming the initiative launched by the Presidents of Brazil, Chile and France and the Prime Minister of Spain, with the support of the Secretary-General, to convene in New York on 20 September 2004 the Summit of World Leaders for Action against Hunger and Poverty,

Noting the report of the Commission on Private Sector and Development entitled Unleashing Entrepreneurship: Making Business Work for the Poor,

Reiterating the need to strengthen the leadership role of the United Nations in promoting development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reiterates that eradicating poverty is the greatest global challenge facing the world today and an indispensable requirement for sustainable development, in particular for developing countries;

3. Underlines the fact that each country has the primary responsibility for its own sustainable development and poverty eradication, that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized, and that concerted and concrete measures are required at all levels to enable developing countries to eradicate poverty and achieve sustainable development;

4. Acknowledges that sustained economic growth, supported by rising productivity and a favourable environment, including for private investment and entrepreneurship, is necessary to eradicate poverty, achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and realize a rise in living standards;

5. Reaffirms the importance of the contributions and assistance of developing countries to the other developing countries in the context of South-South cooperation in order to achieve development and eradicate poverty;

6. Recognizes that, for developing countries to reach the targets set in the context of national development strategies for the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, in particular the goal on the eradication of poverty, and for such poverty eradication strategies to be effective, it is imperative that developing countries be integrated into the world economy and share equitably in the benefits of globalization;

7. Reaffirms that, within the context of overall action for the eradication of poverty, special attention should be given to the multidimensional nature of poverty and the national and international conditions and policies that are conducive to its eradication, fostering, inter alia, the social and economic integration of people living in poverty and the promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, including the right to development;

Global response for the eradication of poverty

8. Stresses the importance of the follow-up to the outcome of the International Conference on Financing for Development, and calls for the full and effective implementation of the Monterrey Consensus;

9. Reaffirms that good governance at the international level is fundamental for achieving poverty eradication and sustainable development; that, in order to ensure a dynamic and enabling international economic environment, it is important to promote global economic governance through addressing the international finance, trade, technology and investment patterns that have an impact on the development prospects of developing countries; that, to that end, the international community should take all necessary and appropriate measures, including ensuring support for structural and macroeconomic reform, a comprehensive solution to the external debt problem and increasing market access for developing countries; that efforts to reform the international financial architecture need to be sustained, with greater transparency and the effective participation of developing countries in decision-making processes; and that a universal, rule-based, open, non-discriminatory and equitable multi-lateral trading system, as well as meaningful trade liberalization, can substantially stimulate development worldwide, benefiting countries at all stages of development;

10. Also reaffirms that good governance at the national level is essential for poverty eradication and sustainable development; that sound economic policies, solid democratic institutions responsive to the needs of the people and improved infrastructure are the basis for sustained economic growth, poverty eradication and employment creation; and that freedom, peace and security, domestic stability, respect for human rights, including the right to development, and the rule of law, gender equality, market-oriented policies and an overall commitment to just and democratic societies are also essential and mutually reinforcing;

11. Welcomes the outcomes of the eleventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held in São Paulo, Brazil, from 13 to 18 June 2004, and the adoption of The Spirit of São Paulo and the São Paulo Consensus;

12. Recognizes the major role that trade plays as an engine of growth and development and in eradicating poverty, and welcomes the adoption by the General Council of the World Trade Organization of its decision of 1 August 2004, in which the members rededicated and recommitted themselves to fulfilling the development dimensions of the Doha Development Agenda, which places the needs and interests of developing and least developed countries at the heart of the Doha work programme;

13. Also recognizes that fighting corruption at all levels is a priority and that corruption is a serious barrier to effective resource mobilization and allocation and diverts resources from activities that are vital for poverty eradication, the fight against hunger and economic and sustainable development;

14. Underlines the fact that, together with coherent and consistent domestic policies, international cooperation is essential in supplementing and supporting the efforts of developing countries to utilize their domestic resources for development and poverty eradication and in ensuring that they will be able to achieve the development goals as envisioned in the Millennium Declaration;

15. Welcomes the recent increase in official development assistance, and reiterates that a substantial increase in official development assistance and other resources will be required if developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, are to achieve the internationally agreed development goals and objectives, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, and that to build support for official development assistance, cooperation is necessary to further improve policies and development strategies to enhance aid effectiveness, both nationally and internationally;

16. Stresses the importance of enhanced and predictable financing to ensure the sustainability of the development and poverty eradication efforts of developing countries;

17. Urges developed countries that have not done so to make concrete efforts to reach the targets of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product as official development assistance to developing countries and 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of their gross national product to least developed countries, as reconfirmed at the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Brussels from 14 to 20 May 2001, encourages developing countries to build on progress achieved in ensuring that official development assistance is used effectively to help to achieve development goals and targets, acknowledges the efforts of all donors, commends those donors whose official development assistance contributions exceed, reach or are increasing towards the targets, and underlines the importance of undertaking to examine the means and time frames for achieving the targets and goals;

18. Recalls the decision to give further consideration to the subject of possible innovative and additional sources of financing for development from all sources, public and private, domestic and external, taking into account international efforts, contributions and discussions, within the overall inclusive framework of the follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development;

19. Recognizes that an enabling domestic environment is vital for mobilizing domestic resources, increasing productivity, reducing capital flight, encouraging the private sector and attracting and making effective use of international investment and assistance, and that efforts to create such an environment should be supported by the international community;

20. Also recognizes that creditors and debtors must share the responsibility for preventing and resolving unsustainable debt situations and that debt relief can play a key role in liberating resources that should be directed towards activities consistent with attaining poverty eradication, sustainable economic growth and sustainable development and achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, and in this regard urges countries to direct those resources freed through debt relief, in particular through debt cancellation and reduction, towards these objectives;

21. Calls upon the developed countries, by means of intensified and effective cooperation with developing countries, to promote capacity-building and facilitate access to and transfer of technologies and corresponding knowledge, in particular to developing countries, on favourable terms, including concessional and preferential terms, as mutually agreed, taking into account the need to protect intellectual property rights, as well as the special needs of developing countries;

22. Recognizes the crucial role that microfinance and microcredit could play in the eradication of poverty, the promotion of gender equality, the empowerment of vulnerable groups and the development of rural communities, invites Member States to consider undertaking policies to facilitate the expansion of microfinance and microcredit institutions in order to service the large unmet demand among poor people for financial services, including the identification and development of mechanisms to promote sustainable access to financial services, the removal of institutional and regulatory obstacles and the provision of incentives to microfinance institutions that meet national standards for delivering such financial services to the poor;

23. Also recognizes the potential of information and communication technologies to serve as a powerful tool for development and poverty eradication and to help the international community to maximize the benefits of globalization, and welcomes in this regard the holding of the first phase of the World Summit on the Information Society from 10 to 12 December 2003 in Geneva and the offer of Tunisia to host the second phase in Tunis from 16 to 18 November 2005;

Policies for the eradication of poverty

24. Reaffirms that the eradication of poverty should be addressed in an integrated way, as set out in the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), taking into account the importance of the need for the empowerment of women and sectoral strategies in such areas as education, the development of human resources, health, human settlements, rural, local and community development, productive employment, population, environment and natural resources, water and sanitation, agriculture, food security, energy and migration and the specific needs of disadvantaged and vulnerable groups in such a way as to increase opportunities and choices for people living in poverty and to enable them to build and to strengthen their assets so as to achieve development, security and stability, and in that regard encourages countries to develop their national poverty reduction policies in accordance with their national priorities, including, where appropriate, through poverty reduction strategy papers;

25. Underlines, in this context, the importance of further integration of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, in the national development strategies and plans, including the poverty reduction strategy papers where they exist, and calls upon the international community to continue to support developing countries in the implementation of these development strategies and plans;

26. Recognizes the importance of disseminating best practices for the reduction of poverty in its various dimensions, taking into account the need to adapt those best practices to suit the social, economic, cultural and historical conditions of each country;

27. Reaffirms that all Governments and the United Nations system should promote an active and visible policy of mainstreaming a gender perspective in all policies and programmes aimed at the eradication of poverty, at both the national and international levels, and encourages the use of gender analysis as a tool for the integration of a gender dimension into planning the implementation of policies, strategies and programmes for the eradication of poverty;

28. Also reaffirms that poverty eradication, changing unsustainable patterns of production and consumption and protecting and managing the natural resource base of economic and social development are overarching objectives of, and essential requirements for, sustainable development;

29. Emphasizes the critical role of both formal and non-formal education, in particular basic education and training, especially for girls, in empowering those living in poverty, reaffirms in that context the Dakar Framework for Action adopted at the World Education

Forum, and recognizes the importance of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization strategy for the eradication of poverty, especially extreme poverty, in supporting the Education For All programmes as a tool to achieve the Millennium Development Goal on universal primary education by 2015;

30. Recognizes the devastating effect of HIV/AIDS, malaria, tuberculosis and other infectious, contagious diseases on human development, economic growth, food security and poverty reduction efforts in all regions, in particular in sub-Saharan Africa, and urges Governments and the international community to give urgent priority to combating those diseases;

31. Also recognizes that HIV/AIDS continues to exact a devastating toll on individuals and families, in particular women and girls, and that in the hardest-hit countries it threatens decades of health, economic and social progress, reducing life expectancy, slowing economic growth, deepening poverty and contributing to chronic food shortages; that urgent action is needed to address gender inequality and economic dependency and poverty; and that addressing HIV/AIDS is therefore an important component of poverty eradication and a key requisite when working to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration;

32. Emphasizes the link between poverty eradication and improving access to safe drinking water, and stresses in that regard the objective to halve, by 2015, the proportion of people who are unable to reach or to afford safe drinking water and the proportion of people who do not have access to basic sanitation, as reaffirmed in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation;

33. Recognizes that the lack of adequate housing remains a pressing challenge in the fight to eradicate extreme poverty, particularly in the urban areas in developing countries, expresses its concern at the rapid growth in the number of slum-dwellers in the urban areas of developing countries, particularly in Africa, stresses that, unless urgent and effective measures and actions are taken at the national and international levels, the number of slum-dwellers, who constitute one third of the world's urban population, will continue to increase, and emphasizes the need for increased efforts with a view to significantly improving the lives of at least 100 million slum-dwellers by 2020;

34. Encourages Governments to support the Global Campaign for Secure Tenure and the Global Campaign for Urban Governance of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme as important tools for, inter alia, promoting administration of land and property rights, in accordance with national circumstances, and enhancing access to affordable credit by the urban poor;

35. Recognizes that the eradication of rural poverty and hunger is crucial for the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, and that rural development should be an integral part of national and international development policies;

Specific initiatives in the fight against poverty

36. Recognizes the important potential contribution of the World Solidarity Fund to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, in particular the objective to halve, by 2015, the proportion of people living on less than one dollar a day and the proportion of the people who suffer from hunger;

37. Takes note of efforts to define the strategy of the World Solidarity Fund and to mobilize resources to enable it to start its activities, and invites Member States, international organizations, the private sector, relevant institutions, foundations and individuals to contribute to the Fund;

38. Recalls that in the Millennium Declaration, the Heads of State and Government, inter alia, identified solidarity as one of the fundamental and universal values that should underlie relations between peoples in the twenty-first century, and in this regard decides to consider at the sixtieth session of the General Assembly the issue of proclaiming 20 December of each year International Human Solidarity Day;

39. Invites Governments and relevant stakeholders to utilize entrepreneurship, taking fully into account national interests, development strategies and priorities to contribute to poverty eradication;

Africa, least developed countries, landlocked developing countries and small island developing States

40. Stresses, as recognized in the Millennium Declaration, the importance of meeting the special needs of Africa, where poverty remains a major challenge and where most countries have not benefited fully from the opportunities of globalization, which has further exacerbated the continent's marginalization;

41. Reaffirms its support for the New Partnership for Africa's Development, encourages further efforts in the implementation of the commitments contained therein in the political, economic and social fields, and calls upon the Member States and the international community, and invites the United Nations system, to continue to support the implementation of the Partnership, the primary objective of which is to eradicate poverty and promote sustainable development on the basis of African ownership and leadership and enhanced partnerships with the international community, in accordance with the principles, objectives and priorities of the Partnership;

42. Takes note of the Plan of Action for Promotion of Employment and Poverty Alleviation in Africa adopted at the extraordinary summit of the African Union on employment and poverty alleviation, held in Ouagadougou from 3 to 9 September 2004, and notes the role of the International Labour Organization in assisting the African countries in implementing the Plan of Action adopted at the summit;

43. Calls upon the Governments of the least developed countries and their development partners to implement fully the commitments contained in the Brussels Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010, adopted at the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Brussels from 14 to 20 May 2001;

44. Stresses the vulnerabilities of the small island developing States, reiterates the importance of international support for the full implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, supports in this regard the holding of the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States in Mauritius from 10 to 14 January 2005, and looks forward to its outcomes;

45. Recognizes the special problems and needs of the landlocked developing countries within a new global framework for transit transport cooperation for landlocked and transit developing countries, calls, in this regard, for the full and effective implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries, and stresses the need for the implementation of the São Paulo Consensus, adopted in São Paulo, Brazil, on 18 June 2004 at the eleventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in particular paragraphs 66 and 84 thereof, by the relevant international organizations and donors in a multi-stakeholder approach;

The United Nations and the fight against poverty

46. Calls for the full implementation of General Assembly resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003 on the integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields, which provides a comprehensive basis for the follow-up to the outcomes of those conferences and summits and contributes to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, in particular the eradication of poverty, and stresses the importance of the 2005 high-level event to be held at the commencement of the sixtieth session of the General Assembly, as decided by the Assembly in its resolution 58/291 of 6 May 2004;

47. Reaffirms the role of United Nations funds and programmes, in particular the United Nations Development Programme and its associated funds, in assisting the national efforts of developing countries, inter alia, in the eradication of poverty, and the need for their funding in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

48. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

49. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixtieth session the item entitled "Implementation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006)".

Also on 22 December, the Assembly took note of the report of the Second Committee [A/59/487] on its discussion of the eradication of poverty and other development issues (decision 59/538).

International Year of Microcredit, 2005

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/221 [YUN 2003, p. 854], the Secretary-General submitted a September report and October addendum [A/59/326 & Add.1], in which he described the preparations for the International Year of Microcredit, 2005, which was declared by the Assembly in resolution 53/197 [YUN 1998, p. 785]. The report provided information on the preparations at the national, regional and international levels for the observance of the Year, taking into account information received from 25 Member States, 11 organizations of the UN system and two NGOs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/487/Add.1], adopted resolution 59/246 without vote [agenda item 89 (a)].

Role of microcredit and microfinance in the eradication of poverty

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/193 and 52/194 of 18 December 1997, 53/197 of 15 December 1998 and 58/221 of 23 December 2003,

Recognizing that microcredit and microfinance programmes have succeeded in generating productive self-employment and proved to be an effective tool in assisting people to overcome poverty and reducing their vulnerability to crisis, and have led to their growing participation, in particular the participation of women, in the mainstream economic and political processes of society,

Welcoming the efforts made in the field of property rights, and noting that an enabling environment at all levels, including transparent regulatory systems and competitive markets, foster the mobilization of resources and access to finance for people living in poverty,

Bearing in mind the importance of microfinance instruments, such as credit, savings and other financial products and services, in providing access to capital for people living in poverty,

Recognizing the need to create inclusive financial sectors in order to facilitate access for people living in poverty, especially women, to microcredit and microfinance so as to enable them to undertake microenterprises to generate employment and contribute to achieving self-empowerment, and to enhance their ability to increase income, build assets and mitigate vulnerability in times of hardship,

Noting that the availability of microcredit and microfinance to people living in poverty, especially women, can support entrepreneurship and spur the development of microenterprises, providing goods, services and income to the poor, thus raising incomes and fostering equitable growth,

Recalling its resolution 53/197, by which it proclaimed 2005 the International Year of Microcredit and requested that the observance of the Year be a special occasion for giving impetus to microcredit and microfinance programmes in all countries, particularly the developing countries,

Encouraging the holding and supporting of regional, subregional and national events on the observance of the International Year of Microcredit, 2005,

Noting the ongoing efforts by the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat and the United Nations Capital Development Fund in jointly coordinating the activities of the United Nations system regarding the preparation and observance of the Year, and noting also the ongoing efforts of public and private development agencies, including the Consultative Group to Assist the Poor, on microcredit and microfinance,

Noting also that the international community is observing the period 1997-2006 as the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006) and preparations for the International Year of Microcredit, 2005;

2. Welcomes the launching of the International Year of Microcredit, 2005;

3. Emphasizes that the observance of 2005 as the International Year of Microcredit will provide a significant opportunity to raise awareness of the importance of microcredit and microfinance in the eradication of poverty, to share good practices and to further enhance financial sectors that support sustainable pro-poor financial services in all countries;

4. Recognizes the importance of scaling up microcredit and other microfinance instruments, using the Year as a platform to find ways of enhancing development impact and sustainability through the increased dissemination of data and sharing of best practices and lessons learned among microcredit and microfinance institutions, and welcomes the ongoing efforts of United Nations regional organizations, funds, programmes and specialized agencies responsible for operational activities related to development in promoting microcredit and microfinance institutions, inter alia, supporting the development of entrepreneurship;

5. Reiterates its invitation to Member States, relevant organizations of the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations, the private sector and civil society to collaborate, including through making voluntary contributions, in observing the Year, to raise public awareness and knowledge about microcredit and microfinance;

6. Recognizes that access to microcredit and microfinance can contribute to the achievement of the goals and targets of major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in particular the goals relating to poverty eradication, gender equality and the empowerment of women;

7. Invites Member States to consider undertaking policies to facilitate the expansion of microcredit and microfinance institutions in order to service the large unmet demand among poor people for financial services, including the identification and development of mechanisms to promote sustainable access to financial services, the removal of institutional and regulatory obstacles and the provision of incentives to microfinance institutions that meet national standards for delivering such financial services to the poor;

8. Also invites Member States to consider developing and promoting regulatory guidance and standards to ensure effectiveness in management, financial reporting, internal auditing, domestic supervision and accountability among microfinance institutions;

9. Decides to devote one plenary meeting at its sixty-first session to the consideration of the outcome of and follow-up to the International Year of Microcredit, with a view to broadening and deepening the discussion about microcredit and microfinance;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the observance of the International Year of Microcredit, 2005, and on the implementation of the present resolution, and to submit it to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session under the item entitled "Implementation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006)".

Rural development

In accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 2003/290 [YUN 2003, p. 853], the Council, at the coordination segment of its 2004 substantive session, considered the theme of a coordinated and integrated UN system approach to promote rural development in developing countries, with due consideration to LDCs, for poverty eradication and sustainable development [A/59/3/Rev.1]. It had before it a report of the Secretary-General [E/2004/58], which analysed the role of the UN system in promoting a coordinated and integrated approach to rural development and made proposals on how to improve policy coherence at the international, regional and country levels.

The report noted that the potential contribution of rural development in the realization of the internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs, was being increasingly acknowledged. However, there were certain issues that needed to be taken into account while assimilating the goal of integrated rural development in the broader framework of the MDGs: how to ensure complementarity between the strategies to achieve the MDGs and rural development-related activities, and how to promote efficient allocation of resources and optimal utilization of capacities of various organizations and actors. In addressing those issues, the UN system, Governments and other relevant actors were trying to develop an integrated approach for their activities, which contained three important elements—the integration of various dimensions of rural development and the development goals, based on a coherent strategy, a clear division of labour and mutually reinforcing programmes; a coherent framework for capacity-building activities and projects in rural development; and regional co-operation.

On 1 July, the Council held a panel discussion entitled "Working together to promote integrated rural development in developing countries, particularly the least developed countries".

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting 50], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2004/48 [draft: E/2004/L.18] without vote [agenda item 4 (b)].

Coordinated and integrated United Nations system approach to promoting rural development in developing countries, with due consideration to least developed countries, for poverty eradication and sustainable development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its decision 2003/287 of 24 July 2003, in which it decided to consider, during its coordination segment in 2004, the theme "Coordinated and integrated United Nations system approach to promoting rural development in developing countries, with due consideration to least developed countries, for poverty eradication and sustainable development",

Reaffirming the ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council adopted on 2 July 2003,

Recalling the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences, summits and relevant special sessions of the General Assembly,

Recalling also the Declaration of the World Food Summit: five years later, adopted in Rome on 13 June 2002,

Reaffirming the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010,

Reiterating that the eradication of rural poverty and hunger is crucial for the achievement of internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, and that rural development should be pursued through an integrated approach, which encompasses the economic, social and environmental dimensions, takes into account the gender perspective and consists of mutually reinforcing policies and programmes, and which should be balanced, targeted, situation specific, locally owned, include local synergies and initiatives and be responsive to the needs of rural populations,

Recognizing that rural development is the responsibility of each country and is predicated on an enabling national environment, and reaffirming that an enabling international economic environment is important for the support of effective national development efforts, including rural development efforts, that it should combine effective and coherent policies, good governance and accountable institutions at the national and international levels as well as the promotion of gender equality and the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development, and that robust, broad-based and equitable economic growth as well as human resources development are needed to fight rural poverty,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Notes the efforts made by United Nations organizations to assist developing countries, upon their request, in integrating rural development into their national development strategies, urges them to promote further the integration of this approach into their operational and other activities, to enhance further the efficiency of resources utilization and to continue to work, within their mandates, to this end, and, in this regard, emphasizes the need for relevant United Nations agencies to be provided with appropriate resources to promote integrated rural development;

3. Calls for enhanced coordination and cooperation among the agencies of the United Nations system, including among the Rome-based agencies, especially at the country level, on the basis of the common country assessment and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, in support of national development strategies as well as in enhancing their cooperation with the World Bank and the regional development banks;

4. Acknowledges the recent increase in official development assistance allocations to rural development and agriculture, urges developed countries that have not done so to make concrete efforts to reach the target of providing 0.7 per cent of their gross national product as official development assistance to developing countries and 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of their gross national product to least developed countries, as reconfirmed at the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Brussels from 14 to 20 May 2001, encourages developing countries to build on progress achieved in ensuring that official development assistance is used effectively to help achieve development goals and targets, acknowledges the efforts of all donors, commends those donors whose official development assistance contributions exceed, reach or are increasing towards the targets, and underlines the importance of undertaking an examination of the means and time frames for achieving the targets and goals;

5. Invites the international and regional financial institutions to continue to enhance their support for national efforts for poverty eradication and rural development in developing countries, including the mobilization of public and private investment as well as improved access to credit for the development of rural infrastructure in order to enhance productivity and increase access to markets and information, calls for actions to facilitate the establishment and strengthening of rural financial institutions, including microcredit/microfinancing, savings and insurance facilities and co-operative ventures for rural development, as well as the development of microenterprises and small and medium-sized enterprises, and in this regard underlines the importance of the International Year of Microcredit, 2005, as a platform to promote these goals;

6. Recognizes that, despite serious efforts to achieve progress, important issues in the implementation of the Ministerial Declaration adopted at the Fourth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization, held in Doha from 9 to 14 November 2001, are still outstanding, in particular regarding the commitments for, inter alia, comprehensive negotiations aimed at substantial improvements in market access; that in the agricultural sector, without prejudging the outcome of negotiations, reductions of, with a view to phasing out, all forms of export subsidies, substantial reduction in trade-distorting domestic support and enhanced market access are needed; that special and differential treatment for developing countries shall be an integral part of all elements of the negotiations, taking development needs fully into account, in a manner consistent with the Doha mandate, including food security and rural development; and that non-trade concerns of countries will also be taken into account, as provided for in the Agreement on Agriculture, in accordance with paragraph 13 of the Doha Ministerial Declaration, and urges the United Nations system, including the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to provide further trade-related technical assistance and capacity-building for developing countries, in particular the least developed countries;

7. Also recognizes the vulnerability of the commodity-dependent developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, to market fluctuations, and calls upon the United Nations system to support their efforts towards diversification of exports and value-added through processing as a means of increasing export earnings, including through support to enable developing countries to put in place measures that are appropriate and necessary for meeting standards consistent with the provisions of the World Trade Organization and improving terms of trade, and to address the impact of the instability of commodity prices;

8. Stresses the need to enhance and expand access by developing countries to appropriate technologies that are pro-poor and raise productivity, underlines the need for measures to increase investment in agricultural research, including modern technologies, as well as in natural resources management and capacity-building, and encourages the United Nations system to strengthen support for the Consultative Group on International Agricultural Research;

9. Reaffirms that sustainable agriculture and rural development are essential to the implementation of an integrated approach to food security and safety in an environmentally sustainable way, recognizes the important role of the rural population in sustainably managing natural resources, and calls for enhanced coordination and cooperation among the agencies of the United Nations system in supporting national efforts to promote environmentally sound and sustainable natural resources management;

10. Also reaffirms the need to improve access to reliable, affordable, economically viable, socially acceptable and environmentally sound energy services and resources, taking into account national specificities and circumstances, through various means, such as enhanced rural electrification and decentralized energy systems, increased use of renewables, cleaner liquid and gaseous fuels and enhanced energy efficiency, as well as by intensifying regional and international cooperation and enhancing coordination and cooperation among agencies of the United Nations system in support of national efforts, including through capacity-building, financial and technological assistance and innovative financing mechanisms, inter alia at the micro- and meso-levels, recognizing the specific factors for providing access to the poor;

11. Expresses its serious concern regarding the severe food shortages and hunger facing millions of people, especially in Africa, recognizes that food security is a global concern, and stresses the importance of improving famine prevention mechanisms and long-term food security, as well as of responding to emergency food aid needs;

12. Invites the United Nations system to support further the implementation of the United Nations

Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa and to address the causes of desertification and land degradation in order to maintain and restore land, as well as addressing poverty resulting from land degradation;

13. Realizes that bridging the digital divide will require strong commitment by all stakeholders at the national and international levels, and encourages all efforts by agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system to assist developing countries in overcoming the digital divide and promoting the use of information and communication technologies to foster economic and social development, particularly in rural areas;

14. Recognizes the devastating impact of HIV/AIDS and other infectious diseases on societies, and calls for measures by United Nations bodies, especially the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS co-sponsoring agencies, and development partners to further mainstream HIV/AIDS concerns into rural development planning, including poverty eradication and food security strategies and multisectoral development activities covering economic and social aspects, including the gender perspective;

15. Invites the relevant organizations of the United Nations system dealing with issues of development to strengthen their cooperation in addressing and supporting the empowerment and the specific needs of rural women in their programmes and strategies;

16. Stresses that the United Nations system should improve its coordination in support of national efforts to increase the school enrolment rate, especially of the girl child, and to provide quality education for the rural poor, inter alia, through mobilizing the financial and technical resources necessary, including the full utilization of modern methodologies and technologies as well as the establishment of distance learning education systems;

17. Recognizes the importance of employment for pro-poor growth in rural areas, and encourages the United Nations system and development partners to assist countries, upon their request, in mainstreaming employment into investment policy and poverty reduction strategies, including those focused on rural area development;

18. Invites the United Nations system to further assist developing countries in their efforts to enhance access by the rural poor to productive assets, especially land and water, in order to promote social and economic development;

19. Calls upon the United Nations system to further support capacity-building programmes for, and exchanges of experience on, rural development through enhanced coordination and information exchange mechanisms such as the United Nations System Network on Rural Development and Food Security;

20. Stresses that the United Nations system should further support regional and subregional initiatives, where appropriate, in order to promote an integrated approach to rural development, and requests the United Nations regional commissions to further enhance regional and interregional cooperation, in particular for sharing best practices;

21. Calls upon the United Nations system and regional organizations to undertake measures to further promote South-South cooperation, including triangular cooperation, in the area of rural development, and in this regard underlines the need for increased cooperation among bodies of the United Nations system to promote South-South cooperation;

22. Notes the work of the United Nations system on partnerships, welcomes the establishment of a multitude of partnerships for sustainable rural development at the field level entered into by various United Nations agencies, Member States, the private sector, non-governmental organizations and civil society in general, and encourages the United Nations system to continue to promote partnerships at the national and international levels in accordance with relevant General Assembly resolutions.

United Nations Alliance

On 23 July [meeting 50], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2004/49 [draft: E/2004/L.32] without vote [agenda item 4 (b)].

United Nations Public-Private Alliance for Rural Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council adopted on 2 July 2003, which underlined the importance of alliances and partnerships among actors in different sectors for the promotion of integrated rural development,

Underlining the importance of the contribution of the private sector, non-governmental organizations and civil society in general to the implementation of the outcomes of United Nations conferences in the economic, social and related fields,

Recalling the central role and responsibility of Governments in national and international policy-making,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 58/129 of 19 December 2003, entitled "Towards global partnerships", in which the Assembly, inter alia, identified the principles and objectives of such partnerships and welcomed the establishment of a multitude of partnerships at the field level, entered into by various United Nations organizations, Member States and other stakeholders, such as the United Nations Public-Private Alliance for Rural Development (the United Nations Alliance),

1. Welcomes the initiative of the Government of Madagascar to serve as the pilot country for the United Nations Public-Private Alliance for Rural Development (the United Nations Alliance);

2. Invites all Member States, the funds, programmes and agencies of the United Nations system, the Bretton Woods institutions, civil society, the private sector and other relevant stakeholders to support the programmes and activities of the United Nations Alliance in its mission to promote sustainable rural development, consistent with General Assembly resolution 58/129 and other relevant resolutions and decisions of the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council;

3. Stresses that activities of the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system at the country level in support of the United Nations Alliance should take into account the implementation of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2006 on the work of the United Nations Alliance.

Science and technology for development

Commission on Science and Technology for Development

The Commission on Science and Technology for Development held its seventh session in Geneva from 24 to 28 May [E/2004/31]. It considered as its main substantive theme “Promoting the application of science and technology to meet the development goals contained in the Millennium Declaration” (see below). It also discussed an April note by the Secretariat on implementation of and progress made on decisions taken at the Commission’s sixth (2003) session [E/CN.16/2004/3], and heard national country reports on information and communication technology (ICT) policies from a number of countries.

The Commission recommended a draft resolution and two draft decisions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. It brought to the Council’s attention a decision by which it took note of the Secretary-General’s report on the main substantive theme [E/2004/31 (dec. 7/101)] (see below).

By decision 2004/314 of 23 July, the Economic and Social Council took note, during its consideration at its high-level segment of the theme “Resources mobilization and enabling environment for poverty eradication in the context of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010” (see p. 855), of the Commission’s contribution, which was addressed under the substantive theme at its seventh session. The Council encouraged all stakeholders to consider the Commission’s recommendations thereon.

On the same date, by decision 2004/315, the Council took note of the Commission’s report on its seventh session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the eighth (2005) session.

Promoting the application of science and technology to meet the development goals

The Commission had before it an April report by the Secretary-General on promoting the application of science and technology to meet the development goals contained in the Millennium Declaration [E/CN.16/2004/2] that sought to identify approaches for the effective promotion and use of science and technology to meet the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51].

The report examined strategies for promoting the application of science and technology to meeting the MDGs, including improving the policy environment for the application of science and technology to development; strengthening basic and applied research in developing countries and promoting international scientific networking; and promoting universal Internet access and building strategic partnerships for development and competitiveness. It found that most developing countries were unlikely to meet the MDGs without making science and technology top priorities in their development agenda. Achieving the MDGs, therefore, would require a reorientation of national science, technology and innovation policies to ensure that they served the needs of development effectively. In particular, a solid national science and technology base would have to be built to enable the generation, use and diffusion of scientific and technological knowledge. Academia/government/industry partnerships were essential in building scientific and technological capabilities and fostering market-oriented policies and developments. Also essential was access to new and emerging technologies, which required technology transfer, technical cooperation and building a scientific and technological capacity to participate in the development, mastery and adaptation of those technologies to local conditions.

The report concluded by directing a number of recommendations to Governments, the Commission and the UN system.

By decision 2004/313 of 23 July, the Economic and Social Council deferred consideration of the draft resolution on promoting the application of science and technology to meeting the development goals contained in the Millennium Declaration, contained in the report of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, to a resumed session.

On 5 November [meeting 53], the Council, on the recommendation of the Commission [E/2004/31, orally amended], adopted resolution 2004/68 without vote [agenda item 13 (b)].

Science and technology for development

The Economic and Social Council,

I

Promoting the application of science and technology to meet the development goals contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration Welcoming the work of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development on its theme “Promoting the application of science and technology to meet the development goals contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration” and taking note of the findings, which include, inter alia, the following:

1. Most developing countries are unlikely to meet the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, without a clear political commitment to making science and technology top priorities in their development agenda;
2. Many developing countries lack solid science and technology bases. Science and technology institutions and national innovation systems in many developing countries are fragmented and uncoordinated and links between them and the private business sector are poorly developed. Review and analysis of national science, technology and innovation policies and institutional and legal frameworks, including advisory bodies and mechanisms, are urgently needed to ensure that they serve the needs of development effectively;
3. The lack of a solid science and technology base not only results from poor human and capital resources, but also stems from a lack of appreciation of the critical role of science and technology in development, as well as from an incoherent methodology for establishing such a base and the absence of a coherent policy addressing national needs and human and capital resources;
4. For developing countries to meet the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, they need access to new and emerging technologies, which requires technology transfer, technical cooperation and the building and nurturing of a scientific and technological capacity to participate in the development and adaptation of these technologies to local conditions;
5. Promoting the development and application of new and emerging technologies, most notably biotechnology and information and communication technologies as well as biomedical and environmental technologies, will both reduce the cost and increase the likelihood of attaining the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration;
6. Academia/government/industry partnerships and networking are essential in building scientific and technological capabilities and fostering policies and developments. Science and technology parks, business incubators and support organizations for innovation are effective mechanisms for promoting academia/ government/industry partnerships and entrepreneurship;
7. The current North-South gap in respect of the generation and application of new and emerging technologies and their contribution to economic and social development constitutes a “technological divide” which must be bridged if developing countries are to participate effectively in a global inclusive knowledge society;
8. States need to invest in publicly funded universities and research institutions to improve infrastructure, quality of education and human resources. To enhance the impact of investment, Governments should consider linking funding of universities to performance in teaching and research;

9. Despite the efforts of various development agencies, poverty still persists in many parts of the world. There is a need to coordinate technical cooperation programmes and to monitor progress so as to ensure policy coherence and socio-economic benefits for the poor;

10. In recent years, there has been a rapid rise in the number of open and collaborative projects to create public goods. These projects are extremely important, as they affect the ability of countries to achieve the development goals contained in the Millennium Declaration;

Decides to make the following recommendations for consideration by national Governments and the Commission on Science and Technology for Development:

(a) Governments are encouraged to undertake the following actions:

- (i) Demonstrate their political commitment by increasing research and development expenditure in science and technology to at least 1 per cent of gross domestic product and encourage research and development, engineering and design, inter alia, in areas involving the assimilation of existing knowledge that address the needs of national development;
- (ii) Establish and/or enhance national advisory bodies and their linkages to provide systematic and institutionalized science and technology advice to various branches of government responsible for coordinating and implementing development strategies;
- (iii) Implement fiscal and other incentives to encourage research and development in the private sector and joint projects between private companies and public research and development institutes;
- (iv) Strengthen universities and research institutions and develop centres of excellence in the fields of science and technology and encourage them to contribute to national development;
- (v) Increase investment in scientific and technical education, particularly at tertiary and vocational levels, and adopt concrete measures to increase the enrolment of girls and women in scientific and engineering disciplines and ensure their representation in science and technology, particularly in decision-making positions;
- (vi) Adopt special measures to attract and retain young and talented scientists and technologists, and establish close ties with expatriate scientists and engineers and encourage their participation in national development;
- (vii) Strengthen the diffusion and commercialization of technology by encouraging venture capital and other forms of financial intermediaries supporting innovation from both public and private sources and establishing facilitatory institutions such as science parks and technology incubators;
- (viii) Explore the potential of openly available public development projects for the enhancement of science and technology infrastructure;
- (ix) Raise public awareness on the importance of science and technology in development and, in particular, the benefits, opportunities and risks of new and emerging technologies;

(b) The Commission on Science and Technology for Development, within existing resources and within the framework of its role in coordinating science and technology activities in the United Nations system, is requested to:

- (i) Forge links between itself and national science and technology bodies in each country, in order to promote networking, share national experiences, facilitate information flows and increase the impact of the work of the Commission. In this regard, the Commission is invited to establish an international network of science and technology institutions, including national science and technology commissions and other stakeholders in development such as the international research centres of the Trieste System. The new association would meet annually in conjunction with the regular sessions of the Commission;
- (ii) Establish, in collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme and other institutions dealing with the use of science, technology and innovation in achieving the Millennium Development Goals, mechanisms for the ongoing review, evaluation and analysis of national strategies for achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, to ensure that science and technology play a central role. To this end, the Commission is invited to consider the feasibility of developing a reliable tool to monitor implementation and benchmark progress;
- (iii) Explore the possibility of establishing new initiatives involving important development partners, such as the New Partnership for Africa's Development, with a view to enhancing closer South-South and North-South collaboration in the area of science and technology;
- (iv) Explore the feasibility of preparing and producing an annual world technology for development report that would include technology achievement indicators and benchmarks and a review of emerging technologies and related policies, as well as best practices and case studies on the application of science and technology towards the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration;
- (v) Provide a forum within the Science and Technology for Development Network within which success stories and lessons learned could be shared in respect of national efforts to apply science and technology to serve the needs of development;
- (vi) Interact closely with the United Nations Information and Communication Technologies Task Force, the International Telecommunication Union and regional commissions in order to assist developing countries in the implementation of national action plans to support the fulfilment of the goals indicated in the Declaration of Principles and the Plan of Action adopted at the first phase of the World Summit on the Information Society, held in Geneva from 10 to 12 December 2003, and contribute to the preparation of the second phase of the Summit, to be held in Tunis from 16 to 18 November 2005.

II

New substantive theme and other activities

Endorses the following decision taken by the Commission on Science and Technology for Development at its seventh session:

The Commission on Science and Technology for Development, recognizing that the implementation of the development goals contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration entails significant re-orientation in the use of science, technology and innovation policies to ensure that they serve the needs of development, especially for poverty reduction, recognizing also that national advisory bodies are essential in providing systematic and institutionalized science and technology advice to the executive and other branches of government responsible for coordinating and implementing development strategies, and taking note of the Declaration of Principles and the Plan of Action adopted at the first phase of the World Summit on the Information Society, held in Geneva from 10 to 12 December 2003, decides to select as its substantive theme for the intersessional period 2004-2005 "Science and technology promotion, advice and application for the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration", and considers that specific emphasis should be placed on at least three key areas: the mutual interaction and dependency of science and technology education and research and development; infrastructure-building as a foundation for scientific and technological development; and promoting gainful employment, in general, and enterprise development, in particular, through the use of existing and emerging technologies, especially information and communication technologies and biotechnologies.

Information and communication technologies

During 2004, the United Nations continued to consider how the benefits of new technologies, especially ICT, could contribute to development and preparations for the second phase of the World Summit on the Information Society; the first phase was held in 2003. The UN ICT Task Force continued its substantive work as a global forum on integrating information on ICT into development programmes.

World Summit on the Information Society

By decision 58/569 of 1 July, the General Assembly, on the proposal of its President, decided to consider the report of the World Summit on the Information Society (first phase, Geneva, 10-12 December 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 857]; second phase, Tunis, Tunisia, 16-18 November 2005) in plenary meeting at its sixtieth (2005) session, notwithstanding the fact that the item entitled "Information and communication technologies for development" would be allocated to the Second Committee pursuant to Assembly resolution 58/316 (see p. 1374).

Report of ITU Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 57/238 [YUN 2002, p. 836], the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council a May report by the Secretary-General of the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) [A/59/80-E/2004/61 & Corr.1] on the first phase [YUN 2003, p. 857] and progress in the preparations for the second phase (2005) of the World Summit on the Information Society. The report noted that the core outputs of the first phase were the Declaration of Principles, "Building the information society: a global challenge in the new Millennium", and the Plan of Action. The Council took note of the ITU report by decision 2004/301 of 23 July. The Declaration and Plan of Action were transmitted to the Secretary-General by Switzerland on 7 October [A/C.2/59/3].

In preparation for the second phase, an informal brainstorming meeting was organized (Hammamet, Tunisia, 2-3 March) and the Preparatory Committee held its first session (Hammamet, 24-26 June) [WSIS-II/PC-1/DOC/6-E]. Regional conferences were held, including the Second Bishkek-Moscow Regional Conference on the Information Society (Bishkek, Kyrgyzstan, 16-18 November) and the West Asia Regional Conference (Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic, 22-23 November). Other preparatory activities included the ITU workshop on Internet governance (Geneva, 26-27 February) and the establishment by the United Nations Secretary-General of the Task Force on Financial Mechanisms for ICT for Development, which produced a report on the subject in December.

CEB consideration. In the context of its consideration of the question of bridging the digital divide, CEB/HLCP discussed the outcome of the first phase of the World Summit on the Information Society at both its seventh session (Beirut, 26-27 February) [CEB/2004/4] and its intersessional meeting (Frascati, Italy, 31 May-1 June) [CEB/2004/5]. It considered the preparations for the second phase of the Summit at its eighth session (Florence, Italy, 15-17 September) [CEB/2004/7].

At CEB's second regular session of 2004 (New York, 29-30 October) [CEB/2004/2], the ITU Secretary-General provided an update on preparations for the second phase.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/480], adopted resolution 59/220 without vote [agenda item 44].

World Summit on the Information Society

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 56/183 of 21 December 2001 and 57/238 of 20 December 2002,

Reaffirming the potential of information and communication technologies as powerful tools to foster socio-economic development and contribute to the realization of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the Government of Switzerland for having hosted the first phase of the World Summit on the Information Society in Geneva from 10 to 12 December 2003 and for the support and arrangements put at the disposal of the Summit;

2. Renews with gratitude its acknowledgement of the generous offer of the Government of Tunisia to host the second phase of the Summit, which will take place in Tunis from 16 to 18 November 2005;

3. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the report of the Secretary-General of the International Telecommunication Union on the first phase and progress in the preparations for the second phase of the World Summit on the Information Society;

4. Endorses the Declaration of Principles and the Plan of Action adopted by the Summit on 12 December 2003, and welcomes, in this regard, the strong development orientation of both documents, encourages developing and developed countries in partnership to continue to identify how information technologies can further contribute to achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and stresses the importance of the effective and timely implementation of the Plan of Action;

5. Welcomes the contribution of Member States, relevant United Nations bodies, including the Information and Communication Technologies Task Force, and other intergovernmental organizations, non-governmental organizations, civil society and the private sector to the success of the Geneva phase of the Summit;

6. Urges Member States, relevant United Nations bodies, including the Information and Communication Technologies Task Force, and other intergovernmental organizations, non-governmental organizations, civil society and the private sector to contribute actively to the implementation of the outcome of the Geneva phase and to the preparatory process of the Tunis phase of the Summit as well as to the Summit itself in order to ensure its overall success;

7. Takes note of the results and decisions of the first meeting of the Preparatory Committee, held in Hammamet, Tunisia, from 24 to 26 June 2004, concerning the structure and output of the second phase of the Summit;

8. Welcomes the establishment of the Working Group on Internet Governance and the Task Force on Financial Mechanisms, set up in accordance with the decisions of the first phase of the Summit;

9. Invites countries to be represented at the highest possible political level at the second phase of the Summit, to be held in Tunis in 2005;

10. Reiterates its call to the international community to make voluntary contributions to the special fund established by the International Telecommunication Union to support the preparations for and holding of the Summit;

11. Invites the Secretary-General of the International Telecommunication Union to transmit to the General Assembly, as soon as it is available, the report of the World Summit on the Information Society.

UN role

ICT Task Force. In May, the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council the second annual report [E/2004/62 & Corr.1] of the Information and Communication Technologies Task Force, which was established in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 763] to provide a global forum on integrating ICT into development programmes and a platform for promoting public and private partnerships to help bridge the digital divide and foster digital opportunity. The first report was submitted to the Council in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 859].

In its second year, the Task Force, through its core activities, working groups and regional nodes, successfully served as a multi-stakeholder mechanism to facilitate and promote collaborative initiatives at the regional, subregional and national levels and to mobilize new public and private resources to support ICT-for-development programmes and projects. The Task Force facilitated the pooling of relevant experience of both developed and developing countries and the sharing of lessons learned in introducing and promoting ICT.

In addition to assessing progress made by the Task Force during its second year (December 2002–February 2004) and outlining its major activities and accomplishments, the report outlined a strategy for the Task Force's activities until the end of 2005.

By decision 2004/296 of 23 July, the Council welcomed the valuable contribution of the Task Force to harnessing the potential of ICT for advancing development and encouraged the Task Force to continue promoting ICT for development worldwide, including through contributing to the World Summit on the Information Society process.

CEB consideration. The issue of the digital divide and its implications for the UN system was discussed by CEB/HLCP at its seventh [CEB/2004/4] and eighth [CEB/2004/7] sessions and at its inter-sessional meeting [CEB/2004/5].

At its second regular session of 2004 [CEB/2004/2], CEB recommended that HLCP, in close consultation with the High-Level Summit Organizing Committee, should undertake a work programme for mainstreaming and integrating ICT into the broader MDG agenda, including through the development of system-wide approaches and guidelines for use by country representatives and by the resident coordinator system; and, working closely with the CEB High-Level Committee on Management (HLCM) and its ICT Network, to focus on developing a clear vision of a UN system-wide knowledge management system, its optimum functionality and implementation options. The UN system ICT strategy had to be pursued as an essential component of the overall effort to enhance cost-effectiveness, strengthen system-wide knowledge management and enhance the capacity to support countries in using ICT for achieving the MDGs. HLCM and its ICT Network had to work closely with HLCP to continue to develop the business cases for the strategy, its resource implications and measures to address constraints in its implementation for consideration and decision by CEB.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 57/295 [YUN 2002, p. 836], the Secretary-General, in a November report [A/59/563], described activities undertaken to develop a comprehensive ICT strategy for the UN system. The activities related to devising a comprehensive and coherent response to the broad issues of harnessing the potential of ICT for promoting development and were focused on: the coherence of the policy advice that UN system organizations provided to countries in setting comprehensive, forward-looking strategies to harness ICT for economic and social progress; and the unprecedented opportunities that ICT offered for system-wide knowledge management and knowledge creation.

Annexed to the report were the text of the United Nations Information and Communication Technologies Charter, which defined the principles and framework for coordination and collaboration within the organizations of the UN system, and the strategy that underpinned the Charter, comprising a set of 15 initiatives in ICT for development, ICT governance, information security, practical applications and capacity-building.

By decision 59/531 of 22 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report and requested him to submit a further report on the implementation of the ICT strategy to the Assembly's sixtieth (2005) session.

Communication for UN development programmes

In response to General Assembly resolution 50/130 [YUN 1995, p. 1438], the Secretary-General, in August [A/59/207], transmitted the report of the Director-General of UNESCO, which described the inter-agency collaborative mechanisms for effective and integrated follow-up to that resolution. The recommendations of the seven UN agencies, funds and programmes that contributed to the review of existing coordination arrangements and of the eighth Inter-Agency Round Table on Communication for Development (Managua, Nicaragua, 26-28 November 2001) were: creation of an international consortium on HIV/AIDS communication strategies; collection and sharing of tools from key agencies/implementers to identify and improve access to proven tools and reduce duplication; improvement of training for journalists by reinforcing learning institutions; and encouragement of the production and dissemination of local media content while keeping a calculated balance between local, national and international contributions. The report called for increased resources for more effective communication programmes, enhanced synergy among all partners and intensified efforts to address the digital divide.

By decision 59/532 of 22 December, the Assembly took note of the UNESCO Director-General's report.

Economic and social trends

The World Economic and Social Survey 2004 [Sales No. E.04.II.C.1], prepared in mid-2004 by the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA), stated that, after a mediocre performance for some three years, world economic growth began to improve in 2003 and continued to do so in early 2004. Gross world product grew by 2.7 per cent in 2003, compared with 1.8 per cent in 2002; it was expected to grow by 3.7 per cent in 2004.

Although economic performance and outlook improved for most countries, differences in economic strength across regions and economies persisted. The economy of the United States expanded apace in 2003 and early 2004 and remained a key engine for the world economy. However, its large fiscal and trade deficits continued to be major concerns, not only for the United States economy but also for the rest of the world because of the downside risks those deficits posed. Economic activity in Western Europe, apart from the United Kingdom, was sluggish but the gradual recovery was expected to continue. Japan was expected to grow by about 3 per cent in 2004, with the resurgence being driven mainly by exports, particularly to other Asian economies. As to the other developed economies, the substantial appreciation of their currencies vis-à-vis the United States dollar had an adverse impact on Australia, Canada and New Zealand.

Developing countries were again growing faster than the developed countries in 2004, with more of them than in any year since 2000 expected to achieve an increase in their per capita income. The extended periods of rapid growth of the two most populous developing countries—China and India—were good not only for the countries themselves and the large number of poor within them, but also for other countries.

Many developing countries had benefited from China's growing appetite for energy and raw materials and from the resulting higher prices of oil and other commodities. Gross domestic product (GDP) growth in Africa was expected to accelerate in 2004-2005 as many countries achieved an increase in agricultural and industrial output. Higher consumer spending, increasing investment, including more foreign direct investment (FDI) in several countries, and expanded, though cautious, government expenditure in a growing number of countries were expected to support domestic demand. The accelerating economic growth in East Asia was fuelled by the region's traditional source of dynamism—international trade. Demand from the United States strengthened in the second half of 2003 and there was an upturn in global information and communication technologies (ICT) product markets. The impetus from powerful growth in China continued to increase and a better-than-anticipated recovery in Japan added new strength to the region's growth. After a rebound in 2003, growth in South Asia was expected to solidify further in 2004, with more balance across countries and sectors. While the surge in Pakistan's exports in 2003 had moderated as the one-off effects of increased textile quotas waned, India's exports and imports both increased sharply, with exports driven by ICT-related products and services. International tourism to the region also improved and recovery in the agricultural sector (except for Sri Lanka) contributed to higher incomes. Western Asia's economic prospects were still heavily conditioned by geopolitical developments, particularly the situation in Iraq, whose economic improvement had been dilatory, and the escalating conflict between Israel and Palestine. The only propitious sign for the region was the higher dollar price of petroleum, a benefit that was discounted by the depreciation of the United States dollar. GDP growth for the region was expected to decelerate to 2.8 per cent in 2004. The short-term economic outlook for Latin America and the Caribbean continued to improve, with stronger demand from North America, Japan and China and the substantial rise in commodity prices boosting the growth of exports. Depreciation of the United States dollar and more flexible exchange-rate regimes had allowed most countries to ease monetary policy; interest rates in many economies were at multi-year lows. For the first time in decades, the region had registered a current-account surplus.

The economies in transition were the most rapidly growing of the three major groups of countries in 2003 as they continued to recover from the setbacks of the 1990s. The economies of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) accelerated to over 7 per cent in 2003 and were expected to remain robust for 2004-2005, with the Russian Federation in the lead. Their economic vigour was bolstered by improved domestic fundamentals; higher production, exports and prices of petroleum and gas; and increased foreign investment. Improved consumer and investor confidence also continued to support growth. The prospects for Central and Eastern Europe continued to improve, mostly due to the performance of the Polish economy, with the momentum of growth shifting to South-Eastern Europe. Growth in the Baltic States was expected to remain robust in 2004-2005, reflecting success in broad-based structural policies and gains in macroeconomic stability. Membership of the European Union (EU) was expected to be beneficial for those economies in the long run, but uncertainties associated with EU entry could pose some short-term risks.

The second volume of the World Economic and Social Survey 2004 [Sales No. E.04.II.C.3] dealt with the subject of international migration (see p. 1077).

The Trade and Development Report, 2004 [Sales No. E.04.II.D.29], published by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), stated that the outlook for a sustained economic recovery was more clouded and uncertain than at the beginning of the 1990s. Large disparities in the strength of domestic demand persisted among the major industrial countries, and increasing trade imbalances between the major economic blocks could lead to new protectionist pressures and increase instability in currency and financial markets, with adverse implications for developing countries. The sharp increase in oil prices, uncertainty about their future development and their possible impact on inflation and interest rates were an additional reason for concern. Moreover, income growth was unequally distributed both among developed countries, where the euro area continued to lag behind, and among developing countries, where fast and sustained growth continued to be concentrated in East and South Asia. At the same time, per capita income in most of sub-Saharan Africa was stagnating, and the basis for sustained growth in Latin America was still very fragile. The improvement in the global economy was the result of exceptionally good performance in a small number of countries, with great variations in the spillover effects on other economies.

A report on the world economic situation and prospects [Sales No. E.05.II.C.2], prepared jointly by DESA and UNCTAD, stated that global growth was not only the highest for many years (4 per cent), but was also unusually widespread and well balanced. Growth in the developing countries was the fastest for more than two decades, while output in the remaining economies in transition continued to increase more rapidly than in the other major country groups. The high aggregate rate of growth in 2004 reflected the fact that every region except South Asia and CIS grew more rapidly in 2004 than in 2003. In those two exceptional cases, growth slipped from previous high levels but remained above 6 per cent and 7 per cent respectively. Even the higher price of oil did not have the discriminating effects that might have been assumed. In Latin America, with its large number of oil-importing countries, growth surged to over 5 per cent after six years of weak performance. In Africa, the impact of higher oil prices was offset for many oil-importing countries by higher non-oil commodity prices; non-oil prices rose less than oil prices, but non-oil commodities often accounted for a higher proportion of exports than oil did of imports. Asia, despite also being predominantly an oil-importing region, received an even greater stimulus than other regions from the rapid growth in China and the large increase in trade that it generated.

On a per capita basis, output increased by more than 3 per cent in almost half the developing countries, but those countries accounted for over 80 per cent of the developing world's population. Per capita output also increased by more than 3 per cent in all the economies in transition except one.

Of the 107 developing countries for which data were available, per capita output fell in only 13 cases, and those countries accounted for less than 3 per cent of the population. Of those 13 countries, 9 were in Africa and accounted for almost one quarter of that region's population. On the other hand, almost half the countries in Africa (but accounting for 40 per cent of the region's population) increased per capita output by more than 3 per cent. Those cases demonstrated that it was possible to achieve rates of growth in Africa that, if sustained, would slowly reduce poverty in the region. In South and East Asia, only four countries, accounting for less than 3 per cent of the region's population, failed to achieve 3 per cent growth of per capita output in 2004. In Western Asia, two of the four countries that experienced a decline in per capita output in 2003 achieved positive growth in 2004, but only half the countries in the region—the same number as in 2003—increased per capita output by more than 3 per cent. The largest turnaround was in Latin America: in 2003, one third of the 24 countries in the region for which data were available (accounting for over 60 per cent of the region's population) experienced a decline in per capita output; in 2004, the same number of countries, accounting for over half the region's population, increased per capita output by more than 3 per cent. Among the developed countries performance was more varied. Growth was strong in North America, moderate in Japan but weak in Europe. With the exception of its new members and a few other countries, the EU had replaced Japan as the lagging economy.

Human Development Report 2004

The Human Development Report 2004 [Sales No. E.04.III.B.1], prepared by UNDP, discussed the question of cultural liberty in a diverse world (see p. 1101).

In addition to providing a critical analysis of a different theme each year, the Report assessed the state of human development across the globe, involving country data that focused on human well-being, not just economic trends. In 2004, it ranked 177 countries in its human development index by combining indicators of life expectancy, educational attainment and adjusted per capita income, among other factors. Of the 177 countries listed, 55 were in the high human development category, 86 were in the medium category and 36 were in the low category.

UNDP consideration. In response to General Assembly resolution 57/264 [YUN 2002, p. 841], the Executive Board of UNDP/United Nations Population Fund included in its agenda an item on the Human Development Report for the purpose of improving the consultation process with Member States regarding the Report, in order to enhance its quality and accuracy without compromising its editorial independence. The UNDP Administrator's first report on the subject was submitted in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 864]. In an April 2004 update, it was stated that for the Human Development Report 2004, UNDP had held consultations with the members of the Executive Board on five occasions and was committed to maintaining that level of consultation in future years.

In June [E/2004/35 (dec. 2004/25)], the Executive Board took note of the update.

Development policy and public administration

Committee for Development Policy

The Committee for Development Policy (CDP), at its sixth session (New York, 29 March–2 April) [E/2004/33], considered three major themes:

measures to improve resources mobilization for the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010 (see p. 855); evaluation of progress towards good governance in the context of the implementation of the MDGs; and matters related to the 2003 triennial review of the list of LDCs (see p. 852).

The Committee considered that good governance could be instrumental in achieving the goals of poverty reduction only if the process of measurement and assessment was not biased in favour of external criteria relevant to the donors, investors and international monitoring bodies, as opposed to the internal perspective of the country. In designing institutions and mechanisms for good governance in developing countries, an interactive process between donors and recipient countries was thus essential. On the one hand, measures imposed by donors had often lacked success when they failed to pay due consideration to the culture and history of recipient countries. On the other, recipient countries needed assistance from donors to bring their institutions and social, political and economic processes closer to those required by good governance. CDP proposed that LDCs be invited to participate in the deliberations of institutions where global norms and standards for aspects of good governance were established.

Public administration

Committee of Experts on Public Administration. The Committee of Experts on Public Administration, at its third session (New York, 29 March–2 April) [E/2004/44], had before it Secretariat reports on: revitalizing public administration as a strategic action for sustainable human development [E/C.16/2004/2]; the role of human resources in revitalizing public administration [E/C.16/2004/3]; the role of the public sector in advancing the knowledge society [E/C.16/2004/4]; strengthening public administration for the MDGs: a partnership-building approach [E/C.16/2004/5]; developing institutions of governance and public administration in Africa [E/C.16/2004/6]; basic data on government expenditure and taxation [E/C.16/2004/7]; and a proposed strategic framework for the period 2006–2007 [E/C.16/2004/8].

The Committee recommended that the Economic and Social Council: reaffirm the role of the public service in fulfilling the specific national goals for socio-economic development, as they were key indicators of Member States' attainment of the MDGs, devoting one of its future high-level segments to the changing role of a public administration geared to development; propose to the General Assembly three options relating to the commemoration of the tenth anniversary of the Assembly's resumed fiftieth session on public administration and development [YUN 1996, p. 750]—host the Global Forum on Reinventing Government in 2006, devote the Council's 2006 high-level segment to "A service-oriented public administration for the achievement of the MDGs", or celebrate the United Nations Public Service Day (23 June) and the awarding of the United Nations Public Service Awards in a more visible manner; consider how to leverage and integrate the work of the Committee of Experts in intergovernmental processes, particularly the deliberations of the commissions that considered development issues; recommend to international organizations and the donor community that they should increase financial, material and technical support to African States to strengthen governance and public administration; and decide that the next session of the Committee of Experts should be devoted to revitalizing public administration: strategic directions for the future, development of a methodology for a bottom-up participatory approach in identifying public administration foundations and principles, and enhancement of the celebration of the United Nations Public Service Day and of the competition for the United Nations Public Service Awards.

The Committee of Experts recommended to Member States that they should: focus the reform of their public administration systems on achieving conditions that would ensure and facilitate the attainment of the MDGs; adopt a holistic national strategy to strengthen the management of human capital in the public sector; have national public administrations act as the major facilitating factor in transition to the knowledge society and perceive themselves as e-governments; pursue the issue of partnerships through South-South cooperation; with UN assistance, if necessary, develop approaches, methodologies and tools for and knowledge on citizen-based policy formulation and performance monitoring; pay attention to low ratios of tax revenues to GDP; and disseminate available data on the public sector. Specific recommendations to African Governments were that they should: implement the African Union's Governance and Public Administration Programme under the aegis of the New Partnership for Africa's Development [YUN 2001, p. 900]; institute mechanisms for implementing and disseminating the Charter for the Public Service in Africa [ibid., p. 847]; adopt methods and systems that fostered opportunities for popular participation in the governance and development process; strengthen the law-making, oversight and budget review capacities of the legislature; depoliticize the public service and transform it into a professional and non-partisan agent; and strengthen the judiciary to ensure predictability and peaceful resolution of disputes arising out of trade, industrial and international relations.

With regard to the United Nations, the Committee of Experts recommended that: the UN programme on public administration, finance and development should continue to focus on the reform/revitalization of the practice of public administration; the Secretariat should carry out policy research and technical cooperation on the role of human resources in revitalizing public administration and build on the successful outcomes of the Global Forum on Reinventing Government (see p. 851) by assisting in developing regional and national strategies to reinvent government; the UN Online Network in Public Administration and Finance (UNPAN) should be continuously enhanced; the Secretariat should continue studying the knowledge society and develop innovative tools, such as the code of accountability, engaged governance norms and a data base of best practices and indicators; the UN system should continue providing substantive technical and advisory support aimed at strengthening governance and public administration institutions in African States; and the Secretariat should assist Governments in their efforts to produce better data related to the measurement of public sector efficiency. The Committee of Experts advised the Secretariat to narrow the focus of the subprogramme's involvement and concentrate more on key priorities. In that respect, it regretted that resources for that purpose were again reduced. The Committee underscored the need for better dissemination of the Secretariat's outputs and promotion of its activities in the area of public administration and indicated that the promotion of successful practices of selected applicants for the United Nations Public Service Awards would increase the visibility of both the Economic and Social Council and the Secretariat. The Committee emphasized the importance of synergy between normative and technical cooperation work and that the Secretariat should continue implementing technical cooperation as an essential feeding mechanism into the deliberations of the policy-making organs of the United Nations.

Economic and Social Council action. By decision 2004/302 of 23 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Committee of Experts on its third session and decided that its fourth (2005) session should be devoted to: revitalizing public administration, including by improving transparency, competence and accountability; strategic directions for the future; development of a methodology for a bottom-up participatory approach in identifying public administration foundations and principles; and enhancement of the celebration of United Nations Public Service Day and of the competition for United Nations Public Service Awards. The Council also decided to discuss the Council's recommendations further during its resumed substantive session.

By decision 2004/325 of 11 November, the Council deferred consideration of the recommendations contained in the report of the Committee of Experts on its third session to its organizational session in January 2005.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 58/231 [YUN 2003, p. 866], the Secretary-General submitted a 9 September report on public administration and development [A/59/346]. He outlined proposals for commemorating, during the Assembly's sixty-first (2006) session, the tenth anniversary of the Assembly's resumed fiftieth session on public administration and development [YUN 1996, p. 750], suggesting that the commemoration could be an opportune time to evaluate progress made in revitalizing public administration and to share successful experiences that had contributed to achieving the MDGs. The report recalled the recommendations made by the Committee of Experts on Public Administration (see p. 849) and drew the Assembly's attention to recommendations on preparatory and supporting actions that could be taken in connection with the observance of the anniversary, including hosting the Global Forum on Reinventing Government in New York in 2006; devoting the high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council in 2006 to the changing role of administration; and celebrating United Nations Public Service Day and the presentation of the United Nations Public Service Awards in a more visible manner.

The report also described activities under way to promote information exchange, research and the dissemination of successful practices and advisory services in public administration, and to support e-government initiatives in the African, Asian, Central American and Caribbean regions as a tool for development.

The report noted that the Global Forum on Reinventing Government, which was supported technically and substantively by the UN programme on public administration, finance and development, had been held five times since its launch in 1999 by the United States and was to hold its sixth session in the Republic of Korea in 2005 on the theme "Towards participatory and transparent governance". The seventh Global Forum could be hosted at United Nations Headquarters in 2006.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 65], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/55 [draft: A/59/L.27/Rev.1 & Add.1, orally revised], without vote [agenda item 12].

Public administration and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling all pertinent resolutions, in particular its resolution 58/231 of 23 December 2003 on public administration and development,

Recalling also the historic resumed fiftieth session of the General Assembly, devoted to the subject of the strengthening of public administration and development,

Stressing the need for capacity-building and e-Government initiatives as tools to promote development,

Recognizing that efficient, accountable, effective and transparent public administration at both the national and the international levels constitutes a key factor in development,

Recognizing also the importance of strengthening public administration institutions, improving public sector human resources capacity and fostering knowledge creation and innovation and the utilization of information technology for development in public administration and in the implementation of internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Welcoming the adoption of the United Nations Convention against Corruption,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Stresses the importance of United Nations Public Service Day and the United Nations Public Service Awards in the process of revitalizing public administration by building a culture of innovation, partnership and responsiveness;
3. Also stresses the valuable contribution that the Global Forum on Reinventing Government has made to the exchange of lessons learned in public administration reform, and reiterates its appreciation to the Government of the Republic of Korea for hosting the Sixth Global Forum on Reinventing Government in 2005;
4. Encourages the Secretary-General to make arrangements for the implementation of the proposals made for the commemoration of the tenth anniversary of the resumed fiftieth session of the General Assembly, on public administration and development;
5. Takes note of the important analytical and operational contribution that the World Public Sector Report provides to policy makers responsible for public administration in Member States;
6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to facilitate, through the United Nations Online Network in Public Administration and Finance, the dissemination of valuable practices in public administration;
7. Also requests the Secretary-General to focus the work on public administration along the lines of Economic and Social Council decision 2004/302 of 23 July 2004 and General Assembly resolution 58/231;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session on progress made in Member States by revitalizing public administration during the last ten years, since the resumed fiftieth session of the Assembly, on public administration and development, and to ensure that the findings are brought to the attention of Member States on the occasion of the special event in 2005.

In-depth evaluation

By a 16 March note [E/AC.51/2004/3], the Secretary-General transmitted to CPC the OIOS report on the in-depth evaluation of the UN programme on public administration, finance and development. The report recommended: rationalizing the scope and focus of DESA's Division for Public Administration and Development Management; ensuring support to international co-operation in tax matters and to public finance management work; enhancing the repertoire of best practices; developing an information strategy; enhancing UNPAN; enhancing linkages and synergies between functions and across themes; and strengthening collaboration among UN entities. The Secretary-General concurred with the report's recommendations.

At its forty-fourth session (New York, 7 June–2 July) [A/59/16], CPC reworded the recommendation on support to international cooperation in tax matters, and recalled the General Assembly's request in resolution 58/270 [YUN 2003, p. 1399] that the Secretary-General undertake a review of the regular programme of technical cooperation and make proposals to the Assembly at its fifty-ninth session. It recommended the approval of the other recommendations contained in the evaluation.

Groups of countries in special situations

On 17 September, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee, included in the agenda of its fifty-ninth session the item entitled "Groups of countries in special situations", covering LDCs and landlocked and transit developing countries.

By decision 59/537 of 22 December, the Assembly took note of the report of the Second Committee on groups of countries in special situations [A/59/486].

Least developed countries

The special problems of the officially designated LDCs were considered in several UN forums in 2004, especially through the implementation of the Brussels Declaration and the Programme of Action for LDCs for the Decade 2001–2010, adopted at the Third UN Conference on LDCs in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 770] and endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 55/279 in July of that year [ibid., p. 771]. Of major concern in 2004 was the question of a smooth transition strategy for countries graduating from the list of LDCs.

LDC list

The number of countries officially designated as LDCs remained at 50. Although Cape Verde and Maldives were recommended for graduation from the list, that process would take place over a three-year period, as decided by the General Assembly in resolution 59/209 (see p. 854).

The full list of LDCs comprised: Afghanistan, Angola, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Kiribati, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nepal, Niger, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sudan, Timor-Leste, Togo, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Yemen, Zambia.

Smooth transition strategy

CDP consideration. At its sixth session (New York, 29 March–2 April) [E/2004/33], CDP, which was responsible for adding countries to or graduating them from the LDC list, confirmed at the conclusion of its fifth (2003) session [YUN 2003, p. 868] that Cape Verde and Maldives qualified for graduation from the list and recommended that they be graduated from the LDC category. However, CDP stressed the need for a smooth transition strategy to be put in place by both the countries themselves and the international community. Among the measures to ensure a smooth transition, the Committee proposed that the United Nations convene an ad hoc country advisory group, in which the graduated country, in co-operation with its development partners, would identify measures to ensure that its development was maintained. The guiding principle of that initiative was that specific transition support measures, monitoring arrangements and the period of transition would be decided on a case-by-case basis so that the development progress of graduated countries was not interrupted or reversed.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 3 June [meeting 13], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2004/3 [draft: E/2004/L.10] without vote [agenda item 2].

Report of the Committee for Development Policy

Recalling General Assembly resolution 46/206 of 20 December 1991,

Expressing its conviction that no country graduating from the least developed country category should have its positive development disrupted or reversed but should be able to continue and sustain its progress and development,

Emphasizing the need for putting in place a process for smooth transition of countries graduating out of the group of least developed countries,

1. Takes note of chapter IV of the report of the Committee for Development Policy on its fifth session and the conclusions contained therein, inter alia, that Cape Verde and Maldives qualified for graduation from the list of least developed countries;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with Member States, to submit to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2004 a report including recommendations on how to formulate a smooth transition strategy for countries graduating from least developed country status;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare the report in an inclusive and transparent manner with the involvement of Member States, in particular the least developed countries, as well as bilateral and multilateral donors and relevant international organizations;

4. Decides to take a decision on a smooth transition strategy for countries graduating from least developed country status and on the graduation of Cape Verde and Maldives from the list of least developed countries at its substantive session of 2004.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2004/3 (above), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council's substantive session a report on formulating a smooth transition strategy for countries graduating from LDC status [E/2004/94]. The report took into account CDP's recommendations (see p. 852), information provided to the Committee by a number of international organizations and information supplied by Governments. It described the benefits associated with LDC status, such as preferential market access, special treatment regarding World Trade Organization (WTO)-related obligations, development financing and technical cooperation, and suggested possible elements for a smooth transition strategy that involved a graduating country retaining some existing benefits so that its development prospects would not be adversely affected.

The report concluded that the success of a smooth transition strategy would depend on cooperation between graduated LDCs and the international community. However, as with all development strategies, the graduated LDCs themselves had to play the central role in formulating and implementing their transition strategy and to ensure that the strategy was attuned to national conditions and circumstances. At the same time, the continued support of development partners was critical to ensuring success. Given that WTO provisions granting differential treatment to LDCs constituted a multilateral instrument outside the purview of the Council and the General Assembly, WTO member States would need to take the initiative to ensure that graduated countries continued to benefit from LDC trade preferences for a transition period after graduation. The international community was encouraged to strengthen efforts to foster private sector development in, and to increase credit guarantees for, graduated countries.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION (July)

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 2004/299 [draft: E/2004/L.45] without vote [agenda item 13 (a)].

Report of the Committee for Development Policy

At its 50th plenary meeting, on 23 July 2004, the Economic and Social Council, recalling its resolution 2004/3 of 3 June 2004 on the report of the Committee for Development Policy:

(a) Took note of the progress achieved so far in the consideration of the report of the Secretary-General on formulating a smooth transition strategy for countries graduating from least developed country status and of the report of the Committee for Development Policy on its sixth session;

(b) Decided to revert to this matter at its resumed substantive session of 2004, building further on the elements for draft resolutions under agenda item 13 (a) contained in the annex to the present decision.

Annex

Elements for draft resolutions under agenda item 13 (a)

The Economic and Social Council will adopt simultaneously two different resolutions:

- One on the report of the Secretary-General on formulating a smooth transition strategy for countries graduating from least developed country status
- One on the report of the Committee for Development Policy on its sixth session, including its recommendation to graduate Maldives and Cape Verde

Elements for a draft resolution on a smooth transition strategy

1. Reconfirmation of general principles related to a smooth transition
2. Definition of the time sequence of a transition process, building on General Assembly resolution

46/206 of 20 December 1991 and subsequent resolutions of the Economic and Social Council:

- A first phase (I), of a three-year duration, beginning with the first identification of a country by the Committee for Development Policy and ending with the validation of the findings at the second review and the recommendation by the Committee to graduate the country
 - A second phase (II), following the endorsement by the General Assembly of the recommendation by the Committee for Development Policy, lasting for a period of three years, during which the graduating country keeps its least developed country status and the advantages associated with it and activates, in a dialogue with its main partners at the country level, the preparations for the third phase, when it will have lost its least developed country status
 - A third phase (III), following the expiration of phase II, of an undetermined duration, during which the graduated country, in line with the strategy elaborated with its partners in phase II, phases out advantages associated with its earlier least developed country status
3. Definition of the mechanisms and content of the transition process, building on the recommendations in the report of the Secretary-General:
 - Invite the graduating country to envisage action during phase I and initiate a process at the country level and, especially during phase II, build on the existing mechanism for coordination with donors
 - Invite the partners of the graduating country (bilateral and multilateral) to engage in the elaboration in phase II and implementation in phase III of a country-specific transition strategy
 4. Definition of a monitoring mechanism:
 - Follow-up of the implementation of the smooth transition strategy at the country level during phase III under the overall responsibility of the Government
 - Specific monitoring of the country, beginning at the end of phase II, during a series of triennial reviews by the Committee for Development Policy
 - Invitation to the national Government to keep the Committee informed of evolution at the country level
 5. Specific requests to the Secretary-General and United Nations agencies:
 - The issue of the vulnerability profile in phase I
 - Assistance through the resident coordinator system during phase II (convening a country-based mechanism; assisting the Government in the identification of critical areas, etc.)
 6. Recommendation to the General Assembly to endorse the resolution

Elements for a draft resolution on the report of the Committee for Development Policy

Take note of the report, including its recommendation to graduate Maldives and Cape Verde.

On 5 November [meeting 53], the Council adopted resolution 2004/66 [draft: E/2004/L.56] without vote [agenda item 13 (a)].

Smooth transition strategy for countries graduating from the list of least developed countries

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 59/209 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/209 [draft: A/59/L.47 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 12].

Smooth transition strategy for countries graduating from the list of least developed countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/206 of 20 December 1991,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 2004/66 of 5 November 2004,

Reconfirming Economic and Social Council resolutions 2000/34 of 28 July 2000, 2001/43 of 24 October 2001, 2002/36 of 26 July 2002 and 2004/3 of 3 June 2004,

1. Re-emphasizes the need for a smooth transition for countries graduating from the list of least developed countries;

2. Reconfirms that graduating from the list of least developed countries should not result in a disruption of development plans, programmes and projects;

3. Decides that the process to ensure a smooth transition of countries graduating from the list of least developed countries shall be as follows:

(a) When the Committee for Development Policy, in its triennial review of the list of least developed countries, identifies a country that meets the criteria for graduation for the first time, it will submit its findings to the Economic and Social Council;

(b) After a country has met the criteria for graduation for the first time, the Secretary-General of the United Nations will invite the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to prepare a vulnerability profile on the identified country, as described in paragraph 3 (a) above, to be taken into account by the Committee for Development Policy at its subsequent triennial review;

(c) At the subsequent triennial review undertaken by the Committee for Development Policy, referred to in paragraph 3 (b) above, the qualification for graduation of the country will be reviewed and, if reconfirmed, the Committee will submit a recommendation, in accordance with the established procedures, to the Economic and Social Council;

(d) The Economic and Social Council, in turn, will take action on the recommendation of the Committee for Development Policy at its first substantive session following the triennial review of the Committee and will transmit its decision to the General Assembly;

(e) Three years following the decision of the General Assembly to take note of the recommendation of the Committee for Development Policy to graduate a country from the list of least developed countries, graduation will become effective; during the three-year period, the country will remain on the list of least developed countries and will maintain the advantages associated with membership on that list;

4. Invites the graduating country, in cooperation with its bilateral and multilateral development and trading partners and with the support of the United Nations system, to prepare, during the three-year period, a transition strategy to adjust to the phasing out, over a period appropriate to the development situation of the country, of the advantages associated with its membership on the list of least developed countries, and to identify actions to be taken by the graduating country and its bilateral and multilateral development and trading partners to that end;

5. Recommends that the graduating country establish, in cooperation with its bilateral and multilateral development and trading partners, a consultative mechanism to facilitate the preparation of the transition strategy and the identification of the associated actions;

6. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, in his capacity as Chair of the United Nations Development Group, to assist countries graduating from the list of least developed countries by providing, if requested, the support of the United Nations Resident Coordinator and the United Nations Country Team to the consultative mechanism;

7. Urges all development partners to support the implementation of the transition strategy and to avoid any abrupt reductions in either official development assistance or technical assistance provided to the graduated country;

8. Invites development and trading partners to consider extending to the graduated country trade preferences previously made available as a result of least developed country status, or reducing them in a phased manner in order to avoid their abrupt reduction;

9. Invites all members of the World Trade Organization to consider extending to a graduated country, as appropriate, the existing special and differential treatment and exemptions available to least developed countries for a period appropriate to the development situation;

10. Recommends that the continued implementation of technical assistance programmes under the Integrated Framework for Trade-related Technical Assistance to Least Developed Countries be considered for the graduated country over a period appropriate to the development situation of the country;

11. Invites the Government of the graduated country to closely monitor, with the support of the consultative mechanism, the implementation of the transition strategy and to keep the Secretary-General informed on a regular basis;

12. Requests the Committee for Development Policy to continue to monitor the development progress of the graduated country as a complement to its triennial review of the list of least developed countries, with the assistance and support of other relevant entities, and to report thereon to the Economic and Social Council.

Graduation of Cape Verde and Maldives

On 5 November [meeting 53], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2004/67 [draft: E/2004/L.57] without vote [agenda item 13 (a)].

Report of the Committee for Development Policy on its sixth session

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its decision 2004/299 of 23 July 2004 on the report of the Committee for Development Policy,

Taking into account its resolution 2004/66 of 5 November 2004 on a smooth transition strategy for countries graduating from the list of least developed countries,

1. Endorses the recommendation of the Committee for Development Policy that Cape Verde and Maldives be graduated from the least developed country category, as contained in the report of the Committee on its sixth session;

2. Recommends that the General Assembly take note of the recommendation of the Committee for Development Policy that Cape Verde and Maldives be graduated from the least developed country category.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/210 [draft: A/59/L.48 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 12].

Report of the Committee for Development Policy on its sixth session

The General Assembly,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 2004/67 of 5 November 2004 on the report of the Committee for Development Policy,

Taking into account its resolution 59/209 of 20 December 2004 on a smooth transition strategy for countries graduating from the list of least developed countries,

Takes note of the recommendation of the Committee for Development Policy that Cape Verde and Maldives be graduated from the group of least developed countries.

Programme of Action (2001-2010)

UNCTAD XI action. The eleventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD XI) (São Paulo, Brazil, 13-18 June) [TD/412] (see p. 954) adopted the São Paulo Consensus in which it called for special measures to assist LDCs. In view of the increasing marginalization of LDCs in the global economy, the Consensus called for UNCTAD to play a leading role in the substantive and technical implementation of the Brussels Programme of Action, stating that it should continue to examine the causes of decline in the share of LDCs in world trade and the linkages between trade, growth and poverty reduction with a view to identifying long-term solutions to those problems.

During UNCTAD XI, on 13 June, the Ministers of the LDCs met and adopted the Declaration of the LDCs Ministerial Meeting at UNCTAD XI [TD/408], which was included in the UNCTAD XI report.

Economic and Social Council ministerial declaration. In accordance with decision 2003/287

[YUN 2003, p. 869], the high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council in 2004 (New York, 28-30 June and 6 July) [A/59/3/Rev.1] considered the theme "Resources mobilization and enabling environment for poverty eradication in the context of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010". It had before it an April report of the Secretary-General on the subject [E/2004/54], which stated that improving the domestic and global environment was crucial to enabling the development of LDCs and that global, regional and national partnerships, including with civil society and the private sector, should be explored to that end.

During the segment, five high-level round tables were held on: local private sector development: the role of microfinance/microcredit; attracting foreign direct investment (FDI) in LDCs; the role of trade preferences for LDCs in promoting investment; unleashing entrepreneurship: the role of partnerships in mobilizing resources for LDCs; and investment in urban water, sanitation and sustainable human settlements development in LDCs.

Also during the segment, the ILO Director-General made a presentation on the report of the World Commission on the Social Dimension of Globalization entitled A Fair Globalization: Creating Opportunities for All [A/59/98-E/2004/79] (see p. 1091) as it related to the successful implementation of the Programme of Action.

On 6 July, the Council adopted a ministerial declaration in which the ministers and heads of delegations participating in the high-level segment affirmed their commitment to the implementation of the goals and objectives set out in the Brussels Programme of Action. They recognized the need for creating an overall enabling environment for national and international actions to eradicate poverty, promote sustainable development of LDCs and for the implementation of the Programme of Action, and addressed the specific issues of good governance; the significance of food security, fighting the HIV/AIDS pandemic, malaria and tuberculosis, improving access to health care, education and other social services, particularly for women, the poor and other vulnerable groups, and protecting the environment; and the need for international support for LDCs and for the implementation of the actions contained in the Programme of Action. National and/or international action was encouraged in the areas of improving the enabling environment for the private sector; enhancing the agricultural sector; promoting an inclusive financial sector; removing obstacles preventing the transfer of assets of migrant workers from

LDCs to their countries of origin; reaching the official development assistance (ODA) target of contributing 0.2 per cent of gross national product to LDCs; solving the debt problems of LDCs; trade preferences in favour of LDCs; FDI; and the special need of LDCs emerging from conflict situations.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 5 November [meeting 53], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2004/65 [draft: E/2004/L.55] without vote [agenda item 6 (b)].

Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Brussels Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010,

Recalling also its decision 2001/320 of 24 October 2001, in which it decided to establish, under the regular agenda item entitled "Integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the major United Nations conferences and summits", a regular sub-item entitled "Review and coordination of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010",

Recalling further its resolution 2003/17 of 22 July 2003 and its decision 2003/287 of 24 July 2003, as well as the ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of its substantive session of 2004 on the theme "Resources mobilization and enabling environment for poverty eradication in the context of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010",

Acknowledging the presentation made by the Director-General of the International Labour Organization during the 2004 high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council on the report of the World Commission on the Social Dimension of Globalization entitled A Fair Globalization: Creating Opportunities for All as it relates to the successful implementation of the Programme of Action,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Expresses its concern over the still weak implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010;

2. Urges the least developed countries and their bilateral and multilateral development partners to undertake increased efforts and to adopt speedy measures, with a view to creating an overall enabling environment for the implementation of the Programme of Action and to meeting its goals and targets in a timely manner;

3. Reiterates the critical importance of the participation of government representatives from the least developed countries in the annual assessment of the Programme of Action by the Economic and Social Council, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to take concrete measures for the full implementation of the provision of paragraph 8 of General Assembly resolution 58/228 of 23 December 2003;

4. Calls upon the Secretary-General, while stressing the central role of the Economic and Social Council in the coordination of actions in the United Nations system for the implementation of the Programme of Action, to take appropriate measures to strengthen the efficiency and effectiveness of the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States so that it can fulfil its functions in accordance with General Assembly resolution 56/227 of 24 December 2001;

5. Reiterates that the review of the Programme of Action and the evaluation of the performance of the least developed countries and their development partners in implementing their various commitments should be based on the goals and targets set out in the Programme of Action;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit an annual progress report on the implementation of the Programme of Action in a more analytical and results-oriented manner by placing greater emphasis on concrete results and indicating the progress achieved in its implementation, which could include the use of a matrix of achievements;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the report takes into consideration the broader development agenda and existing reporting mechanisms in order to avoid duplication.

Trade and Development Board action. The UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB), at its fifty-first session (Geneva, 4-15 October), adopted agreed conclusions [A/59/15 (agreed conclusions 479(LI))] on the review of progress in the implementation of the Brussels Programme of Action. Having considered The Least Developed Countries Report 2004: Linking International Trade with Poverty Reduction [Sales No. E.04.II.D.27], the Board noted with concern the lack of progress in LDCs towards achieving the international development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49] and the Programme of Action. It stressed the urgent need for development strategies that responded to the development needs of LDCs, including debt relief, enhanced ODA and investment flows, improved market access and a more conducive international trading regime, in addition to a conducive domestic macroeconomic framework in order to make international trade work for poverty reduction in LDCs. TDB emphasized the necessity for capacity-building in LDCs and recommended that, in order to enable the UNCTAD Special Programme on the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States to discharge effectively the tasks assigned to it, due consideration should be given to the outcomes of UNCTAD XI in the allocation of resources for the Programme for the 2006-2007 biennium.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2003/17 [YUN 2003, p. 868] and General Assembly resolution 58/228 [ibid., p. 870], the Secretary-General submitted a June report on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the LDCs for the Decade 2001-2010 [A/59/94-E/2004/77]. He described the overall situation in the LDCs and provided an overview of the implementation of the Programme of Action, including by the Office of the High Representative for the LDCs, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States (SIDS).

The Secretary-General said all LDCs that had not done so should articulate their strategy and programme for poverty reduction and sustainable growth and should expeditiously set up national forums to guide and monitor the implementation of the Brussels Programme of Action. LDCs should give special attention to infrastructure development and policies for the development of manufacturing and focus on selected sectors for expansion of their productive capacity and beneficial integration into the global economy. Developed countries should expedite the process of opening up markets for LDC products, and all development partners, particularly the donor countries, should endeavour to focus on the category of LDCs in their ODA policy and development support.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/486/Add.1], adopted resolution 59/244 without vote [agenda item 88 (a)].

Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 55/279 of 12 July 2001, in which it endorsed the Brussels Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010, and its resolutions 57/276 of 20 December 2002 and 58/228 of 23 December 2003 on the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries,

Reaffirming its resolution 55/2 of 8 September 2000, by which it adopted the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in particular paragraph 15 thereof, in which the Heads of State and Government undertook to address the special needs of the least developed countries,

Recognizing the importance of the review of the progress achieved towards meeting the goals and targets contained in the Programme of Action, as well as other internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, as they address the special needs of the least developed countries,

Taking note of the ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2004 of the Economic and Social Council on the theme "Resources mobilization and enabling environment for poverty eradication in the context of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010",

Taking note also of Economic and Social Council resolutions 2004/66 of 5 November 2004 on the smooth transition strategy for countries graduating from the list of least developed countries and 2004/67 of 5 November 2004 on the report of the Committee for Development Policy on its sixth session,

Taking note further of the Least Developed Countries Report, 2004,

Recognizing that the eradication of poverty in the least developed countries will require, inter alia, steps to empower the poor, unleash their entrepreneurial skills and allow them to access, develop and use their assets,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reiterates its deep concern over the weak implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010;

2. Urges the least developed countries and their bilateral and multilateral development partners to increase concerted efforts and speedy measures for meeting the goals and targets of the Programme of Action in a timely manner;

3. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to ensure at the secretariat level the full mobilization and coordination of all parts of the United Nations system to facilitate coordinated implementation as well as coherence in the follow-up to and monitoring of the Programme of Action at the national, regional, sub-regional and global levels, and in this context requests the Secretary-General to engage the United Nations Development Group's team leaders, consistent with their respective mandates, in the coordinated implementation of activities of the Programme of Action;

4. Invites the 2005 high-level event, in accordance with the modalities to be set by the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session, to address the special needs of the least developed countries, while reviewing the progress made in the achievement of internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration;

5. Decides to hold the comprehensive review of the Programme of Action in 2006 within the General Assembly during its sixty-first session, in accordance with paragraph 114 of the Programme of Action, bearing in mind the provisions of General Assembly resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, with modalities to be decided upon;

6. Decides also to consider at its sixtieth session the modalities for conducting such a comprehensive review;

7. Reiterates the critical importance of the participation of government representatives from the least developed countries in the annual review of the Programme of Action by the Economic and Social Council, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to establish a specific trust fund for the travel and subsistence of two representatives from each least developed country to attend the annual review of the Programme of Action; the trust fund should be funded by voluntary contributions;

8. Calls upon Member States, and invites intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the private sector, to make voluntary contributions to the trust fund;

9. Welcomes the decision of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its eleventh session to conduct analyses through the Least Developed Countries Report, 2004 on the causes of the decline in the share of least developed countries in world trade and the linkages between trade, growth and poverty reduction, with a view to identifying long-term solutions to the problem, as expressed in paragraph 34 of the São Paulo Consensus, and invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to conduct an analysis of the role that enterprise development can play in alleviating poverty in least developed countries and to recommend measures the Governments of least developed countries can take to promote the development of their private sector;

10. Emphasizes the importance of the effective implementation of Economic and Social Council resolution 2004/66 in order to support countries graduating from the list of least developed countries;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit an annual progress report on the implementation of the Programme of Action in an analytical and results-oriented way by placing emphasis on concrete results and indicating the progress achieved in its implementation.

Island developing States

During 2004, UN bodies continued to review progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (Barbados Programme of Action), adopted at the 1994 Global Conference on the subject [YUN 1994, p. 783]. Also, preparations proceeded for the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States. The International Meeting, originally scheduled to be held in Mauritius from 30 August to 3 September 2004, was deferred to 10 to 14 January 2005, at the request of the Government of Mauritius.

Commission on Sustainable Development action. The Commission on Sustainable Development, acting as the preparatory meeting for the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of SIDS, met in New York from 14 to 16 April [A/CONF.207/3].

In response to General Assembly resolutions 57/262 [YUN 2002, p. 848] and 58/213 A [YUN 2003, p. 873], the Secretary-General submitted an 11 March report on review of progress in the implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action [E/CN.17/2004/8], which offered an overall assessment of progress achieved through the efforts of SIDS, with the support of regional and international organizations, including UN agencies and the donor community. It concluded that progress in implementing the Programme of Action had been mixed and that SIDS still faced major challenges to their sustainable development, some of long standing and others of more recent origin. Key emerging challenges included those related to the implementation of effective strategies for poverty eradication and the pursuit of people-centred development, coping with the effects and the cost of international security threats on travel and tourism, the development of cultural industries and addressing urgently the growing problem of HIV/AIDS. Sustainable development financing mechanisms were needed, including through regional development banks, to cover the provision of energy and capacity development investments; direct assistance programmes for poverty alleviation; collective insurance in the face of climate change and increased vulnerability to natural disasters; technology transfer; programmes to assist the development and protection of traditional and indigenous knowledge; and the active exploration of ways to make more productive use of the natural and indigenous endowments of SIDS.

Also before the Commission was a March note by the Secretariat on accreditation of NGOs and other major groups to the International Meeting [E/CN.17/2004/9], to which a list of recommended NGOs and other major groups was appended. The Commission approved the requests for accreditation of the listed groups on 14 April. Additions to that list were submitted to the General Assembly by the Secretariat in a 4 October note [A/59/409 & Corr.1].

By a 26 March letter [E/CN.17/2004/12], Qatar transmitted to the Secretary-General the Alliance of Small Island States Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action, adopted by the Interregional Preparatory Meeting of SIDS for the International Meeting (Nassau, Bahamas, 26-30 January).

The Commission adopted two decisions by which it authorized the New Zealand Ambassador to continue his consultations with a view to reaching agreement on remaining pending issues for the preparations for the International Meeting [dec. 2004/1] and agreed to hold two-day informal consultations in Mauritius prior to the International Meeting [dec. 2004/2].

Communication. By a letter of 16 January [A/58/686], Seychelles transmitted the final report of the second Small Island Developing States of the Atlantic, Indian Ocean, Mediterranean and South China Seas Regional Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action, held in Mahé, Seychelles, from 8 to 10 January.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 June [meeting 90], the General Assembly adopted resolution 58/213 B [draft: A/58/L.63] without vote [agenda items 8 & 94 (d)].

Further implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 58/213 A of 23 December 2003, in which it decided to convene the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States from 30 August to 3 September 2004,

Recalling also the offer of the Government of Mauritius to host the International Meeting,

Taking note of the request by the Government of Mauritius to reschedule the International Meeting due to logistical considerations,

1. Decides to convene the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States from 10 to 14 January 2005;

2. Also decides to hold, if deemed necessary and taking into account paragraph 7 of its resolution 58/213 A, two days of informal consultations in Mauritius, on 8 and 9 January 2005, to facilitate the effective preparation of the International Meeting;

3. Takes note of the appointment of a Facilitator for the process of informal consultations, who will report progress thereon to the Bureau of the International Meeting, when constituted.

On 22 December [meeting 75], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/483/Add.2], adopted resolution 59/229 without vote [agenda item 85 (b)].

Further implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration of Barbados and the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, adopted by the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, and recalling also its resolution 49/122 of 19 December 1994 on the Global Conference,

Recalling also its resolutions 58/213 A of 23 December 2003 and 58/213 B of 10 June 2004,

Recalling with appreciation the offer by the Government of Mauritius to host the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States,

Welcoming the preparatory activities undertaken at the national, regional and international levels for the International Meeting,

1. Recalls its decision, in resolution 58/213 B, to convene the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States from 10 to 14 January 2005;

2. Decides to hold two days of informal consultations in Mauritius, on 8 and 9 January 2005, to facilitate the effective preparation of the International Meeting;

3. Urges that representation and participation at the International Meeting be at the highest possible level;

4. Takes note of the report of the Commission on Sustainable Development, acting as the preparatory meeting for the International Meeting;

5. Expresses its appreciation for the contributions made to the voluntary trust fund established for the purpose of assisting small island developing States to participate fully and effectively in the International Meeting and its preparatory process, as approved by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 2003/55 and decision 2003/283, and urges all Member States and organizations to contribute generously to the fund;

6. Decides that non-governmental organizations whose work is relevant to the subject of the International Meeting, which are not currently accredited to the Economic and Social Council and which submitted applications to participate as observers in the International Meeting by 31 October 2004, may participate as observers in the International Meeting, subject to the approval of the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session, and in this regard recalls that the participation of major groups, including non-governmental organizations, in the International Meeting shall be in accordance with rule 65 of the provisional rules of procedure of the International Meeting;

7. Stresses that strengthening of the Small Island Developing States Unit of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat has yet to take place, and in this regard reiterates its request to the Secretary-General, made in General Assembly resolution 57/262 of 20 December 2002 and resolution 58/213 A, to strengthen the Unit without delay and, within existing resources, to enable the Unit, including the Small Island Developing States Network, to undertake its broad range of mandated functions with a view to facilitating the full and effective implementation of the Declaration of Barbados and the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States and the outcomes of the International Meeting;

8. Invites the International Meeting to consider fully the modalities for strengthening the Small Island Developing States Unit, including the Small Island Developing States Network, to enable it to assist effectively in the implementation of the outcomes of the International Meeting;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session the report of the International Meeting, and decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixtieth session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development", a sub-item entitled "Further implementation of the outcome of the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States and follow-up to the outcomes of the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action".

In other action, the Assembly, by decision 59/534 of 22 December, approved the participation of NGOs listed in the 4 October note by the Secretariat (see p. 859) as observers to the International Meeting. On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on further implementation of the Programme of Action would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session (decision 59/552).

Landlocked developing countries

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 58/201 [YUN 2003, p. 877], the Secretary-General submitted a 5 August report [A/59/208] on the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries. The Programme of Action was adopted by the International Ministerial Conference of Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Donor Countries and International Financial and Development Institutions on Transit Transport Cooperation (Almaty, Kazakhstan) in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 875].

The report noted that UN system organizations had made concerted efforts to operationalize coordination and monitoring mechanisms for the implementation of the Programme of Action. One of the main results was the preparation of the road map towards the implementation of the Programme of Action, which would provide guidance to organizations within the UN system and other international, regional and sub-regional organizations in undertaking necessary actions in a focused and well-coordinated manner. The report stated that, since landlocked developing countries depended on their transit neighbours for access to and from the sea, the establishment of efficient transit systems required closer and more effective collaboration between those countries and their transit neighbours. Transit policy reforms aimed at enhancing the efficiency of transit operations and reducing transport costs, including the commercialization and liberalization of transport services and efforts to improve institutional, procedural, regulatory and managerial systems, should be further encouraged, as should competition between different modes of transport and between different transit corridors. A strong case could be made in respect of landlocked developing countries for giving high priority to financial and technical assistance for the improvement of the transport infrastructure and to the management and maintenance of existing facilities. Given the relative poverty and related development handicaps characteristic of landlocked developing countries, it was important that financial assistance to those countries be extended under the most generous terms possible. The international community should provide greater market access for goods originating in landlocked developing countries, taking into consideration the high transport costs associated with their remoteness from major world markets, their lack of access to the sea and their dependence on a very limited number of commodities.

The report recommended that UN system organizations and bodies and relevant international, regional and subregional organizations provide greater financial and technical assistance to landlocked and transit developing countries. UN organizations should take action to pool together their expertise and resources to better address the issue. Donor countries and international financial and development institutions were invited to make contributions to the trust fund established to facilitate the implementation of and follow-up to the Almaty conference.

Ministerial communiqués. On the occasion of UNCTAD XI (São Paulo, 13-18 June), the ministers of landlocked developing countries issued a communiqué [TD/409] in which they stressed that excessive transport costs created a major barrier to foreign markets and observed that the share of landlocked developing countries in international trade was on the decline. They invited UN system organizations and other international organizations to take measures to implement the Almaty Programme of Action. On 15 July [A/59/158], the Lao People's Democratic Republic called the attention of UN Member States to the communiqué.

On 1 October [A/C.2/59/2], the Lao People's Democratic Republic, as Chairman of the Group of Landlocked Developing Countries, transmitted to the Secretary-General the ministerial communiqué adopted at the Fifth Annual Ministerial Meeting of Landlocked Developing Countries (New York, 27 September).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/486/Add.2], adopted resolution 59/245 without vote [agenda item 88 (b)].

Specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of landlocked developing countries: outcome of the International Ministerial Conference of Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Donor Countries and International Financial and Development Institutions on Transit Transport Cooperation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 56/180 of 21 December 2001, 57/242 of 20 December 2002 and 58/201 of 23 December 2003,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in which Heads of State and Government recognized the particular needs and problems of landlocked developing countries and urged both bilateral and multilateral donors to increase financial and technical assistance to this group of countries to meet their particular development needs and to help them to overcome the impediments of geography by improving their transit transport systems, and resolved to create an environment, at the national and global levels alike, that is conducive to development and to the elimination of poverty,

Recognizing that the lack of territorial access to the sea, aggravated by remoteness from world markets, and prohibitive transit costs and risks impose serious constraints on export earnings, private capital inflow and domestic resource mobilization of landlocked developing countries and therefore adversely affect their overall growth and socio-economic development,

Recognizing also that landlocked developing countries, with their small and vulnerable economies, are among the poorest of developing countries, and noting that, of the thirty-one landlocked developing countries, sixteen are also classified by the United Nations as least developed countries,

Recalling the Almaty Declaration and the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries,

Recalling also the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD), an initiative for accelerating regional economic cooperation and development as most landlocked and transit developing countries are located in Africa,

Taking note of the ministerial communiqué adopted at the Fifth Annual Ministerial Meeting of Landlocked Developing Countries, held on 27 September 2004 at United Nations Headquarters,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action;

2. Reaffirms the right of access of landlocked countries to and from the sea and freedom of transit through the territory of transit countries by all means of transport, in accordance with applicable rules of international law;

3. Reaffirms also that transit countries, in the exercise of their full sovereignty over their territory, have the right to take all measures necessary to ensure that the rights and facilities provided for landlocked countries in no way infringe upon their legitimate interests;

4. Invites Member States, organizations of the United Nations system as well as other relevant international, regional and subregional organizations and multilateral financial and development institutions to implement the specific actions in the five priorities agreed upon in the Almaty Programme of Action;

5. Invites donor countries, the United Nations Development Programme and multilateral financial and development institutions to provide landlocked and transit developing countries with appropriate financial and technical assistance in the form of grants or concessional loans for the construction, maintenance and improvement of their transport, storage and other transit-related facilities, including alternative routes and improved communications, to promote sub-regional, regional and interregional projects and programmes, and, in this regard, to consider, inter alia, improving the availability and optimal use of different transport modes and intermodal efficiency along transport corridors;

6. Recognizes that most transit countries are themselves developing countries often of broadly similar economic structure and beset by similar scarcity of resources, including the lack of adequate transit transport infrastructure;

7. Emphasizes that assistance for the improvement of transit transport facilities and services should be integrated into the overall economic development strategies of the landlocked and transit developing countries and that donor countries should consequently take into account the requirements for the long-term restructuring of the economies of the landlocked developing countries;

8. Stresses the need for the implementation of the São Paulo Consensus adopted at the eleventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held in São Paulo, Brazil, from 13 to 18 June 2004, in particular paragraphs 66 and 84 thereof, by the relevant international organizations and donors in a multi-stakeholder approach, and emphasizes, in this regard, that the examination of issues relating to the trade of small, vulnerable economies, and the framing of responses to these trade-related issues to facilitate their fuller integration into the multilateral trading system should be actively pursued consistent with the Doha work programme, taking into consideration the particular needs of landlocked developing countries within a new global framework for transit transport cooperation for landlocked and transit developing countries;

9. Invites the relevant organizations of the United Nations system and other international organizations, including the regional commissions, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the World Bank, the World Customs Organization, the World Trade Organization and the International Maritime Organization, to integrate the Almaty Programme of Action into their relevant programmes of work, and encourages them to continue their support to the landlocked and transit developing countries, inter alia, through well-coordinated and coherent technical assistance programmes in transit transport;

10. Encourages the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in particular the Division for Services Infrastructure for Development and Trade Efficiency and the Special Programme on the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States to continue its technical assistance activities and analytical work related to transit transport cooperation between landlocked and transit developing countries;

11. Requests the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States of the Secretariat, in accordance with the mandate given by the General Assembly in its resolution 56/227 of 24 December 2001 and in the Almaty Programme of Action and the Almaty Declaration, to continue its co-operation and coordination with organizations within the United Nations system, particularly those engaged in operational activities on the ground in landlocked and transit developing countries to ensure effective implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action in line with General Assembly resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, and also requests the Office to continue to carry out advocacy work to mobilize international awareness and focus attention on the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action;

12. Requests, in this regard, the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures, within existing resources, to provide the Office with adequate resources so as to allow it to effectively carry out its added mandate as stipulated in the Almaty Programme of Action;

13. Invites donor countries and the international financial and development institutions to make voluntary contributions to the trust fund established by the Secretary-General to support the activities related to the follow-up to the implementation of the outcome of the Almaty International Ministerial Conference;

14. Invites the 2005 high-level event to address the special needs of the landlocked developing countries, within a new global framework for transit transport co-operation for landlocked and transit developing countries, in accordance with the modalities to be set by the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session, while assessing the progress achieved in the implementation of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixtieth session the item entitled "Specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of landlocked developing countries: outcome of the International Ministerial Conference of Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Donor Countries and International Financial and Development Institutions on Transit Transport Cooperation";

16. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session a report on the progress made in the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action.

Economies in transition

In response to General Assembly resolution 57/247 [YUN 2002, p. 852], the Secretary-General submitted a 26 August report [A/59/301] on progress made in integrating the economies in transition into the world economy. It examined the challenges that they faced and the advances made over the preceding two years, and analysed the current process of integration by tracing the progress of the economies in transition through the channels of trade in goods and services, and capital and labour flows, with particular attention to the role that the enlargement of the EU had played in some of those countries. It also provided a brief overview of recent macroeconomic developments.

The report concluded that the economies in transition had further integrated themselves into the global economy, which had, in turn, contributed to an acceleration of their transformation from planned to market economies. Progress had been achieved across all the dimensions of transition: liberalization of markets, institution-building, and upgrade of industrial capacity through trade and FDI, factor movements and the communication of economically useful knowledge and technology. However, progress was uneven across countries: in the Central European and Baltic States, integration of the eight countries into the EU had been a major success and a manifestation of their advancement. However, many countries in South-Eastern Europe and the smaller, low-income countries of CIS continued to experience difficulties and still needed international assistance to support growth and balance their resources in respect of achieving functioning structures.

Since integration was a political process, as well as an economic one, further progress required coordinated efforts among Governments, institutions, societies in those countries and international organizations, in order to ensure that the economies in transition increased their capacities to utilize their human, technological and natural resources.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/485/Add.5], adopted resolution 59/243 without vote [agenda item 87 (e)].

Integration of the economies in transition into the world economy

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 47/187 of 22 December 1992, 48/181 of 21 December 1993, 49/106 of 19 December 1994, 51/175 of 6 December 1996, 53/179 of 15 December 1998, 55/191 of 20 December 2000 and 57/247 of 20 December 2002,

Reaffirming also the need for the full integration of the countries with economies in transition into the world economy,

Welcoming the progress made in those countries towards market-oriented reforms and achieving macroeconomic and financial stability and economic growth, inter alia, through sound macroeconomic policies, good governance and the rule of law, and noting the need to sustain those positive trends,

Noting that in some economies in transition this progress has been slower, resulting in lower aggregate development levels and lower per capita income,

Stressing the importance of continued international assistance to countries with economies in transition to support their efforts towards market-oriented reforms, institution-building, infrastructure development and achieving macroeconomic and financial stability and economic growth, and to ensure that they are fully integrated into the world economy,

Recognizing, in particular, the need to enhance the capacity of those countries to utilize effectively the benefits of globalization, including those in the field of information and communication technologies, and to respond more adequately to its challenges,

Recognizing also the continuing need for favourable conditions for market access of exports from countries with economies in transition, in accordance with multilateral trade agreements,

Recognizing further the important role that foreign direct investment should play in those countries, and stressing the need to create an enabling environment, both domestically and internationally, to attract more foreign direct investment to those countries,

Recognizing the role that the private sector can play in the socio-economic development of those countries and their integration into the world economy, and stressing the importance of fostering a favourable environment for private investment and entrepreneurship,

Noting the aspiration of the countries with economies in transition towards the further development of regional and interregional cooperation,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Welcomes the measures taken by the organizations of the United Nations system to implement General Assembly resolutions on the integration of the economies in transition into the world economy;

2. Calls upon the organizations of the United Nations system, including the regional commissions, and invites the Bretton Woods institutions, in collaboration with relevant non-United Nations multilateral and regional institutions, to continue to conduct analytical activities and provide policy advice and targeted and substantial technical assistance to the Governments of the countries with economies in transition aimed at strengthening the social, legal and political framework for completing market-oriented reforms, supporting national development priorities with a view to sustaining the positive trends and reversing any declines in the economic and social development of those countries;

3. Emphasizes in this regard the importance of the further integration of the countries with economies in transition into the world economy, taking into account, inter alia, the relevant provisions of the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation");

4. Stresses the need to focus international assistance to countries with economies in transition on those facing particular difficulties in socio-economic development, implementing market-oriented reforms and meeting internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and welcomes efforts made by countries with economies in transition to improve governance and institutional capabilities in order to use aid more effectively;

5. Welcomes the efforts made by countries with economies in transition in implementing policies that promote sustained economic growth and sustainable development, including, inter alia, by promoting competition, regulatory reform, respect for property rights and expeditious contract enforcement, and calls upon the United Nations system to highlight the successful models as good practices;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Poor mountain countries

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/483/Add.8], adopted resolution 59/238 without vote [agenda item 85 (h)].

Rendering assistance to poor mountain countries to overcome obstacles in socio-economic and ecological areas

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/24 of 10 November 1998, by which it proclaimed 2002 the International Year of Mountains,

Recalling also its resolutions 55/189 of 20 December 2000, 57/245 of 20 December 2002 and 58/216 of 23 December 2003,

Recalling further the United Nations Millennium Declaration adopted on 8 September 2000,

Recalling chapter 13 of Agenda 21 and all relevant paragraphs of the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), in particular paragraph 42 thereof, as the overall policy frameworks for sustainable development in mountain regions,

Decides to consider at its sixtieth session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development", a sub-item entitled "Rendering assistance to poor mountain countries to overcome obstacles in socio-economic and ecological areas", bearing in mind its resolution 58/216.

Chapter II

Operational activities for development

In 2004, the UN system continued to provide development assistance to developing countries and countries with economies in transition through the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the central UN funding body for technical assistance. UNDP income in 2004 amounted to $4.2 billion, a 24 per cent increase over 2003. Total expenditure for all programme activities and support costs in 2004 was $3.6 billion, compared with $3.1 billion the previous year. Technical cooperation funded through other sources included $48.9 million provided through the programme executed by the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, $76.8 million through the United Nations Fund for International Partnerships, and $27.6 million through the United Nations Capital Development Fund.

The United Nations completed a triennial comprehensive policy review of UN system operational activities for development, which assessed the capacity of the UN development system to assist developing countries in pursuing poverty eradication, economic growth and sustainable development in the context of the follow-up to the 2000 United Nations Millennium Summit and major UN conferences and summits. Following the review, the Secretary-General called for actions to enhance the effectiveness of UN system development cooperation. In December, the General Assembly adopted a broad outline for future UN system development activities.

UNDP activities were organized under five practice areas: poverty reduction, fostering democratic governance, crisis prevention and recovery, energy and the environment, and responding to HIV/AIDS. UNDP made progress in gender mainstreaming and implemented a joint plan of action with the United Nations Development Fund for Women to achieve gender equality.

The United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) had a project delivery of $495.3 million, exceeding the amount forecasted for the year by 2 per cent. As part of an ongoing change management process, the UNDP/United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) Executive Board, in January, approved the expansion of the UNOPS mandate to allow it to cooperate directly with regional and subregional development banks on a pilot basis.

The United Nations Volunteer programme, administered by UNDP, expanded for the eighth consecutive year, with 7,300 volunteers carrying out 7,772 assignments in 139 countries.

In September, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board considered options for a future strategic niche and business model for the United Nations Capital Development Fund.

System-wide activities

Operational activities segment of Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council, at its 2004 substantive session [A/59/3], considered the question of operational activities of the United Nations for international development cooperation at meetings from 7 to 9 July, as decided by the Council on 4 February (decision 2004/205), and on 12 July. As also decided by the Council on 4 February (decision 2004/206), the theme for the operational activities segment was "Triennial comprehensive policy review of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system and the implementation of General Assembly resolution 56/201 and Council resolution 2003/3". The Council held discussions on the follow-up to the policy recommendations of the Assembly and the Council, including a high-level panel discussion on the international development agenda and the improvements of the operational activities of the UN system at the country level: effectiveness and challenges; and the reports of the Executive Boards of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)/United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the World Food Programme (WFP).

Among the documents before the Council were the Secretary-General's reports on comprehensive statistical data on operational activities for development for 2002 [A/59/84-E/2004/53], the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system [A/59/85-E/2004/68], and assessment of the value added of the joint meetings of the UNDP/UNFPA, UNICEF and WFP Executive Boards [E/2004/60] (see sections below).

On 8 July, the Council held a panel discussion on the role of the common country assessment (CCA) and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) and a dialogue with the heads of UN funds and programmes on key policy issues for the triennial comprehensive policy review.

Triennial policy review

A May report of the Secretary-General [A/59/85-E/2004/68] reviewed the implementation of General Assembly resolution 56/201 [YUN 2001, p. 784] on the triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system, focusing on the assessment of the capacity of the UN development system to assist developing countries to pursue their national priorities and needs in relation to poverty eradication, economic growth and sustainable development within the framework of the follow-up to major UN conferences and summits. To assist in the review, the Secretary-General would submit policy recommendations to the Assembly, following consideration of the report by the Economic and Social Council (see p. 867), drawing on the Council's deliberations.

The report stated that the 2004 triennial comprehensive policy review should take into account the reform measures undertaken by the Secretary-General in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1390] and 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1352] to increase the coherence and effectiveness of UN development cooperation by enhancing coordination and improving management practices, take stock of the shifting global trends and overall development dynamics affecting UN development cooperation, and provide guidance to the system to enable it to adjust to changes. The principal focus of the analysis contained in the report was on assessing the performance and effectiveness of UN development cooperation. The report discussed the effectiveness of and current challenges to UN development cooperation; challenges and new perspectives in funding UN development cooperation; UN reforms and field-level coordination; country-level capacity of the UN development system and development of national capacities; UN system operational activities for development in countries in transition from crisis to development; and partnership between the UN system and national development stakeholders and partners.

The report indicated that substantial progress had been made in bringing cohesion to the system at the country level and in aligning its operations with the development agenda emerging from major UN conferences and summits and, in particular, with the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51]. The system increasingly served as a catalyst for national dialogue among all stakeholders for implementing the MDGs, including within the framework of the UNDP poverty reduction strategy papers (PRSPs). The United Nations helped to build partnerships for action and devised accountability and monitoring instruments, including the MDG country reports. The evaluation of diagnostic and programming tools, including CCA and UNDAF, showed their potential, especially in terms of increased coherence, and highlighted the importance of a more integrated approach to national poverty reduction strategy frameworks. The UN reform processes created strong imperatives to work together, especially among the members of the United Nations Development Group (UNDG) and its Executive Committee. In many countries, the resident coordinator system increasingly functioned as a vibrant instrument with a common set of goals. Clear guidelines were issued on joint programming, and actual joint programmes were developed in such areas as HIV/AIDS, the protection of children and the advancement of women, while the adoption of results-based programming and management by a majority of organizations was helping to create a new culture of efficiency, effectiveness and accountability. Significant progress was also made in integrating reconstruction, rehabilitation and long-term development within a single strategic framework for peace-building and development.

Efforts to simplify and harmonize processes between organizations had yielded limited efficiencies, however, forcing UNDG to formulate a new work programme to accelerate those efforts, the implementation of which depended on further institutional changes and funding. The critical capacity of the system to make available relevant technical resources at the country and regional levels was constrained by the lack of real incentives and institutional reward systems to encourage the various entities to make their knowledge and expertise available to the resident coordinator system. A stronger commitment by all UN system organizations involved in operational activities for development to system-wide collaboration and the effective participation of all, including entities with no country offices, were key requirements for progress. In addition, stable, predictable funding commensurate with the programme priorities identified in CCA/UNDAF was needed. Efforts to improve internal coherence, simplification and efficiency within the UN system would not succeed without Member States reforming their funding practices to limit fragmentation, inconsistency and unnecessary competition for scarce resources. As long as funding arrangements for UN development activities remained inadequate, unstable and unpredictable, the UN development system would not be able to fully play its role in advancing comprehensive, durable development. The mismatch among funding levels, mechanisms and sustained efforts required to support countries in their implementation of the MDGs needed to be addressed.

The Secretary-General, in an April report [A/59/84-E/2004/53], issued to complement his report on progress in implementing resolution 56/201, provided detailed statistical data on resources channelled through the UN system organizations for 2002, which the Council noted on 12 July (decision 2004/232).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 12 July [meeting 33], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2004/5 [draft: E/2004/L.15] without vote [agenda item 3 (a)].

Triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration, which set out priorities and goals to be reached by the international community by 2015,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 47/199 of 22 December 1992, 50/120 of 20 December 1995, 53/192 of 15 December 1998 and 56/201 of 21 December 2001 on the triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 58/291 of 6 May 2004 entitled "Follow-up to the outcome of the Millennium Summit and integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields",

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolutions 2002/29 of 25 July 2002 and 2003/3 of 11 July 2003,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system and on the assessment of the value added of the joint meetings of the Executive Boards of the United Nations Development Programme/United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Food Programme,

Noting the importance of ensuring that the 2004 triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system contributes to the review of progress made in the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration and the outcomes of other United Nations summits and conferences,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, when finalizing his report on the triennial comprehensive policy review for submission to the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session, to take into account the views and comments of Member States on the issues relating to the operational activities for development discussed during the operational activities segment of the substantive session of 2004 of the Economic and Social Council and to make appropriate recommendations;

2. Invites the Secretary-General, in accordance with the coordination, guidance and oversight roles of the Council in the implementation by the United Nations system of the triennial policy review of operational activities, to make recommendations, when finalizing his report on the triennial comprehensive policy review, on the possible themes that could be discussed at the operational activities segment of the substantive sessions of the Council in 2005 and 2006, taking into account the necessary preparatory work for the following triennial policy review;

3. Invites the General Assembly to consider a concise and action-oriented resolution on the triennial comprehensive policy review, focusing on priority areas as determined by Member States.

Report of Secretary-General. In a September report [A/59/387], the Secretary-General provided a synopsis of the detailed analysis of the implementation of resolution 56/201 contained in his May report on the triennial comprehensive policy review (see p. 866). It took into account the views and comments of Member States at the operational activities segment of the Council's substantive session of 2004, as well as additional information provided by UN system organizations. The report was complemented by the reports of the Secretary-General on the comprehensive statistical data on operational activities for development for 2002 (see p. 865) and the preliminary statistical data for the year 2003 [A/59/386] (see p. 875). It also took into account the report of the Secretary-General on assessment of the value added of the joint meetings of the Executive Boards of UNDP/UNFPA, UNICEF, and WFP [E/2004/60] (see p. 878) and provided an overall analysis of progress on the 1997 and 2002 reform measures undertaken by the Secretary-General regarding UN development cooperation.

The report called for actions to enhance the effectiveness of the UN system development cooperation, strengthen coherence within a unified, nationally-owned development framework, ensure adequate use of all relevant capacities available, place greater emphasis on results and their evaluation, and translate internationally agreed development goals into national terms. It called for adequate funding and further reflection on funding arrangements, and for organizational and structural changes, including strengthening of the resident coordinator system. The system's country-level presence should be responsive to national priorities and needs, ensuring comprehensive support to dimensions that were key to a sustained and sustainable development effort. Intensified field-level coordination and participation of all relevant parts of the system, including those entities without country-level representation, were essential. Greater consideration should be given to the regional dimensions of development cooperation and to developing national capacities, as one of its key functions. Added emphasis should be placed on gender mainstreaming.

By decision 59/539 of 22 December, the General Assembly took note of the report of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on operational activities for development [A/59/488].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/488/Add.1], adopted resolution 59/250 without vote [agenda item 90 (b)].

Triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/211 of 22 December 1989, 47/199 of 22 December 1992, 50/120 of 20 December 1995, 52/203 of 18 December 1997, 52/12 B of 19 December 1997, 53/192 of 15 December 1998 and 56/201 of 21 December 2001, as well as Economic and Social Council resolutions 2002/29 of 25 July 2002, 2003/3 of 11 July 2003 and 2004/5 of 12 July 2004, and other relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming the importance of the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities, through which the General Assembly establishes key system-wide policy orientations for the development cooperation and country-level modalities of the United Nations system,

Recalling the role of the Economic and Social Council in providing coordination and guidance to the United Nations system to ensure that those policy orientations are implemented on a system-wide basis in accordance with Assembly resolutions 48/162 of 20 December 1993, 50/227 of 24 May 1996 and 57/270 B of 23 June 2003,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration of 8 September 2000, including the development and poverty eradication goals contained therein, and recalling further the International Conference on Financing for Development, held in Monterrey, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002, and the World Summit on Sustainable Development, held in Johannesburg, South Africa, from 26 August to 4 September 2002 and other major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields, and their importance for international development cooperation, in particular for the operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

Noting, in this context, the activities of the United Nations funds and programmes aimed at providing technical assistance to recipient countries, in response to their national economic and social needs and priorities, including poverty eradication and the promotion of all human rights, including the right to development, for achieving sustained economic growth and sustainable development in accordance with relevant General Assembly resolutions and recent United Nations conferences, and stressing the need for those activities to be undertaken at the request of interested recipient Governments strictly within the respective mandates of the United Nations funds and programmes, which should receive increased contributions from donor countries,

Recognizing that the transition from relief to development represents a complex challenge as regards the universal achievement of the MDGs,

Reiterating that developing countries are responsible for their own development processes, and in this context stressing the responsibility of the international community, in partnership, in assisting developing countries in their national development efforts,

Recognizing that the United Nations development system should take into account the specific needs and requirements of the countries with economies in transition and other recipient countries,

Recognizing also that new technologies, including information and communication technologies, present an opportunity to accelerate development, especially in developing countries, and noting that the access to those technologies is uneven and that a digital divide still prevails,

Reaffirming the need to ensure, in a coherent and timely manner, the full implementation of all the elements of its resolutions 44/211, 47/199, 50/120, 53/192 and 56/201 and the parts of its resolution 52/12 B relevant to operational activities for development, which should be considered an integral part of the present resolution,

Reiterating the importance of the development of national capacities to eradicate poverty and pursue sustained economic growth and sustainable development as a central goal of the development cooperation of the United Nations system,

Recognizing that new trends in development assistance, including sector-wide approaches and budget support, pose challenges to the United Nations, and stressing that the United Nations has a role to play in assisting developing countries to manage the new aid modalities,

Noting the advances that the United Nations development system is making in the area of coordination, including in the implementation of resolution 56/201,

Encouraging the governing bodies of United Nations agencies, funds and programmes to ensure that gender perspectives are integrated into all aspects of their monitoring functions in relation to policies and strategies, medium-term plans, multi-year funding frameworks and operational activities, including those relating to the implementation of the Millennium Declaration and the outcomes of major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields,

I

Introduction

1. Takes note with appreciation of the reports of the Secretary-General on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system;

2. Reaffirms that the fundamental characteristics of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system should be, inter alia, their universal, voluntary and grant nature, their neutrality and their multilateralism, as well as their ability to respond to the development needs of recipient countries in a flexible manner, and that the operational activities are carried out for the benefit of recipient countries, at the request of those countries and in accordance with their own policies and priorities for development;

3. Urges all Member States to pursue the full implementation of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and recognizes the positive contribution that these can make in providing direction to the operational activities for development of the United Nations system in accordance with national development efforts and priorities;

4. Recognizes that the strength of the United Nations operational system lies in its legitimacy, at the country level, as a neutral, objective and trusted partner for both recipient countries and donor countries;

5. Stresses that national Governments have the primary responsibility for their countries' development, and recognizes the importance of national ownership of development programmes;

6. Emphasizes that recipient Governments have the primary responsibility for coordinating, on the basis of national strategies and priorities, all types of external assistance, including that provided by multilateral organizations, in order to integrate effectively such assistance into their development process;

7. Emphasizes also that the operational activities for development of the United Nations system should be valued and assessed on the basis of their impact on the recipient countries as contributions to enhance their capacity to pursue poverty eradication, sustained economic growth and sustainable development;

8. Calls upon the United Nations development system to highlight best practices, where these can inform national efforts to implement policies that promote sustained economic growth and sustainable development, inter alia, through the rule of law and the strengthening of effective, efficient, transparent and accountable systems for mobilizing resources;

9. Decides that, with the agreement of the host country, the United Nations development system should assist national Governments in creating an enabling environment in which the links between national Governments, the United Nations development system, civil society, national non-governmental organizations and the private sector that are involved in the development process are strengthened, with a view to seeking new and innovative solutions to development problems in accordance with national policies and priorities;

10. Stresses that the purpose of reform is to make the United Nations development system more efficient and effective in its support to developing countries to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, on the basis of their national development strategies, and stresses also that reform efforts should enhance organizational efficiency and achieve concrete development results;

11. Requests the organizations of the United Nations system to continue their efforts to respond to national development plans, policies and priorities, which constitute the only viable frame of reference for programming their operational activities at the country level, and to pursue full integration of the operational activities for development at the country-level with national planning and programming, under the leadership of national Governments, at all stages of the process, while ensuring the full involvement of all relevant stakeholders at the national level;

12. Welcomes the efforts of the Secretary-General, through the members of the United Nations Development Group and the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination, as appropriate, to enhance the coherence, effectiveness and efficiency of the United Nations development system at the country level;

13. Recognizes that strengthening the role and capacity of the United Nations development system to assist countries in achieving their development goals requires continuing improvement in its effectiveness, efficiency, coherence and impact, along with a significant increase in resources and an expansion of its resource base on a continuous, more predictable and assured basis;

II

Funding for operational activities for development of the United Nations system

14. Emphasizes that increasing financial contributions to the United Nations development system is key to achieving the MDGs, and in this regard recognizes the mutually reinforcing links between increased effectiveness, efficiency and coherence of the United Nations development system, achieving concrete results in assisting developing countries to eradicate poverty and achieve sustained economic growth and sustainable development through operational activities for development and the overall resourcing of the United Nations development system;

15. Emphasizes also that funding of operational activities for development of the United Nations system should focus on long-term development challenges based on national development strategies;

16. Notes with concern that the United Nations development system has not benefited commensurately from recent increases in official development assistance, despite the additional tasks entrusted to the United Nations system in the implementation of and follow-up to internationally agreed goals;

17. Stresses that core resources, because of their untied nature, continue to be the bedrock of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, and in this regard notes with appreciation that core contributions to United Nations funds and programmes have begun to increase again over the last three years;

18. Calls upon donor countries and other countries in a position to do so to substantially increase their contributions to the core/regular budgets of the United Nations development system, in particular its funds and programmes, and wherever possible, to contribute on a multi-year basis;

19. Urges developed countries that have not yet done so to make concrete efforts to reach the targets of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product as official development assistance to developing countries and

0.15 to 0.20 per cent of their gross national product to least developed countries, as reconfirmed at the Third United Nations Conference on Least Developed Countries, held in Brussels from 14 to 20 May 2001, encourages developing countries to build on progress achieved in ensuring that official development assistance is used effectively to help to achieve development goals and targets, acknowledges the efforts of all donors, commends those donors whose official development assistance contributions exceed, reach or are increasing towards the targets, and underlines the importance of undertaking to examine the means and time frames for achieving the targets and goals;

20. Notes the increase in non-core resources as a mechanism to supplement the means of operational activities for development of the United Nations system, which contributes to an increase in total resources, while recognizing that non-core resources are not a substitute for core resources and that unearmarked contributions are vital for the coherence and harmonization of the operational activities for development;

21. Invites the governing bodies of all organizations of the United Nations development system to address systematically the funding of their operational activities and to explore, within the context of their multi-year planning and related financial frameworks, where appropriate, additional sources of financial support and alternative funding modalities so as to secure, on a predictable, continuous and sustained basis, the critical mass of resources required to ensure adequate functioning and pursuit of long-term development objectives;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to improve his annual statistical compendium to the operational activities segment of the Economic and Social Council by adding a multi-year perspective, fully incorporating available information and statistics;

23. Requests the Economic and Social Council to undertake triennially, as of 2006, a comprehensive review of trends and perspectives in funding for development cooperation;

24. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with Member States, to explore various funding options for increasing financing for operational activities for development of the United Nations system and to examine ways to enhance the predictability, long-term stability, reliability and adequacy of funding for the operational activities for development, including through the identification of possible new funding sources, as a follow-up to his report, while preserving the advantages of the current funding modalities, and to submit a report to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session in 2005;

25. Recognizes the urgent and specific needs of low-income countries, in particular the least developed countries, and stresses the need to continue to assist those countries through the existing institutions and funding mechanisms of the United Nations development system;

III Capacity-building

26. Recognizes that capacity development and ownership of national development strategies are essential for the achievement of the MDGs, and calls upon United Nations organizations to provide further support to the efforts of developing countries to establish and/or maintain effective national institutions and to support the implementation and, as necessary, the devising of national strategies for capacity-building;

27. Urges all organizations of the United Nations development system to intensify inter-agency sharing of information at the system-wide level on good practices and experiences gained, results achieved, benchmarks and indicators, monitoring and evaluation criteria concerning their capacity-building activities;

28. Encourages all organizations of the United Nations development system to include reporting on their capacity-building activities in their annual reports to their respective governing bodies;

29. Requests the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination to analyse the capacity development efforts of the United Nations development system and to make recommendations on measures necessary to enhance their effectiveness, including through the improvement of the assessment and measurement of results;

30. Calls upon United Nations organizations to further strengthen the capacity of developing countries to better utilize the various aid modalities, including system-wide approaches and budget support;

31. Also calls upon United Nations organizations to adopt measures that ensure sustainability in capacity-building activities, and reiterates that the United Nations development system should use, to the fullest extent possible, national execution and available national expertise and technologies as the norm in the implementation of operational activities;

32. Stresses that developing countries, in order to meet the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, should have access to new and emerging technologies, including information and communication technologies, which requires technology transfer, technical cooperation and the building and nurturing of scientific and technological capacity to participate in the development and adaptation of these technologies to local conditions, and in this regard urges Member States and the United Nations system to ensure the promotion and transfer of new and emerging technologies to developing countries;

33. Encourages the United Nations development system to support the national development strategies and plans of countries with economies in transition that face continuing difficulties in economic and social development, specifically to assist them in addressing the challenges of achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration;

IV

Transaction costs and efficiency

34. Invites the governing bodies of all organizations of the United Nations system actively involved in development cooperation activities and their respective management to adopt harmonization and simplification measures, with a view to achieving a significant reduction in the administrative and procedural burden on the organizations and their national partners that derives from the preparation and implementation of operational activities;

35. Notes the progress achieved in the area of simplification and harmonization as defined in section VI of resolution 56/201, with the assistance of the United Nations Development Group, and calls upon the funds, programmes and the specialized agencies of the United Nations system to continue to implement the simplification and harmonization agenda by taking further steps to enhance and ensure the sustainability of that process;

36. Requests the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system to examine ways to further simplify their rules and procedures and, in this context, to accord the issue of simplification and harmonization high priority and to take concrete steps in the following areas: rationalization of country presence through common premises and co-location of members of United Nations country teams; implementation of the joint office model; common shared support services, including security, information technology, telecommunications, travel, banking and administrative and financial procedures, including for procurement; harmonization of the principles of cost recovery policies, including that of full cost recovery; alignment of the regional technical support structures and regional bureaux at headquarters level, including their regional coverage; as well as further simplification and harmonization measures;

37. Requests the Secretary-General, in full consultation with all members of the United Nations Development Group, through the Executive Committee of the Development Group, to submit to the Economic and Social Council, at its substantive session of 2005, a programme of work for the full implementation of the above-mentioned actions, to be completed before the end of 2007, including benchmarks, responsibilities and provisions to phase out redundant rules and procedures, as well as a timetable to monitor the progress made towards meeting these targets;

38. Invites the executive boards and governing bodies of the funds, programmes and specialized agencies to assess regularly the progress achieved in the area of simplification and harmonization of rules and procedures;

39. Requests the funds and programmes to provide, in their annual reports to the Economic and Social Council, specific information on the progress achieved in implementing the above-mentioned agenda;

40. Requests the United Nations Development Group to consult regularly with the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination on all activities undertaken to implement the above;

Coherence, effectiveness and relevance of operational activities for development

A. Common country assessment/United Nations Development Assistance Framework

41. Requests the United Nations system to conduct the common country assessment and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework processes as efforts to improve the support for national development priorities and policies, and stresses that full governmental ownership, participation and leadership is required at all stages of those processes;

42. Welcomes the efforts made so far by the United Nations system in the context of the improved functioning of the resident coordinator system, including through the common country assessment and the Framework, in order to achieve greater country-level programmatic coherence within the system and to foster teamwork among the organizations of the system, in particular those represented at the country level;

43. Recognizes that, in spite of these efforts, participation of the funds, programmes and agencies of the United Nations development system in country-level operational activities for development and coordination mechanisms still differs in level, quality and intensity, and that for some organizations it is inadequate, and in this context calls upon the United Nations development system to improve its country-level coordination so as to optimize its support to national development efforts, at the request of national authorities;

44. Calls upon the United Nations system to draw from its accumulated experience in all pertinent economic, social and other domains and to facilitate the access of developing countries to the services available within the system on the basis of its comparative advantages and expertise;

45. Calls upon the United Nations development system to foster an inclusive approach in promoting inter-agency collaboration, both at the country and headquarters levels, and requests the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination, in collaboration with the United Nations Development Group, to take the necessary steps to secure a more participatory involvement of the United Nations development system in the country-level operations and their coordination mechanisms, including through promotion, decentralization, the delegation of authority and multi-year programming, which will facilitate their participation in country-level coordination mechanisms;

46. Stresses the importance of the common country assessment as the common analytical tool of the United Nations system at the country level, including the specialized agencies, the regional commissions and other United Nations agencies with no country representation or limited country-level presence, which should contribute their accumulated analytical and normative experience so as to enable the use of all capacities available within the United Nations system;

47. Notes the progress made by the United Nations operational system in developing and using the common country assessment, and stresses that the formulation of the assessment is meant to be short, light and flexible;

48. Underlines the complementarity of the common country assessment to other analytical processes, and urges all funds, programmes and agencies to avoid duplication by utilizing, to the maximum extent possible, the common country assessment as their own country-level analytical tool;

49. Reiterates that the ownership and full participation of national authorities in the preparation and development of the Framework are key to guaranteeing that it responds to the national development plans and poverty reduction strategies of the countries concerned, and requests the Secretary-General to develop the Framework and its results matrix where applicable, as the common programming tool for country-level contributions of the funds and programmes towards achieving the MDGs, to be fully endorsed and counter-signed by the national authorities;

50. Notes the potential of the Framework and its results matrix as the collective, coherent and integrated programming and monitoring framework for the operations of the United Nations development system at the country level, bringing increased opportunities for joint initiatives, including joint programming, and urges the United Nations development system to fully utilize such opportunities in the interest of enhancing aid efficiency and aid effectiveness;

51. Requests the Secretary-General, through the Executive Committee of the United Nations Development Group, in consultation with the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination, to ensure that United Nations Development Group agencies with multi-year programmes as well as the entities of the Secretariat that carry out operational activities in pursuit of the MDGs, fully align their respective programming and monitoring with the Framework, as well as take further steps to harmonize their programming cycles and to synchronize them as far as possible with the national programming instruments, in particular the national poverty reduction strategies, including poverty reduction strategy papers, where they exist;

52. Invites the United Nations system and the Bretton Woods institutions to explore further ways to enhance cooperation, collaboration and coordination, including through the greater harmonization of strategic frameworks, instruments, modalities and partnership arrangements, in full accordance with the priorities of the recipient Governments, and in this regard emphasizes the importance of ensuring, under the leadership of national authorities, greater consistency between the strategic frameworks developed by the United Nations funds and programmes, agencies and the Bretton Woods institutions, while maintaining the institutional integrity and organizational mandates of each organization and the national poverty reduction strategies, including poverty reduction strategy papers, where they exist;

B. Resident coordinator system and United Nations country teams

53. Reaffirms that the resident coordinator system, within the framework of national ownership, has a key role to play in the effective and efficient functioning of the United Nations system at the country level, including in the formulation of the common country assessment and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, and is a key instrument for the efficient and effective coordination of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, and requests the United Nations system, including the funds and programmes, the specialized agencies and the Secretariat, to enhance support to the resident coordinator system;

54. Urges the United Nations system to provide further financial, technical and organizational support for the resident coordinator system, and requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the members of the United Nations Development Group to ensure that resident coordinators have the necessary resources to fulfil their role effectively;

55. Welcomes the improvements in the selection process and training of the resident coordinators, and urges the members of the Executive Committee of the United Nations Development Group, in full consultation with the members of the Development Group, to develop a procedure for the common assessment of the performance of resident coordinators by all members of the United Nations country teams;

56. Notes that coordination activities, while beneficial, represent transaction costs that are borne by both recipient countries and the organizations of the United Nations system, and emphasizes the need for their continuous evaluation and for an analysis and assessment of costs compared with the total programme expenditures for operational activities for development in order to ensure maximum efficiency and feasibility;

57. Reaffirms that the utilization of advanced information and communication technologies by the United Nations system could contribute to enhanced information-sharing and knowledge management, resulting in more effective delivery of development co-operation by the United Nations system, and encourages United Nations organizations to intensify their efforts to expand the use of information and communication technologies and to further harmonize their information technology platforms;

58. Requests the Secretary-General, in full consultation with all agencies of the United Nations Development Group and the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination, as appropriate, to develop, by the end of 2005, a comprehensive accountability framework for resident coordinators to exercise oversight of the design and implementation of the Framework, in a fully participatory manner, in support and under the leadership of national Governments;

59. Underscores the fact that the resident coordinator system is owned by the United Nations development system as a whole and that its functioning should be participatory, collegial and accountable;

60. Also underscores the fact that the management of the resident coordinator system continues to be firmly anchored in the United Nations Development Programme, while recognizing that many resident coordinators, especially in countries with large country teams, complex coordination situations or in situations of complex emergencies, lack the capacity to address equally well all tasks inherent to their functions, and in this regard requests that in such cases the United Nations Development Programme appoint, within the existing programming arrangement, a country director to run its core activities, including fund-raising, so as to assure that resident coordinators are fully available for their tasks;

61. Requests that, when raising funds, resident coordinators concentrate on raising funds for the whole of the United Nations at the country level;

VI

Country-level capacity of the United Nations system

62. Reaffirms the principle, as contained in resolutions 44/211 and 47/199, that the country-level presence of the United Nations system should be tailored to meet the specific development needs of recipient countries, as required by their country programmes;

63. Emphasizes the need for the range and level of skills and expertise assembled by the United Nations system at the country level to be commensurate with that needed to deliver on the priorities specified in each country's United Nations Development Assistance Framework, in line with the national development strategies and plans, including poverty reduction strategy papers, where they exist, and to correspond to the technical backstopping and capacity-building needs and requirements of the developing countries;

64. Stresses the principle that no core function of the Secretariat can be outsourced to operational bodies, in particular at the field level, without proper financial compensation;

65. Invites the governing bodies of the organizations of the United Nations development system to consider means to strengthen their country-level capacities, including through complementary measures at their headquarters;

Evaluation of operational activities for development

66. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to assess the effectiveness of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, including, in particular, by assessing the effective use of all capacities available to provide a comprehensive and flexible response to the demand of developing countries for development support, and to report on the results of this assessment in the context of the next triennial policy review at its sixty-second session;

67. Reaffirms that the effectiveness of operational activities should be assessed by their impact on the poverty eradication efforts, economic growth and sustainable development of recipient countries;

68. Underlines the fact that future assessments of the effectiveness of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system should make full use of the data and expertise available within the system and from national authorities in full collaboration with national stakeholders and United Nations entities;

69. Recognizes the need to optimize the linking of evaluation to performance in the achievement of development goals, and encourages the United Nations development system to strengthen its evaluation activities, with particular focus on development results, including through the effective use of the results matrix of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, the systematic use of monitoring and evaluation approaches at the system-wide level and the promotion of collaborative approaches to the evaluation, including joint evaluations, and further encourages the United Nations Evaluation Group, under the aegis of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination, to make further progress in system-wide collaboration on evaluation, in particular harmonization and simplification of methodologies, norms, standards and cycles of evaluation;

70. Strongly encourages country-level evaluations of the Framework at the end of the programming cycle, based on the results matrix of the Framework, with full participation and leadership of the recipient Government;

71. Recognizes that national Governments have primary responsibility for coordinating external assistance, including that from the United Nations system, and evaluating the impact of its contribution to national priorities;

72. Requests the United Nations development system to conduct evaluations of its operations at the country level, in close consultation with national Governments, and in this context stresses the need to assist Governments in the development of national evaluation capacities through, inter alia, better use of lessons learned from past activities at the country level;

73. Also requests the United Nations development system to consider, where appropriate, applying lessons learned in the course of monitoring and evaluation to programming processes;

74. Stresses the need for all organizations of the United Nations development system to implement their global, regional and country-level activities in accordance with their mandates and the priorities of the recipient countries, urges their governing bodies to ensure that the activities, responsibilities and operational strategies of each fund and programme are consistent with their mandates and the overall policy guidance set forth by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council and to report on these issues within the context of the annual reports submitted to the Council, and requests the Secretary-General to include an assessment of these issues in the report on the triennial comprehensive policy review prepared for the sixty-second session of the General Assembly;

75. Requests that the United Nations Development Programme conduct full consultation with the Member States prior to issuing global and regional flagship reports, in accordance with, inter alia, the principles contained in General Assembly resolution 57/264 of 20 December 2002;

VIII

Regional dimensions

76. Calls upon the organizations of the United Nations development system, its regional commissions and other regional and subregional entities, as appropriate and consistent with their mandates, to intensify their cooperation and adopt more collaborative approaches to support country-level development initiatives at the request of recipient countries, in particular through closer collaboration within the resident coordinator system and by improving mechanisms for access to the technical capacities of the United Nations system at the regional and subregional levels;

77. Invites the governing bodies of the organizations of the United Nations development system to give greater and more systematic consideration to the regional and subregional dimensions of development cooperation and to promote measures for more intensive inter-agency collaboration at the regional and subregional levels, facilitating inter-country exchanges of experience and promoting both intraregional and interregional cooperation, as appropriate;

78. Encourages development agencies of the United Nations system to seek to maximize the opportunity to address development challenges on a regional or subregional basis, where appropriate, recognizing the important contribution of regional cooperation to national and regional development;

IX

South-South cooperation and development of national capacities

79. Welcomes the growing importance of South-South cooperation and its adoption as a driver of development effectiveness within the multi-year funding framework of the United Nations Development Programme;

80. Urges organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to mainstream, in their programmes and through their country-level activities and country offices, modalities to support South-South cooperation that would promote identification and dissemination of best practices, promote indigenous knowledge, know-how and technology in the South and facilitate networking among experts and institutions in developing countries;

81. Invites Member States and the organizations of the United Nations development system to celebrate the United Nations Day for South-South Cooperation in a befitting and comprehensive manner every year;

82. Emphasizes the need to mobilize additional resources for enhancing South-South cooperation, including from both the United Nations system and donors, and through triangular cooperation;

83. Urges all Member States and the organizations of the United Nations development system to actively participate in the High-Level Committee on the Review of South-South Cooperation with a view to formulating and reviewing the strategies as well as sharing information and their experience;

84. Encourages, in this regard, United Nations funds and programmes, the specialized agencies as well as centres of excellence in the South to contribute to the periodic updating of the Web of Information for Development, the electronic databank operated by the Special Unit for South-South Cooperation of the United Nations Development Programme in coordination with Governments, allowing for the wide diffusion of and access to the information contained therein, including experiences, best practices and potential partners in South-South cooperation;

85. Highlights the fact that, in spite of progress achieved in this area, further efforts are required to better understand the approaches and potential of South-South cooperation to enhance development effectiveness, including through national capacity development, and in this context calls upon all the organizations of the system to further enhance their support for national capacity development in the context of South-South cooperation;

86. Calls upon all organizations of the United Nations system, within their organizational mandates, to mainstream a gender perspective and to pursue gender equality in their country programmes, planning instruments and sector-wide programmes and to articulate specific country-level goals and targets in this field in accordance with the national development strategies;

87. Urges all organizations of the system to collaborate with the resident coordinator system to provide gender specialist resources in support of gender mainstreaming in country-level activities in all sectors where they operate, working closely with relevant national counterparts in generating the gender disaggregated, quantitative and qualitative information required to produce better analysis of gender-related issues of development;

88. Requests all entities of the United Nations system to enhance the effectiveness of gender specialist resources, gender focal points and gender theme groups by establishing clear mandates, by ensuring adequate training, access to information and to adequate and stable resources, and by increasing the support and participation of senior staff;

89. Calls upon the United Nations development system to avail itself of the technical experience of the United Nations Development Fund for Women on gender issues;

90. Encourages the continuing efforts to achieve gender balance in appointments within the United Nations system at the headquarters and country levels in positions that affect operational activities, including resident coordinator appointments, with due regard to representation of women from developing countries and keeping in mind the principle of equitable geographic representation;

91. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the annual report on resident coordinators includes adequate and concise information on progress on the above;

XI

Transition from relief to development

92. Takes note of the ongoing work within the United Nations on the complex issue of transition from relief to development;

93. Recognizes that the United Nations development system has a vital role to play in situations of transition from relief to development;

94. Requests the organizations of the system to strengthen interdepartmental and inter-agency coordination to ensure an integrated, coherent and coordinated approach to assistance at the country level, which takes account of the complexity of challenges that countries in those circumstances face and the country-specific character of those challenges;

95. Recognizes, in this regard, the important role that the effective resident coordinator/humanitarian coordinator system can play in situations of transition from relief to development;

96. Stresses, in this regard, the need for such transitional activities to be undertaken under national ownership through the development of national capacities at all levels to manage the transition process;

97. Recognizes the benefits of sharing experience and expertise, and encourages the development of South-South cooperation modalities, including triangular cooperation modalities, to assist the transition from relief to development through, inter alia, the use of information technologies and knowledge management systems, as well as exchange of expertise to enable countries in that situation to benefit from the experience of other developing countries;

98. Urges the donor countries and other countries in a position to do so to consider more coordinated and flexible approaches to funding operational activities for development in situations of transition from relief to development, making use of multiple resource mobilization instruments, and stresses that contributions to humanitarian assistance should not be provided at the expense of development assistance and that sufficient resources for humanitarian assistance should be made available by the international community;

99. Urges United Nations agencies and the donor community, in coordination with the national authorities, to begin planning the transition to development and taking measures supportive of that transition, such as institutional and capacity-building, from the beginning of the relief phase;

XII Follow-up

100. Reaffirms that the governing bodies of the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system should take appropriate actions for the full implementation of the present resolution, in line with paragraphs 91 and 92 of resolution 56/201;

101. Requests the Secretary-General, after consultation with the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, to submit a report to the Economic and Social Council, at its substantive session of 2005, on an appropriate management process, containing clear guidelines, targets, benchmarks and time frames for the full implementation of the present resolution;

102. Invites the Economic and Social Council, during the operational activities segment of its substantive session of 2006, to examine the operational activities of the United Nations system in order to evaluate the implementation of the present resolution with a view to ensuring its full implementation;

103. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council, a comprehensive analysis of the implementation of the present resolution in the context of the triennial policy review, inter alia, by making use of relevant documentation, and to make appropriate recommendations.

Financing of operational activities in 2003

Expenditures of the UN system on operational activities, excluding loans through the World Bank Group, totalled $9.7 billion in 2003 [A/59/386], the most recent year for which figures were available (compared with $7.3 billion in 2002). Of that amount, $2,411.5 million was distributed in development grants by UNDP and UNDP-administered funds, $1,992.1 million by specialized agencies and other organizations from extrabudgetary sources, $3,275.3 million by WFP, $1,208.1 million by UNICEF, $518.2 million by specialized agencies and other organizations from regular budgets, and $272.9 million from UNFPA.

The UNDP Administrator, in an August report on UN system technical cooperation expenditures in 2003 [DP/2004/37 & Add.1], said that the unprecedented $9.7 billion in technical cooperation to the developing world, a 31.7 per cent increase over 2002, was the highest level of expenditure in the last decade, attributable to, among other factors, the response to the humanitarian situation in Iraq in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 936]. Expenditure increases were posted by WFP of 105.7 per cent (at $3.3 billion); UNICEF, 15.7 per cent (at $1.3 billion); and specialized agencies, funds and programmes, 11.5 per cent (at $2.5 billion). Only UNFPA registered a decline of 12.7 per cent (at $273 million).

By region, Africa was the largest recipient (28.2 per cent, or $2.7 billion), followed by the Arab States (27.5 per cent, or $2.6 billion), Asia and the Pacific (17.2 per cent, or $1.7 billion), Latin America and the Caribbean (15.6 per cent, or $1.5 billion), and Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) (4.6 per cent, or $446 million). Other global and interregional activities received 6.9 per cent, or $669 million. Four countries received one quarter of the total technical cooperation expenditure: Iraq ($1.5 billion), Afghanistan ($359 million), Ethiopia ($323 million) and Brazil ($258 million). The health and humanitarian assistance sectors together accounted for 48.1 per cent of total, or $4.6 billion. Humanitarian assistance alone increased 97.6 per cent, to $2.9 billion, from $1.5 billion in 2002.

On 24 September [E/2004/35 (dec. 2004/41)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took note of the Administrator's report on technical cooperation expenditure for 2003.

At the 2004 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (New York, 11 November) [A/CONF.208/2004/3], Governments made pledges to UN programmes and funds concerned with development. The Conference noted that several Governments would communicate their pledges to the Secretary-General as soon as they were able to do so.

The Secretary-General provided a statement of contributions pledged or paid at the 2003 Pledging Conference, as at 30 June 2004, to 21 funds and programmes [A/CONF.208/2004/2]. The total amounted to some $1.5 billion.

World Solidarity Fund

On 8 July, during the operational activities segment of the Economic and Social Council's substantive session for 2004 [meeting 29], the UNDP Administrator updated delegations on developments with regard to the World Solidarity Fund, established in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 889] as a UNDP trust fund for the eradication of poverty and the promotion of social and human development in developing countries. He reported that Tunisia and UNDP had invited prospective members of the High-level Committee established for the Fund and had received seven acceptances. At the time of the meeting, however, the Fund had as yet no financial resources, and he counted on the High-level Committee to provide assistance in that regard.

Technical cooperation through UNDP

The report of UNDP on its performance and results for 2004 in implementation of the multi-year funding framework (MYFF) for 2004-2007 [DP/2005/16] described the key messages and conclusions on performance that emerged from analysis of reports on country office results and other data on activities. It provided analysis against strategic performance indicators; qualitative analysis of results by practice; a summary of results in building organizational capacities, promoting efficiency and enhancing accountability; and aggregate information on the use of financial resources. The report also presented two aspects of UNDP contributions to development: the rates of achievement of annual targets set by country offices towards intended programme outcomes and the extent to which UNDP promoted the drivers of development effectiveness.

By four key performance measures, the report assessed the extent of UNDP strategic focus. It indicated that demand for UNDP support and concentration of activity, as measured by intended outcomes, centred on five practices: reducing human poverty; fostering democratic governance; energy and environment for sustainable development; crisis prevention and recovery; and responding to HIV/AIDS. More than 90 per cent of programme countries sought support for the first three practices, 71 per cent for the fourth and 59 per cent for the fifth. At the regional level, the largest areas of UNDP support across all regions continued to be in poverty reduction and democratic governance. Almost 90 per cent of countries in Asia and the Pacific benefited from support in crisis prevention and recovery, compared to 50 to 60 per cent for other regions, while support in HIV/AIDS response was highest in Africa, followed by Asia and the Pacific. As to strategic interventions, the number of intended outcomes being pursued per country varied from 12 to 17; country programmes concentrated on 11 service lines on average, indicating that, of 30 such lines provided to respond to country demands across five regions, country offices focused on just one third of possible thematic options available in the MYFF. The degree of convergence of programme outcomes with core results was found to be strong in 91 country offices, moderate in 12 and weak in 24. Total programme expenditure within thematic priorities as a proportion of all programme expenditures was just over $2.43 billion, of which about 92 per cent (or about $2.23 billion) was spent in pursuing results within the practices and service lines of the MYFF, 2004-2007—in marked contrast to the 79 per cent spent within the focus areas of the MYFF, 2000-2003. Less than 4 per cent fell within the practices not associated with specific service lines or core results.

An analysis of the rates of achievement of targets set by country offices in 2004 showed that, on average, 50 per cent of targets were fully achieved, 42 per cent partially achieved and 8 per cent were not. The targets that were fully achieved were highest in HIV/AIDS response (57 per cent) and lowest in support to energy and environment for sustainable development (45 per cent). As to achievement by service lines, six of the 10 top-performing lines fell under reducing poverty and fostering governance, the two practices at the core of the UNDP profile as a development partner; the other four fell under crisis prevention and recovery, and HIV/AIDS response. Three service lines in two practices (access to sustainable energy services and part of crisis prevention and recovery) failed to achieve 40 per cent or more of annual targets, due mainly to over-ambitious targets and to the need for realigning annual budget targets to government policy and for clarifying national policy.

Analysis of the promotion of the six elements or drivers identified by UNDP for effective development suggested that, in 2004, a UNDP that had become more outward-looking relied heavily on creating an enabling policy environment, thereby influencing country-level policies for effective development, and on forging partnerships for results, which was strong in all five regions. Developing national capacities proved more effective than policy advocacy in enabling national ownership over the development agenda. The promotion of gender equality and South-South solutions appeared not to have been sufficiently incorporated into the design of all programmes.

The UNDP Administrator stated in his annual report [E/2005/4-DP/2005/13] to the Economic and Social Council that, in December 2003, UNDP adopted a two-pronged strategy for its engagement in trade, following the Fifth (2003) Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization [YUN 2003 p. 1535], to help developing countries prepare for the resumption of trade negotiations stalled at that Conference and to enhance developing-country competitiveness and capacity-building for trade through the removal of supply-side constraints. The strategy was to ensure the linkage of trade policies to human development concerns and outcomes, while strengthening developing-country capacity for integrating trade policies into national anti-poverty strategies.

UNDP implemented its 2003 decision to mainstream information and communication technologies (ICT) into other practice areas [YUN 2003, p. 891] by bridging dedicated “ICT for development” expertise into the poverty reduction and democratic governance practices. It focused on ICT for the poor and e-governance-related programmes, especially in Eastern Europe and the Arab States, and was working closely with the Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA) to support the implementation of country-level e-governance programmes.

UNDP streamlined its practice areas to five (see p. 879), with 30 clear-cut service lines that structured activities under each practice, with direct links to the MDGs and an integrated emphasis on gender mainstreaming. It strengthened the implementation of strategic, comprehensive initiatives in support of the empowerment of women and the promotion of gender equality (see p. 883).

The Millennium Project, an independent advisory body launched in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 863], posted in September 2004 its draft Global Plan to Achieve the Millennium Development Goals, together with background research, on its website for public comment; it would present the final version to the Secretary-General in 2005. In 2004, the Project initiated country-level advisory work in Cambodia, the Dominican Republic, Ethiopia, Ghana, Kenya, Senegal, Tajikistan and Yemen. By the end of September, 84 MDG country reports had been produced. The Millennium Campaign continued to expand its assistance to national campaigns, focusing on advocacy of issues related to the MDG goal of developing a global partnership for development. It was working closely with the United Nations Communications Group on a joint strategy for 2005 to leverage the UN system’s communications infrastructure.

UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board

In 2004, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board held its first (23-30 January) and second (20-24 September) regular sessions and an annual session (14-23 June), all in New York [E/2004/35].

At the first regular session, the Board adopted 12 decisions, including one giving an overview of the Board’s actions taken at that session [E/2004/35 (dec. 2004/12)]. Other decisions dealt with reporting on the UNDP MYFF, 2004-2007 (see p. 887); assistance to Myanmar (see p. 878); the United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) (see p. 894); the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors by UNDP and UNFPA (see p. 890); the follow-up to the fourteenth (2003) meeting of the Programme Coordinating Board of the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) [YUN 2003, p. 1248] (see p. 1220); the reports of the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director to the Economic and Social Council (see p. 878); the UNFPA MYFF, 2004-2007 and its intercountry programme, 2004-2007 (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII); the Evaluation Office report Millennium Development Goal reports: an assessment (see p. 886); the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) MYFF, 2004-2007 (see p. 1171); and the World Health Organization (WHO)/UNICEF/UNFPA Coordinating Committee on Health (see p. 1224).

At its annual session, the Executive Board adopted 13 decisions. In addition to an overview decision that summarized the action taken at that session [dec. 2004/25], it adopted decisions regarding the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) (see p. 899); funding commitments to UNDP (see p. 888); UNOPS (see p. 895); the United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme (see p. 897); internal audit and oversight for UNDP, UNFPA and UNOPS (see p. 890); joint UNDP/UNFPA/UNIFEM proposals for MYFF reporting (see p. 887); the management response to the UNDP assessment report “Transforming the Mainstream: Gender in UNDP” (see p. 883) and gender balance in UNDP (see p. 884); the report of the UNFPA Executive Director for 2003 and funding commitments to UNFPA (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII); and the report on the implementation of a 2001 Board decision [YUN 2001, p. 799] on the UNDP/UNFPA programming process and joint UNDP/UNFPA programming (see p. 884).

At its second regular session, the Board adopted 16 decisions, including an overview decision [dec. 2004/41]. The other decisions concerned the 2003 UNFPA annual financial review, additional security requirements to safeguard UNFPA personnel and premises globally, and the report on the midterm review of the Technical Advisory Programme (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII); the annual review of the UNDP financial situation (see p. 888); the UNDP strategic cost management and implications for cost recovery (see p. 890); the report of the Inter-Agency Procurement Services Office for the 2002-2003 biennium (see p. 891); the third cooperation framework for South-South cooperation (see p. 898); the UNDP Administrator’s annual report on evaluation (see p. 885); the second global cooperation framework (see p. 886); assistance to Somalia (see p. 879); UNOPS (see pp. 895 & 896); the progress report on options for a future business model for UNCDF (see p. 899); gender in UNDP (see p. 884); internal audit and oversight (see p. 891); and UNDP and UNFPA follow-up to the fifteenth UNAIDS Programme Coordinating Board meeting (see p. 1220).

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 2004/232 of 12 July, took note of the reports of the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board on its work in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 891], the report on its 2004 first regular session and the decisions adopted by the Board at its 2004 annual session.

UNDP/UNFPA reports

In January [dec. 2004/6], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took note of the reports of the UNDP Administrator [E/2004/4-DP/2004/12] and UNFPA Executive Director [E/2004/5-DP/FPA/2004/2] to the Economic and Social Council and requested the secretariat to transmit them to the Council, together with a summary of the discussion at the January session.

In June [dec. 2004/24], the Board took note of the UNDP Administrator's 2003 annual report [YUN 2003, p. 890] and addenda [DP/2004/16/Add.1,2]. The Council, by decision 2004/232 of 12 July, also took note of the Administrator's annual report.

The Executive Board, at its annual session in June, had before it an April update on the Human Development Report consultations [DP/2004/22], submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 57/264 [YUN 2002, p. 841]. UNDP maintained the frequency of consultations as in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 892]. The Human Development Report Office, charged with preparing the report (see p. 849), held consultations with the Board members on five occasions on the report's theme, outline, structure, statistics and messages. The Board took note of the update in June [dec. 2004/25].

In accordance with Council resolution 2003/3 [YUN 2003, p. 883], the Secretary-General submitted a May report [E/2004/60], which assessed the value added of the joint meetings of the Executive Boards of UNDP/UNFPA, UNICEF and WFP and their impact on the Council's operational activities segment, and made suggestions for further consideration by the Council. The annual joint meetings, organized in response to Assembly resolution 52/12 B [YUN 1997, p. 1392], were to take into account the respective mandates of the individual Boards. Members of the UNDG Executive Committee were of the view that the joint meetings provided a useful addition to the ongoing dialogue facilitating discussion of operational issues facing all four agencies, and addressed the gap between single agency discussions on operational and policy issues in individual Boards and the more general global policy dialogue in the Council and Assembly. However, several shortcomings remained. It had proved impractical for the entire WFP Board to be in New York, so it was being represented at the meetings by its Bureau, and many of the cross-cutting programme issues addressed also applied to one or more of the specialized agencies whose views could only be heard in the Council or Assembly, leading to duplication of discussions. Members of the Executive Committee believed it would be useful for member States and the concerned funds and programmes to discuss a more formal approach to the joint meetings, in particular one that would involve formal decision-making authority. The key consideration should be the contribution of current or alternative arrangements in advancing the basic policy objective of greater system-wide coherence in support of countries' development priorities and agreed development goals that were guiding the Council's work and the 2004 triennial policy review of operational activities (see p. 866).

UNDP operational activities

Country and regional programmes

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, at its January session [dec. 2004/12], approved country programmes for Benin, the Central African Republic, the Congo, Croatia, Djibouti, Ecuador, Kenya, Lithuania, Niger, Pakistan, Poland, the Russian Federation, Sierra Leone and Thailand. It approved a two-year extension of the second country cooperation framework (CCF) for Guyana; took note of the one-year extensions of the second CCFs for the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea, and of the first one-year extension of the first sub-regional cooperation framework for the countries of the Organisation of Eastern Caribbean States and Barbados [DP/2004/9]; and approved a two-year extension of the second cooperation framework for technical cooperation among developing countries [DP/CF/TCDC/2/EXTENSION I].

Also at the January session [dec. 2004/2], the Board took note of the UNDP Administrator's note on assistance to Myanmar [DP/2004/8] and the report by the independent assessment mission to that country, in particular the strategic challenges and recommendations mentioned therein. The Board requested the Administrator to take account of the mission's findings during phase IV of the Human Development Initiative.

At its annual session in June [dec. 2004/25], the Board took note of draft country programme documents and the comments made thereon for Angola, Argentina, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Burundi, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Iran, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Lesotho, Madagascar, the Philippines, Romania, Serbia and Montenegro, Tajikistan, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Turkmenistan, and Uzbekistan. It approved a second one-year extension of the second CCFs for Chile and Uruguay and a two-year extension of the second CCF for Zimbabwe. The Board also took note of the one-year extensions of the second CCFs for Belarus, Hungary, Latvia and Slovakia [DP/2004/21].

At its second regular session in September [dec. 2004/41], the Board took note of the draft country programme documents and the comments made thereon for the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Guatemala, Mauritius, and the Republic of Korea. It adopted extensions of the CCFs for the British Overseas Territory of Saint Helena, and for Senegal and Paraguay [DP/2004/44].

Also in September, the Board had before it the Administrator's note on assistance to Somalia (2005-2006) [DP/2004/43 & Corr.1]. On 24 September [dec. 2004/35], the Board took note of the situation in Somalia and its implications for the delivery of humanitarian and development assistance to the Somali people; endorsed the UNDP strategic approach to promoting peace and security by concentrating on security and the rule of law, poverty reduction, and governance, public administration and civil society; encouraged UNDP to continue to mobilize resources and develop strategic partnerships, and to cooperate with the Intergovernmental Authority on Development Partner's Forum on international assistance and coordination arrangements in support of the future Somali transitional federal institutions; and authorized the Administrator to approve projects consistent with the strategic approach on a case-by-case basis.

UNDP programme results

The establishment and implementation by UNDP of its practice approach were an important element of its strategy to provide knowledge services and part of its objective to develop its ability to provide high-quality support to programme countries. UNDP activities were organized under five practice areas: poverty reduction, fostering democratic governance, crisis prevention and recovery, energy and environment, and responding to HIV/AIDS.

Poverty reduction

UNDP work in the poverty practice remained largely concentrated in local-level initiatives and monitoring and reporting, particularly around country targets related to the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51]. Country office reports indicated a rapid increase in the number of initiatives to support MDG reporting and continued progress on the development and use of national human development reports (NHDRs). Together with NHDRs, MDG reporting accounted for around one quarter of all initiatives. However, the effect of MDG reports and NHDRs on national policy-making or poverty reduction strategies needed further examination, and the biggest challenge for UNDP support was to help lay the foundation for influencing the policy content of national poverty reduction strategies. The downside of the increasing emphasis on reporting and monitoring was the relatively slower progress in providing policy advisory services to countries on poverty reduction strategies, which had become a major priority of UNDP. Nevertheless, several policy-related initiatives continued to support participatory processes and took up the challenge of linking PRSP indicators with the MDGs through global or regional programmes.

UNDP continued to support diverse local poverty reduction initiatives, which accounted for 17 per cent of all poverty practice activities over a broad range of disparate interventions, among which microfinance remained the most coherent and the most closely linked to national policy, accounting for about one third of all activities. The main challenge to UNDP for activities in that area was to consolidate efforts, in line with the microfinance model within a more limited set of corporate priorities, build up systematic bodies of practice and give greater attention to influencing national policy frameworks.

UNDP support to civil society organizations (CSOs) for achieving the MDGs and reducing poverty, while progressing, remained disconnected from work in other poverty service lines. Activities needed to concentrate more on developing the capacities of CSOs and empowering them to engage substantively in the PRSPs and MDGs. Support to ICT for development was also making progress, with country offices reporting significant success in achieving outcomes. However, that area of work remained limited in scope and was not yet well integrated into the poverty practice.

Private sector development was the newest service line for the poverty practice, accounting for only 7 per cent of all activities, most of which related to micro, small and medium-sized enterprises or microfinance. In March, UNDP globally launched the report of the Commission on the Private Sector and Development, entitled Unleashing Entrepreneurship: Making Business Work for the Poor, an independent publication by UNDP. By May, UNDP had facilitated policy dialogue around the report in more than 25 countries.

Representing over 1,100 practitioners and 467 registered resource persons, the poverty reduction practice was the largest thematic practice. The global network of poverty reduction practitioners enabled professionals from every region, country office and service line to share knowledge and lessons learned, to contribute substantively and to backstop each other's work.

UNDP role in PRSP process

A May report [DP/2004/25 & Corr.1] followed up on the 2003 evaluation of the role of UNDP in the PRSP process [YUN 2003, p. 894] and the UNDP management response to that evaluation [ibid., p. 895]. UNDP launched an array of global and regional programmes to address the objectives recommended in the management response report, including championing equity as an integral component of growth strategies, helping link long-term development policies to the causes of poverty and promoting a healthy national dialogue by fostering greater policy choice, especially on economic policies. It initiated the Macroeconomics of Poverty Reduction, a nine-country Asia-Pacific programme aimed at translating the concept of pro-poor growth into practical policy recommendations at the county level, fostering greater consistency between economic policies and poverty reduction strategies, and promoting broader dialogue on policy options. Similar policy-oriented research and capacity development programmes were undertaken in Latin America and the Caribbean, Eastern Europe and CIS, and the Arab States; another programme was planned for Africa. Such programmes were designed to strengthen national policy autonomy in the formulation and implementation of poverty reduction strategies, particularly the PRSPs.

UNDP initiated several new global programmes in 2004, based largely on financing by the Thematic Trust Fund for Poverty Reduction. They included initiatives on pro-poor public investment, the effect on poverty of the privatization of public services and utilities, land reform and poverty reduction, and pro-poor domestic resource mobilization. UNDP had also reached an agreement with the International Labour Organization (ILO) on a global programme on employment and poverty. As recommended in the management response, UNDP was upgrading its in-house capacity by, among other means, training and consolidation of expertise at the sub-regional level through the new regional centres of policy specialists. The challenge was to help link the MDGs and PRSPs by making short-term reforms fit into long-term comprehensive development plans.

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took note of the report at its annual session in June [dec. 2004/25].

Democratic governance

The democratic governance practice was the second largest thematic practice for UNDP, and it continued to grow, making UNDP the leading provider of democratic governance services worldwide. Africa remained at the core of UNDP governance work, with 85 per cent of the countries reporting activity. The greatest concentration was in decentralization and local governance, with UNDP support sustaining both the central government agendas towards devolution and local capacity-development efforts. The strategy of localizing the MDGs was aimed at providing service delivery through democratic participatory processes, blending the governance aspects of local capacity- and institution-building to address the HIV/AIDS pandemic, and ensuring a sustainable environment while promoting local development.

Country office reporting for 2004 reflected a shift in the overall governance portfolio towards increased demand for services where UNDP had comparative strengths at the supranational, national and subnational levels. For example, at the supranational level, UNDP, in partnership with the European Union, launched the report Democracy in Latin America: towards a citizen's democracy, which offered a comprehensive analysis on the state of democracy in 18 Latin American countries and proposals for guiding the debate on democratic governance in the region. At the national level, UNDP support in Liberia put into place an institutional framework for the operation of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (see p. 196). At the subnational level, community-based policing was initiated in Albania.

UNDP was recognized as one of the key providers of technical cooperation in support of elections and parliaments, supporting one out of every three parliaments and, on average, one election every two weeks somewhere in the world. Notable support was provided to Afghanistan, Egypt and Liberia. UNDP was a leading provider of technical advice in public administration reform, and in recent years that support had increased significantly. UNDP reoriented its position and identified types of support to programme country governments that could improve the prospects of lasting impact, resulting in a greater emphasis on capacity development for policy making and anti-corruption initiatives. E-governance and access to information activities were consolidated in 2004, with over 30 country offices reporting core results where the use of ICT in government functions had a strategic value in terms of increased access to information, transparency of operations and improved accountability. In that regard, UNDP's effort was to ensure that its support remained focused on the policy and governance aspects of ICT, rather than on the provision of hardware.

A main challenge for the democratic governance practice was to build on ongoing efforts and raise the emphasis on gender equality. Policy guidance and toolkits for mainstreaming gender were being developed or implemented, and the governance trust fund was introducing incentives to mainstream gender into fund-approved projects.

Crisis prevention and recovery

The commitment to eradicating poverty and empowering the poorest and most vulnerable groups placed conflict prevention and recovery at the core of the UNDP development agenda. In 2004, 80 countries sought UNDP support under that practice (compared to 54 in 2000); the actual number was even higher, as some countries reported their crisis prevention and recovery work under other practices. The year saw a series of conflicts and natural disasters afflicting a growing percentage of the countries in which UNDP worked, and the crisis prevention and recovery practice saw consolidation, growth and a steep increase in demand. Forty countries specifically sought UNDP support for natural disaster reduction. Of the service lines dealing with conflict and its aftermath, UNDP worked with 31 countries on recovery, 25 on conflict prevention and peace-building, 21 on small arms reduction, disarmament and demobilization, 18 on mine action, and 7 on special initiatives for countries in transition. In Africa, UNDP participated in the Mano River Union Initiative involving Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea, Liberia, and Sierra Leone, which helped with the exchange of experiences and lessons learned, and examined common challenges in a post-conflict environment.

UNDP developed tools for mainstreaming conflict prevention into development strategies in pre- and post-conflict countries; deepened collaboration and programming in crisis situations with the Departments of Political Affairs and of Peacekeeping Operations; worked with 13 other UN organizations to revise and update the UN inter-agency policy on mine action; and issued policy recommendations on mainstreaming mine action into development. It also worked with other UN partners to make the Inter-department Framework for Coordination a more effective mechanism for supporting UN country teams in developing strategies for early conflict prevention and, with undg and the World Bank, to develop the post-conflict needs assessment, a joint methodology to coordinate analysis of and response to a country's post-crisis recovery needs. It contributed to the undg-Executive Committee on Humanitarian Assistance (ECHA) working group on transitions and produced a disaster risk index.

However, country office reporting for 2004 on the integration of drivers of development into crisis prevention and recovery work indicated some serious shortcomings, such as giving the least attention to developing national capacity, enhancing national ownership, advocating and fostering an enabling policy environment, seeking South-South solutions and forging partnerships for results. A possible explanation might be the political nature of crisis prevention and recovery programmes, which made promoting specific drivers, like national ownership, difficult. In contrast, 25 countries reported high emphasis on the gender driver in the context of the crisis prevention and recovery practice.

To strengthen crisis prevention and recovery capacities in Africa, 85 practitioners from across the continent were brought together in two workshops to discuss common approaches, share challenges and experiences and learn about the latest programmatic and operational policies and procedures for crisis prevention and recovery.

Environment and energy

One hundred and twenty-eight countries, representing more than 90 per cent of programme countries across all regions, were engaged with UNDP in managing energy and the environment for sustainable development. The greatest concentration of work was on frameworks and strategies for sustainable development, representing 29 per cent of all reported practice outcomes. In 47 countries, support to biodiversity initiatives resulted in specific progress in integrating biodiversity into one or more of their sector strategies in agriculture, forestry, rangeland and grazing, coastal management, fisheries, and wildlife, while 66 countries made progress in adjusting their legal frameworks to incorporate biodiversity.

The UNDP focus on energy-poverty linkages was strengthened to integrate the role of energy into national MDG frameworks and poverty reduction strategies. While there was considerable effort on policy and strategic planning of resources and a broad recognition of poverty-environment linkages, there had not yet been sufficient demonstrated results on delivery of community water and energy services to contribute significantly to progress on MDGs; only a quarter of total outcomes in water governance and energy access was devoted to service delivery.

In 2004, the energy and environment practice was reoriented towards the new realities of development cooperation. In terms of integrating security concerns, some of the key areas for the practice were climate change, natural disaster prevention and recovery, and transboundary environmental cooperation. The UNDP transboundary portfolio with the Global Environment Facility (GEF) (see p. 1046), under the focal areas of international waters and biodiversity, continued to build frameworks for cooperation and dialogue between countries. Work on climate risk assessment resulted in a large body of guidance to assist national Governments.

The majority of outcomes in the energy and environment practice demonstrated a significant emphasis on partnerships for results. Partnership agreements included local private-sector and community action in Zimbabwe; support to environmental management in the decentralization process in Rwanda; and partnerships among non-governmental organizations (NGOs), national Governments and research institutions in Azerbaijan, the Dominican Republic, Kuwait and Romania. Partnerships with GEF and the Multilateral Fund for the Implementation of the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer (see p. 1052) [YUN 1987, p. 686] supported the majority of activities in energy and the environment.

The practice initiated cross-practice initiatives with a view to improving gender equality. Both the sustainable energy and water governance service lines worked with the UNDP gender team to develop guidelines for mainstreaming gender into programmes and projects in those areas. In terms of encouraging South-South cooperation, the practice supported a mission from Latin America in response to a request from Europe and CIS to learn from southern knowledge and experiences on debt swaps.

Five regional workshops covering Africa were held on building cross-practice linkages to advance the MDG related to poverty reduction, safe drinking water and improving the lives of slum dwellers, and financing for sustainable development. Workshops on the theme of sustainable livelihoods were held in Asia and the Pacific, and in Europe and CIS.

Response to HIV/AIDS

Demand for UNDP support under the HIV/AIDS practice continued to grow rapidly, nearly doubling from 55 countries in 2000 to 97 in 2004, an 85 per cent increase in country engagement. Development planning and implementation remained the most active service line (76 outcomes reported), followed by leadership and capacity development (71 outcomes). In terms of leadership and capacity development to address HIV/AIDS, initiatives focused primarily on the development of critical multi-stakeholder leadership capacities at the individual, institutional and societal levels to generate breakthrough responses for reversing the course of the pandemic. In the Arab States, more outcomes were reported that sought to influence individual and community responses to address attitudes and practices influencing the spread of HIV/AIDS. Most activities also focused on developing advocacy and communications strategies to develop a deeper understanding of the pandemic and its underlying causes, and address issues of vulnerability, stigma and discrimination.

In several regions, HIV/AIDS programmes worked across service lines to create a synergistic response and action, notably in Cambodia, Ethiopia and Ukraine. The programme in Ethiopia aimed at scaling up the multisectoral response with a view to developing leadership for local and national action to combat the disease. Cambodia reported breakthrough results under all service lines for HIV/AIDS and indicated interest in sharing its expertise in implementing a nationwide response to the epidemic with other countries in the region. Countries implementing activities under all service lines were able to strengthen programmes at national and district levels, take ownership of initiatives and engage in multi-stakeholder partnerships to address the pandemic.

Joint action in the HIV/AIDS and poverty reduction practices project was aimed at building developing country capacity to access HIV/AIDS drugs sustainability in the context of the 1994 World Trade Organization Agreement on Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights [YUN 1994, p. 1475] and other bilateral and multilateral intellectual property and trade agreements.

UNDP was increasingly seen as credible and effective in multi-partner initiatives to respond to HIV/AIDS, as evidenced by its role in relation to the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria, established in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1217]. Several African Governments called on UNDP to provide medium-term operational support by performing the functions of principal recipient for the Fund and to help them build their own capacities to eventually take over those functions. UNDP support was also helping to bring anti-retroviral drugs to HIV-infected patients; provide mosquito nets to prevent the propagation of malaria; and increase the availability of drugs to cure tuberculosis.

A key feature of all country action in HIV/AIDS was the strong emphasis on forging partnerships for results, with actors ranging from Government, civil society and the private sector to donors and the international community at large. Emphasis was being placed on the enhancement of national ownership in the design and implementation of HIV/AIDS initiatives. While overall support to the driver on gender equity in HIV/AIDS programmes was relatively high compared to other practices, it appeared to be given a lower priority when compared to the other drivers of development. Concerted efforts needed to be made to generate a comprehensive approach that integrated gender concerns into HIV/AIDS strategies.

In 2004, the HIV/AIDS practice had policy advisers in all regions, 50 per cent of whom were women. At the end of the year, the practice had 132 registered practitioners within the organization, of whom 54 per cent were women.

Programme planning and management

Gender issues

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, at its January session, considered a conference room paper on efforts to strengthen the partnership between UNDP and UNIFEM to achieve gender equality [DP/2004/CRP.2]. The paper was an initial step towards the formulation of a results-based strategy for strengthening UNDP-UNIFEM partnership for 2004-2007.

Also in January, UNDP shared with the Board an assessment of gender mainstreaming efforts entitled "Transforming the mainstream: gender in UNDP", featuring major achievements and key challenges in gender mainstreaming drawn from UNDP experience and the shared concerns of other partners. It highlighted issues requiring particular attention in UNDP, including integrated approaches to ways of working; ensuring women-specific strategic programmes; poverty and the environment; measurement of results; and in-house gender expertise. UNDP's gender mainstreaming efforts were analysed within the context of achieving the MDGs and reducing human poverty, fostering democratic governance, energy and the environment for sustainable development, and crisis prevention and recovery. The assessment underscored that, although the macroeconomic framework was a strategic arena for engagement to transform the mainstream, it was still a relatively neglected area; it thus called for investments in specific programme tools to provide practitioners with the necessary technical skills and expertise. The assessment highlighted successful approaches supported by UNDP to increase women's participation in Government and to mainstream gender in governance interventions. It underscored three areas for future work: more support to gender responsiveness; strengthening women's capacities to participate in government; and development of staff capacities. It also emphasized the need for UNDP to bring women's voices into national strategies for sustainable development; ensure women's involvement in participatory resource planning; and strengthen policy and regulatory frameworks to protect women's access to natural resources. UNDP was in a critical position at the country level, where it was able to promote a multifaceted approach to address gender issues in conflict and post-conflict reconstruction.

UNDP management, responding to the assessment in June [DP/2004/31], described its efforts to strengthen strategic programming and accountability in gender mainstreaming, as well as arrangements to increase mainstreaming capacities, commitment and resources. An independent evaluation of gender mainstreaming was initiated under the leadership of the Evaluation Office, and an organizational scorecard was being developed to monitor progress at all levels and build managers' responsibility for the implementation of the UNDP policy on gender balance in management and in the work-life policy. In 2005, UNDP would produce a 10-year review of gender and development and gender empowerment indicators. A UNDP-UNIFEM joint plan of action incorporated features to improve coherence between the two organizations and bring their work closer together. UNIFEM regional programmes and UNDP regional centres would become regional hubs for expanded knowledge and action on gender equality. There would be a unity of leadership on the gender issue between UNDP and UNIFEM, under the strategic direction and policy guidance of the UNDP Administrator.

In June [dec. 2004/21], the Executive Board took note of the assessment report and management response, and the January conference room paper. It stressed that UNDP should implement its strategy for gender mainstreaming rigorously and requested that it prepare a detailed plan of action on gender mainstreaming, with concrete targets and measurable actions, for review by the Board no later than at its first regular session in January 2005. The Board requested further clarification, at its September 2004 session, of the UNDP-UNIFEM joint plan of action and, at the January 2005 session, an elaboration of how UNDP could scale up operations based on lessons learned in UNIFEM pilot projects.

The Board also requested that the organizational scorecard mentioned in the management response (see p. 883) be presented at its June 2005 meeting [dec. 2004/22].

A September report, submitted in response to Board decision 2004/21, described UNDP progress in gender mainstreaming and the joint plan of action with UNIFEM [DP/2004/47], including internal steps already under implementation. In July, the Senior Management Team endorsed a plan of action that called for the creation of a gender task force; discussions with facilitators on all networks; a strategic planning workshop in November to review and endorse the final UNDP plan of action and the UNDP-UNIFEM joint action plan; and a final report to be presented to the Executive Board in January 2005. UNDP made considerable progress in: the identification of specific gender indicators of the MYFF performance indicators; the development of gender mainstreaming strategies, a gender scorecard and a toolkit to build the capacities of gender thematic groups within UN country teams; a joint UNDP-UNIFEM gender analysis of their programme portfolio; and an evaluation of gender in UNDP. The report also discussed progress in strengthening the UNDP-UNIFEM partnership on gender equality.

In September [dec. 2004/38], the Executive Board took note of the report on UNDP progress in gender mainstreaming and the joint plan of action with UNIFEM. It requested UNDP to submit to the Board at its January 2005 session more detailed information on specific gender indicators and gender drivers in the MYFF and in the Atlas information management system, and to provide an update on progress achieved in the UNDP-UNIFEM partnership.

Programming arrangements

Joint programming

In response to a 2003 Executive Board decision [YUN 2003, p. 898], the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director submitted an April report [DP/2004/30-DP/FPA/2004/8] analysing joint programming between UN organizations, based on evidence provided during the revision of the current Guidance Note on Joint Programming. The revised Guidance Note 2004 addressed deficiencies and clarified the difference between joint programming and joint programmes. It was meant to avoid duplication, reduce transaction costs and maximize synergies among national partners and different contributions of UN system organizations. The revised Guidance Note provided programmatic and administrative guidance for seizing joint programming opportunities. It introduced detailed guidance on three fund management options to be applied on the basis of a programmatic rationale and a new mechanism for passing funds through one UN organization to another; clarified the value added to joint programming; and included standard legal agreements for the pooling and pass-through fund management options. Efforts were under way to internalize the Guidance Note into the organizations' procedures. The Note suggested the development of a common work plan consisting of shared objectives, actions, time frames, resource requirements and clear delineation of responsibilities, and included communication activities to publicize joint programme activities. The report stated that the Note should be seen as an instrument to identify areas for further harmonization.

A group of financial experts from different UN organizations was working on a common format for high-level reporting to donors for use in joint programmes.

Also in April [DP/2004/29-DP/FPA/2004/7], the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director reported on progress in the implementation of a 2001 Executive Board decision that called for modifying the UNDP/UNFPA two-step programming process [YUN 2001, p. 799]. Following that decision, UNDP and UNFPA agreed on a harmonized format for country programme outlines and documents aimed at the formulation of brief, concise and focused outlines; the UNICEF and WFP Executive Boards adopted a similar process in 2002. Country programme documents (CPDs) replaced draft country outlines and programmes; draft CPDs were discussed and reviewed by the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board during its annual session, the final versions of which were approved by the Board at the first regular session of the following year. While country office staff welcomed the more focused document limiting resources and outputs to the UNDAF outcomes, they expressed concern that the new two-step approval process had increased the time frame for developing country programmes, and that the process might not be sufficiently flexible.

In June [dec. 2004/19], the Executive Board took note of the report on joint programming and deferred consideration of a decision to its first regular session in 2005. In a separate decision [dec. 2004/18], the Board took note of the report on the UNDP and UNFPA programming process and the concerns expressed in that report regarding the increased time frame for developing country programmes; it requested UNDP and UNFPA to consult with their undg partners on how to address that concern in a harmonized way and report to the Board in 2005.

Monitoring and evaluation

In July [DP/2004/40], the UNDP Administrator, in his annual report on evaluation covering the period from July 2003 to June 2004, examined the progress made by UNDP in contributing to global and national development results and identified organizational lessons distilled from strategic assessments. Key thematic and country evaluations pointed to some achievements in influencing policy and stimulating national debate on human development. UNDP was an effective broker between Government and external agencies, successfully piloting and feeding lessons and experiences from downstream work into upstream dialogue. However, it needed to do more to position itself strategically as a major global upstream policy advisor and in building on niches that it often created successfully.

There had been some success, as noted in the evaluations of UNDP support to the PRSP process and to reporting on the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51] (see below). However, UNDP and its associated funds and programmes still had some way to go in building awareness and capacity to support evaluative evidence-based decision-making. Several outcomes and country evaluations revealed UNDP failures to seize opportunities to build on existing work, how a lack of clear focus prevented it from establishing or retaining a strategic role, and that results-based management tools had not been sufficiently internalized to sharpen focus and direct efforts towards achieving development outcomes.

The Executive Board, in a September decision on the Administrator's annual evaluation report [dec. 2004/33], urged UNDP to continue to give high priority to training key staff in results-based planning, monitoring, evaluation and reporting, in the light of the finding that results-based management tools were not sufficiently internalized in the organization. Recalling its January decision on reporting on the UNDP MYFF, 2004-2007 (see p. 887), the Board stressed that the assessment of development results (ADR) should be a priority of the Evaluation Office. It encouraged UNDP to give continued high priority to the work of the United Nations Evaluation Group and stressed that UN entities, especially UNDP, UNICEF and UNFPA, could benefit significantly from strengthening further their cooperation in support of UNDAF evaluation. The Board asked UNDP to include in its next annual evaluation report an annex containing an overview of all the evaluations undertaken by the Evaluation Office and by UNDP at the local level.

In November [E/2005/4-DP/2005/13], the Administrator said that continual improvements had been made to align the evaluation architecture to corporate goals, review and update methodologies and strengthen assessment capacities in UNDP and its partners. After two years of implementation, the architecture and its instrumentation were under review. The third Development Effectiveness Report successfully advanced the conceptual understanding of development effectiveness by identifying key drivers underpinning the MYFF, 2004-2007 (see p. 887). The utility of strategic and thematic evaluations as effective instruments of corporate relevance had been demonstrated through the evaluation of UNDP support to the PRSP process and to national MDG reports. The Evaluation Office was exploring how to expand annual ADR coverage to validate UNDP results at the country level. In 2004, the second global cooperation framework of UNDP was evaluated comprehensively (see p. 886), which led to a number of key lessons to inform the development of the UNDP global programme, 2005-2007. Alignment with the evaluation policies and procedures of the UNDP-associated funds was also enhanced.

Assessing MDG reports

The Executive Board, at its January session, considered a note [DP/2004/3] summarizing the response of UNDP management to the seven challenges (communication, participation, reporting, statistical, campaign, evaluation, global cooperation) identified in the 2003 assessment of the MDG reports [YUN 2003, pp. 899-890].

Management had since revised the Guidance Note for MDG reporting to emphasize national ownership and participation in the preparation of those reports; better use of disaggregated data to identify development gaps and help set resource allocation priorities; capacity development to promote active participation of key development actors; and advocacy and campaigning, with the reports serving as tools to build consensus around development priorities.

In pursuit of the twofold purpose of the MDG report on public information and social mobilization, the revised note defined mechanisms for closer consultation to improve coordination so that each report was accompanied by a clearly defined communication and advocacy campaign.

Management drew attention to the recommendation not to mistake government participation in the preparation of the MDG report for national ownership. It emphasized the importance of customizing targets through broad-based, inclusive dialogue and debate, and that close collaboration with civil society organizations was essential for widening support and consensus around the MDGs. It was also reinforcing UNDP participation in existing mechanisms for inter-agency coordination to strengthen countries' statistical capacity as the basis for improving global data sources.

In January [dec. 2004/9], the Executive Board took note of the 2003 assessment of the MDG reports, together with the UNDP management response, and asked UNDP to provide further substantive information on the assessment at its June session. The Board decided to include the topic "UNDP cooperation with Member States in the preparation of the MDG reports" in the agenda of its 2005 annual session and requested UNDP to report on the topic, taking into account the triennial comprehensive policy review (see p. 866) during the fifty-ninth (2004) session of the General Assembly.

As requested by the Board, UNDP issued a May report [DP/2004/25 & Corr.1] providing further information on steps taken by management in response to the assessment challenges (see p. 885). Among those steps were the closer collaboration between the monitoring and campaign units to address the communication and campaign challenges; the publication by UNDG of the Indicators for Monitoring the Millennium Development Goals: Definitions, Rationale, Concepts and Sources to promote a better understanding of the MDG indicators; and a closer UNDG focus on statistical capacity. To address global cooperation, a seminar was organized (Bergen, Norway) for donor and developing countries to discuss mutual accountability. With UNDP support, a common format for developed country reporting on the MDG on global partnership for development was prepared with the secretariat of the Development Assistance Committee (DAC) of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) and a group of bilateral donors.

UNDP was helping to improve the management and accessibility of country-level data produced through administrative reporting systems, surveys and censuses and, in close collaboration with relevant UN organizations and the World Bank, was intensifying its operational support in capacity development for MDG monitoring and basic statistical literacy, with a focus on making MDG-related data more accessible, using disaggregated data by sex, level of education, ethnicity, rural-urban location, region and socioeconomic status.

Second global cooperation framework

An August report [DP/2004/41] summarized the findings of an independent evaluation of the second global cooperation framework (GCF-II), approved in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 793] and extended in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 893], for one year, until December 2004. The evaluation's main objectives were to: assess the overall performance and the degree to which the intended organizational goals and development results had been achieved; ascertain how GCF-II had contributed strategically to positioning UNDP as a major upstream policy advisor for poverty reduction and sustainable human development, and as a knowledge-based organization; and make recommendations for the third GCF phase.

In line with UNDP's objectives, GCF-II had contributed to the UNDP development and transformation goals, notably in turning UNDP into a learning, knowledge-sharing organization. However, lingering questions on the meaning and quality of upstream policy advice and the noted weaknesses in governance and management might combine to generate a perception that GCF served as an exclusive facility for internal purposes only. If GCF-III was to serve UNDP corporate goals further, changes would be needed in the design, programming and management of the GCF facility. More fundamentally, it should sharply define its niche for addressing truly global development issues of strategic importance to UNDP and provide a clear strategy for enhancing the quality and effectiveness of UNDP work at the country level through its global programmes.

UNDP management, responding to the GCF-II evaluation in an August report [DP/2004/42], acknowledged the weaknesses in execution, oversight and reporting, but also pointed out that significant progress had been made on certain challenges, and that problems in execution, oversight and reporting were being tackled aggressively. UNDP would use GCF-III to continue to strengthen its promotion of global advocacy and analysis; knowledge networking and sharing; and policy support, consistency and advice. It would further strengthen the links among those three services, particularly the management mechanisms for carrying them out. The GCF-III programming cycle, starting in 2005, would seek to consolidate the gains achieved during GCF-II and delineate a more focused strategy than that of GCF-II. Its central organizing framework would be the priority areas and service lines of the MYFF, 2004-2007 (see p. 887).

In September [dec. 2004/34], the Executive Board noted with concern the findings of the GCF-II evaluation and the related UNDP management response. It requested UNDP, in consultation with Member States, to implement the evaluation recommendations in elaborating the proposed GCF-III, which the Board would consider at its January 2005 session.

Funding strategy

Multi-year funding framework, 2004-2007

In response to a 2003 Executive Board decision that endorsed the MYFF, 2004-2007 [YUN 2003, p. 901], UNDP, in January [DP/2004/4], submitted proposals for reporting on the MYFF. UNDP would continue to report to the Board on progress under the MYFF through the results-oriented annual report (ROAR) covering results achieved in 2004 and 2005. The ROAR for each year would be presented for consideration at the Board's annual session immediately following each year. Results for 2004 to 2006 would be presented in an MYFF report to the Board at its 2007 annual session. The structure and format of the two reports would correspond to the elements of organizational effectiveness identified in the MYFF, while the ROAR would serve as an integrated report. The analysis of results achieved in both reporting documents would be presented under the following categories: summary overview of performance against key MYFF strategic objectives; and analyses of substantive results by MYFF goal and service line, of results in building organizational capacity for development effectiveness, and of programme and operational resources and expenditure.

The proposals envisaged the elimination of a number of reports submitted concurrently to the Board, including reporting on the thematic trust funds, and incorporated conceptual and methodological advances to help UNDP respond to the challenges of attribution and aggregation in the attempt to monitor its contribution to development change. The specific indicators and benchmarks to measure progress, if endorsed by the Board, could serve to inform the entire range of management and oversight processes in use, thus strengthening accountability and results orientation at all levels of the organization.

On 30 January [dec. 2004/1], the Executive Board took note of the strategically designed approach to the ROAR presented by UNDP and looked forward to discussing that matter at the Board's annual session in June. The Board stressed that ROAR reporting should provide Member States with factual analysis of the development effectiveness of UNDP activities and institutional effectiveness, and that UNDP evaluation functions should support the ROAR process by focusing on UNDP activities and effectiveness. It requested the Administrator, in collaboration with the UNFPA and UNIFEM Executive Directors and in consultation with Member States, to explore options for harmonized reporting and to report on the issue, also at the Board's annual session in June.

In response to the Executive Board's January request (see above), UNDP, UNFPA and UNIFEM submitted in May [DP/2004/CRP.6-DP/FPA/2004/CRP.2] a joint proposal for reporting on MYFF results following a harmonized schedule and time frame. The Board adopted the proposal in June [dec. 2004/20].

Financing

The UNDP Administrator, in his annual review of the financial situation for 2004 [DP/2005/33 & Add.1], said that consistent growth in resource contributions continued, reaching $4 billion, a 20 per cent increase over the 2003 level of $3.2 billion. Compared to 2003, regular resources also continued an upward trend, increasing by 9 per cent to $842 million, with a weakening United States dollar and resulting exchange rate fluctuations accounting for more than two thirds of the increase. The positive developments in the volume of contributions to regular resources also reflected the strong political endorsement by donors of the UNDP reform process and UNDP's impact in the countries it served. Expenditures under regular resources increased by 12 per cent to $836 million. The resource balance, exclusive of operational reserves but including after-service health insurance reserves, increased by 17 per cent. Contributions received from the top 15 non-programme country donors (Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Ireland, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, United Kingdom, United States) increased by 11 per cent.

Programme expenditure, including programme support to the resident coordinator system, increased by 19 per cent, from $404 million to $483 million. By appropriation group, 55 per cent of expenditure went to programme support activities, 21 per cent to management and administration and 23 per cent to operational activities. In terms of the percentage share of programme expenditure among regions, Latin America and the Caribbean continued to record the highest share of programme delivery ($27 million or 6 per cent and $1.1 billion or 47 per cent for regular and other expenditures, respectively), followed by Asia and the Pacific ($131 million or 27 per cent and $558 million or 23 per cent, respectively), Africa ($188 million or 39 per cent and $214 million and 9 per cent, respectively), the Arab States ($38 million or 8 per cent and $201 million or 8 per cent, respectively), and Europe and CIS ($43 million or 9 per cent and $159 million or 6 per cent, respectively).

The percentage share for execution modalities showed that national execution represented 60 per cent overall; UNDP, 21 per cent; UNOPS, 10 per cent; the “big five” entities (DESA, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, ILO, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization), 3 per cent; other agencies, 4 per cent; and NGOs, 2 per cent.

The growth of UNDP expenditure was mainly in crisis countries, representing 70 per cent of the total execution.

As at 31 December, the balance of unexpended regular resources stood at $171 million, an increase of 11 per cent over the $154 million in 2003. UNDP held cash and investments for regular resources totalling $272 million, excluding the operational reserve.

For other resources activities—local resources (government cost-sharing and cash-counterpart contributions), donor cost-sharing, trust funds, the United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme (see p. 896), management services agreements, the Junior Professional Officer programme and the reserve for field accommodation—overall income increased by $752 million, from $2.5 billion in 2003 to $3.3 billion in 2004. Overall expenditure also increased by 15 per cent ($345 million). Net contributions received totalled $3.0 billion, of which 38 per cent ($1.2 billion) accounted for local resources. Contributions from the OECD/DAC countries increased 59 per cent, from $569 million in 2003 to $900 million in 2004.

In September [dec. 2004/29], the Executive Board took note of the Administrator’s annual review of the financial situation for 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 902]. The Board encouraged all Member States to increase their funding and to give priority to regular resources (core contributions) over other resources (non-core contributions). It called on all contributing countries to make early payments to, among other things, avoid liquidity constraints, and on Member States in a position to do so to announce and adhere to multi-year pledges and payment schedules. The Board stressed the need for UNDP to build on its successes in results-oriented management and to continue to improve administrative and financial management practices in key areas.

Regular funding commitments to UNDP

In May [DP/2004/20], UNDP submitted a report on the status of regular funding commitments to UNDP and its associated funds and programmes for 2004 and onward. According to the provisional data for 2003, total net income reached $769 million, a 15 per cent ($99 million) increase over the $670 million reached in 2002. Current projections suggested that, based on the official UN exchange rate as at 1 May, contributions would exceed $800 million for the first time since 1997. Eleven OECD/DAC members increased or resumed their contributions in local currency terms in 2003. One donor’s contribution increased by 43 per cent, while another increased by 28.4 per cent. In contrast to previous years, all OECD/DAC donors paid their 2003 contributions in full. Current estimates for 2004 indicated that all OECD/DAC donors would either maintain or increase their contributions. Nine such donors indicated that they would increase their contribution in local currency terms, while two committed to increasing their contributions regularly over the full period of the 2004-2007 MYFF (see p. 887). Five of the programme countries made contributions in excess of $1 million to UNDP regular resources, demonstrating the high value such countries were placing on UNDP and its work. Indications were that some donors might be in a position to make additional pledges and contributions to regular resources during the year, which was particularly important since the 2004 income levels continued to be far below requirements. A total of 11 OECD/DAC donor countries provided fixed payment schedules in 2003, compared to 14 in 2002. While fewer donors had provided schedules over the previous four years, those who had provided them, increasingly deviated from the schedules. Of the 11 OECD/DAC donors that provided payment schedules in 2003, many did not pay as pledged. Although a number of donors paid significant portions of their pledges only in the last quarter of the year, the operational reserves did not have to be used in 2003.

In June [dec. 2004/14], the Executive Board took note of the report on the status of regular resources funding commitments to UNDP for 2004 and onward. It also noted that UNDP was within reach of being provided with a stable and adequate resource base, but that achieving that goal would require all Member States, developed countries in particular, to sustain and increase their funding efforts over the MYFF period. It encouraged all countries that had not yet done so to provide contributions to core resources for 2004 and those that had already contributed to consider supplementing their 2004 contributions so as to accelerate the rebuilding of UNDP's regular resource base.

Strategic cost management and cost recovery

In accordance with a 2003 Executive Board decision [YUN 2003, p. 903], the UNDP Administrator, in a May report [DP/2004/35], provided a framework for strategic cost management and an update on UNDP cost recovery. In a series of meetings in the context of the High-level Committee on Management of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB) (see p. 1449), UN organizations had agreed on a common definition of principles for the purpose of cost recovery to facilitate comparability of cost-recovery policies and practices across UN organizations. They had agreed on common definitions of cost categories, including various elements of direct, fixed and variable costs, and that cost recovery would generally apply to variable indirect cost.

UNDP had adapted the harmonized principles and definitions to fit its business model, covering the provision of development services, advocacy and advisory services and support to UN system coordination. All costs linked to activities under those business lines were considered direct costs on programme budgets. As part of its 2004-2005 biennial support budget, UNDP introduced a base structure concept for headquarters and country offices, which was linked to UNDP's core mandated activities and statutory functions, particularly as custodian of the resident coordinator system. Costs attributable to the base structure were considered fixed costs, covered exclusively from regular resources. Country office costs for all management and operational services outside the base structure were considered variable indirect costs, of which each fund source was charged its proportional share.

Notwithstanding the alignment of UNDP cost management with the common principles, particularly regarding the recovery of variable indirect costs, determination of a single programme support cost or cost recovery rate across multiple UN organizations was not feasible due to differences in mandates, business models and structures. Owing to system limitations, further disaggregate analysis of recovery income and the necessary structures were unattainable—a circumstance being remedied with the introduction, in January 2004, of the new Atlas enterprise resource planning system. UNDP's ultimate objective was the true attribution of all costs to their proper fund source, which was also a prerequisite for results-based budgeting. The delineation between fixed and variable costs would be reviewed and further defined, taking into account structural changes resulting from the implementation of the Atlas system and would be presented to the Executive Board as part of the 2006-2007 biennial support budget.

To achieve a proportional burden sharing of all variable indirect costs, UNDP determined a percentage fee chargeable to all programmes funded from other resources for those costs. The general management service fee (GMS) had been set at a range of 5 to 7 per cent for third-party cost sharing and trust funds. As per the calculation presented in an annex to the report, UNDP should ideally recover about 7.6 per cent from other resources, but had decided to increase its GMS rate gradually to that level. The GMS fee for programme country cost-sharing was set at an average of 3 per cent measured over the country-specific programme portfolio. Owing to its different nature, programme country cost-sharing was excluded from the GMS rate calculation, which was instead based on donor resources. UNDP also assessed an implementation support service (ISS) fee as a direct cost for services provided during programme implementation, either to programme country governments in support of national execution or to other UN organizations in the implementation of their own programmes. ISS fees were calculated based on cost surveys conducted in over 60 country offices grouped into four cost bands. The table of average prices for each standard transaction under each of the cost bands, referred to as the Universal Price List, ensured that the cost of country-based operations units were fully recovered. Annexed to the report were: common definitions of different types of costs; information on the calculation of the cost recovery rate; a comparison of cost recovery practices in UNDG organizations; and an overview of all UNDP cost recovery mechanisms.

In May [DP/2004/36], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), having considered the UNDP Administrator's report on strategic cost management and implications for cost recovery, noted that the comparison of cost recovery practices in UNDG organizations annexed to the report was not meaningful, because the basis for the calculation of the indirect support rates was quite different for each organization. All entities concerned needed to follow the same template to achieve a meaningful comparison. UN funds and programmes should continue consultations for further harmonization of cost recovery principles, clearly identifying common elements under each cost category and differences resulting from different mandates and operating modalities. ACABQ encouraged all UN organizations concerned to continue cost recovery harmonization, taking into account the specific issues raised in its report. It intended to monitor progress within the context of the UNDP 2006-2007 biennial support budget and trusted that a means could be found to increase transparency in the setting of cost recovery rates.

In September [dec. 2004/30], the Executive Board took note of the harmonized cost recovery principles contained in the Administrator's report and encouraged UNDP to intensify consultations for further harmonization. It endorsed, on an interim basis, the UNDP-specific implementation of the harmonized principles, and their application in the cost recovery policy, particularly regarding the proportional sharing of variable indirect cost among all sources of funds. The Board stressed that UNDP ensure full recovery, at an aggregate level, of all actual costs for implementing activities financed from UNDP third-party cost sharing, trust fund contributions and programme country cost sharing. It should report at the first regular session in 2005 on options for transparent reporting on income from cost recovery, including the possibility of including such income in calculating the next biennial support budget. UNDP should submit to the Board, with a view to considering the rates under that policy, at its June 2005 session, a detailed proposal containing clear criteria that encouraged incentives for un-earmarked, timely and flexible contributions to trust funds, third-party cost sharing and programme country cost sharing in order to reach that aggregate level, and to develop the report in close consultation with interested Member States. The Board stressed that new rates under that policy should only be applied subject to a decision by the Board. UNDP was asked to review its cost-recovery policy after two years and to report to the Board at its September 2007 session on the lessons learned, including the aggregate cost recovery rate in time for the 2008 MYFF. It should continue monitoring the level of cost recovered from other (non-core) resources, and refining its strategic cost management system, including through the implementation of the Atlas system, introduced in January, in order to better attribute indirect cost to programmes and projects. The Board reiterated that regular resources remained the bedrock of contributions to UNDP.

Also in September [dec. 2004/41], the Executive Board took note of the related ACABQ report.

Audit reports

The Executive Board, at its January session, considered the Administrator's report [DP/2004/11] on implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors for the 2000-2001 biennium [YUN 2002, p. 1388], which contained an update of actions taken by UNDP on the Board's recommendations, including the status of any follow-up action and the target date for completion. The Administrator said progress had already been achieved in most areas and outstanding issues were being addressed.

In January [dec. 2004/4], the Executive Board took note of the Administrator's report and stressed the importance of adequate follow-up to the recommendations by the Board of Auditors.

In April [DP/2004/27], the Administrator submitted the annual report on the internal audit and oversight services provided by the UNDP Office of Audit and Performance Review (OAPR) for 2003. Key recommendations regarding the new approach to audit and the repositioning exercise initiated in 2002 [YUN 2003, p. 904], including the elimination of Control Self Assessment workshops and discontinuation of the use of public accounting firms to perform internal audits of country offices, were implemented, and changes were made to the OAPR organizational structure to achieve the other key recommendations for strengthening investigation, quality assurance and ICT functions, and enhancing the multidisciplinary character of audit teams. A revised scope was introduced that reduced the number of audit areas from 15 to 12.

The number of UNDP audits/reviews issued in 2003 was 18, down from 56 in 2002, while assessments of national execution of audit reports were relatively unchanged at 1,660. The decline reflected the large number of vacant posts resulting from OAPR's repositioning exercise and the discontinuation of routinely contracting out internal audits of country offices. OAPR issued a total of 15 internal audit reports of country offices, containing 346 recommendations, virtually all of which were accepted by management and were being implemented.

In June [dec. 2004/17], the Executive Board took note of the reports of the Administrator, of OAPR to the UNOPS Executive Director [DP/2004/28] (see p. 896) and of the UNFPA Executive Director on internal audit and oversight (see p. 1083) and the comments made thereon. It urged the Administrator and the UNOPS and UNFPA Executive Directors to address the issues raised in those reports and report to the Board at its annual session in 2005. They should develop a framework containing concrete objectives and a time-path and indicators for resolving those issues and report to the Board at its second regular session in September. UNDP should also report at that session on a periodic review of its policy on universal prices for its services, with clear measures for improving cost recovery, including a timetable (see p. 889). The Board noted with concern that UNDP routinely provided a variety of services to UN organizations, sometimes based on a memorandum of understanding and sometimes not.

As requested, UNDP, UNFPA, and UNOPS submitted an August joint report [DP/2004/CRP.8-DP/FPA/2004/CRP.5] outlining their current practices for ensuring implementation of audit recommendations and proposing a framework for resolving issues contained in internal audit reports. They also proposed that, starting from 2004, the report on internal audit and oversight activities be revised to present findings in a schematic format instead of the current narrative presentation. In September [dec. 2004/39], the Executive Board took note of the joint report and welcomed the proposed framework for future reports.

Procurement

According to the 2003 annual statistical report in procurement [DP/2004/39], total procurement for goods and services under UNDP funding in 2003 was $825.6 million, of which the share from developing countries was 78.3 per cent, an increase of 4.2 per cent. Total procurement by the UN system under all sources of funding was $5.08 billion, of which the share from developing countries was 45.1 per cent.

The Administrator, in his update of the activities of the Inter-Agency Procurement Services Office (IAPSO) from June 2002 to June 2004 [DP/2004/38], reported that the volume of procurement handled by IAPSO fell by 7.9 per cent, from $185.6 million in 2000-2001 to $171 million in 2002-2003. Having brought costs under control and achieved self-financing status [YUN 2002, p. 873], IAPSO shifted its focus to diversifying and strengthening its revenue sources in the 2002-2003 biennium. Total turnover during 2002 was $81.3 million with an average fee of 3.9 per cent; corresponding figures for 2003 were $89.7 million and 4.7 per cent. The net operating surplus was about 0.33 per cent of the turnover in 2002, which tripled in 2003. IAPSO continued to develop its e-procurement system, United Nations Web Buy, launched in 2002 [ibid.] with the introduction of its e-tendering module. In 2003, it launched the first web-based tender in the UN system, thereby reducing the resources needed for managing complex tenders by 90 per cent. IAPSO supported implementation of the UNDP Atlas system by developing content for the contract, asset and procurement management modules in the online Atlas learning tool.

In September [dec. 2004/31], the Executive Board took note of the report on the activities of IAPSO and its continuing self-financed status. The Board encouraged IAPSO to continue raising the professional standards of procurement within the UN system by developing a procurement curriculum for professional certification and recommended that it continue to research collaborative purchasing system-wide as requested by the inter-agency procurement working group.

Other technical cooperation

Review of UN regular programme of technical cooperation and Development Account

UN technical cooperation

As requested by General Assembly resolution 58/270 [YUN 2003, p. 1399], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/59/397] reviewing the UN regular programme of technical cooperation and the Development Account. The report examined the full range of operations of both, with analyses of the similarities and differences between them.

Specific proposals were made for improving the two programmes (see below), including two options for the future of the regular programme of technical cooperation. One option was to eliminate section 23, Regular programme of technical cooperation, of the 2004-2005 programme budget [YUN 2003, p. 1399] and to allocate, on a pro rata basis, its resources to technical cooperation subprogrammes within each programme section, while ensuring that the resources were protected for the use of developing countries. The second option was to retain the regular programme by maintaining section 23, while updating its objective, criteria, management responsibilities and reporting arrangements. The second option was considered the most suitable, since implementing the first could prove complex, and it was not evident that restructuring into the individual programmes would result in more effective management.

The review proposed that the objective for the regular programme be rewritten to better reflect its role within the UN system and include wording based on the Secretary-General's statement on technical cooperation contained in his 2002 report [YUN 2002, p. 860] on the delivery of advisory services to Member States. It also suggested criteria to govern the programme as a whole and to be applied by implementing entities.

Proposals for reporting arrangements called for designating the Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Affairs as programme coordinator and the executive head of each implementing entity as programme manager for the funds allocated to it; using the budget fascicle to present the request for new programme funding and to report on the previous biennium, linking budget approval to reporting on past performance, or to report separately (outside of the UN programme performance report), as in the case for the Development Account; and the performance report to be submitted, in addition to the bodies involved in budget approval, to the Economic and Social Council and the Second Committee. Also proposed was an audit of the regular programme of technical cooperation, which could be considered in 2008 or later.

The review found the Development Account to be well managed and operating in a manner fully consistent with its General Assembly-approved directions. However, it would be useful to ensure a clear ongoing mandate for the Account through the agreed criteria and an approved statement of objective. As to arrangements for its funding, Assembly resolution 54/15 [YUN 1999, p. 1307] had provided that the savings identified from reductions in administrative and overhead costs and transferred to the Account formed the base level of funding for future years, with future verifiable and sustainable savings to be added to the Account. Since no further savings had been identified, the provision should be rescinded by the Assembly. Any future increase in funding levels for the Account should be considered in the light of competing priorities for the use of the overall UN programme budget.

It was further suggested that the Assembly consider combining sections 23 and 35 (Development Account) of the 2004-2005 programme budget [YUN 2003, p. 1399] into one budget section with two separate parts.

UN activities

Department of Economic and Social Affairs

During 2004, the Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA) had approximately 500 technical cooperation projects under execution in a dozen substantive sectors, with a total project expenditure of $48.9 million. Projects financed by UNDP represented $12.8 million; those by trust funds, $36 million; and those by UNFPA, $0.1 million.

On a geographical basis, DESA's technical cooperation programme included expenditures of $29.6 million for interregional and global programmes; $11.6 million in Africa; $4 million in Asia and the Pacific; $2.6 million in the Middle East; $0.9 million in the Americas; and $0.2 million in Europe.

Distribution of expenditures by substantive sectors was as follows: associate expert programme, $22 million; socio-economic governance management, $10.3 million; governance and public administration, $8.1 million; energy, $2.4 million; water, $2 million; ICT task force, $1.2 million; programme support, $1 million; knowledge management, $0.8 million; social development, $0.5 million; infrastructure, $0.4 million; statistics $0.1 million; and the United Nations Forum on Forests, $0.1 million. Of the total delivery of $48.9 million, the associate expert programme comprised 45 per cent; socio-economic governance management, 21 per cent; and governance and public administration, 16 per cent.

On a component basis, DESA's delivery in 2004 included $39.4 million for project personnel; $4.5 million for sub-contracts; $2.6 million for training; $1.5 million for equipment; and $0.9 million for miscellaneous expenses.

Total expenditure for DESA against the UN regular programme of technical cooperation was $5.1 million. Distribution of expenditures by division was as follows: sustainable development, $1.4 million; public administration and development management, $1.9 million; social policy and development, $0.7 million; statistics, $0.9 million; advancement of women, $0.1 million; and administrative support, $0.1 million. On a component basis, expenditure for the year included $3.7 million for advisory services; $0.6 million for meetings; $0.5 million for travel; and $0.3 million for consultancy services.

UN Fund for International Partnerships

The Secretary-General, in his report on the 2004 activities of the United Nations Fund for International Partnerships (UNFIP) [A/60/327], established in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1297] to manage the process of grant allocations through the United Nations Foundation, a public charity founded by Robert E. Turner to channel his gift to the United Nations of stock valued at some $1 billion, provided data on the fifteenth and sixteenth funding cycles, progress in each programme area, and a review of UNFIP activities in advocacy and partnership-building. A total of $76.8 million was programmed for 2004, including $11.4 million in the fifteenth funding cycle and $44.3 million in the sixteenth. Of the total, $46.5 million was for 12 projects related to children's health; $22.6 million for 13 projects for the environment; $3.5 million for six projects for population and women; $2.2 million for nine projects for peace, security and human rights; and $2 million for seven strategic initiative projects. Since 1998, a total of $639 million had been allocated to fund 324 projects in 122 countries involving 37 UN organizations.

UN Office for Project Services

The United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS), established in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 900] in accordance with General Assembly decision 48/501 [YUN 1994, p. 806] as a separate and self-financing entity of the UN system to act as a service provider to UN organizations, offered a broad range of services, from overall project management to the provision of single inputs.

2004 activities

The Executive Director, in his annual report on UNOPS activities for 2004 [DP/2005/23], stated that the Office achieved further transition and recovery during the year. Project delivery exceeded the forecast submitted to the Executive Board in January (see p. 895) by 2 per cent, or $10 million, reaching $495.3 million.

In 2004, UNOPS generated $45.5 million in total revenue, exceeding the 2004 approved estimates of $44 million by $1.5 million (see p. 895). Project services continued to provide the largest percentage of total UNOPS revenue ($35.4 million, or 78 per cent), including $17.6 million from UNDP core and trust funds, $5.3 million from UNDP management service agreements, and $12.6 million from other UN organizations. Service revenue totalled $8.6 million, including $7.0 million from the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD), $1.4 million from reimbursable service agreements, and $200,000 from the Programme of Assistance to the Palestinian People. Interest and rental income totalled $1.5 million.

By UNOPS geographic/service division, income was generated from global/interregional projects ($10.7 million), and from projects in Afghanistan ($9.6 million); Europe, North Africa and Central Asia ($7.6 million); Latin America and the Caribbean ($4.7 million); East and Southern Africa ($4.2 million); Asia and the Pacific ($4 million); and West and Central Africa ($2.7 million). Revenues also included $600,000 from the UNOPS finance division, $200,000 from its procurement division, and $1.5 million from other sources.

Administrative expenditures totalled $57.4 million in 2004, $9.6 million over the 2003 figure, but spending on staff costs declined to $25.8 million from $27.9 million in 2003. Contractual services, equipment, communications, travel and general operating expenses in 2004 equalled $15.2 million. UNOPS paid $6.4 million in reimbursements to UNDP and the United Nations for a range of central and operational support services.

UNOPS spent $3.5 million, or 7 per cent of its total expenditure base, on the wave I rollout of the Atlas system, exceeding the budgeted provision of $2.5 million by 40 per cent. It also paid $4.1 million related to its ongoing change management programme (see below), including the recruitment and installation of a new senior management team and the alignment of its client service divisions.

As at 31 December, UNOPS had a fund balance of $14.5 million, including $6 million in operational reserve and $17.2 million in working capital.

Change management process

The Executive Board, at its January session, considered a report [DP/2004/7] issued in response to a 2003 Board decision [YUN 2003, p. 908] on the implementation of the UNOPS change management process. The report provided a full response to the recommendations set out in the final report of the independent review of the UNOPS business model and related issues [ibid., p. 907]. It reviewed the current status of consultations with stakeholders on the UNOPS mandate and governance mechanisms and its vision as the service provider of choice within the UN system. It summarized measures under way to develop additional business portfolios, strengthen existing client relationships and build new ones.

Concerning the financial viability of UNOPS, the anticipated balance at the end of 2003 and the 2004 projected income would enable the Office to meet its 2004 budget obligations, including the planned change management implementation, and raise the operational reserve, from which it would not have to draw down further. To ensure the realization of income projections and sustained long-term viability, UNOPS identified priority countries for portfolio development in early 2004 and consulted with current and potential clients to consolidate portfolios under negotiation and identify new opportunities. In the event that portfolio growth and the budgetary situation in 2004 did not support that intent, the UNOPS Executive Director would propose to the Executive Board a financing alternative for the change management implementation.

The UNDP Administrator and the UNOPS Executive Director collaborated to improve relations between their two organizations and established a joint, senior-level task force to examine expanded possibilities for partnership. An inter-divisional strategic advisory team within UNOPS was drafting a framework for client relationship management and a longer-term strategy for management of business acquisition and portfolio development. UNOPS would also establish a regular and systematic review and consolidation of its pipeline opportunities and of changing market trends. Other change management initiatives included establishing a new fee-setting mechanism and restructuring UNOPS to eliminate interdivisional competition. Recommendations on a new vision, mission and value statement for UNOPS, submitted in 2003 by a cross-functional strategic advisory team, were being refined. Linked to that were ongoing consultations on changing the UNOPS mandate to allow it to implement donor-funded programmes and projects on behalf of recipient Governments and for its long-term sustainability. It was proposed that where UNOPS was judged by regional development banks and their recipient Governments as the best entity to provide required services in areas of its mandated competence, it should be allowed to enter directly into service relationships with those multilateral entities.

Concerning business improvement, the strategic advisory team on project pricing and cost estimating made initial recommendations on how UNOPS could become more transparent in its pricing practices, introduce standard rate sheets for project implementation services and improve its internal capabilities for understanding the costs of delivering its services. An initial standard rate sheet was developed and was expected to be implemented in 2004. A UNOPS team was developing project management standards, common tools and templates for internal use to support the entire life cycle of a project. UNOPS had piloted a new appraisal and reward system—the Performance Management and Development System—in its Copenhagen (Denmark) and Kuala Lumpur (Malaysia) offices since early 2003, and its organization-wide introduction was planned for 2004.

The first wave of the Atlas system began operations in January 2004, and successive waves would be introduced in midyear and in 2005. UNOPS would also change its outmoded e-mail systems and systems used to maintain and update its Internet and intranet sites, and would invest in staff training and capacity development programmes in 2004.

A strategic advisory team conducted a criteria-based analysis of the UNOPS organizational structure and client interactions, and made recommendations for change. Following a review by the UNOPS Management Coordination Committee (MCC), the Executive Director approved a series of structural and organizational changes to facilitate a strong client focus at corporate and service delivery levels; enhance portfolio development, management and delivery; ensure clear lines of accountability; and promote capacity development, knowledge networking and team spirit. UNOPS headquarters would remain in New York, and its mix of thematic and geographic operational divisions would be replaced by five geographic and one global/interregional divisions, directly overseen by the Director of Operations/Deputy Executive Director. All geographic regional offices would be located in the regions they served, necessitating the decentralization of some divisions headquartered in New York. The report contained the 2004 timetable for major components of the change process and an annotated budget for the 2004 change plan, totalling $8.4 million.

In January 2004 [dec. 2004/3], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took note of the full response to the recommendations set out in the 2003 report of the independent review [YUN 2003, p. 907], the strategy for business acquisition, progress in implementing internal change, the comprehensive timetable and benchmarks for monitoring progress. It approved the detailed budget for the longer-term change process and the modalities for meeting its cost, and the expansion of the UNOPS mandate to allow it to cooperate directly with regional and subregional development banks on a pilot basis. The Board encouraged UNOPS to ensure close consultation with the resident coordinators and requested its Executive Director to provide an update on progress in his report to the Board at its annual session in June 2004.

In a September progress report on UNOPS activities [DP/2004/45], the Executive Director provided an update on the change management process. A new management team was installed on 1 August. Client service offices were established for the Asia and the Pacific region (Bangkok, Thailand), Europe, North Africa and Western/Central Asia (Geneva), Western and Central Africa (Dakar, Senegal), and Eastern and Southern Africa (Nairobi, Kenya); the Latin America and the Caribbean office was to be established in 2005. The Division for the Global and Interregional Programme was established in New York. The realignment of the procurement and the client services divisions was completed on 31 August. Given the experience of the first phase of the change management process and taking into account the recommendations of the Board of Auditors (see p. 896), the change process was refocused on six turnaround initiatives: corporate strategy redefinition; Atlas wave I rollout; imprest accounting; management reporting, budget and planning; client reporting; and project proposal tracking and acceptance. The initiatives were estimated to cost some $5 million over the 2004-2005 period. Initial gains in client reporting were expected to be achieved by the end of September 2004 and a comprehensive reporting system to be fully operational by April 2005, and the prior years' imprest account reconciliations to be completed by June 2005. To facilitate those improvements, the Executive Board was informed at its June 2004 session that resources approved at the January 2004 session for change initiatives (see p. 894) had been reallocated to the adjusted priority tasks.

At its regular session in September [dec. 2004/36], the Executive Board urged the Executive Director to redouble his efforts towards implementing the change management process and ensure financial accountability in UNOPS.

Budget estimates

Revised 2003 budget and 2004 forecast

In January [DP/2004/6], the Executive Director, reporting on the implementation of the UNOPS 2003 budget, indicated that, as at 31 October 2003, total project delivery would be $460 million, or 95 per cent of the $484.4 million target; $63.5 million in total projected income, including $31.3 million from the implementation of project portfolios; $11.6 million in service income; $19.5 million in non-recurring income from contract amendments under the United Nations Office for the Iraq Programme; and $1.1 million in other miscellaneous income. As at 31 December 2003, total expenditure was estimated to be $49.2 million, of which $44 million pertained to recurring administrative expenditure and $5.2 million for non-recurring expenses. The 2003 year-end fund balance was projected to be $18.5 million, comprising an operational reserve of $4.2 million and a $14.3 million working capital fund.

As at January, the indicative figure for project delivery in 2004 was $485 million. Total income was estimated at $44 million, comprising $35 million in portfolio implementation income, $8 million in service income, and $1 million in rental income, while indicative 2004 expenditures totalled $56.7 million, pending finalization of the restructuring implementation plan.

The Executive Board, at its January session [dec. 2004/3], took note of the Executive Director's report on the 2003 UNOPS budget and the encouraging estimated financial results. It also took note of the 2004-2005 revised budget estimates and requested the Executive Director to submit to the Board at its annual session in June an update on the budget estimates, including a critical assessment of the 2004-2005 business projections.

In response to the Executive Board's request, the Executive Director, in his annual report [DP/2004/23], stated that a conservative projection of the 2004 revenue and expenditure data indicated a revised gross project delivery of $429 million. At a revised average income rate of 6.9 per cent, annual revenue generated under the project portfolio would amount to $29.4 million. Additional revenue of $9 million was generated through the IFAD loan portfolio, rental income, and other miscellaneous income, bringing the revised total income projection for 2004 to $38.4 million. Recurrent expenditures, exclusive of change management and Atlas-related expenditures, were projected to be $43.7 million, which would exceed revenues by $5.4 million. The deficit was expected to be reduced through the strict curtailment and monitoring of expenditures, combined with further business acquisition generating additional income in 2004.

In June [dec. 2004/15], the Executive Board took note of the Executive Director's annual report and stressed the importance of the short- and long-term financial viability of UNOPS. It endorsed the proposal of the Executive Director and MCC to extend the UNOPS mandate to allow it to work directly with Governments in providing infrastructure and public works services. The Board asked the Executive Director to keep it informed of the progress and challenges in implementing the expanded mandate. It noted the progress made by UNOPS in its change management process (see p. 893) and looked forward to a furtherance of the process in 2004 and 2005. The Board encouraged all UN entities, particularly UNDP, to work closely with UNOPS, especially in the field of common services, in situations where UNOPS was cost effective and had comparative advantages. It requested the Executive Director to prepare, in consultations with MCC, a progress report for the Board's September session.

In September [DP/2004/45], the Executive Director submitted a progress report on UNOPS activities covering business projections for 2004 and beyond, initiatives to overcome potential obstacles in business acquisition and diversification, and updates on change management. UNOPS proceeded with the realignment of its existing portfolio of projects to reflect the new client service structure and revised the functions and structure of its procurement division.

At the same time, it embarked on a major financial data reconciliation and clean-up exercise.

The project revenue forecast for the end of 2004 was $29.5 million, based on a projected level of delivery of $429 million. Additional revenue for services delivered of at least $9.7 million was projected to be generated through the IFAD loan portfolio; services to the Global Alliance on Improved Nutrition and the Global Fund for HIV/AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria; and rental income. Total revenue for 2004 was projected at $39.2 million, which was subject to changes due to additions and corrections in the data entered into the Atlas system, business acquisition initiatives, and initiatives in support of UN system activities in Burundi, Haiti and the Sudan.

As at 30 June, actual administrative expenditures stood at $21.4 million, comprising some $11.9 million in salaries and entitlements and $9.5 million in general and administrative expenditures. Expenditures estimated to 31 December totalled $44.6 million, including the estimated annual $5 million in UNOPS payments for services bought from UNDP, the United Nations and the Board of Auditors. The end-2004 fund balance was projected at $8 million, including the $6 million operational reserve. New project portfolios acquired to date stood at $408.2 million, with 34.9 per cent of funds attributable to World Bank loan-funded activities, 59.4 per cent to UN programmes, and the remaining 5.6 per cent to other sources. With a projected 2004 delivery of $429 million, the UNOPS 2005 project portfolio budget would amount to some $431 million.

The report also discussed UNOPS governance and mandate. UNOPS intended to explore the case for enlarging MCC to better reflect the UNOPS client structure and to consult with MCC on options for its functioning and composition, and make proposals to the Executive Board in January 2005. The role and service scope of UNOPS would be re-examined within the overall corporate strategy initiative and through intensive stakeholder, client and staff consultations.

At its second regular session in September [dec. 2004/36], the Executive Board noted with concern the financial projections and the fund balance projection in the Executive Director's report. It asked MCC to report to the Board in January 2005 on its assessment of progress in UNOPS and the guidance it provided to the Office. The Board stressed that it was important for UNOPS to increase its business volume through cooperation with other UN entities, particularly UNDP, and requested the UNDP Administrator, in his capacity as MCC chairman, to communicate the Board's view to CEB as soon as possible.

Audit reports

The Executive Board, at its January session [dec. 2004/12], took note of the Executive Director's report [DP/2004/10] on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors [YUN 2002, p. 1388] for the 2001-2002 biennium.

In June [DP/2004/28], the UNDP Office of Audit and Performance Review (OAPR) and the UNOPS Project Services Audit Section reported on internal audit services for UNOPS operations in 2003. OAPR initiated and conducted 21 internal audits covering operational activities at headquarters and in the field, including those under management and support services arrangements. Of the 21 final reports, 18 were on audits started and finalized in 2003 and three on audits begun in 2002 and completed in 2003. Together, the reports contained 149 recommendations, of which 48 were in finance, 35 in administration, 25 in programme, 23 in organization and structure, 10 in policy, 6 in personnel and 2 in office automation. The organizational units concerned provided written comments on the contents of the draft audit reports. UNOPS disagreed with only one of the recommendations; in general the comments indicated that actions had been taken or were being taken to address the audit issues and recommendations.

In response to the recommendations and concerns expressed in the Board of Auditors report on UNOPS for the biennium ended 31 December 2003 [A/59/5/Add.10] (see p. 1397), the Executive Director, in a September progress report [DP/2004/45], stated that UNOPS concurred with the recommendations, which called for more efficient financial procedures, improved internal controls, and strengthened administrative and management processes. UNOPS would present its action plan to address the recommendations, including an update on progress in implementing the plan, at the Executive Board's January 2005 session.

The Executive Board, in September [dec. 2004/36], took note of the preliminary comments of UNOPS to the report of the Board of Auditors and deferred further consideration of the matter to its January 2005 session, when the report would be formally presented, together with ACABQ's recommendations.

UN Volunteers

In 2004, the number of volunteers working for the UNDP-administered United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme increased to 7,300 from 5,635 in 2003. The volunteers, from 163 countries, carried out 7,772 assignments in 139 countries. Seventy-seven per cent of them were from developing countries. Women accounted for 35 per cent of all volunteers in 2004, compared to 37 per cent in 2003. By region, 41.8 per cent of assignments were carried out in Africa, 26 per cent in Asia and the Pacific, 18.2 per cent in Latin America and the Caribbean, 8.5 per cent in Europe and CIS, and 5.5 per cent in the Arab States.

The UNDP Administrator, in his annual report on the UNV financial situation in 2004 [DP/2005/33 & Add.1], indicated that, excluding funds for UN peacekeeping operations, income recorded for UNV in 2004 amounted to $22.7 million, an increase of $7.6 million compared to $15.1 million in 2003. Programme expenditure in 2004, excluding UN peacekeeping operations, decreased by $800,000 to $17.7 million from $18.5 million in 2003. The balance of the operational reserve as at 31 December 2004 was $1 million.

At its June session [dec. 2004/25], the Executive Board took note of the report of the UNDP Administrator [DP/2004/24] on UNV activities during 2002-2003. On 18 June [dec. 2004/16], the Board recognized UNV achievements in articulating and advocating the importance of the contributions of volunteerism, particularly in its role towards the attainment of the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51]. It welcomed initiatives to extend opportunities for volunteerism by expanding the forms of affiliation with the programme and called for relevant UN system organizations and bodies to continue to integrate volunteerism into their policies, programmes and reports, including those relating to the achievement of the MDGs. The Board encouraged Governments to contribute to the Special Voluntary Fund to enable UNV to further explore, expand and strengthen the role of volunteerism and volunteer contributions to development, reconfirmed its support for UNV as the focal point for follow-up to the International Year of Volunteers (2001) [YUN 2001, p. 814], and supported the further development of its future role in the report of the Secretary-General to the General Assembly's sixtieth (2005) session. It encouraged UNV to enhance analysis in future annual reports so as to provide the Board with an in-depth understanding of UNV activities and their impact.

The Assembly, by decision 58/567 of 8 April, deferred until its fifty-ninth (2004) session consideration of the Secretary-General's 2000 report on the participation of UNVs in peacekeeping operations [YUN 2001, p. 814] and the related ACABQ report [ibid., p. 94].

Economic and technical cooperation among developing countries

South-South cooperation

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board considered a report on the implementation of South-South cooperation [DP/2004/26] at its June session. The report highlighted opportunities for enhancing South-South cooperation based on lessons learned and recommendations made to the Special Unit for South-South Cooperation, which was in the process of formulating the third South-South cooperation framework (2005-2007). It indicated that developing countries were placing renewed emphasis on South-South cooperation efforts to reduce gaps between rich and poor countries. It was envisaged that South-South relations would enable countries not benefiting from globalization to learn winning strategies through the exchange of ideas, resources, skills and knowledge with countries that had successfully adjusted to globalization and raised living standards. A number of institutions had been established by developing countries to coordinate South-South initiatives, but the implementation of their agreed action plans remained slower than desired so that only a limited number of programmes were contributing to demonstrable socio-economic transformation. Measures to overcome obstacles and scale up the volume of exchanges among developing countries were the prime concern of the Special Unit as it formulated the third cooperation framework, whose main thrust hinged on marshalling South-South efforts towards meeting the MDGs. To overcome its resource limitations, the Special Unit sought new and larger coalitions among the more advanced developing countries.

On 23 June, the Executive Board took note of the report on South-South cooperation [dec. 2004/25].

The Board considered the third cooperation framework for South-South cooperation (2005-2007) [DP/CF/SSC/3] at its September session. The framework detailed a forward-looking agenda for the use of resources under the UNDP MYFF, 2004-2007 (see p. 887) and elaborated on the context, strategy and directions for broadening South-South cooperation through policy support to global efforts to enhance it, backstopping country initiatives, and mainstreaming South-South cooperation in UNDP's work. The framework would focus on areas of cooperation where the demand expressed by developing countries was greatest; where the commitment to work in multilateral arrangements to achieve agreed objectives was strongest; and where the involvement of and support by State, civil society and private sector partners were likeliest. The Special Unit would work to bring potential partners together by establishing lines of communication, facilitating the sharing of information and best practices, and fostering practical relationships that contributed to human development objectives. The framework would serve as the Special Unit's main instrument for mobilizing financial, technical, institutional social and intellectual resources to pursue growth and development through South-South cooperation, in addition to those required for supporting the Unit's core functions and catalytic efforts in the 2005-2007 period.

The total resource mobilization target for the framework during the 2005-2007 period was $31.4 million, comprising $14.4 million in core resources and $17 million in non-core resources.

In September [dec. 2004/32], the Executive Board requested the Special Unit for South-South cooperation, in close cooperation with Member States, to update the third cooperation framework in the light of the Board's comments for final consideration by the Board in January 2005. To ensure the effective implementation of the framework, it encouraged the UNDP Administrator to appoint a new head of the Special Unit before that session. The Board decided that South-South cooperation be considered as a driver of development effectiveness and incorporated in the MYFF.

UN Capital Development Fund

Contributions to the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) regular resources in 2004 decreased by $9.7 million, or 36 per cent, bringing the total to $17.2 million, from $26.9 million in 2003 [DP/2005/33]. Contributions to other resources were $6.3 million in 2004, down from $10.7 million in 2003. Overall expenditure increased by almost $5 million, from $22.9 million in 2003 to $27.6 million in 2004. Expenditure against regular resources increased to $19.7 million, from $17 million in 2003. Other resources expenditures increased from $5.9 million in 2003 to $6.6 million in 2004. Unexpended resources at the end of 2004 totalled $48 million, including an operational reserve of $22.6 million.

In April [DP/2004/17 & Corr.1], UNCDF submitted to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board its 2003 results-oriented annual report (ROAR), which assessed results achieved by its 2000-2003 strategic results framework.

In 2003, UNCDF operational activities continued to be severely affected by the lower-than-expected level of contributions to its core resources, although the downward trend of income in 2000-2002 was reversed. Core contributions increased from $22.2 million in 2002 to $26.9 million in 2003, 10 per cent short of the $30 million target. Despite that increase, the long-term financial viability of UNCDF remained a concern. It thus reduced its core expenditures significantly in 2003 to align programme expenditures with available resources to ensure the Fund's integrity, resulting in programme expenditures from core resources of $16.7 million, down about a third from 2002. The situation also required a significant reduction of new project approvals, from $9.1 million in 2002 to $5.1 million in 2003, and a write-off of more than $55 million in outstanding commitments, involving programme cuts and closures. Total expenditures in 2003 were at a low of $27.8 million, down from $48.5 million in 2000. However, the 2003 portfolio clean-up, combined with an improving core resource situation, would allow for increased expenditures in 2004. Between 2000 and 2003, UNCDF partially achieved its operational targets in local governance and microfinance while achieving its targets in organizational strengthening.

In 2003, UNCDF had an active portfolio of 74 projects, valued at some $21.6 million, of which 50 met the criteria for reporting (projects lasting more than five months and with expenditure of over $50,000). The majority consisted of local development programmes, followed by programmes in microfinance investments, eco-development projects, and infrastructure projects.

UNCDF impact assessment

An April report [DP/2004/18] summarized the independent impact assessment of UNCDF, mandated by the Executive Board in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 822]. Keeping in mind its objectives, the assessment concluded that UNCDF was effectively carrying out its mandate to reduce poverty in the least developed countries (LDCs). It had, for the most part, organized its existing portfolio according to the 1995 policy shift that narrowed the Fund's focus to local governance and microfinance programmes, and had responded to the recommendations of the 1999 independent external evaluation [ibid., p. 821]. Through its two programmes, the Fund had contributed to significant results in poverty reduction, policy impact and replication of its projects by donors. Overall, it had generally achieved positive results and remained a relatively efficient organization with a balanced budget in 2003. However, its financial viability after 2004 was questionable, a situation resulting from the mismatch between UNCDF's niche and international donor funding trends, its governance structure, and the need for a clarification of its role in the UNDP group.

The assessment recommendations called on the UNDP Administrator and the UNCDF Management Team to clarify UNCDF's role and responsibilities within UNDP and its associated funds, and to work with the Executive Board to identify a new Executive Secretary; on the UNCDF Senior Management Team to establish a team to review and analyse the Fund's business model and corporate governance arrangements, their strengths and weaknesses, and to propose alternatives on the Fund's future; and on UNCDF to make significant reductions in administrative costs or find alternative sources of funding for that budget item should its programme funding continue to decline. The assessment further recommended improving specific areas of the local governance and microfinance programmes, a clearer UNCDF mission statement, symbols, templates and logos, substantive knowledge sharing within and across programmes and creating a monitoring team to oversee implementation of the various Atlas clusters and modules being deployed.

UNCDF management, in a May report [DP/2004/19], welcomed the findings of the independent impact assessment, which were in line with the self-assessment contained in the 2003 cumulative ROAR (see p. 898). The report addressed two key assessment recommendations: UNCDF's positioning, niche and relationship to UNDP; and the development of a new business model. The report proposed several options that could contribute to the funding base for a new UNCDF business model; namely, voluntary core contributions, non-core resource mobilization, fees from technical services, capital lending and concessional loan funding of some elements of UNCDF capital assistance to private enterprise and LDC Governments. Management concluded that the Fund would have to undergo urgent transformation to become more market-oriented in its programmes and financially viable as an institution, while preserving and capitalizing on gains made in its support of local development and microfinance activities.

In June [dec. 2004/13], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took note of the 2003 ROAR, the executive summary of the independent impact assessment of UNCDF and the management response to the assessment. The Board recognized that a number of the assessment recommendations had potentially wide-ranging implications in terms of, among others, a future closer relationship with UNDP, programming arrangements within the context of the MYFF, governance structures, and funding arrangements. In that regard, the Board asked the UNDP Administrator to report to it at its second regular session in September on possible options, including for future closer relationships with UNDP and their implications for governance, programming, funding arrangements, and the possibilities for UNCDF to contribute to pro-poor local private sector development. The Board noted with concern that UNCDF, despite efforts to broaden the donor base, was still unable to meet the annual core resource target of $30 million called for by the Board in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 884]. It asserted that, pending the submission of the requested proposals, UNCDF had a clear role to play in achieving the MDGs at the local level, particularly in local governance and microfinance in LDCs, and called on Member States and other institutions to further strengthen their contributions to its core funding in the light of the significant results achieved.

UNCDF future business model

A September progress report [DP/2004/46] proposed a framework for evaluating strategic options for a UNCDF future business model, including key guiding principles for identifying those options, and described existing strategic opportunities.

The report outlined two options for a future strategic niche and business model for UNCDF. The first was an official development assistance (ODA)-based model, with a UNCDF specialized in retail microfinance funded by voluntary contributions. The second was a private sector-based model, with a UNCDF specialized in channelling and utilizing private capital for high social impact investments in support of the MDGs. Under that option, UNCDF would focus on identifying high-impact investment opportunities and establish preconditions to attract and channel private capital to fund such opportunities. Under both models, the UNCDF local governance programmes would be transferred to a new UNDP unit: the Centre for Local Development. In the Administrator's view, the private sector-based model embodied a more innovative approach and a longer-term vision than the ODA-based model, which called for more radical adjustments in the UNCDF philosophy, approach and organizational culture.

In September [dec. 2004/37], the Executive Board took note of the progress report and the proposal it contained for integrating UNCDF activities and personnel dealing with local development within UNDP's Centre for Local Development, operating primarily in LDCs. To facilitate a final decision on the proposal, the UNDP Administrator was asked to elaborate, in close consultation with Board members and other key stakeholders and partners, a detailed proposal on the business plan for the future Centre for the Board's consideration in January 2005.

The Board noted the different options proposed for UNCDF to support local private sector development and stressed the need for a continued focus on LDCs. It requested the Administrator, in close consultation with UNCDF and Member States, to elaborate further on the viability and feasibility of both the ODA- and the private sector-based model options, taking into account the Board's concerns. The Administrator, in close consultation with UNCDF and Member States, particularly LDCs, should elaborate on other options, including maintaining an independent UNCDF, focusing on practice areas in accordance with its current mandate, and on the possibility for UNDP to strengthen its assistance to UNCDF in its advocacy efforts to mobilize the necessary resources. He should also elaborate on the option of integrating UNCDF microfinance activities in UNDP, taking into account the Board's June decision (see p. 899) and views expressed in the Board, for consideration by the Board in January 2005. The Board called on UNDP to assist UNCDF in mobilizing the resources to sustain its current local governance and microfinance activities.

Chapter III

Humanitarian and special economic assistance

In 2004, the United Nations, through the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), continued to mobilize and coordinate humanitarian assistance to respond to international emergencies. During the year, consolidated inter-agency appeals were launched for Angola, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Burundi, the Central African Republic, Chad, Chechnya and neighbouring republics of the Russian Federation, Côte d'Ivoire + 3 (Burkina Faso, Ghana, Mali), the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Eritrea, the Great Lakes region (Burundi, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Rwanda, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania), Grenada, Guinea, Haiti, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, Liberia, Madagascar, the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the Philippines, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan, Tajikistan, the United Republic of Tanzania, Uganda, the West Africa subregion (Burkina Faso, Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, Guinea, Liberia, Mali, Sierra Leone) and Zimbabwe. The appeals sought 3.4 billion, of which 2.2 billion was made available, meeting 64 per cent of requirements. Excluding contributions in kind and services not costed, OCHA recorded contributions for natural disaster assistance totalling $597.3 million.

At the request of Haiti, an ad hoc advisory group to develop a long-term programme of assistance was established. The groups created in 2002 on Guinea-Bissau and 2003 on Burundi continued their work.

The Preparatory Committee for the World Conference on Disaster Reduction, to be held in Kobe, Japan, in 2005, was established. It held its first and second sessions in Geneva, in May and October 2004, respectively.

humanitarian assistance of the United Nations: present and future challenges; it convened panels on strengthening preparedness and response to natural disasters, with an emphasis on capacity-building, and on field-level coordination for the purpose of continuing the presence and operation of UN humanitarian assistance missions in higher-risk environments (decision 2004/219). On 3 June (decision 2004/220), the Council decided to hold an informal event on 12 July to consider the issue of the transition from relief to development.

The Council considered the Secretary-General's June report [A/59/93-E/2004/74] on strengthening the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance, submitted in response to General Assembly resolutions 46/182 [YUN 1991, p. 421], 57/153 [YUN 2002, p. 889] and 58/114 [YUN 2003, p. 919], and Council resolution 2003/5 [ibid., p. 916]. The report summarized humanitarian developments over the preceding year, and addressed the theme of the Council's humanitarian affairs segment (see above), including issues related to natural disaster management and the challenges in obtaining sustainable humanitarian access to populations affected by conflict. It also highlighted key humanitarian policy initiatives, including updates on efforts to strengthen policies and actions related to the transition from relief to development, gender and humanitarian action, humanitarian financing, and protection from sexual exploitation and abuse in humanitarian crises.

The number of countries requiring humanitarian assistance as a result of complex emergencies remained constant, as was the overall level of requirements, which totalled some $2.86 billion. However, the uneven pattern of funding of humanitarian activities left some countries substantially underfinanced. An important development in the provision of humanitarian assistance was the increase in the diversity of actors providing such assistance, including regional peacekeeping operations with mandated humanitarian support tasks, private contractors, who were increasingly used in the management and distribution of relief assistance, and armed forces, which were directly involved in relief and reconstruction activities, highlighting the need for clearer guidance on civil-military relations and

Humanitarian assistance

Coordination

Humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council

The humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council (12-14 and 23 July) considered the strengthening of the coordination of coordination. Unfortunately, there was a shift in the perception and acceptance of humanitarian organizations by belligerent groups, as evidenced by the 2003 bombing of the UN headquarters in Iraq [YUN 2003, p. 346] and attacks on other humanitarian organizations and workers, suggesting that the emblematic protection traditionally afforded those organizations was no longer recognized, thus forcing them to re-examine their approaches to security and their ability to maintain an effective, impartial presence.

The reporting period also highlighted a serious crisis of protection with widespread and inter-related humanitarian consequences, especially in the West Africa subregion, where (see p. 108) the interrelated nature of the situation in Sierra Leone, Liberia and Côte d'Ivoire underlined the importance of a regional response to better address regional cross-border issues that were of a humanitarian, political, economic and protection nature. The Inter-Agency Standing Committee—a mechanism for the coordination of humanitarian assistance—had formulated preparedness and contingency planning strategies to take into account the importance of dealing with the regional dimensions of and challenges to the effective delivery of humanitarian aid in the West Africa region. Other humanitarian concerns included the plight of internally displaced persons and refugees as a result of conflict situations worldwide; the increasing use of sexual abuse and sexual violence as weapons of war; the interrelated nature of humanitarian problems, such as the combination of food insecurity, HIV/AIDS and weakened capacity for governance, which kept some 6.5 million people in Southern Africa in need of emergency assistance and natural disasters; and environmental emergencies, especially among the world's poorest, which reinforced the need to develop national preparedness and response capacities in disaster-prone countries.

Under the Good Humanitarian Donorship Initiative, which promoted best practice among donors and facilitated improved humanitarian coordination, a commonly agreed definition of humanitarian assistance and its component elements was near completion to allow for better-informed resource allocation and review of humanitarian assistance. UN agencies developed the CAP Needs Assessment Framework and Matrix (NAFM) to analyze, compare and present needs assessments consistently across emergencies. NAFM was being piloted in Burundi and the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC). To improve UN response to the transition of countries emerging from conflict, the standing mechanism for transition planning established in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 916]—the secretariats of the Executive Committee on Humanitarian Affairs (ECHA), the United Nations Development Group (UNDG) and the Executive Committee on Peace and Security—was exploring programming approaches, including the repatriation, reintegration, rehabilitation and reconstruction (the “4Rs”), to assist persons displaced by conflict make the transition from relief to development and to ensure the smooth handover of humanitarian coordination functions to national and international actors in those countries. Renewed efforts were made to strengthen gender analysis in common humanitarian action plans and to ensure that projects included in the Consolidated Appeals Process (CAP) were in line with agreed analysis of priority needs and response. Also, gender issues were integrated into NAFM.

The report noted that, in many of the world's complex emergencies, access by humanitarian agencies remained limited and sporadic. Over 10 million people in 20 countries affected by such emergencies were estimated to be inaccessible by humanitarian agencies, owing to lack of security, which was the major obstacle to the delivery of aid and a threat to the security of humanitarian personnel, physical impediments that reduced access to vulnerable populations and political, procedural and administrative obstacles. To deal with the question of the changing perceptions and misperceptions of humanitarian actors by local governments and populations, the report suggested that the humanitarian community had to better communicate its purpose and objectives to local populations, while addressing the growth of military involvement in humanitarian operations. That would require agreement on and communication concerning the respective roles and responsibilities of military and humanitarian actors, better assessment of the role of military engagement in relief activities and its impact on the perception of humanitarian operations, addressing the way humanitarian relief workers engaged and interacted with populations and improving collaboration among humanitarian agencies to deal with the perceptions influencing their safety and security.

The report also described efforts to build capacity for natural disaster preparedness and response, including assistance and support to national response capacity and the promotion of disaster management and risk capacity. The 2005 World Conference on Disaster Reduction (see p. 946) was expected to produce new and specific mechanisms to assist countries and the international community to implement improvements in risk reduction and disaster management.

The Secretary-General observed that as humanitarian challenges evolved into peacebuilding challenges, strong coordination and effective planning among UN development, humanitarian, peacekeeping and political actors became more critical. The international humanitarian community should strengthen its awareness and understanding of local dynamics and work to reassure recipient communities concerning the principles that guided humanitarian action. It was essential to ensure that disaster-risk reduction was more explicitly integrated into development planning. Member States and the United Nations should strengthen efforts to identify more practical ways of channelling resources to support national and regional disaster management capacities.

The Secretary-General made a number of recommendations concerning humanitarian financing, transition from relief to development, gender, HIV/AIDS in emergencies, protection from sexual exploitation and abuse, internally displaced persons, UN humanitarian presence and natural disasters.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting 50], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2004/50 [draft: E/2004/L.35, orally corrected] without vote [agenda item 5].

Strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming General Assembly resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991, recalling that humanitarian assistance should be provided in accordance with and with due respect for the guiding principles contained in the annex to that resolution, and recalling also other relevant resolutions of the Assembly and resolutions and agreed conclusions of the Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 2003/5 of 15 July 2003 and General Assembly resolution 58/114 of 17 December 2003,

Welcoming the fact that at the humanitarian affairs segment of 2004 the Economic and Social Council considered the theme strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian assistance of the United Nations: present and future challenges and that the Council held two panels, on strengthening preparedness and response to natural disasters, with an emphasis on capacity-building and field-level coordination for the purpose of continuing the presence and operation of United Nations humanitarian assistance missions in higher-risk environments

Recognizing that the affected State has the primary role in the initiation, organization, coordination and implementation of humanitarian assistance within its territory and in the facilitation of the work of humanitarian organizations,

Emphasizing the importance of continued international cooperation in support of the efforts of affected States in dealing with natural disasters and complex emergencies in all their phases, and recognizing that the magnitude and duration of many emergencies may be beyond the response capacity of many affected countries,

Reaffirming that humanitarian assistance is of cardinal importance for the victims of natural disasters and other emergencies,

Reaffirming also the importance of the principles of neutrality, humanity and impartiality for the provision of humanitarian assistance,

Reaffirming further that independence, meaning the autonomy of humanitarian objectives from the political, economic, military or other objectives that any actor may hold with regard to areas where humanitarian action is being implemented, is also an important guiding principle for the provision of humanitarian assistance, and should be applied in full respect for and compliance with international humanitarian law,

Welcoming positive developments towards the resolution of some long-standing complex emergencies, while remaining deeply concerned about the outbreak of new complex emergencies and the protracted nature of other complex emergencies,

Noting the increase in the number and nature of organizations engaged in humanitarian action, and mindful of the need to ensure that this multiplication of actors does not detract from the effectiveness of the humanitarian response and the neutrality and independence of humanitarian assistance,

Expressing profound regret and grave concern at the tragic loss of the lives of humanitarian staff while providing humanitarian assistance and the increased insecurity encountered by humanitarian staff as well as the acts of violence committed against them, in particular deliberate attacks, and mindful of the need to provide the fullest possible protection for their security, and, in this regard, bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 58/122 of 17 December 2003 and Security Council resolution 1502(2003) of 26 August 2003,

Gravely concerned that, in some of the world current complex emergencies, access by humanitarian agencies to affected civilian populations remains limited, sporadic and sometimes restricted,

Bearing in mind that success in peace negotiation, among other processes, could lead to a significant increase in voluntary repatriation of refugees and in the possible reintegration of internally displaced persons, and expressing its belief that the United Nations system should give due consideration to these developments in the planning of its response,

Noting with grave concern the growing intensity and recurrence of natural disasters, and reaffirming the importance of sustainable measures to reduce the vulnerability of societies to natural hazards using an integrated, multi-hazard and participatory approach to addressing vulnerability, risk assessment and disaster prevention, mitigation, preparedness, response and recovery,

Noting the grave humanitarian and development implications of the HIV/AIDS pandemic and other widespread major infectious diseases prevalent in humanitarian contexts, such as malaria, tuberculosis and cholera, for the affected countries,

Gravely concerned that violence, including sexual abuse and sexual and other violence against women, girls and boys, continues to be, in many emergency situations, deliberately directed against civilian populations, and reiterating that acts of sexual violence in situations of armed conflict can constitute serious violations or grave breaches of international humanitarian law and constitute, in defined circumstances, a crime against humanity and/or a war crime, and recalling the relevant provisions of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court,

Reiterating that humanitarian assistance should be provided in a way that is not to the detriment of resources made available for international cooperation for development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Calls upon all parties to armed conflict to comply with their obligations under international humanitarian law, human rights law and refugee law;
3. Reaffirms the obligation of all States and parties to armed conflict to protect civilians in armed conflict in accordance with international humanitarian law, and invites States to promote a culture of protection, taking into account the particular needs of women, children, older persons and persons with disabilities;
4. Notes that some of the issues affecting the protection of civilians in armed conflict could also be effectively addressed at a regional level, and welcomes in this context the fact that States and some regional organizations, within their mandates, have increasingly taken measures to address these and related protection concerns;
5. Strongly encourages the United Nations to address more systematically the protection of civilians and other humanitarian issues with regional organizations, in accordance with their respective mandates, including through continued dialogue;
6. Calls for enhanced collaboration within the United Nations system and among various United Nations bodies, including the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, within their respective mandates, in the area of the protection of civilians in armed conflict;
7. Calls upon States to comply fully with the provisions of international humanitarian law, in particular as provided in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of victims of war, in order to protect and assist civilians in occupied territories;
8. Urges the international community and the relevant organizations of the United Nations system, in this regard, to strengthen humanitarian and other assistance to civilians under foreign occupation;
9. Calls upon all Governments and parties in complex humanitarian emergencies, in particular in armed conflict and in post-conflict situations, in countries in which humanitarian personnel are operating, in conformity with the relevant provisions of international law and national laws, to cooperate fully with the United Nations and other humanitarian agencies and organizations and to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel, as well as supplies and equipment, in order to allow them to perform efficiently their task of assisting the affected civilian population, including refugees and internally displaced persons;
10. Strongly urges all States to take the measures necessary to ensure the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and United Nations and associated personnel;
11. Also strongly urges States to ensure that those responsible for attacks against humanitarian personnel and United Nations and associated personnel are promptly brought to justice, as provided by national law and obligations under international law, and notes the need for States to end impunity for such acts;

12. Stresses the importance of continued collaboration among all parts of the United Nations system on staff safety and security issues, mindful of the ongoing efforts of the Secretary-General on measures to further improve the United Nations security management system;

13. Encourages United Nations organizations and other humanitarian actors to address security risks posed to humanitarian staff, inter alia, by promoting accountability at all levels and by promoting and enhancing collaborative actions, in accordance with the relevant provisions of international humanitarian law and national laws, where applicable;

14. Stresses the importance of ensuring that humanitarian personnel and United Nations and associated personnel remain sensitive to national and local customs and traditions in their countries of assignment, communicate better their purpose and objectives to local populations and observe and respect the laws of the country in which they are operating, in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations;

15. Takes note with appreciation of the continued efforts of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to strengthen the coordination of United Nations humanitarian assistance;

16. Encourages the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs to continue engaging in dialogue with States on humanitarian assistance, including through the Economic and Social Council, in order to enhance its coordinating role for all United Nations humanitarian activities with a view to enhancing comprehensive intergovernmental support and guidance to the United Nations system;

17. Supports the efforts of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs to ensure that the design and implementation of United Nations integrated missions take into account the principles of neutrality, humanity and impartiality as well as the independence of humanitarian objectives for the provision of humanitarian assistance;

18. Encourages the United Nations Secretariat, in strengthening the coordination of humanitarian work and assistance, to engage in a dialogue with States and United Nations humanitarian entities to clarify the respective roles of, and complementarity among, relevant entities of the United Nations operating in the framework of United Nations multidimensional missions, invites the Secretariat to consult with relevant humanitarian organizations in that regard, and requests the Secretary-General to report thereon to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council;

19. Reaffirms the leading role of civilian organizations in implementing humanitarian assistance, particularly in areas affected by conflict, and also affirms the need, in situations where military capacity and assets are used to support the implementation of humanitarian assistance, for their use to be in conformity with international humanitarian law and humanitarian principles;

20. Encourages United Nations humanitarian organizations and other relevant United Nations entities to carry out jointly an in-depth examination of the extent to which current developments in international peace and security have affected the understanding and acceptance of the United Nations humanitarian organizations by local populations, as well as the understanding and acceptance of other humanitarian organizations, and the ability of humanitarian organizations to operate in the context of an international military presence, and to provide advice to these organizations on how they may respond better to these new developments;

21. Stresses the value of the use of the 2003 Guidelines on the Use of Military and Civil Defence Assets to Support United Nations Humanitarian Activities in Complex Emergencies and the 1994 Guidelines on the Use of Military and Civil Defence Assets in Disaster Relief and also stresses the value of the development by the United Nations, in consultation with States and other relevant actors, of further guidance on civil-military relations in the context of humanitarian activities and transition situations;

22. Encourages the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, in close collaboration with the United Nations Development Group Office, to improve further the training and capacity of Humanitarian and Resident Coordinators so that they can respond to the full range of humanitarian issues in a given context, including protection and assistance needs;

23. Encourages the channelling of increased resources to capacity-building activities in disaster-prone areas, in particular to address the dynamics and disproportionate risks that natural disasters pose in urban and rural environments;

24. Emphasizes the importance of building effective and inclusive partnerships, including in risk planning, with populations that live in disaster-prone and disaster-affected areas;

25. Recalls General Assembly resolution 57/150 of 16 December 2002 on strengthening the effectiveness and coordination of international urban search and rescue assistance, and welcomes the work that is being undertaken to strengthen further the effectiveness and coordination of international urban search and rescue assistance;

26. Invites States, as appropriate, to give priority to disaster risk reduction strategies and to integrate them fully into all relevant legal, policy and planning instruments in order to address the social, economic and environmental dimensions that influence vulnerability to natural hazards, bearing in mind the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction;

27. Recommends that the General Assembly raise the maximum limit for an emergency cash grant to 100,000 United States dollars per country in the case of any one disaster, from within existing resources available in the regular budget;

28. Strongly encourages States, relevant agencies and institutions as well as major groups as identified in Agenda 21 to participate in the World Conference on Disaster Reduction, in accordance with the rules of procedure agreed upon by the Preparatory Committee for the Conference, and invites them to contribute inputs to the ongoing preparations for the Conference, to be held in Kobe, Japan, from 18 to 22 January 2005, and to ensure that the opportunity is used to reaffirm and to strengthen disaster reduction policy and its implementation at all levels;

29. Encourages States that have not done so to consider ratifying or acceding to the Tampere Convention on the Provision of Telecommunication Resources for Disaster Mitigation and Relief Operations, adopted at Tampere, Finland, on 18 June 1998;

30. Emphasizes the importance of integrating further HIV/AIDS responses into the planning, programming and implementation of humanitarian action by ensuring linkages between humanitarian, development and HIV/AIDS mechanisms and activities and by using the Inter-Agency Standing Committee Guidelines on HIV/AIDS Interventions in Emergency Settings, and encourages the United Nations system to improve its guidance to ensure a comprehensive approach to prevention, care and treatment in the context of humanitarian action;

31. Recognizes the important role of humanitarian agencies in addressing other major infectious diseases, such as malaria, tuberculosis and cholera, in emergencies, and urges them to factor considerations pertaining to these major infectious diseases into their planning and coordination efforts, including in the areas of early warning and contingency planning;

32. Stresses the continued need and relevance of integrating, through implementation of all relevant resolutions, agreed conclusions, policies, commitments and guidelines on gender mainstreaming, a gender perspective into the planning, programming and implementation of humanitarian assistance activities, and calls upon the Inter-Agency Standing Committee to undertake a review of its 1999 policy statement on the integration of a gender perspective into humanitarian assistance;

33. Strongly condemns all violence committed in situations of humanitarian crisis, especially against women, girls and boys, including sexual violence and abuse, and calls upon States to adopt preventive measures and effective responses to these acts as well as to ensure that those responsible for these acts are promptly brought to justice, as provided for by national law and obligations under international law;

34. Invites the organizations of the United Nations system to enhance geographical balance in terms of humanitarian personnel employed by them, in a manner consistent with Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter;

35. Encourages humanitarian agencies to ensure, to the extent possible, the participation and perspective of all those affected by humanitarian situations, at both the local and national levels, in the design, implementation and evaluation of humanitarian assistance activities, while respecting the role of authorities of affected countries;

36. Encourages the United Nations system to continue to develop and implement internal tools and to take effective measures for protection from sexual exploitation and sexual abuse, and, in this respect, notes with interest the Secretary-General Bulletin on special measures for protection from sexual exploitation and sexual abuse;

37. Encourages Governments as well as international humanitarian organizations, as appropriate, to take further initiatives to prevent, address and follow up on allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse in humanitarian emergencies, and emphasizes that the highest standards of conduct and accountability are required of all personnel serving in humanitarian and peace-keeping operations;

38. Encourages, in this regard, the United Nations system and its Member States to urge international humanitarian organizations and implementing partners serving within the framework of United Nations humanitarian and other relevant operations to live up to the highest standards of conduct and accountability;

39. Encourages Member States with internally displaced persons to develop or to strengthen, as appropriate, national laws, policies and minimum standards on internal displacement, inter alia, taking into account the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement, and to continue to work with humanitarian agencies in endeavours to provide a more predictable response to the needs of internally displaced persons, and in this regard calls for international support, upon request, to capacity-building efforts of Governments;

40. Calls upon the relevant United Nations entities, under the coordination mandate of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, to improve the development of common needs assessments and to work towards more effective prioritization, including reviewing the Consolidated Appeals Process Needs Assessment Framework and Matrix;

41. Encourages the donor community to provide humanitarian assistance in proportion to needs and on the basis of needs assessments, with a view to ensuring a more equitable distribution of humanitarian assistance across humanitarian emergencies, including those of a protracted nature, as well as fuller coverage of the needs of all sectors, and to this end requests the organizations of the United Nations system, including through the United Nations country teams, to continue developing and applying transparent needs assessment mechanisms;

42. Also encourages the donor community to establish reliable, predictable and timely funding to meet humanitarian needs, and to consider increasing the flexibility of funding and the share of non-earmarked contributions to United Nations organizations in response to humanitarian emergencies, including within the consolidated appeals, and notes with interest the progress being made by donors in improving their policies and practices of good donorship, inter alia under the Good Humanitarian Donorship initiative;

43. Emphasizes the need for a more inclusive dialogue with States on the complex issue of transition from relief to development, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, taking into account the range of views expressed by States at the event held by the Council during its substantive session of 2004 to discuss the issue of transition from relief to development, and with the participation of United Nations entities, including the United Nations Development Group and the Executive Committee on Humanitarian Affairs, with the aim of improving the international community efforts to respond better to transition situations, in support of the efforts of affected States, bearing in mind the uniqueness of each transition situation;

44. Welcomes the collaborative effort of the United Nations and the World Bank on the development and implementation of post-emergency programming tools and needs assessment with the full participation of affected States, and underlines the need for further work to enhance coordination;

45. Encourages States to support, including through the allocation of funds, the development and implementation of the 4Rs (repatriation, reintegration, rehabilitation and reconstruction and of other programming tools, to facilitate the transition from relief to development;

46. Requests the Secretary-General to reflect the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the present resolution and to Economic and Social Council resolutions 2002/32 of 26 July 2002 and 2003/5 in his next report to the Council and the General Assembly on the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/141 [draft: A/59/L.49 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 39 (a)].

Strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 and the guiding principles contained in the annex thereto, other relevant General Assembly and Economic and Social Council resolutions and agreed conclusions of the Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Reaffirming the principles of humanity, neutrality and impartiality for the provision of humanitarian assistance,

Recognizing that independence, meaning the autonomy of humanitarian objectives from the political, economic, military or other objectives that any actor may hold with regard to areas where humanitarian action is being implemented, is also an important guiding principle for the provision of humanitarian assistance,

Gravely concerned that violence, including sexual abuse and sexual and other violence against women, girls and boys, continues to be, in many emergency situations, deliberately directed against civilian populations,

Gravely concerned also about the lack of access by humanitarian personnel to victims of humanitarian emergencies, in particular in armed conflict and in post-conflict situations, in many regions of the world,

Reaffirming the responsibility first and foremost of States to take care of the victims of humanitarian emergencies within their own borders, while recognizing that the magnitude and duration of many emergencies may be beyond the response capacity of many affected countries,

Reaffirming also that States whose populations are in need of humanitarian assistance are called upon to facilitate the work of humanitarian organizations and that States in proximity to humanitarian emergencies are urged to facilitate, to the extent possible, the transit of humanitarian assistance,

Concerned about the need to mobilize adequate support, including financial resources, for emergency humanitarian assistance at all levels, including at national, regional and international levels,

Emphasizing that the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat should benefit from adequate and more predictable funding, while stressing the importance for the Office to continue to make efforts to broaden its donor base,

Reiterating that contributions for humanitarian assistance should be provided in a way that is not to the detriment of resources made available for international cooperation for development,

Recognizing the importance of humanitarian assistance in ensuring the effective transition from conflict to peace and the positive effect it may have in preventing the recurrence of armed conflict, and that humanitarian assistance must be provided in ways that will be supportive of recovery and long-term development,

Noting with grave concern the growing intensity and recurrence of natural disasters, and reaffirming the importance of sustainable measures to reduce the vulnerability of societies to natural hazards using an integrated, multi-hazard and participatory approach to addressing vulnerability, risk assessment and disaster prevention, mitigation, preparedness, response and recovery,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the outcome of the seventh humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council, during its substantive session of 2004;

2. Encourages the Emergency Relief Coordinator to continue his efforts to strengthen the coordination of humanitarian assistance, and calls upon relevant United Nations organizations as well as other humanitarian and development actors to work with the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat in enhancing the coordination, effectiveness and efficiency of humanitarian assistance;

3. Recognizes the importance of secure and predictable funding to the coordinated, appropriate and timely delivery of humanitarian assistance, stresses the need to increase in an incremental way, in the normal course of the budget process, the share of the budget of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs borne by the regular budget of the United Nations, and requests the Secretary-General to give this matter full consideration;

4. Emphasizes the importance of the discussion of humanitarian policies and activities in the General Assembly and in the Economic and Social Council and that these discussions should be further revitalized by Member States;

5. Calls upon Governments, relevant organizations of the United Nations system, other relevant international organizations and non-governmental organizations to cooperate with the Secretary-General and the Emergency Relief Coordinator to ensure timely implementation of and follow-up to resolutions of the General Assembly and resolutions of the Economic and Social Council adopted at the humanitarian affairs segment of its substantive sessions;

6. Strongly encourages the United Nations to address more systematically protection of civilians and other humanitarian issues with regional organizations, in accordance with their respective mandates, inter alia, through dialogue;

7. Decides to raise the maximum limit of an emergency cash grant to 100,000 United States dollars per country in the case of any one disaster, within existing resources available from the regular budget of the United Nations;

8. Encourages the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, in close collaboration with the United Nations Development Group Office, to improve further the training and capacity of humanitarian and resident coordinators so that they can respond to the full range of humanitarian issues and those related to transition from relief to development in a given context, including protection and assistance needs;

9. Calls upon the Secretary-General to ensure that the design and implementation of United Nations integrated missions take into account the principles of humanity, neutrality and impartiality as well as independence for the provision of humanitarian assistance;

10. Welcomes the ongoing work within the United Nations on the complex issue of transition from relief to development, and takes note of the request by the Economic and Social Council to the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the issue for further consideration by the Council and the General Assembly;

11. Emphasizes the fundamentally civilian character of humanitarian assistance, reaffirms the leading role of civilian organizations in implementing humanitarian assistance, particularly in areas affected by conflicts, and affirms the need, in situations where military capacity and assets are used to support the implementation of humanitarian assistance, for their use to be in conformity with international humanitarian law and humanitarian principles;

12. Recalls the 2003 "Guidelines on the Use of Military and Civil Defence Assets to Support United Nations Humanitarian Activities in Complex Emergencies", as well as the 1994 "Guidelines on the Use of Military and Civil Defence Assets in Disaster Relief", and stresses the value of their use and of the development by the United Nations in consultation with States and other relevant actors of further guidance on civil-military relations in the context of humanitarian activities and transition situations;

13. Strongly condemns all acts of violence committed against civilian populations in situations of humanitarian crisis, especially against women, girls and boys, including sexual violence and abuse, and reiterates that such acts can constitute serious violations or grave breaches of international humanitarian law and constitute, in defined circumstances, a crime against humanity and/or a war crime;

14. Calls upon States to adopt preventive measures and effective responses to acts of violence committed against civilian populations as well as to ensure that those responsible are promptly brought to justice, as provided for by national law and obligations under international law;

15. Reaffirms the obligation of all States and parties to an armed conflict to protect civilians in armed conflicts in accordance with international humanitarian law, and invites States to promote a culture of protection, taking into account the particular needs of women, children, older persons and persons with disabilities;

16. Encourages Member States with internally displaced persons to develop or strengthen, as appropriate, national laws, policies and minimum standards on internal displacement, inter alia, taking into account the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement, and to continue to work with humanitarian agencies in endeavours to provide a more predictable response to the needs of internally displaced persons, and in this regard calls for international support, upon request, to the capacity-building efforts of Governments;

17. Strongly condemns all forms of violence to which humanitarian personnel and United Nations and its associated personnel are increasingly subjected, as well as any act or failure to act, contrary to international law that obstructs or prevents humanitarian personnel and United Nations and its associated personnel from discharging their humanitarian functions;

18. Calls upon all Governments and parties in complex humanitarian emergencies, in particular in armed conflicts and in post-conflict situations, in countries in which humanitarian personnel are operating, in conformity with the relevant provisions of international law and national laws, to cooperate fully with the United Nations and other humanitarian agencies and organizations and to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel as well as supplies and equipment in order to allow them to perform efficiently their task of assisting the affected civilian population, including refugees and internally displaced persons;

19. Expresses concern about the continued occurrence of sexual exploitation and abuse in humanitarian crises, emphasizes that the highest standards of conduct and accountability are required of all personnel serving in humanitarian and peacekeeping operations, and requests the Secretary-General to report on measures to follow up, inter alia, the Plan of Action on Protection from Sexual Exploitation and Abuse in Humanitarian Crises developed by the Inter-Agency Standing Committee and the application of the bulletin of the Secretary-General on special measures for protection from sexual exploitation and sexual abuse;

20. Takes note with interest of the progress being made by donors to improve their policies and practices of good donorship, including under the Good Humanitarian Donorship initiative, and calls upon donors to take further steps to improve their policies and practices with respect to humanitarian assistance;

21. Calls upon relevant United Nations organizations to continue to improve transparency and reliability of humanitarian needs assessments;

22. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to improve his reporting on emergency humanitarian assistance, including with respect to natural disasters;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session, through the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2005, on progress made in strengthening the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations.

UN and other humanitarian personnel

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/122 [YUN 2003, p. 1453], the Secretary-General, in a September report [A/59/332], described threats against humanitarian and UN personnel over the preceding year. He strongly urged all States to take stronger actions to ensure that threats or acts of violence committed against humanitarian personnel and UN and associated personnel on their territory were investigated fully and that the perpetrators were brought to justice.

The Assembly, in resolution 59/211 of 20 December, called on Governments and parties in complex humanitarian emergencies to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel (see p. 1435).

Defining UNHCR's administrative functions

The Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC), at its forty-fourth session (7 June–2 July) [A/59/16], during consideration of programme 22, Humanitarian assistance, of the programme outline of the 2006-2007 proposed strategic framework (see p. 1401), recognized that the effective implementation of UNHCR's mandate involved ongoing functions at UN Headquarters, including humanitarian coordination, policy development and advocacy, information analysis and dissemination, field support and the management of relevant inter-agency and interdepartmental mechanisms. It recommended that the General Assembly request the Secretary-General to make recommendations at its sixtieth session (2005) on how to ensure the ongoing discharge of those key functions.

Responding to Assembly resolution 58/270 [YUN 2003, p. 1399] and to CPC's concerns (above), the Secretary-General submitted a November report [A/59/562], which described the mandate, funding history and coordination role of the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and the benefits of secure and predictable funding of its work and that of the United Nations. It also proposed a conceptual framework and definition of the Office's administrative functions, and identified the standing functions that were critical to the discharge of its mandate. According to the Secretary-General, the report outlined a framework that could serve as a basis for the Assembly to consider the coordination of humanitarian assistance in the strategic planning and programming activities of the United Nations as a whole, as well as in the programme budgeting process.

The Assembly, in resolution 59/275 of 23 December (see p. 1401), requested the Secretary-General to make recommendations by the end of the Assembly's fifty-ninth session on how to ensure the ongoing discharge of key UNHCR functions as defined by CPC, at Headquarters.

Resource mobilization

Central Emergency Revolving Fund

In 2004, the Central Emergency Revolving Fund, established in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 584] as a cash-flow mechanism for the initial phase of humanitarian emergencies, granted 13 advances, amounting to $27.8 million.

Consolidated appeals

The consolidated appeals process (CAP), an inclusive and coordinated programme cycle for analysing context, assessing needs and planning prioritized humanitarian response, was the humanitarian sector's main strategic planning and programming tool. In 2004, the United Nations and its humanitarian partners issued consolidated appeals seeking $3.4 billion in assistance to Angola, Bangladesh, Bolivia, the Central African Republic, Chad, Chechnya and neighbouring republics of the Russian Federation, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Eritrea, the Great Lakes region (Burundi, the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), Rwanda, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania), Grenada, Haiti, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, Madagascar, the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the Philippines, Somalia, Sudan, Tajikistan, the West Africa Sub-region (Burkina Faso, Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, Guinea, Liberia, Mali, Sierra Leone), and Zimbabwe. Separate appeals were issued for Burundi, Côte d'Ivoire + 3 (Burkina Faso, Ghana, Mali), DRC, Guinea, Liberia, Sierra Leone, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania.

The latest available data indicated that 64 per cent ($2.2 billion) of requirements had been met.

Mine clearance

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/127 [YUN 2003, p. 924], the Secretary-General, in an August report [A/59/284], described progress in implementing the goals and objectives of the UN mine-action strategy for the period 2001-2005 [YUN 2001, p. 828]. A review of the six strategic goals identified progress in each goal as follows: improved assessment of situations in mine-affected countries, including assessment missions conducted in Liberia, Malawi, Senegal and Uganda (goal 1); improved capacity to respond to emergencies, through the UN rapid response plan tested in Iraq, which was being revised (goal 2); ongoing efforts to build national mine action capacity through new capacity-building programmes such as in Afghanistan, Colombia, Iraq, Jordan and the Sudan (goal 3); strengthened quality management through the approval and dissemination of international mine action standards for mine risk education (goal 4); increased availability of resources and initiatives to encourage mine action participation by international financial institutions (goal 5); and improved advocacy coordination and implementation through the approval of a UN mine action strategy (goal 6) (see below).

The Secretary-General concluded that efforts to raise the visibility of mine-related issues throughout the United Nations had resulted in the systematic integration of mine action into planning and operations in peacekeeping, humanitarian affairs and development at national and international levels. UN efforts had strengthened the capacities of mine-affected States to effectively manage mine action policy planning, coordination and operations, and encouraged strengthened co-operation among those States. He recommended that Member States continue to support implementation of the UN mine action strategy for 2001-2005 and that the United Nations present a new strategy for the period 2006-2010. The rapid response plan should be further integrated into the planning processes of UN humanitarian and peacekeeping operations and activated in emergency situations, political developments permitting, and in the absence of other national capacity to address the landmine problem. Member States should continue to strengthen national capacities to address the problem of landmines and explosive remnants of war, and mine-affected Member States should include mine action in poverty reduction strategy papers and national development plans. International financial institutions should assist mine-affected developing States to meet targets and treaty obligations and to advance the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51], while mine action donors should refer to the portfolio of mine action projects and provide data to the donor investments database. Member States should be represented at the highest possible level at the Summit on a Mine-Free World (Nairobi, Kenya, 29 November-3 December), which would be the first review conference of the 1997 Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction [YUN 1997, p. 503] (see p. 568); mine affected States should submit comprehensive national plans for consideration at the Summit.

An addendum to the report [A/59/284/Add.1] presented the UN mine action advocacy strategy for 2004-2005, which was endorsed by the Inter-Agency Coordination Group on Mine Action in April.

The General Assembly, by decision 59/516 of 10 December, decided to include in the provisional agenda of its sixtieth (2005) session the item entitled "Assistance in mine action".

New international humanitarian order

In response to General Assembly resolution 57/184 [YUN 2002, p. 893], the Secretary-General, in a November report [A/59/554], presented the views of three Member States and the Independent Bureau for Humanitarian Issues on the promotion of a new international humanitarian order. The report recommended that the Assembly urge Governments to share their views regarding the constituent elements of an agenda for humanitarian action, and call on Member States to make available to the Secretary-General the expertise and means for developing and implementing the proposed agenda. It also recommended that the Assembly strengthen the role of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and the private sector in the humanitarian field, and recommend that measures be identified to strengthen the nexus between human rights and humanitarian issues, and between emergency assistance and development aid.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/59/498], adopted resolution 59/171 without vote [agenda item 100].

New international humanitarian order

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 57/184 of 18 December 2002 and all previous resolutions concerning the promotion of a new international humanitarian order as well as all relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 on the strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian emergency assistance of the United Nations, and the annex thereto,

Reaffirming the fundamental importance of adherence to and implementation of international humanitarian law, refugee law and human rights law as well as internationally accepted norms and principles, in particular the principles of humanity, neutrality and impartiality for the provision of humanitarian assistance,

Recognizing the importance of action at the national and regional levels and the role that regional organizations can play in certain cases to prevent humanitarian crises, and noting with appreciation the complementary role played in this regard by the United Nations entities, including the agencies, funds and programmes,

Aware of the important role that international organizations, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the private sector can play, within their respective mandates, in the humanitarian context,

Concerned by the increasingly difficult context in which humanitarian assistance takes place in some areas, in particular the continuous erosion, in many cases, of respect for the principles and rules of international humanitarian law,

Emphasizing the importance of continued international cooperation in support of the efforts of affected States in dealing with natural disasters and complex emergencies in all their phases,

Reiterating that humanitarian assistance should be provided in a way which is not to the detriment of resources made available for international cooperation for development,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Expresses its appreciation for the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General in the humanitarian field, and urges Governments to assist him in promoting a new international humanitarian order that corresponds to new realities and challenges, including the development of an agenda for humanitarian action, in accordance with international law;

2. Reaffirms the obligation of all States and parties to armed conflicts to protect civilians in armed conflicts in accordance with international humanitarian law, and invites States to promote a culture of protection, taking into account the particular needs of women, children, older persons and persons with disabilities;

3. Calls upon all Governments and parties in complex humanitarian emergencies, in particular armed conflicts and post-conflict situations, in countries in which humanitarian personnel are operating, in conformity with the relevant provisions of international law and national laws, to cooperate fully with the United Nations and other humanitarian agencies and organizations and to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel in order to allow them to perform efficiently their task of assisting the affected civilian population, including refugees and internally displaced persons;

4. Urges Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and others concerned to extend cooperation and provide support to the efforts of the Secretary-General, inter alia, through the relevant United Nations agencies and organizational mechanisms set up to address the assistance and protection needs of victims of complex emergencies as well as the safety and security of United Nations and other humanitarian workers;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to promote strict adherence to refugee law, international humanitarian law, human rights law and internationally accepted norms and principles in situations of humanitarian emergency;

6. Recognizes the complementarity between humanitarian assistance and human rights;

7. Encourages the international community to improve its response to humanitarian emergencies, including those of a protracted nature, including efforts by donors with regard to policies and practices of good donorship;

8. Encourages intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations as well as the private sector to assist and support national and international efforts to respond to humanitarian challenges and alleviate human suffering;

9. Recognizes the important need to address more effectively the transition from relief to development, and welcomes in this regard the request made by the Economic and Social Council to the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the issue for further consideration by the Council and the General Assembly;

10. Invites Member States, the Secretary-General and the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, to strengthen the capacities of regional and subregional organizations, where applicable, in the context of the response to humanitarian crises;

11. Invites Member States, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, relevant entities of the United Nations system, and inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations, including the Independent Bureau for Humanitarian Issues, to reinforce activities and cooperation so as to continue to develop an agenda for humanitarian action;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to support the process of developing an agenda for humanitarian action and to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session on the overall progress made.

Humanitarian activities

Africa

Angola

An August consolidated report of the Secretary-General [A/59/293], prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 57/102 [YUN 2002, p. 913], provided information on humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance given to nine countries, including Angola, undergoing or emerging from humanitarian crises induced by conflict or natural causes. According to the report, some 133,000 Angolan refugees returned home in 2003, including 76,000 under the voluntary repatriation operation of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). UNHCR estimated that, of the 240,000 Angolan refugees still in Botswana, the DRC, Namibia, the Republic of the Congo, South Africa and Zambia, some 145,000 were expected to return in 2004. Refugees continued to return spontaneously, mainly in the eastern province of Moxico.

In the country itself, the situation was still of concern for an estimated 1.2 million people in difficult-to-access areas, as the war-devastated infrastructure and the presence of landmines posed major impediments to humanitarian operations and the return to normal life. Key humanitarian coordination functions were being handed over to government ministries and UN agencies in conjunction with an ongoing capacity-building programme. To facilitate the transition period, the United Nations used a consolidated appeal for transition for 2004 and a flexible United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) for the period 2005-2008. The Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Angola sought $136 million in 2004, of which 130 million (96 per cent) had been received.

(See also p. 926 under "Special economic assistance".)

Central African Republic

The Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Central African Republic sought $7.6 million for 2004, of which $2.9 million (38 per cent) had been received.

During 2004, the combined burdens of physical insecurity, poor health and economic vulnerability weighed heavily on the daily lives of Central Africans, particularly those in the north western regions of the country, which were hit hardest by the civil war of October 2002-March 2003. A year after the armed rebellion had ended, its devastating effects remained in evidence at the political, military and social levels. The few existing public infrastructures, particularly health centres and schools, had been subjected to almost systematic pillage and destruction. The response by humanitarian agencies was severely limited by both the lack of donor resources and diminished capacity for intervention. However, the country was entering an electoral period due to culminate in presidential elections in March 2005, which, if successful, would herald a return to constitutional legality and thereby open the path to normalized relations with international financial institutions.

Eritrea

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Eritrea, launched for a total of $126 million to assist 1.9 million beneficiaries during 2004, received 60 per cent ($75 million) of requirements.

The cumulative effects of drought, under-performance of the economy, and lack of funding for a post-conflict recovery programme in Eritrea led to a further deterioration of the humanitarian situation. More than 66 per cent of the population was threatened by direct hunger, extreme poverty and poor access to clean water, while scarce resources limited the Government's ability to purchase food commercially. The stalemate in the peace process with Ethiopia (see p. 265) constrained demobilization activities, thus creating a marked workforce shortage in the public and private sectors, and prevented the resettlement of a high number of internally displaced persons (IDPs), who remained in camps.

Great Lakes region

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Great Lakes region, launched for a total of $85.5 million to cover 2004, received 96 per cent ($82.1 million) of that amount. In addition to the Great Lakes regional appeal, individual country appeals were made for the other countries of the region, except Rwanda, for which other mechanisms were used.

The key thematic priorities for 2004 were violence against children; assistance for internally displaced persons; transmission of HIV/AIDS during emergencies; prevention and support to survivors of sexual violence; and the integration of humanitarian principles into all aspects of demobilization, disarmament and reintegration.

Burundi

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Burundi sought $119 million, of which 47 per cent ($56 million) was received.

In 2004, widespread changes in the security conditions throughout Burundi led to expanded and sustained humanitarian access to Burundian populations, including in those communities living in remote areas. However, forced displacement, instability and armed conflict continued to affect some regions. Access to basic health and education services was seriously constrained, but the improved security situation in rural areas and the continuous provision of food aid and emergency agricultural assistance contributed to a reduction in the scope of food insecurity that had plagued the country.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the DRC sought $163 million in assistance in 2004, of which 73 per cent ($119 million) was received.

Improved security, active advocacy, better risk management and a relative improvement in geographic accessibility in the DRC in 2004 led to expanded humanitarian access, thus saving thousands of lives. The malnutrition rate among the most vulnerable groups was stabilized due to the establishment of feeding centres and technical standards, and coordination was optimized. By mid-August, more than 725,000 internally displaced persons out of an estimated 2.3 million returned to their place of origin in a period of 12 months. However, those achievements still warranted improvement and were outweighed by events that altered or prevented humanitarian action, the main constraint being the lack of land and maritime infrastructure.

(See also p. 928 under "Special economic assistance".)

United Republic of Tanzania

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the United Republic of Tanzania, launched for a total of $38.8 million to cover 2004, received 83 per cent ($32.3 million) of that amount.

In Tanzania, the ongoing repatriation of Burundian refugees lessened government criticism of the presence of refugees in the country, but restrictions on refugee movement around the camps and the policy of vetting new arrivals from the DRC remained in place. A substantially reduced maize harvest in the northern highland areas led to maize price increases and limited availability. Water and pasture availability was likely to decline further if drought conditions continued.

Uganda

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Uganda, launched for a total of $143 million to cover 2004, received 79 per cent ($122.3 million) of that amount.

In 2004, more than 1.6 million internally displaced persons (IDPs) lived in more than 180 camps and temporary shelters set up as much as eight years earlier and never intended for long-term use. All camps were highly congested and over-crowded, with squalid living conditions. Limited water supply and low sanitation led to disease outbreaks, contributing to increased morbidity and mortality. Children and women, the most vulnerable groups, comprised 80 per cent of those internally displaced. From January to June, the security situation worsened seriously, as the rebel Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) intensified their attacks on displaced people in Gulu, Kitgum, Pader and Lira districts. However, the general security situation improved markedly beginning in July, following high LRA desertion. Humanitarian access then improved in Teso, Lira and Gulu, but remained difficult in Kitgum and Pader. A number of aid agencies reached the IDP camps with military escorts from the Uganda People's Defence Force.

Somalia

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/115 [YUN 2003, p. 928], the Secretary-General, in his August consolidated report [A/59/293], provided information on relief and rehabilitation assistance provided by the United Nations and its partners in Somalia in 2004.

Insecurity continued to prevail in many parts of Somalia in the period 2003-2004, especially in the Galguduud region, the Belet Weyne district, Kismaayo, the Northern Gedo, Sool and Sanaag regions and in Mogadishu. The United Nations and many NGOs enhanced their security measures in response to the increase in threats and attacks on international and national aid workers. Over four years of consecutive drought in northern Somalia led to massive livestock deaths and, in some cases, the collapse of pastoralism as a viable means of making a living. The drought also triggered unprecedented water and food price increases, which had an impact on the purchasing power of affected populations. UN agencies and NGOs responded with short-term interventions from November 2003 to June 2004. To improve the international humanitarian community's response capacity, the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) established a humanitarian response fund in April 2004, with support from the United Kingdom, and five projects totalling $550,000 were funded. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) provided returnees and internally displaced persons, women, children and minorities in the most food insecure areas with staple food crop seeds and farming hand tools; small-scale irrigation pumps, animal traction equipment and processing equipment would be distributed during the remainder of 2004. To improve further the economic situation, the United Nations was supporting the establishment of a credible and recognized animal health certification for the export of livestock and the formation of a livestock products system, to be known as the Somali Livestock Board.

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Somalia sought $120 million in 2004, of which 60 per cent ($71.7 million) was received.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/59/479 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 59/218 without vote [agenda item 39 (b)].

Assistance for humanitarian relief and the economic and social rehabilitation of Somalia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/160 of 18 December 1992 and subsequent relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 56/106 of 14 December 2001, 57/154 of 16 December 2002 and 58/115 of 17 December 2003,

Noting with serious concern that the current drought in some parts of Somalia threatens the lives of Somali nomads as well as livestock,

Noting with grave concern the high mortality rate of over 80 per cent of livestock in the worst-affected areas of the Sool, Sanaag and Togdheer plateaux of Somalia and the high risk of starvation of Somali nomads,

Noting with serious concern the threat, as a result of this drought, of a serious negative impact on the Somali economy, and in particular on the pastoral economy and social support systems,

Underlining the urgent need for humanitarian assistance, relief and reconstruction,

Noting the linkage between the search for peace and reconciliation and the alleviation of the humanitarian crisis in Somalia,

Welcoming the continued focus of the United Nations, in partnership with civil society at the grass-roots level, on programmes of assistance, including both humanitarian and development approaches, taking into consideration the conditions on the ground,

Recalling the statements by the President of the Security Council of 31 October 2001 and 28 March

2002, by which the Council condemned attacks on humanitarian personnel and called upon all parties in Somalia to respect fully the security and safety of personnel of the United Nations, the International Committee of the Red Cross and non-governmental organizations, and to guarantee their complete freedom of movement and access throughout Somalia,

Re-emphasizing the importance of the further implementation of its resolutions 47/160, 56/106, 57/154 and 58/115 to rehabilitate basic social and economic services throughout the country,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continued and tireless efforts to mobilize assistance for the Somali people;

2. Welcomes with great satisfaction the progress made in the last two years of the reconciliation process in Kenya, in particular the elections of the Somali Transitional Federal Parliament, the Speaker of Parliament and the President, the appointment of the Prime Minister and the formation of the Cabinet, and urges all Somali parties and States members of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development to fully support the new Transitional Federal Government of Somalia;

3. Expresses the need for continued engagement and commitment to a structured support, based on joint principles and structures of coordination and monitoring, as endorsed in Stockholm on 29 October 2004, to be agreed upon with the future transitional national federal institutions;

4. Welcomes the strategy of the United Nations focusing on the implementation of community-based interventions aimed at rebuilding local infrastructures and increased self-reliance of the local population, and the ongoing efforts by the United Nations agencies, their Somali counterparts and their partner organizations to establish and maintain close coordination and cooperation mechanisms for the implementation of the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction programme in line with the priorities of the new Transitional Federal Government;

5. Notes the incremental and prioritized approach of the United Nations system to addressing the continuing crisis and needs in Somalia while maintaining long-term commitments to rehabilitation, recovery and development activities;

6. Commends the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, the funds and programmes of the United Nations as well as other humanitarian organizations for their response, and underlines the urgent need for putting into place practical measures aimed at the alleviation of the consequences of the drought in the most affected areas in Somalia;

7. Urges all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to continue to implement further its resolutions 47/160, 56/106, 57/154 and 58/115 in order to assist the Somali people in embarking on the rehabilitation of basic social and economic services, as well as institution-building aimed at the restoration of structures of civil governance at all levels in all parts of the country wherever possible;

8. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize international humanitarian, rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance for Somalia;

9. Calls upon all Somali parties to respect the security and safety of the personnel of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations and to guarantee their complete freedom of movement and safe access throughout Somalia;

10. Urges the international community to provide:

(a) Political support to the new Transitional Federal Government;

(b) Significant financial and technical support for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Somalia;

(c) Full support to the need for peacebuilding measures and the speedy implementation of programmes for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of militias throughout Somalia in order to stabilize the entire country and thereby ensure the effectiveness of the new Transitional Federal Government;

11. Urges the Transitional Federal Government, in coordination with the Intergovernmental Authority on Development and the African Union, to develop a strategy and timetable outlining its functional priorities;

12. Urges the international community to provide as a matter of urgency humanitarian assistance and relief to the Somali people to alleviate in particular the consequences of the prevailing drought;

13. Calls upon the international community to provide continuing and increased assistance in response to the United Nations 2004 Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance for Somalia;

14. Commends the Secretary-General for the establishment of the Trust Fund for Peacebuilding in Somalia, welcomes the contributions made thus far to the Fund, and appeals to Member States to contribute to it;

15. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the critical situation in Somalia, to take all necessary and practicable measures for the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session.

Sudan

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Sudan Assistance Programme (ASAP), including the Revised ASAP 2004: Darfur Crisis and the appeal for remaining humanitarian requirements for the Sudan until 31 December, sought a total of $726.6 million to cover assistance needs in 2004. Of that amount, 76 per cent ($553.7 million) was received.

At the end of 2004, peace talks in the Sudan had not yet led to agreement on a comprehensive peace agreement for ending 38 years of North-South conflict and rebuilding the country. At the same time, conflict in the Darfur region continued, with an increase in security incidents against aid workers and abuses against civilians. The Darfur crisis displaced 1.6 million people, with 200,000 refugees fleeing to Chad, and caused severe hardship for several hundred thousand other conflict-affected people. Despite the large humanitarian effort, an average of 30 to 50 per cent of the needy did not yet have access to assistance. The crisis threatened security across the region, and risked further detracting from the North-South peace process. In addition, the Sudan as a whole continued to suffer from widespread poverty and inequitable development.

(For more information on the crisis in Darfur, see p. 235).

Chad

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Chad sought $165.5 million in assistance for 2004, of which 88 per cent ($145.4 million) was received.

The conflict in western Sudan profoundly impacted the situation in Chad, especially its eastern region, to which an estimated 200,000 people had fled to escape the crisis in the Sudan's Darfur region (see p. 235). The resulting demographic pressure on an already fragile environment destabilized the local economic and social situation. To overcome logistical constraints and reach beneficiaries, humanitarian organizations had to establish alternative transportation routes and add air capacity, which translated into higher programming cost. In addition, Chad was plagued by internal and external security problems, including political-military instability, cross-border raids from the Sudanese rebels and tensions between refugees and host communities.

West Africa

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the West Africa subregion, launched in 2004 for $97.3 million to assist beneficiaries in Burkina Faso, Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, Guinea, Liberia, Mali and Sierra Leone, received 59 per cent ($57.5 million) of that amount.

The subregion continued to experience the impact of various complex emergencies and natural disasters. While Liberia made initial steps towards recovery, Côte d'Ivoire struggled with the implementation of the Linas Marcoussis Accord (see p. 170). Both peace processes proved fragile, and large populations continued to be displaced. Arms and combatants, as well as epidemics including HIV/AIDS, moved swiftly across the region. Poor host communities remained overburdened by refugees and returning migrants. In addition, locust swarm invasions resulted in the infestation of cropping and grassland areas of the Sahelian countries, and damage to pasture cereals and vegetable crops became widespread.

Côte d'Ivoire + 3

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Côte d'Ivoire and the three neighbouring countries of Burkina Faso, Ghana and Mali, launched in 2004, sought $64.2 million to assist 1 million beneficiaries. Of the total amount, 32 per cent ($20.5 million) was received from the donor community.

In 2004, there were serious setbacks in the consolidation of peace in Côte d'Ivoire, with serious humanitarian consequences. The humanitarian response varied from zone to zone. Humanitarian needs were the most urgent in the West, where security remained precarious. In the North, although the humanitarian situation remained relatively stable, multi-assessment reports indicated that, depending on the harvest, food scarcity could be a problem in early 2005. In the centre of the country, around Yamoussoukro, humanitarian agencies continued to grapple with the needs of IDPs, as Government resources to respond to those needs diminished greatly. The humanitarian situation was also characterized by the limited return of civil servants to run health clinics, schools and other services in the west and north; increased intra-community tensions and clashes, particularly in the West; decreased food production; the proliferation of small arms and the presence of militia in various parts of the country; and increased violation of human rights and international humanitarian law.

The situation in Côte d'Ivoire continued to affect Burkina Faso, one of the world's least developed countries. The return of some 360,000 Burkina nationals from Côte d'Ivoire demonstrated the country's capacity to coordinate emergency aid and absorb large population groups. However, a renewed mass influx of returning nationals living in Côte d'Ivoire, combined with the consequences of the subregional locust invasion could have a devastating impact on social cohesiveness, social services, economic performance and subregional peace. The proliferation of small arms and light weapons across Burkina Faso's borders increased insecurity significantly in various regions, especially along the border with Côte d'Ivoire and could further erode an already fragile situation.

As the crisis in Côte d'Ivoire continued to affect the economy in Mali, another least developed country, basic social services, particularly along the border areas, deteriorated. Furthermore, the subregional locust invasion was expected to destroy up to 440,000 tons (14 per cent) of the total harvest in Mali, which relied heavily on agricultural production. While some 3,000 refugees were living in Mali, around 10,000 transiting migrants and 120,000-150,000 returning Malian residents from Côte d'Ivoire put pressure on the already fragile delivery of basic social services. The influx of small arms and light weapons had also increased insecurity in areas along the border with Algeria, Mauritania and Niger.

Ghana remained affected by the situation in Côte d'Ivoire. Though it only received some 4,500 refugees during the Côte d'Ivoire crisis, it had temporarily accommodated a large number of transiting populations on their way home to Burkina Faso and Mali.

Guinea

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Guinea, launched for a total of $36 million in 2004, received 65 per cent ($23.4 million) of the requirement.

The deterioration of the socio-economic and political situation in Guinea, the inability of the local authorities to provide basic social services to the populations, combined with inadequate funding levels and the lack of consolidated and verifiable vulnerability data were major humanitarian challenges in 2004. However, significant progress was made with regard to refugee assistance, with the last group of 92,920 Sierra Leonean refugees repatriated and a memorandum of understanding provided for the integration of the remaining caseload of 1,814 Sierra Leoneans. The repatriation of 73,026 Liberians started in October, and about 1,385 separated or unaccompanied children were assisted. Assistance was also provided to host communities and indirectly to returnees and IDPs.

Liberia

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Liberia sought $138 million for 2004 and received 58 per cent ($80.2 million) of that amount from the donor community.

Liberia saw significant improvements in security, stability and access. However, a climate of political instability and relative insecurity remained in certain areas of the country. The progressive deployment of UN peacekeeping forces substantially increased access to vulnerable groups, thus allowing humanitarian actors to increase efforts to meet the most critical needs, but new challenges were emerging with the imminent return of hundreds of thousands of IDPs, ex-combatants and refugees.

(See also p. 929 under "Special economic assistance".)

Sierra Leone

The UN Transitional Appeal for Relief and Recovery for Sierra Leone sought some $60 million in 2004. Of that amount, 62 per cent ($38 million) was received from the donor community.

Voluntary repatriation to Sierra Leone was completed in June, and the country continued its reconstruction efforts. The disarmament, demobilization and rehabilitation process was relatively successful, with a few exceptions regarding the integration of female combatants. The reintegration of former fighters would continue to pose challenges in Sierra Leone, with its fragile economy that offered few prospects for young and unemployed people.

Malawi

The Secretary-General, in his August consolidated report [A/59/293], provided information on humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance to Malawi. As the consolidated appeal for Southern Africa covering the period from July 2003 to June 2004 [YUN 2003, p. 931] came to an end, the UN system would continue to work with the Government of Malawi to address the triple threat of HIV/AIDS, food insecurity and weakened capacity for governance through both humanitarian and development interventions. The UN system would support the Government in its disaster management efforts, including the development of a national disaster management plan and operations manual; the preparation of contingency plans for vulnerable districts; the elaboration of an emergency recovery programme integrating issues related to HIV/AIDS and other diseases; and the promotion of bilateral and other funding partner involvement to address vulnerability in an integrated and comprehensive manner.

Zimbabwe

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Zimbabwe sought $90 million for 2004. Of that amount, 11 per cent ($10.1 million) was received from the donor community.

Zimbabwe was experiencing a multi-dimensional decline, which resulted from a number of inter-related factors, including increased vulnerability to climatic fluctuations and the shock of drought, the HIV/AIDS pandemic and a constrained policy environment. Those factors were eroding household self-reliance, economic productivity and the quality of public services. In addition, coping mechanisms increasingly relied on the unsustainable use of natural resources. The cumulative effect left the country in a serious humanitarian situation.

Asia

Afghanistan

In response to resolution 58/27 B [YUN 2003, p. 934], the Secretary-General, in a November report covering the period from 1 December 2003 to 22 November 2004 [A/59/581-S/2004/925], described key political and humanitarian developments in Afghanistan. (For political aspects, see p. 311.)

The Afghan Government's capacity remained weak in terms of public administration, institutions, its ability to extend its development plans to provincial governments and the delivery of essential services. The uncertain security situation and the development of a parallel and illicit narco-economy exacerbated that weakness and seriously challenged further economic and institutional development. The core development budget of $609 million was fully financed and, in addition to national priority programmes, new programmes were being developed for the urban, justice and private sectors and for skills development. The UN country team, with the Government, NGOs, donor communities and international financial institutions, conducted Afghanistan's first common country assessment, an in-depth analysis of the country's development challenges and their root causes, covering institutional development and governance; peace, security and justice; economic development and growth; and social well-being.

The year 2004 marked the sixth year of below-average rainfall and snowfall in Afghanistan, exacerbating the country's chronic water shortage, and resulting in reduced crop yields and increased grain costs. Vulnerable populations, totalling an estimated 4 million people, were identified in localized pockets in at least 27 provinces. In line with the strategy prepared by the Ministry of Health, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and other UN agencies, the international community was supporting the Government in rebuilding the primary health-care system, with a particular focus on obstetric care and reproductive and child health. In education, the Government's strategic focus in 2004 was on improving the quality and content of the education package, with significant UNICEF support. The net enrolment rate for Afghan children between the ages of 7 and 13 increased to 54 per cent (67 per cent for boys, 37 per cent for girls), but a number of factors continued to impede larger enrolment. Ongoing rural infrastructure development, coordinated by the Ministry of Rural Rehabilitation and Development and supported by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), included the construction of houses for returning refugees and internally displaced persons; road, school and clinic construction; agricultural development; and economic reintegration projects.

Between January and October 2004, some 740,000 people returned to Afghanistan under the voluntary and assisted repatriation programme supported by the Ministry of Refugees and Repatriation and UNHCR. However, lack of employment and slow progress in reconstruction in rural areas posed a continuing challenge to the sustainable reintegration of returnees, and the increased returns to urban areas placed an additional burden on the already stretched infrastructure capacity of major cities. The UN Mine Action Centre for Afghanistan facilitated the transfer of responsibility for mine action in Afghanistan from the United Nations to a national mine-action coordination agency. Since January 2003, 33 square kilometres of minefields and 69 square kilometres of battlefields had been cleared, and a total of 2,354,244 mines and pieces of unexploded ordnance had been destroyed.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/112 B [draft: A/59/L.44 & Add.1] without vote [agenda items 27 & 39 (d)].

Emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 58/27 B of 5 December 2003 and its previous relevant resolutions,

Recalling also the agreement reached among various Afghan groups in Bonn, Germany, on 5 December 2001, the International Conference on Reconstruction Assistance to Afghanistan, held in Tokyo on 21 and 22 January 2002, and the International Conference on Afghanistan, held in Berlin on 31 March and 1 April 2004,

Welcoming the adoption of a new constitution for Afghanistan on 4 January 2004 and the historic presidential elections held on 9 October 2004,

Welcoming also the continuing and growing ownership of the rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts by the Government of Afghanistan through the National Development Framework, the "Securing Afghanistan's future" exercise and the national budget, and emphasizing the crucial need to achieve ownership in all fields of governance and to improve institutional capabilities in order to use aid more effectively,

Welcoming further the efforts of the Government of Afghanistan to develop a poverty reduction strategy paper as an integrated part of the national development plans,

Welcoming, in this regard, the guarantee of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all Afghans in the new Constitution as a significant step towards an improved situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in particular for women and children,

Noting, at the same time, reports about incidents of violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law and violent or discriminatory practices in parts of the country,

Alarmed by continued attacks on Afghan civilians, United Nations staff, national and international humanitarian personnel and the International Security Assistance Force,

Noting with concern that the lack of security in certain areas has caused some organizations to cease or curtail humanitarian and development operations in some parts of Afghanistan because limited access and inadequate security conditions for the delivery of aid hampered their work substantially,

Welcoming the continuous return of refugees and internally displaced persons, while noting with concern that conditions in parts of Afghanistan are not yet conducive to safe and sustainable returns to places of origin,

Remaining deeply concerned about the problem of millions of anti-personnel landmines and unexploded ordnance, which constitute a great danger for the civilian population and a major obstacle for the return of refugees and displaced populations and for the resumption of agricultural and other economic activities, the provision of humanitarian assistance and rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts,

Aware of the high vulnerability of Afghanistan to natural disasters, and mindful in particular that the Afghan people continue to suffer from a severe multi-year drought that affects more than half of the provinces of the country,

Underlining the coordinating role of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan and of the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan in ensuring a seamless transition, under Afghan leadership, from humanitarian relief to the reconstruction of Afghanistan, including the cooperation of the United Nations system with other actors in the international community, in particular with the international financial institutions,

Welcoming the establishment of an executive steering committee of the provincial reconstruction teams, a high-level decision-making and consultative body that provides guidance on the management of provincial reconstruction teams and on the interaction of civilian and military actors within the framework of development and reconstruction,

Expressing its appreciation to the United Nations system and to all States and international and non-governmental organizations whose international and local staff continue to respond positively to the humanitarian needs of Afghanistan, as well as to the Secretary-General and his Emergency Relief Coordinator for mobilizing and coordinating the delivery of appropriate humanitarian assistance,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General and the recommendations contained therein;

2. Urges the Government of Afghanistan and local authorities to take all possible steps to ensure the safety, security and free movement of all United Nations and humanitarian personnel, as well as their safe and unimpeded access to all affected populations, and to protect the property of the United Nations and of humanitarian organizations, including non-governmental organizations, and calls upon the international community to continue to support the efforts of the Government of Afghanistan in the area of security in a coordinated manner;

3. Strongly condemns all acts of violence and intimidation directed against humanitarian personnel and United Nations and associated personnel, regrets the loss of life and physical harm, and urges the Government of Afghanistan to make every effort to identify and to bring to justice the perpetrators of attacks;

4. Welcomes the progress of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process for ex-combatants, including child soldiers, by the Government of Afghanistan and the efforts of the international community to assist in this process, and urges all Afghan parties to continue their efforts in this regard; recognizing the efforts of the Government of Afghanistan, reiterates the importance of ending the use of children contrary to international law, while welcoming the recent accession by Afghanistan to the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocol thereto on the involvement of children in armed conflict; and stresses the importance of the demobilization and reintegration of child soldiers and care for other war-affected children, and notes in this regard the value of preparing an action plan to address this issue;

5. Reiterates the importance of providing Afghan children with educational and health facilities in all parts of the country, recognizing the special needs of girls, and encourages the Government of Afghanistan, with the assistance of the international community, to expand those facilities and to promote full and equal access to them by all members of Afghan society;

6. Welcomes the initiative of the Government of Afghanistan to formulate a national plan of action on combating child trafficking, encourages the Government, in the formulation of the plan of action, to be guided by the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, and stresses the importance of considering becoming party to this Protocol;

7. Reminds all Afghan parties of their commitment to the Bonn Agreement and the Berlin Declaration, and calls for the full respect of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all, without discrimination of any kind, including on the basis of gender, ethnicity or religion, in accordance with obligations under the Afghan Constitution and international law, and commends the commitment of the Government of Afghanistan in this respect;

8. Emphasizes again the necessity of investigating allegations of current and past violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law, including violations committed against persons belonging to ethnic and religious minorities, as well as against women and girls, of facilitating the provision of efficient and effective remedies to the victims and of bringing the perpetrators to justice in accordance with international law;

9. Reiterates the important role of the Afghan Independent Human Rights Commission in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and stresses the need to expand its range of operation in all parts of Afghanistan in accordance with the Afghan Constitution;

10. Commends the efforts of the Government of Afghanistan to mainstream gender issues and to protect and promote the equal rights of women and men as guaranteed, inter alia, by the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, ratified by Afghanistan on 5 March 2003, and the Afghan Constitution, in this context welcomes the high level of participation of Afghan women in the recent presidential election, and reiterates the continued importance of the full and equal participation of women in all spheres of Afghan life;

11. Strongly condemns incidents of discrimination and violence against women and girls, welcomes the significant efforts by the Government of Afghanistan to counter discrimination, urges the Government to actively involve all elements of Afghan society, in particular women, in the development and implementation of relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes, and encourages the collection and use of statistical data on a sex-disaggregated basis to accurately track the progress of the full integration of women into the political, economic and social life of Afghanistan;

12. Notes with concern that opium poppy cultivation and the related drug production and trafficking pose a serious threat to security, the rule of law and development in Afghanistan, and urges the Government of Afghanistan, in cooperation with the international community, to implement its comprehensive national drug control strategy, aimed at eliminating illicit poppy cultivation, supporting increased law enforcement, interdiction, demand reduction, eradication of illicit crops, crop substitution and other alternative livelihood and development programmes, increasing public awareness and building the capacity of drug control institutions, and to promote the development of sustainable livelihoods in the formal production sector as well as other sectors, thus improving substantially the lives, health and security of the people, particularly in rural areas;

13. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments that continue to host Afghan refugees, acknowledging the huge burden they have so far shouldered in this regard, and reminds them of their obligations under international refugee law with respect to the protection of refugees and the right to seek asylum and to allow international access for their protection and care;

14. Calls upon the Government of Afghanistan, acting with the support of the international community, to continue its efforts to create the conditions for the voluntary, safe, dignified and sustainable return of the remaining Afghan refugees and internally displaced persons;

15. Stresses the need for further progress on judicial reform in Afghanistan, and urges the Government of Afghanistan and the international community to devote resources also to the reconstruction and reform of the prison sector in order to improve the respect for the rule of law and human rights therein, while reducing physical and mental health risks to inmates;

16. Urges the Government of Afghanistan to meet its responsibilities under the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction, to cooperate fully with the mine action programme coordinated by the United Nations, and to execute the destruction of all existing stocks of anti-personnel landmines;

17. Welcomes the generous commitments made in Berlin at the International Conference on Afghanistan, and urges donors to follow through on their pledges;

18. Urges the international community to channel assistance through the national budget, including by contributing to the Afghanistan Reconstruction Trust Fund and the Law and Order Trust Fund, which are not adequately funded, and to generously support the national priority programmes of the Government of Afghanistan in order to strengthen ownership, transparency and the functioning of basic State institutions;

19. Urges the Government of Afghanistan to continue to effectively reform the public administration sector and to ensure good governance, the rule of law and accountability at all levels, both national and local;

20. Welcomes the initiative taken by the Government of Afghanistan in setting out priorities and development programmes and in national development, reconstruction and regional integration, and calls upon the international community to support Afghanistan in this regard;

21. Urgently appeals to all States, the United Nations system and international and non-governmental organizations to continue to provide, in close coordination with the Government of Afghanistan and in accordance with its national development strategy, all possible and necessary humanitarian, financial, technical and material assistance for Afghanistan;

22. Emphasizes the need to establish, maintain and strengthen civil-military relations among international actors, as appropriate, at all levels in order to ensure complementarity of action based on the different mandates and comparative advantages of humanitarian, development, law enforcement and military actors in Afghanistan;

23. Invites all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations providing assistance to Afghanistan to emphasize capacity-building, institution-building and local employment generation in their work and to ensure that such work complements and contributes to the development of an economy characterized by sound macroeconomic policies, the development of a financial sector that provides services, inter alia, to microenterprises, small and medium-sized enterprises and households, transparent business regulations, accountability, good governance and the rule of law;

24. Requests that existing capacity-building programmes and projects be sufficiently funded in order to strengthen, inter alia, the capacity of Afghanistan to respond to natural disasters, in particular long-term drought;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly every six months during its fifty-ninth session on developments in Afghanistan, including, after parliamentary elections, on the future role of the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan, and to report to the Assembly at its sixtieth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

26. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixtieth session the sub-item entitled "Emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan".

In resolution 59/112 A of the same date, the Assembly called on the international community to assist Afghanistan in the implementation of its comprehensive national drug control strategy. It also called for continued international assistance to Afghan refugees and IDPs.

Democratic People's Republic of Korea

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK), launched for a total of $208.8 million to cover assistance in 2004, received 73 per cent ($151.5 million).

On 22 April, two train wagons exploded in Ryongchon, DPRK, killing 161 people and injuring 1,300. The explosion caused major damage to housing and infrastructure, including schools and medical facilities, and destroyed or rendered unsafe 1,850 dwellings, leaving an estimated 8,000 people homeless. The impact of the disaster was magnified by continuing economic difficulties and ongoing deficiencies in the health sector. Large segments of the population were confronted with a serious reduction in purchasing power, resulting in increased food insecurity. At the same time, the quality and quantity of basic social services continued to diminish, and food aid contributions became erratic. Funding shortfalls caused major interruptions in food aid, resulting in the World Food Programme (WFP) having to remove up to 3 million beneficiaries from its assistance programme. In August, the Government announced that it would not support the consolidated appeal for 2005.

Indonesia

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Indonesia, which sought $40.4 million in 2004, received 30 per cent ($12.1 million) of the requirements.

In Indonesia, the Indian Ocean earthquake and resulting tsunami of 26 December (see p. 952) affected primarily the Aceh region, destroying homes and buildings up to 5 kilometres inland, and damaging roads and bridges, telecommunications, water and electricity supplies, crops, irrigation and fishery infrastructure, food and fuel outlets. Some 80,000 Indonesians lost their lives, and an estimated 2 million people were in need as a result of the wider impact of the disaster.

Palestine

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Occupied Palestinian Territory, which sought $300.5 million in 2004, received 58 per cent ($174 million) of the requirements.

Palestinian living standards continued to deteriorate in 2004. The decline in consumption, and educational and health standards was caused primarily by Israel's imposition of heavy movement restrictions, known as closures, which severely impeded economic activity and prevented many Palestinians from accessing essential services. The humanitarian crisis was characterized by poverty, malnutrition, a collapse in output, and widespread destruction of infrastructure.

Tajikistan

In response to General Assembly resolution 57/103 [YUN 2002, p. 903], the Secretary-General, in his August consolidated report [A/59/293], provided information on humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance to Tajikistan.

The Secretary-General stated that, despite the overall improvement in security and positive economic growth indicators for the country as a whole, disparities in Tajikistan were not diminishing, and there had been little recent change in the humanitarian context for the most vulnerable groups. The coping mechanisms of communities had been stretched far beyond their limits, and most of the population continued to live in poverty. The goal of improving food security was being addressed through a multifaceted, inter-agency approach. Closer ties were forged between agencies providing relief-oriented aid and those involved in development, community mobilization and credit initiatives.

The Secretary-General observed that the crisis situation that gave rise to the provision of special economic assistance in Tajikistan and three other countries covered in the consolidated report, namely Comoros (see p. 282), Mozambique (see p. 281) and Serbia and Montenegro (see p. 404), had essentially stabilized. Accordingly, he recommended that, following the debate on special economic assistance to individual countries or regions at the Assembly's fifty-ninth (2004) session, the Assembly no longer consider the situation in those countries under that agenda item.

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Tajikistan, which sought $39.2 million in 2004, received 55 per cent ($21.5 million) of that amount.

Europe

North Caucasus (Russian Federation)

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Chechnya and Neighbouring Republics (North Caucasus-Russian Federation) sought $61.4 million in 2004. Of that amount, 75 per cent ($45.8 million) was received.

The situation in Chechnya and neighbouring republics continued to be complex and unstable. An unpredictable series of violent confrontations and acts of terror hit the North Caucasus, leaving hundreds of people killed and injured, including civilians, law enforcement officials and non-State combatants. Human rights organizations and eyewitnesses in Chechnya continued to report human rights violations, including arbitrary arrests, extra-judicial executions and torture. The unstable environment limited improvements to the humanitarian situation. Unemployment and poverty remained high. The most significant humanitarian development in 2004 was the increased rate of the return of IDPs to Chechnya.

New Partnership for Africa's Development

The General Assembly, by resolution 57/7 [YUN 2002, 910], endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendation [ibid., p. 909] that the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD), adopted in 2001 by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity (AU) [YUN 2001, p. 900], should be the framework within which the international community should concentrate its efforts for Africa's development.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, responding to a 2003 request of the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) [YUN 2003, p. 939], submitted a March report [E/AC.51/2004/6] on UN system support for NEPAD, which detailed the individual and collective activities undertaken by UN system entities. It also described recent efforts at resource mobilization for NEPAD priorities, and challenges and constraints faced by the UN system in supporting the Partnership. UN system support for NEPAD was organized around six clusters that broadly corresponded to the Partnership's priorities: infrastructure development; governance, peace and security; agriculture, trade and market access; environment, population and urbanization; human resources development, employment and HIV/AIDS; and science and technology. The Secretary-General concluded that, in order to ensure the effectiveness of continued UN system support to NEPAD, the UN system should use the existing coordination mechanisms at the global, regional and country levels to strengthen policy coherence in support of the Partnership; UN system entities should deepen their collaboration to achieve operational coherence of their programmes in support of NEPAD; and additional resources should be made available to the system to better support the Partnership.

CPC action. CPC, at its forty-fourth session (7 June–2 July) [A/59/16], noted the Secretary-General's report on UN system support for NEPAD. CPC recommended that the UN system use existing coordination at all levels to strengthen policy coherence in support of NEPAD, and mobilize sufficient resources to fund activities to support it. CPC further recommended that the General Assembly request the Secretary-General to report to the Committee at its forty-fifth session on further future engagement of the UN system with NEPAD.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 47], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/2004/26], adopted resolution 2004/16 without vote [agenda item 14 (b)].

Implementation of the social objectives of the New Partnership for Africa's Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the World Summit for Social Development, held in Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995, and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, entitled "World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world", held in Geneva from 26 June to 1 July 2000,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 56/218 of 21 December 2001, by which the Assembly established the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole of the General Assembly for the Final Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s to conduct, during the fifty-seventh session of the Assembly, the final review and appraisal of the New Agenda and related initiatives on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General on the independent high-level quality evaluation, as well as on the basis of proposals by the Secretary-General on the modalities of the future engagement of the United Nations with the New Partnership for Africa's Development, and Assembly resolution 56/508 of 27 June 2002,

Reaffirming the United Nations Millennium Declaration of 8 September 2000, the United Nations Declaration on the New Partnership for Africa's Development of 16 September 2002 and General Assembly resolution 57/7 of 4 November 2002 on the final review and appraisal of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s and support for the New Partnership for Africa's Development, Recalling General Assembly resolution 58/233 of 23 December 2003 entitled "New Partnership for Africa's Development: progress in implementation and international support", in which the Assembly, inter alia, welcomed the creation of the Office of the Special Adviser on Africa and requested the Secretary-General to continue to take measures to strengthen the Office to enable it to effectively fulfil its mandate,

Welcoming the adoption of chapter VIII entitled "Sustainable development for Africa" of the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation adopted at the World Summit on Sustainable Development, held in Johannesburg, South Africa, from 26 August to 4 September 2002,

Cognizant of the link between the priorities of the New Partnership and the Millennium Declaration, in which the international community committed itself to addressing the special needs of Africa, and of the need to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including those set out in the Millennium Declaration,

Bearing in mind the reports of the Secretary-General of 20 June 1995 and 12 June 2001 submitted to the high-level segments of the Economic and Social Council devoted to the consideration of the development of Africa,

Bearing in mind also that, while the primary responsibility for the development of Africa remains with African countries, the international community has a stake in it and in supporting the efforts of those countries in that regard,

Noting with appreciation the commitment of the international community in its support of the New Partnership, and welcoming in this regard the outcome of the third Tokyo International Conference on African Development, held in Tokyo from 29 September to 1 October 2003,

Underlining the fact that international cooperation based on a spirit of partnership and solidarity among all countries contributes to the creation of an enabling environment for the achievement of the goals of social development,

Recognizing the urgent need to continue to assist African countries in their efforts to diversify their economies as well as enhance capacity-building and promote regional cooperation, and noting in this context the outcome of the fourth Pan-African Conference of Ministers of Public Service, held in Stellenbosch, South Africa, from 4 to 7 May 2003,

Recognizing also the serious challenges facing social development in Africa, in particular illiteracy, poverty and HIV/AIDS, the scourge of malaria and other major communicable diseases,

1. Emphasizes that economic development, social development and environmental protection are interdependent and mutually reinforcing components of sustainable development;

2. Recognizes that, while social development is primarily the responsibility of Governments, international cooperation and assistance are essential for the full achievement of that goal;

3. Reiterates the importance of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development;

4. Reaffirms the need to strengthen, in a spirit of partnership, inter alia, international, regional and sub-regional cooperation for social development and the implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, entitled "World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world";

5. Also reaffirms the need for effective partnership and cooperation between Governments and the relevant actors of civil society for the achievement of social development;

6. Welcomes the New Partnership for Africa's Development as a socio-economic programme of the African Union that embodies the vision and commitment of all African Governments and peoples;

7. Also welcomes the commitment of African countries to peace, security, democracy, good governance, human rights and sound economic management, as well as their commitment to taking concrete measures to strengthen the mechanism for conflict prevention, management and resolution, as embodied in the New Partnership, as an essential basis for sustainable development in Africa, and in this context welcomes the ongoing efforts of African countries to develop further the African peer review mechanism, which is an important and innovative feature of the New Partnership;

8. Notes the progress made with respect to the African peer review mechanism, in particular the accession of a number of member States of the African Union to the mechanism, as well as the appointment of the Panel of Eminent Persons;

9. Stresses the need for renewed political will at the national, regional and international levels to invest in people and their well-being in order to achieve the objectives of social development;

10. Emphasizes that democracy, respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms and transparent and accountable governance and administration in all sectors of society, as well as effective participation by civil society, are among the indispensable foundations for the realization of social and people-centred sustainable development;

11. Also emphasizes the objectives of the New Partnership to eradicate poverty in Africa and to place African countries, both individually and collectively, on a path of sustainable growth and development, thus facilitating Africa's participation in the globalization process;

12. Underlines the need for effective partnership and cooperation between Governments and the relevant actors of civil society, including non-governmental organizations and the private sector, in the implementation of and follow-up to the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, and the need for ensuring, within the framework of the New Partnership, their involvement in the planning, elaboration, implementation and evaluation of social policies at the national, regional and international levels;

13. Welcomes with appreciation actions already under way at the regional level to organize the activities of the United Nations system around thematic clusters covering the priority areas of the New Partnership, and in that regard urges the strengthening of that process as a means of enhancing the coordinated response of the United Nations system in support of the New Partnership;

14. Stresses, in that context, the vital need for the United Nations in assisting Member States to achieve the development objectives and targets of the United Nations Millennium Declaration and to mainstream them in an integrated and coordinated manner in United Nations development activities;

15. Recognizes that illiteracy, poverty, HIV/AIDS, the scourge of malaria and other major communicable diseases add challenges to Africa's development, and urges the international community to continue to increase its assistance to African countries in their efforts to address these challenges;

16. Notes the African Union declaration on the implementation of the New Partnership for Africa's Development of July 2003, in which the African Union recognized the need for the formal integration of the New Partnership into its structures and processes, as well as the need to sustain the momentum, genuine interest, support and solidarity created by the New Partnership;

17. Urges the international community and the United Nations system to organize support for African countries in accordance with the principles, objectives and priorities of the New Partnership in the new spirit of partnership;

18. Invites the international financial institutions to ensure that their support for Africa is compatible with the principles, objectives and priorities of the New Partnership in the new spirit of partnership;

19. Urges the United Nations system, in coordinating its activities at the national, regional and global levels, to foster a coherent response, including through close collaboration with bilateral donors in the implementation of the New Partnership, in response to the needs of individual countries within its larger framework;

20. Welcomes the decision of the General Assembly to invite the Economic and Social Council, pursuant to its role in respect of system-wide coordination, to consider how to support the objectives of Assembly resolution 57/7;

21. Calls upon the Secretary-General, in his efforts to harmonize current initiatives on Africa, to enhance coordination between the United Nations and its specialized agencies, programmes and funds;

22. Acknowledges the reflection by the Secretary-General of the social dimensions of the New Partnership in his report on the priority theme "National and international cooperation for social development" to the Commission for Social Development at its forty-first session, and invites him to continue to reflect those dimensions in future reports submitted to the Commission on its priority themes;

23. Invites all development partners, including regional and international development partners and the United Nations system, to support the governance and public administration programme and the Pan-African Conference of Ministers of Public Service through the provision of critical resources and collaboration in building the capacity of local institutions and their staff to ensure sustainability into the future, as outlined in the Stellenbosch Declaration;

24. Acknowledges the linkage between the work of the Committee of African Ministers of Public Service and the programmatic thrust of the New Partnership;

25. Recommends that the Commission for Social Development continue to give prominence to the social dimensions of the New Partnership in its future priority themes;

26. Decides to bring the present resolution to the attention of the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session during its consideration of the agenda item entitled “New Partnership for Africa’s Development: progress in implementation and international support”.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 58/233 [YUN 2003, p. 941], the Secretary-General, in August, submitted to the Assembly the second consolidated report [A/59/206] on progress made to implement and support NEPAD, highlighting policy measures and actions taken by African countries and organizations and the response of the international community and UN system support.

According to the report, many countries faced severe fiscal constraints in implementing NEPAD in the short to medium term, suggesting that external support would be needed to achieve the established expenditure targets on NEPAD priorities. Implementation in the infrastructure sector was impeded by long project-approval cycles in partner institutions, limited grant resources and severe technical capacity constraints at the national and regional levels. In agriculture, despite progress in the implementation of the Comprehensive Africa Agriculture Development Programme, many countries would not meet the target of allocating 10 per cent of budgetary resources to agriculture in the next five years. The health sector was afflicted by the twofold crisis of the migration of highly trained professionals to developed countries, and health professionals in the front line of HIV/AIDS care and treatment themselves falling victim to the pandemic. In varying degrees, and in some countries, the education sector was experiencing a severe loss of professionals for the same reasons as was the health sector. In addition, the AU Commission and subregional organizations, which were required to play an important role in NEPAD implementation were also constrained financially.

On the positive side, the NEPAD Heads of State and Government Implementation Committee approved 20 top-priority short-term action plan projects in infrastructure development and capacity-building, at an estimated cost of $8.12 billion, half of which was to be financed by the private sector. The African Development Bank (ADB), which provided broad financial, institutional and programme development support for infrastructure development and other aspects of NEPAD, was preparing nine investment projects, three capacity-building projects and five studies for ABD Group financing at an estimated cost of $580 million.

In the education sector, NEPAD identified eight priority areas to address educational challenges: meeting the MDGs on basic education [YUN 2000, p. 51]; improving the quality of education; achieving gender equality in education; developing effective feeding and nutrition programmes in schools; promoting open learning, distance education for teacher development, and capacity-building in the public sector; improving mathematics and science education; assisting in the reconstruction of the educational system in post-conflict environments; and supporting member States in developing a comprehensive educational response to prevent the spread of HIV/AIDS. Its e-schools project aimed at developing a sustainable knowledge-based society in Africa by turning 600,000 primary and secondary schools into e-schools. A pilot project was launched for 6 schools in 15 countries.

A regional strategy for disaster reduction and the NEPAD Tourism Action Plan were endorsed by the AU at its third ordinary session (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 6-8 July). Under the Comprehensive Africa Agriculture Development Programme, the NEPAD secretariat was developing a tracking mechanism to help countries account for and evaluate their expenditures and budgetary provisions in the agricultural sector. The First NEPAD Ministerial Conference on Science and Technology (Johannesburg, South Africa, 6-7 November 2003) adopted a declaration and agreed on the outline of a plan of action to promote the development and application of science and technology and to guide the development of a coherent business plan. The African Productive Capacity Initiative, adopted by the sixteenth Conference of African Ministers of Industry [YUN 2003, p. 1005], was evolving into the policy framework of Africa’s industrialization effort, and the African investment initiative was launched.

Progress was made in advancing the African Peer Review Mechanism, an instrument for African self-monitoring established by the AU in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 938]. The work programme and rules of procedure for the African peer review panel of eminent personalities were adopted in February 2004, a separate secretariat and a trust fund for the Mechanism were established, and a schedule for the peer review of participating countries agreed upon.

The international community’s response in support of NEPAD included the establishment of the African Partnership Forum for deepening the policy dialogue on support for Africa’s development, which held its inaugural (Paris, France, November, 2003) and second (Maputo, Mozambique, April 2004) meetings; the establishment, in February 2004, by the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom of the Commission for Africa (see p. 993), which sought, among other things, to generate increased support for NEPAD; the extension by the 2004 G-8 summit (Sea Island, Georgia, United States, 8-10 June 2004) of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Initiative until 31 December 2006 to provide financing to complete HIPC and help the poorest countries address the sustainability of debt relief, the pledge of additional official development assistance (ODA) by Africa's developed country partners to support NEPAD implementation; the adoption by the Second International Round Table on Managing for Development Results (Marrakech, Morocco, 4-6 February 2004) of an action plan on harmonization and simplification to improve aid effectiveness; and the ongoing work of the ECA/OECD secretariat on joint review of development effectiveness. In the area of trade liberalization, China signed bilateral agreements with 40 African countries, providing reciprocal most-favoured-nation status, and awarded duty-free status to some goods exported by the least developed African countries; Canada extended the Least Developed Country Tariff for an additional 10 years by providing duty-free access to the Canadian market, with the exception of dairy products, poultry and eggs; and the United States extended its African Growth and Opportunity Act through 2015 (see p. 993). However, a fundamental challenge in international support for NEPAD was the achievement of policy coherence, which was highlighted by the lack of complementarities in debt, aid and trade policies.

In terms of UN support to NEPAD, the Secretary-General set up the Advisory Panel on International Support for NEPAD, which would review and assess the scope and adequacy of international support to the Partnership; conduct a dialogue with Africa's development partners, including the UN system, with a view to promoting support for NEPAD; and make recommendations to the Secretary-General on actions to be taken by the international community to enhance support for NEPAD implementation. UN system support also included technical assistance for institutional development, capacity-building, project development, resource mobilization and advocacy. However, that support was constrained by a lack of financial resources, which limited the scope and prospect of joint activities.

The Secretary-General concluded that a strengthened partnership was needed, in which African countries deepened their commitments to NEPAD priorities and NEPAD development partners targeted measures and actions to give the Partnership a major impetus. Africa's development partners could give further practical expression to their support of the efforts of African countries by creating an enabling environment that was supportive of growth and development, bringing much-needed coherence to trade, aid and foreign debt policies, and accelerating NEPAD's implementation by making significant financial outlays to fund its key sectoral priorities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 76], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/254 [draft: A/59/L.33/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 38 (a)].

New Partnership for Africa's Development: progress in implementation and international support

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 57/2 of 16 September 2002 on the United Nations Declaration on the New Partnership for Africa's Development,

Recalling also its resolution 57/7 of 4 November 2002 on the final review and appraisal of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s and support for the New Partnership for Africa's Development and resolution 58/233 of 23 December 2003 entitled "New Partnership for Africa's Development: progress in implementation and international support",

Bearing in mind that African countries have primary responsibility for their own economic and social development and that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized, also the need for their development efforts to be supported by an enabling international economic environment, and in this regard recalling the support given by the International Conference on Financing for Development to the New Partnership,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General entitled "New Partnership for Africa's Development: second consolidated report on progress in implementation and international support",

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Reaffirms its full support for the implementation of the New Partnership for Africa's Development;
3. Also reaffirms its full support for the implementation of the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS, adopted at the twenty-sixth special session of the General Assembly on 27 June 2001;
4. Recognizes the progress made in the implementation of the New Partnership as well as regional and international support for the New Partnership, while acknowledging that much needs to be done in the implementation of the New Partnership;
5. Welcomes the establishment of a Peace and Security Council within the African Union, stresses that conflict prevention, management and resolution and post-conflict consolidation are essential for the achievement of the objectives of the New Partnership, and welcomes, in this regard, the cooperation and support granted by the United Nations and development partners to the African regional and subregional organizations in the implementation of the New Partnership;

I

Actions by African countries and organizations

6. Welcomes the progress made by the African countries in fulfilling their commitments in the implementation of the New Partnership to deepen democracy, human rights, good governance and sound economic management, and encourages African countries, with the participation of stakeholders, including civil society and the private sector, to continue their efforts in this regard by developing and strengthening institutions for governance and the development of the region;

7. Also welcomes the progress that has been achieved in implementing the African Peer Review Mechanism, including through the establishment of a trust fund to support the activities of the Mechanism, to which participating countries will make financial contributions, and the launching of support missions to several African countries;

8. Further welcomes the efforts made by African countries in developing sectoral policy frameworks and implementing specific programmes of the New Partnership, including by establishing expenditure targets in sectoral priority areas of the New Partnership, and encourages them to continue to integrate the priorities of the New Partnership into their national development plans and frameworks, including poverty reduction strategies, where they exist;

9. Emphasizes the importance for African countries of continuing to coordinate, on the basis of national strategies and priorities, all types of external assistance, including that provided by multilateral organizations, in order to integrate effectively such assistance into their development processes;

10. Welcomes the commitment of African countries to advance the implementation of the New Partnership, acknowledges, in this regard, the role of the Heads of State and Government Implementation Committee of the New Partnership in furthering the implementation of the New Partnership, and welcomes the New Partnership summits held so far, as well as the upcoming summits;

11. Also welcomes the approval by the Heads of State and Government Implementation Committee of the New Partnership of priority infrastructural and capacity-building projects to be implemented by the regional economic communities;

12. Encourages the further integration of the priorities and objectives of the New Partnership into the programmes of the regional structures and organizations, as well as programmes for the African least developed countries;

13. Appreciates the increasing efforts of African countries in mainstreaming a gender perspective and empowerment of women in the implementation of the New Partnership, and in this regard welcomes the Solemn Declaration on Gender Equality in Africa, adopted by the African Union at its third ordinary session in Addis Ababa from 6 to 8 July 2004, and encourages the African countries to track progress in the full integration of women into African social, political and economic life;

14. Emphasizes that progress in the implementation of the New Partnership depends also on a favourable national and international environment for Africa's growth and development, including, inter alia, measures to promote a policy environment conducive to private sector development and entrepreneurship;

II

Response of the international community

15. Welcomes the efforts by development partners to strengthen cooperation with the New Partnership;

16. Acknowledges the importance of various initiatives, such as the Tokyo International Conference on African Development process, the Africa Action Plan of the Group of Eight, initiated at Genoa, Italy, as developed at the Summit of the Group held in Kananaskis, Canada, in 2002, and furthered at their subsequent Summits held in Evian, France, in 2003, and at Sea Island, United States of America, in 2004, as well as the Africa Partnership Forum in support of the implementation of the New Partnership, emphasizes, in this regard, the importance of effective coordination of such initiatives for Africa, and looks forward to the forthcoming report of the Commission for Africa;

17. Welcomes the contribution made by Member States to the implementation of the New Partnership in the context of South-South cooperation;

18. Stresses the need to mobilize additional resources for Africa's development through promoting South-South cooperation and trade and investment as discussed at various forums, including the Asia-Africa Trade and Investment Conference, held in Tokyo on 1 and 2 November 2004, under the auspices of the Tokyo International Conference on African Development;

19. Welcomes the financial support extended by many of the development partners to the various programmes of the New Partnership, and in this regard notes with satisfaction that some developed countries have committed resources for the infrastructure project preparation facility of the New Partnership and have provided resources for institutional strengthening activities at the secretariat of the New Partnership and in some regional economic communities;

20. Recalls that regional economic communities have a critical role to play in the implementation of the New Partnership, and encourages development partners to increase their support to enhance the capacities of these communities;

21. Urges continued attention to the need to continue to take measures to address the challenges of poverty eradication and sustainable development in Africa, including, as appropriate, debt relief, improved market access, support for the private sector and entrepreneurship, enhanced official development assistance and increased flows of foreign direct investment, as well as transfer of technology;

22. Reiterates the need for the international community, relevant multilateral institutions and developed countries to enhance coherence in their trade, investment, aid and debt policies towards African countries;

23. Stresses the need to find comprehensive solutions for the debt problems of African countries, and in this regard welcomes the decision to extend the sunset clause of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative until 31 December 2006 and the ongoing work by the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank to develop a forward-looking debt sustainability framework for heavily indebted poor countries and low-income countries;

24. Welcomes the recent increase in official development assistance by many of the development partners, and urges all development partners to make continued efforts to increase the flows of all resources, public and private, to support the development of African countries and to improve the effectiveness of aid;

25. Also welcomes efforts by development partners to align their financial and technical support to Africa more closely to the priorities of the New Partnership, as reflected in national poverty reduction strategies or in similar strategies, and encourages development partners to increase their efforts in this regard;

26. Acknowledges the activities of the Bretton Woods institutions and the African Development Bank in African countries, and invites those institutions to continue their support for the implementation of the priorities and objectives of the New Partnership;

27. Requests the United Nations system to continue to provide assistance to the secretariat of the New Partnership and to African countries in developing projects and programmes within the scope of the priorities of the New Partnership;

28. Notes that the entities of the United Nations system have been actively using the regional consultation mechanism as a vehicle for fostering collaboration and coordination at the regional level, and encourages them to intensify their efforts in developing and implementing joint programmes in support of the New Partnership at the regional level;

29. Encourages the United Nations funds, programmes and specialized agencies to continue to strengthen further their existing coordination and programming mechanisms, as well as the simplification and harmonization of planning, disbursement and reporting procedures, as a means of enhancing support for African countries in the implementation of the New Partnership;

30. Notes the growing collaboration among the entities of the United Nations system in support of the New Partnership, and requests the Secretary-General to promote greater coherence in the work of the United Nations system in support of the New Partnership, on the basis of the agreed clusters;

31. Invites the High-level Plenary Meeting, which is to be held at the commencement of the sixtieth session of the General Assembly, in accordance with the modalities set by the Assembly at its fifty-ninth session, to address the special needs of African countries;

32. Urges the Commission for Social Development and the Commission on the Status of Women to give prominence to the New Partnership in future priority themes;

33. Welcomes the establishment of the Secretary-General's Advisory Panel on International Support for the New Partnership for Africa's Development, and looks forward to its recommendations on the actions to be taken to enhance support for the implementation of the New Partnership;

34. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take measures to strengthen the Office of the Special Adviser on Africa in order to enable it to effectively fulfil its mandate;

35. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session on the basis of inputs from Governments, organizations of the United Nations system and other stakeholders in the New Partnership, such as the private sector and civil society.

Angola

In response to General Assembly resolution 57/102 [YUN 2002, p. 913], the Secretary-General, in his August consolidated report [A/59/293], provided information on humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance to Angola.

Social indicators in Angola remained very low, with the under-five mortality rate (250 per 1,000 live births) the second highest in the world, the fertility rate (7.2) one of the three highest, and adult literacy (33 per cent) comparable with the average for sub-Saharan Africa (38 per cent). As part of the drive to improve education, and in a step towards achievement of the MDG on education [YUN 2000, p. 51], the Government recruited 29,154 teachers in 2003 to support the return of some 1 million children to school.

The prevalence rate for HIV/AIDS was officially estimated at about 5.5 per cent, but the lack of statistical data and the limited number of surveillance centres meant that the true rate was probably much higher. With UN support, the Government undertook, in 2004, the first national seroprevalence survey and approved its National Law and Strategic Plan to Fight against HIV/AIDS, which aimed to strengthen national-level coordination among governmental, civil society and international partners.

Economic growth in Angola had not yet been translated into better lives for its people. According to the poverty reduction strategy paper (PRSP), 68 per cent of the population lived below the poverty line and 26 per cent was extremely poor. The defence and security ministries and general administrative services consumed the largest share of public resources (41.8 per cent), debt 27 per cent of the budget, while expenditures on health and education (6 and 11 per cent, respectively) remained low. In January, the Government approved its PRSP outlining 10 priority areas for reconstruction to be addressed by 2006. The UN system was focusing on fostering the Government's efforts towards a transition to sustainable development.

The Secretary-General concluded that, while the level of international assistance to Angola since the coming of peace remained inadequate, and donor support needed to be increased, the Government should review the way resources were being used. He recommended that: the Government's capacity be strengthened to ensure that it provided leadership in all development-oriented interventions; Member States give to Angola generously; and the United Nations continue to build alliances among civil society, government, the private sector and the donor community so that development responses were coordinated and strategically harmonized.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/479 & Corr.1] adopted resolution 59/216 without vote [agenda item 39 (b)].

International assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its previous resolutions in which it called upon the international community to continue to render material, technical and financial assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola, including resolution 57/102, adopted by consensus on 25 November 2002,

Recalling also that the Security Council, in resolution 922(1994) of 31 May 1994 and in subsequent resolutions adopted as from 2001, the President of the Security Council, in statements on Angola, and the General Assembly, in all of its resolutions on international assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola, have, inter alia, called upon the international community to provide economic assistance to Angola,

Bearing in mind that the main responsibility for improving the humanitarian situation and creating the conditions for long-term development and poverty reduction in Angola lies with the Government of Angola, together with, where appropriate, the participation of the international community,

Noting the importance of international engagement for the consolidation of peace in Angola,

Noting with concern that, although there are unprecedented opportunities to tackle the country's problems and achieve international and national development goals, recovery will take years as the war has had a devastating economic and social impact,

Recognizing that there is a clear relationship between emergency relief and rehabilitation and development and that in order to ensure a smooth transition from relief to rehabilitation and development, emergency assistance should be provided in ways supportive of recovery and long-term development,

Concerned about the need to mobilize adequate financial resources for emergency humanitarian assistance at all levels,

Welcoming the efforts made by the Government of Angola to improve governance, transparency and institutional capabilities and to use aid more effectively, in cooperation with the United Nations system, and encouraging continued efforts in this regard,

Noting with satisfaction the successful implementation of and effective compliance with the provisions of the Lusaka Protocol,

Taking into account the initiatives taken by the Government of Angola to allocate the human, material and financial resources to improve the social and economic situation of the population and to address the humanitarian situation, and stressing the need to allocate more means towards reconstruction, rehabilitation and social and economic stabilization, with the cooperation of the international community,

Recognizing the urgent need to address as well as to increase national efforts and international support for the resettlement and reintegration of internally displaced persons as well as for the return of refugees and vulnerable groups and for their care in all parts of Angola,

Recognizing also the urgent need to address as well as to increase national efforts and international support for mine-action activities in order to enable the country to tackle the social, economic and humanitarian crises,

Noting that an economically revived and democratic Angola will contribute to regional stability,

Recalling the first Round-Table Conference of Donors, held in Brussels from 25 to 27 September 1995,

Welcoming the efforts made by donors and United Nations agencies, funds and programmes to provide humanitarian, economic and financial assistance to Angola,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Welcomes the successful implementation of the Memorandum of Understanding additional to the Lusaka Protocol, which ended hostilities in the country and created unprecedented conditions for the re-establishment and consolidation of peace in Angola;

3. Recognizes the efforts undertaken by the Government of Angola, with the support of the international community, to facilitate the delivery of humanitarian assistance and to continue to work towards ensuring the maintenance of the peace and national security so necessary for the reconstruction, rehabilitation and economic stabilization of the country, and in this context encourages the Government, with the support of the international community, to continue its efforts, including the increase of budgetary allocations to the development sectors, for poverty reduction and the achievement of sustained economic growth and sustainable development;

4. Welcomes the adoption by the Government of Angola of the poverty reduction strategy paper, and in this regard calls upon the Government of Angola, the World Bank and the international community to remain engaged, with a view to its early endorsement by the World Bank and the Board of the International Monetary Fund, as well as the continued support of the international community to the efforts of the Government of Angola for its implementation;

5. Recognizes the primary responsibility of the Government of Angola for the welfare of all its citizens, including returning refugees and internally displaced persons, and calls upon Member States, in particular the donor community, including through South-South cooperation and triangular cooperation, to continue to support the remaining humanitarian needs in Angola and to assist with the return and resettlement of refugees and internally displaced persons;

6. Welcomes the approval of the National Law and Strategic Plan to Fight against HIV/AIDS, which aims to strengthen national coordination among governmental, civil society and international partners, encourages continued international support to assist in implementing concrete actions to help meet the goals laid out in the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/

AIDS, and in this regard notes with satisfaction the successful conclusion of the first national seroprevalence survey by the Government of Angola with the support of the international community;

7. Requests all national and international, regional and subregional financial institutions to provide their support to the Government of Angola in its efforts to alleviate poverty, consolidate peace and democracy and contribute to economic stability throughout the country and to implement successfully the economic development programmes and strategies;

8. Welcomes the continued commitment of the Government of Angola to improve governance, transparency and accountability in the management of public resources, including natural resources, encourages the Government of Angola to continue its efforts to that end, calls upon international organizations and others in a position to do so to assist the Government of Angola in this endeavour, including through the promotion of responsible business practices, and welcomes in this regard the decision of Angola to accede to the African Peer Review Mechanism;

9. Recognizes the progress towards the adoption of a programme to be monitored by the International Monetary Fund, and encourages the Government and the International Monetary Fund to continue to negotiate actively with a view to reaching an early agreement;

10. Welcomes the commitment of the Government of Angola to the strengthening of its democratic institutions, takes note in this regard of the efforts undertaken by the Government of Angola to hold elections in 2006, looks forward to the early adoption by the National Assembly of a timetable to prepare such elections, and calls upon Members States, international, regional and subregional organizations to provide financial and technical support in this regard;

11. Requests the Government of Angola and the United Nations, and invites the international financial institutions, to take all necessary steps for the preparation and successful organization of an international donors conference for long-term development and reconstruction, including special economic assistance;

12. Expresses its appreciation to the international community, the United Nations system, funds and programmes, and the governmental and non-governmental organizations that are participating in humanitarian assistance programmes in Angola, including mine-action activities, and appeals for their continued contribution to humanitarian mine-action activities in a manner complementary to that of the Government;

13. Expresses its gratitude to donors and United Nations agencies, funds and programmes for the assistance provided to Angola in support of initiatives and programmes for the alleviation of the humanitarian crisis and poverty eradication;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, at its sixty-first session, a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

The Secretary-General, in his August consolidated report [A/59/293], provided information on humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance to the DRC, focusing on economic recovery, national reconstruction and the fight against HIV/AIDS.

Although the DRC's positive economic growth continued in 2003, based mainly on the extractive, transport and communications industries, the social situation scarcely improved. Seventy-three per cent of the population were in a situation of food insecurity, children suffered from malnutrition and primary school enrolment rate was just over 50 per cent. An already alarming health situation was aggravated by the HIV/AIDS pandemic which continued to spread. The DRC continued to face the challenge of overhauling its basic socio-economic structures, which were totally dilapidated and insufficient. In response, it intended implementing an expanded Emergency Multisector Rehabilitation and Reconstruction Project costing some $7 billion, and for which partner support was needed. At the same time, its institutional and human resources weaknesses, in particular in public administration and the judicial system, hindered national productivity.

The UN system helped to rehabilitate social and community infrastructures, promote income-generating activities in rural areas, develop microcredit and distribute equipment for the resumption of trade between provinces. It also helped to draw up DRC's poverty reduction strategy paper (PRSP). The Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and IMF) supported the improvement of the macroeconomic framework, the administration of public funds and the promotion of the private sector. The UN system intensified its multifaceted support for the national programme to fight HIV/AIDS, including the development of catalytic initiatives to promote safe sex among young people, prevent mother-to-child transmission, and contain the spread of HIV/AIDS within the uniformed services and among refugees.

The Secretary-General said that, despite recent growth, the DRC's economy was not strong enough to generate the resources for national reconstruction. The low level of public investment did not permit the construction of a suitable base to relaunch the economy, and foreign/private sector investment would prove ineffectual without basic economic infrastructure. Public investment should be substantially increased, while the elements that limited the country's ability to absorb it were reduced. In addition, job creation had to be put at the centre of the investment policy to revitalize domestic demand. External debt would continue to weigh heavily on national resources.

Liberia

Information on humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance to Liberia, provided by the Secretary-General, in his August consolidated report [A/59/293], revealed that an estimated 1.7 million people in the country still needed humanitarian assistance, of whom some 300,000 were living in 21 IDP camps. Since December 2003, more than 50,000 Liberian refugees had returned spontaneously, many of whom ended up in IDP camps or in returnee camps administered by UNHCR around the capital, Monrovia. UNICEF continued to work with the Ministry of Education to return 750,000 children to school, and since June 2003, UNICEF and its partners had immunized more than 1.24 million children between the ages of 6 months and 15 years. UNDP, the World Health Organization (WHO) and the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) supported education campaigns and communication and dissemination initiatives aimed at creating awareness of the HIV/AIDS pandemic, including among ex-combatants who were taking part in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process. The United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat) led an initiative to improve water and sanitation facilities in Liberia. The protracted conflict had severely affected agricultural production. It was estimated that food production would be considerably less than that required.

The Secretary-General stated that, if not addressed urgently and decisively, the serious security, humanitarian and development challenges facing Liberia could endanger efforts to bring sustainable peace and regional stability. The restoration of lasting peace also required that special attention be paid to other major cross-cutting problems, including the lack of economic opportunity and the disruption of livelihoods as a result of population displacement. Job opportunities had to be created for the large number of unemployed, often illiterate young men who were vulnerable to recruitment by armed groups.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/479 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 59/219 without vote [agenda item 39 (b)].

Assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/232 of 21 December 1990, 46/147 of 17 December 1991, 47/154 of 18 December 1992, 48/197 of 21 December 1993, 49/21 E of 20 December 1994, 50/58 A of 12 December 1995, 51/30 B of 5 December 1996, 52/169 E of 16 December 1997, 53/1 I of 16 November 1998, 55/176 of 19 December 2000 and 57/151 of 16 December 2002,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Commending the Economic Community of West African States and the International Contact Group on Liberia for facilitating the signing of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement in Accra on 18 August 2003, which, inter alia, provided for the formation of the National Transitional Government of Liberia and the holding of democratic elections in October 2005, and for continuing their collaborative efforts with the transitional authority in peacebuilding and security in Liberia,

Welcoming the establishment of the United Nations Mission in Liberia in accordance with Security Council resolution 1509(2003) of 19 September 2003, whereby an enabling environment for the restoration of peace and stability in the country was created,

Also welcoming the formal completion of the disarmament and demobilization operations of the Mission on 31 October 2004 and the subsequent official dissolution of factions on 3 November 2004,

Considering that the holding of free and fair presidential and general elections in October 2005 is a vital undertaking for ensuring national unity, peacebuilding and reconstruction,

Deeply concerned about the recent violence in the city of Monrovia and its environs, which poses a serious threat to the peace process,

Recognizing the importance of a thriving private sector, employment generation, good governance and the rule of law to sustainable economic growth,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the Economic Community of West African States, the African Union, donor countries, specialized agencies of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations for their valuable support in the provision of humanitarian assistance and their adoption of a comprehensive approach to peacebuilding in Liberia and the sub-region;

2. Also expresses its gratitude to all donor countries, specialized agencies of the United Nations system and governmental and non-governmental organizations for their participation in the International Reconstruction Conference on Liberia, held at United Nations Headquarters in New York on 5 and 6 February 2004, at which the National Transitional Government presented the results-focused transition framework, and urges those who have not yet honoured their pledges and commitments to do so;

3. Calls upon all signatories to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement of 18 August 2003 to uphold the spirit and letter of its provisions, to seek to promote socio-economic development and a culture of sustained peace in the country, including a commitment to the rule of law, national reconciliation and human rights and to refrain from actions that may jeopardize the work of the National Transitional Government;

4. Invites all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide assistance to Liberia to facilitate the creation of an enabling environment for the promotion of peace, socio-economic development and regional security, including by emphasizing capacity-building, institution-building and employment generation in their work and ensuring that such work complements and contributes to the development of an economy characterized by an investment climate conducive to entrepreneurship, good governance and the rule of law;

5. Urges the National Transitional Government to create an environment conducive to the promotion of socio-economic development, peace and security in the country, including a commitment to upholding the rule of law, national reconciliation and human rights, establishing inclusive processes that will ensure free and fair presidential and general elections in October 2005 with maximum participation of the citizenry, as well as a commitment to ensuring transparency in the management of government expenditures and donor funds;

6. Invites the international community to provide financial and technical assistance to the National Transitional Government to facilitate free and fair presidential and general elections in October 2005;

7. Urges the National Transitional Government and all States to facilitate and support the return and reintegration of ex-combatants into their home communities, with special attention to children;

8. Commends the Secretary-General for his continuing efforts to mobilize international assistance for the development and reconstruction of Liberia, and requests him to continue his efforts to mobilize all possible assistance within the United Nations system to help in the reconstruction and development of Liberia and in the return and reintegration of refugees, displaced persons and demobilized soldiers;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution;

10. Decides to consider at its sixty-first session the question of international assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia.

Mozambique

In response to General Assembly resolutions 55/167 [YUN 2000, p. 859], the Secretary-General, in a May report [A/59/86-E/2004/69], described follow-up initiatives undertaken in Mozambique in response to the drought of 2002 and 2003, preparation for and response to the spread of the HIV/AIDS pandemic, and other UN assistance initiatives in support of the Government.

Mozambique, the sixth poorest country in the world, was suffering from the compounding effects of HIV/AIDS and repeated natural disasters, including the current drought, which significantly increased the vulnerability of an already impoverished population. HIV/AIDS constituted a threat to sustainable agriculture and rural development and food security. Throughout 2003, the United Nations responded to the Government's requests for assistance in the areas of agriculture, capacity-building, education and child protection, food supplies, health and nutrition, and water, sanitation and hygiene promotion. Following a request from the Government, the UN Country Team in Mozambique decided that the MDGs would be the centre stage of all UN activities in 2004 and would focus on progress made under the national plan towards their achievement. In addition, the national contingency plan for 2004 was launched, with a budget of $35 million to deal with the drought, the risk of cyclones and floods. It comprised the prepositioning of stocks, building a disaster preparedness and early warning capacity, and disaster prevention. The United Nations Inter-Agency Emergency Preparedness and Response Plan for 2004 was intended to support the National Disaster Management Institute in the implementation of the national contingency plan. In light of the poor rainfall in late 2003 and early 2004, the Southern African Development Community (SADC), at a strategic assessment and disaster preparedness meeting (Maputo, Mozambique, February), made a series of recommendations, endorsed by the Mozambique Government, which called for, among other things: refined assessments to better understand the levels of vulnerability; the use of second season and winter cropping; improved emergency response by member States, the United Nations and other multilateral agencies; increased emphasis on disaster prevention, mitigation and preparedness by member States and cooperating partners; strengthening the institutional capacities of the SADC secretariat and member States in disaster management structures and functions; and the promotion of trade and markets.

The Secretary-General said that the UN Country Team in Mozambique shared the concerns and recommendations of the SADC meeting, and should continue to implement 2003 recommendations made by the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Humanitarian Needs in Southern Africa. In particular, the Team would, during the mid-term review of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF), address the severe impact of HIV/AIDS on women, girls and orphaned children, including vulnerability. A national plan for disaster management was crucial for Mozambique, and the National Institute for Disaster Management should go beyond preparing annual contingency plans and develop a national plan.

On 23 July (decision 2004/293), the Economic and Social Council took note of the report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/479 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 59/214 without vote [agenda item 39 (b)].

Assistance to Mozambique

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 386(1976) of 17 March 1976 and all relevant General Assembly resolutions, in which it urged the international community to respond effectively and generously to the call for assistance to Mozambique,

Reaffirming the principles for humanitarian assistance contained in the annex to its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991,

Recalling its resolutions 48/7 of 19 October 1993, 49/215 of 23 December 1994, 50/82 of 14 December 1995, 51/149 of 13 December 1996 and 52/173 of 18 December 1997 on assistance in mine action,

Recognizing that Mozambique is prone to natural disasters which can have a negative impact upon its development efforts,

Aware that, to prevent and manage natural disasters, strategies at the local, national and regional levels are required, in addition to international assistance,

Recognizing that the devastating impact of HIV/AIDS and other endemic diseases is undoing decades of economic and social development and contributing to food insecurity and the increased vulnerability of the population in Mozambique,

Recognizing also that the main responsibility for improving the humanitarian situation and creating conditions for long-term development lies with the Government of Mozambique, while bearing in mind the important role that the international community plays,

Recognizing further the efforts of the Government of Mozambique to promote peace and stability, democracy and national reconciliation as well as economic growth and socio-economic development, including the mainstreaming of internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the Action Plan for the Reduction of Absolute Poverty(2001–2005) and national development plans,

Bearing in mind the Brussels Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010, adopted by the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Brussels from 14 to 20 May 2001, and the mutual commitments entered into on that occasion,

Noting with appreciation the mobilization and allocation of resources by States, relevant organizations of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to assist national development efforts,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on assistance to Mozambique, and humanitarian assistance and rehabilitation for countries and regions,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General and the recommendations contained therein;

2. Commends the Government of Mozambique for its efforts in the maintenance of peace, stability, economic growth and development and for the enhancement of democracy and the consolidation of national reconciliation in the country, and stresses the importance of further consolidation and enhancement of those efforts;

3. Takes note of the launching by the Government of Mozambique of the national contingency plan for natural disasters to improve disaster prevention, mitigation, preparedness and management, and invites the international community to support this initiative;

4. Encourages the Government of Mozambique to continue its efforts to fight HIV/AIDS, malaria and tuberculosis and to implement the Action Plan for the Reduction of Absolute Poverty(2001–2005) and national development plans, with a view to achieving internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, fighting absolute poverty, improving national capacity for education and governance, reducing the vulnerability of the population and promoting economic growth and sustainable development, and invites the international community to continue to support such efforts;

5. Stresses the importance of international assistance for the development programmes in Mozambique, and expresses its gratitude to the development partners that have supported the Government of Mozambique;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to make all necessary arrangements to continue to mobilize and coordinate, with a view to supporting the efforts of the Government of Mozambique:

(a) Humanitarian assistance from the specialized agencies, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system;

(b) International assistance for the national reconstruction and development of Mozambique;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to it at its sixty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

African countries emerging from conflict

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2003/50 [YUN 2003, p. 947], the Secretary-General submitted a June report [E/2004/86] assessing the Council's ad hoc advisory groups on African countries emerging from conflict. Two such groups had been established thus far, on Guinea-Bissau [YUN 2002, p. 920] and Burundi [YUN 2003, p. 947]. The report highlighted the positive role played by the groups in the post-conflict reconstruction efforts of those countries by mobilizing donor support, while encouraging national authorities to create a conducive environment for increased assistance. To those ends, a partnership approach was fostered between national authorities and international stakeholders. The groups promoted enhanced coordination, in particular between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and IMF) and between the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council, which had advanced a holistic approach that addressed both security and economic issues in the transition and recovery phase.

On 3 May, the Economic and Social Council held an informal meeting to assess the work of the ad hoc groups. The meeting agreed that the overall experience had been positive. The discussions helped identify lessons learned, and a number of suggestions and ideas were put forward for future action.

The Secretary-General concluded that the ad hoc advisory groups had proved to be innovative, non-bureaucratic and flexible mechanisms in bringing the attention of the international community to the necessity of supporting the transition from conflict to peace and development in two African countries emerging from conflicts. Having fulfilled their core mandate of identifying short- and long-term recommendations for further support, the Groups were focusing on advocacy to ensure that their recommendations were being implemented and that adequate and coordinated assistance was provided to Burundi and Guinea-Bissau. The groups were also effective in shaping the comprehensive approach to peace and stability called for by the United Nations, and fostered genuine collaboration among international stakeholders. The groups were an example of how the intergovernmental machinery could enhance its impact in relation to post-conflict countries, and the Council might wish to build on their experiences in its response to requests for the creation of new groups. The Secretary-General clarified that the groups should not be seen as continuing mechanisms and should conclude their mandate within a reasonable time. Their experience should be taken into account in the ongoing discussions within the United Nations on promoting coherent international responses to countries in crisis.

Annexed to the report was an overview of the activities carried out by the ad hoc advisory groups on Burundi and Guinea-Bissau.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting 51], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2004/59 [draft: E/2004/L.53] by recorded vote (53-1) [agenda item 7 (f)].

Assessment of the ad hoc advisory groups of the Economic and Social Council on African countries emerging from conflict

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 55/217 of 21 December 2000 on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, in which the Assembly requested the Economic and Social Council to consider creating ad hoc advisory groups on African countries emerging from conflict, with a view to assessing their needs and elaborating a long-term programme of support that begins with the integration of relief into development,

Recalling also the ministerial declaration adopted at the high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council on 18 July 2001 on the role of the United Nations in support of the efforts of African countries to achieve sustainable development, in which the importance of efforts for integrating peace and development was emphasized, and its resolution 2002/1 of 15 July 2002, in which the Council, having taken note of the report of the Secretary-General on this matter, decided to consider creating, at the request of any African country emerging from conflict, an ad hoc advisory group,

Recalling further its decision 2002/304 of 25 October 2002 and its resolutions 2003/1 of 31 January 2003, 2003/53 of 24 July 2003 and 2004/1 of 3 May 2004 related to the establishment and the work of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau,

Recalling its resolution 2003/16 of 21 July 2003, its decision 2003/311 of 22 August 2003 and its resolution 2004/2 of 3 May 2004 related to the establishment and the work of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Burundi,

Recalling also its resolution 2003/50 of 24 July 2003, in which the Council reiterated the need to undertake an assessment of the lessons learned from the ad hoc advisory groups at its substantive session of 2004, and stressed the need to assess also progress made in the implementation of recommendations made by the ad hoc advisory groups,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Recognizes that the composition of the groups, in particular the participation of the countries concerned, which led to their strong ownership of the process, and the presence of African countries, other developing countries and donor countries as members, assisted in ensuring balanced positions and contributing to constructive outcomes;

3. Commends the ad hoc advisory groups for their innovative and constructive work in support of the countries concerned, in particular as it relates to:

(a) The open, transparent and participatory approach adopted by the ad hoc advisory groups and the broad consultations carried out at United Nations Headquarters, in the countries concerned and in other places, with a wide range of actors, including from civil society and the private sector;

(b) The promotion of a comprehensive approach to peace and development by recognizing the complexity and specificity of the situations in the countries concerned and contributing to the development of a framework within which longer-term development activities are planned;

(c) The promotion of an integrated approach to relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development, as a follow-up to the Council's agreed conclusions 1998/1 of 31 July 1998, by, inter alia, linking short- and medium-term humanitarian assistance to the need for longer-term rehabilitation of communities;

(d) The close and fruitful collaboration engaged in with the organizations of the United Nations system, the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, thus creating a constructive and mutually beneficial dynamic among the key players, in support of the countries concerned;

(e) The advocacy role played by the ad hoc advisory groups for long-term international support to the countries concerned, particularly through their partnership approach aimed at establishing a shared understanding of the development challenges and providing recommendations towards concrete solutions, including a long-term development strategy, outlining the respective responsibilities of national authorities and international partners;

4. Urges the ad hoc advisory groups to take into account the following areas for enhancing the effectiveness of their work, within their respective mandates:

(a) Fostering the creation of practical recommendations or strategic advice on how to make the transition from relief to development and increasing relationships with the United Nations Development Group/Executive Committee on Humanitarian Affairs working group on transition issues by exploring the complementary nature of their work;

(b) Entering into closer contacts and collaboration with regional and subregional organizations, such as the African Union, the regional economic communities and regional financial organizations, such as the African Development Bank, whose activities are key to the transition processes of the countries concerned;

(c) Continuing to strengthen their advice on how to ensure that the assistance of the international community in supporting the countries concerned is adequate, coherent, well-coordinated and effective and promotes synergy, including through exploring modalities to further mobilize additional resources, building on relevant mechanisms of coordination at the country level and at the international level;

(d) Ensuring the groups' early contribution to and participation in donor conferences on the countries concerned in order to maximize the impact of their advocacy work;

(e) Promoting a further increase in the interaction between the Economic and Social Council and the Security Council on the situation in the countries concerned, within their respective mandates;

5. Invites the Bretton Woods institutions to continue to cooperate with the ad hoc advisory groups and identify areas of convergence, in support of the post-conflict recovery phase that these countries are going through;

6. Decides to have a substantive debate on the reports of the ad hoc advisory groups as soon as it is appropriate;

7. Stresses the need to conclude the mandate of the ad hoc advisory groups, taking into account all aspects of the situation in each case, and decides to assess progress made towards that end on a semi-annual basis;

8. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the support provided to the ad hoc advisory groups, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure adequate human and technical resources, within existing resources, to provide substantive secretariat support while making maximum use of existing mechanisms and coordination structures, and to ensure the provision of financial resources to cover the operating costs in order to enable the groups to function in a smooth and optimal manner;

9. Decides to undertake a further assessment of lessons learned from the experience of the ad hoc advisory groups, including progress made in the implementation of their mandate, during its substantive session of 2006, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Economic and Social Council in this regard;

10. Reaffirms that each ad hoc advisory group should be specific to the situation prevailing in each country and that further decisions and resolutions should take into account the specific circumstances of any other African country emerging from conflict that requests the establishment of an ad hoc advisory group.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 2004/59:

Against: United States.

Burundi

On 19 January [S/2004/49], Burundi transmitted to the Security Council the Final Communiqué of the fourth Forum of Burundi's Development Partners (Brussels, 13-14 January). At the close of the Forum, Burundi's international partners announced their intention to finance a total of $1.03 billion to cover the priority programme for the second phase of the political transition in Burundi (see p. 141), which included economic recovery; capacity-building for good governance; repatriation of refugees and rehabilitation of "sinistrés" (survivors); and establishment of a new defence and security force. Burundi requested the Council's support in ensuring that the amounts pledged were actually disbursed.

On 29 January [E/2004/9], Burundi informed the Economic and Social Council that the IMF Executive Board had approved a $104 million line of credit for the country under the Poverty Reduction and Growth Facility.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 3 May [meeting 10], the Economic and Social Council, having considered the 2003 report of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Burundi [YUN 2003, p. 948], adopted resolution 2004/2 [draft: E/2004/L.6] without vote [agenda item 2].

Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Burundi

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 2002/1 of 15 July 2002 on the establishment of ad hoc advisory groups on African countries emerging from conflict, in which it decided to consider creating, at the request of any African country emerging from conflict, an ad hoc advisory group,

Recalling also its resolution 2003/16 of 21 July 2003, in which it decided to establish the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Burundi and entrusted the President of the Economic and Social Council with the task of holding consultations and making recommendations on the composition, terms of reference and relevant modalities for the Advisory Group,

Recalling further its decision 2003/311 of 22 August 2003, in which it decided on the terms of reference and composition of the Advisory Group and requested the Advisory Group to submit a report on its recommendations to the Council by mid-January 2004,

Recalling its resolution 2003/50 of 24 July 2003, in which it reiterated the need to undertake an assessment of the lessons learned from the ad hoc advisory groups at its substantive session of 2004 and stressed the need to undertake an assessment of the progress made in the implementation of the recommendations made by the ad hoc advisory groups,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Burundi, and welcomes its recommendations;

2. Welcomes the efforts of the Transitional Government of Burundi to maintain the momentum and consolidate the peace process and the promotion of stability, and encourages the Transitional Government to strengthen its efforts in implementing the recommendations of the Advisory Group as it addresses the economic and social challenges faced by the people of Burundi;

3. Welcomes also the support provided by the international community for the efforts of the Transitional Government, stresses the need for further emergency assistance as well as support for Burundi in embarking on the path of sustainable development, welcomes in this regard the outcome of the fourth Forum of Burundi Development Partners, held in Brussels on 13 and 14 January 2004, and stresses the importance of translating, as a matter of priority, the commitments made into tangible assistance;

4. Requests the Advisory Group to continue to follow closely the humanitarian situation and economic and social conditions, to examine the transition from relief to development in Burundi and the way in which the international community supports the process and to report, as appropriate, to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session in July 2004;

5. Decides that the Advisory Group should contribute to the assessment of the ad hoc advisory groups in relation to lessons learned during the application of its mandate and the implementation of its recommendations;

6. Decides also that the Advisory Group shall invite the participation in its work of the President of the Economic and Social Council for 2004 and the Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Working Group on Conflict Prevention and Resolution in Africa of the Security Council;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, the United Nations Development Group, as well as other relevant United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies to continue to assist the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Burundi in accomplishing its mandate, and invites the Bretton Woods institutions to continue to cooperate to that end.

Advisory Group activities. On 16 July [E/2004/98], South Africa, Chairman of the Advisory Group, transmitted to the Economic and Social Council its 15 July statement made before the Council regarding the Group's activities. The Chairman reported that the Group continued to interact with a wide range of stakeholders and the international community, but support for Burundi's dire humanitarian, economic and social needs continued to be insufficient. Following the announcement of commitment by the Forum of Burundi's Development Partners (see p. 933), a follow-up committee was established, which met monthly in Burundi. Other developments included significant debt relief by the African Development Bank, Belgium, France and Italy; approval by the UNDP Executive Board of the country programme for Burundi for 2005-2007; the deployment of the United Nations Operation in Burundi, the finalization of the UN Development Assistance Framework; and adoption by the UNICEF Executive Board of the country programme for Burundi and approval of a global indicative budget of $37 million. The Group reiterated its call to the donor community to be more forthcoming in providing support to Burundi, including by contributing to the multilateral debt trust fund established by the World Bank.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

On 23 July [meeting 51], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2004/60 [draft: E/2004/L.31] without vote [agenda item 7 (f)].

Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Burundi

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 2002/1 of 15 July 2002, 2003/16 of 21 July 2003, 2003/50 of 24 July 2003 and 2004/2 of 3 May 2004, and its decision 2003/311 of 22 August 2003,

Welcoming the efforts of the African Mission in Burundi as an expression of ownership by the African Union and the establishment of the United Nations Operation in Burundi, in accordance with Security Council resolution 1545(2004) of 21 May 2004,

1. Welcomes the report of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Burundi;

2. Reiterates the importance of maintaining the momentum in consolidating the peace process, calls upon donor countries to follow up on the outcome of the fourth Forum of Burundi Development Partners, held in Brussels on 13 and 14 January 2004, and encourages disbursement of funds announced during that meeting;

3. Requests the Advisory Group to continue to follow closely the humanitarian situation and economic and social conditions, to examine the transition from relief to development in Burundi and the way in which the international community supports the process, and to report, as appropriate, to the Economic and Social Council at its organizational session of 2005;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, the United Nations Development Group, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and other relevant United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies to continue to assist the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Burundi in accomplishing its mandate, and invites the Bretton Woods institutions to continue to cooperate to that end.

Guinea-Bissau

In February [E/2004/10], the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau, established by the Economic and Social Council in decision 2002/304 [YUN 2002, p. 920], reported on its activities since its last report [YUN 2003, p. 949].

On 17 November 2003, the Advisory Group organized an informal dialogue on Guinea-Bissau in New York, which discussed support to the Transitional Government.

The World Bank, IMF and the African Development Bank sent a joint mission to Guinea-Bissau in late 2003 to assess the situation and to make recommendations. Together with UNDP, they provided assistance to the Government in elaborating the Emergency Economic Management Plan and the budget for 2004. The transitional authorities presented their development strategy and announced that they had approved the Plan at an informal meeting of donors organized by the World Bank (Paris, 18 December 2003). At the time of the report, contributions amounted to $5.5 million, but it was estimated that $10.3 million would be needed through June 2004 to enable public institutions to operate and ensure that hospitals and schools remained open. A further $8 to $9 million would be needed for the rest of 2004. UNDP established an Emergency Economic Management Fund (EEMF) to receive funds to address the country's social and economic challenges.

The Advisory Group concluded that a fully fledged dialogue on development priorities would benefit from the return to constitutional order and the holding of elections, primarily the legislative elections scheduled to be held on 28 March 2004. International assistance should focus on emergency support, including electoral assistance. The Advisory Group recommended that the Economic and Social Council further appeal to the donor community to increase emergency assistance to Guinea-Bissau through contributions to the UNDP-managed EEMF.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 3 May [meeting 10], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2004/1 [draft: E/2004/L.5] without vote [agenda item 2].

Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 2002/1 of 15 July 2002, in which it decided to consider creating, at the request of any African country emerging from conflict, an ad hoc advisory group, and its decision 2002/304 of 25 October 2002, in which it decided to establish such an Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau,

Recalling also its resolution 2003/1 of 31 January 2003, in which it took note with appreciation of the report of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau, welcomed its recommendations, endorsed the partnership approach it set out and decided to extend the mandate of the Advisory Group until the substantive session of the Council in July 2003,

Recalling further its resolution 2003/53 of 24 July 2003, in which it took note with appreciation of the supplementary report of the Advisory Group and decided to extend the mandate of the Advisory Group until the organizational session of the Council in January 2004, with the request that it submit a report,

Recalling its resolution 2003/50 of 24 July 2003, in which it reiterated the need to undertake an assessment of the lessons learned from the ad hoc advisory groups at its substantive session of 2004 and stressed the need to undertake an assessment of the progress made in the implementation of the recommendations made by the ad hoc advisory groups,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau, and welcomes its recommendations;

2. Welcomes the continued interaction and cooperation between the Economic and Social Council and the Security Council, within their respective mandates, on the situation in Guinea-Bissau;

3. Welcomes also the steps taken by the Transitional Government in Guinea-Bissau to give effect to the partnership approach proposed by the Advisory Group and the continued support provided by the international community to the Transitional Government and its efforts towards achieving sustainable development, welcomes further the recent parliamentary elections as an important step towards the restoration of democratic government, and appeals to donor countries to contribute further to these efforts;

4. Welcomes further the establishment of an Emergency Economic Management Fund, managed by the United Nations Development Programme, as recommended by the Advisory Group in its initial report, as well as the contributions made to the Fund, and invites donor countries to provide further emergency assistance through the Fund;

5. Decides to extend the mandate of the Advisory Group until the substantive session of the Economic and Social Council in July 2004, with the purpose of monitoring the implementation of its recommendations, following closely the humanitarian situation and the economic and social conditions unfolding in the country and reporting, as appropriate, to the Council at its substantive session in July 2004;

6. Decides also that the Advisory Group should contribute to the assessment of the ad hoc advisory groups in relation to lessons learned during the application of its mandate and the implementation of its recommendations;

7. Decides further that the Advisory Group shall invite the participation in its work of the President of the Economic and Social Council for 2004, the Chairperson of the Group of Friends of Guinea-Bissau and the Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Working Group on Conflict Prevention and Resolution in Africa of the Security Council;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, the United Nations Development Group as well as other relevant United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies to continue to assist the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau in accomplishing its mandate, and invites the Bretton Woods institutions to continue to cooperate to that end.

On 2 July, South Africa, in its capacity as Chairman of the Advisory Group, transmitted a supplementary report [E/2004/92] updating the information on the Group's activities. The Group visited Guinea-Bissau from 25 to 28 June and held discussions with government officials, representatives of IMF and the European Commission (EC). It was joined on 27 and 28 June by the Security Council mission to West Africa (see p. 164). The joint mission assured the Government that the international community would continue to support its efforts by recommending that international partners, the Bretton Woods institutions and donors provide resources to address the country's social and economic priorities. It was convinced that the Government had met key conditions of the partnership and that the substantial improvements in economic management should be rewarded with additional resources. The joint mission called on the Bretton Woods institutions to continue providing technical assistance, with a view to formulating a comprehensive technical assistance plan.

While the Group was impressed with the new rigour in public administration and finance, those improvements needed to be backed up by resources. The EEMF attracted $4.9 million in contributions, of which $2.5 million was disbursed to pay the salaries of some 11,000 civil servants from January to April. The Fund had proved to be an efficient and transparent mechanism for supporting the Government in covering part of the gap in its emergency budget for 2004. The Group was concerned over a $14 million funding gap during the remainder of 2004.

The Advisory Group called for urgent and immediate assistance for a comprehensive restructuring package required for the armed forces, including a review of salaries, career structures, working conditions and infrastructure, as well as a reformulation of their respective roles in a fragile democratic State. It was of the view that there should be no further delay in re-engagement of the international community with Guinea-Bissau to assist the country in meeting its short- and long-term needs. The Group called the attention of the Economic and Social Council to the recommendations made in its first report [YUN 2003, p. 948] regarding the agriculture sector, in particular the fisheries and rice subsectors. The Group urged the Council to call on IMF to resume a programme for the country, and on donors to participate in a round table organized by UNDP and scheduled for November (see p. 937).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 23 July [meeting 51], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2004/61 [draft: E/2004/L.43] without vote [agenda item 7 (f)].

Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 2002/1 of 15 July 2002, 2003/1 of 31 January 2003, 2003/50 of 24 July 2003, 2003/53 of 24 July 2003 and 2004/1 of 3 May 2004, and its decision 2002/304 of 25 October 2002,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the supplementary report of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau and its recommendations;

2. Welcomes the interaction and cooperation that has taken place between the Economic and Social Council and the Security Council, within their respective mandates, on the situation in Guinea-Bissau;

3. Welcomes also the promising developments that have taken place with regard to the economic, social and political situation in Guinea-Bissau following the legislative elections in March 2004, as well as the reforms initiated by the Government to improve the management of public finances;

4. Welcomes further the recommitment of the Government of Guinea-Bissau to the partnership approach, endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 2003/1, calls upon donor countries to support the development efforts of the Government of Guinea-Bissau, including through contributions to the Emergency Economic Management Fund, managed by the United Nations Development Programme, and urges the international community, in particular the donor countries, to increase their assistance to the country in meeting its short-term needs and to implement a long-term programme of support;

5. Encourages the Government of Guinea-Bissau to hold presidential elections by May 2005, and, in this regard, calls upon the international community to support Guinea-Bissau in holding the elections in order to complete the second phase of the Transition Charter;

6. Encourages the International Monetary Fund to consider all possible forms of further support to Guinea-Bissau, and calls upon the donor community to participate in the round table being organized by the United Nations Development Programme, tentatively scheduled for November 2004, which would further the partnership approach;

7. Decides to extend the mandate of the Advisory Group until the organizational session of the Economic and Social Council of 2005, with the purpose of monitoring the implementation of its recommendations, following closely the humanitarian situation and the economic and social conditions unfolding in the country and reporting, as appropriate, to the Council at its organizational session of 2005;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, the United Nations Development Group, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat as well as the relevant United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies to continue to assist the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau in accomplishing its mandate, and invites the Bretton Woods institutions to continue to cooperate to that end.

A December report [E/2005/8] described the activities of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group since its July report (see p. 935); reviewed those undertaken by other international partners; and addressed challenges and constraints impacting the country's transition from crisis to sustainable development.

Following an army mutiny on 6 October (see p. 228), the Ad Hoc Advisory Group in an 11 October communiqué called on the international community to provide urgent and immediate assistance for the restructuring of the armed forces, with a view to professionalizing the army, and renewed its call for budgetary assistance to meet the salary arrears for civil servants and the armed forces. International donor support continued to be critical in helping the Government meet its short-, medium- and long-term priorities. However, the donors round table scheduled for 15 December was postponed, partly as a result of the 6 October events and delays in the finalization of the background documents, including the PRSP, the principal technical document for the round table. The Policy Charter on Infrastructure Development and the National Good Governance Programme were being finalized. The IMF Executive Board (Guinea-Bissau, 19 November) agreed to re-engage with the country on the basis of the Emergency Post-Conflict Assistance programme, provided there were demonstrated international support and political stability.

Concerned at the economic and social situation of the country and the Government's difficulty in meeting the basic needs of the people, the Group supported the Secretary-General's call, made in his December report to the Security Council on Guinea-Bissau (see p. 229) for a special fund to facilitate the planning and implementation of the process of reform of the armed forces, and called on the international community to contribute to the funding of that effort. The Group called on the country's partners to participate actively in the donors round table once a new date was set.

(For more information on the situation in Guinea-Bissau, see p. 225.)

Other economic assistance

Comoros

The Secretary-General, in his August consolidated report on humanitarian assistance [A/59/293], provided information on assistance to the Comoros. The Comoros economic difficulties over the past two decades, including low growth of its gross domestic product, falling investment, arrears in domestic and foreign payments and major macroeconomic imbalances, resulted in an estimated 60 per cent of the population living below the poverty line. The high level of cash poverty went hand in hand with poor human development performance; a situation further aggravated by a constitutional crisis leading to jurisdictional disputes. The institutional instability and political turbulence prevented the country from drawing up a coherent development policy, causing donors to adopt a wait and see attitude. That resulted in a downward trend in development aid to the country. Following the signing by the Comorian parties on 20 December 2003 of the Moroni Agreement, which laid down the interim provisions for governing the Comorian entity until the establishment of the national assembly, the international community met in Paris on 21 January 2004 and established a trust fund of just over $5 million to be managed by UNDP in support of the transition. That allowed the country to formulate a consolidated budget in 2004, with a view to reopening negotiations on a formal IMF programme. The UN system supported the launch of a national process to draw up a PRSP for the Comoros, which should open the door to a number of mechanisms for financing the economy and prepare the country for the next donor round table on funding for national development.

The Secretary-General concluded that the long and multifaceted crisis in the Comoros had left the country economically bereft, socially vulnerable and institutionally fragile. The Comorian national report for 2003 on the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51] showed that the Comoros was not advancing towards the agreed goals, but was actually falling behind. Among its greatest challenges were the creation of a new and viable institutional framework, and the re-establishment of effective cooperation with the Bretton Woods institutions, so that the country could access development financing mechanisms. The Comoros needed multifaceted support from the international community to pursue national reconciliation and reconstruction.

Haiti

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2003/46 [YUN 2003, p. 952], the Secretary-General submitted a June report [E/2004/80] on progress achieved in implementing the long-term programme of support for Haiti. Over the past year, Haiti's critical economic condition was related to the political situation, with a direct negative effect on public sector efficiency and domestic investments, including increasing inflation as a result of unsustainable fiscal deficits. In April 2004, the Prime Minister, calling for pluri-annual commitments by donors in support of Haiti in order to achieve sustainable results, announced his Government's priorities in relation to the MDGs, including modernization of State institutions, public security, infrastructure, education, the environment, the economy and finance. The suspension of most external assistance to Haiti continued into early 2004, but with the new political situation (see p. 288), major development partners announced their intention to resume support to Haiti. At a meeting convened by the World Bank (Washington, D.C., 23 March), donor Governments, international financial institutions and international and regional organizations decided to ensure a coordinated response to Haiti's pressing and medium-term needs. In partnership with the Transitional Government, the meeting agreed to initiate a joint Government/multi-donor assessment stressing the country's economic, social and institutional needs. On 22 April, Haiti's development partners met to consider the Transitional Government's policy priorities (see above) and to elaborate a plan of action. UNDP and the World Bank decided to lead the assessment process for the preparation of the Interim Cooperation Framework for Haiti, and a donor round table was scheduled for July.

The Prime Minister of the Transitional Government of Haiti, in a meeting with the President of the Economic and Social Council on 14 June, requested the Council to set up an ad hoc advisory group on Haiti to help coordinate the development of a long-term programme of assistance to the country and the activities being carried out or planned with the donor community and the Government for that purpose.

The Secretary-General concluded that a long-term effort and international commitment were needed to rebuild the economic and social structures, and support the Government and people of Haiti in building democratic institutions. In the light of the changes in the political environment in Haiti, and taking into account the experience gained through the work of the Council's ad hoc advisory groups on Guinea-Bissau and Burundi (see pp. 935 and 933, respectively), the Economic and Social Council might wish to consider establishing an ad hoc advisory group on Haiti.

(For information on the human rights situation in Haiti, see p. 675.)

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Flash Appeal for Haiti, launched on 9 March, sought $35.8 million to meet urgent humanitarian needs and establish the basis for recovery for the Haitian people over a six-month period. Of the total, 43 per cent ($15.4 million) was received. A separate flash appeal was launched to address emergency relief and recovery needs following floods in Haiti on 17 and 18 September (see p. 952).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting 50], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2004/52 [draft: E/2004/L.44] without vote [agenda item 7 (d)].

Long-term programme of support for Haiti

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1999/4 of 7 May 1999, in which the Council decided to create an Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti, and its subsequent resolutions 1999/11 of 27 July 1999, 2001/25 of 26 July 2001, 2002/22 of 24 July 2002 and 2003/46 of 23 July 2003, and its decisions 2000/235 of 27 July 2000 and 2001/290 of 24 July 2001, adopted with a view to the development of a long-term programme of support for Haiti,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 1529 (2004) of 29 February 2004 and 1542(2004) of 30 April 2004, in which it decided to establish the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti and supported the establishment of a Core Group to be chaired by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Haiti in order, inter alia, to facilitate the implementation of the mandate of the Stabilization Mission,

Recalling further paragraphs 13 and 14 of Security Council resolution 1542(2004), which emphasized the need for Member States, organs, bodies and agencies of the United Nations system and other international organizations to continue to contribute to the promotion of the social and economic development of Haiti, in particular over the long term, in order to achieve and sustain stability and to combat poverty,

Taking note of the request made by the Transitional Government of Haiti to reactivate the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Stresses the need for renewed efforts at the local, national, regional and international levels to secure long-term support for Haiti, together with a sustained commitment at all levels to rebuild the economic and social structures of the country, combat poverty and build institutional capacity in support of the efforts of the Government and people of Haiti;
3. Calls upon the international community to provide substantial contributions to relief and assistance programmes carried out by the United Nations system and other relevant partners to improve the living conditions of the population in Haiti;
4. Underscores the need for a long-term development strategy to promote socio-economic recovery and stability and to ensure coherence and sustainability in international support for Haiti;
5. Decides to reactivate the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti established by its resolution 1999/4 and to consider the mandate and modalities of the Advisory Group at its resumed substantive session of 2004, in close consultation with the Transitional Government of Haiti and with the participation of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Haiti, based on long-term national development needs and taking into account the need to avoid overlap and duplication with existing mechanisms;
6. Also decides to entrust the President of the Economic and Social Council with the task of holding consultations on the composition of the Advisory Group with the participation of all regional groups and the Transitional Government of Haiti, ensuring that it is limited, representative, at the ambassadorial level and drawn from the membership of the Council and its observer States, including representation from Haiti, taking into account the need to include countries that can make a positive contribution to the objectives of the Advisory Group, and with the task of making recommendations on the composition of the Advisory Group for a decision by the Council at its resumed substantive session of 2004.

On 11 November, the Council adopted decision 2004/322 [draft E/2004/L.58/Rev.1] without vote [agenda item 7 (d)].

Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti

At its 54th plenary meeting, on 11 November 2004, the Economic and Social Council, recalling its resolution 2004/52 of 23 July 2004 on the long-term programme of support for Haiti, and in order to reactivate the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti, decided:

(a) To appoint the Permanent Representatives of Benin, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Haiti, Spain and Trinidad and Tobago to the United Nations as the members of the Advisory Group;

(b) That the Advisory Group would invite the participation of the President of the Economic and Social Council and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in Haiti, also acting as Chairman of the core group, in the work of the Advisory Group;

(c) That the Advisory Group would follow closely and provide advice on Haiti's long-term development strategy to promote socio-economic recovery and stability, with particular attention to the need to ensure coherence and sustainability in international support for Haiti, based on the long-term national development priorities, building upon the Interim Cooperation Framework and stressing the need to avoid overlap and duplication with respect to existing mechanisms;

(d) That the Advisory Group would work with Member States, the Core Group, the Security Council, other United Nations organs, bodies and specialized agencies and, in particular, the United Nations Development Programme, the Bretton Woods institutions, regional organizations and institutions, including the Organization of American States and the Caribbean Community, the Inter-American Development Bank and other major stakeholders;

(e) To request the Advisory Group to submit a report on its work, with recommendations, as appropriate, to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2005.

Serbia and Montenegro

The Secretary-General, in his August consolidated report on humanitarian assistance and rehabilitation [A/59/293], provided information on humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance to Serbia and Montenegro. Serbia and Montenegro witnessed a steady decline in humanitarian aid, as the country was no longer in a humanitarian crisis situation but had moved towards stabilization and economic development. The most significant component of that assistance continued to be basic food aid provided by WFP and UNHCR to vulnerable refugees and by the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) to internally displaced persons (IDPs). As that assistance was phased out, the remaining eligible beneficiaries were integrated into the local social welfare system, with international agencies providing residual support to the most vulnerable. Although significant progress was made in finding durable solutions for refugees, focusing mostly on repatriation to Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, and on local integration through housing, income-generation and vocational training programmes, national policies for comprehensive durable solutions for IDPs had not yet been developed. Ethnic violence against the Serb and other non-Albanian populations in the province of Kosovo in March 2004 (see p. 405) posed additional threats to returnees. In the wake of the disturbances, UN agencies in Kosovo addressed urgent humanitarian needs through the provision of food and temporary accommodation assistance and some reconstruction activities.

The United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) for 2005-2009 incorporated remaining humanitarian issues into development objectives. The UN country team was implementing a strategic plan for Kosovo, devised according to the Government's comments and priorities. While solutions for refugees, IDPs and other marginalized groups were sought within broad community development, poverty reduction and social assistance strategies, governments at the republican and local levels were unable to meet their needs without the support of the international community. Outside support would enable domestic bodies to assume a greater share of the rehabilitation, reconstruction and development burden. More coordination was required between international development actors and government ministries to ensure that medium-term and longer-term solutions for the most vulnerable populations were addressed comprehensively as humanitarian programmes ended.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/479 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 59/215 without vote [agenda item 39 (b)].

Humanitarian and special economic assistance to Serbia and Montenegro

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991, and reaffirming that humanitarian assistance should be provided in accordance with the guiding principles contained in the annex to that resolution,

Recalling also its resolutions 54/96 F of 15 December 1999, 55/169 of 14 December 2000, 56/101 of 14 December 2001 and 57/148 of 16 December 2002,

Deeply appreciative of the humanitarian assistance and the rehabilitation support rendered by a number of States, in particular major contributors, international agencies and organizations and non-governmental organizations to alleviate the humanitarian needs of the affected population in Serbia and Montenegro, in particular emergency assistance provided by the European Union and various countries,

Recognizing the role of the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe and the stabilization and association process for the western Balkans in assisting Serbia and Montenegro in its efforts in further promoting democratic and economic reforms and in intensifying regional cooperation,

Recognizing also the need to ensure the effective and smooth transition from humanitarian to development efforts in Serbia and Montenegro, including with respect to the humanitarian and rehabilitation needs of refugees and internally displaced persons, in particular the most vulnerable,

Aware of the weakness of the economy and basic services, which exacerbates further the situation of socially and economically vulnerable segments of the population, including refugees and internally displaced persons, and which is coupled with limited basic social services capacity, especially in the health sector,

Acknowledging that still a large number of refugees and internally displaced persons remain in Serbia and Montenegro and that assistance requirements will include local integration, whenever refugees and internally displaced persons are not willing to return to their places of origin,

Recognizing the role of the United Nations in helping Serbia and Montenegro to achieve a successful transition from humanitarian assistance to development assistance and in coordinating the efforts of the international community in that regard,

Acknowledging the support of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Development Programme and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to the Council of Ministers of Serbia and Montenegro in the implementation of the National Strategy for Resolving Problems of Refugees and Internally Displaced Persons in Serbia and Montenegro, as well as international support for the development of a Roma integration and empowerment strategy and poverty reduction strategies in Serbia and Montenegro and the adoption of a poverty reduction strategy paper,

Recognizing a continued decrease in humanitarian assistance in 2004, in line with an understanding that, as stressed in the report of the Secretary-General, the country was no longer in a humanitarian crisis situation but had moved towards stabilization and economic development,

Recognizing also the importance of the rule of law, good governance, a vibrant private sector, as well as effective social sectors, including education and health, to achieve sustainable development,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Calls upon all States, regional organizations, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other relevant bodies to continue to provide assistance to alleviate the needs of refugees and internally displaced persons, bearing in mind in particular the special situation of women, children, the elderly and other vulnerable groups, and to assist financially and otherwise in seeking durable solutions for a safe return of refugees and internally displaced persons to their places of origin, or for settlement at their place of refuge for those who want to integrate locally, in cooperation with the local authorities, with a successive transition to development projects aimed at durable solutions to those questions;

2. Encourages the Council of Ministers of Serbia and Montenegro in its efforts to ensure a smooth transition from relief to long-term development, and calls upon all States, regional organizations, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other relevant bodies to offer support for those efforts;

3. Welcomes the adoption of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework for Serbia and Montenegro as a strategic document for the operational activities of the United Nations system in Serbia and Montenegro and as a basis for the entire development assistance programme in the period 2005-2009 and the adoption of the United Nations Development Programme country programme outline for Serbia and Montenegro for the period 2005-2009 and the United Nations Children's Fund country programme document for Serbia and Montenegro for the period 2005-2009, and calls upon all States, regional organizations, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other relevant bodies to support their implementation;

4. Recognizes that the main responsibility for improving the humanitarian situation and creating conditions for long-term development lies with the Council of Ministers of Serbia and Montenegro, while bearing in mind the important role played by the international community;

5. Welcomes the continued commitment of Serbia and Montenegro and encourages it to cooperate further with the United Nations system as well as development and humanitarian organizations to address the needs of the affected population, including refugees and internally displaced persons, and urges the relevant authorities and the international community to support and stimulate development assistance for the implementation of the National Strategy for Resolving Problems of Refugees and Internally Displaced Persons, national strategies for poverty reduction and other programmes that will ensure that the needs of the vulnerable refugees and internally displaced persons in Serbia and Montenegro are met and to pursue durable solutions to their plight, in particular voluntary repatriation and reintegration, stresses the need to create conditions that are conducive to their safe return, and emphasizes in this regard the importance of regional cooperation in the search for solutions to the plight of refugees;

6. Urges the relevant government authorities in Serbia and Montenegro to develop, with the assistance of the United Nations system, national policies for comprehensive durable solutions for internally displaced persons based on the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement, and in that regard invites the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo to strengthen its efforts, within its mandate, in coordination with relevant government authorities in Serbia and Montenegro, for the establishment of the necessary conditions for the safe and sustainable return of internally displaced persons;

7. Calls upon the Secretary-General, as well as development agencies, to continue to mobilize the timely provision of international development assistance to Serbia and Montenegro, and welcomes efforts by Serbia and Montenegro to improve governance and institutional capabilities in order to use aid more effectively;

8. Emphasizes the importance of the increased donor coordination of assistance to Serbia and Montenegro, inter alia, through the mechanism of the United Nations resident coordinator system;

9. Urges development partners to assist in capacity-building, institution-building and local employment generation in their programmes and to train and employ local staff to the maximum extent possible, welcomes work by Serbia and Montenegro to create an enabling environment for its private sector, including the development of a financial sector that provides services, inter alia, to microenterprises and to small and medium-sized enterprises and to their households, and encourages continued work on regulatory reform, transparency, accountability, good governance and the rule of law, all of which support sustainable development;

10. Also urges Serbia and Montenegro and its development partners to support and strengthen initiatives that contribute to the enhancement of social capital in areas such as health and education, emphasizing, inter alia, the development of capacity to improve the quality of and access to health care and education;

11. Requests the United Nations and the specialized agencies to continue their efforts to assess needs, in co-operation with the Council of Ministers of Serbia and Montenegro, relevant international and regional organizations and bodies and interested States, with a view to ensuring an effective and smooth transition from relief to longer-term development assistance to Serbia and Montenegro, taking into account the work already carried out in this field and the need to avoid duplication and the overlapping of efforts;

12. Requests the Secretary-General, bearing in mind the recommendation contained in his report, to submit to it at its sixty-first session, under the item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance", a final report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Third States affected by sanctions

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/80 [YUN 2003, p. 1367], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/59/334] highlighting measures for further improvement of the procedures and working methods of the Security Council and its sanctions committees related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions. It reviewed the Secretariat's capacity and modalities for implementing the intergovernmental mandates and for addressing the main findings, including recommendations of the ad hoc expert group meeting on assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions [YUN 1998, p. 1235]. It also reviewed recent developments related to the role of the Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Committee for Programme and Coordination in the area of assistance to third States.

The Assembly took action with regard to the Secretary-General's report in resolution 59/45 (see p. 1346).

Disaster relief

In 2004, an estimated 360 disasters affected approximately 145 million people, causing more than $130 billion in material damage. The most significant was the massive earthquake that occurred off the coast of Indonesia on 26 December and the resulting tsunami (see p. 952), which unleashed a series of major disasters across more than 12 nations, killing more than 240,000 persons and displacing over 1 million.

In Africa, Eritrea was experiencing worsening drought conditions, with over 66 per cent of the population threatened by hunger, extreme poverty and poor access to safe water. Over 7 million people in Ethiopia were still unable to meet their basic needs following the drought of 2003. Floods and cyclones affected over 1 million people in the Southern Africa region, and erratic, dry weather conditions affected the crop production of over 6 million people in six countries. In the Central and East Africa region, 40 million people were chronically vulnerable from successive years of drought and natural and man-made disasters. In the latter half of 2004, locust swarms invaded the Sahelian zone of the West Africa region, with detrimental consequences for food security. The continuing drought in Somalia affected 700,000 people.

More natural disasters struck Asia than any other continent, and South Asia was particularly prone to floods, landslides, earthquakes, cyclones and droughts. Severe floods hit South Asia and China, affecting 80 million people. In July, floods in Bangladesh affected more than 30 million people, of which 5 million were in urgent need of food and other relief items (see p. 950). Floods also occurred in Bangladesh, India and Nepal, and a storm killed more than 140 people in Myanmar in May.

The Pacific region was hit by three cyclones in 2004. In January, Cyclone Heta impacted the Cook Islands, Niue, Samoa and Tokelau. Cyclone Ivy caused heavy damage to Vanuatu in February, and Typhoon Sudal swept through the Federated States of Micronesia in April. The Philippines was also struck by four typhoons and tropical storms (see p. 952).

Political unrest in Haiti was compounded by floods in May (see p. 952) and Tropical Storm Jeanne in September. It was estimated that natural disasters in the Caribbean in 2003 and 2004 affected millions of people and caused more than $65 billion worth of material damage. Hurricanes Charley, Frances, Ivan and Jeanne in 2004 were the strongest chain of storms to hit the region in a decade, and their paths of destruction included small, developing islands, many of which were unprepared for the level of devastation brought by those storms. A prolonged drought in Bolivia affected an estimated 180,000 people (see p. 950).

Excluding contributions in kind and services not costed, the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) recorded contributions totalling $592 million for natural disaster assistance.

International cooperation

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/25 [YUN 2003, p. 955], the Secretary-General, in a September report [A/59/374], highlighted key activities undertaken in response to natural disasters, with an emphasis on disaster response, recovery and transition efforts and global initiatives to reduce risk. In response to resolution 57/150 [YUN 2002, p. 926], the report also updated the activities of the International Search and Rescue Advisory Group (INSARAG), an intergovernmental network established in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 413] for international cooperation and coordination in earthquake response.

The United Nations assisted countries and regions affected by more than 50 natural disasters, in response to 20 international appeals launched by Member States. Efforts to coordinate the UN system response to natural disasters included the launch of four UN inter-agency flash appeals. The United Nations Disaster Assessment and Coordination (UNDAC), a network of 180 disaster management professionals from 57 countries, coordinated the responses in 10 disasters, with WFP support. The United Nations was also trying to expand Member States participation in its disaster response networks and to foster a regional approach to natural disaster response, particularly among low-income countries. UNDAC expanded its network, including the holding of an induction course for new African emergency managers. To address local and regional capacity-building for response to disasters, several capacity-building programmes were initiated worldwide.

To improve local response, UNDAC teams visited Colombia and the Philippines to introduce new on-site coordination methodologies to disaster-prone countries and to train national authorities in international response coordination. At the regional level, the network of UN regional disaster response advisers focused on strengthening regional mechanisms to address all phases of disaster management.

INSARAG organized lessons-learned meetings with Governments and international, national and local response teams to evaluate earthquake response and to make recommendations for inclusion in the INSARAG guidelines, which were being revised. It also organized regional meetings in Japan (November 2003), Tunisia (April 2004), Peru (August 2004) and Singapore (September 2004) to discuss regional cooperation, emphasizing national capacity-building for emergency response preparedness, and meetings of all international urban search-and-rescue team leaders in Seoul (November 2003) and Singapore (September 2004) on technical and operational collapsed structure rescue issues, in order to improve performance standards.

The Secretary-General concluded that, without focused efforts to improve preparedness and response, and to address risk and vulnerability, the effects of disasters on people and human settlements would become more deadly and costly. The situation called for more concerted and comprehensive approaches to disaster management, aimed at building national and regional capacity and emphasizing risk reduction as a core principle. The lack of systematic policies and practices to support local and national responses and risk reduction capacities called for institutional and financial commitments to ensure that disaster risk reduction was more explicitly integrated into development planning, and that the more difficult political and structural elements of risk reduction policies were seriously addressed.

The Secretary-General made recommendations for strengthening international assistance, dealing with disaster response; building local and regional disaster management capacity; information management; risk reduction and sustainable development; disaster funding; and monitoring and evaluation. Member States were encouraged to support the World Conference on Disaster Reduction, to be held in Japan, in 2005 (see p. 946), and to use the opportunity to reaffirm and strengthen the implementation of disaster-reduction policy and practices.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/212 [draft: A/59/L.26/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 39 (a)].

International cooperation on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters, from relief to development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991, the annex to which contains the guiding principles for the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations system, as well as all its resolutions on international cooperation on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters, from relief to development, and recalling the resolutions of the humanitarian segments of the substantive sessions of the Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the importance of the principles of neutrality, humanity and impartiality for the provision of humanitarian assistance,

Emphasizing that the affected State has the primary responsibility in the initiation, organization, coordination and implementation of humanitarian assistance within its territory and in the facilitation of the work of humanitarian organizations in mitigating the consequences of natural disasters,

Emphasizing also the importance of integrating risk reduction into all phases of disaster management, development planning and post-disaster recovery,

Emphasizing further, in this context, the important role of development organizations in supporting national efforts to mitigate the consequences of natural disasters,

Emphasizing the responsibility of all States to undertake disaster preparedness, response and mitigation efforts in order to minimize the impact of natural disasters, while recognizing the importance of international cooperation in support of the efforts of affected countries which may have limited capacities to fulfil this requirement,

Welcoming the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction,

Stressing that national authorities need to enhance the resilience of populations to disasters through, inter alia, implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction so as to reduce risks to people, their livelihoods, the social and economic infrastructure and environmental resources,

Taking into account the outcome of the Second International Conference on Early Warning, held in Bonn, Germany, from 16 to 18 October 2003, under the auspices of the United Nations,

Welcoming the efforts undertaken in preparation for the World Conference on Disaster Reduction, to be held in Kobe, Japan, from 18 to 22 January 2005, and underlining the importance of this conference in the promotion of new efforts in the field of disaster risk reduction,

Noting the critical role played by local resources, as well as by existing in-country capacities, in natural disaster response and risk management,

Recognizing the significant role played by national Red Cross and Red Crescent societies, as part of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, in disaster preparedness and risk reduction, disaster response, rehabilitation and development,

Emphasizing the importance of raising awareness among developing countries of the capacities existing at the national, regional and international levels that could be deployed to assist them,

Noting the lack of progress made in finalizing the establishment of the Directory of Advanced Technologies for Disaster Response as a new part of the Central Register of Disaster Management Capacities as requested in its resolution 58/25 of 5 December 2003,

Emphasizing the importance of international cooperation in support of the efforts of the affected States in dealing with natural disasters in all their phases, including prevention, preparedness, mitigation and recovery and reconstruction, and of strengthening the response capacity of affected countries,

Recognizing that efforts to achieve economic growth, sustainable development and internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, can be adversely affected by natural disasters, and noting the positive contribution that those efforts can make in strengthening the resilience of populations to such disasters,

Welcoming the efforts of Member States, with facilitation by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and in cooperation with the International Search and Rescue Advisory Group, to improve efficiency and effectiveness in the provision of international urban search and rescue assistance, and, in this context noting its resolution 57/150 of 16 December 2002 entitled "Strengthening the effectiveness and coordination of international urban search and rescue assistance",

Encouraging, in this regard, efforts aimed at strengthening the International Search and Rescue Advisory Group and its regional groups, particularly through the participation in their activities of representatives of a larger number of countries,

Mindful of the effects that shortfalls in resources can have on the preparedness for and response to natural disasters, and underscoring, in this regard, the need to gain a more precise understanding of the impact of levels of funding on natural disaster response,

Underlining the need for further improvement in information and analyses available regarding needs, responses and funding related to natural disasters,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General entitled "International cooperation on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters, from relief to development" and "Strengthening the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations";

2. Expresses its deep concern at the high number and the scale of natural disasters and their increasing impact, resulting in massive losses of life and property worldwide, in particular in vulnerable societies lacking adequate capacity to mitigate effectively the long-term negative social, economic and environmental consequences of natural disasters;

3. Calls upon all States to adopt, where required, and to continue to implement effectively necessary legislative and other appropriate measures to mitigate the effects of natural disasters and integrate disaster risk reduction strategies into development planning, inter alia, by disaster prevention, including appropriate land-use and building regulations, as well as disaster preparedness and capacity-building in disaster response and mitigation, and requests the international community to continue to assist developing countries as well as countries with economies in transition, bearing in mind their vulnerability to natural hazards, in this regard;

4. Stresses, in this context, the importance of strengthening international cooperation, particularly through the effective use of multilateral mechanisms, in the provision of humanitarian assistance through all phases of a disaster, from relief and mitigation to development, including the provision of adequate resources;

5. Also stresses that humanitarian assistance for natural disasters should be provided in accordance with and with due respect for the guiding principles contained in the annex to resolution 46/182 and should be determined on the basis of the human dimension and needs arising out of the particular natural disasters;

6. Recognizes that economic growth and sustainable development contribute to improving the capacity of States to mitigate, respond to and prepare for natural disasters;

7. Reaffirms that disaster risk analysis and vulnerability reduction form an integral part of humanitarian assistance, poverty eradication and sustainable development strategies and need to be considered in the development plans of all vulnerable countries and communities, including, where appropriate, in plans relating to post-disaster recovery and the transition from relief to development, and affirms that within such preventive strategies, disaster preparedness and early warning systems must be further strengthened at the country and regional levels, inter alia, through better coordination among relevant United Nations bodies and cooperation with Governments of affected countries and regional and other relevant organizations with the aim of maximizing the effectiveness of natural disaster response and reducing the impact of natural disasters, particularly in developing countries;

8. Emphasizes the importance of the outcome of the Twenty-eighth International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, held in Geneva from 2 to 6 December 2003;

9. Also emphasizes the importance of enhanced international cooperation, including through the United Nations and regional organizations, to assist developing countries in their efforts to build local and national capacities and to effectively and efficiently predict, prepare for and respond to natural disasters;

10. Stresses the need for partnerships among Governments, organizations of the United Nations system, relevant humanitarian organizations and specialized companies to promote training to strengthen preparedness for and response to natural disasters;

11. Calls upon States, the United Nations and other relevant actors, as appropriate, to assist in addressing knowledge gaps in disaster management and risk reduction by identifying ways of improving systems and networks for the collection and analysis of information on disasters, vulnerability and risk to facilitate informed decision-making;

12. Stresses the need to promote the access to and transfer of technology and knowledge related to early warning systems and to mitigation programmes to developing countries affected by natural disasters;

13. Encourages the further use of space-based and ground-based remote-sensing technologies for the prevention, mitigation and management of natural disasters, where appropriate;

14. Also encourages in such operations the sharing of geographical data, including remotely sensed images and geographic information system and global positioning system data, among Governments, space agencies and relevant international humanitarian and development organizations, as appropriate, and notes in that context initiatives such as those undertaken by the International Charter on Space and Major Disasters and the Global Disaster Information Network;

15. Stresses that particular international cooperation efforts should be undertaken to enhance and broaden further the utilization of national and local capacities, including within the framework of the International Search and Rescue Advisory Group, and, where appropriate, of regional and subregional capacities of developing countries for disaster preparedness and response, which may be made available in closer proximity to the site of a disaster, more efficiently and at lower cost;

16. Recognizes, in this regard, that the United Nations Disaster Assessment and Coordination system continues to be a valuable tool by which disaster management expertise is made available by Member States to respond to the sudden onset of emergencies;

17. Urges Member States, with the support of relevant bodies of the United Nations system, to strengthen efforts to identify practical ways to channel resources to and strengthen support for national disaster management capacities in disaster-prone countries;

18. Welcomes the role of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat as the focal point within the overall United Nations system for the promotion and coordination of disaster responses among United Nations humanitarian agencies and other humanitarian partners;

19. Takes note with interest of the initiatives taken by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and the United Nations Development Programme for the establishment of regional positions of disaster response advisers and disaster reduction advisers to assist developing countries in capacity-building for disaster prevention, preparedness, mitigation and response in a coordinated and complementary manner;

20. Encourages further cooperation between the United Nations system and regional organizations in order to increase the capacity of these organizations to respond to natural disasters;

21. Encourages States that have not acceded to or ratified the Tampere Convention on the Provision of Telecommunication Resources for Disaster Mitigation and Relief Operations, adopted at Tampere, Finland, on 18 June 1998, to consider doing so;

22. Reiterates its request that the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the relevant organizations and partners, finalize the establishment of, and then update periodically, the Directory of Advanced Technologies for Disaster Response as a new part of the Central Register of Disaster Management Capacities;

23. Encourages donors to consider the importance of ensuring that assistance in the case of higher-profile natural disasters does not come at the expense of those that may have a relatively lower profile, bearing in mind that the allocation of resources should be driven by needs, as well as the importance of making efforts to increase the level of assistance for disaster reduction and preparedness programmes and for disaster response and mitigation activities;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to examine ways to further improve the assessment of needs and responses and to enhance the availability of data regarding funding in response to natural disasters and to consider concrete recommendations to improve the international response to natural disasters, as necessary, based on his examination, keeping in mind also the need to address any geographical and sectoral imbalances and shortfalls in such responses, where they exist, as well as the more effective use of national emergency response agencies, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session.

International Strategy for Disaster Reduction

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/214 [YUN 2003, p. 958], the Secretary-General, in an August report [A/59/228], described UN activities to implement the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction (ISDR), which was adopted by the programme forum of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (1990-2000) in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 859] and endorsed by the Assembly in resolution 54/219 [ibid., p. 861]. The Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction and the ISDR secretariat served as the main mechanisms for the Strategy's implementation by the UN system.

Preliminary findings of the 10-year review, initiated in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 958], of the Yokohama Strategy for a Safer World: Guidelines for Natural Disaster Prevention, Preparedness and Mitigation and its Plan of Action [YUN 1994, p. 851], showed that it remained a powerful guide for disaster risk reduction and that significant progress had been made in some areas, especially in integrating disaster risk management into development sectors. However, progress was still seriously handicapped by a lack of systematic implementation and the progressive increase in risk factors. More systematic approaches and greater commitment by Governments were required to build national and community resilience to natural hazards and to protect lives and livelihoods. Regional and thematic meetings held in 2003 and 2004 in the Asia, Africa, South Pacific and Latin America and Caribbean regions provided inputs relevant to the review and the programme outcome of the 2005 World Conference on Disaster Reduction.

The Inter-Agency Task Force on Disaster Reduction continued to evolve, adapting its programme to current policy requirements and addressing emerging issues, following the recommendations made in the 2003 implementation report [YUN 2003, p. 958]. The aim was to strengthen the Task Force as a global mechanism for devising strategies and policies and enhancing coordination. Priority areas of the 2004 work programme included guidance and assistance on current major policy processes; strengthening disaster risk reduction in Africa; adaptation to climate change and extreme weather events; data on impacts, risk and vulnerability; and urban risk and vulnerability. The ninth meeting of the Task Force (Geneva, 4-5 May) established a working group to provide specific guidance on the substantive work of the Conference.

Through collaborative partnerships and national and local support, the UN system specialized agencies and programmes, regional bodies and civil society organizations made substantial contributions to ISDR implementation in the areas of governance, inter-agency knowledge management, community-based risk reduction and preparedness, science, risk assessment, monitoring and early warning, and the reduction of underlying risk factors. The ISDR secretariat contributed to the two-year review cycle on water, sanitation and human settlements by the Commission on Sustainable Development (see p. 827), resulting in disaster risk being recognized as a cross-cutting issue in those areas. In cooperation with UNDP, it developed a framework setting out the key elements for systematic disaster risk reduction, and was promoting the use of national platforms for advancing the implementation of disaster risk reduction. With support from Germany, the ISDR secretariat made progress in developing the early warning platform recommended by the Second (2003) International Conference in Early Warning [YUN 2003, p. 957]. The revised version of its flagship publication, Living with Risk: a Global Review of Disaster Reduction Initiatives, was launched in July 2004. An institutional internal review of the tripartite arrangement between OCHA, UNDP and the ISDR secretariat was underway. ISDR funding, provided by a small number of donors, remained unpredictable, and insufficient.

The Secretary-General encouraged all parties to contribute to the 2005 World Conference on Disaster Reduction and to the development of a substantive international programme for guiding action and investments. Member States and regional organizations were urged to follow the example of the Assembly of the African Union and the Pacific Forum in developing disaster reduction strategies and programmes to enable all countries to integrate disaster reduction into national development processes. In follow-up to the request made by the General Assembly in resolution 58/215 [YUN 2003, p. 960], the Secretary-General stated that progress had been made in developing linkages between disaster reduction and adaptation to climate change. The initiatives undertaken under the Strategy demonstrated the capacity of ISDR and its secretariat to deal effectively and quickly with emerging and cross-cutting issues. Those efforts should be pursued, particularly within the processes of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (see p. 1051) and the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change.

As requested by the Assembly in resolution 58/214 [YUN 2003, p. 958], the Secretary-General was looking into allocating adequate financial and administrative resources for the effective functioning of the ISDR secretariat. Meanwhile, the international community was encouraged to provide the necessary financial support to the Trust Fund for the Strategy.

World Conference on Disaster Reduction (2005). The Preparatory Committee for the World Conference on Disaster Reduction, to be held in Kobe, Japan, from 18 to 22 January 2005, held its first (Geneva, 6-7 May) [A/CONF.206/PC(II)/6 & Corr.1], and second (Geneva, 11-12 October) [A/CONF.206/PC(II)/10] sessions. The Committee reviewed the procedural and organizational aspects of the Conference preparations and a draft programme outcome document entitled "Building the resilience of nations and communities to disasters: elements for a programme of action", prepared by the ISDR secretariat [A/CONF.206/PC(II)/4]. It also considered a draft review [A/CONF.206/PC(II)/3] of the 1994 Yokohama Strategy and Plan of Action [YUN 1994, p. 851].

The themes of the Conference, corresponding to the major findings of the review of the Yokohama Strategy and its Plan of Action, would be: governance: institutional and policy frameworks for risk reduction; risk identification, assessment, monitoring and early warning; knowledge management and education: building a culture of resilient communities; reducing the underlying risk factors; and preparedness for effective response. The thematic segment would focus on good practices and implementation and would include a regional session for the exchange of experience and lessons learned in different regions. Three high-level round tables would focus on disaster risk: the next development challenge; learning to live with risk; and emerging risks. Governments, civil society organizations, technical and academic institutions and the private sector would disseminate information and present exhibits at a public forum. A conference unit was established within the ISDR secretariat to coordinate preparations. Japan pledged $2.5 million to cover Conference costs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/483/Add.3], adopted resolution 59/231 without vote [agenda item 85 (c)].

International Strategy for Disaster Reduction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/236 of 22 December 1989, 49/22 A of 2 December 1994, 49/22 B of 20 December 1994, 53/185 of 15 December 1998, 54/219 of 22 December 1999, 56/195 of 21 December 2001, 57/256 of 20 December 2002 and 58/214 of 23 December 2003 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1999/63 of 30 July 1999 and 2001/35 of 26 July 2001, and taking into due consideration its resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003 on integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields,

Recalling also the inclusion of the item entitled "Disaster management and vulnerability" in the multi-year programme of work of the Commission on Sustainable Development,

Reiterating that, although natural disasters damage the social and economic infrastructure of all countries, the long-term consequences of natural disasters are especially severe for developing countries and hamper the achievement of their sustainable development,

Recognizing the urgent need to further develop and make use of the existing scientific and technical knowledge to build resilience to natural disasters, and emphasizing the need for developing countries to have access to technology so as to tackle natural disasters effectively,

Expressing its deep concern at the number and scale of natural disasters and their increasing impact within recent years, which have resulted in massive loss of life and long-term negative social, economic and environmental consequences for vulnerable societies throughout the world, in particular in developing countries,

Recognizing the need to continue to develop an understanding of, and to address, socio-economic activities that exacerbate the vulnerability of societies to natural disasters and to build and further strengthen community capability to cope with disaster risks,

Emphasizing that disaster reduction, including reducing vulnerability to natural disasters, is an important element that contributes to the achievement of sustainable development,

Stressing the importance of advancing the implementation of the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development, and its relevant provisions on vulnerability, risk assessment and disaster management,

Noting the ongoing work of all the working groups established by the Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction, namely the Working Group on Climate Change and Disaster Risk Reduction, the Working Group on Disaster Reduction in Africa, the Working Group on Risk, Vulnerability and Disaster Impact Assessment and the Working Group on the World Conference on Disaster Reduction,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction;

2. Invites Governments and relevant international organizations to consider disaster risk assessment as an integral component of development plans and poverty eradication programmes;

3. Welcomes the work of the ongoing preparatory process for the World Conference on Disaster Reduction, to be held in Kobe, Japan, from 18 to 22 January 2005;

4. Notes with appreciation the generous pledge made by the Government of Japan to cover costs of the World Conference, and welcomes the voluntary contributions already made to facilitate the participation of representatives of developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, in that event, and invites those States that have not yet done so to make such voluntary contributions;

5. Reiterates its invitation to Member States, all United Nations bodies and the specialized agencies and other relevant intergovernmental agencies and organizations, in particular the members of the Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction, to participate actively in the World Conference;

6. Encourages major groups, as identified in Agenda 21, to contribute further to and actively participate in the World Conference, according to the rules of procedure agreed upon by its Preparatory Committee;

7. Stresses the importance of close cooperation and coordination between the relevant institutions, in particular within the United Nations system and with other relevant international organizations, in both the preparation of and follow-up to the World Conference, within their mandate and taking into account their comparative advantages and the need to avoid any duplication of work;

8. Also stresses that continued cooperation and coordination among Governments, the United Nations system, other organizations, regional organizations, non-governmental organizations and other partners, as appropriate, are considered essential to address effectively the impact of natural disasters;

9. Recognizes the importance of linking disaster risk management with regional frameworks, as appropriate, such as with the New Partnership for Africa's Development, to address issues of poverty eradication and sustainable development;

10. Also recognizes the importance of integrating a gender perspective as well as of engaging women in the design and implementation of all phases of disaster management, particularly in the disaster reduction stage;

11. Stresses the importance of identifying, assessing and managing risks prior to the occurrence of disasters, for which it is necessary to combine the efforts at all levels of the development, humanitarian, scientific and environmental communities, as well as the importance of integrating disaster reduction, as appropriate, into development plans and poverty eradication programmes;

12. Also stresses the need to foster better understanding and knowledge of the causes of disasters, as well as to build and strengthen coping capacities through, inter alia, the transfer and exchange of experiences and technical knowledge, access to relevant data and information and the strengthening of institutional arrangements, including community-based organizations;

13. Recognizes the importance of early warning as an essential element of disaster reduction, recommends the implementation of the outcome of the Second International Conference on Early Warning, held in Bonn, Germany, from 16 to 18 October 2003, and takes note of further work done in this regard, including the establishment of the Platform for the Promotion of Early Warning in Bonn;

14. Calls upon Governments to establish national platforms or focal points for disaster reduction, encourages the platforms to share relevant information on standards and practices, encourages Governments to strengthen platforms where they already exist, urges the United Nations system to provide appropriate support for those mechanisms, and invites the Secretary-General to strengthen the regional outreach of the inter-agency secretariat for the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction in order to ensure such support;

15. Requests the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs, in his capacity as Chairman of the Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction, to continue reviewing annually the work carried out by its working groups in order to ensure their effective contribution to the attainment of the objectives of the Strategy;

16. Expresses its appreciation to those countries that have provided financial support for the activities of the Strategy by making voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction;

17. Encourages the international community to provide the necessary financial resources to the Trust Fund for the Strategy and to provide the necessary scientific, technical, human and other resources to ensure adequate support for the activities of the inter-agency secretariat for the Strategy and the Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction and its working groups;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to allocate adequate financial and administrative resources, within existing resources, for the effective functioning of the inter-agency secretariat for the Strategy;

19. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, in particular on the outcome of the World Conference on Disaster Reduction, under the item entitled "Sustainable development".

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the Assembly, also on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/483/Add.3], adopted resolution 59/233 without vote [agenda item 85 (c)].

Natural disasters and vulnerability

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision 57/547 of 20 December 2002 and its resolution 58/215 of 23 December 2003,

Taking into account the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development, adopted by the World Summit, held in Johannesburg, South Africa, from 26 August to 4 September 2002,

Recognizing the need to continue to develop an understanding of, and to address, socio-economic activities that exacerbate the vulnerability of societies to natural disasters, to build and further strengthen community capacity to cope with disaster risks and to enhance resilience against hazards associated with disasters,

Noting that the global environment continues to suffer degradation, adding to economic and social vulnerabilities, in particular in developing countries,

Taking into account the various ways and forms in which all countries, in particular the more vulnerable countries, are affected by severe natural hazards such as earthquakes and volcanic eruptions and extreme weather events such as heat waves, severe droughts, floods and storms, and the El Niño/La Niña events, which have global reach,

Recognizing that the impact of natural disasters upon vulnerable countries is, among others, a significant obstacle to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in particular those relating to poverty eradication and environmental sustainability,

Expressing deep concern at the recent increases in the frequency and intensity of extreme weather events and associated natural disasters in some regions of the world and their substantial economic, social and environmental impacts, in particular upon developing countries in those regions,

Taking into account that extreme weather events and associated natural disasters and their reduction must be dealt with in a coherent and effective manner,

Expressing deep concern at the increasing negative impact of severe natural hazards, including earthquakes, extreme weather events and associated natural disasters, which continues to hinder social and economic progress, in particular in developing countries,

Stressing the need to develop and implement risk-reduction strategies, including disaster preparedness, mitigation and early warning systems at all levels, and to integrate them, where appropriate, into national development plans, in particular through the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, so as to enhance the resilience of populations to disasters and reduce the risks to them, their livelihoods, the social and economic infrastructure and environmental resources,

Recognizing that the development of stronger institutions, mechanisms and capacities, including at the community level, that can systematically build resilience to hazards and disasters is essential to reducing the risks and vulnerability of populations to disasters,

Noting the need for international cooperation to increase the capacity of countries to respond to the negative impacts of all natural hazards, including earthquakes, extreme weather events and associated natural disasters, particularly in developing countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, in particular section II, on natural disasters and vulnerability;

2. Urges the international community to continue to address ways and means, including through co-operation and technical assistance, to reduce the adverse effects of natural disasters, including those caused by extreme weather events, in particular in vulnerable developing countries, through the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, and encourages the Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction to continue its work in this regard;

3. Stresses the importance for the World Conference on Disaster Reduction to conclude the review of the Yokohama Strategy for a Safer World: Guidelines for Natural Disaster Prevention, Preparedness and Mitigation and its Plan of Action, with a view to updating the guiding framework on disaster reduction for the twenty-first century, and to identify specific activities aimed at ensuring the implementation of relevant provisions of the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development on vulnerability, risk assessment and disaster management, bearing in mind the vital importance of addressing the adverse effects of natural disasters in efforts to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration;

4. Emphasizes that the World Conference on Disaster Reduction should, within its mandate as set out in General Assembly resolution 58/214 of 23 December 2003, make concrete recommendations to reduce the risks and vulnerabilities of all countries, in particular developing countries, in relation to disasters, including through the provision of technical and financial assistance, as well as through the strengthening of International Strategy for Disaster Reduction national platforms for disaster reduction or the establishment of institutional mechanisms, including at the regional level, where appropriate;

5. Encourages Governments, through their respective International Strategy for Disaster Reduction national platforms and national focal points for disaster reduction, in cooperation with the United Nations system and other stakeholders, to strengthen capacity-building in the most vulnerable regions, to enable them to address the socio-economic factors that increase vulnerability, and to develop measures that will enable them to prepare for and cope with natural disasters, including those associated with earthquakes and extreme weather events, and encourages the international community to provide effective assistance to developing countries in this regard;

6. Also encourages the Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction to continue to enhance the coordination of activities to promote disaster reduction and to make available to the relevant United Nations entities information on options for natural disaster reduction, including severe natural hazards and extreme weather-related disasters and vulnerabilities;

7. Stresses the importance of close cooperation and coordination among Governments, the United Nations system, other organizations, regional organizations, non-governmental organizations and other partners as appropriate, taking into account the need for the development of disaster management strategies, including the effective establishment of early warning systems, where appropriate, while taking advantage of all available resources and expertise for that purpose;

8. Encourages the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and the parties to the Kyoto Protocol to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change to continue to address the adverse effects of climate change, especially in developing countries that are particularly vulnerable, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention, and also encourages the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change to continue to assess the adverse effects of climate change on the socio-economic and natural disaster reduction systems of developing countries;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session on the implementation of the present resolution in a separate section of his report on the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, and decides to consider the issue of natural disasters and vulnerability at that session, under the sub-item entitled "International Strategy for Disaster Reduction" of the item entitled "Sustainable development".

El Niño

In response to General Assembly resolution 57/255 [YUN 2002, p. 930], the Secretary-General, in August [A/59/228], provided information on international cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon—a disruption of the ocean-atmosphere system in the tropical Pacific that had important consequences for weather and climate worldwide.

The international community continued to improve capacities to predict and respond to future events of El Niño and La Niña—the cool phase of the El Niño cycle. Seasonal forecasts of climatic anomalies could be used for disaster management, even when no El Niño or La Niña event was present. The International Research Centre on the El Niño phenomenon in Guayaquil, Ecuador, established in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 961], developed an international board, a fund-raising strategy and specific projects. The Andean Disaster Prevention Programme of the Andean Development Bank was conducting a study to help the Centre structure its organizational basis and links with other initiatives and organizations working in the field of El Niño, in particular in the Andean countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/483/Add.3], adopted resolution 59/232 without vote [agenda item 85 (c)].

International cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/200 of 18 December 1997, 53/185 of 15 December 1998, 54/220 of 22 December 1999, 55/197 of 20 December 2000, 56/194 of 21 December 2001 and 57/255 of 20 December 2002 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1999/46 of 28 July 1999, 1999/63 of 30 July 1999 and 2000/33 of 28 July 2000,

Noting that the El Niño phenomenon has a recurring character and that it can lead to extensive natural hazards with the potential to seriously affect humankind,

Reaffirming the importance of developing strategies at the national, subregional, regional and international levels that aim to prevent, mitigate and repair the damage caused by natural disasters that result from the El Niño phenomenon,

Noting that technological developments and international cooperation have enhanced the capabilities for the prediction of the El Niño phenomenon and thereby the potential for the preventive actions that may be taken to reduce its negative impacts,

Taking into account the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), in particular paragraph 37 (i) thereof,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, in particular the section entitled "International cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon";

2. Welcomes the efforts of the Government of Ecuador, the World Meteorological Organization and the inter-agency secretariat for the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction which led to the establishment of the International Centre for the Study of the El Niño Phenomenon at Guayaquil, Ecuador, and to its opening in February 2003, and encourages those parties to continue their efforts for the advancement of the Centre;

3. Calls upon the Secretary-General and the relevant United Nations organs, funds and programmes, in particular those taking part in the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, encourages the international community to adopt, as appropriate, the necessary measures to support the development of the International Centre for the Study of the El Niño Phenomenon, and invites the international community to provide scientific, technical and financial assistance and cooperation for this purpose, as well as to strengthen, as appropriate, other centres devoted to the study of the El Niño phenomenon;

4. Encourages the Centre to strengthen its links, as appropriate, with national meteorological and hydrological services of the Latin American region, the Permanent Commission for the South Pacific, the Inter-American Institute for Global Change Research and the International Research Institute for Climate Prediction, as well as with other relevant regional and global organizations that study climate, such as the European Centre for Medium-Range Weather Forecasts, the African Centre of Meteorological Applications for Development, the Drought Monitoring Centre and the Asia-Pacific Network for Global Change Research, and other relevant centres, as appropriate, in order to ensure the effective and efficient use of the available resources;

5. Underscores the importance of maintaining the El Niño/Southern Oscillation observation system, continuing research into extreme weather events, improving forecasting skills and developing appropriate policies for reducing the impact of the El Niño phenomenon and other extreme weather events and emphasizes the need to further develop and strengthen these institutional capacities in all countries, in particular in developing countries;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution, under the item entitled "Sustainable development".

Disaster assistance

Bangladesh

Heavy monsoon rains in Bangladesh in late June, combined with torrential flows from India, Nepal, China (Tibet) and Bhutan, and snow melt from the Himalayas led to floods that devastated large areas of Bangladesh in July, affecting 33 million people. Gastro-enteric and other diseases were rife as millions of clean water sources were contaminated and sanitation facilities were disrupted. Hundreds of thousands of homes were completely washed away or damaged, and other buildings, including schools, clinics and small businesses were severely affected. Roads between communities were submerged, as well as over 2,000,000 acres of agricultural land.

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Flash Appeal for Bangladesh, covering the period from August 2004 to January 2005, was launched for the immediate relief and early recovery needs of the poorest and most vulnerable victims of the floods. The Flash Appeal sought $209.9 million, of which 31 per cent ($65 million) was received.

Bolivia

A prolonged drought severely threatened the food security, health and nutritional status of children and adults in the El Chaco region of Bolivia. The cumulative effects of past years and the acute nature of the 2004 drought put the region at risk of a major humanitarian crisis. According to assessments conducted by FAO, UNICEF, WFP and the Government in July and August, the drought affected an estimated 180,000 people, including 26,000 children under five years of age. Food availability was expected to worsen until the next harvest in May 2005.

Following the 5 October declaration by the Bolivian Government of the drought-affected El Chaco region as a national disaster area, the UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Flash Appeal for Bolivia was launched to respond to immediate needs of approximately 55,000 of the most affected population. The Flash Appeal, which covered the period from 1 November 2004 to 31 May 2005, sought $1.8 million; it received 51 per cent ($930,368) of that amount.

Ethiopia

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/24 [YUN 2003, p. 961], the Secretary-General, in his August consolidated report [A/59/293], provided information on humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance to Ethiopia.

Ethiopia continued to be affected by the 2002 drought which caused widespread acute food insecurity by late 2002 and 2003, and required the mobilization of a huge humanitarian effort. Although the rains in 2003 were significantly better than in 2002, resulting in a crop surplus, many pockets of chronic and acute food insecurity remained in Ethiopia, requiring a further appeal for humanitarian assistance in 2004. Consequently, in December 2003, the Government, the United Nations and humanitarian partners appealed for $85 million of non-food assistance and 871,000 tons of food to meet humanitarian needs in 2004 for an estimated 7.2 million people. As at the end of June, the net food requirements were 79.1 per cent funded, with additional pledges under discussion. However, non-food items were only 38 per cent funded.

The Secretary-General stated that the success of the 2003 relief operation in preventing widespread death and suffering was recognized as a major achievement, which was accredited to donor commitment; effective early warning systems; effective coordination at the federal, regional and weredas (district) levels; early response of the Government, which contributed 45,000 metric tons of wheat; and improved logistics capacity. Drought had become a chronic hazard in Ethiopia that was related to the erosion of the natural resource base caused by high population growth, deforestation, desiccation of water resources, insufficient family farming plots and climate change. Recurrent droughts increased the vulnerability of the population.

Group of Eight initiative. The Group of Eight (G-8) countries (Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States), during their 2004 summit (Sea Island, Georgia, United States, 8-10 June), launched an initiative to end famine in the Horn of Africa by improving worldwide emergency assessment; raising agricultural productivity; and helping 5 million people in Ethiopia attain food security by 2009.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/479 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 59/217 without vote [agenda item 39 (b)].

Humanitarian assistance and rehabilitation for Ethiopia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 58/24 of 5 December 2003 on emergency humanitarian assistance to Ethiopia,

Recalling also the initiatives of the Secretary-General to improve food security, including the appointment of the Special Envoy for the Humanitarian Crisis in the Horn of Africa,

Concerned by the recurrent drought, which still affects millions owing to the serious crop failures in drought-prone parts of the country and the pastoralist areas that have weak infrastructures and low development capacities,

Bearing in mind the joint 2005 appeal of the United Nations and the Government of Ethiopia for emergency assistance for Ethiopia, to respond to the food and non-food requirements of households in need so as to prevent the worsening of the current humanitarian crisis,

Noting with serious concern the significant and persistent humanitarian needs in such areas as health, water and acute malnutrition that still exist in parts of the country,

Also noting with serious concern the dire humanitarian situation and its long-term socio-economic and environmental impacts,

Recognizing that the persistent problem of food insecurity is linked to inadequate progress in achieving and sustaining rural growth at levels required to build the household and community assets needed to manage through the various shocks that induce food crises,

Emphasizing the need to address the crisis, bearing in mind the importance of the transition from relief to development, and acknowledging the underlying structural causes of recurrent drought in Ethiopia,

Recognizing that the main responsibility for improving the humanitarian situation and creating conditions for long-term development lies with the Government of Ethiopia, while bearing in mind the important role played by the international community,

Emphasizing the importance of establishing a strong early warning system for both food and non-food needs in order to predict better and respond as early as possible to disasters and to minimize their consequences,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Welcomes the coordinated and collaborative efforts of the Government of Ethiopia, agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system, the donor community, non-governmental organizations and other entities for their timely and generous response to the joint 2004 appeal;

3. Calls upon the international community to respond in a timely manner to the joint 2005 appeal of the United Nations and the Government of Ethiopia for emergency assistance for Ethiopia, covering food and non-food needs;

4. Welcomes the efforts of the Government of Ethiopia, the international community and civil society, including non-governmental organizations, to strengthen mechanisms already in place to respond to such emergency situations, appreciates their endeavours to increase the availability of food through the procurement of local produce and to ensure access of households in need to food, health and water facilities, sanitation, seeds and veterinary services, and strongly encourages the Government of Ethiopia to continue such efforts;

5. Stresses the need to address the underlying causes of food insecurity, and issues of recovery, asset protection and the sustainable development of the affected areas, welcomes in this regard the programme prepared by the Coalition for Food Security in Ethiopia, and encourages the international community to support the Coalition in realizing its main objective, namely, breaking the cycle of food aid dependency within the next three to five years, thereby enabling fifteen million vulnerable people to engage in sustainable productive activities;

6. Welcomes the Group of Eight action plan on ending the cycle of famine in the Horn of Africa, and looks forward to its full implementation;

7. Encourages the Government of Ethiopia to continue to strengthen its efforts to address the underlying structural causes of recurrent threats of drought as part of its overall economic development programme;

8. Calls upon all development partners, in cooperation with the Government of Ethiopia, to integrate relief efforts with recovery, asset protection and long-term development, including the structural and productive options needed to stimulate accelerated rural growth, and to address the underlying causes of recurrent drought in Ethiopia in a way that is, inter alia, in line with the poverty reduction strategy paper, including strategies that are aimed at preventing such crises in the future and that improve the resilience of the population;

9. Welcomes the initiative taken by the Secretary-General in appointing a Special Envoy for the Humanitarian Crisis in the Horn of Africa, with the objective of mobilizing resources to address the root causes of food insecurity as well as the sustainable development of the affected areas;

10. Invites the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to continue its efforts to coordinate and develop a strategic response to recurrent humanitarian needs in Ethiopia and to consider ways to enhance the mobilization of emergency relief assistance to cover the remaining humanitarian needs in Ethiopia;

11. Takes note of the report on evaluation of the response to the 2002-2003 emergency in Ethiopia prepared jointly by the Government of Ethiopia and humanitarian partners, and urges the Government of Ethiopia, donors and all other stakeholders to implement its recommendations;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Grenada

On 7 September, Hurricane Ivan, a category 4 storm, hit Grenada, leaving some 37 people dead, and most of the population of 102,000 affected. Four of the island nation's six parishes—St. Andrew, St. David, St. Georges and St. John—were completely devastated. Approximately 90 per cent of the houses were damaged or destroyed and, according to Government statistics, some 50 per cent of the population were left homeless. Food shortages and distribution were a major challenge. It was estimated that over 60 per cent of employment in the tourism industry was likely lost, and the agriculture sector was decimated.

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Flash Appeal for Grenada, intended to respond to the urgent humanitarian needs and quickly establish the foundation for rehabilitation of social services and economic recovery, sought $27.6 million for the period 1 October 2004 to 31 March 2005, of which 24 per cent ($6.6 million) was received.

Haiti

On 18 September, the passage of Tropical Storm Jeanne brought heavy rains to Haiti and caused violent flash floods in the Artibonite and North West departments of the country, particularly affecting the towns of Gonaïves and Port-de-Paix. According to the Haitian Civil Protection Directorate, 1,514 people died as a result of the floods, 952 were missing and 2,600 were injured. The total number of people affected was estimated at 298,926.

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Haiti Floods Flash Appeal sought $37.4 million for emergency relief and the early recovery needs of the Haitian people affected by the floods, of which 47 per cent ($17.5 million) was received.

Iran

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Flash Appeal for Iran sought $32.7 million to address the relief, recovery and immediate rehabilitation requirements in the Bam region of Iran, which, on 26 December 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 962], was struck by an earthquake measuring 6.5 on the Richter scale, killing more than 30,000 people and rendering more than 75,000 homeless. Of the total amount required, 56 per cent ($18.4 million) was received.

Kenya

In 2004, drought-like conditions hit arid and semi-arid areas in Kenya, while erratic rainfall patterns caused crop failure on a massive scale in some of the fertile areas. Maize stocks in some areas of the country were contaminated with Aflatoxin, a toxin created by grain mold. Food shortages and the fear of famine resulted in abnormal grain price increases, which in turn had a negative impact on trade for vulnerable populations and on food security in general. Up to 2.3 million people were extremely food-insecure and in need of emergency relief assistance, including 1.8 million requiring general food distribution and 0.5 million school children, for whom assistance under the school feeding programme was required.

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Flash Appeal for Kenya sought $83.2 million covering the period from August 2004 to February 2005. Of that amount, 57 per cent ($47.4 million) was received.

Madagascar

Between 26 January and 4 February, tropical cyclone Elita hit Madagascar several times, leaving 29 people dead, 100 injured and 44,190 homeless. On 7 March, the intense tropical cyclone Gafilo hit the country killing 74 people. Of the estimated 774,000 people affected, 309,500 were in need of relief supplies.

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Flash Appeal for Madagascar sought $15.7 million to cover the period 19 March to 19 June. It received 47 per cent ($7.4 million) of the required amount.

The Philippines

During a three-week period in November and December, landslides and flash floods resulting from four consecutive typhoons and tropical storms caused widespread destruction in the Philippines, particularly on the eastern coast of the main island of Luzon. As at 13 December, the Government reported 1,060 dead, 1,023 injured and 559 missing. Houses, infrastructure, and crops were wiped out. The Government, with the assistance of the international community, mounted an immediate relief operation. Continued relief assistance was needed, and emergency rehabilitation activities required immediate support to restore life-sustaining services.

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Flash Appeal for the Philippines sought $6.4 million to meet the relief and emergency rehabilitation needs of the most vulnerable for the period from mid-December 2004 to mid-March 2005. Of the required amount, 23 per cent ($1.5 million) was received.

Indian Ocean tsunami

On 26 December, an earthquake off the coast of Indonesia registering 9.0 on the Richter scale created a massive tsunami, which struck Indonesia, Thailand, Sri Lanka, the Maldives, and the western coast of Africa in Somalia and Kenya. The earthquake and tsunami caused unprecedented destruction in terms of scale and geographic distribution, primarily affecting poor coastal communities in 12 countries. An estimated 240,000 people died and over 1 million were displaced. OCHA, working with Government officials, organized relief through coordinated sectoral working groups, created databases and websites to manage information, facilitated contributions to relief projects and resolved bottlenecks at major ports and hubs. It deployed four UN Disaster Assessment and Coordination (UNDAC) teams to Indonesia, the Maldives, Sri Lanka and Thailand, the most severely affected States, to liaise with Government authorities, organize inter-agency assessments and jump-start sectoral coordination meetings. OCHA established the Tsunami Task Force and chaired Inter-Agency Standing Committee (IASC) Tsunami Task Force video conferences between New York and Geneva.

Chapter IV

International trade, finance and transport

In 2004, international trade continued to grow, with the volume of world merchandise trade increasing markedly by an estimated 10.5 per cent, from 6.2 per cent in 2003. As manufacturing gathered pace and domestic demand improved in more economies, the brisk economic environment further raised the prices of commodities and manufactures, resulting in a nearly 19 per cent increase in the dollar value of global trade, to $8.6 trillion. Although developed countries, particularly North American States and Japan, accounted for much of the growth, many developing countries and economies in transition also experienced remarkable trade performance.

In June, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) held its eleventh session, UNCTAD XI, in São Paulo, Brazil. The Conference concluded with the adoption of The Spirit of São Paulo, a declaration by which member States reaffirmed their commitment to support UNCTAD in fulfilling its mandate as the UN focal point for the integrated treatment of trade and development and for improving the coherence of the international monetary, financial and trading systems in order to respond better to development needs. The Conference also adopted the São Paulo Consensus, a policy statement and analysis confirming the 2000 Plan of Action adopted by UNCTAD X, as the guide to the future work of UNCTAD. The General Assembly stressed the need to implement the Consensus, and invited UNCTAD to analyse the role of enterprise development in alleviating poverty in the least developed countries.

Unprecedented diplomatic efforts during the year enabled the resumption of multilateral trade negotiations under the Doha (Qatar) work programme adopted at the 2001 World Trade Organization (WTO) Ministerial Conference. The talks culminated on 1 August in the adoption by the WTO General Council of a decision setting out frameworks for future negotiations in the areas of agriculture, non-agricultural market access, development issues, services and trade facilitation.

In April, the high-level meeting between the Economic and Social Council and the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund) discussed coherence, coordination and cooperation in the context of the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, adopted at the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development. Also during the year, a study commissioned by the United Nations proposed innovative sources of financing for development.

The Trade and Development Board, the governing body of UNCTAD, adopted agreed conclusions on the review of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010 and recommended that the outcomes of UNCTAD XI be considered when allocating resources to the Programme for the 2006-2007 biennium. The Board adopted further agreed conclusions on economic development in Africa: issues relating to Africa's debt sustainability, and a decision on the review of UNCTAD technical cooperation activities.

UNCTAD XI

The eleventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, designated UNCTAD XI, was held in São Paulo, Brazil, from 13 to 18 June [TD/412], in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 1995(XIX) [YUN 1964, p. 210] and 57/235 [YUN 2002, p. 934]. Attended by 155 States and the Permanent Observer of Palestine, UN system bodies and numerous inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations, the Conference had as its theme "Enhancing coherence between national development strategies and global economic processes towards economic growth and development, particularly of developing countries". The focus on coherence was examined under four sub-themes: development strategies in a globalizing world economy; building productive capacity and international competitiveness; assuring development gains from the international trading system and trade negotiations; and partnership for development.

The Conference established a Committee of the Whole to consider and report on specific substantive items referred to it, and the draft negotiated text and annex for the Conference [TD/L.368 & Add.1], prepared and approved by the Trade and Development Board (TDB), acting as the Preparatory Committee for the Conference (see p. 956). The main Conference events were a high-level panel (13 June) on creative industries and development [TD/L.379]; a high-level segment (14 June) on the new geography of trade: South-South cooperation in an increasingly interdependent world [TD/404]; and a high-level round table (14 June) on trade and poverty [TD/L.384]. Parallel meetings included a civil society forum and a series of interactive thematic sessions on topics related to the Conference sub-themes. The Committee of Participants of the Global System of Trade Preferences (GSTP) among Developing Countries, at a special ministerial-level session (16 June), launched the third round of GSTP negotiations.

Declaration and Consensus

The Conference [TD/412] concluded on 18 June with the adoption of The Spirit of São Paulo, a political declaration by which UNCTAD member States affirmed their continuing commitment to support UNCTAD in fulfilling its mandate as the focal point within the United Nations for the integrated treatment of trade and development and to joint efforts towards the attainment of the international development goals set forth in previously adopted instruments and initiatives, including the United Nations Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49]. They further committed themselves to eradicating poverty and hunger, and to improving coherence among the international monetary, financial and trading systems in order to respond better to development needs, giving utmost attention to the plight of the least developed countries (LDCs).

Also adopted was the São Paulo Consensus, an analytical, policy action and programmatic statement, which reaffirmed the two-part Plan of Action (Bangkok Plan of Action) adopted at UNCTAD X [YUN 2000, p. 891] as the continuing guide to UNCTAD's future work, and described UNCTAD XI as an opportunity to identify new trade and development issues. Its overarching goal was to generate greater understanding of the interface and coherence between international processes and negotiations on the one hand, and development strategies and policies that developing countries needed to pursue on the other. Under each of the four Conference sub-themes, the Consensus identified problems, formulated appropriate national and international responses and specified actions to be undertaken by UNCTAD.

Regarding the first sub-theme on development strategies in a globalizing world economy, the Consensus noted that the central challenge was how globalization could improve living standards for all people. In that regard, UNCTAD should maintain its role of delivering policy analysis and identifying policy options at the global and national levels and of examining and analysing, through the annual report on LDCs (see p. 857), the causes of decline in their share of world trade and the linkages among trade, growth and poverty reduction, with a view to identifying long-term solutions.

As to the second sub-theme on building productive capacities and international competitiveness, the Consensus noted that an enabling international environment was essential for developing countries and economies in transition to integrate successfully into the world economy and stressed the need to harness domestic resources for investment in productive capacity and technological upgrading, to be complemented by external capital flows, particularly in LDCs. UNCTAD was to assist developing countries to design and implement policies in that regard.

Addressing the third sub-theme on assuring development gains from the international trading system and trade negotiations, the Consensus pointed to the dependence of over 50 developing countries on exports of three or fewer commodities for more than half of their export earnings, and to the decline and instability of world commodity prices and consequent terms-of-trade losses that had reduced economic growth in many of those countries and had increased poverty and indebtedness. UNCTAD was to build on and strengthen the implementation of the Bangkok Plan of Action through measures to assist developing countries to integrate trade and development concerns into their national development plans and poverty reduction strategies.

Regarding the fourth sub-theme on partnership for development, the Consensus noted that efforts to meet the challenges and opportunities of globalization could benefit from enhanced cooperation among all relevant partners, including developing countries from all geographic regions. Noting the specific partnerships launched at the Conference—in information and communication technology (ICT) for development, commodities, investment and capacity-building, and training (the UNCTAD Virtual Institute on Trade and Development)—the Consensus called on TDB to review the implementation of partnerships annually for their funding and continued relevance. The Conference report [TD/412] contained information on UNCTAD XI multi-stakeholder partnership activities to be built around the objective of “ICT applications for improving the economic competitiveness of developing countries”, and on future partnerships in the other fields named above.

Annexed to the report were: a ministerial declaration on the occasion of the fortieth anniversary of the Group of 77; a declaration by the parliamentary meeting on the occasion of UNCTAD XI; a declaration of the LDC ministerial meeting; a ministerial communiqué of landlocked developing countries; and the Civil Society Forum declaration. In addition, the report contained two resolutions (below) and statements of position on the outcome of the Conference.

Other action. On 18 June, the Conference adopted two resolutions: one expressing gratitude to the Government and people of Brazil for hosting the Conference [res. 177(XI)] and the other approving the Credentials Committee report [res. 178(XI)].

The Conference called on TDB to conduct in 2006 a mid-term review of the implementation of the Bangkok Plan of Action and the São Paulo Consensus, based on the framework established by General Assembly resolution 58/269 [YUN 2003, p. 1395].

Preparatory process

At the twenty-first special session (Geneva, 14 May) of TDB [A/59/15] (see below), its President, acting also as Chairman of the UNCTAD XI Preparatory Committee, reported on the results of the Committee's work on the draft negotiated text for the Conference [TD/L.368 & Add.1], which TDB transmitted to the Conference following amendments to the text.

UNCTAD XI follow-up

At its fifty-first session (Geneva, 4-5 October [A/59/15]), TDB discussed the follow-up to UNCTAD XI: new developments in international economic relations. Before it were UNCTAD secretariat background notes on the new geography of international trade [TD/404] and on international economic relations [TD/B/51/6]. It considered three key interlinked determinants shaping the new trade geography: the developing countries' increasing role to drive trade and growth; the vigorous growth of South-South trade and economic cooperation; and the changing context of North-South interdependence and terms of engagement. Other matters considered concerned: policy options and complementary measures by the North for enhancing South-South trade; official development assistance flows to help build supply capacity and competitiveness; policy space; corporate responsibility; and the restrictive impact of security-related measures on the ability of developing countries to trade in goods and services.

UNCTAD, in its continuing analysis and interpretation of the evolving new trade geography from a development standpoint, was encouraged to take a disaggregated view of differential performance and to further elaborate strategic approaches to enhancing South-South trade; a challenge would be to determine whether current developments portended a decisive or qualitative change in the economic situation of the South. UNCTAD was to examine the impact of the multiplicity of free trade agreements on North-to-South investment flows, contribute to confidence-building between developed and developing countries, and play a complementary role in technical assistance.

In resolution 59/245 (see p. 861), the General Assembly stressed the need to implement the São Paulo Consensus and, in that regard, to pursue actively the examination of and responses to issues relating to the trade of small vulnerable economies to facilitate their full integration into the multilateral trading system. In resolution 59/244 (see p. 857), the Assembly welcomed the UNCTAD XI decision to examine the causes of the decline in the share of LDCs in world trade and invited UNCTAD to analyse the role that enterprise development could play in alleviating poverty in LDCs and to recommend measures to develop their private sector.

International trade

The Trade and Development Report, 2004 [Sales No. E.04.II.D.29] stated that global trade increased significantly in 2003, after sluggish growth in 2002 and a slight contraction in 2001. Import volumes rose by 6 per cent and export volumes by 4.9 per cent (compared to increases of 2.7 per cent and 2.6 per cent, respectively, in 2002). The growth rate in 2003 was characterized by a surge in the unit value of both manufactures and commodities, due mainly to the depreciation of the United States dollar vis-à-vis other major currencies. The origins of most global exports shifted in 2003 from developed to developing countries, with the latter accounting for 66 per cent of the increase in the volume of world exports, while developed countries accounted for about 21 per cent and transition economies for some 12 per cent. The shift was attributable to sluggish exports in most developed countries and the rapid expansion of export volumes in the developing regions of East and South Asia and in the transition economies of Central and Eastern Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS).

The contribution of developed and developing countries to the growth of world imports by volume was more balanced, at about 40 per cent and 50 per cent, respectively. In Western Europe, the low growth of export volumes was due to faltering domestic demand within the region. In the United States, where both exports and imports were affected by the economic downturn in 2001 and the global slowdown of growth, relative recovery could not contain a widening trade deficit equivalent to 5 per cent of gross domestic product (GDP). Japan's trade surplus continued to grow as its import volumes picked up following the yen's appreciation and improved domestic economic conditions. In the developing economies, East and South Asia experienced rapid growth of both imports and exports, continuing their strong growth trend of recent years. In Africa, both exports and imports rose by almost 8 per cent each in volume, and by 22 per cent and 17 per cent in value, respectively. Much of the export expansion came from a few oil exporters (Algeria, Angola, Egypt, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Nigeria), which accounted for approximately 60 per cent of the growth in regional export value. In Latin America, trade continued to recover from its downturn of 2001 and 2002, although the situation differed by country and subregion. In transition economies, both imports and exports expanded by 27 per cent at current values. For the Central and Eastern European countries that acceded to the European Union (EU) in May 2004, expectations from accession generated additional trade flows between them and the EU.

According to the World Economic and Social Survey 2004 [Sales No. E.04.II.C.1], after a tentative beginning brought about by the build-up of tensions over Iraq and the outbreak of severe acute respiratory syndrome, international trade resumed its recovery. Growth in the volume of world trade more than doubled to almost 6 per cent in real terms in 2003, with developing countries accounting for most of the increase. It was even higher in nominal terms (almost 15 per cent), owing to the depreciation of the United States dollar, a factor partly responsible for increases in the international prices of many commodities, notably the surge in the price of oil.

The World Economic Situation and Prospects 2005 [Sales No. E.05.II.C.2], jointly issued by UNCTAD and the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA), stated that, in 2004, international merchandise trade grew markedly at an estimated 10.5 per cent (up from 6.2 per cent in 2003), reflecting the cyclical strength of the global economic recovery, as manufacturing picked up pace in the first half of the year and domestic demand improved in more economies. The brisk global economic environment further raised the prices of commodities and, to a lesser extent, of manufactures, leading to an increase in the dollar value of global trade of almost 19 per cent, to $8.6 trillion.

Much of the growth originated in developed countries, supported by their faster economic growth, particularly in North America and Japan, and the continued expansion of China's economy. After a lull in United States exports around mid-year, largely due to a slowdown in some Asian economies and a deceleration in ICT exports, its exports rebounded in the last quarter, and the annual growth of real exports for the year was about 10 per cent. Exports from Canada rebounded from a 2003 decline in volume terms. In the EU, strong external demand offset the decrease in competitiveness stemming from the euro's appreciation since 2000. Despite some slowdown during the second half of 2004, real export growth in the region accelerated to an estimated 6.9 per cent (from 1.5 per cent in 2003). EU import demand also accelerated, boosted in part by the appreciation of the euro and an increase in investment spending. Japan continued to experience an exceptionally strong real export growth, which reached over 15 per cent in the first half of 2004 before decelerating in the third quarter to an annual rate of 1.5 per cent. Australia and New Zealand both achieved import growth of over 10 per cent due to robust domestic demand, as well as export recovery, despite a continuing trade deficit in both of about 5 per cent of GDP.

The surge in world commodity prices, particularly oil and gas, and the upturn in the global economy boosted the value of exports of resource-rich CIS countries. In the Russian Federation, real export growth was estimated at 10 per cent, led by oil and gas, ferrous and non-ferrous metals and chemicals. Meanwhile, robust domestic demand and exchange-rate appreciation led to fast import growth.

Developing economies also maintained a remarkable trade performance; Africa's exports continued to grow, although at a slower pace than in 2003. In East Asia, merchandise trade expanded by over 18 per cent in real terms, with merchandise exports driven by the positive global economic environment and strong demand from China. In South Asia, the larger countries recorded double-digit growth of both exports and imports. Western Asia's exports grew by 6.7 per cent, driven by increased oil production by the region's oil-exporting countries. Non-fuel exports also expanded due to strong performances by Israel, Jordan and Turkey. In Latin America and the Caribbean, trade gained strength as both exports and imports experienced a broad-based recovery.

Multilateral trading system

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 58/197 [YUN 2003, p. 968], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/59/305] on international trade and development, prepared in collaboration with UNCTAD. The report reviewed recent trends in international trade, the outcome of UNCTAD XI (see p. 955), developments in the multilateral trading system in the context of the WTO trade negotiations under the Doha work programme and developments in regional trade arrangements, a major component of the evolving international trading system. The decision adopted by the WTO General Council on 1 August was also examined (see below).

The report noted several positive trends in developing countries, among them the trend towards diversification, indicated by the fact that manufactures currently represented nearly three quarters of their exports. Growth in the share of the South in world trade, currently at 30 per cent, signalled the emergence of a trade geography in which developing countries were increasingly important to the trade of developed countries, especially the United States and Japan. South-South trade, which accounted for just over one tenth of total world trade, was growing significantly: over 40 per cent of developing-country exports were destined for other developing countries and trade among them was increasing at the rate of 11 per cent a year; trade in services was also on the rise. That transformation was further underlined by intraregional and interregional investment, transfer of technology and enterprise-level interaction. Perhaps the most important trend was the continuing rise of oil prices, which was largely due to the economic recovery and increasing demand from such countries as the United States, China and some newly industrialized countries.

The report noted that, during the past decade, a major development in the expansion of regional trade agreements was the emergence of such agreements between North and South. The challenge to developing countries in that regard was to design the appropriate degree and pacing of regional liberalization and to retain policy space and differential treatment.

The report concluded that the positive outcomes of UNCTAD XI and recent developments in WTO negotiations underscored the shared interests of the international community in advancing multilateral trade negotiations under the Doha work programme and in identifying practical inputs for achieving the MDGs, the objectives of the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development [YUN 2002,

p. 953] and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development [ibid., p. 821].

Negotiating frameworks

As noted in the Secretary-General's August report [A/59/305], unprecedented diplomatic efforts were mounted to resume the multilateral trade negotiations under the Doha work programme that were stalled at the WTO Fifth Ministerial Conference [YUN 2003, p. 1535]. Negotiations resumed in July, culminating in the WTO General Council's adoption, on 1 August, of a decision setting out frameworks for a future negotiating package in five core areas: agriculture, market access of non-agricultural products, services, development issues and trade facilitation (improving the movement, release and clearance of goods, including goods in transit).

The General Council reiterated calls for completing the review of the WTO provisions on all categories of special and differential treatment in favour of developing countries, agreed that special attention would be given to their specific trade and development-related needs, and affirmed that developing countries and low-income countries in transition should be provided with enhanced trade-related technical assistance and capacity-building. It also extended the moratorium on imposing customs duties on electronic transmissions until the WTO conference in 2005.

The General Council reaffirmed the commitment to progress in the negotiating areas of rules, trade and environment; trade-related aspects of intellectual property rights; and dispute settlement. It agreed that the decision and its annexes should not be used in any dispute settlement proceeding under the WTO Dispute Settlement Understanding or for interpreting existing WTO agreements. It further agreed to continue the Doha round of negotiations beyond the January 2005 time frame set in the Doha declaration [YUN 2001, p. 1432], leading to the Sixth Ministerial Conference, scheduled for December 2005.

UNCTAD consideration. TDB, in October [A/59/15], discussed UNCTAD secretariat background notes on developments and issues in the post-Doha work programme of particular concern to developing countries from a post-UNCTAD XI perspective [TD/B/51/4], and on assuring development gains from trade negotiations with respect to the implications of the termination on 31 December 2004 of the Agreement on Textiles and Clothing (ATC) [TD/B/51/CRP.1].

The President noted that a fundamental lesson of the most recent trade negotiations was that negotiators had to ensure that WTO agreements addressed the trade-related concerns of its members, and that they had to place the development needs of developing countries at the heart of the Doha work programme if the current round of multilateral trade negotiations was to conclude successfully. While it might prove impossible to conclude negotiations by the time of the Sixth Ministerial Conference in December 2005, the prospects were good for their conclusion by 2006. Addressing development issues required a concerted effort by all parties to incorporate special and differential treatment in all areas of negotiations and to address implementation-related issues and concerns; it would also require finding appropriate solutions to specific trade and development needs. It was particularly important that the multilateral trading system be sensitive to the special needs of LDCs, small island developing States, and landlocked and transit developing countries. The specific trade and development concerns of commodity-dependent countries needed to be addressed, as they remained marginalized in international trade.

Also noted were: the recommendations and modalities of the 1 August decision for negotiations on trade in services and on trade facilitation; the complete phase-out effective 1 January 2005 of the quotas in the textile and clothing sector as required by ATC; negotiations on WTO rules; and accelerating the accession of all developing countries and transition economies to WTO.

In pointing to the mutually supportive relationship between the UNCTAD and WTO processes, the President encouraged both organizations to strengthen their cooperation to assist countries to derive development gains from related agreements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/59/481/Add.1], adopted resolution 59/221 by recorded vote (166-2-6) [agenda item 83 (a)].

International trade and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 56/178 of 21 December 2001, 57/235 of 20 December 2002 and 58/197 of 23 December 2003 on international trade and development,

Recalling also the provisions of the United Nations Millennium Declaration pertaining to trade and related development issues, as well as the outcomes of the International Conference on Financing for Development, held in Monterrey, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002 and the World Summit on Sustainable Development, held in Johannesburg, South Africa, from 26 August to 4 September 2002,

Noting the Ministerial Declaration and decisions adopted at the Fourth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization, held in Doha from 9 to 14 November 2001, and the full commitment of all members of the World Trade Organization to give effect to them, in accordance with the decision of 1 August 2004 of the General Council of the World Trade Organization,

Reaffirming the role of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development as focal point within the United Nations for the integrated treatment of trade and development and the interrelated issues in the areas of finance, technology, investment and sustainable development,

Recalling its resolutions 57/250 of 20 December 2002 and 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, in which it invited the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, as well as the Trade and Development Board, to contribute, within its mandate, to the implementation and to the review of the progress made in the implementation of the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits and invited the President of the Trade and Development Board to present the outcomes of such reviews to the Economic and Social Council,

Recalling also that, to benefit fully from trade, which in many cases is the single most important external source of development financing, the establishment and the enhancement of appropriate institutions and policies in developing countries, as well as in countries with economies in transition, are needed and that, in this context, enhanced market access, balanced rules and well-targeted, sustainably financed technical assistance and capacity-building programmes for developing countries also play an important role,

Noting the significant contribution of the multilateral trading system to economic growth, development and employment and the importance of maintaining the process of reform and liberalization of trade policies, as well as the importance of rejecting the use of protectionism, so that the system plays its full part in promoting recovery, growth and development, in particular of developing countries, bearing in mind paragraph 10 of General Assembly resolution 55/182 of 20 December 2000,

Reaffirming that agriculture remains a key sector for the overwhelming majority of developing countries, and stressing the importance of the successful conclusion of the World Trade Organization Doha work programme in accordance with the decision of 1 August 2004 of the General Council of the World Trade Organization,

Reaffirming also the urgency, subject to national legislation, of recognizing the rights of local and indigenous communities that are holders of traditional knowledge, innovations and practices and, with the approval and involvement of the holders of such knowledge, innovations and practices, of developing and implementing benefit-sharing mechanisms on mutually agreed terms for the use of such knowledge, innovations and practices,

Recalling that it is particularly important for developing countries, bearing in mind development goals and objectives, that all countries take into account the need for an appropriate balance between national policy space and international disciplines and commitments,

Bearing in mind the special needs of the least developed countries, the small island developing States and the landlocked developing countries, as identified, respectively, in the Brussels Programme of Action and the Barbados Programme of Action and within a new global framework for transit transport cooperation for landlocked and transit developing countries as set out in the Almaty Programme of Action,

Noting with concern that a number of developing countries, in particular the least developed countries and commodity-dependent developing countries, have not fully benefited from the global economy and trade liberalization,

Recognizing that countries must take appropriate and necessary security measures, but also underlining the importance of taking these measures in the manner that is least disruptive of normal trade and related practices,

Taking note of the review undertaken by the Trade and Development Board at its fifty-first session of developments and issues in the post-Doha work programme of particular concern to developing countries following the eleventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and its contribution to an understanding of the actions required to help developing countries integrate, in a beneficial and meaningful manner, into the multilateral trading system and the global economy and to achieve a balanced, development-oriented and successful conclusion of the Doha negotiations,

Taking note also of the report of the Trade and Development Board and the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Recognizes that a universal, rule-based, open, non-discriminatory and equitable multilateral trading system, as well as meaningful trade liberalization, can substantially stimulate development worldwide, benefiting countries at all stages of development, thereby promoting economic growth and sustainable development necessary to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration;

2. Reaffirms the value of multilateralism to the global trading system, and in this regard welcomes the progress achieved in the Doha work programme, with the adoption by the General Council of the World Trade Organization of its decision of 1 August 2004 on frameworks for further negotiations, which re-energizes the Doha round of the multilateral trade negotiations and recommit the members of the World Trade Organization to fulfilling the development dimension of the Doha work programme;

3. Welcomes the eleventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held in São Paulo, Brazil, from 13 to 18 June 2004, and the adoption of The Spirit of São Paulo and the São Paulo Consensus, which, building upon the Plan of Action adopted at its tenth session, held in Bangkok from 12 to 19 February 2000, reaffirm the continued commitment of the international community to supporting the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in fulfilling its mandate in consensus-building, research and policy analysis, and in technical assistance on trade and development;

4. Welcomes also the commitment made at the Fourth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade

Organization, held in Doha from 9 to 14 November 2001, and in the decision of 1 August 2004 of the General Council of the World Trade Organization, to place development at the heart of the Doha work programme and to continue to make positive efforts to ensure that developing countries, especially the least developed among them, secure a share in the growth of world trade commensurate with the needs of their economic development;

5. Reaffirms that all countries have a shared interest in the success of the Doha work programme, which aims both at further increasing trading opportunities and reducing barriers to trade among nations and at making the trading system more development-friendly, which would contribute to the objective of upholding and safeguarding an open, equitable, rule-based, predictable and non-discriminatory multilateral trading system, and recalls that a major contribution of the Doha Ministerial Declaration was to place the needs and interests of developing countries at the heart of the Doha work programme and that this important objective needs to be pursued with a view to bringing about concrete development-oriented outcomes from the multilateral trade negotiations;

6. Looks forward to the early development of the frameworks outlined in the decision of 1 August 2004 of the General Council of the World Trade Organization, in an inclusive and transparent manner, into concrete, detailed and specific modalities for the early and successful conclusion of the negotiations, while ensuring balance and parallel progress within and between areas under negotiation bearing in mind the needs and concerns of developing countries, and ensuring a fair and development-oriented outcome of the Doha work programme based on a broad agenda, including enhanced market access, balanced rules and well-targeted, sustainably financed technical assistance and capacity-building programmes;

7. Recognizes, in regard to the decision of 1 August 2004 of the General Council of the World Trade Organization and consistent with the Doha work programme, the following issues of particular interest and concern to developing countries:

(a) Reviewing special and differential treatment provisions with a view to making them more precise, effective and operational and, in this regard, expeditiously completing the review of the outstanding agreement-specific proposals and cross-cutting issues, and finding appropriate solutions to outstanding implementation issues, by July 2005, as provided for in paragraph 1 (d) of the decision;

(b) The elaboration of modalities under the framework on agriculture, as contained in annex A to the decision, for negotiations, in accordance with paragraph 13 of the Doha Ministerial Declaration, noting that reforms in all three pillars of market access, domestic support and export competition form an interconnected whole and must be approached in a balanced and equitable manner with operationally effective and meaningful special and differential treatment for developing countries, and recalling that agriculture is of critical importance to the economic development of developing country members of the World Trade Organization, particularly to the least developed countries and the net food-importing developing countries, and that they must be able to pursue agricultural policies that are supportive of their development goals, poverty reduction strategies and food security and livelihood concerns, and that non-trade concerns will be taken into account;

(c) Implementing concretely the commitment to address cotton issues ambitiously, expeditiously and specifically within the agriculture negotiations, as provided for in annex A to the decision;

(d) The elaboration of modalities on market access for non-agricultural products pursuant to annex B to the decision, with the aim of reducing or, as appropriate, eliminating tariffs, including the reduction or elimination of tariff peaks, high tariffs and tariff escalation, as well as non-tariff barriers, in particular on products of export interest to developing countries, with a comprehensive product coverage and without a priori exclusions, and recalling also the importance of special and differential treatment and less than full reciprocity in reduction commitments for developing countries as integral parts of the modalities;

(e) Negotiations on trade in services, as provided for in annex C to the decision, with a view to providing effective market access to all members of the World Trade Organization; in order to ensure a substantive outcome, members shall strive to ensure a high quality of offers by May 2005, particularly in sectors and modes of supply of export interest to developing countries, giving special attention to the least developed countries, and aiming to achieve progressively higher levels of liberalization with no a priori exclusion of any service sector or mode of supply; special attention shall be given to sectors and modes of supply of export interest to developing countries, noting the interest of developing countries, as well as other members, in mode 4;

(f) Enhancing trade-related technical assistance and capacity-building to increase the effective participation of developing countries in the negotiations, to facilitate their implementation of World Trade Organization rules and to enable them to adjust and diversify their economies;

(g) Advancing the negotiations aimed at clarifying and improving disciplines under the agreements in the areas of anti-dumping, subsidies and countervailing measures, while preserving the basic concepts, principles and effectiveness of those agreements, taking into account the needs of developing countries, in accordance with paragraph 1 (f) of the decision;

(h) Advancing negotiations under the review of the dispute settlement understanding, in accordance with paragraph 1 (f) of the decision;

(i) Negotiations on trade facilitation, the results of which should take fully into account the principle of special and differential treatment for developing and least developed countries, in accordance with annex D to the decision;

8. Reaffirms the importance of market access, and in this context recalls the importance of respect for World Trade Organization disciplines, including in the area of anti-dumping, inter alia, to avoid the abusive application of anti-dumping and other trade-distorting measures;

9. Reaffirms also the importance of the full implementation of the Agreement on Textiles and Clothing of the World Trade Organization, which provides for the complete phase-out of the quotas on textiles and clothing by 31 December 2004;

10. Reaffirms further the importance of the development dimension of the Agreement on Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights;

11. Invites all members of the World Trade Organization to effectively implement the decision adopted by the General Council of the World Trade Organization on 30 August 2003 on the implementation of paragraph 6 of the Doha Declaration on the Agreement on Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights and Public Health to address the problems faced by countries with insufficient or no manufacturing capacity in the pharmaceutical sector in accessing medicines at affordable prices when combating serious public health problems afflicting many developing and least developed countries, especially those resulting from HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, malaria and other epidemics, and, as agreed by the World Trade Organization Council for Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights on 16 June 2004, to expeditiously establish a permanent solution by amending the Agreement on Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights on the basis of the recommendations by the Council to be presented by March 2005;

12. Invites the World Intellectual Property Organization to continue further its development activities and to continue to cooperate with relevant international organizations;

13. Stresses that the adoption or enforcement of any measures necessary to protect human, animal or plant life or health should not be applied in a manner that would constitute arbitrary or unjustified discrimination or a disguised restriction on international trade, while recognizing the rights of members of the World Trade Organization to determine their own appropriate level of sanitary and phyto-sanitary protection in accordance with World Trade Organization rules, and recognizes the need to facilitate the increased participation of the developing countries in the work of relevant international standard-setting organizations as well as the importance of providing financial and technical assistance and capacity-building efforts to enable them to respond adequately to the introduction of any new measures;

14. Emphasizes that issues related to trade, debt and finance and transfer of technology duly covered in the Doha work programme should be addressed as a high priority in accordance with the Doha work programme and the World Trade Organization General Council decision of 1 August 2004;

15. Recalls the commitment of the members of the World Trade Organization, in line with the Doha mandates, to progress in the areas of rules, trade and environment, and trade-related aspects of intellectual property rights, as stated in the World Trade Organization General Council decision of 1 August 2004;

16. Stresses the importance of an open, transparent, inclusive and democratic process and of procedures for the effective functioning of the multilateral trading system that allow for internal transparency and the effective participation of members, including in the decision-making process, and that enable them to have their vital interests duly reflected in the outcome of trade negotiations;

17. Also stresses the importance of facilitating the accession of all developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, as well as countries with economies in transition, that apply for membership in the World Trade Organization, consistent with its criteria, bearing in mind paragraph 21 of resolution 55/182 and subsequent developments, and calls for the effective and faithful application of the World Trade Organization guidelines on accession of the least developed countries;

18. Invites members of the international community to consider the interests of non-members of the World Trade Organization in the context of trade liberalization;

19. Emphasizes that bilateral and regional trade arrangements should complement the goals of the multilateral trading system, and in this context stresses the importance of clarifying and improving disciplines and procedures under the existing provisions of the World Trade Organization applying to regional trade agreements in accordance with paragraph 29 of the Doha Ministerial Declaration, taking into account the developmental aspects of regional trade agreements, and urges the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in accordance with its mandate, to provide technical inputs in this respect;

20. Notes with appreciation the autonomous steps taken by some countries in providing trade-related assistance and by simplifying administrative procedures to facilitate access to their markets for exports from developing countries;

21. Reaffirms the commitments made at the Fourth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization, and at the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Brussels from 14 to 20 May 2001, in this regard calls upon developed countries that have not already done so to work towards the objective of duty-free, quota-free market access for all least developed country exports, and notes that the consideration of proposals for developing countries to contribute to improved market access for the least developed countries would also be helpful;

22. Welcomes the commitment to actively pursue the work programme of the World Trade Organization with respect to addressing the trade-related issues and concerns affecting the fuller integration of countries with small, vulnerable economies into the multilateral trading system in a manner commensurate with their special circumstances and in support of their efforts towards sustainable development, in accordance with paragraph 35 of the Doha Ministerial Declaration;

23. Recognizes the special problems and needs of the landlocked developing countries within a new global framework for transit transport cooperation for landlocked and transit developing countries, in this regard calls for the full and effective implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action, and stresses the need for the implementation of the São Paulo Consensus, adopted on 18 June 2004 at the eleventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in São Paulo, Brazil, in particular paragraphs 66 and 84 thereof, by the relevant international organizations and donors in a multi-stakeholder approach;

24. Recognizes also the importance of addressing seriously the concerns of commodity-dependent developing countries, owing to the continuing volatility of world commodity prices and other factors, and of supporting the efforts of such countries to restructure, diversify and strengthen the competitiveness of their commodity sectors, and in this regard notes the formation of an international task force on commodities by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

25. Emphasizes the importance of addressing the concerns of a number of developing countries in respect of the erosion of preferences and the impact of liberalization on their tariff revenues;

26. Stresses the importance of enhancing South-South trade and cooperation in the context of an emerging new trade geography that complements North-South trade and cooperation, and takes note of the decision, adopted in June 2004, to launch the third round of negotiations on the Global System of Trade Preferences among Developing Countries;

27. Recognizes that it is important for developing countries and countries with economies in transition to consider reducing trade barriers among themselves;

28. Expresses its concern about the adoption of a number of unilateral actions that are not consistent with the rules of the World Trade Organization, harm the exports of all countries, in particular those of developing countries, and have a considerable bearing on the ongoing World Trade Organization negotiations and on the achievement and further enhancement of the development dimension of the trade negotiations;

29. Emphasizes the importance of developing human, institutional, regulatory and research and development capacities and infrastructures aimed at enhanced supply-side capacity and competitiveness, as well as ensuring a conducive international environment for the full and effective integration of developing countries and countries with economies in transition into the international trading system;

30. Stresses the importance of strengthening and enabling the trade, investment and business environments through the adoption of appropriate domestic measures and conditions to encourage local, regional and international investment and efforts to prevent and dismantle anti-competitive practices and promote responsibility and accountability of corporate actors at both the international and the national levels, thereby enabling developing countries' producers, enterprises and consumers to take advantage of trade liberalization, and encourages developing countries to consider establishing competition laws and frameworks best suited to their development needs, complemented by technical and financial assistance for capacity-building, taking fully into account national policy objectives and capacity constraints;

31. Notes that the outcome documents of the eleventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development emphasized the importance for all countries of enhancing coherence between national development strategies and global economic processes towards economic growth and development, in particular of developing countries, and, in that context, reinforced the consensus that trade is a means to growth and development and that the international trading system and trade negotiations should facilitate development gains;

32. Also notes the important and unique mandate of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, which was reaffirmed at its eleventh session, and supports the continued work of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in support of the effective and beneficial integration of developing countries and countries with economies in transition into the global economy in cooperation with relevant international organizations;

33. Invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in accordance with its mandate, to monitor and assess the evolution of the international trading system and of trends in international trade from a development perspective, and in particular to analyse issues of concern to developing countries and countries with economies in transition, supporting them in the formulation, implementation and review of national trade and trade-related policies and options with a view to maximizing their share of world trade;

34. Reiterates the importance of supporting the programmes and technical cooperation and capacity-building activities of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development that assist developing countries, especially the least developed countries and countries with economies in transition, in international trade and trade negotiations, in particular in support of their participation in the Doha work programme, including the Integrated Framework for Trade-related Technical Assistance to Least Developed Countries and the Joint Integrated Technical Assistance Programme;

35. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to report to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session on the implementation of the present resolution and on developments in the multilateral trading system under the sub-item entitled "International trade and development".

Trade policy

Trade in goods and services, and commodities

The Commission on Trade in Goods and Services, and Commodities, at its eighth session (Geneva, 9-13 February) [TD/B/COM.1/67 & Corr.1], had before it the following: a note by the UNCTAD secretariat on access, market entry and competitiveness [TD/B/COM.1/65]; the report of the Expert Meeting on Market Entry Conditions Affecting Competitiveness and Exports of Goods and Services of Developing Countries: Large Distribution Networks, Taking into Account the Special Needs of LDCs [YUN 2003, p. 973]; an UNCTAD secretariat note on trade in services and development implications [TD/B/COM.1/62]; the report of the Expert Meeting on Market Access Issues in Mode 4 (Movement of Natural Persons to Supply Services) and Effective Implementation of Article IV on Increasing the Participation of Developing Countries [YUN 2003, p. 973]; an UNCTAD secretariat note on trade, environment and development [TD/B/COM.1/63]; the report of the Expert Meeting on Definitions and Dimensions of Environmental Goods and Services in Trade and Development [YUN 2003, p. 972]; and a progress report on the implementation of agreed conclusions and recommendations of the Commission, including the post-Doha follow-up [TD/B/COM.1/61].

In agreed recommendations adopted on 13 February, the Commission underscored the significance of interrelationships among market access, market entry and competitiveness in shaping the pace and scope of gains accruing to developing countries from international trade and trade negotiations, and emphasized the importance of UNCTAD's work in that regard.

The Commission recommended that UNCTAD continue its development-oriented policy analysis, confidence and consensus building, exchange of experience and information, and capacity development activities, focusing on, among other issues, market entry and market access conditions facing developing-country exports, including commodities; examine tariff and non-tariff barriers, including technical barriers and other market entry conditions that obstructed international trade, with special attention to those affecting developing-country exports; continue its work on factors shaping developing countries' competitiveness; and deepen its work on preferences, South-South trade (including GSTP among developing countries) and the interface between regional and global trade agreements and processes, together with their implications for trade and development.

The Commission further recommended that UNCTAD continue to enhance its work on international commodity markets, policies and measures to improve the contribution of the commodity sector to development, focusing on: the relationship between poverty reduction and commodity production and trade; enhancing the competitiveness of the commodity sector in developing countries; the strategic positioning of developing-country producers in value chains; diversifying the commodity sector in developing countries towards activities generating higher development gains; further work on the concentration of commodity distribution chains and their impact on commodity sectors; and financing and risk management mechanisms for commodity sector development. UNCTAD was to maintain its role in building effective partnerships among relevant stakeholders to find viable solutions to commodity problems. It was also to contribute to greater coherence between policies on poverty reduction, trade, commodities and financial flows; support development-oriented follow-up to the Doha work programme; promote implementation of the United Nations Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49]; and maintain technical assistance to developing countries on their accession to WTO. UNCTAD should contribute to assuring development gains to developing countries accruing from international trade and trade negotiations in: the assessment of trade in services; sector-specific studies of interest to developing countries; identifying opportunities in new and dynamic services sectors and through outsourcing; assisting developing countries in implementing the General Agreement on Trade in Services (GATS); analysing approaches to further commitments in GATS Mode 4; identifying opportunities for integrating developing countries into regional trade arrangements; enhancing analytical work on cross-cutting issues of special interest to them; and analysing the economic implications of security measures on trade in services.

At its thirty-fourth executive session (Geneva, 10 March) [A/59/15], TDB took note of the Commission's report and endorsed its recommendations.

Subsidiary body. During the year, the Expert Meeting on Financing Commodity-Based Trade and Development: Innovative Financing Mechanisms was held (Geneva, 16-17 November) [TD/B/COM.1/EM.24/3]. Before it was an UNCTAD report providing an overview of innovative mechanisms for agricultural finance [TD/B/COM.1/EM.24/2]. The Meeting proceeded from the premise that lack of financing was a major impediment to the development of the agriculture sector in developing countries and that available finance was provided mostly to larger borrowers to the exclusion of the majority of small producers from the formal credit system.

Noting the integration of farmers, processors and traders in the national or global supply chain, the experts felt that financiers could use that chain to strengthen their financing mechanisms by providing credits to farmers, processors, service and infrastructure providers on the basis not of their individual credit risk but of their position in the supply chain. The experts viewed the supply chain approach as the safest way to provide pre-harvest finance; after harvest, warehouse receipt finance and collateral management could provide solutions.

Other potential financing mechanisms discussed called for a credit framework to provide farmers credit cards or passbooks with credit lines based on the size of their holdings; a joint venture (a corporative) between farmers and banks, with the banks providing management expertise, research and development, extension services and marketing support; and linking farmers directly to the capital market through their country's commodity exchange for their agricultural crops, livestock and poultry.

The experts called on the private sector to take the lead in designing agricultural financing products; on UNCTAD to enhance its support across the board, targeting Governments, banks, agricultural borrowers and other key players; and on donors and international agencies to support those activities to enable UNCTAD to respond better to requests for assistance from developing countries, especially from LDCs.

Interdependence and global economic issues

TDB in October [A/59/15] considered interdependence and global economic issues from a trade and development perspective: policy coherence, development strategies and integration into the world economy. Participants agreed that, while increased interdependence could benefit the global economy, a simultaneous slowdown in the United States and Asia, if not counterbalanced by growth in other major economic centres, would seriously threaten global growth. Recent developments in the world oil market had illustrated the negative reverberations that actions or events in one country could have in a highly interdependent world economy. The economic and social transformations unleashed by globalization were a major challenge for many developing countries, which were not always capable of handling their consequences. While improvements in national governance were important to remedy the situation, current global rules could reduce developing countries' options to manage liberalization and integration processes effectively.

Multilateral and domestic policy solutions were thus required to make the trading environment truly supportive of rapid development. A comprehensive approach in that regard should be people-centred, respect the need for adequate economic policy space at the national level, and comprise good governance of globalization with inclusive and transparent structures of international economic decision-making. The Trade and Development Report 2004 (see p. 957) provided useful data, analyses and ideas regarding the interplay among trade, monetary and financial factors shaping trade performance. However, a collective approach was needed to foster coherence among those factors. TDB stated that UNCTAD could contribute to the debate towards that end and, in addition to examining successful strategies in certain parts of the world, should also present alternative scenarios, including possible action by the international community.

Trade promotion and facilitation

In 2004, UN bodies maintained assistance to developing countries and transition economies in promoting their exports and facilitating their integration into the multilateral trading system. The main originator of technical cooperation projects in that area was the International Trade Centre, under the joint sponsorship of UNCTAD and WTO.

International Trade Centre

In 2004, the UNCTAD/WTO International Trade Centre (ITC) increased its delivery of technical assistance by 5 per cent to $21.1 million, from $20.1 million in 2003 [ITC/AG(XXXVIII)/202]. Between 2000 and 2004, total delivery rose by 82 per cent.

In addition to providing assistance to 133 countries, ITC established new strategic alliances and programmes so as to contribute better to the achievement of the MDGs, refining business processes, and servicing inspection and evaluation activities. Against the background of global trade growth and resumed trade negotiations under the Doha work programme, the need for supply-side responses became more critical to ensure that benefits from growth in global trade did not bypass developing countries. In that context, ITC focused on providing small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) with comprehensive business support services, including targeted business information; access to analytical and operational tools; and training in identifying market opportunities, adapting products and services to demand and developing capabilities for converting business opportunities into actual trade.

ITC focused its activities on its five corporate goals. Under the first goal, facilitating the integration of enterprises into the multilateral trading system, ITC increased its field activities in 67 countries and provided specific country-level assistance on WTO agreements and initiatives, promoted business advocacy, held interactive workshops on a number of trade topics, and conducted business analyses for the textile and clothing industry.

On the second goal, supporting the design of trade development strategies, although significant results were achieved at the national level, ITC attempted to ensure that its tools and back-stopping capacities were adequate to meet the high demand in that area. However, national capacities needed to be improved and capacity-building integrated into ITC country-level programmes.

As to the third goal, strengthening key trade support services (both public and private), ITC helped trade support institutions (TSIs) deliver high-quality services; TSIs in over 100 countries benefited from ITC partnerships. The challenge for ITC was to provide the TSI community with locally adaptable capacity-building tools and services in a timely and efficient manner to enable it to be proactive in its response to quickly changing business requirements.

Under the fourth goal, improving sector performance, ITC provided product sector-specific assistance to 27 LDCs and assisted 17 others in the area of services. New export opportunities were created through buyers-sellers meetings in nine product areas, including publishing and printing, pharmaceuticals, leather and the aid procurement market across Africa. Those meetings resulted in new business worth more than $22 million for over 500 SME exporters from 66 countries.

With regard to the fifth goal, building enterprise competitiveness, ITC delivered 80 projects to improve the competitiveness of SMEs through access to key information, human, financial and network resources. Its programmes helped companies to identify and realize market opportunities in growing markets, such as herbal medicines, cosmetics, tourism, services and creative industries. Over 1,300 SMEs in 20 services subsectors benefited from a direct training programme held in 17 countries.

In 2004, its fortieth anniversary year, ITC consolidated its achievements in terms of rapid delivery, established the basis for better attaining its goals and sharpened its vision for the future.

JAG action. The ITC Joint Advisory Group (JAG), at its thirty-seventh session (Geneva, 26-30 April) [ITC/AG(XXXVII)/200], considered the reports of ITC on its 2003 activities [YUN 2003, p. 974] and on its technical cooperation projects in 2003 [ITC/AG(XXXVII)/197/Add.1,2], the report of the Consultative Committee of the ITC Global Trust Fund [ITC/AG(XXXVII)/198] and the ITC proposed strategic framework for the 2006-2007 biennium [ITC/AG(XXXVII)/199].

The Group endorsed the overall orientation of ITC, encouraged it to continue its activities in accordance with the 2006-2007 proposed strategic framework and welcomed its focus on human and institutional trade capacity-building. Noting that ITC had increased its delivery target by a further 20 per cent in 2004 and maintained double-digit growth in its 2004-2006 Business Plan, the Group expressed concern over the implications that such an ambitious growth rate might have for the quality of ITC field assistance; in that regard, it endorsed the principle of growth through intensification rather than diversification of activity. It also endorsed ITC's unique approach to supporting national, sectoral and enterprise competitiveness through specialized, practical technical assistance targeting SMEs and TSIs servicing them.

In terms of the value of the enterprise-level programme in support of South-South trade, the Group encouraged ITC to expand the programme within the region to cover additional sectors and to include cross-regional trade. It urged ITC to pay increased attention to the supply-side aspects of competitiveness, particularly regarding product adaptation and development issues, and recommended that it broaden its focus to include future industries and subsectors of untapped potential. It encouraged ITC to be proactive in consolidating partnerships with multilateral and bilateral organizations and in pursuing new technical relationships with specialized technical organizations. The Group endorsed ITC's focus on the needs of the business sector and individual SMEs and recommended that it expand its field activities under both its Export-led Poverty Reduction Programme and projects funded under the Integrated Framework for Trade-related Technical Assistance to LDCs Trust Fund. Concerned about the falling share of ITC field support to LDCs, particularly those in Africa, and to Arab, Eastern European and CIS countries, the Group encouraged ITC to increase its development activities on behalf of all stakeholders.

Pledges of trust fund contributions to ITC were announced by Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, India, Norway, Switzerland, United Kingdom and the United States.

In October [A/59/15], TDB took note of JAG's report on its thirty-seventh session.

ITC administrative arrangements

OIOS report. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/244 [YUN 1999, p. 1274], the Secretary-General transmitted an August report [A/59/229] of the Office of Internal Oversight

Services (OIOS) on the inspection of ITC's programme management and administrative practices. The inspection, which focused on assessing the efficiency and effectiveness of ITC's operations, examined programme planning and delivery, and arrangements for monitoring and evaluating programme implementation and for managing financial and human resources.

OIOS found that ITC had successfully established its niche and strengthened its comparative advantages in enhancing the capacity of the business community in developing countries and in countries with economies in transition, especially of their SMEs, for successful participation in international trade. Its services to beneficiaries were relevant and of high quality and its contribution to trade development was increasingly recognized by member States. The inspection highlighted good practices, such as the Global Trust Fund, established in 1995 for financing multi-donor, multi-country and multi-year projects. For many countries, the Fund was the sole source of funding for ITC assistance, and OIOS believed it was an effective mechanism, ensuring adequate operational flexibility in the use of technical cooperation resources while maintaining control by recipient and donor countries over the parameters of their use. Other good practices included the projects portal, an online database designed to improve project monitoring and evaluation; the Senior Management Committee, which played a key role in directing ITC activities; and the effective use of information technology.

OIOS ascertained that ITC products and services, in respect of product and market development, trade support services, and information and promotion met the needs of clients and were considered of high quality. Nonetheless, enhanced horizontal communication and strengthened interdivisional and intersectional cooperation in project development and implementation would further increase the value of ITC activities to developing and transition economies. While acknowledging ITC's success in expanding and intensifying its specialized trade-related technical assistance, OIOS recommended measures to further enhance programme performance monitoring and reporting, increase internal cohesion and strengthen human resources management.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly decision 57/572 [YUN 2002, p. 942], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/59/405] on the ITC administrative arrangements. Prepared in consultation with WTO and ITC, the report made recommendations to simplify those arrangements and adapt them to recent changes in the budgetary processes of the ITC parent organizations: in the case of the United Nations, the replacement of the four-year medium-term plan by a biennium-based strategic framework; and at WTO, the replacement of the annual budget, in force until the end of 2003, by a biennium budget cycle coinciding with that of the United Nations.

Instead of the budget outline required under the current administrative arrangements, ITC would submit a simplified fascicle to both the UN General Assembly and the WTO General Council for them to take note of, with a full proposal to be submitted for decision by both in the fall. The ITC 2006-2007 strategic framework, in the UN format, would be reviewed by JAG in the spring of the first year of a financial period. The amended framework would be submitted to the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC). The JAG report would be submitted for review to TDB and the WTO Committee on Trade and Development. The CPC-approved version of the framework would be sent to WTO for information. ITC should continue to prepare two budget fascicles with the same financial and substantive information in different formats, and endeavour to harmonize the two fascicles in consultation with the UN and WTO secretariats.

Annexed to the report was a detailed time line of the current and proposed simplified procedures for the review of the ITC proposed budget by the United Nations and WTO.

In October [A/59/543], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) recommended that the Assembly take note of the Secretary-General's report and endorse its recommendations.

In resolution 59/276 of 23 December (see p. 1383), the Assembly took note of the report of the Secretary-General and of the related ACABQ report. It also took note of the OIOS report (see p. 966) and requested the Secretary-General to ensure the expeditious implementation of its recommendations.

Enterprise, business facilitation and development

The Commission on Enterprise, Business Facilitation and Development, at its eighth session (Geneva, 12-15 January) [TD/B/COM.3/64], had before it UNCTAD secretariat documents on policy options for strengthening SME competitiveness [TD/B/COM.3/58 & Corr.1]; efficient transport and trade facilitation to improve developing countries' participation in international trade [TD/B/COM.3/60]; e-commerce and ICT for development: selected issues [TD/B/COM.3/62]; a progress report [TD/B/COM.3/63] on the implementation of the Commission's 2003 agreed recommendations [YUN 2003, p. 976]; the report of the 2003 Expert

Meeting on Policies and Programmes for Technology Development and Mastery, including the Role of Foreign Direct Investment [TD/B/COM.3/56]; and a number of other 2003 expert meeting reports [YUN 2003, p. 977].

The Commission requested the UNCTAD secretariat to continue its policy analysis, technical assistance and capacity development to enhance the export competitiveness of SMEs.

On efficient transport and trade facilitation, it asked UNCTAD to continue implementing the Commission's 2003 recommendations related to the topic with respect to: analysing developments, transferring technological and managerial capabilities and examining their implications for developing countries; providing guidance and assistance to those countries on ICT use; analysing the impact of security measures; cooperating with other intergovernmental organizations engaged in the development of international legal instruments affecting international transport and trade facilitation, disseminating information on their implications for developing countries and providing negotiating assistance with regard to ongoing work related to the Doha work programme; and analysing trade facilitation developments, with particular attention to the Almaty Plan of Action [YUN 2003, p. 875] and to identifying the related needs and priorities of developing countries.

Recommendations on electronic commerce for development called for UNCTAD research on and policy-oriented analysis of the economic implications for developing countries of ICT trends and business applications, and for the dissemination of information on international discussions of the technological, commercial, legal and/or financial aspects of ICT, e-business and e-commerce. UNCTAD was asked to assist developing countries in building their capacity to formulate and implement the economic components of their national e-strategies for development; to be actively involved in the implementation of the Action Plan and follow-up to the Declaration of Principles adopted at the first phase of the World Summit on the Information Society [ibid., p. 857]; to continue its work in the statistical measurement of ICT use by enterprises and households and to contribute to the establishment of a set of internationally comparable ICT statistical indicators designed for monitoring progress between the first and second phases of the Summit; and to continue to provide a forum for the discussion of ICT-related policy issues relevant to economic development, facilitate the exchange of experiences in the economic applications of ICT and ensure inclusion of the development dimension in international discussions on such matters.

In March [A/59/15], TDB took note of the Commission's report and endorsed its recommendations.

Subsidiary bodies. A number of expert meetings were held in Geneva during the year. The Expert Meeting on Free and Open-Source Software: Policy and Development Implications (22-24 September) [TD/B/COM.3/EM.21/3] had before it an UNCTAD secretariat paper on the subject [TD/B/COM.3/EM.21/2]. The meeting discussed the question of free and open-source software (FOSS) from a public and ICT-for-development policy perspective and advanced the notion that it promoted digital inclusion and provided a good foundation for an ICT software industry, as future programmers could learn from the best source code by freely inspecting, modifying and including it in their own work. The experts were fully reassured that a number of prominent global ICT industry players had embraced some or all of the principles and processes of FOSS and that any doubts about its suitability for economic activities were unfounded. However, the UN system and UNCTAD needed to address it further from many other perspectives. UNCTAD, in particular, would pursue the implementation of an ICT-for-development partnership so as to promote human-capacity development and awareness-building with regard to FOSS.

The Expert Meeting on the Design and Implementation of Transit Transport Arrangements (24-26 November) [TD/B/COM.3/EM.22/3] had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note on the subject [TD/B/COM.3/EM.22/2]. The meeting discussed the constraints confronting countries depending on transit trade, notably the landlocked countries, that increased the logistics costs of their international trade. Those constraints related to border and customs procedures, different sets of administrative regimes and commercial practices of transit countries, poor and inadequate transit infrastructure, insufficient use of information systems, and commercial risks from broken container seals and aged fleets.

Transit arrangements aimed at diminishing those constraints needed to take account of new developments, such as the recent trade facilitation negotiations regarding articles V (free transit of goods), VIII (trade fees and formalities) and X (transparency of information about trade regulations) of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade; the customs transit regime known as the Transport International Routier applicable to intermodal containerized transport, whereby goods could not be removed without leaving traces or breaking customs seals; the Automated System for Customs Data whose transit module included forgery-proof electronic documents, electronic signature and registration of all transactions; and new security and trade facilitation initiatives in the form of cargo tracking based on radio frequency identification devices and smart and secure trade lanes.

In order to develop effective solutions to transit trade, the meeting called for national and regional cooperation in the planning, organization and administration of transit transport arrangements; appropriate coordination mechanisms; and international community support.

The Expert Meeting on Promoting the Export Competitiveness of SMEs (8-10 December) [TD/B/COM.3/EM.23/3] had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note on the subject [TD/B/COM.3/EM.23/2]. The meeting examined different patterns of internationalizing SMEs through exports and discussed policies and measures that could help to strengthen their export competitiveness in developing countries. Special attention was devoted to possible link-ups with transnational corporations (TNCs), perceived as a way for SMEs to solve their traditional problem of access to the critical resources of finance, technology, managerial skills and new markets. While reaffirming the important role of Governments in enhancing the productive capacity of SMEs, the sustainability of government interventions emerged as a common concern among the experts. Difficulties in creating and strengthening the domestic supplier base were noted, and it was argued that, while TNCs could play a role in upgrading technological capabilities, their interests were not always in alignment with those of host countries. National policies were therefore important for solving and preventing problems that could arise from that conflict of interests.

Commodities

The UNCTAD/DESA report World Economic Situation and Prospects 2005 [Sales No. E.05.II.C.2] stated that, due mainly to the global economic recovery, particularly the rapidly increasing demand in Asia, notably China, and the concurrent depreciation of the United States dollar, prices of non-oil commodities rose by an average of 10 per cent in 2004, continuing the upward trend that had emerged in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 977]. That did not, however, offset the setback recorded for 1980-2002, when prices fell by 40 per cent. At the end of 2004, for example, the price index for all food products remained almost 20 per cent below the average for 1995. Developing countries exporting agricultural commodities thus continued to face prices that were low by historical standards. Oil prices also increased and remained volatile throughout 2004, driven by a strong demand in a context of low and declining inventories and limited spare capacity, an unsettled security situation, speculative movements and natural disasters that disrupted production in the Gulf of Mexico. Despite some slowdown in the second quarter of the year, world oil demand increased by 3.3 per cent to 81.8 million barrels a day, the fastest growth rate and the largest absolute increase since 1977.

Report of Secretary-General. In keeping with General Assembly resolution 57/236 [YUN 2002, p. 945], the Secretary-General, in an August report [A/59/304], provided an overview of world commodity trends and prospects and discussed converting opportunities for increased commodity exports into development and poverty reduction. The report addressed progress in implementing Assembly resolution 58/204 on commodities [YUN 2003, p. 978], which called for actions by Governments and international financial institutions to continue assessing the effectiveness of the systems for compensatory financing of export-earnings shortfalls, by the Secretary-General to undertake open discussions on enhancing the impact of existing instruments to support efforts of commodity-dependent developing countries to diversify their exports, and by UNCTAD and other relevant UN system bodies to strengthen their capacity-building and technical cooperation activities.

The report concluded that, in the past several decades, commodities had not been an engine of growth; however, with an expected demand increase resulting from rapid growth, especially in developing countries, prospects might improve and lead to increased commodity exports from those countries. For the resultant benefits to be shared equitably and to reach the poorest developing countries and their poorest population segments, national and international policies and action were required. At the national level, productivity needed to be improved, especially in LDCs and African countries, through such measures as improved extension services, the rational use of inputs and adoption of better yielding plant varieties and better farming practices. Improvements in the quality of products and quality control were also necessary; the role of Governments in that regard was to establish an enabling environment for producers, processors and traders.

At the international level, the international trading system needed to be reformed so as to offer substantially improved opportunities to developing-country agricultural exporters. Also needed were financial and technical assistance to support developing countries' efforts to participate more effectively in international commodity trade, and international support to mitigate the consequences of price instability through user-friendly and operational approaches to schemes intended to address earnings shortfalls.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/481/Add.4], adopted resolution 59/224 without vote [agenda item 83 (d)].

Commodities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 57/236 of 20 December 2002 and 58/204 of 23 December 2003, and stressing the urgent need to ensure their full implementation,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration adopted by Heads of State and Government on 8 September 2000,

Taking note of the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development,

Taking note also of the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development,

Taking note further of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010 and the Least Developed Countries Report, 2004,

Recalling the Doha work programme adopted at the Fourth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization, on 14 November 2001, and welcoming the decision adopted in this context by the General Council of the World Trade Organization on 1 August 2004,

Taking note of the São Paulo Consensus adopted at the eleventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, particularly the paragraphs relating to commodities,

Taking note also of the report of the Trade and Development Board on its fifty-first session,

Recognizing that commodity prices are an important element for heavily indebted poor countries that are dependent on commodities for maintaining long-term debt sustainability,

Taking note of the targets set out in the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the Plan of Action of the World Food Summit and the outcome document of the World Food Summit: five years later, which reaffirms the pledge to end hunger and poverty,

Recognizing that structural changes in international commodity markets, particularly the increasing concentration in trade and distribution, constitute new challenges for small farmers, commodity producers and exporters in developing countries,

Expressing its concern about the difficulties experienced by the developing countries in financing and implementing viable diversification programmes, which are essential for sustainable development and for attaining access to markets for their commodities,

1. Takes note of the report of Secretary-General on world commodity trends and prospects, including the fact that while prices have improved for some commodities, the real prices of others remain on a declining trend;

2. Recognizes that many developing countries are highly dependent on primary commodities as their principal source of export revenues, employment, income generation and domestic savings and as the driving force of investment, economic growth and social development;

3. Reiterates the importance of maximizing the contribution of the commodity sector to sustained economic growth and sustainable development, while continuing diversification efforts in commodity-dependent developing countries;

4. Emphasizes the need for efforts by the developing countries that are heavily dependent on primary commodities to continue to promote a domestic policy and an institutional environment that encourage diversification and liberalization of the trade and export sectors and enhance competitiveness;

5. Reaffirms that each country has primary responsibility for its own economic and social development, and recognizes that an effective enabling environment at the national and international levels entails, inter alia, a sound macroeconomic framework, competitive markets, clearly defined property rights, an attractive investment climate, good governance, an absence of corruption and well-designed regulatory policies that protect the public interest and generate public confidence in market operations;

6. Encourages developing countries, with the necessary support of donor countries and the international community, to formulate specific commodity policies so as to contribute to the facilitation of trade expansion, the reduction of vulnerability and the improvement of livelihood and food security, by:

(a) Creating an enabling environment that encourages the participation of rural producers and small farmers;

(b) Continuing the diversification of the commodity sector and enhancing its competitiveness in developing countries that are heavily dependent on commodities;

(c) Increasing technology development and improving information systems, institutions and human resources;

7. Notes that the supply capacity and adaptability of many countries is constrained by weak institutional and technical capacity, and invites the international community to support commodity-dependent developing countries in addressing the loss of competitiveness and negative commodity production and trade trends and in taking the measures necessary to improve livelihoods and food security in commodity-dependent developing countries by supporting the design and implementation of commodity chain strategies, and welcomes initiatives taken in this regard;

8. Emphasizes the importance of official development assistance for agriculture and rural development, and invites developing countries to prioritize agriculture and rural development in their national development strategies and programmes, inter alia, in the New Partnership for Africa's Development, and in this regard invites developed countries and the donor community to further reinforce their assistance to those sectors in developing countries by providing financial and technical support for activities aimed at addressing commodity issues, particularly the needs and problems of commodity-dependent developing countries;

9. Welcomes the decision taken by members of the World Trade Organization on 1 August 2004, and stresses the importance of a successful conclusion of the Doha work programme;

10. Reiterates the importance of expanded South-South trade and investment in commodities;

11. Recalls the potential of regional integration and cooperation to improve the effectiveness of traditional commodity sectors and support diversification efforts;

12. Calls upon developed countries that have not already done so to work towards the objective of providing duty-free and quota-free market access for all least developed country products, and encourages developing countries in a position to do so to contribute to improved market access for the least developed countries;

13. Recognizes that developed countries account for two thirds of world non-fuel commodity imports, and expresses the urgent need for supportive international policies and measures to improve the functioning of the commodity markets through efficient and transparent price-formation mechanisms, including commodity exchanges, and through the use of viable and effective commodity price risk-management instruments;

14. Also recognizes that market exigencies can constitute formidable challenges to developing country commodity producers and exporters, in particular small farmers, and urges both developing and developed countries to take appropriate steps to enable those producers to enter global supply chains and to facilitate their effective participation in supply chains, and invites the private sector to promote partnerships that contribute to the effective participation of small producers in supply chains;

15. Encourages the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and other relevant international organizations, within their respective mandates, to enhance their efforts to facilitate access to market-based instruments, with prudential oversight for managing commodity risks due to price fluctuation and natural disasters, so as to address the commodity problems in developing countries;

16. Regrets that schemes to mitigate earnings shortfalls have not reached the originally envisaged goals, and urges Governments and invites international financial organizations to continue to assess the effectiveness, including the operationalization and user-friendliness, of the systems for compensatory financing of shortfalls in export earnings, and in this regard stresses the importance of empowering developing country commodity producers to insure themselves against risk, including natural disasters;

17. Reiterates the role of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in addressing commodities issues in a comprehensive way in accordance with relevant General Assembly resolutions and the provisions of the São Paulo Consensus, and in this regard invites development partners to provide the resources required to enable the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to undertake those activities;

18. Notes with concern that the real prices of some commodities are still on a declining trend, and requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, within their respective mandates, to explore appropriate ways of addressing this problem and identifying best practices for dealing with persistent oversupply situations;

19. Calls upon the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to continue to work, in cooperation with all interested stakeholders, including donor countries and organizations, for the effective operation of the International Task Force on Commodities launched at the eleventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and invites interested parties to provide voluntary financial support for its effective operation;

20. Underlines the need to strengthen the Common Fund for Commodities, and encourages it, in cooperation with the International Trade Centre UNCTAD/WTO, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other relevant bodies, to continue to strengthen the activities covered by its Second Account in developing countries with its supply chain concept of improving access to markets and reliability of supply, enhancing diversification and addition of value, improving the competitiveness of commodities, strengthening the market chain, improving market structures, broadening the export base and ensuring the effective participation of all stakeholders;

21. Invites all relevant stakeholders, including the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the Common Fund for Commodities and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, within their respective mandates, and other donors to intensify their support for the financing of commodity diversification, focusing on developing private sector capacity, strengthening market institutions, developing strong producer associations for commodities with a proper role for producers, including women and small farmers, developing key infrastructure and stimulating investments;

22. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in collaboration with the Secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to report on the implementation of the present resolution and on world commodity trends and prospects to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session;

23. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-first session, under the item entitled "Macroeconomic policy questions", the sub-item entitled "Commodities".

Individual commodities

Timber. The United Nations Conference for the Negotiation of a Successor Agreement to the International Tropical Timber Agreement, 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 887] reconvened in 2004 (Geneva, 26-30 July). It had before it proposals prepared by the Chairperson and Vice-Chairperson of the Preparatory Committee [TD/TIMBER.3/4] and an UNCTAD secretariat note containing a review of related work of the International Tropical Timber Organization [TD/TIMBER.3/3]. The Conference adopted a resolution [TD/TIMBER.3/L.2] requesting the UNCTAD Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Executive Director of the International Tropical Timber Organization, to prepare the working document resulting from the current Conference session, to maintain contact with producing and consuming countries with a view to assisting the Conference in reaching a successful conclusion, and to make arrangements to reconvene the Conference from 14 to 18 February 2005.

As requested, UNCTAD, in October [TD/TIMBER.3/L.3], presented the working document resulting from the July Conference session. During the year, Mexico acceded to the Agreement, bringing the number of parties to 60. The signatories numbered 49.

Olive oil and table olives. The International Olive Oil Council (29 November-2 December) extended, with effect from 1 January 2005, the International Agreement on Olive Oil and Table Olives, 1986, as amended and extended, 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 760], until 31 December 2005. It also extended until 30 June 2005 the time limit for depositing the instrument of accession by Turkey. In 2004, Iran acceded to the Agreement, bringing the total number of parties to 16.

Sugar. As at 31 December, the International Sugar Agreement, 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 625] had 22 signatories and 49 parties. During the year, the International Sugar Council (29 November) extended until 31 December 2005 the time limit for the deposit by signatories of their instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval.

Coffee. As at 31 December, the International Coffee Agreement 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 880] had 35 signatories and 60 parties. During the year, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Greece, Paraguay, Venezuela and Zimbabwe became parties. The International Coffee Council (19-21 May) extended until 31 May 2005 the time limit for the deposit of instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval or accession, including by States applying the Agreement provisionally.

Cocoa. As at 31 December, the International Cocoa Agreement, 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 880] had 11 signatories and 15 parties, including Brazil, Papua New Guinea and Trinidad and Tobago, which became parties during the year.

Common Fund for Commodities

The 1980 Agreement establishing the Common Fund for Commodities [YUN 1980, p. 621], a mechanism intended to stabilize the commodities market by helping to finance buffer stocks of specific commodities and such commodity development activities as research and marketing, entered into force in 1989, and the Fund became operational later that year. As at 31 December 2004, the number of parties to the Agreement stood at 110.

Finance

Financial policy

The World Economic and Social Survey 2004 [Sales No. E.04. ILC.1] stated that macroeconomic policies had played a crucial role in stimulating global recovery in 2003 and 2004, and that the current challenge was to transform the cyclical upturn into sustained long-run growth that generated additional employment. That required striking a balance between accommodating strong growth and at the same time managing potential risks for the escalation of inflation. Additional actions, which would vary from country to country, were necessary to accelerate growth and development beyond the cyclical recovery. Net financial flows to developing countries had increased in 2003, when official development assistance (ODA) rose from 0.23 per cent to a record 0.25 per cent of developed countries' gross national income, although still far short of the target of 0.7 per cent. For countries with access to international capital markets, private capital flows increased markedly, despite a decline in inflows of foreign direct investment (FDI). In that regard, low interest rates and ample liquidity in developed economies encouraged international investors to search for higher returns and thus to purchase higher-risk financial instruments, including the high-yield corporate bonds of developed countries and bonds and stocks of emerging markets. Despite the encouraging prospects in international commodity and financial markets, both commodity prices and capital market conditions were highly volatile so that a possible tightening of monetary policy or a market-driven correction in the United States posed risks for developing countries heavily dependent on international capital flows or with substantial amounts of dollar-denominated debt. Thus, although the expansion in 2003 and 2004 of the United States economy remained a key locomotive for the world economy, its large fiscal and trade deficits continued to be of major concern for the downside risks they posed for the United States itself and for the rest of the world.

The UNCTAD/DESA report World Economic Situation and Prospects 2005 [Sales No. E.05.ILC.2], based on information available as at 30 November 2004, stated that macroeconomic policy stimulus was reduced in many developed countries as recovery gained momentum in 2004. Many central banks began to raise interest rates, gradually reversing the monetary easing they had adopted following the slowdown in 2001; nevertheless, the process was incremental, as policy makers recognized the fragility of the recovery in some countries. In the United States, for example, the Federal Reserve raised the Federal Funds rate five times in the second half of 2004, but by a total of only 125 basis points. In developing economies, monetary policy was mixed: some countries tightened policy modestly in response to emerging inflationary pressures; a few others—the Republic of Korea, Hungary, South Africa and Turkey—reduced interest rates because of weakening growth, currency appreciation or diminished inflationary pressures, notwithstanding higher oil and commodity prices. Barring a supply-side shock that would raise inflation substantially, such as a further surge in oil prices, monetary policy in 2005 was expected to remain generally accommodative in most developing countries across all regions.

Financial flows

According to the UNCTAD/DESA report on the world economic situation and prospects, the net outward financial transfers from developing countries continued to increase in 2004, reaching some $312.7 billion. Net transfers from East and South Asia moderated but remained at a high level. Due to external surpluses, countries in that region continued to accumulate large holdings of foreign exchange reserves, mainly low-risk securities of developed countries. While the majority of those reserves continued to be invested in United States securities, there was evidence of Asian central banks and oil-exporting countries increasing the diversification of their reserve holdings to include more euro-denominated securities. Net financial transfers from Latin America also increased, reflecting the region's improved trade and current-account surpluses. The financial outflows were used to make debt repayments, but there was also an increase in official reserves for precautionary purposes.

In terms of inflows, developing countries received $59.6 billion in net private financial flows, $4.9 billion less than they received in 2003. FDI, the largest source of net private financial inflows in 2004, began to recover from the depressed levels of recent years. Net financial flows to countries with economies in transition turned negative in 2004, owing to sharply lower net private financial flows to the Russian Federation.

International financial system

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 58/202 [YUN 2003, p. 981], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/59/218 & Corr.1], which reviewed recent developments in the international financial system, with particular relevance to developing countries, provided estimates of the net transfer of financial resources of regional groups of developing countries in 2003 and updated developments in international financial reform since his 2003 report on the subject [YUN 2003, p. 981].

The Secretary-General concluded that, although developing countries had taken wide-ranging measures to strengthen financial regulation and supervision, they remained highly vulnerable to global uncertainties and risks. To help lessen their susceptibility to shocks, the international community needed to promote policies and measures to reduce their exposure to external developments. It was also important to continue exploring measures to better assist them in reducing the high volatility of their external payment positions and to make their debt structures less vulnerable to crisis; in that regard, there might be a need for more appropriate regulatory instruments that recognized the close connection between macroeconomic cycles and risk-taking by financial institutions. It was essential to continue work on crisis prevention and resolution; in that connection, there was a need for more effective and less intrusive surveillance, backed by lending facilities offering emerging markets some form of contingent insurance that could be mobilized quickly and on a sufficiently large scale if necessary. There was broad recognition that international financial governance structures had to evolve in order to broaden and strengthen the participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in international economic decision-making and norm-setting; however, the political will to address that issue comprehensively was still lacking. The international community should continue the search for acceptable solutions towards a breakthrough in that area.

IMF/World Bank Development Committee.

The joint International Monetary Fund (IMF)/World Bank Development Committee, in a communiqué issued following its 2 October meeting (Washington, D.C.), expressed concern that most Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51] would not be met by many developing countries and recommitted itself to supporting efforts by those countries to pursue sustainable growth, sound macroeconomic policies, debt sustainability, open trade, job creation, poverty reduction and good governance. Reforms undertaken by many countries and private-sector-driven growth were critical to the success of country-led efforts to reduce global poverty. The Committee stated that success in the Doha Development Agenda [YUN 2001, p. 1432] could only complement those efforts and stressed the importance of translating into tangible results the agreed frameworks for further negotiations, as contained in the 1 August decision of the WTO General Council (see p. 958). It urged the IMF and World Bank to support efforts towards that end, to help developing countries assess the impact of negotiations and to provide them with additional support to address potential adjustment costs.

To address needs for additional stable and predictable financing to help developing countries undertake investment plans to meet the MDGs and to finance associated recurrent costs where appropriate, the Committee reviewed proposals to complement increased aid flows and commitments with innovative mechanisms. It welcomed the World Bank and IMF analysis of those options, notably the international finance facility, global taxes and voluntary contributions, including the analysis of their technical feasibility.

In an earlier communiqué, following a 25 April meeting (Washington, D.C.), the Committee, welcoming World Bank and IMF actions to promote trade facilitation and support developing countries as they integrated further into the global trading system, urged continued efforts to tailor Bank lending to support capacity-building and country-owned trade initiatives.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/481/Add.2], adopted resolution 59/222 without vote [agenda item 83 (b)].

International financial system and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 55/186 of 20 December 2000 and 56/181 of 21 December 2001, both entitled "Towards a strengthened and stable international financial architecture responsive to the priorities of growth and development, especially in developing countries, and to the promotion of economic and social equity", as well as its resolutions 57/241 of 20 December 2002 and 58/202 of 23 December 2003,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration and its resolution 56/210 B of 9 July 2002, in which it endorsed the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"),

Emphasizing that the international financial system should further sustain economic growth and support sustainable development and poverty eradication, while allowing for the coherent mobilization of all sources of financing for development, including the mobilization of domestic resources, international investment flows, official development assistance and external debt relief, and an open, equitable, rule-based, predictable and non-discriminatory global trading system,

Reiterating that success in meeting the objectives of development and poverty eradication depends on good governance within each country and at the international level, and stressing that sound economic policies, solid democratic institutions responsive to the needs of the people and improved infrastructure are the basis for sustained economic growth, poverty eradication and employment creation,

Recognizing that an enabling economic environment should, inter alia, foster a dynamic and well-functioning business sector and include efforts to further promote good corporate and public sector governance, to combat corruption in the private and public sectors, and to promote the strengthening of and respect for the rule of law,

Encouraging further progress on the issue of participation of developing countries in international economic decision-making and norm-setting processes, including those in the Bretton Woods institutions and other economic and financial institutions and ad hoc groupings, while welcoming the steps that have been taken with a view to strengthening the capacity of developing countries to participate effectively in the international financial institutions,

Recognizing the urgent need to enhance the coherence, governance and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems, and the importance of ensuring their openness, fairness and inclusiveness in order to complement national development efforts to ensure sustained economic growth and the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Emphasizing the need for additional stable and predictable financing to help developing countries undertake investment plans to achieve internationally agreed development goals,

Welcoming the initiative launched by the Presidents of Brazil, Chile and France and the Prime Minister of Spain, with the support of the Secretary-General, to convene in New York on 20 September 2004 the Summit of World Leaders for Action against Hunger and Poverty,

Taking note of the note by the Secretary-General on innovative sources of financing for development,

Reiterating the need to strengthen the leadership role of the United Nations in promoting development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Notes that the global economy is recovering, supported by growth in some developing countries, and that economic growth should be further strengthened and sustained, and stresses the importance of cooperative efforts by all countries and institutions to cope with the risks of financial instability and to ensure a strong and steady recovery, as a means of achieving greater financial stability, and in this regard acknowledges recent efforts at regional monetary cooperation;

3. Also notes the continued net outward transfer of financial resources from developing to developed countries, acknowledging the outward investment from some developing countries as an indication of their integration into the world economy, underscores the need for appropriate measures at the national and international levels to address this issue, and further notes the efforts that have been made thus far to this end and the fact that, for some developing countries, those transfers, at the present time, indicate positive developments in the trade balance, which are required, inter alia, for debt repayment and allow for the purchase of foreign assets;

4. Underlines the importance of promoting international financial stability and sustainable growth, and welcomes the efforts undertaken to this end by the International Monetary Fund and the Financial Stability Forum, as well as the consideration by the International Monetary and Financial Committee of ways to sharpen tools designed to promote international financial stability and enhance crisis prevention, inter alia, through an even-handed implementation of surveillance, including at the regional level, and a sharpening of surveillance of capital markets and systemically and regionally important countries, with a view, inter alia, to the early identification of problems and risks, integrating debt sustainability analysis, the fostering of appropriate policy responses, the possible provision of financing and other instruments designed to prevent the emergence or spread of financial crises, and further improvements in the transparency of macroeconomic data and statistical information on international capital flows;

5. Also underlines the importance of efforts at the national level to increase resilience to financial risk, stresses in this regard the importance of better assessment of a country's debt burden and its ability to service that debt in both crisis prevention and resolution, and welcomes the ongoing work of the International Monetary Fund on assessing debt sustainability;

6. Reiterates in this regard that measures to mitigate the impact of excessive volatility of short-term capital flows and to improve transparency of and information about financial flows are important and must be considered;

7. Notes the impact of financial crisis or risk of contagion in developing countries and countries with economies in transition, regardless of their size, and in this regard welcomes the efforts of the international financial institutions, in their support to countries, to continuously adapt their array of financial facilities and resources, drawing on a full range of policies, taking into account the effects of economic cycles, as and where appropriate, having due regard to sound fiscal management and the specific circumstances of each case, so as to prevent and respond to such crises in a timely and appropriate way;

8. Stresses the importance of strong domestic institutions in promoting business activities and financial stability for the achievement of growth and development, inter alia, through sound macroeconomic policies and policies aimed at strengthening the regulatory systems of the corporate, financial and banking sectors, and also stresses that international cooperation initiatives in those areas should encourage flows of capital to developing countries;

9. Notes that building an environment that encourages development of the domestic business sector requires that countries undertake appropriate policies to minimize the risk of and respond to external shocks and their impact, inter alia, on growth and employment, and encourages the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank to take into account the specific conditions of developing countries in determining their guidance to them in this area;

10. Stresses the importance of advancing in respect of the efforts to reform the international financial architecture, as envisaged in the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, and in this regard encourages the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank to continue examining the issues of the voice and effective participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in their decision-making processes;

11. Welcomes the ongoing work of the International Monetary Fund on quotas, and notes the conclusion of the Fund's Twelfth General Review of Quotas, the report on which indicated the adequacy of the current level of Fund resources and the intention of the Executive Board, during the period of the Thirteenth General Review, to monitor closely and assess the adequacy of Fund resources, to consider measures to achieve a distribution of quotas that reflects developments in the world economy and to consider measures to strengthen the governance of the Fund;

12. Notes the ongoing analysis by the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, as mentioned in the communiqué of the Development Committee of 2 October 2004, of proposals on financing modalities to complement increased aid flows and commitments with innovative mechanisms, and their technical feasibility;

13. Looks forward to further consideration of the subject of possible innovative and additional sources of financing for development from all sources, public and private, domestic and external, taking into account international efforts, contributions and discussions, within the overall framework of the follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development;

14. Reaffirms the need to adopt policies and undertake measures to reduce the cost of the transfer of migrant remittances to developing countries, and welcomes the efforts of Governments and stakeholders in this regard;

15. Emphasizes that it is essential to ensure the effective and equitable participation of developing countries in the formulation of financial standards and codes, underscores the need to ensure their implementation, on a voluntary and progressive basis, as a contribution to reducing vulnerability to financial crisis and contagion, and notes that more than one hundred countries participated or agreed to participate in a joint World Bank-International Monetary Fund financial sector assessment programme;

16. Invites the multilateral and regional development banks and development funds to continue to play a vital role in serving the development needs of developing countries and countries with economies in transition, including through coordinated action, as appropriate, and stresses that strengthened regional development banks and subregional financial institutions add flexible financial support to national and regional development efforts, thus enhancing their ownership and overall efficiency, and are an essential source of knowledge and expertise for their developing-country members;

17. Calls for the continued effort of the multilateral financial institutions, in providing policy advice, technical assistance and financial support to member countries, to work on the basis of nationally owned reform and development strategies, to pay due regard to the special needs and implementing capacities of developing countries and countries with economies in transition, and to minimize the negative impacts of the adjustment programmes on the vulnerable segments of society, while taking into account the importance of gender-sensitive employment and poverty eradication policies and strategies;

18. Stresses the need to continuously improve standards of corporate and public sector governance, including accounting, auditing and measures to ensure transparency, noting the disruptive effects of inadequate policies;

19. Acknowledges the ongoing work towards a more comprehensive approach to sovereign debt restructurings, supports the increasing inclusion of collective action clauses in international bond issuing, and strongly encourages leading bond issuing countries and the private sector to make substantial progress on the preparation of an effective code of conduct, bearing in mind the need not to preclude emergency financing in times of crisis, to promote fair burden-sharing and minimize moral hazard, which will engage debtors and creditors to come together to restructure unsustainable debts in a timely and efficient manner;

20. Welcomes the ongoing efforts, including those of the Bretton Woods institutions, to improve the assessment of debt sustainability in low- and middle-income countries through, inter alia, the development of better tools to deal with exogenous shocks and the need to take country-specific factors into account;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

22. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixtieth session, under the item entitled "Macroeconomic policy questions", the sub-item entitled "International financial system and development".

Debt problems of developing countries

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 58/203 [YUN 2003, p. 984], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/59/219] on external debt crisis and development, which complemented his report on the follow-up to and implementation of the outcome of the International Conference on Financing for Development (see p. 978). The report analysed the evolution of debt indicators of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in the context of recent developments in international trade and payments, and in international capital markets. It discussed official debt relief under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Initiative, launched in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 867], and official development assistance in the form of debt restructuring at the Paris Club (a group of creditor countries); debt management in developing countries and technical assistance; and developments in internationally agreed mechanisms for solving problems related to sovereign debt to private creditors.

The report concluded that a further extension of the HIPC Initiative appeared appropriate so as to allow all eligible countries to benefit. Implementation of the Initiative could be enhanced by a further streamlining of conditionality, particularly the elimination of structural and micro-conditions not essential to growth and poverty alleviation, while poverty reduction strategy papers (PRSPs) should be integrated into wider national development programmes focused on export diversification into the production of higher value-added products. In the light of the emerging consensus that full implementation of the Initiative would not remove the debt overhang in all beneficiary countries, renewed efforts by the international community would be required to help those countries attain debt sustainability and the MDGs. Increased grants to the poorest countries would be needed, in addition to debt forgiveness. For the heavily indebted low- and middle-income countries not eligible for debt relief under the HIPC Initiative, a satisfactory solution remained to be found. In that connection, the new Evian Approach of the Paris Club aimed at introducing greater flexibility in addressing the debt problems of non-HIPC countries should be explored. Continued efforts were needed to find an internationally agreed mechanism to address that problem, help prevent future financial crises and lead to more equitable burden sharing between debtors and creditors in crisis situations.

Other actions. The joint IMF/World Bank Development Committee (Washington, D.C., 25 April), in its review of the implementation of the HIPC Initiative, noted that 11 countries, several of them affected by conflict and some burdened with protracted arrears, had yet to reach the “decision point”, which would make them eligible for interim debt relief under the Initiative, or to begin establishing a track record under an IMF-supported programme. It urged the Bank and the Fund to help facilitate those countries’ rapid access to HIPC debt relief when their outstanding issues were addressed, and suggested that careful consideration be given to options to deal with the HIPC sunset clause scheduled to take effect at year’s end.

In October, the Committee reviewed progress under the enhanced HIPC Initiative, welcomed the recent decision to extend its sunset clause to the end of December 2006, urged full creditor participation and welcomed the development of a forward-looking debt sustainability framework aimed at helping low-income countries manage their borrowings and avoid a build-up of unsustainable debt, while pursuing the MDGs.

The UNCTAD/DESA report on the world economic situation and prospects recorded that, as at December 2004, 15 countries qualified for debt relief under the HIPC Initiative, and another 12 reached their “decision points”. Progress in implementing the Initiative was slow, owing mainly to the difficulty of eligible countries in complying with the conditions for receiving debt relief; in addition, maintaining macroeconomic stability remained a challenge for those in the interim phase of the programme.

Africa’s debt sustainability

In accordance with the São Paulo Consensus adopted at UNCTAD XI (see p. 954), which mandated UNCTAD to continue to address developing countries’ problems arising from debt sustainability, UNCTAD conducted a study on economic development in Africa—debt sustainability: oasis or mirage [UNCTAD/GDS/AFRICA/2004/1], a summary of which was issued in July by the UNCTAD secretariat [TD/B/51/3 & Corr.1]. The study analysed issues relating to Africa’s debt overhang and HIPC debt relief, the eligibility and debt sustainability criteria of the HIPC Initiative and the sustainability of Africa’s HIPC debt after debt relief. It explored new approaches to attaining sustainable debt levels.

The study concluded that Africa’s debt burden had been a major obstacle to the region’s economic growth and poverty reduction. It had frustrated public investment in physical and social infrastructure, including in health and human resource development, and deterred private investment. The consensus was that, for a permanent solution to the external debt crisis, African countries would need to pursue prudent debt management, economic diversification and sustained economic growth, which would require greater policy space; the international community had to support those policies with concerted and coherent actions in trade and finance through increased market access and major reductions, and eventually elimination, of agricultural subsidies, combined with international action on commodities and increased ODA. The study illustrated the weaknesses of the HIPC approach to finding a permanent exit solution to the debt crisis of African HIPCs, and highlighted the fact that several other equally poor African countries had been left out of the process. It examined the possible write-off of the debt of the poorest countries and, in the absence of the political will for debt cancellation, stated that the international community could consider applying the principles of bankruptcy codes to international debt work-outs corresponding to the notion of insolvency under such codes.

TDB [A/59/15], in agreed conclusions adopted on 15 October [agreed conclusions 480 (LI)], noted with concern that African HIPC's still faced daunting challenges, including high levels of poverty, and that in some cases progress in implementing the HIPC Initiative had been slow and funding had not always matched the estimated total costs of debt relief. It underscored the shared responsibility of both creditors and debtors in preventing and resolving unsustainable debt situations and agreed that UNCTAD should continue to provide analysis and advice on African development and to support African countries in their endeavour to implement the programmes of the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD) (see p. 920) and to attain international development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/481/Add.3], adopted resolution 59/223 without vote [agenda item 83 (c)].

External debt crisis and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 58/203 of 23 December 2003 on the external debt crisis and development,

Reaffirming the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, which recognizes sustainable debt financing as an important element for mobilizing resources for public and private investment,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration adopted on 8 September 2000, which reaffirms the need to deal comprehensively and effectively with the debt problems of low- and middle-income developing countries,

Recalling also its resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003,

Concerned that a number of developing countries have not sufficiently benefited from the current global economic recovery in their efforts to attain the internationally agreed development goals, in particular the heavily indebted poor countries, where continuing debt and debt-servicing obligations could adversely affect their sustainable development,

Welcoming the further extension of the sunset clause of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative, noting that the Initiative aims to promote debt sustainability in the poorest countries and that its implementation could be enhanced by streamlining conditionalities, emphasizing in this regard the need to ensure that debt relief does not replace other sources of financing, acknowledging furthermore the progress in the implementation of the Initiative, and welcoming the call in the communiqué issued by the joint International Monetary Fund/World Bank Development Committee on 2 October 2004 urging all creditors to participate in the Initiative,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Emphasizes that creditors and debtors must share responsibility for preventing and resolving unsustainable debt situations in a timely and efficient manner, stresses the need to continue to bring them together in relevant international forums, and in this regard reiterates that the international financial system, along with enhanced official and private external financing and foreign direct investment, are key elements for a durable solution;
3. Stresses that debt relief can play a key role in liberating resources that should be directed towards activities consistent with poverty eradication, sustained economic growth and sustainable development and the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and in this regard urges countries to direct those resources freed through debt relief, in particular through debt cancellation and reduction, towards these objectives;
4. Also stresses that debt sustainability depends on a confluence of many factors at the international and national levels, underscores the fact that no single indicator should be used to make definitive judgements about debt sustainability, and in this regard, while acknowledging the need to use transparent and comparable indicators, emphasizes that country-specific circumstances and the impact of external shocks should be taken into account in debt sustainability analyses and invites the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, in their assessment of debt sustainability, to take into account fundamental changes caused by, inter alia, natural disasters, conflicts and changes in global growth prospects or in the terms of trade, especially for commodity-exporting developing countries;
5. Notes with concern that, in spite of the progress achieved, some countries that have reached the completion point of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative have not been able to achieve lasting debt sustainability, stresses the importance of promoting responsible lending and borrowing and the need to help these countries manage their borrowings and avoid a build-up of unsustainable debt, including through the use of grants, and in this regard welcomes the ongoing work by the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank to develop a forward-looking debt sustainability framework for heavily indebted poor countries and low-income countries, as well as the current discussion on other initiatives aimed at ensuring long-term debt sustainability, including through debt reduction or cancellation, while stressing the need to maintain the financial integrity of the multilateral financial institutions;
6. Stresses the need for the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund to keep the overall implications of the framework for low-income countries under review, calls for transparency in the computation of the country policy and institutional assessments, and welcomes the intention to disclose the International Development Association country performance ratings that form part of the framework;
7. Reaffirms the need to pursue, where appropriate, debt relief measures vigorously and expeditiously, by all creditors, including within the Paris and London Clubs and other relevant forums, and welcomes other bilateral initiatives that have been undertaken to reduce outstanding indebtedness, so as to contribute to debt sustainability and facilitate sustainable development;

8. Reiterates the call upon developed countries, as expressed in the Millennium Declaration, to complete the enhanced programme of debt relief for the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative and to ensure that it is fully financed;

9. Recognizes and encourages the efforts of the heavily indebted poor countries, and calls upon them to continue to improve their domestic policies and economic management, inter alia, through poverty reduction strategies, and to create a domestic environment conducive to private sector development, economic growth and poverty reduction, including a stable macroeconomic framework, transparent and accountable systems of public finance, a sound business climate and a predictable investment climate, and in this regard invites all creditors, both private and public, to encourage those efforts, for example, through further participation in the delivery of debt relief in the framework of the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative and continued provision of adequate and sufficiently concessional financing by international financing institutions and the donor community;

10. Stresses the importance of continued flexibility with regard to the eligibility criteria for the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative, in particular for countries in post-conflict situations, and the need to keep the computational procedures and assumptions underlying debt sustainability analysis under review;

11. Also stresses the need to find a solution for the debt problems of heavily indebted low- and middle-income developing countries that are not eligible for debt relief under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative, and in this regard continues to encourage the exploration of mechanisms to comprehensively address the debt problems of those countries, which may include debt-for-sustainable-development swaps or multicreditor debt swap arrangements, as appropriate;

12. Takes note of the acceptance that the debt of some non-HIPC debtor countries is unsustainable and that prudent and appropriate steps are needed to deal with these problems, in this regard welcomes the Evian Approach of the Paris Club, and calls upon creditor countries to ensure that a more tailored response to debt restructuring is granted only in case of imminent default and is not considered by debtor countries as an alternative to more expensive sources of financing and that the debt of such countries is treated in a way that reflects their financial vulnerabilities and the objective of enhancing long-lasting debt sustainability;

13. Invites donor countries, taking into account country-specific debt sustainability analyses, to continue their efforts to increase bilateral grants to developing countries, which could contribute to debt sustainability in the medium to long term, recognizes the need for countries to be able to invest, inter alia, in health and education while maintaining debt sustainability, and in this regard stresses the need to take steps to ensure that resources provided for debt relief do not detract from official development assistance resources;

14. Welcomes the efforts of the international community to provide flexibility, and stresses the need to continue those efforts in helping post-conflict developing countries, especially those that are heavily indebted and poor, to achieve initial reconstruction for economic and social development;

15. Acknowledges the ongoing work towards a more comprehensive approach to sovereign debt restructuring, supports the increasing inclusion of collective action clauses in international bond issuing, and strongly encourages leading bond-issuing countries and the private sector to make substantial progress in the preparation of an effective code of conduct, bearing in mind the need not to preclude emergency financing in times of crisis, to promote fair burden-sharing and to minimize moral hazard, which will engage debtors and creditors to come together to restructure unsustainable debts in a timely and efficient manner;

16. Welcomes the efforts of, and further calls upon, the international community to support institutional capacity-building in developing countries and countries with economies in transition for the management of financial assets and liabilities and to enhance sustainable debt management as an integral part of national development strategies;

17. Invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, in cooperation with the regional commissions, development banks and funds and other multilateral institutions, to continue to study the possibility of creating a consultative group on external debt management aimed at developing best practices, promoting coherence and strengthening the institutional capacity of developing countries in debt management, taking into account work that has already been done;

18. Calls upon all Member States as well as the United Nations system, and invites the Bretton Woods institutions as well as the private sector to take appropriate measures and actions for the implementation of the commitments, agreements and decisions of the major United Nations conferences and summits, in particular those relating to the question of the external debt problem of developing countries;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution and to include in that report a comprehensive and substantive analysis of the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries;

20. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixtieth session, under the item entitled "Macroeconomic policy questions", the sub-item entitled "External debt crisis and development".

Financing for development

Follow-up to International Conference on Financing for Development

High-level meeting of Economic and Social Council, Bretton Woods institutions and WTO.

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/227 [YUN 1996, p. 1249] and Economic and Social Council resolution 2003/47 [YUN 2003, p. 987], the Council, the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and IMF) and WTO met for their seventh special high-level meeting (New York, 26 April). Before it was an April note by the Secretary-General [E/2004/50] providing background information and raising a number of questions. The meeting's overall theme was "Coherence, coordination and cooperation in the context of the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus". The discussions focused on three sub-themes: the impact of private investment and trade-related issues on financing for development; the role of multilateral institutions in reaching the MDGs; and debt sustainability and debt relief.

The Council President, in his summary of the proceedings [A/59/92-E/2004/73], noted the participants' emphasis on the key role of good governance in encouraging local and overseas investments; that a dynamic private sector was critical for economic growth and poverty alleviation; and that, to thrive, the sector required sound legal and regulatory systems, transparency and accountability of private and public institutions, macroeconomic stability, and peace and security. The key role of small and medium-sized enterprises as engines of growth was emphasized, as was the importance of effective progress in multilateral trade negotiations with a view to promoting development worldwide and achieving the MDGs. Although the MDGs had become the core business of several international organizations, concern was expressed about insufficient coordination of their activities and the lack of clarity in the division of labour, a problem often compounded by weak coordination with bilateral donors. The joint World Bank/IMF publication Global Monitoring Report 2004: Policies and Actions for Achieving the Millennium Development Goals and Related Outcomes, which reported on progress and gaps in achieving the MDGs, pointed to the critical need for more and better aid, which was especially important to Sub-Saharan Africa if it was to achieve the MDGs. In noting the significant progress being made in implementing the HIPC Initiative, the meeting considered it important that the debt sustainability framework take into account the imperative of reaching the MDGs, which could be addressed by linking poverty reduction strategies with national budgets and, through the budgets, with macroeconomic programmes and debt sustainability analyses.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to the Monterrey Consensus [YUN 2002, p. 953] and as requested by General Assembly resolution 58/230 [YUN 2003, p. 989], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/59/270] on follow-up to and implementation of the outcome of the International Conference on Financing for Development [YUN 2002, p. 953]. Prepared in collaboration with major institutional stakeholders, the report provided an account of initiatives and commitments undertaken by Governments and stakeholders since the Secretary-General's 2003 report [YUN 2003, p. 989]. It reflected uneven progress towards achieving the goals set out in the Monterrey Consensus, and suggested that strengthening implementation efforts in all areas of the Consensus continued to be essential and that previous recommendations remained valid.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 September [meeting 52], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2004/64 [draft: E/2004/L.47] without vote [agenda item 6 (a)].

International Conference on Financing for Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 56/210 B of 9 July 2002, 57/250, 57/272 and 57/273 of 20 December 2002, 57/270 B of 23 June 2003 and 58/230 of 23 December 2003,

Recalling also its resolutions 2002/34 of 26 July 2002 and 2003/47 of 24 July 2003,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 58/291 of 6 May 2004, entitled "Follow-up to the outcome of the Millennium Summit and integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields",

Reaffirming its commitment to contribute to the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development,

Stressing the importance of staying fully engaged, nationally, regionally and internationally, in order to ensure both proper follow-up to and implementation of commitments made and agreements reached at the International Conference on Financing for Development and to continue to build bridges between development, finance and trade organizations and initiatives, within the framework of the holistic agenda of the Conference,

Taking note of the interactive discussions among all stakeholders during the special high-level meeting of the Economic and Social Council with the Bretton Woods institutions and the World Trade Organization, held in New York on 26 April 2004, in which the President of the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development participated for the first time, as mandated by the General Assembly in its resolution 57/270 B, and welcoming the increased participation of high-level governmental representatives as well as senior intergovernmental and management officials from the major institutional stakeholders in the Monterrey process,

Encouraging the continued participation of non-governmental organizations and the business sector in the Monterrey process, and expressing its readiness to continue its work in the innovative and participatory spirit that characterized the International Conference on Financing for Development, strengthening the role of the Economic and Social Council in its interaction with non-governmental organizations and the business sector, in accordance with paragraph 9 of Council resolution 2003/47,

1. Emphasizes the link between financing for development and the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration;

2. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General on coherence, coordination and cooperation in the context of the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, prepared in collaboration with the major institutional stakeholders and other relevant organizations of the United Nations system, and of the summary by the President of the Economic and Social Council of the special high-level meeting of the Council with the Bretton Woods institutions and the World Trade Organization, held in New York on 26 April 2004;

3. Looks forward to the contribution to the 2005 high-level event of the next special high-level spring meeting of the Economic and Social Council on financing for development, in accordance with the modalities to be set out by the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session;

4. Encourages the Financing for Development Office of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat, in accordance with resolution 58/230, to continue supporting the intergovernmental process entrusted with the follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development, as well as to continue, within its mandate, and with the participation of all stakeholders, including the private sector, civil society and academia, to organize consultations and workshops to examine issues related to the mobilization of resources for financing development and poverty eradication and to organize workshops, panel discussions and other activities to promote best practices and exchange information on the implementation of the commitments made and agreements reached at the Conference;

5. Decides that the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, in collaboration with the secretariats of the Bretton Woods institutions, the World Trade Organization, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other institutional stakeholders, shall prepare the documentation necessary for the special high-level spring meetings of the Economic and Social Council, and also decides to invite all institutional stakeholders to provide the Secretary-General with interim reports during the first quarter of the year on the work undertaken and planned in their respective areas of competence regarding implementation of the different components of the Monterrey Consensus, with the understanding that those reports shall constitute essential inputs to the preparation of the meetings;

6. Encourages the regional commissions, with the support of regional development banks, as appropriate, and in cooperation with the United Nations funds and programmes, to continue to strengthen their efforts in addressing regional and interregional aspects of the follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development, in the context of resolution 58/230, and to provide inputs to the High-level Dialogue on Financing for Development as well as to the spring meeting of the Economic and Social Council;

7. Encourages the President of the Economic and Social Council, in consultation with all major institutional stakeholders, to focus the special high-level spring meeting on specific issues, under the overall theme of coherence, coordination and cooperation in the context of the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, within the holistic integrated approach of the Consensus, and to report thereon to the Council well in advance of the meeting, and, in this regard, underlines the importance of transparency and openness with respect to Member States;

8. Stresses the importance of pursuing appropriate policy and regulatory frameworks at the national level and in a manner consistent with national laws so as to foster a dynamic and well-functioning business sector able to increase economic growth and reduce poverty, while recognizing that the appropriate role of government in market-oriented economies will vary from country to country;

9. Takes note of the outcomes of the eleventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held in São Paulo, Brazil, from 13 to 18 June 2004, namely, the São Paulo Consensus and The Spirit of São Paulo, which contain relevant provisions with respect to the follow-up process of the International Conference on Financing for Development, and requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to continue to contribute to the implementation of that process;

10. Requests the Secretary General to submit a report on financing for development pertaining to the role of the private sector, taking into consideration the report entitled Unleashing Entrepreneurship: Making Business Work for the Poor, for consideration by the General Assembly, under the relevant agenda items, at its fifty-ninth session.

Prior to the adoption of the above resolution, the Council, on 23 July, had deferred consideration of the draft [E/2004/L.47] to its resumed session in September (decision 2004/310).

Innovative sources of financing for development

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 58/230 [YUN 2003, p. 989] and by the Monterrey Consensus [YUN 2002, p. 953], the Secretary-General submitted an August note [A/59/272] providing background information on a study conducted by the World Institute for Development Economic Research of the United Nations University, entitled New Sources of Development Finance. A summary of the study, entitled "New sources of development finance: funding the Millennium Development Goals", was annexed to the Secretary-General's note. It presented an analytical framework; seven proposed sources of funding, namely, global environmental taxes (carbon-use taxes), a tax on currency transactions to combat financial volatility referred to as the Tobin tax, creation of new special drawing rights, an international finance facility, increased private donations for development, a global lottery and global premium bond, and increased remittances from emigrants. Also presented was an overview of the key findings and some conclusions. The objective was to determine new funding sources to finance the achievement of the MDGs by the target date of 2015, in addition to a major effort by developing countries and the international community to mobilize additional financial resources.

The study concluded that the two global taxes proposed could yield revenue of the magnitude required (carbon-use tax), or at least half of the requirement (Tobin tax at a rate of 0.02 per cent). The double dividend of increased revenue plus improved functioning of the economy to be derived from the former might fall short on the second dimension; the much more modest Tobin tax rates were more acceptable and less likely to have disruptive economic consequences. As to the alternatives to global taxation, as listed above, the extent of additionality in each case had to be considered. In practice, each of the seven proposed sources of funding ran a distinct risk of crowding out existing sources. Overcoming the obstacles to each was primarily a matter for political action. Developing countries could do much to facilitate the effective enactment of the proposals and to take the necessary dialogue forward.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/482], adopted resolution 59/225 without vote [agenda item 84].

Follow-up to and implementation of the outcome of the International Conference on Financing for Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the International Conference on Financing for Development, held in Monterrey, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002, and its resolutions 56/210 B of 9 July 2002, 57/250 of 20 December 2002, 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, 57/272 and 57/273 of 20 December 2002 and 58/230 of 23 December 2003, as well as Economic and Social Council resolutions 2002/34 of 26 July 2002, 2003/47 of 24 July 2003 and 2004/64 of 16 September 2004,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the follow-up to and implementation of the outcome of the International Conference on Financing for Development, prepared in collaboration with the major institutional stakeholders, and the note by the Secretary-General on innovative sources of financing for development,

Having considered the summary by the President of the Economic and Social Council of the special high-level meeting of the Council with the Bretton Woods institutions and the World Trade Organization, held in New York on 26 April 2004,

Recognizing the progress made in the implementation of the commitments made and agreements reached at the International Conference on Financing for Development and that more remains to be done,

Determined to continue to implement and build further on these commitments and agreements and to strengthen the coordinated and coherent engagement of all relevant stakeholders in the financing for development process,

Recalling the invitation to the World Trade Organization to strengthen its institutional relationship with the United Nations, in the context of the follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development,

Noting international efforts, contributions and discussions aimed at identifying possible innovative and additional sources of financing for development from all sources, public and private, domestic and external, within the context of the follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development, recognizing that some of the sources and their use fall within the realm of sovereign action,

Welcoming in this regard the initiative launched by the Presidents of Brazil, Chile and France and the Prime Minister of Spain, with the support of the Secretary-General, to convene in New York on 20 September 2004 the Summit of World Leaders on Action against Hunger and Poverty,

Noting the report of the Commission on the Private Sector and Development entitled Unleashing Entrepreneurship: Making Business Work for the Poor,

Noting also the ongoing analysis by the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, mentioned in the communiqué of the Development Committee of 2 October 2004, of proposals on financing modalities to complement increased aid flows and commitments with innovative mechanisms, and their technical feasibility,

Welcoming the support of Member States for the Financing for Development Office of the Secretariat for organizing multi-stakeholder consultations within its mandate, and in accordance with resolution 58/230,

Recognizing the strong link between financing for development and the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

1. Reiterates the call to implement fully and build further on the commitments made and agreements reached at the International Conference on Financing for Development;

2. Stresses the importance of the full involvement of all relevant stakeholders in the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development at all levels, and stresses also the importance of their full participation in the Monterrey follow-up process, in accordance with the rules of procedure of the United Nations, in particular the accreditation procedures and modalities of participation utilized at the Conference and in its preparatory process;

3. Underlines, in accordance with the Monterrey Consensus:

(a) The importance of the implementation of the commitment to sound policies, good governance at all levels and the rule of law;

(b) The importance of the implementation of the commitment to create an enabling environment for mobilizing domestic resources and the importance of sound economic policies, solid democratic institutions responsive to the needs of the people and improved infrastructure as a basis for sustained economic growth, poverty eradication and employment creation;

(c) The importance, in order to complement national development efforts, of the implementation of the commitment to enhance the coherence and consistency of international monetary, financial and trading systems;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to consult with the Director-General of the World Trade Organization in order to expand existing cooperation between the two organizations on issues related to financing for development and to build on the ad hoc modality of interaction between the United Nations and the World Trade Organization in the preparations for the International Conference on Financing for Development by making better use of the possibilities offered by the existing framework of cooperation;

5. Recognizes the issues of particular concern to developing countries and countries with economies in transition acknowledged in paragraph 28 of the Monterrey Consensus, and the importance and critical role that a universal, rule-based, open, non-discriminatory and equitable multilateral trading system, as well as meaningful trade liberalization, can play in stimulating economic growth and development, benefiting countries at all stages of development, particularly in the case of the developing countries, where trade continues to be one of the most important sources of development financing, and in this regard welcomes the decision taken by the General Council of the World Trade Organization on 1 August 2004, which rededicates and re-commits members to fulfilling the development dimensions of the Doha Development Agenda, which places the needs of developing and least developed countries at the heart of the Doha work programme;

6. Notes the recognition by the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund of the need to pursue efforts to increase fiscal space for public infrastructure investment within limits of fiscal prudence and debt sustainability;

7. Decides to give further consideration to the subject of possible innovative and additional sources of financing for development from all sources, public and private, domestic and external, taking into account international efforts, contributions and discussions, within the overall inclusive framework of the follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development;

8. Acknowledges the role that the private sector can play in generating new financing for development, and stresses the importance of pursuing appropriate policy and regulatory frameworks at the national level, in a manner consistent with national laws, to foster a dynamic and well-functioning business sector to increase economic growth and reduce poverty, while recognizing that the appropriate role of Government in market-oriented economies will vary from country to country;

9. Reaffirms the need to adopt policies and undertake measures to reduce the cost of transfer of migrant remittances to developing countries, and welcomes efforts by Governments and stakeholders in this regard;

10. Notes that, while foreign direct investment is a major source of financing development, the flow of such funds to developing countries and countries with economies in transition remains uneven, and in this regard calls upon developed countries to continue to devise source-country measures to encourage and facilitate the flow of foreign direct investment, inter alia, through the provision of export credits and other lending instruments, risk guarantees and business development services, and calls upon developing countries and countries with economies in transition to continue their efforts to create a conducive domestic environment for attracting investments by, inter alia, achieving a transparent, stable and predictable investment climate with proper contract enforcement and respect for property rights;

11. Recalls the commitments made at the International Conference on Financing for Development to increase the levels and effectiveness of official development assistance, in this regard welcomes the recent increase in official development assistance, which represents progress towards the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product, as well as the progress announced by some countries, including in some cases the setting of clear timetables to achieve this objective, urges developed countries that have not yet done so to make concrete efforts to achieve the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product as official development assistance to developing countries and 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of gross national product to least developed countries, and encourages developing countries to continue to build on progress achieved in ensuring that official development assistance is used effectively to help achieve development goals and targets;

12. Notes the efforts of donor countries and recipient countries to improve aid effectiveness, based on national development needs and priorities, including through sound policies at all levels, and stresses the need to intensify the efforts of multilateral and bilateral financial and development institutions in accordance with the Monterrey Consensus;

13. Stresses that debt relief can play a key role in liberating resources that should be directed towards activities consistent with poverty eradication, achieving sustained economic growth and sustainable development, as well as in the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration; in this regard notes with concern that, in spite of some progress, some countries that have reached the completion point of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative have not been able to achieve lasting debt sustainability; stresses the importance of promoting responsible lending and borrowing and the need to help these countries manage their borrowings and avoid a build-up of unsustainable debt, including through the use of grants; and in this regard welcomes the ongoing work by the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank to develop a forward-looking debt-sustainability framework for heavily indebted poor countries and low-income countries, as well as the current discussion on other initiatives aimed at ensuring long-term debt sustainability, including through debt reduction or cancellation, while stressing the need to maintain the financial integrity of the multilateral financial institutions;

14. Stresses also the importance of advancing in the efforts to reform the international financial architecture, as envisaged in the Monterrey Consensus, and in this regard encourages the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank to continue examining the issues of the voice and effective participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in their decision-making processes;

15. Emphasizes that corruption at all levels is a serious barrier to development and to effective resource mobilization and allocation, reaffirms the commitment expressed in the Monterrey Consensus to make the fight against corruption at all levels a priority, welcomes actions taken in that regard at the national and international levels, and invites all Governments that have not yet done so to sign and ratify the United Nations Convention against Corruption;

16. Decides to consider, by the first part of 2005, the appropriate modalities for holding the High-Level Dialogue on Financing for Development, taking into account developments in the preparation for the high-level event of the General Assembly to be held in 2005, and in this context stresses the importance of financing for development for the comprehensive review of the progress made in the implementation of the Millennium Declaration and the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields;

17. Decides also to consider in 2005 the timing and modalities for a follow-up conference to review the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, as called for in paragraph 73 of the Consensus;

18. Emphasizes the importance of an effective inter-governmental follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development, in this regard recalls paragraph 69 of the Monterrey Consensus as well as resolution 58/230, reiterates the need to continue to explore ways of strengthening the follow-up, and decides to keep the issue under review;

19. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixtieth session the item entitled "Follow-up to and implementation of the outcome of the International Conference on Financing for Development", and requests the Secretary-General to submit under this item an annual analytical assessment of the state of implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and of the present resolution, to be prepared in full collaboration with the major institutional stakeholders.

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the follow-up to and implementation of the outcome of the International Conference on Financing for Development would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session (decision 59/552).

Investment, technology and related financial issues

The UNCTAD Commission on Investment, Technology and Related Financial Issues held its eighth session (Geneva, 26-30 January), the report on which [TD/B/COM.2/60 & Corr.1] and the recommendations it contained were taken note of and endorsed, respectively, by TDB in March [A/59/15].

Investment and development. For its consideration of policy issues related to investment and development, the Commission had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note on the effectiveness of foreign direct investment (FDI) policy measures [TD/B/COM.2/EM.13/2]; the report of the Expert Meeting on the subject [YUN 2003, p. 991]; an UNCTAD secretariat note on FDI and development: the case of privatization-related services FDI—trends, impact and policy issues [TD/B/COM.2/EM.14/2]; the report of the Expert Meeting on FDI and Development [YUN 2003, p. 991]; an UNCTAD secretariat note on FDI and development: policy issues related to the growth of FDI services [TD/B/COM.2/55]; and the World Investment Report 2003: FDI Policies for Development: National and International Perspectives [UNCTAD/WIR/2003]. The Commission recommended that UNCTAD continue its work on investment, technology and enterprise development through research and policy analysis, technical assistance and capacity and consensus building; and, in particular, to examine the impact of FDI on development, with a view to helping developing countries attract FDI, maximize its positive effects and face challenges deriving from it. Particular attention should be paid to FDI in services, given the increasing importance of that sector in the world economy, and to how to foster FDI at the regional level and the need to strengthen human and institutional capacity-building efforts at the subnational level to help developing countries attract FDI.

Investment arrangements. For its consideration of issues related to investment arrangements, the Commission had before it the UNCTAD secretariat's note on the subject [TD/B/COM.2/54] and a progress report on the implementation of post-Doha technical assistance work in the area of investment [UNCTAD/ITE/IT/2003/3].

The Commission recommended that UNCTAD continue its work on international arrangements, with emphasis on the bilateral and regional dimensions, including in the context of North-South and especially South-South cooperation, and of the needs of member countries. It should also continue to facilitate the ongoing exchange of information and experiences in that area, especially at the intergovernmental level.

Investment policy reviews. For its consideration of the topic of investment policy reviews (IPRs): exchange of national experiences, the Commission had before it the Investment Policy Review of Algeria [UNCTAD/ITE/IPC/2003/9] and the summary of the deliberations of the Investment Policy Reviews of Lesotho and Nepal [TD/B/COM.2/59].

The Commission recommended that UNCTAD disseminate information on country experiences related to FDI policies and to the interaction between foreign and domestic investment; continue the preparation of IPRs and strengthen the process for implementing their recommendations; complement its analytical work in the context of IPRs with technical assistance and capacity-building; and encourage linkages between foreign and local firms.

Subsidiary body. The Expert Meeting on Good Governance in Investment Promotion (Geneva, 1-3 November) [TD/B/COM.2/EM.15/3] had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note on the subject [TD/B/COM.2/EM.15/2]. The Meeting discussed what constituted good governance in investment promotion, examined national efforts to increase transparency and accountability in the public sector and to promote high standards of corporate governance, and considered ways to further strengthen those efforts. Special attention was given to the role of stakeholders, including business groups and civil society, in improving governance in investment.

The Meeting recognized that efforts to implement legislation to reform the investment climate in some developing countries were obstructed by resource constraints, corruption and the abuse of discretionary authority, which undermined the rule of law and the credibility of the host country. The Meeting suggested that international organizations assist developing countries in implementing measures to improve good governance in investment promotion, and that UNCTAD continue to support host Governments through its related programme and include many more developing countries, especially LDCs, in the programme.

Other suggestions called for the further examination and exchange of experiences in dispute and grievance resolution between foreign investors and host countries; encouraging host Governments to strengthen their mandates in policy advocacy; continued support by international agencies for the further development of corporate governance frameworks in developing countries; and encouraging investment promotion agencies to integrate and supply online client services to create transparent and predictable "single window systems". A further suggestion was for UNCTAD and other international organizations to provide technical assistance through such programmes as the Investment Gateway, an electronic system to help Governments gather and share online information on investment formalities and opportunities.

Competition law and policy

The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Competition Law and Policy, at its sixth session (Geneva, 8-10 November) [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/48], held consultations and discussions regarding peer reviews on competition law and policy; review of the Model Law on Competition and studies related to the provisions of the 1980 Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices (known as the Set) [YUN 1980, p. 626]; the UNCTAD work programme, including capacity-building and technical assistance on competition law and policy; and the provisional agenda of the Fifth United Nations Conference to Review all Aspects of the Set, scheduled for 2005. It had before it UNCTAD secretariat reports on: experiences gained in international cooperation on competition policy issues and the mechanisms used [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/21/Rev.2]; roles of possible dispute mediation mechanisms and alternative arrangements, including voluntary peer reviews, in competition law and policy [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/37/Rev.1]; a handbook on competition legislation [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/41]; the Directory of Competition Authorities [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/42, TD/B/COM.2/CLP/49]; review of capacity-building and technical assistance on competition law and policy [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/43]; best practices for defining respective competences and settling of cases which involved joint action of competition authorities and regulatory bodies [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/44]; preliminary assessment of the Set [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/45]; ways in which possible international agreements on competition might apply to developing countries, including through preferential or different treatment, with a view to enabling those countries to introduce and enforce competition law and policy consistent with their level of economic development [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/46]; and recent competition cases [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/47].

Among the agreed conclusions adopted by the Group was the recommendation that, in order to better implement the Set, the Fifth (2005) UN Conference to review the Set should consider the following: an ad hoc voluntary peer review during the Conference; techniques for gathering evidence on cartels; the role of economic analysis and of the judiciary in competition law enforcement; the application of competition law and policy to the informal sector; and how to operationalize special and differential treatment for developing countries in competition law and policy. UNCTAD was to prepare, for the consideration of the Conference, studies on closer international cooperation in competition policy for the development objectives of developing countries and LDCs, in particular, an assessment of the application and implementation of the Set; a presentation of types of common provisions to be found in international cooperation agreements on competition policy and their application, particularly in bilateral and regional cooperation; and a synthesis of recent, publicly available cartel investigations. It was also to prepare an updated review of capacity-building and technical assistance, taking into account information to be submitted by member States and international organizations; a further revised and updated version of the Model Law on Competition; and an information note on recent important cases, with special reference to competition cases involving more than one country. UNCTAD was to continue to prepare regularly and make available on the Internet further issues of the Handbook on Competition Legislation, including regional and international instruments, and an updated version of the Directory of Competition Authorities.

The Group invited member States to continue their voluntary assistance to UNCTAD for its capacity-building and technical cooperation activities in the form of experts, training facilities and financial resources. UNCTAD should expand those activities, taking into account the Group's deliberations and consultations at the current session, and provide updated information about its forthcoming events on its website.

The Commission on Investment, Technology and Related Financial Issues, in January [TD/B/COM.2/60], took note of the report of the fifth (2003) session of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts [YUN 2003, p. 991] and endorsed its agreed conclusions.

International standards of accounting and reporting

The Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting, at its twenty-first session (Geneva, 27-29 October) [TD/B/COM.2/ISAR/26], had before it UNCTAD secretariat reports on: the review of the comparability and relevance of existing indicators on corporate social responsibility [TD/B/COM.2/ISAR/24]; the review of the implementation status of corporate governance disclosures and the role of such disclosures in adding sustainable value [TD/B/COM.2/ISAR/25]; and transparency and disclosure requirements for corporate governance, first considered in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 967].

In its agreed conclusions, the Working Group noted that UNCTAD XI had provided a broader context for addressing corporate responsibility and agreed with suggestions for further improving the relevance and comparability of social reporting to encourage disclosure, which could constitute part of enterprise annual reporting to supplement financial information and provide a broader view of corporate activities and their impact on society. On the issue of corporate governance disclosure, the Working Group agreed that further efforts were needed to reassert the development benefits to host countries of good corporate governance, as well as its impact on company performance. Having considered the results of the UNCTAD secretariat survey of corporate governance disclosure, based on its 2002 report on transparency and disclosure requirements for corporate governance, the Working Group agreed that an annual study to assess the state of reporting on corporate governance would be useful. It also agreed that the 2002 report needed updating to reflect best practices that had since evolved.

As to the mandate provided by the São Paulo Consensus (see p. 955) on corporate responsibility and other issues relevant to its work, the Group asked the UNCTAD secretariat to consider the related implications and report to its 2005 session. It also asked that the secretariat continue to disseminate the Accounting and Financial Reporting Guidelines for Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises Guidance, and to monitor and compile feedback on its implementation. The Working Group recommended that work on environmental accounting and eco-efficiency indicators continue to be disseminated, and that UNCTAD, in that context, coordinate its work on reporting with other initiatives, including the United Nations Environment Programme, the Global Reporting Initiative and other bodies engaged in environmental accounting and reporting. With regard to the Model Curriculum, the Working Group requested the UNCTAD secretariat to continue efforts on defining national, regional and international requirements for the qualification of professional accountants, in coordination with the Education Committee of the International Federation of Accountants.

The Commission on Investment, Technology and Related Financial Issues, in January [TD/B/COM.2/60], took note of the Intergovernmental Working Group's report on its twentieth (2003) session [YUN 2003, p. 992] and endorsed its agreed conclusions.

Taxation

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 2004/316 of 23 July, deferred consideration of the agenda item on international cooperation in tax matters until its resumed (2004) session.

On 11 November [meeting 54], the Council adopted resolution 2004/69 [drafts: E/2004/L.60 & E/2004/L.61] without vote [agenda item 13 (h)].

Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 58/230 of 23 December 2003, in which the Assembly requested the Economic and Social Council, in its examination of the report of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters at its next substantive session to give consideration to the institutional framework for international cooperation in tax matters,

Reaffirming its resolutions 1273(XLIII) of 4 August 1967, 1980/13 of 28 April 1980 and 1982/45 of 27 July 1982,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the eleventh meeting of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters,

Recognizing the call made in the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, for the strengthening of international tax cooperation through enhanced dialogue among national tax authorities and greater coordination of the work of the concerned multilateral bodies and relevant regional organizations, giving special attention to the needs of developing countries and countries with economies in transition,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of and follow-up to commitments and agreements made at the International Conference on Financing for Development and the recommendations contained therein,

Recognizing the need for an inclusive, participatory and broad-based dialogue on international cooperation in tax matters,

Noting the activities developing within the concerned multilateral bodies and relevant regional organizations, including the international tax dialogue,

Decides that:

(a) The Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters shall be renamed the Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters;

(b) The Committee shall comprise twenty-five members nominated by Governments and acting in their expert capacity, who are to be drawn from the fields of tax policy and tax administration and who are to be selected to reflect an adequate equitable geographical distribution, representing different tax systems. The members shall be appointed by the Secretary-General, after notification is given to the Economic and Social Council. The term of office shall be four years;

(c) The Committee as of 2005 shall meet in Geneva on a yearly basis for not more than five days, within existing resources;

(d) The Committee shall:

- (i) Keep under review and update as necessary the United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries and the Manual for the Negotiation of Bilateral Tax Treaties between Developed and Developing Countries;
- (ii) Provide a framework for dialogue with a view to enhancing and promoting international tax cooperation among national tax authorities;
- (iii) Consider how new and emerging issues could affect international cooperation in tax matters and develop assessments, commentaries and appropriate recommendations;
- (iv) Make recommendations on capacity-building and the provision of technical assistance to developing countries and countries with economies in transition;

(v) Give special attention to developing countries and countries with economies in transition in dealing with all the above issues;

(e) The Committee shall submit its report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of July 2005, to be considered under the sub-item entitled "International cooperation in tax matters";

(f) The Committee shall be serviced by a small technical staff, which shall, inter alia, within existing resources, help collect and disseminate information on tax policies and practices, in collaboration with concerned multilateral bodies and relevant international organizations.

Transport

Maritime transport

The Review of Maritime Transport, 2004 [Sales No. E.04.II.D.34] reported that world seaborne trade continued to grow in 2003, reaching a record high of 6.17 billion tons. The annual growth rate increased to 3.7 per cent, well above the 1.0 per cent increase for 2002. The world merchant fleet expanded to 857 million deadweight tons (dwt) at the beginning of 2004, a 1.5 per cent increase. New building deliveries increased marginally to 49.2 million dwt and tonnage broken up and lost declined by 16.1 per cent to 25.6 million dwt, leaving a net gain of 23.6 million dwt.

The fleet of oil tankers and dry bulk carriers, which together made up 72.9 per cent of the total world fleet, increased by 4.1 per cent and 2.5 per cent, respectively. There was a 9.3 per cent increase from 82.8 to 90.5 million dwt in the container ship fleet and a 7.6 per cent increase from 19.5 to 20.9 million dwt in the liquefied gas carriers fleet. Registration of ships by developed market economies and major open-registry countries accounted for 26.9 and 46.6 per cent of the world fleet, respectively. Open registries increased their tonnage marginally, and two thirds of that beneficially owned fleet was owned by market economies and developing countries. Developing countries' share reached 5.9 per cent, or 181.4 million dwt, of which 136 million dwt was registered in Asia.

Transport of dangerous goods

The Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals, at its second session (Geneva, 10 December) [ST/SG/AC.10/32 & Add.1], considered the reports of the Subcommittee of Experts on the

Transport of Dangerous Goods on its twenty-fifth (5-14 July) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.3/50 & Add.1-3 & Add.3/Corr.1] and twenty-sixth (29 November-7 December) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.3/52] sessions; and of the Subcommittee of Experts on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals on its seventh (14-16 July) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.4/14] and eighth (7-9 December) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.4/16] sessions, all held in Geneva.

The Committee endorsed the reports of the Subcommittee on the transport of dangerous goods, together with its recommended draft amendments to the thirteenth revised edition of the Model Regulations and to the fourth revised edition of the Manual of Tests and Criteria. The Committee likewise endorsed the reports of the Subcommittee on the Globally Harmonized System and the draft amendments to the first edition of the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals, adopted by the Committee in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 993]. The amendments were annexed to the Committee report. The Committee also approved the Subcommittees' work programmes and meeting schedules for 2005-2006, and adopted a draft resolution for consideration by the Economic and Social Council in 2005.

UNCTAD institutional and organizational questions

In 2004, the Trade and Development Board, the governing body of UNCTAD, held the following sessions, all in Geneva: thirty-fourth executive session (10 March); twenty-first special session (14 May); thirty-fifth (21 September) and second part of thirty-third (30 September) executive sessions; and fifty-first session (4-15 October) [A/59/15].

In March, TDB took note of the reports of its subsidiary bodies and took action relating to the participation of its members in the high-level meeting of the Economic and Social Council with the Bretton Woods institutions, WTO and UNCTAD.

In May, TDB considered preparations, including the draft negotiated text, for UNCTAD XI (see p. 954), approved proposed amendments to the certificate of origin of the generalized system of preferences, considered the UNCTAD strategic framework for the 2006-2007 biennium and adopted the draft calendar for the remainder of 2004 and part of 2005.

In September, TDB considered the activities undertaken by UNCTAD in favour of Africa. It also continued its consideration of the financing of the participation of experts from developing countries and countries with economies in transition.

In October, TDB adopted agreed conclusions [agreed conclusions 479(LI 479(I))] on the review of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010 (see p. 857) and on economic development in Africa: issues relating to Africa's debt sustainability [agreed conclusions 480(L1)] (see p. 976), as well as a decision on the review of UNCTAD technical cooperation activities and their financing (see below). It took note of: the reports on UNCTAD assistance to the Palestinian people and on multi-stakeholder partnerships for UNCTAD XI; the TDB President's summary of discussions on a hearing with civil society and the private sector; and the reports of the Working Party (see p. 988) on the UNCTAD medium-term plan and programme budget for the 2004-2005 biennium, of the June session of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law [A/59/17] (see p. 1352), of JAG on its April session (see p. 965) and of the Advisory Body on the implementation of courses by the secretariat in 2003-2004 and their impact, in accordance with the Bangkok Plan of Action [YUN 2000, p. 891].

Working Party. The UNCTAD Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and Programme Budget (the Working Party) held two sessions in 2004, both in Geneva: the forty-second (4 June and 6 July) [TD/B/WP/173] and the forty-third (13-17 September) [TD/B/WP/176 & Corr.1].

Technical cooperation

As described by the UNCTAD Secretary-General in his July report [TD/B/WP/172 & Corr.1 & Add.1, 2], the main features of UNCTAD technical cooperation activities in 2003 were an increased emphasis on capacity development, a focus on LDCs, and an increased level of contributions and delivery. Activities continued to focus on responding to the priorities identified by beneficiary countries and regions and supported the implementation of recommendations of the Bangkok Plan of Action. In 2003, trust fund contributions, the main source of financing for UNCTAD operational activities, increased by 28.6 per cent to $26.6 million, the highest contribution ever.

Expenditures rose sharply to $27.8 million, a 25.5 per cent increase over 2002, attributable to a 30 per cent increase in trust funds expenditures amounting to $19.9 million, and an increase of $1.5 million in UNDP-financed projects, amounting to $4.9 million. Expenditures on technical cooperation from the regular budget were unchanged.

By region, $3.8 million went to Africa, $5.5 million to Asia and the Pacific, $2.2 million to Latin America and the Caribbean, $0.9 million to Europe, and $15.3 million to interregional projects. LDCs' share of technical cooperation expenditures increased slightly, to 31.5 per cent, from 29 per cent in 2002.

By programme, services infrastructure for development and trade efficiency accounted for 32.6 per cent of total expenditures; international trade in goods and services, and commodities, 24.8 per cent; investment, technology and enterprise development, 19.2 per cent; and globalization and development strategies, 11.5 per cent. The balance of 11.9 per cent went to programmes for executive direction and management and support services (4.8 per cent), cross-divisional advisory services (4.2 per cent) and least developed, landlocked and island developing countries (2.9 per cent).

Major technical assistance programmes in order of expenditures included the Automated System for Customs Data ($6 million); investment policies and capacity-building ($4 million); the Debt Management and Financial Analysis System ($3 million); trade negotiations and commercial diplomacy ($2.8 million); trade, environment and development ($2 million); trade logistics ($1.4 million); and competition law and policy and consumer protection ($1.2 million).

Technical cooperation strategy

The July report on UNCTAD technical cooperation activities in 2003 (see above) was considered by the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget at its forty-third session (13-17 September) [TD/B/WP/176 & Corr.1], following which it adopted a draft decision for TDB action.

On 14 October [A/59/15 (dec. 481 (LI))], TDB took note of the information on the implementation of the new technical cooperation strategy adopted by TDB in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 996] and requested the secretariat to further improve the presentation of the information on the allocation of trust fund contributions to different regions and thematic areas. It highlighted the need to ensure a more equitable distribution of resources among developing-country regions in the overall delivery of technical cooperation, and reaffirmed the importance of further implementing the strategy, in accordance with the related 2003 TDB decision and the São Paulo Consensus (see p. 955). TDB asked the secretariat to continue disseminating the strategy and to consider the implications of UNCTAD XI for the strategy.

Evaluation

An August UNCTAD secretariat note transmitted a progress report [TD/B/WP/175] detailing the actions UNCTAD had taken to implement the nine recommendations arising from the 2003 evaluation [YUN 2003, p. 996] of the UNCTAD technical cooperation/capacity-building (TC/CB) programme on trade, environment and development.

The report stated that UNCTAD had outlined the elements of the vision and strategy of its TC/CB programme and communicated them to its stakeholders; devised a communication strategy encompassing a website, a mailing list database, a newsletter launched in 2004, the publication of the Trade and Environment Review, reports to relevant intergovernmental bodies, briefings/meetings for key target audiences and information for the press; developed logical frameworks and objectively verifiable indicators for its main projects; pursued training opportunities to enhance staff capacities to develop and manage projects; consulted with beneficiary countries to identify target core institutions and individuals to be invited to activities; and stepped up efforts to ensure follow-up and hand-over of projects with individual participants and institutions. UNCTAD agreed to focus on trade-related aspects of the value chain and strengthen its partnerships with other organizations with competence in production and infrastructure. It was endeavouring to include a broad range of stakeholders in project activities, including companies and organizations operating at the grassroots level; was discussing project hand-over and follow-up with beneficiaries; and would incorporate end-of-project hand-over arrangements into future project design. It was also extending the coverage of its TC/CB programme to all regions, particularly Africa.

The Working Party, in September [TD/B/WP/176 & Corr.1], took note of the steps taken by UNCTAD, asked the secretariat to keep the evaluators and member States informed of follow-up to the evaluation, and noted the need for continued funding to secure the continuation of the programme's activities and the expansion of its geographical coverage. It requested that, in the implementation of the evaluation plan proposed by the secretariat, provision be made in 2005 for training courses on key issues on the international economic agenda, in accordance with the Bangkok Plan of Action [YUN 2000, p. 891], for accession to WTO in 2006 and for investment advisory services in 2007. TDB in October [A/59/15] endorsed Working Party's conclusions.

Participation in expert meetings

TDB in March [A/59/15] resumed its consideration of the financing of the participation of experts from developing countries and countries with economies in transition in UNCTAD expert meetings. The UNCTAD Deputy Secretary-General stated that the UNCTAD secretariat had tried without success to provide for the item in the proposed UN regular budget and that, if the Group of 77 wished to recommend the use of the regular budget, a proposal to that effect would have to be submitted to the General Assembly. He added, however, that such a proposal was unlikely to meet with success.

TDB returned to the issue in September, when Brazil, on behalf of the Group of 77 and China, pointed out that the participation of experts from various regions had had a significant positive effect on the quality of the meetings, and that, unfortunately, financial resources were inadequate for the full number of experts for 2004, and the outlook for 2005 was even bleaker. As financing through extrabudgetary resources was uncertain, it reiterated that the use of the regular budget represented a reliable and long-term solution.

TDB requested its President to hold consultations with regional coordinators and interested delegations with a view to finding a solution by year's end for predictable financing and to report to it with recommendations at an executive or special session.

Medium-term plan and programme budget

The Working Party on 6 July [TD/B/WP/173] considered the draft UNCTAD section of the proposed UN strategic framework for the period 2006-2007, on the basis of the final outcome of UNCTAD XI (see p. 954). In agreed conclusions adopted on the subject, the Working Party concurred with the UNCTAD section and recommended that TDB transmit to the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth (2004) session the proposed strategic framework for Programme 10: Trade and development for the period 2006-2007.

TDB in September [A/59/15] took note of the Working Party's report, endorsed its agreed conclusions and decided to transmit the proposed strategic framework for Programme 10 to the Assembly at its fifty-ninth session.

The Working Party, in September [TD/B/WP/176 & Corr.1], approved draft agreed conclusions on the review of the UNCTAD programme of work for the 2004-2005 biennium in the light of the outcomes of UNCTAD XI, a draft decision on the review of technical cooperation activities for consideration by TDB (see p. 988) and draft agreed conclusions on the evaluation of UNCTAD technical cooperation activities. The Working Party also approved the provisional agenda for its forty-fourth (2005) session.

TDB in October [A/59/15] took note of the Working Party's report and endorsed its agreed conclusions.

On 22 December, the Assembly took note of the report of the Second Committee [A/59/610], which considered and approved the proposed strategic framework for the period 2006-2007 (decision 59/542).

UNCTAD Secretary-General

By decision 58/574 of 13 September, the General Assembly decided to defer consideration of the item entitled "Confirmation of the appointment of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development" and to include it in the draft agenda of its fifty-ninth (2004) session. By decision 59/552 of 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session.

Chapter V

Regional economic and social activities

The five regional commissions continued in 2004 to provide technical cooperation, including advisory services, to their member States, promote programmes and projects and provide training to enhance national capacity-building in various sectors. Four of them—the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), the Economic Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), and the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC)—held regular sessions during the year. The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) did not meet in 2004 but was scheduled to meet in 2005.

The executive secretaries of the commissions continued to exchange views and coordinate activities and positions on major development issues and on preparations for and follow-up to UN conferences. The Economic and Social Council decided to hold annually a dialogue with the executive secretaries immediately after the high-level segment of its substantive session. The Secretary-General forwarded to the General Assembly the findings and recommendations of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on its audit of the regional commissions, which evaluated the efficiency and effectiveness of their programmes and administrative management.

During the year, ECA placed emphasis on mainstreaming trade policy in national development strategies and reaffirmed its commitment to economic growth and poverty eradication as well as to support for sustainable development. ECE focused mainly on economic policies, in particular on those designed to stimulate competitive growth within the region. ESCAP adopted the Shanghai Declaration, by which it reaffirmed the importance of focusing its work on the three thematic areas of poverty reduction, managing globalization and addressing emerging issues, and, in that connection, set forth the actions ESCAP members would strive to undertake. Through the efforts of ESCAP, the Intergovernmental Agreement on the Asian Highway Network was adopted. The Council endorsed the Declaration and welcomed the adoption of the Agreement; it additionally recognized the work of ESCAP in implementing its technical cooperation projects. The Council adopted the San Juan resolution, in which it welcomed the ECLAC document on productive development in open economies and the proactive agenda proposed by ECLAC for meeting the challenges of the productive development process. It also instructed the ECLAC Executive Secretary to evaluate the modalities of ESCAP collaboration with the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti.

The General Assembly adopted resolutions on cooperation between the United Nations and several regional organizations.

Regional cooperation

In 2004, the United Nations continued to strengthen cooperation among its regional commissions, between them and other UN entities, and with regional and international organizations.

By decision 2004/213 of 13 February, the Economic and Social Council decided that the theme for the agenda item on regional cooperation of its 2004 substantive session would be “Information technology for development: a regional perspective”.

Meetings of executive secretaries. The executive secretaries of the five regional commissions met on 17-19 February (New York), 26 April (Shanghai, China), 18 June (Santiago, Chile), 14 and 17 July (New York) and 20-22 October (New York) [E/2004/15, E/2005/15].

At the 2004 meetings and at those held in the second half of 2003, the executive secretaries exchanged views on: global issues and activities of their respective commissions in response to the related development challenges within the regions, particularly on the regional dimensions of the work of the United Nations; ways to further strengthen coherence of UN activities at the regional level; interregional and horizontal cooperation among the commissions in given areas; and the commissions’ participation in the eleventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD XI) (see p. 954). They also reviewed the commissions’ activities on: regional follow-up to the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development [YUN 2002, p. 953]; resources mobilization and enabling environment for poverty eradication in the context of the implementation of the Brussels Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010 [YUN 2001, p. 770] (see p. 852); follow-up to the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821]; and preparations for the twelfth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development, for the first [YUN 2003, p. 857] and second (see p. 827) phases of the World Summit on the Information Society, and for UNCTAD XI (see p. 845).

Concerning measures taken by the Executive Committee on Economic and Social Affairs to involve the regional commissions more closely in the central policy work of the Secretariat, the executive secretaries agreed that there should be an improved two-way flow of information between global programmes, departments and offices, and the commissions to reflect more systematically the regional perspective in policy discussions at Headquarters and to ensure functional linkages between Headquarters and commission activities. The commissions should be more closely involved in the preparation of the Secretary-General's reports to global bodies, and the thematic groups established by the Executive Committee for the preparation of the 2004-2005 programme budget should remain active in support of that objective. Cooperation and joint work should be further pursued and clearly reflected in the work programme and budget of each of the commissions and the departments and offices concerned.

At the intergovernmental level, the Economic and Social Council, at its substantive sessions, should consider the item on regional cooperation at a separate segment to be held immediately after the high-level segment; it should be devoted to the interface between the commissions and the Council so as to ensure a more effective mainstreaming of their contributions to the Council's overall policy work and facilitate their provision of regional perspectives on global issues under consideration. That would enable the Council to better assess the commissions' response to its directives regarding policy coherence in the economic and social sectors. The executive secretaries further agreed on the need to hold yearly informal meetings at Headquarters to brief commission delegations on socio-economic policies, perspectives and outlooks in their respective regions and to encourage a more effective two-way flow of information and substantive exchange, including on the findings of the economic surveys of the five regions, thereby eliminating the need for their simultaneous launching at Headquarters.

To strengthen coherence of UN regional activities, the executive secretaries felt that there should be a framework for cooperation with regional and subregional organizations, with the commissions having the lead role. The relevant regional commissions should also be involved in initiatives undertaken by such entities as the Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA), UNCTAD, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and the offices of the Special Representative for Africa and of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Countries and Small Island Developing States.

As to the increasing need to bring more coherence to operational activities at the regional and subregional levels, the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51] provided a sound basis for coordination and cooperation between the commissions and the United Nations Development Group.

The executive secretaries agreed that the regional commissions should align their technical cooperation work within the framework of the common country assessments/United Nations Development Assistance Framework (CCA/UNDAF) and poverty reduction strategy papers (PRSPs). To further support that approach, there should be a strong two-way communication between the commissions and the resident coordinators/UN country teams, including information flows on the commissions' country-level activities and their capacities.

The executive secretaries noted that the first phase of the World Summit on the Information Society [YUN 2003, p. 857] (see p. 845) had brought into focus the need for cooperation among relevant organizations within and outside the UN system to develop methodology for measuring selected indicators and for benchmarking and monitoring progress in the implementation of the Summit outcomes. They emphasized also the need for interregional and horizontal cooperation among their respective secretariats in that area. They recommended information and communication technologies (ICT) as the interregional theme for consideration by the Economic and Social Council in 2004 and identified ICT as an important area for a joint project by the commissions, to be funded from the Development Account. They also agreed to participate in a high-level panel organized by ESCAP, in connection with its sixtieth session, on "ICT and knowledge-economy development: a regional perspective".

By decision 2004/323 of 11 November, the Economic and Social Council decided to hold a dialogue with the executive secretaries of the regional commissions immediately after the high-level segment of its substantive session, and requested the Secretariat to ensure that that decision was reflected in the programme of work for the Council's 2005 substantive session. It would assess the implementation of that decision in 2008, in the context of Council resolution 1998/46 [YUN 1998, p. 1262] on the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations and General Assembly resolution 57/270 B [YUN 2003, p. 1468] on follow-up to major UN conferences.

Review and reform of regional commissions

In a May report [E/2004/15], the Secretary-General updated the Economic and Social Council on the two cross-cutting issues related to the regional commissions: mainstreaming the regional dimension in UN work and enhancing the coherence of UN activities at the regional level, in accordance with the guidance provided for in Council resolution 1998/46 [YUN 1998, p. 1262] on restructuring and revitalizing the United Nations. In response to decision 2004/213 (see p. 990), the report also explored the theme "Information technology for development: a regional perspective".

In addenda to the report [E/2004/15/Add.1, 2], the Secretary-General submitted resolutions and decisions adopted at recent meetings of the regional commissions calling for action by or brought to the attention of the Council.

The Secretary-General also submitted the summaries of the overview of the economic report on Africa 2004: unlocking Africa's potential in the global economy [E/2004/17]; the economic and social survey of Asia and the Pacific [E/2004/18]; the economic survey of Europe [E/2004/16]; the economic survey of Latin America and the Caribbean, 2003 [E/2004/19]; and the survey of economic and social developments in the ESCWA region 2004 [E/2004/20].

The Council adopted resolutions on the Shanghai Declaration (resolution 2004/6), the work of ESCAP in implementing its technical cooperation projects (resolution 2004/7), the Intergovernmental Agreement on the Asian Highway Network (resolution 2004/8), the San Juan resolution on productive development in open economies (resolution 2004/45), support for the reconstruction of Haiti and the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (resolution 2004/46), and on the venue of the next session of ECLAC (resolution 2004/47). It also adopted decisions on the implementation of resolutions concerning the participation of associate member countries of ECLAC in the follow-up to UN world conferences and in the Council's work (decision 2004/324), the United Nations Framework Classification for Fossil Energy and Mineral Resources (decision 2004/233), and the venue and dates of ESCWA's twenty-third session (decision 2004/320).

(For the summaries of the surveys and texts of the resolutions, see the relevant sections of this chapter.)

Audit of regional commissions

In May [A/58/785], the Secretary-General submitted the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on its audit of the five regional commissions, which evaluated the efficiency and effectiveness of programme and administrative management and made a series of recommendations.

Overall, OIOS found the financial and administrative controls in the commissions adequate. The reforms and restructuring implemented in the past few years had resulted in more relevant and appropriate substantive programmes, with an implementation rate during 2002-2003 that ranged from 87 per cent to 94 per cent. However, OIOS noted inconsistencies and weaknesses in the planning, selection, scope, methodology, conclusions, timing and costs of the self-evaluation exercises carried out by most of the commissions, and the absence of a systematic monitoring of recommendations emerging from those exercises to determine if specific process improvements had been achieved. The management of regional advisers was ineffective due to problems in coordinating and integrating their activities with the work programmes of the substantive divisions.

OIOS recommended that, to support the Economic and Social Council's discussion of the linkages among the work of the regional commissions and other UN entities in the economic and social sectors, the commissions' New York office should write its annual report more succinctly and begin with the section summarizing the executive secretaries' discussions on common issues. The Council should move its discussions relating to the commissions from the general segment to a special segment, with a day dedicated to incorporating the regional perspectives into the wide-ranging issues under consideration.

The overall coherence and effectiveness of intergovernmental bodies needed constant review for adherence to rules and procedures, for functionality and timely reporting, and for follow-up of recommendations. The calendars of the commissions' annual/biennial sessions should be harmonized with the submissions of the biennial programme plan and the proposed programme budgets to the Office of Programme Planning, Budget and Accounts at Headquarters.

ESCWA and ECA should review the need for a separate statistics division, with a minimum critical mass of statisticians to strengthen their statistical strategy and outputs and to better guarantee methodological standards in their regions. The regional commissions should establish mechanisms for: assessing the quality of publications; categorizing a publication as a “flagship” one and harmonizing the issuance of such publications; conducting peer-review exercises; and assessing the composition of the readership. Policies on access and downloading of publications from websites also needed to be standardized.

The General Assembly, in resolution 59/271 of 23 December (see p. 1369), took note of the OIOS report on its audit of the regional commissions and requested the Secretary-General to report to the Assembly in 2005 on actions taken by the commissions’ legislative bodies on the OIOS recommendations.

Africa

The Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) held its thirty-seventh session/Conference of African Ministers of Finance, Planning and Economic Development (Kampala, Uganda, 21-22 May) [E/2004/38] under the theme “Mainstreaming trade policy in national development strategies”. It considered an overview report on recent economic and social conditions in Africa [E/ECA/CM.37/6], a paper on mainstreaming trade policy in national development strategies [E/ECA/CM.37/2], a progress report on the work of the ECA/Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) on monitoring mutual reviews of development effectiveness, a report of the Expert Group Meeting on Africa’s External Debt Problem [E/ECA/CM.37/8], the annual report on the work of ECA, 2004 [E/ECA/CM.37/4], a report on the external review of ECA’s work since 1996 [E/ECA/CM.37/5], a note on proposals for enhancing the effectiveness of the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development [E/ECA/CM.37/7] and the proposed ECA 2006-2007 programme plan [E/ECA/CM.37/3].

The Conference of African Ministers adopted a statement [E/ECA/CM.37/10] by which the Ministers reaffirmed their commitment to achieving sustained economic growth and eradicating poverty, and to promoting sustainable development as they advanced towards an inclusive and equitable global economic system; expressed concern that, unlike other developing regions, Africa had not reaped the gains of global integration; underscored the importance of successfully concluding the Doha Development Round of trade negotiations launched in 2001 at the Fourth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization (WTO) [YUN 2001, p. 1432] to better integrate Africa into the global trading system; strongly urged renewal beyond 2008 of the African Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA), enacted by the United States to promote African exports and due to expire in September 2004; also urged trading partners to reduce cotton subsidies, with a view to eliminating them; and recommended that development partners correct the tariff escalation maintained by industrial countries.

The Ministers noted the establishment of the Commission for Africa by Prime Minister Anthony Blair of the United Kingdom to galvanize efforts to achieve the MDGs in Africa and believed that it had an important role to play in supporting the implementation of the New Partnership for Africa’s Development (NEPAD) [YUN 2001, p. 899] and advancing Africa’s agenda in international forums; recognized ECA’s key role in promoting Africa’s economic and social development and urged member States to support its efforts by contributing to the United Nations Trust Fund for Africa; and, noting the progress of reform achieved by ECA over the past eight years, believed that the way forward, proposed in the report on the external review of ECA’s work since 1996, would enable ECA to deepen the relevance of its contribution to Africa’s development agenda. Finally, the Ministers endorsed the ECA programme plan for the 2006-2007 biennium [E/2004/38 (res. 842 (XXXVII))].

The Conference was preceded by the twenty-third meeting of the Committee of Experts of the Conference of African Ministers of Finance, Planning, and Economic Development (Kampala, Uganda, 18-20 May), which discussed the agenda items of the Conference. Its report [E/ECA/CM.37/9] was adopted by the Conference.

On 13 July, President George W. Bush of the United States signed into law the AGOA Acceleration Act of 2004, extending AGOA long into the future.

Economic trends

In 2004, Africa’s gross domestic product (GDP) grew by 4.6 per cent, the highest growth rate in almost a decade, up from the final 2003 figure of 4.3 per cent. Underpinning the improvement were higher commodity prices, good macro-economic management, better performance in agriculture, an improved political situation in many African countries, and increased aid and debt relief, according to the Overview of the Economic Report for Africa 2005: Meeting the Challenges of Unemployment and Poverty in Africa [E/2005/17]. Central Africa led the improved performance, with a 7.3 per cent growth rate, followed by East Africa at 5.8 per cent, North Africa at 4.8 per cent, West Africa at 4.3 per cent and Southern Africa at 3.5 per cent. At the country level, the fastest growing economies were those of Chad, Equatorial Guinea, Liberia, Ethiopia, Angola and Mozambique, while the slowest were those of Zimbabwe, Seychelles, Côte d'Ivoire, Central African Republic, Guinea-Bissau, Gabon, Kenya, Malawi, the Comoros, and Somalia.

On average, inflation declined from 10.3 per cent to 8.4 per cent due to prudent monetary and fiscal policies, good harvests and relatively stable exchange rates. Fiscal deficits also declined, with 32 countries recording either fiscal surpluses or declines in fiscal deficit. Current account performance was also favourable, with roughly one half of African countries (26 out of 51) showing improvement.

Overall, exports grew at 23.5 per cent as a result of both volume and price increases. Import growth averaged 16.9 per cent, reflecting higher incomes and rising oil and food prices.

Activities in 2004

ECA activities in 2004 were undertaken in seven subprogrammes: facilitating economic and social policy analysis; fostering sustainable development; strengthening development management; harnessing information for development; promoting trade and regional integration; promoting the advancement of women; and supporting subregional activities for development [E/2004/38, E/ECA/CM.38/2].

Development policy and regional economic development

African recovery and development

ECA continued in 2004 to strengthen the capacity of member States to design and implement policies for economic growth and poverty reduction, in line with the priorities of the Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49] and NEPAD [YUN 2001, p. 899]. Particular emphasis was placed on economic policy analysis, development issues related to social policy and poverty analysis, issues related to financing for development and statistical development. To follow up the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, adopted by the International Conference on Financing for Development [YUN 2002, p. 953], an ad hoc expert group meeting on financial systems and resource mobilization for economic development in Africa was held (Nairobi, Kenya, November) to identify the challenges constraining the emergence of well-functioning capital markets in the continent. The meeting called for the establishment of an African Monetary Fund, improvement and streamlining of regulatory and supervisory infrastructure, transparency, regional harmonization of laws and regulations, and adoption of policies for attracting remittances and mobilizing foreign resources through capital markets.

ECA hosted the fourth meeting of the ECA Big Table (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, October) on the theme "Stimulating private sector investments in Africa", which proposed the creation of an investment climate facility to improve the policy environment for private sector growth. ECA also played a key role in the Strategic Partnership with Africa, a bilateral and multilateral donor group established to mobilize support for Africa and ensure the alignment of donor support with national poverty reduction strategies, including the tracking of results. It organized the first annual meeting of the Advisory Board on Statistics in Africa (Addis Ababa, May), which reviewed the objectives, scope, institutional arrangements and governance structure, including the future direction of ECA work in statistics.

New Partnership for Africa's Development

ECA continued to support the implementation of NEPAD, a programme initiated by African leaders in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 900] for the development of Africa. The programme's African Peer Review Mechanism (APRM) became operational in 2004, with the roll-out of country support missions to Ghana, Kenya, Mauritius and Rwanda to assess the processes in those countries for self-assessment and drafting programmes of action that would be reviewed by the APRM Panel. ECA helped in the development of some APRM codes and standards, provided country economic and governance data to its secretariat, participated in all four support missions and collaborated with UN system agencies and other partners in supporting NEPAD infrastructure development. It worked with the OECD secretariat in developing a framework for mutual accountability and policy coherence, which would form the basis of a new partnership between African countries and their development partners.

ECA convened the Sixth Annual Regional Consultations of UN agencies working in Africa (Addis Ababa, July) to review progress made by the thematic clusters around which UN support for NEPAD was organized [YUN 2002, p. 977], consider immediate UN assistance to advance progress, address challenges and concerns, and chart the way forward. The consultations found that, although significant progress had been made in all the thematic clusters, the United Nations faced a number of constraints in supporting NEPAD at the regional level: increased financial commitment by the UN entities was dependent on their receiving additional resources for NEPAD programmes, without which the scope and flexibility for undertaking additional joint activities were limited. Thus, if further progress was to be made, UN entities would need to deepen their collaboration to achieve greater operational coherence in their various NEPAD support programmes using existing coordination mechanisms.

In resolution 59/254 of 23 December (see p. 924), the General Assembly urged UN system entities to intensify their efforts in developing and implementing joint programmes in support of NEPAD at the regional level.

(For detailed information on NEPAD, see p. 920.)

Illicit diamond transactions and development

In 2004, the General Assembly and the Security Council considered the role that illegal transactions of diamonds played in fuelling conflict (see p. 57), particularly in Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/144 [draft: A/59/L.46 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 21].

The role of diamonds in fuelling conflict: breaking the link between the illicit transaction of rough diamonds and armed conflict as a contribution to prevention and settlement of conflicts

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that the trade in conflict diamonds is a matter of serious international concern, which can be directly linked to the fuelling of armed conflict, the activities of rebel movements aimed at undermining or overthrowing legitimate Governments and the illicit traffic in and proliferation of armaments, especially small arms and light weapons,

Recognizing also the devastating impact of conflicts fuelled by the trade in conflict diamonds on the peace, safety and security of people in affected countries, and the systematic and gross human rights violations that have been perpetrated in such conflicts,

Noting the negative impact of such conflicts on regional stability and the obligations placed upon States by the Charter of the United Nations regarding the maintenance of international peace and security,

Recognizing, therefore, that continued action to curb the trade in conflict diamonds is imperative,

Recognizing also the positive benefits of the legitimate diamond trade to producing countries, and underlining the need for continued international action to prevent the problem of conflict diamonds from negatively affecting the trade in legitimate diamonds, which makes a critical contribution to the economies of many of the producing, exporting and importing States, especially developing States,

Noting that the vast majority of rough diamonds produced in the world are from legitimate sources,

Recalling the Charter and all the relevant resolutions of the Security Council related to conflict diamonds, and determined to contribute to and support the implementation of the measures provided for in those resolutions,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 1459(2003) of 28 January 2003, in which the Council strongly supported the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme as a valuable contribution against trafficking in conflict diamonds,

Welcoming the important contribution of the Kimberley Process, which was initiated by African diamond-producing countries,

Believing that the implementation of the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme should substantially reduce the opportunity for conflict diamonds to play a role in fuelling armed conflict and should help to protect legitimate trade and ensure the effective implementation of the relevant resolutions on trade in conflict diamonds,

Recalling its resolutions 55/56 of 1 December 2000, 56/263 of 13 March 2002, 57/302 of 15 April 2003 and 58/290 of 14 April 2004, in which it called for the development and implementation of proposals for a simple, effective and pragmatic international certification scheme for rough diamonds,

Welcoming, in this regard, the implementation of the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme in such a way that it does not impede the legitimate trade in diamonds or impose an undue burden on Governments or industry, particularly smaller producers, and does not hinder the development of the diamond industry,

Welcoming also the decision of countries and one regional economic integration organization to address the problem of conflict diamonds by participating in the Kimberley Process and to implement the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme,

Welcoming further the important contribution made by the diamond industry, in particular the World Diamond Council, as well as civil society, to assist international efforts to stop the trade in conflict diamonds,

Welcoming the voluntary self-regulation initiatives for the diamond industry announced by the World Diamond Council, and recognizing that a system of such voluntary self-regulation will contribute, as described in the Interlaken Declaration of 5 November 2002 on the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme for Rough Diamonds, to ensuring the effectiveness of national systems of internal control for rough diamonds,

Noting with appreciation that the Kimberley Process has pursued its deliberations on an inclusive basis, involving concerned stakeholders, including producing, exporting and importing States, the diamond industry and civil society,

Recognizing that State sovereignty should be fully respected and that the principles of equality, mutual benefits and consensus should be adhered to,

Recognizing also that the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme, which came into effect on 1 January 2003, will be credible only if all participants have established internal systems of control designed to eliminate the presence of conflict diamonds in the chain of producing, exporting and importing rough diamonds within their own territories, while taking into account that differences in production methods and trading practices, as well as differences in institutional controls thereof, may require different approaches to meet minimum standards,

1. Reaffirms its strong and continuing support for the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme;

2. Recognizes that the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme can help to ensure the effective implementation of relevant resolutions of the Security Council containing sanctions on the trade in conflict diamonds, and calls for the full implementation of existing Council measures targeting the illicit trade in rough diamonds that play a role in fuelling conflict;

3. Also recognizes the important contributions that the international efforts to address the problem of conflict diamonds, including the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme, have made to the settlement of conflicts in Angola, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Liberia and Sierra Leone, and the ongoing value of the Certification Scheme as a mechanism for the prevention of future conflicts;

4. Stresses that the widest possible participation in the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme is essential and should be encouraged, and urges all Member States to participate actively in the Certification Scheme by complying with its undertakings;

5. Notes with appreciation the report of the Chair of the Kimberley Process submitted pursuant to resolution 58/290, and congratulates the Governments, regional economic integration organization representatives, the organized diamond industry and civil society participating in the Kimberley Process for contributing to the development and implementation of the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme;

6. Takes note of the decision of the General Council of the World Trade Organization of 15 May 2003 granting a waiver with respect to the measures taken to implement the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme, effective from 1 January 2003 to 31 December 2006;

7. Welcomes the progress achieved at the plenary meeting of the Kimberley Process held in Gatineau, Canada, from 27 to 29 October 2004, expanding the mandate of the Participation Committee to advise the Chair on matters of non-compliance by participants;

8. Also welcomes the important progress made towards the implementation of the peer review mechanism, including the submission of annual reports by all participants and the completion of eleven voluntary review visits, and encourages all remaining participants to receive voluntary review visits;

9. Encourages all participants in the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme to collate and submit relevant statistical data on the production of and international trade in rough diamonds as a tool for effective implementation and as envisaged by the Certification Scheme;

10. Acknowledges with great appreciation the important contribution that Canada, as Chair of the Kimberley Process in 2004, has made to the efforts to curb the trade in conflict diamonds, and welcomes the succession of the Russian Federation as Chair and Botswana as Vice-Chair of the Process for 2005;

11. Requests the Chair of the Kimberley Process to submit a report on the implementation of the Process to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixtieth session the item entitled "The role of diamonds in fuelling conflict".

Information technology

ECA activities under the subprogramme on harnessing information for development was focused on assisting member States in strengthening national capacities for the utilization of information and communication technologies (ICTs), including strengthening capacities in the development and use of information knowledge systems as decision-support tools for socioeconomic development. Activities were undertaken to promote the growth of the information society in Africa and the harnessing of ICTs to achieve broad development goals, including the MDGs. A major achievement was the increase in the number of African countries that had developed national information and communication infrastructure plans and policies. ECA assisted the Comoros, Ghana, Mali and Niger in developing strategies for the adoption and use of ICTs. The Gambia and Malawi received support for integrating their ICT policies with poverty reduction strategies and the MDGs, and in building capacity for application in social sectors, such as health and education. ECA also began to implement a pilot project on the development of e-strategy at the village level, with the development of village information and communication infrastructure policies, and developed plans for Ghana, aimed at making ICTs accessible to rural communities.

As follow-up to the first phase of the World Summit on the Information Society [YUN 2003, p. 857], ECA organized a meeting (Addis Ababa, February) to discuss preparations for the second phase in 2005. It also organized two workshops (Addis Ababa, February); the first reviewed achievements under the first phase of its benchmarking initiative, the SCAN-ICT project, a multi-donor project aimed at building capacity for gathering information and data in support of investment in ICT; the second reviewed progress in the formulation and implementation of national ICT infrastructure plans and strategies.

Transport and communications

An important objective of ECA's work in infrastructure development was to help establish an efficient, integrated and affordable transport and communications system and to facilitate national and international traffic. ECA continued to assist member States and regional economic communities in the implementation of the Yamoussoukro Declaration on air transport liberalization [YUN 1988, p. 273], particularly in strengthening their capacity to implement the Declaration and incorporate it into their national policies. ECA and the Sub-Saharan Africa Transport Programme (SSATP), in collaboration with Ethiopia, organized the SSATP annual general meetings (September), which highlighted improvements in collaboration between regional economic communities and SSATP, the increased participation of countries (33 countries joined SSATP in 2004), and the inclusion of road safety in the SSATP action plan. The meeting identified priority activities to be implemented as part of corridor development and increased movement of people and goods.

Other notable activities in the area of transport included a study on the development of multi-modal transport in Africa, which was endorsed by an expert group meeting on the subject, and a study on best practices for the commercialization and privatization of rail, air, road and maritime transport, highlighting the importance of private sector involvement in the development of infrastructure and services. ECA also contributed to a NEPAD short-term action plan on infrastructure. It organized a forum (Yaoundé, Cameroon, December) on transport infrastructure and regional integration for the Central Africa subregion.

Food security and sustainable development

ECA's work under the subprogramme of fostering sustainable development focused on assisting member States in defining their environmental challenges and priorities, and identifying strategies for addressing them.

As a contribution to the 10-year review of the Dakar/Ngor Declaration on Population, Family and Sustainable Development [YUN 1992, p. 476] and the Programme of Action of the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) [YUN 1994, p. 955], ECA prepared a regional review which was adopted by the Regional Ministerial Review Conference on Implementation of the Dakar/Ngor Declaration and the Programme of Action of ICPD-10 (Dakar, Senegal, June 10-11) (see p. 1078), together with a ministerial declaration constituting a blueprint for the further implementation the Dakar/Ngor Declaration and the ICPD Programme of Action. ECA studied the role of National Councils for Sustainable Development in achieving sustainable development in Africa, as part of efforts to ensure integrated follow-up and implementation of the outcomes of the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821]. It prepared studies to create awareness of the potential of science and technology in achieving food security and sustainable development, including the study on emerging issues in science and technology—principles, methodology and strategy for promoting the African Green Revolution. It was also developing an African Green Revolution Design and Training Manual as a contribution to the African Green Revolution and as a tool for achieving MDG sustainable development targets in Africa.

ECA supported member States in promoting an integrated approach to national policy-making that included issues related to mineral resources development and assisted several regional organizations in elaborating their programmes in that field. Under the NEPAD regional consultations of UN agencies on the sub-cluster on water, the ECA secretariat organized three regional workshops for decision makers and technical personnel in Geo-Water Information Development and Management for Central African countries (Yaoundé, June), East Africa (Accra, Ghana, September) and East Africa (Mombassa, Kenya, October) to facilitate the development of an African Regional Water Clearinghouse for strengthening cooperation in integrated water resources management. ECA also launched the publication of the African Water Journal.

Development management

ECA activities under the subprogramme on strengthening development management were aimed at improving and sustaining good governance practices for broad stakeholder participation in the development process to strengthen the foundations for sustainable development in Africa. ECA organized the Fourth African Development Forum (Addis Ababa, 11-15 October) under the theme "Governance for a progressing Africa" to address key issues related to the challenges of achieving good governance. Before it were the findings of an ECA secretariat project on the development of indicators for measuring and monitoring progress towards that objective. The Forum focused on conflict prevention and sustainable economic development, strategies for fighting corruption, strengthening the judiciary, and ensuring effective political parties and a strong civil society. It adopted a Consensus Statement containing major policy recommendations and time-bound actions for follow-up at the country level, including for the enhancement of the role and participation of youth and civil society in the governance process in Africa.

Promoting trade and regional integration

The Trade and Regional Integration Division of ECA continued to promote the integration and participation of African countries in the global economy. Its office in Geneva, established in 2003, provided assistance and technical support to the African WTO Geneva Group in preparing its negotiating positions within the framework of the Doha Development Agenda, adopted by the Fourth WTO Ministerial Conference [YUN 2001, p. 1432], and its proposals and submissions on various WTO issues under negotiation. Following the failure of the 2003 Fifth WTO Ministerial Conference [YUN 2003, p. 967], ECA organized a number of meetings to assist the region's countries in developing strategies for further negotiations, including a high-level brainstorming meeting of African trade negotiators (Addis Ababa, November) to evaluate the implications for African countries of the so-called July Framework Agreements at WTO.

ECA's work of building sustainable trade capacities of African countries was enhanced by the Africa Trade Policy Centre, recently established to strengthen Africa's trading capacity in line with the trade-related objectives of NEPAD. It supported African capacity-building efforts through policy research and training activities.

ECA increased its support to member States in building a strategy for the ongoing negotiations on Economic Partnership Agreements (EPAs) between the African, Caribbean and Pacific States and European Union countries, by undertaking an impact assessment of EPAs and organizing four subregional expert group meetings to examine the main challenges of the negotiations and the potential implications of the EPAs for subregional economies.

A major accomplishment was the launch in July of a publication entitled "Assessment of Regional Integration in Africa", produced in collaboration with the AU and the African Development Bank, which provided the first comprehensive assessment of progress towards regional integration in Africa.

Integration of women in development

Promoting the advancement of women in Africa remained a major priority of ECA's work programme, involving the continuing elaboration of tools and mechanisms for monitoring progress towards the goal of gender equality set in global and regional platforms of action and for mainstreaming gender into national planning instruments. Those objectives were being achieved through the African Gender and Development Index, which entered an expanded phase with field trials in 12 countries. The Index would provide tools for measuring the performance of ECA member States in addressing gender equality, promote political awareness of gender issues and help streamline reporting on gender-related human rights issues, the MDGs and NEPAD.

The seventh African Regional Conference on Women (Addis Ababa, October), organized as the regional review of the Beijing Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170] (Beijing +10), endorsed the Index. The Conference adopted an outcome document on the way forward, which reviewed progress achieved and major constraints to the advancement of women in Africa and highlighted further actions to accelerate progress in the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action, especially in such critical areas as poverty reduction, HIV/AIDS, human rights of women, health, education, the girl-child and women's participation in peace-building and reconstruction.

To promote the collection of gender-aggregated data, ECA produced and disseminated 53 country gender profiles based on secondary data collected in a number of thematic areas. It produced a guidebook entitled "Mainstreaming Gender Perspectives and Household Production in National Accounts, Budgets and Policies in Africa" to improve the skills of statisticians, national accountants and policy analysis experts in collecting, analysing and integrating gender-disaggregated micro- and macro-economic statistics into national planning instruments. ECA also prepared the first National Satellite Accounts of Household Production for South Africa and developed a gender-aware macro-economic model to evaluate the impact of policies on poverty reduction and welfare, using the South African economy as a pilot case.

Subregional offices

The five subregional offices (SROS), located in Central, East, North, Southern and West Africa, strengthened policy dialogue by sharing information with African experts principally through meetings of ad hoc expert groups and intergovernmental expert committees. They continued to collaborate with the UN system through the UN Resident Coordinator system and the CCA/UNDAF, a major outcome of which was the publication of a joint report assessing progress towards meeting the MDGs. The SROS helped to facilitate a better understanding of trade issues in the context of the Doha work programme (see p. 958) and of current negotiations on economic partnership agreements between Africa and Europe. They supported member States and subregional economic communities in translating NEPAD priorities and objectives into concrete country-level projects and programmes, including formulation of subregional strategies for infrastructure development and the assessment of progress in implementation.

Construction of office facilities at ECA

In October [A/59/444], the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 56/270 [YUN 2002, p. 1459], reported to the Assembly on progress in the construction of additional office facilities at ECA headquarters in Addis Ababa, including activities related to the preliminary design. Also submitted to the Assembly were the related comments and recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions [A/59/572]. (For details on this subject, see p. 1364.)

Regional cooperation

Cooperation between UN and ECCAS

The Secretary-General, in his consolidated report on cooperation between the United Nations and regional and other organizations [A/59/303], submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 58/316 (see p. 1374), provided information on cooperation between the UN system and the Economic Community of Central African States (ECCAS).

The Assembly, by decision 59/552 of 23 December, decided that the item on cooperation between the United Nations and ECCAS would remain for consideration at its resumed (2005) fifty-ninth session.

Cooperation between UN and SADC

The Secretary-General, in his consolidated report on cooperation between the United Nations and regional and other organizations [A/59/303], provided information on cooperation between the UN system and the Southern African Development Community (SADC).

On 2 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 59/49 (see p. 1459), invited SADC to participate in its sessions in the capacity of observer.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/140 [draft: A/59/L.42 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 56 (s)].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Community

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/248 of 21 December 1982 and all other relevant General Assembly resolutions and decisions on the promotion of cooperation between the United Nations and the Southern African

Development Community, including resolution 57/44 of 21 November 2002 and decision 56/443 of 21 December 2001,

Welcoming the adoption of its resolution 59/49 of 2 December 2004, in which it decided to invite the Community to participate in its sessions and its work in the capacity of observer,

Commending States members of the Community for demonstrating continued commitment to deeper and more formal arrangements for cooperation among themselves towards regional integration,

Recognizing the continued efforts to strengthen democracy, good governance, sound economic management, human rights and the rule of law and the consolidation of peace, including the adoption at the annual summit of the Community, held in Mauritius on 16 and 17 August 2004, of the Principles and Guidelines Governing Democratic Elections,

Noting with concern the HIV/AIDS pandemic, which has reached crisis proportions in the region, and the high prevalence of communicable diseases such as malaria and tuberculosis, which are having far-reaching social and economic consequences,

Noting the continued efforts of the Community to make Southern Africa a landmine-free zone,

Expressing concern about the very difficult humanitarian situation in countries of the region,

Welcoming the launch by the Community of the Strategic Indicative Plan for the Organ on Politics, Defence and Security Cooperation in August 2004 as an enabling instrument for the implementation of the development agenda embodied in the Regional Indicative Strategic Development Plan of the Community,

Recognizing the important role that women play in the development of the region,

Recognizing also the important role of civil society and the private sector in the development of the region,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and regional and other organizations;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations funds and programmes as well as the international community for the financial, technical and material support given to the Southern African Development Community;

3. Expresses its support for the economic reforms being implemented by States members of the Community, in pursuance of their shared vision of creating a strengthened regional economic community through deeper economic integration;

4. Calls upon the international community to strengthen support for the measures taken by the Community in addressing HIV/AIDS, including commitments on the outcome of the special session of the General Assembly on HIV/AIDS, as well as support for the implementation of the Maseru Declaration on the Fight against HIV/AIDS;

5. Appeals to the United Nations, its related bodies and the international community to assist and support the Community in its efforts against landmines;

6. Appeals to the international community and to relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to continue providing financial, technical and material assistance to the Community to support its efforts to fully implement the Regional Indicative Strategic Development Plan and the New Partnership for Africa's Development as well as towards the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals;

7. Calls upon the international community to support the efforts of the Community in capacity-building and in addressing the new challenges, opportunities and consequences presented to the economies in the region arising from the process of globalization and liberalization;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Executive Secretary of the Community, to enhance contacts aimed at promoting and harmonizing further cooperation between the United Nations and the Community;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session a report on cooperation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Community.

Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) held its sixtieth session (Shanghai, China, 26-28 April) [E/2004/39], preceded by a senior officials segment (22-24 April), under the theme "Meeting the challenges in an era of globalization by strengthening regional development cooperation". The High-level Visionary Meeting for Asia and the Pacific 2020 was held in place of the traditional Ministerial Round Table. The Commission reviewed policy issues for the ESCAP region; emerging issues and developments at the regional level; least developed, landlocked and island developing countries; programme planning and evaluation; ESCAP technical cooperation activities; activities of the Advisory Committee of Permanent Representatives and Other Representatives Designated by Members of the Commission; and reports of regional intergovernmental bodies.

Economic trends

According to the summary of the economic and social survey of Asia and the Pacific, 2005 [E/2005/18], economic performance in the ESCAP region for 2004 was marked by an impressive 7.2 per cent estimated GDP growth rate, the highest since 2000, and low inflation, which was supported by robust export growth, higher commodity prices and strong domestic demand driven by low interest rates.

Overall growth in East and North-East Asia climbed to 7.5 per cent, 1.3 percentage point higher than in 2003, led by China, with a real GDP growth rate of 9.5 per cent. North and Central Asia also enjoyed another year of buoyant growth, although marginally lower than that of 2003, with the economies of Tajikistan, Azerbaijan and Armenia maintaining their dominant positions. The energy sector was the main driver of growth, accounting for some one third of GDP and one half of exports in Kazakhstan and the Russian Federation.

Real GDP growth continued at the modest pace of 3 per cent in the Pacific island economies, supported by higher prices for commodity exports and increased tourism. Improved economic management reduced budget deficits and lowered public debt, leading to greatly improved inflation performance. However, macroeconomic stability had not resulted in faster economic growth owing to the absence of an investor-friendly environment brought on by political instability, poor governance, corruption and law-and-order problems.

In the developed economies of South and South-West Asia, the already high economic growth improved slightly, from 7.2 per cent to 7.4 per cent. Rates of inflation picked up in Pakistan and Sri Lanka, but fell somewhat in India and Iran and more sharply in Turkey. Among the least developed countries (LDCs) of South Asia, economic growth improved modestly, although Afghanistan and Bangladesh were affected by bad weather, and the Maldives was devastated by the December 2004 tsunami (see p. 952). Inflation was generally lower, partly owing to currency appreciation, which offset the rise in petroleum prices.

GDP growth in South-East Asia increased to 6.4 per cent, compared to 4.9 per cent the previous year. That growth was broadly-based, with manufacturing particularly benefiting from the upturn in the electronics cycle and strong export demand. Higher food and energy prices put upward pressure on price levels in the subregion but were partly offset by fuel subsidies in some countries. In the LDCs of South-East Asia, economic growth continued to vary widely from year to year, depending on developments in the agricultural sector. With the exception of Myanmar, inflation tended to be lower in all of those countries, owing to greater exchange-rate stability and prudent monetary policies, although higher oil prices were beginning to affect the general price level.

In the developed countries of the region, recently revised economic data from Japan indicated that, after years of stagnation, growth was much stronger, reaching a high of 2.6 per cent, compared to 1.3 per cent the previous year. Growth accelerated in New Zealand to 4.8 per cent, while remaining substantially unchanged in Australia at 3.5 per cent, supported by buoyant domestic demand and high commodity prices. Deflationary pressures eased in Japan, but the fiscal deficit continued to present a daunting challenge. The fiscal position in Australia and New Zealand remained strong, but monetary policy in the latter was tightened in the face of price-pressure build-up. The boom in the Australian housing market appeared to have passed its peak and inflation was subdued.

Policy issues

Among the issues with significant policy implications for ESCAP Governments in the near term was the exacerbation of an already volatile economic situation by higher oil prices, which were likely to remain under upward pressure for some time, posing a significant threat of inflation that would discourage investment. There was also the possibility that the external environment could deteriorate in the coming months. Those developments, together with a weakening dollar, posed a major challenge to the maintenance of growth and macroeconomic stability.

Several long-term development policy issues faced the ESCAP region. The tsunami disaster (see p. 952) illustrated the lack of a systematic disaster management framework, including disaster mitigation measures, in many countries and highlighted the importance of handling vulnerability to achieve a sustainable reduction in poverty in line with the MDG of halving by 2015 the proportion of the world's people whose income was less than a dollar a day [YUN 2000, p. 52]. While most countries in the region were making progress towards that goal, they nevertheless were likely to miss many of the other non-income-related goals. Reaching the targets within and across countries would require more national and international resources, and a radical shift in attitudes, priorities and policies to ensure equitable and sustainable basic services. Meeting the twin challenges of sustaining growth and reducing inequality was high on the region's policy agenda. Some of the most important issues were employment opportunities, especially for the young; access to productive assets; public spending on basic social services; gender equality; and population policy and good governance.

At its 2004 session, the Commission considered a report on the current economic situation in the region and related policy issues [E/ESCAP/1304] and a paper on meeting the challenges in an era of globalization by strengthening regional development cooperation [E/ESCAP/1305]. The Commission recognized that the most pressing long-term challenge facing the region was poverty, and its eradication had to be given the highest priority, requiring not just economic growth but also good governance, increased regional cooperation, and integrated national strategies that focused on generating additional employment, creating productive assets, imparting technical and entrepreneurial skills, and raising the income levels of the poor on a targeted basis and providing them with wider educational facilities. Recognizing that economic indicators did not always reflect the reality of people's lives or explain the reasons for underdevelopment, ESCAP encouraged its secretariat to study alternative standard measures of poverty and assist in the design of more effective indicators of development.

ESCAP agreed that many LDCs lacked the necessary human and financial capital and institutions to enable them to reap the benefits of globalization, and that technical assistance would be useful in the restructuring and institutional development of those countries. ESCAP should use its comparative advantage and enhance its ability to assist countries within its thematic areas through technical assistance and capacity-building activities. In particular, it should strengthen coordination and partnership with other organizations to assist member countries in achieving greater cooperation by analysing and providing access to relevant cross-country experiences.

Activities in 2004

Strengthening regional development cooperation

ESCAP had before it a report on policy issues for the ESCAP region: meeting the challenges in an era of globalization by strengthening regional development cooperation [E/ESCAP/1305] and a publication on the subject [E/ESCAP/2319]. By a resolution of 28 April [E/2004/39 (res. 60/1)], it adopted the Shanghai Declaration, which it hoped would be a milestone for deepening cooperation among the countries and territories of the Asian and Pacific region, and recommended the Declaration for adoption by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 July [meeting 42], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ESCAP [E/2004/15/Add.1], adopted resolution 2004/6 without vote [agenda item 10].

Shanghai Declaration

The Economic and Social Council,

Endorses the Shanghai Declaration adopted on 28 April by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific at its sixtieth session, as set out in the annex to the present resolution.

AnnexShanghai Declaration*I. General provisions

1. We, members and associate members of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, on the occasion of the historic sixtieth session of the Commission, express our deep appreciation to the Government and citizens of the People's Republic of China for hosting the present session in Shanghai, the birthplace of the Commission, and to the government and citizens of Shanghai municipality.

2. We reiterate our commitment to multilateralism and to addressing global issues through dialogue, consultation and cooperation.

3. We reaffirm that the United Nations has a central role in promoting international cooperation for development and in promoting policy coherence on global development issues, including in the context of globalization and interdependence.

4. We support further reform of the United Nations with a view to promoting its important role in peace and development and in establishing a cohesive and effective system for responding to global threats and challenges, as well as enhancing the effectiveness of the United Nations through increased coordination and cooperation between the various agencies and their programmes within the United Nations system.

5. We note the diversity in the levels of development of countries and areas of the Asian and Pacific region and the special needs of the least developed economies, landlocked and island developing economies, and economies in transition.

6. We emphasize the unique role of the Commission as the most representative body for the Asian and Pacific region and its mandate as the main general economic and social development centre within the United Nations system for the Asian and Pacific region.

7. We reaffirm our determination to strengthen further the role, capacity and efficiency of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific to respond more effectively to the needs of its members and associate members and to existing and new global challenges.

8. We welcome the achievements of the region in economic and social development, including progress made in achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 55/2 of 8 September 2000, and the outcomes and final documents of major United Nations summits and international conferences.

9. We renew our commitment to enhancing sub-regional and regional cooperation and remain conscious of the need to further improve national capacities in order to promote sustainable development in the Asian and Pacific region.

10. In this context, we acknowledge the importance of the main theme of the Shanghai session, "Meeting the challenges in an era of globalization by strengthening regional development cooperation".

11. We reaffirm that South-South cooperation, South-North cooperation and triangular cooperation play important roles in promoting development and contribute to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration.

12. We note that globalization offers opportunities and challenges to the world, particularly for the developing countries, and that it is only through greater economic growth coupled with broad, sustained and collaborative efforts that globalization can be made fully inclusive and equitable so that the poor are not left behind. At the same time, the benefits of globalization can be realized only when environmental pressure from the impact of globalization is properly addressed through strengthened common strategies in the Asian and Pacific region.

13. We welcome the conclusion and holding of the signing ceremony of the Intergovernmental Agreement on the Asian Highway Network and the inaugural session of the Asia-Pacific Business Forum, and look forward to the first meeting of the Ministerial Council of the Asia-Pacific Trade Agreement as part of the efforts to strengthen the development of infrastructure and foster closer trade relations within the region. We reaffirm the importance of focusing the work of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific on its three thematic areas: poverty reduction, managing globalization and addressing emerging social issues.

II. Poverty reduction

14. In the area of poverty reduction, we will strive:

(a) To maximize the contribution of economic growth in reducing poverty and hunger, by consolidating successes and facilitating the sharing of best practices, with a view to halving, by 2015, the proportion of people suffering from poverty and hunger, thus making the region a forerunner in the global campaign against poverty;

(b) To implement policies aimed at engendering confidence in the operation of markets to assist in the creation of a favourable business environment;

(c) To emphasize the importance of according priority to the fight against hunger and poverty and, in this context, put in place the necessary policy and institutional framework and implement programmes that are designed to overcome hunger and poverty;

(d) To encourage the efficient utilization of existing financial, physical and human resources and the involvement of all stakeholders, including Governments, international organizations, international and regional development and financial institutions, donors and civil society, to achieve the internationally agreed sustainable development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration;

(e) To eliminate corruption at all levels, welcoming in that regard the adoption of the United Nations Convention against Corruption and inviting all member States to sign and ratify it as soon as possible in order to ensure its rapid entry into force.

III. Managing globalization

15. In the area of managing globalization, we will strive:

(a) To address the regional and interregional aspects of the follow-up to the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development;

(b) To revitalize the multilateral trading system, taking into account the importance of promoting the objectives set out in the Millennium Declaration of ensuring an open, equitable, rule-based, predictable and non-discriminatory multilateral trading system;

(c) To work towards a successful, timely and development-oriented conclusion of the Doha negotiations;

(d) To take action to enable those countries in the region that are not yet members of the World Trade Organization to accede to it in order to participate more effectively in the multilateral trading system;

(e) To strengthen national capacities to negotiate, conclude and implement multilateral and regional agreements designed to promote interregional and intraregional trade and investment flows;

(f) To implement, in a timely fashion, the various regional and subregional economic cooperation initiatives in promoting trade and investment, with a view to expanding economic interaction and promoting stable growth and prosperity for the entire region;

(g) To mobilize investment from domestic and foreign resources by strengthening and developing domestic financial systems and creating an enabling environment;

(h) To advance current efforts to reform the international financial architecture as envisaged in the Monterrey Consensus and promote the effective participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in those efforts;

(i) To take action at the regional level to ensure the effective implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development, including the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, in which some of the salient features of the Phnom Penh Regional Platform on Sustainable Development for Asia and the Pacific were reflected, to move the region towards a more sustainable path to development, with the developed countries taking the lead and with all countries benefiting from the process, taking into account the principles of common but differentiated responsibilities, while taking note of the recent follow-up activities, including the Kyoto Ministerial Declaration and the Jeju Initiative;

(j) To make the next ten years a decade of economic growth and sustainable development in the region, striving to meet the various internationally agreed goals;

(k) To undertake regular studies and analyses of regional environmental trends, strengthen national capacities for protecting the environment consistent with national commitments and support regional and subregional environmental cooperation;

(l) To assist in capacity-building and the formulation and implementation of strategies and action plans for the sustainable use of water resources, with a special focus on problems of water quality and access to safe drinking water for the poor;

(m) To promote capacity-building in sustainable energy development, enhanced utilization of renewable energy and energy efficiency improvement and to support subregional cooperation in energy sector development;

(n) To develop an integrated intermodal transport network in Asia and the Pacific as well as Asia-Europe transport corridors;

(o) To implement the Plan of Action adopted at the first phase of the World Summit on the Information Society, held in Geneva from 10 to 12 December 2003, and take action to achieve the objectives of the World Summit as enunciated in the Declaration of Principles and the Plan of Action adopted at the first phase, and to prepare for the second phase in 2005, paying special attention to least developed countries, landlocked developing countries, small island developing States and countries with economies in transition;

(p) To promote regional cooperation and effective integration of satellite-based information and communication technology applications with other information technologies for informed sustainable economic and social development planning and management and improved quality of life;

(q) To promote the development of transport and tourism in the region so as to provide opportunities for increased national, regional and international trade and better access to health and education services, and to promote cultural exchanges.

IV. Emerging social issues

16. In the area of emerging social issues, we will strive:

(a) To promote social policy development and the mainstreaming of social dimensions in national development programmes;

(b) To improve the development and delivery of basic social services, such as education, health and nutrition, focusing on vulnerable population groups;

(c) To enhance cooperation in capacity-building in public health, inter alia, through the exchange of information and the sharing of experience, as well as research and training programmes focusing on surveillance, prevention, control, response, care and treatment in respect of infectious diseases;

(d) To coordinate a more effective and comprehensive response to HIV/AIDS and other serious diseases in the region by prioritizing effective strategies against them in national development planning, committing sufficient resources, mobilizing the private sector and civil society, enhancing sustained and comprehensive intervention and strengthening regional cooperation in establishing preventive measures and increasing the availability of affordable quality drugs;

(e) To foster an integrated social safety net and, particularly, to establish a social safety net which provides necessary assistance to the unemployed, the poor and senior citizens, as well as other vulnerable groups;

(f) To promote and support gender equality and eliminate discrimination against women;

(g) To promote human security in the region through greater regional cooperation, especially for vulnerable people;

(h) To support and encourage the active participation of all relevant stakeholders, including the business community, for the promotion of social development.

V. Overarching issues

17. On overarching issues, we will strive:

(a) To fully implement the Monterrey Consensus;

(b) To promote regional cooperation by inviting the United Nations regional commissions, in collaboration with other regional and subregional organizations and processes, as appropriate, to contribute, within their mandates, to the review of progress made towards achieving the internationally agreed development goals contained in the Millennium Declaration, which synthesizes and prioritizes the key elements of major international conferences held in prior years, and to provide input to the discussions of the Economic and Social Council on the cross-sectoral thematic issues to be addressed during the coordination segment of its substantive session, in accordance with the rules of procedure of the Council;

(c) To intensify our efforts to implement effectively in the Asian and Pacific region the International Plan of Action for the United Nations Literacy Decade;

(d) To implement the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010 and the Almaty Plan of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries;

(e) To promote initiatives for the least developed countries in the context of South-South cooperation by implementing projects that address the special needs of those countries;

(f) To support the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States and work towards a positive outcome at the review of the implementation of the Programme of Action in Mauritius;

(g) To strengthen and support the implementation of the United Nations Special Programme for the Economies of Central Asia;

(h) To encourage the establishment of a regional network of research institutions and universities in the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific region by 2006 in order to promote education, technical skills development and technology transfer through the exchange of programmes, students and academics.

VI. Strengthening of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific

18. We reaffirm the vital role of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific in fostering sustainable economic and social development in Asia and the Pacific.

19. We request the Executive Secretary to design programmes, within the existing mandate and resources of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, that reflect the overall vision contained in the present Declaration, to present the programme of work for endorsement by the Commission and to report on these matters to the Commission at future sessions.

20. We resolve, therefore, to support efforts by the Executive Secretary to mobilize and make effective use of additional financial and in-kind resources in support of activities of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific and for its further revitalization in line with the needs and priorities of its members and associate members.

21. We also request the Commission to review on a regular basis the progress made in implementing the provisions of the present Declaration.

Poverty reduction

ESCAP endorsed the report of the Committee on Poverty Reduction on its first session [YUN 2003, p. 1009]. The Committee had urged ESCAP, at the Economic and Social Council's June high-level segment, to present the true scope of poverty in Asia and the Pacific in order to attract the attention of donor countries and forge partnerships. Noting that poverty reduction required an enabling international economic environment, ESCAP requested the secretariat to organize a high-level meeting with the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund) to engage in policy dialogue and explore practicable cooperative arrangements, and to encourage countries to meet their commitments as set out in the Monterrey Consensus [YUN 2002, p. 953].

ESCAP urged countries of the region and their development partners, including ESCAP, to strengthen their efforts to accelerate the pace of achieving the MDGs, including developing national plans for that purpose. It called for the adoption of a comprehensive approach with greater emphasis on better access to financial and non-financial resources, human security, increased investments in health and education, empowerment of women, better governance, rural development, environmental protection, social protection, enhanced participation of all stakeholders and more effective partnerships between Governments, non-governmental organizations (NGOs), the private sector and other civil society entities. It also called for strengthening ESCAP's capacity to address poverty reduction and for fostering regional cooperation in that regard. The secretariat should assist developing countries and LDCs in mobilizing resources and in making them more accessible to the poor. The Commission welcomed the secretariat's work to promote the use of ICT for rural poverty reduction, especially for enhancing market access by the poor, improving social service delivery in remote areas and for lifelong learning. It recommended the promotion of public-private partnerships for the provision of basic services as an approach to poverty alleviation.

ESCAP endorsed the recommendations of the Committee on Poverty Reduction on poverty measurement and concurred with its view that sound poverty measurement at the country level depended on the national statistical system. It supported the formulation of a regional action plan to improve poverty statistics and monitoring in the region. The Commission urged the secretariat to ensure that all information was available to different users and to continue playing an active role in implementing a wide range of statistical capacity-building measures. The secretariat should also contribute to the UN Statistics Division handbook on poverty statistics and take advantage of ICT initiatives to enhance statistical capabilities. It should also collaborate in producing more accurate and objective data for measuring the MDGs, study alternative measures of poverty, and assist in designing more effective indicators of development.

In adopting the Shanghai Declaration (see p. 1002), ESCAP reaffirmed its commitments to reduce poverty (see p. 1004), as set out in the Declaration.

The Subcommittee on Poverty Reduction Practices, at its first session (Bangkok, Thailand, 30 June–2 July) [E/ESCAP/SCPRP/Rep.], discussed creating an enabling environment for successful poverty reduction initiatives, implementing ESCAP's poverty reduction strategies, evaluating the impact of targeted poverty reduction programmes, and selected policy issues in poverty reduction.

Statistics

ESCAP noted the report of the Governing Board of the Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific (SIAP) [E/ESCAP/1319], which highlighted the Institute's accomplishments and the factors and strategies that guided the implementation of its activities, the 2004 work programme, the 2005–2009 long-term work programme approved by the Board at its ninth session (Chiba, Japan, 14–15 November 2003), and the Institute's financial status.

The Commission noted that additional contributions and technical assistance were required to place the Institute on a sound financial footing to enable it to respond effectively to the evolving needs of ESCAP members and associate members. It supported the Board's recommendation that a three-year, rather than a five-year, strategic plan be adopted as a more effective way to adjust programmes to changing needs and situations; it recommended that the secretariat formulate measures to implement the suggestion made in the 2003 independent evaluation [YUN 2003, p. 1015] that the Institute play a coordinating role in regional statistical training activities.

The Subcommittee on Statistics of the Committee on Poverty Reduction, at its first session (Bangkok, 18–20 February) [E/ESCAP/CRP(2)/4], conducted an overview of significant global and regional issues in official statistics and examined ESCAP activities in social, poverty and economic statistics, statistical training including the Institute's role, reports for the Subcommittee's attention and programme matters. It noted that the draft Regional Action Plan on Poverty Statistics submitted in 2003 to the Committee on Poverty Reduction [YUN 2003, p. 1009] was broad and ambitious, and whose viability rested on the financing of the activities called for and coordination of regional efforts. The Subcommittee decided that the ESCAP secretariat should revise the Regional Action Plan on Poverty Statistics and clearly identify priority activities.

The Expert Group Meeting on Population and Housing Censuses (Bangkok, 9–10 December), held in preparation for the 2010 Round of Population and Housing Censuses, requested ESCAP to facilitate communication between the regional and global census programmes and ensure their full coordination and mutual support. The Meeting recommended that ESCAP establish a forum for census stakeholders to discuss issues of concern and share experiences. It identified a number of priorities for establishing activities to be carried out in the coming years.

Managing globalization

ESCAP endorsed the report of the Committee on Managing Globalization on its first session [YUN 2003, p. 1010], including its recommendations, and expressed satisfaction with the progress made in implementing six ESCAP resolutions relating to the theme of managing globalization, as described in a March note by the secretariat [E/ESCAP/1308].

In its consideration of selected cross-cutting issues, ESCAP encouraged its members to establish national trade and transport committees to address the high cost of trade and transport transactions and asked the secretariat to provide support and guidance in that regard. The Commission also asked the secretariat: to provide training and advisory services to countries undertaking corridor studies in applying the ESCAP cost/time-distance model and the Trade Facilitation Framework; to accord priority to bridging the digital divide through sharing of best practices, capacity-building and pilot projects; and to promote e-centres in order to bring the benefits of globalization to rural areas. The Commission recognized that ICT had a high impact on the flow of capital, goods, services and knowledge, thus becoming one of the main driving forces of globalization.

ESCAP noted the common understanding and strategies developed at regional expert meetings for mapping out a 10-year plan for revising current consumption and production patterns and for translating international commitments into reality.

Least developed, landlocked and island developing countries

Special Body on Pacific Island Developing Countries

ESCAP endorsed the recommendation of the eighth session (Shanghai, 20-21 April) [E/ESCAP/1312] of the Special Body on Pacific Island Developing Countries on urban management issues in Pacific island developing countries and on the revitalization of the ESCAP Pacific Operations Centre. On 28 April, ESCAP adopted a resolution on the Centre's revitalization (see p. 1011).

ESCAP also adopted a resolution [E/2004/39 (res. 60/7)] endorsing the Pacific Urban Agenda developed by an ESCAP workshop (Nadi, Fiji, 1-4 December 2003) on the urban governance initiative of UNDP, the United Nations Human Settlements Programme and the Pacific Islands Forum secretariat. It requested the Executive Secretary to accord priority to the implementation of the Agenda and called on Pacific members and associate members to address the actions outlined therein; it invited partner agencies to provide technical and financial support, and members and associate members to coordinate implementation. It also asked the Executive Secretary to convene a workshop in 2006 for the exchange of experience and capacity-building and to report to ESCAP at its sixty-second (2006) session.

Economic and technical cooperation

In 2004, ESCAP received $11.5 million for technical cooperation activities [E/ESCAP/1351], significantly less than the $13.6 million for 2003, but that did not include additional multimillion dollar contributions, which would be deferred to 2005. Of the 2004 amount, $5.7 million (49.2 per cent) was contributed by the UN system and $5.8 million from individual countries. Contributions from three developed countries (Japan, Finland, United States) provided over 50 per cent ($3.3 million) of the total bilateral assistance, with Japan contributing the most. Among the developing countries, the Republic of Korea, China and India were the largest contributors. In addition to cash contributions, donor countries provided some 113 work-months of expert services on a non-reimbursable basis.

ESCAP adopted a resolution [E/2003/39 (res. 60/3)] on its work in implementing technical cooperation projects, which it recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 July [meeting 42], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ESCAP [E/

2004/15/Add.1], adopted resolution 2004/7 without vote [agenda item 10].

Work of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific in implementing its technical cooperation projects

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 37(IV) of 28 March 1947, by which it established the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, and in particular paragraphs 1 (d) and (e) of the terms of reference of the Commission, regarding advisory services and technical assistance,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977, through which the Commission was mandated to serve as the main general economic and social development centre within the United Nations system for the Asian and Pacific region and as an executing agency for intersectoral, subregional, regional and interregional projects,

Cognizant of the scope of the responsibilities of the Commission, the domain of which comprises the largest region in the world in geographical coverage and contains 62 per cent of the world's population, as well as the majority of the world's poor,

Aware of the focus of the work of the Commission on three key thematic areas, namely, poverty reduction, managing globalization and addressing emerging social issues,

1. Recognizes with appreciation that the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific has been implementing a number of technical cooperation projects that strengthen the capacity of Commission members and associate members in the development and implementation of policies and programmes in the economic and social fields;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those traditional donors which have made significant voluntary contributions to the technical cooperation activities of the Commission, and invites non-traditional donors to increase their contributions;

3. Welcomes the efforts of the Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific to focus on high-priority, results-oriented and demand-based projects, and requests him to implement such projects in an effective and efficient manner;

4. Recognizes the need for the technical cooperation activities of the Commission to be guided by the internationally agreed development goals contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 55/2 of 8 September 2000, and the outcomes of United Nations summits and conferences, including the Doha Development Agenda, the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, the Monterrey Consensus, the Almaty Programme of Action and the Plan of Action of the World Summit on the Information Society;

5. Also recognizes that the Commission has comparative strengths and advantages in certain technical cooperation activities in the Asian and Pacific region, and requests the Executive Secretary, in carrying out the technical cooperation activities of the Commission, to continue to attach high priority to the following areas:

(a) Capacity-building for members and associate members to plan and implement effective policies and programmes in the economic and social fields through training activities, such as organizing seminars, workshops and the exchange of experts;

(b) Provision of advisory services, at the request of members or associate members, to strengthen their capacity to respond effectively to the challenges of globalization in the region;

(c) Identification of existing good practices in the region and promotion of their introduction in places where feasibility studies yield positive results;

(d) Enhancement of awareness among members and associate members and facilitation of the dissemination of relevant information;

6. Urges the Executive Secretary to implement the projects in close cooperation with the participating Governments and relevant international organizations and bodies, as well as in partnership with the private sector and relevant non-governmental organizations;

7. Also urges the Executive Secretary to pay particular attention to the special needs of socially vulnerable groups and to the gender dimension when implementing projects;

8. Further urges the Executive Secretary to pay particular attention to the special needs of least developed countries, landlocked and Pacific island developing countries, and countries with economies in transition when implementing projects;

9. Expresses its appreciation to the Executive Secretary for actively monitoring and evaluating the projects of the Commission, and urges him to continue to do so in order to determine the effectiveness of those projects and to draw lessons therefrom for improved planning and implementation of future projects of the Commission;

10. Requests the Executive Secretary to include the following in his report to the Commission at its sixty-first session under the agenda item on technical cooperation activities of the Commission and announcement of intended contributions:

(a) His efforts to mobilize resources in areas such as broadening the donor base, cost-sharing, private sector funding and other innovative means in view of the trend towards declining voluntary contributions for technical cooperation activities;

(b) His strategy paper and action plan for technical cooperation activities for the year 2005 and thereafter, taking into account the priorities of the Commission and recognizing that the implementation of projects is subject to the availability of extrabudgetary resources;

(c) The results of the monitoring and evaluation of ongoing and recently completed projects for the purposes mentioned in paragraph 9 above.

Transport, communications, tourism and infrastructure development

ESCAP, having considered the report on the outcome of the International Ministerial Conference of Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Donor Countries and International Financial and Development Institutions on Transit Transport Cooperation [YUN 2003, p. 1010], requested the secretariat to continue to work with member countries to realize the vision of an integrated, international intermodal transport system that supported mobility, trade and tourism both domestically and across international borders. It endorsed the strategy on transport infrastructure and facilitation proposed by the Committee on Managing Globalization at its first session [ibid.].

Noting the progress made in the accession by member States to international conventions, and also noting that numerous agreements on transport and facilitation were already in place but that problems with implementation remained, ESCAP requested the secretariat to conduct workshops at the national and regional levels to enhance understanding and assist the implementation of existing agreements, including those listed in its resolution 48/11 [YUN 1992, p. 485]. It endorsed the convening in 2006 of a ministerial conference on transport to review the implementation of the New Delhi Action Plan on Infrastructure Development in Asia and the Pacific, 1997-2006 [YUN 1995, p. 1012] and to develop a strategy for the further development of reliable and efficient, integrated, intermodal international transport that facilitated international trade and tourism and economic integration processes.

In a resolution on the Intergovernmental Agreement on the Asian Highway Network [E/2004/39 (res. 60/4)], ESCAP welcomed the unanimous adoption in 2003 of that Agreement [YUN 2003, p. 1010], which the Economic and Social Council also welcomed in resolution 2004/8 (see p. 1008). ESCAP endorsed the development of an intergovernmental agreement on the Trans-Asian Railway and urged the secretariat to focus on additional land and land-cum-sea corridors, including the North-South and Southern Corridors.

In the context of Asia-Europe transport corridors, ESCAP underscored the importance of the joint ECE-ESCAP programme of work and noted the First Expert Group Meeting on Developing Euro-Asian Transport Linkages convened by those two regional commissions (Almaty, Kazakhstan, March). ESCAP requested the secretariat to focus on the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries [YUN 2003, p. 875].

ESCAP noted the secretariat's work in transport facilitation and assistance to the Greater Mekong subregion in preparation for the negotiation of facilitation agreements in collaboration with the Asian Development Bank. It requested the secretariat to continue to provide guidance to the Shanghai Cooperation Organization countries (China, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Russian Federation, Tajikistan, Uzbekistan) in the hope that that would lead to the development of a multilateral road transport facilitation agreement among them.

ESCAP endorsed the convening of an intergovernmental meeting on sustainable tourism development in 2005 to review the implementation of the Plan of Action for Sustainable Tourism Development in the Asian and Pacific Region [YUN 1999, p. 929] and to consider launching a second phase of the Plan, focusing on the promotion of transport linkages from a tourism perspective and the promotion of tourism as a means of reducing poverty. It encouraged the secretariat to assist member countries in accelerating the use of ICT in tourism, including the creation of mechanisms for preventing its abuse.

The Subcommittee on Transport Infrastructure and Facilitation and Tourism, at its first session (Bangkok, 24-26 November) [E/ESCAP/STIFT/Rep.], noted that 27 ESCAP member States had signed the Intergovernmental Agreement on the Asian Highway Network (see above) and that seven had become parties to it. Noting the progress made at a regional meeting (Bangkok, 22-23 November) to initiate negotiation of an intergovernmental agreement on the Trans-Asian Railway network, the Subcommittee recommended that an intergovernmental meeting be organized in 2005 to finalize and adopt the draft agreement for recommendation to ESCAP in 2006.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 July [meeting 42], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ESCAP [E/2004/15/Add.1], adopted resolution 2004/8 without vote [agenda item 10].

Intergovernmental Agreement on the Asian Highway Network

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the importance of international road transport to the development of the economy, trade and tourism in the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific region,

Recognizing also that an intergovernmental agreement on the Asian Highway network would play a catalytic role in the coordinated development of international highways in the region and between Asia and Europe,

Recalling the establishment of a working group to develop an intergovernmental agreement on the Asian Highway network, as recommended by the Ministerial Conference on Infrastructure, held in Seoul from 12 to 17 November 2001, and endorsed by the Commission at its fifty-eighth session,

Recalling also the decision of the Commission at its fifty-ninth session to convene an ad hoc intergovernmental meeting to consider and adopt the agreement in the second half of 2003 and its hope that the agreement could be concluded at the meeting in November 2003,

Welcoming the unanimous adoption of the Intergovernmental Agreement on the Asian Highway Network by the Intergovernmental Meeting to Develop an Intergovernmental Agreement on the Asian Highway Network, held in Bangkok on 17 and 18 November 2003,

Recalling the priority area of infrastructure development and maintenance identified in the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries, adopted at the International Ministerial Conference of Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Donor Countries and International Financial and Development Institutions on Transit Transport Cooperation, held in Almaty, Kazakhstan, on 28 and 29 August 2003, and acknowledging that the Asian Highway network provides transit transport opportunities,

Expressing its appreciation to the Government of Japan for its valuable support for the development and formalization of the Asian Highway network and for the assistance which it provided in preparing for and convening the Intergovernmental Meeting,

Also expressing its appreciation also to the Government of China for hosting the signing ceremony for the Agreement in Shanghai on 26 April 2004,

Convinced that the Agreement will strengthen relations between member countries, promote international trade and tourism through coordinated development of the Asian Highway network and have a substantial positive impact on the region by achieving internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 55/2 of 8 September 2000,

1. Invites all the relevant members of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific to become parties to the Intergovernmental Agreement on the Asian Highway Network in order to ensure the speedy entry into force of the Agreement;

2. Invites the international and regional financing institutions and multilateral and bilateral donors to provide financial and technical support for the development of the Asian Highway network and related infrastructure, particularly taking into account the special needs of landlocked developing countries;

3. Invites subregional organizations to promote the Agreement and accord priority to the development of the Asian Highway network in their respective subregions;

4. Encourages landlocked developing countries and their transit neighbours that are members of the Commission to enter into bilateral or subregional transit traffic facilitation agreements which will enable the Asian Highway network to provide further tangible transit transport opportunities within the scope of the Almaty Programme of Action;

5. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific:

(a) To assist member countries in becoming parties to the Agreement;

(b) To accord priority to the development of the Asian Highway network, within the programme of work of the Commission;

(c) To collaborate effectively with international and regional financing institutions, multilateral and bilateral donors and subregional organizations for the development of the Asian Highway network;

(d) To discharge effectively the functions of the secretariat of the Agreement;

(e) To report to the Commission at its sixty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Science and technology

ESCAP took note of the report of the Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology (APCTT) on its 2003 activities [E/ESCAP/1317 & Corr.1], to which was annexed the report of the APCTT Governing Board at its eighteenth session (Manila, Philippines, 6-7 February). The Commission urged its members and associate members to consider increasing their annual contributions to the Centre to enable it to deliver its technology transfer services in a more effective, regular and sustainable manner.

ESCAP, in its consideration of the report of the Coordinating Committee for Geoscience Programmes in East and Southeast Asia [E/ESCAP/1323], noted that the Committee had carried out most of its planned activities to enhance coordination of geoscience programmes of member countries. ESCAP agreed that the Space Applications Programme for Sustainable Development in Asia and the Pacific should be strengthened to help its members and associate members to meet the MDGs.

Environment and sustainable development

ESCAP, in noting the importance of the secretariat's activities to enhance the capacity of countries in the implementation of multilateral environmental agreements, environmental monitoring, biodiversity conservation, energy efficiency, enhanced utilization of renewable energy and water resources management, requested the secretariat to take cognizance of issues and problems at the subregional and national levels in its studies and projects in those areas. It noted that the achievements under the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 822] were well below the desired level and suggested that the secretariat, in support of the UN Commission on Sustainable Development, ensure that regional inputs were effectively integrated into that body's work programme.

In other action, ESCAP endorsed the preparations [E/ESCAP/1329] for the fifth Ministerial Conference on Environment and Development in Asia and the Pacific in 2005 and recommended that it focus on translating the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation into concrete activities. It supported the recommendations adopted by the Ninth Senior Officials Meeting (Moscow, Russian Federation, March) on the North-East Asian Subregional Programme of Environmental Cooperation. To ensure sustainable development in that subregion, it requested the secretariat to facilitate dialogue towards promoting energy cooperation. It encouraged the development of integrated water resources management and water efficiency plans, and the establishment of strategies and policies for regional and national disaster mitigation and preparedness. For that purpose, it was suggested that a research network be considered, with the cooperation of international organizations under ESCAP guidance, to deal with floods and earthquakes.

Agriculture and development

ESCAP considered the report of the Regional Coordination Centre for Research and Development of Coarse Grains, Pulses, Roots and Tuber Crops in the Humid Tropics of Asia and the Pacific (CGPRT) [E/ESCAP/1318], which also covered the proceedings of the twenty-second meeting (Bangor, Indonesia, 15-16 January) of the Centre's Governing Board. Besides adopting the Centre's 2004 programme of work and planned 2004 expenditures, the Board agreed to meet in March to deliberate on changing the mandate and name of the Centre. Subsequently, ESCAP took note of the recommendation of the Board at its extraordinary session (22 March) that the Centre's name be changed to the "Centre for Alleviation of Poverty through Secondary Crops Development in Asia and the Pacific" (CAPSA) and that its statute be revised to reflect the realignment of its work. By its resolution on CGPRT [E/2004/39 (res. 60/5)], ESCAP agreed to the name change and granted the Centre the status of a subsidiary body, with a Governing Council, a Director and a Technical Committee.

ESCAP noted the report of the Asian and Pacific Centre for Agricultural Engineering and Machinery (APCAEM) [YUN 2003, p. 1012], in particular the establishment of its headquarters in Beijing, China. Noting the many challenges facing any new institution, ESCAP looked forward to increasing programme and fund-raising support from the secretariat to make APCAEM self-sustainable as soon as possible.

Social development

ESCAP endorsed the report of the Committee on Emerging Social Issues on its first session [YUN 2003, p. 1013]. It requested the secretariat to continue to support national efforts to promote social development and to assist members and associate members in implementing the Biwako Millennium Framework for Action towards an Inclusive, Barrier-free and Rights-based Society for Persons with Disabilities in Asia and the Pacific [ibid., p. 1014]. It further requested its members and associate members to continue their support for and active participation in the drafting of an international convention on promoting and protecting the rights and dignity of persons with disabilities.

ESCAP concurred with the analysis and recommendations contained in the document entitled "Emerging social issues: trends, issues and strategies" [E/ESCAP/1311], which demonstrated how the rights-based approach was applied to the formulation of policies and programmes in the areas of population, ageing, disability, migration, gender and health. ESCAP called upon the secretariat to analyse the causes and consequences of international migration, in particular labour migration, including projecting future trends and assessing the use and impact of remittances. Concerned about the region's increasing trafficking in women and children, it called for improving existing mechanisms to combat such trafficking and for strengthening domestic legislative frameworks to complement multinational and bilateral initiatives. It called on the secretariat to assist in fostering regional cooperation in promoting investment in health for development and in providing capacity-building programmes for allocating, managing and utilizing funds. Noting the slow overall progress in achieving the HIV/AIDS-related targets in the Millennium Declaration, it urged the international community to increase its resources and action in order to strengthen national AIDS programmes. It urged its members and associate members to accord priority to combating the spread of HIV/AIDS and to advocate the full mobilization of all sectors and levels of government to integrate HIV/AIDS issues into national development planning.

In its resolution on a regional call for action to enhance capacity-building in public health [E/2004/39 (res. 60/2)], ESCAP urged members and associate members to implement domestic measures to counter the impact of avian influenza on human health, livestock production and economic development, in particular to strengthen reporting and surveillance systems; participate in the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria and encourage the private sector to contribute to the Fund; further integrate public health into their economic and social development strategies; raise professional and public awareness of the importance of public health and mobilize the participation of educational institutions, civil society and the mass media in promoting good public health practices; and improve regional public health preparedness and response systems to better cope with major diseases, such as global or regional outbreaks of new diseases.

By the same resolution, ESCAP encouraged donors to continue to support the Asian and Pacific countries in combating infectious diseases and epidemics. It requested the Executive Secretary to coordinate with the World Health Organization (WHO) and other organizations, to assist members and associate members in mainstreaming health concerns into development sectors in support of attaining internationally agreed development goals; to promote coordinated regional action in strengthening capacity-building in public health, including through the Subcommittee on Health and Development, which held its first session (Bangkok, 1-3 December), and in facilitating the exchange of information and the sharing of experience; and to report to ESCAP in 2005 on the implementation of the resolution.

In its resolution on the Shanghai Declaration (see p. 1002), ESCAP reaffirmed the measures it would strive to carry out to address emerging social issues.

The High-level Intergovernmental Meeting to Review Regional Implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action and its Regional and Global Outcomes (Bangkok, 7-10 September) [E/ESCAP/1341] reviewed achievements, identified challenges and addressed strategies for an enabling environment to achieve gender equality. It adopted the Bangkok Communiqué, which acknowledged gaps in the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170] and recognized a number of challenges to be addressed. The Meeting's outcome would serve as the Asian and Pacific contribution to the global review and appraisal of the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action at the 2006 session of the Commission on the Status of Women.

Natural disasters

ESCAP considered and took note of the reports of three regional intergovernmental bodies highlighting activities in 2003 and progress achieved in the implementation of their respective programmes related to natural disasters.

The Mekong River Commission [E/ESCAP/1324] reported its approval of two procedures of its water utilization programme; the navigation programme to address important shortcomings in the regional navigation sector; and the flood management and mitigation programme, which made up the fourth in the Commission's core programmes. The flood programme was approved as a core programme, together with three current programmes—the Mekong Basin development plan, the water utilization programme and the environment programme.

The Typhoon Committee [E/ESCAP/1325] evaluated the activities undertaken by ESCAP members related to the meteorological and hydrological components of its regional cooperation programme implementation plan, including flood forecasting and warnings, natural disaster prevention and mitigation, and enhancement of public awareness of cyclone and water-related hazards. It reviewed activities under the disaster prevention and preparedness, training and research components. It set up a working group to review the Committee's operations and structure.

The Panel on Tropical Cyclones [E/ESCAP/1326] evaluated its activities under the meteorological, hydrological, natural disaster prevention and preparedness, training and research components of its work programme. It highlighted significant improvements in flood forecasting techniques and modelling, real-time monitoring of water levels and rainfall, risk mapping and participation of stakeholders in flood-warning systems in Bangladesh, India, Maldives, Pakistan, Sri Lanka and Thailand. It further underscored the modernization of observation and telecommunication networks and forecasting systems aimed at improving tropical cyclone monitoring, forecasting and warning services.

Programme and organizational questions

ESCAP congratulated the secretariat on the production of the programme performance report for 2002-2003 [E/ESCAP/1414], reflecting for the first time the results-based approach. It endorsed the proposed programme changes for the 2004-2005 programme of work [E/ESCAP/1315], which reflected mandates adopted in 2003 and emerging global priorities identified by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly. It also endorsed the draft strategic framework for 2006-2007 [E/ESCAP/1313/Rev.1]. It supported efforts to align the activities of the regional institutions (APCTT, CGPRT, SIAP, APCAEM) [E/ESCAP/1316] with ESCAP's programme of work and to ensure that their governance structures were consistent with UN processes for intergovernmental review.

ESCAP reform

Revitalization of Pacific Operations Centre

In its resolution on the revitalization of the ESCAP Pacific Operations Centre [E/2004/39 (res.

60/6)], ESCAP expressed appreciation for progress in implementing the key institutional changes in that regard in line with the recommendations of the independent evaluation carried out in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1015]. It welcomed the revised mission statement clarifying the Centre's role, noted the preparations under way for its relocation from Port Vila, Vanuatu, to Suva, Fiji, and also noted the establishment of an Advisory Council to advise it on work programme priorities. ESCAP requested the Executive Secretary to mobilize the resources required to relocate the Centre in 2004, increase its Professional staff in the 2006-2007 biennium, and use the Pacific Trust Fund for its revitalization, including capacity-development activities in support of the Pacific region and to carry out needs assessment and evaluations.

ESCAP further requested the Executive Secretary to prepare amendments to the terms of reference of the Special Body on Pacific Island Developing Countries to provide for the possible convening of its sessions prior to Commission sessions, in alternate years with the Special Body on Least Developed and Landlocked Developing Countries, and alternately between Bangkok and the location of the Centre. It welcomed the Executive Secretary's decision to establish subprogramme 3, on the development of Pacific island countries, with the objective of building policy and management capacity in Pacific island developing countries and territories.

Date and venue of ESCAP sixty-first session

The Commission decided that its sixty-first session would be held in Bangkok on 21-27 April 2005 under the theme "Implementing the Monterrey Consensus in the Asia and Pacific region: achieving coherence and consistency".

Subregional activities

Cooperation with Economic Cooperation Organization

In response to General Assembly resolution 57/38 [YUN 2002, p. 1001], the Secretary-General reported on cooperation between the United Nations, its programmes and organizations, and the Economic Cooperation Organization [A/59/303].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 October [meeting 40], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/4 [draft: A/59/L.3 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 56 (h)].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/2 of 13 October 1993, by which it granted observer status to the Economic Cooperation Organization,

Recalling also its previous resolutions on cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization, and inviting various specialized agencies as well as other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and relevant international financial institutions to join in their efforts towards realization of the goals and objectives of the Economic Cooperation Organization,

Welcoming the efforts of the Economic Cooperation Organization with regard to consolidating ties with the United Nations system and relevant international and regional organizations,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 57/38 of 21 November 2002, and expresses satisfaction at the enhanced cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization;

2. Takes note of the Dushanbe Declaration, adopted at the eighth Economic Cooperation Organization summit on 14 September 2004, following the fourteenth meeting of the Council of Ministers in Dushanbe on 12 September 2004;

3. Stresses the importance of cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization with regard to the provision of financial and technical cooperation for pre-feasibility and feasibility studies of projects of the Economic Cooperation Organization, consultancy services, information on drug control, training courses on trade and investment by the specialized agencies of the United Nations, including the United Nations Development Programme, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the International Trade Centres UNCTAD/WTO and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, in the ongoing and future activities of the Economic Cooperation Organization;

4. Notes with appreciation the implementation of the ongoing project of the Economic Cooperation Organization and the International Trade Centres on expanding intraregional trade, and stresses the importance of the continuation of the second phase of the project;

5. Also notes with appreciation the signing of the Economic Cooperation Organization Trade Agreement in Islamabad in July 2003, and stresses its importance in the accomplishment of the goal of establishing a free trade area in the region;

6. Further notes with appreciation the holding of the second Economic Cooperation Organization Regional Trade and Investment Conference, and the seventh General Assembly Meeting of Economic Cooperation Organization Chambers of Commerce and Industry, in Kabul, from 18 to 20 April 2004, and stresses the close interaction in the field of trade and investment between the Economic Cooperation Organization and trade-related agencies and bodies of the United Nations;

7. Notes with appreciation the memorandum of understanding signed by the Economic Cooperation Organization and the World Customs Organization on 17 March 2003 in Brussels with a view to establishing and maintaining effective and regular consultations, cooperation and exchanges of information between the two organizations;

8. Notes with satisfaction the holding of a workshop on multimodal transport and trade facilitation, in Tehran in May 2004, sponsored by the Economic Cooperation Organization, in which the Islamic Development Bank, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific participated, and hopes that efforts will be made to bring about the successful completion of the multimodal transport project as soon as possible;

9. Expresses its appreciation for the importance the Economic Cooperation Organization attaches to the smooth running of container trains on the Trans-Asian Railway main line and to the fine-tuning of a draft action plan for revitalizing and operating the China-Middle East-Europe corridor, as well as for the organization of meetings in Tehran in May 2004 to discuss these issues;

10. Notes with satisfaction the efforts of the Economic Cooperation Organization to implement United Nations programmes for the development of transit transport facilities in the landlocked countries of the region;

11. Recognizes the importance of removing barriers to transport and trade development in the region, and welcomes the joint project of the Economic Cooperation Organization and the United Nations Development Programme to prepare a comprehensive report on the subject;

12. Takes note with satisfaction of the decisions of the first Economic Cooperation Organization Ministerial Meeting on Industry, held in Tehran from 25 to 27 January 2004, and notes the importance of the adoption of the Tehran Declaration and the Plan of Action for Industrial Cooperation in the Economic Cooperation Organization Region, which pave the way for consolidating regional efforts to promote industrial cooperation in the region through the mobilization of regional and international resources and the industrial potential of the member States, and to that end encourages the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to actively contribute to the activities of the Economic Cooperation Organization in the field of industry;

13. Also takes note with satisfaction of the decisions of the first Economic Cooperation Organization Ministerial Meeting on Finance/Economy, held on 29 and 30 January 2004, and the Islamabad Joint Communiqué for Cooperation on Finance/Economy, especially in the areas of: (a) macroeconomic management and global capital markets; (b) promotion of banking, investment, transit and trade from legal and financial aspects; (c) securities and capital market regulations and stock/commodity exchanges; (d) privatization of public enterprises; and (e) cost of economic adjustment and the need for social safety nets;

14. Appreciates the efforts of the Economic Cooperation Organization to implement the Millennium Development Goals, especially its attempts to reduce poverty and food insecurity in the region, takes note with satisfaction of the implementation of the technical cooperation programme of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the regional programme for food security in the member States of the Economic Cooperation Organization, and urges the relevant financial institutions to support the ideas to be outlined within the programme;

15. Welcomes the initiative of the Economic Cooperation Organization to establish institutional cooperation among its member States and relevant international organizations on agriculture-related matters of the World Trade Organization, and encourages the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other international organizations and institutions to support the activities of the Economic Cooperation Organization in this regard;

16. Notes with satisfaction the adoption of the Tehran Declaration on Environmental Cooperation among member States of the Economic Cooperation Organization and the Plan of Action for Cooperation among the States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization on Environment (2003-2007) at the first Ministerial Meeting of the Economic Cooperation Organization on Environment, held in Tehran, from 13 to 15 December 2002, and the revision of the Plan of Action by the member States at the first meeting of the Working Group on Environment, held in Ankara on 7 and 8 April 2004;

17. Also notes with satisfaction the adoption by the United Nations Environment Programme of decision 22/14 of 7 February 2003 on the role of the Programme in strengthening regional activities and cooperation in the Economic Cooperation Organization region, at the twenty-second session of the United Nations Environment Programme Governing Council/Global Ministerial Environment Forum;

18. Welcomes the signing of the memorandum of understanding on cooperation in the field of environment between the Economic Cooperation Organization and the United Nations Environment Programme, in Tehran on 18 August 2004;

19. Also welcomes the growing cooperation between the Economic Cooperation Organization, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific and the United Nations Environment Programme in the field of environment, and encourages their active collaboration with the Economic Cooperation Organization;

20. Notes with satisfaction the ongoing cooperation between the Economic Cooperation Organization and the Islamic Development Bank concerning the project of the Economic Cooperation Organization on the interconnection and parallel functioning of power systems in the region, as well as the assistance provided by the Bank to the Economic Cooperation Organization in convening meetings on power trading as well as on legal and fiscal aspects of the promotion of foreign direct investment in the mineral sector, held in 2002 and 2003, respectively;

21. Takes note of the decision to hold ministerial meetings in the areas of transport and communications, energy/petroleum, environment, agriculture and information technology in 2004 and 2005;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

23. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-first session the sub-item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization".

Cooperation with Pacific Islands Forum

On 4 June [A/59/95], New Zealand transmitted to the Secretary-General the Auckland Declaration, adopted by the Special Leaders' Retreat of the Pacific Islands Forum (Auckland, 6 April), in which they agreed to a Pacific Vision statement on enhanced regional cooperation, to be elaborated through the development of a Pacific Plan. The leaders confirmed the key goals of the Forum as economic growth, sustainable development, good governance and security.

The Secretary-General, in his 1 September consolidated report on cooperation between the United Nations and regional and other organizations [A/59/303], described cooperation activities between the United Nations, its programmes and organizations and the Pacific Islands Forum.

On 8 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/20 (see p. 387) on cooperation between the United Nations and the Pacific Islands Forum.

Observer status

On 2 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 59/53 (see p. 1460), granted observer status to the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation in the work of the Assembly.

Europe

The Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), at its fifty-ninth session (Geneva, 24-26 February) [E/2004/37], considered economic developments and policies of the ECE region on the basis of the Economic Survey of Europe 2004 No. 1 [Sales No. E.04.II.E.7]. It convened two round tables to discuss policies to stimulate competitive growth: the first identified best practices and national policies that had proved successful in increasing competitiveness and growth; the second focused on regional initiatives and cooperation and ECE's role in stimulating competitiveness.

ECE discussed its work on the basis of a December 2003 report of the Executive Secretary [E/ECE/1412] on ECE achievements, constraints and perspectives. It considered preparations for, and follow-up to, global and regional conferences. It endorsed proposals for ECE participation in the second phase of the World Summit on the Information Society (see p. 845) and for the Executive Secretary to help organize two sub-regional meetings to promote implementation of the information society in the countries concerned and for them to benefit from the exchange of best practices and policies. Noting the success of the first Regional Implementation Forum on Sustainable Development, ECE endorsed the Executive Secretary's proposal that, as a follow-up to the International Ministerial Conference of Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Donor Countries and International Financial and Development Institutions on Transit Transport Cooperation [YUN 2003, p. 875], ECE should continue or undertake the specific activities outlined in his 19 December 2003 note on follow-up to world and regional conferences [E/ECE/1413]. It also endorsed the proposals for organizing a regional preparatory meeting regarding follow-up to the special session of the General Assembly on women (Beijing+10) (see p. 1145), and the Executive Secretary's proposal that ECE devote a high-level policy segment of its sixtieth (2005) session to follow up the results of the International Conference on Financing for Development [YUN 2002, p. 953]. It recommended financing for development as a thematic orientation for a seminar in 2005.

Also considered were: an overview of ECE technical cooperation activities in 2003 [E/ECE/1414], which, ECE pointed out, needed to be supported by additional resources and thus urged the secretariat to make additional efforts to attract extra-budgetary resources, particularly from the private sector; and ECE reform [E/ECE/1411], regarding which ECE decided to commission a review of possible changes to its role, mandate and functions in the light of changes in the European institutional architecture since ECE's inception almost 60 years earlier. The review, also covering the mandate of the Group of Experts on the Programme of Work (GEPW) with a view to strengthening its role as an intergovernmental supervisory body within ECE, would be considered by ECE in 2005.

In connection with the review, ECE endorsed the secretariat proposals and GEPW recommendations with regard to intergovernmental structures, its principal subsidiary bodies and a priority-setting mechanism for technical cooperation activities. It requested the secretariat and GEPW to revise the work programme planning process for endorsement at ECE's next ad hoc informal session. ECE endorsed, as well as urged the secretariat to implement, the technical cooperation strategy contained in the Executive Secretary's note of 17 December 2003 [E/ECE/1411/Add.1] identifying measures to address the new challenges faced by ECE in technical cooperation, to facilitate priority setting, coordination, monitoring, reporting and evaluation, and to strengthen coordination and fund-raising.

ECE welcomed a proposed formalization of relations between it and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe [E/ECE/1410] in the form of a memorandum of understanding that should not duplicate the work under other cooperation agreements. It endorsed the proposals on best practice for the evaluation of ECE work programmes as outlined by GEPW [E/ECE/1415 & Add.1].

Economic trends

According to the ECE summary [E/2005/16] of the Economic Survey of Europe 2005 No. 1 [Sales No. E.05.II.E.7] covering the economic situation in and forecasts for Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) in 2004 and 2005 [E/2005/16], global economic recovery maintained strong momentum in 2004, with the United States and China remaining the principal engines of growth. In Europe, the CIS countries registered rapid growth due largely to the boom in commodity prices, and, in most of Central and Eastern Europe, economic activity continued at high momentum. However, as in 2003, the euro area lagged behind in the global recovery.

In the United States, GDP rose to 4.4 per cent, led by strong domestic demand and increased exports helped by a weaker dollar, but the country's trade and current-account deficit surged to record levels. Although the Federal Reserve started to gradually raise the target for the federal funds rate, monetary policy remained strongly supportive of economic growth.

In the euro area, real GDP rose by some 2 per cent, compared to 0.6 per cent the previous year, masking variations in the growth performance of individual countries; however, that ranged from a little more than 1 per cent in Italy, the Netherlands and Portugal, to a buoyant 4 per cent and more in Ireland and Luxembourg. Germany, the major euro economy, witnessed a return to positive growth of 1.7 per cent, following two years of virtual stagnation. In the non-euro European Union (EU) area, the United Kingdom maintained relatively strong momentum, with real GDP rising by 3.2 per cent, compared to 2.2 per cent the previous year, and economic growth recovered strongly in Denmark and Sweden.

In Central and Eastern Europe, economic activity in the eight new EU member States (EU-8) picked up noticeably, their aggregate GDP growing by some 5 per cent, led by a strengthened recovery in Poland. That growth was driven by robust consumption, investment expenditures and strong external demand; import growth was dynamic, reflecting strong domestic demand and exports. All Baltic economies continued to grow at a brisk pace. Economic growth in South-East Europe likewise accelerated considerably, underpinned by strong domestic demand and exports. Aggregate GDP rose by some 8 per cent, led by Romania and Turkey.

The CIS region, including the Russian Federation, continued to benefit from the surge in world commodity prices, increasing its aggregate GDP by almost 8 per cent. The rapid growth of commodity exports (particularly oil and natural gas) was the main factor behind the output growth in the most resource-rich CIS countries, leading to a surge in domestic demand, especially private consumption. The expansionary macroeconomic policy in many CIS economies further boosted economic activity.

Activities in 2004

Trade, industry and enterprise development

The Committee for Trade, Industry and Enterprise Development, at its eighth session (Geneva, 10 and 14 May) [ECE/TRADE/340], approved its consolidated procedures and guidelines, including procedures for an intersessional decision-making process and for its subgroups. It renewed the mandates of the Real Estate Advisory Group, the Advisory Group on the Protection and Implementation of Intellectual Property Rights for Investment, and of the teams of specialists on industrial restructuring, quality management systems, youth entrepreneurship, women's entrepreneurship and Internet enterprise development.

Also approved were the establishment of a telecom task force and terms of reference for the Advisory Group on Market Surveillance; new terms of reference for the Working Party on Technical Harmonization and Standardization Policies (WP.6), renamed the Working Party for Regulatory Cooperation and Standardization Policies; and a proposal by the Working Party on Agricultural Quality Standards to abolish the Specialized Section on Standardization of Early and Ware Potatoes and combining its work with that of the Specialized Section on Standardization of Fresh Fruit and Vegetables. The Committee agreed that the title of its 2005 forum would be "After fifteen years of market reforms in transition economies: new challenges and perspectives for the industrial sector", and for 2006,

"Regulatory cooperation in support of international trade".

In addition, the Committee held an interactive policy discussion on priority activities for the Committee for Trade, Industry and Enterprise Development in order to promote its objectives [ECE/TRADE/340/Add.1].

Timber

The Timber Committee, at its sixty-second session (Geneva, 5-9 October) [ECE/TIM/2004/2], held jointly with the thirty-second session of the European Forestry Commission of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), convened a policy forum to discuss long-term challenges for forest and timber policies and institutions in a wider Europe; forest law enforcement and governance; the future of the Timber Committee and the European Forestry Commission in the international forest policy dialogue; and forest products market developments and prospects and links between forest policy and market policy.

The joint session approved a statement on links between forest policy and market policy for publication and wide dissemination. It recommended that ECE/FAO contribute to regional efforts to improve forest law compliance in the region and that the secretariat, in consultation with partners, submit proposals on their areas of comparative advantage. It adopted the 2005-2008 integrated ECE/FAO programme of work [TIM/2004/7] resulting from the 2003-2004 strategic review process.

Transport

The Inland Transport Committee, at its sixty-sixth session (Geneva, 17-19 February) [ECE/TRANS/156 & Add.1], reviewed, among other subjects, its strategic objectives, intersectoral activities, the transport situation in ECE member countries and emerging development trends, transport security, assistance to countries with economies in transition, and the status of the application of international ECE transport agreements and conventions. The Committee also considered transport trends and economics, road transport, road traffic safety and safety in tunnels, harmonization of vehicle regulations, rail and inland water transport, intermodal transport logistics, border crossing facilitation, transport of dangerous goods and perishable foodstuffs, and transport statistics.

The Committee adopted its strategic objectives, focusing on the creation, improvement and unification of international transport legislation and the monitoring of its implementation; the development of road infrastructure; increased facilitation of transport operations; and elimination of barriers to cross-border transport. It adopted resolutions on a global coordinating role for the ECE Working Party on Road Traffic Safety; a 2005 combined census of road traffic and inventory of standards and parameters on international traffic arteries in Europe; and a 2005 e-rail traffic census in Europe.

Energy

In 2004, in response to calls for greater energy security, the Energy Security Forum, launched in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1018], examined emerging energy security risks and risk mitigation, including the contribution of the Caspian Sea region to promoting energy security. The Forum's Executive Board held discussions in Geneva (March) and Moscow (June) with representatives of Governments, the financial community and energy industries on how oil price rises could be affected by energy security risk. ECE also established the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on the Supply of Fossil Fuels to promote worldwide application of the United Nations Framework Classification for Fossil Energy and Mineral Resources, which had been approved by the Committee on Sustainable Energy at its thirteenth session [YUN 2003, p. 1018]; its endorsement by ECE was welcomed by the Economic and Social Council in its decision 2004/233 (see p. 1032).

In January, the Gas Centres set up a new Task Force on Company and Market Structure to examine gas markets and industries and the implications for countries in Central and Eastern Europe. Under regional advisory services, the CIS countries began the second phase of the energy efficiency and energy security projects in the region. A new technical assistance project was initiated on coal mine methane in Central and Eastern Europe and the CIS.

Environment

The Committee on Environment Policy, at its eleventh session (Geneva, 13-15 October) [ECE/CEP/124 & Add.1], requested the secretariat to prepare the next regional implementation forum on sustainable development in 2005 or 2006, pending a decision by ECE. It reviewed the environmental performance of Bosnia and Herzegovina and of Tajikistan, adopting recommendations for those countries, and took note of the interim reports on the reviews of the environmental performance of Armenia, the Republic of Moldova and Ukraine. It extended the mandate of the Ad Hoc Expert Group on Environmental Performance for a further two years, adopted its terms of reference and elected its members. It decided to convene a High-level Meeting of Environment and Education Ministries in 2005 for the final consideration of the strategy on education for sustainable development.

In other action, the Committee provided guidance for further work on developing a communication strategy to raise awareness of the "Environment for Europe" process; supported the cross-sectoral activities on sustainable energy, environment and health, and transport, health and environment; and established a working group of senior officials for the sixth Ministerial Conference "Environment for Europe" and adopted its mandate.

Human settlements

The Committee on Human Settlements, at its sixty-fifth session (Geneva, 20-22 September) [ECE/HBP/134], agreed to submit a paper on challenges and policy options for human settlements in the ECE region to the regional preparatory meeting for the 2005 session of the UN Commission on Sustainable Development (see p. 827). It also agreed that, at its next session, the Committee and its Working Party on Land Administration would assess, in the context of the preparations for the World Urban Forum in Canada in 2006, the implementation of the ECE Strategy for a Sustainable Quality of Life in Human Settlements in the Twenty-first Century, adopted in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 946]. The Committee noted the activities of the Working Party, in particular its reviews and studies on real estate units and identifiers, and public/private partnerships in land administration. It undertook to strengthen the linkage between the country profile programme and the land administration reviews whenever they took place in the same country. It would also strengthen its activities in urban and regional planning and study spatial planning at the local level in cooperation with the Council of Europe. It stressed the need to cooperate with the Conference of European Statisticians in preparation for the new round of housing censuses.

The Committee adopted its 2005-2006 programme of work and confirmed the high priority of the country profile programme for the housing sector.

Statistics

The Conference of European Statisticians, at its fifty-second session (Paris, 8-10 June) [ECE/CES/66], considered the implications of the meetings of its parent bodies—the February session of ECE (see p. 1013) and the March session of the UN Statistical Commission (see p. 1255). It agreed that the Conference itself, its Bureau and the Statistical Division secretariat should continue to work towards strengthening ECE. It asked the Bureau to review its intergovernmental structure and the work programme of the Conference biennially; it also asked the ECE Statistical Division to find ways to increase its technical assistance, and regularly draw the attention of Conference members to those statistical areas where the less developed statistical offices in the region needed technical assistance but were currently underfunded.

The Conference reviewed the Integrated Presentation (IP), a unique document crucial to the coordination of international statistical work in the ECE region, and agreed that its improvement was an ongoing process and that several changes were expected with regard to its structure and procedures for its review updating. A Task Force was created to review the classification of IP statistical activities. The Conference approved the issues agreed to by its Bureau for the future development of the IP, the Annual Statistical Programme for 2004, and guidelines for establishing teams of specialists.

Operational activities

Operational activities in 2003, as described in a note by the Executive Secretary [E/ECE/1414], were carried out through capacity-building workshops, seminars, study tours, policy advisory services and field projects. Those activities were funded from the UN regular budget, with a value of $1,210,648, of which 46.3 per cent went to trade, industry and enterprise development, 15.4 per cent to the environment sector, 14.9 per cent to transport, 11.8 per cent to energy and 11.6 per cent to statistics. ECE technical cooperation activities financed from extra-budgetary sources (general trust funds, local trust funds and other sources) totalled $5,880,199.

ECE noted that, while cooperation with other organizations in implementing technical cooperation activities was appreciated, there was a need for stepping up inter-agency coordination.

Subregional activities

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 57/34 [YUN 2002, p. 1008], the Secretary-General, in his consolidated report on cooperation between the United Nations and regional and other organizations [A/59/303], described cooperation between the United Nations and the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization, in the areas of transport, promotion of entrepreneurship, and support and development of small and medium-sized enterprises. Negotiations were ongoing to extend cooperation to trade facilitation and sustainable energy.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 76], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/259 [draft: A/59/L.57 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 56 (d)].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 54/5 of 8 October 1999, by which it granted observer status to the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization, as well as its resolutions 55/211 of 20 December 2000 and 57/34 of 21 November 2002, on cooperation between the United Nations and the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization,

Recalling also that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social or humanitarian nature,

Recalling further the Articles of the Charter of the United Nations that encourage activities through regional cooperation for the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Recalling its Declaration on the Enhancement of Cooperation between the United Nations and Regional Arrangements or Agencies in the Maintenance of International Peace and Security of 9 December 1994,

Pointing out the fact that since its transformation into a regional economic organization with an international legal identity as from 1 May 1999, the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization has established itself as a reliable partner in boosting economic cooperation in the Black Sea region,

Recognizing that any dispute or conflict in the region impedes cooperation, and stressing the need to solve such a dispute or conflict on the basis of the norms and principles of international law,

Convinced that the strengthening of cooperation between the United Nations and other organizations contributes to the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Recalling the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to resolution 57/34,

1. Welcomes the statement issued in Istanbul, Turkey, on 25 June 2004 by the Council of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States members of the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization on the contribution of the Organization to security and stability, and encourages the ongoing process of considering ways and means of enhancing the contribution of the Organization to security and stability in the region;

2. Takes note of the entry into force of the Additional Protocol to the Agreement among the Governments of the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization Participating States on Cooperation in Combating Crime, in Particular in its Organized Forms, done in Kyiv on 15 March 2002, as well as the imminent signature of the Additional Protocol on Combating Terrorism to the same Agreement;

3. Welcomes the activities of the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization aimed at strengthening regional cooperation in various fields, such as trade and economic development, banking and finance, communications, energy, transport, agriculture and agro-industry, health care and pharmaceuticals, environmental protection, tourism, science and technology, exchange of statistical data and economic information, collaboration among Customs services, and combating organized crime and the illicit trafficking of drugs, weapons and radioactive material, all acts of terrorism and illegal migration, or in any other related area;

4. Also welcomes the adoption of the Baku Declaration on energy cooperation in the region of the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization by the Ministers of Energy of the States members of the Organization on 19 September 2003 and the Joint Declaration by the Ministers of Transport from countries of the Black Sea and Caspian Sea region on 3 October 2003;

5. Further welcomes the operationalization and financing of the first projects by the Project Development Fund of the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization to the benefit of the sustainable development of the Black Sea region;

6. Takes note of the positive contribution of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization, the Business Council, the Black Sea Trade and Development Bank and the International Centres for Black Sea Studies to the strengthening of multifaceted regional cooperation in the Black Sea area;

7. Welcomes the Cooperation Agreement between the Economic Commission for Europe and the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization, signed on 2 July 2001, and the support given by the Commission to the activities of the Organization in the fields provided for in the Agreement, notably in small and medium-sized enterprises, energy and transportation policy development;

8. Also welcomes the collaboration between the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization and the United Nations Environment Programme based on the Cooperation Agreement signed in Istanbul on 20 February 2002;

9. Further welcomes the cooperation between the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization, as well as the financial support provided by the Food and Agriculture Organization in implementing the project on institutional strengthening to facilitate intraregional and interregional agricultural trade among States members of the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization and other projects on trade promotion;

10. Takes note of the cooperation between the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization and the World Bank and the World Trade Organization and the working contacts with the World Tourism Organization, aimed at the sustainable development of the Black Sea region;

11. Also takes note of the importance attached by the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization to the strengthening of relations with the European Union, and supports the efforts of the Organization to take concrete steps to advance this cooperation;

12. Further takes note of the cooperation established between the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization and other regional organizations and initiatives;

13. Invites the Secretary-General to strengthen dialogue with the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization with a view to promoting cooperation and coordination between the two secretariats;

14. Invites the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to cooperate with the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization in order to continue programmes with the Organization and its associated institutions for the achievement of their objectives;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-first session the sub-item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization".

Latin America and the Caribbean

At its thirtieth session (San Juan, Puerto Rico, 28 June–2 July), the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) [LC/G.2267] considered a document [LC/G.2234 (SES.30/3)] analysing the strategies in Latin America and the Caribbean for furthering productive development in open economies in pursuit of the region's integration into the global economy. ECLAC adopted a number of resolutions, among them the San Juan resolution on productive development in open economies [LC/G.2267 (res. 612(XXX))], which it recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption (see p. 1019), and a resolution on support for the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (see p. 296).

The remaining resolutions were on support for the work of the Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning [res. 597(XXX)]; implementation of resolutions concerning the participation of ECLAC associate member countries in the follow-up to UN world conferences and in the work of the Council [res. 598(XXX)], consideration of which the Council deferred to its January 2005 organizational session (decision 2004/324); ECLAC Statistical Conference of the Americas [res. 599(XXX)]; ECLAC Caribbean Development and Cooperation Committee [res. 600(XXX)]; modalities for the introduction of amendments to the work programme of ECLAC's subregional headquarters for the Caribbean [res. 601(XXX)]; monitoring sustainable development in Latin America and the Caribbean [res. 602(XXX)]; the 2004-2006 calendar of conferences

[res. 603(XXX)]; priority activities for 2004-2006 in population and development [res. 604(XXX)]; the Regional Conference on Women in Latin America and the Caribbean [res. 605(XXX)]; ECLAC programme of work for 2006-2007 [res. 607(XXX)]; promotion of coordination in studies and activities concerning South America [res. 608(XXX)]; financing and management for education [res. 609(XXX)]; follow-up to the World Summit on the Information Society [res. 610(XXX)]; cooperation among developing countries and regions [res. 611(XXX)]; and the place (Uruguay) of the next session [res. 613(XXX)].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July [meeting 48], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ECLAC [E/2004/15/Add.2], adopted resolution 2004/45 without vote [agenda items 10].

San Juan resolution on productive development in open economies

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind resolution 595(XXIX) of 10 May 2002, adopted by the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean at its twenty-ninth session, in which it urged the secretariat to analyse the relationship existing between the liberalization agendas of the countries of the region and the associated productive development policies including, in particular, their links with trade, national and international financing and social and environmental issues, in order to ensure that those policies take into account the interests of the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean,

Recognizing that progress has been made in the gradual dissemination of economic and social reforms in countries of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean region but that this has not been manifested in high, stable rates of growth that would create the necessary conditions to provide the individual and shared resources that would meet the inherent need for economic, social and cultural rights, as is emphasized, in particular, in the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Noting that the emergence of signs of growing interdependence among countries of the region in a number of areas, such as trade, international finance and the environment, opens up new opportunities but also hinders the policy-making autonomy of national authorities,

Aware of the profound processes of productive, trade and financial restructuring now taking place worldwide, with the active participation of transnational corporations at the helm of internationally integrated production systems into which some countries of the region are being incorporated,

Observing that the expansion of trade has not resulted in rapid worldwide economic growth, that the inflow of capital to the region, including foreign direct investment, has declined and that this has been a factor in widening the gap in knowledge and technological innovation between the region and the industrialized countries,

Noting that a trend towards income disparities across countries of the region persists; that, within those countries, the low density of the processes involved in changing production patterns has exacerbated the heterogeneity of the production structure, with some sectors displaying differing patterns; and that, through their impact on the composition and quality of employment, those sectors have an influence on the disparity among households in levels of well-being,

Underlining, in sum, that the current phase of access to international markets offers a range of opportunities for productive development, some of which have been fully utilized by some sectors in developing countries, but that it also has negative consequences owing to the structural change required to adapt to changing conditions in terms of competitiveness,

Underlining also the tradition and vitality of sub-regional integration schemes and the potential for deepening them within a framework of open regionalism, along with the rich pool of regional institutions present in Latin America and the Caribbean,

Aware of the various means demonstrated by countries of the region of expanding their trade both within and outside the region and the difficult conditions under which they attract financial resources, including resources in the form of foreign direct investment, and the fact that in many cases the procyclical behaviour of capital flows to the region has led to unsustainable indebtedness,

Highlighting the progress achieved by many countries of the region in the area of macroeconomic management, especially with regard to the control of public finances and inflation; the strides made towards a more effective incorporation of the sustainable development agenda; the expansion, in many cases, of public expenditure on education, which has made it possible to increase the coverage of basic and intermediate education and to launch activities aimed at giving the population access to computerized information networks and audio-visual media; the efforts being devoted to making the labour market more adaptable by introducing new worker training arrangements and unemployment insurance; the participation of the private sector in the modernization of various infrastructure sectors and in interacting with the public sector to develop innovative approaches in the area of social security; and the fact that, nonetheless, efforts should be made to place greater emphasis on devoting attention to the difficulties that the implementation of pension reforms has raised in some countries,

Observing that obstacles to the process of changing production patterns with social equity and environmental sustainability in the region persist; that poverty levels regrettably persist; that economic growth has been insufficient and volatile; that the increase in productivity has not narrowed the gap with the developed world; that the linkages of export activities and foreign direct investment with other economic activities remain insufficient; that institutions for sustainable development have few instruments and scant resources at their disposal; that the insufficient creation of quality jobs continues to impede a reduction in open unemployment and informal employment; that the educational gap with the developed world persists in terms of both coverage (secondary and higher education) and learning outcomes; and that increased demands are being made for social security systems to cover traditional risks (health care, old age and illness) and new risks associated with the increased employment and income vulnerability.

1. Welcomes the document prepared by the secretariat of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, entitled "Productive development in open economies", considering that, thanks to the concepts it explores, the information it contains and the proposals it sets forth regarding international linkages, productive development and social vulnerability, it makes a significant contribution to the current phase of trade liberalization, levels of competitiveness and development of labour markets, education and training;

2. Welcomes the proactive agenda proposed by the secretariat of the Commission for meeting the challenges posed by the current phase of the productive development process, in particular the reaffirmation of national strategies for improving linkages with the world economy as pillars of the process of strengthening competitiveness; the region's potential contribution to building cohesive societies that can mitigate social vulnerability and give the countries greater room for manoeuvre in restructuring production systems; and the stress laid on the importance of an integral approach in which macroeconomic solvency is consistent with productive development and social cohesion policies;

3. Requests the secretariat of the Commission to ensure the wide dissemination of the document entitled "Productive development in open economies" and to encourage its consideration in the following areas:

- (i) Political, social, academic and business spheres and civil-society organizations in the region, through national, subregional and regional dialogues on the chief components of the proposed agenda;
- (ii) International organizations dealing with the various dimensions of economic development, with a view, in particular, to fostering an exchange of ideas regarding proposals for correcting asymmetries and gaps in the international agenda, especially with the International Labour Organization in relation to employment and social cohesion policies and the creation of decent jobs for a just form of globalization;

4. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean to undertake a more in-depth analysis of the following issues:

- (i) Education, science and technology, highlighting the development of national and regional innovation systems that unite the efforts of the public and private sectors;
- (ii) Social protection and active labour-market policies aimed at achieving complementarity between public and private mechanisms in order to broaden coverage and adopt solidarity-based approaches, as part of a major effort to enhance social cohesion;
- (iii) Countercyclical macroeconomic management, adding national, subregional and regional measures to complement the changes required at the international level;

- (iv) Production linkages, defining policies for developing and deepening them and for forming production clusters;
- (v) Sustainable development and competitiveness, devoting special attention to the economic valuation of environmental goods and services and to the improvement of their market access conditions;
- (vi) Financing for development, placing special emphasis on the financial development needed to replace intermediation systems dominated by banks with systems that include large capital markets; strengthening of development banks with a view to promoting the institutional changes needed to capture and extend long-term financing and to design risk management instruments to give different types of enterprises easier access to financing; reliance on subregional financial institutions to provide countercyclical financing, correct situations of illiquidity and support investment programmes for sustainable development; and the role of infrastructure in productive development and competitiveness;
- (vii) Trade integration and development, paying special attention to trade in agricultural goods and access to markets that can enable the region's economies to capitalize on their competitive advantages and use appropriate technology;

5. Calls upon the secretariat of the Commission to pursue its examination of the development strategies of the Latin American and Caribbean countries in the context of globalization, based on an integrated approach to economic, social and environmental issues which also incorporates gender analysis, and to identify the measures that should be adopted at the national, regional and international levels.

Economic trends

In 2004, the Latin American and Caribbean economy grew by 5.8 per cent, with per capita GDP expanding by some 4.2 per cent, accompanied by a surplus on the balance-of-payments current account, according to the summary of the economic survey of Latin America and the Caribbean, 2004 [E/2005/19]. With the exception of Haiti, all the countries of the region recorded positive growth rates, led by Venezuela, which achieved the highest growth rate, at 17.3 per cent, followed by Uruguay at 11.8 per cent, Argentina at 9.0 per cent, Ecuador at 6.6 per cent, Chile at 5.8 per cent and Brazil at 5.2 per cent.

The strong economic performance of the region was tied to the expansion in world economic activity and trade. The combination of higher export prices and larger volumes gave rise to an unprecedented boom in merchandise trade. Exports expanded by 23 per cent while imports climbed by 20.9 per cent. Improved terms of trade brought an additional $24.2 billion in foreign exchange into the region.

For the second year in a row, the region posted a surplus in the balance-of-payments current account, reaching $18 billion in 2004. The macro-economic performance of the region resulted in a significant improvement in the countries' fiscal accounts. The financial surplus made it possible to reduce debt-to-GDP ratios, which remained very high, averaging 50 per cent. Monetary policy supported the recovery of domestic demand by lowering the cost of financing, and real interest rates generally followed a downward trend and were actually negative in some cases.

Job creation picked up in 2004, although labour supply expansion was slower than in 2003. The unemployment rate declined from 10.7 per cent in 2003 to 10 per cent in 2004, the largest region-wide decrease since 1986. The rate of inflation also continued its downward trend, declining to a region-wide average of 7.4 per cent, compared to 8.5 per cent in 2003.

Activities in 2004

Development policy and regional economic performance

The Economic Development Division of ECLAC continued to report on the macro-economic performance of the region as a whole and individual countries in the ECLAC publications entitled Economic Survey of Latin and the Caribbean 2003-2004, Preliminary Overview of the Economies of Latin America and the Caribbean 2004 and Macroeconomic of Development Series. Two of the Division's projects, on the integration of young people into the labour market and on international mobility of talent, were in the process of implementation; six others were awaiting approval. Its inter-divisional activities included providing technical assistance to Brazil's Ministries of Finance and of Planning on matters of public spending and their implications for fiscal policy, technical cooperation with Bolivia, preparing a project on social public spending in Latin America, and organizing a workshop on the role of legislative power in the budgetary process in Latin America (Santiago, Chile, 12 July).

The Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES) focused its activities on public administration and regulation; decentralization, territorial planning, management and development; programming and investment projects; and cooperation among Latin American and Caribbean organizations. It organized meetings and international and national seminars, among them the sixteenth regional seminar on fiscal policy (Santiago, 26-29 January); 11 international seminars, attended by a total of 343 representatives from 18 countries; 10 national courses attended by 297 participants; and one subregional course for 28 representatives from Latin America and the Caribbean. It provided consultancy services to the Honduran municipalities association to assist in the preparation of local economic development policy for its institutional development plan. The ECLAC/ILPES agreement with the German Agency for Technical Cooperation on State reform, productive development and sustainable use of natural resources enabled a series of technical support missions to be carried out in several countries of the region.

The meeting of the Presiding Officers of the Regional Council for Planning (San Juan, 29 June), the intergovernmental body directing the work of the Institute, reviewed its activities in the 2002-2003 biennium and considered its 2004-2005 work programme. The Regional Council adopted a resolution expressing support for the Institute's work and requested ECLAC to organize a meeting to explore opportunities for implementing economic instruments as a complement to instruments for environmental regulation. ECLAC took note of the resolutions adopted at the June meeting of the Presiding Officers, reiterated to the Regional Council members the importance of their contributions to the regular system of government financing, and requested the Executive Secretary to continue to provide resources to support ILPES [res. 597(XXX)].

The Committee on Cooperation among Developing Countries and Regions (San Juan, 30 June) reviewed the ECLAC secretariat report entitled "Activities of the ECLAC system to promote and support technical cooperation among developing countries and regions during the 2002-2003 biennium" [LC/G.2242(SES.30/18)] and discussed opportunities and challenges for international cooperation in Latin America and the Caribbean. ECLAC, in its resolution relating to that review [res. 611(XXX)], took note of the report and stressed the need to broaden South-South cooperation in areas related to strategies for productive development in open economies; to support activities for extending the use of South-South mechanisms and modalities in the priority areas of economic and social development policy; and to arrange for greater financial participation by countries and agencies to strengthen cooperation for development.

ECLAC requested the Executive Secretary to modernize its strategic approaches to international cooperation for development, including South-South, North-South and multilateral cooperation; intensify the incorporation of South-South cooperation modalities into the secretariat's 2006-2007 programme of work; strengthen strategic partnerships with donors to increase North-South and South-South cooperation; disseminate, through the new ECLAC Internet site, activities promoting South-South cooperation; request the international community to support Latin American and Caribbean countries in responding to globalization; strengthen collaboration with UN development bodies to foster interregional cooperation in the context of globalization; participate in regional coordination activities for South-South cooperation in the areas of ECLAC competence; and support UNDP and the Latin American Economic System activities to promote South-South cooperation in UN regional work. In addition, ECLAC decided to change the name of the Committee on Cooperation among Developing Countries to the Committee on South-South Cooperation.

In the resolution on follow-up to the first phase of the World Summit on the Information Society [YUN 2003, p. 857], ECLAC requested the secretariat to prepare regional countries for the second phase by, among other actions, developing and updating indicators for the ongoing assessment of progress; supporting a regional preparatory meeting to define goals for the second phase; and developing a work plan aimed at building an inclusive information society [res. 610(XXX)].

International trade and integration

The International Trade and Integration Division of ECLAC undertook several projects, the most important of which was a comparative study of East Asian and Latin American information technology industries, which resulted in an international seminar that provided a useful exchange of ideas on best practices for using information and communication technology (ICT) in those two regions. Among other projects were: a UNDP-funded project with the other four regional commissions on interregional partnership for promoting trade as an engine of growth through knowledge management and for taking advantage of ICT; and an international collaboration project to assess the overall impact of free trade agreements.

The Division continued to offer technical assistance, taking part in more than 30 talks, courses and seminars for government officials, university officials, students and technicians throughout the region. It issued a series of papers and studies on international trade and finance, among other publications.

Social development and equity

The Social Development Division of ECLAC prepared a framework document defining aspects for a regional report on progress made by countries of the region towards achievement of the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51]. An inter-institutional meeting (6-7 October) supported the initiative and decided to contribute to the preparation of that report. The Division launched the 2004 edition of the Social Panorama of Latin America on 30 November, which focused on poverty and distribution of income, demographic changes, the social situation of young people, changes within families and the social agenda of programmes for young people. A document on poverty, hunger and food security was also published. The second stage of an ECLAC/World Food Programme agreement was implemented, with an analysis of hunger and inequality in the Andean countries, which was considered at a Hunger Forum of the Andean Nations (Quito, Ecuador, 22-23 November). The Forum ended with a declaration on investing in programmes for hunger eradication in Andean countries.

The Division conducted and published five national studies (Argentina, Chile, Costa Rica, Mexico, Uruguay) on the processes of construction and application of public policies, the management of reforms and the role of political actors. A regional seminar of experts was held (August, 10-12) on the improvement of the institutionalization of social policies and the constitution of a social authority. In October, ECLAC signed an agreement with the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) for the evaluation of the costs of implementing goals on children's rights.

ECLAC held a seminar on education financing and management in Latin America and the Caribbean, at which it considered an ECLAC/United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) document on the subject [LC/G.2253(SES.30/15)]. As a result, ECLAC decided [res. 609(XXX)] to undertake with UNESCO an analysis of options for financing and managing education and to promote the formulation of public policy agendas to help countries to meet their education targets, as well as an analysis of the causes of educational inequality in the region, and to stimulate the formulation of regional strategies for reducing inequalities in economic, social and educational development. It also undertook to follow up the fulfilment of the education-related MDGs; help mobilize stakeholders to uphold the principle of social responsibility for education; promote interaction among education and finance authorities with a view to arriving at agreements on management and financing options; and promote activities with other UN bodies and multilateral agencies to follow up on financing and management of education. ECLAC agreed to support UNESCO in the fulfilment of its mandate to follow up on the educational goals agreed upon in international forums.

Sustainable development and human settlements

In 2004, the Sustainable Development and Human Settlements Division of ECLAC completed a number of projects, including a training programme to improve environmental management in Latin America and the Caribbean; an action-oriented strategy to strengthen the capacity of urban governments and institutions to craft policies and manage programmes for the reduction of urban poverty at the national and local levels; consulting services for drawing up a model for sustainable development by integrating environmental policies with social and economic policies; the development of an economic sector through cooperative alliances and agreements that benefited from market opportunities created by the growing demand for environmental services and technologies; and assistance for organizing an editorial group and coordinating the writing of a book on science and technology for sustainable development. The Division also carried out a number of interdivisional activities in the areas of energy and climate change, and of water, sanitation and human settlements for the Commission on Sustainable Development.

ECLAC commended the secretariat for organizing a special meeting within the framework of its session to analyse the challenges and opportunities that sustainable development represented for the region; agreed to proceed with a regional forum on sustainable development for the implementation of decisions adopted at the World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821], to be convened by the Executive Secretary; and invited the international community and ECLAC member countries to collaborate in organizing those meetings to ensure their regularity and permanence as a forum for dialogue and consensus-building [res. 602(XXX)].

Population and development

In 2004, ECLAC's Latin American and Caribbean Demographic Centre (CELADE) provided technical assistance to regional countries in drawing up policies and programmes related to the elderly to meet the requirements of the International Plan of Action on Ageing, 2002 (the Madrid Plan of Action) [YUN 2002, p. 1194] and those of the regional strategy approved by the Regional Intergovernmental Conference on Ageing [YUN 2003, p. 1022]. CELADE continued to update and disseminate a database on international migration, which proved of assistance to the Statistical Information System on Migrations in Central America, established by CELADE and the International Office for Migration. CELADE participated in national and regional seminars, intergovernmental forums on migration in the region and meetings related to the UN Global Commission for International Migration. It also convened a meeting of experts to discuss the relation between migration, regional integration and human rights. It developed specific studies on the interrelation of the demographic dynamic and development.

The open-ended meeting of the Presiding Officers of the sessional Ad Hoc Committee on Population and Development (Santiago, 10-11 March) [LC/L.2141] adopted a Declaration in commemoration of the tenth anniversary of the International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) [YUN 1994, p. 955] and requested the Committee Chair to present the results of the meeting to the Commission on Population and Development at its thirty-seventh session in March and to the Ad Hoc Committee at its next meeting. The Declaration urged countries to intensify their efforts in a number of areas and requested ECLAC and the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) to prepare a regional strategy for meeting the need for trained human resources in population and development for submission to the Ad Hoc Committee.

The Ad Hoc Committee, at its meeting (San Juan, 29-30 June), adopted conclusions that were reflected in the ECLAC resolution on population and development covering priority activities for 2004-2006 [res. 604(XXX)]. By that resolution, ECLAC endorsed the Declaration, urged regional countries to intensify efforts to implement the CPD Programme of Action, and adopted the recommendation that the Committee assume responsibility for monitoring the regional strategy for implementing the Madrid Plan of Action. ECLAC recommended that the Ad Hoc Committee analyse in 2006 international migration, human rights and development, and prepare relevant documents. It requested the Presiding Officers, during the intersessional period and in coordination with UNFPA, to examine the issues related to indigenous peoples and other ethnic groups, ageing, and human resources development in preparation for the Committee's 2006 session. It called on the region's countries to provide resources for the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action and the key actions it specified and to ensure their inclusion in policies aimed at reducing social inequalities, eliminating gender inequality and eradicating poverty; it urged the international community to increase technical and financial cooperation for fulfilling those objectives.

Integration of women in development

The Regional Conference on Women in Latin America and the Caribbean (ninth session, Mexico City, 10-12 June) [LC/G.2256(CRM.9/6)] adopted the Mexico City Consensus, by which participating Governments reaffirmed their determination to, among other actions, adopt measures to ensure the full development and advancement of women of all ages, with a view to guaranteeing their access to justice and their enjoyment of all human rights. The Conference welcomed the research agenda proposed in the document entitled "Roads towards gender equity in Latin America and the Caribbean" [LC/L.2114(CRM.9/3)] and requested the ECLAC secretariat to put it into practice, in collaboration with regional Governments and other international organizations. It declared that the Mexico City Consensus should constitute the region's contribution to the work of the 2005 session of the Commission on the Status of Women and asked the Chairman to submit it to ECLAC at its thirtieth session.

ECLAC took note of the report of the Regional Conference and reaffirmed the Mexico City Consensus [res. 605(XXX)].

The thirty-seventh meeting of the Presiding Officers of the Regional Conference on Women in Latin America and the Caribbean (Santiago, 29-30 November) agreed on a regional strategy for participation in UN system activities related to the tenth anniversary of the Fourth World Conference on Women (Beijing +10) (see p. 1144), the special session of the Economic and Social Council on the analysis of cross-cutting of gender issues in the UN system, and the charting of the objective of the Millennium Declaration on the promotion of gender equality [YUN 2000, p. 52] and of the cross-cutting of other goals.

ECLAC organized a meeting of experts (Quito, Ecuador, 25 August) on policies and programmes for overcoming poverty from the perspective of democratic governance and gender. It also organized the twelfth meeting (Santiago, 30 November) of UN system bodies on the advancement of women in the region.

Economic statistics and technical cooperation

The ECLAC Statistics and Economic Projection Division published, in addition to the Statistical Yearbook, various technical documents designed to offer methodological tools in the production and analysis of social and economic statistics, and prepared a Cuaderno Estadístico on the classification of international statistics, including a framework for the economic analysis of tourism information. As an initial response to the growing demand from member States for the improvement of the institutional and organizational aspects of national statistics systems, the Division translated into Spanish the UN manual on the organization of statistical institutions. It redesigned the Statistical Yearbook and the Cuadernos Estadísticos, as well as its online databases and website.

The Division carried out a number of projects, such as those for the creation of a network of institutions and experts in social and environmental statistics (REDESA project), the improvement of surveys and measurement of living conditions in Latin America and the Caribbean (MECOVI project), and the International Comparison Programme (ICP project), a global initiative to obtain statistics of the parities of purchasing power. It also played a central role in coordinating information, documents and data for monitoring the MDGs.

ECLAC [res. 599(XXX)] endorsed the agreements adopted by the second meeting of the Executive Committee of the ECLAC Statistical Conference of the Americas [YUN 2002, p. 1014] and the Conference's resolution [YUN 2003, p. 1023].

Natural resources and infrastructure

The ECLAC Division of Natural Resources and Infrastructure focused on productive development based on the exploitation of natural resources and a conceptual review of the development of infrastructure and economic growth. It conducted studies on sustainable management and natural resources, on the integration of regional infrastructure, and on the regulation of infrastructure and public utility services and its impact on competitiveness, economic growth and social equality. It carried out projects on sustainable management of natural resources and on the regulation of infrastructure and public utility services. It cooperated with other Divisions, UN agencies and regional organizations, in particular with the Inter-American Development Bank and the World Bank, and assisted 12 countries in drawing up regulations for infrastructure and energy services and legislation for water and mining resources. The Division presented the study "Renewable energy resources in Latin America and the Caribbean: the situation and policy proposals" at the World Conference on Renewable Energies.

Subregional activities

Caribbean

The ECLAC subregional headquarters for the Caribbean—the Caribbean Development and Co-operation Committee (CDCC) in Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago—held its twentieth meeting (St. Croix, United States Virgin Islands, 22-23 April) [LC/CAR/L.15]. The meeting reviewed the implementation of its work programmes for 2002-2003 and for 2004-2005 up to March 2004, and considered the draft 2006-2007 work programme. It also considered the draft revised text of the CDCC Constituent Declaration and Rules of Procedure [LC/G.2251(SES.30/9)], preparations for the international meeting to review the implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States [YUN 1994, p. 783], recent developments in relation to the proposal for securing international recognition of the Caribbean Sea as a special area in the context of sustainable development, obstacles to the implementation of the Plan of Action of the World Summit on the Information Society [YUN 2003, p. 857], the challenges of the Free Trade Area of the Americas and of social development in the Caribbean small island developing States, and measurements of social and economic trends in the Caribbean.

ECLAC noted the report of CDCC's twentieth session, endorsed its resolutions and approved its Constituent Declaration and Functions and Rules of Procedure [res. 600(XXX)]. It requested that the amendments proposed by the Monitoring Committee or adopted by the CDCC ministerial session with respect to the CDCC work programme be incorporated into any revision of the ECLAC work programme, and that the Executive Secretary establish a time frame for the submission of proposed amendments [res. 601(XXX)].

ECLAC also adopted a resolution [res. 606(XXX)] on support for the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (see p. 288), which it recommended for adoption by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July [meeting 48], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ECLAC [E/2004/15/Add.2], adopted resolution 2004/46 without vote [agenda item 10].

Support for the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling resolution 503(XXIII) of 9 May 1990, adopted by the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, on support for Haiti,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 57/337 of 3 July 2003 on the prevention of armed conflict, and in particular the role assigned to the Economic and Social Council in that connection,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1542 (2004) of 30 April 2004, in which the Council decided to establish the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti and considered its various aspects, including the promotion of the social and economic development of Haiti and the need to design a long-term development strategy to that effect,

Bearing in mind also that Security Council resolution 1542(2004) underscores the need for Member States, in particular those in the region, and bodies of the United Nations system, among other actors, to provide appropriate support for these actions,

Highlighting the role that the Economic and Social Council can play in a long-term programme of support for Haiti,

Highlighting also the fact that these economic and social efforts will make an important contribution to the longer-term peace and security objectives of the Mission, which are currently the most immediate priority on the ground,

Considering the content of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010,

1. Welcomes the commitments undertaken by the countries of the region in connection with the efforts towards the reconstruction of Haiti;

2. Trusts that these commitments will be extended to all the spheres envisaged in the mandate of the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti, with special emphasis on economic and social development, in accordance with the spirit of Security Council resolution 1542(2004);

3. Requests the secretariat of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean to support the countries of the region in the context of this effort, in full cooperation with the transitional Government of Haiti and in close coordination with the Mission, with a view to optimizing the actions they seek to carry out under the terms of reference of the Mission;

4. Instructs the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean to evaluate, in coordination with the transitional Government of Haiti, the Secretary-General and the Mission, the timing and modalities of such collaboration;

5. Expresses its satisfaction with the assistance being provided by the Governments participating in the Mission, and urges other Governments in the region, to the extent of their abilities, to join in this manifestation of solidarity.

Mexico and Central America

In 2004, the ECLAC subregional headquarters in Mexico, at the request of those member States that faced a particularly intense cycle of hurricanes and torrential rains, undertook seven evaluations of the socio-economic and environmental impact of natural phenomena: two on floods in Mexico and five on hurricanes in the Caribbean. It also held five training courses on the methodology used for such evaluations.

The subregional headquarters provided consultancy services to 18 member States and held one meeting of experts and 14 training courses. A total of 19 projects were carried out at a cost of some $1.2 million from extra-budgetary sources. It conducted a number of interdivisional activities, including coordination with CDCC for technical cooperation with Haiti's provisional Government and the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti, joint preparation with the ECLAC office in Washington, D.C. of an extra-budgetary project proposal on the strengthening of capacities related to trade, and provision of technical assistance to Andean nations for negotiating a free-trade agreement with the United States.

South America

ECLAC, in taking account of the interest of the South American countries in strengthening the coherence of studies and projects concerning the subregion, recommended that the various ECLAC national offices and organs carry out joint integrated and complementary studies and activities, focusing in depth on the subregion; in that connection, it highlighted the need to guarantee coordination and unity in their work, especially with respect to physical integration, international trade and the analysis of macroeconomic convergence in South America, without prejudice to issues relating to the social sphere and sustainable development [res. 608(XXX)].

Programme and organizational questions

ECLAC approved the draft 2006-2007 programme of work of the ECLAC system [LC/G.2238 (SES.30/6)], including ILPES, and endorsed the proposed priorities, which encompassed the promotion of a broader vision of macroeconomic stability to fuel growth and reduce volatility, the importance of regional affairs and integration into the rest of the world, an increase in the region's production potential and in social cohesion, improvements in global institutions, and the importance of migration, sustainable development and financing for development. It asked the Executive Secretary to strengthen the structure of its national and liaison offices, to submit proposals for the execution of the programme of work, and to convene the Committee of the Whole in between Commission sessions so as to strengthen and broaden the dialogue between member States and the secretariat [res. 607(XXX)]. In other action, ECLAC approved its calendar of conferences [LC/G.2248(SES.30/7)] for 2004-2006 [res. 603(XXX)].

Venue of and participation in ECLAC thirty-first session

On 22 July [meeting 48], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ECLAC [E/2004/15/Add.2], adopted resolution 2004/47 without vote [agenda item 10].

Place of the next session of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind paragraph 15 of the terms of reference and rules 1 and 2 of the rules of procedure of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean,

Considering the invitation of the Government of Uruguay to host the thirty-first session of the Commission,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Government of Uruguay for its generous invitation;
2. Notes the acceptance by the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean of this invitation with pleasure;
3. Endorses the decision of the Commission to hold its thirty-first session in Uruguay in 2006.

Also on 22 July, the Council, by decision 2004/246, deferred consideration of a draft resolution recommended by ECLAC on the participation of ECLAC associate member countries in the follow-up to UN world conferences and in the Council's work.

Cooperation with regional organizations

Cooperation between United Nations and Latin American Economic System

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 57/39 [YUN 2002, p. 1016], the Secretary-General, in his consolidated report on cooperation between the United Nations and regional and other organizations [A/59/303], provided information on cooperation between the various programmes and agencies of the UN system and the Latin American Economic System (SELA).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 76], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/258 [draft: A/59/L.55], as orally revised, without vote [agenda item 56 (k)].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 57/39 of 21 November 2002 on cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and regional and other organizations,

Bearing in mind the Agreement between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System, in which the parties agree to strengthen and expand their cooperation in matters that are of common concern in the fields of their respective competence pursuant to their constitutional instruments,

Noting that cooperation between the Latin American Economic System and the United Nations has been evolving, strengthening and diversifying over the years with regard to its areas of cooperation,

Welcoming the changes in the treatment of topics relating to the United Nations system, in close contact with the delegations of the Member States participating in such deliberations,

1. Takes note of the holding of the thirtieth regular meeting of the Latin American Council of the Latin American Economic System from 22 to 24 November 2004;

2. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Urges the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean to continue deepening its coordination and mutual support activities with the Latin American Economic System;

4. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations, funds and programmes of the United Nations system to continue and intensify their support for and to strengthen their cooperation with activities of the Latin American Economic System and to contribute to joint actions to achieve the internationally agreed development objectives, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in Latin America and the Caribbean;

5. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Permanent Secretary of the Latin American Economic System to assess, at the appropriate time, the implementation of the Agreement between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Cooperation with Caribbean Community and OAS

The General Assembly, on 10 December, adopted resolution 59/138 on cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community (see p. 306). On 23 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 59/257 on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States (see p. 307).

Western Asia

The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) did not meet in 2004. Its twenty-third meeting was scheduled to be held in 2005.

Economic and social trends

Economic trends

Despite the situations in Iraq and Palestine, 2004 was another positive year for the overall economic growth of Western Asia. GDP, which grew by 4.8 per cent, compared to 5.7 per cent in 2003, still represented a considerable improvement over the growth of recent years, according to the summary of the survey of economic and social developments in the ESCWA region, 2005 [E/2005/20]. That was due to a combination of high oil prices and production, low interest rates, ample liquidity in the public and private sectors and an expansion of domestic demand. With average population growth estimated at 2.4 per cent, per capita GDP, excluding Iraq and Palestine, increased by 2.3 per cent in real terms.

In the Gulf Cooperation Council States (GCC) (Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates), real growth was only 4.7 per cent, as compared with a final figure of 6.6 per cent in 2003, largely due to high oil and natural gas production and revenues. Non-oil sectors performed well, particularly transport, telecommunications, real estate, banking and finance, as well as high domestic liquidity and low, albeit gently rising, interest rates. Among the GCC countries, Qatar achieved the highest GDP growth rate (6.0 per cent), followed by Saudi Arabia (5.3 per cent) and Bahrain (5.0 per cent).

In the more diversified economies (Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon, Syrian Arab Republic, Yemen), favourable external factors, including low dollar interest rates, the expansion of regional tourism, a sustained increase in worker remittances and other income transfers, resulted in healthy domestic demand, which drove the real GDP up to 4.9 per cent, the highest since 2000. Egypt and Jordan each had the highest growth rate, at 5.5 per cent, followed by Lebanon at 5.0 per cent.

Tensions and political instability continued to overshadow prospects for steady economic growth and development in the conflict zones of Iraq and Palestine, leading to falling levels of per capita income and widespread poverty. However, the Iraqi economy showed signs of recovery from a very low base, with an improvement of per capita GDP, reversing the decline of preceding years, although not enough to achieve self-sustaining economic growth. The Palestinian economy registered a real GDP growth rate of 1.6 per cent, down from the 6.1 per cent rate in 2003.

Oil

In 2004, the average basket price of crude oil of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) was $36.05 per barrel. Oil production in the ESCWA region expanded by 6 per cent from its 2003 level, with ESCWA's OPEC members (Kuwait, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates) producing an average of 4 per cent more than in 2003, while production in non-OPEC ESCWA countries (Bahrain, Egypt, Oman, the Syrian Arab Republic, Yemen) declined by 5 per cent as they struggled to maintain output. All ESCWA oil-exporting countries experienced a boost in oil export revenue, which rose to an estimated $213 billion, a 29 per cent increase over 2003.

Trade

In 2004, total merchandise exports of ESCWA member countries reached $297 billion, while that of merchandise imports reached $194 billion. The GCC countries accounted for 86 per cent of those exports and 70 per cent of all imports. Total gross exports from the region increased by 24 per cent, largely as a result of increased oil export values. Exports from the more diversified economies, notably Egypt, Jordan and Lebanon, also rose significantly, as did imports, which increased by 22 per cent due to an expansion in domestic demand.

Social trends

In the social sphere, the region remained trapped in a vicious circle of poverty, unemployment and violent conflict, each reinforcing the other and interacting with other negative parameters, including weak and/or waning social protection systems, non-participatory modes of governance, segmentation, modest growth and a shock therapy approach to economic reform, resulting in worsening social conditions for large parts of the population. Poverty was a serious challenge to both policy makers and decision makers. Household surveys revealed clear symptoms of widespread poverty. Non-money metric measures of poverty provided a different perspective on living conditions other than the income measure. Most ESCWA member countries performed quite well when judged by life expectancy at birth and by infant and under-five mortality rates. However, the region still experienced literacy rates of only 67 per cent for its adult population and 75 per cent for its youth population.

Activities in 2004

During 2004, ESCWA activities under its 2004-2005 work programme [YUN 2003, p. 1028] focused on the four pivotal priorities: water and energy resources, social policies, globalization, and technology; and on the interdisciplinary issues of the empowerment and advancement of women, national statistical capacity-building, especially in monitoring the attainment of the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51], and the special needs of countries emerging from conflict.

Economic development and cooperation

The Economic Analysis Division of ESCWA focused on increasing the capacity of ESCWA member countries to coordinate their economic policies and achieve economic development by providing a quantitative assessment of economic and financial data and trends. Activities included the provision to end-users of in-depth analyses showing macroeconomic variables and trends, workshops, studies, and dialogue with regional stakeholders. A workshop on the role of indebtedness in regional economic development was held (Beirut, Lebanon, 6-7 December) and a study on the impact of economic variables was published.

The Globalization and Regional Integration Division concentrated its activities on, among other aspects of its work, facilitating transboundary flows of goods, services, people and capital; increasing awareness of ESCWA member countries to new developments in the multilateral trading system and familiarity with WTO negotiations and agreements and their implications; and disseminating knowledge and capacity-building through expert group meetings, seminars and workshops. To that end, an expert group meeting was organized (Beirut, 11-12 May) to follow up the results of the Fifth WTO Ministerial Conference [YUN 2003, p. 1535], as were six seminars/workshops, including two regional seminars in Beirut on trade facilitation (1-3 June) and on trade in services for the Arab countries (7-9 December). Briefing notes on recent developments in respect of the WTO Doha round of WTO trade negotiations (see p. 958) and an Arabic translation of the 2004 framework agreement were prepared.

Transportation

The Committee on Transport, at its fifth session (Beirut, 2-4 March) [E/ESCWA/GRID/2004/IG.1/7], recommended that the draft action plan

[E/ESCWA/GRID/2004/1] for the implementation of the Agreement on International Roads in the Arab Mashreq [YUN 2001, p. 928] be adopted to allow implementation to begin; that member States accelerate implementation of the action plan before the expiry of the maximum period allowed for under the Agreement; and that countries that had not yet done so, sign and ratify the Agreement. They should likewise sign and ratify the Agreement on International Railways in the Arab Mashreq [YUN 2003, p. 1026]. Noting the efforts made by member countries to establish and activate national committees for the facilitation of transport and trade, the Committee urged the ESCWA secretariat to provide those countries with technical assistance to enable them to accelerate measures for doing so.

The Committee further recommended that member States approve by 30 June the amended memorandum of understanding on cooperation in maritime transport in the Arab Mashreq, with a view to submitting it to ESCWA in 2005, and, by that date, complete and update data on the regional road transport information system and on international road network connections. ESCWA was to submit the collected data to the Committee in 2005.

Statistics

The Statistical Committee, at its sixth session (Beirut, 6-8 October) [E/ESCWA/SCU/2004/IG.1/6], called on ESCWA member countries to strengthen human and material capacities of central statistical offices and units; communicate with one another through ESCWA in order to develop national capacities; submit proposals on the modification of the Statistical Committee's internal organization and enhancement of its performance by the end of 2004; and exchange expertise and experts in various statistical fields with a view to raising the level of statistical activities and reducing implementation costs.

The Committee called on ESCWA to form a task force to coordinate the region's work on population and housing censuses with a view to harmonizing national censuses. Regarding drafting a strategy for national statistical development, the Committee proposed that the Paris 21 Consortium (Partnership for Statistics) assist ESCWA member countries in preparing national statistical strategies by the end of 2006 and provide the necessary funding. It recommended that ESCWA member countries take a number of measures to fulfil the statistical requirements related to the MDGs and asked ESCWA to establish a joint regional technical task force of UN agencies to coordinate efforts related to the United Nations Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49]. It further recommended that ESCWA strengthen the partnership between its member countries and the UN Statistical Department with regard to support for and development of activities related to population censuses, as part of the 2010 World Programme on Population and Housing Censuses and Related Surveys.

Natural resources, energy and environment

The Committee on Water Resources, at its sixth session (Beirut, 2-4 December) [E/ESCAP/SDPD/2004/IG.2/6], recommended that water resources in ESCWA member countries be developed and their management assured by realistic goals and feasible national policies based on integrated management. Approval should be given for the adoption of a mechanism for consolidating regional cooperation, proposed in the ESCWA study on the principles for formulating guidelines for groundwater management. Through effective coordination and cooperation with all relevant parties, greater effort should be exerted to protect water resources from contamination, maintain water quality, formulate and develop indicators on the quality of surface water and groundwater, rainwater and water from springs feeding aquifers, and formulate comprehensive monitoring programmes for water quality management at basin level. The Committee urged ESCWA to continue efforts to build national capacities, especially in strengthening integrated water resource management; assist countries in developing their national plans with a view to achieving the MDGs and the goals of the Plan of Implementation of the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821], and, in that regard, assist countries in formulating policies and mechanisms for improving water supplies and sanitation services; convene a preparatory meeting in 2005 to coordinate the countries' positions; and develop a regional stance on water issues for the Fourth World Water Forum to be held in 2006 (see p. 1039).

The Committee on Energy, at its fifth session (Beirut, 11-12 October) [E/ESCWA/SDPD/2004/IG.1/7], recommended that member countries formulate national strategies, implement policies and programmes for energy conservation and efficiency in production and use, use clean fossil fuel technologies, exploit renewable energy resources, and formulate national strategies for sustainable development in energy. The Committee recommended to ESCWA that it include in its programme of work studies on policies involving social, economic and environmental aspects of energy resources management, with a view to achieving sustainable development, and continue the development of an energy database, which should be updated to include use for sustainable development.

Quality of life

The Committee on Women, at its first session (Beirut, 4-5 December 2003) [E/ESCWA/WOM/2003/IG.1/9], reviewed achievements for the advancement of Arab women 10 years after the 1995 Fourth World Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1169], the tasks before the Committee and the programme of work of the Centres for Women in that regard. It identified country needs concerning the empowerment of women in preparation for the 2006-2007 strategic framework and programme of work of the Centres. It adopted recommendations directed at Governments and ESCWA, focusing on commitment to the formulation of a comprehensive programme for Beijing +10 (see p. 1144), the provision of technical assistance to Arab countries in the preparation of national reports and the review, and revision and testing of an indicator for measuring the status of Arab women.

The Committee, at its second session (Beirut, 8-10 July 2004) [E/ESCWA/WOM/2004/IG.1/6], convened in conjunction with the Arab Regional Conference Ten Years after Beijing: Call for Peace, adopted the Beirut Declaration on Arab Women Ten Years After Beijing: Call for Peace, which was issued by the Arab Regional Conference. The Declaration appealed to the international community to take action to end wars and find a just and lasting solution for the occupied territories in the Arab region, called on all Governments to implement the Beirut Declaration, and urged them to strengthen national machineries for women. It requested ESCWA to provide advisory services in the areas of empowerment and the advancement of women, and called for the allocation of human and material resources to the Centres for Women to enable it to assume its expanded tasks.

The Committee also adopted the subprogramme on the empowerment and advancement of women within the 2006-2007 proposed strategic framework.

In other developments, ESCWA was preparing the first draft of the integrated social policies report and issued a booklet providing a comparative analysis of and guidelines for formulating such policies in the ESCWA region. It assisted the Palestinian Authority, the Palestinian private sector and civil society in articulating a coordinated vision for rehabilitation and development and in establishing socio-economic needs and priorities. It organized, in coordination with the League of Arab States, the Arab-International Forum on Rehabilitation and Development in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (Beirut, 11-14 October).

ESCWA also focused on advocacy for empowering youth and disabled persons, providing them with opportunities for employment, and on maintaining gender perspectives in such activities. It convened the Regional Expert Group Meeting on Information and Communication Technologies for Persons with Disabilities (Beirut, 25-26 May) and launched a website entitled "Net Forum for the Blind" and another for the Arab Youth Directory.

Programme and organizational questions

Venue and dates of ESCWA twenty-third session

By decision 2004/320 of 5 November, the Economic and Social Council approved the ESCWA request to accept the invitation of the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic to hold its twenty-third session in Damascus in April/May 2005.

Chapter VI

Energy, natural resources and cartography

The conservation and use of energy and natural resources continued to be considered by several UN bodies in 2004, including the Commission for Sustainable Development.

During the year, the Commission reviewed progress towards realizing the commitments and meeting the targets agreed to in the 1992 Agenda 21 and the 2002 Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, both of which called for sustainable access to and affordability of environmentally sound energy. The use of nuclear energy as an environmentally clean source of electricity was also considered by the General Assembly in November.

The natural resource water, considered together with sanitation and human settlements, was the focus of discussion at the Commission's twelfth session in 2004, the first year of its thematic two-year work cycle (2004-2005). The Assembly, reiterating that water was critical for sustainable development, including environmental integrity and the eradication of poverty and hunger, and indispensable for human health and well-being, invited the Secretary-General to organize the International Decade for Action, "Water for Life" (2005-2015).

On the World Day for Water (22 March), the Secretary-General announced the establishment of a high-level Advisory Board on Water and Sanitation, which aimed to galvanize global action on the related issues of water, sanitation and human settlements as part of the international effort to eradicate poverty and achieve sustainable development.

The recommendations of the Sixteenth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific and the twenty-second session of the United Nations Group of Experts on Geographical Names were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in July.

Energy and natural resources

The Commission on Sustainable Development, which assumed the work of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development following the latter's termination by Economic and Social Council decision 2002/303 [YUN 2002, p. 1022], held its twelfth session (New York, 14-30 April 2004) [E/2004/29] (see p. 827).

The Commission, at its high-level segment (28-30 April), discussed a series of reports of the Secretary-General on various aspects of implementation of Agenda 21 (the 1992 action plan for sustainable development) [YUN 1992, p. 672], and subsequent intergovernmental meetings related to sustainable development, including a report providing an overview of implementation and the related challenges and opportunities [E/CN.17/2004/2]. The reports contained a detailed review of implementation in a selected thematic cluster of issues, among which was a report on water management [E/CN.17/2004/4]. In his summary of the issues before the high-level segment, the Chairman stated that this was the first non-negotiating session, the purpose of which was to analyse the reasons for successes and failures, and to identify constraints, achievements and best practices in respect to the thematic cluster for 2004-2005—water, sanitation and human settlements. He noted that water was key to economic growth and that meeting the targets on water was a prerequisite for progress in poverty eradication, reduction of child mortality, health and environmental sustainability.

Energy

The Secretary-General, in his February overview report [E/CN.17/2004/2] on progress towards sustainable development, noted that Agenda 21 and the two major follow-up documents—the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 [YUN 1997, p. 792] and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation [YUN 2002, p. 821]—stressed the importance of access to and affordability of environmentally sound energy. The report briefly discussed energy, which would be dealt with in depth by the Commission for Sustainable Development at its fourteenth (2006) session. It noted that approximately 1.6 billion people, one quarter of the world's population, remained without access to electricity, and that the share of renewable energy, excluding hydroelectricity, in global electricity generation was 1.7 per cent.

Initiatives to promote access to reliable and affordable energy were carried out by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the World Bank, among others. The UNDP-World Bank Global Village Energy Partnership launched in 2002 continued to bring together public and private stakeholders to ensure access to modern energy services by the poor. A UNDP-led World Summit on Sustainable Development partnership worked to improve access to liquefied petroleum gas (LPG) in rural areas, in a programme known as the LPG Challenge. Ongoing forums such as the World Bank's Energy Forum and the Global Forum on Sustainable Energy continued to serve as catalysts for action. To increase the share of renewables in energy supply, some countries promoted renewable energy for the production of electricity with tax and subsidy incentives as well as legislation, and some took steps to encourage the use of ethanol in gasoline. A number of World Summit on Sustainable Development partnerships were established to promote energy efficiency and cleaner energy technologies. For example, the Partnership for Clean Fuels and Vehicles was aimed at eliminating lead in gasoline and reducing emissions, and the Collaborative Labelling and Appliance Standards Programme promoted cost-effective energy-efficiency standards and labels for appliances, equipment and lighting. In addition, the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA) worked with States to develop a mechanism that developing countries could use in attracting clean energy investments. The Secretary-General affirmed that development and transfer of cleaner energy technologies by developed countries were crucial to addressing climate change.

The Secretary-General reported in February [E/2004/12-E/CN.17/2004/3] on the efforts of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB) to enhance inter-agency cooperation in the follow-up to the World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821] (see p. 827), focusing on efforts in several areas, including water (see p. 1034) and energy. CEB found there was wide recognition throughout the UN system that energy use and efficiency were closely linked to climate change. It identified gaps in the programmatic reach of the institutions and the financial resources available to them to implement their mandates on energy. No single entity in the system had primary responsibility for energy, and independent approaches had been taken; as a result, a system-wide approach to addressing energy issues had not emerged. Adequate joint action on energy by the United Nations and other stakeholders would require more inclusive and broad-based arrangements than were in place. Other development actors, particularly the private sector, had comparative advantages in that area and should be engaged in the follow-up efforts.

By decision 2004/233 of 16 July, the Economic and Social Council welcomed the endorsement by the Economic Commission for Europe of the United Nations Framework Classification for Fossil Energy and Mineral Resources and decided to invite the Member States of the United Nations, international organizations and the regional commissions to ensure its worldwide application. The new classification included energy commodities such as natural gas, oil and uranium, among others, and was an extension of the earlier framework developed for solid fuels and mineral commodities.

Nuclear energy

By an August note [A/59/295], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the 2003 report of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). Presenting the report to the Assembly on 1 November [A/59/PV.47], the IAEA Director General said that, during the past year, increasing attention was paid to the benefits of nuclear energy as an environmentally clean source of electricity, while concerns remained about waste disposal, safety and security, despite overall improvements. With 439 nuclear reactors worldwide, nuclear energy accounted for about 16 per cent of the world's electricity production, keeping pace with the steady growth in the global electricity market. Asia and Eastern Europe remained the largest centres of expansion in nuclear capacity owing to demand for electricity, existence of a well-developed industrial infrastructure and lack of indigenous alternatives in some countries.

The Agency continued to improve its ability to implement safeguards and to encourage and stimulate technological innovation related to nuclear fuel. The development and adoption of legally binding international agreements had proved to be a powerful mechanism for enhancing safety. Work progressed on amending and broadening the scope of the 1979 Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material [YUN 1979, p. 1239], to include transport, storage and use, and on the Agency's revision and updating of international nuclear safety standards, all part of IAEA efforts to enhance protection against nuclear and radiological terrorism. In services to member States, IAEA undertook more than 50 advisory and evaluation missions and convened more than 60 training courses and seminars. Despite increased attention to the security of radioactive sources, deficiencies remained and a market existed for such sources for malicious purposes.

The Director General reported that the situation in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) continued to pose a serious challenge to the nuclear non-proliferation regime. Since December 2002, no verification activities were performed in the DPRK and the Agency could not provide any level of assurance about the non-diversion of nuclear material. Over the course of the year, the IAEA's verification activities in the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya confirmed that the country had pursued an undeclared nuclear programme for many years. However, in December 2003, Libya renounced its programmes for nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction (see p. 280) and actively cooperated with IAEA's efforts on verification. Regarding the implementation of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) safeguards agreements in Iran (see p. 548), the IAEA Board of Governors adopted several resolutions on Iran's undeclared nuclear programme and its failure to meet many of its obligations under its safeguard agreement, and urged Iran to cooperate fully with the Agency in the verification process. In 2003, IAEA had begun its verification of Iran's undeclared programme. As for Iraq, the Agency's mandate in that country remained in effect, although it was requested in March 2003 to cease its verification activities there. At that time, IAEA had found no evidence of the revival of nuclear activities (see p. 363). No progress had resulted from the Director General's consultations with the Middle East States on the application of full-scope safeguards for all nuclear activities. He also raised the possibility of the development of model agreements on establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in that region. The Agency continued its technical cooperation programme, including support for nuclear applications in such areas as human health, water resources management and mutation breeding of major food crops. The year 2004 marked the fiftieth anniversary of civilian nuclear power.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 November [meeting 48], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/18 [draft: A/59/L.18 & Add.1] by recorded vote (123-1-67) [agenda item 14].

Report of the International Atomic Energy Agency

The General Assembly,

Having received the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency for 2003,

Taking note of the statement of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency, in which he provided additional information on the main developments in the activities of the Agency during 2004,

Recognizing the importance of the work of the Agency,

Recognizing also the cooperation between the United Nations and the Agency and the Agreement governing the relationship between the United Nations and the Agency as approved by the General Conference of the Agency on 23 October 1957 and by the General Assembly in the annex to its resolution 1145(XII) of 14 November 1957,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency;

2. Takes note of resolutions GC(48)/RES/10A on measures to strengthen international cooperation in nuclear, radiation and waste safety, GC(48)/RES/10B on international nuclear and radiological emergency preparedness and response, GC(48)/RES/10C on transport safety, GC(48)/RES/10D on the safety and security of radioactive sources, GC(48)/RES/11 on progress on measures to protect against nuclear and radiological terrorism, GC(48)/RES/12 on strengthening of the Agency's technical cooperation activities, GC(48)/RES/13A on strengthening the Agency's activities related to nuclear science, technology and applications, GC(48)/RES/13B on support to the African Union's Pan-African Tsetse and Trypanosomiasis Eradication Campaign, GC(48)/RES/13C on development of the sterile insect technique for the control or eradication of malaria-transmitting mosquitoes, GC(48)/RES/13D on a programme of action for cancer therapy, GC(48)/RES/13E on nuclear knowledge, GC(48)/RES/13F on Agency activities in the development of innovative nuclear technology, GC(48)/RES/14 on strengthening the effectiveness and improving the efficiency of the safeguards system and application of the Model Additional Protocol, GC(48)/RES/15 on implementation of the Agreement between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea for the application of safeguards in connection with the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, GC(48)/RES/16 on the application of Agency safeguards in the Middle East and decision GC(48)/DEC/10 on Israeli nuclear capabilities and threat, adopted on 24 September 2004 by the General Conference of the Agency at its forty-eighth regular session;

3. Affirms its support for the indispensable role of the Agency in encouraging and assisting the development and practical application of atomic energy for peaceful uses, in technology transfer to developing countries and in nuclear safety, verification and security;

4. Appeals to Member States to continue to support the activities of the Agency;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Director General of the Agency the records of the fifty-ninth session of the General Assembly relating to the activities of the Agency.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 59/18:

In favour: Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Argentina, Armenia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belarus, Benin, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chile, China, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Serbia and Montenegro, Seychelles, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Swaziland, Sweden, Switzerland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Timor-Leste, Togo, Tonga, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Yemen, Zambia

Against: Democratic People's Republic of Korea

Abstaining: None

Natural resources

Water resources

In preparation for the twelfth session of the Commission for Sustainable Development, the Secretary-General issued a February report on freshwater management [E/CN.17/2004/4] in which he linked the issue to the goals on water set in Agenda 21 and the Millennium Declaration (MDG) [YUN 2000, p. 49]. Meeting the MDG of halving the number of people without access to safe drinking water by 2015 would require providing access to an additional 1.6 billion people by that date, estimated to require a doubling of spending in drinking water supply. That goal appeared to be attainable in many Asian countries, but not in most countries in other regions. In developing countries, most freshwater was used for agricultural irrigation, while in developed countries the largest user was industry. In both sectors, there was potential for increased efficiency in use, as well as reduction in pollution. Many countries had strengthened their integrated water resource management processes, with decentralization of some aspects of water management and increased participation of local users or water user associations and other stakeholders, frequently resulting in improved water allocations, greater efficiency of use and greater cost recovery.

The Secretary-General, in his February report [E/2004/12-E/CN.17/2004/3] on CEB efforts to coordinate UN system activities on sustainable development, covered freshwater and water and sanitation, among other things. He noted the formation in 2002 of UN-Water, bringing together the senior managers of the water-related programmes of 24 UN system entities, which provided global water assessment and policy advice. UN-Water was preparing to manage new external partnerships such as with the Global Water Partnership, the World Water Council, the Water Supply and Sanitation Council, the International Union for the Conservation of Nature, and the private sector. CEB endorsed UN-Water as the inter-agency mechanism for follow-up of the water-related decisions reached at the World Summit on Sustainable Development and the MDGs concerning freshwater. It requested UN-Water to finalize its terms of reference and modalities of work, including arrangements for participation of non-UN actors in the Summit follow-up.

The Commission also considered: the report of the African Regional Implementation Review Meeting on water, sanitation and human settlements (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 8-12 December 2003) [E/CN.17/2004/7/Add.1]; the report of the Regional Implementation Meeting on water, sanitation and human settlements for Asia and the Pacific [E/CN.17/2004/7/Add.2]; and discussion papers on water, sanitation and human settlements submitted by major groups [E/CN.17/2004/10 & Add.1].

Communication. On 13 February [E/CN.17/2004/14], Norway transmitted the report of an international conference on the theme "Water for the poorest", held in Stavanger, Norway, on 4 and 5 November 2003. The conference made recommendations for priority actions that could expand and accelerate the MDG and the World Summit's water and poverty agenda.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Social) Committee [A/59/483/Add.1], adopted resolution 59/228 without vote [agenda item 85(a)].

Activities undertaken during the International Year of Freshwater, 2003, preparations for the International Decade for Action, "Water for Life", 2005-2015, and further efforts to achieve the sustainable development of water resources

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 55/196 of 20 December 2000, by which it proclaimed 2003 the International Year of Freshwater, and its resolution 58/217 of 23 December 2003, by which it proclaimed that the International Decade for Action, "Water for Life", 2005-2015, would commence on World Water Day, 22 March 2005,

Emphasizing that water is critical for sustainable development, including environmental integrity and the eradication of poverty and hunger, and is indispensable for human health and well-being,

Recalling the provisions of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 adopted at its nineteenth special session, the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation") and the decisions of the Economic and Social Council and of the Commission on Sustainable Development at its sixth session relating to freshwater,

Reaffirming the internationally agreed development goals on water and sanitation, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and determined to achieve the goal to halve, by 2015, the proportion of people who are unable to reach or to afford safe drinking water, and the goals set out in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation to halve the proportion of people without access to basic sanitation as well as to develop integrated water resources management and water efficiency plans by 2005, with support to developing countries,

Taking note of the Ministerial Declaration, entitled “Message from the Lake Biwa and Yodo River Basin”, adopted on 23 March 2003 at the Ministerial Conference of the Third World Water Forum, held in Kyoto, Japan, and the Dushanbe Water Appeal, proclaimed on 1 September 2003 at the International Freshwater Forum, held in Dushanbe from 29 August to 1 September 2003,

Noting that the Fourth World Water Forum will take place in Mexico in March 2006,

Taking note with interest of the establishment of the Advisory Board on Water and Sanitation by the Secretary-General, and looking forward to its contribution to the mobilization of efforts and resources towards the implementation of the commitments, goals and targets agreed upon in those areas,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Welcomes the activities related to freshwater undertaken by Member States, the United Nations Secretariat and the organizations of the United Nations system, inter alia, through inter-agency work, as well as contributions from major groups, for the observance of the International Year of Freshwater, 2003;
3. Encourages Member States, the Secretariat, organizations of the United Nations system and major groups to continue their efforts to achieve the internationally agreed water-related goals contained in Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation;
4. Welcomes the work of the twelfth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development, and looks forward to the upcoming thirteenth session of the Commission on the thematic cluster of issues on water, sanitation and human settlements;
5. Invites the Secretary-General to take appropriate actions in organizing the activities of the International Decade for Action, “Water for Life”, 2005-2015, taking into account the results of the International Year of Freshwater and the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development at its twelfth and thirteenth sessions;
6. Calls upon the relevant United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, regional commissions and other organizations of the United Nations system to step up their efforts to deliver a coordinated response in order to make the Decade a decade of delivering promises through the use of existing resources and voluntary funds;
7. Notes with interest the partnership initiatives on water and sanitation undertaken within the framework of the World Summit on Sustainable Development and in the follow-up to the Summit and in accordance with the criteria and guidelines adopted by the Commission on Sustainable Development at its eleventh session;
8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session on the implementation of the present resolution, as well as on the activities planned by the Secretary-General and other relevant organizations of the United Nations system for the Decade;
9. Decides to consider, at its sixtieth session, the future arrangements for the review of the implementation of the Decade, including the possibility of a review on a biennial or triennial basis or a mid-term review.

Cartography

UN Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 2004/301 of 23 July, took note of the Secretary-General's report on the Sixteenth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific (Okinawa, Japan, 14-18 July 2003) [YUN 2003, p. 1035]. On the same date, the Council endorsed the Conference's recommendation (decision 2004/304) that the Seventeenth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific be convened for five working days in 2006, with a primary focus on the contribution of cartography and geographic information in support of the implementation of Agenda 21. The Council requested the Secretary-General to implement the other recommendations made by the sixteenth conference, in particular, that the United Nations continue to support surveying, mapping and spatial data infrastructure activities in the Asian and Pacific region and facilitate the participation of the least developed countries and the small island developing States of the region.

Standardization of geographical names

In accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 2003/294 [YUN 2003, p. 1035], the Secretary-General reported on the twenty-second session of the UN Group of Experts on Geographical Names (New York, 20-29 April) [E/2004/64, GEGN/22]. The Group of Experts considered the reports of the nine working groups and 18 linguistic/geographical divisions on their regions and on progress made in the standardization of geographical names since the Eighth UN Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names [YUN, 2002, p. 1029]. The Group of Experts addressed organizational matters for the Ninth Conference (2007), and commenced planning for implementing its recommendations. The Group proposed that the Council endorse its recommendation that its twenty-third session be held for six days in 2006 to prepare for the ninth Conference and requested the Secretary-General to implement that recommendation.

The Council, by decision 2004/301 of 23 July, took note of the report on the twenty-second session of the Group of Experts and by decision 2004/303, endorsed its recommendation that the twenty-third (2006) session be held in Vienna.

Chapter VII

Environment and human settlements

In 2004, the United Nations and the international community continued to protect the environment through legally binding instruments and the activities of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP).

The UNEP Governing Council/fifth Global Ministerial Environment Forum held its eighth special session on the theme of the environmental dimensions of water, sanitation and human settlements, as part of its follow-up to the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development. The summary of its consultations—the Jeju Initiative—addressed key environmental dimensions and concepts for meeting the water-related targets of the 2000 Millennium Declaration. The meeting also adopted decisions relating to international environmental governance; small island developing States; regional implementation of UNEP's work programme; and waste management.

The High-level Open-ended Intergovernmental Working Group on an Intergovernmental Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-building, established by GC/GMEF in March, adopted in December the Bali Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-building, designed to provide targeted long- and short-term measures for support in those areas to developing countries and economies in transition. The first Global Women's Assembly on Environment: Women as the Voice for the Environment, held in October, adopted a manifesto calling for urgent action to achieve sustainable development and made recommendations for action, among others, on gender issues with regard to global environmental change.

The Conference of the Parties to the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change adopted the Buenos Aires programme of work on measures dealing with adaptation and response to climate change. The seventh meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity adopted the Addis Ababa Principles and Guidelines for the Sustainable Use of Biodiversity. The 1998 Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade, which entered into force on 24 February, held its first Conference of the Parties to the Convention in September. The 2001 Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants also entered into force on 17 May.

The United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat) continued to support the implementation of the 1996 Habitat Agenda; the 2000 UN Millennium Declaration; the 2001 Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium; and the human settlements-related elements of the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation of the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development. It convened the second session of the World Urban Forum in September. In 2004, UN-Habitat had 95 technical cooperation programmes and projects under execution in 56 countries.

UN Environment Programme

Governing Council/Ministerial Forum

The fifth Global Ministerial Environment Forum (GMEF), also serving as the eighth special session of the Governing Council (GC) of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), was held at Jeju, Republic of Korea, from 29 to 31 March [A/59/25].

GC/GMEF discussed the follow-up to the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821]; UNEP's contribution to the twelfth (2004) session of the Commission on Sustainable Development (see p. 827) in the form of ministerial consultations on the theme "Environmental dimensions of water, sanitation and human settlements". The theme was addressed through three focus areas: integrated ecosystem approaches by the year 2005; water and sanitation; and water, health and poverty. A summary of the consultations, entitled the Jeju Initiative (see p. 1044), was annexed to the GC/GMEF report.

The Committee of the Whole (29-31 March) considered assessment, monitoring and early warning; the state of the environment (see p. 1041); outcomes of intergovernmental meetings of relevance to GC/GMEF [UNEP/GCSS.VII/3]; and international environmental governance: implementation of decisions of the World Summit and the seventh (2002) special session of GC/GMEF [YUN 2002, p. 1030] on the 2002 report of the Open-ended Intergovernmental Group of Ministers or Their Representatives on International Environmental Governance [ibid., p. 1032] (see p. 1038). The Committee's report was annexed to the Governing Council's report.

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Governing Council's report on its eighth special session (decision 2004/301).

Subsidiary body

In 2004, the Committee of Permanent Representatives, which was open to representatives of all UN Member States and members of specialized agencies, held an extraordinary meeting on 26 February and regular meetings on 15 April, 1 July, 1 September [UNEP/GC.23/INF/4], and 7 December [UNEP/CPR/90/2]. The Committee discussed, among other matters, preparations for and the outcome of the Governing Council's eighth (2004) special session, implementation of UNEP's programme of work and the relevant decisions of the Governing Council's twenty-first [YUN 2002, p. 1030] and twenty-second [YUN 2003, p. 1036] sessions, UNEP relations with the United Nations Office at Nairobi (UNON), and the status of the Environment Fund.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/59/483], adopted resolution 59/226 without vote [agenda item 85].

Report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on its eighth special session

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2997(XXVII) of 15 December 1972, 53/242 of 28 July 1999, 56/193 of 21 December 2001, 57/251 of 20 December 2002 and 58/209 of 23 December 2003,

Taking into account Agenda 21 and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"),

Reaffirming the role of the United Nations Environment Programme as the principal body within the United Nations system in the field of environment, which should take into account, within its mandate, the sustainable development needs of developing countries as well as countries with economies in transition,

Recalling the provisions of the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation on the full implementation of the outcomes of the decision on international environmental governance adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme at its seventh special session,

Reiterating the need to ensure that capacity-building and technology support to developing countries, as well as countries with economies in transition, in environment-related fields, remain important components of the work of the United Nations Environment Programme, and noting in this regard the ongoing work of the High-level Open-ended Intergovernmental Working Group to prepare an intergovernmental strategic plan for technology support and capacity-building,

Recalling its resolutions 57/251 and 58/209, by which Member States, the Governing Council and the relevant bodies of the United Nations system were encouraged to submit their comments, in a timely manner, on the important but complex issue of establishing universal membership of the Governing Council/ Global Ministerial Environment Forum, including its legal, political, institutional, financial and system-wide implications, in order to contribute to the report of the Secretary-General to be submitted to the General Assembly for consideration before its sixtieth session,

1. Takes note of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on its eighth special session and the decisions contained therein;

2. Also takes note of the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to its resolutions 57/251 and 58/209;

3. Notes that the Governing Council, at its eighth special session, discussed all components of the recommendations on international environmental governance, as contained in its decision SS.VII/1, and notes the continued discussion scheduled for its twenty-third session;

4. Emphasizes the need for the United Nations Environment Programme, within its mandate, to further contribute to sustainable development programmes, the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation at all levels and to the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development, bearing in mind the mandate of the Commission on Sustainable Development;

5. Calls upon all countries to further engage in the negotiations of the intergovernmental strategic plan for technology support and capacity-building with a view to its adoption at the twenty-third session of the Governing Council, in February 2005;

6. Notes the differences in the views expressed so far on the important but complex issue of establishing universal membership for the Governing Council/ Global Ministerial Environment Forum, notes also the upcoming consideration of the question of universal membership by the Council/Forum at its twenty-third session, encourages Member States, the Governing Council and the relevant bodies of the United Nations system that have not yet done so to submit their comments to the Secretariat on the important but complex issue of establishing universal membership for the Council/Forum, including the legal, political, institutional, financial and system-wide implications, as their contribution to the report of the Secretary-General and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report incorporating those views to the Assembly for consideration at its sixty-first session;

7. Emphasizes the need to further enhance coordination and cooperation among the relevant United Nations organizations in the promotion of the environmental dimension of sustainable development, and in this respect welcomes the continued participation of the United Nations Environment Programme in the United Nations Development Group;

8. Calls upon the United Nations Environment Programme to continue to contribute, within its mandate and as a member of the Inter-Agency Task Force, to the preparations for the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, to be held in Mauritius from 10 to 14 January 2005;

9. Notes the decision of the Governing Council to discuss at its twenty-third session issues related to domestic, industrial and hazardous waste management, in particular regarding capacity-building and technology support, and, in that context, to consider innovative ways of mobilizing financial resources from all appropriate sources to support the efforts of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in this area;

10. Also notes the decision of the Governing Council to review at its twenty-third session the implementation of the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the intergovernmental consultation on the strengthening of the scientific base of the United Nations Environment Programme;

11. Reiterates the need for stable, adequate and predictable financial resources for the United Nations Environment Programme, and in accordance with resolution 2997(XXVII) underlines the need to consider the adequate reflection of all administrative and management costs of the Environment Programme in the context of the United Nations regular budget;

12. Welcomes the progress made in the implementation of the provisions of section III.B. of the appendix to decision SS.VII/1 of the Governing Council on strengthening the role and financial situation of the United Nations Environment Programme, including the significant broadening of the donor base and increasing total contributions to the Environment Fund, and, in this regard, notes that the Governing Council will review the implementation of those provisions at its twenty-third session;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the resource needs of the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Office at Nairobi under review so as to permit the delivery, in an effective manner, of necessary services to the Environment Programme and to the other United Nations organs and organizations in Nairobi.

International environmental governance

In response to 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1033] and 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1039] Governing Council decisions, the Executive Director, in a February overview report on international governance [UNEP/GCSS.VIII/5], detailed progress achieved on the issues of universal membership for GC/GMEF (see below); strengthening UNEP's scientific base (see p. 1041); the development of an intergovernmental strategic plan for technology support and capacity-building (see p. 1039); strengthening UNEP financing (see p. 1049); multilateral environmental agreements (see p. 1050); and enhanced coordination across the UN system and the Environmental Management Group (see below).

He also submitted, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 57/251 [YUN 2002, p. 1031] and the above-mentioned 2003 Council decision, in March [UNEP/GCSS.VIII/INF/6], a synthesis of the views of Governments concerning the question of universal membership of GC/GMEF. Of the 19 replies received as of 1 March, including one representing the 25 members and acceding States of the European Union, 13 expressed their support for universal membership, 3 were opposed, 2 others had not yet decided their positions, and one indicated that the matter was being positively pursued. The views and comments presented in the note focused on the legality, legitimacy and practical and financial implications of universal membership.

On 31 March [A/59/25 (dec. SS.VIII/1, section I)], the Council requested the Executive Director to continue to invite views on the universal membership of GC/GMEF and to convey them to the Secretary-General as an input for his report requested by the Assembly in resolutions 57/251 and 58/209 [YUN 2003, p. 1037]. He should report on the matter at the twenty-third (2005) GC/GMEF session.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Assembly resolutions 57/251 and 58/209, the Secretary-General submitted his report in August [A/59/262] on establishing universal membership for GC/GMEF, which outlined consideration of the issue by GC/GMEF. The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly encourage Member States, the Governing Council and the relevant UN system bodies to submit their comments on the issue to the UNEP Executive Director, including its legal, political, institutional, financial and system-wide implications, for incorporation in the Secretary-General's report to be submitted to the Assembly for consideration at its sixtieth (2005) session.

The Assembly took action on the report in resolution 59/226 (see p. 1037).

Environmental Management Group

The Environmental Management Group (EMG), an inter-agency advisory group set up in 1999 to coordinate UN system activities in addressing the major challenges in the UNEP work programme [YUN 1999, p. 974], held its sixth (Geneva, 6 February), seventh (New York, 20 April), eighth (Nairobi, Kenya, 1 September) and ninth (Geneva, 8 November) meetings in 2004.

A February report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GCSS.VIII/5/Add.2] summarized EMG's work from mid-2003 to February 2004, covering activities relating to its contribution to major intergovernmental processes, including international environmental governance, implementation of the outcomes of the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821] in the areas of water, sanitation and human settlements (see p. 1044) and strengthening of UNEP's scientific base (see p. 1041). The report also discussed planned activities; links with intergovernmental forums and other UN system coordination mechanisms; and the functioning of the EMG secretariat. The work of EMG's issue management group on the harmonization of information management and reporting for biodiversity-related conventions, established in 2001, were detailed in an annex to the report. In February, EMG established an issue management group on environmental capacity-building to discuss the issue further and to develop a specific, time-bound programme of work, which would consider, as its immediate focus, the development of an environmental capacity-building resource library.

A February note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GCSS.VIII/INF/5] contained information on the activities of EMG members in the field of water, focusing on environmental aspects and the ecosystem approach, as a contribution to the eighth (2004) special session of GC/GMEF and the twelfth (2004) session of the Commission on Sustainable Development (see p. 827).

Governing Council action. On 31 March [dec. SS.VIII/1, section VI], the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to continue to promote UN-system coordination of environmental activities, in particular those relevant to UN system operations, through EMG's work. It decided to convey the report on EMG's work to the General Assembly as an annex to the 2004 report of GC/GMEF. The Executive Director was requested to submit a report to GC/GMEF in 2005, including a comprehensive assessment of the location of the EMG secretariat, taking into account, among other things, current efforts to strengthen UNON—the headquarters of UNEP and the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat)—and EMG's mandate and membership.

Reports of Executive Director. In response to Governing Council decision [SS.VIII/1, section VI] (above), the Executive Director, in a December report [UNEP/GC.23/7], summarized EMG's work under its 2004-2005 work programme and outlined its 2006-2007 work programme.

Environmental capacity-building and sustainable procurement for the UN system constituted the bulk of EMG's programme of work for 2004. With regard to environmental capacity-building, EMG focused on defining its role as a facilitator for more coordinated exchange of information and data on lessons learned, experiences and methodologies within the UN system, and on the possibility of establishing a resource library. Two pilot situation/needs analyses in biodiversity and chemicals management capacity-building, prepared in cooperation with the UNEP World Conservation Monitoring Centre (see p. 1063) and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, constituted EMG's contribution to the third meeting (Bali, Indonesia, 2-4 December) of the High-level Open-ended Intergovernmental Working Group on an Intergovernmental Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-building (see p. 1040). The main findings of both studies were discussed in the report, as were EMG's contributions to the development of a strategic plan on technology support and capacity-building (see below).

On the question of sustainable procurement, EMG discussed how it could best assist in the development of sustainable procurement policies and environmental management programmes throughout the UN system. It established an issue management group with the UNEP Division of Technology, Industry and Economics as the task manager, with other agencies, to survey current regulations and activities and address the development of supplier codes of conduct and training.

Among its future activities, EMG would support the implementation of the internationally agreed goals of the UN Millennium Declaration, adopted in General Assembly resolution 55/2 [YUN 2000, p. 49], in the areas of its mandate; continue work on environment-related capacity-building; and address specific issues related to urban poverty and environment, as requested by UN-Habitat.

Strategic plan on technology support and capacity-building

In response to a 2003 Governing Council decision [YUN 2003, p. 1038], the Executive Director submitted in February [UNEP/GCSS.VIII/5/Add.1 & Corr.1] the elements for an intergovernmental strategic plan on technology support and capacity-building, as called for in a 2002 decision of the Council [YUN 2002, p. 1033].

On 31 March [dec. SS.VIII/1, section III], the Governing Council established a high-level, open-ended intergovernmental working group of GC/GMEF to prepare an intergovernmental strategic plan for technology support and capacity-building, for its consideration in 2005. The group would consider, among other things, the draft elements for the plan submitted by the Executive Director (see above). The Council requested the Executive Director to seek additional financial resources to facilitate the participation of developing countries in the Group's meetings. It invited Governments, relevant organizations and stakeholders, in particular the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the Global Environment Facility (GEF) (see p. 1046), other relevant bodies and UN system organizations, international financial institutions and the secretariats of multilateral environmental agreements, to contribute to the group's work; and regional and subregional ministerial environmental forums to submit for the group's consideration, views on their technology support and capacity-building needs. The Executive Director would make available reports, including an inventory of UNEP's capacity-building and technology support activities, to assist the working group.

Intergovernmental working group. The High-level Open-ended Intergovernmental Working Group on an Intergovernmental Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-building held its first (New York, 25 June) [UNEP/IEG/IGSP/1/5], second (Nairobi, 2-4 September) [UNEP/IEG/IGSP/2/4], and third (Bali, Indonesia, 2-4 December) [UNEP/IEG/IGSP/3/4] sessions.

The working group had before it the Executive Director's June report [UNEP/IEG/IGSP/1/3/Rev.1] on perspectives on needs and gaps to be taken into account in the development of the intergovernmental strategic plan for technology support and capacity-building, which presented a set of issues to be addressed; the report of meetings of the working group of the Committee of Permanent Representatives (5 and 19 May and 2 June) [UNEP/IEG/IGSP/1/2] to consider the Committee's contribution to the intergovernmental working group; outcomes of the expert consultation (Geneva, 17-18 June) and civil society consultation (Nairobi, 21-22 June) [UNEP/IEG/IGSP/1/4]; the report of the civil society consultation [UNEP/IEG/IGSP/CS/1/2]; an inventory of UNEP capacity-building and technology support activities [UNEP/IEG/IGSP/2/3]; and a compilation of proposals by Governments [UNEP/IEG/IGSP/3/2].

The working group also considered notes by the Executive Director on an overview of UNEP activities relating to technology support and capacity-building in the fields of technology, industry and economics [UNEP/IEG/IGSP/1/INF/2] and environmental law [UNEP/IEG/IGSP/1/INF/3]; and secretariat notes on the submission by the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment (AMCEN) to the working group [UNEP/IEG/IGSP/2/INF/1], the strategic approach to enhance capacity-building prepared by GEF and approved by the GEF Council in 2003 [UNEP/IEG/IGSP/1/INF/4], and the Chair's summary of a meeting hosted by UNEP and the Republic of Korea on capacity-building for integrated policy design and implementation for sustainable development (Jeju, Republic of Korea, 27-28 March) [UNEP/IEG/IGSP/1/INF/5].

The Chair of the working group proposed a draft framework for the plan [UNEP/IEG/IGSP/2/2] based on the elements contained in the Executive Director's February paper (see p. 1039), the discussions at the working group's first session and inputs from related processes, including the consultations of the Committee of Permanent Representatives, and of experts and civil society held in June (see above).

Bali Strategic Plan. The Bali Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-building [UNEP/GC.23/6/Add.1 & Corr.1], adopted by the High-level Open-ended Intergovernmental Working Group on an Intergovernmental Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-building, at its third session on 4 December, was intended as an intergovernmentally agreed approach to strengthen technology support and capacity-building in developing countries and countries with economies in transition, including reinforcing UNEP's role and building on areas where it had comparative advantage and expertise. Its objectives were to: strengthen the capacity of Governments of developing countries and countries with economies in transition; provide systematic, targeted, short- and long-term measures for technology support and capacity-building; ensure the participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in the negotiations on multilateral environmental agreements; ensure that principles of transparency and accountability were integrated in all activities; integrate gender-mainstreaming strategies and education and training for women in formulating relevant policies, and promote women's participation in environmental decision-making; enable collaboration with stakeholders and provide a basis for a comprehensive approach to developing partnerships; emphasize the identification and dissemination of best practices and the fostering of entrepreneurship and partnerships; enhance UNEP's delivery of technology support and capacity-building to developing countries and countries with economies in transition; strengthen cooperation among UNEP, multilateral environmental agreement secretariats, and other bodies engaged in environmental capacity-building, including UNDP and GEF; and promote, facilitate and finance access to and support of environmentally sound technologies and know-how, especially for developing countries and countries with economies in transition.

The Plan included measures for implementation at the national, regional and global levels, including the strengthening of regional UNEP offices to facilitate its effective support. It included a list of cross-cutting issues and thematic areas to be addressed, among which were the strengthening of national and regional environmental or environment-related institutions; development of national environmental law; and strengthening civil society and private sector cooperation. The Plan also supported South-South cooperation and the implementation of the outcomes of the intergovernmental consultation on strengthening UNEP's scientific base (see below). It provided for the reporting of its implementation to GC/GMEF and outlined coordination and evaluation mechanisms. A strategic partnership between UNEP and GEF would be developed to further the goals of the plan and submitted to GC/GMEF for adoption. Activities under the plan would be implemented through the Environmental Fund and resources mobilized from other sources, including public-private partnerships.

UNEP activities

A March policy statement of the Executive Director [UNEP/GCSS.VII/7] outlined UNEP's efforts with regard to the follow-up to the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821]; strengthening its work in environmental assessment and early warning; enabling countries to meet their commitments made at the 2000 Millennium Summit [YUN 2000, p. 47] and the World Summit; and international environmental governance. The challenge before the eighth (2004) GC/GMEF special session was to provide a substantive environmental perspective on the implementation of the environmental pillar of sustainable development in the fields of water, sanitation and human settlements; sustain momentum of implementation required to meet the goals and targets of the Millennium Declaration [ibid., p. 49] and World Summit; and implement measures related to international environmental governance.

Monitoring and assessment

Responding to a 2003 Governing Council decision [YUN 2003, p. 1039] initiating a consultative process on strengthening UNEP's scientific base, also known as the Science Initiative, the Executive Director submitted to the Council a synthesis [UNEP/SI/IGC/2] of 122 substantive responses received as at 12 November 2003 from Governments, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and scientific institutions on the likely gaps and types of assessment needs with respect to the environment, how UNEP and other organizations were meeting those needs, and current options for meeting any unfulfilled needs within UNEP's mandate. The synthesis report identified gaps and types of needs including: assessment of existing international intergovernmental challenges and of inter-linkages; scientific credibility, legitimacy and relevance in the assessment process; cost-effectiveness, cooperation and strengthening of existing institutions; and developing country participation and capacity-building. Options for meeting the needs within UNEP's mandate included strengthening UNEP cooperation with scientific institutions and academia, the operations of inter-agency cooperation mechanisms, and local and regional capacities for integrated environmental assessment and enhanced capacity-building, technology transfer and increased financial support.

On 26 January [UNEP/GCSS.VIII/5/Add.3], the Executive Director updated his earlier synthesis report and in February [UNEP/GCSS.VIII/INF.8] submitted a draft report, prepared by consultants, analysing the additional questions regarding the strengthening of UNEP's scientific base posed by its secretariat.

Governing Council action. On 31 March [dec. SS.VIII/1, section II], the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to evaluate the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the intergovernmental consultation and report to GC/GMEF in 2005, at which time it would review also their implementation. It invited both developed and developing countries in a position to do so and other partners active in development to provide additional funding for implementing the conclusions and recommendations, in particular those related to participation by, capacity-building in and support to subglobal assessments in developing countries and countries with economies in transition.

Post-conflict assessments

In November [UNEP/GC.23/3/Add.2], the Executive Director described progress by the UNEP Post-Conflict Assessment Unit in implementing the 2003 Governing Council decision on post-conflict assessment [YUN 2003, p. 1039] in Afghanistan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Haiti, Iraq, Liberia, Serbia and Montenegro and the Sudan. In Afghanistan, the Unit was implementing a comprehensive capacity- and institution-building programme. It participated in a United Nations Development Group (UNDG)/World Bank assessment mission to Haiti, and, in Iraq, it conducted a desk study on the environment and organized six round tables to coordinate activities among key stakeholders. It was also the focal point for cross-cutting issues on the environment within the context of the joint United Nations/World Bank mission to assess rehabilitation and transitional recovery needs in the Sudan. UNEP was developing a proposal to strengthen environmental administration in Liberia.

In support of the United Nations Compensation Commission, UNEP provided eight review reports of environmental studies by claimant countries. A December note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/INF/20] contained additional information on UNEP's post-conflict assessment activities.

Support to Africa

In response to a 2003 Governing Council decision [YUN 2003, p. 1040], the Executive Director, in a November report on meeting substantial environmental challenges in Africa and other regions [UNEP/GC.23/3/Add.7], stated that UNEP provided institutional support for the establishment of the interim secretariat of the environment initiative of the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD) [YUN 2002, p. 1035], which targeted desertification, wetland conservation, invasive alien species, coastal management, global warming, transboundary conservation areas, environmental governance and financing. It also initiated the implementation phase of the capacity-building programme of the Action Plan for the implementation of the NEPAD environment initiative.

UNEP continued to support the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment (AMCEN), especially the organization of its tenth regular session (Sirte, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, 26-30 June), which provided policy guidance on the environment in Africa. UNEP gave support to the Bureau of the African Ministers' Council on Water (AMCOW), which was part of the NEPAD environment initiative, the consultative processes of its Technical Advisory Committee and the organization of AMCOW's fourth ordinary session (Kampala, Uganda, 4-6 November). Through a memorandum of understanding signed between UNEP and Kenya's National Environmental Management Authority, support was given to the establishment of the NEPAD office in Kenya, in the coordination of coastal and marine sub-theme of the NEPAD environment initiative.

UNEP conducted several reviews and assessments of land-based sources of pollution and their impacts on the physical environment and human lives. It also provided support to Africa for the implementation of a number of multilateral environmental agreements and participation in international forums. It supported sectoral and cross-cutting activities in Africa including in the areas of trade and environment; cleaner production and sustainable consumption; environmental law; post-conflict efforts, including a desk study on Liberia; integrated water resources management; the ecosystem approach to dryland management; and the Great Apes Survival Project Partnership.

Pursuant to another 2003 Governing Council decision [YUN 2003, p. 1040], the Executive Director's report included information on poverty and the environment in Africa. UNEP developed a four-year project aimed at increasing African countries' capacities to mainstream environmental and ecosystem considerations in their development plans, thereby creating an enabling environment for poverty eradication. The project was initiated in Kenya, Mozambique, Rwanda, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania, and was scheduled to begin in Mali and Mauritania in 2005. UNEP developed a global partnership on the issue in cooperation with the UNDP Poverty and Environment Initiative. At the national level, UNEP also worked with UNDP country offices and with the World Bank's ongoing country assessment strategies and the establishment of its poverty reduction credits.

In 2004, 20 UNEP/GEF projects devoted exclusively to Africa were approved, with total funding of $64.6 million, including $20.4 million in GEF resources. UNEP continued to support African countries in the development of the Action Plan for implementation of the NEPAD environment initiative through a GEF-funded medium-sized project.

Water policy and strategy

UNEP's updated water policy and strategy, whose overall goals were: improved assessment and awareness of environmental water issues, environmental management of basins, coastal and marine waters and cooperation and coordination between UNEP and others in the international water sector, was submitted by the Executive Director in a November report [UNEP/GC.23/3/Add.5], pursuant to a 2003 Governing Council decision [YUN 2003, p. 1041]. The updated policy and strategy also included a revitalized environmentally sound management of inland waters programme, developed in 1985 [YUN 1985, p. 814], to be known as the Programme for the Environmentally Sound Management of Freshwater (EMWA). The water policy and strategy was designed to yield results in, among other areas, global and regional assessments of the state of major priority aquatic ecosystems, with a view to developing appropriate policy responses, and strengthened integrated management of internationally shared basins, marine and coastal areas, using multi-sectoral approaches. The Governing Council would conduct regular reviews to gauge progress in the stated objectives under the three key components of the policy and strategy: assessment, management and coordination.

A November note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/INF/25] presented the key policy issues, developments and processes that were taken into account in updating the water policy and strategy, and EMWA. The Council was to review the policy and strategy in 2005.

The atmosphere

UNEP was engaged in a number of national-level activities to reduce the vulnerability of least developed countries and small island developing States to climate change. Under the Assessment of Impacts and Adaptation to Climate Change, a global initiative of UNEP, the World Meteorological Organization, and the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (see p. 1057) for advancing scientific understanding of climate change vulnerabilities and adaptation options in developing countries, 24 regional studies were under way in 46 developing countries. Other projects included integrating vulnerability and adaptation to climate change into sustainable development planning in Southern and Eastern Africa.

Under its Energy Programme, UNEP addressed the environmental consequences of energy production and use, including global climate change and local air pollution, focusing on promoting policies that placed energy and transport within a broader sustainable development context.

Environment and sustainable development

In response to a 2003 Governing Council decision on the sustainable development of Small Island Developing States (SIDS) [YUN 2003, p. 1042], a report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GCSS.VIII/6] outlined modalities to: strengthen the institutional capacity of SIDS; increase funding for UNEP's SIDS-related activities during the 2004-2005 biennium; and provide focused support for the development and execution of partnership initiatives. The modalities, which were framed within the context of UNEP's substantive programmes and projects consisted of, among other things, the organization of thematic workshops, the elaboration and dissemination of technical papers and the provision of technical assistance.

On 31 March [dec. SS.VIII/2], the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to prepare a report on the outcome of the upcoming international meeting (Mauritius, 10-14 January 2005) for a ten-year review of the 1994 Barbados Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States [YUN 1994, p. 783] (see p. 858) for review in 2005 in the context of UNEP's mandate.

In response to the decision, the Executive Director in November, submitted a preliminary report [UNEP/GC.23/3/Add.6] describing UNEP's mandate for SIDS-related activities, background on the international meeting, and UNEP's contributions. An updated report would be issued following the meeting's conclusion.

Follow-up to World Summit on Sustainable Development (2002)

Pursuant to a 2003 Governing Council decision [YUN 2003, p. 1043], a December report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/5] provided an overview of UNEP activities to implement the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, adopted at the World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821], in the areas of water, sanitation and human settlements (see p. 1044); poverty, gender and the environment; technology support and capacity-building (see p. 1039); regional support; international environmental governance (see p. 1038); and other cross-cutting and thematic areas.

In other areas, a November report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/3/Add.7] included information on UNEP's role in strengthening regional activities and cooperation in the Economic Cooperation Organization (ECO) region (Western and Central Asia). The report described UNEP's activities in the areas identified for cooperation with ECO in a memorandum of understanding signed between the two organizations on 18 August, namely, environmentally sound and renewable energy services and resources; capacity-building services in environmental law, environmental education and ecotourism; and environmental assessment services.

Also in November [UNEP/GC.23/INF/23], the Executive Director reported on the implementation of a 2003 Governing Council decision on environment and cultural diversity [YUN 2003, p. 1043]. The report contained the results of the survey on the subject, which was undertaken in cooperation with UNESCO and the secretariat of the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity (CBD) [YUN 1992, p. 638]. Among the objectives of the survey were to understand if safeguarding cultural diversity was a prerequisite to preserving the environment, and to reveal the level of diversity and interlinkages between the environment and culture and their role in programmes and activities. The survey concluded that it was becoming clear that the link between cultural and biological diversity was often an inextricable one, and that it was necessary to think of preserving the world's biological and cultural diversity as an integrated goal. Fostering a convergence of perspectives required strengthening the links among various fields of research and applied work involved in diversity conservation. As a way forward, the report identified possible short-term activities, including organizing a workshop on cultural, environmental and social impact assessments and regional workshops on ethics, customs and traditions on environmental protection. However, in the longer term, a deeper analysis in the form of a comprehensive desk study in collaboration with other agencies, in particular UNESCO and CBD, could highlight concrete, implementable steps to demonstrate the interlinkages between environment and cultural diversity, and would culminate in a final report. Annexed to the report were a legal analysis of interlinkages between environment and cultural diversity and the results of a questionnaire on women, cultural diversity and sustainable development distributed at the first Global Women's Assembly on Environment in October (see p. 1048).

CEB consideration. The United Nations Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB), in its annual overview report for 2003 [E/2004/67], stated that, in follow-up to the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821], it had, through its High-level Committee on Programmes (HLCP), established or strengthened collaborative arrangements in the areas of freshwater, energy, water and sanitation, oceans and coastal areas, and patterns of consumption and production. Specifically, UN-Water, an informal arrangement for coordinating the activities of senior managers of UN water programmes, was confirmed as the inter-agency mechanism for follow-up on the Summit's water-related decisions and the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) concerning freshwater [YUN 2000, p. 52]. UN-Water's terms of reference and modalities of work were to include an inter-agency plan for addressing water and sanitation issues and mechanisms for interacting with non-UN system stakeholders. CEB established the Oceans and Coastal Areas Network (UN-Oceans) to ensure information-sharing and enhance coherence in the system's policies and activities relating to oceans and coastal areas. HLCP, at its eighth session (Florence, Italy, 15-17 September) [CEB/2004/7], noted the adoption of UN-Water's terms of reference.

Jeju Initiative

GC/GMEF, at its eighth special session [A/59/25] (see p. 1036), considered follow-up to the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821]: UNEP's contribution to the twelfth (2004) session of the Commission on Sustainable Development [E/2004/29] (see p. 827) on the theme of the environmental dimensions of water, sanitation and human settlements. The theme was addressed through the focus areas of integrated ecosystems approaches by 2005; water and sanitation; and water health and poverty. The Chair's summary of the consultations—the Jeju Initiative—identified key environmental dimensions and concepts for addressing the functions and needs of the natural environment, particularly water, in local, national and international efforts to achieve the water-related targets stemming from the 2000 Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49] and the World Summit, and examples of partnerships and best practices. The Initiative emphasized the need for the international community and Governments to make substantive progress in implementing the integrated water resource management target to develop integrated water resources management by 2005, the need for an environmentally sound approach to the Summit's target of halving the proportion of people without access to safe drinking water and basic sanitation; and the need to address water and sanitation issues in poverty reduction efforts. It also addressed the role of UNEP and other UN agencies.

While there was widespread agreement on many of the points contained in the Initiative, there was no consensus on a number of other issues. Nevertheless, the ministers and other delegation heads agreed that the Initiative should be transmitted to the Commission as UNEP's contribution to its 2004 session, at which it would review progress on the implementation of the goals, targets and commitments on freshwater, sanitation and human settlements in Agenda 21, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 672]; the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by the nineteenth special session of the General Assembly in resolution S/19-2 [YUN 1997, p. 792]; and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation of the World Summit [YUN 2002, p. 821].

As background papers for the ministerial consultations, GC/GMEF had before it summaries submitted by Governments on innovative practices [UNEP/GCSS.VIII/INF/17]; a discussion paper by the Executive Director on water, sanitation and human settlements [UNEP/GCSS.VIII/4]; and a January note [UNEP/GCSS.VIII/INF/4] on financing wastewater and treatment in relation to the MDGs, and the Summit's water and sanitation targets.

Policy and advisory services

Trade and the environment

A November note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/INF/5] contained information on UNEP's activities in trade and the environment. With the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), UNEP convened the Capacity-building Task Force on Trade, Environment and Development Training Workshop on Integrated Assessment for African Countries (Nairobi, Kenya, 19-20 July). UNEP also convened national stakeholders workshops to launch a pilot project on integrated assessment and planning for sustainable development (Kampala, Uganda, 7-8 September) and a pilot project on integrated assessment and planning to analyse the impacts of trade policy on the Colombian agriculture sector, with special emphasis on biodiversity and poverty reduction. The note also discussed UNEP's activities with respect to the use of environmental impact assessments, economic instruments and natural resource accounting, which included the convening, in cooperation with the United Nations Statistical Division, of a meeting on integrated environmental and economic accounting (Copenhagen, Denmark, 20-21 September).

Institution-building

In November [UNEP/GC.23/3/Add.3], the Executive Director reported on the implementation of a 2003 Governing Council decision [YUN 2003, p. 1044] on enhancing the application of principle 10 of the 1992 Rio Declaration on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 670], which related to public awareness and access to information held by public authorities, public participation in decision-making and access to justice in environmental matters. UNEP carried out consultations with Governments and relevant civil society organizations to determine the value of initiating an intergovernmental process for preparing global guidelines on the application of Principle 10. Responses received so far favoured the development of a "soft-law" international instrument, in the form of global guidelines. UNEP would continue to work with other organizations to enhance implementation of the Principle, preparing and disseminating information to raise awareness on the issue.

Coordination and cooperation

Business and industry

As requested by the Governing Council in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1044], the Executive Director, in a November note [UNEP/GC.23/INF/5], reported on the development of guidelines on cooperation between UNEP and the business sector. Taking into account the proposed elements contributed by Governments, and based on the Secretary-General's 2000 Guidelines on Cooperation between the United Nations and the Business Community, the "Guidelines on Cooperation between the United Nations Environment Programme and Business" were finalized in March and were appended to the Executive Director's note. The Guidelines were based on UNEP's ongoing work with business and industry and aimed to ensure greater private sector commitment to a new culture of environmental accountability and responsibility.

UNEP continued working with individual business entities and business associations to create greater environmental and social responsibility, mainly through its annual consultative meeting with industry associations. Other UNEP activities aimed at engaging businesses and industries included strengthening voluntary initiatives. Its Finance Initiative, involving more than 270 banks and insurance companies, was taking the lead in monitoring follow-up to undertakings made by major brokerage firms on corporate responsibility and sustainability at the first summit of leaders of the Global Compact (New York, 24 June), which was launched in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 989] to engage the business community in advancing basic values in human rights, labour and the environment. The Global Reporting Initiative (GRI), a multi-stakeholder process and independent institution, was launched in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1038] to develop and disseminate globally applicable sustainable reporting guidelines. With UNEP's support, the GRI secretariat was gathering feedback from all regions, and assessing and making amendments to the GRI guidelines, originally released in 2002 [ibid.], with a view to releasing version 3 in 2006.

Environmental emergencies

In response to a 2003 Governing Council decision [YUN 2003, p. 1045], the Executive Director, in November [UNEP/GC.23/3/Add.2], reported on environmental emergency prevention, preparedness, assessment, response and mitigation. UNEP continued to strengthen its capacity to address natural disasters with significant environmental impacts, including by enhancing the global network of environment and disaster experts that supported its response activities. It was assisted in those efforts by the Environmental Emergencies Partnership, a UNEP/ UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) global mechanism for reducing the frequency and severity of environmental emergencies, through the strengthening of collaboration and information-sharing among environmental emergency stakeholders. UNEP's capacity-building and training activities included the development, in May, of profiles of institutions working on disaster and environmental risk reduction in Africa and a March publication on environmental and flood management, targeting children. To strengthen capacities and promote regional perspectives in disaster reduction and management, UNEP organized a workshop (Lesotho, February) on national legislation and institutions for environmental disaster in selected countries in Southern Africa.

Among other activities, UNEP, as requested by the Governing Council in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1045], put in place a process for reviewing the 2001 Strategic Framework on Environmental Emergency Prevention, Preparedness, Assessment, Mitigation and Response [YUN 2001, p. 950]. With support from Norway, and in cooperation with the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, UNEP was implementing a project on strengthening capacities for integration of environmental dimensions in the management of refugee settlements and flows in Angola, Liberia and Sierra Leone. It was also implementing, in cooperation with a number of African organizations and institutions, a project to promote the harnessing, use and application of indigenous knowledge in environmental conservation and coping mechanisms for flood and drought disasters in Kenya, South Africa, Swaziland, and the United Republic of Tanzania.

In 2004, the Joint UNEP/OCHA Environment Unit coordinated responses to the environmental aspects of emergencies resulting from the 26 December Indian Ocean earthquake and subsequent tsunami (see p. 952) in Indonesia, Maldives and Sri Lanka (see p. 914); the humanitarian crisis in the Darfur region of the Sudan (see p. 942); hurricanes Ivan and Jeanne in the Dominican Republic, Grenada and Haiti; uranium mining in the Democratic Republic of the Congo; and the outbreak of neurological disease in Tanzania.

Global Environment Facility

The Global Environment Facility (GEF), a joint programme of UNDP, UNEP and the World Bank, established in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 505] to help solve global environmental problems, was the designated financial mechanism for the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 1992, p. 683] (see p. 1053), the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [ibid., p. 681] (see p. 1051), and the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification [YUN 1994, p. 944] (see p. 1055), and served as the interim financial mechanism for the 2001 Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants (POPs) [YUN 2001, p. 971] (see p. 1066), pending that Convention's entry into force.

At year's end, the cumulative UNEP/GEF work programme was financed to $865 million, including $444 million in GEF resources, involving activities in 153 countries. Through GEF enabling activities related to biodiversity, climate change, POPs, and capacity-building needs assessment for global environmental management, UNEP assisted 138 countries to meet their obligations to the global environmental conventions and to build capacity to implement them.

Fifty-three new UNEP/GEF initiatives were approved in 2004, with funding of $258 million, including $80 million in GEF grant financing.

A December note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/INF/24] contained information on the activities of UNEP as a GEF implementing agency.

Memorandums of understanding

In 2004, UNEP signed memorandums of understanding (MOUs) with: the Organizing Committee for the 2004 Olympic Games and Paralympic Games, to collaborate on environmental awareness-raising during the games (Athens, Greece, 13-29 August and 17-28 September, respectively); the World Organization of the Scout Movement, to promote environmental activities among its members and support the implementation of UNEP's long-term (Tunza) strategy on the engagement and involvement of young people in environmental issues [YUN 2002, p. 1040] (see below); the University of New South Wales (Sydney, Australia), to expand sustainability programmes in the Asia-Pacific region; the Economic Cooperation Organization (ECO), to cooperate in strengthening environmental management in the ECO region (Western and Central Asia); the European Commission, to strengthen cooperation to fight global threats to the environment more effectively; and the Barbados Ministry of Housing, Lands and the Environment, to cooperate on the establishment of an association to develop, implement and monitor a license system to import and export ozone depleting substances in that country.

Participation of civil society

In December [UNEP/GC.23/INF/14], the Executive Director reported on the implementation of UNEP's Tunza strategy (2003-2008) for the engagement and involvement of young people in environmental issues [YUN 2002, p. 1040], endorsed by the Governing Council in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1046]. The report described activities in the four focus areas of information exchange, awareness-building, youth in decision-making processes and capacity-building. UNEP launched a new illustrated environmental series for children, a new website for children and youth and a video encouraging children to protect themselves better from ozone-related problems. A version of the African Environment Outlook (AEO) was being prepared by leaders of African youth organizations in collaboration with UNEP's Division of Early Warning and Assessment. UNEP's network for children and youth organizations continued to grow, with over 10,000 organizations in over 150 countries regularly receiving environmental information from UNEP, including electronic networks for information sharing with children and youth organizations. Despite an annual contribution of 1 million euros by the German-based chemical and health-care company, Bayer AG, full implementation of the Tunza strategy was still hampered by inadequate financial resources.

The 2004 Tunza International Children's Conference (New London, Connecticut, United States, 19-23 July) agreed to a set of commitments and challenges for protecting the environment. Annexed to a December note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/INF/27], was a statement by the Tunza Youth Advisory Council to the 2005 GC/GMEF session, proposing key priorities for action to meet the goals of the 2000 United Nations Millennium Summit [YUN 2000, p. 47] and the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821].

Another December note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/INF/28] contained a report on activities to implement UNEP's long-term strategy on sport and the environment, endorsed by the Governing Council in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1046]. Those activities included participation in the Secretary-General's initiative on sport, including the work of his Task Force on Sport for Development and Peace [YUN 2003, p. 1111], efforts to commemorate the International Year for Sport and Physical Education (2005), proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 58/5 [ibid.] and UNEP's efforts to strengthen its work with sports organizations. UNEP, in cooperation with the World Federation of the Sporting Goods Industry and the sporting goods industry in Pakistan, organized the 2004 Global Forum for Sport and the Environment (Lahore, Pakistan, 25-26 November), which adopted the Lahore/Sialkot Declaration on Corporate Environmental Responsibility.

The main challenge for the full implementation of the strategy was the urgent need to raise the required financial resources. Given the lack of Government support, UNEP was increasingly looking to the private sector to provide those resources. The report encouraged Governments to engage sport federations and associations to promote environmental awareness and action, and to use the opportunity of the International Year for Sport and Physical Education (2005) to promote the use of sport for the enhancement of the sustainable development agenda and achieving the internationally agreed goals of the Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49].

The Fifth Global Civil Society Forum (Jeju, Republic of Korea, 27-28 March) [UNEP/GCS/5/1] considered environmental issues on the Korean peninsula and in North-East Asia, Asia and the Pacific and West Asia, Latin America and the Caribbean and Africa, and Europe and North America. It discussed the global approach to issues raised by the regions and heard civil society statements [UNEP/GCSS.VIII/INF/10 & Add.1]. The Forum's conclusions and recommendations were contained in the Jeju statement adopted by the eighth (2004) GC/GMEF special session (see p. 1044).

Four earlier Global Civil Society Forums were held in 2000, 2001, 2002, and 2003 [UNEP/GCS/4/2].

Gender and the environment

Consultative seminar. UNEP's Division of Policy Development and Law convened a consultative seminar (Nairobi, Kenya, 25-26 February) [UNEP/DPDL/CSGE/1] to deal with substantive and strategic challenges regarding gender and environment. Seminar working groups made recommendations on women, poverty and the environment; the ten-year review of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170], adopted by the Fourth (1995) World Conference on Women [ibid., p. 1169], and the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 51]; the establishment of a mentoring programme on women and youth; better incorporation of gender in UNEP's work; biodiversity, water and indigenous knowledge at the core of sustainable and equitable development; and planning the upcoming UNEP Global Women's Assembly on Environment (see p. 1048). The recommendations called for an audit of UNEP's gender mainstreaming strategy; the establishment of a gender task force and a mechanism for monitoring gender mainstreaming; and a global review of indigenous knowledge, biodiversity and water as they related to women and of the impact of water privatization policies on communities and on women.

Global Women's Assembly. The first Global Women's Assembly on Environment: women as the voice for the environment (WAVE) (Nairobi, 10-13 October) [UNEP/DPDL/WAVE/1], discussed gender-sensitive policies on sustainable livelihoods in the context of world conflict and peace; the development of a draft manifesto and action plan on women and the environment (see below); women's rights, environment, poverty and health; female leadership and starting a mentorship programme; and recommendations by women ministers for the environment. The manifesto, adopted by the Assembly and annexed to its report, called for urgent action by all stakeholders, in particular the UN system, to achieve sustainable development. Through their global partnership, Assembly participants would use and promote non-violent approaches, eliminate destructive practices and build a sustainable, just and valuable life for all current and future generations. The manifesto contained recommendations for action on the issues discussed during the Assembly (see above), as well as on gender issues with regard to global environmental change and urban challenges and the environment. Further recommendations dealt with the implementation of the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821]; the 10-year review in 2005 of the 1995 Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170]; the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 34/180 [YUN 1979, p. 895]; and the MDGs. The manifesto also included a number of project ideas, corresponding to its recommendations, for implementation by UNEP.

General Assembly issues

In January [UNEP/GCSS.VIII/INF/7], the Executive Director provided information on the issues arising from resolutions adopted by the General Assembly in 2003 that called for action by, or were of relevance to, UNEP.

Global Environment Outlook Yearbook

In response to a 2003 Governing Council decision [YUN 2003, p. 1039], a December note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/INF/2] contained UNEP's Global Environmental Outlook (GEO), GEO Yearbook 2004/5, which presented a global and regional overview of the state of the environment, including the Indian Ocean tsunami disaster of 26 December (see p. 952); gender and the environment (see p. 1047); changes in ocean salinity; environmental indicators; and emerging infectious diseases. The GEO Yearbook 2004/5 would be published in 2005. Future yearbooks would be dated according to the years in which they were published.

UNEP secretariat

OIOS audit and inspection services

The tenth annual report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS), transmitted by the Secretary-General in October [A/59/359] (see p. 1368), included the results of an audit of UNEP's Division of Technology, Industry and Economics. The audit showed that, while the Division had improved its handling of administrative matters, it lacked basic data to establish an overall picture of its advisory bodies and how they contributed to its work. The mandate and rationale for the current organizational structure were still unclear and in need of review. UNEP needed a mechanism to provide an overview of the mandates and missions of its divisions, and to strengthen the administrative arrangements for its Nairobi-based divisions in management information, budget control and asset management.

Administrative and budgetary matters

Environment Fund

A February note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GCSS.VIII/INF/9] contained information on the execution of UNEP's 2002-2003 biennial budget, showing total projected income for the biennium, including from the UN regular budget, the Environment Fund, trust funds, trust fund support and earmarked contributions, amounting to $334.20 million and expenditures totalling $237.15 million. The balance in the funds as at 31 December 2003 was projected at $97.05 million.

Pursuant to 2003 Governing Council decisions on UNEP's 2004-2005 biennial programme and support budget [YUN 2003, p. 1047] and regional implementation of UNEP's programme of work [ibid., p. 1043], a report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GCSS.VIII/6] provided information on progress in the development of preliminary data and a format for the regional annexes of UNEP's 2006-2007 programme of work based on the 2004-2005 programme of work of subprogramme 1 of the Division of Early Warning and Assessment. It provided a synopsis by region of the area of work of the Division and a format for presenting the resource plan. The annex indicating the Environment Fund resources allocated and the percentage to be implemented at the regional level per subprogramme, was to be included as part of the work programme for the 2006-2007 biennium, and starting from that biennium, the synopsis by region and by division would be submitted to the GC/GMEF sessions as a separate document.

The Governing Council, on 31 March [dec. SS.VIII/3], reiterated its 2003 request [YUN 2003, p. 1047] to the Executive Director to include in the work programme, beginning with the 2006-2007 biennium, regional annexes identifying the percentage of the Environment Fund budget from each division to be implemented at the regional level and to present that information for a decision in 2005. The UNEP secretariat should prepare, as a separate document, a synopsis by region of the area of work of each division for presentation to the Council at its regular sessions, starting from the 2006-2007 biennium.

Responding to the Council's decision, the Executive Director submitted the requested regional synopses in a November note [UNEP/GC.23/INF/9].

Board of Auditors report

A December note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/INF/7] contained the report of the Board of Auditors, which included the financial report and audited financial statements for the 2002-2003 biennium [A/59/5/Add.6]. UNEP's financial statements covered the major funds, including the Environment Fund, general trust funds, the Multilateral Fund for the Implementation of the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer (see p. 1052), Technical Cooperation Trust Funds and other trust funds. The Environment Fund reported a total income of $98.79 million against expenditures of $109.97 million, showing a net shortfall of $11.18 million (11 per cent), as compared with a net shortfall of income over expenditures of $11.23 million in 2000-2001. The general trust funds showed a shortfall of income relative to expenditure of $8.59 million, compared to a net excess of $24.48 million for 2000-2001. The Multilateral Fund reported a net excess of income over expenditures of $16.15 million, compared with a net shortfall of income relative to expenditures of $32.24 million for 2000-2001.

The Board made recommendations for establishing and reviewing obligations in accordance with UN regulations; recovering outstanding advances paid to staff members and "other persons"; enforcing agreement in respect of the timely liquidation of advances to implementing agencies; and disclosing, in the notes to the financial statements, the amount of non-expendable property "pending write-off".

Strengthening UNEP's financing

In February [UNEP/GCSS.VIII/5], the Executive Director reported on measures taken to strengthen UNEP's financing, including implementation of the voluntary indicative scale of contributions, a pilot phase of which began in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1048]. The pilot phase revealed a significant widening of the base for voluntary contributions, with 118 countries having pledged or contributed to the Environment Fund in 2003, compared to the annual average of 74 countries, and an increase in payments by countries to the Fund. By the end of 2003, over 70 Governments had pledged or paid higher contributions than in the previous year, and over 50 had increased budget allocations for contributions to UNEP. Taking into account the feedback from Governments during the pilot phase, UNEP developed a new indicative scale for the 2004-2005 biennium, which was supported by 61 countries as at the end of 2003, 43 of which had paid or pledged amounts for 2004, the highest number ever before the start of the calendar year to which the pledges related. The report also discussed the more efficient and effective use of available resources and the possibility of utilizing external management review mechanisms; a strong focus on agreed UNEP priorities and ongoing review of previous priorities; and greater mobilization of resources from the private sector and other major groups.

Data on the implementation of the 2003 pilot phase of the voluntary indicative scale of contributions and the new 2004-2005 scale were submitted by the Executive Director in a March note [UNEP/GCSS.VIII/INF/12].

On 31 March [dec. SS.VIII/1, section IV], the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to continue efforts to increase funding from all sources for strengthening UNEP's financial base and to implement its 2002 decision [YUN 2002, p. 1032] with respect to the recommendations on financing the Programme, including through resources approved for UNEP by the General Assembly from the UN regular budget. The Council decided to review all aspects of the strengthening of UNEP's financing in 2005 and requested the Executive Director to report thereon.

The General Assembly, in resolution 59/226 (see p. 1037) of 23 December, welcomed the progress made in strengthening UNEP's role and financial situation, including the significant broadening of its donor base and increasing total contributions to the Environmental Fund, and which would be reviewed by the Governing Council in 2005.

International conventions and mechanisms

MEAs

A February report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GCSS.VIII/5] discussed issues concerning multilateral environmental agreements (MEAs), whose implementation was supported through a significant proportion of UNEP activities. UNEP was striving to enhance complementarity and communication between conventions at the national level in capacity-building and reporting, among other areas. It continued to identify programmatic synergies between the conventions and improve cooperation between convention secretariats and respective UNEP programmes. UNEP, through its World Conservation Monitoring Centre, was facilitating pilot projects in Ghana, Indonesia, Panama and Seychelles to test information management and harmonization concepts in the context of national reporting to global biodiversity-related conventions, including the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 1992, p. 683] (see p. 1053); the 1973 Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES), the 1979 Convention on the Conservation of Migratory Species of Wild Animals, and the 1971 Ramsar Convention on Wetlands of International Importance, Especially as Waterfowl Habitat. UNEP was launching a major project on achieving synergies between conventions in Africa, and was organizing a series of regional and subregional workshops to promote the coordinated national implementation of the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1989, p. 420] (see p. 1066), the 1998 Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade [YUN 1998, p. 997] (see p. 1063) and the 2001 Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants [YUN 2001, p. 971] (see p. 1066).

On 31 March [dec. SS.VIII/1, section V] the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to continue to promote the implementation of the Council's recommendations with respect to coordination between and effectiveness of multilateral environmental agreements, in pursuance of a 2002 Council decision on international environmental governance [YUN 2002, p. 1032], taking into account the autonomous decision-making authority of the conferences of the parties to those conventions.

A November report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/3/Add.4] contained information on UNEP support for MEAs and a progress report on the implementation of a 2002 Governing Council decision on compliance with and enforcement of multilateral environmental agreements [YUN 2002, p. 1042]. The tenth meeting of MEA secretariats (Nairobi, Kenya, 8-9 March) suggested that systematic contact between UNEP and the MEA secretariats be established, as well as a UNEP focus areas on MEA-related issues. UNEP should provide political and practical support to MEAs; strengthen regional delivery through capacity-building and training; and improve coherence among MEAs. As a follow-up to the meeting, UNEP established an interdivisional task force to coordinate the work of all UNEP divisions in support of MEAs, and was asked to help develop a database to monitor the implementation of decisions of conferences of the parties.

The report also discussed an issue-based modular approach project for implementing biodiversity-related MEAs decisions at the national level; efforts to harmonize national reporting; the results of an expert workshop on promoting cooperation and synergy between CITES and the Convention on Biological Diversity (Vilm, Germany, 21-24 April); coordinated national implementation of the Basel, Rotterdam and Stockholm Conventions; and the OzonAction Programme, established by the UNEP Division of Technology, Industry and Economics to help developing countries and countries with economies in transition improve their ability to comply with the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer [YUN 1987, p. 686] of the 1985 Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer [YUN 1985, p. 804] (see p. 1052). The report also dealt with issues related to biodiversity and biosafety among others.

The 2002 Guidelines on Compliance and Enforcement of Multilateral Environmental Agreements [YUN 2002, p. 1042] were translated into all official UN languages and disseminated to Governments and international organizations, MEA conferences of parties and other stakeholders. UNEP developed a manual for implementing the guidelines, which was tested in regional workshops held in 2003 and 2004. The report described ongoing activities for the implementation of the guidelines and the development of national laws for the implementation of the Rio conventions taking into account poverty reduction (Convention on Biological Diversity, the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [YUN 1992, p. 681], the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa [YUN 1994, p. 944]).

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolutions 58/243 [YUN 2003, p. 1049], 58/242 [ibid., p. 1053] and 58/212 [ibid., p. 1052], the Secretary-General, by an August note [A/59/197], transmitted reports submitted by the secretariats of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (see below), the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa (see p. 1055), and the Convention on Biological Diversity (see p. 1053), respectively. The note also contained a joint submission on cooperative activities of the three secretariats.

Climate change convention

As at 31 December, the number of parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC), which was opened for signature in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 681] and entered into force in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 938], stood at 188 States and the European Community (EC). During the year, the Convention was acceded to by Turkey.

At year's end, 132 States and the EC were parties to the Kyoto Protocol to the Convention [YUN 1997, p. 1048]. During the year, seven States ratified the Protocol and six acceded to it.

Conference of Parties

The tenth session of the Conference of the Parties to UNFCCC (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 6-18 December) [FCCC/CP/2004/10 & Add.1-2] adopted decisions on the Buenos Aires programme of work on measures dealing with adaptation and response to climate change, and simplified modalities and procedures for small-scale afforestation and reforestation project activities under the Kyoto Protocol's clean development mechanism (CDM) (see below). Other decisions related to: capacity-building for developing countries not included in the Convention's annex I list of industrialized countries and countries with economies in transition; the work of the Least Developed Countries Expert Group; implementation of the global observing system for climate; the development and transfer of technology; the status of, and ways to enhance, implementation of the New Delhi work programme, adopted in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1042], on article 6 of the Convention relating to education, training and public awareness; the continuation of pilot phase activities implemented jointly by the Subsidiary Body for Scientific and Technological Advice and the Subsidiary Body for Implementation; and issues related to the technical review of greenhouse gas inventories from UNFCCC parties included in annex I and the implementation of article 8 of the Kyoto Protocol. The Conference adopted decisions on a standard electronic format for reporting emission reduction units under the Protocol; the incorporation of modalities and procedures for afforestation and reforestation project activities under the CDM and measures to facilitate their implementation; good practice guidance for land use, land-use change and forestry activities under the Protocol's article 3; and issues relating to registry systems under article 7. Further decisions dealt with the Convention's financial mechanism; the assessment of funding to assist developing countries in fulfilling their commitments under the Convention, a report which [FCCC/SBI/2004/18] was prepared by the secretariat in collaboration with GEF; and other administrative and financial matters.

In October, the CDM Executive Board issued its third annual report [FCCC/CP/2004/2 & Add.1], covering the period from November 2003 to December 2004. At its tenth session, the Conference of the Parties adopted a decision on guidance relating to CDM.

The Subsidiary Body for Scientific and Technological Advice (SBSTA) [FCCC/SBSTA/2004/6 & Add.1, 2] and the Subsidiary Body for Implementation (SBI) [FCCC/SBI/2004/10] held their twentieth sessions (Bonn, Germany, 16-25 June). SBSTA [FCCC/SBSTA/2004/13 & Corr.1] and SBI [FCCC/SBI/2004/19] also held their twenty-first sessions in 2004 (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 6-14 December).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75] the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/483/Add.4], adopted resolution 59/234 without vote [agenda item 85(d)].

Protection of global climate for present and future generations of mankind

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 54/222 of 22 December 1999, its decision 55/443 of 20 December 2000 and its resolutions 56/199 of 21 December 2001, 57/257 of 20 December 2002 and 58/243 of 23 December 2003 and other resolutions relating to the protection of the global climate for present and future generations of mankind,

Recalling also the provisions of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, including the acknowledgement that the global nature of climate change calls for the widest possible cooperation by all countries and their participation in an effective and appropriate international response, in accordance with their common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities and their social and economic conditions,

Recalling further the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development, the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development

("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), the Delhi Ministerial Declaration on Climate Change and Sustainable Development, adopted by the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change at its eighth session, held in New Delhi from 23 October to 1 November 2002, and the outcome of the ninth session of the Conference of the Parties held in Milan, Italy, from 1 to 12 December 2003,

Noting the review of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, Remaining deeply concerned that all countries, in particular developing countries, including the least developed countries and small island developing States, face increased risks from the negative impacts of climate change,

Noting that one hundred and eighty-nine States and one regional economic integration organization have ratified the Convention,

Noting also that, to date, the Kyoto Protocol to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change has attracted one hundred and twenty-eight ratifications, including from parties mentioned in annex I to the Convention, which account for 61.6 per cent of emissions,

Noting further the work of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change and the need to build and enhance scientific and technological capabilities, inter alia, through continuing support to the Panel for the exchange of scientific data and information, especially in developing countries,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in which Heads of State and Government resolved to make every effort to ensure the entry into force of the Kyoto Protocol, preferably by the tenth anniversary of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 2002, and to embark on the required reduction in emissions of greenhouse gases,

Taking note of the report of the Executive Secretary of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change on the work of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention,

1. Calls upon States to work cooperatively towards achieving the ultimate objective of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change;

2. Notes that States that have ratified the Kyoto Protocol to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change strongly urge States that have not yet done so to ratify it in a timely manner;

3. Notes also that States that have ratified the Kyoto Protocol welcome its ratification by the Russian Federation, which satisfies the requirements for the Kyoto Protocol to enter into force;

4. Encourages States that have ratified the Kyoto Protocol to continue their preparations for its entry into force;

5. Notes with interest the preparations undertaken for the implementation of the flexible mechanisms established by the Kyoto Protocol;

6. Takes note of the decisions adopted by the Conference of the Parties at its ninth session, and calls for their implementation;

7. Notes the ongoing work of the liaison group of the secretariats and offices of the relevant subsidiary bodies of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa, and the Convention on Biological Diversity, and encourages cooperation to promote complementarities among the three secretariats while respecting their independent legal status;

8. Invites the Executive Secretary of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change to report to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session on the work of the Conference of the Parties;

9. Invites the conferences of the parties to the multilateral environmental conventions, when setting the dates of their meetings, to take into consideration the schedule of meetings of the General Assembly and the Commission on Sustainable Development so as to ensure the adequate representation of developing countries at those meetings;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixtieth session the sub-item entitled "Protection of global climate for present and future generations of mankind".

Vienna Convention and Montreal Protocol

As at 31 December, 188 States and the EC were parties to the 1985 Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer [YUN 1985, p. 804], which entered into force in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 810]. In 2004, Afghanistan and Bhutan acceded to the Convention and to the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer.

Parties to the Montreal Protocol, which was adopted in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 686], numbered 187 States and the EC; to the 1990 Amendment to the Protocol, 174 and the EC; to the 1992 Amendment, 163 and the EC; to the 1997 Amendment, 123 and the EC; and to the 1999 Amendment, 85 and the EC.

The first Extraordinary Meeting of the Parties to the Montreal Protocol (Montreal, Canada, 24-26 March) [UNEP/OzL.Pro.ExMP/1/3], addressed unresolved issues related to methyl bromide [YUN 2003, p. 1050] and adopted a double-cap concept, which distinguished between use and production for critical use exemptions for methyl bromide for 2005. It established an ad hoc working group to review the working procedures and terms of reference of the Methyl Bromide Technical Options Committee, and adopted other decisions relating to reductions in and accelerated phase-out of methyl bromide by parties operating under article 5 of the Protocol (developing countries) and conditions for granting and reporting critical-use exemptions.

The Sixteenth Meeting of the Parties (Montreal, Canada, 22-26 November) [UNEP/OzL.Pro.16/17] adopted decisions on: critical use exemptions for methyl bromide for 2005 and 2006; a review of the working procedures and terms of reference of, and financial assistance to, the Methyl Bromide Technical Options Committee; the adoption of an accounting framework; trade in products and commodities treated with methyl bromide; technical and financial support relating to alternatives and flexibility in their use; and reporting of information on quarantine and pre-shipment uses of the substance and coordination among UN bodies on such uses. Other decisions dealt with essential use nominations for 2005 and 2006 of chloroflourocarbons (CFCs) for metered-dose inhalers; an assessment of the portion of the refrigeration service sector made up by chillers and the identification of incentives and impediments to the transition to non-CFC equipment; sources of carbon tetrachloride emissions and opportunities for reductions; a review of approved destruction technologies; the establishment of licensing systems; illegal trade in ozone-depleting substances; cooperation between the Protocol's secretariat and other related conventions and international organizations; terms of reference for a study on the 2006-2008 replenishment of the Multilateral Fund for the Implementation of the Montreal Protocol; the 2004 evaluation and review of the Fund [UNEP/OzL.Pro.16/11]; and compliance issues. The Meeting declared 2007 the "International Year of the Ozone Layer" and decided to hold a second extraordinary meeting in 2005 to complete work on methyl bromide exemptions for 2006.

Convention on air pollution

As at 31 December, the number of parties to the 1979 Convention on Long-Range Transboundary Air Pollution [YUN 1979, p. 710], which entered into force in 1983 [YUN 1983, p. 645], remained at 48 States and the EC. Eight protocols to the Convention dealt with the programme for monitoring and evaluation of the pollutants in Europe (1984), the reduction of sulphur emissions or their transboundary fluxes by at least 30 percent (1985), the control of emissions of nitrogen oxides or their transboundary fluxes (1988), the control of volatile organic compounds or their transboundary fluxes (1991), further reduction of sulphur emissions (1984), heavy metals (1998), persistent organic pollutants (POPs) (1998) and the abatement of acidification, eutrophication and ground-level ozone (1999).

The twenty-second session of the Executive Body for the Convention (Geneva, 29 November–3 December) [ECE/EB.AIR/83 & Add.1, 2] established task forces on heavy metals and hemispheric transport of air pollution, and an expert group on particulate matter. It adopted decisions on compliance and the implementation of the Cooperative Programme for Monitoring and Evaluation of the Long-range Transmission of Air Pollutants in Europe (EMEP) monitoring strategy, which was approved by the Executive Body during the session, and its 2005 work plan.

Convention on Biological Diversity

As at 31 December, the number of parties to the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 1992, p. 638], which entered into force in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 210], remained at 187 States and the EC.

At year's end, 110 States and the EC were parties to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety, which was adopted in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 973] and entered into force in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1051]. During the year, 20 States ratified the Protocol, 11 States acceded to it and Portugal accepted it.

The seventh meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, 9-20 and 27 February) [UNEP/CBD/COP/7/21] adopted the Addis Ababa Principles and Guidelines for the Sustainable Use of Biodiversity, which were developed during the Fourth Open-Ended Workshop for the Sustainable Use of Biological Diversity (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 6-8 May 2003). In a decision on the Strategic Plan for the Convention (2002-2010), adopted in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1045], the Meeting established an Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Review of Implementation of the Convention. It took action on the Global Strategy for Plant Conservation, also adopted in 2002 [ibid.], and on the Global Taxonomy Initiative. The Meeting adopted decisions on forest and mountain biological diversity; the biological diversity of inland water ecosystems, marine and coastal ecosystems, and dry and sub-humid lands; agricultural biological diversity; biological diversity and tourism; and biodiversity and climate change. Further decisions dealt with, the ecosystem approach for addressing the Convention objectives; issues related to article 8(j) of the Convention on traditional knowledge; implementation of the Bonn Guidelines on Access to Genetic Resources and Fair and Equitable Sharing of the Benefits Arising out of their Utilization, adopted in 2002 [ibid.]; and administrative and budgetary and other matters. A ministerial segment of the meeting adopted the Kuala Lumpur Ministerial Declaration, which, among other things, reaffirmed the significant role of indigenous and local communities in the conservation and sustainable use of biological resources and committed Governments to integrating biodiversity conservation and sustainable use into socio-economic development.

Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety

The first meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, 23-27 February) [UNEP/CBD/BS/COP-MOP/1/15] adopted an action plan for building capacities for the effective implementation of the Protocol; approved the transition of the pilot phase of the Biosafety Clearing-House to the fully operational phase; and adopted procedures and mechanisms on compliance under the Protocol and established the Compliance Committee. In a decision on the handling, transport, packaging and identification of living modified organisms, the meeting established an open-ended technical expert group on identification requirements of living modified organisms intended for direct use as food or feed, or for processing. It also established the Open-ended Ad Hoc Working Group of Legal and Technical Experts on Liability and Redress and adopted a medium-term programme of work for the Conference of the Parties serving as the meeting of the Parties to the Protocol from the second to fifth meetings. Other decisions dealt with monitoring and reporting under the Protocol and administrative and budgetary matters.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/483/Add.6], adopted resolution 59/236 without vote [agenda item 85(f)].

Convention on Biological Diversity

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 55/201 of 20 December 2000, 56/197 of 21 December 2001, 57/253 and 57/260 of 20 December 2002 and 58/212 of 23 December 2003,

Reiterating that the Convention on Biological Diversity is the key international instrument for the conservation and sustainable use of biological resources and the fair and equitable sharing of benefits arising from the use of genetic resources,

Recalling the commitments of the World Summit on Sustainable Development to pursue a more efficient and coherent implementation of the three objectives of the Convention and the achievement by 2010 of a significant reduction in the current rate of loss of biological diversity, which will require action at all levels, including the implementation of national biodiversity strategies and action plans and the provision of new and additional financial and technical resources to developing countries,

Taking note of the entry into force of the International Treaty on Plant Genetic Resources for Food and Agriculture, the objectives of which are the conservation and sustainable use of plant genetic resources for food and agriculture and the fair and equitable sharing of the benefits arising from their use, in harmony with the Convention on Biological Diversity, for sustainable agriculture and food security,

Expressing its deep appreciation to the Government of Malaysia for hosting the seventh meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity and the first meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety, held in Kuala Lumpur from 9 to 20 and on 27 February, and from 23 to 27 February 2004, respectively,

Expressing its deep appreciation also to the Government of Brazil for its offer to host the eighth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity and the third meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety, to be held in the first half of 2006,

Noting the efforts of the Government of France to organize a biodiversity-related conference in Paris in 2005,

1. Takes note of the report of the Executive Secretary of the Convention on Biological Diversity, transmitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session;

2. Takes note also of the outcome of the seventh meeting of the Conference of Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity and the outcome of the first meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety, and urges all parties to these respective agreements to implement their decisions;

3. Notes the recent progress made with respect to the achievement of the three objectives set out in the Convention on Biological Diversity;

4. Notes also the progress made at the first meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety in establishing an operational framework for the implementation of the Protocol, and reiterates that the effective implementation of the Protocol will require the full support of parties and of relevant international organizations, in particular with regard to the provision of assistance to developing countries as well as countries with economies in transition in capacity-building for biosafety;

5. Invites the countries that have not yet done so to ratify or to accede to the Convention on Biological Diversity;

6. Invites the parties to the Convention that have not yet ratified or acceded to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety to the Convention on Biological Diversity to consider doing so;

7. Invites countries to consider ratifying or acceding to the International Treaty on Plant Genetic Resources for Food and Agriculture;

8. Encourages developed countries parties to the Convention to contribute to the relevant trust funds of the Convention, in particular so as to enhance the full participation of the developing countries parties in all of its activities;

9. Urges parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity to facilitate the transfer of technology for the effective implementation of the Convention in accordance with its provisions;

10. Takes note of the ongoing work of the liaison group of the secretariats and offices of the relevant subsidiary bodies of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa, and the Convention on Biological Diversity, and further encourages continuing cooperation in order to promote complementarities among the secretariats, while respecting their independent legal status;

11. Stresses the importance of harmonizing the reporting requirements of the biodiversity-related conventions while respecting their independent legal status;

12. Invites the Executive Secretary of the Convention on Biological Diversity to continue reporting to the General Assembly on the ongoing work regarding the Convention, including its Cartagena Protocol;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixtieth session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development", the sub-item entitled "Convention on Biological Diversity".

Convention to combat desertification

As at 31 December, the total number of parties to the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa (UNCCD) [YUN 1994, p. 944], which entered into force in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 958], remained at 190 States and the EC.

Following a meeting of the Bureau of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention (Bonn, Germany, 9 June) and consultations with the President of the Committee for the Review of the Implementation of the Convention (CRIC), it was agreed that the third CRIC session, originally planned for 2004, would be held in Bonn in May 2005. The seventh session of the Conference of the Parties and the Committee on Science and Technology, a Conference subsidiary body, were scheduled to take place in Nairobi, Kenya, in October 2005.

To commemorate the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Convention (17 June), the Convention secretariat published "Preserving our common ground: UNCCD 10 years on", which included articles on the work of the Convention since its inception.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/483/Add.5], adopted resolution 59/235 without vote [agenda item 85 (e)].

Implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 58/242 of 23 December 2003 and other resolutions relating to the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa,

Recalling also its resolution 58/211 of 23 December 2003, in which it declared 2006 the International Year of Deserts and Desertification,

Reaffirming that desertification constitutes a serious obstacle to sustainable development and contributes to food insecurity, famine and poverty, which are factors that can give rise to social, economic and political tensions, including forced migration and conflicts, and that the Convention is an important tool for poverty eradication,

Reaffirming also the universal membership of the Convention, and acknowledging that desertification and drought are problems of a global dimension in that they affect all regions of the world,

Noting that timely and effective implementation of the Convention would help to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Emphasizing the need for the provision of adequate resources for the focal area of land degradation, primarily desertification and deforestation, of the Global Environment Facility,

Stressing the need for further diversification of funding sources to address land degradation, in accordance with articles 20 and 21 of the Convention,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General;

2. Stresses the importance of the implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa, for meeting the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and in this regard invites all Governments to take further measures to strengthen the implementation of the Convention;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to give due consideration to the role and place of the Convention in ongoing work in the context of the preparations for the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly in 2005, including the report of the Millennium Project;

4. Invites the Global Environment Facility to strengthen the focal area of land degradation, primarily desertification and deforestation;

5. Takes note with interest of ongoing efforts to diversify the availability of financial resources to support activities aimed at combating desertification and poverty;

6. Invites the donor community to increase its support to the Convention with a view to bringing greater international attention to bear on the issue of land degradation and desertification, which will contribute to the improvement of the sustainable development of drylands and the global environment;

7. Invites the secretariat of the Global Environment Facility and the secretariat of the Convention to finalize the draft memorandum of understanding in an expeditious way and to submit it, as mandated by Conference of the Parties decision 6/COP.6 of 3 September 2003, for the consideration of and adoption by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention and the Council of the Global Environment Facility;

8. Takes note of Conference of the Parties decision 23/COP.6 of 5 September 2003 on the programme and budget for the biennium 2004–2005, as an ongoing process of the Conference of the Parties to undertake a comprehensive review of the activities of the secretariat, as defined in article 23, paragraph 2, of the Convention, and looks forward to the review at the seventh session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention;

9. Urges United Nations funds and programmes, the Bretton Woods institutions, the donor countries and other development agencies to integrate actions in support of the Convention into their strategies to support the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration;

10. Calls upon Governments, where appropriate, in collaboration with relevant multilateral organizations, including the Global Environment Facility implementation agencies, to integrate desertification into their plans and strategies for sustainable development;

11. Encourages countries to undertake special initiatives in observance of the International Year of Deserts and Desertification and, as they are able, to contribute to its preparatory process;

12. Reiterates the invitation to all parties to pay promptly and in full the contributions required for the core budget of the Convention for the biennium 2004–2005, and urges all parties that have not yet paid their contributions for 1999 and/or the bienniums 2000–2001 and 2002–2003 to do so as soon as possible in order to ensure continuity in the cash flow required to finance the ongoing work of the Conference of the Parties, the secretariat and the Global Mechanism;

13. Calls upon Governments, and invites multilateral financial institutions, regional development banks, regional economic integration organizations and all other interested organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations and the private sector, to contribute generously to the General Fund, the Supplementary Fund and the Special Fund, in accordance with the relevant paragraphs of the financial rules of the Conference of the Parties, and welcomes the financial support already provided by some countries;

14. Takes note of the ongoing work of the liaison group of the secretariats and offices of the relevant subsidiary bodies of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa, and the Convention on Biological Diversity, and further encourages continuing cooperation in order to promote complementarities among the secretariats, while respecting their independent legal status;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixtieth session the sub-item entitled “Implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa”.

Environmental activities

Follow-up to the Millennium Summit

The Secretary-General, in his August report [A/59/282 & Corr.1] on the implementation of the Millennium Declaration, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 55/2 [YUN 2000, p. 49], including progress toward the MDG on ensuring environmental sustainability, stated that protected areas had increased in all regions, but there was a loss of forest cover in some parts of the world, notably those with tropical forests. Energy use and per capita carbon dioxide had increased in developing countries but fell in the countries with economies in transition as industrial production declined in the 1990s. The use of ozone-depleting chlorofluorocarbons had been almost eliminated globally. The 1997 Kyoto Protocol [YUN 1997, p. 1048] to the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [YUN 1992, p. 681] (see p. 1051) still required ratification by either the Russian Federation or the United States in order to come into force, and implementation of the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa [YUN 1994, p. 944] was limited by a lack of financial resources. However, progress was made towards the full implementation of the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 1992, p. 638], with the adoption of measurable indicators and specific goals to reduce the current rate of biodiversity loss by 2010 [YUN 2002, p. 1045] and the entry into force of the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1051]. As to deforestation and forest degradation (see p. 1057), nine international processes involving 150 countries encompassing 85 per cent of the world's forests made progress in developing criteria and indicators for sustainable forest management.

Millennium Ecosystem Assessment

A November note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/INF/18 & Corr.1] contained information on the Millennium Ecosystem Assessment (MA), a four-year international assessment launched in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 961] to evaluate the state of major ecosystems and their links with human well-being. During 2004, draft assessment reports underwent expert and Government reviews, and synthesis reports for specific audiences, including the Convention on Biological Diversity (see p. 1053), the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa (see p. 1055), the Ramsar Convention on Wetlands of International Importance, Especially as Waterfowl Habitat, and for business and industry were being prepared. A plan for outreach activities would be implemented through the end of 2005. The southern African sub-global assessment (SAFMA) was largely completed, and the SAFMA integrated report, the regional assessment report and the Gariep River basin report were published. MA partners were examining how best to make use of its findings, including in strengthening the ecosystem aspects of sub-global environmental research, assessment and management.

The atmosphere

Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change

The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC), at its twenty-second session (New Delhi, India, 9-11 November), discussed the scope, content and process for its Fourth Assessment Synthesis Report; Fourth Assessment Report products; outreach; and administrative matters. It approved a process for developing the Fourth Assessment Report, which was to be adopted and approved by IPCC in October 2007, and adopted a decision on its programme and budget for 2005 to 2008.

Report of Executive Director. Pursuant to a 2003 Governing Council decision [YUN 2003, p. 1056], the Executive Director, in November [UNEP/GC.23/3/Add.4], gave a progress report on IPCC's work.

Terrestrial ecosystems

With an estimated 135 million people worldwide at risk of being displaced as a consequence of desertification, UNEP's strategy for dryland environmental management involved working with Governments and other stakeholders to implement, test and further develop an ecosystems approach, integrating the management of land, water and living resources and promoting conservation and sustainable use. UNEP was testing the approach through a drylands policy initiative aimed at restoring degraded drylands, preventing further desertification and promoting sustainable land management as an integral part of intergovernmental and national development policies, strategies and plans. UNEP and FAO began the Global Land Cover Network cooperative programme and were developing a Land Degradation Assessment for Drylands to provide a policy tool for the implementation of national and subregional action programmes of the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa (UNCCD) [YUN 1994, p. 944] (see p. 1055). UNEP and the Consultative Group for International Agricultural Research completed the first two-year phase of the Desert Margins Programme and began a second phase. UNEP was also helping African countries to formulate regional, subregional and national action plans and to develop environmental legislation and institutions to combat desertification.

Note by Executive Director. A February note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GCSS.VIII/INF/3] contained a summary of progress made in the implementation of a joint project among China, Japan, Mongolia and the Republic of Korea, and the Asian Development Bank, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the UNCCD secretariat and UNEP to tackle the problem of dust and sandstorms in North-East Asia.

Deforestation and forest degradation

United Nations Forum on Forests

The United Nations Forum on Forests (UNFF), at its fourth session (Geneva, 3-14 May) [E/2004/42 & Corr.1], adopted four resolutions and three decisions, which were brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council. The resolutions pertained to forest-related scientific knowledge [res. 4/1]; social and cultural aspects of forests [res. 4/2]; forest-related monitoring, assessment and reporting; criteria and indicators for sustainable forest management [res. 4/3]; and a process to facilitate the review of the effectiveness of the international arrangement on forests at UNFF's fifth (2005) session [res. 4/4]. The Forum encouraged member States, Collaborative Partnership on Forests members, and other relevant international, regional and subregional organizations, bodies and processes to take action on the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Expert Group on Finance and Transfer of Environmentally Sound Technologies [YUN 2003, p. 1062]. It decided to further consider in its work programme the issues of finance and transfer of environmentally sound technologies, including the Expert Group's recommendations. The Forum took note of documents before it [dec. 4/3] (see below) and invited the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) to participate in its deliberations [dec. 4/1].

The Forum had before it reports of the Secretary-General on traditional forest-related knowledge [E/CN.18/2004/7]; social and cultural aspects of forests [E/CN.18/2004/8]; forest-related scientific knowledge [E/CN.18/2004/9]; monitoring, assessment and reporting, concepts, terminology and definitions [E/CN.18/2004/10]; and criteria and indicators of sustainable forest management [E/CN.18/2004/11]. The Secretary-General also provided information on the Forum's third multi-stakeholder dialogue [E/CN.18/2004/4 & Add.1-5], which took place during UNFF's fourth session; enhanced cooperation and policy and programme coordination to effectively promote and implement Intergovernmental Panel/Forum on Forests (IPF/IFF) proposals and achieve sustainable forest management [E/CN.18/2004/13]; and the proposed UNFF strategic framework for the 2006-2007 biennium [E/CN.18/2004/14]. Secretariat notes described the activities and status of the UNFF secretariat during the 2002-2003 biennium, focusing on 2003 activities [E/CN.18/2004/3]; preparations for the meeting of the Ad Hoc Expert Group on Consideration with a View to Recommending the Parameters of a Mandate for Developing a Legal Framework on All Types of Forests [E/CN.18/2004/6], established by Economic and Social Council decision 2003/299 [YUN 2003, p. 1058] (see below); and a proposal to facilitate the review of the effectiveness of international arrangement on forests, established by Council resolution 2000/35 [YUN 2000, p. 979], at the fifth (2005) UNFF session [E/CN.18/2004/12]. A further Secretariat note dealt with ASEAN's request to participate in UNFF's deliberations [E/CN.18/2004/16] (see p. 1057). Also before the Forum was the Collaborative Partnership on Forests Framework 2004 [E/CN.18/2004/INF/1]; a 5 March letter from Indonesia and Switzerland concerning the convening of an international meeting (Interlaken, Switzerland, 27-30 April) on forestry and national forest programmes in support of UNFF, known as the Interlaken Workshop [E/CN.18/2004/15]; and the reports of the Ad Hoc Expert Groups on Approaches and Mechanisms for Monitoring, Assessment and Reporting, and on Finance and Transfer of Environmentally Sound Technology [YUN 2003, p. 1062].

On 20 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Forum's report on its fourth session and approved the provisional agenda for the fifth session (decision 2004/235).

Expert group meeting. The Ad Hoc Expert Group on Consideration with a View to Recommending the Parameters of a Mandate for Developing a Legal Framework on All Types of Forests (New York, 7-10 September) [E/CN.18/2005/2] addressed, under the tasks assigned to it by the Council in decision 2003/299 [YUN 2003, p. 1058], complementarities, gaps and duplications and a review of relevant experiences of existing regional and international binding and non-binding instruments and processes relevant to forests; other outcomes of the international arrangement on forests; and options for the parameters of a mandate for developing a legal framework on all types of forests. In carrying out its tasks, the Group considered reports by member States and organizations of the Collaborative Partnership on Forests and the Forum secretariat, and the outcomes of UNFF sessions. It also considered an overview of catalysts and obstacles in implementing IPF/IFF proposals for action [YUN 1997, p. 1057] and UNFF resolutions and decisions [E/CN.18/AC.3/2004/3], and background information to facilitate its deliberations [E/CN.18/AC.3/2004/2].

The Group recommended that the fifth (2005) UNFF session consider and build upon the discussions and exchange of views of the Group, as reflected in its report.

Marine ecosystems

Oceans and seas

The fifth meeting of the United Nations Open-ended Informal Consultative Process in Oceans and the Law of the Sea (New York, 7-11 June) [A/59/122] (see p. 1333) discussed new sustainable uses of the oceans, including the conservation and management of the biological diversity of the seabed in areas beyond national jurisdiction. It proposed that the General Assembly welcome the establishment of the Oceans and Coastal Areas Network (UN-Oceans), a new inter-agency coordination mechanism (see p. 1044), and urge the close and continuous involvement in the Network of all UN programmes, funds, specialized agencies and organizations, which the Assembly did, in section XV of resolution 59/24 of 17 November (see p. 1340).

Global waters assessment

The Global International Waters Assessment (GIWA), inaugurated in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 982] to assess international waters and causes of environmental problems in 66 water regions, focusing on the aquatic environment in transboundary waters, published a number of regional assessment reports in 2004, including reports on environmental conditions of international waters in three regions of South America and on Lake Chad in Africa. Other GIWA reports highlighted the problems of solid wastes on Indian Ocean islands and threats to the ecosystems of the Barents and Baltic Seas.

A November note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/INF/18 & Corr.1] included further information on GIWA. By the end of 2004, GIWA would have published 22 regional reports and 20 more would be ready for publishing, covering 98 per cent of all regions eligible for assessment under GEF funding. With the GIWA project nearing completion, a proposal for the further use of GIWA networks and assessment methodologies was put forward.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in July [A/59/126], reported on the results of the Global Marine Assessment (GMA) International Workshop (New York, 8-11 June), held in accordance with General Assembly resolution 58/240 [YUN 2003, p. 1355], and convened in conjunction with the fifth meeting of the UN Open-ended Informal Consultative Process on Oceans and the Law of the Sea (see p. 1333). The Workshop considered a draft document [A/AC.271/WP.1], prepared by a Group of Experts established in compliance with resolution 58/240, covering the scope, general framework and outline of GMA, and other matters. The Workshop discussed an "Assessment of Assessments" as a first step in the implementation of the start-up phase of GMA, a proposed task force for launching the "Assessment of Assessments", and GMA's scope. The Workshop concluded that, since no consensus was reached on launching GMA, it would be premature to hold the intergovernmental meeting mandated in resolution 58/240 and planned for Reykjavik, Iceland, in October, to formally establish it. The draft conclusions of the Workshop were annexed to the report.

The Assembly, in section XII of resolution 59/24 (p. 1339), took note of the report, and recognizing the urgent need to initiate the start-up phase (the Assessment of Assessments) for establishing GMA, requested the Secretary-General to convene another workshop in 2005 and to report thereon.

Note by Executive Director. A November note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/INF/18 & CORR.1] reported that the Group of Experts (New York, 23-26 March), convened pursuant to resolution 58/240, concluded that GMA should: produce regular, integrated global syntheses of the status and trends of marine ecosystems, including their socio-economic aspects; be built on integrated regional assessments conducted by regional affiliates; and facilitate continuous access to information on the status and trends of marine ecosystems on diverse geographic scales. Negotiations on the establishment of the GMA process were to continue up to the Assembly's fifty-ninth (2004) session, with the hope that a consensus would be reached that would allow the start-up of the initial, "Assessment of Assessments" phase.

UNEP continued to work on the development of policy summary reports based on the findings of its coastal and marine assessment projects, particularly GIWA (see p. 1058) and the Millennium Ecosystem Assessment (see p. 1056). It also developed modules for the assessments of coastal and marine environments, in partnership with key institutions and collaborators, which would contribute to the GMA process once it was established.

Global Programme of Action

In response to a 2003 Governing Council decision [YUN 2003, p. 1066], a November report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/3/Add.5] contained information on the implementation of the Global Programme of Action (GPA) for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities [YUN 1995, p. 1081]. UNEP continued to implement the GPA 2002-2006 work programme, endorsed by the Governing Council [YUN 2002, p. 1054], and strived to ensure that the 2001 Montreal Declaration on the implementation of GPA [YUN 2001, p. 965], the 2002 Monterrey Consensus, adopted by the International Conference on Financing for Development [YUN 2002, p. 953], and the outcomes of the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821] were addressed in GPA implementation efforts.

At the global level, UNEP hosted the inaugural Global Hilltops-2-Oceans (H2O) Partnership Conference (Cairns, Australia, 11-14 May), which resulted in the Cairns Communiqué [UNEP/GC.23/INF/17] on the integration of water resource and coastal area management from hilltops to oceans through multi-stakeholder partnerships. During the Conference, UNEP and the Water Supply and Sanitation Collaborative Council launched the Wastewater Emissions Targets: Water and Sanitation for All (WET-WASH) campaign. UNEP finalized guidelines on municipal wastewater management, related checklists and 10 Keys for Local and National Action on Municipal Wastewater, which were annexed to a January note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GCSS.VIII/INF/4]. It also helped develop a training course on improving municipal wastewater management in coastal cities and cooperated with the Regional Seas Programme on regional GPA activities.

UNEP's national-level activities included support for the development of national programmes of action and the implementation of a strategic plan on municipal wastewater; programmes dealing with the physical alteration and destruction of coastal and marine habitats and integrated coastal area and river basin management; the development of national legislation to address marine pollution from land-based activities and innovative financial arrangements to secure GPA implementation.

In section X of resolution 59/24 of 17 November (see p. 1338), the General Assembly called on States to advance the implementation of GPA and the 2001 Montreal Declaration on the implementation of GPA [YUN 2001, p. 965].

Coral reefs

A November report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/3/Add.5] described progress in the implementation of a 2003 Governing Council decision regarding coral reefs [YUN 2003, p. 1067], led by UNEP's Coral Reef Unit. The Unit, which operated under UNEP's Division of Environmental Policy Implementation, provided programme support and policy analysis on the conservation, management and sustainable use of coral reef resources. The Unit furthered the subject of cold-water coral reefs and raised the issue of dredging in coral reef regions. It was developing relationships with coral reef stakeholders from private and industrial sectors, including the dredging industry, and initiated a project, with the International Association for Dredging Companies and the Central Dredging Association, on reducing the environmental impact of dredging operations in areas with corals. A UNEP initiative, established in collaboration with Ireland, Norway, the United Kingdom and the World Wide Fund for Nature, commissioned a report on a comprehensive and up-to-date baseline on cold-water coral reefs from around the world. The report, "Cold-water corals: out of sight—no longer out of mind", was released on 28 June at the International Coral Reef Symposium in Okinawa, Japan.

In February, the International Coral Reef Action Network (ICRAN) Mesoamerican Reef Alliance project, providing for the establishment and strengthening of private sector alliances, was signed in Belize City, Belize. In preparation for the expansion of ICRAN into additional coral reef areas as announced at the World Summit, UNEP supported an assessment of the needs, priorities and opportunities for coral reef work in a number of regions. In September, the World Resources Institute, with support from ICRAN, the UNEP regional coordinating unit for the Caribbean and the United States Agency for International Development, published an analysis of threats to Caribbean coral reefs, entitled "Reefs at Risk in the Caribbean". The joint ICRAN board and steering committee meeting (Washington, D.C., 21-23 January) adopted a new ICRAN framework document which emphasized a regional focus. The Executive Director's report also described UNEP's efforts to realize the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation [YUN 2002, p. 821] with respect to coral reefs; collaborative efforts in coral-related activities with multilateral environmental agreements; collaboration with UN agencies to address the urgency of achieving sustainability in the management and use of coral reefs; and efforts to engage international financial institutions.

Regional Seas Programme

A November note by the UNEP secretariat [UNEP/GC.23/INF/26] provided information on the implementation of the Governing Council's 2003 decisions on regional seas conventions and action plans [YUN 2003, p. 1067] and UNEP's activities in marine safety and protection of the marine environment from accidental pollution. With regard to regional seas strategies for sustainable development, the note summarized progress relating to the global strategic directions/guidelines agreed upon by the Fifth (2003) Global Meeting of Regional Seas Conventions and Action Plans [YUN 2003, p. 1068]. The directions/ guidelines were finalized at the Sixth Global Meeting (Istanbul, Turkey, 29 November–3 December) [UNEP(DEC)/RS.6]. Based on the report of a feasibility study, UNEP planned developing a global initiative on the sustainable management of marine litter through regional pilot projects.

UNEP finalized host country agreements with Japan and the Republic of Korea to co-host the regional coordinating unit offices (Toyama, Japan and Busan, Republic of Korea) of the Action Plan for the Protection, Management and Development of the Marine and Coastal Environment of the North-West Pacific Region (NOWPAP), established in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 966], which were to become operational in November. NOWPAP's ninth intergovernmental meeting was held in Busan (2-4 November).

With support from the Swedish International Development Agency (SIDA), UNEP assisted in institutionalizing the Action Plan of the Convention for Cooperation in the Protection and Sustainable Development of the Marine and Coastal Environment of the North-East Pacific, first signed in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1055]. Informal consultations were taking place on institutional arrangements, including a host country for the secretariat and its programme of work.

UNEP continued to support the 1981 Abidjan Convention for Cooperation in the Protection and Development of the Marine and Coastal Environment of the West and Central African Region [YUN 1981, p. 840] and the 1985 Nairobi Convention for the Protection, Management and Development of the Marine and Coastal Environment of the Eastern African Region [YUN 1985, p. 816], and assisted in mobilizing a major Global Environment Facility project in the Abidjan Convention region.

The Regional Seas and GPA Coordinating Offices, in collaboration with the Comisión Permanente del Pacífico Sudeste, organized workshops and supported expert meetings in the region of the South-East Pacific Action Plan and Convention for the Protection of the Marine Environment and Coastal Area of the South-East Pacific, both established in 1981 [YUN 1981, p. 833], including on integrated coastal area and river basin management, and marine mammals.

Regarding marine safety and protection of the marine environment from accidental pollution,

UNEP and the International Maritime Organization (IMO) finalized a report of a joint IMO/UNEP forum on regional arrangements in emergency response to marine pollution and held a joint workshop on marine pollution prevention and environmental management in ports in East Africa (Mombassa, Kenya, 26-30 April). Collaboration between UNEP, IMO and other partners on the development of related activities also continued.

Caribbean Sea management

In response to General Assembly resolution 57/261 [YUN 2002, p. 1056], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/59/173] assessing progress made in promoting an integrated management approach to the Caribbean Sea in the context of sustainable development. It described activities undertaken by the Association of Caribbean States (ACS), the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, UNDP, UNEP, GEF, UNESCO, and various States. The Secretary-General's report contained an ACS report, which included information on the first meeting of the Technical Advisory Group on the Caribbean Sea Initiative (Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago, 26 May 2003).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/483/Add.2], adopted resolution 59/230 without vote [agenda item 85(b)].

Promoting an integrated management approach to the Caribbean Sea area in the context of sustainable development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the principles and commitments enshrined in the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development and the principles embodied in the Declaration of Barbados and the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, as well as other relevant declarations and international instruments,

Recalling the Declaration and review document adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-second special session,

Taking into account all other relevant General Assembly resolutions, including resolutions 54/225 of 22 December 1999, 55/203 of 20 December 2000 and 57/261 of 20 December 2002,

Taking into account also the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"),

Noting with interest the respective partnership initiatives voluntarily undertaken by Governments, international organizations and major groups and announced at the Summit,

Reaffirming the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, which provides the overall legal framework for ocean activities, and emphasizing its fundamental character, conscious that the problems of ocean space are closely interrelated and need to be considered as a whole through an integrated, interdisciplinary and intersectoral approach,

Emphasizing the importance of national, regional and global action and cooperation in the marine sector as recognized by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in chapter 17 of Agenda 21,

Recalling the Convention for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean Region, signed at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, on 24 March 1983, which contains the definition of the wider Caribbean region of which the Caribbean Sea is part,

Welcoming the adoption, on 6 October 1999 in Aruba, of the Protocol Concerning Pollution from Land-based Sources and Activities to the Convention for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean Region,

Welcoming also the entry into force, on 18 June 2000, of the Protocol Concerning Specially Protected Areas and Wildlife to the Convention for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean Region and the establishment by the United Nations Environment Programme of the Regional Activities Centre in Guadeloupe to assist in the implementation of the Protocol,

Recalling the relevant work done by the International Maritime Organization,

Considering that the Caribbean Sea area includes a large number of States, countries and territories, most of which are developing countries and small island developing States that are ecologically fragile, structurally weak and economically vulnerable and are also affected, inter alia, by their limited capacity, narrow resource base, need for financial resources, high levels of poverty and the resulting social problems and the challenges and opportunities of globalization and trade liberalization,

Recognizing that the Caribbean Sea has a unique biodiversity and highly fragile ecosystem,

Emphasizing that the Caribbean countries have a high degree of vulnerability occasioned by climate change, climate variability and associated phenomena, such as the rise in sea level, the El Niño phenomenon and the increase in the frequency and intensity of natural disasters caused by hurricanes, floods and droughts, and that they are also subject to natural disasters, such as those caused by volcanoes, tsunamis and earthquakes,

Expressing deep concern over the severe destruction and devastation caused to several countries by heightened hurricane activity in the Caribbean region in 2004,

Recognizing national and regional efforts to undertake disaster preparedness, response and mitigation efforts to minimize the impact of natural disasters, and reiterating the responsibility of all States in that regard,

Bearing in mind the heavy reliance of most of the Caribbean economies on their coastal areas, as well as on the marine environment in general, to achieve their sustainable development needs and goals,

Recognizing the Caribbean Environment Outlook process currently being undertaken by the United Nations Environment Programme, and welcoming the support being provided by the Caribbean Environment Programme of the United Nations Environment Programme towards its implementation,

Acknowledging that the intensive use of the Caribbean Sea for maritime transport, as well as the considerable number and interlocking character of the maritime areas under national jurisdiction where Caribbean countries exercise their rights and duties under international law, present a challenge for the effective management of the resources,

Noting the problem of marine pollution caused, inter alia, by land-based sources and the continuing threat of pollution from ship-generated waste and sewage, as well as from the accidental release of hazardous and noxious substances in the Caribbean Sea area,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions of the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency on safety of transport of radioactive materials,

Mindful of the diversity and dynamic interaction and competition among socio-economic activities for the use of the coastal areas and the marine environment and their resources,

Mindful also of the efforts of the Caribbean countries to address in a more holistic manner the sectoral issues relating to the management of the Caribbean Sea area and, in so doing, to promote an integrated management approach to the Caribbean Sea area in the context of sustainable development, through a regional cooperative effort among Caribbean countries,

Noting the importance of the ongoing work of the Working Group on climate change and disaster risk reduction, established by the Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction,

Noting also the efforts of the Caribbean countries, within the framework of the Association of Caribbean States, to develop further support for their concept of the Caribbean Sea as an area of special importance, in the context of sustainable development and in conformity with the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea,

Welcoming the decision by the Association of Caribbean States to establish the Technical Advisory Group to further advance the Caribbean Sea Initiative and the implementation of resolutions 55/203 and 57/261, inter alia, through the preparation of a technical report,

Cognizant of the importance of the Caribbean Sea to present and future generations and to the heritage and the continuing economic well-being and sustenance of people living in the area, and the urgent need for the countries of the region to take appropriate steps for its preservation and protection, with the support of the international community,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Takes note also of the report of the Association of Caribbean States, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 57/261;

3. Recognizes the importance of adopting an integrated management approach to the Caribbean Sea area in the context of sustainable development;

4. Encourages the further promotion of an integrated management approach to the Caribbean Sea area in the context of sustainable development, in accordance with the recommendations contained in resolution 54/225, as well as the provisions of Agenda 21, the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the outcome of the twenty-second special session of the General Assembly, the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development, the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation and the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development, and in conformity with relevant international law, including the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea;

5. Also encourages the continued efforts of the Caribbean countries to develop further an integrated management approach to the Caribbean Sea area in the context of sustainable development and, in this regard, to continue to develop regional cooperation in the management of their ocean affairs in the context of sustainable development, in order to address such issues as land-based pollution, pollution from ships, physical impacts on coral reefs and the diversity and dynamic interaction of, and competition among, socio-economic activities for the use of the coastal areas and the marine environment and their resources;

6. Welcomes the wide range of activities being implemented within the scope of the mandate of resolution 57/261, with a view to promoting an integrated management approach to the Caribbean Sea area in the context of sustainable development;

7. Recognizes the efforts of Caribbean countries to create conditions leading to sustainable development aimed at combating poverty and inequality, and in this regard notes with interest the initiatives of the Association of Caribbean States in the focal areas of sustainable tourism, trade, transport and natural disasters;

8. Calls upon States to continue to prioritize action on marine pollution from land-based sources as part of their national sustainable development strategies and programmes, in an integrated and inclusive manner, and also calls upon them to advance the implementation of the Global Programme of Action for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities and the Montreal Declaration on the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities;

9. Calls upon the United Nations system and the international community to assist, as appropriate, Caribbean countries and their regional organizations in their efforts to ensure the protection of the Caribbean Sea from degradation as a result of pollution from ships, in particular through the illegal release of oil and other harmful substances, and from illegal dumping or accidental release of hazardous waste, including radioactive materials, nuclear waste and dangerous chemicals, in violation of relevant international rules and standards, as well as pollution from land-based activities;

10. Calls upon all relevant States to take the necessary steps to bring into force, and to support the implementation of, the Protocol Concerning Pollution from Land-based Sources and Activities to the Convention for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean Region in order to protect the marine environment of the Caribbean Sea from land-based pollution and degradation;

11. Calls upon the international community to continue to support the efforts of the Association of Caribbean States to further implement resolutions 55/203 and 57/261, and invites the Association to submit a report on its progress to the Secretary-General for consideration during the sixty-first session of the General Assembly;

12. Calls upon all States to become contracting parties to relevant international agreements to enhance maritime safety and promote the protection of the marine environment of the Caribbean Sea from pollution, damage and degradation from ships and ship-generated waste;

13. Supports the efforts of Caribbean countries to implement sustainable fisheries management programmes by strengthening the Caribbean Regional Fisheries Mechanism;

14. Calls upon States, taking into consideration the Convention on Biological Diversity, to develop national, regional and international programmes for halting the loss of marine biodiversity in the Caribbean Sea, in particular fragile ecosystems, such as coral reefs;

15. Invites intergovernmental organizations within the United Nations system to continue their efforts to assist Caribbean countries in becoming parties to the relevant conventions and protocols and in implementing them effectively;

16. Calls upon the international community, the United Nations system and the multilateral financial institutions, and invites the Global Environment Facility, within its mandate, to support actively national and regional activities towards the above-mentioned approach;

17. Urges the United Nations system and the international community to continue to provide aid and assistance to the countries of the Caribbean region in the implementation of their long-term programmes of disaster prevention, preparedness, mitigation, management, relief and recovery, based on their development priorities, through the integration of relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction into a comprehensive approach to sustainable development;

18. Calls upon Member States to improve as a matter of priority their emergency response capabilities and the containment of environmental damage, particularly in the Caribbean Sea, in the event of natural disasters or of an accident or incident relating to maritime navigation;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to report to it at its sixty-first session, under the sub-item entitled "Further implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States" of the item entitled "Sustainable development", on the implementation of the present resolution, taking into account the views expressed by relevant regional organizations.

Conservation of wildlife

As at 31 December, the number of parties to the 1994 Lusaka Agreement on Cooperative Enforcement Operations Directed at Illegal Trade in Wild Fauna and Flora [YUN 1994, p. 951], which entered into force in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 970], remained at six States (Congo, Kenya, Lesotho, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia). The Agreement aimed to reduce, and ultimately eliminate, illegal trafficking in African wildlife.

Reports of Executive Director. In November [UNEP/GC.23/3/Add.4], the Executive Director, in line with a 2003 decision of the Governing Council of the Parties to the Agreement [YUN 2003, p. 1068], reported that UNEP had completed a draft report reviewing and evaluating the Agreement's work since its adoption. A revised report would be submitted to the UNEP Governing Council in 2005. The Executive Director's report also provided an overview of UNEP involvement in the Great Apes Survival Project.

Also in November [UNEP/GC.23/INF/5], the Executive Director, reporting on the implementation of a 2003 Governing Council decision on the UNEP World Conservation Monitoring Centre (WCMC) [YUN 2003, p. 1068], stated that UNEP established a process to strengthen the Centre, including consultations with key stakeholders and the development of a review process. It completed a study on a network for enhancing the work of WCMC and other organizations concerned with biodiversity, particularly biodiversity assessment and information management; finalized a report on the state of the world's protected areas to be launched at the third World Conservation Union World Conservation Congress (Bangkok, Thailand, 17-25 November); continued to strengthen the World Database on Protected Areas (WDPA); and initiated discussions with the relevant partners on the renewed mandate for the United Nations List of Protected Areas (UN List) process, the latest (2003) edition of which was released during the fifth World Parks Congress (Durban, South Africa, 8-17 September 2003).

Protection against harmful products and waste

Chemical safety

As at 31 December, 72 States and the EC had signed and 79 States and the EC were parties to the 1998 Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent (PIC) Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade [YUN 1998, p. 997]. During the year, 14 States ratified the Convention, two accepted it, one approved it, and nine acceded to it. The Convention entered into force on 24 February, 90 days after the deposit of the fiftieth instrument of ratification.

Prior to the entry into force of the Convention, the PIC Procedure was applied voluntarily by Governments.

The 29-member Interim Chemical Review Committee, a subsidiary body of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee (INC) for an International Legally Binding Instrument for the Application of the PIC Procedure, established in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 997] to make recommendations on specific chemicals or hazardous pesticide formulations for inclusion in the PIC procedure, held its fifth session (Geneva, 2-5 February) [UNEP/FAO/PIC/ICRC.5/15], at which it made a number of recommendations on chemicals to INC.

The eleventh and final session of INC (Geneva, 18 September) [UNEP/FAO/PIC/INC.11/7] extended the period for inclusion of any additional chemicals under the interim PIC procedure from the date of entry into force of the Convention until the date of the opening of the first meeting of the Conference of the Parties (see below) and agreed to decide on the inclusion of any additional chemicals to the interim PIC procedure in accordance with articles 5, 6, 7 and 22 of the Convention. On the recommendation of the Interim Chemical Review Committee (see above), INC made tetraethyl lead and tetramethyl lead (gasoline additives) subject to the interim PIC procedure, along with the pesticide parathion. INC did not reach a consensus on the inclusion of chrysotile asbestos in the voluntary PIC procedure.

Conference of Parties. The first meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Rotterdam Convention (Geneva, 20-24 September) [UNEP/FAO/RC/COP.1/33] adopted its rules of procedure and financial rules and requested the secretariat to propose options on a financial mechanism. It established a 31 member Chemical Review Committee as a subsidiary body and rules and procedures for preventing and dealing with conflicts of interest relating to the activities of the Committee. The Conference invited the UNEP Executive Director and the FAO Director-General to make proposals on a Convention secretariat for consideration and approval at its second meeting and to continue to perform those functions in the interim, and to appoint an Executive Director in consultation with the parties. It accepted the offer of Italy and Switzerland to host the secretariat jointly in Rome and Geneva and decided that developing countries should be adequately represented at senior grades in the secretariat. It also approved an operational budget for 2005 and an indicative budget for 2006.

The Conference adopted the regions and listing of countries as PIC regions for the purposes of article 5, paragraph 5 of the Convention; amendments to annex III to the Convention; and annex VI to the Convention setting out procedures for the settlement of disputes. It also adopted procedures for banned or severely restricted chemicals, and established a period of transition (24 February 2004 to 24 February 2006) from the interim to the Convention PIC procedure. The Conference encouraged the World Customs Organization to assign specific Harmonized System codes to the chemicals listed in annex III of the Convention. It decided to convene an open-ended ad hoc working group to consider the issue of non-compliance under article 17. Decisions were also adopted on regional delivery of technical assistance and on cooperation with the World Trade Organization.

International chemicals management

Report of Executive Director. A November report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/3/Add.1], outlined progress in the development of the strategic approach to international chemicals management (SAICM), pursuant to a 2002 Governing Council decision [YUN 2002, p. 1063]. Inter-session regional consultations, following the first (2003) session of the Preparatory Committee of the Development of SAICM [YUN 2003, p. 1071], were held by the African Group (Abuja, Nigeria, 24-26 May) and the Latin American and Caribbean Group (Nairobi, Kenya, 2-3 May). The second session of the Preparatory Committee (Nairobi, 4-8 October) [SAICM/PREPCOM.2/4] agreed on a tripartite structure for SAICM, comprising a high-level declaration, an overarching policy statement and a global plan of action. The Committee's president and secretariat were to continue intersessional work, and regional consultations were expected to take place in February and March 2005. Following one further Preparatory Committee meeting in 2005, the final international conference on chemicals management was planned to take place in 2006.

Lead

The Executive Director reported [UNEP/GC.23/3/Add.1] that activities for implementing the 2003 Governing Council decision on lead [YUN 2003, p. 1071] were constrained by lack of funding and staff resources. Concerning the phasing out of lead in gasoline, 65 bodies, drawn from Governments, the private sector, NGOs, and international organizations had joined the Partnership for Clean Fuels and Vehicles, launched at the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821]. In Africa, UNEP was supporting national-level activities, including workshops, training sessions for gasoline attendants, the formation of country task teams and public awareness campaigns. A regional conference on progress made in leaded gasoline phase-out in sub-Saharan Africa (Nairobi, Kenya, 5-7 May) re-confirmed the phase-out date of the end of 2005 set by African Governments and their partners, including UNEP, in 2001, and proposed actions to ensure that the target was met. The conference outcomes were adopted by the tenth regular session of the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment (Sirte, Libya, 26-30 June). To date, 50 per cent of gasoline sold in Africa was unleaded; nine countries had completely phased out leaded gasoline, 12 had fixed phase-out dates by December 2005, 16 introduced unleaded gasoline, and 20 had action plans to phase out leaded gasoline.

Mercury programme

Responding to a 2003 Governing Council decision on mercury [YUN 2003, p. 1071], the Executive Director, in November [UNEP/GC.23/3/Add.1], reported on the UNEP mercury programme, whose long-term objective was to facilitate national, regional and global action to reduce or eliminate as far as possible anthropogenic uses and releases of mercury and mercury compounds. Its immediate objective was to encourage all countries to adopt goals, identify at-risk populations and ecosystems and reduce anthropogenic mercury releases. The report described capacity-building and technical activities; programme funding; technical and financial assistance activities; and further activities.

A December note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/INF/19], provided an analysis of the views and options submitted by 25 Governments and regional economic organizations as at 1 October, in response to his 23 February request to them to report on progress in implementing the Governing Council's 2003 decision on mercury, especially with regard to any goals or national action taken, and to provide views on further measures to address significant global adverse impacts of mercury and further action on other heavy metals.

Harmful products

In May [A/59/81-E/2004/63], the Secretary-General submitted a report covering the seventh triennial review of the Consolidated List of Products Whose Consumption and/or Sale Have Been Banned, Withdrawn, Severely Restricted or Not Approved by Governments. The report updated developments since the submission of the Secretary-General's last report in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 970].

Significant progress had been made since the previous review, particularly the coming into force of the Rotterdam (see p. 1063) and the Stockholm Conventions (see p. 1066). The Secretary-General made recommendations to the Economic and Social Council relating to the permanent online availability of the List and printing updates in all UN official languages;

strengthening capacity-building and technical assistance in developing countries and providing financial resources in support of national efforts to improve the environmentally sound management of toxic chemicals; and full participation by Member States in the process to successfully develop the strategic approach to international chemicals management (see p. 1064) by 2005.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting 50], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2004/55 [draft: E/2004/L.46] without vote [agenda item 13(e)].

Protection against products harmful to health and the environment

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 37/137 of 17 December 1982, 38/149 of 19 December 1983, 39/229 of 18 December 1984 and 44/226 of 22 December 1989, Assembly decisions 47/439 of 22 December 1992 and 50/431 of 20 December 1995, and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1998/41 of 30 July 1998 and 2001/33 of 26 July 2001,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on products harmful to health and the environment, which contains a review of the Consolidated List of Products Whose Consumption and/or Sale Have Been Banned, Withdrawn, Severely Restricted or Not Approved by Governments,

Taking note of the fact that an increasing number of countries participate in the preparation of the Consolidated List,

Noting with satisfaction the continued close collaboration among the United Nations, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Environment Programme in the preparation and dissemination of the Consolidated List,

Taking note of commitments made and targets established regarding environmentally sound management of chemicals in the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), adopted by the Summit on 4 September 2002,

Noting the entry into force, in early 2004, of the Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade and the Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and notes that the Consolidated List of Products Whose Consumption and/or Sale Have Been Banned, Withdrawn, Severely Restricted or Not Approved by Governments is available online;

2. Expresses its appreciation for the cooperation extended by Governments in the preparation of the Consolidated List, and urges all Governments, in particular those that have not yet done so, to provide the information necessary to relevant organizations for inclusion in future issues of the Consolidated List;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to update the electronic version of the Consolidated List, alternating between chemicals and pharmaceuticals every year, while printing only new data to complement previously printed issues for the benefit of those, particularly in developing countries, who may not have easy access to the electronic version;

4. Urges all Governments to participate fully in the process of developing a strategic approach to international chemicals management by 2005, in order to achieve the 2020 target of the World Summit on Sustainable Development, as set out in paragraph 23 of the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, pursuant to which chemicals would be used and produced in ways that lead to the minimization of significant adverse effects on human health and the environment, using transparent science-based risk assessment procedures and science-based risk management procedures, taking into account the precautionary approach, as set out in principle 15 of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, and support developing countries in strengthening their capacity for the sound management of chemicals and hazardous wastes by providing technical and financial assistance, and calls for a more coordinated use of existing international instruments in this field, taking into account the work undertaken by the United Nations system in this regard;

5. Encourages countries to implement the new Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals, as agreed in paragraph 23 (c) of the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, as soon as possible, with a view to having the system fully operational by 2008;

6. Urges all Governments that have not yet done so to consider ratifying the Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade and the Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants and to fully implement them;

7. Invites multilateral and bilateral agencies to continue to strengthen and coordinate their activities for improving the capacity-building of developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, as well as countries with economies in transition, including through technical assistance in the area of the sound management of hazardous chemicals and dangerous pharmaceutical products;

8. Emphasizes the need to continue to utilize the work being undertaken by relevant organizations of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental organizations in this area, as well as that being carried out under international agreements and conventions in related areas, in updating the Consolidated List;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to report every three years, in accordance with resolution 39/229, on the implementation of the present resolution, taking into account previous Assembly resolutions on the same subject, as appropriate.

Persistent organic pollutants

As at 31 December, 88 States and the EC were parties to the 2001 Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants (POPs) [YUN 2001, p. 971]. During the year, 34 States ratified the Convention, one accepted it, one State and the EC approved it, and 10 acceded to it. The Convention entered into force on 17 May, 90 days after the deposit of the fiftieth instrument of approval. The first Conference of the Parties to the Convention was scheduled to be held in Punta del Este, Uruguay, in May 2005.

The Expert Group on Best Available Techniques and Best Environmental Practices, established in 2002 by the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for an International Legally Binding Instrument for Implementing International Action on Certain POPs [YUN 2002, p. 1064], at its third session (Tokyo, Japan, 11-16 October) [UNEP/POPS/EGB.3/3], endorsed the draft guidelines on best available techniques and provisional guidance on best environmental practices and agreed to forward them to the Conference of Parties to the Stockholm Convention.

Hazardous wastes

As at 31 December, the number of parties to the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1989, p. 420], which entered into force in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 685], rose to 163 with the accession of Chad, the Cook Islands, Liberia, Rwanda and Togo. The 1995 amendment to the Convention [YUN 1995, p. 1333], not yet in force, had been ratified, accepted or approved by 55 parties. During the year, Botswana, the Syrian Arab Republic and Togo acceded to the 1999 Basel Protocol on Liability and Compensation for Damage resulting from Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1999, p. 998], bringing the total number of parties to four.

The third session of the Open-ended Working Group of the Convention (26-30 April) [UNEP/CHW/OEWG/3/34 & Corr.1], adopted the 2004 work plan of the Basel Convention Partnership Programme. Other decisions dealt with the selection of project proposals under the Strategic Plan for the Implementation of the Convention to 2010, adopted by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1065]; legal aspects of the dismantling of ships; a proposed decision on the Joint Working Group of ILO, the International Maritime Organization (IMO) and the Convention (see p. 1067); issues related to annex VII to the Convention; the Basel Protocol on Liability and Compensation [YUN 1999, p. 998]; establishment of a mechanism for implementation and compliance; technical guidelines on POPs; implementation of existing technical guidelines; work on hazard characteristics; India's application regarding plastic-coated cable scrap; the import of wastes contained in annex IX to the Convention; and illegal traffic in hazardous wastes.

The seventh meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Basel Convention (Geneva, 25-29 October) [UNEP/CHW.7/33] adopted amendments to annexes VIII and IX to the Convention; a standardized format for reporting under article 3 of the Convention on national definitions of hazardous wastes; and technical guidelines on POPs and on the environmentally sound recycling/reclamation of metals and metal compounds. The meeting asked the Open-ended Working Group to finalize technical guidelines on the environmentally sound management of wastes resulting from surface treatment of metals and plastics and invited Parties to provide comments on the implementation of existing technical guidelines. It also adopted the 2005-2006 work plan of the Basel Convention Partnership Programme and that of the Convention's Open-ended Working Group. It requested the secretariat to conclude a framework agreement with Iran to establish a Regional Centre for Training and Technology Transfer in Tehran. The meeting incorporated modifications into the French language version of the lists of wastes contained in annexes VIII and IX to the Convention. Other decisions related to the implementation of the Strategic Plan for the Implementation of the Convention [YUN 2002, p. 1065]; hazardous waste minimization; the Mobile Phone Partnership Initiative; implementation of the 1994 Barbados Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States [YUN 1994, p. 783]; the implementation of the environment initiative of the New Partnership for Africa's Development [YUN 2002, p. 907]; follow-up to the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821]; regional centres for training and technology transfer; designation of competent authorities and focal points; work on hazard characteristics; the disposal of polyvinyl chloride (PVC) wastes; the import of wastes contained in annex IX to the Convention; harmonization of lists of wastes and related procedures; the Joint Working Group of ILO, IMO and the Basel Convention on Ship Scrapping; the environmentally sound management of ship dismantling and the abandonment of ships; the Basel Protocol [YUN 1999, p. 998]; the Trust Fund to Assist Developing Countries and Other Countries in Need of Technical Assistance in the Implementation of the Basel Convention; the mechanism established in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 1065] to promote implementation and compliance; a checklist for the preparation of national legislation for the implementation of the Convention; illegal traffic in hazardous wastes and other wastes; the transmission of information; bilateral, multilateral or regional agreements; international cooperation, including with WTO and the Global Environment Facility; sustainable financing; and administrative, financial and other matters. (For information on the human rights aspects of the illicit movement and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes, see p. 766).

Cleaner production and sustainable consumption patterns

The Executive Director, reporting in November [UNEP/GC.23/INF/5] on the implementation of a 2003 Governing Council decision on the promotion of sustainable consumption and production [YUN 2003, p. 1073], described UNEP's activities in cooperation with the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA), activities undertaken through UNEP's cleaner production and sustainable consumption programmes, and training and capacity-building programmes.

The Global Compact, an initiative launched in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 989] with the aim of engaging the business community in advancing basic values in human rights, and UNEP, held a policy dialogue on sustainable consumption: marketing and communications (Paris, 5-6 April). The First African Expert Meeting on Sustainable Consumption and Production (Casablanca, Morocco, 19-20 May) adopted the Casablanca Statement on Sustainable Consumption and Production, which, among other things, called on the UN system, including UNEP, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, and DESA to strengthen their support to national, subregional and regional efforts in Africa to promote sustainable consumption and production, as part of the 10-year Framework of Programmes for Sustainable Consumption and Production—the Marrakech Process—agreed to in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 840]. The Statement was to be submitted to the tenth regular session of the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment (Sirte, Libya, 29-30 June). Other meetings held were: the Third African Roundtable on Sustainable Consumption and Production (Casablanca, 17-20 May); and the European stakeholder meeting on sustainable consumption and production (Ostend, Belgium, 25-26 November), organized by UNEP and the EC.

UNEP held its eighth International High-level Seminar on Sustainable Consumption and Production (Monterrey, Mexico, 15-16 November) to select methodologies, approaches, projects and funding mechanisms to be replicated and used to change unsustainable patterns of production and consumption; build new partnerships to share and leverage resources and facilitate the implementation process; and identify priority activities for UNEP and other organizations mandated to implement the sustainability agenda. Seminar participants agreed on 16 recommendations relating to water; energy; consumption; resource use, technology and products; and other issues for consideration by the Governing Council in 2005, which would review progress on the sustainable consumption and production agenda.

Governing Council action. On 31 March [dec. SS.VIII/4], the Governing Council decided to discuss, in 2005, domestic, industrial and hazardous waste management, in particular capacity-building and technology support, and to consider innovative ways of mobilizing financial resources to support developing countries and countries with economies in transition in that regard.

Other matters

Environmental law

In response to a 2003 Governing Council decision [YUN 2003, p. 1073], the Executive Director, in November [UNEP/GC.23/3/Add.3], reported on follow-up to the 2002 Global Judges Symposium on the Role of Law and Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 1065], focusing on capacity-building in the area of environmental law. The report summarized the results of activities conducted pursuant to the decision, including the creation of a UNEP alliance of chief justices; the establishment of a global training centre for judges in Cairo, Egypt, as a centre of excellence for the implementation of UNEP's global judges capacity-building programme; the creation of judges forums on environmental law in Europe, the Pacific, southern Africa, the Arab States, the Caribbean and francophone African countries; the development of a UNEP Judges Handbook on Environmental Law for common law, civil law and the Arab States; the convening of regional chief justices needs-assessment and planning meetings; the implementation of the capacity-building programme for judges and other legal stakeholders; and systematic and sustained capacity-building activities at the national level in several countries. Future activities would focus on intensifying national judicial training in environmental law through national judicial training institutes, supported by UNEP and its partner agencies; dissemination of the UNEP Judges Handbook on Environmental Law to judges worldwide; and further strengthening networking among chief justices through a UNEP global alliance of chief justices for environmental law.

In response to a further 2003 Governing Council decision [YUN 2003, p. 1073], the Executive Director reported on the implementation of the Programme for the Development and Periodic Review of Environmental Law for the First Decade of the Twenty-first Century (Montevideo Programme III), adopted by the Governing Council in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 972]. The report listed UNEP achievements in the implementation of Montevideo Programme III, including the launch of its environmental law website and the joint UNEP-FAO-World Conservation Union database—ECOLEX—and the publication of environmental law materials and training manuals. Montevideo Programme III programme areas warranting special attention in the second half of the decade included implementation, compliance and enforcement; strengthening and development of international environmental law; freshwater resources; coastal and marine ecosystems; and trade and environment. UNEP activities in those areas would continue to be aligned with, and directed towards achieving the internationally agreed goals of the 2000 Millennium Declaration, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 55/2 [YUN 2000, p. 49]. Further information on the implementation of Montevideo Programme III for the period 2000-2005 was provided in a December note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.23/INF/10].

Occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories

In response to a 2003 Governing Council decision on the environment in the Occupied Palestinian Territories [YUN 2003, p. 1073] the Executive Director, reported in November [UNEP/GC.23/3/Add.2] that UNEP's Post-Conflict Assessment Unit convened a trilateral technical meeting on environmental issues to discuss implementation of the decision, including the recommendations contained in the 2002 UNEP Desk Study on the Environment in the Occupied Palestinian Territories [YUN 2003, p. 1073]. The meeting considered the next steps to be undertaken by UNEP under eight jointly agreed priority desk study recommendations. The Unit subsequently held capacity-building training seminars for Palestinian officials, including on communications and the environment, environmental quality standards on wastewater and air pollution, environmental impact assessment, environmental policy-making and environmental laboratory analysis.

Human settlements

Follow-up to the 1996 UN Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and the 2001 General Assembly special session

In August [A/59/198], the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 58/226 [YUN 2003, p. 1076], reported on follow-up to the Assembly's twenty-fifth (2001) special session [YUN 2001, p. 973] to review and appraise the implementation of the Habitat Agenda [YUN 1996, p. 994], adopted by the 1996 United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) [ibid., p. 992], and on the strengthening of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat). As a result of a positive response by Governments to the Assembly's calls in resolution 58/226 [YUN 2003, p. 1076] for increased contributions to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation (see p. 1076), general-purpose funds from Governments rose from $6 million in 2002 to $8.3 million in 2003, and special-purpose contributions from Governments and other donors increased from $30 million in 2002 to $37.8 million in 2003. The UN-Habitat Executive Director appealed to member States for multi-year funding, to enable more effective support of programme implementation. There were also promising signs of commitments from other sources.

Implementation of the Special Human Settlements Programme for the Palestinian People and the Technical Cooperation Trust Fund, the establishment of which was endorsed by the UN-Habitat Governing Council in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1083], began with a programme definition phase (March to December). The UN-Habitat Global Urban Observatory (GUO) was strengthened as a worldwide monitoring and learning network to assist countries and cities in collecting, analysing and using urban indicators and statistical data. UN-Habitat was providing technical assistance to Governments through GUO and technical cooperation projects with partners to promote the development of city performance monitoring systems and the development and implementation of indicator systems for monitoring the Habitat Agenda, the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 52] and national and local development targets. Joint initiatives were established with ongoing urban projects in Bangladesh, Cambodia, China, Georgia, India, Indonesia, Latvia, Mexico, South Africa and Yemen. With the World Bank, UN-Habitat produced operational guidelines for municipal performance measurement and introduced a programme on the monitoring of urban inequities, whose overarching global goal was to influence urban policies by providing knowledge support to Governments. An ongoing dialogue on the improvement of slum-dwellers' conditions was also initiated.

UN-Habitat established a Partners and Youth Section to provide an integrated approach and promote cooperation with Habitat Agenda partners. Cooperation and collaboration with NGOs and other Habitat Agenda partners centred on the implementation of UN-Habitat's Global Campaigns for Secure Tenure and Urban Governance, launched in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 995], and on the global monitoring of urbanization trends. UN-Habitat was working towards increasing the number of women's organizations and women's affairs ministries working in the area of human settlement in order to bring human settlement issues into the mainstream agenda and the 10-year review, in 2005, of the implementation of the 1995 Beijing Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170], adopted at the Fourth World Conference on Women [ibid., p. 1169] (see p. 1145). It conducted studies on women's rights to land and property as part of a larger study in Latin America, the findings of which would be published during the year.

UN-Habitat was cooperating with member States to address issues facing young people. Together with the UN Secretariat's Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA) and ILO, UN-Habitat organized an expert group meeting on urban youth employment (Nairobi, Kenya, June). A global partnership initiative on urban youth development in Africa was to be launched at the second session of the World Urban Forum (see p. 1073). UN-Habitat was also cooperating with various UN agencies in youth-related initiatives.

Initiatives of the Cities Alliance partnership between the World Bank and UN-Habitat included a state-wide slum upgrading programme in Bahia, Brazil. The MDGs were integrated into new guidelines for the common country assessment and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF), and linkages between the common country assessment and UNDAF, the MDGs and poverty reduction strategy papers were clarified. UN-Habitat began assigning programme managers to selected UNDP country offices, with 33 programme managers expected to be in place by the end of the year.

The Secretary-General said that multilateral and bilateral assistance for housing and urban infrastructure, which amounted to some $4 billion annually, had not increased in recent years and played a limited supporting role in view of the magnitude of the housing and basic services needs in developing countries. While major gains were registered during the period 2000-2003 in implementing the Programme, human and financial resource constraints limited the achievement of better results in partnership activities. The Secretary-General encouraged Governments to: include water, sanitation and human settlements in their national development plans and to integrate urban poverty in national poverty reduction strategy documents; increase the non-earmarked component of their contribution to facilitate the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, the 2001 Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium, adopted by the twenty-fifth special session of the General Assembly in resolution S-25/2 [YUN 2001, p. 974], and the relevant commitments of the Millennium Declaration, in particular the MDG target of significantly improving the lives of at least 100 million slum dwellers by 2020 [YUN 2000, p. 52]; and support the participation of partner groups from developing countries at the second (2004) session of the World Urban Forum (see p. 1073). He encouraged Governments and financial institutions to contribute generously to the Technical Cooperation Trust Fund and the Special Human Settlements Programme for the Palestinian people. He also encouraged Governments and international agencies to review and promote the role of cities in sustainable development as the engines of economic growth and to assess their social risk and opportunity, as well as their potential assets in relation to rural hinterlands.

Coordinated implementation of Habitat Agenda

In May [E/2004/70], the Secretary-General reported on the implementation of Economic and Social Council resolution 2003/62 [YUN 2003, p. 1075] regarding the coordinated implementation of the Habitat Agenda. The report discussed the continued increase in contributions to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, a campaign to widen the donor base, the Special Human Settlements Programme for the Palestinian people and the Technical Cooperation Trust Fund. It described cooperation and collaboration with NGOs and other Habitat Agenda partners, including civil society representatives, women's organizations, and member States and UN agencies working on youth-related initiatives. It also described the work of the Habitat Agenda task manager system, the establishment of which was supported by the General Assembly in the 2001 Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements [YUN 2001, p. 974]; coordination efforts through the United Nations Development Group, UNDAF and UNDP; and the inclusion of shelter and urbanization issues in national development strategies.

The Secretary-General encouraged Governments to increase their contributions for the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, the 2001 Declaration and the MDGs; facilitate partnerships at the national and local levels with civil society organizations, local authorities and the business sector; and support the participation of partner groups from developing countries in the second (2004) World Urban Forum (see p. 1073).

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 2004/300, took note of the Secretary-General's report; decided to transmit it to the Assembly for consideration at its fifty-ninth (2004) session; and requested the Secretary-General to submit a further report for consideration by the Council in 2005.

Pursuant to the Council's decision, the Secretary-General, by a September note [A/59/382], transmitted his May report on the coordinated implementation of the Habitat Agenda (see above) to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/59/484], adopted resolution 59/239 without vote [agenda item 86].

Implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and strengthening of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3327(XXIX) of 16 December 1974, 32/162 of 19 December 1977, 34/115 of 14 December 1979, 56/205 and 56/206 of 21 December 2001, 57/275 of 20 December 2002 and 58/226 and 58/227 of 23 December 2003,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolutions 2002/38 of 26 July 2002 and 2003/62 of 25 July 2003 and Council decision 2004/300 of 23 July 2004,

Recalling the Habitat Agenda and the Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium,

Taking into account the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), as well as the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development,

Recalling the goal contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration of achieving a significant improvement in the lives of at least 100 million slum-dwellers by 2020, as proposed in the Cities Without Slums Initiative, and recalling further the goal contained in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation to halve, by 2015, the proportion of people who are unable to reach or afford safe drinking water and the proportion of people who do not have access to basic sanitation,

Recognizing that the overall thrust of the strategic vision of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat) and its emphasis on the two global campaigns on secure tenure and urban governance are strategic points of entry for the effective implementation of the Habitat Agenda, especially for guiding international cooperation in respect of adequate shelter for all and sustainable human settlements development,

Conscious of the need to achieve greater coherence and effectiveness in the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, the Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium and the relevant internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration,

Recognizing the continued urgent need for increased and predictable financial contributions to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation to ensure timely, effective and concrete global implementation of the Habitat Agenda, the Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium and the relevant internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration and the Johannesburg Declaration and Plan of Implementation,

Reiterating the call to the Executive Director of UN-Habitat to increase the efforts to strengthen the Foundation in order to achieve its primary operative objective of supporting the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, including supporting shelter, related infrastructure-development programmes and housing-finance institutions and mechanisms, particularly in developing countries,

Recognizing that humanitarian assistance in the field of human settlements must be provided in ways that will be supportive of reconstruction and long-term development,

Noting the convening of the second session of the World Urban Forum, organized by UN-Habitat in co-operation with the Government of Spain, the Autonomous Government of Catalonia and the Municipality of Barcelona, in Barcelona, from 13 to 17 September 2004,

Expressing its appreciation to the Government of Canada and the city of Vancouver for their willingness to host the third session of the World Urban Forum in 2006,

Emphasizing the importance of access to basic services for the urban poor, and in this regard noting the decision of the Governing Council of UN-Habitat at its nineteenth session on water and sanitation in cities,

Noting the commitment to integrate urban planning and management in relation to housing, transport, employment opportunities, environmental conditions and community facilities, and further noting the commitment to promote, where appropriate, the upgrading of informal settlements and urban slums as an expedient measure and pragmatic solution to the urban shelter deficit,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Recognizes that Governments have the primary responsibility for the sound and effective implementation of the Habitat Agenda and the Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium, and stresses that the international community should fully implement its commitments to support the Governments of developing countries as well as countries with economies in transition in their efforts, through the provision of the requisite resources, capacity-building, the transfer of technology and the creation of an international enabling environment;

3. Calls for continued financial support to UN-Habitat through increased voluntary contributions to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, and invites Governments to provide multi-year funding to support programme implementation;

4. Also calls for increased, non-earmarked contributions to the Foundation;

5. Requests the Executive Director to continue to work with the World Bank Group, regional development banks, other development banks, the private sector and other relevant partners to field-test approaches through pilot projects and to develop longer-term programmes to mobilize resources to increase the supply of affordable credit for slum upgrading and other pro-poor human settlements development in developing countries as well as countries with economies in transition;

6. Calls upon the international donor community and financial institutions to contribute generously to the Technical Cooperation Trust Fund and other operational activities of UN-Habitat for the effective implementation of its field programmes;

7. Recognizes the important role of regional offices and personnel of UN-Habitat in providing operational support to developing countries, and in this regard calls upon Governments to strengthen and support financially the regional offices of UN-Habitat in order to expand operational support to developing countries and countries with economies in transition;

8. Calls upon UN-Habitat to continue to work closely with the other organizations of the United Nations system, integrating UN-Habitat staff as appropriate into existing United Nations country offices;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the resource needs of UN-Habitat and the United Nations Office at Nairobi under review so as to permit the delivery, in an effective manner, of necessary services to UN-Habitat and the other United Nations organs and organizations in Nairobi;

10. Encourages Governments to establish local, national and regional urban observatories and to provide financial and substantive support to UN-Habitat for the further development of methodologies for data collection, analysis and dissemination;

11. Encourages Member States as well as Habitat Agenda partners to provide support for the preparation of the UN-Habitat flagship reports, the Global Report on Human Settlements and the State of the World's Cities report, on a biennial basis so as to raise awareness of human settlements and to provide information on urban conditions and trends around the world;

12. Encourages Governments to support the UN-Habitat Global Campaign for Secure Tenure and the Global Campaign on Urban Governance as important tools for, inter alia, promoting administration of land and property rights, in accordance with national circumstances, and enhancing access to affordable credit by the urban poor;

13. Invites Governments to continue to promote linkages between urban and rural areas in line with the Habitat Agenda, which recognized that cities and rural areas are interdependent economically, socially and environmentally;

14. Encourages Governments and UN-Habitat to continue to promote partnerships with local authorities, non-governmental organizations, the private sector and other Habitat Agenda partners, including women's groups and academic and professional groups, in order to empower them, within the legal framework and conditions of each country, to play a more effective role in the provision of adequate shelter for all and sustainable human settlements development in an urbanizing world;

15. Also encourages Governments to support and enable the participation of youth in the implementation of the Habitat Agenda through social, cultural and economic activities at the city level and other national- and local-level activities;

16. Further encourages Governments to include issues pertaining to shelter, sustainable human settlements and urban poverty in their national development strategies, including poverty reduction strategy papers, where they exist;

17. Urges the donor community to support the efforts of developing countries to make pro-poor investments in services and infrastructure in order to improve living environments, in particular in slums and informal settlements;

18. Requests UN-Habitat, within its mandate, to continue to support the efforts of countries affected by natural disasters and complex emergencies to develop prevention, rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes for the transition from relief to development, and encourages UN-Habitat to continue to work closely with the members of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee and other relevant agencies in the United Nations system in this field;

19. Invites the Secretary-General to incorporate the assessment of progress made towards the target of achieving a significant improvement in the lives of at least 100 million slum-dwellers by 2020 in his report on the review in 2005 of the implementation of the United Nations Millennium Declaration;

20. Calls upon UN-Habitat and the Division for Sustainable Development of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat to work together closely in the preparations for the thirteenth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development in order to ensure a fruitful policy discussion of the thematic cluster of issues on water, sanitation and human settlements;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

22. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixtieth session an item entitled "Implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and strengthening of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat)".

UN Human Settlements Programme

Governing Council

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 56/206 [YUN 2001, p. 987], the Governing Council of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat) met biennially. It did not meet in 2004. The Governing Council's twentieth session would take place in 2005.

Committee of Permanent Representatives

The Committee of Permanent Representatives, the intersessional body of UN-Habitat's Governing Council, met three times in 2003

(4 June, 4 September, 11 December) and four times in 2004 (3 March, 30 June, 30 September and 9 December) [HSP/GC/20/3]. The Committee discussed follow-up to the decisions of the nineteenth (2003) session of the Governing Council [YUN 2003, p. 1078]; implementation of the UN-Habitat work programme, and of UN-Habitat's Global Campaigns for Secure Tenure and Urban Governance [YUN 2000, p. 995]; UN-Habitat's operational activities; preparations for the second session of the World Urban Forum (Barcelona, Spain, 13-17 September) (see p. 1073); UN-Habitat's financial status; the outcome of the twelfth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development (see p. 827); implementation of the MDG on slums; the programme on water and sanitation for cities; strengthening the role and status of local authorities and promoting effective decentralization; mainstreaming gender issues in UN-Habitat's work; and the UN-Habitat budget for the 2006-2007 biennium.

UN-Habitat activities

UN-Habitat's work in 2004, within its four-pillar strategy for attaining the goal of cities without slums, consisted of advocacy of global norms, analysis of information, field testing of solutions and financing. Its shelter, urban development, research and finance programmes, and its Global Campaigns on Secure Tenure and Urban Governance [YUN 2000, p. 995], were revised to contribute to the strategic vision adopted by the Governing Council in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 1003] and updated in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1081]. The Global Campaign for Secure Tenure was launched in three countries in West Africa and an international task force created to facilitate negotiated policy alternatives to unlawful eviction. Regional and country consultations were conducted under the Water for African Cities and the Water for Asian Cities programmes, and community-led initiatives for improving water and sanitation for the urban poor were supported. Consultations started on a new Water for Eastern European Cities programme. Training and capacity-building for pursuing the Habitat Agenda and achieving the MDGs were conducted in eight countries. In Latin America and the Caribbean, technical support was provided to the capacity-building component in urban safety and youth-at-risk. The United Cities and Local Governments, an association advocating democratic local self-government worldwide, was launched during a meeting of its Founding Congress (Paris, 2-5 May), and the Global Campaign on Urban Governance was launched in Morocco, Senegal and Burkina Faso. New field operations in disaster management and response were identified in fifteen countries and several islands, and work on the strategy for addressing shelter problems for women and orphans afflicted by HIV/AIDS in informal settlements was ongoing in East Africa.

UN-Habitat's monitoring systems were strengthened to enable effective tracking of the MDG on slums [YUN 2000, p. 52], with Urban Inequities Surveys implemented in selected cities. UN-Habitat made considerable progress in preparing its Global Urban Indicators Database Version 3, including by revising urban indicators in line with the MDGs. The 2004-2005 edition of one of UN-Habitat's flagship publications, The State of the World's Cities 2004/05: Globalization and Urban Culture, was launched at the World Urban Forum's second session (see below).

In 2004, UN-Habitat had 95 technical programmes and projects under execution in 56 countries. It executed 36 technical cooperation projects, including 12 regional programmes, in 31 countries in Africa and the Arab States, and published 5 reports on the state of human settlements. In Asia and the Pacific, 23 projects worth $15.9 million were executed. New projects were undertaken in Afghanistan, China, Indonesia, Mongolia, Nepal, Sri Lanka, and the Philippines, and projects covering a range of priority issues from urban upgrading to urban governance were implemented in 13 countries. UN-Habitat started a new Urban and Housing Rehabilitation Programme for Iraq (UHRP), working within the UN strategic planning framework for Iraq (see p. 354), and served as the Deputy Task Manager for Cluster 4 of the Plan on infrastructure and housing. Large programmes, including reconstruction projects, were implemented in Africa, the Arab States, Asia and Europe. The Regional and Technical Cooperation Division also provided advisory services and implemented technical programmes and projects within the Global Campaigns [YUN 2000, p. 995], assisted several countries with post-war reconstruction and recovery and worked on training programmes and capacity-building in disaster prevention and management. Considerable progress was made in establishing the Slum Upgrading Facility, with $1.8 million raised for the design phase, and $10 million for the Facility's three-year pilot phase.

UN Habitat convened the second session of the World Urban Forum (Barcelona, Spain, 13-17 September) [HSP/GC/20/2/Add.2] on the theme "Cities: Crossroads of Cultures, Inclusiveness and Integration". It focused on urban cultures, realities, governance and renaissance, and thematic dialogues on urban poor, resources, sustainability, services, and disasters and reconstruction. The third Forum session would be held in Vancouver, Canada, in 2006.

Through the Cities Alliance, UN-Habitat and the World Bank collaborated to strengthen local government authorities, help in the emergency reconstruction of urban infrastructure, initiate and sustain labour intensive municipal public works, formulate city development strategies, and set up urban indicators databases, among other objectives, in Afghanistan, East Asia, Egypt, Latvia, Tanzania, and Yemen. UN-Habitat continued to publish its flagship quarterly magazine Habitat Debate. In collaboration with UNDP, UN-Habitat established a worldwide network of Habitat Programme Managers to enhance normative work with respect to implementation of the Habitat Agenda and the MDGs on water and sanitation and on slums [YUN 2000, p. 52]. UN-Habitat's disaster recovery activities related to the Indian Ocean tsunami of 26 December (see p. 952) were bringing a long-term, community-oriented perspective to the rapid recovery efforts of agencies and NGOs in Indonesia, Maldives, Sri Lanka and Thailand.

UN-Habitat's main focus with regard to urban environment was on assisting local authorities in better planning and managing their environmental resources towards more sustainable growth and development. Expert group meetings were held in Burkina Faso, Kenya and Sri Lanka on basic urban services and sustainable urban mobility. UN-Habitat continued in-country activities to achieve the MDG on slums. Activities of the Cities Without Slums subregional programme for Eastern and Southern Africa were initiated and consolidated. The Best Practices and Local Leadership Programme finalized the pilot phase of the initiative to document and review good urban policies and enabling legislation; evaluations were conducted in Brazil, Burkina Faso, Colombia, Mexico, Peru, the Philippines, Senegal, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Cooperation with UNEP

A December report [HSP/GC/20/10] prepared jointly by the Executive Directors of UN-Habitat and UNEP described cooperation between the two organizations in the areas of assessment, policy development and implementation of joint initiatives; cooperation in Africa, Europe, and the Asia-Pacific and Latin America and Caribbean regions; and opportunities for future cooperation.

Decentralization and strengthening local authorities

In response to a 2003 Governing Council resolution [YUN 2003, p. 1079], the Executive Director submitted a November report [HSP/GC/20/7] on decentralization and the strengthening of local authorities. The report discussed, among other issues, the establishment by UN-Habitat of the Advisory Group of Experts on Decentralization (AGRED). AGRED's inaugural meeting (Ville de Gatineau, Canada, 9-10 March) reviewed the status of decentralization legislation of selected countries and the basic principles of decentralization policies, including subsidiarity, administrative and financial capacities of local authorities, governance and democracy at the local level, with the aim of developing best practices. AGRED members prepared draft guidelines on decentralization, which were discussed during its second meeting (Barcelona, Spain, 14 September) and presented to the tenth meeting (Barcelona, 12 September) of the Advisory Committee of Local Authorities, established in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 990]. The draft guidelines were annexed to the Executive Director's report. AGRED members also agreed on the format for documenting best practices. Given the interconnection between the promotion of decentralization and the monitoring of local democracy, UN-Habitat and the newly established United Cities and Local Governments (see p. 1072) agreed to establish a global observatory of local democracy and decentralization. A special AGRED meeting on the guidelines and best practices was scheduled to take place in conjunction with the twentieth (2005) Governing Council session. A dialogue session on decentralization would also form part of the Council's deliberations.

UN Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation

Biennial financial audit

Allocations and expenditures in respect of project activities and programme support cost amounted to $59 million and $48 million, respectively, leaving an unexpended allocation of $11 million. The UN Board of auditors, in its report on UN-Habitat financial reports and audited financial statements for the year ended 31 December 2003 [A/59/5/Add.8], found that only $175,000 of the invalid unliquidated obligations of $775,000 (that remained outstanding as of 31 December 2002) was cancelled in 2003, leaving an outstanding balance of $600,000 or 5 per cent of the total unliquidated obligations of $11,827,356 as at 31 December 2003. Operationally completed projects had not been financially closed or completed within 12 months of the date of their operational completion, as required and adequate assurance on the accuracy and completeness of non-expendable property was not obtained. Of 24 contracts reviewed, seven (29 per cent) did not comply with the six-month evaluation requirement, and the database on consultants at the Regional Office for Asia and the Pacific did not include information on their performance.

Chapter VIII

Population

In 2004, the world population reached 6.4 billion, as compared with 6.3 billion in 2003. While the number of people was greater, the actual rate of increase declined, an indication that the world was beginning to witness the end of rapid population growth.

United Nations population activities continued to be guided by the Programme of Action adopted at the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD). The year 2004 also marked the tenth anniversary of ICPD, and through various events, including the commemoration by the United Nations of the anniversary on 14 October, the international community reaffirmed its commitment to the ICPD Programme of Action.

The issue of international migration was considered by a number of organizations, both within and outside the UN system, as the Secretary-General reported, and the General Assembly recognized that they could contribute to the high-level dialogue on international migration and development. The Assembly encouraged countries of origin, transit and destination to increase cooperation on migration issues.

The United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) maintained its focus on goals in the areas of reproductive health, population development and poverty, and gender equality and women's empowerment, as well as on HIV/AIDS, humanitarian assistance and adolescent and youth needs. UNFPA established an International Youth Advisory Board and launched the Global Coalition on Women and AIDS. Among other publications, it issued the results of its global survey, Investing in People: National Progress in Implementing the ICPD Programme of Action 1994-2004. In 2004, UNFPA's donor base grew to a record 166 countries, and the Fund's income from all sources totalled $506.1 million, compared to $397.9 million in 2003.

The Commission on Population and Development, at its 2004 session, reviewed, as its special theme, progress made in achieving the goals and objectives of the ICPD Programme of Action. Other matters discussed by the Commission included financial resources to implement the Programme of Action, world population monitoring and the activities of the UN Population Division. The Population Division continued to analyse and report on world demographic trends and policies and to make its findings available in publications and on the Internet.

Follow-up to 1994 Conference on Population and Development

Implementation of the Programme of Action

Commission on Population and Development action. In follow-up to the recommendations of the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) [YUN 1994, p. 955], the Commission on Population and Development, at its thirty-seventh session (New York, 22-26 March and 6 May) [E/2004/25], considered as its special theme "Review and appraisal of the progress made in achieving the goals and objectives of the Programme of Action of the ICPD". The Commission also discussed the flow of financial resources for assisting in the implementation of the Programme of Action.

Review of progress towards Programme of Action goals

The General Assembly, in its 1994 resolution 49/128 [YUN 1994, p. 963], had named the Commission on Population and Development as the body responsible for monitoring, reviewing and assessing the implementation of the Programme of Action. In January 2004, pursuant to Economic and Social Council decision 2003/229 [YUN 2003, p. 1094], the Secretary-General submitted [E/CN.9/2004/3] the second quinquennial review and appraisal of progress made in achieving the goals and objectives of the Programme of Action. The report provided an overview of population levels and trends; population growth, structure and distribution globally and by major regions; reproductive rights and reproductive health; health and mortality; international migration; and population programmes. The first quinquennial review on that subject was presented to the Commission in 1999 [E/CN.9/1999/PC/2].

The report stated that, with a world population of 6.4 billion, nearly all countries experienced in 2004 some reduction of fertility—the main source of population growth—and that world population was increasing at a declining rate. Between 1994 and 2004, the average annual growth rate was 1.3 per cent, with the less developed regions growing more rapidly than the more developed regions (at annual rates of 1.6 per cent and 0.3 per cent, respectively), and the least developed countries at an even faster pace (2.4 per cent per year). By 2015, the world population was projected to reach 7.2 billion at an annual average growth rate of 1.1 per cent. During the 2004–2015 period, 104 countries, accounting for 41 per cent of the world population, were expected to exhibit growth rates lower than 1 per cent per year, and 52 countries, accounting for 14 per cent of the total population, were expected to experience growth rates above 2 per cent per year, of which 31 were less developed countries. Six developing countries accounted for about half of the annual population growth: India (21 per cent); China (13 per cent); and Pakistan, Nigeria, Bangladesh and Indonesia (about 4 per cent each). In 2004, the five most populous countries were China (1.3 billion), India (1 billion), the United States (297 million), Indonesia (223 million) and Brazil (181 million).

Population statistics indicated that the distribution of the world population was shifting towards the less developed regions and that rates of growth varied considerably. Africa was the fastest growing region, at a rate of 2.3 per cent annually, followed by Latin America and the Caribbean (1.5 per cent), Asia (1.4 per cent), Oceania (1.4 per cent), North America (1.0 per cent) and Europe (negative 0.02 per cent). The world fertility rate declined from over 3 children per woman in 1990–1995 to 2.7 children in 2000–2005. Among other trends, the report noted an increased world life expectancy, currently 66 years of age; an increased number of international migrants; rising school enrollment at all educational levels and declining illiteracy; increased growth of the older population, at a much faster rate than that of the child population; increased growth of urban agglomerations, with 49 per cent of the world's population living in urban areas; and an increased number of internally displaced persons, the fastest growing group of uprooted persons in the world, largely as a result of environmental degradation, natural disasters, armed conflict and forced resettlement.

In regard to reproductive health issues, the report indicated that contraceptive use among couples had risen, indicating greater access to family planning; awareness of sexually transmitted infections as a threat to public health had increased, but incidences remained high with 340 million new cases worldwide in 1999; the HIV/AIDS epidemic continued to expand throughout the world; and more and more pregnant women sought antenatal care. It was expected that 65 per cent of the world population would achieve the Programme of Action goal of a rate below 50 deaths per 1,000 live births by 2000–2005. A total of 100 countries, representing 47 per cent of the world population in 2003, had met the goal of a life expectancy at birth greater than 70 years.

The report concluded that although much progress had been made in the implementation of the Programme of Action during the decade, it had not been universal, and, based on current trends, many countries might fall short of the agreed goals. Continued efforts to mobilize resources, strengthen institutional capacities and nurture partnerships would be required to achieve them.

Financial resources

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/124 [YUN 1995, p. 1094], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a report [E/CN.9/2004/4], covering ten years, on the flow of financial resources for assisting in the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action. The report examined trends in bilateral, multilateral and foundation/non-governmental assistance for population activities in developing countries from 1994 to 2002, and domestic expenditures reported by developing countries from 1997 to 2001. Although international population assistance rose in 2002 to $3 billion, up from $2.5 billion in 2001, and was expected to increase slightly in 2003, the ICPD goal of reaching $18.5 billion by 2005 appeared unlikely. The consequences of resource shortfalls included increases in unintended pregnancies, abortions, maternal morbidity and mortality and infant and child mortality, as well as the likelihood that ICPD goals would not be met.

International migration and development

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 58/208 [YUN 2003, p. 1087], the Secretary-General, in September [A/59/325], submitted a report on international migration and development, providing an update on activities relating to international migration undertaken by organizations within the UN system and involving UN cooperation with relevant intergovernmental organizations. Those included the International Organization for Migration (IOM) and the Geneva Migration Group (GMG), an informal mechanism for the exchange of information among organizations, established in 2003 by the heads of the International Labour Organization (ILO), IOM, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC). Among 2004 activities were a high-level panel discussion on “International migration and migrants from a social perspective”, held by the Commission for Social Development (10 February, New York); the selection by the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA) of international migration as the special topic for its World Economic and Social Survey, 2004, a publication that provided an annual analysis of the state of the world economy and emerging policy issues; and the first session (1–5 March, Geneva) of the Committee on the Protection of the Rights of Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families (see p. 668), established in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 676] to monitor implementation of the International Convention on those rights [YUN 1990, p. 594]. The report also reviewed Member States’ initiatives to create a multilateral framework of cooperation for improving migration management and proposed action-oriented options of the United Nations for addressing the issue of international migration and development.

The report concluded that the response by the international community to the significant increase in international migration since the 1990s had been swift, and the UN system, in collaboration with relevant institutions and organizations, including IOM and GMG, had addressed a wide array of relevant issues. In addition, a number of government initiatives had given rise to several regional consultative processes, and the work of the United Nations on international migration would benefit from closer ties with those processes, particularly in obtaining inputs that would be useful in preparatory activities for the General Assembly’s high-level dialogue on international migration scheduled for 2006. The findings of the Global Commission on International Migration (GCIM), which met for the first time (Stockholm, Sweden, 26–27 February) and was expected to issue its report in mid-2005, would also benefit from consideration of international migration issues at the United Nations.

Communication. In a letter dated 5 April [A/59/73], El Salvador welcomed the Secretary-General’s initiative in December 2003 to launch GCIM, an independent body comprised of 19 Commissioners which was given the mandate to provide a framework for the formulation of a comprehensive and global response to the issue of international migration. El Salvador expressed its support for the work to be done by the Commission.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/59/485/Add.2], adopted resolution 59/241 without vote [agenda item 87 (b)].

International migration and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development adopted at Cairo, in particular chapter X on international migration, and the key actions for the further implementation of the Programme of Action, set out in the annex to General Assembly resolution S-21/2 of 2 July 1999, in particular section II.C on international migration, as well as the relevant provisions contained in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development, the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women and the outcome documents of the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth special sessions of the General Assembly,

Recalling also its relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, 58/190 of 22 December 2003 and 58/208 of 23 December 2003, in which it decided to devote a high-level dialogue to international migration and development during its sixty-first session, bearing in mind that the purpose of the high-level dialogue is to discuss the multidimensional aspects of international migration and development in order to identify appropriate ways and means to maximize its development benefits and minimize its negative impacts,

Reaffirming the obligations of all States to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms, reaffirming also the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and recalling the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Noting the work undertaken under the International Migration Policy Programme by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the International Organization for Migration and the United Nations Population Fund, in partnership with the International Labour Office, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and other relevant international and regional institutions, with a view to strengthening the capacity of Governments to manage migration flows at the national and regional levels and thus foster greater cooperation among States towards orderly migration,

Noting also the ongoing efforts and recent activities within the United Nations system and the other inter-governmental activities and multilateral initiatives on international migration and development being undertaken, as well as the exchanges of information on the subject,

Recalling the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, which entered into force in July 2003,

Welcoming the adoption of the special theme of the thirty-ninth session of the Commission on Population and Development in 2006, which will be “International migration and development”,

Taking note of the views of the Member States on the question of convening a United Nations conference on international migration, its scope, form and agenda, noting the low number of respondents to the survey of the Secretariat, and in this context inviting the Secretary-General to continue considering the issue,

Acknowledging the important contribution provided by migrants and migration to development as well as the complex interrelationship between migration and development,

Aware of the fact that all countries are impacted by international migration, and hence stressing the crucial importance of dialogue and cooperation so as to better understand the international migration phenomenon, including its gender perspective, and to identify appropriate ways and means to maximize its development benefits and minimize its negative impacts,

Realizing the benefits that international migration can bring to migrants, their families, the receiving societies and their communities of origin and the need for countries of origin, transit and destination to ensure that migrants, including migrant workers, are not subject to exploitation of any kind and the need to ensure that the human rights and dignity of all migrants and their families, in particular of women migrant workers, are respected and protected,

Noting that an overall commitment to multiculturalism helps to provide a context for the effective integration of migrants, preventing and combating discrimination and promoting solidarity and tolerance in receiving societies,

Aware that, among other important factors, both domestic and international, the widening economic and social gap between and among many countries and the marginalization of some countries in the global economy, due in part to the uneven impact of the benefits of globalization and liberalization, have contributed to large flows of people between and among countries and to the intensification of the complex phenomenon of international migration,

Recognizing that countries can be concurrently any combination of origin, transit and/or destination,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Reconfirms that the Secretary-General will report to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session on the organizational details of the 2006 high-level dialogue;
3. Recognizes the important contributions that international and regional efforts, including by the regional commissions, can provide to the high-level dialogue on international migration and development;
4. Invites appropriate regional consultative processes and other major initiatives undertaken by Member States in the field of international migration to contribute to the high-level dialogue;
5. Takes note of the establishment of the Global Commission on International Migration;

6. Calls upon all relevant bodies, agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and other relevant intergovernmental, regional and sub-regional organizations, within their continuing mandated activities, to continue to address the issue of international migration and development, with a view to integrating migration issues, including a gender perspective and cultural diversity, in a more coherent way within the broader context of the implementation of agreed economic and social development goals and respect for all human rights;

7. Encourages Governments of countries of origin, countries of transit and countries of destination to increase cooperation on issues related to migration, and notes with appreciation the numerous meetings and conferences convened relating to migration and development, in particular in the context of regional co-operation;

8. Invites Governments, with the assistance of the international community, where appropriate, to seek to make the option of remaining in one's own country viable for all people, in particular through efforts to achieve sustainable development, leading to a better economic balance between developed and developing countries;

9. Reaffirms the need to adopt policies and undertake measures to reduce the cost of the transfer of migrant remittances to developing countries, and welcomes the efforts of Governments and stakeholders in this regard;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to prepare a comprehensive overview of studies and analyses on the multidimensional aspects of migration and development, including the effects of migration on economic and social development in developed and developing countries, and on the effects of the movements of highly skilled migrant workers and those with advanced education;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

UN Population Fund

2004 activities

In 2004, the international community celebrated a decade of steady progress towards implementation of ICDP goals since the 1994 conference in Cairo, Egypt [YUN 1994, p. 955]. Those goals were linked to the programme priorities of the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA). To mark the anniversary, government and civil society leaders reaffirmed their commitment to the ICPD Programme of Action at such events as the “Commemoration of the tenth anniversary of ICPD” (New York, 14 October), held in accordance with General Assembly decision 58/529, which called for an event during its fifty-ninth session [YUN 2003, p. 1085], and the second International Parliamentarians’ Conference on the Implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action (Strasbourg, France, 18-19 October), following which parliamentarians and ministers from 90 countries issued the Strasbourg Statement of Commitment. Support for ICPD and the UNFPA mandate was also expressed by countries at regional meetings and at the 2004 sessions of the Commission on Population and Development and the General Assembly.

UNFPA published a global survey, Investing in People: National Progress in Implementing the ICPD Programme of Action 1994-2004, which confirmed progress towards ICPD goals. Among its findings, the survey noted that the percentage of couples in the developing world able to choose contraception had increased from 55 to 60 since the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action in 1994; infant mortality rates had dropped from 71 to 61 out of every 1,000 babies born; life expectancy in the developing world had risen from 61 to 63 years of age; and women and men in ever greater numbers had stood up against female genital cutting, rape, gender violence and other human rights violations. The survey identified areas for future action and the major challenge of UNFPA—to secure the political will and funding required to achieve the ICPD and Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51].

Report of Executive Director. As requested by the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)/UNFPA [YUN 2003, p. 1090], the UNFPA Executive Director submitted her report covering 2004 [DP/FPA/2005/7 (Part I & Add.1, Part II)] in a new format, merging various parts of the annual report into a single performance- and results-oriented annual report that reflected the goals and outputs of the multi-year funding framework (MYFF). The report discussed implementation of the 2004-2007 MYFF (see p. 1083), the context in which UNFPA operated, and the strengthening of UNFPA's effectiveness. It described progress towards achieving three goals identified in the MYFF—universal access to reproductive health, the inclusion of population dynamics to promote development, and gender equality (see below).

The implementation of country and sub-regional programmes continued as the Fund's core work during 2004. By programme area, the largest share of resources, 62.8 per cent, went to reproductive health activities; 21.6 per cent to population and development strategies; 9.6 per cent to programme coordination and assistance; and 6.0 per cent to gender equality and the empowerment of women. The highest priority for allocation of assistance, 66.7 per cent, was for Group A countries, which included all the least developed countries (see p. 852). By region, sub-

Saharan Africa accounted for 35.2 per cent of programme assistance; Asia and the Pacific for 29.7 per cent; the Arab States and Europe for 12.9 per cent; and Latin America and the Caribbean for 9.5 per cent; interregional activities accounted for 12.7 per cent.

The Executive Director noted that UNFPA was operating in a changing environment. Many countries had implemented elements of the ICPD Programme of Action and, increasingly, population factors were being integrated into national development frameworks. Efforts were made to strengthen reproductive health policies, promote gender equality, and address reproductive health needs and rights. At the regional and country levels, UNFPA cooperated with other members of the UN country team in joint programmes and increasingly with other partners, bringing to the common agenda key population, reproductive health and rights, and gender equality issues. The March issuance of the United Nations Development Group (UNDG) Guidelines on Joint Programmes resulted in an increased number of UNFPA country offices engaging in joint programmes—activities with a common work plan among two or more UN agencies. Conflict, political crisis and natural disasters continued to affect the work of UNFPA, with new crisis situations emerging in eight countries during 2004, including those affected by the 26 December tsunami in the Indian Ocean (see p. 952). In those situations, UNFPA focused its assistance on ensuring access to reproductive health, prevention of violence against women and girls, and psychological counselling.

The Fund's main publication, State of World Population 2004 [Sales No. E.04.III.H.1], also took stock of achievements and challenges in implementing the ICPD Programme of Action. While noting that many developing countries had made great strides in putting the ICPD recommendations into action, it stated that inadequate resources and persistent gaps in serving the poorest populations were impeding progress, particularly in halting the spread of HIV/AIDS and providing family planning and reproductive health.

In 2004, the level of regular source mobilization for UNFPA reached an all-time high of $331.6 million and a record of 166 donor countries was achieved. Membership in the "million dollar club"—country offices that mobilized over $1 million for country programmes—almost doubled, rising to 17 members.

The Executive Director reported [DP/FPA/2005/7 (Part II)] that UNFPA had provided inputs for the preparation of a number of Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) reports and reviews. Of the seven reports issued by JIU in 2004, five were of interest for UNFPA operations, mostly dealing with administrative issues, and were shared with UNFPA managers for their information and consideration.

On 23 June [E/2004/35 (dec. 2004/23)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board welcomed the 2003 report of the Executive Director [YUN 2003, p. 1089].

By decision 2004/232 of 12 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the reports of the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board on its work during 2003 [E/2003/35] and at its first regular session of 2004 [E/2004/35]. The Council also noted the annual report of the UNFPA Executive Director [E/2004/5-DP/FPA/2004/2], which addressed the implementation of the Secretary-General's reform programme, the provisions of the triennial comprehensive policy review and follow-up to international conferences and the MDGs.

Communication. In a letter of 17 February [A/59/61], Switzerland transmitted the summary of deliberations of the "European Population Forum 2004", a high-level expert meeting (Geneva, 12–14 January) jointly organized by the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) and UNFPA, which focused on the theme "Population Challenges and Policy Responses" and discussed, among other things, newly emerging population challenges.

Reproductive health

UNFPA, as it had done over the previous decade, invested more than two thirds of its financial resources in reproductive health. Appraisal of the ICPD goal of universal access to reproductive health showed varying progress both among countries and among population groups within countries. While the use of modern contraceptive methods was around 54 per cent in developing countries, such methods remained unavailable to large numbers of couples. Adolescent reproductive health emerged as a global concern, and the HIV/AIDS crisis worsened the mortality and morbidity situation in 53 of the most affected countries.

Increased numbers of UNFPA country offices were involved in various national partnerships, working to incorporate reproductive health in poverty reduction strategy paper (PRSP) processes, sector-wide approaches (SWAs) and MDG reporting. An analysis of 60 MDG reports and 29 PRSPs showed increased attention to the issues of reproductive health and gender. However, closer examination of the PRSPs revealed a lack of attention to adolescent sexual and reproductive health, gender-based violence and emergency obstetric care, a key strategy for averting maternal deaths. Among other signs of progress, 14 countries approved policies to increase adolescents' access to services and 87 countries reported a legal minimum age for marriage, viewed as a means to reduce maternal mortality as young women were statistically at a higher risk of dying during pregnancy. UNFPA's strategy also focused on addressing family planning and preventing sexually transmitted infections (STIs), including HIV/AIDS. In its response to the epidemic, the Fund focused on the prevention of HIV infection among young people, the prevention of infection in pregnant women, and comprehensive condom programming, including advocating for increased condom use by sexually active young people. UNFPA also joined an existing partnership to work on the television company MTV's "Staying Alive Campaign", the largest global HIV/AIDS awareness-and-prevention campaign for young people. (For further information on UNFPA's activities on HIV/AIDS, see Chapter XIII of this section.)

Population development and poverty

The UNFPA Executive Director, in her report covering 2004 [DP/FPA/2005/7 (part I)], stated that attempts to reduce poverty by addressing interactions between population dynamics, sustainable development and poverty had made only modest progress since 1990. The gap between rich and poor nations remained unacceptably wide.

In 2004, a number of countries in Africa, Asia and Latin America were at various stages of implementing population and housing censuses. As it had determined that the availability of relevant data was vital for planning poverty reduction strategies, UNFPA provided assistance for conducting censuses and for planning, mobilizing resources, analysing the data and disseminating the results in at least 13 countries. The number of country offices reporting national sex-disaggregated population-related databases rose from 50 in 2002 to 74 in 2004, with another 15 developing them. UNFPA intensified its advocacy efforts for incorporating population dimensions into national development plans, including PRSPs, and 43 country offices reported undertaking interventions to make population and poverty linkages. The Fund also continued to support the formulation, operationalization and implementation of national population policies.

Gender equality and empowerment of women

The UNFPA Executive Director stated that there had been notable progress in the last decade in female education, literacy and participation in civic life, in many countries and regions, but discrimination remained high in certain regions and countries, or in pockets of poverty or social marginalization within countries. In 2004,

UNFPA offices in 56 countries reported the existence of mechanisms to monitor and reduce gender-based violence, and 55 country offices reported the existence of protocols for managing the health consequences of gender-based violence, as compared to 19 offices in 2002. Civil society became more involved in promoting gender equality and the empowerment of women, with a diversity of movements, alliances, coalitions, networks and multisectoral committees functioning in over 80 per cent of the countries where UNFPA had programmes. Many UNFPA country offices reported significant involvement in supporting efforts to eliminate discrimination against women and girls, particularly through training and building the capacity of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) for advocacy.

Country and intercountry programmes

In January, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board considered the proposed UNFPA intercountry programme for 2004-2007 [DP/FPA/2004/3], which was designed to help countries to implement the ICPD Programme of Action. The programme was consistent with the goals of the MYFF and was aligned with the new strategic direction of UNFPA that emerged from the Fund's transition process, and focused on three programme areas—reproductive health, population and development strategies, and gender. The objective of the programme was to strengthen policy dialogue, development frameworks and programming processes in population.

On 30 January [E/2004/35 (dec. 2004/8)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board approved the proposed 2004-2007 intercountry programme, in the amount of $226 million, and requested UNFPA to develop a results-based management system for planning, monitoring and evaluating the programme. On the same date [dec. 2004/12], the Board took note of the review of the UNFPA intercountry programme for 2000-2003 [DP/FPA/2004/3/Add.1].

Report of Executive Director. UNFPA's provisional project expenditures for country and intercountry (regional and interregional) programmes in 2004 totalled $221.9 million, compared to $176.4 million in 2003, according to the Executive Director's statistical overview report [DP/FPA/2005/7 (Part I, Add.1)]. The 2004 figure included $181.6 million for country programmes and $40.3 million for intercountry programmes. Costs for administrative and operational services amounting to $6.4 million were included in programme expenditures. In accordance with the Board's procedure for allocating resources according to its categorization of countries laid down in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 989], total expenditures in 2004 for Group A countries (see p. 1079) amounted to $121.1 million, compared to $92.1 million in 2003.

Africa. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in sub-Saharan Africa totalled $78.1 million in 2004, compared to $63.5 million in 2003. Most of that amount (54.7 per cent) went to reproductive health and family planning, followed by population and development strategies (30.6 per cent), programme coordination and assistance (8.8 per cent) and gender equality and women's empowerment (5.9 per cent).

On 30 January [E/2004/35 (dec. 2004/12)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board approved UNFPA country programmes for Benin, the Republic of the Congo, Kenya, the Central African Republic, the Niger and Sierra Leone. On 23 June [dec. 2004/25], the Board took note of the draft country programme documents for Angola, Burundi and Madagascar, and approved a two-year extension of the fourth country programme for Zimbabwe [DP/FPA/2004/13].

Arab States and Europe. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in the Arab States and Europe totalled $28.7 million in 2004, compared to $23 million in 2003. Most (64.8 per cent) was spent on reproductive health and family planning, followed by population and development strategies (18.8 per cent), programme assistance (11 per cent) and gender equality and women's empowerment (5.5 per cent). On 23 June [dec. 2004/25], the Board took note of the draft country programmes for Armenia, Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Romania, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan.

Asia and the Pacific. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in Asia and the Pacific amounted to $65.9 million in 2004, compared to $53.3 million in 2003. Most of those expenditures (69.2 per cent) went to reproductive health, followed by population and development strategies (18.6 per cent), programme coordination and assistance (7.3 per cent) and gender equality and women's empowerment (4.9 per cent).

On 30 January [dec. 2004/12], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board approved UNFPA country programmes for Afghanistan and Pakistan. On 23 June [dec. 2004/25], the Board took note of the draft country programme documents for Iran and the Philippines, and took note of the report on the implementation of UNFPA's special programme of assistance to Myanmar [DP/FPA/2004/11].

Latin America and the Caribbean. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in Latin America and the Caribbean totalled $21.1 million in 2004, compared to $13.5 million in 2003. As in the other regions, most of the total (52.4 per cent) went to reproductive health and family planning, followed by population and development strategies (22.8 per cent), gender equality and women's empowerment (13.7 per cent) and programme coordination and assistance (11.1 per cent).

On 30 January [dec. 2004/12], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board approved country programmes for Cuba and Ecuador.

Interregional programmes. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA's interregional and global programmes totalled $28.1 million in 2004, compared to $23.2 million in 2003. Of that total, 76.0 per cent went to reproductive health and family planning, 14.7 per cent to programme coordination and assistance, 5.2 per cent to population and development strategies and 4.0 per cent to gender equality and women's empowerment.

Financial and management questions

Financing

UNFPA's income from all sources totalled $506.1 million in 2004, compared to $397.9 million in 2003 [DP/FPA/2005/7 (Part I, Add.1)], and comprised $331.6 million in regular resources and $174.5 million from other resources. Expenditures totalled $451.5 million in 2004, up from $380 million in 2003, comprising $318.6 million from regular resources and $132.9 million from other resources, resulting in an excess of $54.6 million.

Contributions to regular resources from donor Governments and a private contribution from the Mars Trust totalled $322.5 million in 2004, an increase of 11.8 per cent over 2003. Interest and other income brought the total of regular resources to $331.6 million. Contributions to trust funds, cost-sharing arrangements and other sources totalled $171.4 million, and interest income another $3.1 million.

On 21 September [E/2004/35 (dec. 2004/26)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took note of the 2003 UNFPA financial review [YUN 2003, p. 1091] and recognized the significance of increasing predictability in contributions to regular resources.

Revision of financial regulations and recovery of indirect costs

In November [DP/FPA/2005/3], the Executive Director submitted a report on the revision of UNFPA financial regulations. The revisions, which reflected the introduction of the MYFF and UN simplification and harmonization initiatives, were the result of a review of financial regulations necessitated by the January introduction of the PeopleSoft financial system (known as Atlas). The report proposed new regulations to permit electronic signatures, approvals and authorizations in lieu of signed paper copies.

In another November report [DP/FPA/2005/5] on recovery of indirect costs for co-financing, the Executive Director proposed revisions to the recovery policy for indirect costs, by which the existing structure of multiple rates would be replaced with a single rate of 7 per cent charged to all non-core expenditures. The report proposed confirmation of the rate of 5 per cent for third-party procurement expenditures.

ACABQ report. In December [DP/FPA/2005/4], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) considered the November reports of the UNFPA Executive Director (see above). It noted that the revisions of the financial regulations included the replacement of the "certifying" function by the "committing" function, establishing the approval to spend against a budget source; the replacement of the "approving" function by the "verifying" function, ensuring controls were in place before disbursing of funds; and the replacement of the "allocation" concept by the "budget" concept, used to control expenditures. Also, as authority had been delegated to UNFPA on managerial, financial and staff issues [YUN 2003, p. 1093], references to the UNDP Administrator had been removed from the regulations. ACABQ recommended that the Executive Board approve the revisions to the regulations and the proposed new regulations.

In regard to the Executive Director's proposals on the recovery of indirect costs for co-financing, ACABQ noted that the basis for the review included the JIU recommendation that all organizations of the UN system review their indirect cost rates in order to harmonize whenever possible. The Committee further noted that in reviewing the cost-recovery rates, UNFPA examined the rates for the reimbursement of third party procurement services, calculated at 5 per cent of the value of goods procured, and confirmed its appropriateness. The Committee agreed that the rate of 7 per cent—proposed to be the one rate to be used to recover indirect costs for co-financed activities—was reasonable, and that the UNFPA Executive Director should be allowed to keep the indirect cost-recovery rate under review and propose amendments to avoid cross-subsidization, if necessary.

Audit reports

The Executive Director submitted to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board a report [DP/FPA/2004/1] on follow-up action by UNFPA to recommendations by the Board of Auditors for the 2000-2001 biennium [YUN 2002, p. 1093]. On 30 January [E/2004/35 (dec. 2004/4)], the Executive Board took note of the report.

In a March report [DP/FPA/2004/6], the Executive Director described UNFPA's internal audit and oversight activities carried out in 2003, including management audits of 16 country offices and one functional area at Headquarters; follow-up on the implementation of previous audit recommendations concerning two divisions at Headquarters; and contracted audits of nine country offices. In addition, 473 audit reports covering 2002 activities for projects executed by government and NGOs were reviewed. Of the 23 reports issued in 2003, the level of internal controls and the compliance with financial and administrative requirements were found to be satisfactory in seven offices. Eleven offices were rated partially satisfactory and four deficient. One report did not include a rating. The report also summarized the activities of the three new organizational committees, established to improve oversight and accountability: the Oversight Committee; the Management Committee; and the Programme Committee.

On 18 June [E/2004/35 (dec. 2004/17)], the Executive Board urged the Executive Director to take the necessary steps to address the issues contained in the report on internal audit and oversight and to report to the Board in 2005. On 24 September [ibid., dec. 2004/39], the Board welcomed the proposed framework for future reports, as proposed in an August report on a framework for resolution of issues contained in internal audit reports [DP/2004/CRP.8-DP/FPA/2004/CRP.5].

Multi-year funding commitments

In May [DP/FPA/2004/10], the Executive Director submitted to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board updated estimates of regular and other resources for 2004 and future years, in the multi-year funding framework (MYFF). As at 1 April, 60 countries had submitted written pledges to UNFPA for 2004, of which only 19 were multi-year pledges.

In 2003, UNFPA received regular contributions from a record 149 donor Governments. Total contributions received from donor Governments in 2003 amounted to $293 million, of which 16 major donors provided approximately 96 per cent. It was estimated that 17 major donors would account for approximately 97 per cent of total contributions of $322 million in 2004. Discussions were ongoing with donors to increase their regular contributions in order to broaden the base of support of the Fund's regular resources.

The report concluded that the Fund's 2003 income level increased substantially in comparison to 2002 due to the larger contributions from five major donors (Canada, Finland, Ireland, Norway and Sweden) and favourable exchange rates of the euro and other currencies against the US dollar. As resource requirements for regular resources for 2004-2007 amounted to $1.2 billion and UNFPA's regular resources would need to exceed $300 million annually, it stressed that UNFPA should focus its resource mobilization efforts on increasing regular resources. UNFPA urged countries to increase their contributions and make timely payment of pledges to ensure a more predictable cash flow and stable income base.

On 23 June [E/2004/35 (dec. 2004/24)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, taking note of the report, encouraged countries to commit to multi-year pledges and make early payments, and encouraged UNFPA to reduce its dependency on a few large donors and broaden its donor base.

Assessment of the 2004-2007 MYFF

At its January session, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board had before it the UNFPA Executive Director's report [DP/FPA/2004/4] on the Fund's second multi-year funding framework (MYFF), covering 2004-2007. The report provided background information on the MYFF as the Fund's medium-term strategic plan, lessons learned implementing the first MYFF, and the process used to develop the second MYFF. It described the two major components: the strategic results framework (SRF) that outlined the MYFF development goals, outcomes, indicators and strategies; and the integrated resources framework (IRF) that set out resource requirements for 2004-2007. The report also outlined how the Fund would monitor its progress in managing for results, and how it would report on results.

On 30 January [E/2004/35 (dec. 2004/7)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board endorsed the proposed 2004-2007 MYFF and welcomed the report's focus on the three results areas of reproductive health, population and development, and gender as key requirements for poverty eradication. It affirmed that the MYFF was to serve as the main policy document of UNFPA, as well as a strategic resource and management tool. Approving the proposed IRF, the Board urged countries to make multi-year pledges. It requested the Executive Director to explore options for reporting on results in a harmonized manner. On 18 June [ibid., dec. 2004/20], the Board adopted the joint UNDP/UNFPA/United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) proposal for harmonized reporting on results under the MYFF process.

Report of Executive Director. In her report on implementation of the 2004-2007 MYFF [DP/FPA/2005/7 (Part I)], the UNFPA Executive Director indicated an overall positive assessment of UNFPA's contribution to achieve MYFF results. The Fund had been engaged in policy work and had strengthened partnerships with Governments, UN agencies, donors and civil society organizations. UNFPA country offices had increasingly participated in poverty reduction strategy paper (PRSPs) processes and sector-wide approaches (SWAps) to incorporate reproductive health and gender issues. However, obtaining updated data for most of the quantitative goal and outcome indicators had been a challenge. Due to issues of attribution and aggregation, the contributions of UNFPA and other partners and the results obtained from countries could not be combined to provide a meaningful measure of overall progress. Lack of up-to-date and comparable data had also limited the discussion of progress on indicators. To improve the Fund's capacity to track and report on results, UNFPA revised its annual reporting mechanisms and established an MYFF impact tracking system (i-track) to allow country office annual reporting to be done online.

In 2004, country offices aimed to achieve 557 outputs in different programme areas, with 60 per cent in reproductive health, 29 per cent in population and development and 11 per cent in gender equality and women's empowerment. Other progress included implementation of a new performance appraisal and development system; development of a website or web pages by 55 per cent of country offices in programme countries; implementation of a country office typology piloted in 2003; the launching of "DocuShare", a UNFPA electronic document and publication repository; development of a reproductive health website; and the launching of an electronic financial and resources system to improve the Fund's accountability. To assess progress in managing for results, UNFPA identified 11 lead indicators that reflected five key managing-for-results dimensions presented in the 2004-2007 MYFF. The report also presented the 2004 baselines for those indicators.

Programming process

In response to a 2001 Executive Board decision [YUN 2001, p. 1000], the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director submitted an April report [DP/2004/29-DP/FPA/2004/7] on progress in implementing decision 2001/11 on the UNDP/UNFPA programming process (see p. 884). On 18 June [E/2004/35 (dec. 2004/18)], the Executive Board requested UNDP and UNFPA to determine how to address the issue of the increased time frame for developing country programmes in a harmonized way and to report back to the Executive Board in 2005. On the same date [ibid., dec. 2004/19], the Board took note of the report on UNDP/UNFPA experiences in joint programming [DP/2004/30-DP/FPA/2004/8] and deferred consideration of a decision to 2005.

Evaluation

In an April report [DP/FPA/2004/12], the Executive Director provided an overview of UNFPA's evaluation activities, including progress during the 2002-2003 biennium in conducting and using the results of evaluations and evaluative activities, and in institutionalizing evaluation recommendations. It also described initiatives taken to establish results-based planning, monitoring and evaluation systems and to develop related national capacities.

On 23 June [E/2004/35 (dec. 2004/25)], the Executive Board took note of the periodic report on evaluation.

Technical Advisory Programme

In response to a 2002 Executive Board request [YUN 2002, p. 1083], the Executive Director submitted in August [DP/FPA/2004/16] a mid-term review of the UNFPA Technical Advisory Programme (TAP), an inter-agency arrangement for providing UNFPA assistance to countries for population and development activities. TAP constituted the UNFPA strategy to increase the efficiency, effectiveness and impact of its technical support in reproductive health, population and development, and gender empowerment, and was composed of nine multi-disciplinary Country Technical Services Teams (CSTs).

The report indicated that despite the brief period of operation in 2003 and 2004 of the new TAP programme, it was clear that the system was changing in the intended direction and that the CSTs were moving away from demand-driven and project-oriented technical support towards more strategic mission and non-mission support focused on capacity-building, regional and institutional-level analyses, and policy dialogue. Progress was also made towards implementation of the strategic partnerships programme, which represented a departure from past inter-agency arrangements, and the implementation by the World Health Organization (WHO) of a project on family planning, sexually transmitted infections and safe motherhood. However, the changeover had not been complete. The report summarized actions taken to address the issues raised in the midterm review, including the establishment of a working group to review the work planning process and make recommendations to modify current practices; adoption of a two-year timetable for programmable and time-bound activities in order to expand participation of the CSTs in key exercises; and the revision of previously defined parameters to standardize the operational definition of strategic support.

On 23 September [E/2004/35 (dec. 2004/28)], the Executive Board took note of the report and requested UNFPA to provide a further review in 2005 of the impact of the TAP programme against strategic goals as contained in the MYFF.

Security of personnel

The Executive Director submitted in July [DP/FPA/2004/14] a proposal to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board on additional security requirements to safeguard UNFPA personnel and premises globally. Citing the attack on the UN office in Baghdad, Iraq, in August 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 346], the Executive Director stated that the security threat levels for UN operations worldwide had significantly increased. Consequently, she requested that the Executive Board grant her authority to access up to 4 per cent of the approved gross 2004-2005 regular biennial support budget in additional funding, i.e., a maximum of $6.8 million for additional protective measures, including: relocating UNFPA country offices to safer premises; enforcing compliance with the enhanced minimum operating security standards (MOSS); increasing the number of field security officers; meeting the increased malicious acts insurance policy premium and other insurance requirements; and establishing a security structure with four security advisers.

ACABQ consideration. In September [DP/FPA/2004/17], ACABQ considered the Executive Director's request. The Committee indicated that such requests should not be based on a piecemeal approach, but preceded by a comprehensive and complete review of security arrangements. It endorsed all the measures proposed in the report, except the establishment of a basic security structure, which the Committee advised should await the submission of a comprehensive review of security arrangements to be submitted by the Secretary-General (see p. 1478) and any relevant decision by the General Assembly.

On 22 September [E/2004/35 (dec. 2004/27)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board endorsed the Executive Director's proposal to grant her authority to access up to a maximum of $6.8 million and noted that the amount would be recorded as a reserve, disclosed in the financial statement and reported to the Board in the annual financial review. The Board took note [ibid., dec. 2004/41] of the ACABQ report.

UN Population award

The 2004 United Nations Population Award was presented to John C. Caldwell (Australia), Professor Emeritus of Demography of the Australian National University, in the individual category, and to the Addis Ababa Fistula Hospital in the institutional category. Professor Caldwell was selected for his significant contributions to demographic research, including demographic transition theory, the study of culture and mortality decline, family formation, sexual networking and the spread of HIV/AIDS; anthropological and qualitative approaches to demographic techniques of analysis; and the interaction of culture, managerial practice and family planning programme success. The Addis Ababa Fistula Hospital was selected for its achievements in providing services for women suffering from childbirth and related injuries and in offering a holistic package of rehabilitation services with the objective of reintegrating patients into society in a dignified manner.

The Award was established by General Assembly resolution 36/201 [YUN 1981, p. 792], to be presented annually to individuals or institutions for outstanding contributions to increasing awareness of population problems and to their solutions. In July, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the report of the UNFPA Executive Director on the Population Award [A/59/160].

Commission on Population and Development

The Commission on Population and Development, at its thirty-seventh session (New York, 22-26 March and 6 May) [E/2004/25], considered as its special theme "Review and appraisal of the progress made in achieving the goals and objectives of the Programme of Action of the ICPD", which was discussed in the context of the follow-up to the 1994 ICPD (see p. 1075). Documents before the Commission included the Secretary-General's report reviewing progress in achieving ICPD goals [E/CN.9/2004/3] (see p. 1075); the report of the Commission's Bureau on its intersessional meeting (Vilnius, Lithuania, November 2003) [E/CN.9/2004/2] [YUN 2003, p. 1094]; the Secretary-General's report on the flow of financial resources for implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action [E/CN.9/2004/4] (see p. 1076); the Secretary-General's report on programme implementation and progress of work in the field of population in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1094] and the Secretary-General's note on the proposed strategic framework for 2006-2007 [E/CN.9/2004/6].

The Commission adopted and brought to the Economic and Social Council's attention resolutions on the work programme in the field of population [E/2004/25 (res. 2004/1)] and on follow-up to the ICPD Programme of Action [res. 2004/2]. The Commission also reaffirmed that the special theme for its thirty-eighth (2005) session would be "Population, development and HIV/AIDS, with particular emphasis on poverty" [dec. 2004/1]; decided to consider its methods of work at its 2005 session [dec. 2004/2]; and took note of the documents it had considered [dec. 2004/3]. It also decided that the special theme for its thirty-ninth (2006) session would be "International migration and development".

By decision 2004/237 of 20 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's report on its thirty-seventh session and approved the provisional agenda for its thirty-eighth (2005) session.

In preparation for the thirty-eighth session, the Commission's Bureau held an intersessional meeting (Lima, Peru, 16-19 October) [E/CN.9/2005/2].

2004 UN activities

In a report on programme implementation and progress of work of the UN Population Division in 2004 [E/CN.9/2005/9], the Secretary-General described the Division's activities dealing with the analysis of fertility, mortality and migration; world population estimates and projections; population policies and population ageing; population and development; monitoring, coordination and dissemination of population information; and technical cooperation in population.

The Division's work in fertility and family planning analysis included the issuance of a wallchart entitled World Fertility Pattern 2004, which presented data on selected fertility indicators. According to the data, the number of countries with total fertility below replacement level increased fourfold between 1970 and 2000, with fertility levels below replacement in all developed countries, and the fertility decline accompanied by shifts in the timing of childbearing. In most developing countries, the mean age at childbearing declined as the fertility of older women fell, and in developed countries, the mean age at childbearing was rising as women postponed the beginning of childbearing. The Division also issued a CD-ROM entitled "World Contraceptive Use 2003", and undertook a study on the prevalence of childlessness among women nearing the end of the reproductive lifespan.

On mortality and health, the Population Division developed a database and issued a CD-ROM containing key mortality indicators for two periods—the early 1970s and the most recent period for each country, according to data availability. The Division also prepared a report of the Workshop on HIV/AIDS and Adult Mortality in Developing Countries, held in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1094], which combined a technical meeting and a training activity for African officials working in the area of HIV/AIDS.

In the area of international migration, the Population Division organized the Third Coordination Meeting on International Migration (New York, 27-28 October), which focused on issues that might be considered by the High-Level Dialogue on International Migration and Development, scheduled by the General Assembly for 2006. Participants exchanged information on recent activities of their organizations in the area of international migration and development. In addition to the issuance of a database, Trends in Total Migrant Stock: The 2003 Revision, and its contribution to part two of the World Economic and Social Survey, 2004, published by DESA, the Population Division prepared and submitted to the General Assembly the Secretary-General's report on international migration and development (see p. 1076).

With regard to population projections, the Division issued the third and final volume of the 2002 revision of its biennial World Population Prospects, entitled Analytical Report. That volume analysed the results of the demographic estimates and projections for 228 countries and provided a view on demographic trends between 1950 and 2050. It predicted that the world population would grow from 6.1 billion in 2000 to 8.9 billion in 2050, with the population in the less developed regions rising at six times the rate of the developed regions (0.25 per cent annually). The Division published the results of the 2003 revision of world urbanization prospects [YUN 2003, p. 1095], in a publication and a CD-ROM, and made them available on the Division's website (www.unpopulation.org). The final report of the Division's new set of long-range projections, World Population to 2300, was also issued and made available online.

In the area of population policies, the Division published World Population Policies, 2003, which revealed that the most significant demographic concern of Governments was HIV/AIDS. Other concerns included low fertility and population ageing, in developed countries; and rapid population growth and infant, child and maternal mortality in developing countries. Evaluation and analysis of the United Nations Ninth Inquiry among Governments on Population and Development were under way. Responses had been received from some 80 countries representing 80 per cent of the world population and the results of the quinquennial Inquiry would be incorporated into World Population Policies, 2005.

Population ageing was another area of research. The Division's study on living arrangements of older persons around the world was due to appear in 2005. Based on census and survey data from more than 130 countries, the study provided comparative analysis of patterns and trends of the living arrangements of people aged 60 years or over. It showed that the majority of older persons in developed countries lived alone or with a spouse only, while in most developing countries, a large majority lived with children or other relatives. A new wallchart, Population Ageing 2005, was prepared for publication, which showed numbers of the older population, proportions currently married, living alone and in the labour force, the sex ratio of those aged 60 and over and aged 80 or older, and life expectancy at age 60 for men and women.

The Division issued the report entitled The Impact of AIDS and finalized the fourth version of the database on Population, Resources, Environment and Development. During the year, it prepared the latest edition of its annual monitoring report, which focused on population, development and HIV/AIDS, and continued to expand and update its website and to develop the Population Information Network (POPIN), a major channel for information dissemination. The Division's automatic e-mail announcement service, established in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1095], had over 1,000 subscribers in 2004, and the Division continued to produce and distribute a software package for demographic estimation.

Internal oversight

In conformity with General Assembly resolution 54/244 [YUN 1999, p. 1274], the Secretary-General transmitted an April report [E/AC.51/2004/5] of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the triennial review of the implementation of the recommendations made by the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) on the in-depth evaluation of the population programme. The review concluded that there had been significant progress towards implementing the CPC recommendations [YUN 2001, p. 1328], including the dissemination of information through the Internet, improvements in the design and navigation of the POPIN website, the discussion in its reports of the Division's technical procedures and methods, and consolidation of population activities into larger social and development subprogrammes. However, the report also indicated that there had been a decline in basic research and data collection in regional population data, and it stressed the need for financial support to the UN population research agenda.

Chapter IX

Social policy, crime prevention and human resources development

In 2004, the United Nations continued to promote social, cultural and human resources development, and to strengthen its crime prevention and criminal justice programme.

The Commission for Social Development considered as its priority theme improving public sector effectiveness, and adopted agreed conclusions on that topic. Preparations continued for the ten-year review by the Commission in 2005 of the 1995 World Summit for Social Development and the five-year review of the General Assembly's twenty-fourth (2000) special session. The Assembly endorsed the conclusions of the World Commission on the Social Dimension of Globalization, entitled A Fair Globalization: Creating Opportunities For All, which called for a people-centred globalization process. The Assembly stressed the importance of supporting the efforts of developing countries to achieve economic growth, sustainable development, poverty reduction and the strengthening of their democratic systems.

In December, the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family was observed at UN Headquarters. Also observed during the year were the second World Day for Cultural Diversity for Dialogue and Development in May and the Olympic Truce during the twenty-eighth Olympic Games in August.

On the issue of persons with disabilities, work continued by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Comprehensive and Integral International Convention on the Protection and Promotion of the Rights and Dignity of Persons with Disabilities, while consideration by the Assembly of the proposed supplement to the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities was postponed until its sixty-first (2006) session. Also during the year, efforts to promote religious and cultural understanding continued under the guidance of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and preparations were made to usher in the International Year of Sport and Physical Education and the International Year of Physics in 2005.

In the area of crime prevention, the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice considered crimes against cultural property, preparations for the Eleventh United Nations Congress on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, the rule of law, implementation of technical assistance projects in Africa, strengthening the technical cooperation capacity of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, promoting the implementation of the universal conventions and protocols related to terrorism, corruption, transnational organized crime, kidnapping, trafficking in human organs, money laundering, fraud, urban crime, UN norms and standards in crime prevention, the second World Summit of Attorneys General and General Prosecutors, and the Commission's functioning.

The Secretary-General reported on activities undertaken to implement the International Plan of Action for the United Nations Literacy Decade (2003-2012). Concerned about meeting the goals of the Decade, the Assembly appealed to Governments to mobilize enough resources to achieve those goals and called for increased investments in education. The Secretary-General also reported on the work of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and the United Nations University.

Social policy and cultural issues

Social development

Follow-up to the 1995 World Summit and to the General Assembly special session

In response to General Assembly resolution 58/130 [YUN 2003, p. 1097], the Secretary-General submitted a June report [A/59/120] on the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action adopted at the 1995 World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113] and of the further initiatives for social development adopted by the Assembly's twenty-fourth (2000) special session [YUN 2000, p. 1012]. The report discussed, in preparation for the ten-year review of the Summit and review of the Assembly's special session, the various priority themes considered by the Commission for Social Development from 1996 to 2004, a list of which was annexed to the report. It also analysed the agreed conclusions adopted by the Commission on those themes in 2002, 2003 and 2004 and selected issues which appeared to be of particular importance ten years later.

According to the report, although the Summit emphasized the placing of people at the centre of development efforts, a people-centred approach to national and international public affairs remained too much of an abstract concept. Progress towards achieving the main goals of the Summit—reduction of poverty and elimination of extreme poverty, full employment and integration in stable, safe and just societies—was at best uneven. Achieving social development continued to be characterized by a gap between intentions and actions, and between proclaimed objectives and the actual orientation of national and international affairs. While the acute problems of society, such as extreme poverty and insecurity, were receiving increased attention, as evidenced by the visibility of the Millennium Development Goals [YUN 2000, p. 51], their means of implementation left much to be desired, including that of resources. Three issues selected from the work of the Commission on follow-up to the Summit appeared to be of general relevance for countries—the social aspects of globalization, the compatibility and contribution of macroeconomic policies with and to social development goals and the capacity of national Governments to define and implement their own social policies—which were at the core of the search for equity and the reduction of poverty and inequality. The Secretary-General proposed that the Assembly recommend that, in the context of the ten-year review to take place in 2005, particular attention be given to the principle of a people-centred approach and its realization in public policies and development strategies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/59/491], adopted resolution 59/146 without vote [agenda item 93].

Implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Recalling the World Summit for Social Development, held at Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995, and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, entitled “World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world”, held at Geneva from 26 June to 1 July 2000,

Reaffirming that the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action and the further initiatives for social development adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-fourth special session constitute the basic framework for the promotion of social development for all at the national and international levels,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the development goals contained therein, as well as the commitments made at major United Nations summits, conferences and special sessions,

Considering that, despite the efforts made and the progress achieved in some areas of economic and social development, vast sectors of our societies, in particular in developing countries, especially the least developed countries, are still facing serious challenges, including financial crises, insecurity, poverty, exclusion and inequality in income growth and distribution, education and health, as well as environmental degradation,

Recalling the commitment to promote national and global economic systems based on the principles of justice, equity, democracy, participation, transparency, accountability and inclusion,

Recalling also its resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003 on the integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Welcomes the contribution of the Commission for Social Development in the follow-up to and review of the further implementation of the commitments made at the World Summit for Social Development and the further initiatives agreed upon at the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, reaffirms that the Commission will continue to have the primary responsibility in this regard, and encourages Governments, the relevant specialized agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and civil society to enhance their support to its work;

3. Underlines the significance of the forty-third session of the Commission for Social Development, which will mark the tenth anniversary of the World Summit for Social Development and at which the Commission will undertake a review of the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action and the outcome of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, and recommends that the Commission reflect the outcome of its review, on an exceptional basis, in a short declaration to be elaborated during its forty-third session, reaffirming the agreed commitments and the need for continued implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and of the twenty-fourth special session;

4. Welcomes the decision by the Economic and Social Council, in its resolution 2004/58 of 23 July 2004, that the Commission for Social Development at its forty-third session should convene high-level plenary meetings, open to the participation of all States Members of the United Nations and observers, on the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration and the Programme of Action and the outcome of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, and also welcomes the request of the Council to the Chairman of the Commission at its forty-third session to transmit the outcome, through the Council, to the Assembly at its sixtieth session, including to the high-level event of the Assembly on the review of the United Nations Millennium Declaration in 2005;

5. Recommends that the Commission for Social Development, at its forty-third session and in undertaking the review of the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration and the Programme of Action and the outcome of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, give particular attention to the people-centred approach and to its concrete implementation, as set out in the Copenhagen Declaration and the Programme of Action and the outcome of the twenty-fourth special session, and that it emphasize the sharing of experiences and good practices in overcoming challenges to the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration and the Programme of Action and the outcome of the twenty-fourth special session;

6. Reaffirms that the aim of social integration is to create a society for all, in which every individual, each with rights and responsibilities, has an active role to play, and that such an inclusive society must be based on respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms, cultural and religious diversity, social justice and the special needs of vulnerable and disadvantaged groups, democratic participation and the rule of law;

7. Recognizes the need to promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in order to address the most pressing social needs of people living in poverty, including through the design and development of appropriate mechanisms to strengthen and consolidate democratic institutions and governance;

8. Reaffirms the commitment to gender equality and to strengthening policies and programmes that improve, ensure and broaden the full participation of women in all spheres of political, economic, social and cultural life, as equal partners, and to improving their access to all resources needed for the full exercise of all their human rights and fundamental freedoms by removing persistent barriers;

9. Stresses the vital importance of achieving social development for all and of integrating social development objectives, as set out in the Copenhagen Declaration and the Programme of Action and in the further initiatives for social development, into economic policy-making, including into policies that influence domestic and global market forces and the global economy;

10. Recognizes that globalization and interdependence are opening new opportunities through trade, investment and capital flows and advances in technology, including information technology, for the growth of the world economy and the development and improvement of living standards around the world, while at the same time there remain serious challenges, including serious financial crises, insecurity, poverty, exclusion and inequality within and among societies and considerable obstacles to further integration and full participation in the global economy for developing countries, and that unless the benefits of social and economic development are extended to all countries, a growing number of people in all countries and even entire regions will remain marginalized from the global economy, and in this regard reiterates the need for further action in order to overcome those obstacles affecting peoples and countries and to realize the full potential of opportunities presented for the benefit of all;
