FOREWORD

Addressing UN Member States in late 2003, at the end of a difficult and divisive period for the international community, I expressed my belief that the world had come to a fork in the road. In one direction lay an outdated international security system, ill-equipped to handle the challenges of the twenty-first century; in the other, a renewed commitment to international cooperation, and reformed mechanisms able to address problems without passports.

In 2004, the report of the High-level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change proposed a new conceptualization of collective security for the 21st century. Addressing a broad range of issues from the use of force to global public health, it recommended fundamental changes in our approach and in the UN itself, and generated lively global debate.

But even as a reform blueprint took shape, the world faced extraordinary challenges. International terrorism wreaked havoc, with attacks in Madrid and Beslan proving the most prominent. Renewed volatility in the Middle East, and an armed conflict in the Darfur region of western Sudan, caused immense suffering. Three new peacekeeping missions were established in quick succession—in Burundi, Côte d'Ivoire and Haiti. And at the end of 2004, a tsunami devastated coastal communities in Indonesia, Sri Lanka, India and Thailand, triggering an unprecedented humanitarian operation.

Throughout an eventful year, the United Nations also continued its long-standing mission to help people achieve the Millennium Development Goals and build better lives for themselves and their children. This work encompassed efforts to combat extreme poverty, end hunger, fight human rights abuse, slow the spread of HIV/AIDS, and ease the plight of refugees and displaced persons. Aided by the report of the Panel of Eminent Persons on United Nations-Civil Society Relations, we sought greater engagement with civil society actors in achieving shared goals.

This edition of the Yearbook of the United Nations provides a comprehensive account of the activities undertaken by the United Nations in 2004. It is my hope that it will serve as an important reference tool for all those seeking to learn about our efforts to revitalize our Organization and to create a more peaceful and prosperous world.

About the 2004 edition of the Yearbook

This volume of the YEARBOOK OF THE UNITED NATIONS continues the tradition of providing the most comprehensive coverage of the activities of the United Nations. It is an indispensable reference tool for the research community, diplomats, government officials and the general public seeking readily available information on the UN system and its related organizations.

Efforts by the Department of Public Information to achieve a more timely publication have resulted in having to rely on provisional documentation and other materials to prepare the relevant articles. Largely, Economic and Social Council resolutions and some other texts in the present volume are provisional.

Structure and scope of articles

The Yearbook is subject-oriented and divided into six parts covering political and security questions; human rights issues; economic and social questions; legal questions; institutional, administrative and budgetary questions; and intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations. Chapters and topical headings present summaries of pertinent UN activities, including those of intergovernmental and expert bodies, major reports, Secretariat activities and, in selected cases, the views of States in written communications.

Activities of United Nations bodies. All resolutions, decisions and other major activities of the principal organs and, on a selective basis, those of subsidiary bodies are either reproduced or summarized in the appropriate chapter. The texts of all resolutions and decisions of substantive nature adopted in 2004 by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council are reproduced or summarized under the relevant topic. These texts are preceded by procedural details giving date of adoption, meeting number and vote totals (in favour–against–abstaining) if any; and an indication of their approval by a sessional or subsidiary body prior to final adoption. The texts are followed by details of any recorded or roll-call vote on the resolution/decision as a whole.

Major reports. Most reports of the Secretary-General, in 2004, along with selected reports from other UN sources, such as seminars and working groups, are summarized briefly.

Secretariat activities. The operational activities of the United Nations for development and humanitarian assistance are described under the relevant topics. For major activities financed outside the UN regular budget, selected information is given on contributions and expenditures.

Views of States. Written communications sent to the United Nations by Member States and circulated as documents of the principal organs have been summarized in selected cases, under the relevant topics. Substantive actions by the Security Council have been analysed and brief reviews of the Council's deliberations given, particularly in cases where an issue was taken up but no resolution was adopted.

Related organizations. The Yearbook also briefly describes the 2004 activities of the specialized agencies and other related organizations of the UN system.

Multilateral treaties. Information on signatories and parties to multilateral treaties and conventions is taken from Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General: Status as at 31 December 2004 (ST/LEG/SER.E/24 (vols. I & II)), Sales No. E.05.V.3.

Terminology

Formal titles of bodies, organizational units, conventions, declarations and officials are given in full on first mention in an article or sequence of articles. They are also used in resolution/decision texts, and in the SUBJECT INDEX under the key word of the title. Short titles may be used in subsequent references.

How to find information in the Yearbook

The user may locate information on the United Nations activities contained in this volume by the use of the Table of Contents, the Subject Index, the Index of Resolutions and Decisions and the Index of Security Council presidential statements. The volume also has five appendices: Appendix I comprises a roster of Member States; Appendix II reproduces the Charter of the United Nations, including the Statute of the International Court of Justice; Appendix III gives the structure of the principal organs of the United Nations; Appendix IV provides the agenda for each session of the principal organs in 2004; and Appendix V gives the addresses of the United Nations information centres and services worldwide.

EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS

References in square brackets in each chapter of Parts One to Five of this volume give the symbols of the main documents issued in 2004 on the topic. The following is a guide to the principal document symbols:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly, numbered in separate series by session. Thus, A/59/- refers to documents issued for consideration at the fifty-ninth session, beginning with A/59/1. Documents of special and emergency special sessions are identified as A/S- and A/ES-, followed by the session number.

A/C.- refers to documents of the Assembly's Main Committees, e.g. A/C.1/- is a document of the First Committee, A/C.6/-, a document of the Sixth Committee. A/BUR/- refers to documents of the General Committee. A/AC.- documents are those of the Assembly's ad hoc bodies and A/CN.-, of its commissions; e.g. A/AC.105/- identifies documents of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, A/CN.4/-, of its International Law Commission. Assembly resolutions and decisions since the thirty-first (1976) session have been identified by two arabic numerals; the first indicates the session of adoption; the second, the sequential number in the series. Resolutions are numbered consecutively from 1 at each session. Decisions since the fifty-seventh session are numbered consecutively, from 401 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 501 for all other decisions. Decisions of special and emergency special sessions are numbered consecutively, from 11 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 21 for all other decisions.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council, numbered in separate series by year. Thus, E/2004/- refers to documents issued for consideration by the Council at its 2004 sessions, beginning with E/2004/1. E/AC.-, E/C.- and E/CN.-, followed by identifying numbers, refer to documents of the Council's subsidiary ad hoc bodies, committees and commissions. For example, E/CN.5/- refers to documents of the Council's Commission for Social Development, E/C.2/-, to documents of its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations. E/ICEF/- documents are those of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Symbols for the Council's resolutions and decisions, since 1978, consist of two arabic numerals: the first indicates the year of adoption and the second, the sequential number in the series. There are two series: one for resolutions, beginning with 1 (resolution 2004/1); and one for decisions, beginning with 201 (decision 2004/201).

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council. Its resolutions are identified by consecutive numbers followed by the year of adoption in parentheses, beginning with resolution 1(1946).

ST/-, followed by symbols representing the issuing department or office, refers to documents of the United Nations Secretariat.

Documents of certain bodies bear special symbols, including the following:

CD/-	Conference on Disarmament
CERD/-	Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination
DC/-	Disarmament Commission
DP/-	United Nations Development Programme
HS/-	Commission on Human Settlements
ITC/-	International Trade Centre
TD/-	United Nations Conference on Trade and Development
UNEP/-	United Nations Environment Programme

Many documents of the regional commissions bear special symbols, which are sometimes preceded by the following:

E/ECA/-	Economic Commission for Africa
E/ECE/-	Economic Commission for Europe
E/ECLAC/-	Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean
E/ESCAP/-	Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific
E/ESCWA/-	Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

"L" in a symbol refers to documents of limited distribution, such as draft resolutions; "CONF." to documents of a conference; "INF." to those of general information. Summary records are designated by "SR.", verbatim records by "PV.", each followed by the meeting number.

United Nations sales publications each carry a sales number with the following components separated by periods: a capital letter indicating the language(s) of the publication; two arabic numerals indicating the year; a Roman numeral indicating the subject category; a capital letter indicating a subdivision of the category, if any; and an arabic numeral indicating the number of the publication within the category. Examples: E.04.II.A.2; E/F/R.04.II.E.7; E.04.X.1.

Report of the Secretary-General

Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization

Following is the Secretary-General's report on the work of the Organization [A/59/1], dated 20 August 2004, submitted to the fifty-ninth session of the General Assembly. The Assembly took note of it on 8 October (decision 59/504). On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item would remain for consideration during the resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session (decision 59/552).

Chapter I

Introduction

1. The United Nations has been through an extraordinarily challenging year. The Security Council had to deal with the controversies surrounding the Iraq crisis and the role to be played by the Organization in the aftermath of the war. There was a surge in demand for peacekeeping operations in a number of countries emerging from violent conflicts. International terrorism and the threat of the use of weapons of mass destruction cast a shadow over all the peoples of the world. Simultaneously, the United Nations also faced a surge in infectious disease as well as the ongoing challenges of extreme poverty and hunger, environmental degradation, human rights violations and humanitarian emergencies. It was against this background that I appointed, last November, a High-level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change to examine the threats we faced, evaluate our existing policies, processes and institutions and make bold and practicable recommendations.

2. It is worth recalling that the Charter requires the United Nations to promote conditions of economic and social progress and development, as well as solutions to international economic, health and related problems. For the majority of the world's people, the most immediate threats are those of poverty, hunger, unsafe drinking water, environmental degradation and endemic or infectious diseases. The Organization's important work in those areas focuses on the Millennium Development Goals. The eight Goals include halving poverty and hunger, ensuring universal primary education and reversing the spread of HIV/AIDS and other major diseases, all by 2015.

3. While there have been some successes, progress towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals has been mixed. The Goals can be met only through sound economic and social policies, good governance, mobilization of resources and a true partnership between developed and developing nations.

4. An important new programme in the fight against HIV/AIDS is the "three-by-five initiative" of the World Health Organization and the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS, which aims to provide antiretroviral treatment to 3 million people by the end of 2005. The need is urgent because 6 million people infected with HIV/AIDS in the developing world need access to antiretroviral therapy to survive. The fight against HIV/AIDS requires strong global leadership, effective global partnership and sustained global action.

5. The gap between increasing demand and limited resources becomes even more evident and urgent when it comes to addressing natural disasters, refugee situations and other humanitarian emergencies. The appeals issued by the United Nations are consistently under-funded, with resulting limits on the services provided. Adequate funding of development and humanitarian causes would be a sound investment. It would also be cost-effective, considering the likely returns in terms of peace and security.

6. The critical situation in Africa and the plight of its peoples is a high-priority concern. The armed conflict in Darfur in western Sudan is a grim reminder of the persistence of deadly conflict on the continent. Half of Africa's people live in poverty, and it is the only region where child malnutrition is getting worse, not better. The HIV/AIDS pandemic has claimed the lives of some 15 million Africans, and continues to cause social and economic devastation in the affected societies. Yet I have been encouraged by positive trends and the efforts of African States and institutions in dealing with the challenges of peace and security, economic and social development and human rights. African States played an important role in stabilizing Burundi and Liberia. The newly established Peace and Security Council of the African Union has great potential as an instrument for the prevention, management and resolution of violent conflict. Through the New Partnership for Africa's Development and its Peer Review Mechanism, Africa is showing a renewed commitment to poverty reduction, human rights and good governance.

7. The constructive contributions made by non-State actors in achieving progress on issues such as gender, climate change, debt, landmines and HIV/AIDS should not be underestimated. The challenge today is to enrich the unique inter-governmental character of the United Nations through increased openness to establishing partnerships with global civil society.

8. The demand for United Nations peacekeeping operations increased dramatically during the past year, and new operations were launched in Burundi, Haiti, Liberia and the Sudan. At present, more than 56,000 uniformed personnel and some 11,000 civilian staff from 97 countries are serving in 16 missions around the world. Many of those operations are multi-dimensional, dealing not only with security issues, but also with political problems, the rule of law, human rights, humanitarian concerns and economic reconstruction. The growth in the number of missions reflects the increased demand as well as the continuing importance of peacekeeping in helping to end hostilities and consolidate peace in many countries. At the same time, it places enormous strain on the Organization's resources and its capacity to plan, deploy and manage those operations. Today's operations will not succeed without the sustained political support and commitment of the Member States—and the right resources.

9. The United Nations must of necessity be engaged in the struggle against international terrorism, since effective measures to counter it require broad international cooperation. The Counter-Terrorism Committee of the Security Council, which is central to the Organization's effort, is now to be strengthened by the creation of a Counter-Terrorism Executive Directorate. As we join forces against terrorism, it is imperative that freedom, human rights and the rule of law be upheld and protected.

10. I hope that the momentum gradually building up for the event on the five-year review of the Millennium Declaration in 2005 and the sixtieth anniversary of the United Nations will be sustained and strengthened and will lead to the positive results that our Organization and the world need.

Chapter II

Achieving peace and security

11. Violent internal conflicts continue to engulf millions of civilians around the world, drawing in neighbouring countries and thus posing an even wider threat to international peace and security. Often spurred by the failure of political leaders to provide participatory and accountable governance, such wars can exploit ethnic and religious differences and thrive on economic interests. Participants in such wars often fail to distinguish between combatants, civilians and humanitarian workers. Indeed, civilians have been deliberately attacked, children have been forced to become fighters and aid workers have become strategic targets. The proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and terrorism remain issues of great concern.

12. The United Nations continues to employ a variety of means, including preventive diplomacy, peacemaking, peacekeeping and peace-building, to assist Member States in tackling internal as well as more traditional inter-State conflicts. In the course of the past 12 months all of those means were put to use, from good offices in a number of sensitive disputes to a combination of peacekeeping and peacemaking in the cases of Cyprus and Western Sahara to post-conflict peace-building in Sierra Leone. In addition, the United Nations development agencies continued their efforts to assist Member States in addressing the root causes of conflict and in building their long-term capacity for the peaceful settlement of disputes.

13. The past year again saw an increase in the number of United Nations peace-building and peacekeeping missions, demonstrating the central role of our Organization in the pursuit of international peace and security, but also increasing the strains on our human and material resources.

Conflict prevention and peacemaking

14. Because of the serious deterioration of the security environment in Iraq, I decided to temporarily relocate the international staff of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq, as well as of United Nations agencies, programmes and funds, outside the country. However, the United Nations system continued to manage a broad range of essential assistance activities in all parts of the country, from both within and outside Iraq.

15. In its resolution 1483(2003), the Security Council requested me to terminate the oil-for-food programme in Iraq by 21 November 2003, transferring responsibility for any remaining activity under the programme to the Coalition Provisional Authority. On 21 November 2003, the United Nations handed over all operational responsibilities to the Authority. By 30 June 2004, $8.6 billion of the remaining funds had been transferred to the Development Fund for Iraq. The Office of the Iraq Programme closed down on 31 May.

16. In its resolution 1511(2003), the Security Council invited the Governing Council of Iraq to provide, by 15 December 2003, a timetable and a programme for the drafting of a new constitution for Iraq and for the holding of democratic elections. It also resolved that the United Nations should strengthen and pursue its vital role in Iraq as circumstances permitted and authorized a multinational force to take all necessary measures to contribute to the maintenance of security and stability in Iraq. On 15 November 2003, the Coalition Provisional Authority and the Governing Council signed an agreement setting out a political process for the restoration of sovereignty by 30 June 2004, as well as for the drafting of a new constitution and the holding of elections under that constitution.

17. On 19 January 2004, I convened a meeting in New York with a delegation of the Governing Council and the Coalition Provisional Authority, after which the United Nations was asked to help facilitate a process of dialogue and consensus-building among Iraqis to ensure a peaceful and successful political transition. To that end, my Special Adviser conducted three missions to Iraq. During his first mission, from 6 to 13 February 2004, my Special Adviser, in conjunction with a team from the Electoral Assistance Division of the Department of Political Affairs, concluded that credible elections could not take place by 30 June 2004 and that an interim Government would have to be formed through other means. During his second visit, from 26 March to 16 April, my Special Adviser was able, on the basis of extensive consultations with a broad spectrum of Iraqi society, the Governing Council and the Coalition Provisional Authority, to develop provisional ideas for a successful transition. On 27 April 2004, he presented those ideas to the Security Council. During his third mission, from 1 May to 2 June, my Special Adviser facilitated the formation, on 1 June, of the interim Iraqi Government. Concurrently, an electoral mission was deployed, from 3 May to 6 June, to facilitate the negotiation of the electoral modalities and establish an electoral institution. On 31 May, the Independent Electoral Commission of Iraq was formed following a country-wide nomination and selection exercise overseen by the United Nations. After consultations with a wide range of Iraqis throughout the country and discussions with the Governing Council and the Coalition Provisional Authority, the legal framework for the electoral system and political parties and entities was promulgated on 7 June.

18. On 8 June 2004, the Security Council adopted resolution 1546(2004), in which it endorsed the proposed timetable for Iraq's political transition and decided that the United Nations should play a leading role, as circumstances permitted, in assisting in convening a national conference, in providing advice on the process for holding elections and in promoting national dialogue and consensus-building on the drafting of a national constitution. The Council also gave UNAMI a mandate in other areas, such as development and humanitarian assistance, human rights and national reconciliation.

19. Under its strengthened mandate provided in resolution 1546(2004), the United Nations will do everything possible to assist the Iraqi people in the transition process. To that end, my new Special Representative will work closely with the interim Government and establish a dialogue with countries in the region and beyond. An expanded role of the United Nations in institution-building, reconstruction, human rights and other areas, however, will depend on whether the overall security environment will allow for a larger presence in Iraq. In the meantime, my Special Representative will focus on the essential priority tasks set out in resolution 1546(2004) from both outside and inside Iraq, as circumstances permit. To succeed, he will need the full support of the international community.

20. Turning to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, despite the strenuous efforts of the international community through the Quartet (consisting of the United Nations, the European Union, the Russian Federation and the United States of America) and the stated commitment of the parties to the road map initiative, the peace process remained stalled and violence persisted. The humanitarian situation in the occupied Palestinian territory continued to deteriorate, with a subsistence standard of living for many Palestinians being maintained only through assistance from the international donor community, including the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and other United Nations agencies and programmes.

21. Over the past 12 months, the Security Council adopted two resolutions on the Middle East. On 19 November 2003, resolution 1515 (2003) endorsed the road map and called upon the parties to fulfil their corresponding obligations. On 19 May 2004, the Council adopted resolution 1544(2004), calling upon Israel to respect its obligations under international humanitarian law, including its obligation not to destroy Palestinian homes in a manner contrary to the law. The General Assembly, at its resumed tenth emergency special session, adopted resolution ES-10/13 on 21 October 2003 demanding that Israel stop and reverse the construction of the wall in the occupied Palestinian territory, including in and around East Jerusalem. On 8 December, the Assembly, again at its resumed tenth emergency special session, adopted resolution ES-10/14 requesting the International Court of Justice to urgently render an advisory opinion on the legal consequences arising from the construction of the wall. The Court rendered its advisory opinion on 9 July 2004, finding that the route of the wall in the occupied Palestinian territory was contrary to international law and that Israel was under an obligation to terminate the building of the wall, to dismantle parts already built and to make reparations for all damage caused to Palestinian property. It also found that States were under an obligation not to recognize the illegal situation and to ensure Israel's compliance with international law under the Fourth Geneva Convention. The Court said that the General Assembly and the Security Council should consider further action. The Assembly reconvened its tenth emergency special session to consider the issue and, on 20 July 2004, adopted resolution ES-10/15, in which it acknowledged the advisory opinion, demanded that Israel comply with its legal obligations as mentioned in the opinion, called upon Member States to comply likewise with their legal obligations and requested me to establish a register of damage caused as a result of the construction of the wall.

22. I have exercised good offices through my direct contacts and those of my Special Coordinator, as well as through the Quartet mechanism. At the meeting of Quartet members, held in New York on 4 May 2004, we reiterated that all final status issues, such as borders and refugees, should be negotiated by the parties and that such negotiations must be based on the internationally accepted framework for the peace process. We also set out principles for the success of a possible Israeli withdrawal from the Gaza Strip and stated that the withdrawal should be complete, that it must lead to an end of the occupation of Gaza and that it must be accompanied by similar steps in the West Bank. Discussion of an action plan has been initiated and designed to move the parties ahead and to help them to meet their obligations.

23. On Cyprus, after two months of intense negotiations by my Special Adviser and with my personal involvement, the Foundation Agreement proposed in the settlement plan was finalized on 31 March 2004 and was submitted to separate simultaneous referendums in the two communities on 24 April. Although it was approved by the Turkish Cypriots by a margin of two to one, the plan was rejected by the Greek Cypriot electorate by a margin of three to one and therefore did not enter into force. At present, I do not see a basis for resuming my good offices in Cyprus. Instead, a broad reassessment of the full range of United Nations peace activities is called for. In this regard, I have called for a review of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus. While the decision of the Greek Cypriots must be respected, I hope they will reflect on their position so that future efforts can have a chance to succeed. I have appealed to the Turkish Cypriots and to Turkey to stand by the community's wish for reunification, and have called upon the Security Council to encourage States to lift unnecessary barriers that isolate the Turkish Cypriots and impede their development.

24. In Burundi, considerable progress was made in the peace process with the signing of the protocols of 8 October and 2 November 2003 and the conclusion on 16 November of the Global Ceasefire Agreement between the Transitional Government of Burundi and the Forces for the Defense of Democracy. By its presidential statement of 22 December 2003, the Security Council recognized the progress made and took note of requests made by the President of Burundi and the Deputy President of South Africa, on behalf of the States of the Regional Initiative, that the United Nations consider taking over from the African Mission in Burundi. The Council also welcomed my decision to examine the situation in further detail. To that end, I fielded an assessment mission to Burundi from 16 to 27 February 2004, following which I recommended the establishment of a multidisciplinary peacekeeping operation in that country. By its resolution 1545(2004) of 21 May, the Council established the United Nations Operation in Burundi, for an initial period of six months as from 1 June 2004, with an authorized troop strength of 5,650 military personnel and up to 120 civilian police personnel. Meanwhile, efforts continued towards a comprehensive and all-inclusive ceasefire, despite serious ongoing challenges.

25. Talks on the Sudan led by the Intergovernmental Authority on Development have made significant progress during the past year, leaving only details of a ceasefire and international guarantees to be negotiated before a comprehensive peace agreement is complete. My Special Adviser provided continuous support to the parties and to the mediation process. I hope that the Sudanese parties will be able to finalize a peace agreement expeditiously. At the request of the Security Council, the United Nations began preparatory work on how best it could fully support the parties during the implementation of a comprehensive peace agreement.

26. During 2004, the launching of an armed rebellion in Darfur in western Sudan and the Government's response led to significant loss of life and massive displacement of civilians in the region, many of whom were forced to seek refuge in neighbouring countries, mainly Chad. As violence targeting the civilian population continued, the humanitarian and human rights situations in the area deteriorated into a full-scale emergency by spring 2004, as detailed in the following chapter. More than 1 million people are internally displaced and over 170,000 refugees are currently in Chad. At the invitation of the Sudanese Government, I dispatched two missions to the area to assess the humanitarian and human rights situations. Persistent reports of massive human rights violations and the humanitarian emergency unfolding in Darfur continued to be a cause of grave concern. I visited the Sudan and Chad in early July 2004 to see what could be done to resolve the root causes and mitigate the consequences of the conflict in Darfur. In a joint communiqué signed at the end of my visit, the Government of the Sudan and the United Nations committed themselves to a wide range of obligations that needed to be met without delay to address the crisis. A joint implementation mechanism, co-chaired by the Sudanese Foreign Minister and my Special Representative for the Sudan, was established to monitor the implementation of the joint communiqué. I also asked my Special Adviser in the region to provide assistance to the African Union in its mediation of the political negotiation on Darfur. On 30 July, the Security Council adopted resolution 1556(2004), in which it demanded that the Government of the Sudan fulfil its commitments to disarm the Janjaweed militias and apprehend and bring to justice Janjaweed leaders and their associates who had incited and carried out human rights and international humanitarian law violations and other atrocities. The Council further requested that I report to it in 30 days, and monthly thereafter, on the progress or lack thereof made by the Government of the Sudan on this matter and expressed its intention to consider further actions in the event of non-compliance.

27. In January 2004, in its resolution 1523(2004), the Security Council extended the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara for three months until 30 April to allow my Personal Envoy to consult further with the Government of Morocco on its final response to the Peace Plan for Self-Determination of the People of Western Sahara, which he had submitted to the parties in January 2003. The Frente POLISARIO had informed my Personal Envoy of its acceptance of the Peace Plan in early July 2003. In April 2004, Morocco delivered its final response, in which it expressed a willingness to continue to work to achieve a political solution within the framework of Moroccan sovereignty, thereby rejecting essential elements of the Peace Plan. On 29 April, the Council adopted resolution 1541(2004) extending the mandate of MINURSO until 31 October. The Council also reaffirmed its support for the Peace Plan and my efforts to achieve a mutually acceptable political solution to the dispute over Western Sahara. On 1 June, my Personal Envoy tendered his resignation, citing his belief that he had done all that he could to assist the parties in finding a solution to the conflict. He also stated that, while there had been progress in a number of areas during his seven years of involvement in the issue, the United Nations had not been able to resolve the underlying dispute. Following my Personal Envoy's resignation, I have decided that my current Special Representative for Western Sahara will continue to work with the parties and neighbouring countries in pursuit of a political solution. In the meantime, MINURSO continued to monitor the ceasefire between the parties, which had been in effect since September 1991, and to provide assistance to the implementation of confidence-building measures led by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, including the exchange of family visits between Western Sahara and the Tindouf refugee camps in Algeria, which began in March 2004.

28. Progress made in mid-2004 at the Somalia National Reconciliation Conference in Kenya, held under the auspices of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, gave cause for cautious optimism. Concerted efforts by the foreign ministers of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development made it possible for the Conference to begin its third and final phase. Somali traditional leaders began negotiating the distribution of parliamentary seats within each of the major clans. Each clan is to submit a list of members of parliament to form the 275-seat transitional federal parliament, which would in turn elect a president. I commend the Governments of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development for demonstrating a renewed cohesiveness on the issue of national reconciliation in Somalia. I personally addressed the Somali delegates at the Conference on 8 July and encouraged them to establish an inclusive governance structure as soon as possible.

29. With regard to United Nations support for the peaceful resolution of potentially violent conflicts, I was pleased with the significant progress achieved by Cameroon and Nigeria, with the assistance of the United Nations, in the implementation of the October 2002 ruling of the International Court of Justice on the land and maritime boundary between the two countries. This progress was achieved within the framework of the Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission, which I established at the request of the heads of State of the two countries and which is chaired by my Special Representative for West Africa. The process initiated by the Commission for the withdrawal of the civilian administration, military and police forces by each of the two States from areas falling within the sovereignty of the other and the corresponding transfer of authority, as called for by the Court, will enhance cooperation between Cameroon and Nigeria. The official visit of Nigerian President Olusegun Obasanjo to Cameroon on 28 and 29 July 2004 demonstrated the two countries' determination to continue to strengthen their bilateral relations through peaceful cooperation and dialogue. In the same vein, the long-standing border dispute between Equatorial Guinea and Gabon seems to be heading towards a mutually acceptable solution following a series of mediation sessions led by my Special Adviser and mediator on this issue. I am pleased to report that on 6 July, the leaders of the two countries signed a memorandum of understanding on the joint development of petroleum and other natural resources in the exclusive economic zones of Equatorial Guinea and Gabon.

30. In the Americas, the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala, now in its final year, has been working with domestic institutions and with the newly elected Government to ensure continuity in the implementation of the peace accords and the consolidation of democracy. With organized criminal groups posing a serious threat to the consolidation of the rule of law, the United Nations concluded an agreement with the previous Government, endorsed by the new Government, on the establishment of a Commission for the Investigation of Illegal Groups and Clandestine Security Apparatuses.

The United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime is also helping to strengthen the legal and institutional frameworks to confront organized crime groups, which constitute a serious force destructive to civil society and good governance.

31. Despite multiple peacemaking efforts undertaken by my Special Adviser on Colombia, the Government and the guerrilla groups have not renewed peace talks. Since the end of 2002, the Government has been waging an intensive military campaign against the two major guerrilla groups—the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia and the National Liberation Army. At the same time, it is pursuing talks with some paramilitary groups aimed at their disarmament, demobilization and reintegration. As requested by the Government, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights examined a draft law on justice and reparations, concluding that it needed to address impunity and past human rights violations. Meanwhile, violence continues and is directly affecting both the humanitarian and human rights situations adversely.

32. In view of the present situation, the second humanitarian action plan, to be launched by the United Nations system in Colombia will provide a comprehensive assistance programme that will require a firm commitment on the part of the Government and other parties. I also urge the Government to implement the recommendations of the Commission on Human Rights. Finally, my good offices remain available in the search for a peaceful solution to the conflict in Colombia. My Special Adviser will continue, through contacts with the Government, guerrilla groups, civil society and the international community, to assist peacemaking efforts.

33. In South Asia, India and Pakistan have made important strides in their efforts to improve their relations and resolve outstanding issues. Following an agreement in January 2004 in Islamabad to resume bilateral dialogue on an agreed range of issues, including Jammu and Kashmir, the two sides have been conducting talks in a purposeful and serious manner. This has brought hope that the two countries will be able to bring an end to the dispute that has troubled their relations since their independence. I have expressed to the leaders of the two countries, both in public and in private, my admiration for their concerted efforts to bring peace to the region and have encouraged them to continue this endeavour. The United Nations will remain at their disposal to assist the process in any way they may deem necessary.

34. In Nepal, the insurgency led by the Communist Party of Nepal (Maoist) has escalated since the breakdown of peace talks and the ceasefire in August 2003, causing considerable suffering in much of the country. I have intensified my engagement with all concerned with a view to contributing to a political resolution to the conflict. The United Nations Development Programme and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights are strengthening their support for national efforts to curb conflict-related human rights abuses, and United Nations system agencies are adapting their programmes to ensure that they will be able to deliver protection and assistance to affected communities.

35. The peace process in Sri Lanka has continued to encounter difficulties and delays. However, the ceasefire has held, demonstrating a desire by all sides for durable peace based on a negotiated agreement. It is my hope that the ongoing efforts to revive negotiations, facilitated by the Government of Norway, will bear fruit and pave the way for the long-awaited reconstruction and rehabilitation of the country, in which the United Nations system stands ready to play a full part.

36. I am pleased to report that the peace process in Bougainville, Papua New Guinea, has been slowly but steadily moving forward. The downsized successor to the United Nations Political Office in Bougainville, the United Nations Observer Mission in Bougainville has overseen the destruction by the Bougainville parties of over 80 per cent of weapons. Simultaneously, the Bougainville parties, together with the Government of Papua New Guinea, are finalizing the Bougainville constitution. Its adoption will pave the way for the election of an autonomous Bougainville government, hopefully before the end of this year. With the establishment of the autonomous Government, the Mission will have completed its mandate.

37. I continued to provide good offices aimed at facilitating national reconciliation and democratization in Myanmar. My Special Envoy visited Yangon in September 2003 and March 2004 and engaged relevant actors. On 17 May, the Government reconvened the National Convention to draft a new constitution, regrettably without the participation of the National League for Democracy and some ethnic nationality parties. I have stated that for the Government's political road map to be considered as a credible and all-inclusive vehicle for a democratic transition, the remaining restrictions on Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and her deputy, U Tin Oo, should be lifted and the National League for Democracy's offices permitted to reopen.

38. Cooperation between the United Nations and the Government of Indonesia, in support of the latter's pursuit of political, economic and social reforms, continues in a constructive manner. Notably, the United Nations provided technical assistance to Indonesia's parliamentary and presidential elections held in recent months. Indonesia's national unity and territorial integrity can best be ensured through respect for democratic norms and the promotion of human rights. In this connection, it should be noted that the Government on 19 May changed the military emergency status in Aceh to a civil emergency. I hope that such a change in status will result in unimpeded access to the population in Aceh so that the Organization can resume all of its humanitarian and developmental activities there. I also remain concerned about the situation in Ambon, Maluku, where sectarian violence flared up again in April. I continue to believe that the perpetrators of serious human rights violations committed in 1999 in Timor-Leste (then East Timor) must be brought to justice.

39. On the Korean Peninsula, my Personal Envoy continued his efforts to mobilize international humanitarian assistance for the Democratic People's Republic of Korea through the United Nations system, with some progress. I am increasingly concerned about the health situation in the country, of which children are the main victims. Politically, I have focused my efforts on supporting the six-party talks as the most promising way to achieve a nuclear-weapon-free peninsula and a comprehensive settlement of related issues. I remain convinced that durable solutions to these issues will have to take into account the long-term economic needs of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. In close consultation with that country's Government and other Governments concerned, my Personal Envoy has established expert groups to explore steps and measures by which the international community can best assist the Democratic People's Republic of Korea in meeting its energy needs and modernizing its economy.

40. The United Nations continues to work on enhancing its institutional capacity for conflict prevention and peacemaking. In response to General Assembly resolution 57/337 of 3 July 2003 on the prevention of armed conflict, the United Nations system has increased its assistance to Member States in building national capacity for the prevention of conflict. Country teams have started to better integrate such assistance into their programmes. United Nations agencies and departments, acting under the auspices of the Inter-agency/Interdepartmental Framework for Coordination, have also assisted a growing number of Member States, at their request, in building the capacity and skills of institutions, government and civil society for ensuring the peaceful settlement of disputes and enhancing sustainable development and social cohesion, including the consolidation of democratic governance.

Peacekeeping and peace-building

41. The reporting period witnessed a surge in demand for United Nations peacekeeping activities, with the establishment of new and complex operations in Liberia, Côte d'Ivoire, Burundi and Haiti—the last three in quick succession. As at July 2004, the United Nations had more than 56,000 peacekeepers, including troops, military observers and civilian police, serving in 16 operations around the world. The increase in the number of peacekeeping missions poses a serious challenge to the Organization's capacity for effective planning, timely deployment and the provision of sustained support for such operations. The new operations will not succeed without the continued political, financial and human resources of the Member States.

42. Peacekeeping mandates authorized by the Security Council have increasingly sought to create the conditions necessary for preventing a relapse into conflict by helping parties to accelerate national recovery and assume primary responsibility, with support from the international community, for the peace-building process. The effectiveness and success of United Nations peacekeeping and peace-building interventions remain contingent upon the promotion and implementation of regional integrated approaches to challenges when they are transnational in origin and effect. The Office of the Special Representative for West Africa, established in 2002 as the United Nations Office for West Africa, has provided the Security Council with recommendations on practical ways to combat such cross-cutting and subregional problems in West Africa. Under the leadership of my Special Representative, the Office has continued to hold periodic consultations with all heads of United Nations missions in the subregion aimed at promoting inter-mission cooperation.

43. Although some progress has been made in the transitional process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the process was impeded by lingering mistrust among various components of the Government of National Unity and Transition. Relations between the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda and Uganda improved somewhat following the adoption of the Principles on Good Neighbourly Relations and Cooperation between the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda in New York in September 2003. Yet the pace of normalization of bilateral relations has slowed down since the beginning of 2004. Meanwhile, the Ituri Brigade of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo consolidated its military positions in Ituri and deployed to several locations in the interior of the region, thereby restoring some peace and stability. The leaders of most armed groups in Ituri signed a declaration on 14 May 2004 committing themselves to fully supporting disarmament efforts and the national transitional process. The mine action coordination centre coordinated a survey of mined land and roads in the Ituri District, thus contributing to safe mission deployment. In the Kivus, MONUC also deployed a brigade-sized force. On 26 May 2004, however, fighting broke out in Bukavu, South Kivu, between troops loyal to the Government of National Unity and Transition and those loyal to dissident factions of the former Congolese Rally for Democracy—Goma. While the crisis reached the national level, the situation was brought under control with the withdrawal of troops loyal to the dissident elements from the town. Following the deterioration of bilateral relations between the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda as a result of the Bukavu crisis, a mini-summit on the Democratic Republic of the Congo was held in the margins of the African Union summit held in Addis Ababa on 6 July, during which it was agreed to establish a Democratic Republic of the Congo/Rwanda joint verification mechanism.

44. The Economic Community of West African States force, which has been deployed in Côte d'Ivoire since January 2003, sharing responsibility for peacekeeping duties with the French force (Licorne), continued to face serious logistical and financial shortfalls. ECOWAS and the Ivorian parties proposed that the United Nations take over peacekeeping functions in Côte d'Ivoire with the establishment of a multidimensional operation. By its resolution 1528(2004) of 27 February 2004, the Security Council established the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire as from 4 April. Its mandate included monitoring the ceasefire; supporting the implementation of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme; protecting United Nations personnel and civilians under imminent threat of violence; supporting the provision of security for the ministers of the Government of National Reconciliation; facilitating the delivery of humanitarian assistance; providing oversight, guidance and technical assistance for the 2005 elections; and protecting human rights and assisting the Government in reviving and restoring the rule of law. The Operation had reached its authorized strength of 6,240 troops by mid-August 2004.

45. Serious obstacles to the Ivorian peace process emerged, however, in 2004 in terms of the deepening rift between the President, the Prime Minister and the opposition parties. This eventually led to the opposition's suspension of participation in the Government as from 7 March. On 25 March, opposition demonstrations in Abidjan resulted in violent clashes between the Ivorian security forces and demonstrators and the arrest of opposition members. In response to requests from the President and Prime Minister, an International Commission of Inquiry visited Côte d'Ivoire from 15 to 28 April. The Commission concluded that the demonstrations of 25 March had been used for a carefully planned and executed operation by the Ivorian security forces, as well as special units and parallel forces, targeting opposition parties and community groups. Given the dangerous stalemate in the peace process, I convened a mini-summit on Côte d'Ivoire on 6 July in the margins of the African Union Summit in Addis Ababa. Participants, who included President Laurent Gbagbo, agreed to convene a larger summit in Accra. At the Accra meeting, held from 29 to 31 July, the Ivorian parties agreed on key issues, including resuming the functioning of the Government of National Reconciliation; delegating authority from the President to the Prime Minister and starting the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme. I expect all parties to abide fully by their commitments.

46. The United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone continued to successfully implement its mandate to assist the Government of Sierra Leone in consolidating peace. With the support of UNAMSIL and other bilateral and multilateral partners, the Government of Sierra Leone has made significant progress in key areas, such as the reintegration of ex-combatants, the return of refugees, the consolidation of State authority, the restoration of government control of diamond-mining activities and economic recovery.

47. In early February 2004, an interdisciplinary assessment mission travelled to Sierra Leone to take stock of the key security benchmarks and to determine whether a residual UNAMSIL presence would be required beyond December 2004. Following that visit, I submitted my recommendations to the Security Council. Subsequently, in its resolution 1537(2004) of 30 March 2004, the Council authorized a reduced UNAMSIL presence in Sierra Leone for an initial period of six months from 1 January 2005, with a new ceiling of 3,250 troops, 141 military observers and 80 United Nations civilian police personnel. The residual presence of UNAMSIL provides the Government of Sierra Leone with a unique opportunity to further consolidate the peace process and to continue enhancing its security sector.

48. The United Nations peace-building support offices in the Central African Republic and Guinea-Bissau continued to assist the host countries in promoting good governance and mobilizing international support for reconstruction. Despite various destabilizing pressures, including the coups in the Central African Republic in March 2003 and in Guinea-Bissau in September 2003, the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in the Central African Republic and the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Guinea-Bissau concentrated on the restoration and consolidation of constitutional normality in their respective countries through peaceful political transitions. UNOGBIS contributed to the successful holding of legislative elections in March 2004 and BONUCA facilitated the establishment of a consultative mechanism composed of representatives from the transitional Government, political leaders and civil society.

49. Significant progress was made towards restoring peace in Liberia during the reporting period. By its resolution 1509(2003) of 19 September 2003, the Security Council established the United Nations Mission in Liberia, with a mandate that included implementing the 17 June 2003 ceasefire agreement, supporting security sector reform, contributing to efforts to protect and promote human rights and supporting the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement signed by the Liberian parties on 18 August 2003 in Accra. UNMIL, with an authorized troop strength of 15,000, took over peace-keeping responsibilities from an ECOWAS force on 1 October 2003.

50. The National Transitional Government of Liberia provided for in the Comprehensive Peace Agreement was inaugurated on 14 October 2003. With the deployment of UNMIL across the country, the security situation improved nationwide. The ceasefire has generally held, although intra-faction disputes at times have resulted in violence. Some 63,000 ex-combatants have been disarmed and demobilized, and programmes to reintegrate them into the community continue. United Nations civilian police, comprising 1,060 personnel, have been working closely with the National Transitional Government of Liberia in restructuring the national police. UNMIL continues to play a central role in supporting the organization of national elections, which are scheduled to be held in October 2005. Humanitarian access has improved, paving the way for the eventual return of internally displaced persons and refugees. In early February, an international reconstruction conference for Liberia was held at which $520 million was pledged for the reconstruction and humanitarian needs of the country. UNMIL and the United Nations country team are working closely with the National Transitional Government of Liberia and its development partners to ensure that national recovery projects presented at the conference are funded and implemented.

51. Despite the impasse in the peace process between Eritrea and Ethiopia, the situation in the border area remained relatively calm from a military point of view. At the same time, tensions persisted at the political level, exacerbated by spates of inflammatory rhetoric emanating from the two capitals. In order to break the stalemate caused by the lack of progress in the demarcation of the border, I appointed a Special Envoy for Ethiopia and Eritrea to start a dialogue between the two sides. The United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea continued to support the peace process by monitoring the temporary security zone between the two countries, chairing the Military Coordination Commission and coordinating humanitarian, human rights and demining activities in the temporary security zone and its adjacent areas. In view of the prevailing circumstances, the effectiveness of UNMEE is currently being reviewed with a view to adjusting and streamlining its operations as necessary. However, no adjustments should be made without careful consideration of the possible implications for the peace process and the results achieved so far.

52. The United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon continued to monitor the Blue Line between Israel and Lebanon and to liaise with the parties to avert, minimize and contain tensions. Unfortunately, the past year saw an increased number of incidents along the Blue Line, with Israeli violations of Lebanese airspace and Hezbollah retaliatory anti-aircraft fire. Israel conducted air raids on suspected Hezbollah positions and there was an exchange of missile, mortar and small arms fire predominantly in the Shab'a farms area. Hezbollah also placed booby traps on the Lebanese side of the Blue Line in close proximity to the Israel Defense Forces patrol routes. I have continued to remind the parties to respect the Blue Line and to abide fully by their obligations. The Lebanese armed forces continue to be active in the south, but the Government of Lebanon has not yet taken all of the steps required to assert and maintain its full authority in the region. The mine action coordination centre continues to assist in clearing land in southern Lebanon of anti-personnel mines; an area of five square kilometres has been cleared since May 2002.

53. During the reporting period, Timor-Leste continued to establish and strengthen its national institutions with assistance from the United Nations Mission of Support in East Timor and United Nations agencies. The security situation remained stable. To safeguard the gains made to date and to help Timor-Leste achieve full self-sufficiency, the Security Council, in its resolution 1543(2004), decided to extend the mandate of UNMISET for a period of six months beyond 20 May 2004, with a view to subsequently extending it for a further and final period of six months. The size of the operation was reduced and its tasks revised to take account of changed circumstances on the ground. The Government of Timor-Leste has assumed full responsibility for maintaining security and stability within the country, although UNMISET remains ready to assist in exceptional circumstances if required. The Mission continues to provide capacity-building assistance to public administration, law enforcement and the judiciary.

54. In Afghanistan, implementation of the Bonn Agreement continued during the review period. The new Afghan constitution was adopted in January 2004 by a Loya Jirga, a disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme was introduced for ex-combatants and a voter registration drive was initiated on 1 December 2003 in preparation for elections. In March 2004, the Government made public its intention to hold presidential and lower-house parliamentary elections simultaneously in September 2004. Citing legal and technical grounds, the Joint Electoral Management Body announced on 9 July that the presidential elections would be held on 9 October and parliamentary elections in April 2005. Afghanistan remains an insecure environment, with factional fighting in the north and terrorist elements operating in the south. Significant progress on disarmament, demobilization and reintegration is critical to ensure sustainable peace and the holding of elections. The lack of security inside Afghanistan is one of the key factors preventing the return of some 3 million Afghan refugees in the Islamic Republic of Iran and Pakistan, as well as of thousands of internally displaced persons. It is also undermining the political process. Extremists, for example, have deliberately targeted the voter registration drive. A major obstacle to the success of the Bonn process is the increased cultivation of narcotics, which fuels both factional fighting and terrorism. The engagement of the international community remains a critical factor in keeping the peace and promoting the Bonn process. A conference held in Berlin in March and April 2004 gathered high-level representatives from 56 countries. At the conference, donors pledged $8.2 billion over the next three years to an Afghan-led reconstruction programme. The mine action centre in Afghanistan has been coordinating all mine-related activities, including the clearance of 780 square kilometres of mined land to date.

55. The United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia continued to monitor the implementation of the 1994 Moscow ceasefire agreement by the Georgian and Abkhaz sides and to pursue efforts to achieve a comprehensive settlement of the conflict based on the principle of the territorial integrity of Georgia. Its efforts have focused on maintaining stability on the ground and engaging the two parties on security and political issues, refugee returns and economic cooperation. The Group of Friends continued to support those efforts. Meanwhile, the political change in Georgia brought about by the election of a new President and parliamentary elections in early 2004 has created a new momentum in Georgia's efforts to resolve its internal conflicts, including in Abkhazia. The Abkhaz side, however, has continued to refuse to discuss the status of Abkhazia within the Georgian State, which is a key obstacle in efforts to achieve a negotiated settlement.

56. The United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo, in furtherance of the establishment of democratic provisional institutions of self-government, devolved powers to the provisional institutions of self-government in accordance with the Constitutional Framework. UNMIK continues to exercise overall authority and to implement the reserved responsibilities listed in chapter 8 of the Constitutional Framework. In March 2004, violence erupted throughout Kosovo, targeting primarily Kosovo Serb community members and institutions, including Serbian Orthodox religious sites. The violence demonstrated that Kosovo still has some way to go in meeting the standards endorsed by the Security Council in its presidential statement of 12 December 2003. As a result, the implementation plan will give additional emphasis to security and the rule of law, minority rights and protection, the return of displaced persons, economic development and decentralization. UNMIK also continued to encourage a direct dialogue on practical matters between Belgrade and Pristina.

57. With the situation in Haiti deteriorating, the Security Council adopted resolution 1529 (2004) on 29 February 2004 authorizing the deployment of a multinational interim force to Haiti and declaring its readiness to establish a follow-on stabilization force to support a peaceful, constitutional political process following the resignation and departure of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide. The Council also approved the establishment of the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti, starting on 1 June 2004 following a multidisciplinary needs assessment mission. The Mission is multidimensional in scope to help Haitians address the complex range of issues they face. Close cooperation with the Organization of American States and the Caribbean Community will be key in ensuring the successful implementation of the Mission's mandate. In July 2004, the transitional Haitian Government presented an Interim Cooperation Framework, prepared with the assistance of the World Bank, UNDP and MINUSTAH, to the donor community in Washington, D.C., and received pledges of $1.3 billion to assist with a wide range of political, social and economic needs.

58. I am thus far encouraged by the dedication and political will demonstrated by the interim Government to put Haiti on a path to democracy and sustainable development. The international community must do its part and remain engaged for the long term, both politically and financially. It must seek creative ways to assist, building on previous experiences, while leaving the ownership of the process firmly in the hands of the Haitian people.

United Nations and regional organizations

59. The United Nations continued to intensify its partnership with regional organizations in pursuit of the shared goals of peace, stability and development in a framework of democratic governance and respect for human rights and the rule of law.

60. In Africa, the United Nations further enhanced its cooperation with the African Union and subregional organizations. We assisted the African Union in developing its policy framework for the establishment of African peace and security structures and continue to cooperate closely with it in that regard, including in the establishment of an African standby force and Military Staff Committee. In an effort to consolidate linkages with ECOWAS in the promotion of peace and stability in the subregion, as called for by the Security Council on a number of occasions, my Special Representative for West Africa held extensive consultations with ECOWAS officials in Nigeria on 31 May and in Senegal on 22 and 23 July 2004 regarding practical modalities for improving working relations. As a result of those consultations, ECOWAS and the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for West Africa have developed a memorandum of understanding and a programme of work for 2004-2005 involving joint activities in the areas of governance and security sector reform, electoral assistance, youth unemployment, free movement of persons and goods, small arms and light weapons and transborder security.

61. The United Nations and the European Union achieved significant progress in cooperation on conflict prevention and post-conflict reconstruction, as well as in crisis management activities. The first desk-to-desk dialogues on conflict prevention, held in Brussels and New York in October 2003 and June 2004, launched a new phase of United Nations-European Union cooperation at both the headquarters and country levels. There was general consensus that the goals of the dialogues had been met in terms of sharing assessments of situations on the ground, deepening interaction between the two organizations, suggesting follow-up actions and identifying specific areas for cooperation on conflict prevention in five targeted countries or subregions. The Joint Declaration on United Nations-European Union Cooperation in Crisis Management, signed in September 2003, committed the two organizations to work together in addressing crisis situations and called for the establishment of a joint consultative mechanism at the working level to examine ways and means to enhance coordination and compatibility. In mid-February 2004, the first meeting of the joint consultative mechanism, the United Nations-European Union steering committee on crisis management, was held at United Nations Headquarters and discussed a range of issues concerning cooperation in planning, training, communications, best practices and supporting African capacity-building initiatives in the area of peacekeeping. Working-level contacts and meetings have continued, and the next steering committee meeting is scheduled for October in Brussels.

62. The United Nations has increased its contacts with member States and the secretariat of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations on matters relating to regional peace and security, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 57/35 of 21 November 2002. In February 2004, at the fourth United Nations-ASEAN regional workshop on conflict prevention, conflict resolution and peace-building in South-East Asia, held in Jakarta (Indonesia being the current Chair of ASEAN), new means to enhance cooperation between the two organizations, specifically in the area of peacekeeping, were recommended, as well as the exchange of lessons learned in the fields of humanitarian assistance, preventive measures and early warning.

63. I welcome the comprehensive review by the Pacific leaders of the functioning of the Pacific Islands Forum and its secretariat, which aims at developing a plan to realize the vision of the Pacific as a region of peace, harmony, security and economic prosperity, and look forward to enhancing our cooperation towards our common objectives.

Electoral assistance

64. Elections can have a polarizing effect and heighten political tensions. Credibly conducted elections encourage those who lose at the ballot box to accept the results, while technically flawed elections provide opportunities for resort to civil disquiet or violence. Requests that the United Nations provide technical assistance to improve the quality of elections and reduce the potential for electoral conflict have increased over the past decade. During the reporting period, 18 new requests were received and 39 countries are currently being assisted. A strong priority of United Nations electoral assistance is enhancing the participation of women in electoral processes through a variety of measures, including public education campaigns and, where relevant, quotas.

65. Of particular importance and prominence has been the involvement of the United Nations with electoral matters in Iraq. Following the determination by a United Nations expert team that credible elections could not be held in the country by 30 June 2004, and as agreed on 15 November 2003 by the Coalition Provisional Authority and the Governing Council of Iraq, a transitional law was adopted that provided for a series of elections beginning in January 2005. United Nations electoral experts subsequently assisted in the establishment of an independent Iraqi electoral commission and are currently contributing technical expertise for the preparation of those elections (see also para. 17 above).

66. In preparation for the elections in Afghanistan (see para. 54), Afghan authorities carried out a countrywide electoral registration drive, with the assistance of the United Nations, between 1 December 2003 and 15 August 2004. This is the first time that Afghan voters have ever been registered. Despite threats and attacks against the process, nearly 9 million Afghans—or more than 90 per cent of the estimated eligible voters—have registered to vote.

67. The peace processes in Burundi, Côte d'Ivoire, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Liberia and Sierra Leone also include elections as a crucial mechanism for peace-building. In Sierra Leone, following national elections in 2002, the local elections held in May 2004—for which the United Nations provided decisive technical and logistical support—constituted a further step towards the consolidation of political stability.

Disarmament

68. This year, the Conference on Disarmament benefited from focused high-level discussions during which foreign ministers voiced strong political support for the Conference. Further progress is needed to ensure that the Conference will be able to resume its role of negotiating new arms control and disarmament agreements, with an emphasis on the elimination of weapons of mass destruction. The demonstrated ability of the Conference to devise disarmament treaties should be used to the fullest extent.

69. Several issues relating to weapons of mass destruction remained of great concern to the international community. These included the slow pace of disarmament, violations of non-proliferation commitments, evidence of a clandestine nuclear network and the threat of terrorism. Such developments jeopardize international peace and security and may increase the risk of new instances of unilateral or pre-emptive use of force.

70. I welcome the decision by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to renounce its weapons of mass destruction programmes. The States parties' reaffirmation of their commitment to the Chemical Weapons Convention is also encouraging. I urge all States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to confront persisting concerns about compliance and to consider new initiatives to strengthen the treaty while striving for its universality. I also urge further efforts to bring the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty into force without delay.

71. Adopted in response to the threat of proliferation of weapons of mass destruction by non-State actors, Security Council resolution 1540 (2004) contains concrete preventive measures to be taken by all States. Its effective implementation would complement ongoing efforts to strengthen existing multilateral disarmament and non-proliferation regimes.

72. The United Nations continued to support efforts by a wide variety of actors to implement the 2001 Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects. In particular, it provided assistance to Member States in the establishment of national coordinating bodies, the development of national capacity, the management or destruction of stockpiles, reporting on the implementation of the Programme of Action and the enactment or revision of national legislation on the sale and use of small arms.

73. Multilateral negotiations began in June 2004 on an international instrument to enable States to identify and trace illicit small arms and light weapons. Agreed standards and procedures, as well as increased cooperation, can assist States in gaining greater control over the flow of illicit weapons into and out of their territories. In a further initiative this year, the United Nations conducted broad-based consultations with States, regional and subregional organizations, international agencies and experts in the field on further steps to enhance international cooperation to prevent, combat and eradicate illicit brokering in small arms and light weapons. I encourage Member States to ratify the Protocol against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Their Parts and Components and Ammunition, which supplements the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, thus enabling its entry into force.

74. With an estimated 15,000 new victims of anti-personnel mines each year and 50 States not yet party to the Mine-Ban Convention, the first review conference of the Convention, the Nairobi Summit for a Mine-Free World, to be held from 29 November to 3 December 2004, will be an opportune moment to redouble efforts to rid the world of these inhumane weapons. I invite those States that have not ratified the Convention to do so promptly and urge all States to participate in the Nairobi Summit at the highest possible level.

Terrorism

75. Events over the past year have underlined the continued threat that terrorism poses to international peace and security and the need for broad-based international cooperation to counter it. During this period, the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1373 (2001), known as the Counter-Terrorism Committee, continued its efforts to suppress and prevent terrorism and initiated a process of revitalization, which culminated in March 2004 with the adoption of Security Council resolution 1535 (2004), aimed at strengthening the reach and effectiveness of the Committee. In accordance with the resolution, on 14 May I appointed an Executive Director of the Counter-Terrorism Executive Directorate, which will be set up later this year.

76. During 2003, working in close coordination with the Counter-Terrorism Committee, the Terrorism Prevention Branch of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime provided legislative assistance to more than 70 countries in connection with the ratification and implementation of the 12 universal anti-terrorism conventions and the implementation of Security Council resolution 1373(2001). Following the decision of the General Assembly in 2002 to reinforce the work of the Branch, it has provided technical assistance to States, at their own request or that of the Counter-Terrorism Committee. The connection between terrorism and organized crime, as recognized in Security Council resolutions 1373 (2001) and 1456(2003), was discussed at the spring 2004 session of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination, along with the need for a global response.

77. I reiterate my conviction that the struggle against terrorism must not take place at the expense of the fundamental freedoms and the basic dignity of individuals. Success in defeating terrorism can come only if we remain true to those values which terrorists eschew. In September 2003, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights published, in cooperation with the Department of Public Information, the "Digest of Jurisprudence of the United Nations and Regional Organizations on the Protection of Human Rights while Countering Terrorism". The Office of the High Commissioner has supported the work of the Special Rapporteur on human rights and terrorism of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights and will be supporting the recently appointed independent expert of the Commission on Human Rights on the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism. The Department of Public Information has undertaken a number of activities to enhance outreach to civil society and to inform the public about United Nations activities in the area of counter-terrorism.

Sanctions

78. The Security Council has continued to refine the sanctions instrument so that it can be more effectively applied to new or evolving threats to international peace and security. Following the conclusion of comprehensive peace agreements in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Liberia, Security Council sanctions were applied with a view to ensuring that continued flows of arms did not undermine the fragile peace processes. The fact that peacekeeping operations were already under way in those countries when the Council adopted the sanctions measures has allowed United Nations military observers and other personnel to play a greater role in sanctions monitoring and enforcement. Aware of the potential unintended effects of such coercive measures on the civilian population in a targeted country, the Council again requested reports assessing the possible humanitarian consequences of United Nations sanctions on Liberia.

79. In its resolution 1493(2003), which imposed the arms embargo on the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Security Council instructed me to deploy MONUC military observers in North and South Kivu and in Ituri and to report to the Council regularly on information concerning the supply of arms, especially by monitoring the use of airstrips in that region. In the case of Liberia, the Council reviewed its existing measures and made the necessary modifications in response to the changed political situation in that country. In its resolution 1521(2003), the Security Council welcomed the readiness of UNMIL to assist the Committee and the Panel of Experts established by the resolution in monitoring the Council's relevant sanctions measures and also requested the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone and the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire to pass to the Committee and the Panel information relevant to the implementation of the sanctions.

80. During the period under review, the Security Council continued to receive detailed information regarding its sanctions regimes from expert groups responsible for monitoring compliance and investigating alleged violations of sanctions. These included the Panel of Experts and Monitoring Group on Somalia, the Panel of Experts on Liberia and the Group of Experts on the Democratic Republic of the Congo. An Analytical Support and Sanctions Monitoring Team was established pursuant to Council resolution 1526(2004) of January 2004 to replace the Monitoring Group on Al-Qaida and the Taliban. In the same resolution, the Council strengthened the mandate of the Al-Qaida and Taliban Sanctions Committee and also encouraged States to inform listed individuals of the measures imposed on them.

81. Regarding Iraq, the Security Council, in its resolution 1518(2003) of 24 November 2003, established a new Committee to continue identifying individuals and entities affiliated with the former Iraqi regime for the purpose of freezing their funds, financial assets and economic resources, which Member States are obligated to transfer to the Development Fund for Iraq.

Chapter III

Meeting humanitarian commitments

82. Since my previous report, the consolidation of peace in several areas of the world has opened windows of opportunity for alleviating suffering and rebuilding the lives of millions of affected people. At the same time, however, both new and protracted conflicts, as well as natural disasters, continue to take a toll on the world's poor, often undermining whatever progress had been achieved or creating new emergencies.

83. Humanitarian assistance continues to be unevenly allocated and its levels are insufficient to meet needs. I urge the donor community to ensure that funding for humanitarian operations is increased and is provided more consistently across humanitarian emergencies and that it better covers the needs of all sectors.

Protecting and assisting refugees and displaced populations

84. During the past year, the refugee population has decreased significantly. For the second consecutive year the figure has decreased by nearly 1 million persons, falling overall 20 per cent, from 12.1 million at the beginning of 2002 to 9.7 million at present. The total population receiving protection and/or assistance from the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees currently stands at some 17 million persons. That figure includes 9.7 million refugees and 4.2 million internally displaced persons. However, the apparent progress in the decline of refugees must be seen against the backdrop of the worldwide total of uprooted persons (including those within and outside the mandate of UNHCR), which is currently estimated at nearly 50 million, or one in every 126 persons on earth. This worldwide figure also includes more than 1.6 million refugees from the occupied Palestinian territory who continue to receive life-saving assistance from UNRWA.

85. I am pleased to report that never before have there been so many opportunities for durable solutions in so many parts of Africa with regard to the situation of refugees and internally displaced persons. In Angola, more than 3.7 million refugees and displaced persons have returned since the conflict ended in April 2002 and plans are in place to return a further 145,000 refugees this year. In Burundi, progress on the political front has enabled more than 130,000 refugees to return since the beginning of 2003. In West Africa, stabilization has led to the return of more than 240,000 refugees to Sierra Leone, including some 25,000 during 2004 alone, and the repatriation programme is expected to draw to a close at the end of this year. In Liberia, repatriation plans are being put in place for more than 320,000 refugees who fled the country, as well as for hundreds of thousands of internally displaced persons, to return once the situation stabilizes further. In the Sudan, positive developments on the political front have opened up possibilities for the eventual return of millions of refugees and internally displaced persons to the southern part of the country.

86. Despite the progress that has been made, new and lingering conflicts around the world continue to present many challenges for the humanitarian community. For example, the positive steps in the Sudan have been overshadowed by the situation in the western part of the country. More than 1 million persons have become internally displaced in the region of Darfur as a result of direct attacks on their villages and gross human rights violations, while some 170,000 persons have fled to Chad. This has given rise to regional security concerns due to cross-border incursions and the presence of armed groups in the border areas. Despite massive logistical constraints in eastern Chad, UNHCR had managed to move more than 123,000 refugees to nine new refugee camps in safer areas further inland by the end of July 2004. Outbreaks of violence in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in June 2004 resulted in thousands becoming internally displaced while more than 35,000 people fled to Burundi and, in smaller numbers, to Rwanda. The conflict in northern Uganda between government and rebel forces continues to take civilian lives and cause further displacement and increasing vulnerability. More than 1.6 million displaced persons are being sheltered in overcrowded and poorly protected camps where they remain susceptible to attack and abduction by rebel fighters, as well as abuses committed by the local security forces.

87. Outside Africa, tensions in the Middle East, South America and parts of the Balkans are also cause for concern. In Afghanistan, while more than 3.5 million refugees and internally displaced persons have returned to their homes since the end of 2001, it is estimated that there are still around 180,000 internally displaced persons and 2 million refugees remaining in both the Islamic Republic of Iran and Pakistan. Their return is hindered by the continued lack of security inside Afghanistan. In Iraq there were no massive refugee movements in 2003, but the vast insecurity that has prevailed has prevented the return of those who fled the country in previous years. The internal displacement situation in Colombia remains one of the most serious in the world today. An estimated 3 million people have been internally displaced during the country's 40-year conflict, and up to 40,000 have fled to neighbouring countries. Although the war in Kosovo ended more than five years ago, the situation remains perilous for the minority Serb and Roma populations. Clashes between Albanians and Serbs in March 2004 left more than 20 people dead and undermined expectations for more progress on minority returns.

88. Last year UNHCR launched “Convention Plus”, an important initiative aimed at strengthening the Convention relating to the Status of Refugees through the use of special multilateral agreements. The objective is to ensure that refugees receive a higher standard of protection as close to home as possible and to increase the level of State involvement as an effective system of international burden-sharing. The agreements will focus on three priority areas: resettlement as a tool of protection, a durable solution and a tangible form of burden-sharing; more effective targeting of development assistance to support durable solutions for refugees; and clarification of the responsibilities of States in the event of secondary movements of refugees and asylum-seekers from an initial country of refuge to another country.

89. Also on the protection front, violence perpetrated against refugee and internally displaced women and children continues to be a major concern. An increase in the use of sexual and gender-based violence as a tool of war has been manifested in Burundi, Chad, Côte d’Ivoire, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Darfur in western Sudan. In order to better address this growing trend, UNHCR has revised its “Sexual and Gender-based Violence against Refugees, Returnees and Internally Displaced Persons: Guidelines for Prevention and Response”. The Guidelines will ensure that better prevention and response mechanisms are put in place. They have already been distributed to a wide range of actors involved in humanitarian work for implementation in the field, and training of staff is also ongoing. Efforts to reinforce cooperation among United Nations agencies in support of children also led to the launch of “Inter-agency Guiding Principles on Unaccompanied and Separated Children” in February 2004. The Guiding Principles will, among other things, strengthen inter-agency collaboration aimed at responding to the problem of forced recruitment of refugee children and addressing family reunification of demobilized children.

90. Coping with the issue of security in the field, for both refugees and humanitarian personnel, has remained a constant challenge. Over the past year there have been a number of direct attacks against humanitarian personnel. Such incidents are often intrinsically linked to the security environment for refugees themselves. In February 2004, more than 200 people were killed in an attack on a camp for displaced persons in northern Uganda. More recently there have been incursions from the Sudan into refugee-populated areas in eastern Chad, where various armed groups are also present. The presence of armed elements in refugee camps and settlements creates a dangerous environment for humanitarian personnel and also has grave consequences for the security and welfare of refugees, including violence and forced recruitment. In June 2004, UNHCR hosted a meeting of experts in Geneva on the issue of maintaining the civilian and humanitarian character of asylum. The meeting brought together the various parts of the United Nations system, including the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, a number of international non-governmental organizations and interested Governments. Participants took stock of lessons learned from the successful process of separating Liberian combatants from refugees in Sierra Leone in 2003, which may be applicable to future cases. A set of operational guidelines, including standards and procedures for the separation of armed elements from refugee populations, will follow later this year.

91. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, through its Internally Displaced Person Unit, has continued its efforts to improve support for the implementation of a collaborative response to internal displacement. In March 2004, the Inter-Agency Standing Committee endorsed the Unit’s development of revised and updated policy guidance on a collaborative response, including the enhancement of protection capacity. To facilitate a more robust assessment and strategic support role for the Unit, the Emergency Relief Coordinator has renamed it the Inter-Agency Internal Displacement Division and appointed a new director, who will also act as his special adviser on internal displacement.

Coordinating and delivering humanitarian assistance

92. Coherent, effective and principled humanitarian response remains a priority for the United Nations. In keeping with its mandate to coordinate humanitarian response to crises, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs has continued to work closely with partner agencies and non-governmental organizations to strengthen key coordination tools and mechanisms for all phases of a crisis. This has included more consistent action to allow improved humanitarian access, information management and financial tracking of aid flows, and improved support for the coordination of protection activities. The Office has also focused increased attention on forgotten emergencies, enhanced its early warning mechanisms, contingency planning capacity and emergency preparedness, and has further strengthened the strategic planning component of the consolidated appeals process. During the reporting period, such efforts were applied to good effect in response to crises in the Islamic Republic of Iran, Iraq, West and Central Africa and the Sudan.

93. In Darfur, Sudan, massive human rights violations, including forced displacement, extrajudicial killings and gender-based sexual violence, combined with a lack of access to food and water, have left the majority of the population struggling to survive. The World Food Programme has been providing food assistance, while the United Nations Children's Fund has begun constructing and rehabilitating water systems. The World Health Organization has established a system for early warning to respond to outbreaks of disease and, together with UNICEF, is supporting health facilities and other field activities. In addition, my Emergency Relief Coordinator and the investigative missions of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights have raised the profile of this humanitarian emergency and human rights crisis by briefing the Security Council and holding several high-level meetings with donors and agencies.

94. In northern Uganda, the displaced are dispersed in well over 100 camps, to which access for humanitarian operations is severely constrained. Children suffer disproportionately in this crisis, increasingly as targets of abduction and also through the loss of security. The unique phenomenon of "night commuters", in which more than 50,000 children travel from their homes every night to seek safety in district towns, underlines the tragic humanitarian consequences of this crisis. In this highly insecure environment, WFP has, through the use of armed escorts, managed to sustain the delivery of food supplies to the vulnerable population.

95. Continued insecurity and the cumulative effects of displacement, the depletion of food stocks, the collapse of social services and stagnant economies have kept many countries around the world in need of life-sustaining assistance and have offset prospects for peace. Ongoing fighting, food shortages and weak governance continue to undermine efforts to stabilize the Central African Republic. The eastern regions of the Democratic Republic of the Congo have seen only incremental change since the war ostensibly ended, primarily because of continued efforts by Congolese actors and neighbouring countries to prevent any institution representing the general interest of the country from undermining their established interests. The area continues to be overrun by rebel groups and militias, and millions struggle to meet their most basic needs. The United Nations is working to meet those needs through efforts such as the rehabilitation of the country's water sources by UNICEF—as more than 54 per cent of the population lack access to potable water—and the support provided by WHO to local and national health authorities.

96. Drought and chronic food supply problems continued to blight Eritrea and Ethiopia. The last six months saw little change in rainfall, crop production or nutritional recovery. The need for measures to improve food security remains acute. WFP has been covering up to 50 per cent of the overall relief food requirements, reaching as many as 3.44 million beneficiaries a month. A joint UNICEF-WFP extended outreach strategy/child survival programme in Ethiopia is aimed at addressing the effect of chronic food insecurity on some 6 million to 8 million children living in the most food-insecure and drought-affected areas. WHO is working closely with the other United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations for the surveillance and control of health-related problems.

97. In Southern Africa, life expectancy in Lesotho, Malawi, Mozambique, Swaziland, Zambia and Zimbabwe has declined, from an average of 46 years in 1970 to 35 in 2004. At least one child in five in those countries is expected to be an orphan by 2010—and the ratio is even higher in some countries. A deadly combination of HIV/AIDS, food insecurity, weak governance and chronic poverty has led to a crisis of survival and the premature death of millions of people. The concerted efforts of United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations, through consolidated appeals from mid-2002 to mid-2004, have raised over $800 million, thus enabling the provision of, among other things, food assistance to more than 10 million people, nutritional support to 2 million children, measles immunization to 7 million children and agricultural support to 5.5 million farmers.

98. The integrated, multidimensional character of United Nations missions recently deployed in Burundi, Côte d'Ivoire, Haiti and Liberia creates opportunities for more coherent and effective action in post-conflict situations. Such an integrated approach seeks to advance both humanitarian relief, respect for human rights and the achievement of sustainable peace. In particular, it is essential that the impartiality and neutrality of humanitarian response is maintained in all integrated missions and that the United Nations humanitarian arm is able to fully collaborate with its non-governmental organization partners.

99. United Nations agencies have also been working to facilitate the transition from relief to development in countries emerging from conflict. A recent evaluation of United Nations transition activities in eight countries concluded that a single coherent strategy for the United Nations system was necessary to strengthen transition activities and proposed a standing mechanism to support United Nations country teams engaged in transition planning. The humanitarian and development pillars are already working together more closely to include refugees and displaced persons in transition planning and to promote durable solutions for those populations. The "4 Rs" approach (repatriation, reintegration, rehabilitation and reconstruction) launched jointly two years ago by UNHCR, UNDP and others, is now being tried in pilot projects in Afghanistan, Liberia, Sierra Leone, and Sri Lanka, and there are plans to apply it in Burundi and eventually the Sudan.

100. With the intifada in the occupied Palestinian territory continuing for a fourth year, the socio-economic hardship of the Palestinian population has been worsening as a result of Israeli actions such as closures, curfews and military operations. The emergency interventions of UNRWA continued to be an important source of assistance and stability, although the Agency remained concerned about restrictions on humanitarian access. The construction of a physical barrier in the West Bank has added another obstacle to humanitarian access and has severely affected the livelihoods of the Palestinians affected and their access to essential services. UNRWA also maintained its regular programme of education, health, relief, social and microfinance services to over 4 million Palestine refugees in Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, as well as in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Funding humanitarian emergencies

101. The message of the consolidated appeals process 2003 midyear review bears repeating: while the general underfunding of consolidated appeals may not be measurable in greater loss of life as is sometimes supposed, greater suffering and recovery denied are persistent themes in all consolidated appeals. The underfunding of humanitarian action persists in 2004, in both absolute and proportional terms. Overall funding requirements for humanitarian assistance in 2004, as registered in the consolidated appeals, totalled $2.9 billion. As at 21 July 2004, contributions totalled $928 million, which (with carry-overs) fulfils only 32 per cent of requirements halfway through the appeal period. This is lower than the response for the same period in 2003, when approximately 45 per cent of total requirements were funded. In addition, the pattern of funding humanitarian activities remains uneven, leaving some countries substantially under-financed. The response to individual consolidated appeals as at 21 July 2004 ranged from a high of 50 per cent for the northern Caucasus (Russian Federation) and Chad to lows of 16 per cent for Côte d'Ivoire and 15 per cent for Zimbabwe.

102. Overall emergency funding for UNICEF and WHO has provided them with only the minimum capacity to respond to life-sustaining needs. For example, the low level of resources has limited interventions to combat infectious diseases in some West African countries, has restricted education, protection and health-care programmes in Côte d'Ivoire and has impeded support in HIV/AIDS and education activities in Burundi, increasing children's vulnerability and risk for human rights violations.

103. UNHCR, challenged by the system of voluntary contributions, is facing a recurring shortfall in the funding of its life-saving protection and assistance programmes. As in recent years, the impact of the shortfall is being felt mainly in Africa, where the needs are the greatest. Major repatriation operations under way for Liberia and the Sudan may be hindered by a lack of adequate funding. As at the end of July 2004, UNHCR had received only $16.6 million in confirmed contributions out of $39.2 million needed for the repatriation of more than 300,000 Liberians. For the Sudan, UNHCR had received less than half of the $8.8 million needed to begin the expected repatriation and reintegration of up to 600,000 refugees currently in neighbouring countries. The slow pace of funding has also hampered the ability of UNHCR to respond to the crisis of refugees from Darfur in eastern Chad. By the end of July, UNHCR had received $27.8 million out of the $55.8 million needed to respond to the emergency in Chad.

104. The WFP Iraq operation in 2003 was the largest single humanitarian aid operation in history, requiring the Programme and its donors to marshal extraordinary food, cash and human resources. Elsewhere in the world, however, WFP had to face unprecedented needs with insufficient resources. In Africa alone, some 40 million people remained in need of food aid, with roughly $1.8 billion required. WFP struggled to meet the needs of 6.4 million people in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, covering less than 60 per cent of the operation's requirements. WFP was also forced to cut rations in half for hundreds of thousands of displaced Angolans and thousands of refugees from Ethiopia, Somalia and the Sudan.

105. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations delivered assistance in the agricultural sector valued at $190 million (of which $111 million was for Iraq). Yet in the consolidated appeals for 2003 it received less than 45 per cent of its requirements. By June 2004, less than 25 per cent of the requirements against the 2004 appeals had been received. FAO provided agricultural inputs, such as seeds and fertilizer, fishing equipment, animal feed and drugs and essential farming tools to restart agricultural production in disaster-affected areas. Where conditions allowed, input distributions were complemented by more sustainable assistance, such as local production of seeds and other planting material, restocking of farm animals, prevention and control of plant and animal diseases, quick-impact rehabilitation of infrastructure such as irrigation schemes and training in improved farming techniques.

106. The $135.8 million shortfall in contributions to the UNRWA emergency appeals for the occupied Palestinian territory was one of the Agency's prime concerns during the year, as needs in the refugee community continued to increase without sufficient resources to address them. In Gaza, UNRWA has been able to rehouse fewer than 10 per cent of the 21,000 Palestinians that have been uprooted by Israeli military operations since October 2000. Funding shortfalls have also made it difficult to maintain emergency food assistance for more than 1 million refugees and to implement the Agency's emergency job creation programme.

107. The United Nations mine action programmes received more than $50 million through the United Nations Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Action during the period covered by the present report. The Trust Fund is managed by the Department of Peacekeeping Operations. Additional funds were received through UNDP and UNICEF thematic trust funds. Shortfalls across the United Nations system compromised assistance efforts in such places as Afghanistan, Angola, Burundi, Colombia, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the occupied Palestinian territory and the Sudan. As at July 2004, there were funding shortfalls of over $60 million in Afghanistan and the Sudan alone. Contributions to the Trust Fund must be more than doubled if these shortfalls are to be met.

108. During the current reporting period humanitarian workers and operations faced continued risks, particularly in Afghanistan, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Iraq, where relief workers have been directly targeted. Security is an essential precondition for the delivery of humanitarian assistance in many areas of conflict, and thus forms an integral component of the consolidated appeals. Despite the increased security threats, donor contributions to security sector projects set out in the 2004 consolidated appeals totalled only slightly over $4 million, representing 27 per cent of the overall requirement, as at 27 July 2004. In addition, donors contributed over $6 million for special security requirements for United Nations operations in Iraq outside the consolidated appeals process. While the security sector for Iraq was fully funded, many less prominent emergencies experienced a lack of security personnel, resources and assets.

Natural disaster management

109. In 2003 some 700 disasters resulted in 75,000 deaths and economic losses of more than $65 billion. The death toll was many times higher than that for the previous year, largely because of the earthquake in Bam, Islamic Republic of Iran. In 2004 floods and cyclones in Bangladesh, China, the Dominican Republic, Haiti, India, Madagascar and Sri Lanka affected millions. It is notable that, because of their increased capacity, many of the affected countries did not require external assistance to respond to the floods in 2004. Drought and chronic food supply problems continued to blight the Horn of Africa, where crop production, nutritional recovery and the need for measures to improve food security remained acute. Between September 2003 and June 2004, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs worked with other agencies to coordinate the response to 38 major disasters due to natural or environmental hazards in vulnerable disaster-prone countries. This includes the coordination of the response to major earthquakes in the Islamic Republic of Iran (December 2003) and Morocco (February 2004), cyclone Gafilo in Madagascar (March 2004) and floods in the Dominican Republic and Haiti (May 2004).

110. I am concerned that the consequences of natural hazards pose a great challenge to achieving the Millennium Development Goals and I welcome efforts by humanitarian and development organizations to support the implementation of disaster-reduction activities at the national and local levels. Increased joint planning and collaboration has developed among UNDP, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, the United Nations Human Settlements Programme and the secretariat of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, a primary international mechanism for reducing disaster risk. This cooperation has led to specific collaborative programmes in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Ecuador and Peru, as well as regional programming covering eight Central American States. In addition, the Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction has re-focused its work to assess the effects of climate change on disaster risk reduction. It has been addressing the increasing vulnerability of urban environments, how to better support disaster response and mitigation in Africa and the continued development of risk and vulnerability information and indicators. In early 2004, UNDP launched a report entitled "Reducing disaster risk: a challenge for development". The report introduced a global Disaster Risk Index, which measures the relative vulnerability of countries to three key natural hazards—earthquakes, tropical cyclones and floods—and identifies development factors that contribute to increased risk levels. In this connection, I am pleased to note that the United Nations University has launched a programme to reduce the risk of catastrophic floods in the Asia and Pacific region by means of a comprehensive approach to reduce hazards and vulnerability.

Protection of civilians in armed conflict

111. The Organization has continued to strengthen and enhance the policy framework for the protection of civilians in armed conflict over the past year. In December 2003, the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs presented to the Security Council a ten-point platform on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, which formed the basis for my fourth report to the Council on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, submitted in May 2004.

112. There has been notable progress in the five years since the agenda on the protection of civilians in armed conflict was launched. Concerns for the protection of civilians are now more effectively integrated into the mandates of peace-keeping operations, as has been the case for the United Nations missions in Burundi, Côte d'Ivoire, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Liberia and Sierra Leone.

113. During the reporting period, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs completed a series of high-level regional workshops with senior government officials. Those workshops were used to reflect specific regional issues in developing the agenda on the protection of civilians in armed conflict and improving Member States' understanding of their own roles and responsibilities. I am pleased to see regional organizations taking up the agenda, as manifested, for example, by the decision of the African Union to appoint a special representative for the protection of civilians in armed conflict and by the decision of ECOWAS to establish a humanitarian division to address issues related to the protection of civilians.

114. The above-mentioned initiatives have been supported by collective mechanisms within the Organization, such as the Executive Committee on Humanitarian Affairs Implementation Group on the Protection of Civilians in Armed Conflict, which has provided a basis for strengthened coordination in this area. Closer coordination has led to the joint development of various tools for the protection of civilians, including an updated aide-memoire reflecting the latest concerns, trends and measures to address them (adopted by the Security Council in December 2003 as an annex to presidential statement S/PRST/2003/27).

115. The serious issue of the sexual exploitation and abuse of women and children in armed conflict by personnel employed by or affiliated with the United Nations—both civilian staff and uniformed peacekeepers—has been the focus of considerable attention since my previous report. In October 2003, I issued a bulletin entitled "Special measures for protection from sexual exploitation and sexual abuse" (ST/SGB/2003/13). The bulletin sets out minimum standards of behaviour expected of all United Nations personnel and measures necessary to maintain an environment that prevents sexual exploitation and abuse. Subsequently, implementation guidelines and tools were issued, and all parts of the United Nations system with field presences have begun working to ensure the coherent implementation of the bulletin at the field level.

Chapter IV

Cooperating for development

Achieving the Millennium Development Goals

116. During the past year, the eight Millennium Development Goals continued to provide a unifying framework for the activities of the United Nations in the area of cooperation for development. The United Nations core strategy—research, campaigning, monitoring and reporting, and country-level operations—guided the Organization's work to achieve the Goals.

117. Although the prospects for meeting the Millennium Development Goals remain uneven, the time-bound and measurable goals are still achievable by the deadline of 2015. However, this will be possible only if developed and developing countries institute the right combination of national and international policies and implement their shared commitments, as set out in the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the Monterrey Consensus.

118. In assisting Member States to achieve the Millennium Development Goals, the United Nations has adopted a holistic approach. Over the past year, the United Nations has sought to help increase the productive capacity of developing countries and countries with economies in transition through trade, investment, mobilization of resources and technology development. The Organization has also assisted vulnerable groups, such as those living in absolute poverty, women, children, youth, indigenous peoples, refugees, people living with HIV/AIDS and migrants.

119. The United Nations Development Group, comprising the operational agencies working on development, has been developing new policies and guidelines to improve the quality, effectiveness and coordination of programmes at the country level. The common country assessment and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework permit a strategic, coherent and integrated United Nations system response to national priorities and needs within the framework of the Millennium Development Goals. In 2003, 18 United Nations country teams embarked on developing common country assessment and United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks, with 18 more following in 2004.

120. Achieving the Millennium Development Goals continues to require considerable outreach and advocacy. The Millennium Campaign is raising broad-based popular support for the Goals, by working with constituencies in the industrialized countries to gather political momentum behind the eighth Goal, which calls for increased aid, meaningful debt relief and expanded access to trade and technology. In 2003, the Campaign began supporting national campaigns in developing countries, in collaboration with civil society networks.

121. The Millennium Project brings together more than 150 policy experts, development practitioners and top scholars from around the world to research alternative approaches for achieving the Goals. Looking ahead to the 2005 review of the Millennium Declaration, the Project is now working with Governments, international financial institutions and other partners to conduct a series of country-level pilot projects that will look at what each country needs in terms of policies, resources and economic growth to achieve the Goals.

122. As the General Assembly has recognized, effective monitoring of progress towards the achievement of the Goals requires operational and sustainable statistical systems. Sound, reliable and comparable statistical data are indispensable for the formulation and implementation of policies to achieve the Goals. Numerous entities of the system, notably the Statistics Division of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, under the guidance of the Inter-Agency and Expert Group on the Millennium Development Goal Indicators, have contributed to improving data quality. The Department organized workshops for national statistical capacity-building in 2003. To strengthen tracking of the Goals at the country level, the United Nations Development Group is piloting the roll-out of the DevInfo software, which was in use by 42 national statistical offices in 2003 and is being introduced in another 120 countries in 2004.

123. Science and technology are critical elements in promoting economic and social development to meet the Millennium Development Goals. Many developing countries are unlikely to meet the Goals without a clear political commitment to make science and technology a top priority. Emerging issues include access and connectivity to information and communication technologies and biotechnology, as well as technology transfer and capacity-building. Most entities of the Organization have undertaken work on information and communication technologies and have contributed to the preparatory process of the first phase of the World Summit on the Information Society and to the Summit itself. The Information and Communication Technologies Task Force and the Commission on Science and Technology for Development have played a significant role in disseminating knowledge and sharing information in the field of information and communication technologies for development.

124. Over the past year, the Organization has continued to address the challenge of building national administrative capacity in pursuit of the Millennium Development Goals. The Committee of Experts on Public Administration identified new trends in and opportunities for revitalizing public administration and governance systems to meet the Goals. The World Public Sector Report 2003: E-Government at the Crossroads highlighted the power of information and communication technologies and their use in complex environments. Analytical tools and training materials were developed in the field of capacity-building for conflict management.

125. With regard to the goal of eradicating extreme poverty and hunger, the International Fund for Agricultural Development focused on three key measures to reduce poverty in rural areas: strengthening the capacity of the rural poor and their organizations, improving equitable access to productive natural resources and technology and increasing access to financial services and markets. In 2003, IFAD approved 25 new rural development projects, for a total commitment of $403.6 million towards the achievement of those objectives. In addition, the IFAD grant programme comprised 70 grants amounting to $20.3 million.

126. Through its poverty reduction practice area, UNDP helped countries to develop poverty reduction strategies based on participatory processes, to connect the Millennium Development Goals to national budgets and to improve monitoring of the Goals. It also helped countries to explore feasible policy options and alternative views on human development and poverty reduction through broad national stakeholder consultations and to translate them into the formulation and implementation of poverty reduction strategy papers.

127. Achieving the Millennium Development Goals will reduce the incentive for people to resort to human traffickers to escape poverty. It will also contribute to durable solutions for refugees, internally displaced persons and returnees, who are among the most vulnerable people in the world. People fleeing conflict, human rights violations and persecution should be able to find protection and start their lives anew in a safe and welcoming environment. Jointly, the International Labour Organization, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, the International Organization for Migration and UNHCR are strengthening the exchange of information on migration and promoting greater policy coherence. The Department of Economic and Social Affairs contributes to the understanding of the impact of international migration by monitoring levels and trends of such migration and the policies adopted by Governments to shape those trends.

128. Activities carried out at the regional level to combat poverty included pilot projects of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia to mobilize local capacity and resources and to strengthen cooperation and collective self-reliance of selected communities in Egypt, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, leading to the creation of some 1,500 new jobs. The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, in its publication Social Panorama of Latin America 2002-2003, assessed the chances of halving extreme poverty in the region and documented the scale of undernourishment and child malnutrition as well as trends towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals in those areas.

129. Investing in agriculture and rural areas, particularly in water control technology and rural infrastructure, in food-insecure countries should be the main priority in the fight against hunger. In spite of this, FAO reported that official bilateral development assistance to agriculture from donor countries of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development fell from $4.1 billion in 2001 to $3.8 billion in 2002. In commemorating World Food Day 2003, IFAD, FAO and WFP, together with representatives of international and national non-governmental organizations, formally declared their support for the International Alliance Against Hunger, a voluntary association of civil society organizations, social and religious movements and private sector and international organizations committed to the rapid eradication of hunger in the world. More than 50 countries—both developed and developing—have expressed their intent to form or reinforce national alliances against hunger linked to the International Alliance. Through its special programme for food security, which has now been taken up in almost 100 countries, FAO has continued to help low-income food-deficit countries to improve food security at both the national and household levels. This is being achieved through rapid increases in food production and productivity on an economically and environmentally sustainable basis and by improving people's access to food.

130. Increasingly, people living in poverty are located in urban areas. In order to “urbanize” the Millennium Development Goals, UN-Habitat has implemented partial urban inequity surveys in Bangladesh, Bolivia, Egypt, Ghana, the Philippines and Turkey. The UN-Habitat publication, The Challenge of Slums: Global Report on Human Settlements 2003, presented the first-ever global estimates of slum populations.

131. Building up the indigenous private sector is essential to achieving growth and development and alleviating poverty. The Commission on the Private Sector and Development's March 2004 report, entitled Unleashing Entrepreneurship: Making Business Work for the Poor, details a range of actions that Governments, public development institutions, the private sector and civil society organizations can undertake to spur the growth of small- and medium-sized enterprises. The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development provided services to enhance the competitiveness of small and medium-sized enterprises in developing countries through its Empretec programme. The programme has already been established in over 30 countries, most recently in Angola and Guyana.

132. In 2003, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization assisted some 51 countries through integrated programmes and country service frameworks for industrial development. The aim was to improve industrial governance and institutional infrastructure, strengthen small and medium-sized enterprises, upgrade technological capacity, enhance skills and access to modern technology, build trade and export capability and adopt energy-efficient and cleaner production measures.

133. With regard to achieving universal primary education, UNICEF estimates that 121 million children are still out of school—65 million of them girls. In 2004, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization initiated a strategic review of its lead coordination role in the Education for All programme, an inter-agency initiative to help countries to achieve and sustain universal primary education of good quality by 2015, relying on the most in-depth statistical evaluation of education ever undertaken on a global scale and covering 180 countries. Among other things, UNESCO is examining ways to advance the monitoring of progress towards the Education for All goals and ways to ensure better coordination among instruments of development cooperation for the programme at the global and country levels. The Education for All Observatory at the UNESCO Institute for Statistics in Montreal continued to provide quality educational data and statistics to help guide decision makers and monitor global progress in achieving Education for All.

134. Efforts to promote gender equality and empower women continued to be an important aspect of the work of the Organization over the past year. The Regional Symposium on Mainstreaming Gender into Economic Policies (Geneva, January 2004), organized jointly by the Economic Commission for Europe and the Office of the Special Adviser on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women, provided an opportunity for exchanging experiences and good practices in selected areas of economic policy. Concrete achievements at the country level, with assistance from United Nations entities, include a growing number of government development professionals trained in gender issues and analysis, more statistical registers with gender-disaggregated data and the progressive inclusion of gender considerations in national poverty reduction strategies and budgets.

135. Progress was achieved in support of major legal instruments, for which Member States received technical cooperation from the Department of Economic and Social Affairs and other entities. The number of States ratifying the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women increased by 3 to reach 177 States parties, and ratifications of the Optional Protocol to the Convention increased by 9 to reach 60 States parties.

136. On reducing child mortality the traditional focus of UNICEF on child survival was strengthened, especially in areas with high mortality rates. Important advances were achieved in the global partnerships against polio and measles, in the development of policies for orphaned children and AIDS prevention and in increasing national focus on child protection issues. UNICEF and its partners are working to ensure the best possible start in life for children and to reduce infant mortality, but this and the other Millennium Development Goals can be achieved only when the needs of children and women are given universal priority.

137. Throughout 2003, in programme design and implementation and in policy dialogue, including dialogue on poverty-reduction strategies, the United Nations Population Fund focused attention on concrete programmes and interventions that linked population dynamics and reproductive health issues, particularly maternal health, to the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals. WHO assisted countries with especially high rates of maternal death to strengthen their health systems to build a “continuum” of care so that all women and their babies can go through pregnancy, childbirth and the post-natal period safely, irrespective of their ability to pay for health services. Such a continuum includes the development of human resources for health; the availability, access, use and quality of services; building the capacity of women, families and the community; and creating collaborative links with other key primary health-care programmes.

138. On establishing global partnerships for development, implementing the Monterrey Consensus adopted at the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development remains critical for achieving the Millennium Development Goals. As envisaged in the Consensus, on 26 April 2004 the Economic and Social Council held its second high-level meeting with the Bretton Woods institutions and the World Trade Organization. The summary by the President of the Council (A/59/92-E/2004/73) included a number of recommendations to advance the implementation of the policy commitments set out in the Monterrey Consensus.

139. In my view, increased and more equitable world trade holds forth the prospect of helping nations to achieve the Millennium Development Goals. The United Nations regional commissions provide research and technical assistance programmes focused on enhancing the capacity of their member States to integrate more effectively into the regional and world economy through sustained trade and investment.

140. The conclusion of the Fifth Ministerial Conference of WTO (Cancún, Mexico, September 2003) without substantive results was a major setback, affecting the prospects for concluding the Doha Round of trade negotiations on time. Since then, a framework agreement reached on 31 July 2004 has put the Doha Round back on track. Developing countries continue to receive support from UNCTAD and the regional commissions in those negotiations. Key challenges relate to addressing the core market access agenda of agriculture, non-agricultural products and services and fully integrating the needs and interests of developing countries concerning implementation issues and special and differential treatment.

141. The UNCTAD Trade and Development Report 2003 examined the developmental implications of new trends in the international pattern of production and investment and made a number of proposals to enhance development strategies and macroeconomic policies in developing countries. The UNCTAD World Investment Report 2003 focused particularly on the role of national policies and international investment agreements in attracting and benefiting from foreign direct investment. The investment policy reviews and related advisory services provided by UNCTAD helped countries to improve policies and institutions dealing with foreign direct investment and to increase their capacity to attract and benefit from it. During 2003 and the first part of 2004, UNCTAD completed investment policy reviews for Botswana, Ghana, Lesotho, Nepal and Sri Lanka. In collaboration with WTO, UNCTAD assisted developing countries in their negotiations on international investment arrangements, including bilateral investment treaties and double taxation treaties.

Fighting HIV/AIDS

142. The scale and destructive impact of HIV/AIDS places this pandemic at the top of the international agenda as a serious health and development issue. With dedicated efforts by social, political and religious leaders, countries such as Brazil, Cambodia, Senegal, Thailand and Uganda have seen or are beginning to see a decline in infection rates. I wish, however, to reiterate my concern, expressed in my report on progress achieved towards implementation of the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS, that few countries will meet the goals set in 2001 at the special session of the General Assembly on HIV/AIDS unless resources and efforts at all levels are increased dramatically.

143. I am happy to report that overall, agencies of the United Nations have increasingly recognized the need to strengthen and better coordinate their efforts at the country level. In 2003, WFP became the ninth co-sponsoring organization of the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS, joining ILO, UNICEF, UNDP, UNESCO, the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, UNFPA, WHO and the World Bank. The United Nations Development Group has issued new policy guidelines for resident coordinators and United Nations country teams on strengthening the response to HIV/AIDS at the country level and ensuring a unified United Nations policy and programme support. The executive heads of the co-sponsoring agencies of UNAIDS met in March 2004 in Zambia, where they underlined their commitment to coordinated action and enhanced response at the country level and endorsed a new global initiative on preventive education.

144. Globally, the number of women living with HIV now equals the number of men. In sub-Saharan Africa, women now represent 58 per cent of all HIV-infected people. This feminization of the HIV/AIDS epidemic demands an urgent response. In this respect, I welcome the launching in February 2004 by UNAIDS of the Global Coalition on Women and AIDS, which brings together a wide range of individuals and organizations under a steering committee of some 25 high-level leaders representing Governments, activist groups, United Nations agencies and academic institutions and chaired by the Executive Director of UNFPA.

145. UNESCO and UNAIDS are undertaking a participatory joint initiative to empower young people and youth organizations to take action against HIV/AIDS and related discrimination and intolerance in their communities. In 2003, a series of training workshops were held for young people in Africa and the Arab region, and small grants were provided for national and local-level youth initiatives in Bangladesh, Malawi, Mozambique, Sri Lanka and Zambia.

146. As part of a comprehensive HIV/AIDS strategy linking prevention, treatment, care and support for people living with the virus, WHO declared a global treatment emergency in 2003 and launched an initiative to treat 3 million people in developing countries with antiretroviral drugs by the end of 2005.

147. The Department of Economic and Social Affairs convened a training workshop on HIV/AIDS and adult mortality in developing countries for African specialists in September 2003, which provided a solid understanding of the broad demographic aspects of the HIV/AIDS epidemic. The Department also issued a report entitled “The impact of AIDS”, which documented the massive impact of HIV/AIDS on all sectors of society.

148. The United Nations Development Programme helped countries to mainstream the HIV/AIDS issue and implement responses to the epidemic. UNDP launched the Southern Africa capacity initiative to strengthen the capacity for health care, education and agriculture in the sub-region most affected by HIV/AIDS.

149. The programme expenditures of UNICEF on HIV/AIDS have risen rapidly, from $67 million in 2001 to $111 million in 2003. All UNICEF country offices remained involved in the fight against HIV/AIDS, regardless of the current level of incidence of the disease. The UNICEF supply operation helped more than 40 Governments procure antiretroviral drugs and diagnostic equipment.

150. In more than 140 countries, UNFPA contributed to the prevention of HIV/AIDS as part of promoting reproductive health and rights and gender equality through a strategy focused on preventing HIV infection among young people and pregnant women as well as on comprehensive condom-related programming addressing demand, a supportive environment and supply.

151. In 2003, WFP undertook HIV/AIDS interventions in 41 out of the 82 countries in which it operates, including 22 of the 25 countries in the world with the highest prevalence of HIV. Its evolving programming and analytical tools for vulnerability mapping are helping stakeholders to understand and address the links between HIV/AIDS and food insecurity.

152. Refugees with HIV/AIDS face particularly difficult circumstances in locations without sufficient access to adequate health care and social services. In December 2003, the Inter-Agency Standing Committee issued Guidelines for HIV/AIDS Interventions in Emergency Settings to address this challenge. The Guidelines serve to help concerned Governments and the international community deliver a comprehensive response to refugees with HIV/AIDS. The Guidelines recognize that during conflict situations, the combined effects of instability, poverty and social dislocation increase the vulnerability of displaced persons to HIV/AIDS. In such circumstances, women and children are particularly at risk, as they can be forced into having sexual relations in order to gain access to basic needs such as food, water or even security.

153. In 2003, UN-Habitat designed an HIV/AIDS orphan shelter programme and completed baseline surveys of the severe orphan situation in the urban slums of Kenya, Swaziland, Uganda, and the United Republic of Tanzania.

154. The United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime continued to assist Governments in the implementation of HIV/AIDS prevention and care programmes for injecting drug users through technical assistance projects, capacity-building, guidance on policy and programme development and monitoring and evaluation, particularly in Eastern Europe and Central, South and South-East Asia.

155. Over the past year, ILO continued to focus on strengthening the capacity of its constituents to contribute to national efforts against HIV/AIDS. ILO sought to ensure that national AIDS plans included the world of work and that labour policy and legislation addressed the implications of HIV/AIDS.

156. The media remains an underutilized sector and resource in the fight against HIV/AIDS. To date, the media have been seen largely as a means of distribution, but have rarely been engaged as a true partner. Therefore, in January of this year, I convened a historic meeting of the leaders of the world’s major media companies to focus on what they can contribute to the fight against HIV/AIDS. UNAIDS, the Kaiser Family Foundation and the Department of Public Information are carrying this initiative forward.

Sustainable development

157. Since the World Summit on Sustainable Development (Johannesburg, South Africa, August and September 2002), Member States have emphasized the need to achieve progress in implementing time-bound goals, targets and commitments in sustainable development. This focus on implementation has propelled the Organization’s work in support of sustainable development, including through support for capacity-building at the country level.

158. In April 2004, the United Nations Commission on Sustainable Development held its first substantive review of progress on the targets set at the World Summit. The thematic focus of the session was water, sanitation and human settlements, reflecting the priority Member States attached to those issues. The Department of Economic and Social Affairs provided full support to the Commission, assisting it in introducing innovations into the intergovernmental deliberative process to carry out an in-depth review of the three themes, in conjunction with cross-cutting issues. The Partnerships Fair organized during the session showcased some 80 partnership initiatives, providing a timely opportunity for reviewing progress, sharing experiences and networking among partners. At its twelfth session, attended by more than 100 ministers holding a broad range of portfolios, the Commission identified continuing technical and policy challenges in the area of access to safe drinking water, including effective water sector management, infrastructure investment, regulatory frameworks and local governance; in the area of sanitation, including the need to raise its political profile and funding for it; and in the area of human settlements, including the need for secure property tenure for the poor and legal recognition of women's right to property and inheritance.

159. The General Assembly, in its resolution 58/217 of 23 December 2003, proclaimed the period from 2005 to 2015 the International Decade for Action, "Water for Life", to commence on World Water Day, 22 March 2005. I consider water and its linkages to health, poverty reduction, gender equality, education, environmental protection and peace crucial to sustainable development. Water and its related issues need greater prominence, both globally and locally. Accordingly, I established an Advisory Board on Water and Sanitation, chaired by former Prime Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto of Japan and including other eminent personalities with expertise in the field, in order to raise awareness and help mobilize resources for water and sanitation programmes.

160. Through its energy and environment practice area, UNDP promoted the integration of environmental resource management with poverty reduction efforts. UNDP helped countries to strengthen their capacity to address those challenges at the global, national and community levels, seeking out and sharing best practices, providing innovative policy advice and linking partners through pilot projects that help poor people to build sustainable livelihoods.

161. The Governing Council and the Global Ministerial Environment Forum of the United Nations Environment Programme identified in March 2004 workable approaches for expediting the Millennium Development Goals and the commitments made at the World Summit on Sustainable Development. They addressed goals related to the environmental aspects of water, sanitation, human settlements and the centrality of ecosystem approaches in water management, as well as environmental threats to small island developing States.

162. Over the past year, several environmental instruments have entered into force: the Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants, the Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade and the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety to the Convention on Biological Diversity. Although there has been real progress in implementing the Convention on Biological Diversity, biodiversity itself continues to be lost at an alarming rate. In February 2004, Governments agreed on a more quantitative approach to significantly reducing the current rate of biodiversity loss by 2010.

163. UNEP also continued to foster partnerships for sustainable development, such as the Supporting Entrepreneurs for Environment and Development initiative, launched early in 2004. The initiative, a joint undertaking of UNDP, UNEP, the Stakeholder Forum and the World Conservation Union and supported by the Global Compact, advances new local partnerships in support of the Millennium Development Goals by building the capacity of nascent entrepreneurial partnerships, creating a conduit for investment in partnerships, disseminating good practices and lessons learned and generating evidence-based research to assist policy makers.

164. The first Economic Commission for Europe Regional Implementation Forum on Sustainable Development, held in January 2004, assessed the water, sanitation, and human settlements situation in the ECE region. ECE also initiated a second round of environmental performance reviews for countries with economies in transition, focusing on sustainable development. Two protocols to the ECE Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution entered into force in 2003: the 1998 Protocol on Heavy Metals and the 1998 Protocol on Persistent Organic Pollutants. The UNDP environmental governance programme initiated regional and cross-border initiatives in Eastern and Central Europe to improve economic opportunities in specific regions while supporting conservation and sustainable management of the region's natural resources.

165. The region served by the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia suffers from the inefficient use and resulting scarcity of water resources. ESCWA established the Arab Integrated Water Resources Management Network to support research and training institutes for knowledge-sharing and initiated regional cooperation in the management of shared groundwater resources among the member countries. In the energy sector, ESCWA also initiated regional cooperation to promote cross-border energy trade. With the assistance of ESCWA, Egypt, Jordan, Qatar, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen adopted new policies on energy pricing and efficiency, codes and standards and promoted the use of efficient appliances in the electric power sector and renewable electricity systems.

166. The environmental management programmes of UNIDO helped countries to address problems of industrial growth, including global warming, water and air pollution, releases of persistent organic pollutants and other toxic substances, land degradation and coastal erosion. UNIDO sought to mitigate those threats by promoting both pre-emptive measures, including the use of cleaner production technologies, and ex post measures, including end-of-pipe treatment of pollutants and other environmental clean-up measures.

167. As the lead agency for the promotion of the United Nations Decade of Education for Sustainable Development, UNESCO prepared a draft international implementation scheme in close consultation with partners from the United Nations, Governments, non-governmental organizations, civil society and individuals. The question is now before the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session under the agenda item entitled "United Nations Decade of Education for Sustainable Development".

168. The United Nations Forum on Forests continued its work on promoting and facilitating the management, conservation and sustainable development of all types of forests and providing a global framework for policy implementation, coordination and development. In 2004, the Forum considered traditional and scientific forest-related knowledge, social and cultural aspects of forests and means of implementing agreements. The Forum will review the effectiveness of the international arrangement on forests and make recommendations in 2005 to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly on the parameters of a mandate for developing a legal framework on all types of forests.

169. FAO helped Member States to build up their capacity to implement Agenda 21, the multi-sectoral action plan that emerged from the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 1992), and provided a neutral forum for international discussions on emerging issues and policy options in food and agriculture. FAO provided support to Member States focusing on strengthening regulatory frameworks for sustainable development; promoting participatory systems-oriented approaches in the management of fisheries, forestry, mountain regions and other natural resources; sharing good practices and policies; promoting an integrated approach to agriculture, forestry and fisheries; and supporting the use of information and communication technologies for development planning at all levels and for specific user groups and localities.

170. To promote sustainable urbanization, UN-Habitat launched the Managing Water for African Cities initiative at the Pan African Implementation and Partnership Conference on Water (Addis Ababa, December 2003) and also established a water and sanitation trust fund. Through the Water for Asian Cities programme, which draws upon the experience of the Managing Water for African Cities programme, UN-Habitat has established a new model for cooperation, closely linking political mobilization and capacity-building to follow-up investment in the sector by the Asian Development Bank.

171. In the field of corporate environmental accounting, UNCTAD in 2004 published A Manual for the Preparers and Users of Eco-efficiency Indicators, which standardizes for the first time the presentation and disclosure of a company's environmental performance.

172. A United Nations University study alerted the world to the growing negative environmental impacts of computers. The average 24-kilogram desktop computer with a monitor requires at least 10 times its weight in fossil fuels and chemicals to manufacture, making it five times more materials-intensive than an automobile or refrigerator. The material- and energy-intensive production process, greater adoption of personal computers worldwide and the rapid rate at which they are discarded for newer machines add to resource depletion and environmental pollution. Government incentives are needed worldwide to extend the life of personal computers and to slow the growth of high-tech pollution.

173. To build national capacity for sustainable development, the ILO International Training Centre, based in Turin, Italy, conducted some 700 training activities for 16,000 participants from 177 countries. Some 45 per cent of those activities took place in Turin, 50 per cent in the field and 5 per cent online.

Africa

174. In response to the high priority I have assigned in United Nations reform efforts to addressing the special needs of Africa, all parts of the Organization provided support for African development over the past year. The Office of the Special Adviser on Africa has been established and provides support for the implementation of the New Partnership for Africa's Development through its reporting, advocacy and analytical work. The Office continues to monitor the implementation of the recommendations of my 1998 report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa (S/1998/318). In my progress report submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session (A/58/352), I noted that while further progress had been made in the implementation of the recommendations in the past year, such progress had been slow and uneven. It concluded that African countries and the international community needed to accelerate their efforts to implement my recommendations.

175. To promote technical cooperation for the implementation of NEPAD, the Office of the Special Adviser on Africa in 2004 published South-South Cooperation in Support of the New Partnership for Africa's Development: Experiences of Africa-Latin America and the Caribbean, which examines the depth and diversity of South-South cooperation between the two regions and assesses the congruence between NEPAD priorities and existing areas of cooperation.

176. I have also appointed an independent panel of eminent persons to review and assess the scope and adequacy of international support for NEPAD, to conduct a dialogue with Africa's development partners with a view to promoting support for NEPAD and to make recommendations to me on action the international community could take to enhance support for the implementation of NEPAD and for the development of Africa. The panel is to begin its work in September 2004. The NEPAD secretariat has received institutional, technical and financial support from UNDP.

177. The prospects for peace in Africa may help to facilitate the return of millions of displaced persons. As part of integrated United Nations efforts in support of the NEPAD peace and security programme, UNHCR focuses on holistic post-conflict and recovery programmes in transition countries.

178. In November 2003 WFP signed a memorandum of understanding with NEPAD, the focus areas of which included food security, livelihood protection, nutrition, HIV/AIDS, emergency needs assessment, preparedness and response and regional capacity-building. Nearly half, or 46 per cent, of the Programme's development resources were invested in sub-Saharan Africa.

179. UNEP assisted African Governments in developing the Action Plan for the Environment Initiative of the New Partnership for Africa's Development. The African Union held a donor partners' conference (Algiers, December 2003), at which the Algiers Declaration for a Global Partnership on the Environment Initiative of NEPAD was adopted, recognizing the importance for the initiative of international assistance and national capacity-building and committing all partners and stakeholders to support the implementation phase of the Action Plan.

180. FAO has provided support to Member States in Africa in capacity-building, technical assistance and the formulation, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of policies and strategies (e.g., in Eritrea, Mozambique, Nigeria, Swaziland, South Africa and the United Republic of Tanzania), as well as in the formulation of regional programmes for food security and support for regional economic organizations. FAO has also assisted in the review and updating of national strategies for food security and agricultural development for the implementation of the NEPAD Comprehensive Africa Agriculture Development Programme. For least developed countries in Africa, UNIDO has launched the African Productive Capacity Initiative, to be implemented in the framework of NEPAD, with the objectives of increasing the share of manufactured products and services in national income, creating environmentally friendly productive entities and generating sustainable jobs.

181. Jointly with the Government of Japan, the United Nations organized in September 2003 the Tokyo International Conference on African Development. As a follow-up, the Office of the Special Adviser on Africa is assisting United Nations country teams in the preparation of projects for funding from the Japanese Trust Fund for Human Security.

182. I welcome the Economic and Social Council's initiative to assert its role in African countries emerging from conflict through the work of its ad hoc advisory groups on Burundi and Guinea-Bissau. They presented their recommendations to the Council in February 2004. The groups have called for partnerships between the authorities of the two countries and the international community and have contributed to mobilizing donor support in the critical phase of the transition from relief to development. In this context, working relationships between the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council have been enhanced, as exemplified by joint missions to Guinea-Bissau, thus contributing to promoting a comprehensive approach to peace and development, as called for in the Millennium Declaration.

183. In 2003, the strategy of UNDP for contributing to the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals in Africa sought to strengthen awareness of the Goals, to strengthen the capacity of African countries for monitoring progress towards the Goals; and to put the Goals into effect at the country level. UNDP organized two sub-regional Millennium Development Goals forums, for West Africa and Southern Africa, which reinforced the country-level campaigns and rekindled commitment to the Goals. Various governance programmes helped to create an enabling environment for the Goals and to strengthen political commitment to their achievement. UNDP also supported the efforts of many countries in Africa to incorporate the Goals in their medium-to long-term national poverty reduction strategies, including poverty reduction strategy papers.

184. The Global Partnership for Clean Fuels and Vehicles has also made substantial progress. The Partnership, focusing on sub-Saharan Africa and coordinated by UNEP, was set up to support the global phase-out of leaded gasoline as part of a commitment made at the World Summit on Sustainable Development. At a conference held at UNEP headquarters in May 2004, it was reported that over half of all petrol sold in sub-Saharan Africa was now unleaded, a dramatic increase since 2001, when virtually all petrol sold was leaded.

185. The interventions of UNFPA in Africa focused on evidence-based policy dialogue, national capacity-building for the management of population and reproductive health programmes and data for development.

186. In 2004, 63 UN-Habitat-supported projects and programmes for urban development and management were under execution in 30 countries in Africa, addressing the formulation of national housing policies and programmes, promoting appropriate building materials and technologies, improving access by the poor to basic services and promoting sustainable livelihoods.

187. The United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime continued to provide capacity-building support to the Eastern and Southern Africa Anti-Money Laundering Group and its 14 member States. The Office also completed operational research in Kenya, Malawi and Mauritius jointly with UNAIDS on drug abuse and HIV/AIDS linkages and appropriate prevention responses. The Office also provided African Governments with technical and advisory services to develop drug demand-reduction programmes in national policies.

188. ILO supported the African Union in preparing for the Extraordinary Summit on Employment and Poverty Reduction in Africa, to be held in September 2004. As a result of ILO advice, a number of poverty reduction strategy papers in Africa have incorporated issues of employment, social protection, social dialogue and principles, and rights at work.

Addressing the needs of the least developed countries, landlocked developing countries and small island developing States

189. Developments during the past year show that the most vulnerable groups of countries remain marginalized in the global economy. The targets set by the international community to assist them, in particular with regard to halving extreme poverty and hunger by 2015, seem, on the basis of current trends, unlikely to be achieved in most cases. The Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States increased its efforts to address the special needs of these three groups of countries and assisted me in ensuring coordinated follow-up of the implementation of the respective programmes of action referred to below.

190. At its high-level segment in June 2004, the Economic and Social Council adopted a ministerial declaration on resource mobilization and creation of an enabling environment for poverty eradication in the context of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010, adopted in Brussels in 2001, which renewed the call for the effective implementation of the Programme of Action and again urged donor countries to provide more than 0.2 per cent of their gross national product as official development assistance to those countries.

191. The Brussels Programme of Action remains the most comprehensive programme addressing all the special needs of the least developed countries. The establishment of national mechanisms, including national focal points, is crucial for its implementation at the national level. As at May 2004, 47 countries had identified a national focal point and 18 national forums had been established, as compared with 11 focal points and 9 national forums a year ago. Within the United Nations and other multilateral organizations, 19 entities have now mainstreamed the Brussels Programme of Action into their activities and programmes of work. Moreover, partnerships with civil society, the private sector and intergovernmental organizations have been either initiated or strengthened.

192. The landlocked developing countries received a special boost in their efforts from the International Ministerial Conference on Transit Transport Cooperation (Almaty, Kazakhstan, August 2003), which was the first United Nations conference ever to address this group's special needs. Its outcome, the Almaty Programme of Action, was the result of a participatory preparatory process involving all stakeholders, and is balanced, focused and implementable. A road map for the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action has been prepared and validated through a meeting of United Nations entities and agencies, including the World Bank Group. I have invited Member States to take advantage of the United Nations annual treaty event to become party to the conventions on transit transport.

193. Regarding the needs of the third vulnerable group, the small island developing States, the Organization continued to assist Member States in implementing, through analytical and operational activities, the Barbados Programme of Action adopted at the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (Bridgetown, April and May 1994). In April 2004, the Commission on Sustainable Development convened a three-day preparatory meeting on the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, to be held in Mauritius in January 2005.

194. The least developed countries, landlocked developing countries and small island developing States have received broad-based support from the United Nations. One of the numerous activities of UNCTAD, both analytical and operational, with regard to those countries was the publication of The Least Developed Countries Report 2004. The report assesses the relationship between international trade and poverty and identifies national and international policies that would make trade a more effective mechanism for poverty reduction in the least developed countries. The Integrated Framework for Trade-Related Technical Assistance to Least Developed Countries, consisting of six agencies—the International Monetary Fund, the International Trade Centre UNCTAD/WTO, UNCTAD, UNDP, the World Bank and the World Trade Organization—continued to support the least developed countries in their capacity development for trade. In January 2004, FAO issued a paper on FAO and the small island developing States: challenges and emerging issues in agriculture, forestry and fisheries.

195. WFP dedicated 71 per cent of its development resources to the least developed countries and 99 per cent to low-income food-deficit countries. Similarly, UNFPA devoted most of its resources and programme efforts to least developed countries and small island developing States, in particular those whose population and social development indicators fell considerably short of internationally agreed standards. UN-Habitat continued to carry out capacity-building programmes in the least developed countries, landlocked developing countries and small island developing States through its various programmes and its regional offices. The United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, jointly with the Commonwealth Secretariat, continued to provide technical assistance to several Pacific island States identified as international financial centres at high risk for money-laundering.

196. At the regional level, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, in its panel discussion on achieving the Millennium Development Goals in the least developed countries through regional development cooperation, held at its sixtieth session (Shanghai, China, April 2004), highlighted the modalities of regional development cooperation required to ensure socio-economic progress in the least developed countries. A Pacific regional workshop on urban management (Nadi, Fiji, December 2003), organized jointly by ESCAP, UN-Habitat, UNDP and the Pacific Islands Forum Secretariat, resulted in a draft Pacific Urban Agenda, which was adopted by ESCAP. ESCAP also convened the eighth session of the Special Body on Pacific Island Developing Countries in April 2004, which arrived at a set of recommendations in regard to experiences and challenges in urban management issues in Pacific island countries. As a follow-up to the Almaty conference, the Economic Commission for Europe initiated the promotion of accession to the ECE legal instruments on transport by least developed countries, and together with ESCAP convened the first Expert Group Meeting on Developing Euro-Asian Transport Linkages in March 2004, covering landlocked and transit developing countries as well as transition countries in the Euro-Asian region.

Chapter V

International legal order and human rights

Human rights development

197. As I stated in my report of September 2002 entitled “strengthening of the United Nations: an agenda for further change”, building strong human rights institutions at the country level is what, in the long run, will ensure that human rights are protected and advanced in a sustained manner. In follow-up, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations Development Group and the Executive Committee on Humanitarian Affairs have developed and adopted a joint plan of action for the period 2004-2006 designed to strengthen human rights-related United Nations action at the country level. The focus of the plan is to improve the capacity of United Nations country teams to assist Member States, at their request, in their efforts to establish and operate national human rights promotion and protection systems. Measures are being developed in the areas of needs assessment and planning, training and facilitating closer linkages between national systems and the international human rights mechanisms. The plan also includes the development of appropriate methodological tools and resource materials for use by country teams, national authorities and civil society. Specific projects are aimed at enhancing the role of national courts in human rights protection.

198. Human rights advisers have been assigned to a number of country teams. This relatively new concept has proven to be an effective way to develop human rights capacity and to support the human rights elements of peace processes as well as in conflict or post-conflict situations. OHCHR currently maintains field presences in more than 40 countries and manages some 40 technical cooperation projects and programmes in all parts of the world. Moreover, to alleviate the causes of violence and related human rights violations, as well as to combat impunity, which, if left unaddressed, can reverse or halt progress, OHCHR has been called upon to coordinate or carry out investigations into major human rights violations.

199. Progress in the protection of human rights depends on the strength of the international legal framework. It is heartening to note that the number of ratifications of international human rights treaties has continued to increase, moving us closer to achieving one of the goals of the United Nations Millennium Declaration. I would like to make a special reference to the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of their Families, the States parties to which met for the first time on 11 December 2003 to elect the 10 members of the Committee monitoring the implementation of the Convention. The Committee held its first session from 1 to 5 March 2004 at the United Nations Office at Geneva. I am convinced that the Committee has an essential role to play in a neglected area and hope that States Members of the United Nations will make every possible effort to accede to or ratify this important instrument, as well as all other fundamental international human rights treaties.

200. The work of the expert bodies established under the human rights treaties continues to be of critical importance. From the date of my last report until 1 June 2004, the Human Rights Committee, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the Committee against Torture have considered the reports of 87 States parties and adopted four general comments that clarify the meaning of the treaties and offer practical advice on their implementation. The treaty bodies have continued to harmonize their working methods and to consider means to assist States parties to fulfil their substantive commitments and meet their reporting obligations. OHCHR has developed guidelines for an expanded core document designed to streamline the reporting process for the consideration of treaty bodies.

201. The petitions procedures operating under a number of international human rights treaties offer valuable opportunities for individuals directly to seek redress for alleged violations of their rights. Over the past year, expert bodies have adopted well over 100 decisions and views on individual cases.

202. The special rapporteurs and experts (mandate holders) appointed by the Commission on Human Rights have continued to make valuable contributions to the protection of fundamental rights. Over the past year, some 90 reports submitted to the Commission by the mandate holders—as well as more than 20 reports submitted to the General Assembly—have touched upon numerous human rights themes, reminding the international community of the need to uphold domestic and international human rights standards. The mandate holders have visited more than 40 countries in the framework of their fact-finding activities. Through their numerous confidential urgent appeals and other communications to some 164 countries, the mandate holders have contributed to keeping the concerned Governments aware of the need to conform in practice with international human rights norms and standards. Those communications sought the protection of individuals whose rights had allegedly been violated with no due process of law or, more generally, drew attention to global phenomena and developments threatening the full enjoyment of human rights.

203. In addition, the Commission established new thematic mechanisms on trafficking in persons, especially women and children, and on impunity. On the latter issue, the Commission asked me to appoint an independent expert to update the 1997 Set of Principles for the protection and promotion of human rights through action to combat impunity. The newly established Special Rapporteur on trafficking is to focus on the human rights aspects of the victims of trafficking in persons, especially women and children. New special procedures mechanisms were also established by the Commission for Belarus, Chad, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Sudan and Uzbekistan.

204. At its sixtieth session, the Commission on Human Rights commemorated the International Day of Reflection on the 1994 Genocide in Rwanda. I attended this important meeting, at which I announced my Plan of Action to Prevent Genocide, in particular my intention to appoint a Senior Adviser on the Prevention of Genocide to work closely with the High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations system to ensure that we are better equipped to anticipate and prevent such horrors in the future. On 12 July, I informed the Security Council of my intention to appoint Juan Méndez to this position.

205. This year the Commission on Human Rights attracted almost 5,000 participants, including representatives of Member States, non-governmental organizations, independent experts, United Nations agencies and national human rights institutions. A total of 82 senior government officials, primarily foreign and justice ministers, attended the high-level segment opening the Commission, a significant increase over the previous year. Despite broad participation, however, there continues to be disquiet over the fact that a number of Governments accused of gross violations of human rights are elected to membership in the Commission, about the high level of politicization of the Commission's debates and about the lack of consideration of certain situations involving grave human rights violations.

206. On 1 July 2004, Louise Arbour took up her responsibilities as High Commissioner following the General Assembly's endorsement of my decision to appoint her to that post. For the past year, the Office of the High Commissioner has been ably led by Bertrand Ramcharan, following the tragic death on 19 August 2003 of Sergio Vieira de Mello, the High Commissioner for Human Rights and my Special Representative in Iraq, who was killed, along with 21 colleagues, in a terrorist attack on the United Nations headquarters in Baghdad. I take this opportunity to put on record the remarkable contribution that Mr. Vieira de Mello made to the principles and purposes of the United Nations throughout his long career as an outstanding international civil servant.

International Criminal Court

207. The International Criminal Court is now operational in The Hague. The United Nations is proud to have played an important role in its establishment and in making arrangements for the commencement of its operations. As at 31 December 2003, the United Nations Secretariat ceased to act as the secretariat of the Assembly of States Parties.

208. The second session of the Assembly of States Parties was held in September 2003. The Assembly elected the Deputy Prosecutor, the Board of Directors of the Victims Trust Fund and the remaining members of the Committee on Budget and Finance. It adopted the staff regulations of the Court as well as the 2004 budget, which signals that the Court may soon begin to carry out its judicial functions. The Assembly also established its own secretariat and a trust fund for the participation of least developed countries in its activities.

209. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 58/79 of 9 December 2003, the United Nations Secretariat has assisted in the orderly and smooth transition of work to the secretariat of the Assembly of States Parties. In accordance with the same resolution, I have also taken steps to conclude a relationship agreement to guide future cooperation between the United Nations and the Court and to facilitate the discharge of responsibilities of the two institutions under their constituent instruments. On 7 June 2004, the Acting Legal Counsel on my behalf and the Chef de Cabinet of the President of the International Criminal Court initialled the negotiated draft relationship agreement, thereby completing the negotiations at the working level. The General Assembly and the Assembly of States Parties to the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court now must approve the agreement before it can be signed and enter into force.

210. As at 23 July 2004, 94 States were parties to the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court. Although the pace of accession and ratification has slowed down, I remain confident that we can assume that the 100 mark will be reached soon. Universal participation in the Rome Statute would be an indelible contribution to the cause of justice in a world where many still commit, without punishment, egregious crimes that numb the human conscience. It should remain the ultimate goal. Once again, I appeal to those countries which have not yet done so to consider acceding to or ratifying the Rome Statute. I was pleased that, in June 2004, the Security Council did not renew the request that it had made in previous years that in the next 12 months the International Criminal Court not commence or proceed with the investigation or prosecution of any case involving officials or personnel from a contributing State not a party to the Rome Statute in respect of acts or omissions relating to an operation authorized or established by the United Nations. This development represents a significant contribution to the efforts of the Organization to promote justice and the rule of law in international affairs.

International Tribunals

International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia

211. The International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia has continued to implement the completion strategy endorsed by the Security Council in its resolutions 1503(2003) and 1534 (2004). The three trial chambers operate at full capacity, hearing six cases simultaneously and preparing to begin new cases as soon as ongoing cases are completed. On 6 April 2004, the judges amended rule 28 (A) of the Tribunal's Rules of Procedure and Evidence to comply with the Security Council's directive in its resolution 1534 (2004) that indictments concentrate on the most senior leaders suspected of being most responsible for crimes within the Tribunal's jurisdiction.

212. The Tribunal has taken an active role in preparing domestic judicial institutions in the States of the former Yugoslavia for the referral of cases from the Tribunal. The Tribunal hosted a donors' conference on 30 October 2003 that raised 15.7 million euros for the planned war crimes chamber within the State Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina, a project endorsed by the Security Council in its resolutions 1503(2003) and 1534(2004). The Chamber, which is being established by the Office of the High Representative for Bosnia and Herzegovina, is expected to be operational by January 2005 and, provided adequate detention facilities are available, should be able to receive cases referred by the Tribunal shortly thereafter. The Tribunal is also engaged in a number of initiatives designed to share expertise and information with the national authorities of Croatia and Serbia and Montenegro in order to facilitate the possible referral of cases to domestic jurisdictions in those States.

213. Six trials, involving a total of eight accused, are under way in the Tribunal's trial chambers. An additional 20 cases, involving 34 accused, are in the pre-trial phase. The total number of guilty pleas has risen to 18. Some of the accused pleading guilty have provided important evidence about the crimes they committed and events they witnessed. The trial chambers have rendered 14 judgements during the past year, and the Appeals Chamber has rendered 3. Four hundred and ten witnesses have testified. As at 20 July 2004, 59 persons were being detained at the Tribunal's detention facility. The Tribunal has transferred two convicted persons to Member States to serve their sentences: one to Austria and one to Norway.

214. Nearly 20 indictees, including some former high-ranking military and political officials, notably Radovan Karadzic, Ratko Mladic and Ante Gotovina, remain at large. The full cooperation of the international community, especially the States of the former Yugoslavia, remains essential in order to accomplish the Tribunal's mandate, complete its operations on time and have a lasting impact on the rule of law in the former Yugoslavia. On 4 May 2004, the President of the Tribunal reported to the Security Council the consistent failure of Serbia and Montenegro to comply with its obligations under article 29 of the Tribunal's Statute and rule 39 of its Rules of Procedure and Evidence. That report stated that the level of Serbia and Montenegro's cooperation with the Tribunal had started to fall off after the December 2003 elections in that country and had now reached the point where it was almost non-existent.

International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda

215. The International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda has worked to achieve the goals set out in Security Council resolution 1503(2003), in which the Council urges it to complete investigations by 2004, trials by 2008 and appeals by 2010. The Tribunal has now rendered 17 judgements involving 23 accused. The trials of 19 accused are under way at different stages. The judicial capacity of the trial chambers was increased following the Security Council's grant of ad litem judges, nine of whom can now operate at any given time. Additional measures have been taken to streamline the judicial process. So, for example, a Trial Committee, composed of representatives of the Chambers, the Prosecution and the Registry, is now in place and is responsible for planning and streamlining pre-trial proceedings so as to ensure that cases are ready for trial on schedule.

216. Following the adoption of Security Council resolution 1503(2003), a separate position of Prosecutor was established for the Tribunal. The Prosecutor has reviewed the cases and determined which should be pursued before the Tribunal and which could be transferred to national jurisdictions for prosecution. Concrete steps are now being taken to assess the suitability of some national systems, including that of Rwanda, to adjudicate cases in compliance with international standards.

217. The Registry continues to provide support to the other organs to facilitate their work. Reform of the legal aid system is under way in order to control unnecessary or excessive defence fees. The Registrar has signed agreements on the enforcement of sentences with France, Italy and Sweden, and is working towards the early conclusion of similar agreements with other countries, including Rwanda.

Special Court for Sierra Leone

218. In the past year the Special Court for Sierra Leone has continued to lay the groundwork for the start of trials of those alleged to bear the greatest responsibility for the atrocities committed during the conflict in that country. On 16 September 2003, the Special Court issued its latest indictment and arrest warrant against Santigie Borbor Kanu, who was arrested while in the custody of the authorities of Sierra Leone awaiting trial for treason and transferred to the detention facility of the Special Court. To date, the Special Court has approved 13 indictments. On 5 December 2003, the Prosecutor withdrew the indictments against Foday Sankoh and Sam Bockarie in view of their deaths. Two indictees, Johnny Paul Koroma and Charles Taylor, remain at large, and nine are detained in the custody of the Special Court, all of whom have pleaded not guilty.

219. On 28 January 2004, the trial chamber issued decisions as a result of which three trials, instead of nine separate ones, will be held involving the nine accused who are currently in the custody of the Court. The trials in the cases of the Civil Defence Forces and the Revolutionary United Front started on 3 June and 5 July 2004 respectively. The trial in the case of the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council is expected to start in the autumn of 2004, when a second trial chamber will be appointed.

220. The Special Court's progress has been achieved against constant funding insecurity and fiscal constraints. The funding requirement of $19 million for the first year of operation (July 2002–June 2003) were met entirely through voluntary contributions. However, during the past year it has become apparent that pledges and contributions from a group of interested States would not be sufficient to fund operations for the minimum three-year timeline, which I had previously indicated as being necessary for the investigation, prosecution and trial of a very limited number of accused. As a result of the continuing funding uncertainty, in March 2004 I sought a subvention from the General Assembly of $40 million for completion of the Court's work—$16.7 million for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2004 and the remaining $23.3 million for 2005. By its resolution 58/284 of 8 April 2004, the General Assembly authorized a subvention of up to $16.7 million from the regular budget appropriations for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2004. I will report to the Assembly at its fifty-ninth session on the status of this subvention and seek approval for release of the balance.

221. After only two years of operation, the Special Court is already preparing for the post-trial phase by working on its completion and exit strategies. These will include winding down its core activities, devising mechanisms to continue necessary residual activities and leaving behind a legacy of accountability for violations of international humanitarian law. In addition, it is hoped that there will be a contribution to legal reform efforts in Sierra Leone through the dissemination of information regarding the Special Court's work and the transfer of expertise, equipment and facilities to the local legal community.

Enhancing the rule of law

222. On 24 September 2003, the Security Council held its first general consideration of the topic of justice and the rule of law. In a statement to the Council, I shared a number of lessons that the Secretariat has learned from its experience over the years in dealing with post-conflict situations and trying to help rebuild shattered societies. Foremost among those was that we must make the rule of law and justice central objectives of our peace operations, for when people do not feel safe from crime or confident that past injustices are being redressed, they will lose faith in a peace process and that process will ultimately fail. As far as re-establishing the rule of law is concerned, I noted that we cannot focus, as we sometimes have in the past, solely on rebuilding law enforcement institutions. Instead, we must take a comprehensive approach that encompasses the entire criminal justice process—police, prosecutors, defence lawyers, judges, court administrators and prison officers. A second major lesson I recalled was the need to avoid a “one-size-fits-all” approach. Rather, we must tailor solutions to local circumstances and traditions. We must also resist the temptation to think that we know best, but must involve local actors from the start and try to help them to find their own solutions. As for the pursuit of justice, I identified two major challenges. First, there is a need to look beyond questions of individual responsibility for serious crimes and to give greater consideration to meeting the needs both of victims and of the wider societies from which they come. This may mean that we will need, on occasion, to supplement criminal trials with other mechanisms, such as truth commissions, commissions of inquiry and reparation programmes. The second major challenge is how to resolve the demands of justice and of reconciliation when they compete. As I noted, the relentless pursuit of justice may at times be an obstacle to peace, making it difficult to reach an agreement that will stop the bloodshed or placing a delicate and hard-won peace agreement in peril. That might mean that we sometimes must accept less than perfect justice or will need to devise alternatives to prosecutions, such as truth and reconciliation processes, or will have to put off the day when we bring the guilty to trial. At other times we might need simply to accept the risk to peace in the hope that, in the long term, a peace that is founded in justice will be more secure and likely to endure.

223. In August 2004, I submitted a report to the Security Council identifying a number of further practical lessons that we in the Secretariat have learned in this field which the Council might apply and build upon in its future work. Central among those were a number of precepts or ground rules that I suggested the Organization should adhere to when negotiating peace agreements and adopting mandates for its operations. Among them were the need to reject any amnesty for genocide, war crimes or crimes against humanity and ensure that any amnesty already granted for those crimes is not a bar to prosecution before any court created or assisted by the United Nations; to avoid establishing or participating directly in any tribunal that can impose capital punishment; to ensure that all courts created or assisted by the United Nations are structured and organized in a way that will ensure that the process of prosecution and trial is credible, that it complies with established international standards regarding the independence and impartiality of the judiciary, the effectiveness, impartiality and fairness of prosecutors and the integrity of the judicial process; to consider, where mixed tribunals are envisaged and there are no clear guarantees regarding the real and perceived objectivity, impartiality and fairness of the national judiciary, insisting on a majority of international judges and an international prosecutor; to recognize and respect the rights of victims and ensure that relevant processes include specific measures for their participation and protection; to recognize and respond to the differential impact of conflicts and international crimes on women; and to ensure that initiatives for the restoration of the rule of law and transitional justice mechanisms are adequately resourced through viable and sustainable funding mechanisms, including, where United Nations-sponsored tribunals are involved, at least partial funding through assessed contributions. I also announced my intention to instruct my Executive Committee on Peace and Security to propose concrete action on the matters discussed in my report, with a view to strengthening United Nations support for transitional justice and the rule of law in conflict and post-conflict countries.

224. In September 2003, I appointed a full-time coordinator to secure and organize the assistance that the United Nations is to provide to the Government of Cambodia under our June 2003 agreement on the establishment of extraordinary chambers within the existing courts of Cambodia for the prosecution of serious violations of Cambodian law and international law committed during the period of Democratic Kampuchea. To form a better picture of the probable requirements of the extraordinary chambers, I sent a planning mission to Phnom Penh in December 2003 and another in March 2004. As a result, agreement was reached with Cambodia on a range of key planning parameters. Suitable premises for a courtroom and accommodation for the related institutions and support services have also been identified and detailed budget estimates prepared. I shall soon be launching an appeal to States and will be reporting in depth to the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session on progress achieved. Meanwhile, with a new Government in place, the Cambodian authorities have assured me that ratification of the agreement will be a priority on the agenda of the National Assembly.

225. During the past year, five new multilateral treaties were deposited with me, bringing the total number of active treaties deposited to 510. Ten treaties, related to human rights, health, transnational organized crime and the environment, entered into force. The annual treaty event that I initiated in 2000 will this year be entitled "Focus 2004: treaties on the protection of civilians". In March, I invited Governments to participate in the event, to be held during the fifty-ninth session of the General Assembly. I have pledged to provide requesting States with the legal technical assistance necessary to participate in the multilateral treaty framework. The Office of Legal Affairs jointly with the United Nations Institute for Training and Research offers biannual training on treaty law and practice at Headquarters. In 2003, this training was expanded to the regional level. To enhance knowledge of the technical aspects of treaties deposited with me, a new Handbook of Final Clauses has been published to complement the existing Treaty Handbook. Contributing to the wide dissemination of treaty-related information, the United Nations Treaty Collection on the Internet provides on a daily basis the updated status of all treaties deposited with me. This site now receives over 1.7 million hits per month.

Legal affairs

226. The International Law Commission completed its first reading of draft articles on diplomatic protection and advanced its work on reservations to treaties. It also made progress on the other topics on its agenda, including international liability in case of loss from transboundary harm arising out of hazardous activities; responsibility of international organizations; shared natural resources; unilateral acts of States; and fragmentation of international law. The Ad Hoc Committee established pursuant to General Assembly resolution 51/210 of 17 December 1996 was reconvened and continued its efforts to elaborate a draft comprehensive convention on international terrorism and a draft convention for the suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism. Meanwhile, by its resolution 58/74 of 9 December 2003, the General Assembly decided to reconvene the Ad Hoc Committee on Jurisdictional Immunities of States and Their Property with a mandate to formulate a preamble and final clauses with a view to completing a convention on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property. In March 2004, the Ad Hoc Committee adopted the text of a draft convention, which it recommended for adoption by the Assembly.

227. At its session in 2004, the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law adopted a legislative guide on insolvency law. The objective of the guide is to assist national authorities in preparing new laws and in reviewing existing laws to establish an effective legal framework to address the financial difficulties of debtors, thereby providing market certainty and promoting economic growth and stability. The Commission is also preparing international standards in the fields of secured credit, arbitration, electronic contracting, transport and Government procurement law. In the past year, the International Trade Law Branch of the Office of Legal Affairs, which received additional resources to address an increased workload, particularly in the area of training and legal assistance, continued to assist the Commission, whose membership was increased from 36 to 60 States.

228. With respect to the law of the sea, the fifth meeting of the Open-ended Informal Consultative Process on Oceans and the Law of the Sea discussed how States could better address the increasing threats to biodiversity in areas beyond national jurisdiction. In relation to the request by the General Assembly to establish a regular process for global reporting and assessment of the state of the marine environment, including socio-economic aspects, an international workshop was held in conjunction with the fifth meeting of the Consultative Process. This represented the first opportunity for States to discuss the practical implications of the establishment of a global marine assessment process. Inter-agency cooperation and coordination to address all these issues has been enhanced by the establishment of the Oceans and Coastal Areas Network (UN-Oceans), the general mechanism for inter-agency cooperation in ocean affairs. The date 16 November 2004 marks the tenth anniversary of the entry into force of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea. One hundred and forty-five States are now parties to the Convention, demonstrating the considerable progress that has been made towards universal participation.

229. During the past year, the Office of Legal Affairs provided advice on legal issues arising from the situation in Iraq, including on relevant Security Council resolutions and the question of Iraq's representation in the United Nations, as well as on the activities of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq, the winding-up of the oil-for-food programme and the transfer of responsibility for the programme to the Coalition Provisional Authority.

230. The Office provided procedural advice to the tenth emergency special session of the General Assembly, which ultimately requested the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion on the legal consequences of the construction by the occupying Power of a wall in the occupied Palestinian territory. The Office prepared a dossier of relevant documents and assisted in the preparation of my written statement to the Court.

231. With respect to the International Tribunals, the Office provided advice in relation to requests for access to documentary evidence and witnesses. It also assisted the Management Committee of the Special Court for Sierra Leone on legal and operational aspects of the Court. The Office provided support to peacekeeping missions and assistance with respect to the establishment of a number of new and expanded operations, including the United Nations Mission in Liberia, the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire, the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti and the United Nations Operation in Burundi.

232. The Office also provided advice on a wide range of other matters of concern to the Organization, including personnel reform, procurement practices and guidelines on cooperation with the private sector. It continued to draft and negotiate a series of complex contracts for the capital master plan and a related security-strengthening initiative for the Headquarters complex in New York.

Chapter VI

Management

Administration and management

233. The Organization continued its efforts to improve client servicing and place a stronger emphasis on delivering results. An Organization-wide client survey of services provided by the Department of Management was carried out to es-establish benchmarks against which future performance can be measured. The survey revealed that while respondents viewed recent efforts to upgrade the management of services as being headed in the right direction, there was much room for improvement, particularly with respect to client focus and meeting client needs, enhanced consultation with clients in the policy-making process and flexibility in the application of policies and rules. An important development was a retreat in May 2004 that brought together all the chief administrative officers from offices away from Headquarters and senior Headquarters administrative staff. This has led to mechanisms being put in place for increased dialogue and closer collaboration in the area of administration and management.

234. Practical steps have been taken to improve high-priority administrative services. In view of increased security threats, the Organization's ability to respond quickly and effectively to crises has been enhanced by building up its capacity to deal with the needs of staff, their families and others who may be affected. The administration of justice has become more efficient through the assignment of additional resources and streamlining procedures, which has led to significant reductions in case backlogs.

Information and communication technology services

235. The information and communication technology strategy (A/57/620) to ensure efficiency, automation and coordination in the Organization's internal decision-making is being implemented, and a Project Review Committee has been established to enforce standards on all initiatives in the area of information and communication technology and to ensure that all related investments are justified. The United Nations is upgrading its global information and communication technology network to make it more robust and sufficiently powerful to support multimedia applications such as desktop videoconferencing. Network security risk assessments have been undertaken to mitigate security risks at four duty stations.

Security and safety services

236. In view of significantly increased threats to the United Nations and its staff, the Organization undertook a number of initiatives to enhance security at Headquarters and field offices. Measures in New York include the replacement of the perimeter fence and the development of an electronic access control system. The development of a system-wide standardized access control system is under way. To ensure a safe and secure working environment, risk assessment, mitigation measures and strategies in the form of Headquarters minimum operating security standards were developed and established in January 2004. All United Nations system offices at Headquarters have agreed to adhere to the standards.

237. In the wake of the attack on the United Nations office in Baghdad on 19 August 2003, the Department of Management worked very closely with the United Nations Security Coordinator, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and the Department of Political Affairs to compile an implementation plan to improve crisis response on the basis of lessons learned. Recommendations cover the areas of disaster preparedness and planning, formulation of clear definitions of roles and responsibilities, development of emergency procedures, creation of a full inventory of operational response capabilities, proper selection and training of crisis response personnel and dedicated follow-up on administrative matters.

238. Training programmes on security have been instituted, including one on basic security in the field, which is mandatory for all staff. Increased security awareness of staff before and during a crisis has been promoted through a hotline, a web site and an emergency preparedness booklet, and post-crisis support programmes for staff are provided by the Staff Counsellor's Office.

Common support services

239. The United Nations Global Marketplace, a common Internet-based supplier registration and database facility that is expected to become a "one-stop shop" for all United Nations-related procurement information for both procurement professionals in the Organization and the public, was launched in February 2004. The consolidation of requirements and direct negotiations with manufacturers and developers rather than the retailer have led to global arrangements, that benefit all United Nations system organizations, thus avoiding duplication of effort and providing improved volume discounts, increased control over the procurement process, elimination of non-value-added tasks and reduction of long purchase cycles. Particularly beneficial are travel-related contracts and contracts for information technology and telecommunications (software and hardware), office supplies, vehicles and security-related equipment. New office facilities are being built in Addis Ababa, Nairobi and Santiago to ensure that disparate offices are situated in one location in line with the "United Nations House” concept. In terms of security, they will conform to the new electronic access control system and the Headquarters minimum operating security standards.

Human resources management

240. Implementation of the integrated human resources management reform programme continued with human resource practices and procedures being further refined in order to meet the needs of programme managers and staff at large. Particular emphasis was given to supporting the new staff selection system, which incorporates recruitment, placement, promotion and managed mobility. Information technology tools have been leveraged with the Organization-wide roll-out of a fully electronic Performance Appraisal System (e-PAS), the further development of the electronic Human Resources Handbook and enhancements to the Galaxy tool, which supports the staff selection system. The Office of Human Resources Management continues to work in partnership with department heads in developing and monitoring human resources action plans, which set departmental goals related to, among other things, geographical distribution, gender, staff development and PAS compliance.

241. The core values and competencies have now been incorporated into all aspects of human resources management, including recruitment, performance management, career development and learning. Major emphasis has been placed on developing a culture of continuous learning, building leadership and management capacity, providing guidance for staff and managers on emergency preparedness and supporting career development and mobility for staff at all levels. Increased attention has been paid to the work-life agenda, including the design and implementation of worksite wellness programmes, further implementation of the United Nations policy on HIV/AIDS, the introduction of flexible working arrangements and the provision of expanded staff counselling and advisory services.

Capital master plan

242. The United Nations has entered into contracts for the design development phase of the refurbishment of the Headquarters complex. They cover various design services related to infrastructure, architecture and engineering, as well as measures to strengthen security. In February 2004 the United States of America, as the host country, extended a provisional offer, subject to approval by the United States Congress, of an interest-bearing loan of $1.2 billion to finance the capital master plan. Subsequently the host country proposed alternative repayment scenarios for consideration by the General Assembly. Preparatory work is moving ahead, and an architect has been selected for the design and construction of the new building south of Headquarters that would serve as alternate accommodation during the renovation phase.

Financial management

243. The results-based-budgeting framework has continued to be further refined to improve managerial accountability, including the introduction of the new two-year strategic framework to replace the medium-term plan and a redesigned programme performance report.

244. A worrisome development during the past year has been the deterioration in the financial situation of the International Tribunals for the Former Yugoslavia and Rwanda, with an increasing number of Member States failing to pay their assessed contributions. Unless Member States respond positively and promptly by paying their dues, the future of the Tribunals may be jeopardized.

245. The payment of regular budget contributions has also fallen behind in comparison with the previous year, with the amount unpaid at the end of 2003 totalling $441.7 million, versus $304.7 million at the end of 2002. Only 127 Member States had paid their assessed contributions in full by the end of 2003. Those developments, together with recent decisions of the General Assembly that surplus balances from closed peace-keeping missions should be returned to Member States, have severely curtailed the level of available cash. Under these circumstances, full and timely payments by Member States become even more necessary in order to not affect the mandated operations of the United Nations.

Accountability and oversight

246. This year marks the tenth anniversary of the establishment of the Office of Internal Oversight Services, which was created by the General Assembly in July 1994 to enhance oversight functions within the Organization. The Assembly will conduct its second five-year evaluation and review of the functions and reporting procedures of the Office at its fifty-ninth session. To assist the Assembly, the Office undertook a comprehensive internal assessment of its activities, concluding that while the quality of its activities had improved over the past five years, there was a need to strengthen coordination of oversight reports in the Secretariat to enhance the impact of recommendations and overall accountability.

Monitoring, evaluation and consulting

247. Intensive training of managers and staff carried out by the Office of Internal Oversight Services contributed to the strengthening of results-based management. The format and content of my report on the programme performance of the United Nations for the biennium 2002-2003 (A/59/69) were substantially improved to showcase the key results achieved under each programme and subprogramme of the Organization's programme budget.

248. In its evaluation of the recent restructuring of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (A/58/746), the Office of Internal Oversight Services concluded that the reform was on the right track but that more time was needed for its impact to be realized fully. Among other things, the Office recommended improving personnel management, institutionalizing best practices and implementing information management and technology objectives.

249. The Office of Internal Oversight Services continued to provide consulting services to Secretariat departments to assist them in changing their work processes and structures, including by completing a report on the integration of global management in conference services (A/59/133) and assessments of the children and armed conflict programme and the human resources reform programme.

Internal audit

250. The Office of Internal Oversight Services conducted approximately 100 audits and issued five reports to the General Assembly covering a wide range of issues, including peacekeeping operations, the activities of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, procurement and programme management. As a result of its audit of the Headquarters Committee on Contracts, the Office of Internal Oversight Services made recommendations for improving the efficiency of the review process (A/58/294). In its report on the audit of the Office of the Prosecutor of the International Tribunals for Rwanda and the Former Yugoslavia (A/58/677), which was still a joint office at the time, it recommended strengthening planning and monitoring activities and expediting the recruitment of senior officials. Two audit reports submitted to the General Assembly dealt with the administration of peacekeeping trust funds (A/58/613) and the policies and procedures for recruiting Department of Peacekeeping Operations staff (A/58/704).

Investigations

251. In September 2003, the Investigations Division of the Office of Internal Oversight Services opened a new office at the United Nations Office at Vienna. Approximately 90 per cent of cases investigated by the Division are located away from Headquarters. With the move of most of the Headquarters-based investigators to the new location, the Division has been able to realize substantial cost savings and be in closer contact with many of the offices for which it conducts investigations.

252. At my request, an investigation was conducted into allegations that the United Nations had possession of a cockpit voice recorder ("black box") from the Falcon 50 aircraft that was carrying the Presidents of Rwanda and Burundi when it crashed on 6 April 1994, precipitating the Rwandan genocide. A cockpit voice recorder had indeed been stored at the United Nations since 1994, but the investigation revealed that it was not from the presidential aircraft and did not contain any relevant information about the crash of that aircraft.

253. The Investigations Division is leading the Investigation Task Force in Kosovo, which was established as a result of last year's investigation into the fraudulent diversion of $4.3 million by a senior staff member of the reconstruction pillar of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (see A/58/592 and Corr.1). As a joint investigative body, the Task Force is mandated to initiate, conduct and coordinate investigations to identify fraud and corruption involving funds from the Kosovo consolidated budget. The Anti-Fraud Office of the European Union and the Financial Investigation Unit of UNMIK, composed of police from the Guardia di Finanza of Italy, are the other members of the Task Force. This initiative is being run in close collaboration with the senior management of UNMIK so that corrective action can be taken promptly.

254. On 21 April 2004, I appointed a high-level Independent Inquiry Committee to investigate allegations of impropriety in the administration and management of the oil-for-food programme in Iraq. To ensure a thorough and meticulous inquiry, the members of the Committee have access to all relevant United Nations records and information and the authority to interview all relevant officials and personnel. The Committee is authorized to obtain records and interviews from persons unaffiliated with the United Nations who may have knowledge relevant to the inquiry and to seek cooperation from Member States in the conduct of its inquiry. I was encouraged by the unanimous welcoming of the Committee's appointment by the Security Council through its resolution 1538(2004) and its calling upon the Coalition Provisional Authority, Iraq and all other Member States, including their national regulatory authorities, to cooperate fully with the inquiry.

Strengthening the Organization

255. The implementation of my agenda for further change, submitted to the General Assembly two years ago, is now largely complete. Last autumn, I submitted a progress report to the Assembly at its fifty-eighth session (A/58/351), along with a number of subsidiary reports on specific reform proposals. The programme budget proposal for the biennium 2004-2005 debated by the Assembly last autumn reflected an alignment of activities of the Organization with the priorities agreed upon at the Millennium Summit and the global conferences of the 1990s. It also reflected a major reorganization of two large departments—the Department for General Assembly and Conference Management and the Department of Public Information—and the discontinuation of a large number of reports, meetings and activities of marginal utility. In terms of resources, more than $100 million was reallocated within or between programmes and significant increases in the funds dedicated to information and communication technology and staff training were approved.

256. Reporting is one area in which measurable improvements have been made. Efforts to consolidate reports for the fifty-eighth session of the General Assembly resulted in a 13 per cent reduction in the number of reports. An additional reduction of 16 per cent is proposed for the fifty-ninth session. In the area of public information, the structural changes made to the Department of Public Information are beginning to show results—with more focused attention being given to priority activities and better leveraging of technology. A single regional information hub was established in Brussels in January 2004, replacing nine under-resourced and disparate centres located throughout Western Europe. Further efforts to consolidate the network of information centres in other regions will proceed in the coming year.

257. With regard to the planning and budgeting system, a two-year strategic framework replaced the four-year medium-term plan. The first proposed strategic framework, for the period 2006-2007, will be submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session. In addition, processes for programme planning and resource allocation are now better aligned and the inter-governmental review process has been streamlined. The budget document for 2004-2005 was considerably shorter than in previous bienniums and was better presented. In late 2004, Member States were also expected to consider specific measures to improve the system of monitoring and evaluation, another important element in the planning and budgeting cycle.

258. The reforms introduced in the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights are described in some detail in chapter V, including proposed measures to strengthen national protection systems, improve treaty implementation and enhance the management of the Office. The question of strengthening support for rapporteurs and the special procedures system remains a priority policy issue. The new High Commissioner will address this and other concerns, in particular as regards the staffing of her Office, in the coming year.

259. Two major reports arising out of the 2002 reform package were completed in the past year: one that clarifies the Organization's roles and responsibilities in technical cooperation on a number of selected issues and the other reflecting the work of the Panel of Eminent Persons on United Nations–Civil Society Relations. Considerable follow-up work will be needed, particularly on the latter report, since the Panel's recommendations have important institutional and systemic implications for the United Nations. Chapter VII contains additional details on the Panel's findings and proposed next steps.

260. The funds and programmes have made further progress in strengthening their presence at the country level. Measures include the development of guidelines for joint programming and identification of lessons learned in countries emerging from conflict. Modalities for the joint management of resources, knowledge-sharing systems and strengthening of the resident coordinators are being developed.

261. A comprehensive report on the progress made to implement the 10 building blocks of the Organization's human resources strategy will be considered by the General Assembly in late 2004. Concerning specific proposals contained in the 2002 package, implementation is in progress. For example, measures to harmonize contracts and benefits for staff in the field have been developed; however, the financial impact of those proposals is still under review. Practical measures to improve opportunities for General Service staff are being developed, within the restrictions imposed by recent resolutions of the General Assembly. A review of delegated authority has pointed to the need for more explicit guidance from the Department of Management on management and administrative functions. Better systems of monitoring are also anticipated—including the reconfiguration of the Organization's Accountability Panel—and more attention will be given to managerial training.

262. I would also like to draw attention to a recent review conducted by the General Accounting Office of the United States Government on the progress of United Nations reform. It is encouraging to note that, at the time of its review, the Office estimated that 85 per cent of the reforms proposed in the 1997 and 2002 reform packages had been either fully or partly implemented.

Chapter VII

Partnerships

Communication

263. As detailed in my previous report on the work of the Organization, the Department of Public Information has undergone a major reorganization of its priorities, structures and processes. Its new operating model is based on the premise that its role is to manage and coordinate the content of United Nations communications and to strategically convey this content to achieve the greatest public impact. Through the reorganization process, the Department has acquired the tools it needed to deliver on the challenges I set for it in my 2002 report entitled "Strengthening of the United Nations: an agenda for further change (A/57/387 and Corr.1)". After a period of transition, initial problems with the new structures and processes have been overcome. The reformed and restructured Department now understands what is expected of it, is mastering the means to deliver on those expectations and has gained practical experience in their execution. It is ready to apply the lessons learned, as well as its new-found confidence, to further improve the products and services it offers.

264. In December 2003, through its resolution 58/101 B, the General Assembly endorsed my proposals regarding the rationalization of the network of United Nations information centres around the world and laid out a clear sequence of steps to be undertaken by the Department of Public Information to implement those proposals. The first such step was the creation of a regional United Nations information centre for Western Europe, established on 1 January 2004 in Brussels immediately following the closure of nine Western European information centres on 31 December 2003. With the establishment of this modern and adequately resourced centre, the Organization will, for the first time, be able to properly implement a robust, coherent and coordinated public information outreach programme throughout Western Europe.

265. I have asked the Department of Public Information to review the Western European experience to derive lessons that may be valuable as we continue the process of regionalization of the United Nations information centres. It is clear that the regional model that will ultimately be applied in the developing world will differ from that used in Western Europe, as the needs of each region are different. At this stage, I envisage the establishment, in consultation with Member States, of a significant number of smaller hubs in key media centres throughout the developing world, with sites chosen and resources allocated in such a way as to ensure that distance and linguistic diversity do not hamper their operations.

266. A feature of United Nations information activities over the past 12 months was the establishment of small expert groups to deal with the public information consequences of emerging crises. These groups, generally with participants from the Department of Public Information and the relevant substantive offices of the Secretariat, are guided by senior management and provide strategic advice and guidance on how we might publicly address the crises in question. Another group, composed of United Nations system information officers from the Middle East and the Arab world, held two meetings and developed a strategic plan to bolster the flagging image of the Organization in that region.

267. The importance of effective public information for the success of peacekeeping operations was underlined as the Secretariat sought to ensure that the United Nations was equipped to meet the recent dramatic surge in demand for such operations. The Department of Public Information, in fulfilling its responsibilities with regard to the public information aspects of peacekeeping, has set in place new strategies aimed at generating support for new and expanding operations among Member States, the general public and the local populations in the areas where such operations are deployed.

268. To implement the aforementioned strategies, there is an increasing need to rapidly deploy expert public information personnel to new field missions. Preliminary training of United Nations staff who could be deployed rapidly to peacekeeping missions was conducted at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi in June, under the auspices of the Department of Public Information and with funding from the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. I hope to continue this training to ensure that we have a full cadre of qualified staff available when needed. Training has also been provided to information staff currently serving with United Nations peacekeeping missions on ways to support specific mission priorities, such as disarmament, demobilization and reintegration. Experts from the Department of Public Information now take part, as a matter of course, in multidisciplinary assessment missions that precede the deployment of peacekeeping or political missions. In the past 12 months, assessment missions to Burundi, Côte d'Ivoire, Haiti, Liberia and the Sudan have benefited from input by public information officers, and a preliminary media needs-assessment mission was undertaken to Iraq.

269. A number of new techniques and activities have been employed to increase the scope of United Nations outreach. The use of external public venues for United Nations observances and commemorations has proved to be a most successful innovation, quadrupling attendance at the annual New York observance of World AIDS Day (1 December), for example.

270. Similarly, the use of multi-site videoconferences and Internet exchanges, linking students and civil society partners around the world, has boosted our capacity to encourage public dialogue on many important issues. Special web events held in the lead-up to and during the first phase of the World Summit for the Information Society (Geneva, December 2003), attracted large and enthusiastic participation from students in many countries. The annual Department of Public Information Non-Governmental Organizations Conference, which brought a record 2,000 representatives from civil society organizations from 86 countries to New York, was followed by many more interested organizations and individuals via a live webcast.

271. Another innovative means used to promote public understanding of the work of the Organization was allowing the filming on location at United Nations Headquarters of The Interpreter, a feature film. This decision was taken after considerable thought and discussion, and ultimately rested on the assessment that the net result would be increased awareness of the United Nations among a broad audience.

272. In an effort to focus attention on important issues that often go underreported, the Department of Public Information launched a list of "10 stories the world should hear more about". Featured on the list was the plight of child soldiers in Uganda, the crisis in the Central African Republic, developments that may lead to a new treaty on the rights of the disabled and the threat posed by overfishing to the livelihoods of 200 million people worldwide. The initiative received a positive response from United Nations offices and agencies that contributed ideas to the project and succeeded in drawing the attention of numerous news organizations both to the specific stories themselves and to the broader question of what role the media plays in raising public awareness.

273. The Dag Hammarskjöld Library employed technology to upgrade its products, with its UNBISnet catalogue now linked to the full text of all documents on the Official Document System, in all six official languages. Additional links have been provided in the index to speeches to the full text of speeches and in the voting records to the full texts of resolutions. A thorough revision of the voting records database, currently under way, is expected to be completed by the end of 2004.

274. The continuous development and improvement of the United Nations web site allows us to harness the power of the Internet towards familiarizing more people around the world with the work of our Organization and issues of common concern. In 2003 the site recorded over 2,100 million hits, compared to 1,695 million hits in 2002. On an average day, over 940,000 pages are viewed by users. Substantial increases in visits to the various language sites were also recorded in the course of 2003: 126 per cent for Arabic, 792 per cent for Chinese, 77 per cent for English, 108 per cent for French, 173 per cent for Russian and 115 per cent for Spanish. The size of these increases reflects the phenomenal growth in overall Internet use in such countries as China, as well as the significant measures taken by the Secretariat to promote multilingualism by making more pages available in all the official languages. The introduction of a new search engine that can be employed for searching in all official languages is also making it much easier to locate relevant materials.

275. To facilitate movement towards parity among the official languages, the Department of Public Information has been establishing partnerships with academic institutions that provide pro bono translations. Agreements have already been signed with Minsk State Linguistic University (Belarus), Shaoxing University (China) and the University of Salamanca (Spain). Discussions with possible partners on arrangements that would enhance the Arabic language site are well under way.

276. Special measures are being implemented to improve access to content on the web site for users with disabilities. Technical guidelines have been drafted by a working group of the Publications Board, and all content-providing offices are being encouraged to conform with them to the maximum extent possible.

277. The United Nations News Centre online portal, which is now available in all official languages, continues to draw a steadily growing number of visitors. The stories posted there by News Services Section staff appear with ever greater frequency on the web sites of various United Nations offices and agencies, as well as major media outlets, non-governmental organizations and other external entities. The portal's e-mail news service in English and French now has over 25,000 subscribers in more than 100 countries. This service should be available in all official languages before the end of 2004.

278. Turning to our more traditional outreach activities, it is encouraging to note that after a dip in the number of visitors to United Nations Headquarters in the wake of the events of 11 September 2001, the number of people taking guided tours rose again in the period covered by the present report.

279. United Nations Radio continues to provide daily and weekly news reports and features in the six official languages, as well as Portuguese and Kiswahili, to hundreds of radio stations around the globe. Weekly programmes in seven other non-official languages are also distributed. The audience for this programming is conservatively estimated at 200 million people. The radio service is expanding the material on offer with a new programme on Africa and the development of a dramatic programme for children.

280. United Nations Television estimates that an audience of 2 billion people sees its programming, including hundreds of hours of coverage supplied to the world's broadcasters through daily feeds covering meetings of the General Assembly, the Security Council and other events and conferences. Through an expanding network of partnerships with major broadcasters, United Nations Television's productions of "World Chronicle" (a weekly talk show), "UN in Action" (a series of features on the work of the United Nations system) and the annual "Year in Review" have enjoyed larger audiences than ever before, as have its latest productions: "The United Nations: Working for Us All" and "The Security Council: Keeping the Peace".

281. Over the past year, the Department of Public Information has also co-produced a series of public service announcements in connection with the observance of 13 international days. These announcements, produced in association with an outside partner, were distributed to 200 television broadcasters in 70 countries and received positive feedback.

United Nations Fund for International Partnerships

282. The successful partnership between the United Nations Fund for International Partnerships and the United Nations Foundation entered into its seventh year in March 2004. Since the inception of this partnership in 1998 and until the end of 2003, a total of $563 million had been allocated to fund 292 projects with activities in 121 countries and involving 35 United Nations entities. The cumulative amount of co-financing from other funding partners, such as multilateral and bilateral donors, was $187.4 million. Projects have been funded worldwide in four programme areas: children's health; population and women; environment; and peace, security and human rights.

283. Over time, the focus of the UNF-UNFIP partnership has developed from the exclusive programming and funding of individual projects to also "telling the story" of such projects and of the work of the United Nations in general. The Foundation plays a unique advocacy role by virtue of its ability to increase understanding of the United Nations on the part of potential partners and the public. At the same time, the Foundation's extrabudgetary contributions are able to be used in ways that core funds cannot, opening up possibilities for innovation and creativity that the Organization alone would not be able to provide. Through UNF matching grants, new partners have come forward to collaborate on United Nations causes in a range of areas, such as protecting biodiversity, preserving World Heritage sites and combating disease.

284. Building on a series of innovative initiatives, UNF, the Coalition for Environmentally Responsible Economies, UNEP and UNFIP hosted the Institutional Investor Summit on Climate Risk in November 2003. The Summit brought together 200 pension fund managers, United States state treasurers, government officials, business executives, representatives of non-governmental organizations and senior United Nations staff to explore the connection between climate risk and fiduciary responsibility. It culminated in the signing of a 10-point call to action by key participants with responsibility for over $1 trillion in assets.

285. As a result of the success of the UNF-UNFIP partnership, UNFIP now functions as a clearing house for partnership information and a facilitator of funding opportunities for the United Nations. Increasingly, UNFIP provides a full range of services to build key networks, alliances and partnerships. A recent example of this is the Citigroup Private Bank partnership with UNDP. This collaboration brought a dozen of the Bank's clients to Mozambique and South Africa in April 2004 to explore opportunities to support the United Nations projects they visited.

286. UNFIP often provides advice to the private sector and foundations on United Nations policies and procedures, as well as suggestions on strategic ways for external entities to support the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals. In 2003, UNFIP was instrumental in getting the European Foundation Centre (an umbrella organization of over 500 foundations) to adopt the Goals as their framework for action, with an emphasis on supporting the fight against HIV/AIDS. New partnerships were established with a number of institutions, foundations and corporations, including the Citigroup Private Bank and Citigroup Foundation, the Committee to Encourage Corporate Philanthropy, the Council on Foundations, the Education Development Centre, Europe in the World, Hewlett-Packard, the Hilton Foundation, Microsoft, the Network of European Foundations for Innovative Cooperation, PricewaterhouseCoopers, the United States Chamber of Commerce and Vodafone.

287. In 2004, UNFIP assumed responsibility for providing support to my Special Adviser on Sport for Development and Peace, particularly with regard to his activities aimed at promoting field-level projects using sport as a tool for development.

Project services

288. In a multi-year effort initiated in 2003, the United Nations Office for Project Services set out to strengthen its financial condition, improve its competitive edge and streamline people, processes and technologies to acquire new business and meet client and market needs cost-effectively and efficiently. To position UNOPS for long-term viability, its management must make a series of strategic investments in 2004 and 2005. The goal is to recast UNOPS as a client-centred organization that contributes effectively to the realization of the Millennium Development Goals and the broader peace and development agenda of the United Nations.

289. In terms of 2003 performance, UNOPS continued to adhere to its self-financing principle. Total project delivery for 2003 amounted to $490.6 million, with revenue totalling $66.2 million and expenditures $47.8 million. UNDP remained the primary client of UNOPS, which continued to be a valued partner also of the International Fund for Agricultural Development and other lending institutions because of its acknowledged expertise in loan supervision and disbursements.

Civil society and business partnerships

290. After a year of extensive consultations at the country, regional and global levels, my Panel of Eminent Persons on United Nations–Civil Society Relations submitted its report entitled “We the peoples: civil society, the United Nations and global governance” (A/58/817). The Panel based its proposals on four main principles, namely, that the United Nations needed: to become a more outward-looking organization in response to the changing nature of multilateralism; to embrace a plurality of constituencies and establish new partnerships to tackle global challenges; to connect the global goals with local reality; and to accept a more explicit role in strengthening global governance, emphasizing participatory democracy and deeper accountability of institutions to the global public. Building on those principles, the Panel made a total of 30 proposals in the following areas: the convening role of the United Nations—fostering multi-constituency processes; investing more in partnerships; focusing on the country level; strengthening Security Council dialogue with civil society; engaging with elected representatives and parliamentarians; streamlining and depoliticizing civil society accreditation and access to the United Nations; providing the necessary additional resources; and providing global leadership in enhancing engagement with civil society.

291. The Panel's report is a valuable contribution to the reform process of the United Nations. I am particularly pleased that the Panel has proposed a number of concrete ways of increasing the participation of civil society representatives from developing countries, strengthening partnerships with civil society in the humanitarian and development areas and encouraging greater involvement of parliamentarians in the work of the United Nations. As the Panel suggests, the effectiveness and the relevance of the Organization would increase if we found ways to strengthen the involvement and participation of civil society. I intend to submit to the General Assembly, at its fifty-ninth session, further comments and suggestions regarding practical steps that might be taken in response to the Panel's recommendations.

292. The past year witnessed rapid growth in the Global Compact, the corporate citizenship initiative I launched in July 2000 to advance universal principles in the areas of human rights, labour conditions and the environment. An impact assessment undertaken by the international consultancy McKinsey & Company observed that the Global Compact, with more than 1,500 companies from 70 countries, was the largest corporate citizenship initiative in the world. Moreover, the assessment concluded that the Global Compact had, overall, had a positive impact by encouraging companies to adopt or enhance policies related to social and environmental issues while galvanizing partnerships between businesses, labour groups, civil society organizations and other stakeholders.

293. A major milestone was the Global Compact Leaders Summit, which I convened on 24 June at United Nations Headquarters. With nearly 500 leaders in attendance, it was the largest gathering ever of chief executive officers, government officials and heads of labour and civil society organizations on the topic of global corporate citizenship. One of the most noteworthy Summit outcomes was the adoption of the tenth Global Compact principle, dealing with anti-corruption. The Compact thus entered the worldwide fight against corruption, a scourge whose main victims are the world's poor. There was a range of other important outcomes, chief among them: (a) a pledge by 20 major financial companies to begin integrating social, environmental and governance issues into investment analysis and decision-making; (b) an announcement by a number of stock exchanges that they would explore collaboration with the Global Compact, with many agreeing to actively share information on the Compact and on corporate responsibility with their listed companies; and (c) an announcement by the Department of Management of the Secretariat that the Global Compact's principles would be adopted in key areas of the Organization's administration, such as procurement, investment management, facilities management and human resources.

294. The Summit also featured calls to improve the accountability and integrity of the initiative. Leaders from several civil society organizations expressed keen concern about the Global Compact's credibility, urging that the initiative further explore ways to ensure that the commitments by companies to the Global Compact's principles are translated into concrete and transparent action. Indeed, it is crucial that the reputation of the United Nations not be threatened or harmed by a failure to focus on quality assurance. Therefore, I announced at the Summit that the Global Compact Office would begin a process to improve the overall governance of the initiative in order to provide such safeguards. It is also clear the Global Compact's more than 40 country networks hold great promise. Moving forward, the Global Compact Office will focus on helping to make such local networks truly dynamic and sustainable. They will be key assets as we strive to realize the vision of the Global Compact: a more sustainable and inclusive global economy.

Chapter VIII

Conclusion

295. As the present report demonstrates, the United Nations has continued to carry out a wide range of activities in difficult times, consistent with the principles and purposes of its Charter. These activities reflect all the major international problems and concerns, and are a part of the struggle for a world of greater justice. Despite formidable challenges and obstacles, the Organization's efforts are helping us to build a better future.

296. The architects of the Charter were guided by a central idea—that durable international peace could be built only on foundations of interdependence. Underpinning this idea was the rule of law and multilateralism as the only rational basis for civilized discourse among nations. Shared responsibility was at the heart of the United Nations Millennium Declaration adopted in September 2000. Much has changed since the Millennium Summit, and even more since the Charter was adopted. Yet the values of interdependence and shared responsibility remain fundamental.

297. Next year we will celebrate the sixtieth anniversary of the United Nations. It will provide an opportunity for fresh thinking about the problems of our world and how the Organization can address them. It is my hope that in the coming months, Member States, the Secretariat and other entities of the United Nations system, civil society and business organizations, as well as individuals around the world will work together to ensure that the anniversary will be worthy of the United Nations and everything for which it stands.

PART ONE

Political and security questions

Chapter I

International peace and security

In 2004, the resolve of the international community to promote and maintain international peace and security continued to be tested by new acts of international terrorism, the unstable security situation in Iraq, a deteriorating Israeli-Palestinian conflict, a surge in violent internal conflicts in Africa and Haiti, and questions about the effectiveness of the Organization's response to those and other situations. In August, the General Assembly reaffirmed the central role of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security and the promotion of international cooperation, and, in December, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly a report entitled "A more secure world: our shared responsibility" by the High-level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change, which he had appointed in 2003 to evaluate UN performance in addressing threats and challenges to international security and to make recommendations for strengthening the Organization. The Panel offered a vision of a United Nations for the twenty-first century and made recommendations for change in each of its principal organs, including the Security Council, and proposed the establishment of a new intergovernmental body, the Peace-building Commission. Also, the Assembly, recalling that 2005 would mark the sixtieth anniversary of the end of the Second World War, declared 8 and 9 May as a time of remembrance and reconciliation to be observed annually and decided to hold a solemn meeting in May 2005 in commemoration of all victims of the war.

The devastating consequences of international terrorism continued to be felt in 2004, with particularly vicious incidents in Spain and the Russian Federation. The Security Council condemned those atrocities and urged that those responsible be brought to justice. To counter the continuing threat posed by international terrorism, the Council established a working group to make recommendations on measures it could impose on individuals, groups and entities involved or associated with terrorist activities, including more effective procedures for prosecuting them and seizing their assets. It called for the establishment of an international fund to compensate victims of terrorist acts and their families. The Council also adopted measures to revitalize and strengthen the Counter-Terrorism Committee, including the creation of the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate and the appointment of an Executive Director.

The Council considered ways to improve the quality of the UN response in complex crises. It also examined the Organization's conflict prevention activities, including the role of diamonds in fuelling conflict and the progress made in implementing the Kimberley Process for the certification of rough diamonds, and the role of businesses in conflict prevention, peacekeeping and post-conflict peace-building. In the area of post-conflict peace-building, the Council met at ministerial level to examine the civilian aspects of conflict management and peace-building. It also considered the role of civil society in post-conflict peace-building, the UN role in post-conflict national reconciliation, the rule of law and transitional justice in conflict and post-conflict situations, and UN cooperation with regional organizations to maximize efficiency in stabilization processes.

The Organization maintained 14 political and peace-building missions during 2004. The surge in demand for UN peacekeeping forces in 2004, with the establishment of new and complex operations in Burundi, Côte d'Ivoire and Haiti, in quick succession, posed a serious challenge to the Organization's capacity for effective planning, timely deployment, management and the provision of sustained support for such operations. In May, the Council studied those challenges during its consideration of strategic directions and future trends of peacekeeping operations. The Council also considered the recommendations of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, which met in March/April to discuss comprehensive strategies for complex peacekeeping operations, enhancing UN peacekeeping capacity and that of African peacekeeping, consultations with troop-contributing countries, safety and security issues in the light of the 2003 bombing of the UN headquarters in Iraq, the contribution of regional arrangements to the management of UN peacemaking missions, and gender mainstreaming in peacekeeping operations. At the end of 2004, 64,701 military and civilian police were serving under UN command in 16 peacekeeping missions, compared to 45,815 at the end of 2003.

The financial position of UN peacekeeping operations was significantly affected by the rapid expansion of peacekeeping activities. During the reporting period, expenditures increased to $2,933.8 million, compared to a final figure of $2,499.8 million for the previous year. Unpaid assessed contributions increased to $1.5 billion, compared to $1.1 billion the previous year. The Assembly considered several aspects of peacekeeping financing, including the peacekeeping support account, the disposition of the assets of closed missions, the peacekeeping Reserve Fund, experience with the creation of regional hubs of auditors and investigators for financial oversight of peacekeeping operations, and reimbursement issues. It also considered the management of peacekeeping assets, including the financing of the United Nations Logistics Base and the strategic deployment stocks, an analysis of the establishment of a global procurement hub for all peacekeeping missions, the question of air safety in the procurement of aircraft, and policies and procedures for the recruitment of peacekeeping staff.

Promotion of international peace and security

UN role in the maintenance of international peace and security

On 5 August [meeting 93], the General Assembly met to consider, under the agenda item "Strengthening of the United Nations system", a draft resolution [A/58/L.67/Rev.1] on reaffirming the central role of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security and the promotion of international cooperation.

Malaysia, in introducing the draft on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement, said that developments in global affairs in recent years raised serious concerns about the primacy of the United Nations, its relevance in multilateral decision-making, and the gradual erosion of its role as the primary interlocutor in addressing global challenges and in fulfilling its responsibilities as envisaged in the Charter. That view had been emphasized by world leaders before the Assembly in September 2003 and was echoed by the general public, civil society and mass media worldwide. The draft resolution was a broad-based initiative for Member States to reaffirm their support for and political commitment and adherence to the central role of the United Nations in fulfilling its role and responsibilities; it provided a strong political platform that would enhance the Organization's role in the maintenance of peace and security and the promotion of economic and social development.

Canada said that the draft resolution, despite its stated intent, would not strengthen the role and capacity of the United Nations. It went beyond just renewing commitment to the ideals and purposes of the United Nations; it was interpretative of those ideals and purposes and disregarded elements that would impart sufficient balance to attract consensus. Its selectivity risked undermining, or at least complicating, the Assembly's work on key issues linked to the new realities of the international environment and could contribute to the United Nations seeing the world through outdated and blurred lenses.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 August [meeting 93], the Assembly adopted resolution 58/317 [draft: A/58/L.67/Rev.1] by recorded vote (93-2-47) [agenda item 59].

Furthermore, it reaffirmed some principles of international law and not others, thus rendering the text incomplete.

High-level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change

In a December note [A/59/565 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the High-level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change entitled "A more secure world: our shared responsibility". He appointed the Panel in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 49] to evaluate how existing UN policies and institutions had performed in addressing threats and challenges to international security and to make recommendations for strengthening the Organization in providing collective security in the twenty-first century.

The Panel, chaired by Anand Panyarachun (Thailand), put forward a new vision of collective security, one that addressed all of the major threats to international peace and security. It examined the case for a new security consensus, including elements of a credible collective security system; collective security and the challenge of prevention; collective security and the use of force, including questions of legitimacy, peace enforcement, peacekeeping capability and post-conflict peace-building; and a more effective United Nations for the twenty-first century. The report addressed specific threats and identified new ways of understanding the connections between them and the implications for the policies and institutions that had to be put in place.

The Panel concluded that 60 years after the creation of the United Nations, the biggest security threats went far beyond States waging aggressive war, extending to poverty, infectious disease and environmental degradation; war and violence within States; the spread and possible use of nuclear, radiological, chemical and biological weapons; terrorism; and transnational organized crime. Those threats came from both States and non-State actors. The system of collective security created by the UN founders was, in a traditional military sense, a pledge for collective action against aggression. The central challenge for the twenty-first century was to fashion a new and broader understanding, bringing together all the strands of collective security, in order to form a collective security system that would be effective, efficient and equitable.

The case for collective security currently rested on three basic pillars: that threats recognized no national boundaries, were connected, and had to be addressed at the global, regional and national levels; no State alone could make itself invulnerable to those threats; and it could not be assumed that every State would always be able, or willing, to meet its responsibility to protect its own peoples and not to harm its neighbours. Without mutual recognition of threats, there could be no collective security. What was needed was a new consensus between frayed alliances, between wealthy and poor nations, and among peoples mired in mistrust across a widening cultural abyss.

The Panel identified six clusters of threats with which the world should be concerned: economic and social threats, including poverty, infectious diseases and environmental degradation; inter-State conflict; internal conflict, including civil war, genocide and other large-scale atrocities; nuclear, radiological, chemical and biological weapons; terrorism; and transnational organized crime. The primary challenge was to ensure that distant threats did not become imminent and those that were imminent did not become destructive. That required a framework for preventive action, especially leadership at the domestic and international levels to act early, decisively and collectively. Meeting the challenge of prevention had to begin with development because it was the foundation for a collective security system and was vital in helping States prevent or reverse the erosion of State capacity, and was part of a long-term strategy for preventing civil war and for addressing the environments in which both terrorism and organized crime flourished.

The Panel addressed the circumstances in which effective collective security might require the backing of military force. It identified “five criteria of legitimacy” that the Security Council should always consider when deciding to authorize or apply military force. Those guidelines (seriousness of threat, proper purpose, last resort, proportional means and balance of consequences) should significantly improve the chances of reaching international consensus on deeply divisive issues.

In addressing the issue of reforming the United Nations, the Panel found that it was currently just as important as it had been in 1945: to combine power with principle. Recommendations that ignored underlying power realities would be doomed to failure or irrelevance, just as recommendations that simply reflected raw distributions of power and made no effort to bolster international principles were unlikely to gain the widespread adherence required to shift international behaviour. Proposed changes should be driven by real-world need. The Panel identified the institutional weaknesses in current responses to threats as those urgently in need of remedy. The General Assembly had lost vitality and often failed to focus on the most compelling issues of the day. The Security Council needed to be more proactive, with those who contributed most to the Organization financially, militarily and diplomatically participating more in Council decision-making, and those who participated in Council decision-making contributing more to the Organization. The Council needed greater credibility, legitimacy and representation to do all that was demanded of it. It also needed to avail itself more of the potential advantages of working with regional and subregional organizations. There was a major institutional gap in addressing countries under stress and countries emerging from conflict. There should be new institutional arrangements to address the economic and social threats to international security. The Commission on Human Rights suffered from a legitimacy deficit that cast doubts on the overall reputation of the United Nations. A more professional and better organized Secretariat that was much more capable of concerted action was needed.

The Panel made a number of recommendations for addressing the issues raised in its report. In the area of collective security and the challenge of prevention, it recommended that all States recommit themselves to the goals of eradicating poverty, achieving sustained economic growth and promoting sustainable development. The donor countries not reaching the goal of 0.7 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance should establish a timetable for doing so. World Trade Organization members should strive to conclude the Doha development round of multilateral trade negotiations [YUN 2001, p. 1432] at the latest in 2006. Lender Governments and international financial institutions should provide highly indebted poor countries with greater debt relief, longer debt payment schedules and improved access to global markets. More than $10 billion annually was needed to stem the HIV/AIDS pandemic. Leaders of countries affected by HIV/AIDS needed to mobilize resources, commit funds and engage civil society and the private sector in disease-control efforts. The Security Council, with the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS, should host a second special session on HIV/AIDS as a threat to international peace and security, to explore the future effects of HIV/AIDS on States and societies, generate research and identify a long-term strategy for diminishing the threat. International donors, working with national authorities and local civil society organizations, should undertake a new global initiative to rebuild local and national public health systems throughout the developing world. Greater resources should be provided to the World Health Organization Global Outbreak Alert and Response Network to increase its capacity to cope with potential disease outbreaks. States should provide incentives for development of renewable energy sources and begin to phase out environmentally harmful subsidies, especially for fossil fuel. Member States were urged to reflect on the gap between the promise of the Kyoto Protocol [YUN 1997, p. 1048] to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [YUN 1992, p. 681] and its performance, re-engage on the problem of global warming and begin new negotiations to produce a new long-term strategy for reducing global warming beyond the period covered by the Protocol (up to 2012).

To deal with conflicts between States, the Security Council should use its authority under the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court [YUN 1998, p. 1209] to refer cases of suspected war crimes and crimes against humanity to the Court. The United Nations should work with national authorities, international financial institutions, civil society organizations and the private sector to develop norms governing the management of natural resources for countries emerging from or at risk of conflict. It should build on the experience of regional organizations in developing frameworks for minority rights and for protecting democratically elected Governments from unconstitutional overthrow. Member States should negotiate legally binding agreements on the marking, tracing, brokering and transfer of small arms and light weapons, and report on all elements of the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms, with the Secretary-General providing an annual account to the General Assembly and the Security Council on reporting inadequacies. A training and briefing facility should be established for special representatives of the Secretary-General and other UN mediators, and the Department of Political Affairs should be given additional resources and be restructured to provide more consistent and professional mediation support, taking into account the need for the United Nations to have a field-oriented mediation support capacity; competence on recurrent thematic issues in peace negotiations; greater interaction with national mediators, regional organizations and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) involved in conflict resolution; and greater involvement of important voices from civil society, especially those of women in peace processes. National leaders and parties to conflict should use the option of preventive deployment of peacekeepers.

Regarding collective security and the use of force, the Panel agreed that Article 51 of the Charter should be neither rewritten nor reinterpreted, to extend its scope to allow preventive measures to non-imminent threats or to restrict its application to actual attacks. The Security Council was fully empowered under Chapter VII of the Charter to address the full range of security threats with which States were concerned. The task was not to find alternatives to the Council as a source of authority but to make the Council work better. The Panel endorsed the emerging norm that there was a collective international responsibility to protect, exercisable by the Council authorizing military intervention as a last resort, in the event of genocide and other large-scale killing, ethnic cleansing or serious violations of humanitarian law which sovereign Governments had proved powerless or unwilling to prevent. In considering whether to authorize or endorse military force, the Council should always address the five basic criteria of legitimacy (see p. 55). Those guidelines for authorizing the use of force should be embodied in declaratory resolutions of the Council and the Assembly.

Regarding peace enforcement and peacekeeping capability, the Panel said that developed States should do more to transform their existing force capacities into suitable contingents for peace operations; Member States should support the Department of Peacekeeping Operations to meet deadlines for deployment; States with advanced military capacities should establish high readiness, self-sufficient battalions to reinforce UN missions and place them at the disposal of the United Nations; troop strength for peacekeeping missions should be sufficient to deter and repel hostile factions; and the United Nations should have a small corps of between 50 and 100 senior police officers and managers to undertake mission assessments and organize the start-up of police components of peace operations.

Other recommendations were made in respect of nuclear, radiological, chemical and biological weapons (see p. 554); terrorism (see p. 576); transnational organized crime (see p. 1117); the role of sanctions (see p. 331); peace enforcement and peacekeeping capability (see p. 81); post-conflict peace-building (see p. 63); protecting civilians (see p. 60); and for a more effective United Nations in the twenty-first century (see p. 1360).

The Secretary-General wholly endorsed the core arguments for a broader, more comprehensive concept of collective security. The recommendations required a wide-ranging response and he would move quickly to consider and implement, as appropriate, those under his purview, while those pertaining to the Secretariat would need the approval and support of the relevant legislative bodies. Other recommendations were directed at UN intergovernmental organs and the highest levels of government. He said that action on the recommendations need not await consideration by the Assembly at its sixtieth (2005) session but could commence whenever possible.

Complex crises and UN response

The Security Council met on 28 May [meeting 4980] to consider complex crises and the United Nations response, having before it suggestions for discussion submitted by Pakistan [S/2004/423]. According to Pakistan, the Council and the UN system had been increasingly called upon since 1990 to intervene in complex crises—conflicts that had military and security dimensions, as well as political, economic, social and humanitarian facets. An effective collective response required action on several interrelated tracks, including containment and resolution of conflict, establishing security, protection of civilians, security sector reforms, humanitarian relief strategies, establishing justice and the rule of law, promoting good governance, and development of democratic institutions. To be effective, certain elements were necessary: timely analysis and assessment of potential and actual conflicts and crises; strategic coherence in policy response; enhanced UN system coordination; and closer cooperation with regional and subregional organizations, regional countries and humanitarian and development partners.

On 8 September [S/2004/723], the Council President issued a summary of the important ideas and suggestions presented during the debate. According to the summary, most of the issues currently under consideration by the Council were complex crises, requiring solutions to meet both security and development needs. The link between peace and development had to remain at the core of the UN response to complex crises, with major investment by the international community, the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Secretariat. In tackling complex crises, prevention should be the first priority. The United Nations should therefore move from a culture of response to a culture of prevention. Preventive action should address the deep-rooted socioeconomic, cultural, environmental, institutional and other structural causes often underlying immediate political symptoms of conflicts. The resource gap in the comprehensive, integrated response sought by the international community for conflict prevention and ensuring human security should be overcome by a bolder, more precise approach to detecting and preventing conflicts and by making development a dimension of complex UN operations. At the policy level, priority should be given to preventive diplomacy. The UN system needed to be strengthened to deal with short- and long-range early warning factors, with better use of existing and non-UN capacities to analyse and anticipate crises and help defuse them in the early stages.

Concerning conflict management and resolution, the Assembly should play a larger role in considering general principles of cooperation in the maintenance of international peace and security and in drawing the attention of the Council to situations likely to endanger peace and security. The Council should pay greater attention to resolving conflicts using measures mentioned in Chapter VI of the Charter.

Peacekeeping could be enhanced by incorporating more elements of peace-building and post-conflict reconstruction. A great deal remained to be done to improve the UN peacekeeping potential, especially in the areas of rapid response, the effective use of material resources, financing, transport and training. The Secretariat and the international community should significantly restructure their work in peacekeeping.

At the root of most conflicts were issues of poverty, corruption, deliberate manipulation of minority groups, and social inequality and exclusion, which had to be addressed by the Council. The United Nations should devote greater attention to development, strive to help developing countries eradicate poverty and increase its involvement in post-conflict reconstruction. It was important to develop a framework and an enabling environment for peace-building activities, including a speedy operational response, the optimum mobilization of resources and preventing the outbreak or recurrence of conflicts.

Recognizing that one of the greatest weaknesses of the international system was follow-up, Council members suggested that the United Nations consider political and administrative mechanisms to follow up on progress, warn of obstacles and propose remedies. Those mechanisms should involve the Council, the countries concerned, major donors, regional and subregional organizations and international financial agencies and institutions.

Conflict prevention

In 2004, the General Assembly and the Security Council considered various measures for the prevention of armed conflict, including the economic measures of the Kimberley Process for the certification of rough diamonds and the role that business could play in conflict prevention.

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on the prevention of armed conflict would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session (decision 59/552).

Conflict diamonds

Kimberley Process. Two plenary meetings of the Kimberley Process were held in 2003 (Johannesburg, 28-30 April, and Sun City, South Africa, 29-31 October) to review implementation of the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme (KPCS), established in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 55] to stop the use of conflict diamonds in fuelling armed conflict, protect the legitimate diamond industry and ensure implementation of resolutions on trade in conflict diamonds [A/58/623]. The Johannesburg meeting, in recognition of the challenges faced by certain participants, extended the tolerance period for implementing KPCS until 31 May 2003. The Sun City meeting welcomed the addition of Brazil, Romania and Togo to the list of KPCS participants, bringing the total number, as at October 2003, to 45 States and the European Union (EU). Canada and the Russian Federation were elected KPCS Chair and Vice-Chair, respectively, for 2004, and the Russian Federation as Chair for 2005. The meeting agreed to establish a peer review mechanism to guarantee that KPCS was upheld.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 April [meeting 85], the General Assembly adopted resolution 58/290 [draft: A/58/L.59 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 21].

The role of diamonds in fuelling conflict: breaking the link between the illicit transaction of rough diamonds and armed conflict as a contribution to prevention and settlement of conflicts

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that the trade in conflict diamonds is a matter of serious international concern, which can be directly linked to the fuelling of armed conflict, the activities of rebel movements aimed at undermining or overthrowing legitimate Governments and the illicit traffic in and proliferation of armaments, especially small arms and light weapons,

Recognizing also the devastating impact of conflicts fuelled by the trade in conflict diamonds on the peace, safety and security of people in affected countries, and the systematic and gross human rights violations that have been perpetrated in such conflicts,

Noting the negative impact of such conflicts on regional stability and the obligations placed upon States by the Charter of the United Nations regarding the maintenance of international peace and security,

Recognizing, therefore, that continued action to curb the trade in conflict diamonds is imperative,

Recognizing also the positive benefits of the legitimate diamond trade to producing countries, and underlining the need for continued international action to prevent the problem of conflict diamonds from negatively affecting the trade in legitimate diamonds, which makes a critical contribution to the economies of many of the producing, exporting and importing States, especially developing States,

Noting that the vast majority of rough diamonds produced in the world are from legitimate sources,

Recalling the Charter and all the relevant resolutions of the Security Council related to conflict diamonds, and determined to contribute to and support the implementation of the measures provided for in those resolutions,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 1459(2003) of 28 January 2003, in which the Council strongly supported the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme as a valuable contribution against trafficking in conflict diamonds,

Welcoming the important contribution of the Kimberley Process, which was initiated by African diamond-producing countries,

Believing that the implementation of the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme should substantially reduce the opportunity for conflict diamonds to play a role in fuelling armed conflict and should help to protect legitimate trade and ensure the effective implementation of the relevant resolutions on trade in conflict diamonds,

Recalling its resolutions 55/56 of 1 December 2000, 56/263 of 13 March 2002 and 57/302 of 15 April 2003, in which it called for the development and implementation of proposals for a simple, effective and pragmatic international certification scheme for rough diamonds,

Welcoming, in this regard, the implementation of the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme in such a way that it does not impede the legitimate trade in diamonds or impose an undue burden on Governments or industry, particularly smaller producers, and does not hinder the development of the diamond industry,

Welcoming also the decision of countries and one regional economic integration organization to address the problem of conflict diamonds by participating in the Kimberley Process and to implement the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme,

Welcoming further the important contribution made by the diamond industry, in particular the World Diamond Council, as well as civil society, to assist international efforts to stop the trade in conflict diamonds,

Welcoming the voluntary self-regulation initiatives for the diamond industry announced by the World Diamond Council, and recognizing that a system of such voluntary self-regulation will contribute, as described in the Interlaken Declaration of 5 November 2002 on the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme for Rough Diamonds, to ensuring the effectiveness of national systems of internal control for rough diamonds,

Noting with appreciation that the Kimberley Process has pursued its deliberations on an inclusive basis, involving concerned stakeholders, including producing, exporting and importing States, the diamond industry and civil society,

Recognizing that State sovereignty should be fully respected and that the principles of equality, mutual benefits and consensus should be adhered to,

Recognizing also that the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme, which came into effect on 1 January 2003, will be credible only if all participants have established internal systems of control designed to eliminate the presence of conflict diamonds in the chain of producing, exporting and importing rough diamonds within their own territories, while taking into account that differences in production methods and trading practices, as well as differences in institutional controls thereof, may require different approaches to meet minimum standards,

1. Reaffirms its strong support for the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme;

2. Recognizes that the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme can help to ensure the effective implementation of relevant resolutions of the Security Council containing sanctions on the trade in conflict diamonds, and calls for the full implementation of existing Council measures targeting the illicit trade in rough diamonds that play a role in fuelling conflict;

3. Stresses that the widest possible participation in the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme is essential and should be encouraged, urges all Member States to participate actively in the Certification Scheme by complying with its undertakings, and welcomes the establishment at the plenary meeting of the Kimberley Process, held in Johannesburg, South Africa, from 28 to 30 April 2003, of a Participation Committee to ensure that participants and applicants willing to join the Certification Scheme meet the minimum standards;

4. Notes with appreciation the report of the Chair of the Kimberley Process submitted pursuant to resolution 57/302, and congratulates the Governments, regional economic integration organization representatives, the organized diamond industry and civil society participating in the Kimberley Process for contributing to the development and implementation of the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme;

5. Takes note of the decision of the General Council of the World Trade Organization of 15 May 2003 granting a waiver with respect to the measures taken to implement the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme;

6. Welcomes the progress achieved at the plenary meeting of the Kimberley Process held in Sun City, South Africa, from 29 to 31 October 2003 by the adoption of a decision on a peer review system for the effective implementation of the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme;

7. Encourages participants in the Kimberley Process to allow voluntary review visits in accordance with the decision mentioned in paragraph 6 above, and welcomes the readiness of some participants to host such visits;

8. Also encourages participants in the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme to submit annual reports on the implementation of the Certification Scheme to the Chair of the Kimberley Process;

9. Further encourages all participants in the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme to collate and submit relevant statistical data on the production of and international trade in rough diamonds as a tool for effective implementation and as envisaged by the Certification Scheme;

10. Acknowledges with great appreciation the important contribution that the Government of South Africa has made to the efforts to curb the trade in conflict diamonds in its capacity as the Chair of the Kimberley Process from May 2000 to December 2003, and welcomes the selection of Canada as the Chair and the Russian Federation as the Vice-Chair of the Process for 2004;

11. Requests the Chair of the Kimberley Process to submit a report on the implementation of the Process to the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-ninth session the item entitled "The role of diamonds in fuelling conflict".

At the 2004 Kimberley Process meeting (Gatineau, Quebec, 27-29 October) [A/59/590], the Chair (Canada) reported that 42 Governments and the EU (following its enlargement, all EU countries participated as a single participant) were implementing KPCS, encompassing the majority of the production and trade in rough diamonds. The Scheme accounted for more than 99.8 per cent of global production, valued at $8.5 billion. Under KPCS, 47,598 certificates were issued for more than $20 billion in trade. Under the peer review system adopted in October 2003, eight participants had already received review visits and another seven were scheduled to do so before the end of 2004. The meeting endorsed the report of the Working Group on Monitoring, including a provisional schedule of review visits in 2005 and 2006. To improve the comparability of statistics submitted by participants, the meeting established a maximum period for the validity of KPCS certificates at 60 calendar days from the date of issuance and asked the Working Group on Statistics to study aspects of national methodologies that constrained statistical reporting. Participants established a framework for the three-year review of KPCS and created an ad hoc working group to carry out the review and report before 31 July 2006.

Role of business in conflict prevention, peacekeeping and post-conflict peace-building

On 15 April [meeting 4943], the Security Council considered the role of business in conflict prevention, peacekeeping and post-conflict peace-building. The Council President, in opening the debate, said that political and economic stability in conflict prevention, as well as in post-conflict recovery, were closely interrelated and had to be reflected inside and outside the broader UN system, including the international financial institutions such as the World Bank. The role of the private sector deserved particular attention in that context, especially its huge potential in development or reconstruction strategy at national and regional levels.

The Secretary-General told the Council that the economic dimensions of armed conflict, though often overlooked, should never be underestimated. Private companies operated in many conflict zones and conflict-prone countries and their decisions on investment and employment, on relations with local communities, on protection for the local environment, and on their own security arrangements could either help a country turn its back on conflict or exacerbate the tensions that fuelled conflict in the first place. Private companies also manufactured and sold the hardware of conflict and were involved in the exploitation of, and trade in, lucrative local natural resources. The challenges were complex, touching on fundamental questions of sovereignty, democratic governance, corporate accountability and individual integrity. Business itself had an enormous stake in the search for solutions, since companies required a stable environment to conduct their operations; their bottom lines could not be separated from some of the key UN goals of peace, development and equity.

The Security Council, for its part, had already addressed many of those issues, but the time had come to translate its ad hoc efforts into a more systematic approach, so as to promote greater co-operation between the security and development arms of the United Nations, give it the tools to influence more actively the economic incentives and disincentives that drove the dynamics of armed conflict, and ensure that those factors were reflected in efforts to prevent conflict, in peace agreements and in the mandates given to peace operations.

In that context, the Secretary-General indicated that he had established an inter-agency group, chaired by the Department of Political Affairs, to look at the political economy of armed conflict and make recommendations for improving the response of the UN system and of Member States. He urged the Council and Member States to focus greater attention on the issue and to engage more dynamically with the private sector.

President's summary. The Security Council President summarized the discussion in a document circulated on 25 May [S/2004/441]. Among the observations, speakers said that business had a crucial role to play in situations of armed conflict. Private companies' decisions on investment and employment, on relations with local communities and on protection for local environments could ease or exacerbate tensions. Giving people work and opportunity was a key factor in preventing and in emerging from conflict. Domestic small and medium-size enterprises played an especially important role in that context, creating most of the jobs, especially employment opportunities for demobilized fighters.

Business itself had an enormous stake in the search for solutions. Requiring a stable environment to carry out their operations and minimize their risks, companies looked for a reasonable level of security, adequate infrastructure, financing for reconstruction programmes and a perspective afforded by visible progress. In long-term conflict prevention, key elements were education, sustainable economic growth and the private sector's contribution to it. The resolution of violent conflicts required a concerted effort by all major stakeholders. The United Nations, the international financial institutions and Member States were called on to cooperate closely with the private sector to set the necessary political, security, legal, economic and financial framework.

A number of participants expressed their hope for a follow-up to the Council's meeting, with some suggesting that the Secretary-General report on further developments. The President concluded that the meeting was a clear signal for a more coherent approach by all respective institutions within and outside the UN system to use the potential of entrepreneurial initiative in conflict situations more effectively.

Peacemaking and peace-building

The High-level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change, in its December report [A/59/565], made recommendations on post-conflict peace-building. It said that special representatives of the Secretary-General should have the authority and guidance to work with relevant parties to establish robust donor-coordinating mechanisms and have the required resources. Funding should be provided for disarmament and demobilization programmes from assessed budgets and a standing fund established for peace-building at the minimum level of $250 million to finance the recurrent expenditures of a nascent Government and critical agency rehabilitation and reintegration programmes.

The Panel proposed the establishment of a peace-building commission to identify countries that were under stress and risked sliding towards collapse; organize proactive assistance in preventing that process from developing further; assist in planning for transitions between conflict and post-conflict peace-building; and marshal and sustain the international community's efforts in post-conflict peace-building for as long as necessary. A peace-building support office should also be established in the Secretariat to support the commission and ensure that the Secretary-General was able to integrate system-wide peace-building strategies, develop best practices and provide cohesive support for field operations.

Civilian aspects of conflict management and peace-building

Security Council consideration. On 22 September [meeting 5041], the Security Council met at the ministerial level to consider the civilian aspects of conflict management and peace-building. The President (Spain), in an 8 September letter [S/2004/722], remarked on the importance of the civilian aspects of crisis management in complex crisis situations, as the ability of international military operations was limited in terms of socio-economic rehabilitation and political reconciliation. The importance of civil-military cooperation had to be acknowledged. In a civil-military operation, civilian aspects could not be achieved without security, and civilian success was the key for the exit strategy of the military. Unlike the military, civilian crisis management did not have a body of agreed doctrine and relied on individual entrepreneurship in the field. Demanding Council mandates on the Secretariat and other bodies made the setting up of civilian teams and means for a successful operation difficult. Therefore, the Council should address such issues as the nature of the growing responsibilities of civilian elements in civil-military operations; ways for organizations involved in deploying such operations to enhance their cooperation in order to increase the availability of resources and their interoperability; options for cooperation in crisis management between the United Nations and Member States and other international organizations; institutional issues regarding the deployment of coordinated civilian-military components for a particular operation; and improvements to civilian crisis management by focusing on building a more cohesive international approach.

The Secretary-General told the Council that peace-building was complex and drew in many actors, including the Council, UN agencies, funds and programmes, regional organizations and NGOs. The United Nations needed to be realistic about what was achievable and to have a clear political strategy for success, with benchmarks for progress towards the goal of building legitimate and effective States, including clear priorities, particularly in the areas of security, the rule of law and immediate economic opportunities. The Organization needed to sustain its focus on those long-term commitments and ensure adequate resources. It had to make sure that its efforts were well integrated, working with other organizations, bilateral donors and NGOs on the basis of shared goals and priorities, and to maintain an international cadre of highly skilled civilian staff for peace-building. Peace-building required a clear strategy, developed and executed by highly skilled professionals, grounded in local conditions and reflected in realistic mandates, supported by all parts of the UN system and backed by the Council and the membership of the Organization as a whole.

The African Union (AU) Commissioner for Peace and Security, the High Representative for the EU's Common Foreign and Security Policy, and the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States also addressed the Council.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 September [meeting 5041], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/33 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council met at the ministerial level on 22 September 2004 to consider "Civilian aspects of conflict management and peace-building". Ministers recognized the increasing importance of civilian aspects of conflict management in addressing complex crisis situations and in preventing the recurrence of conflict. They affirmed the importance of conflict resolution in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations.

Ministers also acknowledged the importance of civilian-military cooperation in crisis management. Military and police components are essential to address and stabilize certain serious crisis situations and to guarantee security. Moreover, the participation of a strong civilian component is key to the provision of humanitarian assistance, the re-establishment of public order, functioning public institutions, reconstruction, rehabilitation and peace-building for longer-term sustainable development. A substantial civilian participation in crisis management is also essential for a strategy of military disengagement and plays a crucial role in the phase of post-conflict peace-building. In this context, it is important that there is coordination between the civilian and military components in crisis management from the first phase of integrated mission planning. In addition, there should be significant coordination with actors involved in longer-term reconstruction and development, including in particular the other organs of the United Nations system in accordance with their respective mandates and the international financial institutions, as well as cooperation with the business sector.

Ministers recognized the increasing role of some regional and subregional and other international organizations in crisis management. They also recalled that Articles 52 and 53 of the Charter set forth the contribution of regional organizations to conflict management, as well as the relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations. They encouraged these organizations, whenever possible, to continue to develop their crisis management capabilities, including in the civilian field, in close coordination with the United Nations and in accordance with the provisions of Article 54 of the Charter. When applicable, clear schemes for joint operations should be developed. Also, greater coordination and interoperability among those organizations, as well as developing and sharing common strategies, operational policies and best practices in civilian crisis management, would enhance efficiency and coherence in crisis management. Continued internal coordination in this field among all relevant United Nations organs and agencies should also be strengthened.

Ministers supported the efforts by Member States to continue to develop, as appropriate, their own civilian crisis management capabilities, including, inter alia, rapid civilian response teams, and they also supported their initiatives to make these capabilities available to the United Nations and other relevant regional or subregional organizations, as a contribution to their efforts in the maintenance of international peace and security. Adequate capabilities should be developed in key areas of civilian crisis management, such as police, justice and the rule of law, preparation of electoral processes and electoral observation, civil protection and public administration. The Council should consider the nature and availability of these capabilities when approving the necessary mandates for United Nations operations.

Adequate and flexible means for transitional peace support and crisis management activities, such as protection of civilians, including United Nations and humanitarian personnel, disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants, the end of impunity, public institution-building and transitional justice, as well as the promotion and protection of human rights and the integration of a gender perspective, are essential to ensure lasting peace after a conflict. Also, the involvement of local actors in the policy-making process and a fruitful relationship with civil society should be among the priorities of any post-conflict strategy.

The Security Council commends the efforts of the Secretary-General in addressing all relevant issues relating to the civilian aspects of crisis management, and invites him, other institutions and agencies of the United Nations system, regional and subregional organizations and Member States to continue to give serious consideration to this matter, with a view to making further progress in this field.

Role of civil society in post-conflict peace-building

On 22 June [meeting 4993], the Security Council met to consider the role of civil society in post-conflict peace-building. It had before it a non-paper submitted by the President (Philippines) [S/2004/442] on the questions to be discussed, which drew attention to the crucial role played by civil society organizations in the comprehensive and multidimensional approach to conflict prevention and post-conflict peace-building. In addition to their contributions to peacekeeping, relief and humanitarian efforts, those organizations were a source of information on the ground. They had become a force to reckon with in post-conflict areas, with their public advocacy role and media campaigns often helping to shape public understanding of the crises and bringing pressure to bear on Governments to act, and an actor in the policy process, whose support was at times essential to the success of government policies and Council initiatives. However, more needed to be done to harness civil society in the structural and operational dimensions of post-conflict peace-building.

The Secretary-General told the Council that the partnership between the United Nations and civil society had grown considerably, reflecting the increasing role of civil society in helping to shape and scrutinize government policies, in holding Governments accountable and in contributing to international decision-making. If peace-building missions were to be effective, they should, as part of a clear political strategy, work with and strengthen those civil society forces that were helping people to voice their concerns and to act on them in peaceful ways. The aim should be to create a synergy with those civil society groups that were bridge-builders, truth-finders, watchdogs, human rights defenders and agents of social protection and economic revitalization. Civil society groups also had a role to play in UN deliberative processes. The Secretary-General called on the Council to deepen its dialogue with civil society groups and thus benefit from their expertise, focus and insight. He asked the Council to pay attention to the report of the Panel of Eminent Persons on United Nations-Civil Society Relations (see p. 63), especially the measures proposed for increasing the participation of civil society representatives from developing countries, for strengthening the partnership with civil society in UN humanitarian and development work, and on how the Council might engage more effectively with civil society. The Secretary-General said that he had high hopes for the 2005 international conference on conflict prevention which civil society groups were organizing in response to the recommendation in his 2001 report on conflict prevention [YUN 2001, p. 48].

The President of the Economic and Social Council told the Security Council that civil society organizations were significant actors in crisis and post-crisis situations. Their number, diverse mandates and varying operational capacities made coordination essential to ensure the coherence and impact of their efforts. Many donors, including the United Nations, relied on NGOs as implementing partners of channels for assistance, and, in violent conflicts, they were the principal delivery vehicles. NGOs faced particular challenges, and international organizations and Governments should support them in their efforts. The Economic and Social Council was uniquely placed to interact and consult with civil society, and its various subsidiary bodies had established close contacts with NGOs and other private entities to hear their views on the topics that the intergovernmental bodies were addressing.

On 3 August [S/2004/624], the Security Council President, in a summary of the debate, said that Member States recognized the need to establish a mechanism or a strategy to foster the partnership between the United Nations and civil society organizations. They lauded the organizations' efforts in providing grass-roots information and early warning for conflict prevention, as well as in national reconstruction and rehabilitation. Most members supported the practice of holding "Arria-plus formula" meetings (the "Arria formula" enabled Council members to discuss matters with invited personalities in an informal and closed setting), but others cautioned against formalizing such meetings or other interaction between the Council and those organizations. Member States recognized the need to enhance coordination and cooperation among the Security Council, the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and other UN bodies and institutions involved in conflict prevention and post-conflict peace-building.

Specific recommendations were made for the establishment of a strategy/framework/mechanism for post-conflict peace-building; maintaining governmental/intergovernmental and civil society communication and coordination; incorporating economic and social development in post-conflict peace-building; enhancing and developing creative and cooperative relationships among civil society, the Security Council and the UN system as a whole; following up on the recommendations of the Panel on UN relationships with civil society (see below); making use of the Arria-formula type of meetings; correcting the representational imbalance of civil society organizations; and convening independent commissions of inquiry following UN operations.

Report of Panel on UN-Civil Society Relations. The Panel of Eminent Persons on United Nations-Civil Society Relations, in its June report "We the peoples: civil society, the United Nations and global governance" [A/58/817] (see p. 1360), noted that the Security Council had greatly enhanced its relations with civil society in recent years, largely in response to its changing roles in the post-cold war era and the changing nature of conflicts. That expanded engagement was largely with NGOs in the areas of international humanitarian assistance and human rights and, to a lesser extent, with religious leaders. It had taken the form of more frequent Arria formula meetings, regular meetings with the NGO Working Group on the Security Council, expanded contacts with international NGOs and more frequent field visits of Council members to meet with civil society. While some civil society actors regarded those informal consultations as sufficient, others believed that they were not inclusive enough and mechanisms for exchanges with civil society should be enhanced through a more formal UN instrument.

The Panel proposed that Council members should further strengthen their dialogue with civil society by improving the planning and effectiveness of the Arria formula meetings; ensuring that the Council's field missions met regularly with appropriate local civil society leaders, international humanitarian NGOs and others; holding a series of Council seminars to discuss issues of emerging importance, which would include presentations by civil society and other constituencies; and convening independent commissions of inquiry after Council-mandated operations.

UN role in post-conflict national reconciliation

On 26 January [meeting 4903], the Security Council considered the agenda item "Post-conflict national reconciliation: role of the United Nations".

The Council President, in opening the debate, said that post-conflict national reconciliation presented challenges for the work of the United Nations, raising questions as to what role the Organization should have in national reconciliation processes; whether it should incorporate the need for reconciliation into exit strategies for post-conflict situations or design specific strategies for reconciliation; and what role other principal UN organs should play. Other questions concerned the principles and mechanisms of reconciliation, and the instruments for seeking truth, such as truth and reconciliation commissions, consensus-building among political actors, reparations for victims and the role of justice.

The Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs, Tuliameni Kalomoh, in his briefing, contended that post-conflict reconciliation was closely related to the broader discussion of the rule of law and to addressing the root causes of the conflict. The Council, in its 2003 debate on the issue [YUN 2003, p. 59], had identified the need to incorporate rule of law concerns into UN activities (see p. 65). The international community had employed a number of instruments to address the issue of reconciliation, such as tribunals, truth and reconciliation commissions, amnesties (except for genocide, war crimes and crimes against humanity), reparations and targeted assistance programmes. Although it was difficult to apply standard prescriptions for reconciliation to every situation, some general observations could be informative. First, peace without reconciliation was hardly ever durable. Secondly, it was difficult to achieve reconciliation without a significant measure of justice. Thirdly, there were some crimes that were so heinous that they required that justice be done. Fourthly, the pursuit of justice should not become an obstacle to establishing or maintaining peace. Reconciliation was a complex, often difficult process in which contradictions might be inevitable. It involved accounting for the past and meeting demands for justice and the degree of forgiveness that would allow for the reconstruction of the social fabric, and striking a balance between the aggrieved and the aggressors, the pursuit of justice and stability. It was a long-term process and the right combination of measures would depend on the specific conditions in each post-conflict situation.

The Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), Mark Malloch Brown, speaking about UNDP's role in reconciliation, said that, since the submission of the report of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations (Brahimi report) [YUN 2000, p. 83], there had been a clear understanding of the different roles played by the various parts of the United Nations, under the leadership of the Department for Political Affairs, in post-conflict reconstruction in general and in reconciliation in particular. For UNDP, that presented some critical issues. First, there was a significant funding gap in every post-conflict situation during the process from relief to reconciliation. Secondly, although UNDP was much less well resourced in areas such as disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, the rule of law and justice and early support for building electoral systems, it worked in all of those areas. However, despite its strengthened capacity in those areas, it was difficult to provide adequate support to half a dozen of those activities around the world at the same time. UNDP had therefore begun to discuss with key supporters how to strengthen its own capabilities and how the international community could make funds available more quickly for the early steps of reconciliation.

Carolyn McAskie, Deputy Emergency Relief Coordinator, said that a principled and strategic approach to humanitarian assistance was required so as to ensure that it did not perpetuate grievance or hamper longer-term development, and adequate funding was necessary not only for life-sustaining assistance but also for programmes that had a significant impact on national reconciliation. There was considerable scope to look further into ways to channel reconciliation efforts into the programmatic work of UN agencies, bearing in mind the fact that humanitarians played an important bridging role. The United Nations Children's Fund, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the World Food Programme and other humanitarian agencies already played that role in their everyday work. Humanitarian aid had to be consistently and equitably provided. Legal and judicial mechanisms, international humanitarian law, property restitution, reintegration and reparations had to be consistently applied if reconciliation was to have a solid base. However, humanitarian assistance alone would not provide a solution to crises. Without reconciliation, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development, countries would slip back into the horrors of war, and the efforts of the humanitarian community would be lost. Sixty-five per cent of the countries emerging from conflict in Africa were slipping back into violence, and the international community could not afford to be complacent on that front. It was therefore vital to have an international support strategy to ensure that humanitarian activities were reinforced with reconciliation, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 January [meeting 4903], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/2 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council met on 26 January 2004 to consider the item entitled "Post-conflict national reconciliation: role of the United Nations". Members expressed their respective views and understandings on, and reaffirmed the vital importance of, this matter, stressing the necessary close cooperation needed in the United Nations system, including the Council, on this issue.

The statements underscored the important tasks that must be addressed in post-conflict situations in order to reach the goal of national reconciliation, as well as the relevant experience and expertise that exist within the United Nations system and in Member States.

Members considered that it would be appropriate to examine further how to harness and direct this expertise and experience drawn up from several key areas, so that it would be more readily accessible to the Council, to the wider United Nations system and membership, and to the international community as a whole, so that the lessons and experience of the past could be, as appropriate, learned and built on.

The Council invites the Secretary-General to give consideration to the relevant views expressed in this debate in preparation of his report on the role of the United Nations in justice and the rule of law.

The Council invites all Members of the United Nations, and other parts of the United Nations system with relevant experience and expertise, to contribute to this process.

The rule of law and transitional justice in conflict and post-conflict situations

Consideration by Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice. The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, at its thirteenth session (11-20 May) [E/2004/30], recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption a draft resolution entitled "The rule of law and development: strengthening the rule of law and the reform of criminal justice institutions, with emphasis on technical assistance, including in post-conflict reconstruction". That resolution was adopted by the Council as resolution 2004/25 (see p. 1111).

Report of Secretary-General. In August [S/2004/616], the Secretary-General submitted a report on the rule of law and transitional justice in conflict and post-conflict societies, highlighting the key issues and lessons learned from UN experience in promoting justice and the rule of law in those societies. The report took into account the views expressed during the Security Council's 26 January debate on the UN role in post-conflict national reconciliation, as requested by the Council in presidential statement S/PRST/2004/2 (see p. 64). Among the key issues discussed were: strengthening the rule of law and transitional justice in the wake of conflict; articulating a common language of justice for the United Nations; assistance based on international norms and standards; identifying the UN role in peace operations; assessing national needs and capacities; supporting domestic reform; filling a rule of law vacuum; developing national justice systems; learning lessons from ad hoc tribunals; facilitating truth telling; delivering reparations; and coordinating UN efforts.

The Secretary-General said that in recent years, the United Nations had increasingly focused on questions of transitional justice and the rule of law in conflict and post-conflict societies, gaining important lessons for future activities. Success would depend on critical factors such as the need to ensure a common basis in international norms and standards and to mobilize the necessary resources for a sustainable investment in justice. The United Nations should support domestic reform constituencies, help build the capacity of national justice sector institutions, facilitate national consultations on justice reform and transitional justice and help fill the rule of law vacuum evident in so many post-conflict societies. In some cases, international or mixed tribunals had been established to address past crimes in war-torn societies. While they had helped to bring justice and hope to victims, combat impunity and enrich the jurisprudence of international criminal law, they were expensive and contributed little to sustainable national capacities for justice administration. The International Criminal Court offered hope for a permanent reduction in the phenomenon of impunity, and the further ratification of its statute was to be encouraged. Truth commissions, also valuable in the quest for justice and reconciliation, had proved to be a vital element of transitional justice and were key to restoring public trust in national institutions of governance. Strengthening UN support in those areas would require efforts to enhance coordination among all actors, develop rosters of experts and technical tools, and more systematically record, analyse and apply those lessons in Council mandates, peace processes and the operations of UN peace missions.

The Secretary-General recommended that peace agreements and Council resolutions and mandates: give priority to the restoration of and respect for the rule of law; respect, incorporate and apply international standards for fairness, due process and human rights in the administration of justice; reject any amnesty for genocide, war crimes or crimes against humanity, including ethnic, gender and sexually based international crimes; ensure that the United Nations did not establish or participate in any tribunal that included capital punishment among possible sanctions; require that all judicial processes be credible, fair, independent and impartial; recognize and respect the rights of victims and accused persons, particularly the most affected groups; recognize the differential impact of conflict and rule of law deficits on women and children and the need to ensure gender sensitivity in the restoration of rule of law and transitional justice; fund national needs assessment and consultation processes; where mixed tribunals were envisaged for divided societies, consider mandating a majority of international judges to enhance the credibility and perceived fairness of such tribunals; insist on full governmental cooperation with international and mixed tribunals, including in the surrender of accused persons; adopt an integrated and comprehensive approach to the rule of law and transitional justice; ensure the provision of adequate resources, including a sustainable funding mechanism; and consider the establishment of national human rights commissions during transitional arrangements.

The Secretary-General announced his intention to instruct the Executive Committee on Peace and Security to propose action on the matters discussed in the report, with the aim of strengthening UN support for transitional justice and the rule of law in conflict and post-conflict countries and ensured their integration into planning of UN peace operations. The Committee should, among other actions, propose new or enhanced UN system mechanisms for collecting and developing best practices, documentation, guidelines and other tools for transitional justice and for justice sector development; develop workable national-level rule of law coordination mechanisms; and ensure that all programmes and policies supporting constitutional, judicial and legislative reform promoted gender equality.

Statement by Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, introducing his 2004 report on the work of the Organization [A/59/1] (see p. 3) before the General Assembly on 21 September [meeting 3], said that the rule of law was at risk around the world. Laws were shamelessly disregarded as civilians were massacred in cold blood, while relief workers, journalists and other non-combatants were taken hostage or put to death in the most barbarous fashion, prisoners were abused and whole populations displaced and their homes destroyed, while rape was used as a deliberate strategy. No cause, no grievance, however legitimate, could justify such acts, the prevalence of which reflected the collective failure to uphold the rule of law and instil respect for human life. The current international framework of fair rules, norms and laws was riddled with gaps and weaknesses, applied selectively, enforced arbitrarily, and lacked the teeth to make it into an effective legal system. Where enforcement capacity existed, as in the Security Council, many felt it was not always used fairly or effectively and where the rule of law was most earnestly invoked, as in the Commission on Human Rights, those invoking it did not always practise what they preached. By reintroducing the rule of law and confidence in its impartial application, societies shattered by conflict could be resuscitated.

The Secretary-General recalled his promise to the Security Council to make strengthening the rule of law and transitional justice in conflict and post-conflict societies a priority for the remainder of his tenure. He urged the Assembly to do more to foster the rule of law, to sign and implement treaties on the protection of civilians, and to support the measures he would propose on improving the security of UN staff (see p. 1475).

The United States President, George W. Bush, proposed the establishment of a UN democracy fund to help countries lay the foundation of democracy by instituting the rule of law, independent courts, a free press, political parties and trade unions, and to help set up and support election monitors. The United States would make an initial contribution to the fund and he urged other nations to do likewise.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 6 October [meeting 5052], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/34 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council thanks the Secretary-General for his report of 3 August 2004, which was reissued on 23 August 2004, and reaffirms the vital importance that the Council attaches to promoting justice and the rule of law, and post-conflict national reconciliation. The Council will consider, as appropriate in its deliberations, the recommendations set out in paragraph 64 of the report.

The Council urges the Secretariat to make proposals for implementation of the recommendations set out in paragraph 65 of the report, and draws attention in particular to the importance of the practical measures set out in that paragraph that can be implemented rapidly, including coordinating existing expertise and resources, setting up databases and web-based resources, developing rosters of experts and organizing workshops and training programmes. The Council urges Member States that are interested in doing so to contribute national expertise and materials to these developments, within their means, and to improve their capacities in these areas.

The Council recalls the important statement made by the Secretary-General to the fifty-ninth session of the General Assembly on 21 September 2004, and endorses his view that "it is by reintroducing the rule of law, and confidence in its impartial application, that we can hope to resuscitate societies shattered by conflict". The Council stresses the importance and urgency of the restoration of justice and the rule of law in post-conflict societies, not only in order to come to terms with past abuses, but also to promote national reconciliation and to help prevent a return to conflict in the future. The Council emphasizes that such processes must be inclusive, gender-sensitive and open to the full participation of women.

The Council underlines the importance of assessing the particular justice and rule of law needs in each host country, taking into consideration the nature of the country's legal system, traditions and institutions, and of avoiding a "one size fits all" approach. The Council recognizes that building national capacities and independent national institutions is essential, that local ownership and leadership in that process should be encouraged and respected, and that international structures can play a complementary and supportive role.

The Council emphasizes that ending the climate of impunity is essential to the efforts of a conflict and post-conflict society to come to terms with past abuses and in preventing future abuses. The Council draws attention to the full range of mechanisms of transitional justice that should be considered, including national, international and "mixed" criminal tribunals and truth and reconciliation commissions, and underlines the fact that those mechanisms should concentrate not only on individual responsibility for serious crimes, but also on the need to seek peace, truth and national reconciliation. The Council welcomes the report's balanced appraisal of the lessons to be learned from the experience of the ad hoc international criminal tribunals and "mixed" tribunals.

The Council recalls that justice and the rule of law at the international level are of key importance for promoting and maintaining peace, stability and development in the world. The Council underlines also the importance of helping to prevent future conflicts through addressing their root causes in a legitimate and fair manner.

The Council warmly welcomes the Secretary-General's decision to make the United Nations work to strengthen the rule of law and transitional justice in conflict and post-conflict societies a priority for the remainder of his tenure. The Council invites the Secretary-General to keep it informed of the Secretariat's progress in taking forward the recommendations set out in paragraph 65 of the report, and expresses the intention to consider this matter again within six months.

Cooperation with regional organizations

Security Council consideration (May). On 7 May [meeting 4964], the Chairman-in-Office of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) briefed the Security Council on its cooperation with the United Nations, the EU, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and other regional organizations. He said that OSCE had helped to end the civil war in Tajikistan, constrained conflict in Georgia, the Republic of Moldova and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and, with the United Nations, continued to play a major role in building civil society in post-conflict Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Serbia and Montenegro province of Kosovo. Currently, OSCE had 18 field missions, mostly in the Caucasus and in Central Asian countries, which helped it deal with new threats to security. In its efforts to combat terrorism, OSCE worked closely with the Council's Counter-Terrorism Committee. It also worked in controlling the spread of small arms. In March, with the UN Office on Drugs and Crime, it hosted the third special meeting of the Counter-Terrorism Committee with international, regional and subregional organizations [S/2004/276]. In cooperation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, it was paying attention to the role of education in building tolerance and inter-cultural understanding. The United Nations and OSCE worked well together in the field, especially in Kosovo, where it was an integral part of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo. In Georgia, OSCE supported the efforts of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia to bring about a comprehensive settlement of the conflict in Abkhazia.

In its wide range of activities, OSCE had good working relations with the United Nations, which could be further strengthened. It would continue to cooperate with the United Nations, the EU and NATO to improve their ability to respond quickly in addressing major contemporary challenges.

Security Council consideration (July). On 20 July [meeting 5007], the Security Council met to discuss cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in stabilization processes. Attending the meeting were representatives of the AU, the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), the Economic Community of West African States, the EU, the League of Arab States, NATO, the Organization of the Islamic Conference and OSCE.

The Council President (Romania), in a background document on the subject [S/2004/546], stated that the purpose of the meeting was to identify new methods of cooperation and interaction between the United Nations and regional organizations and innovative approaches in conflict stabilization processes. It would also review progress made since its 2003 meeting on the theme "The Security Council and regional organizations: facing the new challenges to international peace and security" [YUN 2003, p. 58].

Addressing the Council, the Secretary-General said that the United Nations was currently cooperating with regional organizations in stabilization processes in many countries, particularly with the AU and the EU in Africa, the EU and NATO in Europe, the Organization of American States and the Caribbean Community in Haiti, and with coalition forces in Afghanistan. That cooperation had shown that, in many instances, regional organizations could be on the ground much faster than the United Nations. Indeed, the AU, the EU and NATO had either established or were developing rapid response capabilities for peacekeeping operations. Not all regional organizations, however, could sustain deployments over a long period, and the legitimacy that flowed from UN operations was often needed for longer-term sustainability.

The cooperative efforts of the United Nations with regional organizations had not been without problems. Full integration was not always easy, due to different mandates, organizational cultures and leadership roles. In trying to enhance cooperation, the United Nations had to consider the comparative strengths of different organizations and work to create strategic partnerships that met challenges. Moreover, UN cooperation with regional organizations, though established across a wide range of activities, was often ad hoc. More institutionalized channels of cooperation would help ensure greater efficiency and effectiveness and economies of scale. To that end, the Secretary-General exchanged views regularly with heads of regional organizations on issues of common concern. He would discuss with them cooperation mechanisms for monitoring the protection of civilians in armed conflict, measures for building tolerance and promoting a dialogue among civilizations and lessons learned from field experiences, such as military-civilian cooperation, policing, institution-building and confidence-building measures. The 2005 high-level meeting between the United Nations and regional organizations would review progress in implementing decisions on those issues.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in his report on the work of the Organization [A/59/1] (see p. 3), gave examples of UN cooperation with regional organizations in pursuit of the shared goals of peace, stability and development in a framework of democratic governance and respect for human rights and the rule of law.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 July [meeting 5007], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/27 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council met on 20 July 2004 to consider the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in stabilization processes". Members recalled that Articles 52 and 53 of the Charter of the United Nations set forth the contribution of regional organizations to the settlement of disputes, as well as the relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations.

The Council recalls its invitation of January 1993 to regional organizations to improve coordination with the United Nations, the Declaration of the General Assembly of December 1994 on the enhancement of cooperation between the United Nations and regional arrangements or agencies, and its meeting on "The Security Council and regional organizations: facing the new challenges to international peace and security", held on 11 April 2003 under the Mexican presidency of the Council.

On 20 July 2004, members expressed their views on the cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations and acknowledged the important role that can be played by the latter in the prevention, resolution and management of conflicts, including by addressing their root causes.

The statements emphasized that the Council has primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security and that effectively adressing the numerous conflict situations confronting the international community would require an increased level of cooperation with regional organizations, where appropriate.

Member States and heads of regional organizations participating in the meeting stressed their interest in enhancing cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in the maintenance of international peace and security. They also considered that regular dialogue on specific issues between the Council and regional organizations would bring significant added value in this respect.

It was stressed that common and coordinated efforts undertaken by the United Nations and regional organizations in stabilization processes should be based on complementarity and their comparative advantages, making full use of their experience, in accordance with the Charter and the relevant statutes of the regional organizations.

The statements reiterated the importance of a coherent approach to stabilization processes through improved cooperation and collaboration, including increased and timely exchange of information between United Nations and regional organizations, in accordance with the provisions of Article 54 of the Charter.

The Council welcomes the ongoing practice of high-level meetings of the Secretary-General with regional organizations and the consensus reached over modalities of cooperation in conflict prevention and principles of cooperation in peace-building. It invites the Secretary-General to give consideration to the relevant views expressed in this debate in preparation of the next high-level meeting and to keep the Council informed as appropriate.

The Council invites regional organizations to take necessary steps to increase collaboration with the United Nations in order to maximize efficiency in stabilization processes and also encourages enhanced cooperation and coordination among regional and subregional organizations themselves, in particular through the exchange of information and by sharing experience and best practices.

The Council invites all Members of the United Nations to contribute to the strengthening of the capacity of regional and subregional organizations in all parts of the world, including through the provision of human, technical and financial assistance.

The Council invites all Members of the United Nations, and other parts of the United Nations system with relevant experience and expertise, to contribute to this process.

The Council, in statement S/PRST/2004/44 of 19 November (see p. 282), recognized the importance of cooperation between the United Nations and the AU to build capacity to deal with collective security challenges.

Commemoration of the sixtieth anniversary of the end of the Second World War

On 22 November [meeting 59], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/26 [draft: A/59/L.28/Rev.2, as orally revised] without vote [agenda item 158].

Commemoration of the sixtieth anniversary of the end of the Second World War

The General Assembly,

Recalling that 2005 marks the sixtieth anniversary of the end of the Second World War, the war which brought untold sorrow to mankind,

Stressing that this historic event established the conditions for the creation of the United Nations, designed to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war,

Calling upon the States Members of the United Nations to unite their efforts in dealing with new challenges and threats, with the United Nations playing a central role, and to make every effort to settle all disputes by peaceful means in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and in such a manner that international peace and security are not endangered,

Underlining the progress made since the end of the Second World War in overcoming its legacy and towards establishing reconciliation, international and regional cooperation and the promotion of democratic values, human rights and fundamental freedoms, in particular through the United Nations, and the establishment of regional organizations and other appropriate frameworks,

1. Declares 8-9 May as a time of remembrance and reconciliation and, while recognizing that Member States may have individual days of victory, liberation and commemoration, invites all Member States, organizations of the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations and individuals to observe annually either one or both of these days in an appropriate manner to pay tribute to all victims of the Second World War;

2. Requests the President of the General Assembly to hold a special solemn meeting of the General Assembly in the second week of May 2005 in commemoration of all victims of the war;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Member States and organizations of the United Nations system and to take measures necessary for its implementation.

The Assembly, by decision 59/552 of 23 December, decided that the item entitled "Declaration by the United Nations of 8 and 9 May as days of remembrance and reconciliation" would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session.

Threats to international peace and security

International terrorism

High-level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change

The High-level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change, in its report transmitted to the General Assembly in December [A/59/565 & Corr.1], described the effects of terrorism and made recommendations for its prevention. The Panel said that terrorism attacked the values that lay at the heart of the United Nations Charter—respect for human rights, the rule of law, rules of war to protect civilians, tolerance among people and nations, and the peaceful resolution of conflict. Two new dynamics gave the terrorist threat greater urgency—the instance (not likely to be the last) of an armed non-State network (Al-Qaida) with global reach and sophisticated capacity; and the threat that terrorists, for whatever motivation, would seek to cause mass casualties.

The Panel recommended that the United Nations, with the Secretary-General taking a leading role, promote a comprehensive strategy against terrorism. That strategy would include dissuasion, working to reverse the causes or facilitators of terrorism through promoting social and political rights and the rule of law, and to end occupations, address major political grievances, combat organized crime, reduce poverty and unemployment, and stop State collapse. It should also encompass efforts to counter extremism and intolerance, including through education and fostering public debate; development of better instruments for global counter-terrorism cooperation, within a legal framework that was respectful of civil liberties and human rights; building State capacity to prevent terrorist recruitment and operations; and control of dangerous materials and public health defence.

Member States that had not done so were urged to sign and ratify all 12 international conventions against terrorism [YUN 2001, p. 69], and adopt the eight Special Recommendations on Terrorist Financing issued by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development-supported Financial Action Task Force on Money-Laundering [ibid., p. 68] and the measures recommended in its various best practices papers. The General Assembly should rapidly complete negotiations on a comprehensive convention on terrorism, incorporating a definition of terrorism. The Security Council should extend the authority of the Counter-Terrorism Executive Directorate (see p. 79) to act as a clearing house for State-to-State provision of military, police and border control assistance for developing domestic counter-terrorism capacities. The Council should devise a schedule of predetermined sanctions for State non-compliance with the Council's counter-terrorism resolutions. To help Member States comply with their counter-terrorism obligations, the United Nations should establish a capacity-building trust fund.

2004 terrorist incidents

Spain

On 11 March, a terrorist attack on commuter trains in Madrid, Spain, claimed the lives of 200 people and caused over 1,400 other casualties, some 190 of whom were in serious or critical condition. Among the dead and wounded were nationals not only of Spain, but of over 20 other countries.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On the same day [meeting 4923], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1530 (2004). The draft [S/2004/186] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and its relevant resolutions, in particular its resolution 1373(2001) of 28 September 2001,

Reaffirming also the need to combat by all means, in accordance with the Charter, threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts,

1. Condemns in the strongest terms the bomb attacks in Madrid perpetrated by the terrorist group Euskadi ta Askatasuna (ETA) on 11 March 2004, in which many lives were lost and people injured, and regards such acts, like any act of terrorism, as a threat to peace and security;

2. Expresses its deepest sympathy and condolences to the people and Government of Spain and to the victims of the terrorist attacks and their families;

3. Urges all States, in accordance with their obligations under resolution 1373(2001), to cooperate actively in efforts to find and bring to justice the perpetrators, organizers and sponsors of these terrorist attacks;

4. Expresses its reinforced determination to combat all forms of terrorism, in accordance with its responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations.

Communications. On 12 March [S/2004/196], Romania, in a letter addressed to the Council President, noted that among those killed were two Romanian citizens and 75 others were injured. Romania emphasized the importance of elaborating and enforcing comprehensive counter-terrorism legislation and urged the Council to continue to discharge its responsibility for international peace and security, including through its Counter-Terrorism Committee. The adoption of resolution 1530(2004) should be followed by concrete and firm measures to bring to justice the perpetrators and sponsors of such heinous acts.

On 15 March [S/2004/204], Spain conveyed its appreciation for the expressions of sympathy and cooperation demonstrated by the Council in resolution 1530(2004), adopted only a few hours after the attacks. It said that when the Council adopted that text, the Spanish Government was firmly convinced that the terrorist group ETA was behind the 11 March events. Since then, new evidence pointed to the involvement of citizens of other countries and investigations were continuing. In a further communication of 31 March [S/2004/269], Spain expressed its regret at its earlier conclusion and reported that the attacks were committed by radical Islamist elements, many of whom were Moroccans. With the collaboration of the Moroccan police, an investigation was being conducted into the terrorist organization Moroccan Islamic Combat Group. It had been determined that individuals, whose whereabouts were unknown and who apparently took part in preparing and carrying out the attacks, were involved in drug trafficking. The investigation was ongoing and the Spanish police were processing the relevant international arrest warrants.

Russian Federation

Grozny incident

On 10 May [meeting 4966], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/14 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council unequivocally condemns the terrorist bomb attack that took place on 9 May 2004 in Grozny, Russian Federation, as a result of which many people were injured and killed, including the President of the Chechen Republic of the Russian Federation, Mr. Ahmad Kadyrov.

The Council condemns in the strongest terms the perpetrators of this heinous act committed against innocent people at the stadium when celebrating Victory Day—the most solemn national holiday in the Russian Federation.

The Council expresses its deepest sympathy and condolences to the people and to the Government of the Russian Federation and to the victims and their families.

The Council urges all States, in accordance with their obligation under resolution 1373(2001) of 28 September 2001, to cooperate with the Russian authorities in their efforts to bring to justice the perpetrators, organizers and sponsors of this attack.

The Council reaffirms that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations constitutes one of the most serious threats to international peace and security and that any acts of terrorism are criminal and unjustifiable, regardless of their motivation, whenever and by whomsoever committed.

The Council expresses its determination to combat all forms of terrorism, in accordance with its responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations.

Beslan incident

On 1 September, more than 30 armed men seized a school in the town of Beslan in the North Ossetia region of the Russian Federation during a ceremony to mark the first day of the school term, taking more than 1,000 people hostage. The siege, which ended two days later, resulted in the death of 360 persons, of whom 172 were children and 30 members of the gang that seized the school.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On the same day [meeting 5026], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/31 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council condemns in the strongest terms the heinous terrorist act involving the taking of hostages at a secondary school in the town of Beslan, Russian Federation, on 1 September 2004, as well as other terrorist attacks committed recently against innocent civilians in Moscow and on two Russian airliners, in which many lives were claimed and people injured.

The Council demands the immediate and unconditional release of all hostages in the terrorist attack.

The Council expresses its deepest sympathy and condolences to the people and the Government of the Russian Federation and to the victims of the terrorist acts and their families.

The Council urges all States, in accordance with their obligations under resolution 1373(2001), to cooperate actively with the Russian authorities in their efforts to find and bring to justice the perpetrators, organizers and sponsors of these terrorist acts.

The Council reaffirms that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations constitutes one of the most serious threats to international peace and security and that any acts of terrorism are criminal and unjustifiable, regardless of their motivation, whenever and by whomsoever committed.

The Council expresses its determination to combat all forms of terrorism, in accordance with its responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations.

Communications. The Russian Federation President, Vladimir Putin, in a 4 September statement [A/59/337-S/2004/721], said that the Beslan incident was an inhuman crime by terrorists and a direct intervention on the part of international terrorists against Russia, which had to create a more effective security system and demand that its law enforcement agencies took actions commensurate with the level and scale of the new threats.

The heads of the member States of CIS, in a 16 September statement [A/59/537-S/2004/868], expressed their solidarity with the Russian Federation in its fight against terrorism and their conviction that only concerted efforts in combating international terrorism would prevent its spread. The heads of State instructed the relevant national structures to prepare a concept of cooperation between CIS member States in combating terrorism and other violent manifestations of extremism, and pledged to contribute to the struggle waged by the international community against the threat of terrorism.

The State Duma of the Federal Assembly of the Russian Federation, in a 22 September statement [A/59/538], expressed gratitude to all national parliaments, international organizations, State and public figures and peoples of foreign States for their expression of sympathy and called for international solidarity in combating terrorism, given the expanding geographical scope of terrorist acts, their brutality and the transformation of civilians, and even children, into the main target of terror.

Other incidents

On 8 October, the Security Council President made a press statement [SC/8215], affirming that Council members strongly condemned recent terrorist attacks in which many lives were claimed and people injured, including the horrific attacks in Pakistan, the 7 October heinous attack in Taba, Egypt, and the murder of a British civilian in Baghdad. By adopting resolution 1566(2004) by consensus, the Council had reaffirmed the central role of the United Nations in the fight against terrorism and the Council's determination to stand together in confronting terrorism. The Council urged all States, in accordance with their obligations under resolution 1373(2001) [YUN 2001, p. 61] and other relevant Council resolutions, to cooperate actively in their efforts to find and bring to justice the perpetrators, organizers and sponsors of terrorist acts. They reaffirmed their view that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations constituted one of the most serious threats to international peace and security, and that any acts of terrorism were criminal and unjustifiable.

Anniversary of bombing of UN Baghdad office

On 19 August, the Security Council President issued a press statement on the first anniversary of the bombing of the UN headquarters in Baghdad [SC/8170-1K/455], stating that Council members together with the entire system commemorated that day as one of the most tragic days in the history of the Organization. A year earlier, the UN family lost Sergio Vieira de Mello and 21 other UN staff members in the bombing. Their deaths came as a result of the terrorist attack aimed at breaking the will of the international community, which came to Iraq with no other mission than to help its people regain control of their own destiny and build a better future of peace, justice, sovereignty and full independence. Those who killed the UN staff members had committed a crime, not only against the United Nations, but also against Iraq itself, the statement said. Paying tribute to those who lost their lives in that attack, members of the Council noted the continuing terrorist attacks on the representatives of the international community working in Iraq and strongly condemned them.

Measures to eliminate terrorism

During 2004, the United Nations pursued action on several fronts to combat and eliminate international terrorism. The General Assembly, on 2 December, adopted resolution 59/46 (see p. 1311) on measures to eliminate international terrorism.

The Security Council, by resolution 1526 (2004) of 30 January (see p. 332), decided to improve implementation of the measures imposed by its previous resolutions against Al-Qaida, the Taliban and their associates. On 28 April, by resolution 1540(2004) (see p. 544), the Council, concerned by the threat of illicit trafficking in nuclear, chemical and biological weapons and their means of delivery, decided that all States should establish domestic controls to prevent the proliferation of those weapons and their means of delivery. In October, during consideration of the agenda item "Threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts", the Council adopted additional measures to be taken to combat terrorism (see below).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 8 October [meeting 5053], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1566(2004).

The draft [S/2004/792] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 1267(1999) of 15 October 1999 and 1373(2001) of 28 September 2001, as well as its other resolutions concerning threats to international peace and security caused by terrorism,

Recalling, in this regard, its resolution 1540(2004) of 28 April 2004,

Reaffirming the imperative to combat terrorism in all its forms and manifestations by all means, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and international law,

Deeply concerned by the increasing number of victims, including children, of acts of terrorism motivated by intolerance or extremism in various regions of the world,

Calling upon States to cooperate fully with the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1373(2001) concerning counter-terrorism (the Counter-Terrorism Committee), including the recently established Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate, the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) concerning Al-Qaida and the Taliban and associated individuals and entities and its Analytical Support and Sanctions Monitoring Team, and the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540 (2004), and further calling upon such bodies to enhance cooperation with each other,

Reminding States that they must ensure that any measures taken to combat terrorism comply with all their obligations under international law, and should adopt such measures in accordance with international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law,

Reaffirming that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations constitutes one of the most serious threats to peace and security,

Considering that acts of terrorism seriously impair the enjoyment of human rights and threaten the social and economic development of all States and undermine global stability and prosperity,

Emphasizing that enhancing dialogue and broadening understanding among civilizations, in an effort to prevent the indiscriminate targeting of different religions and cultures, and addressing unresolved regional conflicts and the full range of global issues, including development issues, will contribute to international cooperation, which by itself is necessary to sustain the broadest possible fight against terrorism,

Reaffirming its profound solidarity with victims of terrorism and their families,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Condemns in the strongest terms all acts of terrorism irrespective of their motivation, whenever and by whomsoever committed, as one of the most serious threats to peace and security;

2. Calls upon States to cooperate fully in the fight against terrorism, especially with those States where or against whose citizens terrorist acts are committed, in accordance with their obligations under international law, in order to find, deny safe haven and bring to justice, on the basis of the principle of extradite or prosecute, any person who supports, facilitates, participates or attempts to participate in the financing, planning, preparation or commission of terrorist acts or provides safe havens;

3. Recalls that criminal acts, including against civilians, committed with the intent to cause death or serious bodily injury, or taking of hostages, with the purpose of provoking a state of terror in the general public or in a group of persons or particular persons, intimidating a population or compelling a government or an international organization to do or to abstain from doing any act, which constitute offences within the scope of and as defined in the international conventions and protocols relating to terrorism, are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature, and calls upon all States to prevent such acts and, to ensure that such acts if not prevented, are punished by penalties consistent with their grave nature;

4. Calls upon all States to become party, as a matter of urgency, to the relevant international conventions and protocols whether or not they are party to regional conventions on the matter;

5. Calls upon Member States to cooperate fully on an expedited basis in resolving all outstanding issues with a view to adopting by consensus the draft comprehensive convention on international terrorism and the draft international convention for the suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism;

6. Calls upon relevant international, regional and subregional organizations to strengthen international cooperation in the fight against terrorism and to intensify their interaction with the United Nations and, in particular, the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1373(2001) concerning counter-terrorism (the Counter-Terrorism Committee), with a view to facilitating full and timely implementation of resolution 1373(2001);

7. Requests the Counter-Terrorism Committee, in consultation with relevant international, regional and subregional organizations and the United Nations bodies to develop a set of best practices to assist States in implementing the provisions of resolution 1373(2001) related to the financing of terrorism;

8. Directs the Counter-Terrorism Committee, as a matter of priority and, when appropriate, in close cooperation with relevant international, regional and subregional organizations, to start visits to States, with the consent of the States concerned, in order to enhance the monitoring of the implementation of resolution 1373(2001) and facilitate the provision of technical and other assistance for such implementation;

9. Decides to establish a working group consisting of all members of the Security Council to consider and submit recommendations to the Council on practical measures to be imposed upon individuals, groups or entities involved in or associated with terrorist activities, other than those designated by the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267 (1999) concerning Al-Qaida and the Taliban and associated individuals and entities, including more effective procedures considered to be appropriate for bringing them to justice through prosecution or extradition, freezing their financial assets, preventing their movement through the territories of Member States, and preventing supply to them of all types of arms and related material, and on the procedures for implementing these measures;

10. Requests the working group established pursuant to paragraph 9 above to consider the possibility of establishing an international fund to compensate victims of terrorist acts and their families, which might be financed through voluntary contributions, which could consist in part of assets seized from terrorist organizations, their members and their sponsors, and submit its recommendations to the Council;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to take, as a matter of urgency, appropriate steps to make the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate fully operational and to inform the Council by 15 November 2004;

12. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

The Russian Federation, in a statement after the vote, said that the unprecedented escalation of international terrorism (see p. 72) pointed to the need for the Council to further develop a global anti-terrorist strategy, as defined in resolution 1373(2001) [YUN 2001, p. 61]. Resolution 1566 (2004) set out concrete steps to strengthen security mechanisms and to improve legal instruments for enhancing coordination of international counter-terrorism actions. However, identifying additional anti-terrorist measures posed a problem, and the Council's working group entrusted with that task should, as a priority, search for ways to identify terrorists, possibly drafting a relevant list of those who might subsequently be brought to justice.

Communications. On 12 May [A/59/83-S/2004/387], the Sudan transmitted to the Secretary-General the Khartoum Declaration on Combating Terrorism and Transnational Organized Crime, issued by the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (Khartoum, 17-19 January).

On 23 March [A/58/745-S/2004/235], Cuba protested the inclusion in the United States delegation to the sixtieth session of the Commission on Human Rights of the "notorious terrorist" of Cuban origin, Luis Zúñiga Rey. It said that his inclusion was a sign of disrespect for the United Nations and it jeopardized the security of the Organization.

By letters dated 2 and 21 September [A/58/884-S/2004/718, A/59/371], Cuba informed the Secretary-General that, as a result of Panama's President, Mireya Moscoso, having pardoned four Cuban-born terrorists (Luis Faustino Clemente Posada Carriles, Gaspar Eugenio Jiménez Escobedo, Guillermo Novo Sampoll and Pedro Remón Rodríguez), who were sentenced in Panama for the attempted assassination of Cuban President Fidel Castro in November 2000, it was severing indefinitely diplomatic relations with Panama. Also on 21 September [S/2004/753], Cuba provided further information on the four suspects and requested the Counter-Terrorism

Committee to evaluate the situation in the hope of bringing an end to impunity for those terrorists and to inform Cuba of its conclusions, in the light of resolution 1373(2001).

On 22 September [A/59/383-S/2004/758], Costa Rica conveyed to the Secretary-General the proposal of its President, Abel Pacheco de la Espriella, for establishing a United Nations High Commissioner on Terrorism. The office of such a High Commissioner would be an independent body for coordinating international counter-terrorism activities. The President recommended that the General Assembly request the Secretary-General to report in 2005 on the possible methods, mandate and structure of such an office, which could be operational by December 2007, and to establish a working group for that purpose.

Counter-Terrorism Committee

In 2004, the Counter-Terrorism Committee (CTC), established by Security Council resolution 1373(2001) [YUN 2001, p. 61], updated the consolidated directory of contact points in each State, in a number of international/regional organizations and agencies, and in the UN Secretariat, that would provide information or assistance in connection with matters arising under resolution 1373(2001). The revisions were transmitted by the Committee Chairman to the Council President on 28 April [S/2004/346] and 24 September [S/2004/659].

The Chairman also submitted CTC's work programmes for the 90-day periods 1 January to 31 March [S/2004/32], 1 April to 30 June [S/2004/284], 1 July to 30 September [S/2004/541] and 1 October to 31 December [S/2004/820]. The Council considered those reports at meetings held on 19 July and 19 October under the agenda item "Threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts".

In a 28 May note [S/2004/436], the Council President reported that Council members had agreed to elect Alexander V. Konuzin (Russian Federation) as CTC Chairman and Abdallah Baali (Algeria), Ismael Abraão Gaspar Martins (Angola) and Ronaldo Mota Sardenberg (Brazil) as Vice-Chairmen until 31 December 2004.

Security Council consideration (March). The CTC Chairman, reporting on 4 March [meeting 4921] to the Security Council on the Committee's work, said that the Committee had approved 44 reports from States on their implementation of resolution 1373(2001) under its October to December 2003 programme of work [YUN 2003, p. 66] and its subcommittees had reviewed another 37. As part of that work programme, the report on the problems encountered by States and CTC in implementing resolution 1373(2001) (see p. 78) was submitted to the Council on 14 November 2003. CTC would report on measures to be taken to solve those problems (see p. 77). CTC expanded contacts and cooperation with international, regional and subregional organizations, including participating in their meetings.

Communications. On 1 April [S/2004/276], the CTC Chairman transmitted to the Council President the declaration adopted by the follow-up meeting to the CTC special meeting of 6 March 2003, hosted by OSCE in cooperation with the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (Vienna, 11-12 March 2004), in which international, regional and subregional organizations agreed, among other actions, to enhance the effectiveness of their efforts against terrorism and to coordinate and exchange information with CTC, one another and other relevant international actors to meet the capacity-building needs of their members so as to assist them to implement fully their obligations under resolution 1373(2001).

On 7 May [S/2004/361], the CTC Chairman, in accordance with resolution 1456(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 63], reported on States' reporting to CTC and indicated that, as at 7 May, 71 States had failed to meet the reporting deadlines for the submission of second, third and fourth reports. Of those States, 11 had requested an extension.

Security Council consideration (July). Reporting to the Council on 19 July [meeting 5006], the CTC Chairman, referring to the Committee's report for April to June [S/2004/284], said that during the transition period following the adoption of resolution 1535(2004) (see p. 79) on the revitalization of CTC, the review of reports submitted by States had slowed down. Only 25 of the 65 planned reviews were actually completed, but CTC had taken measures to accelerate the process. The Committee began integrating the analysis of country assessments of assistance needs into the review process, thereby ensuring that global technical assistance efforts were better adjusted to needs. CTC intended to assume a more active role in coordinating technical assistance, particularly through direct dialogue with Member States and through information exchange with the donor community. With regard to transparency, CTC resumed the practice of regular briefings by its Chairman with interested delegations. Given the lack of public awareness about its activities and the resulting misconceptions about its work, it would continue to improve its communication methods. Through CTC efforts, the number of States becoming parties to the 12 terrorism-related international conventions [YUN 2001, p. 69] had increased.

Referring to the Committee's report for July to September [S/2004/541], the CTC Chairman said that, as at 30 June, CTC had received 515 reports from Member States and others, including 162 second, 116 third and 40 fourth reports. However, 71 States had not met the deadline for submission of their reports. CTC's main task was implementing resolution 1535(2004), and in that regard it expected to consider in July the draft organizational plan for the CTC Executive Directorate (see p. 79). It had agreed on formal cooperation with the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 265] concerning Al-Qaida and the Taliban and would seek appropriate working relations with the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540(2004) (see p. 544) concerning non-proliferation problems in the context of the terrorist threat. The Committee would begin preparations for its first visit to a Member State to ensure monitoring of resolution 1373(2001). It would also develop direct dialogue with Member States seeking assistance in strengthening their capacities to combat terrorism.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 19 July [meeting 5006], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/26 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the briefing by the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1373(2001) concerning counter-terrorism (the Counter-Terrorism Committee) on the work of the Committee.

The Council reaffirms that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations constitutes one of the most serious threats to peace and security and that any acts of terrorism are criminal and unjustifiable, regardless of their motivation, whenever and by whomsoever committed.

The Council recalls the statement by its President on 16 October 2003 (S/PRST/2003/17) and its resolution 1535(2004) of 26 March 2004, which indicated the intention of the Council to review the structure and activities of the Counter-Terrorism Committee.

The Council expresses its appreciation for the work of Mr. Inocencio Arias, of Spain, as Chairman of the Counter-Terrorism Committee and also expresses its confidence that the new Chairman, supported by the new Bureau of the Committee, will continue the effective coordination of the Committee in the global fight against terrorism under the aegis of the United Nations by monitoring the implementation of resolution 1373(2001) of 28 September 2001.

The Council invites the Counter-Terrorism Committee to pursue its agenda as set out in the work programme for the Committee for the twelfth 90-day period, focusing on practical measures to implement resolution 1535(2004) on the revitalization of the Committee, including by considering the organizational plan for the newly established Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate.

The Council notes the importance of continuing the efforts of the Counter-Terrorism Committee aimed at increasing the capabilities of Member States to combat terrorism, to identify and address the problems faced by States in implementing resolution 1373(2001), to facilitate the provision of technical assistance adjusted to the countries' needs, to encourage the largest possible number of States to become parties to the international conventions and protocols related to counter-terrorism, and to strengthen its dialogue and cooperation with international, regional and subregional organizations acting in the areas outlined by resolution 1373(2001).

The Council invites the Counter-Terrorism Committee to accelerate its work on country assessments of assistance needs that can be shared with interested donor States and organizations and welcomes the initiation of preparations for the first visit by the Committee to a Member State with its consent in order to enhance the monitoring of the implementation of resolution 1373(2001), focusing in particular on the assistance that might be available to address States' needs.

The Council notes that, as of 30 June 2004, 71 States had not met the deadline for submission of their respective reports to the Counter-Terrorism Committee as set out in resolution 1373(2001). It calls upon them urgently to do so, in order to maintain the universality of response which resolution 1373(2001) requires.

The Council invites the Counter-Terrorism Committee to continue reporting on its activities at regular intervals and expresses its intention to review the structure and activities of the Committee in October 2004.

Security Council consideration (October).

The CTC Chairman, reporting to the Council on 19 October [meeting 5059] on CTC's work programme for July to September [S/2004/541], said that, as at 30 September, CTC had received 526 reports from Member States and others, including 197 first reports, 162 second reports and 118 third reports. However, 78 Member States had not submitted their reports on time.

During the reporting period, CTC approved a guidance document for making assessments of each country's assistance needs and intended to rely on the assessment process to enhance the dialogue with Member States and the donor community with a view to making technical assistance more effective and relevant. In July, the Chairman requested Member States to update on a regular basis the Directory of Counter-Terrorism Information and Sources of Assistance and the Assistance Matrix. The Committee also adopted general guidelines for conducting visits to Member States and procedures for the preparation, conduct and evaluation of CTC visits. The CTC web page was substantially improved and updated. The Chairman submitted the 90-day work programme for October to December [S/2004/820].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 19 October [meeting 5059], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/37 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the briefing by the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1373(2001) concerning counter-terrorism (the Counter-Terrorism Committee) on the work of the Committee.

The Council reaffirms that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations constitutes one of the most serious threats to peace and security and that any acts of terrorism are criminal and unjustifiable, regardless of their motivation, whenever and by whomsoever committed.

The Council recalls the statement by its President of 19 July 2004, resolution 1535(2004), which indicated the intention of the Council to review the structure and activities of the Counter-Terrorism Committee, and resolution 1566(2004) emphasizing additional measures aimed at strengthening international cooperation in combating terrorism.

The Council invites the Counter-Terrorism Committee to pursue its agenda as set out in the work programme for the Committee for the thirteenth 90-day period, focusing on practical measures to implement resolution 1535(2004) on the revitalization of the Committee, including implementation of the organizational plan for the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate, and resolution 1566(2004). These measures will embrace further work to increase the capacity of the Committee, including through enhanced cooperation with the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) concerning Al-Qaida and the Taliban and associated individuals and entities and the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540(2004).

The Council notes the importance of continuing the efforts of the Counter-Terrorism Committee to enhance the capabilities of Member States to combat terrorism, to identify and address the problems faced by States in implementing resolution 1373(2001), to facilitate the provision of technical assistance adjusted to the countries' needs, to encourage the largest possible number of States to become parties to the international conventions and protocols related to counter-terrorism, and to strengthen its dialogue and cooperation with international, regional and subregional organizations acting in the areas outlined in resolution 1373(2001).

The Council invites the Counter-Terrorism Committee to continue preparing and begin sending to Member States assessments of their assistance needs for eventual sharing with interested donor States and organizations, and to accelerate the preparations for the first visits to Member States with their consent in order to enhance the monitoring of the implementation of resolution 1373(2001) and facilitate the provision of technical and other assistance for such implementation.

The Council, recalling paragraph 7 of resolution 1566(2004), invites the Counter-Terrorism Committee to start, in consultation with relevant international, regional and subregional organizations and United Nations bodies, to develop a set of best practices to assist States in implementing the provisions of resolution 1373(2001) related to the financing of terrorism.

The Council notes that, as of 30 September 2004, 78 States had not submitted their respective reports to the Counter-Terrorism Committee on time as set out in resolution 1373(2001). It calls upon them urgently to do so, in order to maintain the universality of response which resolution 1373(2001) requires.

The Council invites the Counter-Terrorism Committee to continue reporting on its activities at regular intervals and expresses its intention to review the structure and activities of the Committee in January 2005.

Report of CTC Chairman. On 16 December [S/2004/982], the CTC Chairman, in accordance with the Committee's eleventh 90-day work programme [S/2004/284], presented to the Security Council a list of 75 States that had failed to meet the reporting deadlines for the submission of second, third and fourth reports, of which 7 had requested an extension.

Arrangements for the CTC Bureau

On 30 March [meeting 4939], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/8 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls the statement by its President of 16 October 2003 (S/PRST/2003/17), which confirmed the continuation of the current arrangements for the Bureau of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1373(2001) concerning counter-terrorism for another six months, until 4 April 2004.

The said six months having elapsed, the Council confirms the continuation of the current arrangements for the Bureau of the Committee for another six months, until 4 October 2004.

Implementation of resolution 1373(2001)

By a January note [S/2004/70], the Security Council President transmitted to the Council the report of the Chair of CTC on the problems encountered in the implementation of resolution 1373(2001) [YUN 2001, p. 61].

The report concluded that implementation of resolution 1373(2001) was encountering serious problems, at the level of both States and CTC. Implementation of the obligations for suppressing the financing of terrorism was placing new burdens on banking institutions and financial professions, legislation on money-laundering was not specific enough, international financial transactions lacked transparency, and national legislation was weak and often did not include provisions for freezing funds. It was also difficult, for both technical and political reasons, to monitor certain non-profit organizations used by terrorists to disseminate propaganda or collect funds on their behalf. Some States were reluctant to create a legislative mechanism for prosecuting those responsible for acts of terrorism wherever committed. Although many States had ratified the main international anti-terrorist conventions, a number of those had not adopted internal enforcement measures.

Because of the relationship between organized crime and terrorism, CTC needed to give greater attention in its dialogue with States to publicizing the means of combating organized crime. It should also play a more proactive role in promoting implementation of anti-terrorist action plans related to weapons of mass destruction, legal obligations in the fields of disarmament, arms limitation and non-proliferation, and instruments aimed at combating the manufacturing and trafficking of small arms and weapons.

Technical assistance was a major component of CTC work. As CTC was assuming a more proactive role in that area, its structure and working methods needed to be revisited in order to increase efficiency. It needed to evaluate the specific needs of States in that area, enhance relations with assistance providers, serve as a focal point for counter-terrorism action plans and monitor the assistance provided to States. In terms of CTC's structure and procedures, the CTC monitoring mechanism, based on the stages States had reached in adopting anti-terrorism legislation, had become artificial. Moreover, Member States perceived the stages system as an evaluation by CTC of their performance in fighting terrorism and believed that the system did not provide a clear picture of the States' real situation or efforts in implementing resolution 1373(2001). Other deficiencies were related to the need for consistency in reporting, the decision-making process, inadequacy of follow-up to CTC decisions, lack of adequate accountability, the responsibilities of the Chair, the functioning of the Bureau, recruitment of personnel of the CTC secretariat and the need to find a better contractual arrangement for CTC experts. In an effort to find solutions to the problems raised, the CTC Chair would submit a further report, including specific measures for complying with resolution 1373(2001).

Revitalization of Counter-Terrorism Committee

On 19 February [S/2004/124], the CTC Chairman submitted his proposals for the revitalization of the Committee, aimed at consolidating achievements made in the fight against terrorism, intensifying CTC's and the Security Council's work in that field, and giving CTC further means for monitoring implementation of resolution 1373(2001). The revitalized CTC would consist of the Plenary, composed of Security Council member States, which would focus on strategic and policy decisions; the Bureau, composed of the Chair and Vice-Chairs; and the Executive Directorate (CTED), made up of experts and Secretariat staff and comprising the Assessment and Technical Assistance Office and the Information and Administrative Office. CTED would be headed by an Executive Director, to be appointed by the Secretary-General. A draft resolution reflecting the main ideas of the report was to be presented to the Council.

Security Council consideration (4 March).

The CTC Chairman, Inocencio Arias (Spain), told the Security Council on 4 March [meeting 4921] that CTC revitalization was urgent and necessary and would provide the means for making it more operational, proactive and visible. The goals of revitalization were to promote and monitor implementation of resolution 1373(2001) through dialogue; strengthen the provision of technical assistance to States and cooperation within the United Nations and among international and regional organizations; improve CTC's capacity to collect information and to make concrete recommendations to the Council on all aspects of resolution 1373(2001); and expedite CTC's work and simplify its procedures, including adoption of a proactive communication strategy. The Chairman stressed that the Executive Directorate would not be a permanent structure, but would have a sunset clause of 31 December 2007 and would not set a precedent for other Council bodies.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 March [meeting 4936], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1535(2004). The draft [S/2004/238] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 1373(2001) of 28 September 2001, adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, and the ministerial declarations annexed to its resolutions 1377(2001) of 12 November 2001 and 1456(2003) of 20 January 2003, as well as its other resolutions concerning threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts,

Reaffirming also that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations constitutes one of the most serious threats to peace and security,

Reaffirming its reinforced determination to combat all forms of terrorism, in accordance with its responsibilities under the Charter,

Reminding States that they must ensure that any measures taken to combat terrorism comply with all their obligations under international law, and should adopt such measures in accordance with international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law,

Reaffirming its call upon States to become party, as a matter of urgency, to all relevant international conventions and protocols relating to terrorism and to support all international initiatives taken with that aim, and to make full use of the sources of assistance and guidance which are now available,

Commending Member States for their cooperation with the Counter-Terrorism Committee, and calling upon all of them to continue to cooperate fully with the Committee,

Commending the progress made so far by the Counter-Terrorism Committee, established by the Security Council under paragraph 6 of resolution 1373(2001), acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, in discharging its important responsibility to monitor the implementation of that resolution,

Stressing the important role that international, regional and subregional organizations play in the fight against terrorism, urging them to intensify their assistance to Member States with respect to the implementation of resolution 1373(2001), and commending the coordination by the Committee of counter-terrorism efforts with such organizations,

Recognizing that many States continue to require assistance in implementing resolution 1373(2001), and urging States and organizations to inform the Committee of areas in which they are able to offer assistance,

Recognizing also the need for the Committee, where appropriate, to visit States, with the consent of the State concerned, and to engage in a detailed discussion to monitor the implementation of resolution 1373(2001),

Recognizing further that such visits should be conducted, when appropriate, in close cooperation with relevant international, regional and subregional organizations and other United Nations bodies, including the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, in particular with its Terrorism Prevention Branch, taking special care of the assistance that might be available to address the needs of States,

Stressing the importance of enhancing the monitoring of the implementation of resolution 1373(2001),

Having considered the report of the Chairman of the Committee on the problems encountered both by Member States and by the Committee itself in the implementation of resolution 1373(2001),

Stressing the importance of addressing these difficulties so as to enable the Committee to monitor effectively the implementation of resolution 1373(2001) and to enhance the capacity-building work in which it is engaged,

Bearing in mind the special nature of resolution 1373(2001), the continuing threats to peace and security caused by terrorism, the important role the United Nations and the Security Council must continue to play in the global fight against terrorism, and the need to reinforce the Committee as the subsidiary body of the Council with responsibility in this area, without setting a precedent for other bodies of the Council,

1. Endorses the report of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1373(2001) concerning counter-terrorism on its revitalization;

2. Decides that the revitalized Committee shall consist of the Plenary, composed of the member States of the Security Council, and the Bureau, composed of the Chair and the Vice-Chairs, assisted by the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate (hereinafter "CTED") to be established as a special political mission, under the policy guidance of the Plenary, for an initial period ending 31 December 2007 and subject to a comprehensive review by the Council by 31 December 2005, so as to enhance the ability of the Committee to monitor the implementation of resolution 1373(2001) and effectively continue the capacity-building work in which it is engaged;

3. Decides also that CTED, headed by an Executive Director, shall be responsible for the tasks set out in the report of the Committee, and requests the Secretary-General, within forty-five days of the adoption of the present resolution, to appoint, after consultation with and subject to the approval of the Council, an Executive Director of CTED who will take up office as soon as possible;

4. Requests the Executive Director of CTED, within thirty days of taking office, in consultation with and through the Secretary-General, to submit to the Plenary, for its endorsement, an organizational plan for CTED, consistent with the report of the Committee and United Nations rules and regulations, including its structure, staffing requirements, budget needs, management guidelines, recruitment procedures, recognizing in particular the need for an effective, cooperative management structure for the new body, and staffing with suitably qualified and experienced personnel, who would be international civil servants subject to Article 100 of the Charter of the United Nations, securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity and paying due regard to the importance of recruiting the staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible;

5. Requests the Chairman of the Committee to present the organizational plan to the Council for its endorsement, and further requests the Secretary-General to take the appropriate steps to implement it on an expedited basis, including, at the appropriate time, seeking the approval of the General Assembly;

6. Decides that the Committee shall continue to report to the Council on a regular basis;

7. Stresses the importance of ensuring that the Committee continues to operate effectively during the consolidation of the support structure of the Committee into CTED, and, in this regard, decides that the Committee shall continue to operate with its present support structure until the Committee determines, in consultation with the Secretary-General, that CTED is operational;

8. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

The Secretary-General, following consultations with Security Council members, appointed on 12 May [S/2004/388, S/2004/389] Javier Rupérez (Spain) as CTED Executive Director, which the Council approved two days later [S/2004/390]. On 11 August [S/2004/642], the Council endorsed CTED's organizational plan.

Report of Secretary-General. As requested by resolution 1566(2004) (see p. 74), the Secretary-General submitted to the Council on 15 November [S/2004/914] a report on steps to make CTED, currently functioning within the budget of the Department of Political Affairs (DPA) with support from the DPA Executive Office, fully operational. He said that, in addition to the appointment of an Executive Director and endorsement by CTC of the CTED organizational plan (see above), administrative arrangements were put in place to facilitate recruitment of support personnel. Vacancy announcements for specialists in areas such as legislative drafting, financial law enforcement, extradition law, customs and border control, technical assistance and administrative support would be circulated. Budget requirements for 2004 (July to December) amounting to $617,700 were being met through redeployment of resources appropriated under section 3, Political affairs, of the 2004-2005 programme budget. The requirement for 2005 would be submitted to the General Assembly during its fifty-ninth (2004) session.

The Secretary-General, in his November report [A/59/534/Add.1] on estimates in respect of special political missions, good offices and other political initiatives authorized by the Assembly and/or the Council, presented overall resource requirements for CTED in 2005 at $6,085,000 net ($7,071,800 gross). That amount was approved by the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) [A/59/569/Add.1], in section VII of resolution 59/276.

Reports of States. Between January and December, the CTC Chairman transmitted to the Council President reports submitted by Member States on action they had taken or planned to take to implement resolution 1373(2001) and letters from the Committee requesting follow-up information: [S/2004/19, S/2004/21-23, S/2004/36-38, S/2004/57-60, S/2004/65, S/2004/86, S/2004/89-96, S/2004/118-119, S/2004/124, S/2004/127-130, S/2004/131 & Corr.1, S/2004/132-133, S/2004/136, S/2004/149-159, S/2004/170-171, S/2004/179, S/2004/181, S/2004/214 & Corr.1, S/2004/215, S/2004/226-227, S/2004/252-255, S/2004/286, S/2004/295-296, S/2004/323-324, S/2004/340, S/2004/342-344, S/2004/358-360, S/2004/362-372, S/2004/374-377, S/2004/403-405, S/2004/429, S/2004/450-451, S/2004/475-477, S/2004/479-483, S/2004/502, S/2004/523 & Add.1, S/2004/552-559, S/2004/578-580, S/2004/589, S/2004/658-659, S/2004/660 & Add.1, S/2004/661-664, S/2004/670, S/2004/683-691, S/2004/745-746, S/2004/778, S/2004/791, S/2004/834-855, S/2004/863, S/2004/872, S/2004/876, S/2004/884-885, S/2004/899-900, S/2004/918-919, S/2004/945,

Action by Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice

The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, at its thirteenth session (11-20 May) [E/2004/30], recommended to the Economic and Social Council for approval a draft resolution for adoption by the General Assembly entitled "Strengthening international cooperation and technical assistance in promoting the implementation of the universal conventions and protocols related to terrorism within the framework of the activities of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime". That resolution was approved by the Council as resolution 2004/19 and adopted by the Assembly as resolution 59/153 (see p. 1125).

IAEA action

The General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), at its forty-eighth session (Vienna, 20-24 September) (see p. 548), adopted resolution GC(48)/RES/11 relating to progress on measures to protect against nuclear and radiological terrorism. It called on member States to continue to provide political, financial and technical support to improve nuclear and radiological security, prevent nuclear and radiological terrorism, and support the Nuclear Security Fund.

Peacekeeping operations

In 2004, the General Assembly and the Security Council continued to oversee the management and operations of UN peacekeeping missions. The Council addressed a number of key issues aimed at strengthening and streamlining the overall conduct of those operations. It renewed the mandates of several ongoing operations and created new ones in the face of deteriorating security conditions. The Assembly took action on a number of financial and administrative matters. The Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) continued to implement the recommendations contained in the 2000 report of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations (the Brahimi report) [YUN 2000, p. 83] and those of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, whose mandate was to review the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects. The Special Committee held a general debate on 29 and 30 March, during which it approved a number of recommendations for submission to the Assembly. It also considered other general issues related to peacekeeping operations and made recommendations for improving their effectiveness.

General aspects of UN peacekeeping

Security Council Working Group on Peacekeeping Operations

The Security Council Working Group on Peacekeeping Operations held four meetings in 2004 (2 April, 11 June, 2 July and 27 August). The Chairman of the Working Group, in his personal report on the Group's activities, transmitted in December to the Council [S/2004/1040], said that the Group, in addition to dealing with various issues concerning the relationship between troop contributors and peacekeeping operations, focused on the relationship between the Council and DPKO and how to deal with the demands of peacekeeping from the perspective of new and increasingly complex operations and the management of ongoing operations.

The Chairman proposed that the Working Group become a full-fledged subsidiary organ of the Council so that it could have a more effective role in terms of peacekeeping mandates.

On 30 December [S/2004/1032], the Council President stated that Council members had agreed that the Working Group would continue its work until 31 December 2005.

Decision-making in peacekeeping operations

By a 5 February letter [S/2004/99], Brazil, Canada, Egypt, Germany, Ghana, India, Japan, Mexico, Pakistan and South Africa drew the attention of the Security Council to their concern regarding decision-making in peacekeeping operations. According to them, decision-making in peacekeeping operations was confined to Council members, the Secretariat and troop-contributing countries. While there were mechanisms provided for in resolution 1353(2001) [YUN 2001, p. 80] for the inclusion of other interested Member States on a case-by-case basis, those mechanisms had not been successful in allowing for substantial input by major stakeholders in peacekeeping operations. Meetings with troop-contributing countries were largely informative and technical, with little or no relevance for Council decisions. The potential for a broad-based approach remained mostly untapped. New ways to organize a more comprehensive and rational decision-making process, involving all stakeholders, was needed. Apart from improving the basis for decision-making in the Council, the inclusion of major stakeholders would also create a considerable incentive for the general membership to support peacekeeping operations. The solution would be to schedule regular meetings of the Security Council Working Group on Peacekeeping Operations as the forum for open debate, allowing all interested parties to make their views known on issues concerning peacekeeping operations. The Chairman of the Working Group would then report back to the Council. As for the question of determining which States had a legitimate interest in participating, the Council's precedent of allowing non-members with a stake in the agenda item to speak in the Council's public meetings, upon request, should be followed.

Strategic direction and future trends of UN peacekeeping operations

During its presidency of the Security Council, Pakistan informed the members that it was holding a debate on 17 May on UN peacekeeping operations [S/2004/378]. In its working paper on the subject, Pakistan said that, with the recent upsurge in demand for peacekeeping operations and the four years that had elapsed since the release of the Brahimi report, it was timely to evaluate the strategic direction of peacekeeping operations and analyse trends. That would involve reviewing the efficacy and effectiveness of the principles, policies, structures and mechanisms governing the planning, establishment, deployment and conduct of peacekeeping operations, what had and had not worked since the Brahimi reforms, as well as the level of logistic, financial and political support for those operations and future requirements.

Opening the debate on 17 May [meeting 4970], Pakistan, as Council President, said that it was appropriate to highlight the challenges in peacekeeping and to help generate sufficient levels of political, financial, human and logistical support required in establishing new missions. It hoped that the exchange of views would promote better preparation for the challenges and for utilizing more effectively the instrument of UN peacekeeping in the furtherance of international peace and security.

The Secretary-General told the Council that the United Nations was facing a surging demand for peacekeeping. As at April, more than 53,000 troops, military observers and civilian police were serving in 15 UN missions around the world, the highest number since October 1995. Many of those missions were large and complex and went beyond the limited military functions of traditional peacekeeping missions. The Council had recently authorized a new mission in Haiti and expanded the one in Côte d'Ivoire, while other missions were being planned for Burundi and the Sudan. To absorb the new costs, an extra $1 billion above the current $2.82 billion would be needed by the end of the year for the peacekeeping budget. The United Nations had a duty to meet that demand and to seize the opportunities to bring long-standing conflicts to an end, as UN peacekeeping missions offered the best and sometimes only hope of emerging from conflict towards a safe and stable future.

Peacekeeping had become increasingly multi-dimensional and, as the complexity of mandates had increased, so too had public expectations about what those missions could achieve. Peacekeeping operations had to be part of a longer-term strategy to solidify the foundation of peace, lest, as in Haiti and Liberia, the United Nations had to return again. To that end, the international community should better integrate the security, political, economic and social levers at its disposal to keep and build peace in the immediate post-conflict period and beyond. As the United Nations moved into non-traditional aspects of peacekeeping, it also needed to have a clear picture of the environments in which it was operating, with the required information, the capacity to analyse that information and the means to conduct its mission.

To deal with those challenges, the United Nations had to show commitment and be prepared to stay the course with political will and resources to ensure that peace processes did not falter into renewed conflict. To succeed, Council mandates had to be clear, implementable and achievable and missions needed to receive the requisite troops and resources. Council support was especially important when a mission faced challenges to the legitimacy of its mandate.

Although many of the recommendations in the Brahimi report had been implemented, the scale of the current surge in peacekeeping operations might well outstrip the Organization's capacities to backstop those operations, and it would have to augment those capacities. UN missions remained hampered by a lack of specialized military capacities, generally available from developed countries, which made only limited contributions of troops to peacekeeping operations. At the same time, many willing troop-contributor States had difficulty in deploying staff within the necessary time frames.

The Secretary-General urged Member States to help fill those gaps so that UN peacekeeping operations could draw on specialized capacities and deploy rapidly. The United Nations was also working with regional, subregional and international arrangements to ensure complementary capacities, such as early temporary force deployments that could bridge the gap until the UN peacekeepers could deploy. Another critical gap was the need for French-speaking personnel, especially police, to tackle assignments in Francophone countries. As missions in Haiti, Côte d'Ivoire and possibly Burundi were expanded, that pressure would intensify.

UN peacekeeping missions had a long history and the lessons of the past had to be recalled to ensure that everything would be done to ensure success. New missions should be guaranteed the necessary resources and commitment to handle the complex and challenging tasks to which they were called.

On 17 May [meeting 4970], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/16 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security and reaffirms its commitment to the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, in particular, of the political independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States in conducting all peacekeeping and peacebuilding activities and the need for States to comply with their obligations under international law.

The Council recognizes that, as experience confirms, United Nations peacekeeping operations play a critical role in the maintenance of international peace and security, preventing and containing conflicts, promoting compliance with international norms and Council decisions, and building peace in post-conflict situations.

It further notes that United Nations peacekeeping missions are charged with increasingly difficult and complex mandates assigned to them by the Council and recognizes in this regard the need for a continued review of United Nations peacekeeping.

The Council notes that, in addition to the existing fourteen United Nations peacekeeping operations, there has been a recent surge in demand for new peacekeeping operations. It is cognizant of the challenges this represents for the United Nations system in terms of generating the necessary resources, personnel and other capabilities to meet the increased demand.

The Council calls upon Member States to ensure that the United Nations is provided with full political and financial support to meet these challenges effectively, keeping in view the specific requirements of each mission and bearing in mind the human and financial resource implications for the United Nations. The Council also stresses that it is also important to ensure that, while meeting the demand for new peacekeeping operations, the resources available for and the effective management of the existing operations are not adversely affected. At the same time it underscores the need for efficient and effective management of resources.

The Council calls upon Member States to contribute sufficient levels of trained troops, police and civilian personnel, including those with specialized capabilities and skills, bearing in mind the need for an increased percentage of female personnel at all decision-making levels, as well as the mobilization of logistic and administrative support, to allow the multiple operations to start optimally and fulfil their respective mandates in an effective manner. Enhancing the Secretariat's capacities and using them in a rational and efficient manner will constitute a crucial element of this response.

The Council also stresses the need for improved integrated mission planning, as well as enhanced capacity for rapid deployment of personnel and materiel to ensure efficient start-up of peacekeeping operations. The timely and adequate replenishment of strategic deployment stocks is essential to meet current and future demands.

The Council recognizes the need to work, as appropriate, with regional and subregional organizations and multinational arrangements in peacekeeping operations in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations to ensure complementary capacities and approaches before and during the deployment and after the withdrawal of United Nations peacekeeping missions.

The Council recognizes its responsibility to provide clear, realistic and achievable mandates for peacekeeping missions. The Council values, in this regard, the assessments and recommendations provided by the Secretariat for informed decisions on the scope and composition of new peacekeeping operations as well as their mandates, concept of operations and force levels and structures.

The Council believes that there is need to strengthen the relationship between those who plan, mandate and manage peacekeeping operations, and those who implement the mandates for these operations. Troop-contributing countries, through their experience and expertise, can greatly contribute to the planning process and can assist the Council in taking appropriate, effective and timely decisions on peacekeeping operations. The Council recognizes, in this regard, that the meetings and mechanisms established by its resolution 1353(2001) of 13 June 2001 serve to facilitate the consultations process.

The Council recognizes that in peacekeeping operations there are contributors, other than troop-contributing countries, whose views should also be taken into account as appropriate.

The Council stresses that, in challenging environments, United Nations peacekeepers may need to be provided with sufficiently robust rules of engagement and the necessary military resources to enable them to fulfil their mandate and, if necessary, to defend themselves. In all cases, the Council considers the safety and security of all United Nations personnel to be a priority. It stresses, in this context, the importance of enhanced capacity to gather and manage information in the field.

The Council takes notes of recent efforts to increase coordination between missions in adjacent countries and encourages Special Representatives of the Secretary-General to explore synergies to ensure effective management of peacekeeping missions in the same regions or subregions.

The Council stresses the need to regularly assess the size, mandate and structure of peacekeeping operations with a view to making the necessary adjustments, including downsizing, where appropriate, according to progress achieved. It also encourages the continued commitment of the international community to consolidate and sustain the peace on the ground during and beyond the life of the mission.

The Council further recognizes the importance of a gender perspective, including gender training for peacekeepers, in peacekeeping operations, in accordance with Council resolution 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000 and the importance of protection of children in armed conflict in accordance with Council resolution 1379(2001) of 20 November 2001.

The Council recognizes the increased risk of the spread of communicable diseases and certain criminal activities in post-conflict areas. The Council welcomes efforts by the Secretariat to sensitize peacekeeping personnel in the prevention of HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases in compliance with Council resolution 1308(2000) of 17 July 2000, and encourages the Secretariat to continue implementing its guidelines on prostitution and trafficking.

The Council recognizes that effective peacekeeping operations should be part of an overall strategy to consolidate and sustain peace. In this regard, it stresses the need to ensure from the outset the coordination, coherence and continuity between the different parts of this overall strategy, in particular between peacekeeping on the one hand and peacebuilding on the other. To this end, the Council encourages closer cooperation between all relevant United Nations agencies, funds and programmes and international financial institutions, regional and subregional organizations and the private sector. Ensuring lasting peace in the aftermath of conflict may require sustained support from the United Nations and its humanitarian and development partners.

The Council notes that training is increasingly becoming a critical element in peacekeeping operations and recognizes the need to utilize the expertise of experienced troop-contributing countries. It encourages international cooperation and support for the establishment of peacekeeping training centres, which could provide a wide range of training opportunities to new and emerging troop contributors.

The Council recognizes that meeting the demands of an increasing number of United Nations peacekeeping missions will require the concerted efforts of the Security Council, the General Assembly, the States Members of the United Nations and the Secretary-General so as to ensure that the necessary resources and operational support are provided. The Council encourages follow-up consultations on the surge in demand, and invites the Secretary-General to provide regularly, in a timely manner, to Member States assessments of evolving needs and shortfalls in United Nations peacekeeping, in order to identify critical gaps and unmet requirements as well as steps required to meet these.

The Council underscores the useful role of its Working Group on Peacekeeping Operations in the consultation process at different stages of peacekeeping operations. It encourages the Working Group to pay special attention to matters relating to the surge in demand in United Nations peacekeeping over the coming year and, as necessary, to report to the Council.

The Council pays high tribute to all the men and women who have served and continue to serve in United Nations peacekeeping operations for their high level of professionalism, dedication and courage. It honours the memory of those who lost their lives in the service of the United Nations and the noble cause of peace.

The Secretary-General, in an August report [A/59/282] to the General Assembly on the implementation of the United Nations Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49], discussed the Organization's achievements in peace and security, particularly in peacekeeping in the light of the jump in demand for UN peacekeeping operations (see p. 51).

Strategies for complex peacekeeping operations

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2004 substantive session (New York, 29 March–16 April) [A/58/19], recognized the need for DPKO to plan for peacekeeping missions in such a manner as to facilitate post-conflict peace-building and long-term prevention of recurrence of armed conflict. In that context, it encouraged the Secretariat to develop comprehensive strategies and integrated mission planning in disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, strengthening the rule of law, security sector reform, quick-impact projects and mine action, with a view to restoring security and stability in post-conflict societies. The Committee called for the inclusion of peace-building elements in mandates to generate conditions for preventing the recurrence of armed conflict. It stressed the need for cooperation and coordination among UN specialized agencies, funds and programmes, as well as with the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund), international donors, humanitarian organizations, NGOs and civil society for ensuring operational clarity and coherence on the ground during implementation of those comprehensive strategies in the post-conflict peace-building phases, so as to ensure a smooth transition to long-term development activities. It looked forward to the detailed review of UN capacity in that regard, to be included in the Secretary-General's report on the implementation of resolution 57/337 [YUN 2003, p. 50] to the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth (2004) session.

Regarding disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, the Special Committee stressed the importance of planning and preparations at UN Headquarters of comprehensive strategies from the outset, and underscored the valuable role that the Peacekeeping Best Practices Unit could play in that regard. Efforts should be undertaken to identify with the donor community ways to secure financing for all components of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes. All disarmament, demobilization and reintegration processes should take into account the special needs of child and women soldiers and children and women dependants of ex-combatants. Peacekeeping missions should be committed to implementing those strategies in cooperation with local authorities and relevant partners. At the earliest stage of the peace negotiation process preceding the establishment of a mission, there should be identification, preparation and coordination of all relevant actors in order to develop, well in advance, a successful disarmament, demobilization and reintegration strategy. The Special Committee underlined the importance of effective disarmament measures, including the collection, safe storage, disposal or destruction of arms from ex-combatants.

The Special Committee recognized that establishment of local rule-of-law capacities was an essential element in creating and sustaining stability in a post-conflict environment. A peacekeeping mission might provide technical advice to reform the local justice system. The Special Committee noted the report of the Executive Committee on Peace and Security regarding the need for enhanced UN system-wide coordination to strengthen its rule-of-law capacities and mobilize identified resources. The Special Committee believed that the report identified available expertise within and outside the UN system and suggested possible arrangements through which UN departments and agencies and external entities could provide expertise. It asked the Secretariat to assess the work undertaken thus far in that area, particularly in justice and corrections. The Committee noted the Secretary-General's request, in his report on the implementation of its recommendations [A/58/694] (see p. 81), for additional resources for DPKO's support for justice and corrections issues and sought clarification on the resources requested.

Concerning quick-impact projects, the Special Committee suggested that they be not only an integral part of mission planning and development, but also part of the implementation of comprehensive strategies to meet the challenges facing complex peacekeeping operations. Selection procedures for those projects should be more flexible and be addressed at the field level. The necessary resources should be made available through the second year of a peacekeeping operation, provided they directly supported the mission's mandate and either responded to needs not covered by existing assistance or served as a catalyst to broaden those efforts.

In the area of mine action, the Special Committee encouraged stakeholders to use standardized information management systems, such as the Information Management System for Mine Action, for the collection, analysis and dissemination of mine-related information. The Committee further encouraged the development and application of standardized mine-action training modules, mine-risk education materials and operating procedures for use by troop-contributing countries.

Enhancing UN peacekeeping capacity

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/58/19], in emphasizing the need to further improve the Organization's rapid deployment capabilities, suggested that the Secretariat use the United Nations Standby Arrangements System database as a starting point for the force-generation process and improve the efficacy of all aspects of pre-mandate operational preparedness, especially the timely dissemination of information on upcoming missions to troop-contributing countries to meet required deployment deadlines. More efficient management of the financial and logistical aspects would also contribute to rapid deployments. Further study and proposals on the requirements for rapidly deployable reserve forces were welcomed.

The Special Committee encouraged DPKO to assess the effectiveness of the Standby Arrangements System and optimize the strategic deployment stocks system in the light of lessons learned. It supported using the rapid deployment level early in the force-generation process to link troops from one Member State with equipment and training from other sources. The Special Committee stressed the need for militarily coherent and well-trained headquarters to achieve the degree of command and control necessary for effective implementation of complex mandates, and urged wider use of rapidly deployable headquarters in the initial phase of a peacekeeping operation. The earliest possible selection of the force commander, police commissioner and headquarters staff was recommended, to allow for their training and engagement in the pre-mission planning process.

The Special Committee reiterated its request for the creation of a working group to consider the funding difficulties of troop-contributing countries in complying with rapid deployment requirements, especially ways of assuring rapid reimbursement in the rapid deployment phase, and asked the Secretariat to produce a study on possible options. It welcomed the initiatives for improving the capacity for rapid deployment of civil personnel. Given the likely surge in peacekeeping activities in 2004, it requested DPKO to explore alternative means of placing staff on standby, in addition to expanding the rapid deployment team concept.

Noting the ongoing review of strategic deployment stocks, the Special Committee called on the Secretariat to ensure that all aspects of pre-mandate operational readiness were covered so as to reduce preparation time. To overcome the equipment shortfall faced by troop-contributing countries, it recommended that the United Nations continue to facilitate various enabling arrangements, including through other Member States and bilateral arrangements.

Concerning the challenges faced in meeting the demands of surges in operational activity, the Special Committee recommended that the United Nations implement an integrated mission-planning process across all departments and stakeholders, producing a mission concept of operations and component plans that were fully understood, integrated, rehearsed and owned. It should also seek additional surge-planning capacity from external sources, such as regional headquarters, national staff or teams of international experts on a time-, objective- or mission-oriented basis.

The Special Committee noted the focus of the Peacekeeping Best Practices Unit on policy development, lessons learned and knowledge management and expected the Unit to play a part in developing generic peacekeeping policies, and in integrating lessons learned and best practices in the planning and conduct of missions. It welcomed the launch of the Unit's website and the publication of the handbook on multidimensional peacekeeping.

Consultations with troop contributors

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/58/19] reiterated the need for substantive consultations between the Security Council, the Secretariat and troop-contributing countries in planning and managing peacekeeping operations. It recognized that the meetings and mechanisms established by the Council in resolution 1353(2001) [YUN 2001, p. 80] had facilitated the consultation process. It looked forward to the implementation of the Council's recommendations [YUN 2002, p. 65] regarding the establishment of a mechanism for strengthening the Council's cooperation with troop-contributing countries and encouraged increased consultations between the Security Council Working Group on Peacekeeping Operations and troop contributors on specific peacekeeping issues and individual peacekeeping operations. The Special Committee recommended that the Secretariat continue to look at ways to improve modalities for information-sharing with troop-contributing countries, particularly with respect to the Situation Centre's briefings and reports. It encouraged DPKO to make more use of issue-specific workshops and briefings to enhance cooperation on peacekeeping.

The Peacekeeping Best Practices Unit should consult with troop-contributing countries, and the Secretariat should convene periodic meetings, with the participation of former force commanders and national contingent commanders, to develop validation mechanisms for lessons learned and best practices. The Secretariat should consult with the troop-contributing countries in a timely manner when planning any change in the tasks, mission-specific rules of engagement, operational concepts or command and control structure which had an impact on the personnel, equipment, training and logistics requirements, and when planning a drawdown of troops in any peacekeeping operation.

The Special Committee requested that a list of the existing and anticipated peacekeeping-related policy papers, guidelines, manuals, standard operating procedures and training materials issued by DPKO be provided to Member States at regular intervals and be made available on the Department's web site.

Safety and security

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/58/19] expressed concern over the precarious security environment in many field missions and called on the Secretariat to give the utmost priority to enhancing the safety and security of UN and associated personnel in the field. It supported the ongoing overall review of the UN security management system, and was of the view that the Secretary-General's request for a full-time safety and security focal point and a mission security management unit within DPKO should be considered within the context of that review. In the meantime, DPKO and related Secretariat bodies should address security concerns in missions in coordination with the field.

The Committee believed that joint mission analysis cells, established to improve enhancing information-gathering capacity in the field and to assess operating environments, should be properly equipped, adequately staffed and have access to all available information. The Secretariat should report on that capacity to the Committee in 2005. Recognizing the need to improve information collection, analysis and dissemination at Headquarters as well as in the field, and pending the security management review, the Committee requested the Secretariat to inform Member States as quickly as possible, particularly in crisis situations, of changes in the security situation in the field or when casualties had occurred. It recommended that DPKO institute contingency arrangements for each mission to facilitate the evacuation of personnel.

The Committee welcomed the development and use of minimum operating security standards for peacekeeping missions and urged that they be reviewed and updated as circumstances changed. It reiterated its requests for information on the status of the Secretariat's work to formalize a policy on protection from nuclear, biological and chemical threats in the field.

Cooperation with regional arrangements

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/58/19], while emphasizing the central role of the United Nations in peacekeeping operations, welcomed the new partnerships with relevant regional organizations that had enabled the Organization in recent years to make use of regional capacities. Assisting regional and sub-regional organizations in strengthening their capacities for peacekeeping would prove beneficial to those organizations, to confidence-building in the regions concerned and to peace and stability of the international community as a whole. At the same time, more deliberation should be encouraged on the optimal relationship between the United Nations and regional and subregional entities with regard to peacekeeping.

The Committee recognized that regional organizations had capacities for supporting UN peacekeeping operations in rapid-reaction capabilities, over-the-horizon capabilities, coordinated civilian and civilian police capabilities, specialized capabilities, provision of coherent headquarters, regional expertise, and sharing of best practices and training. They could also identify contributions offered by their own member States, or act as a one-stop shop. However, development of regional capacities should be in addition to bilateral contributions from Member States.

The Committee recommended that DPKO expand its contacts with regional organizations and their subregional partners, especially at the working level, in order to implement practical means for partnership. In addition, the Peacekeeping Best Practices Unit should continue to develop lessons learned in consultation with regional organizations, building on its studies of the Interim Emergency Multinational Force in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, authorized by Security Council resolution 1484(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 126], and the multinational force of the Economic Community of West African States Mission in Liberia [ibid., p. 190], and those lessons should be incorporated in future partnerships with regional organizations.

Women and peacekeeping

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/58/19], taking note of the Secretary-General's 2003 report on gender mainstreaming in peacekeeping activities [YUN 2003, p. 74], stressed the need for ongoing reporting on the implementation of gender mainstreaming in the field and at Headquarters. It shared the Secretary-General's concern over the low representation of women in peacekeeping operations and expressed its wish to see more female candidates for senior civilian appointments and for military and civilian police positions at all levels. The Committee encouraged the Secretariat to pursue its policy of mainstreaming a gender perspective into DPKO activities and to implement the recommendations made by the Secretary-General in his report on women, peace and security relating to peacekeeping [YUN 2002, p. 67].

Recognizing the need for a gender mainstreaming strategy for UN peacekeeping operations, the Committee recommended that gender experts be included in pre-mandate assessments and planning to ensure that the gender dimension was fully addressed in mission mandates. It welcomed DPKO's decision to focus in the coming year on establishing procedures for gender mainstreaming, including developing an organizational action plan for implementing the elements in Security Council resolution 1325(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 1113] relating to peacekeeping. The Committee encouraged the Secretariat to take into account the recommendations on peacekeeping operations contained in the relevant resolution of the Commission on the Status of Women [E/2004/27 (res. 48/4)] (see p. 1170), as well as the guidelines provided in the Commission's agreed conclusions on women's equal participation in conflict prevention, management and conflict resolution and in post-conflict peace-building, adopted by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 2004/12 (see p. 1154).

Report of Secretary-General. Responding to Security Council presidential statement S/PRST/2002/32 [YUN 2002, p. 1143], the Secretary-General, in October [S/2004/814], reported on the implementation of Council resolution 1325(2000) [YUN

2000, p. 1113] on women and peace and security. He stated that the most significant progress in its implementation was made in peacekeeping. In 2000, there was only minimal mention of gender issues in peacekeeping mandates and two gender advisers were assigned to peacekeeping operations. Currently, gender concerns were raised in all new peacekeeping mandates and there were 10 full-time gender adviser positions in 17 peacekeeping operations. The gender adviser within DPKO would support the mainstreaming of gender perspectives in all DPKO offices, provide policy and operational guidance to gender advisers in the field, and disseminate lessons learned and best practices on gender and peacekeeping.

Gender units and advisers in peacekeeping operations provided technical guidance to ensure gender perspectives were incorporated in all functional areas of peacekeeping and to increase women's participation in implementing the mission's mandate. Gender advisers participated in inter-agency assessment missions conducted prior to the establishment of the mandates of operations in Burundi, Côte d'Ivoire, Haiti and Liberia.

Military, civilian police and civilian peacekeeping personnel were trained on the protection, rights and particular needs of women, as well as the importance of involving women in all peacekeeping functions. Canada and the United Kingdom developed a gender training initiative for military and civilian personnel involved in peace support operations. Within the UN system, the Department of Management supported a variety of capacity-building initiatives on mainstreaming gender perspectives in peacekeeping, while DPKO focused on improving the gender-mainstreaming training materials and tools. In addition, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research conducted training on women and children for civilian personnel in several peacekeeping operations.

To deal with the emerging problem of human trafficking in some peacekeeping operations, DPKO developed a policy on human trafficking and was producing, with United States support, a package of guidance for peacekeeping operations, which would include model legislation and awareness-raising materials. A number of peacekeeping operations had also established specific units in police stations to assist victims of sexual violence. Gender-sensitive HIV/AIDS awareness training was included in induction training for peacekeepers.

According to the Secretary-General, a more coherent strategy for gender mainstreaming in peacekeeping was needed to increase the understanding of the relevance of gender issues to peacekeeping and to detail how to integrate gender concerns into the various pillars of an operation, including greater attention to data collection and reporting. He intended to develop a comprehensive strategy and action plan for mainstreaming gender perspectives into peacekeeping activities, with specific monitoring and reporting mechanisms, and urged the Security Council to monitor the implementation of the strategy and action plan.

As to enhancing the gender balance in recruitment, DPKO had introduced specific language into vacancy announcements, targeting professional women's organizations in order to encourage female candidates to apply. It had also made efforts to increase the representation of women among uniformed personnel.

The Secretary-General called on Member States, UN entities and civil society organizations to further analyse the obstacles to increasing women's representation in peace operations and humanitarian response and develop and implement appropriate recruitment strategies, including in military and police services, and create a pool of precertified female candidates for senior-level positions to ensure rapid deployment.

The Security Council, in presidential statement S/PRST/2004/40 (see p. 1152) of 28 October, welcomed the Secretary-General's recommendations for developing a strategy and action plan for mainstreaming a gender perspective into peacekeeping activities and operations and for recruiting more female candidates in peace operations, particularly for senior-level positions, including in the military and civilian police services.

In related action, the Council, in resolution 1539(2004) (see p. 787) of 22 April, noted with concern all the cases of sexual exploitation and abuse of women and children, especially girls, in humanitarian crises, including those involving humanitarian workers and peacekeepers, and requested contributing countries to incorporate the six core principles of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee on emergencies into pertinent codes of conduct for peacekeeping personnel and to develop appropriate disciplinary and accountability mechanisms.

Peacekeeping and the international legal system

During informal consultations of the Security Council on 19 May, the United States introduced a draft resolution which sought to renew the request contained in Council resolution 1487(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 77] that the International Criminal Court not commence or proceed, for a period of 12 months starting on 1 July 2003, with investigation or prosecution of any case involving current or former officials or personnel from a contributing State not a party to the Rome Statute establishing the Court [YUN 1998, p. 1209] over acts or omission relating to a UN established or authorized operation, unless the Council otherwise decided.

On 20 May [S/2004/412], Ireland, Jordan, Liechtenstein and Switzerland requested that the Council convene a public meeting and invite interested States to discuss the proposed renewal of resolution 1487(2003) since it had implications of direct import to Member States, including those that were parties to the Rome Statute, relating to international peacekeeping, fundamental questions of international law and the Council's role in promoting law and accountability. They suggested that the issue would benefit from discussion in the wider UN membership. The Council President, Pakistan, in the assessment of its presidency for May [S/2004/614], reported that, during informal discussions on 21 May, the public meeting and the vote were deferred. Subsequently, the sponsor informed the Council that the request had been withdrawn for the time being. No further action was taken in 2004 on the draft resolution.

Comprehensive review of peacekeeping

Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 57/336 [YUN 2003, p. 79], the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations and its Working Group continued their comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects [A/58/19]. In response to the Committee's request, the Secretary-General submitted a January report on the implementation of the Committee's recommendations [A/58/694].

The Committee, during its general debate on 29 and 30 March, considered guiding principles, definitions and implementation of peacekeeping mandates; safety and security of UN and associated personnel; cooperation with troop-contributing countries; cooperation with regional arrangements; enhancing African peacekeeping; comprehensive strategies for complex peacekeeping operations; enhancing UN capacity for peacekeeping; civilian police; gender and peacekeeping; children and peacekeeping; public information; and financial issues (for details, see subjects above).

Operations in 2004

On 1 January 2004, 13 peacekeeping operations were in place—5 in Africa, 3 in Asia, 2 in Europe and 3 in the Middle East. During the year, three new missions were launched (in Burundi, Côte d'Ivoire and Haiti), bringing the total number of missions in place at the end of the year to 16.

In Africa, the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL) was extended by the Security Council to 30 June 2005. The Council also extended the mandate of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) until 31 March 2005, authorized an increase in its strength by 5,900 personnel and expanded its mandate. The mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) was extended until 30 April 2005 and that of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE) until 15 March 2005. The Council extended the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL) to 19 September 2005. Americas

In the Americas, the Security Council established as of 1 June the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH) to, among other tasks, secure a stable environment, support the constitutional and political process and the conduct of free and fair elections, and extend State authority throughout the country. The Council extended the MINUSTAH mandate until 1 June 2005.

Asia

In Asia, the United Nations Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan (UNMOGIP), established in 1949, remained in place to monitor the ceasefire in Jammu and Kashmir. The Council extended the mandate of the United Nations Mission of Support in East Timor (UNMISSET) until 20 May 2005.

In related action, the Council extended in September the authorization of the International Security Assistance Force in Afghanistan for a further period of 12 months beyond 13 October 2004 (resolution 1563(2004)).

Europe

In Europe, the Security Council extended the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG) until 31 January 2005. The Council extended the mandate of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) until 15 June 2005 and endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendations for amending the concept of operations and troop levels. The United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK), Serbia and Montenegro, remained in place. The Council also authorized Member States, acting through or in cooperation with the European Union, to establish for an initial period of 12 months a multinational stabilization force (EUFOR), to replace the NATO-led stabilization force in Bosnia and Herzegovina (resolution 1575(2004)).

Middle East

Three long-standing operations continued in the Middle East: the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO), which continued to observe the truce in Palestine; the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL), whose mandate was extended until 31 January 2005; and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF), whose mandate was renewed until 30 June 2005.

Financial and administrative aspects of peacekeeping operations

Financing

Expenditures for United Nations peacekeeping operations for the period 1 July 2003 to 30 June 2004 totalled $2,933.8 million, compared to a final figure of $2,499.8 million for the previous 12-month period. The 17 per cent increase in expenditure was attributable to the operations of four new peacekeeping missions (UNMIL, UNOCI, MINUSTAH, ONUB) and MONUC, offset by a decrease in expenditure levels at UNIFIL, UNAMSIL, UNMIK, UNMISSET and UNMEE.

In terms of the overall financial situation, assessments, unpaid assessments and expenditures of active missions all increased on account of the establishment of four new peacekeeping operations, with a corresponding decrease in liquidity. Unpaid assessments for active peacekeeping missions rose by $501.7 million or 109 per cent, with the four new missions accounting for 88 per cent of that increase. Unpaid assessments for closed missions did not change significantly. As at 30 June 2004, total unpaid assessments amounted to $1.5 billion, compared to $1.1 billion in the previous financial period.

The liquidity of active missions was negatively affected by the start-up of the four new missions, which were financed initially by loans from the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund. The liquidity position of closed missions with cash surpluses deteriorated as they continued to be the only source of lending to active peacekeeping missions, the Tribunals and the regular budget. Available cash for active missions totalled $1,052.3 million, while liabilities reached $1,599.6 million. Available cash for closed missions totalled $307.7 million, while liabilities came to $345.6 million.

Notes of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 49/233 A [YUN 1994, p. 1338], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee a February note [A/C.5/58/35] updating information provided in March 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 82] on proposed budgetary requirements for current peacekeeping operations, the United Nations Logistics Base (UNLB) and the support account for the period 1 July 2003 to 30 June 2004 amounting to $2,689,945,400. That figure took into account 2003 Assembly decisions in respect of UNMISSET, MONUC and UNMIL.

In May [A/C.5/58/36], the Secretary-General submitted information on proposed budgetary requirements for 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005 in the amount of $2,504,803,100.

Financial performance and proposed budgets

In April [A/58/759], ACABQ considered the financial performance report for 1 July 2002 to 30 June 2003 and the proposed budget for 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005 for the support account for peacekeeping operations [A/58/760]; the Secretary-General's overview of the financing of the UN peacekeeping operations: budget performance for 1 July 2002 to 30 June 2003 and budget for the period from 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005 [A/58/705]; the performance report on the budget for the support account for peacekeeping operations for 1 July 2002 to 30 June 2003 [A/58/703 & Add.1]; and the proposed budget for the support account for peacekeeping operations for 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005 [A/58/715].

Expenditure for peacekeeping missions, including UNLB and the support account for peacekeeping operations, for the year ending 30 June 2003 amounted to $2,392.4 million, against appropriations of $2,606.5 million, leaving an unencumbered balance of $214.1 million.

ACABQ, while welcoming improvements made in the budget presentation using results-based budgeting, noted that little progress had been made in enhancing the capability of existing financial systems to support results-based budgeting, and was concerned that, as at the end of March, operational resources and costs could not be attributed, monitored and recorded automatically for the results-based budgeting framework of each mission and that additional systems would need to be installed. The Committee pointed to the need for missions to state more clearly mission-specific objectives in budget documents. It also stressed the importance of clearly drafting expected accomplishments, indicators of achievement and planned outputs under each component, identifying time frames to facilitate monitoring and reporting, and allowing objective measurement of progress in implementing expected accomplishments and the mission's objective.

ACABQ emphasized that the timely recruitment of staff for DPKO was critical and all efforts should be made to reach recruitment goals. The Committee joined the Board of Auditors in recommending that the administration evaluate the level of incumbents appointed to budgeted posts at missions to ensure that staff occupied posts at the appropriate level and that the level of posts be re-evaluated and inconsistencies rectified. It regretted that DPKO managerial, staffing and operational reviews of mission activities were not reflected in budget proposals and recommended that the Board of Auditors follow up on the issue of periodic and timely management reviews. It believed there was a need to establish a common approach for restructuring the supervision of the technical support areas of peacekeeping missions.

ACABQ considered the proposed conversion of staff in peacekeeping missions from the 300 series of the staff rules to the 100 series, and noted that during the 2004/05 period some 1,600 Professional and 5,000 national staff members would be so converted. It requested further information in the next submission on the matter. Noting that 300-series appointment was limited to four years, ACABQ pointed out that those appointments were never intended to create long-term career opportunities. Such a wholesale conversion raised a number of policy issues, including the net impact on the equitable geographical distribution of staff, the potential impact on the long-term contractual obligations of the Organization, and the cost implications. The proposed action represented a change in the scope of application of the 300 series and should be reported to the Fifth Committee for possible comment or further direction. ACABQ therefore recommended that the Secretary-General present a comprehensive proposal on the matter in the context of his report on human resources management to be submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth (2004) session and, pending the Assembly's consideration, defer any action on the proposed conversion.

ACABQ considered the issue of hiring individuals on procurement contracts without benefits for functions necessary for the day-to-day running of long-term peacekeeping operations. It was of the opinion that, in a number of instances, those services could be outsourced instead of employing individuals as staff members or issuing them special service contracts. It underlined the necessity for the Secretariat to develop a coherent, comprehensive and cost-effective policy on outsourcing for peacekeeping missions in implementation of resolution 55/232 [YUN 2000, p. 1401]. In the meantime, it would make recommendations on a case-by-case basis.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 June [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/58/821], adopted resolution 58/296 without vote [agenda items 127 & 134].

Administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of the United Nations peacekeeping operations

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Overview of the financing of the United Nations peacekeeping operations: budget performance for the period from 1 July 2002 to 30 June 2003 and budget for the period from 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005" and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at the main part of its fifty-ninth session a comprehensive report on the use, including the conversion, of 300 series contracts, addressing in particular the strategy of the Organization for meeting current and future human resources requirements for peacekeeping missions, taking into account the observations and recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Endorses the observations and recommendations of the Advisory Committee contained in paragraphs 35 to 39 of its report, concerning the wholesale conversion, bearing in mind the fact that the General Assembly has taken no decision to support the replacement of the 300 series contracts as a mechanism for the employment of staff in peacekeeping missions;

3. Decides to suspend the application of the four-year maximum limit for appointments of limited duration under the 300 series of the staff rules in peacekeeping operations, until 31 December 2004, pending a decision by the General Assembly on this matter at its fifty-ninth session.

On 29 October, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to submit at the second part of its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session a report on the review of the management structure of all peacekeeping operations, including through administrative comparisons, taking into account the complexities, mandates and specificities of each operation and the necessity of carrying out effectively and efficiently each operation (decision 59/507).

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on the administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of the United Nations peacekeeping operations would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-ninth session (decision 59/552).

Funds from closed missions

In March [A/58/723], the Secretary-General, in response to the General Assembly's request contained in resolution 57/323 [YUN 2003, p. 85] that he postpone the return of 50 per cent ($84,446,000) of the net cash available for credit to Member States as a result of a number of peacekeeping missions having been closed, reported that the amount available as at 29 February 2004 was $57,399,000.

In the light of the establishment of missions in Côte d'Ivoire and Haiti, the extension of UNMISSET until May 2005, and potential missions in Burundi and the Sudan, which would give rise to increased requirements before the Assembly was in a position to review and approve the related budgets, the Secretary-General proposed that, out of prudence, the return of the amount of $84,446,000, representing 50 per cent of the cash available to Member States as at 30 June 2002, be postponed. He also proposed that the Assembly revisit the issue at the main part of its fifty-ninth (2004) session.

ACABQ, in a March report [A/58/732], expressed the view that the postponement of the return of "available cash" to Member States was a policy decision to be determined by the Assembly, while pointing out that cash from closed missions appeared to be the only source for temporary cross-borrowing, as well as for funding new missions, in addition to the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 April [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/58/582/Add.1], adopted resolution 58/288 without vote [agenda item 134].

Implementation of paragraph 3 of General Assembly resolution 57/323

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 57/323 of 18 June 2003,

Having considered the note by the Secretary-General on the implementation of paragraph 3 of General Assembly resolution 57/323 and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Takes note of the proposal by the Secretary-General and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Decides to postpone to 30 June 2004 the return of the remaining 50 per cent of the net cash available for credit to Member States as at 30 June 2002, in the amount of 84,446,000 United States dollars, in respect of the fund balances of the United Nations Mission in Haiti; the United Nations Observer Group in Central America and the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador; the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force; the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters; the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium and the Civilian Police Support Group; the United Nations Angola Verification Mission and the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola; the United Nations Observer Mission Uganda-Rwanda and the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda; the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan; the United Nations Transition Assistance Group; and the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia;

3. Also decides that credits or disbursements to Member States may be made at the discretion of the Member State concerned as from 1 July 2004;

4. Encourages Member States that are owed credits for the closed peacekeeping mission accounts to apply those credits to any accounts where the Member State concerned has outstanding assessed contributions.

In April [A/58/778], the Secretary-General updated the information, as at 30 June 2003, on the financial position of 18 closed peacekeeping missions for which financial performance reports had already been submitted: the Military Observer Group of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala (MINUGUA); the United Nations Mission in Haiti (UNMIH); the United Nations Observer Group in Central America (ONUCA) and the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL); the United Nations Operation in Mozambique (ONUMOZ); the United Nations Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM); the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP); the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, UNPREDEP and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters (UNPF); the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti (UNSMIH) and the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti (MIPONUH); the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES) and the Civilian Police Support Group; the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC); the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT); the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM) and the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola (MONUA); the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL); the United Nations Observer Mission Uganda-Rwanda (UNOMUR) and the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR); the United Nations Military Liaison Team in Cambodia (UNMLT); the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group (UNIIMOG); the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic (MINURCA); and the United Nations Transition Assistance Group (UNTAG).

The Secretary-General reported that, as at 30 June 2003, the net cash available for credit to Member States amounted to $178,684,000, inclusive of the $84,446,000 to be credited to Member States, in accordance with resolution 58/288 (see above). He proposed that the balance of $94,238,000 be retained until 31 October 2004 to supplement the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund in order to finance the initial requirement for the new peacekeeping operations. The available cash in the Fund ($150.3 million) was insufficient to meet the foreseeable cash requirements in the first quarter of the forthcoming financial year.

ACABQ, in a May report [A/58/799], reiterated that the postponement of the return of available cash was a policy decision to be determined by the Assembly.

On 18 June, by decision 58/564 C, the Assembly deferred until its fifty-ninth session the Secretary-General's report on the updated financial position of closed peacekeeping missions as at 30 June 2003 and the related ACABQ report.

Peacekeeping support account

The Secretary-General, in February [A/58/703 & Add.1], submitted the performance report on the budget of the support account for peacekeeping operations for 1 July 2002 to 30 June 2003. Expenditures for the period totalled $97,145,400 against an apportionment of $100,896,200, resulting in an unencumbered balance of $3,750,800, attributable mainly to the vacancy rate and underexpenditures for consultants, official travel and information technology. The Secretary-General recommended that the unencumbered balance and other income and adjustments of $4,600,000 be applied to the 2004/2005 budget (see below).

Also in February [A/58/715], the Secretary-General submitted the budget for the support account for peacekeeping operations for 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005 in the amount of $122,093,400, which provided for 762 posts. In April [A/58/760], ACABQ recommended reductions to that budget totalling $814,500 and that the Assembly approve total staffing and non-staffing requirements of $121,278,900 gross ($104,870,200 net). It proposed that miscellaneous income of $4,600,000, the amount of $127,800 that was not applied to offset the amounts prorated among individual peacekeeping budgets for 1 July 2002 to 30 June 2003, and the amount of $741,000 relating to additional staff assessment income be applied to the resources required for 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005 and that the balance be prorated among individual peacekeeping operation budgets for that period.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 June [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/58/582/Add.2], adopted resolution 58/298 without vote [agenda item 134].

Support account for peacekeeping operations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/258 of 3 May 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 48/226 A of 23 December 1993, 56/241 of 24 December 2001, 56/293 of 27 June 2002 and 57/318 of 18 June 2003, its decisions 48/489 of 8 July 1994, 49/469 of 23 December 1994 and 50/473 of 23 December 1995 and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the support account for peacekeeping operations and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recognizing the importance of the United Nations being able to respond and deploy rapidly to a peacekeeping operation upon adoption of a relevant resolution of the Security Council, within thirty days for traditional peacekeeping operations and ninety days for complex peacekeeping operations,

Recognizing also the need for adequate support during all phases of peacekeeping operations, including the liquidation and termination phases,

Mindful that the level of the support account should broadly correspond to the mandate, number, size and complexity of peacekeeping missions,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the support account for peacekeeping operations;

2. Reaffirms the need for effective and efficient administration and financial management of peacekeeping operations, and urges the Secretary-General to continue to identify measures to increase the productivity and efficiency of the support account;

3. Also reaffirms the need for adequate funding for the backstopping of peacekeeping operations, as well as the need for full justification for that funding in support account budget submissions;

4. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the relevant report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

5. Decides to maintain, for the period from 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005, the funding mechanism for the support account used in the current period, from 1 July 2003 to 30 June 2004, as approved in paragraph 3 of its resolution 50/221 B of 7 June 1996;

6. Reaffirms the need for the Secretary-General to ensure that delegation of authority to the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat and field missions is in strict compliance with relevant resolutions and decisions and the relevant rules and procedures of the General Assembly on this matter;

7. Also reaffirms paragraph 15 of its resolution 56/293, regrets that the report requested in paragraph 10 of its resolution 57/318 was not submitted at its fifty-eighth session, and decides to consider it at its fifty-ninth session;

8. Decides to continue its consideration of the implementation of the restructuring of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, in the context of the review requested in paragraph 14 of resolution 57/318, at the second part of its resumed fifty-ninth session;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session on the status of the civilian rapid deployment roster, including measures to improve its utility, taking into account recent experiences with its use;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to review the level of the support account, including the need for existing posts, in future budget submissions, taking into consideration the number, size and complexity of peacekeeping operations;

11. Notes with concern, as observed by the Advisory Committee in paragraph 21 of its report, that the implementation of paragraph 18 of resolution 57/318 is not consistent with the requirement of the resolution;

12. Reiterates paragraph 18 of resolution 57/318, and requests the Secretary-General to submit, during future considerations of the support account budget, information as outlined in paragraph 22 of the report of the Advisory Committee with respect to posts that will have been vacant for at least 12 months by 30 June of a given year on the understanding that, in the interim, until such consideration by the General Assembly, the recruitment process will not be affected;

Financial performance report for the period from 1 July 2002 to 30 June 2003

13. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the financial performance of the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 2002 to 30 June 2003;

Budget estimates for the period from 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005

14. Approves the support account requirements in the amount of 121,610,300 United States dollars for the period from 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005, including 743 continuing and 18 new temporary posts and their related post and non-post requirements;

Financing of the budget estimates

15. Decides that the requirements for the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005 shall be financed as follows:

(a) The unencumbered balance and other income in the total amount of 8,478,600 dollars, comprising 8,350,800 dollars in respect of the period ended 30 June 2003 and the adjustment of 127,800 dollars related to the period ended 30 June 2001, to be applied to the resources required for the period from 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005;

(b) The increase of 59,000 dollars in the estimated staff assessment income, representing the difference between 682,000 dollars in respect of the financial period ended 30 June 2003 and the adjustment of 741,000 dollars related to the period ended 30 June 2001, to be applied to the amount referred to in subparagraph (a) above;

(c) The balance of 113,131,700 dollars to be prorated among the budgets of the active peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005;

(d) The estimated staff assessment income of 16,509,400 dollars for the period from 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005 to be set off against the balance referred to in subparagraph (c) above, to be prorated among the budgets of the individual active peacekeeping operations.

Peacekeeping Reserve Fund

The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 57/317 [YUN 2003, p. 88], reported in March [A/58/724] that the level of the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund, established in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 1022] to ensure the rapid deployment of peacekeeping operations, stood at $194.3 million as at 30 June 2003. As at 29 February 2004, the balance was $163 million, with $74 million available in cash. The Secretary-General recommended that the Fund be maintained at the level of $150 million and that the balance in excess of that amount ($11 million) be applied to the support account for peacekeeping operations for 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005.

In March [A/58/732], ACABQ expressed the view that an increase in the Fund's level would have little or no impact on the short-term cash-flow problem, which could be solved only by payment of assessed contributions. It recommended that the Assembly accept the Secretary-General's recommendations on the Fund's level and the treatment of the balance in excess of that level. By decision 58/564 C of 18 June, the Assembly deferred consideration of the Secretary-General's report on the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund and the related ACABQ report until its fifty-ninth (2004) session.

Accounts and auditing

At its resumed fifty-eighth session, the General Assembly considered the financial report and audited financial statements for UN peacekeeping operations for 1 July 2002 to 30 June 2003 [A/58/5, vol. II], the Secretary-General's report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors [A/58/737] and the related ACABQ report [A/58/759].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 June [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/58/570/Add.1], adopted resolution 58/249 B without vote [agenda item 118].

Financial reports and audited financial statements, and reports of the Board of Auditors

The General Assembly,

Having considered the financial report and audited financial statements for the twelve-month period from

1 July 2002 to 30 June 2003 and the report of the Board of Auditors on United Nations peacekeeping operations, the related section of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors concerning United Nations peacekeeping operations in respect of that period,

1. Accepts the audited financial statements on the United Nations peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 2002 to 30 June 2003;

2. Takes note of the observations and endorses the recommendations contained in the report of the Board of Auditors;

3. Also takes note of the observations and endorses the recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions related to the report of the Board of Auditors;

4. Commends the Board of Auditors for the quality of its report and the streamlined format thereof;

5. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors concerning United Nations peacekeeping operations in respect of the financial period ended 30 June 2003;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to ensure that internal control in peacekeeping missions is improved with respect to the optimum use of audit resources;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure the full implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors and the related recommendations of the Advisory Committee in a prompt and timely manner.

Regional auditors and investigators

In November [A/59/546], the Secretary-General transmitted the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the first year of experience of regional investigators in two hubs, Vienna and Nairobi, in response to General Assembly resolution 57/318 [YUN 2003, p. 86]. The report assessed the OIOS Investigations Division's regional investigator programme, under which regional investigators, operating from Nairobi and Vienna, conducted inquiries at peacekeeping missions. It also provided an overview of the caseload of the two regional hubs, highlighted some of the significant matters investigated and assessed the impact of the new concept.

OIOS concluded that, given the limited resources, the regional investigators working on cases at peacekeeping operations had performed well. Significant matters had been investigated, particularly corruption and sexual exploitation and abuse, and recommendations issued, accepted and implemented. The OIOS work was generally well received by DPKO and mission management. The first year of operation revealed the merits of the regional hubs, especially in terms of costs and reduced travel times compared to those for investigations handled by staff based at UN Headquarters. Relying only on regional investigators, however, meant that OIOS investigators, unlike resident investigators, could not develop detailed knowledge of the individual missions, nor readily respond to requests from missions, given the travel and time requirements. The larger and more complex missions, however, needed the presence of resident investigators.

OIOS believed that the most effective approach was a combination of regional and resident investigators, with resident investigators based at and providing services to the larger missions, and an additional six regional investigator posts to provide services to both the larger missions in regard to complex cases and the smaller missions. It would submit, for the Assembly's consideration, a proposal for additional posts in its budget submission for the support account for peacekeeping operations for 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006.

Reimbursement issues

Equipment

The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 55/274 [YUN 2001, p. 100], submitted in August [A/59/292] a report on reformed procedures for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment, which summarized the findings and recommendations of the 2004 Working Group on Contingent-Owned Equipment (23 February–5 March) [A/C.5/58/37 & Corr.1]. The Working Group conducted a triennial review of reimbursement rates and updated the standards of major equipment and self-sustainment categories. It agreed on criteria for reimbursement of commercial pattern support vehicles as military pattern vehicles; standard reimbursement rates for certain special cases and new categories of major equipment; a threshold value of $500 for special cases major equipment; and the frequency of verification reports by field missions (quarterly). Consensus was not reached on the triennial review of reimbursement rates for major equipment and self-sustainment; a refinement of the methodology for triennial rate review of contingent-owned equipment; a mechanism to provide guidance and decision-making on contingent-owned equipment; a modular medical concept; and a methodology to review reimbursement rates for troop costs.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly approve the criteria for reimbursement of commercial pattern support vehicles as military vehicles, the reimbursement rates for new items of major equipment and the quarterly cycle of verification reports; and agree to distribution of the updated Contingent-Owned Equipment Manual as an official UN document. He also suggested that the Assembly convene the next Working Group in 2008 instead of 2007 to review the contingent-owned equipment system; establish a methodology for reviewing reimbursement rates; set up consultations between the Secretariat and Member States on the system; make recommendations on the costing and medical staffing level of the modular medical concept; adopt the proposed format for collecting national cost data on medical equipment for the Working Group to review; and discuss the maintenance of current reimbursement rates for troop costs and the determination by the Assembly of when an adjustment was warranted.

Management of peacekeeping assets

UN Logistics Base

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-eighth session, considered the financial performance report of the United Nations Logistics Base (UNLB) in Brindisi, Italy, for 1 July 2002 to 30 June 2003 [A/58/702]. Expenditures for the period totalled $14,447,500 gross ($13,360,600 net), against total appropriations of $14,293,200, resulting in a deficit of $154,300. The Assembly was asked to approve the additional requirement of $154,300, to apply other income/adjustments for that period amounting to $3,328,000 to offset the additional requirements and to decide on the treatment of the balance of $3,173,700.

The Assembly also had before it the proposed budget for 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005 [A/58/706] amounting to $28,799,700 gross ($27,104,600 net), which represented an increase of $6,591,600 in total resources over the previous 12-month period. The proposed increase reflected a 17.7 per cent increase in operational costs, a 55.2 per cent increase in personnel costs, and a 34.7 per cent increase in staff assessment. The budget provided for the deployment of 37 international and 114 national staff.

ACABQ, in April [A/58/759/Add.9], noted that the report on UNLB's financial performance did not contain information on measures taken in response to its requests and asked that the next report contain such information. It requested that a methodology be developed to identify and estimate reimbursable costs and utilized for the next budget estimate. Regarding the 2004/05 budget, ACABQ's recommendations would result in a reduction of $377,700. It also made recommendations on the administration and management of UNLB and opportunities for further savings.

In May [A/C.5/58/36], the Secretary-General submitted to the Fifth Committee a note on amounts to be apportioned in respect of each peacekeeping mission, including the prorated share of UNLB for 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005.

The Assembly also considered reports on the status of implementation of strategic deployment stocks [A/58/707], progress in implementing the field assets control system [YUN 2003, p. 94], an analysis of establishing a global procurement hub for all peacekeeping missions in Brindisi [A/58/762] and the related ACABQ reports [A/58/759/Add.9 & A/58/796] (these reports are dealt with in the respective sections).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 June [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/58/582/Add.2], adopted resolution 58/297 without vote [agenda item 134].

30 June 2001, to be prorated among the individual active peacekeeping operation budgets;

16. Also decides to consider at its fifty-ninth session the question of the financing of the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi.

Strategic deployment stocks

In response to General Assembly resolution 57/315 [YUN 2003, p. 73], the Secretary-General submitted a February report on the status of implementation of the strategic deployment stocks [A/58/707]. He stated that DPKO had positioned sufficient stocks at UNLB and had significantly advanced towards having the capability to deploy rapidly the immediate operational capability for a traditional peacekeeping mission. As at 31 December 2003, strategic deployment stocks facilitated the rapid deployment and operational readiness of UNMIL, UNOCI, the United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission and the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in Iraq.

As at 30 June 2003, strategic deployment stock holdings were valued at $23 million, and equipment transferred from DPKO's reserve and surplus stocks from peacekeeping missions was valued at $21 million. Out of the total budget of $141,546,000, expenditures amounted to $88,902,181. As the Assembly in resolution 57/315 had extended the validity of the approved resources to 30 June 2004, the balance of $52,643,816 had been carried forward to the 2003/04 financial period. The Secretary-General also reported that the Galileo Inventory Management System had been implemented at UNLB and at Headquarters to manage the strategic deployment stocks.

ACABQ, in its April report on UNLB [A/58/759/Add.9], expressed regret that the Secretary-General's report did not provide sufficient information on the administration of the strategic deployment stocks, including problems incurred. ACABQ suggested that the next budget submission should include information on lessons learned and deficiencies to be corrected, and reiterated its previous recommendation that the report on strategic deployment stocks should be consolidated with that on UNLB. It urged the Secretariat to address the factors hampering the acquisition and replenishment of the strategic stocks, such as contractual problems and the selection of vendors; to consider improving replenishment policies and procedures, while maintaining those stocks in good condition; and to include that information in the Secretary-General's annual report on strategic deployment stocks. ACABQ was of the view that the role of the Steering Group on Strategic Deployment Stocks and its Finance Working Group should be enhanced to make them an effective tool in a coordinated approach to strategic deployment stocks.

Procurement

Reports of Secretary-General. In April [A/58/762], the Secretary-General, responding to General Assembly resolution 57/320 [YUN 2003, p. 96], submitted an analysis of the merits of establishing a global procurement hub for all peacekeeping missions in Brindisi. The Secretary-General, reviewing the possibility of transferring the logistics support function to UNLB, focused on the advantages and disadvantages of creating such a hub and its operational impact on the functioning of DPKO's Logistics Support Division and the Office of Central Support Services of the Department of Management.

The review concluded that, while there were some advantages to creating such a hub, such as operating in a closer time zone to the majority of peacekeeping missions, enhanced ability to perform on-site contract management for strategic deployment stocks and reduced operating costs, they were far outweighed by the disadvantages. Those disadvantages related to the difficulty of attracting and maintaining qualified international staff, coordination challenges of operating in a time zone different from Headquarters, the loss of surge capacity (specifically, the inability to utilize Headquarters staff during peak demands), relocation costs and duplication of support and liaison infrastructures.

In May [A/58/796], ACABQ, noting that the Secretary-General's report dealt only with a few of the operational and administrative challenges of establishing a hub, called for a more thorough review, providing a technical, managerial and financial analysis, and recommended that the Assembly defer action until a comprehensive report was submitted.

Also in April [A/58/761], the Secretary-General reported on procurement and contract management for peacekeeping operations, in response to Assembly resolution 57/290 B [YUN 2003, p. 83], the recommendation of the Board of Auditors on UN peacekeeping operations for the year ended 30 June 2002 [ibid., p. 91] and the comments of ACABQ [ibid., p. 95]. The Secretary-General stated that new initiatives, including ethics training and the drafting of ethical guidelines, had been put in place to ensure that all staff working in procurement understood their responsibilities. The newly revised Procurement Manual contained a chapter entitled "Ethics and Professional Responsibility". The Procurement Division issued an instruction reminding all procurement staff of their responsibilities relating to the signature of a declaration of independence and, in particular, of the need to ensure confidentiality of information associated with their functions. To improve procurement and contract management in peacekeeping missions, plans were reviewed by the Logistics Support Division at Headquarters to determine how best to fulfil requirements, taking into account surplus assets at other missions and strategic stock at UNLB. Although the quality and timeliness of the procurement submissions from the missions had improved, further improvement needed to be made in that area. Over the previous 12 months, the Procurement Division undertook management missions to a number of peacekeeping operations, during which specific issues were addressed. It released staff to participate in fact-finding and start-up phases of new missions to develop procurement capacity on the ground at the outset of those missions. Field procurement training took place in the first quarter of 2004 in six locations and the Procurement Division worked with UN organizations to develop a system-wide common procurement and certification programme under the auspices of the Inter-Agency Procurement Working Group to meet longer-term training needs.

To improve procurement lead time, the Procurement Division, with the Logistics Support Division, established a "24/7" hotline and a designated focal point for direct communications between procurement officers in the field and the Procurement Division. Recommendations of local committees on contracts were forwarded directly to the Procurement Division for presentation to the Headquarters Committee on Contracts. The two Divisions were developing a common procurement management system to facilitate the exchange of procurement-related data between Headquarters and peacekeeping missions.

OIOS report. In September [A/59/347], the Secretary-General transmitted the OIOS report on the audit of safeguarding air safety standards while procuring air services for UN peacekeeping missions, prepared pursuant to General Assembly resolution 57/279 [YUN 2002, p. 1358]. As of 31 January 2004, DPKO, through 12 long-term and four short-term commercial contracts with a total value of $132.5 million, deployed 136 aircraft to peacekeeping missions, and projected deployment of over 200 in 2004, owing to the increase in peacekeeping operations.

Among efforts to improve air safety, DPKO and the World Food Programme developed the Aviation Standards for Peacekeeping and Humanitarian Air Transport Operations. Efforts were still needed in air safety policy setting, procurement, and organization and staffing of DPKO and peacekeeping mission units responsible for air safety. The audit also found that, although DPKO had an accident prevention programme, no trend analyses or lessons learned had been issued. For missions in Sierra Leone, Liberia and Côte d'Ivoire, where a total of 40 aircraft were deployed, a regional aviation safety office would be more cost-effective than deploying aviation safety officers at each mission, and would help to improve consistency in the application of DPKO's accident prevention programme. Within DPKO, the prolonged periods during which the positions of Chief, Air Transport Section, and Chief, Aviation Safety Unit, remained vacant, and the limited progress in implementing the International Civil Aviation Organization's recommendations for strengthening DPKO's civil aviation capacity, made it difficult for the Department to develop and sustain a sound air safety strategy.

Regarding procurement, OIOS noted that, due to budgetary constraints, visits by DPKO staff to vendor sites to evaluate vendor capability in providing technically acceptable and safe air services were infrequent. The Procurement Division and the Department needed to agree on a vendor pre-qualification process to allow wider participation of vendors in UN bids, while allowing sufficient scrutiny of prospective vendors' documentation. There were divergent opinions within DPKO concerning the use of cargo aircraft for transporting cargo and passengers. After two accidents involving non-UN cargo aircraft carrying passengers resulted in mass fatalities in 2002-2003, the Department stopped transporting passengers on cargo aircraft as of April 2004.

OIOS issued 20 recommendations to enhance policy and procedures on safeguarding air safety standards while procuring air services for UN peacekeeping missions. DPKO's management agreed with all the recommendations and had started to implement them.

Restructuring issues

OIOS report. In March [A/58/746], the Secretary-General transmitted the OIOS report on the evaluation of the impact of the recent restructuring of DPKO, prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 56/241 [YUN 2001, p. 74]. The evaluation focused on the impact of the restructuring on DPKO's performance in the backstopping of peacekeeping operations.

OIOS was of the view that, while the reform would require more time to produce its full impact, the process was on the right track. It had enhanced DPKO's capacity to strategize, analyse and tackle complex, multidimensional problems and to improve its rapid deployment capacity and backstopping of field operations. However, DPKO faced four main challenges: to develop a comprehensive, clearly structured and evolving doctrine comprising the totality of its policies and guidelines; to operationalize the process of learning lessons and translating them into policies and practice; to establish a sound and transparent procedure for adjusting its staffing from peak to routine levels and managing the resultant staff mobility; and to exploit fully information management to strengthen its capacity.

Among its recommendations, OIOS proposed that DPKO redesign the integrated mission task forces concept, including DPKO's role in making it operational, and that a reliable mechanism be established for apprising those involved in mission planning of lessons learned and best practices. DPKO and the Department of Political Affairs should develop a mechanism for sub-regional political cooperation between missions. In addition, DPKO should advance inter-mission flexibilities and establish mechanisms for better integration between missions. DPKO should review annually the capacity, structure, preparedness and effectiveness of each peacekeeping force, identify the problems in implementing the Standards, Verification and Control of Contingent-Owned Equipment for Major Equipment and Self-Sustainment (COE Manual), issue standard operating procedures to guide the missions and revise the Guidelines to Troop-Contributing Countries for Military Units (TCC Guidelines). Other recommendations called on DPKO to define the functions of the Situation Centre and determine whether additional functions could be supported by reassigning or delaying resources, pending the provision of additional resources; finalize the organizational streamlining of the Civilian Police Division; ensure that its work plans were sound, realistic and flexible and periodically evaluated; and develop the law and order segment of a departmental "generic" exit strategy with a view to preventing a law-and-order vacuum when the United Nations departed.

The Department was called on to recommend to the Controller expanding the authority of missions funded from the regular budget in line with the policy promulgated in July 2002, while the Personnel Management and Support Service was urged to reassess its projects in succession planning and developing recruitment policies and procedures for the field to ensure further delegation of authority. The restructuring review of the Field Service category should resume, and the roster of available staff members should be updated. A mechanism for institutionalizing best practices as policies and operational modalities should be established. DPKO's training strategy should promote an integrated approach to the training of civilian, police and military components and address capacity development in political affairs and other areas where the Department did not have primary responsibility or dedicated units.

OIOS recommended that the Communications and Information Technology Service adopt an action plan for developing an information and communications technology strategy and a strategic plan for the Department and field missions. DPKO was urged to set up a committee for the information management strategy and policy and prepare a work plan for its implementation.

The Director of Change Management should lead the review of the Department's organizational structure with a view to formalizing it in a revised Secretary-General's bulletin. The review should define limited and continuous functions and refine the delineation of responsibilities between DPKO and peacekeeping operations and between DPKO and the Department of Management. DPKO should make its future business plans more sound and realistic, reflecting staff strength and skills mix, prioritizing tasks, having flexibility for exigencies and realistic deadlines. Implementation of the plans should be monitored and efficiency of implementation periodically evaluated.

The General Assembly, in resolution 58/299 of 18 June, took note of the OIOS report. It noted that the Board of Auditors would act on Assembly resolution 57/318 [YUN 2003, p. 86] once it had considered the OIOS report and assessed what additional evaluation it might provide. The Assembly might revert at that time to the OIOS report.

Personnel matters

Recruitment policies and procedures

OIOS report. In February [A/58/704], the Secretary-General transmitted an OIOS report on the audit of the policies and procedures for recruiting DPKO staff, prepared pursuant to General Assembly resolution 57/287 A [YUN 2002, p. 1360]. The audit found that the average recruiting time for DPKO staff in the Professional category and above was 347 days, significantly higher than the goal of 120 days envisaged in the Secretary-General's report on human resources management reform [YUN 2000, p. 1337]. OIOS considered that DPKO should be able to significantly reduce the recruitment time frame in future years, particularly because the surge in vacancies experienced during 2001 and 2002 appeared unlikely to recur in the near future.

The criteria for determining staff members' eligibility to apply for vacancies had undergone significant changes with the issuance of an administrative instruction [ST/AI/2002/4] promulgating the new staff selection system from 1 May 2002. Section 5.6 of the instruction appeared to indicate that a staff member who had served the minimum occupancy period in a post was eligible to be considered for any post, even if it was two or more grades higher than the staff member's current level. OIOS was concerned that that provision was not articulated in the Secretary-General's report on human resources management reform or explicitly enunciated in the administrative instruction. The audit also identified instances in which ineligible staff members were shortlisted and evaluated for an advertised post. In several cases, errors were made in determining the eligibility of candidates at the 15-day and 30-day marks because of the lack of clear eligibility requirements. OIOS recommended that the Office of Human Resources Management (OHRM) clarify the eligibility requirements to ensure transparency and equity in recruitment and promotion.

The biggest challenge facing managers in DPKO and OHRM was reviewing the large number of applications received in response to vacancy announcements issued during 2002, as the Galaxy system did not possess a filtering mechanism to assist them in excluding unqualified candidates. OIOS recommended that OHRM work closely with managers to develop appropriate filtering techniques for screening applications. OIOS also found that numeric scoring methods were not used by DPKO managers for evaluating candidates, evidently because OHRM had said it was optional. OIOS recommended that OHRM ensure that managers used numeric ratings based on predetermined evaluation criteria.

The General Assembly, in resolution 58/299, decided to revert to consideration of the OIOS report during its fifty-ninth (2004) session, in the context of its consideration of the items on human resources management and the administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of peacekeeping operations.

Report of Secretary-General. In April [A/58/767], the Secretary-General reported on the criteria used for recruitment to support account posts, in particular those in DPKO, in response to Assembly resolutions 56/293 [YUN 2002, p. 77] and 57/318 [YUN 2003, p. 86]. The report presented details on the selection criteria for such posts, outlined the criteria used for the selection of staff for posts subject to geographical distribution and analysed possible future criteria for consideration in recruitment against peacekeeping support account posts.

The report noted that the posts financed under the peacekeeping support account were not governed by the system of desirable ranges for the geographic distribution of staff in the Professional category and above, as set out by the Assembly most recently in resolution 53/221 [YUN 1999, p. 1324]. Consequently, numerical targets did not exist for those posts. However, in recruitment against support account posts, due regard was given to equitable geographical representation and gender balance, as well as to candidates with the requisite qualifications already in the service of the United Nations. A troop contribution factor was added by the Assembly in resolution 55/238 [YUN 2000, p. 1300]. Therefore, in filling those posts, primary consideration was given to identifying the most qualified candidates, while taking the other criteria into account. Senior managers also reviewed both individual cases and the overall pattern of recommendations in the context of legislative mandates with regard to gender parity, geographical diversity and proper representation of troop- and police-contributing countries.

The Secretary-General proposed using the system of desirable ranges as a workable hypothesis to be applied to various options for filling posts under the support account budget and presented options for determining desirable ranges for nationals in those posts. To illustrate the ramifications of varying the relative weights of the factors of population, size, the total number of UN members, and contribution amount and introducing the new troop contribution factor, the report offered six options with resultant desirable ranges, allowing for shifts in the relative weight of the factors.

The Secretary-General concluded that the differences between the options were small. Variations up to 15 per cent in the weight of the contribution factor in favour of the new troop contribution factor had only a marginal impact on Member States' representation status. The number of overrepresented Member States remained unchanged. Five Member States that stood to benefit (China, France, Germany, Italy, United States) were among major troop-contributing countries, and would move from their current status of underrepresentation to within range. The proposed options would not change the status of two underrepresented Member States (Japan, Spain).

Staffing of field missions

Report of Secretary-General (April). In April [A/58/765], the Secretary-General reported on the greater use of national staff (national professional officers (NPOs) and national general service staff) in field missions, as requested by the General Assembly in resolution 57/290 B [YUN 2003, p. 83]. He recalled the policy governing the use of NPOs adopted by the Assembly in resolution 49/223 [YUN 1994, p. 1374], which restricted their service to the country of their nationality. Their use was also limited to functions with a national content, requiring national experience and knowledge of local culture, language traditions and institutions. In December 2003, authority was delegated to DPKO to recruit NPOs in governance-oriented missions, both necessary and desirable in view of the expanded field of activities requiring national experience and local knowledge. The increased utilization of national staff also strengthened national capacity and development, providing national staff with the opportunity to contribute directly to reconciliation, recovery and reconstruction efforts. As at January 2004, a total of 9,231 national posts had been approved and established, of which 306 were NPO posts in eight peacekeeping and special political missions and 8,925 were national general service posts.

The Secretary-General concluded that overall, the experience of using national staff in the various missions had been positive. NPOs had generally produced high-quality work in their area of competence and their knowledge of local institutions, culture and language had proved especially helpful. All missions that currently had NPOs had indicated their interest in maintaining and expanding that particular expertise. Some missions, however, had encountered difficulties in identifying suitable national staff as a result of UN language requirements. The greater use of NPOs in peacekeeping operations was also limited by the conditions governing their employment. However, within that framework, it had been possible to increase significantly their use in such missions as UNMIK and UNAMA. In staffing missions in the future, DPKO would use the experience gained at those two missions to expand the use of NPOs where feasible and cost-effective.

OHRM and DPKO were monitoring the use of NPOs within the framework of the delegation of authority granted in December 2003. The currently applied criteria for their recruitment might be further reviewed to allow the Secretariat, and DPKO in particular, to be in a better position to develop flexible staffing strategies for expanding their use in field missions.

OIOS report. In July [A/59/152], the Secretary-General transmitted an OIOS report on the follow-up audit of DPKO policies and procedures for recruiting international civilian staff for field missions, prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 57/322 [YUN 2003, p. 98]. The report discussed OHRM's monitoring role, the global strategy for civilian staffing and management of the recruitment function.

OIOS found that, despite the additional resources provided, OHRM's monitoring of DPKO's delegated recruitment authority was weak. Contrary to expectations, the Galaxy system for filling vacancies did not result in continuous monitoring of recruitment actions by DPKO because the system had not been used for processing the recruitment of international civilian staff for field missions. OIOS also found instances where Field Service staff had been converted to the Professional category contrary to staff rules, and OHRM gave no clear policy guidance regarding DPKO's practice of "promoting" certain staff members by treating successive mission appointments as independent of each other, while reassigning others from one mission to another without a review of their salary level/grade. In the opinion of OIOS, the monitoring of delegated recruitment authority needed to be strengthened through more intensive reviews and provision of policy guidance to DPKO. OHRM should ensure enforcement of the policy guidance on the conversion of Field Service appointments to the Professional category and provide policy guidance to ensure that DPKO's recruitment practices were consistent with those of the Organization. DPKO, in consultation with OHRM, should resolve the problems concerning the Galaxy system, develop policy guidelines on geographical distribution and gender balance, and finalize arrangements with Member States for deploying civilian specialists in field missions through institutional relationships.

Work needed to be done in human resources planning, streamlining the recruitment process, screening applications for inclusion in the roster of available staff, expanding the sources of recruitment, and delegating authority to field missions. OIOS also found that an Intranet/Internet-based roster of candidates from which field missions could select suitable candidates had not been established; some 120,000 applications received in response to the generic vacancy announcements issued through the Galaxy system had not been screened; recruitment procedures were still in draft form; and DPKO was yet to expand the delegation of recruitment authority beyond the two missions to which that authority had been delegated in 2000. In the opinion of OIOS, DPKO needed to formulate a realistic timetable for completing the tasks assigned to its Personnel Management and Support Service, and to hold its managers accountable. The efficiency gains resulting from implementing new information technology systems and delegating recruitment authority to the field should lead to resizing of the Service's staffing levels based on an assessment of its workload.

The Secretary-General, in his transmittal note, said that he concurred with the OIOS recommendations, many of which were accepted by OHRM and action initiated.

Report of Secretary-General (August). The Secretary-General submitted in August [A/59/291] a comprehensive report on the staffing of field missions, including the use of 300 and 100 series appointments, as requested by the General Assembly in resolution 58/296 (see p. 94). The report addressed the current international context in which peacekeeping operations were deployed and the Organization's strategy for meeting current and future resource requirements for peacekeeping missions, the use of 300 series contracts and the financial implications.

In view of the larger and more complex mandates of peacekeeping missions, the Secretary-General said that supporting those multi-dimensional operations in increasingly dangerous circumstances required that the Secretariat have at its disposal a cadre of experienced, trained and multi-skilled civilian peacekeepers. Developing such a capacity required strengthened human resources structures and policies, including equitable contracts and updated conditions of service that facilitated the interest, recruitment and retention of qualified staff. In response to the increase in peacekeeping missions and the resulting high mobility in the field, DPKO, with legislative bodies and OHRM, designed its human resources strategy with the objective of developing such a cadre in a variety of occupational fields. The elements of that strategy included the establishment of mission templates to ensure consistent and rational organizational structures within which jobs would be defined and linked to generic job profiles; introduction of the performance appraisal system in peacekeeping missions; development of a strategic framework for training; appropriate contractual arrangements to retain staff in whom significant investment had been made; and fair and equitable conditions of service.

Various contractual mechanisms were needed to facilitate the employment of staff on short-, medium- and long-term bases. For the past 10 years, the practice had been to recruit all staff for special missions on appointments of limited duration under the 300 series of the staff rules (with fewer benefits), initially for six months with six-month extensions, subject to the mission's mandate. The 300 series of the staff rules were intended to meet the special needs of short-term appointments, especially in field operations, and were to be applied to assignments not expected to exceed three years, with a possibility of extension for a fourth and final year. Over time, the appointment was used for the initial recruitment of all staff for service in a special mission, becoming, in essence, a probationary trial period, after which it was the normal practice to consider staff for reappointment under a 100 series fixed-term appointment limited to service with a specific mission.

As at 30 June 2004, DPKO employed 3,921 international staff from 157 countries in peacekeeping operations, of whom 1,535 were engaged under appointments of limited duration, 1,500 were on 100 series fixed-term appointments limited to service with a specific mission, 336 were Field Service Officers, and the remaining 550 on assignment from Headquarters and other offices. In accordance with resolution 58/296 (see p. 94), by which the Assembly suspended the application of the four-year maximum limit for appointments of limited duration under the 300 series in peacekeeping operations until 31 December 2004, the Secretariat ceased the practice of reviewing 300 series staff for reappointment under the 100 series fixed-term appointments after reaching their fourth year under an appointment of limited duration.

Peremptorily separating staff on appointments of limited duration after reaching their maximum of four years without due consideration for the needs of the Organization for skilled, experienced field staff did not, in DPKO's view, represent sound managerial practice. The practice would only add to the high vacancy rate and the pressures placed on the Organization to deliver high-quality mission operations in the field, and would have serious consequences for the operation of missions. In 2003, 417 staff members reached their fourth year on appointments of limited duration. If the Department were obliged to separate them, much institutional knowledge, talent and skill would be lost, and another 417 vacancies would be added to the already high number due to the current surge in new and expanding missions.

The Secretary-General concluded that, to respond effectively to the growing and changing demands for more complex peacekeeping activities, the Secretariat had to ensure that it had the resources and capacity to rapidly deploy the required experienced and multi-skilled civilian staff to field missions. The development of such staff involved investing in people and often retaining their services for more than four years. Appropriate contractual arrangements were critical for enabling the Secretariat to attract, recruit and retain staff in field operations. He was therefore seeking the Assembly's endorsement to use the 100 series of the staff rules for the appointment of staff in field missions for periods of six months or longer, for functions for which there was a continuing requirement. Appointments of limited duration would be used only for time-limited activities such as technical assessments, short-term assistance or special projects.

ACABQ response. ACABQ, in its October report on human resources management [A/59/446], said that the solution proposed by the Secretary-General raised a number of questions. To provide assistance for an informed discussion, it submitted two options. In the first, the Assembly could endorse the Secretary-General's proposal for using the 100 series of the staff rules, but adjustments and refinements would have to be made during its implementation since the wholesale incorporation into the 100 series would lead to complications, such as the lack of transparency, the disparities in conditions of service between UN field staff and those of funds and programmes, the career aspirations of national staff and problems that might arise when some 100 series staff were required to reapply at the end of each mission, while others, outposted from Headquarters, were guaranteed reabsorption upon completion of their field assignment.

In the second option, the Assembly would recognize that a piecemeal, ad hoc approach was not appropriate in dealing with such a significant number of staff performing a major activity (a total of 6,082 were currently holding appointments of limited duration), and that a "one size fits all" approach was not transparent and might only lead to difficulties in implementation. It would call for an innovative and comprehensive system incorporating features of both the 100 and 300 series, as well as the work to be done by the Secretariat on improving equity in the conditions of service among field staff and what might emerge from the involvement of the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC). The financial implications should also be clearly spelled out. That system would thus be uniquely suited to the needs of the field staff supporting peacekeeping operations and the current and long-term requirements of the Organization. As an interim measure, the arrangements contemplated by the Secretary-General could be applied.

Conduct and discipline

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, in its April report [A/58/19], noted that the meeting it had requested the Secretariat to convene in 2003 with Member States to discuss ways of meeting the challenges of developing standard procedures for dealing with alleged violations of the code of conduct for peacekeepers and for minimizing misconduct [YUN 2003, p. 99] had not been held and requested that it be convened before its 2005 session. It emphasized that cases of alleged misconduct should be handled through cooperation between the troop-contributing countries concerned and the mission leadership. The Committee, while urging the Secretariat to involve the contributing country concerned from the outset in an investigation into any case of alleged misconduct, regretted that the Secretariat withheld, at its own discretion, certain elements of the investigation outcome of cases of misconduct from the troop- or police-contributing country whose national was the subject of investigation. The Committee stressed that the investigation outcome, including all related evidence, should be made available to that country to enable its national authorities to take legal steps.

To help improve discipline, the Special Committee encouraged Member States contributing formed units to UN peacekeeping missions to deploy trained counsellors with those units. It recognized the need to strengthen DPKO systems for monitoring and reporting all cases of misconduct in peacekeeping operations and for greater accountability and transparency in dealing with such cases. In that regard, it welcomed the Secretary-General's bulletin [ST/SGB/2003/13] on special measures for protection from sexual exploitation and sexual abuse, and steps taken by the Department to ensure that each mission had an active strategy to prevent and respond to the problems of sexual exploitation and abuse as they related to peacekeeping operations. The Committee noted the development of DPKO's web-based training module on the ICSC standards of conduct and the prevention of sexual exploitation, abuse and harassment. It requested that Member States be briefed on the progress of the DPKO review on how to improve notification and monitoring of conduct in field missions.

UN Volunteers

The General Assembly, by decision 58/567 of 8 April, deferred consideration of the Secretary-General's report on the participation of United Nations Volunteers in peacekeeping operations [YUN 2001, p. 814] and the related ACABQ report [ibid., p. 94] until its fifty-ninth (2004) session.

Chapter II

Africa

In 2004, Africa remained a priority concern for the United Nations, whose efforts to restore the conflict zones, especially the Great Lakes region and West Africa, to peace and stability were marked by progress and setbacks. While countries such as Sierra Leone and Liberia, with UN encouragement and assistance, were well on their way to overcoming obstacles that had blocked progress in the search for peace, others, including Côte d'Ivoire, Ethiopia and Eritrea, and Western Sahara, remained mired in conflict with little immediate prospects of finding mutually agreed solutions. The region suffered a further setback with the rapid escalation of the conflict situation in the Darfur region of western Sudan, which risked further destabilizing the continent. Concerned about Africa's future stability, the Security Council sent missions to both the Great Lakes region and West Africa during the year to urge leaders and parties to the conflicts to make decisions that would lead to negotiated settlements. The Council held one of its sessions in Nairobi, Kenya, to demonstrate its deep concern for the problems facing the continent. Many of those problems were addressed by the Council, including the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, and enhancing Africa's peace-keeping capacity.

As the countries of the Great Lakes region continued to experience conflict, especially the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) and Burundi, the First International Conference on the Great Lakes Region was held in November under the auspices of the United Nations and the African Union (AU). The Conference called for measures to address the priority issues of peace and security, governance and democracy, economic development, and social and humanitarian issues. Also in November, the Council sent a mission to the region, which reported that both the DRC and Burundi were at critical turning points in their peace processes as they were faced with implementing the remaining aspects of their agreed transition process, before proceeding with elections that could lead to durable peace and stability.

The military situation in the eastern part of the DRC deteriorated in mid-year, following months of slow progress in advancing the functioning of the Transitional Government established under the terms of a 2002 peace agreement. Subsequently, an integrated army command was instituted by the Transitional Government and the principal political institutions began to function. Despite that progress, the remaining problems, including the slow pace in adopting legislation, the need for State administration throughout the country, further integration of former opposing forces and preparation for elections, appeared intractable. Violence erupted in the east of the country, with charges by the DRC of Rwandan involvement. The United Nations Organization Mission in the DRC (MONUC) worked to halt the fighting and arranged for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of armed forces. In October, the Council increased the Mission's size and expanded its mandate, giving it the authority to use all necessary means to carry out its responsibilities, including the protection of civilians and officials.

In Burundi, the transitional process was well under way, as positive steps were taken to implement the 2000 Arusha Agreement on Peace and Reconciliation, despite the refusal of one main armed movement to join the process. In May, the Council established the United Nations Operation in Burundi (ONUB), which took over from the AU peacekeeping mission. Its main tasks were to monitor ceasefire agreements, promote confidence between the forces, assist in the delivery of humanitarian assistance, contribute to the electoral process and protect civilians.

In the Central African Republic, the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in the Central African Republic (BONUCA) supported the Government's efforts to achieve reconciliation and reconstruction, following years of unrest. The Government made progress in preparing for elections, scheduled for 2005, by adopting an electoral schedule and drafting a constitution and electoral laws. The constitution was adopted by the people in a December referendum.

The region of West Africa was marked by mixed progress in addressing conflicts. The Secretary-General, through the United Nations Office for West Africa (UNOWA), sought solutions to combat the regional cross-border problems. In that regard, he requested his Special Representative for West Africa to coordinate activities with the UN missions in the region and regional organizations, in particular the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) and the Mano River Union (MRU). The Council called for a comprehensive and composite approach for solutions to the conflicts in West Africa and made recommendations to address the root causes of conflict and promote sustainable peace, security and good governance.

In Côte d'Ivoire, disagreements between political parties over the delegation of powers in the Government of National Reconciliation and the refusal of armed factions to lay down arms blocked further implementation of the 2003 Linas-Marcoussis Agreement. Three main rebel groups continued to hold the northern half of the country. In February, the Council established the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire (UNOCI), which created a zone of confidence between the south and the rebel-controlled north. After months of political stalemate and violent clashes between security forces and demonstrators, the parties signed the Accra III Agreement on reactivating the peace process. Little progress followed, however, and further hostilities erupted in November when Government forces attacked rebels' positions in the north. Mediation efforts, led by President Thabo Mbeki of South Africa, were undertaken to assist the parties to reach an agreement.

In Liberia, the National Transitional Government succeeded in restoring State authority over the entire country, with the assistance of the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL). The disarmament process was completed in October and armed groups were disbanded. However, the peace process remained fragile, as demonstrated by the outbreak of violence in late October.

Sierra Leone also made strides in consolidating stability, having fulfilled nearly all provisions of the 2000 Agreement on the Ceasefire and Cessation of Hostilities. That progress led to the drawdown of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL) from 11,500 troops to 5,000 by the end of the year. The disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme for ex-combatants was closed on 31 March after four years. The Truth and Reconciliation Commission completed its trials of those accused of serious human rights abuses and crimes against humanity during the 10 years of civil war, and released its final report to the public.

Progress was also recorded in the Guinea-Bissau situation, as it complied with the terms of the 2003 Political Transitional Charter by holding legislative elections leading to the formation of a new Government in May. Preparations were under way for holding presidential elections. That progress was temporarily halted in October by a military mutiny, but calm was restored when the Government paid salary arrears of the armed forces and civil services. The United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Guinea-Bissau (UNOGBIS) continued to support the peace process.

Cameroon and Nigeria, acting through the Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission, took steps to resolve their border issues, following the 2002 ruling of the International Court of Justice on the land and maritime boundary. Work began on the delimitation of the border.

The situation in the Sudan drew international attention when what appeared to be ethnic-based violence erupted in the Darfur region of western Sudan, complicating an already protracted civil war and creating a serious humanitarian situation. A peace process led by the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD) and assisted by the AU was directed at helping the parties implement the 2002 Machakos Protocol dealing with the issues of the right to self-determination for the people of southern Sudan, and the status of State and religion, and the 2003 Framework Agreement on Security Arrangements signed by the Government, the main rebel group, and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army (SPLM/A). On 26 May 2004, the parties agreed on a power-sharing mechanism under a Government of National Unity and on the administration of certain conflict areas. Meanwhile in the south, rebel militias, known as the Janjaweed, carried out attacks on civilians in villages and settlements in the Darfur region. By mid-2004, over a million people were in need of urgent humanitarian assistance and about 200,000 refugees had fled to Chad. The UN Secretary-General responded to the situation by proposing that an advance team be sent there to prepare for international monitoring of the 2003 security agreement. The United Nations and the Sudan signed on 5 August a Plan of Action on Darfur, by which the Sudan pledged to restore security to Darfur, enable delivery of aid and assist in the voluntary return of displaced persons. However, on 18 September, the Security Council said that the Government had not met its commitments to improve the security of the civilian population of Darfur. The Council supported the AU plans to augment its monitoring mission in Darfur, and urged the Government and the rebel groups to reach a political solution. Towards the end of the year, the parties completed the process for the full implementation of the peace framework, with the Government and SPLM/A agreeing on a series of documents to be incorporated into a comprehensive peace agreement and signed in 2005. However, the situation in Darfur remained a matter of concern. The Secretary-General, as requested by the Council, established the International Commission of Inquiry for Darfur to investigate reports of serious violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law.

Slow but steady progress was made in the national reconciliation process in Somalia, which began in 2002 at the Eldoret (Kenya) Conference under the auspices of IGAD. In January 2004, Somali leaders signed a declaration on agreement of issues related to a transitional federal government. At the Somali National Reconciliation Conference, held in Kenya intermittently over a period of two years and attended by numerous representatives of Somali factions and clans, with the notable exception of Somaliland, the participants agreed to form the Transitional Federal Parliament. In late 2004, that body elected its Speaker and the Transitional President, thereby establishing the first national governmental institutions since the country's central Government disintegrated under the pressures of civil war 14 years earlier. IGAD, as organizer of the Conference, convened ministerial committee meetings which reached agreement on various aspects of the planned transitional federal Government, and the AU dispatched a reconnaissance mission to prepare for deploying military monitors to Somalia. The United Nations Political Office for Somalia (UNPOS) remained involved in the peace process and humanitarian efforts and continued to operate from Nairobi. The monitoring group established by the Secretary-General to investigate violations of the arms embargo against Somalia reported in August that weapons continued to flow into, through and out of Somalia, in contravention of the embargo.

Little headway was made in the border dispute between Eritrea and Ethiopia. The United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE), which maintained its presence along the border zone, continued to monitor the implementation of the 2000 Algiers Peace Agreements between the two countries. Although a decision on delimitation of the border had been made in 2002 by the Boundary Commission and the Secretary-General's Special Envoy continued to negotiate with both sides, the physical demarcation process remained stalled throughout 2004. In November, Ethiopia proposed a plan for resolving the dispute through peaceful means, including the suggestion that both sides implement the Boundary Commission's decision. Eritrea was dismissive of the plan.

The question of the future of Western Sahara also remained unresolved due to a lack of compromise by the two parties to the dispute, Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguía el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (POLISARIO), despite their 1990 agreement to hold a referendum for the people to decide between independence or integration of the Territory with Morocco. The latest peace plan, drawn up in 2003 by the Secretary-General's Personal Envoy, would divide governmental and administrative responsibilities between the parties before the results of the referendum were finalized. POLISARIO eventually accepted that plan, but Morocco continued to reject it. By the end of the year, the Secretary-General said that an agreement appeared more distant than a year earlier, as there was no consensus on how to proceed to overcome the deadlock. The United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) continued to monitor the ceasefire.

In December 2003, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya announced its decision to abandon programmes for developing weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery. The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), on 10 March, welcomed the voluntary decision and Libya's request that IAEA ensure verification that all its nuclear activities would be under safeguards and exclusively for peaceful purposes. In April, the Security Council also welcomed the decision and encouraged Libya to ensure the verified elimination of all of its weapons of mass destruction programmes.

Promotion of peace in Africa

The United Nations remained engaged in 2004 in the search to resolve the root causes of conflict and to encourage peace and sustainable development in Africa.

In August, the Secretary-General reported on implementation of his 1998 recommendations on overcoming the root causes of conflict and promoting durable peace, focusing on progress and hindrances encountered over the previous two years. He found that, while progress had been made in tackling conflict situations, some worrisome trends had emerged. The General Assembly welcomed the progress as reported by the Secretary-General and his recommendation that Member States strengthen cooperation between the UN system and the AU and other African organizations in the maintenance of peace and security. The Secretary-General was requested to explore suitable arrangements through which Member States could support Africa's efforts to address the multiple causes of conflict.

The Secretary-General, reporting in November on the peacekeeping capacity in Africa, discussed the efforts of the AU and other African regional and subregional organizations in strengthening their continental security architecture, including the establishment of an African Standby Force, and proposed measures the United Nations could adopt in support of that initiative.

Working Group. In an 8 January note [S/2004/5], the Security Council President said that, after consultations among the members, it had been agreed that Ismael Abraão Gaspar Martins (Angola) would serve as Chairman of the Ad Hoc Working Group on Conflict Prevention and Resolution in Africa until the end of 2004. In a 30 December note [S/2004/1031], the President stated that the Council members had agreed that the Ad Hoc Working Group would continue its work until 31 December 2005.

That Working Group, established in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 93], reported in December 2004 [S/2004/989] on its 2003-2004 activities. It provided assistance to a number of meetings and panels related to conflict prevention and resolution, contributed to Council missions to Africa, and enhanced its working relationship with Economic and Social Council advisory groups dealing with African countries emerging from conflict. It also examined regional and cross-conflict issues that affected the Security Council's work, and developed partnerships with other institutions, such as the International Peace Academy.

Security Council consideration. The Security Council, on 22 December [meeting 5106], heard a statement by the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Group's 2003 report [YUN 2003, p. 105]. He recalled the Group's round-table discussion with the International Peace Academy, which included the Secretary-General's suggestion to consider how to deal with Governments that had been democratically elected but defied constitutional order and flouted basic governance. Referring to the Council's invitation, in presidential statement S/PRST/2004/44 (see p. 282), to the Secretary-General to explore new means of cooperation between the United Nations and the AU, he said that the Working Group could play a pivotal role in enhancing cooperation between the Council and the AU's newly established Peace and Security Council. He suggested that the Working Group reflect on how it could better implement its mandate, including through the continued development of partnerships with other institutions, and on its future status within the Council in order to respond to new trends in the search for solutions to African conflicts.

Economic and Social Council action. The Economic and Social Council considered the work of its ad hoc advisory groups on African countries emerging from conflict and, in July, it adopted resolution 2004/59 on its assessment of those advisory groups (see pp. 156 and 932).

Implementation of Secretary-General's 1998 recommendations on promotion of peace

Report of Secretary-General (August). The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 58/235 [YUN 2003, p. 106], submitted on 20 August [A/59/285] a report on implementation of the recommendations contained in his 1998 report on the causes of conflict and promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa [YUN 1998, p. 66]. The report, which updated information since his 2003 review [YUN 2003, p. 106], highlighted progress in the implementation of those recommendations, identified challenges and constraints and made specific proposals on measures to accelerate the implementation of those recommendations. He reported that, while steady progress was made in peacemaking and peacekeeping, progress was slow in other areas, such as the strengthening of democratic governance, enhancing administrative capacity, ensuring the independence of the judiciary and promoting transparency and accountability.

The number of countries in the region experiencing armed conflict had dropped from 14 in 1998, to six in 2004 and very few others were facing deep political crises. Most African countries were relatively stable politically and were governed by democratically elected regimes. Their efforts were directed at economic reconstruction and at combating poverty and underdevelopment. Peace agreements were negotiated in Burundi, Côte d'Ivoire, the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), Eritrea, Ethiopia, Liberia and the Sudan. Under the auspices of the AU, African countries had established a legal framework and structures to deal with conflicts, such as the Peace and Security Council and the protocol relating to its establishment, and the Committee of the Wise which supported the Council. They also deployed peacekeeping forces and military observers in a number of African countries and were establishing an African standby force to enable them to participate more effectively in peace operations. The number of military coups had diminished and those countries that had experienced attempted or successful coups (Central African Republic, Comoros, Guinea-Bissau, Sao Tome and Principe and Sierra Leone) had restored or were attempting to return to law and order. Efforts were also under way in the areas of governance and human rights. Some 23 countries had acceded to the African Peer Review Mechanism of the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD) [YUN 2001, p. 899], set up by the AU to promote political, economic and corporate governance and human rights observance. The long-standing issue of Angola had been resolved, and the Security Council had approved new peacekeeping missions in Burundi, Côte d'Ivoire, the DRC and Liberia, and an advance team for the Sudan. In general, there were increased prospects for peace restoration in all countries experiencing armed conflict, although instability continued in the Great Lakes region, the member countries of the Mano River Union and in parts of Central Africa.

The report provided details of action taken to implement the recommendations as well as constraints in the following areas of peacemaking: the appointment of special mediators and special commissions; mobilizing international support for peace efforts; improving the effectiveness of sanctions; stopping the proliferation of arms; establishing multidisciplinary peacekeeping missions that bridged the gap to integrated reconstruction and development; supporting efforts by African regional organizations in peacekeeping; providing UN and other support for regional and subregional initiatives; protecting civilians in situations of conflict; addressing refugee security issues; coordinating humanitarian assistance; ensuring post-conflict peace-building; financing recovery, especially by the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank; working towards a coordinated international response; securing respect for human rights and the rule of law; promoting transparency and accountability in public administration; managing natural resources; and eliminating discrimination against women.

The Secretary-General noted that slow progress was shown in poverty reduction, despite African countries' efforts to implement NEPAD and create an enabling environment for economic growth and sustainable development. Efforts were under way to reduce trade in small arms and to prevent the harbouring of opponents with military capabilities in neighbouring countries and uncontrolled military groups.

However, certain trends threatened to affect peace in Africa adversely, including the worsening conditions for young people, in particular high unemployment rates, the spread of the HIV/AIDS pandemic, and the illicit exploitation of and trade in natural resources. Demographic pressures and issues of migration were becoming an increasing source of tension in West, Central and East Africa, as a result of high fertility rates and a shortage of arable land. Those pressures threatened to undermine UN and African Governments' efforts in peace-building, the promotion of good governance and democratization. The Secretary-General urged the international community to take steps to reverse those trends, including tightening the rules and controls to regulate the trade in diamonds (see p. 57) and engaging more seriously in the fight against poverty, and to support efforts to strengthen co-operation among the UN system, the AU and other African regional organizations. In that regard, he instructed relevant UN agencies, departments and offices to look into new ways of collaboration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 76], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/255 [draft: A/59/L.50/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 38 (b)].

Implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa

9. Recognizes the contribution made by the ad hoc advisory groups on African countries emerging from conflict of the Economic and Social Council, as well as by the Ad Hoc Working Group on Conflict Prevention and Resolution in Africa of the Security Council, in promoting peace and sustainable development, and emphasizes the need for continued collaboration between the Economic and Social Council and the Security Council in generating a coherent approach to the challenges of conflict prevention, conflict resolution and post-conflict reconstruction in Africa;

10. Notes the support offered by the United Nations system in the context of conflict prevention and peace consolidation, and in this regard calls upon Member States, in particular donor countries, as well as other development partners and relevant regional and subregional organizations as appropriate, to continue to provide financial and technical assistance, in a coordinated and sustained manner, to support activities in Africa, inter alia, to eradicate poverty, promote respect for human rights and strengthen the rule of law and transparent and accountable public administration;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to explore and recommend suitable arrangements and mechanisms through which Member States could more effectively support Africa's efforts to address the multiple causes of conflict in Africa, including their regional dimensions, and to strengthen, in a coordinated and sustained manner, preventive action as well as post-conflict peacebuilding;

African peacekeeping capacity

Consideration by Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2004 session (New York, 29 March–16 April), discussed enhancing African peacekeeping. It recognized the effort to establish the African Standby Force (see below) through regional partnership arrangements and the need to further expand the pool of African military, civilian police and civilian specialists available for peacekeeping operations. It requested that efforts to train African peacekeeping military personnel be enhanced and conducted according to UN standards and that regional and subregional organizations and Member States expand training for civilian police and specialists. The Special Committee welcomed the new partnerships for building Africa's capacity for conflict prevention, peacekeeping and peace-building between the United Nations, the AU and other regional organizations and bodies, and individual Member States, and looked forward to the Secretary-General's comprehensive report on the enhancement of Africa's peacekeeping capacity.

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 57/48 [YUN 2002, p. 235], the Secretary-General reported on 30 November [A/59/591] on the enhancement of African peacekeeping capacity. The report examined the role of African regional and subregional organizations in peacekeeping and that of the African Standby Force in a response system, and the way forward. The report noted that, since 1999, the United Nations had faced a surge in demand for peacekeeping and, of the more than 53,000 troops, military observers and civilian police currently serving in 17 UN missions, more than half of them were in Africa. In the previous year, the Security Council had authorized new missions in Burundi and Liberia, expanded those in Côte d'Ivoire and the DRC, and was planning another for the Sudan (see p. 247).

In the past five years, the AU and subregional organizations, such as the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), had played an increasingly prominent role in the maintenance of peace and security in African regions. Co-operation with ECOWAS included support to its missions in Côte d'Ivoire, Liberia and Sierra Leone in the form of the provision of logistical and financial advice, planning and deployment and sustainment. The Secretary-General's Special Representative for West Africa worked with States and organizations on issues of cross-border security problems, such as illicit trafficking of weapons and combatants, and conflict prevention in the Mano River region. In East Africa, the United Nations supported the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD).

A new AU security structure was expected to have profound implications for peacekeeping on the continent, particularly the Policy Framework Document approved by the AU Summit (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 6-8 July), establishing the Standby Force and the Military Staff Committee. A standby brigade from each of the five subregions, established by 2010, would be composed of nationally based units available for rapid deployment under the auspices of such organizations as the AU, ECOWAS or the Southern African Development Community (SADC) or a coalition of the willing. The Standby Force, which would participate in various peacekeeping scenarios, from ceasefire monitoring to multidimensional peacekeeping and peace enforcement, would allow African Member States to contribute more effectively to both African and UN-led peacekeeping operation in Africa and elsewhere and would be a welcome addition to tools available to the international community for managing crises in Africa and other parts of the world.

In addressing the way forward, the Secretary-General welcomed the commitment made by the Group of 8 at their annual summit (Sea Islands, United States, June), in response to the AU's appeal for assistance in setting up the Standby Force, to train and help equip 75,000 peacekeepers by 2010 as part of a plan to expand global capability for peace support operations. He also welcomed the commitment of the European Union (EU) to strengthening the AU's ability to conduct peace support operations, including through the establishment of the African Peace Facility [S/2004/444] at a cost of 250 million euros, which became operational on 25 May. It also provided funds for the AU to expand its peace and security staff capacity; in a 6 July declaration, it reiterated its intention to support the strengthening of peace and security mechanisms in Africa.

For its part, the United Nations focused on building the capacity of individual African troop contributors to participate in UN peacekeeping operations. It could do more to assist the AU, but it had to have a clear mandate and the required resources. The Organization, with its partners, also needed to coordinate efforts within the framework of a joint action plan that reflected comparative advantage in delivering peace and security and the needs and wishes of the providers and beneficiaries of peacekeeping operations. Such a plan should address issues such as a common doctrine and training standards; equipment and adequate logistical support, including sea and airlift capabilities; funding; and planning and management capacity for peacekeeping operations. The Secretary-General suggested concrete initiatives the United Nations could undertake in collaboration with key African partners in those areas, including: the establishment of a revolving fund to allow African Member States to obtain equipment from liquidating peacekeeping missions in Africa or to purchase from the United Nations strategic deployment stocks; promoting the use of a common set of equipment; making available to the AU, to strengthen its strategic headquarters capacity, the significant UN capacity to plan, launch, manage and conduct peacekeeping operations; and promoting longer-term programmes for the exchange of staff.

Those measures should be seen as part of an "open door" policy to give African regional and subregional organizations full access to updated information on conflicts and potential conflicts, best practices and lessons learned, mission planning templates and other relevant documents.

Central Africa and Great Lakes region

The volatile situation in Central Africa and the Great Lakes region remained a major concern to the international community in 2004, in particular the conflicts in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), Burundi and Rwanda. During the year, the United Nations continued its search for political solutions to the widespread unrest in the Great Lakes region. In support of that effort, it organized in November, in collaboration with the AU, the First International Conference on the Great Lakes Region, which outlined a number of measures to address the priority issues of peace and security, governance and democracy, economic development, and social and humanitarian issues. In addition, the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa met at the ministerial level in June to discuss the geopolitical and security situation in the region.

Meanwhile, the Security Council, as it had done in the previous four years, sent a mission to the region in late November to assess the situation. The mission reported that both the DRC and Burundi were at a crucial turning point in their peace processes and faced the similar challenge of implementing the outstanding aspects of their respective transition process, such as conducting credible elections that would lead to durable peace and stability. Both also had transitional Governments in place and, with assistance from UN peacekeeping forces, were attempting to solve the issue of armed groups by bringing them into the peace process and arranging disarmament and reintegration programmes.

In the DRC, following months of slow progress to advance the establishment and functioning of the transitional Government, as outlined in the 2002 Global and All-Inclusive Agreement [YUN 2002, p. 125] signed by a number of armed factions, the transitional Government in Kisangani took steps to establish an integrated army command and to operationalize the principal political institutions. However, a number of challenges remained, including the slow pace in adopting needed legislation, the extension of State administration throughout the country, military integration and reintegration of former forces, and preparation for elections. The situation was further complicated by the outbreak of violence in eastern DRC, causing the military and security situation to deteriorate. The Governments of the DRC and Rwanda accused each other of involvement in the violence by supporting anti-government armed groups. The United Nations Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) took action to halt the fighting and coordinated with the Government and opposing parties to arrange the disarmament, demobilization, resettlement and reintegration of armed forces. The Security Council expressed concern about the continuation of hostilities in eastern DRC and warned neighbouring States of the consequences of supporting armed rebel groups.

Acting on the recommendation of the Secretary-General, the Security Council, in October, authorized the increase of MONUC military personnel to 16,700 and expanded its mandate, giving it the authority to use all necessary means to carry out its tasks. Those tasks included deployment to volatile areas, ensuring the protection of civilians, seizing illegal arms, protection of officials and contributing to the electoral process.

Relations with Rwanda remained tense as the two countries continued to make charges and counter-charges of invasion and threats of invasion and of assisting opposing armed factions. Nevertheless, the two countries were among the regional States which signed the Tripartite Agreement and the Dar es Salaam Declaration on Peace, Security, Democracy and Development in the Great Lakes Region. They also established the Joint Verification Mission to monitor the border between their countries.

As requested by the Council, the Secretary-General established a Group of Experts to report on the flows of arms in the region. The Group found that Rwanda supported dissident military leaders in eastern DRC and violated the arms embargo. In July, the Council extended the arms embargo for another year, until 31 July 2005, and requested the Secretary-General to re-establish the Group of Experts.

The transitional process in Burundi also made some progress towards implementation of the peace agreement between rebel forces. The 2000 Arusha Agreement on Peace and Reconciliation [YUN 2000, p. 146] provided for political reform during a three-year transition period. By 2004, only one main armed movement had not joined the political process and hostilities continued throughout the year in one area of Burundi where that group continued to operate. In May, the Security Council established the United Nations Operation in Burundi with a maximum force of 5,650 military personnel to monitor ceasefire agreements, promote confidence between Burundi forces, monitor the illegal flow of arms and the quartering of Burundi armed forces, assist in providing safe conditions for delivery of humanitarian assistance, contribute to the electoral process and protect civilians. The UN mission took over from the African Mission in Burundi set up by the AU in 2003, and it incorporated the existing United Nations Office in Burundi.

In August, some 150 refugees from the DRC were massacred in Gatumba, Burundi, in what appeared to be an ethnically motivated crime. Investigations were unable to determine who had organized and carried it out. In December, the Security Council called on the DRC and Rwanda to cooperate with Burundi in the investigation of the massacre, and it requested the UN missions in those countries to assist the investigation and strengthen the security of vulnerable populations. The Council stated its intention to consider measures against those who threatened the national reconciliation process in Burundi.

Towards the end of the year, progress was made, especially with regard to the peaceful extension of the Burundi transitional Government for at least six months after its original deadline of 31 October 2004, the establishment of an electoral calendar, and the adoption of a post-transition constitution to be put to a popular referendum. Legislation remained to be adopted on electoral procedure and reform of the armed forces and police.

The Central African Republic was also run by a transitional Government in 2004, following a coup d'état in March 2003. In similar steps as in other regional countries, the Government, which included all political factions, made progress towards elections, scheduled for 2005, having adopted an electoral schedule and having drafted a constitution, electoral code and laws on political parties. The constitution was approved by the people of the Central African Republic in a December referendum. The United Nations Peace-building Support Office in the Central African Republic remained in the country to support the Government's efforts to achieve reconciliation and reconstruction following years of unrest and continued serious crime. The crises of the region and, in particular, the burgeoning problems in the Sudanese region of Darfur, were also areas of concern for the Central African Republic.

The year 2004 marked the tenth anniversary of the 1994 genocide in Rwanda, for which the General Assembly held a solemn commemoration.

On 11 November [S/2004/904], the Secretary-General stated that the mandate of his Special Representative for the Great Lakes Region would expire on 31 December. In view of the first and second conferences on the Great Lakes, he affirmed his intention to extend the mandate until 31 December 2005. The Council took note of the intention on 16 November [S/2004/905].

International Conference on Great Lakes

The First International Conference on Peace, Security, Democracy and Development in the Great Lakes Region was held on 19 and 20 November in Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania. Organized under the auspices of the United Nations and the AU, the summit meeting was preceded by the Pre-Summit Meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs (Dar es Salaam, 16-17 November), the First Great Lakes Regional Women's Meeting (Kigali, Rwanda, 7-9 October) and the Meeting of Regional Non-Governmental Organizations from the Great Lakes Region (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 20-24 September). The Conference concluded with the adoption and signing of the Dar es Salaam Declaration on Peace, Security, Democracy and Development in the Great Lakes Region by the heads of State and Government of Angola, Burundi, the Central African Republic, the Congo, the DRC, Kenya, Rwanda, the Sudan, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia.

The Declaration, which provided a vision and follow-up mechanism, addressed the four themes of the Conference: peace and security, democracy and governance, economic development and regional integration, and humanitarian and social issues. The leaders expressed their commitment to: support the national peace processes in the region and refrain from negatively impacting them; establish a regional security framework for the prevention, management and settlement of conflicts; strengthen cooperation in defence and security; ensure security at borders; prevent assistance to armed groups; support national disarmament and demobilization programmes; fight trans-border crime and terrorism; protect vulnerable groups; promote democracy and good governance; promote multiculturalism, tolerance and human rights; cooperate in enhancing economic growth through economic integration; establish or strengthen regional legal, administrative and institutional frameworks for regional integration; adopt regional policies to promote the private sector; promote cooperation in trade, monetary policies, energy, transport, tourism, culture, environment and information technologies; pursue a collective strategy on enhanced access to international markets; find solutions to the problems of displaced and refugee populations; guarantee the safety of humanitarian personnel; establish an early warning and rapid response mechanism for natural and man-made disasters; prohibit the recruitment of children into armed forces; and promote strategies to curb the spread of endemic diseases such as HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria.

The participants decided to set up a Regional Inter-Ministerial Committee, assisted by the Regional Preparatory Committee, to prepare draft protocols and programmes of action to be submitted to the second summit which would form the Declaration part of a pact on security, stability and development in the Great Lakes region.

Conference preparations

The Secretary-General, in a 12 March letter to the Security Council [S/2004/528], noted the progress in the preparations for the international conference on the Great Lakes region and stated that, in order to assist in follow-up to the conference's preparatory meetings and in the establishment of the national preparatory committees, the Office of his Special Representative would need nine international civil servants, in addition to its current seven administrators. On 30 June [S/2004/529], the Council President responded that members had requested more detailed information on the need for nine additional staff.

The EU, in a 19 October statement of its Presidency, on the occasion of the meeting of the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region (Kinshasa, DRC) [S/2004/864], pledged the financial, technical and diplomatic support of the Group of Friends of the Great Lakes Region, of which the EU was a member, to help make the conference a success.

Security Council consideration. On 27 October [meeting 5065], the Security Council was briefed by Ibrahima Fall, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Great Lakes Region, on the status of preparations for the First International Conference to be followed by a second and final summit in 2005. He said that the entire process had given rise to ideas and suggestions for the regional preparatory meetings, on the basis of which the Dar es Salaam declaration would be finalized. The inclusive preparatory meetings allowed for a geographical broadening among countries participating, which increased from seven to eleven, with the addition of Angola, the Central African Republic, the Congo and the Sudan. Four priority areas had been identified for the conference: peace and security; governance and democracy; economic development and regional integration; and social and humanitarian issues.

Security Council missions to Central Africa

Follow-up to 2003 mission. The Secretary-General, in response to Security Council presidential statement S/PRST/2003/12 [YUN 2003, p. 109], submitted a 20 January progress report [S/2004/52] on advances made in the implementation of the recommendations of the Council's 2003 mission to Central Africa [YUN 2003, p. 109] regarding the situations in the DRC and Burundi (see pp. 120 and 142), and detailed preparations for the convening of an international conference on the Great Lakes region (see p. 116).

The Council, on 17 February [meeting 4911], considered the Secretary-General's progress report. The Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs, Tuliameni Kalomoh, told the Council that substantial progress had been made in the peace processes in both countries since the Council's mission in 2003. However, much remained to be done to consolidate the historic advances and to build sustainable peace in the region. The international community's commitment to continue supporting peace efforts in the subregion was therefore as critical as ever. The mission provided an added impetus, encouraging the parties to fulfil their commitments to the peace process in both Burundi and the DRC.

2004 mission. On 8 November [S/2004/891], the Council President informed the Secretary-General that the Council had decided to send another mission to Central Africa from 20 to 25 November, headed by Jean-Marc de La Sablière (France). The mission would visit Burundi, the DRC, Rwanda and Uganda. In its general mandate, the mission would, among other tasks, stress the need to continue the peace and transitional processes in the DRC and Burundi (see pp. 119 and 152) and to bring them to a successful conclusion in 2005. It would call on Governments of the region to cooperate in areas of security, including joint monitoring of borders and combating the illegal traffic in arms, and economic development. The mandate also addressed the specific situations and actions to be accomplished in each of the countries to be visited.

On 30 November [S/2004/934], the mission reported on its visit, the fifth in as many years. The mission observed that, while the Council had recognized the linkages between the peace processes of the DRC and Burundi, the regional dimension of the conflict had become more prominent over the previous 18 months, as was demonstrated by the massacre on 13 August in a refugee transit centre in Gatumba, Burundi (see p. 150). The resulting refugee flows affected all countries in the subregion. The mission was also concerned by unconfirmed reports of cross-border cooperation between different armed groups. Despite the reinforcement of MONUC and the establishment of ONUB, the task remained vast. With no fewer than 325 identified airstrips, illicit arms continued to flow through the porous borders into the DRC. The mission condemned the prevalence of sexual violence in both the DRC and Burundi, perpetrated by almost all armed groups, including army units of the two countries. However, it was convinced that the provisions of the Dar es Salaam Declaration (see p. 116) provided a solid basis for consolidating peace and promoting cooperation between the countries of the Great Lakes region. The successful conclusion of the First International Conference on the Great Lakes Region gave hope for regional cooperation. Rwanda's threatened preparedness to cross the border to "neutralize" the former Armed Forces of Rwanda (ex-FAR/Interahamwe) reinforced the need for stronger regional cooperation.

The mission exchanged views with President Museveni of Uganda on the status of the peace processes and on the humanitarian situation in Uganda. In regard to northern Uganda, Mr. Museveni expressed the view that the conflict there would soon cease, given the recent developments in the Sudanese peace process (see p. 236) as a result of the curbing of cross-border operations of the Lord's Resistance Army, whose combatants had become "fugitives".

The mission concluded that, in spite of the remaining challenges, there had been a steady positive trend in the promotion of regional security. Since the adoption of the Principles on Good-Neighbourly Relations and Cooperation between the DRC and its eastern neighbours in September 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 133], much progress had been made, leading up to the adoption of the Dar es Salaam Declaration. The mission recommended that the Council encourage the participants in the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region to focus on the development of priorities and speedy implementation.

Security Council consideration. The Council, on 30 November [meeting 5091], heard a briefing by the head of the mission, Mr. de La Sablière, who said that the mission came back encouraged, even though much remained to be done, by the widely shared determination by Congolese and Burundian officials to move to elections and, by the extent of the progress achieved since the Council's 2003 mission. The international community should exert effective influence in its engagement in the two countries. To that end, better use should be made of the coordination mechanisms in the DRC. It was equally essential that the elections scheduled for 2005 should not be jeopardized by new outbreaks of violence, particularly in the eastern part of the DRC. The regional dimension of certain problems made it clear that the success of the Great Lakes Conference had to be followed up by the swift implementation of the Dar es Salaam Declaration by establishing priorities. Thinking about the post-electoral period should also begin.

Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions

The United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa, at its twenty-first ministerial meeting (Malabo, Equatorial Guinea, 21-25 June) [A/59/154-S/2004/576], discussed the geopolitical and security situation in Burundi, the Central African Republic, Chad, the DRC, Equatorial Guinea, and Sao

Tome and Principe; cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Community of Central African States (ECCAS); and the Committee's future.

Concerning Burundi, the Committee welcomed the 2003 signing of the Global Ceasefire Agreement [YUN 2003, p. 152] but remained concerned about the lack of resources for initiating the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration (DDR) process. It recommended the establishment of an electoral and political system which encouraged compromise, the search for consensus to facilitate national reconciliation, and the observance of the electoral timetable stipulated in the 2000 Arusha Agreement [YUN 2000, p. 146]. The Committee called on ECCAS to become more involved in the search for a lasting solution to the crisis in Burundi.

The Committee welcomed the efforts of the transitional Government in the Central African Republic to implement the recommendations of the 2003 national dialogue [YUN 2003, p. 158], including the electoral timetable. It appealed to bilateral and multilateral donors to support the economic and financial needs of the country.

Noting the situation in the DRC, the Committee appealed to all political actors to abide by the provisions of the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement on the Transition of the DRC Government [YUN 2002, p. 125]. The international community was urged to support reconstruction, national reconciliation and election preparations.

The Committee noted with satisfaction the climate in which the legislative and municipal elections had been held in April in Equatorial Guinea (see p. 234) and condemned the attempts to overturn the democratically elected institutions by force. In view of the magnitude of the problems relating to mercenary activities, the Committee decided to include the issue in the agenda of its next meeting. It encouraged Equatorial Guinea and Cameroon to implement the decisions taken in the framework of the ad hoc joint commission on security questions between the two countries, which met in Malabo in June (see p. 234).

The Committee welcomed the efforts of all political actors in Sao Tome and Principe to find a consensus-based solution to the political crisis in the country, and encouraged the Government to continue efforts aimed at restructuring and training the country's security forces. It welcomed the mission sent by ECCAS in March to that country.

Condemning the attempted coup in Chad on 16 May, the Committee expressed concern about the general situation on the border between Chad and the Sudan (see p. 239) and welcomed the mediation efforts led by President Idriss Déby of Chad to find a solution to the problems in the Darfur region.

The Committee called for further cooperation between ECCAS and the United Nations. In regard to its own future, the Committee decided on action for its revitalization and to enhance the effectiveness of its functioning, including the establishment by member States of follow-up and evaluation mechanisms and holding thematic meetings on major issues.

The Committee assisted ECCAS in establishing a mechanism for conflict prevention and management (the Council for Peace and Security in Central Africa (COPAX)), and appealed to the ECCAS secretariat to operationalize COPAX as soon as possible.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

In 2004, the Security Council worked towards building on the recent progress achieved in the peace process in the DRC as a result of the conclusion of the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement signed by the parties to the conflict in late 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 125] and the establishment in 2003 of the Government of National Unity and Transition [YUN 2003, p. 129], which provided for a two-year transitional Government to be followed by national elections. Those efforts were supported by the International Committee in Support of the Transition, comprising the five permanent Security Council members (China, France, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States), plus Belgium and Canada, four African countries (Angola, Gabon, South Africa, Zambia), the EU and the AU, which provided advice and guidance for the Congolese transition, and by the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC), headed by William Lacy Swing (United States), the Special Representative of the Secretary-General. MONUC's mission, as set out in Council resolution 1493(2003) [ibid., p. 130], was to, among other things, provide assistance for the reform of the security forces, the re-establishment of a State based on the rule of law and the preparation and holding of elections throughout the country. In October, the Council, in resolution 1565 (2004), extended MONUC's mandate until 31 March 2005 and restructured it to deploy and maintain a presence in the key areas of potential volatility to promote the re-establishment of confidence, discourage violence and allow UN personnel to operate freely, particularly in the eastern part of the country; ensure the protection of civilians, including humanitarian personnel; seize or collect the arms that were in violation of the arms embargo; assist the Congolese authorities in maintaining order; support the disarmament of foreign combatants; and assist in the promotion of human rights. The Council also increased its strength by 5,900 personnel, including up to 341 civilian police.

The Secretary-General, on 18 November [SG/A/896-AFR/1067-BIO/3624], announced the appointment of Ross Mountain (New Zealand) as his Deputy Special Representative for the DRC, and Resident Coordinator and Humanitarian Coordinator for the DRC.

Political and military developments

Formation of national army

The Secretary-General, in his fifteenth report on MONUC [S/2004/251] (see p. 121), reported that initial steps had been taken towards restructuring the national army, to be known as the Forces armées de la République démocratique du Congo (FARDC). A draft law on defence and the armed forces, which was approved by the Council of Ministers in January, was being considered by the National Assembly. The transitional Government issued decrees establishing a Commission de contrôle des effectifs de l'armée, charged with overseeing the identification of elements belonging to hitherto different military organizations, and the État-Major technique d'intégration, which was to plan and undertake the operational aspects of integration. On 12 January, President Kabila swore in one military region commander and two deputies, replacing previous nominees who had not reported for duty. Through Belgian bilateral assistance, senior officers from all armed components participated in a seminar in Kinshasa in January to plan military integration.

The Security Council considered the situation in the DRC on 15 January and welcomed efforts currently under way to set up the first integrated and unified brigade in Kisangani, as a step towards the formation of a Congolese national army. By resolution 1522(2004) (below), it adjusted one of its prior demands so that the integrated brigade could operate in that city.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 15 January [meeting 4894], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1522(2004). The draft [S/2004/25] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions and the statements by its President on the situation concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Encouraged by the progress achieved in the peace process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo since the conclusion of the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement on the Transition in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, signed at Pretoria on 17 December 2002, and the subsequent establishment of the Government of National Unity and Transition,

Considering that the reform of the security sector, including the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants, the effective restructuring and integration of the armed forces of the former Congolese belligerents and the establishment of an integrated national police, are key elements for the success of the transition process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Reaffirming, in this regard, that overall responsibility lies with the Government of National Unity and Transition, welcoming the establishment of an integrated High Command, and calling for effective cooperation at all levels of the Congolese armed forces,

1. Welcomes the efforts currently being undertaken to set up the first integrated and unified brigade in Kisangani as a step towards the elaboration and implementation of a comprehensive programme for the formation of a Congolese integrated national army;

2. Decides that, since the Government of National Unity and Transition has been established and is in place, its demand for the demilitarization of Kisangani and its surroundings laid down in paragraph 3 of resolution 1304(2000) of 16 June 2000 shall not apply to the restructured and integrated forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and to the armed forces included in the comprehensive programme for the formation of an integrated and restructured national army;

3. Urges the Government of National Unity and Transition to take the appropriate measures for the restructuring and integration of the armed forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in accordance with the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement on the Transition in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including setting up a Supreme Defence Council and the elaboration of a national plan for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, as well as the necessary legislative framework;

4. Calls upon the international community to provide further assistance for the integration and restructuring of the armed forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in accordance with Security Council resolution 1493(2003) of 28 July 2003;

5. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Meeting on security sector reform

On 9 February, the United Nations convened a meeting in New York between the DRC transitional Government and Member States concerned to review the status of security sector reform and to reach an understanding on the key issues to be addressed to meet the timetable for the transition, the Secretary-General reported [S/2004/251]. The meeting agreed that the Government should develop a national security policy, finance the establishment and maintenance of security entities, and ensure that DDR bodies coordinated their work under a common vision and strategy. A number of military reform issues were also agreed upon, including the review and adoption of the law on the general organization of defence and the armed forces; establishment of the conseil supérieur de la défense; adoption and implementation of a coherent military integration plan, complemented by a national DDR programme and production of plans for the deployment of integrated FARDC units. Agreement was also reached on the need to elaborate the future role of the police service by holding a national seminar on police issues, to adopt decrees appointing the national police high command, to establish the protection corps and to designate the command structure of the Integrated Police Unit.

The meeting also agreed to set up an advisory group on security sector reform.

Communication (March). Belgium, on 12 March [S/2004/201], in response to resolution 1522 (2004) (above) and the 9 February meeting on the DRC's security sector reform (above), informed the Council President of its support to the DRC by providing training for an initial integrated brigade in peacekeeping operations. France was also participating in the training programme.

Follow-up to 2003 mission

The Secretary-General, in a 20 January report [S/2004/52], described progress on the implementation of recommendations made by the Security Council's 2003 mission to Central Africa [YUN 2003, p. 127] (see also pp. 117 and 142). In regard to the DRC, those recommendations concerned the installation of the transitional Government and the creation of a unified national army, the situation in Bunia and in North Kivu, the need for regional countries to exert a positive influence on the situation, and efforts to end impunity and establish the rule of law. The Secretary-General updated the Council on action taken in 2003 to implement those recommendations. Regarding the establishment of the transitional institutions, he also reported that, on 7 January 2004, the transitional Parliament met in extraordinary session to tackle the backlog in the examination and adoption of key legislation.

Security Council consideration. On 11 February [S/2004/224], the Council was briefed by the Secretary-General's Special Representative, William Lacy Swing. In a press statement of the same date [SC/8000-AFR/833], the Council President said that Council members were encouraged by the positive developments in the peace and national reconciliation process. They shared the concern of the International Committee in Support of the Transition with regard to the work still to be done leading up to national elections in 2005 and stressed the need for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of Congolese combatants to be implemented and for a national coordinator to ensure a unified approach. Council members called on the international community to assist the Government, and took note of the progress made and the actions agreed upon at the 9 February meeting on security sector reform (see p. 120) as a basis for integrating and restructuring the military and police.

On 17 February [meeting 4911], during the Council's consideration of the Secretary-General's 20 January report, the Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs, Mr. Kalomoh, said that the transitional Government's comprehensive programme of work, having been approved by the new Parliament, was well under way. Progress was made in normalizing relations between the DRC and its neighbours, but much more could be done in that area. The pace of DDR and resettlement and/or repatriation of Rwandans, Ugandan and Burundian armed elements had accelerated beyond expectations. The International Committee in Support of the Transition had been meeting in Kinshasa on a regular basis, under the chairmanship of the Special Representative, and had been instrumental in resolving several deadlocks between and among the parties.

In Bunia, MONUC had been enforcing a weapons-free policy, and the first phase of the Mission's military expansion outside Bunia was under way.

Political developments and MONUC activities

Report of Secretary-General (March). On 25 March [S/2004/251], the Secretary-General, in response to Security Council resolution 1493(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 130], issued his fifteenth report on MONUC, covering developments since November 2003. He reported that eight months after the establishment of the transitional Government, despite initial progress in national reunification, the peace process was facing daunting challenges. The most crucial issue concerned the ability of the transitional leaders to act as a truly unified government and to overcome the atmosphere of distrust.

During the reporting period, the principal political institutions of the transitional Government continued to function and several steps were taken to implement the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement on the Transition. The ordinary session of Parliament concluded on 3 January, with many items remaining on its agenda. An extraordinary session opened on 7 January to address the legislative backlog, but only the laws establishing the Independent Electoral Commission, the High Media Authority, the Ethics and Anti-corruption Commission and the National Human Rights Observatory, and the law on political parties, had been adopted by the National Assembly. Although initial steps were taken towards restructuring and integrating the national army (see p. 128), lack of equipment and sustainment raised serious concerns regarding its future operational capacity.

Pending the development of a national DDR programme, MONUC was expected to assume functions, such as monitoring of disarmament and demobilization, including the registration and storage of arms; carrying out voluntary disarmament of individuals and small groups outside government centres; providing assistance in the destruction of arms; and monitoring human rights. As numerous Mayi-Mayi had requested to be disarmed and reintegrated into the national army, MONUC would assist the Government in emergency disarmament needs by undertaking voluntary disarmament as a security measure. It was also planning with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) ways to better utilize the rapid-response mechanism, a financial and operational tool for responding to contingencies in connection with DDR. Progress in the reform and restructuring of the Congolese national police was stymied by delays in the appointment of a unified police command. Training for the establishment of the Integrated Police Unit, with EU support, was expected to start in mid-June.

Considerable preparatory work was needed for the holding of elections by 30 June 2005, such as adopting laws to establish a viable Independent Electoral Commission, and laws on nationality, decentralization, amnesty and political parties, as well as the drafting of a new constitution that would be submitted to a referendum. Decisions were also needed on voter registration, demarcation of constituencies and the electoral system. The pace of normalization of relations with neighbouring countries slowed down, as the transitional Government had not followed up on the agreed-upon confidence-building measures with its neighbours, such as setting up a joint bilateral commission with Rwanda. Meetings of the joint security commission of the DRC and Uganda were postponed several times.

MONUC continued the eastward deployment of its military contingents. The MONUC brigade in Ituri consolidated its positions in Bunia and deployed to seven locations in the interior of the region. It was scheduled to deploy to two other areas by the end of March. Nevertheless, volatility in Ituri had increased, mainly as a result of restricted operating space for armed groups due to the extension of Ituri brigade operations, slow progress in the integration of the district into national structures, possible involvement of external actors and delays in launching a local disarmament and reintegration initiative. Those factors contributed to shifting alliances among the armed groups in the region, no longer necessarily along ethnic lines. Reflecting a new trend among militia hardliners to target MONUC, attacks on the Mission occurred on 16, 19 and 20 January. A MONUC military observer was killed on 12 February in an ambush of a convoy en route to Bunia. As a result, the Ituri brigade took additional preventive measures through patrols, augmented checkpoint control and cordon and search operations.

During the reporting period, there was limited progress in solidifying the political process in Ituri. On 20 January, the Ituri operational plan, prepared by the Government, UNDP, the United Nations Children's Fund and MONUC, was formally adopted. It was to be implemented pending the adoption of the national DDR programme. However, the Ituri Interim Administration had not extended its reach much beyond Bunia, where armed groups were jockeying for power and remained a source of instability. The Secretary-General's Special Representative urged President Kabila, at a 24 February meeting, to extend State authority to Ituri and proposed measures the transitional Government could take towards that end, including the appointment of a governor for Orientale province and a district commissioner for Ituri.

In late January, MONUC received reports of a massacre in the village of Gobu on Lake Albert. MONUC determined that most of the population had fled as a result of the massacre, which was led by an alliance of a Lendu militia and the branch of the Union des patriotes congolais (UPC) led by Thomas Lubanga (UPC-L).

In Bunia, as part of efforts to end impunity and restore the justice capacity, MONUC and its partners refurbished the Bunia prison, courthouse, police headquarters and accommodations for judges. MONUC trained 81 police officers on urban law enforcement and provided advisers to support local police in investigations, patrol duties and other functions.

In the Kivus, intermittent skirmishes were attributable to the accelerated pace of disarmament, demobilization, repatriation, resettlement or reintegration of Rwandan elements previously incorporated into Mayi-Mayi groups and the repatriation of some prominent Rwandan rebel leaders, which altered the balance of power among various local groups. MONUC reacted quickly to restore security, as well as to assist in DDR activities and humanitarian efforts. It was also developing a strategy for extending State authority to the Kivus, including the implementation of integrated security activities, community relations and economic recovery. It intended to form a 3,500-member brigade for deployment in the Kivus, with headquarters in Bukavu. In February, tensions mounted in Bukavu as a result of deep divisions within the transitional Government (see p. 124).

The pace of repatriation of Rwandan armed groups accelerated, rising from 2,900 people in November 2003 to 9,658 by 10 March 2004. MONUC began, for the first time, repatriations to Burundi and Uganda, with a total of 3,085 and 501 persons, respectively, as at 10 March.

Human rights abuses involved violations of the right to security and private property committed by armed elements, militia members, foreign armed groups and State law enforcement agencies, who were also responsible for killings, torture and inhuman and degrading treatment. Throughout the country, looting, armed robberies, extortions, illegal taxation, arbitrary arrest and illegal detention were the key means of subsistence for unpaid soldiers. MONUC investigated reports of serious human rights abuses against children, including killings and sexual abuse. It was also undertaking a study of the issue and was setting up mixed commissions in three locations to assist victims. MONUC also provided military protection for large-scale humanitarian deliveries in South Kivu and logistical assistance to humanitarian agencies and to Congolese authorities, and assisted humanitarian actors in addressing the problem of the return of some of the 3.4 million internally displaced persons in the DRC to their places of origin.

The Secretary-General, noting the delays in the transition process, identified a number of priorities that needed to be addressed to adhere to the time lines for the transition. Those included enacting the legislative framework for security sector reform, DDR, extension of State administration and elections and addressing problems such as Mayi-Mayi integration into the armed forces. MONUC was following up on the understandings reached at the 9 February meeting on security sector reform (see p. 120), and the Secretary-General indicated that he would propose additional recommendations on the support MONUC could provide for the integration and development of the national police. The Secretary-General called on the DRC to improve its relations with its neighbours in the search for sustainable peace in Central Africa, and urged Rwanda and Uganda to play a constructive role in that regard (see p. 126).

March incidents in Kinshasa. The EU, in a 30 March statement [S/2004/307], expressed concern at incidents that occurred during the night of 28

March in Kinshasa. The EU encouraged the Congolese leaders, the institutions of the transition and the Congolese people to remain calm and committed to the transition process.

The Security Council President, in a press statement of 31 March [SC/8047-AFR/878], following a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, said that Council members expressed concern over the serious incidents in Kinshasa on 28 March and called on all parties to ensure the transition was not jeopardized. They called on the Congolese leaders to make every effort to proceed with the full implementation of the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement on Transition and to take steps for the DDR of combatants, reform of the security sector, the full re-establishment of State authority and the successful organization of elections.

Communications (April). By a letter of 16 April [S/2004/312], Uganda announced that, as part of its efforts to promote good-neighbourly relations in the Great Lakes region, it had reopened its embassy in Kinshasa, which had been closed since 1998.

The DRC, on 21 April [S/2004/318], transmitted the schedule of its election procedure, in accordance with the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement.

Events in eastern DRC

Cross-border tensions (April)

On 26 April [S/2004/327], the DRC expressed its gratitude to MONUC for having confirmed that soldiers of the regular Rwandan army were still present in the DRC in North and South Kivu, in violation of the agreements signed between the two countries [YUN 2003, p. 133]. The DRC protested the presence of those soldiers, who it said were helping to exacerbate tension at the border and might undermine the tenuous progress towards peace in the Great Lakes region. The DRC requested the Secretary-General to send a fact-finding commission to study the latest developments in the region, and reiterated its request for an urgent meeting of the Council on the situation in the DRC.

Rwanda, in a 29 April response [S/2004/335], rejected those allegations and called on MONUC to investigate the matter more thoroughly. Rwanda stated that there were no Rwandan troops in the Bunangana area in the DRC and urged MONUC to exercise more caution before labelling Kinyarwanda-speaking Congolese as nationals of Rwanda. At the same time, Rwanda expressed concern at the failure of the international community to address the presence of the Interahamwe, the militia responsible for the 1994 genocide [YUN 1994,

p. 283], who were based in the DRC and were terrorizing people in western Rwanda and eastern DRC. In Rwanda's view, the Interahamwe militia was the principal source of insecurity and violence in the Great Lakes region. Rwanda also appealed to the Council to investigate the source of arms supplied to that militia.

On 10 May [S/2004/385], the EU expressed concern at reports of an attack led by the Democratic Liberation Forces of Rwanda (FDLR) on Rwandan territory and of an incident involving Rwandan troops inside DRC territory. The EU believed that MONUC should intervene to counter any attempt by FDLR to infiltrate Rwandan territory, with a view to establishing real stability in the DRC. It called on the DRC and Rwanda to hold direct consultations to improve relations and indicated its support for the establishment of a bilateral mechanism for monitoring the border area, backed by MONUC.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 14 May [meeting 4969], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/15 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses its serious concern regarding recent reports of an incursion into the Democratic Republic of the Congo by elements of the Rwandan army.

The Council further expresses its concern at the reports of increased military activities of the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and of incursions made by them on the territory of Rwanda.

The Council condemns in this context any impediments to the freedom of movement of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and reaffirms its full support for the efforts of the Mission to stabilize the situation in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and encourages the Mission to continue to report to it on the military situation in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in accordance with its mandate.

The Council attaches great importance to respect for the national sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, of which it condemns any violation, as well as any violation of its relevant resolutions.

The Council also attaches great importance to respect for the national sovereignty and territorial integrity of Rwanda, and condemns any incursions of armed groups into that country.

The Council demands that the Government of Rwanda take measures to prevent the presence of any of its troops on the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council calls upon the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda to investigate jointly, with the assistance of the Mission, the substance of recent reports on armed incursions across their mutual border.

The Council further calls upon both Governments to establish border security mechanisms to prevent the recurrence of such incidents.

The Council reaffirms its support for the commitments made by the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda in Pretoria on 27 November 2003, and urges both Governments to implement expeditiously the provisions contained in the communiqué issued on that date.

The Council further underlines the fact that the disarmament and the demobilization of all armed groups, including in particular the ex-Forces armées rwandaïses and Interahamwe combatants, are essential to the settlement of the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and calls upon the Governments of Rwanda and the Democratic Republic of the Congo to take all necessary measures to facilitate the swift and voluntary repatriation of Rwandan combatants from the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council encourages the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda to continue to take steps to normalize their relations. It commends, in this context, the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo for the efforts that led to the arrest of Mr. Yusufu Munyakazi, indicted, inter alia, on charges of genocide, and his subsequent transfer to the International Tribunal for Rwanda, and it calls upon all Member States to intensify efforts to arrest and transfer suspects sought by the Tribunal.

The Council urges all Governments in the region to encourage the re-establishment of confidence between neighbouring countries, in accordance with the declaration of Principles on Good-neighbourly Relations and Cooperation between the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda, adopted in New York by leaders of the region on 25 September 2003, with a view to achieving the normalization of their relations.

The Bukavu crisis

The Secretary-General reported in March [S/2004/251] that, despite the improvement of the overall situation in the Kivus, the mounting tension in Bukavu in February underscored the deep divisions within the transitional Government, particularly within the presidency, the integrated military high command and local political and military arrangements in Bukavu. Following the discovery of an arms cache at a residence of an associate of the former Rassemblement congolais pour la démocratie-Goma (RCD-G) South Kivu Governor Chiribanya, a confrontation on 3 February between elements loyal to the commander of the tenth military region, Brigadier General Prosper Nabyolwa, and those loyal to the Governor's allies resulted in at least two persons being killed. The situation was defused by MONUC and some weapons were handed over to the Mission. On 7 February, the Council of Ministers suspended Governor Chiribanya and decided not to arrest him for the possession of arms. On 22 February, under General Nabyolwa's order, the homes of two former RCD-G officers associated with the suspended Governor were raided, resulting in the arrest of an RCD-G military officer, Major Kasongo, who was subsequently transferred to Kinshasa. Major Kasongo had been convicted by the military court in absentia for his alleged role in the assassination of President Laurent-Désiré Kabila and sentenced to death. His transfer to Kinshasa heightened tensions within the leadership of the tenth military region. In reaction, RCD-G threatened to withdraw from the transitional institutions if Major Kasongo was not sent back to Bukavu. That, in turn, triggered statements from ministers close to the President and the Mayi-Mayi component of the transitional Government criticizing RCD-G and accusing it of "preparing a third rebellion" in the Kivus. Following an agreement between President Kabila and Vice-President Azarias Ruberwa, MONUC transported Major Kasongo back to Bukavu on 25 February, thus helping to stabilize the town. Meanwhile, hard-line elements fomented a campaign against MONUC, claiming that it had not acted impartially. The spread of hate propaganda against the Banyamulenge ethnic group was also observed. On 8 March, at the request of President Kabila, MONUC transported General Nabyolwa to Kinshasa for consultations.

Communications. On 1 June [S/2004/454], the DRC reported to the Council President that, since 26 May, soldiers under the command of Colonel Jules Mutebusi, deputy commander of the military region around Bukavu, had committed acts of insubordination and had crossed the border into Rwanda. Colonel Mutebutsi had dispatched reinforcements to forcibly release one of his loyal soldiers arrested at the border. On 28 May, General Laurent Mihigo Nkunda dispatched five battalions from Goma to Bukavu to reinforce Colonel Mutebutsi's troops, while troops stationed in the Ruzizi plain also began to move towards Bukavu. On 31 May, the mutinous troops were in the vicinity of the airport at Kavumu and on the outskirts of Bukavu. The DRC Foreign Minister led a high-level delegation to Rwanda to convince Rwandan President Paul Kagame not to become involved in a problem that was internal to the Congolese armed forces. Some 50 people, mostly civilians, had been killed and property looted and plundered. On 2 June, Bukavu had fallen to the mutineers, who were supported by a third column from the east of the DRC. The transitional Government said that the mutiny would not affect the continuation of the process towards democratic elections and that the law would be applied against the perpetrators. It called for an urgent meeting of the Council to, among other things, impose sanctions if it turned out that the mutineers had benefited from outside assistance.

On 3 June [S/2004/452], Rwanda, expressing concern that the situation did not spill over into that country, and about statements by DRC President Joseph Kabila implicating Rwanda in the fighting in Bukavu, reiterated that there were no Rwandan troops in the DRC. It was of the view that the problem in Bukavu was an internal Congolese matter. It requested the Congolese forces involved in the events in Bukavu to support the DRC transition process, and called on the international community and the regional leaders to revive the verification mechanisms provided for under the 1999 Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement [YUN 1999, p. 87]. On the same date [S/2004/455], the DRC transmitted a communiqué issued at the extraordinary session of the Council of Ministers, held on 2 June, in which it condemned the violation of DRC's territorial integrity and sovereignty by Rwanda and requested that the Council strongly condemn Rwanda for its aggression and take measures under the Charter to put it to an end. The DRC reiterated its request that the Council impose sanctions on Rwanda, which, it said, remained the sole obstacle to the overall peace process taking place in the Great Lakes region.

Rwanda, on 7 June [S/2004/459], said that it was concerned that the DRC Government intended to wage war on Rwanda. It reiterated that its forces were not involved in the fall of Bukavu and announced the closure of the border with the DRC on 6 June to allow those concerned to verify and arrest, or otherwise deal with members of Rwanda's armed forces allegedly present on DRC territory until the United Nations and/or the AU clarified the events in Bukavu, and the eastern DRC in general. Rwanda also requested that the two bodies set up a verification mechanism to investigate and report on the allegations against Rwanda.

The AU Peace and Security Council (Addis Ababa, 4 June) [S/2004/458] released a statement condemning the 2 June occupation of Bukavu by dissident soldiers of the new Congolese national army. It took note of the mutineers' announcement that they would withdraw from Bukavu and demanded that they transfer the administration of the province to the authorities designated by the Government. It urged the UN Security Council to increase MONUC's size and resources to effectively support the DRC peace process, and requested AU members to provide troops for that force. The AU welcomed the decision of the Chairperson of its Commission to dispatch an Envoy to the DRC and Rwanda.

The EU also issued a statement on 4 June [S/2004/467] condemning the clashes in Bukavu and calling for an immediate end to hostilities and for the rebel forces to lay down their arms and leave Bukavu. It called on the DRC, Rwanda and Uganda to cooperate to reduce the tension in eastern DRC.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (7 June)

On 7 June [meeting 4985], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/19 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council condemns with the utmost firmness the seizure of the town of Bukavu, on 2 June 2004, by dissident forces led by former Rassemblement congolais pour la démocratie-Goma commanders Major General Laurent Nkunda, Colonel Jules Mutebutsi and others. It also condemns atrocities and human rights violations which have occurred in this context. It declares its profound concern regarding reports of military actions that these forces have undertaken in other parts of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It considers that all such actions constitute a serious threat to the peace process and to the transition and demands that they cease immediately.

The Council reaffirms its commitment to and respect for the national sovereignty, political independence, territorial integrity and unity of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It expresses its solidarity with the Congolese people and its full support to the Government of National Unity and Transition. It calls for the prompt and peaceful extension of State authority throughout the Congolese territory, in particular in Bukavu.

The Council urges all parties represented in the Government of National Unity and Transition to remain fully committed to the peace process and to abstain from any action that could endanger the unity of the transitional Government.

The Council warns solemnly the States neighbouring the Democratic Republic of the Congo of the consequences of support to the armed rebel groups. It urges the Government of Rwanda, taking into account its previous relationship with the Rassemblement congolais pour la démocratie-Goma, and all other neighbouring States, to do all in their power to support the peace process and help to secure a peaceful resolution to this crisis, while at the same time refraining from any action or declaration that might impact negatively on the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It recalls the terms of its resolutions 1493(2003) of 28 July 2003 and 1533(2004) of 12 March 2004, especially those elements relating to regional security across the Great Lakes, and calls upon all Member States, in particular those in the region, to fulfil their responsibilities accordingly.

The Council welcomes the initiative of the Chairperson of the Commission of the African Union aimed at overcoming the current crisis, including in its human dimension, and at facilitating the successful conclusion of the peace process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council reiterates its full support to the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It condemns the recent killing of three of the Mission's personnel. It calls upon all Congolese parties to support the work of the Mission and demands that they refrain from any hostile action against the personnel or facilities of the United Nations.

Communications (mid-June). Reacting to the Council statement (see above), Rwanda, on 10 June [S/2004/474], said that it was disturbed that the Council's reaction was based on orchestrated disinformation. Rwanda intended to continue playing a positive role in the search for regional peace and stability and urged the Council to demand that the DRC Government desist from its bellicose statements and hatred against Rwanda. It noted that the DRC was opposed to the proposed verification mechanisms under the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement. On 22 June [S/2004/509], Rwanda said that, based on the information received from the Secretary-General's Special Representative that the DRC was finally ready to establish the verification mechanism, it had, on 18 June, submitted to MONUC a draft agreement for the establishment of a permanent joint commission between the two countries to finalize the work of the Third Party Verification Mechanism, which was an indication of its efforts to ensure transparency. Rwanda also brought to the Council's attention the fact that Colonel Mutebutsi, a DRC national, along with about 300 men, had fled to Rwanda where he was allowed to enter on humanitarian grounds but would not be permitted to engage in activities to undermine the DRC's transitional Government and that country's security.

On 10 June [S/2004/489], the DRC confirmed that its forces had peacefully regained control of Bukavu. In response to Rwanda's communications (above), it repeated its accusation of renewed aggression by Rwanda in violation of the Charter and Council resolutions, and reaffirmed that it had no hidden agenda in Rwanda. The DRC requested that the Council ensure that Rwanda lifted the border closure to facilitate the return of Congolese nationals who had fled the Bukavu fighting, of former Colonel Mutebutsi and his men who found refuge in Rwanda and armed Rwandan elements remaining in the DRC.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (22 June)

ident made statement S/PRST/2004/21 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council reiterates its grave concern at the continued violence and instability in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and at reports of threats to the peace and transition process. It condemns in the strongest terms any involvement by outside forces in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council urges all Congolese parties to remain fully committed to the peace process of the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement on the Transition in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and to respect the Government of National Unity and Transition as the sole legitimate governing authority in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It warns all parties against any attempt to seize power by force. It urges all parties to refrain from statements or actions which might inflame the situation, including by supporting armed elements.

The Council warns all parties against any attempt at engaging in belligerent actions or violations of the embargo imposed by resolution 1493(2003) of 28 July 2003, in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It invites the Secretary-General to determine further the need for a possible rapid reaction capability for the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council calls upon the Government of National Unity and Transition to begin work immediately with the International Committee in Support of the Transition and with the Mission to establish mechanisms for closer coordination, in order to expedite security sector reform, the adoption of essential legislation and electoral preparations.

The Council urges the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda to respond without further delay to the efforts undertaken by the Mission under its current mandate to establish, as soon as possible, a joint verification mechanism for their common security, including verification of cross-border movements.

The Council strongly encourages the heads of State of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Rwanda, Uganda and Burundi to work together to reduce tensions and restore confidence in the region, in accordance with the commitments made in the declaration on good-neighbourly relations of 25 September 2003 including by holding meetings at the earliest possible opportunity.

The Council urges Rwanda not to provide any practical or political support to armed groups in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular those led by Mr. Laurent Nkunda or Mr. Jules Mutebutsi. It further urges Rwanda to use its influence positively to de-escalate the current crisis and support the restoration of stability.

The Council reminds Uganda not to interfere in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including through military support for armed groups.

The Council calls upon Burundi to prevent any support from its territory to armed groups in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It encourages the Transitional Government to facilitate humanitarian assistance for Congolese refugees now in Burundi, and the international community to provide its full assistance.

The Council underlines that any attempt to disrupt the peace and transition process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including through support for armed groups, will not be tolerated.

The Council condemns the deaths of innocent civilians and human rights abuses in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and calls for such incidents to be fully investigated. Those responsible for atrocities and human rights abuses should be held to account, and the Government of National Unity and Transition should take immediate steps, with support from the international community, to reverse the current climate of impunity.

Uganda, on 23 June [S/2004/511], said that the part of the Council statement reminding Uganda not to interfere in the DRC suggested that Uganda was or might be contemplating interfering in DRC internal affairs, which was uncalled for. Uganda urged the Council President to correct the false impression. In a further communication of 28 June [S/2004/517], Uganda affirmed that it had no intention of getting involved in Congolese affairs. It rejected any attempt to reintroduce a military solution to the DRC crisis and declared that it would not provide sanctuary to Mr. Nkunda. Uganda called on the United Nations to support the democratization process that would lead to elections in the DRC.

Rwanda, in a response of the same date [S/2004/518], expressed its concerns arising from the Council statement (above). It felt that the Council was falling prey to the deliberate misrepresentation as a result of a disinformation campaign and, in turn, presented its own information to correct that situation. Rwanda reiterated its readiness to proceed with the proposed verification mechanism and urged MONUC to facilitate a meeting with DRC officials.

On 2 July [S/2004/534], Rwanda confirmed that its President, Paul Kagame, had met with DRC President Joseph Kabila on 24 June in Abuja, Nigeria, to recommit themselves to implementation of the 2002 Pretoria Agreement [YUN 2002, p. 115] on the withdrawal of Rwandan troops from DRC territory through the reactivation of the joint verification mechanism and by addressing other outstanding issues, especially the disarmament, demobilization, repatriation and rehabilitation of the ex-FAR/Interahamwe by the DRC. It also announced the reopening of the border, effective 3 July.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 29 July [meeting 5014], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1555(2004). The draft [S/2004/605] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its relevant resolutions and the statements by its President on the situation concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular resolutions 1493(2003) of 28 July 2003 and 1533(2004) of 12 March 2004,

Reaffirming its commitment to respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and all the States in the region,

Reiterating its full support to the Government of National Unity and Transition of the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Deeply concerned by the ongoing tensions and by the continuation of hostilities in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, particularly in the provinces of North and South Kivu, as well as in the Ituri district,

Reaffirming its readiness to support the peace and national reconciliation process, in particular through the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Welcoming the readiness of the Mission to take an active part in the joint verification mechanism whose creation was announced by the Presidents of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and of the Republic of Rwanda in Abuja on 25 June 2004,

Noting that the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, as contained in resolutions 1493(2003) and 1533(2004), both adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, until 1 October 2004;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Council, before 16 August 2004, on the execution by the Mission of its mandate;

3. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Further political developments

Report of Secretary-General (August). On 16 August [S/2004/650], the Secretary-General, in response to Security Council resolution 1555(2004) (above), submitted his third special report on MONUC, which covered political and military developments since his previous report in March (see p. 121). The preparations for elections, which would include a referendum on a new constitution and legislative elections, culminating in presidential elections in July 2005, posed a number of challenges, given the size of the DRC, its population of over 50 million and the absence of basic infrastructure. On 5 June, President Kabila promulgated the organic law on the establishment of the Independent Electoral Commission, which had since adopted a provisional timetable for electoral operations and had begun preparations for the registration of an estimated 28 million voters. While the law on the registration of voters was being prepared, work on the electoral law could not begin until there was agreement on the type of political system and constitutional principles to be adopted. In June, the Senate drafted the general provisions of the new constitution and started consultations on such issues as the form of the State and its name, the political regime and territorial delimitation.

State administration remained weak or absent in many parts of the country, where parallel administrations run by armed groups maintained control. However, some progress was made in extending State authority, with the installation of governors and vice-governors in the 11 provinces.

The lack of progress on military integration was a significant destabilizing factor. With the exception of one integrated brigade that was trained by a Belgian team, military regional commanders had little control over the armed elements under their command. FARDC's poor command and control structure and the lack of support and payment of salaries contributed to indiscipline among the ranks, which depended on the local population for their sustenance. In view of the continuing delays in security sector reform, a meeting was convened on 29 June, as a follow-up to the 9 February meeting (see p. 120), to review progress and identify and coordinate bilateral efforts. The meeting agreed that MONUC would revive efforts to establish a consortium of Member States to assist the Congolese in the development of an overall plan for military reform. MONUC established a steering committee of potential donors, the first meeting of which was held on 13 July. The World Bank, in May, approved a $100 million grant to support the national DDR programme, the operational plans of which were being finalized. Pending its implementation, MONUC and UNDP assisted the Government in disarming some 535 Mayi-Mayi soldiers in eastern DRC.

Some progress was made in integrating the Congolese police forces, comprising some 70,000 personnel. The police high command was appointed, followed by the appointment in July of provincial police inspectors. MONUC and the Government drew up plans to train and deploy 6,000 police officers during 2004-2005. France trained and equipped a 500-member rapid intervention police unit.

The situation in Ituri remained tense, as rifts between moderates and hardliners emerged within the armed groups. In an effort to extend State authority, President Kabila consulted the leaders of armed groups from 10 to 14 May. The participants signed an acte d'engagement, committing themselves to the transition process and participation in the pilot disarmament and reinser-tion programme. The new District Commissioner was appointed in June. The judicial tribunal in Bunia began to hear criminal cases and the local police began assuming their law enforcement responsibility. The MONUC Ituri brigade had so far deployed to eight locations.

Serious allegations of sexual exploitation and misconduct by MONUC civilian and military personnel in Bunia were uncovered by the Mission during May, including sexual exploitation of girls and women at the camp for internally displaced persons and other locations. Those allegations were under investigation by the UN Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS).

In addition to the crisis in Bukavu (see p. 124), on 11 June, about 40 presidential guards attempted a coup d'état, without success. On 14 July, eight RCD-Goma members of the National Assembly suspended their membership of the Assembly, but were condemned by the RCD-Goma leadership. FARDC increased its presence in eastern DRC by deploying some 15,000 troops. General Nkunda's fate remained unresolved as he and his troops remained located between Goma and Bukavu on Lake Kivu, creating a tense situation.

Bilateral relations suffered setbacks during the reporting period. In April, Rwanda claimed that elements of the ex-FAR/Interahamwe, also referred to as FDLR, attacked its territory from the DRC, while the latter claimed that Rwandans had invaded its territory (see p. 124). Steps were taken to strengthen bilateral contacts with Uganda, despite the continued presence of Ugandan armed groups in north-eastern DRC. The establishment in December 2003 of the DRC/Uganda Joint Bilateral Security Intelligence Commission with MONUC assistance had contributed to the strengthening of bilateral relations. Following a meeting in May, a joint MONUC/DRC/Uganda border verification mechanism was established.

The Secretary-General noted that, overall, the prevailing mistrust and lack of political determination continued to impede the transitional Government from moving forward on its agreed agenda. Some influential elements among the ex-belligerents were working against the transition, and the security situation remained unstable, as evidenced by the May/June activity in Bukavu and Kinshasa. A clear political strategy was therefore necessary, requiring a step-by-step approach. He urged the Government to engage in such a process, following the steps outlined in the report, and called on the DRC, Rwanda and Uganda to normalize their bilateral relations as a matter of priority.

The Secretary-General said that MONUC was authorized to use all necessary means to fulfil its mandate in the Ituri district and in North and South Kivu. There was a wide gap between the expectations that the Mission would enforce peace and the Mission's capacity to fulfil them. In the Secretary-General's view, MONUC's key role was to use its good offices to build confidence among the leaders of the transition and to strengthen the Government. Given the size of the DRC, MONUC could not be deployed everywhere, nor in sufficient strength. Hence strategic areas of operation had to be identified. If the Council were to mandate MONUC to assist in the creation of stability in areas other than Ituri, the conditions under which the Mission would use force to deter dissident elements from using violence to derail the political process should be clearly defined.

The Secretary-General recommended that the transitional Government should ensure that support to ex-FAR/Interahamwe was terminated; MONUC should be augmented and fully deployed in the Kivus, participate in DDR and support FARDC; MONUC should prevent reprisal attacks by foreign elements against Congolese civilians; and support should be provided to the Joint Verification Mechanism. He cautioned, however, that MONUC could not assume responsibility for the maintenance of law and order in the DRC. Its primary role in deterring armed challenges was to use its political good offices to mediate disputes.

The military concept of MONUC's operations would allow it to act as a deterrent in unstable areas, on the one hand, and as a rapid reaction force, on the other. It would have to maintain a credible and secure presence in key areas of potential volatility to undertake surge operations in crisis areas, in addition to its regular tasks, which would require flexible and mobile reserve capability of an additional 13,100 military personnel.

The Secretary-General called on the Security Council to endorse his transitional agenda to strengthen the political process and on the transitional Government to implement it. The Governments of the DRC, Rwanda and Uganda needed to ensure that the flow of arms across their borders ended; to settle the question of the foreign armed groups, in particular the ex-FAR/Interahamwe; and to legitimize the exploitation of natural resources. Those goals could be achieved through the Joint Verification Mechanism or by establishing normal bilateral relations, with the exchange of ambassadors. He recommended that the Council increase MONUC's military strength from 10,800 all ranks to 23,900 and extend the mandate of its civilian police component and increase its strength from the current 140 to 507 personnel. The implementation of the Mission's revised military tasks would require the addition of formed and enabling units, as well as improving its information-gathering and analysis capacity.

Letter and statement of Secretary-General. On 3 September [S/2004/715], the Secretary-General, in a letter to the Council President, noted that Council members had recognized the need to enhance the UN involvement in the DRC's peace process. However, the possibility of a further deterioration in the situation could not be ruled out, given the speed with which events were unfolding. Pending the Council's decision on the recommendations contained in his report, he proposed that the Council deploy emergency reinforcements to MONUC, consisting of two additional infantry battalions and four attack helicopters, to address immediate security concerns, without prejudice to the long-term requirement of reinforcing MONUC.

The Secretary-General, in a statement to the press issued on 19 November [SG/SM/9605- AFR/1069-PKO/115], expressed outrage at the findings of a UN investigation into allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse in MONUC, which showed clear evidence that acts of gross misconduct had taken place. The investigation should be accelerated and those involved held accountable. Prince Zeid Ra'ad Al-Hussein (Jordan) had agreed to be his adviser on the issue. The Secretary-General declared that he was considering additional measures and had instructed the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) urgently to send a special investigation team to the DRC to examine the outstanding cases.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 1 October [meeting 5048], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1565(2004). The draft [S/2004/774] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Reaffirming its commitment to respect the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and all the States of the region,

Reaffirming its support for the process of the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement on the Transition in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, signed in Pretoria on 17 December 2002, welcoming the efforts made to date for its implementation by the Government of National Unity and Transition, and calling upon all the Congolese parties to honour their commitments in this regard, in particular so that free, fair and peaceful elections can take place within the agreed time frame,

Deeply concerned by the continuation of hostilities in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, particularly in the provinces of North and South Kivu and in the Ituri district, and by the grave violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law that accompany them,

Recalling that all the parties bear responsibility for ensuring security with respect to the civilian populations, and recalling in particular, in this regard, its resolutions 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000 on women and peace and security, 1379(2001) of 20 November 2001, 1460(2003) of 30 January 2003 and 1539(2004) of 22 April 2004 on children in armed conflict, and 1265 (1999) of 17 September 1999 and 1296(2000) of 19 April 2000 on the protection of civilians in armed conflict,

(a) To contribute to arrangements made for the security of the institutions and the protection of officials of the transition in Kinshasa until the integrated police unit in Kinshasa is ready to take on this responsibility, and to assist the Congolese authorities in the maintenance of order in other strategic areas, as recommended in paragraph 103 (c) of the third special report of the Secretary-General;

6. Authorizes the Mission to use all necessary means, within its capacity and in the areas where its armed units are deployed, to carry out the tasks listed in paragraphs 4 (a) to (g) above, and in paragraphs 5 (a) to (c), (e) and (f) above;

7. Decides that the Mission will also have the mandate, within its capacity and without prejudice to carrying out tasks stipulated in paragraphs 4 and 5 above, to provide advice and assistance to the Transitional Government and authorities, in accordance with the commitments of the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement, including by supporting the three joint commissions outlined in paragraph 62 of the third special report of the Secretary-General, in order to contribute to their efforts, with a view to take forward:

(a) Essential legislation, including the future constitution;

(b) Security sector reform, including the integration of national defence and internal security forces together with disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and, in particular, the training and monitoring of the police, while ensuring that they are democratic and fully respect human rights and fundamental freedoms;

(c) The electoral process;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council, within one month of the adoption of the present resolution, on reforms necessary to improve the structures of command and control and the management of military information within the Mission, and to rationalize the civilian and police components of the Mission;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General, through his Special Representative for the Democratic Republic of the Congo, to coordinate all the activities of the United Nations system in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

10. Further requests the Secretary-General to ensure that his Special Representatives for the Democratic Republic of the Congo and for Burundi coordinate the activities of the Mission and the Operation, in particular:

(a) By sharing military information at their disposal, especially concerning cross-border movements of armed elements and arms trafficking;

(b) By pooling their logistic and administrative resources, to an extent that does not prejudice the ability of the missions to carry out their respective mandates, in order to ensure their maximum efficiency and cost-effectiveness;

(c) By coordinating, as appropriate, the implementation of the national programmes for disarmament and demobilization and repatriation, reintegration and resettlement;

11. Stresses the need for the Government of National Unity and Transition to carry out the process provided for by the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement, and in particular to implement the recommendations listed in paragraph 54 of the third special report of the Secretary-General, including by producing, with the support of the Mission, precise plans and time lines in each of the fields identified;

12. Calls upon the Government of National Unity and Transition to cooperate closely with the Mission in establishing three joint commissions on essential legislation, security sector reform and elections, and in implementing security sector reform, in accordance with paragraph 7 above;

13. Urges the Government of National Unity and Transition to continue, with determination and rapidity, the integration of the security forces, in particular the integration of the armed forces, and underlines the importance of regular meetings of the Supreme Defence Council and of its cooperation with the international partners of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, especially with the Mission, as positive signals of the commitment of the Government of National Unity and Transition in this regard;

14. Also urges the Government of National Unity and Transition to develop without further delay a plan for the disarmament of foreign combatants, and to entrust its implementation to the armed forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, with the support of the Mission;

15. Urges the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda to each ensure that its territory is not used to infringe the sovereignty of the others, to realize without further delay the complete normalization of their bilateral relations, and to cooperate actively in assuring security along their common borders, in particular by implementing agreements they have signed for the establishment of joint verification mechanisms with the active participation of the Mission, and exhorts them to comply in this regard with the recommendations listed in paragraph 55 of the third special report of the Secretary-General;

16. Urges, in particular, the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda to work together and with the Mission and the African Union, with a view to removing the threat posed by foreign armed groups, as they have agreed to in the Peace Agreement signed in Pretoria on 30 July 2002 and the Declaration signed in Pretoria on 27 November 2003, and in accordance with the terms of reference for the Joint Verification Mechanism signed in New York on 22 September 2004;

17. Calls upon the Government of National Unity and Transition and Congolese officials at all levels to take all necessary steps, while respecting freedom of expression and of the press, to prevent the use of the media to incite hatred or tensions among communities;

18. Calls upon Member States, the international organizations concerned and the community of donors to provide their full support to the transitional process, the extension of State authority throughout the territory and long-term social and economic development in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and encourages them in this regard to respond positively to the recommendations listed in paragraph 57 of the third special report of the Secretary-General;

19. Strongly condemns violence and other violations of international humanitarian law and human rights, in particular those perpetrated against civilians, in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and demands that all parties and Governments concerned in the region, including the Government of National Unity and Transition, take without delay all necessary steps to bring to justice those responsible for these violations and to ensure respect for human rights and international humanitarian law, as appropriate with relevant international assistance, as well as to guarantee the security and well-being of the civilian population;

20. Demands that all parties cooperate fully with the operations of the Mission and that they ensure the safety of as well as unhindered and immediate access for United Nations and associated personnel in carrying out their mandate, throughout the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, demands in particular that all parties provide full access to Mission military observers, including in all ports, airports, airfields, military bases and border crossings, and requests the Secretary-General to report without delay any failure to comply with these demands;

21. Recalls its resolution 1502(2003) of 26 August 2003, reaffirms the obligation of all parties to comply fully with the rules and principles of international humanitarian law applicable to them related to the protection of humanitarian and United Nations personnel, and urges all those concerned to allow immediate, full and unimpeded access by humanitarian personnel to all people in need of assistance, as set forth in applicable international humanitarian law;

22. Also recalls the link between the illicit exploitation and trade of natural resources in certain regions and the fuelling of armed conflicts, and, in line with its resolutions 1493(2003), 1533(2004) and 1552(2004) of 27 July 2004, condemns categorically the illegal exploitation of the natural resources and other sources of wealth of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, urges all States, especially those in the region including the Democratic Republic of the Congo itself, to take appropriate steps in order to end these illegal activities, including if necessary through judicial means, and to report to the Council as appropriate, and exhorts the international financial institutions to assist the Government of National Unity and Transition in establishing efficient and transparent control of the exploitation of natural resources;

23. Welcomes the convening of the International Conference on Peace, Security, Democracy and Development in the Great Lakes Region, with inclusive participation by all the Governments concerned, under the aegis of the African Union and the United Nations, with a view to strengthening stability in the region and working out conditions that will enable each State to enjoy the right to live in peace;

25. Expresses grave concern at the allegations of sexual exploitation and misconduct by civilian and military personnel of the Mission, requests the Secretary-General to continue to fully investigate these allegations, to take the appropriate action in accordance with the Secretary-General's bulletin on special measures for protection from sexual exploitation and sexual abuse and to keep the Council informed, further encourages the Mission to conduct training for personnel targeted to ensure full compliance with its code of conduct regarding sexual misconduct, and urges troop-contributing countries to take appropriate disciplinary and other action to ensure full accountability in cases of such misconduct involving their personnel;

26. Requests the Secretary-General to keep it informed regularly of developments in the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and to submit to the Council before 28 February 2005 a report on the execution of the Mission's mandate, including an evaluation of the structure and strength of its military, civilian and police components, with a view to their adjustment according to the progress made on the ground and the tasks remaining to be accomplished;

27. Reiterates its strong support for the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the Mission, and for the efforts they continue to make to assist the parties in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and in the region to advance the peace process;

28. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Following the adoption of resolution 1565 (2004) (above), the Secretary-General said that the Council's action, while improving the Mission's operational capacities, fell well below the requested additional forces. Therefore, he had instructed DPKO to review the tasks that could be performed by MONUC, with a view to revising the scope of its military and civilian police concepts of operation. He hoped that the Council would favourably revisit MONUC's requirements in the future.

Rwanda, in a 4 October letter [S/2004/788], expressed disappointment that the Council had not mandated MONUC to forcefully disarm the ex-FAR/Interahamwe.

Security Council mission. The Security Council mission to Central Africa (21-25 November) (see p. 117) had as its key objective, during its visit to the DRC, to observe the achievements made in the peace and transition process since its last visit to the country in June 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 127]. It discussed the political transition process, the continuing insecurity and the need for good-neighbourly relations in eastern DRC, the situation in Bukavu and the roles of MONUC and the international community.

In its report [S/2004/934], the mission noted that the main transitional institutions had been established and were operational; an integrated high command had been set up for the armed forces and police service; the Governors and Vice-Governors of the provinces had been appointed; and some key laws, such as the nationality law, had been adopted. The mission had a strong impression of the Congolese people's desire to hold elections and concluded that the parties should reach an understanding on the post-transitional period to ensure long-term stability. The mission, stressing the need to respect the deadline for completing the electoral process by the target date of June 2005, said that much work remained to be done in that regard, in particular the integration of the armed forces, the adoption of the constitution and election laws. President Kabila had reaffirmed his determination to hold elections within the agreed time frame.

The mission noted the restructuring challenges that MONUC was facing and underlined the importance of early, detailed planning for its role in supporting the election process.

The Security Council discussed the report on 8 December [meeting 5096].

Further cross-border tension (November)

The DRC, on 30 November [S/2004/935], informed the Council President that Rwandan regular troops had crossed the Congolese border to attack the town of Mutongo in North Kivu province and requested that the Council meet to condemn the aggression. In a 1 December statement [S/2004/949] of its Foreign Minister, the DRC accused Rwanda of using the fight against the ex-FAR/Interahamwe as an excuse to return to the DRC. The DRC was aware that it had to resolve the Interahamwe issue and was committed to doing so, but questioned Rwanda's real objective in trying to disarm the ex-FAR/Interahamwe. It rejected Rwandan President Kagame's proposals for neutralizing the ex-FAR/Interahamwe but was willing to accept assistance from African States and their partners, including MONUC, to settle, by force if necessary, the Interahamwe and ex-FAR issue.

On 2 December [SG/SM/9631-AFR/1076], the Secretary-General, in a statement attributable to his Spokesman, said that he was disturbed by the increasing tension between the DRC and Rwanda, particularly by indications from Rwanda of military operations on DRC territory against ex-FAR/Interahamwe elements, which Rwanda maintained was a threat to its security. He called on Rwanda to refrain from military action in the DRC, which would disrupt the transition process, and on the DRC to intensify efforts to disarm and repatriate elements still in the DRC. He added that MONUC was prepared to activate the Joint Verification Mechanism for disarming and repatriating those groups.

Rwanda, in a 6 December communiqué [S/2004/951], expressed surprise that the DRC President had called on the Congolese people to mobilize to fight a Rwandan invasion on DRC territory, and reiterated that there were no Rwandan troops currently on DRC territory. Rwanda added that ex-FAR/Interahamwe elements were present and active in massive numbers there, and intended to launch an attack against Rwanda. Rwanda had fulfilled its obligations under all agreements it had signed with the DRC, while the DRC had not done so; specifically, it had not disarmed and demobilized those elements on its territory.

The AU Peace and Security Council, in a 7 December decision [S/2004/966], expressed concern about the continued presence of ex-FAR/Interahamwe in the DRC and its effect on the stability of the region. It called for a DRC-Rwanda summit, with the AU, the United Nations and other stakeholders, to defuse the tension and consider ways to address the disarmament and demobilization of the ex-FAR/Interahamwe. The AU Council appealed to the United Nations to strengthen MONUC so that it could participate in the disarmament and demobilization and called for the speedy establishment of the Joint Verification Mechanism.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 7 December [meeting 5095], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/45 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses its very deep concern at multiple reports of military operations by the Rwandan army in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and at threats by the Government of Rwanda in this regard. It recalls its adherence to the respect for the sovereignty of all States, and underlines the fact that the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity of any State is contrary to the purposes and principles stated in the Charter of the United Nations.

The Council strongly condemns any and all such military action, recalling that they are contrary to its resolutions, and in particular to resolution 1565 (2004), by which it urged the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda to each ensure that the territory of its country was not used to infringe the sovereignty of the others.

The Council demands that the Government of Rwanda withdraw without delay any forces it may have in the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and calls upon all States in the region to refrain from any action or statement that contravenes international law, undermines the already fragile stability in the region or the transitional process supported by the international community.

The Council notes that these reported events and threats are contrary to all peace agreements, declarations and protocols signed by regional States since the 1998 commencement of hostilities in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It underlines the fact that these events and threats, arising after the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region, are contrary to the commitments taken by the regional Heads of State, in the Declaration adopted in Dar es Salaam on 20 November 2004, to settle their disputes in a peaceful manner, and are all the more unacceptable.

The Council calls upon all Governments in the region, to commit themselves to and make full use of multilateral mechanisms they have agreed to establish, including the Joint Verification Mechanism and the Tripartite Commission, for the peaceful resolution of their disputes. It further calls upon the Government of Rwanda, as well as all Governments in the region, to devote their resources to the promotion of peace, stability, democracy and development.

The Council urges all Member States fully to comply with their obligations under resolution 1493 (2003), which imposed an arms embargo in the district of Ituri and the provinces of North and South Kivu.

The Council recognizes that continued tension in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo undermines peace and security in the region, and in particular that the presence of ex-Forces armées rwandaises and Interahamwe elements in the eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo is a source of instability, a threat to civilian populations and an impediment to good neighbourly relations between the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda. It considers the armed presence and activities of ex-Forces armées rwandaises and Interahamwe elements in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to be unacceptable and demands that they disarm and disband without delay, with a view to their repatriation or resettlement.

In this regard, the Council welcomes steps taken to set up the plan established by the Congolese authorities, with the support of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, aimed at accelerating the disarmament and demobilization of foreign armed groups. It calls upon the Governments of Rwanda and the Democratic Republic of the Congo to explore ways to facilitate the voluntary repatriation of these combatants, based on the existing mechanisms. It urges the Congolese authorities to do everything possible to effectively disarm these armed groups as a matter of urgency, in the interest of stability in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the security of Rwanda and Burundi, and the establishment of peace and stability in the region.

The Council further calls upon, in this regard, the Congolese authorities to accelerate the integration of the armed forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and encourages the donor community to provide coordinated financial and technical assistance to this important task.

The Council condemns any attempt aimed at undermining the unity and territorial integrity of the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council expresses its intention to consider further actions, including measures that may be taken against those individuals who, by their actions or statements, compromise the peace and transition process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The DRC, on 20 December [S/2004/984], said that, in the light of Rwanda's refusal to withdraw its troops in compliance with statement S/PRST/2004/45 (above), it was calling on the Council to take steps against Rwanda, including the imposition of a total embargo on arms sales to Rwanda (see p. 160), the suspension of bilateral and multilateral aid, the freezing of the assets and prohibition of the movement of Rwandan authorities.

Situation at end of year

Progress continued to be made in the transition to a new Government, but the security situation in eastern DRC remained volatile, the Secretary-General reported in December [S/2004/1034]. The May/June Bukavu crisis (see p. 124) and the Gatumba massacre in Burundi in August (see p. 150) had polarized the government components, leading RCD-G to temporarily suspend its participation in the transitional Government on 23 August. Subsequently, the Government prepared a new road map to ensure implementation of the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement; the road map was adopted by the Council of Ministers and was being reviewed monthly. However, progress remained slow. The Senate prepared a first draft of the constitution, which provided for a unitary State with considerable powers devolved to the provinces, although key issues, such as the electoral system and the balance of power between the President and the Prime Minister, remained to be clarified. The laws on nationality and the armed forces were promulgated on 12 November, while the amnesty, decentralization and electoral laws were under discussion in the Parliament. The voter registration law was adopted but had not been promulgated.

Among developments in regional relations, the DRC and Rwanda signed, on 22 September, the terms of reference for the Joint Verification Mechanism to address cross-border issues, including the remaining ex-FAR/Interahamwe in the DRC. The Mechanism was composed of the Joint Verification Commission, a policy-making and review body, and Joint Verification Teams comprising technical experts and representatives of MONUC and the AU. The first meeting of the Commission was held in Kigali, Rwanda, on 5 October. On 29 November, the parties endorsed the concept of operations for the Teams. Separately, on 26 October, the DRC, Rwanda and Uganda signed an agreement on regional security, with a view to strengthening trilateral relations and preventing the use of their territories by foreign combatants. The agreement also committed the parties to ensuring the DDR of foreign armed groups within 12 months and established a Tripartite Joint Commission. On 19 and 20 November, the leaders of 11 African States participated in the International Conference on Peace, Security, Democracy and Development in the Great Lakes Region, which agreed on guiding principles in the areas of peace and security and good governance, among others (see p. 116).

In accordance with resolution 1565(2004), by which the Security Council mandated the establishment of joint commissions with a view to assisting the transitional Government in security sector reform, essential legislation and elections, the National Assembly and Senate agreed on the establishment of the Joint Commission on Essential Legislation, to be chaired by MONUC, which convened on 7 November a meeting of donors to discuss its terms of reference. The Commission would advise on the elaboration and implementation of key legislation, including the constitution and laws on nationality, voter registration, referendums, decentralization and elections. The Joint Commission on Security Sector Reform would coordinate and supplement assistance in support of integration and reform of the armed forces, provide technical advice and coordinate donor assistance for security sector reform.

The security situation in Ituri, which had improved earlier in the year, deteriorated sharply. In Katanga and Kasai, armed men from the Revolutionary Movement for the Liberation of Katanga captured the town of Kilwa on 13 and 14 October, resulting in the displacement of its population. FARDC regained control of the town on 15 October. In the Kivus, tensions increased between political and military factions, while security along the border with Rwanda deteriorated, with accusations and counter-accusations of border violations. On 29 November, the transitional Government officially complained to the Joint Verification Mechanism about the presence of thousands of Rwandan troops in the Kivus since January. However, security concerns forced the Verification Team to cancel its investigation. On 19 December, Rwanda's Foreign Minister stated that his Government was withdrawing its "threat" to send troops into the DRC, noting that it would trust the international community to address the matter of the remaining ex-FAR/Interahamwe on Congolese territory.

In Ituri, the Government, with MONUC and UNDP assistance, began a disarmament and reintegration programme for an estimated 15,000 militia members. However, by mid-December, only 1,506 former combatants had registered for the programme. Overall, by the end of the year, more than 11,300 foreign combatants and their dependants had been repatriated from the DRC to Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda. Three FARDC brigades were deployed to South Kivu to conduct operations to disarm and repatriate FDLR.

MONUC and the UN Secretariat continued to follow up on allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse by MONUC personnel. Between June and September, an OIOS investigation into sexual misconduct in Bunia revealed that 8 of 72 allegations could be corroborated. All of the cases were being followed up to ensure that appropriate disciplinary action was taken, and a number of staff were suspended, pending completion of the investigations. The Secretary-General emphasized zero tolerance towards sexual exploitation and abuse and said that he would develop a comprehensive strategy to prevent and respond to such activities in all peacekeeping operations.

The Secretary-General concluded that the transitional process was steadily, albeit slowly, progressing towards elections, despite remaining challenges. He urged the parties to turn their attention to real power-sharing and overcoming the mistrust that continued to impede the establishment of a unified country. The Congolese parties needed to assure the population that elections would be conducted fairly and free from political violence. Although there had been some visible progress with regard to the extension of State authority, transparent and legitimate local governance had yet to take root in many areas because of the lack of infrastructure, the irregular payment of salaries of civil servants and the illegal exploitation of natural resources. The difficulties encountered in the reform of the security sector remained daunting, while relations with neighbouring States remained tense. The Secretary-General urged the DRC and Rwanda to cooperate to restore peace in eastern DRC, and called on Uganda to assist the DRC in extending its authority throughout Ituri.

MONUC financing

The General Assembly considered several reports by the Secretary-General concerning the financing of MONUC.

A performance report on the MONUC budget, covering 1 July 2002 to 30 June 2003 [A/58/684], stated that total expenditure amounted to $481.7 million, out of a total apportionment of $584.7 million. The difference of $102.9 million, a variance of 17.6 per cent, was primarily attributable to the delayed deployment of military and civilian personnel. The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly decide on the treatment of the unencumbered balance and on the treatment of other income, amounting to $31,456,000, mostly derived from savings on or cancellation of prior-period obligations ($22,581,000) and from interest income ($6,547,000).

The MONUC budget for 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005 [A/58/701] totalled $721.4 million, inclusive of voluntary contributions in kind valued at $3.1 million. It provided for the deployment of 10,040 military contingent personnel, 760 military observers, 182 civilian police, 972 international staff, 1,354 national staff and 490 United Nations Volunteers.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in its April report [A/58/759/Add.10], recommended that the unencumbered balance for the earlier period, as well as other adjustments, be credited to Member States. In regard to the proposed 2004/05 budget, it recommended that the total requirement be reduced by $9.2 million and that the Assembly appropriate $709.1 million gross ($691.6 million net) for the maintenance of MONUC for the 12 months.

The Secretary-General, in an April note [A/58/772], reported that the appropriation for 1 July 2003 to 30 June 2004 for MONUC was projected to be fully utilized, primarily due to the full deployment of military contingents and resulting requirement for the reimbursement of troop-contributing Governments. The difference between the projected expenditures and the amount appropriated by the Assembly was $59 million gross ($57.1 million net). Therefore, he requested that the Assembly assess and apportion that amount among Member States. ACABQ, in a May report [A/58/794], endorsed that request.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 June [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/58/583/Add.1], adopted resolution 58/259 B without vote [agenda item 138].

Financing of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo

The General Assembly,

23. Decides to apportion among Member States the amount of 59,038,300 dollars already appropriated for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July 2003 to 30 June 2004 under the terms of General Assembly resolution 58/259 A, in accordance with the levels set out in Assembly resolution 55/235, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 55/236 and 57/290 A and updated in its resolution 58/256, taking into account the scale of assessments for 2003, as set out in its resolutions 55/5 B and 57/4 B, and the scale of assessments for 2004, as set out in its resolution 58/1 B;

24. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 23 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated additional staff assessment income of 1,936,764 dollars approved for the Mission;

25. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

26. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Mission;

27. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

28. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-ninth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo".

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the financing of MONUC would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session (decision 59/552).

Arms embargo

In March, the Security Council, having considered the fourteenth report of the Secretary-General on MONUC [YUN 2003, p. 134], established a committee to review and monitor the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1493(2003) [ibid., p. 130] against armed groups operating in the DRC (see below).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 12 March [meeting 4926], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1533(2004).

The draft [S/2004/192] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Reiterating its concern regarding the presence of armed groups and militias in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, particularly in North and South Kivu and in Ituri, which perpetuates a climate of insecurity in the whole region,

Condemning the continuing illicit flow of weapons into the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and declaring its determination to monitor closely compliance with the arms embargo imposed by its resolution 1493(2003) of 28 July 2003,

Underscoring the right of the Congolese people to control their own natural resources, recalling in this regard the statement made by its President on 19 November 2003, which emphasizes the connection, in the context of the continuing conflict, between the illegal exploitation of natural resources and trafficking in raw materials and arms, as highlighted in the final report of the Panel of Experts on the Illegal Exploitation of Natural Resources and Other Forms of Wealth of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and stressing for this purpose the need for all Member States to work to achieve an end to the illegal exploitation of natural resources,

Encouraging all States signatories to the Nairobi Declaration on the Problem of the Proliferation of Illicit Small Arms and Light Weapons in the Great Lakes Region and the Horn of Africa of 15 March 2000 to implement quickly the measures required by the Coordinated Agenda for Action, as an important means of support of the measures imposed by paragraph 20 of resolution 1493(2003),

Taking note of the fourteenth report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, of 17 November 2003, and of the recommendations contained therein,

Noting that the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Reaffirms the demand, laid down in paragraph 20 of resolution 1493(2003), that all States take the necessary measures to prevent the supply of arms and any related materiel or assistance to armed groups operating in North and South Kivu and in Ituri, and to groups not party to the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement on the Transition in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, signed at Pretoria on 17 December 2002;

2. Welcomes the recommendations contained in paragraph 72 of the fourteenth report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

3. Requests the Mission to continue to use all means, within its capabilities, to carry out the tasks outlined in paragraph 19 of resolution 1493(2003), and in particular to inspect, without notice as it deems it necessary, the cargo of aircraft and of any transport vehicle using the ports, airports, airfields, military bases and border crossings in North and South Kivu and in Ituri;

4. Authorizes the Mission to seize or collect, as appropriate, the arms and any related materiel whose presence in the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo violates the measures imposed by paragraph 20 of resolution 1493(2003), and to dispose of such arms and related materiel as appropriate;

5. Reiterates its demand that all parties provide immediate, unconditional and unhindered access to Mission personnel, in accordance with paragraphs 15 and 19 of resolution 1493(2003), to enable them to carry out the tasks outlined in paragraphs 3 and 4 above;

6. Reiterates its condemnation of the continuing illegal exploitation of natural resources in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, especially in the eastern part of the country, which contributes to the perpetuation of the conflict, and reaffirms the importance of bringing to an end these illegal activities, including by applying the necessary pressure on the armed groups, traffickers and all other actors involved;

7. Urges all States, and especially those in the region, to take the appropriate steps to end these illegal activities, including through judicial means where possible, and, if necessary, to report to the Council;

8. Decides to establish, in accordance with rule 28 of its provisional rules of procedure, a Committee of the Security Council consisting of all members of the Council ("the Committee"), to undertake the following tasks:

(a) To seek from all States, and particularly those in the region, information regarding the actions taken by them to implement effectively the measures imposed by paragraph 20 of resolution 1493(2003) and to comply with paragraphs 18 and 24 of the same resolution, and thereafter to request from them whatever further information it may consider useful, including by providing States with an opportunity, at the request of the Committee, to send representatives to meet with the Committee for more in-depth discussion of relevant issues;

(b) To examine, and to take appropriate action on, information concerning alleged violations of the measures imposed by paragraph 20 of resolution 1493(2003) and information on alleged arms flows highlighted in the reports of the Panel of Experts on the Illegal Exploitation of Natural Resources and Other Forms of Wealth of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, identifying, where possible, individuals and legal entities reported to be engaged in such violations, as well as aircraft or other vehicles used;

(c) To present regular reports to the Council on its work, with its observations and recommendations, in particular on the ways to strengthen the effectiveness of the measures imposed by paragraph 20 of resolution 1493(2003);

(d) To consider the lists referred to in paragraph 10 (g) below with a view to submitting recommendations to the Council for possible future measures to be taken in this regard;

(e) To receive notifications in advance from States made under paragraph 21 of resolution 1493(2003) and to decide, if need be, upon any action to be taken;

9. Requests all States, in particular those in the region, to report to the Committee, within sixty days of the date of adoption of the present resolution, on the actions that they have taken to implement the measures imposed by paragraph 20 of resolution 1493(2003), and authorizes the Committee thereafter to request from Member States whatever further information it may consider necessary;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Committee, to establish, within thirty days of the date of adoption of the present resolution, and for a period expiring on 28 July 2004, a group of experts consisting of no more than four members ("the Group of Experts"), having the necessary skills to perform the following mandate:

(a) To examine and analyse information gathered by the Mission in the context of its monitoring mandate;

(b) To gather and analyse all relevant information in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, countries of the region and, as necessary, in other countries, in co-operation with the Governments of those countries, on flows of arms and related materiel, as well as networks operating in violation of the measures imposed by paragraph 20 of resolution 1493(2003);

(c) To consider and recommend, where appropriate, ways of improving the capabilities of interested States, in particular those of the region, to ensure that the measures imposed by paragraph 20 of resolution 1493(2003) are effectively implemented;

(d) To report to the Council in writing before 15 July 2004, through the Committee, on the implementation of the measures imposed by paragraph 20 of resolution 1493(2003), with recommendations in this regard;

(e) To keep the Committee frequently updated on its activities;

(f) To exchange with the Mission, as appropriate, information that might be of use in the fulfilment of its monitoring mandate as described in paragraphs 3 and 4 above;

(g) To provide the Committee, in its reports, with a list, with supporting evidence, of those found to have violated the measures imposed by paragraph 20 of resolution 1493(2003), and those found to have supported them in such activities, for possible future measures by the Council;

11. Requests the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Democratic Republic of the Congo to communicate, as appropriate, to the Security Council, through the Committee, information gathered by the Mission and, when possible, reviewed by the Group of Experts concerning supply of arms and related materiel to armed groups and militias and any possible presence of foreign military in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

12. Urges all States, relevant United Nations bodies and, as appropriate, other organizations and interested parties, to cooperate fully with the Committee and with the Group of Experts and the Mission, in particular by supplying any information at their disposal on possible violations of the measures imposed by paragraph 20 of resolution 1493(2003);

13. Calls upon the international community, in particular the specialized international organizations concerned, to provide financial and technical assistance to the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo with a view to helping it to exercise effective control over its borders and its airspace;

14. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Council members elected the Chairman and vice-chairmen of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1533 (2004), as announced by the Council President on 8 April [S/2004/280].

In May and June, Honduras [S/AC.43/2004/17], Jordan [S/AC.43/2004/25], Kuwait [S/AC.43/2004/24], Norway [S/AC.43/2004/18], South Africa [S/AC.43/2004/9], Sweden [S/AC.43/2004/7] and the Syrian Arab Republic [S/AC.43/2004/19] informed the Committee of measures they had taken to comply with the requirements contained in paragraphs 18 and 24 of resolution 1533(2004).

Appointment of Group of Experts. The Secretary-General, on 21 April [S/2004/317] and 24 August [S/2004/677], informed the Council of the names of the four experts he had appointed to serve on the Group of Experts, in accordance with paragraph 10 of resolution 1533(2004) (above). On 21 September [S/2004/750], he informed the Council of the replacement of one of those members who was unable to assume his functions.

Report of Group of Experts. The Group of Experts on the DRC released its report on 15 July [S/2004/551]. The report described the political and military situation leading to the imposition and monitoring of the arms embargo established by resolution 1493(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 130], examined the elements that contributed to border porosity and arms trafficking, issues related to air transport and trafficking, aiding and abetting, the involvement of foreign forces and military alliances with uncontrolled armed groups.

The group noted that the transitional Government exerted little or no authority over extended parts of DRC's eastern border, whose porosity, permeability and permissibility constituted the most critical factor undermining its ability and that of the international community to monitor the flow of weapons and other illicit commodities into the country. Moreover, local, regional and international capacities, controls and surveillance were weak or totally inadequate. There was therefore ample opportunity to traffic weapons into the DRC overland, facilitated by the informal trading across the border, as well as by way of inter-State lakes and by aircraft using the more than 450 known airports and airfields, many of them in remote areas but long enough to accommodate medium-weight aircraft.

The Group examined the case of Rwandan support for the mutinous forces of Jules Mutebutsi and Laurent Nkunda. It concluded that Rwanda's violations involved direct and indirect support, in both the DRC and Rwanda, to those mutinous troops during their armed military operations against FARDC, allowing them to flee back into Rwanda where they regrouped and remained a latent threat to the DRC. Both Mr. Mutebutsi's and Mr. Nkunda's forces had looted areas of Bukavu, gaining $1 million to $3 million in cash for recruitment and for the payment and supply of troops. Prior to the outbreak of the Bukavu conflict, Rwandan officials also lent their support to General Nkunda on recruitment drives inside Rwanda. The Group of Experts confirmed reports that, from mid-May to June 2004, Rwandan troops had ordered the deforestation of the southern sector of the DRC's Virunga National Park. Rwanda's deployment to that area was in violation of the embargo. It also confirmed that Rwandan forces maintained positions in the Congolese border town of Bunagana and surroundings.

The Group noted that political and military alliances of convenience could be construed as violations of the arms embargo in giving direct or indirect support to groups not party to the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement or to an uncontrolled armed group operating out of Ituri and the Kivus, adding that the ambiguity of interpretation of the embargo needed to be clarified.

Among its recommendations, the Group called for Governments party to the Northern Corridor Transit Agreement to amend the Agreement to permit physical inspection of transit trade goods en route to areas under the exclusive domain of uncontrolled armed groups and other embargoed parties. To prevent all forms of assistance reaching the Ituri armed groups, it urged control of all inter-State trade with such groups, as well as commercial flights, until MONUC was able to deploy to those territories or the State extended its authority there.

Aware of Uganda's security concerns, the Group suggested that Uganda provide adequate protection so that it could deploy immigration and customs agents to its border areas with the DRC and strengthen its capacity to patrol Lake Albert and Lake Edward. Procedures at border crossings with areas controlled by Ituri armed groups should be enhanced by the presence of more accredited agents, tighter procedures on the declaration of goods to and from the DRC, improved inspection of goods entering areas controlled by Ituri armed groups and systematic registration of individuals exiting and entering Uganda.

In regard to Rwanda, the Group recommended the restoration of civilian oversight and monitoring of activities along its borders with the DRC, and the restriction of immigration, safe residence and freedom of movement of dissident or mutinous forces and other individuals allied with such forces except for international peace negotiations. The Group urged the Joint Verification Mechanism, as agreed by the 24 June summit in Abuja between Rwanda and the DRC (see p. 127), to begin its work. The Group said that the extension of the transitional authority throughout the DRC remained a prerequisite, which should be followed by unified governmental control of the borders in order to stem the flow of arms and other illicit commodities into the country. The control of movements in the air and on the ground should be improved by establishing an independent air-traffic services unit.

Pointing to the need to respect the civilian nature of refugee camps, in particular by abstaining from voluntary and forced recruitment within them, the Group called on Rwanda to prohibit recruitment drives and to expel Congolese who had conducted them. The disarmament, demobilization, repatriation, reintegration and resettlement mechanism would benefit from a donor-funded external verification mission to follow up on the status of demobilized soldiers after their return to Rwanda. Such a mission could ensure that demobilized soldiers were not being recruited to fight in the DRC. The Group also recommended that Mutebutsi's troops fleeing across the border be disarmed and cantoned and that the DRC and Rwanda reach an agreement on the fate of Mutebutsi and his troops.

Improvement of MONUC's monitoring and interdiction capacity could be achieved with appropriate lake patrol and air-surveillance capabilities, and more troops to monitor airports, areas under the control of the Ituri armed groups, Idjwi Island and other flashpoints along the DRC-Rwanda border.

The Group of Experts recommended the renewal of the arms embargo in the DRC for the period covering MONUC's next mandate. It added that monitoring of the embargo was essential to enhance its effectiveness.

Communications. The DRC, in a 21 July letter [S/2004/586], welcomed the Group's report which, it said, confirmed the DRC's views on the continued presence of the Rwandan Defence Forces on its territory, with the concealed motive of exploiting the natural resources in the DRC. It supported the recommendations and called on the Council to impose further sanctions targeted at the Rwandan leaders, including a travel ban, the freezing of their bank assets and an arms embargo.

In its reaction to the report, also of 21 July [S/2004/587], Rwanda refuted many of the statements contained therein. It said that the most serious threat to the region was the presence of the ex-FAR/Interahamwe, whereas the report focused on Mutebutsi and his men. The United Nations, Rwanda said, should work with regional States to strengthen their capacity in border control and customs procedures and operations. The Experts should have focused on those needs. On 26 July [S/2004/593], Rwanda expanded on its comments, stating that the Group of Experts had completely ignored or trivialized the information that Rwanda had provided, including responses to specific questions. Rwanda stated that the report therefore lacked credibility.

On 23 July [S/2004/591] and 27 July [S/2004/607], Uganda submitted its comments and observations on the report, particularly references to Uganda, which it denied, and factual errors, which, it said, were intended to portray Uganda in a bad light. Solutions to Congolese problems required strengthening regional cooperation and governmental structures, rather than inquiries by expert groups, it added.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 27 July [meeting 5011], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1552(2004). The draft [S/2004/594] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular resolutions 1493(2003) of 28 July 2003 and 1533(2004) of 12 March 2004,

Reiterating its concern regarding the presence of armed groups and militias in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, particularly in the provinces of North and South Kivu and in the Ituri district, which perpetuates a climate of insecurity in the whole region,

Condemning the continuing illicit flow of weapons within and into the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and declaring its determination to monitor closely compliance with the arms embargo imposed by its resolution 1493(2003),

Taking note of the report and the recommendations, of 9 July 2004, of the Group of Experts referred to in paragraph 10 of resolution 1533(2004), transmitted by the Security Council Committee established in accordance with paragraph 8 of the same resolution (hereinafter "the Committee"),

Noting that the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Reaffirms the demands set out in paragraphs 15, 18 and 19 of resolution 1493(2003);

2. Decides, in the light of the failure of the parties to comply with those demands, to renew, until 31 July 2005, the provisions of paragraphs 20 to 22 of resolution 1493(2003) and all the provisions of resolution 1533(2004);

3. Expresses its intention to modify or to remove those provisions if it determines that the demands noted above have been satisfied;

4. Decides that it will review those measures by 1 October 2004, and periodically thereafter;

5. Requests, to this end, the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Committee, to re-establish, within thirty days of the date of adoption of the present resolution, and for a period expiring on 31 January 2005, the Group of Experts referred to in paragraph 10 of resolution 1533(2004);

6. Requests the Group of Experts to report to the Council in writing before 15 December 2004, through the Committee, on the implementation of the measures imposed by paragraph 20 of resolution 1493(2003), with recommendations in this regard, in particular regarding the lists provided for by paragraph 10 (g) of resolution 1533(2004);

7. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Burundi

In 2004, the United Nations, through the United Nations Office in Burundi (UNOB), headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Burundi, continued to assist the parties (Jean Bosco Ndayikengurukiye's faction of the Conseil national pour la défense de la démocratie-Forces pour la défense de la démocratie (CNDD-FDD), Alain Mugabarabona's faction of the Parti pour la libération du peuple hutu-Forces nationales de libération (PALIPEHUTU-FNL), Pierre Nkurunziza's faction of the CNDD-FDD and Agathon Rwasa's Forces nationales de libération (FNL (Rwasa), also known as Palipehutu-FNL) in the implementation of the 2000 Arusha Agreement on Peace and Reconciliation [YUN 2000, p. 146], particularly its transition to full democratic governance. The Implementation Monitoring Committee, charged with supervising the implementation of the Agreement, met under the chairmanship of the United Nations. The Committee's subsidiary organ, the Joint Ceasefire Commission, established in 2003, coordinated and resolved military issues related to the implementation of the ceasefire agreements between and among the parties. The United Nations worked closely with the Great Lakes Regional Peace Initiative under the chairmanship of Uganda; the Facilitation, a regional peace initiative under the direction of South Africa's Deputy President, Jacob Zuma, and the Transitional Government, established in 2001 for a three-year period.

The security aspects were covered by the AU African Mission in Burundi (AMIB), established in 2003 to provide security for the cantonment of combatants and assist in the demobilization, disarmament and reintegration of armed groups. In May 2004, the Security Council established the United Nations Operation in Burundi (ONUB), incorporating UNOB and AMIB, with a mandate to monitor ceasefire agreements, promote confidence between the Burundian forces through disarmament and demobilization measures, monitor the illegal flow of arms and the quartering of Burundi armed forces, assist the transitional Government in establishing safe conditions for providing humanitarian assistance, contribute to the electoral process, and protect civilians under threat and UN personnel and property. The Council extended ONUB's mandate until 1 June 2005.

Political and military developments

Follow-up to recommendations of 2003 mission

Forum of Burundi's Development Partners. Burundi forwarded to the Security Council President the final communiqué of the Forum of Burundi's Development Partners (Brussels, Belgium, 13-14 January) [S/2004/49].

Burundi's international partners pledged a total of 810 million euros ($1,032 million) to cover the priority programmes for the second phase of its transition, covering economic recovery, capacity-building for good governance, repatriation of refugees and rehabilitation of survivors, and the establishment of a new defence and security force. In its transmittal letter, Burundi requested the Council to ensure that the amounts pledged were disbursed and expressed its hope that the Council would strengthen the peace process by taking over the responsibilities of AMIB through a UN peacekeeping operation and provide assistance in combating impunity.

Netherlands ceasefire talks. Burundi also transmitted to the Council President the communiqué issued at the end of talks (Oisterwijk, Netherlands, 18-21 January) [S/2004/62] between President Domitien Ndayizeye and Ibrahim Ntakirutimana and his PALIPEHUTU-FNL delegation. The parties agreed on the establishment of an international commission of inquiry into the death of the Apostolic Nuncio, Archbishop Michael Courtney [S/2004/46]; ending the violence to create a climate of trust and an end to the clashes between PALIPEHUTU-FNL and CNDD-FDD; and to meet without delay to discuss matters related to the Burundi peace process. The Netherlands declared its readiness to assist the parties in pursuing the discussions and following up on the agreements reached.

Statement by Council President. In a 23 January statement [SC/7988-AFR/817], the Council President said that the Council welcomed the discussions and the role played by the Dutch Government. It noted the final communiqué signed by the parties and encouraged them to continue their discussions, with a view to a complete cessation of hostilities and PALIPEHUTU-FNL entering the transitional institutions.

EU statement. The EU, in a 27 January statement [S/2004/109], called on the Government of Burundi and FNL to hold a follow-up meeting at the earliest opportunity, to cease all hostilities and to conclude a ceasefire agreement.

Establishment of commission of inquiry. As recommended by the mission [YUN 2003, p. 149], the Security Council President, on 26 January [S/2004/72], responding to Burundi's 2002 request that the Council establish an international judicial commission of inquiry as provided for in the Arusha Agreement, affirmed the Council's agreement to request the Secretary-General to send an assessment mission to Burundi to consider the advisability and feasibility of establishing such a commission. The terms of reference of the mission, approved by the Council on 23 January, were annexed to the President's letter.

Report of Secretary-General. Reporting on those and other developments relating to the implementation of the recommendations pertaining to Burundi of the Council's 2003 mission to the Great Lakes region, the Secretary-General, in a 20 January report [S/2004/52], said that, in connection with the international community's assistance to AMIB, UN agencies and AMIB maintained regular consultations, and UN agencies in Bujumbura, with political guidance from UNOB, provided assistance in disarmament, demobilization and reintegration activities and security sector reform, in cooperation with AMIB and the Joint Ceasefire Commission (JCC). A new impetus was given to JCC activities with the arrival in Bujumbura of the representatives of CNDD-FDD (Nkurunziza) in December 2003. At the time of the report, all the parties except FNL (Rwasa) were represented in JCC. They visited the three proposed demobilization sites in December and January. JCC took formal decisions on those matters on 5 January.

The Secretary-General drew attention to the Forum of Burundi's Development Partners (see above), organized with UNDP assistance, and other UN initiatives to provide assistance to restore Burundi's economy. On the humanitarian side, the United Nations and its partners, in November 2003, launched the 2004 consolidated appeal for some $71 million for humanitarian needs.

Efforts continued to end impunity for human rights violations. However, the establishment of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, which was expected to play a major role in the reconciliation process, was stalled in Parliament due to disagreement between the two major political groupings comprising the transitional institutions. The Field Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights continued to monitor the human rights situation and to strengthen the judiciary.

UNOB provided support, both diplomatic and financial, to facilitate the regional peace initiative. Its efforts contributed to the comprehensive ceasefire agreement of 16 November 2003, signed by the Transitional Government and CNDD-FDD (Nkurunziza) [YUN 2003, p. 152]. That permitted CNDD-FDD (Nkurunziza) representatives to return to Bujumbura and participate in the transitional institutions. In his new year address, President Ndayizeye called on stakeholders to accelerate implementation, and CNDD-FDD (Nkurunziza) responded by announcing that it would have its combatants gathered in the assembly areas by 10 January 2004. On 6 January, the President signed a decree appointing 33 members of the joint military high command, 20 from the army and 13 from FDD (Nkurunziza).

Security Council consideration. At the Security Council's 17 February meeting [meeting 4911] to discuss the Secretary-General's report, the Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs, Tuliameni Kalomoh, said that significant progress had been achieved towards implementation of the Council mission's recommendations. The January meeting between President Ndayizeye and a high-level FNL (Rwasa) delegation in Oisterwijk (see p. 142) provided further grounds for optimism.

Many challenges lay ahead, as the transitional period was expected to end in November with elections. In that regard, a UN multidisciplinary reconnaissance mission was due to arrive in Bujumbura on 17 February to examine the situation on the ground and assess support for the Transitional Government.

Burundi told the Council that all that remained was to canton the CNDD-FDD combatants and to begin disarmament, demobilization and reintegration operations. The other movements were in the process of gathering their combatants, most of whom were returning to the DRC with MONUC's help. Only PALIPEHUTU-FNL remained outside the peace process, but it had met with the Transitional Government. Burundi urged the Council to send a peacekeeping mission to the country, a step it described as vital to the success of the Burundi peace process and which could help stabilize the Great Lakes region. Burundi welcomed the Council's request that the Secretary-General send a fact-finding mission to the country with a view to establishing an international judicial commission of inquiry.

It was also pleased with the role played by the Economic and Social Council's Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Burundi (see p. 912).

Multidisciplinary assessment mission

Report of Secretary-General (March). The Secretary-General, in response to presidential statement S/PRST/2003/30 [YUN 2003, p. 153], submitted on 16 March [S/2004/210] a report which contained the findings of his multidisciplinary assessment mission to Burundi (16-27 February) to examine UN support to the implementation of the Arusha Agreement. The mission observed the political, military, security, humanitarian and economic situations, as well as human rights and the status of implementation of the Agreement.

Reporting on the political situation, the mission observed that significant progress had been made towards ending hostilities. Most of the armed political parties and movements had joined the peace process, with the exception of FNL (Rwasa), which continued to reject the Arusha Agreement on the grounds that it was a power-sharing deal between political elites and did not address the plight of the disenfranchised, nor brought them into the process. Although it held meetings in January in the Netherlands with the Transitional Government (see p. 142), the group cancelled further meetings, citing ongoing hostilities. In the meantime, the deadline for joining the process imposed on FNL (Rwasa) by the Regional Peace Initiative in November 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 151] expired on 16 February. Fighting between FNL (Rwasa) and joint Burundian Armed Forces (FAB)/CNDD-FDD (Nkurunziza) elements continued, resulting in the Government refusing to end military action until FNL (Rwasa) agreed to negotiate with it, and the latter refusing to do so as long as the Government was waging military action against it. Meanwhile, members of the international community were attempting to bring FNL (Rwasa) into the process. Despite those difficulties, the mission found that progress had been made in achieving an all-inclusive peace process since the inauguration of the transitional Government in 2001 and that both sides seemed ready to open discussions if the right framework could be found.

The ceasefire was generally holding and major military operations had ceased throughout most of the country despite continuing operations against FNL (Rwasa), which harassed the capital from neighbouring Bujumbura Rurale. The security situation had also improved and calm had been restored to most provinces. However, ongoing hostilities between FAB/CNDD-FDD (Nkurunziza) in Bujumbura Rurale continued to seriously affect security in those areas, forcing the capital to remain under curfew. Criminality had increased, aided by the large number of weapons in circulation and the Government's inability to control the situation.

The civil conflict in Burundi had led to massive refugee flows, much internal displacement and the disruption of daily life over the decade of conflict. Currently, there were 320,000 Burundians living in camps in the United Republic of Tanzania, and an estimated 281,000 internally displaced persons at 230 sites. Reports indicated that large numbers of internally displaced persons had begun returning to their original locations in recent months, but their return, as well as that of refugees, constituted a major humanitarian challenge in the coming months. The re-establishment of sustainable livelihoods would, however, require a shift in emphasis by the international community from humanitarian assistance and emergency interventions to recovery programming.

The human rights situation in Burundi had not improved much in recent months. Summary executions of civilians had decreased, but torture and illegal and arbitrary detention persisted. The civilian population, especially the elderly, women and children, were the primary victims of the acts of violence, which were committed with impunity. Incidents of rape were on the rise and individuals accused of witchcraft were killed by mobs. The incapacity of the judicial system to act in a timely and impartial manner remained a matter of grave concern. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) maintained its office in Burundi for monitoring, investigating and promoting human rights, with a reduced staff of three, down from 23 in 1999.

Implementation of the Arusha Agreement had accelerated since the integration of the armed groups into the Transitional Government, and the working relationship between the parties had been more cooperative in recent months. Further progress was needed in security sector reform, judicial reform, adoption of legal instruments and the organization of elections, in view of the end of the transitional period set for 31 October. While the United Nations was following up on Burundi's request for an assessment mission (see p. 142) to advise on the establishment of an international judicial commission of inquiry, with the exception of the law on genocide, very few of the other measures called for in the Arusha Agreement had been implemented.

To facilitate the integration process, the Government had established a National Commission for Demobilization, Reinsertion and Reintegration and an Executive Secretariat. In February, the Commission completed the preparation of a national demobilization, reinsertion and reintegration programme costing $84.4 million, to be financed through the World Bank.

With less than eight months left in the transitional period, the organization of credible elections represented one of the greatest political and practical challenges ahead. The Transitional Government anticipated holding colline elections in July, commune elections in August and parliamentary and presidential elections in October. However, the legal framework for elections had not yet been adopted. Proposals had been drawn up for the post-transition constitution, the electoral code, the law on political parties and the law on the reorganization of communal administration. Legislation on elections was needed to continue the planning, and a civic education campaign and registration of voters would be required. Another obstacle was the cantonment of armed forces, which had stalled, thereby preventing those groups from registering as political parties.

UNOB, headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, Berhanu Dinka, continued to work with the Regional Initiative on Burundi, under the chairmanship of Uganda, in moving the peace process forward, and with the Facilitation, under the leadership of the Deputy President of South Africa, Jacob Zuma, in its work to bring about a comprehensive ceasefire. The Implementation Monitoring Committee, mandated by the Arusha Agreement to monitor, supervise and ensure implementation of the Agreement, under the chairmanship of the United Nations, held its seventeenth session from 10 to 13 February, at which it continued to press for a post-transition constitution and the electoral law. JCC, a subsidiary body of the Committee, worked on military issues relating to the ceasefire agreements. In January, the Commission approved the site for the two demobilization centres and 11 pre-disarmament assembly areas. AMIB, the AU peacekeeping mission, with a strength of 2,523 troops and 43 military observers as at February, served to stabilize the situation in Burundi and gave confidence to the armed groups to begin the assembly and cantonment process; however, it suffered from a lack of funds and logistic support, preventing it from fully implementing its mandate.

The Secretary-General also made recommendations for reinforcing the UN role in Burundi (see p. 145).

Establishment of ONUB

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in his March report on Burundi

[S/2004/210], said that, in view of the expressed readiness of the parties to cooperate in a spirit of national reconciliation and the significant progress made to date, the assessment mission to Burundi concluded that the UN role there could be expanded to provide the support required to consolidate the peace process. The election of a new Government was scheduled for 31 October, at which time the transition process would end. Because of the serious financial and logistical difficulties facing AMIB, the AU, on 17 March [S/2004/270], had requested UN assistance in taking over and expanding its presence in Burundi. That request was strongly supported by the Government of Burundi [S/2004/208]. The Secretary-General therefore recommended that the Council authorize the deployment of a multidimensional UN peacekeeping operation (the United Nations Mission in Burundi (ONUB)) to support the peace process.

The operation would be headed by a Special Representative of the Secretary-General, who would chair the Implementation Monitoring Committee. JCC would report directly to the Force Commander. The Deputy Special Representative would serve concurrently as United Nations Resident Coordinator and Humanitarian Coordinator. The Mission would comprise a military component based on the reassignment of AMIB, with a total troop strength of 5,650 all ranks, including 200 military observers and 125 headquarters staff, as well as a civilian component, which would build on current UNOB capabilities, to monitor and provide security at pre-disarmament assembly sites, collect and secure weapons, monitor the cantonment of FAB elements and weapons, and participate in joint liaison teams of JCC to monitor the disarmament and disbanding of militia groups by the Transitional Government. It would also be responsible for protecting UN personnel, equipment and facilities. The Secretary-General suggested that the force be deployed under robust rules of engagement and that an "over-the-horizon" force be established.

The civilian police component would support the preparation of a comprehensive plan for the integration and development of the Burundi National Police. There would also be a security sector reform and disarmament, demobilization, reinsertion and reintegration component, a rule of law and civil affairs component, an electoral component, a human rights component, and a public information component. The Mission would cooperate closely with MONUC in the DRC, particularly on gathering information on cross-border movements of armed elements and arms trafficking.

The Secretary-General said that a Council decision was needed soon, in view of the expiration of the AMIB mandate on 2 April and the planned elections. The force should remain in place after the elections and its mandate should be reviewed within the following six months. As a first priority, the Secretary-General called on the Government and FNL (Rwasa) to immediately cease hostilities and enter into dialogue with a view to becoming part of the peace process.

The Secretary-General informed the Council that the financial implications of deploying ONUB would amount to some $418 million for a 12-month period [S/2004/210/Add.1], and of his intention to immediately begin planning and preparations for the Mission [S/2004/274]. On 1 April [S/2004/275], the Council, without prejudice to any decision it might take on establishing such an operation, approved his proposal.

The AU Peace and Security Council, at its second session (Addis Ababa, 25 March) [S/2004/261], adopted a communiqué on Burundi in which it urged the UN Security Council to authorize the early deployment of a UN peacekeeping mission as the Secretary-General had recommended. In the meantime, it decided to renew the AMIB mandate for one month, until 2 May, on the understanding that the Council would deploy a peacekeeping mission in Burundi before the end of the new mandate. The AU appealed to PALIPEHUTU-FNL (Rwasa) to work towards a ceasefire agreement with the Transitional Government and to join the peace process.

Burundi, on 21 April [S/2004/316], expressed concerns about the preparations for the deployment of the peacekeeping mission in Burundi and hoped that they would be reflected in the draft resolution that was being prepared, especially regarding the task of the mission to create favourable conditions for the investigative work of the International Judicial Commission of Inquiry and the National Truth and Reconciliation Commission, which were important for the peace process. Noting that armed groups had crossed into Burundi from both the DRC and the United Republic of Tanzania, Burundi stated that the future peacekeeping mission should not include any nationals from its immediate neighbours. Burundi expected the Council to accept the Secretary-General's proposals concerning ONUB.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 21 May [meeting 4975], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1545(2004). The draft [S/2004/410] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions as well as the statements by its President on Burundi, in particular its resolution 1375(2001) of 29 October 2001 and the statements by its President of 18 December 2002 and 22 December 2003,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to the respect of the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and unity of Burundi, and recalling the importance of the principles of good-neighbourliness and non-interference, and of regional cooperation,

Reaffirming its full support for the process of the Arusha Peace and Reconciliation Agreement for Burundi, signed at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, on 28 August 2000 (hereinafter “the Arusha Agreement”), calling upon all the Burundian parties to honour fully their commitments, and assuring them of its determination to support their efforts to that end,

Encouraging in particular the transitional institutions of Burundi to enact without delay the laws and regulations required for the organization of the electoral process under the Arusha Agreement, so that this process can take place before the expiration of the transitional period on 31 October 2004,

Taking note with satisfaction of the ceasefire agreement signed on 7 October 2002 by the Transitional Government of Burundi with the Forces pour la défense de la démocratie of Mr. Jean Bosco Ndayikengurukiye and the Parti pour la libération du peuple hutu-Forces nationales de libération of Mr. Alain Mugabarabona, as well as the Global Ceasefire Agreement signed on 16 November 2003 at Dar-es-Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania, between the Transitional Government and the Conseil national pour la défense de la démocratie-Forces pour la défense de la démocratie of Mr. Pierre Nkurunziza, Reiterating its concern at the continuing hostilities in certain parts of the country, underlining that there cannot be a military solution to Burundi's problems, urging all the parties to observe an immediate ceasefire, and stressing the importance attached to the Parti pour la libération du peuple hutu-Forces nationales de libération of Mr. Agathon Rwasa, the last armed movement that has still not done so, participating in the peace process of the Arusha Agreement,

Taking note in this regard of the talks which were started between the President of the Republic of Burundi, Mr. Domitien Ndayizeye, and this armed movement at the meeting held at Oisterwijk, the Netherlands, from 18 to 21 January 2004, as well as the congress held at Kigoma, United Republic of Tanzania, from 18 to 21 April 2004 by the Parti pour la libération du peuple hutu-Forces nationales de libération of Mr. Agathon Rwasa, and urging the latter to conclude an agreement with the Transitional Government without delay with a view to a complete cessation of hostilities and its participation in the transitional institutions,

Condemning all acts of violence, as well as human rights and international humanitarian law violations, and particularly concerned by the increasing incidents of rape, including mass rapes,

Reaffirming its determination to support the efforts of Burundians to bring the perpetrators of such acts and violations to justice on the basis of the rule of law in order to put an end to situations of impunity, and calling upon the parties and transitional authorities to take without delay all necessary measures to that end,

Expressing its concern at the tragic humanitarian situation of a large majority of the Burundian population, recalling that all the parties are responsible for the security of the civilian populations, and recalling in particular, in this regard, its resolution 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000 on women and peace and security, its resolutions 1379(2001) of 20 November 2001, 1460(2003) of 30 January 2003 and 1539(2004) of 22 April 2004 on children and armed conflict, and its resolutions 1265(1999) of 17 September 1999 and 1296(2000) of 19 April 2000 on the protection of civilians in armed conflict,

Taking note of the progress achieved in preparing the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme for the combatants, calling upon the parties to commit themselves firmly to that programme without delay, and encouraging the international financial institutions and donors to support the programme,

Expressing its concern at the deteriorating economic situation in Burundi in the context of the conflict, and recognizing that any improvement in security should be matched by tangible economic and social benefits for the population,

Considering that the voluntary and sustainable return of refugees and internally displaced persons will be a critical factor for the consolidation of the peace process, and will require a just solution of the issue of land ownership,

Welcoming the conclusions of the Forum of Burundi's Development Partners, which was held at Brussels on 13 and 14 January 2004, and calling upon donors to honour their pledges,

Paying tribute to the efforts made by the African Union as well as by the States which are members of the Regional Initiative, especially Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania, and the Facilitation, in particular South Africa, to bring peace to Burundi, and encouraging the African Union to maintain a strong presence in Burundi to accompany the efforts of the Burundian parties, as specified in the Arusha Agreement and subsequent agreements,

Welcoming the efforts of the African Mission in Burundi and the contingents from South Africa, Ethiopia and Mozambique which make it up, as well as the Member States which have assisted the Mission in its deployment,

Encouraging the efforts being undertaken to train a joint Burundian protection unit to ensure continuing security of the leaders of the transitional institutions, and underlining the need for that unit to be operational as soon as possible,

Taking note of the statements made before the Council by the President of Burundi on 22 September 2003 and by the Deputy President of the Republic of South Africa, Mr. Jacob Zuma, on 4 December 2003, in favour of transforming the African Mission in Burundi into a United Nations peacekeeping operation, and taking note also, in that regard, of the letter dated 15 March 2004 from Mr. Thérence Sinunguruza, Minister for Foreign Affairs and Cooperation of Burundi, addressed to the President of the Security Council, as well as the letter dated 17 March 2004 from Mr. Alpha Oumar Konaré, Chairperson of the Commission of the African Union, addressed to the Secretary-General,

Aware of the difficulty of sustaining stability in Burundi unless peace is restored beyond its borders, in particular in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and underlining how important it is for all the States concerned, especially those of the region, to cooperate towards that end, and for the United Nations to coordinate its efforts in the two countries,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on Burundi,

Welcoming with satisfaction and encouraging the efforts of the United Nations to enhance the awareness of peacekeeping personnel of the need to prevent and combat HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases,

Noting that obstacles remain to Burundi's stability, and determining that the situation in that country continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Welcomes the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General on Burundi;

2. Decides to authorize, for an initial period of six months as from 1 June 2004, with the intention to renew it for further periods, the deployment of a peacekeeping operation called the United Nations Operation in Burundi (the acronym ONUB to be used in all languages), pursuant to the mandate specified in paragraphs 5 to 7 below, in order to support and help to implement the efforts undertaken by Burundians to restore lasting peace and bring about national reconciliation, as provided under the Arusha Agreement;

3. Decides also that ONUB shall be headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Burundi, who chairs the Implementation Monitoring Committee of the Arusha Agreement, and shall initially be composed of existing forces of the African Mission in Burundi, and therefore requests the Secretary-General, acting in liaison with the African Union, to ensure the transfer of authority over the Mission, within the framework of ONUB, to his Special Representative;

4. Decides further that ONUB shall consist of a maximum of 5,650 military personnel, including 200 observers and 125 staff officers, and up to 120 civilian police personnel, as well as the appropriate civilian personnel;

5. Authorizes ONUB to use all necessary means to carry out the following mandate, within its capacity and in the areas where its armed units are deployed, and in coordination with humanitarian and development communities:

(a) To ensure the respect of the ceasefire agreements, by monitoring implementation and investigating violations of those agreements; armament and demobilization of the elements that need to be disarmed and demobilized;

(e) To monitor, to the extent possible, the illegal flow of arms across the national borders, including Lake Tanganyika, in cooperation with the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and, as appropriate, with the group of experts referred to in paragraph 10 of resolution 1533(2004) of 12 March 2004;

(f) To contribute to the creation of the necessary security conditions for the provision of humanitarian assistance and facilitate the voluntary return of refugees and internally displaced persons;

(g) To contribute to the successful completion of the electoral process stipulated in the Arusha Agreement by ensuring a secure environment for free, transparent and peaceful elections to take place;

(h) Without prejudice to the responsibility of the Transitional Government of Burundi, to protect civilians under imminent threat of physical violence;

(i) To ensure the protection of United Nations personnel, facilities, installations and equipment, as well as the security and freedom of movement of ONUB personnel, and to coordinate and conduct, as appropriate, mine action activities in support of its mandate;

6. Decides that ONUB shall provide advice and assistance, within its capacity and subject to carrying out tasks stipulated in paragraph 5 above, to the Transitional Government and authorities to contribute to their efforts:

(a) To monitor Burundi's borders, with special attention to refugees, as well as to movements of combatants, especially in the Cibitoké province;

(b) To carry out institutional reforms as well as the constitution of the integrated national defence and internal security forces and, in particular, the training and monitoring of the police, while ensuring that they are democratic and fully respect human rights and fundamental freedoms;

(c) To proceed with electoral activities;

(d) To complete implementation of the reform of the judiciary and correction system, in accordance with the Arusha Agreement;

(e) To ensure, in close liaison with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the promotion and protection of human rights, with particular attention to women, children and vulnerable persons, and investigate human rights violations to put an end to impunity;

7. Decides also that ONUB shall cooperate with the Government and authorities of Burundi, as well as their international partners, to ensure the coherence of their work, in assisting the Government and authorities of Burundi in:

(a) Extending State authority and utilities throughout the territory, including civilian police and judicial institutions;

(b) Carrying out the national programme of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of combatants and members of their families, including those coming from the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in liaison with the Government of that country and the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and with particular attention to the specific needs of women and children;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, through his Special Representative for Burundi, to conduct all the activities of the United Nations system in Burundi and to facilitate the coordination with other national, regional and international actors, in particular the African Union, of activities in support of the transition process, while ensuring that ONUB personnel give special attention to issues related to gender equality, as well as to the specific needs of children;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to conclude agreements with States neighbouring Burundi to enable ONUB forces to cross their respective borders in pursuit of armed combatants, as may be necessary while carrying out their mandate;

10. Requests the Transitional Government of Burundi to conclude a status-of-forces agreement for ONUB with the Secretary-General within thirty days of the adoption of the present resolution, taking into consideration General Assembly resolution 58/82 of 9 December 2003 on the scope of legal protection under the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, and notes that, pending the conclusion of such an agreement, the model status-of-forces agreement for peacekeeping operations of 9 October 1990 shall apply provisionally;

11. Requests all parties to cooperate fully with the deployment and operations of ONUB, in particular by ensuring the safety and freedom of movement of United Nations and associated personnel, as well as the personnel of humanitarian, development and aid organizations, throughout the territory of Burundi;

12. Recalls its resolution 1502(2003) of 26 August 2003, reaffirms the obligation of all parties to comply fully with the rules and principles of international humanitarian law applicable to them related to the protection of humanitarian and United Nations personnel, and urges all those concerned to allow full, unimpeded access by humanitarian personnel to all people in need of assistance as set forth in applicable international humanitarian law;

13. Requests all parties and concerned States to facilitate the voluntary, safe and sustainable return of refugees and internally displaced persons, and to cooperate fully to this end with ONUB and the relevant international organizations;

14. Underlines the need for ONUB to have at its disposal an effective public information capacity, including through local and national radio, television and newspaper channels, to promote understanding of the peace process and the role of ONUB among local communities and the parties;

15. Stresses the importance of the full and unconditional implementation of the Arusha Agreement, and demands that all parties fulfil their obligations under that agreement in order to allow the electoral process, in particular the legislative elections, to take place before 31 October 2004;

16. Reaffirms the need for all parties to complete in a timely manner the execution of the programme for the regrouping and cantonment of combatants and to begin implementing as soon as possible the programme to dismantle all armed groups, including the militias, and the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, giving particular attention to the specific needs of women and children, and to proceed as well, in parallel, with the restructuring of the armed forces and the internal security forces;

17. Reaffirms also the continued need to promote peace and national reconciliation and to foster accountability and respect for human rights in Burundi, and urges the Government of Burundi, specialized agencies, other multilateral organizations, civil society and Member States to accelerate their efforts to establish the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, as provided for in the Arusha Agreement;

18. Expresses its deep concern over the illicit flow of arms to armed groups and movements, in particular those which are not parties to the peace process under the Arusha Agreement, calls upon all States to halt that flow without prejudice to the Burundian national army and police forces whose integration is in progress, and expresses its intention to consider this issue further as soon as possible after the deployment of ONUB;

19. Urges the international financial institutions and the donor community to continue to contribute to the economic development of Burundi, in particular for the long term, including through the realization of pledges already made, to enable that country to achieve sustainable stability, and in order also to contribute to the wider stability of the region;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that his Special Representatives for Burundi and for the Democratic Republic of the Congo coordinate the activities of ONUB and the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, share military information at their disposal, in particular concerning cross-border movements of armed elements and arms trafficking, and pool their logistic and administrative resources, to an extent that does not affect the ability to carry out their respective mandates, in order to maximize efficiency and cost-effectiveness;

21. Decides that ONUB shall carry out its mandate in close cooperation with the Mission, in particular concerning monitoring and prevention of movements of combatants across the border between Burundi and the Democratic Republic of the Congo, as well as the implementation of the disarmament and demobilization programmes;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council informed on a regular basis of developments in the situation in Burundi, the implementation of the Arusha Agreement and the execution of the mandate of ONUB and to submit a report on those developments every three months, including an evaluation of the strength of the military component, with a view to its adjusted reduction, taking account of the progress made on the ground and the tasks remaining to be accomplished;

23. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Appointments. The Secretary-General, on 24 May [S/2004/433], informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint Carolyn McAskie (Canada) as his Special Representative for Burundi and Head of ONUB, replacing Berhanu Dinka (Ethiopia). The Council took note of the appointment on 28 May [S/2004/434]. Similarly, on 16 July [S/2004/583], the Secretary-General informed the Council of his nomination of Major General Derrick Mbuyiselo Mgwebi (South Africa), formerly AMIB Force Commander, as ONUB Force Commander. The Council took note of that information on 21 July [S/2004/584].

Communications (May and July). In a statement forwarded to the Security Council on 28 May [S/2004/448], the EU welcomed the establishment of ONUB and called on PALIPEHUTU-FNL to seize the opportunity for peace. It encouraged the Regional Peace Initiative on Burundi (see below), in particular Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and South Africa, to continue the efforts to support the transition in Burundi. In another statement of 19 July [S/2004/608], the EU reiterated its support, particularly regarding financial support, for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process and the reform of the defence and security forces of Burundi. It called for the electoral process to be set in motion and considered that the urgent establishment of the Independent National Electoral Commission, the adoption of the electoral code and communal law, and the adoption of the post-transition constitution would start the process rapidly and definitively.

Regional Peace Initiative

The Great Lakes Regional Peace Initiative on Burundi, at its twenty-first summit (Dar es Salaam, 5 June), discussed the elections scheduled for October and the non-participation of PALIPEHUTU-FNL in the peace process. In a communiqué transmitted on 8 June [S/2004/471], the summit directed that the electoral process start without further delay with a view to holding elections by 31 October, as stipulated in the Arusha Agreement, and mandated the Facilitator, Deputy President Zuma, to help the Government and the Burundi parties to reach a compromise on outstanding issues relating to power-sharing. Noting that the continued intransigence of PALIPEHUTU-FNL posed an obstacle to the peace process, the summit urged the AU Peace and Security Council to recommend appropriate political and legal action within three months and called on PALIPEHUTU-FNL to take advantage of that time period and join the peace process. It decided to impose restrictions on the movement of that group's leaders and invited the international community to do likewise. The summit mandated the Chairperson of the Regional Initiative, Ugandan President Yoweri Museveni, to approach the United Nations for assistance in providing protection services for Burundi leaders who requested it.

The AU Peace and Security Council, at its twelfth meeting (Addis Ababa, 4 July) [S/2004/561], endorsed the decision of the Regional Initiative summit to extend the deadline for PALIPEHUTU-FNL to join the peace process by three months and to impose restrictions on the movements of its members.

At its twenty-second summit meeting (Dar es Salaam, 18 August) [S/2004/665], the Regional Peace Initiative took note of the consultations on power-sharing held in Pretoria and Bujumbura between the Burundi parties, and endorsed the power-sharing agreement concluded in Pretoria on 6 August as the appropriate mechanism for ensuring ethnic balance. It endorsed their acknowledgement that the provisions of the Arusha Agreement be incorporated in the Burundi constitution and in all other relevant legislation. It invited the Transitional Government to ensure that the Independent Electoral Commission was in place by 29 August and that the National Assembly decide on the draft constitution three weeks later, failing which it should be submitted to a referendum or to the Implementation Monitoring Committee.

The summit condemned the terrorist attack against the UN refugee camp in Gatumba, Burundi, on 13 August (see below). In the light of recent incidents and of the refusal of PALIPEHUTU-FNL to renounce violence and participate in the peace process, the summit declared PALIPEHUTU-FNL a terrorist organization.

Gatumba massacre

On 14 August [S/2004/652], Rwanda issued a communiqué expressing its shock and horror at the massacre of more than 150 Congolese Banyamulenge refugees at the UNHCR transit camp at Gatumba on the night of 13 August. Information available indicated that the attack was perpetrated by a combined force of ex-FAR/Interahamwe and Mayi-Mayi from the DRC, in cooperation with PALIPEHUTU-FNL elements.

Rwanda added that, during and following the May/June events in Bukavu (see p. 124), Banyamulenge refugees in Rwanda and Burundi affirmed that they had fled targeted massacres against them by DRC armed forces under the command of Mbuza Mabe, acting in concert with ex-FAR/Interahamwe. Rwanda expressed concern that for 10 years the international community refused to disarm the ex-FAR/Interahamwe, the force that committed the genocide in Rwanda, or to take any decisive action against them. Rwanda again called on the international community to take action against the incipient ethnic cleansing in the region, especially in eastern DRC. It called for the forcible disarmament, demobilization and repatriation of the ex-FAR/Interahamwe currently deployed along Rwanda's border and in many cases co-located with DRC armed forces.

As the Secretary-General reported in his 25 August report [S/2004/682] (see p. 151), the massacre occurred after a period of escalating tension in Bujumbura Rurale, while other areas of the country were relatively stable. The instability in the area ignited with the Gatumba massacre. An investigation of the event by the United Nations yielded inconclusive results (see below).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

On 15 August [meeting 5021], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/30 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council condemns with the utmost firmness the massacre of refugees from the Democratic Republic of the Congo which occurred on the territory of Burundi, in Gatumba, on 13 August 2004.

The Council requests the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Burundi, in close contact with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Democratic Republic of the Congo, to establish the facts and report on them to the Council as quickly as possible.

The Council calls upon the authorities of Burundi and of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to cooperate actively so that the perpetrators and those responsible for those crimes can be brought to justice without delay.

The Council calls upon all States in the region to ensure that the territorial integrity of their neighbours is respected. It recalls in this respect the declaration of principles on good-neighbourly relations and cooperation adopted in New York on 25 September 2003. It encourages them to redouble their efforts in order to provide security for the civilian populations on their territory, including for the foreigners to whom they grant refuge.

The Council requests the United Nations Operation in Burundi and the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to offer their assistance to the Burundian and Congolese authorities with a view to facilitating the investigation and to strengthening the security of vulnerable populations.

Communications. The AU Peace and Security Council, at its fifteenth meeting (Addis Ababa, 17 August) [S/2004/656], condemned the massacre and stressed the need to establish the Joint DRC/Rwanda Verification Mechanism. The Council recalled its decision of 4 July calling for an examination of PALIPEHUTU/FNL activities and reiterated its appeal to AU member States to impose, with immediate effect, restrictions on the movement of their leaders and members, as recommended by the twenty-first summit of the Regional Peace Initiative (see p. 149).

The Fourteenth Ministerial Conference of the Non-Aligned Movement (Durban, South Africa, 19 August) [S/2004/694] supported the Regional

Peace Initiative's decision (see p. 149) to declare PALIPEHUTU-FNL, which had claimed responsibility for the massacre, a terrorist organization, and urged the United Nations and the AU to reinforce that position. It also supported the proposal to conduct an international investigation into the massacre.

Reports on investigation into massacre. On 3 September [S/2005/6], the Security Council received a preliminary oral report on the ongoing investigation, conducted by MONUC, ONUB and OHCHR, of the massacre committed in the refugee camp at Gatumba. Council members, reaffirming their condemnation of the attack on defenceless refugees, expressed their expectation that they would soon receive a final report on the investigation.

On 15 October [S/2004/821], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Council the joint report on the Gatumba massacre (see above), as it had requested in presidential statement S/PRST/2004/30 (see above). According to the report, despite an extensive investigation, the UN team was unable to conclusively identify who authorized, financed or carried out the killings. Nevertheless, sufficient information was collected to warrant further investigation. Evidence pointed to PALIPEHUTU-FNL, the only group claiming responsibility, as probably having participated in the massacre but unlikely to have done so on its own. Evidence of other groups' participation was credible but could not be confirmed. The attack, apparently ethnically and politically motivated, targeted Banyamulenge refugees from the DRC who had fled fighting there in June. The Banyamulenge were viewed as pro-Rwanda by many, even though they participated on both sides of the fighting in June. The Governments of Burundi and Rwanda, as well as the Munyamulenge Vice-President of the DRC, charged that the refugees were killed by an alliance of anti-Tutsi groups based in eastern DRC, which might have included elements of FARDC, members of a Rwandan Hutu rebel group partly composed of ex-FAR/ Interahamwe and Mayi-Mayi. The UN team investigated all leads but was unable to find conclusive evidence.

The massacre was committed at a critical moment in the peace processes in both the DRC and Burundi and threatened to scuttle both. Information suggesting the potential involvement of one or more actors in the DRC warranted a continuation of the investigation. The team collected sufficient information about the crime to recommend a thorough judicial inquiry at both the national level, led by Burundi, and the international level, led by the International Criminal Court (ICC).

The team recommended that the Council encourage the immediate initiation of national and international judicial proceedings to ensure that the authors and perpetrators of the killings were identified, prosecuted and brought to justice, and that Burundi should seek international technical assistance for the investigation and should be able to rely on the full cooperation of the DRC and Rwanda. Burundi should also immediately invoke the jurisdiction of ICC. In view of the political instability in the region, Governments and others in the region should be called on to exercise restraint in their declarations concerning the massacre. Burundi should also be requested to immediately take all measures necessary to protect refugee and internally displaced populations.

Burundi, reacting to the report on 29 October [S/2004/867], said that it was conducting an investigation and intended to release its own report shortly. It pointed out and gave examples of omissions, confused interpretations of facts and assertions that were contrary to stated facts in the UN report. It declared its intention to pursue a thorough judicial investigation at the national and subregional levels with the cooperation of the DRC and Rwanda to bring the culprits to justice and would refer the matter to ICC.

Further political developments

Report of Secretary-General (August). On 25 August [S/2004/682], the Secretary-General issued his first report on ONUB, covering developments since his 16 March report (see p. 143).

During the reporting period, the Burundian parties engaged in intense negotiations on the electoral process and post-transitional power-sharing arrangements. On 26 March, President Ndayizeye invited 27 armed political parties and movements to an all-party forum to discuss the election and legal instruments to govern Burundi in the post-transition period, but no consensus was reached. Thereafter, the Facilitation (South Africa) met with those organizations five times from April to July in Bujumbura and Pretoria. The Secretary-General's Special Representative also worked closely with the Facilitation and the parties to move the process forward. The Tutsi parties called for revisions to the Arusha Agreement and subsequent agreements, particularly to provide for an alternating presidency between Hutu and Tutsi parties; one (Tutsi) Vice-President with veto power, instead of two from different ethnic groups, as called for in the Arusha Agreement; and a 10-year interim period between the transition and full democracy, instead of five. By law, political parties were required to be ethnically mixed, with every party having a 30 per cent minimum representation of each ethnic group. The Tutsi parties argued that, to be fairly represented in legislative bodies, at least 70 per cent of the 40 per cent of the seats reserved for them had to be occupied by Tutsis representing Tutsi-led parties and the remaining 30 per cent by Tutsis representing parties with a Hutu majority. The Hutu-dominated parties opposed those amendments. At an 18-21 July meeting, the Facilitation stressed that the agreements should be adhered to, a position accepted by the Hutu parties but rejected by the Tutsis. In July, Vice-President Alphonse Kadege of the Tutsi-dominated UPRONA party denounced the discussions as favouring the Hutu parties.

To break the deadlock, the Facilitation, in coordination with ONUB, invited all armed political parties and movements to Pretoria for consultations on 4 and 5 August. CNDD-FDD (Nkurunziza) declined to participate. The talks ended with 20 predominantly Hutu parties agreeing to the power-sharing formula suggested by the Facilitation and 11 predominantly Tutsi parties rejecting it. However, the Hutu parties made the concession to increase by 21 the number of seats for minority groups in the National Assembly. Meanwhile, efforts continued to convince CNDD-FDD representatives to occupy the seats reserved for them in the National Assembly, the Senate and the Cabinet, which they refused to do in protest against the presence of former army officers in the National Assembly. On 27 July, after a meeting with the President, CNDD-FDD (Nkurunziza) agreed to resume its activities in the National Assembly and the Cabinet, but no agreement was reached on its participation in the Senate.

On 28 May, the Cabinet agreed to postpone the elections by one year on technical grounds, which was rejected by CNDD-FDD (Nkurunziza) and the Front for Democracy in Burundi (FRODEBU), but welcomed by the Union for National Progress, Burundi (UPRONA). ONUB encouraged the parties to separate the technical aspects of the electoral process from the political negotiations in order to move the process along. The Independent Electoral Commission was established on 5 August, but the five commissioners had not been nominated or approved.

The Special Representative worked with the Facilitation and others concerned to build confidence between the Transitional Government and FNL. The latter offered to cease fire if certain conditions were met, including the return of CNDD-FDD to its cantonment areas and the confinement of the Burundian Armed Forces to barracks. The Transitional Government rejected the offer but did indicate its willingness to engage in formal ceasefire negotiations at a later date. In the meantime, tensions in Bujumbura Rurale escalated, culminating in the massacre at the Gatumba refugee camp on 13 August (see p. 149). President Ndayizeye, at a meeting with the Special Representative on 15 August, expressed concern about a possible alliance of FNL, Congolese Mayi-Mayi and ex-FAR/Interahamwe forces.

In other developments, the Implementation Monitoring Committee, meeting in April (20-23) and again in July (12-14) under the Chairmanship of the Special Representative, urged the adoption of the necessary legislation for the electoral process and the fulfilment of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process. It urged the parties to set up the Electoral Commission and decided that, if the parties failed to agree on a post-transition constitution by 31 July, it would, in accordance with the Arusha Agreement, hire experts to draft the document.

With regard to military integration, the Joint Ceasefire Commission endorsed, on 17 June, an operations plan for the pre-disarmament, disarmament and demobilization of combatants, which was approved by the Cabinet, but the Government still had to prepare an operational plan for the integration, demobilization and reform of the military and a budget to support that process. Belgium, France, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom contributed to the integrated training of combatants from the various armed political parties and movements. As to the implementation of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, technical preparations were moving forward and a demobilization centre was set up. Members of various groups were assembled in 12 pre-disarmament assembly areas throughout the country, but the Burundian Armed Forces had not begun cantoning its troops, on the grounds that their deployment was required because of ongoing hostilities with FNL (Rwasa). Although funding was available for demobilization and reintegration, primarily through the World Bank, the lack of an operational plan remained a concern. Efforts were also under way to enhance the functioning of the local police.

ONUB's police component had begun assessing the current police structure, analysing the training required and assisting in the formulation of a comprehensive plan for security arrangements during the elections.

The deployment of ONUB, which totalled 3,312 troops as at 23 August, was behind schedule due primarily to lack of donor response, particularly for the maritime unit and the "over-the-horizon" force proposed by the Secretary-General (see p. 145). The mission sent a battalion each to Gitega and Bubanza, and a company remained in Bujumbura, which would be built up to battalion strength. Daily patrols began in Bujumbura Rurale and some 100 military observers were deployed to field sites, mostly in Bujumbura Rurale, where they encountered some difficulties with freedom of movement. A maritime unit patrolled Lake Tanganyika.

In his observations, the Secretary-General called on Burundi, the DRC and the international community to ensure that those responsible for the Gatumba massacre were held responsible. He expressed concern about the possibility of heightened ethnic tensions in Burundi following the massacre, and urged those Governments and Rwanda to work together to end ethnic-based hostilities that had afflicted the subregion for so long.

Noting that the negotiations on post-transition power-sharing had shown signs that the parties were willing to find common ground to implement the Arusha timetable and preserve peace, he called on them to continue in that direction. He also noted that the parties had yet to demonstrate the good faith and political will necessary to fulfil their commitments to each other and to the Security Council.

Communication (September). The EU, in a statement issued on 6 September [S/2004/737], welcomed Burundi's establishment of an Independent Electoral Commission which would play the leading role in the organization of local, regional, parliamentary and presidential elections. Its creation made it possible to proceed with the adoption of a new constitution and electoral laws. The EU also welcomed the law creating the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and expressed its willingness to assist Burundi in the organization of elections.

Security Council communiqué. At a closed meeting held on 23 September [meeting 5042], the Security Council heard a briefing by Burundian President Ndayizeye, who, according to the Council President, in his summary of the Council's activities in September [S/2005/6], informed the Council of the latest developments in Burundi, including the adoption of a draft constitution and the decision of the Transitional Government to hold a referendum on the draft constitution. Council members encouraged the President to continue to work for a successful conclusion of the transition.

Extension of transitional period

The twenty-third summit of the Great Lakes Regional Peace Initiative on Burundi (Nairobi, 15 October) [S/2004/894] welcomed the progress made by the Transitional Government, specifically the establishment of the Independent Electoral Commission, the adoption of the draft post-transitional constitution, and President Ndayizeye's announcement of 20 October as the date of the referendum on the post-transitional constitution. Based on the reality on the ground, the summit accepted that elections could not take place before 1 November, and it endorsed the Independent Electoral Commission's electoral calendar, which rescheduled the constitutional referendum for 26 November, local elections (COLLINE) on 9 February 2005, commune council elections on 23 February 2005, National Assembly elections on 9 March 2005, Senate elections on 23 March 2005 and the presidential election on 22 April 2005. As a consequence, the summit noted that the life of the transition institutions and administration had to be extended. It noted that that issue was addressed in the draft constitution passed by the National Assembly and the Senate. The summit decided that the draft constitution should be endorsed before 25 October 2004, as an interim constitution until the referendum, to facilitate the election process in line with the calendar of the Independent Electoral Commission. The summit also decided that the region should assist Burundi to secure the financial resources required for elections by ensuring that the donors who had pledged funds met their obligations.

Burundi, in its 8 November letter transmitting the summit's communiqué, reported that the Congress had approved the interim constitution, which came into force on 1 November. In addition, the President had appointed the provincial electoral committees, which worked under the authority of the Independent Electoral Commission. According to the Chairman of that Commission, the electoral timetable was provisional and adherence to those dates would depend on the security situation in the country. Moreover, the holding of the constitutional referendum would also depend on such factors as availability of resources for a census and the manufacture of identification cards and voting cards.

Situation at end of year

The Secretary-General, in his 15 November report on ONUB [S/2004/902], which covered events since 25 August, said that the reporting period was marked by major developments in the last few months of the original 36-month transitional period, which ended on 31 October. Among the remaining challenges were the adoption of key legislation, including the communal law, repeal of the law banning assembly, and laws governing the establishment of the new military and security forces, and the adoption of a new electoral code before elections could be held. Disarmament needed to proceed without delay, so that armed groups could become eligible to register as political parties before the elections. Demobilization and integration should proceed for the creation of integrated security services, and the issue of the proliferation of arms should be addressed to ensure security for elections. The question of FNL (Rwasa), which remained outside the peace process, would have to be resolved.

On 20 October, the President, after consultations, signed a law declaring the draft constitution, adopted on 17 September, to be the interim constitution until the referendum was held. After some initial refusals, 9 of the 10 Tutsi-dominated G-10 parties accepted the interim constitution. However, some prominent Tutsi leaders, including the Vice-President, Alphonse Kadege, continued to call for a debate on the proposed constitution. Mr. Kadege was later dismissed by the President. The tenth party, PARENA, did not participate in the political process and refused to pronounce itself on the matter.

UNDP and ONUB estimated that $23 million was required to fund the electoral process, including the constitutional referendum, of which $19.5 million had been pledged but only $1.87 million had been received.

The military situation remained generally stable, with the exception of three western provinces, Bujumbura Rurale, Cibitoké and Bubanza, where frequent clashes occurred between FAB/CNDD-FDD and RNL (Rwasa). The hostilities caused temporary displacements of the local population. Crime, which was on the rise, was characterized by indiscriminate and opportunistic incidents, including organized crime. On 26 September, a United Nations Volunteer was murdered in Bujumbura, the first civilian casualty in the mission. The instability in eastern DRC continued to contribute to increased tensions in Burundi. In mid-October, roughly 3,000 Burundians, mostly Tutsis, citing fear of election-related violence, crossed into Rwanda, which prompted UPRONA to accuse CNDD-FDD (Nkurunziza) of conducting a "terror campaign". More than half had returned a month later.

In order to speed up disarmament, training of combatants to form joint security brigades began. On 23 September, 1,000 FAB and 800 CNDD-FDD (Nkurunziza) elements completed a month-long training programme and were deployed to replace the Burundian Armed Forces units in Bujumbura Rurale. The five smaller armed parties and political movements had not yet begun participating, pending an agreement with the Transitional Government on selection criteria and disarmament procedures.

An estimated 12,000 combatants were expected to be demobilized before elections in April 2005, but disagreements on procedure for integration and reform prevented disarmament and demobilization from starting. However, there was agreement on the demobilization of child soldiers by the end of 2004. Despite the political problems, most of the technical preparations for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration were completed, including the establishment of three demobilization centres and arrangements to supply them. The Transitional Government and ONUB had prepared a disarmament, demobilization and reintegration plan. As at 18 October, 20,979 members of the armed political parties and movements had been assembled in 12 pre-disarmament assembly areas monitored by ONUB. All the parties provided the Joint Ceasefire Commission with lists of their combatants, which were being verified by the joint liaison teams. The Council of Ministers adopted a decree on the formation, organization and mandate of the National Burundian Police.

The Secretary-General reported that overall, steady progress had been observed in the peace process, especially with regard to the extension of the transition and the establishment of a clear electoral calendar, thereby averting a constitutional crisis. Major political and social tensions in the country remained, however, fuelled by mistrust between the parties. Having made major political achievements in the last six months, Burundi found itself at the beginning of a dynamic but potentially volatile electoral process. In the light of the progress, and in view of the remaining priorities of the transition, he recommended that ONUB's mandate be extended for an additional six months, until 31 May 2005.

Report of Security Council 2004 mission. The Security Council mission to the Great Lakes region (21-25 November) (see p. 115), in its report to the Council [S/2004/934], said that it was greatly impressed by the progress made in the peace process in Burundi and expressed its support for the transitional process based on the principles of dialogue, power-sharing and reconciliation. Welcoming the decision on extension of the transitional process, the mission expressed concern over delays encountered in the critical areas of the adoption of the electoral code and the commune act, essential prerequisites for the elections, and in progress in disarmament, demobilization and reintegration in order to create conditions for holding elections.

In discussions with Burundian leaders, the mission emphasized the need to ensure stability in the post-transition period. It noted the call by many of its interlocutors that an international judicial commission of inquiry be established to support the fight against impunity, and that the draft legislation on the national Truth and Reconciliation Commission had been adopted by the Parliament. The mission also heard that the security situation had improved. With the exception of Bujumbura Rurale, most of the country was considered stable. As in previous Council visits to the country, the interlocutors appealed for help in overcoming the dire poverty facing the country, which was a root cause of the conflict.

The mission recommended that the Council consider the issue of FNL, with a view to ascertaining what additional measures could be taken against those in the movement who compromised the peace process; consider the feasibility of establishing an international judicial commission of inquiry; and urge donor countries to disburse financial aid and extend technical assistance to Burundi. It also recommended the extension of ONUB's mandate.

Security Council consideration. The Council considered the mission's report on 30 November [meeting 5091] and 8 December [meeting 5096], and heard presentations by the head of the mission, who noted that the framework for the end of the transition and the post-transition period had largely been agreed and a referendum on the constitution was set for 22 December. As in the DRC, the mission was encouraged by what it had seen, despite remaining difficulties, which should not be underestimated. In Burundi, the process was more on track; it was currently a question of will and determination. Burundi faced the problem of FNL receiving support in the DRC from the ex-FAR/Interahamwe.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 1 December [meeting 5093], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1577 (2004). The draft [S/2004/930] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 1545(2004) of 21 May 2004 and the statement by its President of 15 August 2004,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to the respect of the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and unity of Burundi, and recalling the importance of the principles of good-neighbourliness and non-interference, and of regional cooperation,

Reaffirming its full support for the process of the Arusha Peace and Reconciliation Agreement for Burundi signed at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, on 28 August 2000 (hereinafter "the Arusha Agreement"), calling upon all the Burundian parties to honour fully their commitments, and assuring them of its determination to support Burundi's efforts to bring the transition to an end successfully through the holding of free and fair elections,

Welcoming the positive achievements that have been made so far by the Burundian sides, including since the deployment of the United Nations Operation in Burundi on 1 June 2004,

Welcoming in particular the agreement signed by the Burundian parties at Pretoria on 6 August 2004, and the subsequent adoption by the Parliament of an interim Constitution, on 20 October 2004, which provides guarantees for all communities to be represented in the post-transition institutions,

Encouraging all Burundian parties to continue their dialogue in a spirit of compromise, in particular during the campaign to explain the interim Constitution and the drawing-up of the electoral code, with a view to a lasting political solution,

Recalling that there is no alternative to the holding of elections as provided for by the Arusha Agreement, and calling upon the transitional authorities to carry through the electoral process scheduled to take place until 22 April 2005,

Paying tribute to the efforts made by the States of the Regional Peace Initiative on Burundi, especially Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania, and the Facilitation, in particular South Africa, to support the peace process in Burundi, and encouraging them to continue to accompany the efforts of the Burundian parties,

Encouraging the international donor community to respond to requests from the Government of Burundi to strengthen its national judicial institutions and rule-of-law capacity,

Condemning all acts of violence as well as violations of human rights and international humanitarian law,

Reiterating its strong condemnation of the Gatumba massacre, and reaffirming that perpetrators of such crimes must be brought to justice,

Taking note of the joint report of the United Nations Operation in Burundi, the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights regarding the Gatumba massacre on 13 August 2004, and taking note also of the statement by the Government of Burundi of 29 October 2004 and of its commitment to bring its investigation into the Gatumba massacre to a prompt conclusion, with international support as appropriate,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General of 15 November 2004,

Noting that obstacles remain to Burundi's stability, and determining that the situation in that country continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the mandate of the United Nations Operation in Burundi, as defined in resolution 1545(2004), shall be extended until 1 June 2005;

2. Urges all the Governments and parties concerned in the region to denounce the use of and incitement to violence, to condemn unequivocally violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law, and actively to cooperate with the United Nations Operation in Burundi and the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and with efforts of States aimed at ending impunity;

3. Calls upon the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and of Rwanda to cooperate unreservedly with the Government of Burundi to ensure that the investigation into the Gatumba massacre is completed and that those responsible are brought to justice;

4. Requests the United Nations Operation in Burundi and the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to continue to provide their assistance, within their mandates, to the Burundian and Congolese authorities, with a view to facilitating the completion of the investigation into the Gatumba massacre and strengthening the security of vulnerable populations;

5. Deeply troubled by the fact that the Parti pour la libération du peuple hutu-Forces nationales de libération of Mr. Agathon Rwaso has claimed responsibility for the Gatumba massacre, expresses its intention to consider appropriate measures that might be taken against those individuals who threaten the peace and national reconciliation process in Burundi;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to keep it informed on a regular basis of developments in the situation in Burundi, the implementation of the Arusha Agreement, the execution of the mandate of the United Nations Operation in Burundi and the action taken by the Burundian authorities following the recommendations of the Council in the fight against impunity, and to submit a report on those developments every three months;

7. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Further developments. Despite slippages in the electoral calendar, there was some progress at the end of the year in the preparation for the referendum on the constitution and elections [S/2005/149]. Voter registration commenced on 20 November and lasted until the end of the month, with extensive logistical support mobilized by ONUB, including transport of registration and electoral materials to all 17 provinces. In total, 3,134,116 Burundians registered to vote, estimated to represent, by province, from 60 to 90 per cent of those eligible.

The Implementation Monitoring Committee, at its twenty-fourth session (17 December), called on the Government to finalize an electoral code and communal law and to collaborate on issues of military rank harmonization within the context of the overall security sector reform/demobilization, disarmament and reintegration programme. On 2 December, President Ndayizeye launched the disarmament and demobilization process in Muramvya, and on 31 December, signed a decree consolidating the combatants of the six armed political parties and movements located in the 12 pre-disarmament assembly areas into five cantonment sites, which paved the way for the transformation and subsequent registration of the armed political parties and movements.

Ad Hoc Advisory Group. The Economic and Social Council's Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Burundi, established in 2003 to examine the humanitarian and economic needs of the country, issued a report in February [S/2004/11] and made recommendations in April [S/2004/266] on action to be taken by both the Economic and Social Council and the Security Council. After considering the reports, the Economic and Social Council took action on those aspects of the situation in Burundi in resolution 2004/2 of 3 May (see p. 933) and resolution 2004/60 of 23 July (see p. 934).

ONUB financing

The Secretary-General, pending the submission of a full budget for the maintenance of ONUB, submitted on 24 May [A/58/802] an interim budget for the period from 21 April to 30 June and from 1 July to 31 December, which reflected the preliminary financial requirements of $58,421,400 and $145,267,500, respectively.

ACABQ, on 24 May [A/58/811], recommended that the Assembly approve a total commitment authority of $156,043,900 to be assessed for ONUB, which included commitment authority in the amount of $49,709,300, inclusive of an amount of $49,491,200 it had already authorized, for the period 21 April to 30 June, and the amount of $106,334,600 for the period from July to October.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

On 18 June [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/58/833], adopted resolution 58/312 without vote [agenda item 170].

Financing of the United Nations Operation in Burundi

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Operation in Burundi and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1545(2004) of 21 May 2004, by which the Council authorized, for an initial period of six months as from 1 June 2004, with the intention to renew it for further periods, the deployment of a peacekeeping operation called the United Nations Operation in Burundi,

1. Expresses concern at the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

Budget estimates for the period from 21 April to 31 October 2004

9. Authorizes the Secretary-General to establish a special account for the United Nations Operation in Burundi for the purpose of accounting for the income received and expenditure incurred in respect of the Operation;

ACABQ, on 5 October [A/59/412], recommended that the total estimated budget requirements for that period be reduced to $329,714,400.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (October)

On 29 October [meeting 46], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/59/528], adopted resolution 59/15 without vote [agenda item 153].

Financing of the United Nations Operation in Burundi

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Operation in Burundi and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Rwanda

Throughout the year, Rwanda and the DRC exchanged charges of interference in each other's internal affairs. The DRC complained on numerous occasions that Rwanda was supporting military operations in DRC territory, while Rwanda alleged that groups opposing its Government were operating from the DRC. (For further information on the charges concerning DRC territory, see section on DRC, above). Rwanda claimed that lack of action by the international community, and particularly on the part of MONUC peacekeepers in the DRC, had emboldened its opponents.

The year 2004 marked the tenth anniversary of the 1994 genocide in Rwanda, for which the General Assembly held a solemn commemoration.

Military situation

Rwanda, on 30 November [S/2004/933], informed the Security Council of the continued violation of its sovereignty and territorial integrity by forces operating from the DRC with relative impunity. Despite Council action, the ex-FAR/Interahamwe forces continued to operate from, and receive supplies in, the territory of another State and to recruit and train troops. Eastern DRC had become a recruiting ground and crucible for the ideology of hate, destruction and extermination in the region. Over the previous three months, those forces had carried out a series of attacks on Rwandan territory, killing people and destroying property. Intending to complete the genocide of 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 282], the forces had also targeted infrastructure vital for Rwanda's economy. Recalling recent incidents, including the attack at Gatumba (see p. 149), Rwanda deplored the international community's lack of reaction, which it claimed had encouraged those groups. Rwanda believed that MONUC should focus on disarming them, as failure to do so would increase tension in the region and undermine the transitional processes in the DRC and Burundi. Rwanda stated that the problem of the genocidal forces was a matter for the Council to resolve. Since all options for resolving the situation had been rejected by the DRC, Rwanda could not stand by and see its people attacked, its infrastructure destroyed and destabilization continue. Having lost one million of its citizens in 1994, Rwanda had a responsibility to protect and defend its people.

The Secretary-General, in a 2 December statement released by his Spokesman [SG/SM/9631- AFR/1076], said that he was disturbed by the increasing tension between the DRC and Rwanda, particularly by indications of military operations on DRC territory against ex-FAR/Interahamwe elements, which Rwanda maintained was a threat to its security. He called on Rwanda to refrain from any military action on DRC territory, which would disrupt the transitional process in that country, and to work within the established process for disarming and repatriating the remaining ex-FAR/Interahamwe elements still in DRC territory. The Secretary-General called on the DRC to intensify its efforts to disarm and repatriate such elements, and indicated that MONUC was prepared to activate the Joint Verification Mechanism for disarming and repatriating those groups.

The Council, in presidential statement S/PRST/2004/45 (see p. 133), expressed concern at reports of military operations by the Rwandan army in eastern DRC and demanded that Rwanda withdraw without delay any forces it might have in the DRC. The Council noted that the presence of ex-FAR and Interahamwe elements in eastern DRC was a source of instability.

Tenth anniversary of 1994 genocide

In 2004, several events were organized at the United Nations to mark the tenth anniversary of the 1994 genocide in Rwanda [YUN 1994, p. 282]. Canada and Rwanda organized the Memorial Conference on the Rwanda Genocide (New York, 26 March). The Secretary-General, in his address, said that the international community had failed Rwanda. However, the United Nations was currently helping the people to recover and reconcile. It was clearing mines, repatriating refugees, rehabilitating clinics and schools, and building up the judicial system, among other things, while the United Nations International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda continued to pursue the perpetrators of the genocide (see p. 1286). The genocide in Rwanda had raised questions that affected all mankind, and the question remained as to whether, confronted by a new Rwanda situation, the response would be effective and timely.

General Assembly commemorative meeting. The General Assembly, having designated 7 April as the International Day of Reflection on the 1994 Genocide in Rwanda in resolution 58/234 [YUN 2003, p. 154], held a commemorative meeting [meeting 82] that day in New York to mark the tenth anniversary of that tragedy. The meeting was addressed by the Presidents of the General Assembly and the Security Council, the Vice-President of the Economic and Social Council, Rwandan President Paul Kagame, the Deputy-Secretary-General and Jacqueline Murekatete, a survivor of the genocide.

The Assembly President, in his statement, said that the Assembly shared the hopes and aspirations of the Government and people of Rwanda in seeking to heal and rebuild a democratic nation, with an overarching vision of economic and social progress for all. The tragedy afforded the United Nations the opportunity to confront the issues that could lead to such situations, determine its own shortcomings in Rwanda and consider what remained to be done to prevent genocide in future years. For his part, the Secretary-General suggested areas for future activities to prevent genocide.

On 8 April [S/2004/310], the EU said that the anniversary was an occasion for reflection by the international community. It was heartened by UN efforts to forewarn the world against future genocide and supported the Secretary-General's proposals to prevent genocide, in particular his decision to appoint a Special Adviser on the Prevention of Genocide (see p. 730). The EU pledged to support Rwanda's recovery.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/137 [draft: A/59/L.45 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 39 (a)].

Assistance to survivors of the 1994 genocide in Rwanda, particularly orphans, widows and victims of sexual violence

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Recalling the findings and recommendations of the independent inquiry commissioned by the Secretary-General, with the approval of the Security Council, into the actions of the United Nations during the 1994 genocide in Rwanda, Recalling also the report containing the findings and recommendations of the International Panel of Eminent Personalities commissioned by the Organization of African Unity to investigate the genocide in Rwanda and the surrounding events, entitled “Rwanda: The Preventable Genocide”,

Recalling further its resolution 58/234 of 23 December 2003, by which it declared 7 April 2004 the International Day of Reflection on the Genocide in Rwanda,

Noting decision EX.CL/Dec.154(V) on the report of the Chairperson of the African Union on the commemoration of the tenth anniversary of the Rwandan genocide, adopted by the Executive Council of the African Union at its fifth ordinary session, held in Addis Ababa from 30 June to 3 July 2004,

Recognizing the numerous difficulties faced by survivors of the 1994 genocide in Rwanda, particularly the orphans, widows and victims of sexual violence, who are poorer and more vulnerable as a result of the genocide, especially the many victims of sexual violence who have contracted HIV and have since either died or become seriously ill with AIDS,

Firmly convinced of the necessity to restore the dignity of the survivors of the 1994 genocide in Rwanda, which would help to promote reconciliation and healing in Rwanda,

Commending the tremendous efforts of the Government and people of Rwanda and civil society organizations, as well as international efforts, to provide support for restoring the dignity of the survivors, including the allocation by the Government of Rwanda of 5 per cent of its national budget every year to support genocide survivors,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to encourage the relevant agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system to continue to work with the Government of Rwanda in developing and implementing programmes aimed at supporting vulnerable groups that continue to suffer from the effects of the 1994 genocide, in alleviating poverty, disease and suffering and in promoting development in Rwanda;

2. Invites the relevant agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system to continue to develop and implement those programmes, utilizing existing resources and encouraging the mobilization of additional voluntary contributions;

3. Invites agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system to ensure that assistance is provided in the specific areas identified as priorities by the Government of Rwanda, notably education for orphans, medical care and treatment for victims of sexual violence, including HIV-positive victims, trauma and psychological counselling for genocide survivors and skills training and microcredit programmes aimed at promoting self-sufficiency and alleviating poverty;

4. Encourages all Member States to seriously consider promoting the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the independent inquiry into the actions of the United Nations during the 1994 genocide in Rwanda, and also encourages all Member States to provide assistance to genocide survivors and other vulnerable groups in Rwanda in support of the present resolution;

5. Expresses its appreciation for development assistance and support for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Rwanda after the 1994 genocide, and calls upon Member States to continue to support the development of Rwanda, inter alia, through programmes under the poverty reduction strategy;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the critical situation of the survivors of the 1994 genocide in Rwanda, particularly orphans, widows and victims of sexual violence, to take all necessary and practicable measures for the implementation of the present resolution, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session.

Arms embargo

On 19 February [S/2004/134], the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 918(1994) [YUN 1994, p. 285] concerning the arms embargo against Rwanda issued a report covering its activities from 1 January to 31 December 2003. In the absence of a specific monitoring mechanism to ensure implementation of the arms embargo, the Committee repeated its previous observation [YUN 2002, p. 142] that it relied solely on the cooperation of States and organizations in a position to provide information on violations of the arms embargo. During the reporting period, no violations were brought to the Committee’s attention.

Central African Republic

The United Nations Peace-building Support Office in the Central African Republic (BONUCA), established by Security Council presidential statement S/PRST/2000/5 [YUN 2000, p. 162], continued in 2004 to support the Government’s efforts to return to stability and achieve reconciliation and reconstruction, following the 2003 coup d’état [YUN 2003, p. 156]. The political situation in the country was marked by progress towards elections, scheduled for early 2005, which were designed to restore constitutional order. The transitional Government, established in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 156], adopted a schedule for elections and considered a draft constitution, electoral code and laws on political parties. The draft constitution was approved by the people of the Central African Republic in a referendum on 5 December and work continued on the draft legislation.

However, the security situation remained precarious, with acts of violence, including summary executions, armed robbery and roadblocks continuing to occur, despite the deployment of defence and security detachments backed by the Central African Economic and Monetary Community (CEMAC) multinational force. There was concern over the possible consequences to the Central African Republic of the crises in the sub-region, in particular the Sudanese region of Darfur.

The Secretary-General extended BONUCA's mandate for an additional year, until 31 December 2005.

Political and security developments

Press statement (23 January). The Security Council President, in a 23 January press statement [SC/7989-AFR/818], following a briefing by the Secretary-General's Representative on the situation in the Central African Republic and BONUCA activities, said that Council members noted with satisfaction that the authorities of the Central African Republic had maintained efforts towards reconciliation and reconstruction, and underlined that the continuation of the national dialogue and the restructuring of the national security forces were positive elements. They called for the strengthening of the CEMAC international force and invited the Central African authorities to ensure that human rights violations did not remain unpunished. The members called on the authorities to allow the electoral operations to take place according to schedule and invited the Secretary-General to examine ways in which BONUCA could assist in that regard.

Communication. On 10 February [S/2004/125], the Central African Republic transmitted to the Council President the calendar for the referendum and elections, adopted by consensus on 23 January by the Office of the President of the Republic, the Government and the Bureau of the National Transition Council (NTC), in the presence of the bureau of the committee to oversee the implementation of the outcome of the national dialogue. The calendar envisaged the holding of the referendum on the constitution in October/November 2004 and presidential and legislative elections in January 2005.

Report of Secretary-General (June). The Secretary-General, in response to presidential statement S/PRST/2001/25 [YUN 2001, p. 156], submitted a 16 June report on the situation in the Central African Republic and BONUCA activities [S/2004/496], covering the first half of 2004.

The political situation during the period was marked by the launching of the electoral process with a view to restoring constitutional legality and the rule of law in 2005. The transitional Government adopted a schedule for the elections and a timeline, which it forwarded to the Security Council on 10 February (see above). The transitional Government transmitted to NTC for its views the draft constitution, the electoral code and ordinances on political parties and the status of the opposition, and on the constitutional court and decentralization. The draft constitution was based on the 1995 Constitution, suspended since the coup d'état of March 2003, and on the recommendations of the national dialogue. The document would be submitted to the people for approval by a referendum in November 2004, followed by legislative and presidential elections in early 2005.

On 30 April, the head of State established the Mixed and Independent Electoral Commission (CEMI) to make preparations for and conduct the elections and ensure implementation of the Electoral Code. Political parties expressed concern over CEMI's independence and integrity. BONUCA established a framework for political consultations with foreign partners who supported the electoral process and the UN system, and UNDP established a technical advisory committee under its project of support to the electoral process. BONUCA also worked to defuse tensions through mediation and good offices with political parties, civil society, trade unions and public authorities, and with the transitional authorities in drafting legal texts.

The Central African authorities remained concerned about the security situation. The lack of security was most evident in the rural areas, where the civilian population was vulnerable to attacks, especially by "former liberators" who assisted General François Bozizé during the 2003 coup d'état. They severely tested the Government, demanding "bonuses promised" in return for their support of the rebellion and holding demonstrations that led to confrontations with the regular forces. Negotiations with the parties, including the Secretary-General's Representative, led to a solution to the problem of the former liberators, but it was uncertain whether the settlement was definitive.

The process of restructuring the defence and security forces was continuing, as was military training and equipping. In the area of sub-regional security cooperation, NTC authorized the ratification of the Protocol to the Treaty establishing the Economic Community of Central African States (ECCAS) on the Council for Peace and Security in Central Africa, adopted in Malabo, Equatorial Guinea, in February 2000. The Government was also pursuing disarmament, particularly in Bangui, and had approved a project for the reintegration of former combatants and support to communities. BONUCA and UNDP were assisting the Government in implementing the project.

The economic situation was characterized by a continued decline in production in most sectors, in particular in timber and diamonds due to the Government's temporary suspension of concessions and operating permits, pending their overhaul. Consequently, tax revenue declined by 30 per cent. The poverty and vulnerability of the population remained a major concern. Despite the prevailing insecurity, operational agencies of the UN system, in particular UNICEF, WHO, UNDP, WFP, UNHCR and FAO, concentrated on humanitarian activities and on active participation in the implementation of emergency programmes. The agencies adopted a development assistance framework for the Central African Republic, highlighting good governance, socio-economic recovery and prevention of HIV/AIDS, which depended on support from the donor community and the availability of additional resources. Despite the difficulties, the overall economic situation was improving, mainly as a result of the gradual resumption of mining and forestry production.

The human rights situation was also improving slowly. General Bozizé appointed a special adviser responsible for human rights and good governance, and the Government established a national committee to draft reports on the human rights situation and formulate a national plan of action for promoting and protecting human rights. BONUCA continued its observation and investigation of human rights violations, meeting victims and visiting detention centres, organizing training of law enforcement officers and providing media coverage of human rights activities.

According to the Secretary-General, the fact that the parties were opting for management by consensus of the transition with a view to a return to constitutional order through legislative and presidential elections in 2005 offered hope for a return to stability. Assistance was urgently needed to consolidate the achievements made and to build confidence. He noted the geo-strategic position of the Central African Republic and the possible humanitarian and security impact of the conflict in the Sudanese region of Darfur. If that crisis persisted, he warned, Sudanese refugees living in camps near the Chad-Central African Republic border would be pushed towards the Central African Republic. He welcomed the recent decision of the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the World Bank and the African Development Bank to support the efforts of the Central African authorities.

UN Standing Advisory Committee consideration. The United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa, at its twenty-first meeting (21-25 June), welcomed the efforts of the transitional Government to implement the recommendations of the 2003 national dialogue and the current political consensus in the country. It expressed concern about the precarious economic and security situation, improvement of which would make it easier to meet the various electoral deadlines and consolidate the positive political developments. The Committee appealed to donors and international financial institutions to provide the Central African Republic with the necessary support; to CEMAC to strengthen efforts to ensure security in the country, particularly in disarmament and the restructuring of the defence and security forces; and to the ECCAS General Secretariat to become actively involved with the electoral process.

Press statement (7 July). Security Council members, in a 7 July press statement by its President [SC/8142-AFR/992], noted the positive evolution of the political situation and progress in the economic and financial fields in the Central African Republic. They welcomed the establishment of CEMI as an important step towards the restoration of constitutional legality and encouraged the Central African authorities to maintain efforts to organize free, transparent and democratic elections in 2005. Members expressed concern regarding the possible consequences to the Central African Republic of the crisis in the subregion, in particular the crisis in Darfur (see p. 235).

Extension of BONUCA's mandate. The Secretary-General, on 18 October [S/2004/874], informed the Security Council of his intention to extend BONUCA's mandate for an additional year, until 31 December 2005. The extension would enable the Office to support efforts to restore constitutional legality and help to create a propitious political environment for holding elections. In addition, he had asked BONUCA to assess developments in neighbouring countries on the situation in the Central African Republic and vice versa. On 28 October [S/2004/875], the Council took note of the proposal.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 October [meeting 5067], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/39 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council commends the Central African authorities, the political parties and civil society of the Central African Republic for the efforts they have made for the ongoing success of the transition process. The Council welcomes in particular the spirit of consensus which the Central African parties have shown and which attests to their determination to continue the transition process to the end.

The Council encourages the Central Africans to continue their efforts to ensure the success of the constitutional referendum in November and the satisfactory organization of free, transparent and democratic presidential and legislative elections in January 2005.

The Council also pays tribute to the United Nations system in the Central African Republic and in particular to the Representative of the Secretary-General, General Lamine Cissé, for his work at the head of the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in the Central African Republic, and reaffirms to him its full support. The Council is pleased that the Secretary-General intends to renew the mandate of the Office until 31 December 2005.

The Council welcomes the assistance provided by the international community to the stabilization and recovery of the Central African Republic as well as the considerable efforts made by the member States of the Central African Economic and Monetary Community in the political, economic and security fields.

The Council calls upon international donors and the international financial institutions to continue to provide resolute support to the Central African Republic, including on the preparation of the upcoming legislative and presidential elections. It also emphasizes that their support will be essential for the country's economic and social recovery, and encourages them to formulate, in close consultation with relevant development agencies and with the Government of the Central African Republic, a concerted development strategy for the country.

However, the Council expresses its concern at the deterioration of the State's finances and of the public sector, and calls upon the Central African authorities to act with determination in order to address this situation.

The Council reiterates its full support for the Central African Economic and Monetary Community multinational force, and calls for the continuation of the restructuring of the Central African Republic's defence and security forces.

The Council also encourages the Central African authorities to continue to combat, with determination, human rights violations.

The Council again expresses its concern at the possible consequences to the Central African Republic of the crises in the subregion. Accordingly, it welcomes with satisfaction the Secretary-General's initiative in asking the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in the Central African Republic to assess the implications of developments in neighbouring countries on the situation in Central African Republic and vice versa.

Report of Secretary-General (December). On 23 December [S/2004/1012], the Secretary-General, reporting on the situation in the Central African Republic and BONUCA activities, said that the electoral process for the holding of general elections continued, supported by the Committee of Foreign Partners to Follow Up on the Electoral Process (China, France, Germany, the EU, UN system agencies, and the CEMAC Executive Secretariat and Force Commander). NTC, at its second session, which closed on 15 July, amended the draft constitution and the draft electoral code, and transmitted them to the Government for adoption. The amendments concerned, among other things, the type of regime to be adopted, the powers of the Prime Minister, the length of the presidential term of office, the conditions for eligibility to the legislature and the presidency, and the conditions for establishing the criminal liability of the head of State. The head of State initialled and distributed the draft constitution and signed and enacted the ordinance on the electoral code.

NTC, at its third session (16 August–1 October), adopted the draft ordinance on political parties and the status of the opposition. National Councillors separately considered the draft constitution, and, with BONUCA's assistance, resolved discrepancies with respect to amendments made in accordance with the recommendations of the 2003 national dialogue. The Government amended the ordinance on the electoral code, modified the draft constitution and enacted it by decree. The draft constitution was approved by the people of the Central African Republic in a referendum on 5 December.

At its fourth session (8–26 November), NTC adopted draft ordinances on the establishment, organization and functioning of the transitional constitutional court, on the establishment of a commission to oversee freedom of the press (Haut Conseil de la communication) and on freedom of the press, all of which were submitted to the Government for adoption.

On 23 August, CEMI set up, in partnership with BONUCA and NTC, a committee of experts to develop an interpretation of the electoral code and measures for applying it to the election dates. An electoral census was carried out from 16 to 24 October. A total of 4,020 voting stations were set up within the country and abroad for 1,400,882 registered voters.

The overall security situation remained precarious. Acts of violence and summary executions attributable to law enforcement forces and robbery and roadblocks by armed groups continued to occur. On 14 September, a National Commission for Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration was established.

The economic and social situation continued to be affected by the poor economic performances of 2002 and 2003, despite the commitments and adjustments made by the Government in agreement with the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and IMF) to gradually restore security throughout the country, reduce State spending and combat bad governance and impunity. Personal income and State revenue declined, while earnings growth remained weak. The agricultural sector continued to be affected by the fall in world coffee and cotton prices. Public expenditure fell as a result of the authorities' commitments to cut State spending. Civil servants and State officials reported that they would be owed salary arrears for five months by the end of 2004.

The humanitarian situation remained precarious, and the poor condition of roads and the prevailing insecurity made it difficult for humanitarian organizations to reach vulnerable population groups. There were around 200,000 displaced persons in the Central African Republic at the end of 2004 and almost 30,000 Central African refugees in Goré, Chad, following the events of 15 March 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 156]. The Central African Republic was hosting almost 46,000 people of Sudanese, Chadian, DRC, Rwandan and Burundian origin. A repatriation operation for DRC refugees living in the Central African Republic began in October.

The Secretary-General determined that the situation in the Central African Republic was gradually improving in spite of shortcomings in governance and human rights. The programmes adopted in August by IMF and the World Bank sent a signal to the authorities to continue their efforts to raise tax revenues. Meanwhile, election preparations were proceeding on schedule, and on 11 December General Bozizé announced his candidacy for president. The compromise achieved with regard to the draft constitution and the draft electoral code significantly improved relations between the Government and NTC, giving rise to new hope for a favourable outcome to the transition, as demonstrated by the smooth holding of the constitutional referendum on 5 December. The Secretary-General encouraged the donor community and friends of the Central African Republic to provide material, financial and technical resources to ensure a lasting consolidation of its institutions.

Other matters. The Central African Republic, by a 4 March letter [S/2004/195], informed the Secretary-General that General Bozizé had agreed to receive and welcome the Haitian President, Jean-Bertrand Aristide, as a purely humanitarian act. (See PART ONE, Chapter II, for more information.)

West Africa

In 2004, the countries in conflict in West Africa recorded modest progress in their search for peace and a return to stability, with the exception of Côte d'Ivoire, where tension remained high.

In March, the Security Council expressed concern about the continuing instability in the region, called for a comprehensive and composite approach to durable solutions to the crises and conflicts that would address the root causes, and considered means to promote peace and security. In that regard, the Council sent a fact-finding mission to the region in June to, among other tasks, identify a coherent UN intervention strategy. The mission made a number of recommendations for addressing the complex problems facing the region and the countries individually, stressing the need for a collective approach and support of the efforts of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS).

In further efforts to promote a regional approach to addressing the serious challenges to peace and security facing West Africa, the Security Council met in March to consider the Secretary-General's report and recommendations for combating subregional and cross-border problems. The Council adopted many of the Secretary-General's recommendations, particularly those relating to the plight of child soldiers and the use and proliferation of mercenaries and small arms, within the context of a regional approach. Other recommendations dealt with disarmament and reintegration of ex-combatants, security sector reform, good governance, halting human rights and humanitarian abuses, and an international presence in post-conflict countries. The Secretary-General also submitted to the Council an assessment of the role and performance of the United Nations Office for West Africa (UNOWA) in promoting regional solutions to cross-border and regional problems and conflict prevention.

In Côte d'Ivoire, progress in implementing the 2003 Linas-Marcoussis Agreement was stymied by the disagreements among the political parties over the delegation of powers in the Government of National Reconciliation and their refusal to lay down their arms. In February, the Security Council established the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire (UNOCI), thereby expanding the UN presence in the country. A demonstration in March led to violent clashes in Abidjan between the Ivorian security forces and demonstrators and led to the withdrawal of opposition forces from the Government. After months of political stalemate, the parties signed the Accra III Agreement on reactivating the peace process and on means for implementing the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement. However, little progress followed, and hostilities erupted again in November when government forces attacked rebels' strongholds in the north, crossing the Zone of Confidence, a belt across the middle of the country controlled by UNOCI. The Council imposed an arms embargo and adopted other sanctions on Côte d'Ivoire. To get the peace process back on track, mediation efforts were led by President Thabo Mbeki of South Africa, which resulted in the parties' agreement in December on a plan of action for advancing the peace process. By the end of the year, tensions in the capital, Abidjan, and the rest of the country had decreased and significant progress was made in fulfilling all outstanding requirements under the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement.

Both Liberia and Sierra Leone experienced positive movement in efforts to stabilize their respective political situations. In Liberia, concerted efforts were made to implement the 2003 Comprehensive Peace Agreement, the framework for the establishment of the National Transitional Government and the end of civil strife. The United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL), established in 2003, monitored the ceasefire, assisted in disarming combatants and facilitated the delivery of humanitarian aid. The deployment of the Mission's troops throughout the country in 2004 brought relative calm and security that permitted progress towards the restoration of State authority. The disarmament and demobilization of the armed forces were completed in October and resettlement of displaced persons commenced. The Government continued to encounter difficulties in delivering basic services, extending civil administration throughout the country and establishing electoral procedures. The outbreak of violence in Monrovia in late October was a reminder of the fragility of the peace process.

Sierra Leone was able to consolidate its stability in 2004, implementing most of the provisions of the 2000 Agreement on the Ceasefire and Cessation of Hostilities (Abuja Agreement). That progress and fulfilment of the benchmarks for the drawdown of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL) created the conditions for the reduction of the Mission from 11,500 troops at the beginning of the year to 5,000. Meanwhile, Sierra Leone continued efforts to enhance the capacity of its armed forces and police to enable them to ensure security and stability. The disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme was formally closed on 31 March, with more than 54,000 ex-combatants having received benefits. Local elections were held in May for the first time in 32 years. The Truth and Reconciliation Commission released its final report to the public, and the Special Court for Sierra Leone continued to try those accused of serious human rights abuses and crimes against humanity during the 10 years of civil war.

In view of the progress achieved, the Security Council, in September, redefined the UNAMSIL mandate. As the country remained generally calm, UNAMSIL proceeded with its drawdown and transferred responsibility for national security to the Government of Sierra Leone.

Guinea-Bissau was also successful in implementing the terms of its peace framework, the 2003 Political Transition Charter. The main achievements in 2004 were the holding of legislative elections in March and the formation of a new Government in May, the resumption by some governmental institutions of their functions and the start of preparations for presidential elections in April 2005. The United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Guinea-Bissau (UNOGBIS) continued to support the Government in the peace process and to promote social and economic development, which remained in a critical socio-economic situation. Progress in implementing the Political Transition Charter was halted temporarily by a military mutiny in October; however, the situation was ameliorated when the Government, having received international assistance and adopted fiscal reforms, was able to satisfy one of the grievances that led to the march, paying the salary arrears of the armed forces and civil services. Presidential elections were scheduled for 2005 and efforts were made to restructure the security sector. To assist the Government in those efforts, the Security Council in December extended the UNOGBIS mandate and expanded its responsibilities.

Cameroon and Nigeria took steps in 2004 to resolve their border issues, with UN assistance, mainly through the Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission. The Commission, established by the Secretary-General following the 2002 ruling of the International Court of Justice on the land and maritime boundary between the two countries, began work on the delimitation of the land and maritime borders.

Regional issues

Threats to peace and security

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, on 12 March [S/2004/200], reported on ways to combat subregional and cross-border problems in West Africa, as requested by the Security Council in presidential statement S/PRST/2003/11 [YUN 2003, p. 176]. The Secretary-General noted that, while the three cross-border problems of child soldiers, mercenaries and small arms were important contributory causes of conflict in West Africa, their relationship with the instability was primarily symptomatic, not causal.

Based on extensive consultations by his Special Representative for West Africa within the UN system and in the subregion, he made recommendations to address the cross-border problems, in the areas of improving UN harmonization, ratification and observance of existing conventions, collaboration in the Mano River Union (MRU) area, strengthening the ECOWAS secretariat and implementing the 1998 ECOWAS moratorium on the importation, exportation and manufacture of small arms and light weapons in West Africa, supporting national commissions, disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes, security sector reform, reducing extortion at roadblocks within and between countries, strengthening civil society participation and awareness-raising, and “naming and shaming” small arms exporters and private security companies.

To improve harmonization among the UN actors active in West Africa, the Secretary-General suggested that his Special Representative for West Africa organize meetings among the senior staff of the UN political and peacekeeping missions in the region, and the regional heads of UN agencies and programmes, with the participation of senior ECOWAS officials and civil society representatives. He called on regional Governments to ratify and observe existing conventions on small arms, child soldiers and mercenaries and to adopt policies against the recruitment of child soldiers and mercenaries. ECOWAS and the United Nations, with the MRU countries (Guinea, Liberia, Sierra Leone), should explore ways of enhancing international attention to the priority cross-border problems, including the convening of an international conference on assistance to that region. MRU States and Côte d’Ivoire, with UN and other assistance, should initiate joint security patrols and common border management. ECOWAS should reinforce its four observation and monitoring zones to gather more information on cross-border problems, authorize information-sharing and set up a database of individuals and groups suspected of trafficking in small arms, mercenaries and child soldiers. It should also adopt a legally binding instrument to complement the work done so far under its 1998 moratorium, due to expire in 2004, including a ban on mercenaries; harmonize national legislation and common penalties; and begin work on a regional arms register. ECOWAS should also support the strengthening of national arms control commissions. A register of arms held by the military and security agencies should be maintained.

In the area of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, the lessons learned in Mali and Sierra Leone should be applied in other areas in West Africa, and UNOWA and UN missions in Côte d’Ivoire, Liberia and Sierra Leone should collaborate regarding a true disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process. Development projects should be made contingent on the collection of arms, and disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes should contain specific elements for child and women combatants. Security sector reform could be improved, including in human rights and humanitarian law, and by convening a meeting of defence and interior ministers. The capacity of frontier services should also be strengthened. To reduce extortion at roadblocks, ECOWAS members should abide by their commitments to free passage for people and goods and reduce illegitimate checkpoints.

To halt human rights and humanitarian abuses, the Secretary-General called for further concerted pressure, including international sanctions, against the recruiters of children and mercenaries, as well as commercial companies and individuals involved in such recruitment and which exported small arms to the subregion. Among other measures to control small arms, he proposed that exporting countries should force manufacturers to inscribe indelible serial numbers on weapons and importing countries should strengthen licensing procedures.

The Secretary-General said that addressing the cross-border regional issues identified by the Council in a comprehensive manner required a fundamental change in the political approach. The regional and international communities should help Governments by providing targeted assistance and ensuring that international standards were respected, and by responding at an earlier stage to governance and humanitarian crises. The international community should also maintain a robust presence in post-conflict countries to prevent regression into conflict and to promote good governance and peace-building. The Secretary-General hoped that Council members would explore ways to enhance the ECOWAS capacity to address cross-border regional issues, support the activities of civil society organizations, including women’s associations, and identify specific recommendations from among those in his report for further action.

Security Council consideration. At the Security Council’s 25 March meeting [meeting 4933] to consider cross-border issues in West Africa, the Secretary-General said that ECOWAS had taken important initiatives to tackle the serious challenges to peace and security in West Africa, demonstrating the resolve of Africans to settle African problems in cooperation with the international community. The recommendations in his report could not be implemented solely on a country-by-country basis but required a multifaceted regional approach. Special attention should be paid to the proliferation of small arms, the illegal exploitation of natural resources and the use of child soldiers and mercenaries, as well as roadblocks. To build on his report on the subject (see p. 165), he had asked his Special Representative for West Africa to convene a meeting to explore how ECOWAS and the relevant UN entities could best move ahead.

The ECOWAS Chairman (Ghana) said that, though the Secretary-General's recommendations for joint security patrols and common border management were laudable, ECOWAS felt that the best solution was finding a way to restore peace to the entire region. He stated that, with the drawdown of UNAMSIL (see p. 212), there was a need to ensure that the withdrawal took account of the Government's ability to assume responsibility for overall security, enhance control of natural resources and consolidate civil administration throughout the country. It was also vital that UNAMSIL continue to monitor the movement of armed elements along Liberia's borders to prevent incursions. UNOWA should be tasked with getting the leaders of Côte d'Ivoire, Sierra Leone and Guinea to stay engaged in the disarmament process and to help UNMIL to monitor the concealment of arms in Liberia's neighbouring States.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 25 March [meeting 4933], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/7 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council, recalling its relevant resolutions and the statements by its President, emphasizes the importance of addressing the continuing factors of instability in West Africa within a regional framework. It recognizes the need for a comprehensive and composite approach for durable solutions to the complex crises and conflicts in West Africa. Such an approach should address the root causes of conflict and consider means to promote sustainable peace and security, including development and economic revival, good governance and political reform.

The Council takes note in this regard of the report of the Secretary-General of 12 March 2004 and its recommendations to address cross-border issues, in particular the plight of child soldiers and the use and proliferation of mercenaries and small arms, within the context of a regional approach. The Council believes action on the report should be taken as part of a wider strategy of conflict prevention, crisis management and post-conflict stabilization in the subregion.

The Council welcomes the principles set out by the African Union and the New Partnership for Africa's Development which provide an important framework for such action. It encourages the States members of the Economic Community of West African States to ensure that these are fully implemented. It consequently urges the Economic Community of West African States to work closely with the United Nations system, the international financial institutions and other international and regional organizations concerned, including the newly established African Union Peace and Security Council, as well as with interested States, in drafting a regional conflict prevention policy taking fully into account the recommendations of the recent joint United Nations and European Union mission to the region.

The Council stresses the importance of the role of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for West Africa in facilitating the coordination of a coherent United Nations approach to cross-border and transnational problems in the subregion.

The Council encourages the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for West Africa to continue to hold regular meetings on coordination among the United Nations missions in the region in the interest of improved cohesion and maximum efficiency of United Nations activities in West Africa. It also encourages the greatest possible harmonization among United Nations agencies within countries of the subregion.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to encourage the United Nations missions in West Africa to share information and their logistic and administrative resources as far as possible, without impeding the satisfactory execution of their respective mandates, in order to increase their effectiveness and reduce costs.

The Council expresses its intention to consider the recommendations of the Secretary-General to facilitate cross-border operations and to strengthen cooperation among the United Nations missions in the region, including the possibility of 'hot pursuit' operations, joint air patrolling, shared border responsibility, the possible reinforcement of airspace monitoring and joint planning for the repatriation of foreign combatants. It looks forward to receiving, as soon as possible, the recommendations of the Secretary-General, after due consultation with the Governments concerned. It also encourages the States in the subregion to organize common patrols along their respective borders, jointly if need be, with the respective United Nations peacekeeping operations.

The Council invites the Secretary-General and the Economic Community of West African States to take the requisite practical decisions to improve the coordination of the activities of the United Nations and the Economic Community of West African States in West Africa.

The Council stresses the importance of a regional approach in the preparation and implementation of demobilization, disarmament and reintegration programmes. To this end it invites the United Nations missions in West Africa, the Governments concerned, the appropriate financial institutions, international development agencies and donor countries to work together to harmonize individual country demobilization, disarmament and reintegration programmes within an overarching regional strategy to design community development programmes to be implemented alongside demobilization, disarmament and reintegration programmes, and to pay special attention to the specific needs of children in armed conflict.

The Council reiterates the importance of finding durable solutions to the problem of refugees and displaced persons in the subregion, and urges the States in the region to promote necessary conditions for their voluntary and safe return with the support of relevant international organizations and donor countries.

The Council considers that illegal trafficking in arms poses a threat to international peace and security in the region. It, therefore, urges the States members of the Economic Community of West African States to fully implement their moratorium on the import, export and manufacture of light weapons, signed in Abuja on 31 October 1998. It also invites them to study the possibility of strengthening its provisions.

The Council invites the States members of the Economic Community of West African States to take all necessary steps to better combat illegal trafficking in small arms and light weapons in the region, such as the establishment of a regional register of small arms and light weapons. The Council calls on donor countries to help the member States implement these steps.

The Council urges all States, in particular those in the region and those with a capacity to export arms, to ensure that arms embargoes are fully implemented in the subregion. It expresses its intention to pay close attention and remain in consultation with the Economic Community of West African States and Member States on steps to stop the illicit flows of arms to conflict zones in the region.

The Council recognizes the need to address both the supply and demand side with regard to private companies selling illegally small arms or security services, and invites the Governments concerned to take appropriate steps to prevent such illegal sales.

The Council recalls the measures it has implemented on the illegal exploitation and trade of diamonds and timber in the subregion, and encourages the Economic Community of West African States and its member States to promote transparent and sustainable exploitation of those resources.

The Council encourages the Economic Community of West African States to publicly identify parties and actors who are shown to engage in illicit trafficking of small arms in the subregion and use mercenaries, and expresses its intention to consider adopting this practice in relation to the conflicts in West Africa.

The Council recalls that the existence of the many illegitimate checkpoints and the practice of extortion at those checkpoints in the region harms the security of civilians and is a major stumbling block to the economic development of all West Africa. It therefore invites the Governments concerned to take the necessary steps to effectively address this impediment to regional economic integration with the support of the international community.

The Council calls upon the States members of the Economic Community of West African States to work together to agree to a coherent approach to the problem of foreign combatants.

The Council calls upon the Mano River Union States to resume dialogue and to consider holding a summit of heads of State and meetings of ministers to develop a common approach to their shared security issues and confidence-building measures.

The Council considers that civil society actors, including the media, have an important role to play in crisis management and conflict prevention in the region and that their efforts in this regard deserve to be actively supported by the regional States, the Economic Community of West African States, the international community and the United Nations system. Increased support should be provided for the media to raise awareness about the plight of child soldiers, the use and proliferation of small arms and the recruitment of mercenaries.

The Council welcomes the consideration being given in the International Contact Group on Liberia to broadening its mandate to the cross-border issues concerning Liberia and its neighbouring countries.

The Council considers reform of the security sector an essential element for peace and stability in West Africa, and urgently calls upon donor countries and the international financial community to coordinate their efforts to support the Economic Community of West African States, in particular its Executive Secretariat, and to assist the States in the subregion in their efforts to reform the security sector.

The Council, in the context of its emphasis on the regional dimension of the problems in West Africa, expresses its intention to keep under review the implementation of the above-mentioned recommendations, and requests the Secretary-General to report on them at the occasion of his regular reports on the United Nations missions in the subregion.

MRU summit. The Mano River Union countries, at their summit on 20 May in Conakry, Guinea [S/2004/468], expressed satisfaction at the implementation of the disarmament, demobilization, reintegration and rehabilitation programme, which made possible the voluntary repatriation of Sierra Leonean refugees. The summit considered that all armed individuals conducting destabilizing activities against a legally established Government were to be considered as rebels or mercenaries, and that MRU member States should take legal and security measures to render them harmless. They called on the regional States to establish cooperation and monitoring mechanisms to combat that problem.

Security Council missions to West Africa

Report on 2003 mission

Security Council consideration. On 23 January [meeting 4899], the Security Council considered the progress report of the Secretary-General on its 2003 mission to West Africa [YUN 2003, p. 164]. The Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs briefed the Council on developments in the countries visited since the publication of the report. He concluded that, by and large, progress continued to be made in implementing the mission's recommendations. Having invested so much already in the subregion in terms of capital and resources, it was important that the Council remain engaged to build upon the progress being made in Guinea-Bissau, Côte d'Ivoire, Liberia and Sierra Leone and address the cross-cutting regional issues relating to peace and security and governance.

On 15 June [S/2004/491], the Security Council President informed the Secretary-General that the Council was sending a mission to West Africa (Ghana, Côte d'Ivoire, Liberia, Sierra Leone, Nigeria, Guinea-Bissau and Guinea), headed by Emyr Jones Parry (United Kingdom), from 20 to 29 June to, among other tasks, identify a coherent strategy for UN intervention in conflict prevention and peace-building, encourage ECOWAS to implement a subregional conflict prevention strategy, and strengthen UN-ECOWAS-MRU co-operation. Specific tasks were identified for the mission in each of the countries concerned.

In its 2 July report to the Council [S/2004/525], the mission stated that it had focused on the link between security and development, the need to build good governance and respect for human rights as the necessary foundation for lasting peace and prosperity. The region's borders were so porous and the problems, including the prevalence of small arms, fighters, child soldiers and HIV/AIDS, moved so easily across them that a collective approach was necessary to effect real and lasting change. A collective and integrated UN strategy should encompass the transition from peacekeeping to peace-building and development, including the role of UN peacekeeping operations in helping to create the right socioeconomic conditions for lasting stability. ECOWAS was taking an increasingly active role by mobilizing regional countries to undertake peacekeeping missions; leading conflict resolution initiatives, as in Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea-Bissau and Liberia; and working with UNOWA on a regional conflict prevention strategy. Those efforts were gradually helping to build security and stability in the subregion, which, in turn, would lay the basis for greater economic integration and growth. The mission noted the progress in peacebuilding in the region in general, but was concerned by the breakdown in the peace process in Côte d'Ivoire.

The mission was gratified to learn about the enlarged programme of collaboration between ECOWAS and UNOWA to address cross-border problems in the subregion. The mission supported the efforts by the EU, UNDP and UNOWA to establish a strategic and operational planning capacity in the office of the ECOWAS Executive Secretary. It also welcomed the ECOWAS and UNOWA initiative to identify ways of preventing military coups and other unconstitutional means of seizing or holding power, as well as mitigating the abuses of power that were usually the root causes of such actions.

The mission called on all parties to cease the use of child soldiers, emphasized the need to reintegrate former child combatants, and welcomed the efforts of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and others to strengthen the ECOWAS Child Protection Unit. It recommended that additional resources be provided rapidly for UNOWA. It underlined the need to include in the regional approach to disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes not only those countries emerging from conflict but also those seriously affected by conflicts in neighbouring countries, such as Guinea, Mali and Burkina Faso.

With regard to small arms, the mission called on exporting countries to take action against those transgressing national laws or UN sanctions. The mission called on donors and institutions to provide assistance, particularly transport capacity and logistical assistance to increase the subregion's peacekeeping capacity. It encouraged ECOWAS, working with UNOWA, to develop a conflict prevention strategy, and recommended that the UN system develop strategies to deal with problems afflicting border regions in order to prevent conflicts from spreading further. Countries should also ensure that border controls curbed unauthorized cross-border movements, and UN peacekeeping operations should pay special attention to the monitoring of border areas.

The mission appealed to donors to increase contributions to humanitarian appeals, and encouraged greater support to West African civil society organizations. To promote job creation and economic opportunity, it recommended that Governments in the region work towards greater accountability and transparency, through such measures as anti-corruption campaigns and policies. Noting the principle of no impunity for serious human rights abuses, the mission urged the Council to take measures at the appropriate time, including the imposition of targeted sanctions against the individuals concerned.

The Council heard an oral briefing by the head of the mission on its visit to West Africa on 30 June [meeting 5000] and considered the mission's written report on 16 July [meeting 5005].

UNOWA activities

On 4 October [S/2004/797], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council a review of the activities of the United Nations Office for West Africa. The Office, established in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 162], became operational only in January 2003 in Dakar, Senegal. The review stated that, despite initial administrative and logistical constraints and unforeseen developments in the region, the Office had made considerable progress. It had proved useful in raising public awareness about cross-border and subregional problems, bringing a regional perspective to issues and promoting conflict prevention. It also developed mechanisms and promoted plans of action for enhancing linkages with other UN entities and national and international partners, supported peacemaking efforts, especially in Côte d'Ivoire and Liberia, undertook studies on subregional issues and conducted field missions to assess developments in tension-prone areas. The Secretary-General had also entrusted UNOWA with following up on the implementation of the 2002 decision [YUN 2002, p. 1265] of the International Court of Justice on land and maritime boundaries between Cameroon and Nigeria (see p. 230).

Promoting an integrated regional approach to the complex challenges facing West Africa remained a long-term process requiring sustained interaction between UNOWA and its partners. To that end, the Secretary-General recommended that UNOWA's mandate be extended for another period of three years, from 1 January 2005 to 31 December 2007, subject to a midterm review in July 2006. He intended to strengthen UNOWA, as called for by the Council's mission to West Africa (see p. 169).

Côte d'Ivoire

Concerted efforts by the United Nations, ECOWAS and the international community continued in 2004 to help facilitate a return to peace and stability in Côte d'Ivoire through implementation of the 2003 Linas-Marcoussis Agreement [YUN 2003, p. 166], including providing assistance to the Government of National Reconciliation of Côte d'Ivoire, established under that Agreement. The main responsibility for peacekeeping rested with the Licorne (French forces) and the ECOWAS Mission in Côte d'Ivoire (ECOMICI), whose deployment was endorsed by the Security Council in resolution 1464(2003) [ibid., p. 168]. Forces from both entities were deployed along the Zone of Confidence separating the Government-controlled south of the country from the north, controlled by the rebel movement, Forces nouvelles. Those efforts were supported by the United Nations Mission in Côte d'Ivoire (MINUCI), established in May 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 172] to facilitate implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, monitor the security situation and complement the ECOWAS and French peacekeeping forces. The mission was headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General.

During the year, the Government of National Reconciliation attempted to fulfil its tasks as outlined by the Agreement and to work towards national elections in 2005. However, implementation was hampered by continued disagreements over the delegation of powers. Based on reports of an investigative mission sent to evaluate MINUCI's progress, the Secretary-General recommended that the United Nations expand its peacekeeping mission. The Security Council established the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire (UNOCI) in February, with a maximum strength of 6,240 UN military personnel, and requested the Secretary-General to transfer authority from MINUCI and ECOWAS forces to UNOCI. At the same time, the Council authorized the French forces to use all necessary means to support UNOCI. The UN mission's wide-ranging mandate included responsibilities for monitoring the ceasefire and movements of armed groups; assisting in disarmament, demobilization, reintegration, repatriation and resettlement programmes; protecting UN personnel, institutions and civilians; facilitating humanitarian assistance; supporting implementation of the peace process; contributing to the protection of human rights; promoting the peace process through public information; and assisting the Government in restoring law and order.

The peace process stalled in March, due to rising political tension and lack of progress in implementing the terms of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement. Some parties refused to lay down their arms, and others either suspended participation in the Government of National Reconciliation or announced their intention to do so. As frustration mounted, demonstrations were held, despite a government ban, resulting in violent clashes in the capital, Abidjan, between the Ivorian security forces and demonstrators. Investigation into the events determined that the excessive use of force was not proportional to the situation.

A series of diplomatic efforts by a number of heads of regional States and others to steer the peace process back on track, including a visit by the Security Council mission to the subregion, resulted in the signing on 30 July of the Accra III Agreement, which committed the parties to a framework for reactivating the peace process and fully implementing the terms of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, including resolving the issue of eligibility for the presidency, adoption of all legal reforms envisaged under the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, and agreeing on a clear delegation of powers from the President to the Prime Minister. The Council welcomed the Agreement and urged all parties to implement it in good faith.

However, the parties failed to make much progress in fulfilling the terms of the Agreement in the following months. Hostilities broke out again in early November when government forces launched attacks against positions held by the Forces nouvelles in the north. Fighting and violent demonstrations quickly spread to other parts of the country, and nine French peacekeepers were killed by government forces. On 6 November, the Secretary-General asked the Security Council to confirm that UNOCI could use all necessary means to prevent any hostile action in the Zone of Confidence, which it did on the same day. Nine days later the Council took punitive action against those involved in the fighting by imposing an arms embargo against Côte d'Ivoire and a travel ban and a freeze of funds against those blocking the peace process. The Council established a committee to designate those individuals and entities subject to the sanctions.

The events in November were a serious setback to the prospects for peace. For the remainder of the year, there was some progress in returning to negotiations, principally through the mediation efforts of President Thabo Mbeki of South Africa, who led an AU diplomatic initiative in co-operation with the United Nations and ECOWAS. By late December, most of the major legislative reforms envisaged in the peace agreements had been drafted, including an amendment to article 35 of the Constitution on eligibility for the presidency.

Political and security developments

The Secretary-General reported [S/2004/443] a number of encouraging developments in the peace process at the beginning of the year. On 6 January, the Forces nouvelles returned to the Government of National Reconciliation and participated in subsequent meetings of the Council of Ministers, where major legal reforms envisaged in the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement were considered. On 14 January, the Secretary-General of the Forces nouvelles reaffirmed his movement's commitment to remain in the Government. The first extraordinary session of the National Assembly was convened to consider some of the draft laws envisaged under the Agreement, including those related to the identification of the population and the residence status of foreigners, the reconstitution of the Independent Electoral Commission, the establishment of the National Commission on Human Rights, and land reform. On 12 January, President Laurent Gbagbo met with Guillaume Soro, leader of the Forces nouvelles, for the first time since that party had suspended participation in the Government. On 28 January, President Gbagbo agreed to restructure the management of the Ivorian Radio and Television, which had been a source of major political friction. In addition, the Government took steps towards deploying State administration and providing basic services to Forces nouvelles-controlled areas.

In the area of military cooperation, on 9 January, the quadripartite commission (Forces armées nationales de Côte d'Ivoire (FANCI), the armed wing of Forces nouvelles, ECOMICI and Licorne) signed the Yamoussoukro Agreement on the joint operational plan and guidelines for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme. Both FANCI and the Forces nouvelles committed themselves to implementing the programme. On 14 February, the commission met to consider further plans and agreed on an exchange of prisoners to be carried out on 4 March. The Prime Minister, Seydou Diarra, announced that the programme would start on 8 March. However, the political climate began to worsen. On 26 February, Mr. Soro declared that, unless all key issues of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement were addressed, his movement would not lay down arms before the October 2005 elections.

Communications (January/February). President Gbagbo, in a speech delivered on 20 January [S/2004/67], reported on the Government's efforts towards achieving a peaceful solution to the crisis, and indicated that, within the powers granted to him by the Constitution, he intended to submit a number of issues to referendum.

The AU Central Organ of the Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution, at a meeting on 30 January [S/2004/88], expressed satisfaction at the progress made in the Ivorian peace process, particularly the return of the Forces nouvelles to the Government. It encouraged the Ivorian political forces to continue to honour their commitments, in conformity with the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, and supported the requests by Côte d'Ivoire and ECOWAS for the speedy deployment of a peacekeeping force in that country and the Secretary-General's proposal for such a mission [YUN 2003, p. 171].

Report of assessment mission. On 6 January [S/2004/3], the Secretary-General reported on MINUCI's efforts to facilitate peace and security in the country, including the report of an assessment mission sent to Côte d'Ivoire from 3 to 11

December 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 183] and his recommendation for expanding MINUCI's mandate in the light of the realities on the ground. In the meantime, the President of the General Assembly, in an 8 January letter [S/2004/100] to the Security Council President, drew attention to resolution 58/275 [YUN 2003, p. 175] concerning consideration of the financing of MINUCI at the Assembly's resumed fifty-eighth (2004) session, scheduled for 8 March to 2 April.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (4 February)

On 4 February [meeting 4909], the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1527(2004). The draft [S/2004/82] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions concerning Côte d'Ivoire, in particular its resolutions 1514(2003) of 13 November 2003, 1498(2003) of 4 August 2003 and 1464(2003) of 4 February 2003,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and unity of Côte d'Ivoire, and recalling the importance of the principles of good-neighbourliness, non-interference and cooperation in relations between the States of the region,

Reaffirming its endorsement of the agreement signed by the Ivorian political forces at Linas-Marcoussis, France, on 23 January 2003 ("the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement") and approved by the Conference of Heads of State on Côte d'Ivoire held in Paris on 25 and 26 January 2003,

Stressing the importance of the complete and unconditional implementation of the measures provided for under the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, and taking note with satisfaction of the progress made recently in this regard,

Recalling its full support for the efforts of the Economic Community of West African States and France to promote a peaceful settlement of the conflict, and welcoming in particular the effective action taken by the Economic Community of West African States Mission in Côte d'Ivoire in order to stabilize the country, as well as the commitment of the African Union in supporting the process of national reconciliation in Côte d'Ivoire,

Taking note of the message addressed to the Security Council on 10 November 2003 by the President of the Republic of Côte d'Ivoire, in which he requested the transformation of the United Nations Mission in Côte d'Ivoire into a peacekeeping operation,

Noting the need for the Mission to continue carrying out its mandate as outlined in its resolution 1479(2003) of 13 May 2003,

Affirming its readiness to consider the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General of 6 January 2004 as well as the need for coordination of the United Nations efforts in West Africa,

Noting with concern the continued existence of challenges to the stability of Côte d'Ivoire, and determining that the situation in Côte d'Ivoire continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Côte d'Ivoire shall be extended until 27 February 2004;

2. Decides also to renew until 27 February 2004 the authorization given to Member States participating in forces of the Economic Community of West African States, together with French Forces supporting them;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General of 6 January 2004 on the United Nations Mission in Côte d'Ivoire;

4. Calls upon the signatories to the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement to carry out expeditiously their responsibilities under the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement;

5. Also calls upon the signatories to the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement to take the steps called for by the Secretary-General in paragraph 86 of his report, and expresses its readiness to help them to achieve lasting peace and stability;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, pending a decision by the Security Council on the reinforcement of the United Nations presence in Côte d'Ivoire as recommended in paragraph 61 of the report of the Secretary-General, to prepare the possible deployment of a peacekeeping operation within five weeks after such decision by the Council;

7. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Establishment of UNOCI

To help him finalize his proposals for expanding the UN peacekeeping mission in Côte d'Ivoire, the Secretary-General sent a technical team to that country from 16 to 27 January to evaluate the situation. In his 9 February report [S/2004/3/Add.1], he pointed out that under the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, the international community was requested to support the Government of National Reconciliation in restructuring the security forces. However, the conduct of the National Police and the Gendarmerie, including human rights violations, corruption and extortion at checkpoints along major arteries, contributed to a widespread culture of impunity. The security forces had ceased to function in the northern part of the country, where law enforcement and policing activities were carried out by "interim structures". A plan was being prepared for the return and reintegration of the National Police and the Gendarmerie to the north, which appeared to have the agreement of the Forces nouvelles, but the latter insisted on a neutral UN presence during the transition period. Another important concern to be urgently addressed was the restoration of law enforcement institutions and personnel in the zone of confidence. The judicial system had also ceased functioning in the north and in the zone of confidence. The prison system was underfunded and prisoners were held without access to proper judicial procedures.

The Secretary-General proposed that in the southern part of the country where national police operations had not been disrupted, the main role of the UN civilian police would be to advise the Government on restructuring the Gendarmerie and the National Police. It would also advise law enforcement authorities and observe their operation, with a view to deterring excesses and abuses. In the north and in the zone of confidence, the UN civilian police would advise the Government on the restoration of a police presence and instil confidence in the population so as to facilitate the restoration of that presence there. The UN civilian police, comprising 350 UN officers, would provide advice and support aimed at enhancing the operational capabilities and professionalism of the police and gendarmerie, and the restoration of law enforcement institutions and personnel in the zone of confidence and in the north. The deployment of all UN civilian police would begin in Abidjan in the south and Bouaké in the north, and gradually expand throughout the country.

The Secretary-General also recommended the establishment of a small judicial unit to help address key outstanding issues identified in the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement relating to strengthening the independence of the judiciary, national identification and citizenship, human rights, land tenure, and the criteria for eligibility for the presidency and other elections-related issues. The unit, comprising up to five international staff, would support and advise judicial authorities and the Government on the re-establishment of an impartial judicial system in areas where the administration of justice had broken down, and encourage the transparency of the justice system. It would follow legislative, judicial and administrative developments on matters central to implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement. In view of the need to re-establish a prison system in the north and to strengthen the system in the south, it was recommended that the civilian police and judicial component of the proposed peacekeeping operation also include a corrections unit to advise national authorities.

In a later addendum [S/2004/3/Add.2], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the financial implications for the deployment of a UN peacekeeping operation in Côte d'Ivoire were projected at $303 million for a six-month period, including $149 million in recurrent and $154 million in non-recurrent costs. The projections, which took into account MINUCI's personnel and assets, provided for the deployment of 6,240 military personnel and 435 international and 529 national staff, as well as 119 United Nations Volunteers.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (27 February)

On 27 February [meeting 4918], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1528 (2004). The draft [S/2004/146] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1464(2003) of 4 February 2003, 1479(2003) of 13 May 2003, 1498(2003) of 4 August 2003, 1514(2003) of 13 November 2003 and 1527(2004) of 4 February 2004, and the statements by its President on Côte d'Ivoire,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and unity of Côte d'Ivoire, and recalling the importance of the principles of good-neighbourliness, non-interference and regional cooperation,

Recalling that it endorsed the agreement signed by the Ivorian political forces at Linas-Marcoussis, France, on 23 January 2003 ("the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement") and approved by the Conference of Heads of State on Côte d'Ivoire, held in Paris on 25 and 26 January 2003,

Taking note with satisfaction of the recent progress, in particular the return of the Forces nouvelles to the Government, the agreement reached on the implementation of the programme of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, and the talks between the President of the Republic of Côte d'Ivoire and the Forces nouvelles,

Considering that the Ivorian parties have made the progress called for by the Secretary-General towards the steps mentioned in paragraph 86 of his report of 6 January 2004 on the United Nations Mission in Côte d'Ivoire, as confirmed to the Council on 4 February 2004, and encouraging the Ivorian parties to continue their efforts in that direction,

Calling upon the parties and the Government of National Reconciliation to take all necessary steps to prevent further violations of human rights and international humanitarian law and to put an end to impunity,

Reaffirming its resolution 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000 on women and peace and security, its resolutions 1379(2001) of 20 November 2001 and 1460(2003) of 30 January 2003 on children and armed conflict, and its resolutions 1265(1999) of 17 September 1999 and 1296(2000) of 19 April 2000 on the protection of civilians in armed conflict,

Welcoming and encouraging efforts by the United Nations to sensitize peacekeeping personnel in the prevention and control of HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases in all its peacekeeping operations,

Deeply concerned by the deteriorating economic situation in Côte d'Ivoire and its serious impact on the subregion as a whole,

Welcoming the commitment of the African Union in supporting the process of national reconciliation in Côte d'Ivoire,

Recalling its full support for the efforts of the Economic Community of West African States and France to promote a peaceful settlement of the conflict, and welcoming in particular the effective action taken by the forces of the Economic Community of West African States in order to stabilize the country,

Taking note of the message addressed to the Security Council on 10 November 2003 by the President of the Republic of Côte d'Ivoire, in which he requested the transformation of the United Nations Mission in Côte d'Ivoire into a peacekeeping operation,

Taking note also of the request made by the Economic Community of West African States to the Security Council on 24 November 2003 to establish a peacekeeping operation in Côte d'Ivoire,

Noting that lasting stability in Côte d'Ivoire will depend on peace in the subregion, especially in Liberia, and emphasizing the importance of cooperation among the countries of the subregion to this end, as well as the need for coordination of the efforts of the United Nations missions in the subregion to contribute to the consolidation of peace and security,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Mission in Côte d'Ivoire, Taking note of the letter dated 8 January 2004 from the President of the General Assembly addressed to the President of the Security Council,

Aware of the persistent challenges to the stability of Côte d'Ivoire, and determining that the situation in Côte d'Ivoire continues to pose a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to establish the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire for an initial period of twelve months as from 4 April 2004, and requests the Secretary-General to transfer authority from the United Nations Mission in Côte d'Ivoire and the forces of the Economic Community of West African States to the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire on that date, and decides, therefore, to renew the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Côte d'Ivoire until 4 April 2004;

2. Decides also that the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire shall comprise, in addition to the appropriate civilian, judiciary and corrections component, a military strength of a maximum of 6,240 United Nations personnel, including 200 military observers and 120 staff officers, and up to 350 civilian police officers, as required to perform the mandated tasks described in paragraph 6 below;

(d) To help to protect civilians in the deployment areas of their units;

17. Requests France to continue to report to it periodically on all aspects of its mandate in Côte d'Ivoire;

18. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

The Secretary-General, speaking after the vote, said that Côte d'Ivoire had come a long way from the crisis that erupted in 2002. He noted that the parties had recently agreed on arrangements to implement the disarmament, demobilization, reintegration and repatriation programme, which was to start on 8 March. Other positive developments were the return of the Forces nouvelles to the Government of National Reconstruction on 6 January and consideration by the Council of Ministers of draft legislation and other reforms envisaged in the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement. A strengthened UN presence would make implementation of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme easier, facilitate the provision of humanitarian assistance and the restoration of State authority throughout the country, contribute to the promotion of human rights and the re-establishment of the rule of law, and help the country prepare for elections in 2005.

Appointment. On 25 March [S/2004/267], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint Major General Abdoulaye Fall (Senegal) as Force Commander of UNOCI. The Council, on 31 March [S/2004/268], took note of his intention.

Events of late March

Following those positive developments in the peace process, the political climate in Côte d'Ivoire began to worsen, the Secretary-General stated in his first report on UNOCI [S/2004/443]. Following Mr. Soro's 26 February declaration on conditions for laying down arms (see p. 171), a number of political parties announced their intention to suspend participation in the Government due to concerns over the pace of implementation of the reforms envisaged under the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, in particular those relating to the devolution of power from the President to the Government and the discretionary authority of ministers to make certain senior appointments within departments under their purview. Forces from the parties were deployed along the zone of confidence separating the Government-controlled south of the country from the rebel-controlled north. As a result of the political stalemate, the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme did not start as planned on 8 March. Two days later, supporters of the President stormed the Ministry of Justice to protest appointments made by the Justice Minister, Alassane Ouattara, who was also President of the opposition party, Rally of the Republicans. ECOWAS and French forces prevented them from attacking the residence of the Forces nouvelles ministers in Abidjan. Following those developments, the Council of Ministers, on 11 March, banned all demonstrations. In defiance, the "Coalition des Marcoussistes" (a coalition of opposition parties, including Forces nouvelles) announced that it would organize a demonstration on 25 March to protest the stalemate in the peace process and to show support for implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement. Despite a decree signed by President Gbagbo on 23 March limiting public demonstrations to enclosed spaces, the opposition parties maintained their determination to proceed with the rally. In a broadcast to the nation on the same day [S/2004/241], the President announced that a meeting had been scheduled for 29 March to examine all the issues outlined in a "Memorandum of Political Signatories of the Linas-Marcoussis and Accra II Agreements" presented to him by a delegation of "Marcoussistes".

On 24 March, the Secretary-General urged all Ivorian parties to exercise restraint and avoid exacerbating the situation. He appealed to the leaders of all Ivorian political parties to engage in consultations in order to move forward with implementation of the Agreement, as did a number of African leaders. Meanwhile, the Ivorian armed forces and gendarmerie moved into the centre of Abidjan. Public institutions and schools were closed until 29 March.

On 25 March, demonstrations took place in several parts of Abidjan, resulting in violent clashes between the Ivorian security forces and demonstrators. Violence and sporadic shooting occurred for two days in and around the capital. At least 120 people were killed, 274 wounded and 20 disappeared. Demonstrations also took place in Yamoussoukro and in Bouaké. The Secretary-General issued another statement, again urging all parties to put the national interest foremost, stop confrontations and resume implementation of the Agreement.

The events of 25 and 26 March dealt a serious blow to the peace process. Following those events, Mr. Soro stated that his movement ruled out any possibility of disarmament or a return to the Government as long as President Gbagbo remained in power. However, on 31 March, the "Marcoussistes" presented a number of conditions for the resumption of dialogue with President Gbagbo, including recognition of their constitutional right to demonstrate; enhanced security for signatories of the Agreement to be provided by Ivorian, French and UN forces; balanced coverage for all political parties in State-owned media; permission to organize funerals and commemorative ceremonies for those who died on 25 March; and the establishment of an international commission of inquiry to investigate all human rights violations committed in connection with the 25-26 March events. President Gbagbo [S/2004/257] and Prime Minister Diarra [S/2004/258] also requested the establishment of an international commission of inquiry and called on all the parties that had signed the Agreement but had suspended their participation in governmental bodies to return to their places and to implement it fully.

The Secretary-General supported the requests for an International Commission of Inquiry and instructed the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) to proceed with its establishment (see p. 177).

Security Council President press statement. The Security Council President, in a 26 March press statement [SC/8043-AFR/869], said that Council members expressed grave concern at the events and stressed the importance of implementing all the commitments in the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, in particular disarmament, to ensure the redeployment of the administration throughout the territory.

Communications (April). The EU, in a statement issued on 8 April [S/2004/309], deplored the events of 25 March. It emphasized the importance of prompt deployment of UN peacekeeping forces in Côte d'Ivoire to support implementation of the Agreement and urged the parties to resume political dialogue and participate again in the Government of National Reconciliation.

On 22 April [S/2004/321], Côte d'Ivoire transmitted to the Council the common platform on conditions for the resumption of the political dialogue, submitted by the Directorate for the Coordination of Political Forces for National Reconciliation, signatories of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, concluded during a meeting held on 13, 15 and 17 April to consider the social and economic situation following the events of 25-26 March. Those conditions, as agreed to by the Government of National Reconciliation, concerned security guarantees for civilians and political leaders; the right to demonstrate; the holding of a public commemoration for victims; the establishment of an international commission of inquiry to investigate the events of 25-26 March; and the impartial treatment of information by the State-run media. The letter also contained a schedule of specific actions in regard to each of the conditions, and a list of legislation relating to the Agreement that had been submitted to and/or adopted by Parliament.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

On 30 April [meeting 4959], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/12 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses its grave concern at the events which occurred in Côte d'Ivoire at the end of March 2004 and at the current impasse in the peace process defined in the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement.

The Council underscores the importance of investigating all alleged violations of human rights committed in Côte d'Ivoire so that those responsible do not remain unpunished.

The Council reaffirms its strong commitment to the territorial integrity and unity of Côte d'Ivoire.

The Council recalls that it endorsed the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, which remains the only possible solution to the crisis in Côte d'Ivoire.

The Council further recalls that all Ivorian political forces have committed themselves to implement fully and with no conditions the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement. The Council decided, on the basis of this commitment, to deploy the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire to support the process of peaceful settlement of the crisis, which is to culminate in 2005 with the organization of free, fair and transparent elections.

The Council emphasizes the individual responsibility of each of the Ivorian actors in the settlement of the crisis.

The Council expresses its readiness to consider further steps to encourage full implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement and to promote the process of national reconciliation in Côte d'Ivoire, including actions that might be taken, if necessary, against individuals whose activities are an obstacle to the full implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement.

Commission of inquiry

OHCHR, as requested by the Secretary-General, led the investigation into alleged human rights violations committed in connection with the demonstrations of 25 March. The commission of inquiry visited Abidjan from 15 to 28 April. In its report [S/2004/384], the commission concluded that the 25 March demonstration was used for what turned out to be a carefully planned operation by the Ivorian security forces, as well as special units and the so-called parallel forces, targeting opposition parties and community groups not only in Côte d'Ivoire, but also in Burkina Faso, Mali and the Niger. In spite of public statements to the contrary, all evidence suggested that there was no significant threat to the security forces by the demonstrators and that the repression and killings on 25 March and the following days represented a level of violence and excessive use of force that were not proportional to the situation, resulting in indiscriminate killing of innocent civilians and massive human rights violations. The events had to be seen in the broader context of a fragile political system and a struggle for power, which was often violent. The political responsibility of those who planned the march, in spite of the ban, the tense climate created by the drawing of a "red zone" (forbidden area for unauthorized persons) and the mobilization and use of the army were major factors in the escalation of tension. Many of the killings took place in the houses of would-be demonstrators or even innocent civilians targeted by the security forces. Most of the human rights violations could be characterized as a massacre in which summary executions, torture, disappearances and arbitrary trary detentions were repeatedly committed by units of the security forces, acting in coordination or in collusion with the parallel forces.

In addition, the commission believed that other massive human rights violations committed since 19 September 2002 also needed to be investigated, and proposed the establishment of an international commission of inquiry for that purpose. It also stated that other relevant issues needed to be resolved, such as reducing the uneven distribution of wealth, the systematic exclusion of community groups and the low level of literacy, compounded by unemployment.

Among its proposals, the commission recommended: the conduct of criminal investigations for those responsible for the massacres; the expansion of the UNOCI mandate to ensure the protection of witnesses to the indiscriminate killings of 25 March and of relatives of massacre victims; the establishment of a mixed human rights court, with the participation of international judges, mandated to prosecute all past serious human rights violations, including those committed prior to 25 March 2004; the dismantlement and disarmament of all armed groups, including the so-called parallel forces, with the possible integration of those forces into regular security structures of the State; ensuring more effective protection of the basic human rights and fundamental freedoms of all individuals in Abidjan, to create an environment conducive to holding fair elections in 2005; reform and training of the police and security forces; reform and strengthening of the judiciary; restructuring of the armed forces with the participation of all ethnic groups; establishment of a UN radio station to encourage mutual respect and tolerance; and the establishment of an independent human rights mechanism of the Commission on Human Rights, such as a country-based special rapporteur or an independent expert.

Security Council consideration. The Security Council, in a 14 May press statement of the President [SC/8094-AFR/929-HR/4756], following a briefing by the Acting High Commissioner for Human Rights, welcomed OHCHR's intention to establish a commission to look into events dating back to September 2002. They expressed their determination to consider rapidly steps to ensure that those responsible for the violations of human rights in Côte d'Ivoire since September 2002 were held accountable for their actions. Council members urged the immediate establishment of the National Human Rights Commission called for in the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement.

Communications. President Gbagbo, on 18 [S/2004/411] and 20 [S/2004/414] May, welcomed the decision to send a new commission of inquiry to conduct a comprehensive review of the violations from September 2002. He also indicated that two national commissions of inquiry had been established to investigate the events of 25-26 March and that action would be taken to follow up on the conclusions of the Council's inquiries.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 25 May [meeting 4977], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/17 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council reiterates its grave concern at the events which occurred in Côte d'Ivoire at the end of March 2004 and at the current impasse in the peace process defined in the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement.

The Council recalls that it endorsed the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, which is the only solution to the crisis in Côte d'Ivoire.

The Council reaffirms the individual responsibility of each of the Ivorian actors to ensure the full implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement. It reiterates its complete readiness to take any necessary further steps against individuals who block the full implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement.

The Council takes note with deep concern of the report of the commission of inquiry of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the events that occurred in Abidjan on 25 and 26 March 2004. It expresses its appreciation for the work of the Office of the High Commissioner.

The Council strongly condemns the violations of human rights and international humanitarian law committed in Côte d'Ivoire, including those that occurred in Abidjan on 25 and 26 March 2004, and expresses its determination to ensure that those responsible for all these violations are identified and that the Government of Côte d'Ivoire brings them to justice. The Council expects President Laurent Gbagbo to comply fully with the commitment he has made in this regard, through the letter dated 20 May 2004 from the Permanent Representative of Côte d'Ivoire to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council.

The Council therefore requests the Secretary-General to establish as soon as possible the international commission of inquiry, as recommended by the commission of inquiry of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and requested by the Government of Côte d'Ivoire, in order to investigate all human rights violations committed in Côte d'Ivoire since 19 September 2002 and determine responsibility. The Council calls upon all the Ivorian parties to cooperate fully with this international commission of inquiry.

The Council reiterates its demand for the Government of Côte d'Ivoire to bring to justice those responsible for these violations of human rights. In this regard, it expresses its complete readiness to encourage possible international assistance to the Ivorian judicial authorities to this end and requests the Secretary-General to submit recommendations on the various possible options for such assistance.

The Council is deeply concerned by slogans and declarations of hate, in particular those directed against the personnel of the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire, and urges all the Ivorian actors to refrain from any action or statement, especially in the media, which put at risk the security of United Nations personnel and, more globally, the process of national reconciliation. The Council recalls the obligation of all Ivorian actors, in particular the Government of Côte d'Ivoire, to cooperate fully in the deployment and operations of the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire, which is there at the request of the Government, in particular by guaranteeing the safety, security and freedom of movement of all United Nations personnel.

The Council requests the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire to establish without delay its broadcasting capacity, as mandated in its resolution 1528 (2004) of 27 February 2004.

The Council recalls that it decided, on the basis of the commitment of all Ivorian political forces to implement fully and without conditions the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, to deploy the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire to support the process of peaceful settlement of the crisis, which is to lead to the organization in 2005 of open, free and transparent elections.

The Council underlines the fact that no concrete progress can be made in the implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement until the Government of National Reconciliation composed on 13 March 2003 and completed on 12 September 2003 meets again under the authority of the Prime Minister.

The Council is therefore deeply concerned by the recent announcement by President Laurent Gbagbo that he would dismiss opposition ministers. The Council also reiterates its concerns at the continuing non-participation of the opposition parties in the Government of National Reconciliation. The Council considers that such decisions undermine the normal functioning of Ivorian institutions and the resumption of dialogue between Ivorian parties which is the basis of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement.

The Council underscores the importance of having all relevant Ivorian parties participate fully in the Government of National Reconciliation. In this regard, the Council calls upon all Ivorian parties to apply faithfully all the provisions of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, including those regarding the composition and the functioning of the Government of National Reconciliation, and to resume immediately political dialogue with a view to ensuring the effective functioning of the Government of National Reconciliation.

The Council reiterates its full support to Prime Minister Seydou Diarra, head of the Government of National Reconciliation, and encourages him to carry on his task until the completion of the peace process, as foreseen in the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement.

The Council recalls the importance it attaches to the early and full adoption of the constitutional and legislative reforms provided for in the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement.

The Council takes note in this regard of the renewed commitment of President Laurent Gbagbo, in his message to the nation on 18 May 2004, to apply fully the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, and his request addressed to the Parliament to accelerate the achievement of the legislative reforms. It now expects these commitments to be fulfilled in order that concrete steps can be undertaken to restore confidence.

The Council also reaffirms the urgency of disbanding militias and armed groups and proceeding with operations to regroup the opposing forces in order to permit the start of disarmament and demobilization, which must precede their reintegration into the regular army or civilian life.

The Council firmly rejects the assertion that disarmament can be delayed until after the 2005 elections and calls upon all parties to move immediately to begin this process.

The Council underlines the responsibilities of the Monitoring Committee as the guarantor of the implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement and expresses its appreciation for further efforts it may undertake in order to overcome the current impasse in the peace process as well as in supporting the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire in carrying out its mandate.

The Council calls upon all parties to take immediate action to implement the steps above and emphasizes that these measures are essential to enable Côte d'Ivoire and Ivorians to return to the path to peace, stability and economic development."

Further developments in peace process

Report of Secretary-General (June). The Secretary-General, in his first report on UNOCI, issued on 2 June [S/2004/443] in response to resolution 1528(2004) (see p. 173), said that, in an effort to give new impetus to the peace process, a high-level delegation, led by the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Jean-Marie Guéhenno, visited Côte d'Ivoire from 15 to 20 April. The delegation conveyed the international community's preparedness to help Côte d'Ivoire restore peace and normalcy, including through the deployment of UNOCI, but the Ivorian parties had the responsibility to proceed without further delay and in good faith with implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement. It encouraged the President to use his authority to establish all necessary conditions to enable the Government to function effectively, including full support for his Prime Minister, greater freedom for the ministers to appoint their aides and the immediate dismantling of any parallel government structures. The delegation called on the Forces nouvelles to proceed with disarmament without delay.

On 24 April, the "Coalition des Marcoussistes" held a memorial service to honour the victims of the 25 and 26 March events, which took place without any serious incidents. The following day, supporters of President Gbagbo held a rally in Abidjan, demanding that UNOCI immediately disarm Forces nouvelles and the right to hold a rally in the Forces nouvelles stronghold of Bouaké. In the meantime, the political stalemate continued and the parties hardened their positions. On 26 April, the Forces nouvelles leader said that his movement would not disarm or return to the Government as long as President Gbagbo remained in power and would re-establish social services and a police force in the areas under its control. Two days later, a delegation of the "Coalition des Marcoussistes", escorted by UNOCI troops, travelled to northern Côte d'Ivoire for meetings aimed at promoting reconciliation. On 5 May, Prime Minister Diarra gave the Coalition assurances of impartial treatment in access to the State media and enhanced security, thereby satisfying the two remaining preconditions for the return of their ministers to the Government. In addition, the National Assembly decided to resume the debate on the law on identification and to consider other draft laws envisaged under the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement.

On 18 May, however, President Gbagbo announced the suspension of support to the opposition ministers who had boycotted Cabinet meetings since early March, and signed a decree announcing the dismissal of three of them, including Mr. Soro. Forces nouvelles responded by withdrawing all its remaining representatives from the capital to Bouaké. The tension continued to mount the next few days in Abidjan and several businesses and schools were closed. Threats to UNOCI from pro-Gbagbo supporters escalated, and the Secretary-General called on all parties concerned to desist from action that might lead to further violence and to cooperate with the Linas-Marcoussis Monitoring Committee and his Special Representative in resolving outstanding issues. The Monitoring Committee formulated a programme of work to help the parties overcome the political stalemate and proceed with implementation of the Agreement. The programme included a timetable for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration operations; legislation relating to the identification process; the reunification of the country, including by redeploying the State administration and the provision of basic services throughout Côte d'Ivoire; the reconstitution of the Independent Electoral Commission; equal access by all political groups to public media; security arrangements for leaders of political parties and candidates for presidential elections; and measures aimed at economic recovery.

The security situation, which deteriorated following the events of 25-26 March, remained fragile throughout the country. Serious tensions resulted in shootings and violent attacks against villagers. There was also an increase in militia activities in the western region. Ethnic and party clashes were also reported. In the north, in February and March, inter-factional fighting escalated between the military wings of Forces nouvelles. The continued de facto partitioning of the country contributed to the climate of uncertainty, and reinforced fears of a resumption of civil conflict. Forces nouvelles was reported to be strengthening its administrative activities in the areas under its control, including the payment of salaries to elements of the army and police and the establishment of custom services. Forces nouvelles suspended its participation in meetings of the quadripartite military commission, while FIANCI no longer participated in joint patrols with Forces nouvelles. In Abidjan, the security situation deteriorated, with various demonstrations, mainly organized by pro-Ivoirian Patriotic Front supporters to protest the findings of the international commission of inquiry (see p. 177) and delays in implementing the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme. UNOCI and French troops also came under attacks by groups of violent protesters.

The human rights situation throughout Côte d'Ivoire also deteriorated, with violations including arbitrary detention, extrajudicial killings and discrimination and violence on the basis of nationality, ethnic origin, gender and political opinion. In the northern area, there were acts of extortion, arbitrary tax collection, forceful abduction and summary execution. The collapse of the judicial system led to a dramatic increase in child prostitution and sexual violence perpetrated by various uniformed elements.

The current political crisis had a negative effect on election preparations. The National Assembly adopted a law on the identification and residence of aliens and the Government promulgated decrees on the establishment of a National Identification Supervisory Commission, changes to the National Identification Office, procedures for the issuance and format of the national identity card, and appointments to the National Identification Supervisory Commission. However, several draft laws were still awaiting legislative assent. An electoral needs assessment mission, sent to Côte d'Ivoire from 26 January to 6 February by the Secretary-General, recommended the establishment of an electoral component within UNOCI to provide technical assistance to national electoral authorities and monitor electoral preparations throughout the country.

The crisis also affected significantly the overall humanitarian and economic situation in the country and the West African subregion. Surveys indicated that malnutrition rates were on the rise in the western part of the country owing to the loss of harvests, continued displacements, poor roads and limited access to health facilities. In the north, the lack of deployment of local administration in the territory under the control of Forces nouvelles impacted negatively on the provision of health services and education in those areas. The health situation remained precarious, owing to the closure of most health-care centres following the departure of up to 85 per cent of the medical staff and lack of medical supplies.

The Secretary-General concluded that Côte d'Ivoire had reached a crossroads. He appealed to the Security Council, the AU, ECOWAS and other international stakeholders to continue to play an active role in encouraging all Ivorian parties to resume political dialogue, and to all opposition parties to return to the Government of National Reconciliation without delay. He said that the Security Council's upcoming mission to West Africa (see below) would provide an opportunity to remind all Ivorian parties of their respective responsibilities. He urged President Gbagbo to ensure that the ban on disruptive activities was enforced without discrimination, that all Ivorians were free to move safely throughout the country and that the Government was allowed to initiate the process of legislative reform unhindered.

Report of Security Council mission. The Security Council mission to West Africa (20-29 June) (see p. 169) visited Côte d'Ivoire on 22 and 23 June. In its report, submitted on 2 July [S/2004/525], the mission said that it had emphasized to leaders of Côte d'Ivoire its concern over the breakdown in the peace process, the impasse in the implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement and the non-functioning of the Government. It identified three concrete measures as vital for restarting the peace process: the reconstitution of the Government, the resumption of its work and the establishment of a schedule for implementing the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement; the early adoption by the National Assembly of political reforms envisaged in the Agreement; and the parties acting in unity to forge a better future for the country. The mission stressed that attacks against UN personnel and property had to cease.

The mission agreed that failure to resolve the political impasse would not only provoke a major socio-economic and humanitarian disaster and compound the existing North-South divide in the country, but would seriously upset the stability of the whole subregion. It noted the concern expressed by the UNOCI Force Commander that, unlike the French Licorne force, the mission's rules of engagement did not permit it to use force in monitoring the ceasefire and protecting civilians in the Zone of Confidence, making it difficult for the two forces to cooperate effectively.

The mission recommended that the President and the Prime Minister should consult with all the signatories to the Agreement on reconstituting and reactivating the Government, including an implementation schedule and ensuring that draft laws on political reform were adopted by the National Assembly by 28 July; the parties should commit to regular high-level dialogue without preconditions; the Government should halt hostile actions against UNOCI and UN and other foreign representatives in the country; and UNOCI should be brought up to full strength. In that regard, the Council would welcome advice on redefining the UNOCI mandate to allow for re-adjustment of its rules of engagement. The mission also recommended that the Government honour its commitment to authorize the operation of UNOCI's radio by early July; the Monitoring Committee should work with the Government and ECOWAS in monitoring the schedule of compliance with the Agreement; UN representatives should work with civil society organizations to advance the peace process; the Government should ensure that those responsible for human rights violations were brought to justice; the parties should commit themselves to cooperating with the international commission of inquiry (see p. 177) into human rights violations since September 2002; UNOCI should assist in preparations for general elections; ECOWAS should remain engaged in efforts to resume the national dialogue and help expedite legislative reforms provided for in the Agreement; and the Security Council should monitor fulfilment of the pledges made by President Gbagbo and other Ivorian parties, particularly the adoption of laws and the resolution of the issues of the status-of-forces agreement and the operation of UNOCI radio by early July. The Council should consider targeted measures against individuals who obstructed implementation of those pledges.

Côte d'Ivoire, in its observations on the report of the Security Council mission [S/2004/610], transmitted on 27 July, affirmed that President Gbagbo would ensure that the bills provided for in the Agreement were adopted in compliance with the national Constitution.

Accra III Agreement

As the Ivorian peace process continued to face serious difficulties, numerous initiatives were taken in mid-2004 by international stakeholders to defuse the tensions, the Secretary-General reported [S/2004/697]. His Special Representative, Albert Tévoédjrè, consulted with the President, other government leaders and those of Ivorian political parties on ways to overcome the impasse in the peace process, while the Prime Minister consulted with the “Coalition des Marcoussistes”. On 20 June, the Presidents of Ghana, Nigeria and Togo and the ECOWAS Executive Secretary met with President Gbagbo in Abuja, Nigeria, at an ECOWAS mini-summit at which strategies for putting the Ivorian peace process back on track were discussed. Following the summit, President Gbagbo, in a 21 June speech, announced his determination to remove all obstacles to the peace process and condemned attacks against French citizens and UN personnel. He encouraged the Government to submit all remaining draft laws under the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement to the National Assembly for adoption.

Following further diplomatic initiatives by the President of Gabon, President Gbagbo met with the major Ivorian political forces, including the “Coalition des Marcoussistes”, and separately with them on 29 and 30 June, in an attempt to restart the political dialogue. That meeting discussed the return of the three dismissed ministers to the Government of National Reconciliation and the delegation of powers from the President to the Prime Minister. Forces nouvelles did not participate in the meeting, but indicated that it would abide by any agreement reached by the other members of the Coalition. The AU Peace and Security Council (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 4 July) [S/2004/561] welcomed the ECOWAS mediation efforts to relaunch the peace and reconciliation process as well as the resumption of dialogue between the President and the political opposition, and urged the Forces nouvelles to rejoin the negotiation process.

On 6 July, the Secretary-General convened a mini-summit on Côte d’Ivoire, on the sidelines of the third AU summit in Addis Ababa. Attended by the Presidents of Benin, Burkina Faso, Côte d’Ivoire, Gabon, Ghana, Mali and Nigeria, the Prime Minister of Togo and the ECOWAS Executive Secretary, the summit called on the Ivorian parties to increase efforts to overcome the political impasse; restore the integrity of, and confidence in, the Government of National Reconciliation; and dismantle all paramilitary and militia groups. The President and Prime Minister were called upon to resume the effective functioning of the Government, which should address all remaining legal reforms. The Ivorian parties were urged to establish security conditions necessary for State administration and economic activities nationwide, and for the preparation of elections, and participate in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme. It was also decided that a meeting of all the Ivorian political forces would be convened in Accra, Ghana, on 29 July to give impetus to the peace process. Prior to that meeting, a number of confidence-building measures were to be taken: President Gbagbo would meet with the leaders of all Ivorian political forces; the National Assembly would adopt all legal reforms envisaged under the Agreement before the end of July; the Joint Côte d’Ivoire–Burkina Faso and Côte d’Ivoire–Mali Commissions would be reactivated; and the heads of State of Burkina Faso, Côte d’Ivoire and Mali would hold a tripartite meeting to prepare for the Accra summit.

The high-level meeting on Côte d’Ivoire was held in Accra on 29 and 30 July, bringing together 13 African heads of State, President Gbagbo and Prime Minister Diarra, and most of the leaders of the 10 Ivorian political forces signatory to the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement. The parties reached a consensus on addressing the key outstanding issues facing the peace process, and signed the Accra III Agreement on 30 July. The text of the Agreement was forwarded to the Security Council on 2 August [S/2004/629] by Ghana.

The Accra III Agreement provided a framework and a timetable for the reactivation of the peace process, with a view to ensuring the full implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement. With regard to the revision of article 35 of the Constitution concerning eligibility to the presidency, the parties agreed that President Gbagbo should use his constitutional powers to implement that provision by the end of September. They also agreed that the National Assembly should adopt, by the end of August, all legal reforms envisaged under the Agreement. They committed themselves to the commencement of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process by 15 October, which should include all paramilitary and militia groups. The parties agreed on the need for a clear delegation of powers from the President to the Prime Minister, to urgently resume the work of the Government of National Reconciliation and to convene a meeting of the Council of Ministers.

The parties also committed themselves to cooperating fully with the international commission of inquiry to investigate the human rights violations perpetrated in Côte d’Ivoire since September 2002 (see p. 177) and on the urgent need to establish the National Human Rights Commission. They agreed to establish a tripartite monitoring group, comprising representatives of ECOWAS, the AU and UNOCI, which would submit fortnightly reports on progress in implementing the Accra III Agreement to the ECOWAS and AU Chairpersons and to the UN Secretary-General.

In a statement issued on 5 August [S/2004/641], the EU welcomed the Accra III Agreement and urged all the parties concerned to commit themselves to the full application of its provisions.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

On 5 August [meeting 5018], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/29 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the signing, on 30 July 2004 at Accra, by the President of the Republic of Côte d'Ivoire, Mr. Laurent Gbagbo, the Prime Minister of the Government of National Reconciliation, Mr. Seydou Elimane Diarra, and all the political forces of Côte d'Ivoire, of an agreement ("the Accra III Agreement") that consolidates the implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis process. The Council recalls that it endorsed the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement. It welcomes the resolute commitment of the African Heads of State and Government, in particular of the Chairman of the Economic Community of West African States, Mr. John Agyekum Kufuor, President of the Republic of Ghana, and the Chairperson of the African Union, Mr. Olusegun Obasanjo, President of the Federal Republic of Nigeria, as well as of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the other participants in the summit held in Accra on 29 and 30 July 2004, thanks to which the conclusion of the Accra III Agreement was made possible.

The Council welcomes the spirit of dialogue and responsibility shown by President Gbagbo and each of the Ivorian parties, who have clearly demonstrated their willingness to lead the political process in Côte d'Ivoire to its completion. It welcomes the concrete measures agreed upon by the signatories to the Accra III Agreement with a view to facilitating the full and comprehensive implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement and because of the serious threats, caused by the continuing crisis, which persist against the territorial integrity of Côte d'Ivoire. It urges the parties to adhere strictly to the deadlines that have been fixed, in particular to settle the issue of eligibility for the Presidency of the Republic and to begin disarmament, in accordance with the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, for all paramilitary groups and militias and disband disruptive youth groups.

The Council urges all parties to implement in good faith, without delays or preconditions, the obligations they have undertaken in signing the Accra III Agreement. It calls upon them, in particular, to remain committed so that open, free and transparent elections can be held, as agreed, before the end of 2005. It reaffirms its complete readiness to take any appropriate measure against individuals who impede the full implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement.

The Council takes note with profound concern of the preliminary results of the investigation led by the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire of the massacres that occurred in Korhogo. It reiterates its firm condemnation of all atrocities and violations of human rights and international humanitarian law committed in Côte d'Ivoire and in particular those that occurred in Abidjan on 25 and 26 March 2004. It reiterates its full support to the international commission of inquiry put in place by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in order to establish the facts and circumstances of the perpetration of violations of human rights and international humanitarian law which have occurred in Côte d'Ivoire since 19 September 2002, and, as far as possible, to identify their authors. It recalls that all persons responsible for such violations will be brought to justice. It encourages the Ivorian parties to establish without further delay, in accordance with the commitment they have undertaken, the National Human Rights Commission provided for in the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement.

The Council expresses its intention to continue to follow closely developments in the situation in Côte d'Ivoire and the implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement. It emphasizes in this regard the importance of the follow-up mechanism and looks forward to the regular reports provided for in the Accra III Agreement of 30 July 2004. In this regard, the Council requests the Secretary-General to keep it regularly informed of the implementation of commitments under the Accra III Agreement.

President Gbagbo, in an address to his country on 6 August [S/2004/632], expressed his Government's intention to implement the Accra Agreement.

Tripartite Monitoring Group

The tripartite Monitoring Group, set up in accordance with the Accra III Agreement to review progress in its implementation, issued seven reports in 2004 covering the periods 1 to 31 August [S/2004/667, S/2004/716], 1 to 15 September [S/2004/748], 15 to 30 September [S/2004/800], 1 to 15 October [S/2004/878], 15 to 30 October [S/2004/944] and 16 to 30 November [S/2004/976]. Developments from 1 to 17 December and from 18 December to the end of the year were detailed in a later report [S/2005/82]. (For details of the last three reports, see p. 191.)

The Group reported, among the major developments, that the Council of Ministers met on 9 August and issued decrees reinstating the three dismissed ministers to their previous posts in the Government; appointing a new government spokesperson; and delegating power to the Prime Minister. The Group followed the status of implementation of the pertinent texts of legislation and decrees envisaged under the Linas-Marcoussis and Accra III Agreements, and, in its second report, included a timetable for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme and a table setting out progress in respect of the legislative texts. The Group noted sharp divisions between the parties over appointments to the Independent Electoral Commission. In addition, the gridlock in the National Assembly did not augur well for the remaining legislation to be considered and adopted by the Assembly, as scheduled. The Group warned that the political atmosphere could lead to a revival of animosities, which could erode commitment to the Accra III Agreement.

By mid-September, the Group reported that, while the legislative process was slow, some progress was achieved in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme. However, the critical problem of identification had to be solved before that exercise could begin. It also noted some encouraging developments in human rights, specifically, that checkpoints and the number of arrests, detentions and disappearances had decreased. In the light of the stalemate within the National Assembly and the trend of political debate over issues relating to implementation of the Agreements, the tripartite Monitoring Group recommended that consultations be held with President Gbagbo and other political stakeholders to ascertain the difficulties facing them in regard to the passage of the relevant legal reforms, and with the four major Ivorian political leaders (President Gbagbo, Mr. Soro, Mr. Konan Bedie, Mr. Alassane Ouattara) to find a solution to the controversy surrounding article 35 of the Constitution. However, the situation remained deadlocked over the issues of constitutional reform and disarmament.

Report of Secretary-General (August). On 27 August [S/2004/697], the Secretary-General, in response to Security Council resolution 1528(2004) (see p. 173), issued his second report on UNOCI, covering developments since his 2 June report, including events leading to the 30 July signing of the Accra III Agreement (see p. 183).

With a troop strength of 5,877 as at 20 August, UNOCI's activities focused on patrolling, including border patrolling and guard duties, and liaising with FANCI, the military elements of Forces nouvelles and the Licorne force. It coordinated with humanitarian and development agencies to facilitate the delivery of assistance. The civilian police force, which had 160 officers, out of an authorized strength of 350, assisted the mixed national force of gendarmes, comprising Ivorian internal security forces and Forces nouvelles elements, in training and facilitated cooperation between the two sides. The UNOCI deployment had a generally positive impact on the security situation in the country, which had become more stable. However, violent incidents, mostly involving rival factions of Forces nouvelles in the north, various youth groups in Abidjan and militias in other parts of the country, led to an increased level of tension. The presence of mercenaries was also reported in both northern and southern areas. In the north, "unidentified" heavily armed elements, allegedly supporters of Staff Sergeant Ibrahim Coulibaly, launched an attack against the military elements of Forces nouvelles stationed in the Korhogo area on 20 June, resulting in 11 civilian deaths. The same elements then attacked the convoy of the Secretary-General of Forces nouvelles, Mr. Soro, but no injuries were reported. Forces nouvelles issued a communiqué accusing the attackers of receiving support from President Gbagbo and Guinean President Lansana Conté. On 21 June, clashes between the rival factions of Mr. Soro and Mr. Coulibaly in Bouaké resulted in a series of summary executions. On 25 and 26 June, sporadic shooting between rival factions of Forces nouvelles was again reported in Korhogo. Mass graves discovered in Korhogo were investigated by UNOCI, which confirmed the existence of three such graves containing at least 99 bodies. The situation in Abidjan was calm, with a strong presence of FANCI and Ivorian security forces. FANCI reinforced its positions along the southern edge of the Zone of Confidence to track possible infiltration by armed elements from the north. Western areas of the country remained volatile, mainly owing to a large presence of Liberian and Burkinabé refugees. Tensions were also rising between local military forces in both the north and south and the impartial forces, particularly the French Licorne force. A positive development was the resumption on 16 August of the Quadripartite Commission meetings of FANCI, Forces nouvelles, ONUCI and the Licorne force.

The human rights situation in Côte d'Ivoire continued to be of serious concern. Grave violations occurred in the north, following inter-factional fighting within Forces nouvelles. In the Government-controlled area, the situation was marked by reports of ethnic tensions, including harassment and intimidation of foreigners and civilians from the north by paramilitary and militia groups and other disruptive youth groups. In western areas, the situation was dominated by intercommunal conflict, with land ownership at the core of tensions. That dispute led to the exclusion of foreign migrants, mainly from Mali, Guinea and Burkina Faso, and northern ethnic groups. On 22 June, OHCHR established the International Commission of Inquiry to investigate human rights violations since September 2002, which arrived in the country on 15 July to begin its work. Progress was made in the public information area with the mission's radio station, covering the greater Abidjan area, beginning regular broadcasts on 13 August.

The humanitarian situation was complicated by the internal displacement of an estimated 800,000 persons, of whom 500,000 had yet to be resettled. Humanitarian agencies reported a near total collapse of the provision of basic services in health, water and sanitation, education and protection in the north. Some 70,000 Liberian refugees continued to live in Côte d'Ivoire, where they encountered hostility from local extremist groups and some political leaders.

The Secretary-General observed that the Accra III Agreement, containing a framework for implementation of the main provisions of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, provided a clear road map for progress in the peace process. Some progress had been made, although much remained to be done to meet the established deadlines. Reminding the Ivorian parties of their personal responsibility for ensuring that the commitments made in Accra were carried out, he also drew their attention to the Council's stated intention to consider appropriate, targeted measures against individuals who obstructed the implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement. While the international community remained ready to assist the Ivorian parties to bring the crisis to an end, it looked to President Gbagbo and the Ivorian leadership to ensure that progress was made in the peace process.

Security Council consideration. The Security Council was briefed on 27 September on the situation in Côte d'Ivoire by the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Albert Tévoédjrè. In a 27 September press statement of its President [SC/8197-APR/1036], Council members noted the resumption of the activities of the Government of National Reconciliation, in accordance with the commitments made at the Accra III summit (see p. 182), but expressed concern over the lack of progress in other key sectors. They underlined that the situation was not only holding back the peace process in Côte d'Ivoire, but was also detrimental to further progress in the subregion. The members exhorted President Gbagbo to do everything in his power to ensure the revision of article 35 of the Constitution, and exhorted Forces nouvelles to start as soon as possible, without preconditions, the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process to which they both had committed themselves. They also called on military groups to disarm and on members of Parliament to accelerate consideration of legislative reforms.

Communication. Mr. Gbagbo, in an address to Ivorians on 12 October [S/2004/817], said that he would submit to Parliament the draft amendment to article 35 of the Constitution on eligibility, as soon as disarmament began. He reported that the armed forces on both sides had declared themselves ready to begin disarmament on 15 October and he appealed to the political leaders to play their part.

Renewed hostilities

Despite the general improvement in security between September and mid-October, the situation remained tense in Man and around Guiglo where militias operated freely, the Secretary-General reported [S/2004/962]. The level of co-operation between FIANCI and the military elements of Forces nouvelles also improved, culminating in the adoption on 11 October of the Yamoussoukro Joint Declaration, in which the parties reaffirmed an earlier decision not to resume armed hostilities and their commitment to commencing the disarmament process. However, the lack of progress in the peace process impacted on the military and security situation in Côte d'Ivoire, with both FIANCI and Forces nouvelles increasing their states of alert. Tensions mounted as the deadline for the disarmament process approached, and demonstrations were held in three northern towns in early October, targeting both UNOCI and Licorne troops. On 26 October, Forces nouvelles claimed to have discovered a large quantity of weapons and ammunition in a truck entering Bouaké. That led to the suspension two days later of their participation in the Government of National Reconciliation. Forces nouvelles declared a "state of emergency", imposed a curfew in areas under its control, withdrew from the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process and announced that all vehicles entering areas under its control, including UN and humanitarian vehicles, would be searched.

On 4 November, FIANCI launched a military operation against Forces nouvelles positions in Bouaké and Korhogo. In Abidjan, the so-called "young patriots", supporters of President Gbagbo, forcibly tried to seize the residence of Forces nouvelles ministers. Meanwhile, the office of the Prime Minister was seized by FIANCI and the staff expelled. The "young patriots" also ransacked the offices of the National Commission for Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration and those of the opposition parties, and burned and looted the offices of three major newspapers. Following the attacks, the Secretary-General of Forces nouvelles declared the Accra III and the Linas-Marcoussis Agreements “null and void”.

On 5 November, FANCI forces carried out additional attacks against Forces nouvelles, resulting in further deaths of civilians and soldiers. Despite UNOCI efforts to prevent infiltration through the zone of confidence, on 6 November large numbers of FANCI troops moved across the zone and clashed with Forces nouvelles in Sakassou, south of Bouaké, and in Bouaké itself. Meanwhile, President Gbagbo informed the UN Secretary-General that the military operations under way were “limited and targeted at the recapture of specific towns”. On the same day, a base of the French Licorne force was bombed, resulting in the deaths of nine French soldiers and one American citizen, and the wounding of 38 French soldiers. The French forces responded by destroying the planes used by FANCI during the raids, and military helicopters on the ground in Yamoussoukro. The Ivorian authorities accused the Licorne force of a disproportionate use of force in response to a “mistake” by the Ivorian security and defence forces, as the Government explained in a letter of 16 November [S/2004/910]. The Ivorian authorities asked for an international inquiry into the French action. That action had also heightened tensions in Abidjan and other major towns, fuelled by messages broadcast on State-run radio and television inciting hatred and violence against French forces and citizens, leading to violent demonstrations. Calm was restored on 7 November, as FANCI troops were ordered to withdraw to their positions south of the Zone of Confidence and President Gbagbo appealed for calm and for demonstrators to return to their homes.

The Secretary-General, on 6 November [S/2004/886], sought the Security Council’s confirmation that, in accordance with resolution 1528 (2004) (see p. 173), UNOCI was authorized to use all necessary means within its capabilities and areas of deployment to prevent any hostile action within the zone of confidence, where the UNOCI and the French forces were deployed.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (6 November)

On 6 November [meeting 5072], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/42 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council condemns the attack against French forces in Bouaké on 6 November 2004 that resulted in fatalities and other casualties, as well as the fatal air strikes in the north by the national armed forces of Côte d’Ivoire, as violations of the ceasefire agreement of 3 May 2003.

The Council further condemns any effort by any party to send forces through the Zone of Confidence.

The Council demands the immediate cessation of all military operations by all Ivorian parties and full compliance with the ceasefire agreement of 3 May 2003.

The Council expresses its full support for the action undertaken by French forces and the United Nations Operation in Côte d’Ivoire.

The Council confirms that French forces and the United Nations Operation in Côte d’Ivoire are authorized to use all necessary means to carry out fully their mandate in accordance with its resolution 1528(2004) of 27 February 2004. It confirms also that the United Nations Operation in Côte d’Ivoire, within its capabilities and areas of deployment, is authorized to prevent any hostile action, in particular within the Zone of Confidence.

The Council strongly recalls the obligations of all Ivorian parties, the Government of Côte d’Ivoire as well as the Forces nouvelles, to refrain from any violence against civilians and to cooperate fully with the activities of the United Nations Operation in Côte d’Ivoire. The Council firmly reminds all parties of the need to guarantee the security and freedom of movement of all United Nations personnel.

The Council intends to examine rapidly further actions, including individual measures to be taken.

The AU Peace and Security Council, in a communiqué on Côte d’Ivoire adopted on 8 November [S/2004/896], urged the Government and the parties to exercise maximum restraint, desist from pronouncements that might incite hatred and violence, and recommit themselves to dialogue and negotiations. It supported the decision of the AU Chairperson to mandate President Thabo Mbeki of South Africa to undertake a mission to the country to promote a political solution.

On 29 November [S/2004/931], Côte d’Ivoire provided its version of the events that took place from 4 to 10 November and called for the forces in the zone of confidence to be unified under the United Nations.

Arms embargo

On 10 November [S/2004/895], the Gambia, on behalf of the African Group of States, expressed deep regrets over the events that had occurred in Bouaké since 4 November. The Group expressed reservations about the proposed Security Council resolution recommending the imposition of punitive measures against Côte d’Ivoire as they were incompatible with the AU’s strategy of engagement with all the parties concerned, and appealed to the Council that the AU be allowed more time for its diplomatic efforts to come to fruition.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (15 November)

On 15 November [meeting 5078], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1572 (2004). The draft [S/2004/892] was submitted by Chile, France, Germany, Romania, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 1528(2004) of 27 February 2004, as well as the relevant statements by its President, in particular those of 5 August and 6 November 2004,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and unity of Côte d'Ivoire, and recalling the importance of the principles of good-neighbourliness, non-interference and regional cooperation,

Recalling that it endorsed the agreement signed by the Ivorian political forces at Linas-Marcoussis, France, on 23 January 2003 (the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement) and approved by the Conference of Heads of State on Côte d'Ivoire, held in Paris on 25 and 26 January 2003, and the agreement signed at Accra on 30 July 2004 (the Accra III Agreement),

Deploing the resumption of hostilities in Côte d'Ivoire and the repeated violations of the ceasefire agreement of 3 May 2003,

Deeply concerned by the humanitarian situation in Côte d'Ivoire, in particular in the northern part of the country, and by the use of the media, in particular radio and television broadcasts, to incite hatred and violence against foreigners in Côte d'Ivoire,

Strongly recalling the obligations of all Ivorian parties, the Government of Côte d'Ivoire as well as the Forces nouvelles, to refrain from any violence against civilians, including against foreign citizens, and to cooperate fully with the activities of the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire,

Welcoming the ongoing efforts of the Secretary-General, the African Union and the Economic Community of West African States towards re-establishing peace and stability in Côte d'Ivoire,

Determining that the situation in Côte d'Ivoire continues to pose a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Condemns the air strikes committed by the national armed forces of Côte d'Ivoire, which constitute flagrant violations of the ceasefire agreement of 3 May 2003, and demands that all Ivorian parties to the conflict, the Government of Côte d'Ivoire as well as the Forces nouvelles, fully comply with the ceasefire;

2. Reiterates its full support for the action undertaken by the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire and French forces in accordance with their mandate under its resolution 1528(2004) and with the statement by its President of 6 November 2004;

3. Emphasizes again that there can be no military solution to the crisis and that the full implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement and the Accra III Agreement remains the only way to resolve the crisis persisting in the country;

4. Urges, as a consequence, the President of the Republic of Côte d'Ivoire, the heads of all the Ivorian political parties and the leaders of the Forces nouvelles immediately to begin resolutely implementing all the commitments they have made under those agreements;

5. Expresses its full support for the efforts of the Secretary-General, the African Union and the Economic Community of West African States, and encourages them to continue these efforts in order to relaunch the peace process in Côte d'Ivoire;

6. Demands that the Ivorian authorities stop all radio and television broadcasting inciting hatred, intolerance and violence, requests the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire to strengthen its monitoring role in this regard, and urges the Government of Côte d'Ivoire and the Forces nouvelles to take all necessary measures to ensure the security and safety of civilian persons, including foreign nationals and their property;

7. Decides that all States shall, for a period of thirteen months from the date of adoption of the present resolution, take the necessary measures to prevent the direct or indirect supply, sale or transfer to Côte d'Ivoire from their territories or by their nationals, or using their flag vessels or aircraft, of arms or any related materiel, in particular military aircraft and equipment, whether or not these originated in their territories, as well as the provision of any assistance, advice or training related to military activities;

8. Decides also that the measures imposed by paragraph 7 above shall not apply to:

(a) Supplies and technical assistance intended solely for the support of or use by the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire and the French forces supporting them;

(b) Supplies of non-lethal military equipment intended solely for humanitarian or protective use, and related technical assistance and training, as approved in advance by the Committee established pursuant to paragraph 14 below;

(c) Supplies of protective clothing, including flak jackets and military helmets, temporarily exported to Côte d'Ivoire by United Nations personnel, representatives of the media and humanitarian and development workers and associated personnel for their personal use only;

(d) Supplies temporarily exported to Côte d'Ivoire to the forces of a State which is taking action, in accordance with international law, solely and directly to facilitate the evacuation of its nationals and those for whom it has consular responsibility in Côte d'Ivoire, as notified in advance to the Committee established pursuant to paragraph 14 below;

(e) Supplies of arms and related materiel and technical training and assistance intended solely for the support of or use in the process of restructuring defence and security forces pursuant to paragraph 3 (f) of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, as approved in advance by the Committee established pursuant to paragraph 14 below;

9. Decides further that all States shall take the necessary measures, for a period of twelve months, to prevent the entry into or transit through their territories of all persons designated by the Committee established pursuant to paragraph 14 below who constitute a threat to the peace and national reconciliation process in Côte d'Ivoire, in particular those who block the implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis and Accra III Agreements, any other person determined to be responsible for serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in Côte d'Ivoire on the basis of relevant information, any other person who publicly incites hatred and violence, and any other person determined by the Committee to be in violation of the measures imposed by paragraph 7 above, provided that nothing in the present paragraph shall oblige a State to refuse entry into its territory to its own nationals;

10. Decides that the measures imposed by paragraph 9 above shall not apply where the Committee established pursuant to paragraph 14 below determines that such travel is justified on the grounds of humanitarian need, including religious obligation, or where the Committee concludes that an exemption would further the objectives of the resolutions of the Council, for peace and national reconciliation in Côte d'Ivoire and stability in the region;

11. Decides also that all States shall, for the same period of twelve months, freeze immediately the funds, other financial assets and economic resources that are in their territories on the date of adoption of the present resolution or at any time thereafter, that are owned or controlled directly or indirectly by the persons designated pursuant to paragraph 9 above by the Committee established pursuant to paragraph 14 below, or that are held by entities owned or controlled directly or indirectly by any persons acting on their behalf or at their direction, as designated by the Committee, and decides further that all States shall ensure that any funds, financial assets or economic resources are prevented from being made available by their nationals or by any persons within their territories to or for the benefit of such persons or entities;

12. Decides further that the provisions of paragraph 11 above do not apply to funds, other financial assets and economic resources:

(a) That have been determined by relevant States to be necessary for basic expenses, including payment for foodstuffs, rent or mortgage, medicines and medical treatment, taxes, insurance premiums and public utility charges, or exclusively for payment of reasonable professional fees and reimbursement of incurred expenses associated with the provision of legal services, or fees or service charges, in accordance with national laws, for routine holding or maintenance of frozen funds, other financial assets and economic resources, after notification by the relevant States to the Committee established pursuant to paragraph 14 below of the intention to authorize, where appropriate, access to such funds, other financial assets and economic resources and in the absence of a negative decision by the Committee within two working days of such notification;

(b) That have been determined by relevant States to be necessary for extraordinary expenses, provided that such determination has been notified by the relevant States to the Committee and has been approved by the Committee; or

nancial assets and economic resources may be used to satisfy that lien or judgement, provided that the lien or judgement was entered prior to the date of the present resolution, is not for the benefit of a person referred to in paragraph 11 above or an individual or entity identified by the Committee, and has been notified by the relevant States to the Committee;

13. Decides that, at the end of a period of thirteen months from the date of adoption of the present resolution, the Security Council shall review the measures imposed by paragraphs 7, 9 and 11 above, in the light of progress accomplished in the peace and national reconciliation process in Côte d'Ivoire as defined by the Linas-Marcoussis and Accra III Agreements, and expresses its readiness to consider the modification or termination of those measures before the aforesaid period of thirteen months only if the Linas-Marcoussis and Accra III Agreements have been fully implemented;

14. Decides also to establish, in accordance with rule 28 of its provisional rules of procedure, a Committee of the Security Council consisting of all the members of the Council (the Committee), to undertake the following tasks:

(a) To designate the individuals and entities subject to the measures imposed by paragraphs 9 and 11 above, and to update that list regularly;

(b) To seek from all States concerned, and particularly those in the region, information regarding the actions taken by them to implement the measures imposed by paragraphs 7, 9 and 11 above, and whatever further information it may consider useful, including by providing them with an opportunity to send representatives to meet with the Committee to discuss in more detail any relevant issues;

(c) To consider and decide upon requests for the exemptions set out in paragraphs 8, 10 and 12 above;

(d) To make relevant information publicly available through appropriate media, including the list of persons referred to in subparagraph (a) above;

(e) To promulgate guidelines as may be necessary to facilitate the implementation of the measures imposed by paragraphs 11 and 12 above;

(f) To present regular reports to the Council on its work, with its observations and recommendations, in particular on ways to strengthen the effectiveness of the measures imposed by paragraphs 7, 9 and 11 above;

15. Requests all States concerned, in particular those in the region, to report to the Committee, within ninety days of the date of adoption of the present resolution, on the actions they have taken to implement the measures imposed by paragraphs 7, 9 and 11 above, and authorizes the Committee to request whatever further information it may consider necessary;

16. Urges all States, relevant United Nations bodies and, as appropriate, other organizations and interested parties, to cooperate fully with the Committee, in particular by supplying any information at their disposal on possible violations of the measures imposed by paragraphs 7, 9 and 11 above;

17. Expresses its determination to consider without delay further steps to ensure the effective monitoring and implementation of the measures imposed by paragraphs 7, 9 and 11 above, in particular the establishment of a panel of experts;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Council by 15 March 2005, drawing on information from all relevant sources, including the Government of National Reconciliation in Côte d'Ivoire, the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire, the Economic Community of West African States and the African Union, on progress made towards the goals described in paragraph 13 above;

19. Decides that the measures imposed by paragraphs 9 and 11 above shall enter into force on 15 December 2004, unless the Council shall determine before then that the signatories to the Linas-Marcoussis and Accra III Agreements have implemented all their commitments under the Accra III Agreement and are embarked towards full implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement;

20. Decides also to remain actively seized of the matter.

The Council, by a 6 December note of its President [S/2004/950], agreed that Gunter Pleuger (Germany) would serve, from 6 to 31 December 2004, as Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1572 (2004) (above) concerning Côte d'Ivoire. The Committee held its first meeting on 6 December [SC/8261-AFR/1077].

End-of-year developments

Report of Secretary-General (December).

The Secretary-General, on 9 December, issued his third progress report on UNOCI [S/2004/962 & Add.1], covering developments since his 27 August report (see p. 184). He continued to report a lack of progress in the implementation of the peace agreements, which was further complicated by the launching of a military operation by FANCI in early November (see p. 185). Following the outbreak of hostilities, actions by the AU, ECOWAS and the United Nations focused on the restoration of calm and security and on facilitating a resumption of dialogue among the Ivorian parties.

On 7 November, President Gbagbo appealed for calm and for demonstrators to return to their homes, and the next day, UNOCI and FANCI resumed joint patrols, both of which contributed to a reduction of tensions. The Ivorian authorities reported that 57 people were killed during the November disturbances. Some 9,000 expatriates left the country, and a number of UN staff were relocated to Accra, Ghana. Throughout the crisis, UNOCI troops maintained contacts with both FANCI and Forces nouvelles.

On 9 November, President Mbeki of South Africa led an AU mission to Abidjan aimed at bringing about a resumption of the peace process. The mission held discussions with President Gbagbo and other leaders. On 11 November, President Mbeki held further consultations in Pretoria, South Africa, with several opposition leaders, and with Burkina Faso's President on 13 November. Following further meetings in Pretoria on 20 and 21 November with the Secretary-General of Forces nouvelles, President Mbeki returned to Côte d'Ivoire on 2 December for a four-day visit to meet with the Ivorian parties and examine proposals for the resumption of the peace process. During that visit, the parties agreed on a plan of action for resuming the peace process.

In other developments, on 14 November, President Obasanjo of Nigeria, in his capacity as AU Chairperson, convened a summit in Abuja, attended by six regional heads of State, which urged all Ivorian parties to observe the ceasefire and called on the international community to stop the flow of arms to the country.

On 18 November, for the first time since the outbreak of hostilities, the Council of Ministers met under the chairmanship of President Gbagbo. None of the Forces nouvelles ministers attended. The meeting examined draft legislation to enact the reforms envisaged under the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement. The second ordinary session of the National Assembly resumed on 29 November.

The National Commission for Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration indicated that some 30,000 ex-combatants would participate in the programme, including 26,000 from Forces nouvelles, of which 3,000 were children. However, the programme did not commence as scheduled in October because Forces nouvelles was not prepared to disarm in the absence of progress in the adoption of key constitutional and legal reforms. The rehabilitation of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration sites in the south were completed, while those in the north were not, due to continued protests and lack of authorization for access. The programme continued to face severe financial difficulties. However, France had provided 1 million euros, which enabled the programme to begin in the eastern region.

On 15 October, the International Commission of Inquiry, established under the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement to investigate all serious violations of human rights and humanitarian law perpetrated in Côte d'Ivoire since 19 September 2002, submitted its report to the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights. It was subsequently circulated to the Ivorian parties signatory to that Agreement for their comments and was finalized and submitted to the Secretary-General on 19 November for transmission to the Security Council (see p. 177). During the crisis, the UNOCI public information unit increased its monitoring and analysis of daily media and launched a public information strategy focusing on countering disinformation, propaganda and media broadcasts inciting hatred, intolerance and violence.

The Secretary-General observed that the November crisis had strained UNOCI's capacity to implement its mandate. As an emergency measure, he recommended that the mission be reinforced by an additional infantry battalion of 850 military personnel to act as a reserve force to be stationed in Abidjan. It would be reinforced by an additional aviation unit of both attack and light helicopters and 270 support personnel, as well as a small-boat unit of 30 personnel. He also proposed the deployment of an additional 76 personnel to provide protection to ministers of the Government, bringing the level of the gendarme unit to 282. Those adjustments would increase the total UNOCI force to 7,466 military personnel. A formed police unit of 125 personnel was also recommended to assist in protecting of UNOCI headquarters and a level 1+ military medical facility for emergency requirements.

In an addendum to the report [S/2004/962/Add.1], the Secretary-General informed the Council that the financial implications arising from the reinforcement of UNOCI was estimated, on a full-cost basis, at some $27.3 million for the period ending 30 June 2005.

Communication. Côte d'Ivoire, on 21 December [S/2004/988], commented on and raised objections to some of the statements in the Secretary-General's report, which, it said, failed to take into account several relevant concerns on the ground and to address those expressed by the Ivorian President and Government well before its preparation. Côte d'Ivoire had called for a Security Council meeting on France's "reprisals" and for an international inquiry to be conducted into the events of 4 to 10 November (see p. 185). It also urged that the French Licorne force be placed under UNOCI command.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 16 December [meeting 5103], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/48 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council commends the efforts made by the African Union and, in particular, the personal involvement of Mr. Thabo Mbeki, President of the Republic of South Africa, to promote dialogue and relaunch the peace and national reconciliation process in Côte d'Ivoire. It expresses its full support for the facilitation mission undertaken by President Mbeki on behalf of the African Union.

The Council welcomes the encouraging prospects resulting from these efforts and the commitments made by all Ivorian parties, demands that all Ivorian parties fully comply with their commitments, and underlines that it will monitor with vigilance their full implementation.

The Council reaffirms its conviction that the full implementation of resolution 1572(2004) is a key element in ensuring that all Ivorian parties commit themselves fully to the implementation of the peace and national reconciliation process in Côte d'Ivoire, and deplores the fact that the signatories to the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement and the Accra III Agreement have not implemented by 15 December 2004 all their commitments under the Accra III Agreement.

The Council underlines that any failure by any Ivorian party to respect its commitments made to President Mbeki would constitute a threat to the implementation of the peace and national reconciliation process as defined in the Linas-Marcoussis and Accra III Agreements, and recalls in this regard the measures referred to in paragraphs 9 and 11 of resolution 1572(2004).

The Council requests the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1572(2004) to continue its work, taking fully into account the developments in the peace process in Côte d'Ivoire arising from the facilitation efforts undertaken by the African Union.

In addition, the Council demands that all Ivorian parties stop all incitement to violence and hatred in broadcast, written and other media, and calls upon the Committee to monitor this closely without delay.

The Council also demands that all Ivorian parties ensure freedom of the press and unlimited access to information throughout Côte d'Ivoire.

The Council expresses its intention to consider without delay further steps to ensure the effective monitoring and implementation of the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1572(2004).

The Council expresses its appreciation to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Côte d'Ivoire, Mr. Albert Tévoédjrè, for his unsparing efforts to support the restoration of a durable peace in Côte d'Ivoire under challenging circumstances.

Later developments. In a later report [S/2005/186], the Secretary-General said that President Gbagbo's decision in late December to ban street marches and demonstrations in Abidjan for three months helped calm the situation in the city, but the security situation in the country as a whole remained very tense.

Before the completion of its extraordinary session in late December, the National Assembly adopted most of the major legislative reforms (the amendment to the Citizenship Code, the Special Law on Naturalization and the law consenting to a proposed amendment to articles 35 and 55 of the Constitution) envisaged in the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, which were subsequently promulgated. In that context, the Assembly's adoption of the amendment to article 35 of the Constitution relating to eligibility of candidates for the presidency was a significant step forward. However, Mr. Gbagbo had repeatedly stated his intention to submit the proposed amendment to a national referendum. That position was challenged by the opposition parties. The G-7, a group of opposition political parties, further claimed that some of the legislation was not in conformity with the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement and called for the revision of those laws. The Assembly also adopted a new law on the press and one on audio-visual communication. A presidential decree was issued on 24 December changing the status of the Ivorian Radio and Television into a State-owned company.

Communication. On 20 December [S/2004/987], Côte d'Ivoire informed the Security Council that the basic laws called for under the Linas-Marcoussis and Accra III Agreements were approved by the National Assembly on 17 December, and that other related bills would be concluded on 31 December. Côte d'Ivoire reiterated President Gbagbo's position that the amendment to article 35 required approval in a national referendum. Drawing attention to article 127 of the Constitution which stated that no amendment procedure might be initiated so long as the integrity of the national territory was threatened, it said that, while President Gbagbo wished to finish amending article 35, adherence to the rule of law and the Constitution required that the country be reunified so that the amendment could be put to a referendum.

Monitoring Group (December). On 2 December [S/2004/944], the Secretary-General forwarded to the Security Council the sixth and seventh reports of the tripartite Monitoring Group established under the Accra III Agreement, covering the periods from 15 to 30 October and from 1 to 15 November. The Group noted that the deadline of 15 October passed without the commencement of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, underscoring the failure of the parties to implement the time frame set under that Agreement. Furthermore, the conditions for the organization of the elections had not been met. The FIANCI military operations in early November, followed by retaliatory action by the Licorne force, which destroyed much Ivorian military equipment, led to rising tensions. The resumption of armed hostilities had complicated, if not scuttled, the initiatives that were ongoing in search of a way out of the Ivorian crisis. By mid-November, the atmosphere for negotiations was confused even as reports of consultations and good offices might have otherwise given hope for some compromise.

The situation had not changed much by the end of the month, as the Monitoring Group observed in its eighth report [S/2004/976], covering the period from 16 to 30 November. While the overall military situation had calmed down, the confusion and uncertainties in the general political and social situation had scuttled any local initiatives for restoring dialogue among the Ivorian political actors. The ongoing consultations by President Mbeki (see p. 189) were the only glimmer of hope in the prevailing circumstances, and it was in the interest of the international community to support that AU initiative.

In the report covering activities from 1 to 17 December [S/2005/82], the Group provided information on the broad outlines agreed upon by the Ivorian parties under the five clusters proposed by the AU facilitation mission (2-6 December): the legislative programme; disarmament, demobilization and reintegration; functioning of the Government of National Reconciliation; creating a climate conducive to free political activity and the functioning of State institutions; and restoration of social services and redeployment of administration throughout the country. Under the programme of action, the parties agreed that the Government would forward to the National Assembly all outstanding legislative texts envisaged under the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement. All parties agreed that the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme would start immediately and would be carried out in the context of the Agreement reached earlier at Yamoussoukro among the military Quadripartite Commission. Implementation would be the responsibility of the National Commission for Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration, although Forces nouvelles insisted that only UNOCI should carry out the exercise in zones under its control. It was agreed that all ministers of the Government should return to their posts and work as a team. However, security had to be improved for their safety. To enhance general security, the parties agreed on joint patrols by FIANCI and UNOCI; the "young patriots" should be encouraged to get off the streets; restoration of the regular management of the national television company; and an end to the hate campaign in the media. It was also agreed that measures would be taken progressively to urgently restore social services and public utilities.

UNOCI financing

The Secretary-General submitted the UNOCI budget for the period from 4 April to 30 June 2004 and from 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005, which amounted to a total of $502,354,400 ($101,061,200 and $401,293,200, respectively) [A/58/788].

ACABQ, in its report [A/58/806] on the proposed budget, recommended that the total be reduced by $205,339,700, bringing the total figure to $297,014,700, due to delayed deployment rates for military and other personnel and the vacancy rates in authorized posts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

On 18 June [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/58/831], adopted resolution 58/310 without vote [agenda item 167].

Financing of the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1528(2004) of 27 February 2004, by which the Council established the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire for an initial period of twelve months as from 4 April 2004,

Recognizing that the costs of the Operation are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the general principles underlying the financing of United Nations peacekeeping operations, as stated in General Assembly resolutions 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973 and 55/235 of 23 December 2000,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Operation with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolution of the Security Council,

1. Expresses concern at the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

2. Also expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

3. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

4. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

5. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Operation;

6. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

Liberia

Liberia's political transition showed measured progress in 2004, as efforts intensified to implement the 2003 Comprehensive Peace Agreement [YUN 2003, p. 192] concluded by Liberia's Government, the two main rebel groups (the Liberians United for Reconciliation and Democracy (LURD) and the Movement for Democracy in Liberia (MODEL)), 18 political parties and civil society leaders. That Agreement, which ended the war and provided for the establishment of a National Transitional Government, was monitored by three mechanisms: the Joint Monitoring Committee, chaired by the Force Commander of the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL), which assessed the compliance by armed groups with the ceasefire; the Implementation Monitoring Committee, chaired by ECOWAS and charged with monitoring and ensuring implementation of the Agreement; and the International Contact Group on Liberia. UNMIL, established in 2003 with an authorized strength of 15,000, continued to observe and monitor the implementation of the agreed ceasefire, assist in developing cantonment sites and disarming combatants, monitor disengagement and cantonment, and facilitate delivery of humanitarian aid. As at 1 December 2004, the Mission's strength stood at 14,541 troops and 1,104 civilian police.

Throughout 2004, UNMIL made progress in stabilizing Liberia and providing assistance to create the security conditions for the full implementation of the Agreement. The deployment of its troops in all areas brought relative calm and security that facilitated the delivery of humanitarian assistance and progress towards the restoration of State authority. On 31 October, the disarmament and demobilization of armed forces was completed, and the armed factions were formally disbanded. By the end of the year, further progress was made, including the commencement of the repatriation of refugees and the resettlement of internally displaced persons. State authority was extended to most counties and the new Liberian National Police Service was strengthened through recruitment and training, with UN assistance. Despite those achievements, many challenges remained, in particular the limitations on the capacity of the National Transitional Government to deliver basic services and to extend civil administration throughout the entire country. The electoral reform bill was held up due to disagreement on the allocation of seats in the future legislative assembly, and disagreements within the LURD leadership complicated negotiations among the parties on power sharing.

However, the peace process encountered serious setbacks, especially the outbreak of violence in Monrovia from 28 to 31 October, apparently fueled by ethnic divisions and exploited by former combatants. The security situation remained relatively calm, although it was marred by an increasing number of incidents of mob violence and armed robberies.

The Security Council considered the reports of its two subsidiary bodies established to assess the effectiveness of its arms embargo, diamond and timber sanctions against Liberia, and a ban on travel of individuals deemed to be harmful to the peace process, and those of the Panel of Experts appointed to advise on compliance with those sanctions. While noting that the Transitional Government had made progress in meeting the conditions for lifting the measures, in particular diamond and timber sanctions, the Council determined that much remained to be done to fulfil the conditions for lifting the sanctions and therefore decided to renew the measures. It also imposed further measures against former President Charles Taylor and his immediate family.

Peace-building efforts

Report of Secretary-General (March). In response to Security Council resolution 1509(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 194], the Secretary-General, on 22 March [S/2004/229], issued his second progress report on UNMIL, covering the period since his previous report of 15 December 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 197]. The Mission, whose task was to stabilize the country and create conditions for the implementation of the other aspects of its mandate, was deployed throughout the country, with the exception of the area along the border with Côte d'Ivoire in Grand Gedeh and Maryland counties. During the reporting period, there was general compliance with the ceasefire in most of the country, except for reports of minor violations by all three armed groups (LURD, MODEL and former Government of Liberia forces) outside the capital, including illegal checkpoints and sporadic shooting, as well as the harassment of civilians, extortion and looting. Security in areas where UNMIL had deployed improved and armed groups in those areas generally respected the ban on the public display of arms.

The Joint Monitoring Committee continued to monitor the ceasefire, maintain dialogue among the armed groups and facilitate contacts between UNMIL and ground commanders of the three factions. It held six meetings during the reporting period to discuss ceasefire violations, preparations for disarmament, demobilization, reintegration and repatriation, and efforts to retrieve looted vehicles from the armed factions. UNMIL pressed the factions to submit lists of their combatants, indicating their locations and military equipment. MODEL and forces of the former Government of Liberia forces indicated that they were finalizing nominal lists, while LURD had yet to provide a response.

The Implementation Monitoring Committee met on 4 March to review preparations for relaunching the disarmament, demobilization, reintegration and repatriation process. UNMIL, ECOWAS and the International Contact Group on Liberia were also working to advance the peace process, calling on all parties to refrain from action that could jeopardize the work of the National Transitional Government, and to turn to the politics of dialogue and accommodation.

The National Transitional Legislative Assembly completed the nomination of 19 of the 23 ministerial positions as allocated by the Agreement. However, the issue of appointments to 84 assistant ministerial positions not provided for under the Agreement continued to be a source of tension between some leaders of the armed factions and Chairman Charles Gyude Bryant of the National Transitional Government. By early March, the Transitional Government submitted 66 nominations to the Transitional Legislative Assembly for those posts, but none had been formally confirmed. The approval process was also complicated by a leadership struggle within LURD.

The situation in Liberia further heightened tension in the region, and Chairman Bryant paid visits to Guinea and Sierra Leone to help revive cooperation among the Mano River Union (MRU) countries. A meeting of the Force Commanders of UNMIL, UNAMSIL and MINUCI was held in Abidjan on 13 February to discuss regional aspects of conflicts, including military coordination in addressing cross-border activities. The Secretary-General's Special Representatives for Liberia, Côte d'Ivoire, Sierra Leone, Guinea-Bissau and West Africa met in Dakar from 18 to 21 February to review and address cross-border issues, such as the movement of combatants, the use of mercenaries, the circulation of small arms and the repatriation of foreign combatants. The International Contact Group on Liberia, in a statement issued following its 5 February meeting, urged all States in the subregion to prevent their territories from being used by armed elements to destabilize their neighbours and to strengthen subregional cooperation. It urged UNMIL, the Transitional Government and the leadership of the warring parties to contain all Liberian fighters within the territory of Liberia to enable the peace process in neighbouring countries to succeed.

The disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process, which was suspended in December 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 199], was revived at a meeting held on 15 January 2004 among UNMIL, the faction commanders, the Transitional Government, UN agencies and other stakeholders. The meeting agreed that the programme would be contingent on the implementation of a sensitization campaign for combatants; provision by the three armed factions of lists of their combatants, locations and weapons; the establishment of cantonment sites; and adequate deployment of UNMIL troops to provide security. The Technical Coordination Committee completed the operational plans for the disarmament and demobilization process and identified disarmament and cantonment sites, in conjunction with UNMIL. The Government arranged for the distribution of rice to combatants, for which UNMIL provided logistical assistance. As at 5 March, $11.3 million in pledges had been made to the UNDP Trust Fund for disarmament demobilization, reintegration and repatriation, of which $8 million had been received, but additional funds were urgently needed.

The UNMIL civilian police worked to re-establish police services where the police had been forced to withdraw for security reasons. It also conducted joint force patrols to locations throughout the country. On 12 January, UNMIL launched a training programme for a Liberian interim police force of 400 officers. The civilian police consulted with justice officials to improve conditions in the correctional system, which faced such problems as insufficient prison facilities, untimely processing of cases and a lack of security.

UNMIL assisted the Transitional Government to prepare for the re-establishment of State authority throughout the country. Progress was made in meeting civil servants' salary arrears, but most ministries still lacked operational facilities, having been looted during the fighting in Monrovia in 2003. UNMIL assisted ministries and other governmental institutions to develop plans for restructuring and enhancing their operational capacities and for restoring civil administration in the interior of the country. Its civil affairs officers helped to resolve disputes over illegally occupied dwellings and land restitution. The human rights and protection component worked with the gender unit in building the capacity of the Ministry of Gender and Development. It also assisted the Transitional Government in preparing draft legislation for the establishment of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and other human rights legislation. The Mission's public information component promoted the peace process through UNMIL Radio, working with national and international media.

With the deployment of UNMIL outside Monrovia, humanitarian access to vulnerable populations in the interior of the country improved. About 12,000 refugees from neighbouring countries returned home spontaneously, raising protection concerns in those parts of the country where UNMIL had not been deployed. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) led the overall programme for the eventual return and resettlement of refugees and other displaced persons. However, the humanitarian situation in the camps for internally displaced persons around Monrovia, hosting some 250,000 people, was dire. Between November 2003 and January 2004, UN agencies and NGOs relocated about 25,000 internally displaced persons from shelters in Monrovia back to their homes or to recognized camps. An estimated 10,000 internally displaced persons had spontaneously returned from camps to areas that were relatively accessible, such as Bomi, Bong, Margibi and Grand Cape Mount counties. However, they all faced problems of lack of housing, food, tools for farming and poor infrastructure. A number of UN aid agencies were working to meet those challenges.

By early March, UNMIL had undertaken over 50 quick-impact projects in Monrovia utilizing local contractors, and another 45 projects were under review, mainly in the education, health, water and sanitation areas. Support was made available by UNDP, the World Bank and UNICEF, among others. A results-focused transition framework addressing Liberia's short- to medium-term reconstruction and development needs was presented at the International Reconstruction Conference for Liberia (New York, 5-6 February), where $522 million was pledged for relief and reconstruction.

The Secretary-General concluded that notwithstanding the difficulties encountered in launching the disarmament, demobilization, reintegration and repatriation programme, significant progress was made in improving security, facilitating the delivery of humanitarian assistance and implementing the peace process. He emphasized the need for the parties to work together constructively and refrain from jeopardizing the functioning of the National Transitional Government. He added that there were still many difficult challenges requiring careful management, and the Implementation Monitoring Committee would have to play a more central role in the coming months to facilitate dialogue among the parties and in helping to overcome any obstacles to the peace process.

Security Council consideration. On 29 March [S/2004/328], the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations briefed the Security Council during consideration of the Secretary-General's report. Council members welcomed the significant progress made towards improving security in Liberia, while recognizing that much more remained to be done, especially disarmament, demobilization, reintegration and repatriation, one of the biggest challenges ahead. They noted that the increased stability in the country should encourage the Government to extend State authority throughout Liberia.

Report of Secretary-General (May). In May [S/2004/430 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General, updating the information on Liberia since his March report (see p. 196), indicated that UNMIL was able to move into areas previously controlled by LURD elements along the Guinea-Liberia border and along Liberia's borders with Sierra Leone and Côte d'Ivoire. The ceasefire continued to hold, although the security situation remained fragile, mainly because the disarmament process was yet to be completed. Intra-faction disputes, particularly within LURD, created tension and resulted in some shooting incidents. The Joint Monitoring Committee held five meetings during the reporting period and noted that, while fighting among the armed groups had almost completely ended, intra-faction disputes and criminal activities remained a serious threat to security.

The International Contact Group on Liberia met in London on 11 May to assess progress made in the Liberian peace process. It recognized the need for a subregional approach to resolving many of the issues at hand and, to that end, proposed that the Group's mandate be expanded to cover not only Liberia but also the wider subregional issues.

Both the National Transitional Government and the National Transitional Legislative Assembly were making sincere efforts to carry out their responsibilities. The major issue of appointments to the Transitional Government, which had strained relations between Chairman Bryant and the armed factions and made it difficult for the Transitional Government to function, was largely resolved. The process of confirming nominees to the 81 assistant ministerial and other executive positions began, and the 21-member Cabinet was formally sworn in on 23 March. However, two seats in the Legislative Assembly remained vacant because of ongoing disagreements among the stakeholders in Grand Kru county and the All Liberian Coalition Party.

On 15 April, UNMIL re-launched the disarmament, demobilization, rehabilitation and reintegration programme at a cantonment site in Gbarnga for LURD combatants. Additional cantonment sites were opened in Buchanan (for MODEL), in Tubmanburg (for LURD) and near Monrovia (for former government forces). Disarmament commenced on 6 May for ex-Government of Liberia militias at Kakata and the next day in the Buchanan cantonment site initially used for MODEL combatants, without major problems. However, on 17 May, riots erupted in Monrovia when a group of armed ex-Government of Liberia combatants, demanding to be transported to a cantonment site to be disarmed, were informed that they were scheduled to undergo the process at a later stage. UNMIL troops and civilian police had to intervene to prevent the situation from escalating. As at 18 May, 17,485 combatants had been disarmed since 15 April, bringing the overall total to nearly 31,000 since December 2003, out of an anticipated caseload of 53,000. Some 14,368 weapons were also surrendered, but there were signs that some of the heavy weapons were not being turned in, while others were being smuggled across Liberia's borders. Modalities were being finalized for the voluntary reintegration and repatriation of foreign combatants to their countries of origin, with particular attention to the special needs of women and children associated with the fighting forces. With disarmament and demobilization components of the programme on track, UNMIL and others concerned turned their focus to the reintegration aspects of the programme, in collaboration with a number of agencies, including UN agencies, the United States Agency for International Development, the EU and NGOs.

In the security sector, the registration of Liberian law enforcement personnel was proceeding on schedule. The process, due to be completed by September, had enabled, as at 1 May, 3,492 members of the Liberian National Police to be registered. UNMIL provided training for 530 officers. A Rule of Law Implementation Committee was established to coordinate the reform of the police, the judiciary and correctional institutions. It was formulating a strategy for the reform and restructuring of the police force, renamed the Liberian Police Service. UNMIL also worked on problems facing the legal and judicial system, including rehabilitation work on the infrastructure of the Temple of Justice in Monrovia and coordinating plans for opening circuit and magistrates courts.

UNMIL continued to work with the Liberian authorities to formulate and execute a comprehensive strategy for the return of government officials to their areas of authority. A task force for the restoration of civil authority was established to formulate a gradual deployment of government officials to all counties.

As preparations for elections continued, an assessment mission was sent to Liberia in April to develop proposals on the UN role in supporting that process. The assessment team drew up proposals for the reform of the electoral system and a possible time line of activities. It recommended that a meeting be held as soon as possible with all signatories to the Agreement to clarify issues such as voter education and registration, constituency delimitation and polling.

Security Council consideration. The Security Council, at a 3 June meeting [meeting 4981] to consider the Secretary-General's third progress report on UNMIL (see p. 197), was briefed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Liberia, Jacques Paul Klein. He reported that progress had been made in deploying troops throughout Liberia, disarming armed groups and restructuring the law and order institutions, which had exceeded the Mission's expectations. UNMIL's deployment throughout Liberia had greatly improved security along its porous borders. The United Nations was pleased that the United States had offered to take the lead in assisting and advising the National Transitional Government on the restructuring of the army. Meanwhile, UNMIL was preparing a draft restructuring scheme, and a draft defence policy was being reviewed. Developments in the surrounding countries were of concern as they negatively impacted on the Liberian peace process.

The improved security situation and the resumption of the disarmament process had enabled humanitarian agencies and human rights groups to extend their activities to formerly inaccessible areas, and displaced people and refugees were returning to their former homes. UNMIL also assisted in the restoration of the judicial system and prisons, with 17 courts being reconstituted in the Monrovia area.

The Special Representative observed that there were numerous challenges ahead, as progress was still fragile. Ensuring weapons hand-over remained a priority. Until the disarmament, demobilization, reintegration and repatriation programme and the troop deployment process were completed, inter- and intra-factional conflicts might persist in remote parts of the country. The capacity of the Transitional Government to deliver services and extend its authority throughout the country also remained very limited. However, he anticipated no major setback in efforts to bring peace and stability to Liberia.

Security Council mission. The Security Council mission to West Africa (see p. 169), which visited Liberia on 24 June, reported on 2 July [S/2004/525] that it was impressed by the progress made there since the National Transitional Government took office and UNMIL deployment in October 2003. It recognized, however, that the challenges of reconstruction and peace-building were so great that the international community would have to remain engaged for some time to come. The mission identified several immediate priorities for Liberia, the most urgent of which was establishing security, particularly in view of reports of cross-border movements. The mission recommended that UNMIL pay particular attention to monitoring Liberia's external borders. To help establish government authority throughout the country, it recommended that the remaining UNMIL civilian personnel, including human rights officers, be deployed as soon as possible. It welcomed the United States assistance in military training. The mission encouraged donors to provide financial and technical support for election preparations and underlined the importance of helping women to participate in those elections. It also urged donors to disburse quickly the pledges made at the international donors' conference on Liberia in February (see p. 915).

In regard to sanctions imposed against Liberia (see p. 204) by Security Council resolution 1521 (2003) [YUN 2003, p. 208], the mission reiterated the Council's wish to see sanctions ended as soon as the conditions outlined in that resolution were met. It clarified that the diamond ban could be lifted once Liberia had a transparent and internationally verifiable diamond certification scheme, thus paving the way for the country to join the Kimberley Process for diamond certification (see p. 57). The mission recommended that the Government continue efforts to achieve the goals in its action plan on timber, including the transparent management of government revenues. It also recommended that the Council consider the Special Representative's proposal that UNMIL play a more active role in monitoring sanctions.

The mission encouraged the Government to combat corruption and to explore ways of attracting private investment, in conjunction with donors and development partners. The mission recommended that UNMIL continue to coordinate with other UN missions in the subregion to develop a more effective response to cross-border problems, such as the movements of arms and mercenaries and human trafficking.

The Council considered the mission's visit and report at meetings held on 30 June and 16 July [meetings 5000 & 5005].

Report of Secretary-General (September). The Secretary-General, in his 10 September report on UNMIL [S/2004/725], covering developments in Liberia since his 26 May report (see p. 197), said that the overall security situation remained calm, although there were a few minor skirmishes and incidents, primarily related to the intra-faction dispute within LURD. Disarmament was nearing completion and UNMIL continued searches to curb the illegal movement of weapons across the country. In July, a large quantity of arms and ammunition was confiscated during checkpoint and search-and-seizure operations in central Liberia. The Mission also continued to conduct land and air patrols to monitor the situation along the borders. At the same time, there was an increase in minor crimes and civil unrest, particularly in Monrovia, where many disarmed ex-combatants had moved. However, the security situation around the city had improved overall, primarily owing to the presence of UNMIL troops and joint patrols by UNMIL civilian police and the Liberian National Police throughout the capital. The patrols quelled demonstrations by ex-combatants and others, which at times turned violent. Criminal activity and violent incidents also increased in some areas in the interior, partially linked to growing frustration among combatants still awaiting the commencement of the disarmament and demobilization programme in outlying counties and those awaiting the start of the rehabilitation and reintegration programme in their chosen communities.

The third phase of the disarmament and demobilization programme commenced, with disarmament carried out in several remote border areas, and new cantonment sites opened in Zwedru (for MODEL) and Ganta (for the former Government of Liberia forces). Operations at the cantonment sites in Gbarnga (for LURD) and Buchanan (for MODEL) concluded in July. As at 30 August, a total of 71,000 combatants had been disarmed since December 2003. UNMIL had registered 530 foreign combatants, most of whom were from Guinea, Sierra Leone and Côte d'Ivoire. UNMIL worked with UN and other agencies to strengthen linkages between the reintegration of ex-combatants and internally displaced persons and refugees who returned to their communities.

UNMIL also worked with the Liberian National Police Service in recruiting and training police officers. Through quick-impact projects, it helped to facilitate the rehabilitation and reopening of the law school, and provided legal support to committees and organizations to build capacity for good governance, transparency and the supremacy of the rule of law. It also worked with the juvenile justice system by collaborating with national counterparts, through education and legal reform initiatives. UNMIL developed, in collaboration with others, training programmes for justices of the peace, magistrates and circuit and specialized court judges, and strengthened the correctional system.

Some progress was made towards the restoration of State authority throughout the country. UNMIL assisted the national Task Force for the Restoration of State Authority in the Ministry of Internal Affairs in developing and implementing a nationwide programme for that purpose, and helped in the deployment of immigration and customs officials to border crossing points. UNMIL civil affairs officers were deployed to all 15 counties, where they supported the restoration of State authority and the revival of government institutions, including negotiating with members of the armed factions to ensure that they vacated State-owned buildings.

ECOWAS, UNMIL and the National Elections Commission, at a meeting on 31 May, agreed that the Commission would be responsible for conducting elections and that the United Nations would take the lead in coordinating all electoral assistance for the Commission. At subsequent meetings, the Commission determined that there was general consensus that the local elections would take place after the presidential and legislative elections in October 2005 and after the elected government had taken office. On 30 August, the Commission submitted the draft electoral reform legislation to the National Transitional Legislative Assembly. Voter registration was expected to begin in April 2005.

The Secretary-General, while noting the progress made in stabilizing Liberia and in creating the security conditions for implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, said that he remained concerned about the capacity of the National Transitional Government to deliver basic services and extend civil administration throughout the country. Protracted disputes, including over claims by some ministers that individuals from their respective factions should be nominated to key government and parastatal positions, had hindered the functioning of the Transitional Government, as had the continuing divisions within LURD. Liberia was entering the rehabilitation and reintegration phase of the disarmament, demobilization, reintegration and repatriation programme, a vital element in the process of ensuring durable peace and in enhancing subregional security. There were some 70,000 ex-combatants seeking to benefit from the reintegration programme, which was experiencing a funding shortfall. In the light of the new phase of UNMIL operations, focusing on rehabilitation and reintegration, the restoration of State administration nationwide, the strengthening of the rule-of-law institutions, promotion of recovery and reconstruction, and the organization of elections, the Secretary-General recommended that the UNMIL mandate be extended for 12 months, until 19 September 2005.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 17 September [meeting 5036], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1561 (2004). The draft [S/2004/740] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions and statements by its President on Liberia, including its resolutions 1497(2003) of 1 August 2003 and 1509(2003) of 19 September 2003 and the statement by its President of 27 August 2003, and other relevant resolutions and statements,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 10 September 2004 and its recommendations,

Recognizing the critical role the Economic Community of West African States continues to play in the Liberian peace process, and welcoming the support and continued engagement of the African Union and its close coordination with the Economic Community of West African States and the United Nations,

Noting the substantial progress made to date in the disarmament phase of the programme of disarmament, demobilization, rehabilitation and reintegration of ex-combatants,

Recalling that its resolutions 1521(2003) of 22 December 2003 and 1532(2004) of 12 March 2004 provide for measures against any individuals engaged in activities aimed at undermining peace and stability in Liberia and the subregion,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Liberia until 19 September 2005;

2. Calls upon all Liberian parties to demonstrate their full commitment to the peace process and to work together to ensure that free, fair and transparent elections take place as planned no later than October 2005;

3. Calls upon the international community to respond to the continuing need for funds for the critically important rehabilitation and reintegration phase and to fulfil pledges made at the International Reconstruction Conference on Liberia, held in New York on 5 and 6 February 2004;

4. Requests the Secretary-General through his Special Representative to continue to report periodically to the Council on the progress made by the Mission in the implementation of its mandate;

5. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

The United States, speaking in explanation of its vote, said that its policy was to ensure that its armed services participating in UN peace operations were protected from criminal prosecution or other assertion of jurisdiction by the International Criminal Court. Normally, it would seek express provisions providing such protection for personnel from States not party to the Rome Statute establishing the Court [YUN 1998, p. 1209]. However, the United States maintained sufficient bilateral protections with Liberia to facilitate its continued participation in UNMIL, absent such express provisions (see p. 198).

Report of Secretary-General (December).

The Secretary-General, on 17 December [S/2004/972], issued his fifth progress report on UNMIL, covering developments in Liberia since his 10 September report (see p. 199). During that period, progress was made in implementing the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, including the completion of disarmament and demobilization on 31 October, the formal disbandment of the armed factions on 3 November, the commencement of the repatriation of refugees on 1 October and the resettlement of internally displaced persons on 8 November. State authority was extended to several additional counties and the training of recruits for the new Liberian National Police Service continued.

At the same time, the peace process encountered several major challenges, in particular an outbreak of violence in Monrovia from 28 to 31 October, resulting in destruction of property and loss of life, continued disputes among the LURD leadership, violent demonstrations by various disaffected groups and slow progress in the reintegration of ex-combatants. Progress was also hampered by the limited capacity of the National Transitional Government to provide social services and consolidate State authority, disputes among the former armed factions regarding the distribution of government posts, and delays in the passage of the electoral reform bill.

Early reports of the October disturbances indicated that a land dispute might have triggered the rioting, which rapidly assumed ethnic and religious dimensions involving members of the predominantly Mandingo ethnic group. The situation was exploited by disgruntled combatants awaiting reintegration, loyalists of former President Charles Taylor and some elements of the opposing factions within LURD. A number of religious, commercial and residential properties were destroyed during the uprising and 19 people killed. UNMIL initially responded to the riots by deploying its civilian police and Liberian police units, but as the situation escalated, its troops had to undertake robust action to bring it under control. The continuing disagreement among splinter groups within LURD posed serious problems for the peace process, and there were reports that some members were attempting to unseat Chairman Bryant and unravel the peace process. To guard against the derailment of the peace process, UNMIL, in a meeting with other international partners on 13 and 15 October, agreed that the National Transitional Government should be encouraged to address the grievances of the population, specifically: paying civil servants' salary arrears; instituting measures to address corruption; ensuring transparency in the management of public funds; and improving communication with the public. It urged the National Transitional Government to consult civil society groups, and Chairman Bryant to convene regular Cabinet meetings so as to ensure transparency and inclusiveness in decision-making.

On 18 October, the Implementation Monitoring Committee issued a press statement warning the Liberian factions that the international community would not allow any disruption of the functioning of the National Transitional Government, including the unseating of Chairman Bryant, and drawing attention to the measures provided for in Security Council resolutions 1521(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 208] and 1532(2004) (see p. 204) that would be taken against any individual undermining peace and stability in Liberia and the subregion. On 19 October, the Minister of Justice announced that the National Transitional Government had commenced legal action to freeze the economic assets of the former Commissioner of the Maritime Bureau, Benoni Urey, and the former Finance Minister, Emmanuel Shaw. However, following a legal petition by the two men, the Liberian Supreme Court ordered a suspension of the freeze until a hearing on 2 November. As at 1 December, the Supreme Court had yet to rule on the matter. (See section on sanctions.)

Divisions within LURD deepened on 27 October, when one faction unilaterally elected new executive members for LURD. At the intervention of the Special Representative and regional leaders, the leadership of the two opposing LURD factions were brought together at a 30 October meeting, at which a memorandum of understanding was signed for transforming LURD into a political movement; however, feuding flared up again shortly thereafter.

Meanwhile, there were growing signs of public dissatisfaction with the limited progress of the Government in improving basic living conditions. Several protests occurred linked to low or delayed payment of salaries, labour disputes, poor teaching conditions and high registration fees for high school students.

Following the completion of the disarmament and demobilization exercise, which officially ended on 31 October, 48 commanders from the three armed factions handed in their weapons and demobilized on 2 November. The next day, the three armed factions signed a joint declaration attesting to the completion of disarmament and demobilization and acknowledging the cessation of their military existence with the disbandment of their forces and command structures. As at 1 December, a total of 101,449 combatants had been disarmed and demobilized, including over 22,000 women and nearly 11,000 children, and 27,892 weapons and 33,000 pieces of heavy munitions and unexploded ordnance had been collected. UNMIL continued to make payments to the demobilized combatants, but implementation of an effective rehabilitation and reintegration programme for those ex-combatants remained a major challenge. UNMIL also initiated discussions with neighbouring countries on the repatriation of disarmed combatants who had identified themselves as nationals of those States.

Some progress was made in the restoration of State authority. During the reporting period, Chairman Bryant submitted for confirmation the names of eight nominees for county superintendent posts. UNMIL, in collaboration with UNDP, facilitated the establishment of District Development Councils to enhance community participation in local projects and governance. Meanwhile, the United Nations Office for Project Services assisted in the development of a national plan for reconstruction, including rehabilitation of the free port area in Monrovia. UNMIL also assisted the Government with the deployment of officials, particularly at the border entry points. However, the deployed officials' ability to function was hampered by a lack of adequate facilities and equipment. UNMIL civil affairs county coordinators continued to support the restoration of State authority and the revival of government institutions.

The National Transitional Legislative Assembly reached its full strength of 76 members, with the 12 October election of the representative for Grand Kru county, thereby fulfilling another provision of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement. The electoral reform bill had not been adopted due to disagreement on the basis to be used for allocating seats (either on the number of registered voters or on actual population figures). The delay hindered preparations for the October 2005 elections.

On 1 October, UNHCR, in collaboration with the Government, began to facilitate the voluntary repatriation of Liberian refugees from neighbouring countries, estimated to total nearly 100,000 by the end of the year. That action followed the signing of agreements between UNHCR and Liberia, Sierra Leone, Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana and Guinea, providing the legal framework for repatriation. In addition, it was estimated that there were more than 260,000 internally displaced persons in Liberia. UN organizations, such as WFP, FAO, UNICEF, WHO and the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat) increased their deployment throughout the country to bring humanitarian aid to those outside the capital.

The Secretary-General said that the peace process was at a critical juncture, with the focus of attention shifting to the preparations for the October 2005 elections, the need to resettle internally displaced persons and refugees and provide reintegration opportunities for ex-combatants, and further the extension of State authority nationwide. Many serious issues remained to be effectively addressed, so that the gains made so far were not undermined. In addition to paying civil servants' salaries, the Government needed to address corruption and ensure transparency in order to attract donor funding for reconstruction. Consideration should also be given to increasing independent oversight of the Government's public revenue management. The Government should also actively engage and consult with civil society, as part of an overall strategy to enhance public understanding of and promote support for the transition process, expand its authority nationwide and promote reconciliation and religious tolerance among the diverse groups in the country. The reintegration of ex-combatants, largely unemployed and restive, was essential to counter the threat they posed to security and stability.

2003/04 financial arrangements and performance

In a 12 May note [A/58/792] on financing arrangements for UNMIL for the period from 1 August 2003 to 30 June 2004, the Secretary-General reported that, as at 30 March 2004, expenditures incurred by UNMIL amounted to $237,837,300 gross ($237,260,700 net), or 42 per cent of the $564,494,300 gross ($560,733,400 net) appropriated by the General Assembly for that period to the Special Account for UNMIL in resolution 58/261 A [YUN 2003, p. 200]. It was anticipated that the remainder would be fully utilized and that an additional $114,494,300 would be needed for the budget, as States had been apportioned for only $450,000,000. The Assembly was also requested to approve the reduction in the estimated staff assessment income from $5,210,000 as apportioned to $3,760,900.

On 20 December [A/59/624], the Secretary-General issued a performance report on the UNMIL budget for the period from 1 August 2003 to 30 June 2004. Actual expenditure amounted to $548,178,700, a variance of 2.9 per cent, leaving an unencumbered balance of $16,315,600.

2004/05 budget estimates

On 22 March [A/58/744], the Secretary-General submitted the budget for UNMIL for the period from 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005, which amounted to $839,711,300, inclusive of budgeted voluntary contributions in kind valued at $120,000.

ACABQ, in its 14 May report [A/58/798], having considered the financial arrangements for the period from 1 August 2003 to 30 June 2004 and the 2004/05 budget, proposed a number of revisions to the budget, particularly for streamlining UNMIL's structure and downgrading five posts. It recommended that the estimated budget requirement be reduced to $821,986,000.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 June [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/58/589/Add.1], adopted resolution 58/261 B without vote [agenda item 165].

2005/06 budget estimates

On 20 December [A/59/630], the Secretary-General submitted proposed budget estimates for the maintenance of UNMIL for the period from 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006, which amounted to $722,753,600 inclusive of budgeted voluntary contributions in kind in the amount of $120,000.

On 23 December, the General Assembly decided that the agenda item on UNMIL financing would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session (decision 59/552). The Assembly also called on the international community to provide assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia in resolution 59/219 (see p. 929).

Sanctions

The Security Council received several reports on the implementation of sanctions imposed on Liberia pursuant to Council resolutions 1343 (2001) [YUN 2001, p. 181], 1478(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 203] and 1521(2003) [ibid., p. 208]. Those sanctions banned arms and related materiel, military training, the export of Liberian timber products and rough diamonds and international travel of those individuals so designated, who constituted a threat to the peace process in Liberia and the sub-region. On 12 March 2004, the Council imposed further financial sanctions on Charles Taylor and his immediate family (see below).

On 16 January [S/2004/40], the Secretary-General informed the Council, as requested by resolution 1521(2003), of his appointment of five members of the Panel of Experts established pursuant to resolution 1478(2003). The Panel was mandated to conduct a follow-up assessment mission to Liberia and neighbouring States, to investigate and report on the implementation of resolution 1521(2003) and violations of the sanctions, including any violations involving rebel movements and neighbouring countries, and any information relevant to the designation by the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1521(2003) of the individuals described in the resolution, and the various sources of financing, such as from natural resources, for the illicit trade of arms.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 12 March [meeting 4925], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1532(2004). The draft [S/2004/189] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 1521(2003) of 22 December 2003 and its other resolutions and the statements by its President on the situation in Liberia and West Africa,

Noting with concern that the actions and policies of former President of Liberia Charles Taylor and other persons, in particular their depletion of Liberian resources and their removal from Liberia and secreting of Liberian funds and property, have undermined Liberia's transition to democracy and the orderly development of its political, administrative and economic institutions and resources,

Recognizing the negative impact on Liberia of the transfer abroad of misappropriated funds and assets and the need for the international community to ensure as soon as possible, in accordance with paragraph 6 below, the return of such funds and assets to Liberia,

Expressing concern that former President Taylor, in collaboration with others still closely associated with him, continues to exercise control over and to have access to such misappropriated funds and property, with which he and his associates are able to engage in activities that undermine peace and stability in Liberia and the region,

Determining that this situation constitutes a threat to international peace and security in West Africa, in particular to the peace process in Liberia,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that, to prevent former President of Liberia Charles Taylor, his immediate family members, in particular Jewel Howard Taylor and Charles Taylor, Jr., senior officials of the former Taylor regime, or other close allies or associates as designated by the Committee established pursuant to paragraph 21 of resolution 1521(2003) (hereinafter "the Committee") from using misappropriated funds and property to interfere in the restoration of peace and stability in Liberia and the subregion, all States in which there are, at the date of adoption of the present resolution or at any time thereafter, funds, other financial assets and economic resources owned or controlled directly or indirectly by Charles Taylor, Jewel Howard Taylor and Charles Taylor, Jr. and/or those other individuals designated by the Committee, including funds, other financial assets and economic resources held by entities owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by any of them or by any persons acting on their behalf or at their direction, as designated by the Committee, shall freeze without delay all such funds, other financial assets and economic resources and shall ensure that neither these nor any other funds, other financial assets or economic resources are made available, by their nationals or by any persons within their territory, directly or indirectly, to or for the benefit of such persons;

2. Decides also that the provisions of paragraph 1 above do not apply to funds, other financial assets and economic resources:

(a) That have been determined by relevant State(s) to be necessary for basic expenses, including payment for foodstuffs, rent or mortgage, medicines and medical treatment, taxes, insurance premiums and public utility charges, or exclusively for payment of reasonable professional fees and reimbursement of incurred expenses associated with the provision of legal services, or fees or service charges for routine holding or maintenance of frozen funds, other financial assets and economic resources, after notification by the relevant State(s) to the Committee of the intention to authorize, where appropriate, access to such funds, other financial assets and economic resources and in the absence of a negative decision by the Committee within two working days of such notification;

(b) That have been determined by relevant State(s) to be necessary for extraordinary expenses, provided that such determination has been notified by the relevant State(s) to the Committee and has been approved by the Committee; or

(c) That have been determined by relevant State(s) to be the subject of a judicial, administrative or arbitral lien or judgement, in which case the funds, other financial assets and economic resources may be used to satisfy that lien or judgement, provided that the lien or judgement was entered prior to the date of the present resolution, is not for the benefit of a person referred to in paragraph 1 above or an individual or entity identified by the Committee, and has been notified by the relevant State(s) to the Committee;

3. Decides further that all States may allow for the addition to accounts subject to the provisions of paragraph 1 above of:

(a) Interest or other earnings due on those accounts; and

(b) Payments due under contracts, agreements or obligations that arose prior to the date on which those accounts became subject to the provisions of paragraph 1 above; provided that any such interest, other earnings and payments continue to be subject to those provisions;

4. Decides that the Committee shall:

(a) Identify individuals and entities of the types described in paragraph 1 above and promptly circulate to all States a list of said individuals and entities, including by posting such a list on the web site of the Committee;

(b) Maintain and regularly update and review every six months the list of those individuals and entities identified by the Committee as being subject to the measures set forth in paragraph 1 above;

(c) Assist States, where necessary, in tracing and freezing the funds, other financial assets and economic resources of such individuals and entities;

(d) Seek from all States information regarding the actions taken by them to trace and freeze such funds, other financial assets and economic resources;

5. Decides also to review the measures imposed by paragraph 1 above at least once a year, the first review taking place by 22 December 2004 in conjunction with its review of the measures imposed by paragraphs 2, 4, 6 and 10 of resolution 1521(2003), and to determine at that time what further action is appropriate;

6. Expresses its intention to consider whether and how to make available the funds, other financial assets and economic resources frozen pursuant to paragraph 1 above to the Government of Liberia, once that Government has established transparent accounting and auditing mechanisms to ensure the responsible use of government revenue to benefit directly the people of Liberia;

7. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Implementation of sanctions regime

Report of Committee established pursuant to resolution 1343(2001). On 23 February [S/2004/139 & Corr.1], the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1343(2001) concerning Liberia reported to the Council. It was tasked with reporting on any Liberian military or financial support to the Revolutionary United Front (RUF) of Sierra Leone and other rebel movements, including transfer of arms, military training and provision of communications and logistical assistance, as well as on the bans on the travel of key individuals providing support to rebels and the import of Sierra Leone rough diamonds not controlled through the certificate-of-origin regime. The report covered the period from 21 December 2002 to 22 December 2003, when the Council decided, in resolution 1521(2003), to dissolve the Committee and to revise the legal basis of the sanctions to reflect the changed circumstances in Liberia, in particular the departure of former President Charles Taylor, the formation of the National Transitional Government and progress with the peace process in Sierra Leone. During the reporting period, the Committee received 11 notifications of travel of individuals on the travel ban list and granted 22 of the 29 requests for waivers of the ban. It conducted reviews of the travel ban list on three occasions, and removed the names of two RUF members from the list of persons to be expelled from Liberia. In response to the Council's request, the Committee received a total of 116 replies from States on measures they had taken to implement the travel ban. The Committee sought information from States on alleged violations reported by the Panel of Experts of the Liberia sanctions regime. At its request, the Committee received a report from the Panel of Experts on violations of the embargo on the importation of all round logs and timber products originating in Liberia.

Report of Secretary-General (April). In response to Security Council resolution 1478(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 203], the Secretary-General, on 1 April [S/2004/272], reported on Liberia's compliance with that resolution. Since his 22 April 2003 report [YUN 2003, p. 202], there had been significant developments in Liberia, in particular the resignation of President Charles Taylor on 11 August 2003 and his departure from the country, the signing of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement [ibid., p. 192] and the establishment of UNMIL [ibid., p. 194]. The report also described the dissolution of RUF in Sierra Leone over the previous two years, and its transformation into a political party, the Revolutionary United Front Party. Subsequently, there were reports of former RUF members being recruited to fight in Liberia on behalf of the forces of the Government of Liberia or LURD. However, with the deaths of some RUF fighters, including its leader, Sam Bockarie, the force was substantially weakened. Noting the changed circumstances, the Council had accordingly revised the legal basis of its sanctions and agreed not to renew the prohibition against the import of rough diamonds from Sierra Leone not controlled by the certificate-of-origin regime, thus making the demand contained in paragraph 2 (c) of resolution 1343(2001) obsolete. Therefore, the Secretary-General intended to make the report currently before the Council his last, pursuant to paragraph 20 of resolution 1478(2003). He would report to the Council by 30 May on progress made towards the revised benchmarks for lifting sanctions, in accordance with paragraph 26 of resolution 1521(2003).

Report of Secretary-General (May). On 26 May [S/2004/428], the Secretary-General submitted a report pursuant to Security Council resolution 1521(2003) regarding Liberia, covering progress made towards the goals described in paragraphs 5, 7 and 11 of that resolution, which dealt with the imposition of arms, diamond and timber sanctions. The report described progress in a number of areas: disarmament, demobilization, reintegration and repatriation; restructuring the security sector; implementing the Comprehensive Peace Agreement; maintaining stability in Liberia and the subregion; establishing a certificate-of-origin regime for trade in Liberian rough diamonds; and control over the timber-producing areas and use of revenues from the timber industry.

Since its establishment on 14 October 2003, the National Transitional Government had made some encouraging progress towards meeting the objectives contained in paragraphs 5, 7 and 11, the Secretary-General said, notwithstanding a number of serious resource and operational constraints. Much remained to be done to apply and implement the recommendations for reform of the timber sector made by the Timber Sanctions Review Committee. The reform programme needed to be developed into a comprehensive package, with fully defined recommendations, an implementation strategy and timelines. Although some steps had been taken, such as a review of logging concessions, there were still concerns about the current pace of the review process and the way concessions could be awarded by the Government. The Forestry Development Authority would need to ensure transparency in revising all forestry concession agreements to reflect international standards and sustainable forest management practices.

The Government did not have full authority and control over the timber-producing areas. However, with the steady deployment and patrolling of UNMIL forces throughout the country, in particular to logging areas such as Buchanan, Greenville and Zwedru, the Government's capacity was increasing, although it would take some time to establish local administration in forest areas. The most pressing concerns continued to be the lack of structure, oversight and accountability in the financial management systems of the timber sector.

In the diamond sector, the Government was making gradual progress in preparing its application to join the Kimberley Process for the certification of rough diamonds (see p. 198). In doing so, the Government would need to ensure transparency in its procedures and methods for instituting controls over the export, import and transit of rough diamonds.

Report of Panel of Experts (June). The Panel of Experts established pursuant to paragraph 22 of Security Council resolution 1521(2003) concerning sanctions against Liberia transmitted a report to the Council on 1 June [S/2004/396 & Corr.1.2]. The Panel, having visited the country, said that it found no evidence of weapons trafficking into Liberia since August 2003; however, organized, international smuggling networks remained in place. Disarmament was progressing, but there was a strong possibility that factions might have cached weapons either within Liberia or in neighbouring countries, making regional stability a continuing concern. Therefore, it affirmed that the arms sanctions should remain in place, the ECOWAS moratorium on small arms should be implemented (see p. 166), and the origin of weapons surrendered in the disarmament process should be established. Regarding civil aviation, the Panel said that the Government was currently applying international civil aviation regulations and flights were operating more safely than in the past when arms were entering the country. It recommended that the Liberian civil aviation authority continue to implement the international standards.

In the context of the poor internal security situation, diamond mining in Liberia had virtually ceased, and consequently the current level of diamond smuggling was negligible. The Government had taken steps towards establishing an effective certificate-of-origin scheme for trade in rough diamonds that was transparent and internationally verifiable, with a view to joining the Kimberley Process. The Panel recommended that those positive steps be accelerated by providing financial and technical support.

Sanctions on timber products appeared to be effective, as there was no evidence of widespread exports. However, UNMIL had not deployed to the heavily forested south-east of Liberia, and the Forestry Development Authority did not function outside Monrovia. Given the evidence of the Authority's past complicity with human rights abuses and widespread corruption, an independent review of the industry was required. The lack of trained personnel suggested that a management company should be appointed to run the Authority. Until the Authority was operational and security achieved, the conditions necessary to lift sanctions would not be met, as the revenue from forestry and the security forces used by logging companies could be a source of regional instability.

In terms of the humanitarian impact, the Panel determined that the sanctions against Liberia had contributed significantly to ending the country's 14-year cycle of armed conflicts and laying the foundations for lasting peace and good governance. The erosion of former President Taylor's power base was a direct result of the sanctions, as had been the inability of former warring factions and their expatriate counterparts to use diamonds and timber to prolong the conflict. At the same time, the sanctions on diamonds and timber had had some adverse effects, such as the absence of employment for thousands of Liberians, the loss of tax revenues to the Government and road maintenance opportunities previously provided by logging companies. Nevertheless, Liberians seemed to understand the rationale for their imposition and viewed the international community's efforts to facilitate reforms in Liberia as positive.

On several occasions throughout the year [SC/8027, SC/8033, SC/8062, SC/8123, SC/8133, SC/8145, SC/8147, SC/8176/Rev.1, SC/8211], the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1521 (2003) approved additions to the list of individuals subject to the travel restrictions imposed by paragraph 4 (a) of that resolution.

Security Council consideration. The Security Council, which considered the 26 May report of the Secretary-General on 3 June [meeting 4981], heard a statement by the Special Representative for Liberia, who affirmed that, as part of its mandate, UNMIL monitored progress made by the Government to put in place mechanisms to ensure the proper management of the natural resource industries under sanctions, namely diamonds and timber. He pointed out that the Government badly needed reliable sources of revenue in order to function effectively. Liberia's long-term security and stability would come only with a robust economy that could offer steady employment for young adult males, supported by a responsible credible, democratic and accountable Government. It was therefore necessary for the international community to provide all necessary support to enable the Government to meet the requirements of resolution 1521 (2003).

The Chairman of the National Transitional Government of Liberia, Charles Gyude Bryant, in his address to the Council, made the case for lifting the sanctions, especially those on diamonds and timber. He said that the forestry sector held the greatest short-term promise for job creation and fostering economic recovery, and diamond production was an economic mainstay for a substantial number of people and a foreign exchange earner. He enumerated the steps Liberia had taken to meet the demands of the Council for lifting the sanctions in both industries and drew attention to the fact that the United States had unilaterally lifted sanctions on the importation of diamonds from Liberia.

On 10 June, the Council conducted a mid-term review of the sanctions imposed on Liberia. In a statement of the same day issued by its President [SC/8119-AFR/966], Council members acknowledged progress made by the Liberian Government in meeting the conditions for lifting the measures, in particular the diamonds and timber sanctions. While noting that no major violations of the arms embargo and the diamond and timber sanctions had been reported since August 2003, the members felt that the conditions for lifting the sanctions were yet to be fully met. They also noted the views expressed by the Special Representative and the Chairman of the National Transitional Government, and said that the measures were not meant to be punitive but to ensure that the peace process was irreversible. They expressed their readiness to keep the measures on diamonds and timber under regular review with a view to their possible termination, based on further evaluation of progress made on the benchmarks established for lifting them.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 17 June [meeting 4991], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1549(2004). The draft [S/2004/495] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions, in particular resolutions 1521(2003) of 22 December 2003 and 1532(2004) of 12 March 2004, on the situation in Liberia and West Africa,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on Liberia of 26 May 2004 and the report of the Panel of Experts on Liberia of 17 May 2004, both submitted pursuant to resolution 1521(2003),

Taking note also of the views expressed by the Chairman of the National Transitional Government of Liberia in the Security Council on 3 June 2004 appealing for the lifting of current sanctions on Liberia's timber and diamonds, and the request that Council experts visit Liberia within the next ninety days to assess the performance of the Transitional Government in fulfilling the conditions for the lifting of sanctions,

1. Decides to re-establish the Panel of Experts appointed pursuant to paragraph 22 of resolution 1521(2003) for a further period commencing no later than 30 June and ending on 21 December 2004 to undertake the following tasks:

(a) To conduct a follow-up assessment mission to Liberia and neighbouring States in order to investigate and compile a report on the implementation, and any violations, particularly ongoing violations, of the measures referred to in paragraphs 2, 4, 6 and 10 of resolution 1521(2003), including any violations involving rebel movements and neighbouring countries, and including any information relevant to designation by the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1521(2003) (hereinafter "the Committee") of the individuals described in paragraph 4 (a) of resolution 1521(2003), and also including the various sources of financing, such as from natural resources, for the illicit trade in arms;

(b) To assess the progress made towards the goals described in paragraphs 5, 7 and 11 of resolution 1521(2003);

(c) To monitor the implementation and enforcement of the measures imposed by paragraph 1 of resolution 1532(2004), particularly in Liberia and in neighbouring States, as well as in other regions, and to provide the Committee with any information that the Panel acquires which will facilitate the identification of individuals and entities of the types described in paragraph 1 of resolution 1532(2004), and with recommendations on technical assistance that Liberia and other States might require to implement the measures;

(d) To assess the socio-economic and humanitarian impact of the measures imposed by resolutions 1521(2003) and 1532(2004);

2. Requests the Panel to provide a mid-term report to the Council for its review, through the Committee, no later than 30 September 2004, with its observations and recommendations, taking into consideration progress made towards the goals identified in resolution 1521(2003), in particular in paragraphs 7 and 11 of that resolution, and also requests that the Panel present a final report to the Council, through the Committee, no later than 10 December 2004, covering all the tasks assigned to it in paragraph 1 above;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, upon adoption of the present resolution and acting in consultation with the Committee, to appoint by 30 June 2004 no more than five experts, with the range of expertise necessary to fulfil the mandate of the Panel referred to above, drawing as much as possible and as appropriate on the expertise of the members of the Panel of Experts appointed pursuant to paragraph 22 of resolution 1521(2003), and further requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary financial arrangements to support the work of the Panel;

4. Encourages the National Transitional Government of Liberia to take urgent steps to establish an effective certificate-of-origin regime for trade in Liberian rough diamonds that is transparent and internationally verifiable, and urges the Transitional Government to establish its full authority and control over the timber-producing areas and to take all necessary steps to ensure that government revenues from the Liberian timber industry are not used to fuel conflict or otherwise in violation of the resolutions of the Council but are used for legitimate purposes for the benefit of the Liberian people, including development;

5. Reiterates its call upon States, relevant international organizations and others in a position to do so to offer assistance to the National Transitional Government of Liberia in achieving the objectives set forth in paragraphs 5, 7 and 11 of resolution 1521(2003);

6. Reiterates its previous appeals to the international community to provide timely and adequate assistance for the reconstruction and economic recovery of Liberia and, in particular, to redeem the pledges made at the International Reconstruction Conference on Liberia, held in New York on 5 and 6 February 2004;

7. Urges all States, relevant United Nations bodies and, as appropriate, other organizations and interested parties to cooperate fully with the Committee and the Panel of Experts, including by supplying information on possible violations of the measures imposed by paragraphs 2, 4, 6 and 10 of resolution 1521(2003) and paragraph 1 of resolution 1532(2004);

8. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

The Secretary-General, on 2 July [S/2004/531], informed the Security Council of the names of the five experts he had appointed to the Panel of Experts pursuant to resolution 1549(2004) (above).

Report of Expert Panel (September). The Panel of Experts submitted, on 23 September [S/2004/752], its midterm report, prepared in accordance with resolution 1549(2004) (above). The Panel, which visited Liberia in August, reported, with regard to the timber industry, that sanctions remained effective and appeared to have halted exports of timber. There was no evidence of widespread logging and the Panel could not confirm allegations of exports to Côte d'Ivoire and Guinea. However, a pre-audit of the Forestry Development Authority, the Government's regulatory agency, revealed a complete lack of financial management systems. An independent firm was appointed to provide financial management. The Government, which had, in December 2003, produced a road map of reforms necessary for sanctions to be lifted, reported on progress in meeting those reforms. The Panel pointed out that, without sufficient security, conflict could resume; without financial oversight, misappropriation would facilitate corruption; and without enforcement, timber companies might violate regulations with impunity; therefore reform was required. Because reforms had not been instituted, nor had the conditions set out in Security Council resolution 1521(2003) been met, the Panel recommended that the timber sanctions remain in place.

The Panel reported that illegal Liberian exports of rough diamonds continued to be negligible. That situation was a result of poor weather conditions, concerns regarding overall security in mining areas, particularly as disarmament remained to be completed in those areas, and acute shortages of mining equipment. In August, the National Transitional Legislative Assembly adopted an Act amending the Minerals and Mining Law, providing for controls on the export, import and transit of rough diamonds. In addition, some institutional and technical structures were set up for implementing the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme. In that regard, the Ministry of Lands, Mines and Energy would monitor buying and selling transactions to ensure greater transparency in the flow of diamonds from the mine to the granting of a Kimberley Process certificate and export. A plan was drawn up for establishing mining cooperatives and for training mines inspectors. Overall, the Panel determined that the Government was proceeding well towards meeting the Council's requirements for lifting sanctions on the export of Liberian rough diamonds. However, its biggest obstacle remained funding for the materials and mechanisms necessary for implementing the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme; without funding, it was unlikely that the Government would be able to meeting those requirements by the end of 2004.

Security Council consideration. Following a review of the sanctions on Liberia by the Security Council, the President, in a 7 October press statement [SC/8212-AFR/1045], said that Council members, noting that no violations of the diamond and timber sanctions were reported in recent months, appreciated the Government's efforts to meet the goals identified in resolution 1521(2003)

for lifting sanctions. They encouraged the Liberian authorities to take the necessary measures to establish full authority and control over the timber-producing areas and to ensure proper utilization of the revenues of the timber industry. While recognizing the need to lift the diamonds and timber sanctions as soon as possible, and acknowledging the progress made so far, Council members concluded that the conditions for lifting them were not fully met and called on the Government to take the necessary steps for meeting those benchmarks.

Report of Expert Panel (December). The Panel of Experts transmitted a report to the Security Council on 6 December [S/2004/955], covering the socio-economic and humanitarian situation in the country, the impact of sanctions on that situation, weapons trafficking, the travel ban against certain individuals, diamond mining and trading, and the timber industry. It reported that small quantities of arms imported to Liberia were smuggled in from neighbouring countries, such as Guinea and Sierra Leone, for the purpose of being surrendered in the disarmament, demobilization, reintegration and repatriation process in Liberia. More than 27,000 weapons were recovered, indicating a benchmark return rate of more than 60 per cent.

The Government remained committed to meeting the requirements for lifting the embargo on rough diamonds, but it was hampered by a lack of funding and institutional capacity. With the onset of the dry season and better security, mining activity had increased, much of which was, however, illegal. Reports indicated that the production from those mines was being smuggled through neighbouring countries to reach the international market. There was widespread compliance with timber sanctions. However, the Forestry Development Authority had not completed the reforms required by the Council, such as financial oversight and expansion of its operations to the field. The Panel recommended that the current embargoes on Liberian diamond and timber exports remain in effect.

The Panel criticized the Government's handling of the national budget, which reflected misplaced priorities. In addition, the Government had not prepared accounts for the previous two budgets, and, from February to June, had allowed excess expenditure of $8.6 million without any allotments from the Bureau of the Budget, nor any supplementary budget approved by the National Assembly. There were also large variations between amounts budgeted and amounts spent and a lack of audits. Among its recommendations, the Panel proposed that UNMIL be empowered to take a proactive stance in identifying and publicizing high-level corruption and other violations of public trust, so as to emphasize the importance of and urgent need for accountability and transparency.

The Government had delayed action to freeze the assets of the persons designated by the Security Council, and finally took action against 2 of the 26 persons on the list, and without proper preparation. The Panel, having contacted a number of countries to obtain information about the assets frozen by them, in pursuance of Council resolution 1532(2004), learned that Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States had identified and frozen the assets of three listed individuals.

The Panel was concerned about aircraft registered in Liberia, as it believed that Liberian registered aircraft were still flying elsewhere in the world for illicit activities. The Panel approved the permanent presence of UNMIL police officers at Robertsfield International Airport to enhance security procedures and allow for overall supervision of airport civilian security personnel.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 21 December [meeting 5105], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1579 (2004). The draft [S/2004/981] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions and the statements by its President on the situation in Liberia and West Africa,

Taking note of the reports of the Panel of Experts on Liberia of 24 September and 6 December 2004 submitted pursuant to resolution 1549(2004) of 17 June 2004,

Taking note also of the letter dated 13 December 2004 from the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in Liberia to the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to paragraph 21 of resolution 1521(2003) of 22 December 2003,

Recognizing the linkage between the illegal exploitation of natural resources such as diamonds and timber, the illicit trade in such resources and the proliferation and trafficking of arms as one of the sources of fueling and exacerbating conflicts in West Africa, particularly in Liberia,

Recalling that the measures imposed under resolution 1521(2003) were designed to prevent such illegal exploitation from fuelling a resumption of the conflict in Liberia, as well as to support the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement signed at Accra on 18 August 2003, and the extension of the authority, throughout Liberia, of the National Transitional Government of Liberia,

Expressing its satisfaction that the full deployment of the United Nations Mission in Liberia has contributed to the improvement of security throughout Liberia, while recognizing that the National Transitional Government of Liberia has not yet established its authority throughout Liberia,

Expressing concern that former President of Liberia Charles Taylor and others still closely associated with him continue to engage in activities that undermine peace and stability in Liberia and the region,

Having reviewed the measures imposed by paragraphs 2, 4, 6 and 10 of resolution 1521(2003) and paragraph 1 of resolution 1532(2004) of 12 March 2004 and the progress made towards achieving the objectives set forth in paragraphs 5, 7 and 11 of resolution 1521(2003),

Welcoming the steps taken by the National Transitional Government of Liberia towards meeting the conditions established by the Security Council for lifting the measures imposed by resolution 1521(2003),

Noting the completion of demobilization and disarmament, respect for the ceasefire, and implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, but emphasizing that significant challenges remain in completing the reintegration, repatriation and restructuring of the security sector, as well as establishing and maintaining stability in Liberia and the subregion,

Noting with concern that, despite having initiated important reforms, the National Transitional Government of Liberia has made only limited progress towards establishing its full authority and control over the timber-producing areas and towards ensuring that government revenues from the Liberian timber industry are not used to fuel conflict or otherwise in violation of the resolutions of the Council but are used for legitimate purposes for the benefit of the Liberian people, including development,

Welcoming the start of preparations by the National Transitional Government of Liberia to establish an effective certificate-of-origin regime for trade in rough diamonds that is transparent and internationally verifiable, looking forward to the visit by representatives of the Kimberley Process to Liberia in early 2005, encouraging the Government to continue its preparations in that regard, and urging States to increase their support for its efforts,

Determining that the situation in Liberia continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides, on the basis of its assessments above of progress made by the National Transitional Government of Liberia towards meeting the conditions for lifting the measures imposed by resolution 1521(2003):

(a) To renew the measures on arms and travel imposed by paragraphs 2 and 4 of resolution 1521(2003) for a further period of twelve months from the date of adoption of the present resolution, and to review them after six months;

(b) To renew the measures on timber imposed by paragraph 10 of resolution 1521(2003) for a further period of twelve months from the date of adoption of the present resolution, and to review them after six months;

(c) To renew the measures on diamonds imposed by paragraph 6 of resolution 1521(2003) for a further period of six months from the date of adoption of the present resolution, but to review them after three months in the light of the visit by representatives of the Kimberley Process and the preliminary report of the

Panel of Experts on Liberia, requested in paragraph 8 (f) below, with a view to lifting the measures as soon as possible, when the Council concludes that the National Transitional Government has established an effective certificate-of-origin regime for trade in rough diamonds that is transparent and internationally verifiable;

2. Reiterates the Council's readiness to terminate these measures once the conditions referred to in paragraph 1 above have been met;

3. Encourages the National Transitional Government of Liberia to intensify its efforts to meet these conditions, in particular by implementing the Liberia Forest Initiative and the necessary reforms in the Forestry Development Authority, and urges all members of the National Transitional Government to commit themselves to this end for the benefit of the Liberian people;

4. Notes that the measures imposed by paragraph 1 of resolution 1532(2004) remain in force to prevent former President Charles Taylor, his immediate family members, senior officials of the former Taylor regime, or other close allies or associates from using misappropriated funds and property to interfere in the restoration of peace and stability in Liberia and the sub-region, and reconfirms its intention to review these measures at least once a year;

5. Reiterates its call upon the international donor community to continue to provide assistance to the peace process, including for reintegration and reconstruction, to contribute generously to consolidated humanitarian appeals, to disburse as soon as possible the pledges made at the International Reconstruction Conference on Liberia, held in New York on 5 and 6 February 2004, and to respond to the immediate financial, administrative and technical needs of the National Transitional Government of Liberia, in particular to assist the Government to meet the conditions referred to in paragraph 1 above, so that the measures can be lifted as soon as possible;

6. Restates its demand that all States refrain from any action that might contribute to further destabilization of the situation in the subregion, and further demands that all West African States take action to prevent armed individuals and groups from using their territory to prepare and commit attacks on neighbouring countries;

7. Reminds all States of their obligation to implement all the measures under resolutions 1521(2003) and 1532(2004), and particularly urges the National Transitional Government of Liberia to implement without delay its obligations under paragraph 1 of resolution 1532(2004) to freeze the assets of all persons designated by the Security Council Committee established pursuant to paragraph 21 of resolution 1521(2003) (hereinafter "the Committee");

8. Decides to re-establish the Panel of Experts appointed pursuant to resolution 1549(2004) for a further period until 21 June 2005 to undertake the following tasks:

(a) To conduct a follow-up assessment mission to Liberia and neighbouring States in order to investigate and compile a report on the implementation, and any violations, of the measures referred to in paragraph 1 above, including any information relevant to the designation by the Committee of the individuals described in paragraph 4 (a) of resolution 1521(2003) and paragraph 1 of resolution 1532(2004), and including the various sources of financing, such as from natural resources, for the illicit trade of arms;

(b) To assess the impact and effectiveness of the measures imposed by paragraph 1 of resolution 1532(2004);

(c) To assess the progress made towards meeting the conditions referred to in paragraph 1 above;

(d) To assess the humanitarian and socio-economic impact of the measures imposed by paragraphs 2, 4, 6 and 10 of resolution 1521(2003);

(e) To report to the Council, through the Committee, by 7 June 2005 on all the issues listed in the present paragraph;

(f) To provide a preliminary report to the Council, through the Committee, by 21 March 2005 on progress made towards meeting the conditions for lifting the measures on diamonds imposed by paragraph 6 of resolution 1521(2003);

9. Requests the Secretary-General, acting in consultation with the Committee, to appoint as soon as possible no more than five experts, with the appropriate range of expertise, in particular on arms, timber, diamonds, finance, humanitarian and socio-economic and any other relevant issues, drawing as much as possible on the expertise of the members of the Panel of Experts established pursuant to resolution 1549(2004), and further requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary financial and security arrangements to support the work of the Panel;

10. Calls upon the United Nations Mission in Liberia, the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone and the United Nations Mission in Côte d'Ivoire to continue assisting the Committee and the Panel of Experts in accordance with paragraph 23 of resolution 1521(2003);

11. Calls upon all States and the National Transitional Government of Liberia to cooperate fully with the Panel of Experts;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Council by 7 June 2005, drawing on information from all relevant sources, including the National Transitional Government of Liberia, the United Nations Mission in Liberia and the Economic Community of West African States, on progress made towards meeting the conditions mentioned in paragraph 1 above;

13. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council Committee. On 31 December 2004 [S/2004/1025], the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1521(2003) concerning Liberia submitted a report on its activities since its establishment on 22 December 2003.

Since the adoption of that resolution, the Committee received and approved one request to permit UNMIL to import into Liberia weapons and ammunition to be used in the training of Liberian police. The Committee considered 10 requests for travel-ban waivers, of which 7 were granted. It held quarterly reviews of the travel-ban list established on 16 March 2004, retaining the names of 19 persons and adding five more to that list. The Committee conducted its first formal review of the assets-freeze list on 17 and 20 December, placing three persons on the list during the reporting period.

The Committee adopted procedures for updating and maintaining its travel-ban list, handling requests for exemptions and conducting reviews of its travel-ban and assets-freeze lists. Fifteen States responded to the Committee's request for information regarding their actions to enforce the sanctions.

No major violations of the arms embargo were reported, and the diamond and timber sanctions were being largely implemented. No responses had been received to its request to 13 States for information on alleged violations.

Sierra Leone

In 2004, Sierra Leone, building on the progress achieved in 2003 in implementing the provisions of the 2000 Agreement on the Ceasefire and Cessation of Hostilities (Abuja Agreement) [YUN 2000, p. 210], made significant strides in the peace consolidation process in the country, with the completion of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process, the holding of local elections, the successful ending of the work of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, the gradual handover of responsibility for security to the Government and the progressive consolidation of State authority.

The United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL) continued in 2004 to assist the Government in re-establishing a functioning State and in meeting the benchmarks for the Mission's drawdown and eventual withdrawal by the end of 2004. The Security Council, while noting the progress made by Sierra Leone, extended the Mission's mandate until 30 September. However, recognizing that some major gaps still existed, in particular with regard to the capacity of the Sierra Leone police and armed forces to maintain security and stability, the Council acted on the Secretary-General's recommendation that the timetable for the drawdown be extended to ensure a more gradual reduction in military strength, thus allowing for a smooth transition to a follow-on mission and eventual assumption by the Government of primary responsibility for national security. The Council decided that a residual UNAMSIL presence would remain in Sierra Leone, for an initial period of six months from 1 January 2005, to be reduced from 5,000 troops at the end of 2004 to 3,250 troops by 28 February 2005.

Throughout 2004, Sierra Leone, with international assistance, worked to increase the size of its police force and to enhance its capabilities so that officers could be deployed to all provinces, including the diamond-mining and border areas. At the same time, the Government took steps to strengthen the operational capacity of its armed forces, to enable it to assume responsibility for external security and to backstop the police in maintaining public order, which allowed it to extend State authority to all 12 administrative districts of the country. However, the judicial system was unable to function effectively due to lack of trained magistrates and other personnel, logistics and infrastructure.

As the security situation remained stable, UNAMSIL was able to hand over to the Government the primary responsibility for security in the north and south of the country first and later in the eastern and western areas, but continued to cooperate with Sierra Leone forces in patrolling and monitoring border areas. The disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme closed on 31 March after four years, with a total of 54,000 ex-combatants having received benefits.

Other significant achievements recorded by Sierra Leone included the successful holding of local elections on 22 May for the first time in 32 years, the completion by the Special Court for Sierra Leone of two full years of operation in trying those accused of serious human rights abuses and crimes against humanity during the decade-long civil war, the completion in July of the repatriation by UNHCR of Sierra Leonean refugees, mainly from Guinea and Liberia, and the release, in October, of the final report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, which provided an analysis of the causes, nature and circumstances that fuelled the war.

Having received reports of gradual and steady progress in the Government's achievement of the benchmarks, the Council, in September, extended UNAMSIL's mandate for nine months. It also defined the military, civilian police and civilian tasks of UNAMSIL's residual presence, which would remain in Sierra Leone for an initial period of six months from 1 January 2005. The Council agreed to review the presence of the residual force in 2005.

UNAMSIL activities

Report of Secretary-General (March). On 19 March [S/2004/228], the Secretary-General issued his twenty-first report on UNAMSIL, in which he outlined his proposals for a residual UN peace-keeping presence in Sierra Leone after the termination of UNAMSIL's mandate, based on the findings of a UN interdepartmental assessment mission, which visited Sierra Leone (9-19 February) to evaluate progress and collect information.

The mission reported that the drawdown of UNAMSIL, which was scheduled to take place in December, was proceeding according to the plan outlined in resolution 1492(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 217]. While significant progress had been made in meeting the benchmarks [YUN 2002, p. 155] required for that process to continue, some major gaps remained, particularly with regard to the security sector, in consolidating State administration throughout the country and restoring government control over diamond-mining activities. The Sierra Leone police force, with assistance in training and recruiting provided by an international police team, made progress in building its capacity to assume full responsibility for internal security. As of February, some 980 recruits were trained, bringing its strength to 7,115 officers, with the eventual aim of reaching its pre-war level of 9,500 officers. The newly trained police were being deployed to the provinces, especially in areas vacated by UNAMSIL and to the diamond-mining and border areas in the east. The Government re-established a police presence in all provincial and district headquarters and major towns, and intended to deploy police in each chiefdom. UNAMSIL also provided advice on cross-border policing, airport security, criminal intelligence, policy and planning, and juvenile justice. Despite those gains, the national police force was not yet capable of handling widespread public disturbances, particularly in Freetown and the diamond-mining areas. In addition, the force lacked the necessary accommodation and police stations.

With regard to the armed forces, the Government, with international assistance, launched a programme for building their operational capacity to assume responsibility for external security and to backstop the police in maintaining public order. Those measures included the deployment of three brigades to the provinces and border areas; the restructuring of the armed forces to reduce troop strength from 14,000 to 10,500; and forging a cooperative relationship between the armed forces, the National Security Council and the National Security Council Coordinating Group.

UNAMSIL continued to conduct joint patrols and exercises with the Sierra Leone forces and police, but leaders stated that the armed forces were not fully prepared or equipped to take over security responsibilities from UNAMSIL by the end of the year, an assessment shared by all stakeholders and the UN assessment team.

The Government closed the initial programme for the reintegration of ex-combatants on 31 December 2003, with a total of 51,000 individuals having received medium-term reintegration assistance. The majority of the 6,845 child combatants who were demobilized were reunited with their families.

State authority was consolidated, with government officials deployed in all 12 administrative districts of the country and the return of paramount chiefs to their chiefdoms. Magistrate courts were rehabilitated in all districts, but the recruitment of judges and magistrates was hampered by the poor conditions of service. Only five magistrates were assigned to service the 12 districts. As a temporary measure, justices of the peace, trained with UNDP support, were deployed to 18 locations to perform judicial functions under the supervision of the magistrates. Progress was also made in re-establishing government administrative, security and judicial structures throughout the country, but their capacity to function remained severely limited by the lack of logistics, infrastructure and qualified personnel.

The Government reasserted its control over diamond mining through vigorous law-enforcement measures, including the deployment of mine monitors and wardens in mining areas, and incentives to encourage legal mining. UNAMSIL cooperated with the Government in conducting aerial surveys and ground patrols of mining areas. Among challenges faced by the industry were the fact that more than 50 per cent of diamond-mining activities in the country remained unlicensed and disputes continued among chiefdoms over diamond-mining rights and boundaries.

The assessment mission made suggestions for remedial action that the Government and its partners could take to accelerate progress on the benchmarks, minimize threats to stability and enable national institutions to take primary responsibility for security and national recovery. The Government needed to sensitize the general populace and explain the measures it was taking to address the economic and social challenges, and encourage potential investors, in particular in the agriculture and mining sectors, to create employment opportunities for youth. Preparations for the elections needed to be transparent and the necessary security arrangements put in place. In that respect, UNAMSIL conducted a threat assessment and a security plan was drawn up, in coordination with the Sierra Leone police.

At the subregional level, the MRU countries (Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone) should resume dialogue aimed at building subregional security structures and revitalizing the MRU secretariat. The three UN peacekeeping missions in the area (UNAMSIL, UNMIL and MINUCI) should continued cooperating on cross-border issues and in joint planning and sharing of information.

Under consideration were the possibility of “hot pursuit” operations, joint air patrolling, shared border responsibility, the establishment of a sub-regional reserve force and joint planning for the repatriation of foreign combatants.

In view of its assessment that key security benchmarks would most likely not be met by December, the mission reported that all national and international stakeholders had emphasized the need to maintain a post-UNAMSIL peacekeeping presence to, among other tasks, assist the country in assuming its full responsibilities in the security sector.

The Secretary-General recommended that the UNAMSIL drawdown plan be adjusted to avoid a steep drop in the Mission’s military strength in the remaining phases of the withdrawal process, reducing the military strength gradually from the current level of 11,500 to 5,000 between June and 31 December 2004. A new follow-on mission would be established, whose primary purpose would be to provide back-up security and accompany the transition to national primacy until the Government’s security sector was adequately developed. The post-UNAMSIL peacekeeping mission would focus on three geographical areas: the west, including Freetown; the centre of the country, which was the stronghold of the former Civil Defence Force (CDF); and the east, specifically the border and diamond-mining areas. In the centre, the new mission would act as a deterrent against possible destabilization of the work of the Special Court for Sierra Leone or the Government, backstop the police in maintaining security, provide security for UN personnel and reinforce the western and eastern areas. In the east, it would compensate for the lack of capacity by the Sierra Leone police and army to fully monitor the border and maintain security in other parts of the country. The mission would consist of three battalions, with 3,250 troops, 141 military observers and 80 civilian police personnel. Certain tasks currently performed by UNAMSIL would be assumed by other UN agencies by the end of 2004, while some of its offices, such as the electoral unit, would be phased out. The new mission would have a public information unit and a political policy and planning unit. It would be headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and supported by a Deputy Special Representative, who would also serve as the UN Resident Coordinator and Humanitarian Coordinator. Wherever UN military observers, civil affairs, political and human rights officers and civilian police personnel were co-deployed, they would function as integrated units, in close collaboration with the UN country team and its transitional support teams. The proposed mission would remain in Sierra Leone until the end of 2005, with a midyear review.

The Secretary-General invited the Security Council to authorize the establishment of a residual UN peacekeeping operation in Sierra Leone, as well as an appropriate adjustment in the current drawdown plan of UNAMSIL, which would include the retention of 1,500 troops from relevant UNAMSIL support units, for two months, to facilitate a seamless transition to the follow-on mission.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 30 March [meeting 4938], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1537(2004). The draft [S/2004/256] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the situation in Sierra Leone,

Affirming the commitment of all States to respect the sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity of Sierra Leone,

12. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council mission. The Security Council mission to West Africa (see p. 169), which visited Sierra Leone on 25 June, reported on 2 July [S/2004/525] that it was pleased to see that significant progress had been achieved in the peace consolidation process in the country. However, the gains remained fragile and considerable challenges still faced the Government, such as widespread unemployment; trials under way at the Special Court for Sierra Leone; control over the diamond-mining areas; and potential external threats from spillover from other conflicts in the region. Noting President Alhaji Ahmad Tejan Kabbah's hope that the maintenance of UNAMSIL's presence in the country from January 2005 would allow the Sierra Leone army and police force to strengthen their capacity and resources to assume responsibility for national security, the mission underlined the importance of that goal and encouraged donors to contribute to the restructuring and strengthening of the security sector. It also encouraged donors to contribute to the Court for Sierra Leone, given its importance for long-term reconciliation. The mission stressed the need to address the root causes of the conflict, including through a poverty reduction strategy, the continuing consolidation of State authority throughout the country and anti-corruption measures.

Report of Secretary-General (July). On 6 July [S/2004/536], the Secretary-General, in his twenty-second report on UNAMSIL, noted that the overall political and security situation in Sierra Leone remained stable, allowing the Mission to continue with its drawdown and withdrawal plan to handover to the Government the primary responsibility for security in the Northern and Southern Provinces and to support the national police in those areas. The handover of responsibility for security to the Government in the Eastern Province and the Western Area (Freetown and outlying parts) was scheduled to take place in August and September, respectively. UNAMSIL and the Government jointly evaluated the security situation at the National Security Council Coordinating Group's weekly meetings. The Mission worked with the provincial and district security committees and conducted joint exercises with the Sierra Leone police and Republic of Sierra Leone Armed Forces (RSLAF). The security environment in the border areas needed robust patrolling and monitoring, particularly along the border with Guinea, where some Guinean troops had crossed over to engage in farming and hunting inside Sierra Leone.

Local elections were held on 22 May, the first in 32 years, and were contested by 1,115 candidates, the majority of whom belonged to the two main parties, the Sierra Leone People's Party and the All People's Congress (APC), as well as 347 independent candidates. The Revolutionary United Front Party did not take part in the elections, reportedly owing to financial constraints. A total of 2,271,435 voters were registered. The elections resulted in 475 posts of councillor being filled in 394 wards nationwide. UNAMSIL provided logistical support for the elections, including land and air transport to most chiefdoms, communications support, technical assistance to the National Electoral Commission (NEC) and election policing, while UNDP funded civic education activities. With a view to preparing for national elections in 2007, NEC requested further technical assistance from the United Nations; an electoral needs assessment mission was dispatched to Sierra Leone in June.

In terms of meeting the benchmarks for the drawdown of UNAMSIL, the Sierra Leone police made progress towards assuming responsibility for the maintenance of law and order. The pace of training and recruitment had accelerated, bringing the total force to 7,903. UNAMSIL continued to assist in raising the professional standards of the police by conducting in-service courses. With other UN agencies, it was also running human rights workshops. RSLAF made progress in restructuring, and the envisaged downsizing from 14,000 to 10,500 by 2007 was on track. UNAMSIL provided training in military policing, vehicle maintenance, information technology and communications.

The disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme was officially closed on 31 March, with a total of 54,000 ex-combatants having received reintegration benefits over the previous four years. As agreed by Sierra Leone and Liberia, the estimated 500 to 2,000 Sierra Leonean ex-combatants in Liberia would undergo disarmament and demobilization in Liberia, and would have the option of staying or returning to Sierra Leone. A similar choice would be given to the 500 to 800 Sierra Leonean ex-combatants in Côte d'Ivoire.

The Special Court for Sierra Leone commenced joint trials of indictees on 3 June, with the trial of members of the former CDF, including the former Minister of the Interior, Sam Hinga Norman. The trial of members of the former RUF was scheduled to begin in July, while that of the former Armed Forces Revolutionary Council members depended on the appointment of a second trial chamber and the readiness of the defence team. In planning its exit strategy, the Court was negotiating bilateral agreements with several countries for the enforcement of sentences and the relocation of witnesses. Some Governments had already responded positively.

Overall, the Secretary-General found that the Government had made significant progress in consolidating peace and in promoting national reconciliation and economic recovery. He urged the newly elected local councils to become instruments for improving the life of communities. He expressed regret at incidents between the armed forces and the Sierra Leone police as the Government took over responsibility for security from UNAMSIL throughout the country. It was essential for the Government to implement expeditiously its plan for addressing major security sector gaps.

Security Council consideration. At consultations held on 15 July [S/2004/623] on the Secretary-General's report (above), Security Council members took note of the significant progress in consolidating peace in Sierra Leone, facilitated by the implementation of the UNAMSIL drawdown plan. However, they noted the fragility of the gains made so far and underlined the need for accelerated progress on the key benchmarks.

Report of Secretary-General (September). The Secretary-General, on 9 September [S/2004/724], issued his twenty-third report on UNAMSIL. He stated that the improved security situation enabled the Mission to hand over primary responsibility for security in the Eastern Province to the Government on 4 August. The relationship between RSLAF and the Sierra Leone police improved and measures were taken to improve collaboration between them. The security situation in the border areas remained volatile, with reports of arms smuggling into Liberia from Sierra Leone. The security environment along the border with Guinea was also of concern in the light of reports that some Guinean armed forces were harassing Sierra Leonean civilians. In that regard, the 5 August meeting in Conakry between the two Governments on resolving the boundary dispute in the area of Yenga was a welcome development. In a meeting on the Yenga issue between President Kabbah and Guinean President Lansana Conté in Conakry on 2 September, the two leaders agreed that the village of Yenga belonged to Sierra Leone, in accordance with the 1912 treaty signed between France and the United Kingdom. On 6 September, the two countries agreed to establish joint investigation and technical committees to prepare reports on the Yenga issue.

In reviewing the transition to a residual UN presence in Sierra Leone and the required benchmarks, the Secretary-General stated that, despite the efforts of the Government and a military training team from the United Kingdom, several factors hampered the operational effectiveness of both the Sierra Leone police and RSLAF. Unless the issues of logistics, communications, accommodation and transport shortfalls were addressed, the security sector would not be able to assume full security responsibilities in the future. RSLAF's capacity to assume effective responsibility for security against external threats would remain a key benchmark in reviewing the tasks of the residual UNAMSIL presence after 2004. Before UNAMSIL completed its drawdown by the end of 2005, RSLAF should have a fully operational company, with a full complement of vehicles, radios and accommodation, the ability to deploy within 48 hours into border areas to prevent armed incursions, and a fully operational infantry battalion to deploy anywhere in the country in support of the national police within 24 hours. The army would also need to establish a reliable military communications system. By the end of 2005, the police force should have completed all planned deployments to the provinces, attained the planned level of 9,500 personnel and ensured that its units were adequately equipped before UNAMSIL's withdrawal. Another benchmark for drawdown was the full deployment of the United Nations Mission in Liberia, especially in areas close to Liberia's border with Sierra Leone. The Secretary-General suggested that the benchmarks be reviewed by mid-2005, with a view to determining further adjustments in UNAMSIL components.

On 29 June, a UNAMSIL civil contractor helicopter carrying 24 UN and non-UN personnel crashed, and all aboard were killed. The cause of the crash was under investigation at the time of the report.

The human rights situation had gradually improved as a result of UNAMSIL's training and sensitization efforts, in partnership with the Government and local human rights organizations. On 30 July, the Sierra Leone Parliament passed an act establishing the National Human Rights Commission. A Law Reform Commission was also established to review existing laws and to make recommendations for the repeal, amendment or enactment of new laws. The entire justice system needed urgent reform to address the problems of inadequate personnel, lack of access to current legislation and jurisprudence in codified form, respect for human rights in the administration of justice and the lack of resources. On 21 July, 64 former RUF members and 33 of the so-called West Side Boys, detained in Pademba prison for over three years, rioted to protest another postponement of their court appearances. The police brought the situation under control, and a month later, the Government released 16 of them on the advice of the international community.

The Truth and Reconciliation Commission completed its operational mandate, having collected over 8,000 statements on the issues, events and violations of human rights that occurred during the decade-long civil war. The Special Court for Sierra Leone, which had completed two years of operation, began the trial of three members of the former CDF on 3 July and continued with the trial of three former RUF members.

The repatriation by UNHCR of Sierra Leonean refugees, mainly from Guinea and Liberia, was completed on 21 July. Since the repatriation began in 2001, UNHCR had repatriated 179,000 refugees, with 25,913 Sierra Leoneans repatriated in 2004. Another 92,000 refugees returned unassisted and an estimated 15,000 opted to stay in other countries. Sierra Leone continued to host some 66,000 Liberian refugees.

The Secretary-General concluded that the overall gradual progress and stable political environment in Sierra Leone continued to facilitate the consolidation of peace. The Government had made significant progress towards accomplishing a number of benchmarks for the withdrawal of UNAMSIL. That situation had permitted a slow increase in economic and commercial activity throughout the country. Further progress would depend on continued support from international donors. In order to continue with the gradual drawdown of UNAMSIL and to ensure a smooth transition from the current configuration of the Mission to its residual presence in Sierra Leone, he recommended that its mandate be extended for nine months, until 30 June 2005.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 17 September [meeting 5037], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1562 (2004). The draft [S/2004/741] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the situation in Sierra Leone,

8. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (December). In his twenty-fourth report on UNAMSIL issued on 10 December [S/2004/965], the Secretary-General said that, on 23 September, UNAMSIL transferred to the Government primary responsibility for security in the western area, thereby completing the overall transfer. Consequently, the Mission's role was readjusted to that of providing support to the national security services. The relationship between the Sierra Leone armed forces and police continued to improve, as the leadership of the two agencies committed themselves, in a 9 August joint communiqué, to enhancing cooperation. However, the issue of the border village of Yenga remained a cause for concern. Despite the 2 September agreement (see p. 216) affirming Sierra Leone's sovereignty over the village, Guinean armed forces maintained a small presence in the area, and there were reports of Sierra Leonean civilians being harassed by them. The issue continued to generate tensions and had the potential of negatively affecting relations between the two countries.

The drawdown of UNAMSIL remained on track. A national security exercise was held in November to test planning procedures following UNAMSIL's disengagement, including the operational preparedness of the Sierra Leone police and armed forces joint force command. Meanwhile, to ensure a seamless transition from peace-keeping to peace-building in Sierra Leone, UNAMSIL and the UN country team jointly developed a transition plan, identifying priority tasks to be implemented in 2005, with a focus on national capacity-building, strengthening national ownership and ensuring the Government's lead in the formulation and implementation of policies and programmes in key areas, and ensuring that it addressed the root causes of the conflict.

The final report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission was presented to President Kabbah on 5 October and subsequently released to the public [ECOSOC/6140-GA/10287-SC/8227]. The report covered the 10-year conflict, its causes, nature, human rights violations, the role of external actors and circumstances that fuelled the war, such as mineral resources. On 15 October, the Special Court signed its first agreement on the enforcement of sentences, which would allow some of those convicted to serve their sentences outside Sierra Leone. It also concluded a limited number of witness relocation agreements and finalized its work completion strategy. In the justice sector, appointment by the Government of a number of High Court judges would help to expedite adjudication of the large backlog of cases pending before the courts.

The Secretary-General observed that, as Sierra Leone moved from recovery and reconstruction to the development phase, concerted and highly focused actions by the Government and its international partners should address poverty alleviation to ensure that the improvements in the macroeconomic situation had a positive impact on the living standards of the population. The poverty reduction strategy paper, which was being finalized, would provide the framework for such action, while post-conflict aid would need to be followed by adequate longer-term donor assistance and development.

UNAMSIL financing

The Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly at its resumed fifty-eighth (2004) session the performance report on the UNAMSIL budget for 1 July 2002 to 30 June 2003 [A/58/660], which showed that, of a total appropriation of $669,476,400, actual expenditure amounted to $603,085,500, a variance of 9.9 per cent. He also submitted the proposed budget for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005 [A/58/661], totalling $199,799,800 gross.

ACABQ, having reviewed the reports, recommended on 8 April [A/58/759/Add.3] that the approved appropriation for 2002/03 be reduced to $633,447,400 and that the total apportionment granted by the Assembly for the maintenance of the Mission during the same period be increased from $622,469,200 to $633,447,400. The Assembly should decide on the treatment of other income and adjustments for 2002/03 in the amount of $27,223,300. ACABQ made suggestions for reducing costs and recommended that the estimated budget for the 2004/05 period be reduced from $199,799,800 to $196,982,200.

The revised budget amounted to $291,603,600, an increase of $94,621,400.

ACABQ, in its October report [A/59/417] on the revised budget, recommended approval of the full amount proposed by the Secretary-General.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (October)

On 29 October [meeting 46], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/59/527], adopted resolution 59/14 without vote [agenda item 136].

Financing of the appropriation

12. Decides also, taking into account the amount of 207,246,100 dollars previously apportioned under the terms of its resolution 58/308, to apportion among Member States the additional amount of 94,621,400 dollars at a monthly rate of 7,885,117 dollars, in accordance with the levels set out in General Assembly resolution 55/235, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolution 55/236 of 23 December 2000 and updated in its resolution 58/256 of 23 December 2003, taking into account the scale of assessments for 2004 and 2005, as set out in its resolution 58/1 B of 23 December 2003;

The Assembly, on 23 December, decided that the agenda item on UNAMSIL financing would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session (decision 59/552).

Financing of Special Court

The Secretary-General, on 26 February [S/2004/182], informed the Security Council of the shortfall in the budget for the third year of operation of the Special Court for Sierra Leone, established in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 164] as requested by the Council in resolution 1315(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 205]. Since voluntary contributions for the operation of the Court, to date, were estimated at only $8 million, the anticipated shortfall was projected between $20 million and $22 million. To address the situation, the Secretary-General proposed that the shortfall for all or part of the third-year costs of the Court be provided by assessment and invited the Council to bring the matter to the attention of the General Assembly.

On 10 March [S/2004/183], the Security Council President informed the Secretary-General that it had no objection to his proposal for supplementing the voluntary contributions for financing the Court.

The Secretary-General, on 15 March [A/58/733], submitted to the Assembly for approval a request for a subvention to the Special Court for Sierra Leone for the period from 1 July 2004 to 31 December 2005 of up to $40 million, of which $16.7 million related to the period from 1 July to 31 December 2004 and the remaining $23.3 million to 2005. The amount requested would supplement voluntary contributions, including those pledged but not yet paid. Any voluntary contributions received would reduce the amount to be assessed.

On 17 March [A/58/7/Add.30], ACABQ, having reviewed the request, recommended that commitment authority be granted in the amount of $16.7 million. ACABQ intended to revert to the matter when it had received a detailed submission, and would provide a detailed recommendation to the Assembly on the required level of financial assistance and the source of financing.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (April)

On 8 April [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/58/573/Add.1], adopted resolution 58/284 without vote [agenda item 121].

Special Court for Sierra Leone

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the request for a subvention to the Special Court for Sierra Leone submitted in response to the exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions contained in its report, subject to the provisions of the present resolution, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary report to the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session;

2. Authorizes the Secretary-General, as an exceptional measure, to enter into commitments in an amount not to exceed 16.7 million United States dollars to supplement the financial resources of the Special Court for Sierra Leone for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2004, on the understanding that any regular budget funds appropriated for the Court would be refunded to the United Nations at the time of liquidation of the Court should sufficient voluntary contributions be received;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in concert with the Management Committee, to redouble efforts to raise voluntary contributions to support the work of the Court, and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session on progress made;

4. Appeals to Member States, as a matter of urgency, to contribute voluntary funds in support of the Court and to honour existing pledges;

5. Notes that the Court is expected to complete its work by 31 December 2005;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to invite the Court to adopt a completion strategy, and also requests the Secretary-General to inform the Security Council and the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session about this matter;

7. Invites the Management Committee to review the structure of the Court with a view to minimizing the cost of completing the Court's work, without adversely affecting the implementation of the legal agreement between the United Nations and the Government of Sierra Leone.

The Secretary-General, as requested in resolution 58/284 (above), reported on 7 December [A/59/534/Add.2] on the request for a subvention to the Special Court. He said that, owing to the continuing availability of voluntary contributions, the Special Court would not require the $16.7 million authorized by the General Assembly for the period ending 31 December 2004. It was anticipated, however, that the Special Court would exhaust its available voluntary contributions and a subvention from the United Nations would be required from early 2005. The Assembly was being requested to appropriate the amount of $20 million for that purpose.

ACABQ, on 10 December [A/59/569/Add.2], reviewed the Secretary-General's report and recommended that commitment authority be granted in an amount not to exceed $20 million, so that the Court could continue operations until 30 June 2005. The Committee would revert to the matter on the basis of the detailed report to be submitted to the Assembly at its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session.

The Assembly, in section VII of resolution 59/276 of 23 December (see p. 1383), authorized the Secretary-General to enter into commitments not to exceed $20 million to supplement the financial resources of the Court, with effect from 1 January to 30 June 2005, under special political missions of section 3, Political affairs, of the 2004-2005 programme budget. He should continue to raise voluntary contributions for the Court and submit a progress report at the Assembly's resumed fifty-ninth session. Member States were asked to continue to provide funds in support of the Court.

Sanctions

The Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1132 (1997) [YUN 1997, p. 135] on Sierra Leone, reported on 27 February [S/2004/166] on its activities in 2003. The Committee sought the views of the Sierra Leone Government and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on the criteria for reviewing and revising the travel-ban list and on redefining the legal basis of the travel ban. The Committee removed the names of eight persons confirmed deceased from the list and approved one request for an exemption of the travel restrictions. The Committee also considered allegations of violations of the diamond sanctions. In the absence of a specific monitoring mechanism, the Committee urged States and organizations to provide it with pertinent information.

In a later report [S/2005/44], the Committee described its 2004 activities. On 25 February, the Committee issued a revised travel-ban list [SC/8008]. On Sierra Leone's recommendation, the Committee removed the names of 16 individuals from the list and issued a new one on 20 September [SC/8192]. The Committee reviewed a request from the Special Court for Sierra Leone that five individuals in the Court's custody be allowed to be granted a waiver so that they could travel abroad for medical treatment, and the Acting Chairman indicated that the Committee would look constructively upon such requests. It considered a notification from the United States [S/2004/395] of the export of non-lethal spare parts for RSLAF helicopters, and information from Argentina on steps it had taken to implement the arms sanctions. On 5 November, the Committee adopted revised guidelines for the conduct of its work.

Guinea-Bissau

In 2004, progress was made towards restoring constitutional rule in Guinea-Bissau through implementation of the terms of the Political Transitional Charter, signed in September 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 227]. The Charter, signed by the Military Committee, 23 of the 24 registered political parties and civil society organizations, set up a Transitional Government and the National Transitional Council, following the coup d'état staged by the military. As called for in the Charter, legislative elections were held in March 2004, and a new Government was formed in May. The Interim President, Henrique Pereira Rosa, and the new Government undertook to restore law and order and institutional stability. Some governmental institutions resumed their functions and preparations began for presidential elections, scheduled for April 2005.

The United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Guinea-Bissau (UNOGBIS), headed by the Secretary-General's Representative for Guinea-Bissau, continued to support the Government's efforts to monitor internal developments, to promote peace and security, and to coordinate efforts aimed at social and economic development in the country. It reported that the socio-economic situation in Guinea-Bissau remained critical, and the Government lacked the resources to meet expenditure and pay salary arrears of the civil services and armed forces.

Progress in implementing the Transitional Charter was stalled by a military mutiny on 6 October, resulting in the assassination of the Chief of General Staff and the Chief of Human Resources. Condemning the use of force to settle differences, the Security Council urged the political parties to continue working with national authorities to complete the implementation of the Charter before the holding of presidential elections. The Council welcomed the financial support provided by ECOWAS for the payment of some of the salary arrears of military personnel.

By the end of the year, the transitional process was back on track, and the new Government formed after the legislative elections of March made further efforts towards restoring constitutional rule and institutional stability. The executive, legislative and judiciary branches began to function, and progress was made in organizing presidential elections. The Government's fiscal reforms made it possible for civil servants and the security forces to be paid after a long hiatus. According to the Secretary-General, Guinea-Bissau's new Government needed assistance in organizing presidential elections, restructuring the security sector and building the capacity of the executive and judiciary branches. To help the Government meet those challenges, he proposed that the UNOGBIS presence in Guinea-Bissau be extended and its mandate expanded. Acting on that recommendation, the Security Council, on 22 December, extended the mandate for one year and revised it. Among its tasks, UNOGBIS would support national reconciliation; promote respect for the rule of law and human rights; support the restoration of constitutional normalcy; assist in elections; strengthen national mechanisms for conflict prevention; support security sector reform; and mobilize international financial assistance.

Elections and new Government

Following the 26 January elections for the President and the Vice-President of the Supreme Court of Justice, legislative elections were held in Guinea-Bissau on 28 and 30 March, a significant step in the implementation of the transitional process due to end with the holding of presidential elections in March 2004. The National Electoral Commission announced on 4 April that the African Party for the Independence of Guinea-Bissau and Cape Verde (PAIGC) obtained 45 seats in the 102-member National Popular Assembly, the party of former President Koumba Yala, the Party of Social Renewal (PRS), 35 seats, the United Social Democratic Party, led by Francisco Fadul, 17 seats, the Electoral Union two seats and the United Popular Alliance (APU) one seat. Thus, none of the parties received an absolute majority. After the ruling by the Supreme Court rejecting claims of fraud by PRS and APU, all parties accepted the results. With the transfer, on 7 May, by the National Transition Council of its power to the newly elected National Popular Assembly and the Assembly's inauguration, the Council ceased to exist as provided for in the Transition Charter.

Following the inauguration of the Assembly, the President appointed Carlos Gomes Junior, head of PAIGC, as Prime Minister. Mr. Gomes Junior announced a 24-member Government, representing all ethnic groups and including five women.

The EU, in a 2 April statement of its Presidency [S/2004/283], welcomed the calmness and public-spiritedness which characterized the electoral process. It found the elections to be fair, free and transparent. The EU reaffirmed its willingness to help Guinea-Bissau in normalizing its economic and social situations.

Developments and UNOGBIS activities

Report of Secretary-General (June). The Secretary-General, in response to Security Council resolution 1233(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 140], reported on 4 June [S/2004/456] on developments in Guinea-Bissau and UNOGBIS. He said that important progress continued to be made towards restoring constitutional order, in accordance with the Transitional Charter provisions. Following the formation of the new Government, the new authorities set priority objectives, among which were the creation of institutional capacity for assuming national responsibility for good governance, accountable and transparent financial management and the improvement of socioeconomic conditions.

The overall situation in the country remained peaceful; however, the ethnic imbalance within the military, unpaid salary arrears for the security forces and the poor condition of barracks and infrastructure were potentially destabilizing factors. The authorities recognized that the reorganization of the armed forces was one of the country's top priorities. In that regard, UNOGBIS, in collaboration with ECOWAS and bilateral partners, initiated planning for the reform of the armed forces. The reintegration component of the disarmament, reinsertion and reintegration programme was proceeding well and the Government received additional resources from the World Bank to increase the number of beneficiaries to 7,376 from 4,372.

Among efforts to reinforce national capacity for the protection and respect of human rights, UNOGBIS helped to develop a National Human Rights Action Plan to be submitted to the National Popular Assembly. UNOGBIS followed closely the cases of 20 persons accused of attempted coups d'état and arbitrarily detained since December 2002, given that many of them had not been formally charged. UNOGBIS received assurances that the trial of the detainees would proceed in criminal courts to avoid further delays, as the military tribunal lacked logistical and financial means.

The economic situation in Guinea-Bissau remained difficult, with two out of three people living in poverty. To respond to the country's economic and budgetary crisis, the Transitional Government, supported by IMF, the World Bank, the African Development Bank and UNDP, formulated an emergency budget for 2004 and an emergency economic management plan. To support the country in the implementation of that plan, a multi-donor Emergency Economic Management Fund for Guinea-Bissau, initiated by the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau of the Economic and Social Council, was set up to enable the Government to resume social services and key public administration activities. The Fund, administered by UNDP and expected to be operational until the end of 2004, had so far received just over $4 million of the $18.3 million required.

The Secretary-General observed that the democratization process in Guinea-Bissau remained fragile. It lacked the resources to strengthen the capacity of State institutions to address the country's deep-rooted structural problems. The country needed the support of the international community to complete the transition to constitutional order.

Ad Hoc Advisory Group. The Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau issued two reports [E/2004/10, E/2004/92], highlighting its efforts to assist the country with its development priorities. The Economic and Social Council in resolution 2004/1 of 3 May (see p. 935), and resolution 2004/61 of 23 July (see p. 936), called on donors to support Guinea-Bissau's development efforts, including through the Emergency Economic Management Fund. The Economic and Social Council drew the Security Council's attention to the Group's work in a 2 November letter [S/2004/898].

Security Council consideration. On 6 April, the Security Council was briefed, during informal consultations, on the situation in Guinea-Bissau by David Stephen, the Representative of the Secretary-General and Head of UNOGBIS. In a press statement issued that day [SC/8054-APR/887] by the President, Council members took note of the announcement by the PAIGC leader of the party's intention to form a broad-based government and urged all the Guinean actors to work together for a smooth completion of the transitional period. Members commended ECOWAS for its mediation and facilitation role, as well as for the timely and constructive contribution brought to the political environment immediately after the elections. They also expressed concern at the persistence of serious economic difficulties in Guinea-Bissau and appealed to the international community to consider the situation in the country as a matter of urgency, requiring strengthened support of its economic reconstruction and rehabilitation efforts.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 18 June [meeting 4992], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/20 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council, recalling its previous statements on Guinea-Bissau, in particular the statement by its President of 19 June 2003, welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 4 June 2004 on developments in Guinea-Bissau and on activities of the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in that country.

In this regard, the Council expresses its satisfaction regarding progress made by national authorities towards restoring constitutional order, in accordance with the Transition Charter provisions and calendar, in particular the installation of a new National Popular Assembly and a new Government, thus completing the first phase of the transitional process due to end with the holding of presidential elections by March 2005, and generating the environment for growing international confidence and support.

The Council acknowledges, with appreciation, the manner in which the country's principal actors and the political forces managed to reach consensus on critical political challenges they faced during and after the elections, and encourages them to stay the course.

The Council also encourages all parties, and the new Government established on 12 May 2004, to faithfully adhere to the provisions of the Transition Charter in order to achieve and consolidate national reconciliation and to ensure the full restoration of constitutional order. It further encourages the authorities to continue to strengthen the rule of law and respect for human rights and to resolve outstanding human rights issues.

The Council commends the national authorities and the people of Guinea-Bissau for their continued commitment and dedication to democracy.

The Council expresses, nonetheless, its concern with the fragility of the democratization process in Guinea-Bissau, due mainly to the country's deep-rooted structural problems, including the weakness of State institutions and structures, as well as the persistent economic and social crisis.

The Council further expresses its concern about the need to improve the situation of the military, in particular the payment of salary arrears, which continues to be seen as a potentially destabilizing factor. It welcomes the Government's commitment to make all efforts aimed at addressing the issue of salary arrears and the reorganization of the national armed forces and invites the international community to fully support such efforts.

The Council welcomes the improved dialogue between the Government of Guinea-Bissau and the Bretton Woods institutions, and urges the Government to continue to implement its commitments in the areas of fiscal responsibility and good governance. It highlights the importance that those efforts be matched by the resumption of adequate levels of international assistance.

The Council acknowledges and also welcomes the assistance provided to Guinea-Bissau by bilateral and multilateral partners, in particular the United Nations Development Programme and the World Bank, and encourages their enhanced constructive involvement in the country.

The Council underlines the importance it attaches to the organization of a round-table conference to take place in the last quarter of 2004, which it considers of utmost relevance to addressing some of the most urgent needs of Guinea-Bissau. In the interim, the Council reiterates its appeals to the international community to contribute financially to the Emergency Economic Management Fund for Guinea-Bissau, managed by the United Nations Development Programme.

The Council recognizes and commends the work of the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Guinea-Bissau and the entire United Nations country team for their outstanding support and contribution to the process of normalization of the political situation and stability in Guinea-Bissau.

The Council reaffirms the importance of the regional dimension in the solution of the problems faced by Guinea-Bissau, and, in this regard, welcomes the role being played by the African Union, the West African Economic and Monetary Union, the Economic Community of West African States and the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries in the peace-building process in Guinea-Bissau.

The Council also commends the efforts by the Ad Hoc Working Group on Conflict Prevention and Resolution in Africa of the Council, the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau of the Economic and Social Council and the Group of Friends of Guinea-Bissau aimed at assisting the country to address both its short-term post-conflict crisis and longer-term development goals.

The Council looks forward to conclusions and recommendations of its mission to West Africa, which includes Guinea-Bissau.

Security Council mission. The Security Council mission to West Africa (see p. 169) visited Guinea-Bissau on 27 and 28 June, jointly with the Economic and Social Council's Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau and the Group of Friends of Guinea-Bissau. In its 2 July report [S/2004/525], the mission welcomed the progress in the political transition and commended the Government's efforts to meet its short-term priorities, including paying current salaries to civil servants and the armed forces and ensuring accountability and transparency in the management of public funds.

The mission, noting that the overall situation in the country remained fragile, despite the progress made in the transition, highlighted the remaining major challenges as restructuring the armed forces into a professional force; strengthening national public institutions; redressing social and economic inequities; promoting inclusive internal political dialogue; and mobilizing resources from bilateral and multilateral sources, to promote social and economic development and to ensure regular payment of salaries to civil servants and the military.

The mission recommended that development partners and donors, including the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and IMF) and the EU, should help Guinea-Bissau to meet its most immediate needs; the Government and IMF should discuss resuming an IMF programme; UNDP should assist in preparing for the round-table conference to take place late in 2004; the Government should strengthen a culture of good governance, democracy and respect for the rule of law and human rights; and bilateral and/or multilateral partners should support the restructuring of the armed forces. The mission also recommended that the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau and the Security Council continue to monitor and support political, economic and social developments in Guinea-Bissau. ECOWAS was called on to include Guinea-

Bissau in regional policies for containing the proliferation of small arms and other security threats in the region.

The Security Council considered the mission's report on 16 July [meeting 5005].

Appointment. On 1 September [S/2004/713], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to designate Jono Bernardo Honwana (Mozambique) as his Representative in Guinea-Bissau and Head of UNOGBIS as from 15 September, to succeed David Stephen, who retired in April. The Council, on 3 September [S/2004/714], took note of the Secretary-General's intention.

Military revolt

On 6 October, a group of military officers led a revolt, which resulted in the assassination of the Chief of General Staff, General Veríssimo Correia Seabra, and the spokesman for the armed forces, Colonel Domingos de Barros.

The officers involved stated afterwards that their actions had been motivated mainly by grievances over salaries, poor living conditions and corruption in the military hierarchy. They insisted that the mutiny had not been a coup d'état or aimed at changing the political status quo. Subsequently, they sought, and obtained from the authorities, the appointment of Major General Tagme Na Waie as new Chief of General Staff. General Tagme and new chiefs of the navy, air force and army were sworn in on 11 November, ending the month-long vacuum of military leadership. The appointments, however, were viewed as caving in on the part of the civilian authorities to pressures from the military and as a sign of further erosion of the authority of the constitutional Government and its institutions. In addition, misgivings were expressed about impunity following the Government's commitment in a memorandum of understanding, signed with the military, to a possible amnesty for all involved in military interventions since 1980.

Following the installation of the new officers, the interim President underlined the importance of proceeding with the long-planned reform of the armed forces, a goal endorsed by the new Chief of General Staff, who announced the military leadership's readiness to work towards reform. ECOWAS and the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries provided material and technical assistance to the Government of Guinea-Bissau after the mutiny, including a cash donation of $500,000 towards paying some of the salary arrears owed to the military. The Community dispatched a good offices mission to Bissau on 15 November to assist the civilian and military authorities to find peace.

Security Council consideration. The Security Council was briefed by the Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs on the developments that took place on 6 October. In a 7 October statement of the President [SC/8213-APR/1047], Council members expressed concern over the tragic events at a time when Guinea-Bissau was making steady progress towards the full restoration of constitutional order. They condemned the use of force to settle long-standing problems in the military sector and the subsequent loss of life. They called on all concerned to come to a speedy agreement consistent with respect for constitutional authority and the rule of law.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 2 November [meeting 5069], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/41 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses its deep concern at developments in Guinea-Bissau that led to the killings, on 6 October 2004, of the Chief of General Staff of the Armed Forces, General Veríssimo Correia Seabra, and of the Chief of Human Resources, Colonel Domingos de Barros. The Council condemns in the strongest terms such use of force to settle differences or address grievances and, bearing in mind the position of the African Union on unconstitutional changes of government, as stated in the 1999 Algiers Declaration and the 2000 Lomé Declaration, calls upon the Guinea-Bissau parties to refrain from attempting to seize power in Guinea-Bissau by force.

The Council takes note of the signature of a memorandum of understanding, in Bissau, on 10 October 2004, and of the establishment of a commission to monitor its implementation, and underlines that the Government of Guinea-Bissau and national authorities must remain committed to the promotion of the rule of law and to the fight against impunity, including when considering ways of implementing the above-mentioned agreement.

The Council urges all political parties to continue working, in good faith, with national authorities to complete the implementation of the Political Transition Charter before the holding of presidential elections by April 2005.

The Council reaffirms that peace and stability in Guinea-Bissau are critical for peace and security in the West African subregion. As the Government of Guinea-Bissau tackles the military, political, institutional and economic problems that are responsible for recurrent political turmoil and instability in Guinea-Bissau, the Council underlines the importance of addressing their root causes as well as finding immediate solutions to improve the situation in the short term.

The Council stresses the need for urgent measures by the international community to assist the Government of Guinea-Bissau to overcome the present crisis, in particular to reinforce the capacity of legitimate authorities to maintain political stability and to determine sound solutions to the country's most urgent and fundamental challenges, particularly the restructuring of the Armed Forces, the strengthening of the State and its institutions and the promotion of social and economic development.

The Council welcomes the timely financial support already provided by the Economic Community of West African States and its members to the Government of Guinea-Bissau towards the payment of salary arrears due to military personnel. The Council calls upon international donors to contribute urgently to the Government of Guinea-Bissau's budget for civil service and military salaries and also encourages them to contribute to the Emergency Economic Management Fund, managed by the United Nations Development Programme.

The Council also takes note, with appreciation, of the recent visit of a fact-finding mission from the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries to Guinea-Bissau.

The Council reiterates its call upon the international community to maintain its confidence in the process of democratic consolidation in Guinea-Bissau and to uphold its commitments to development in that country, particularly through its active preparation for and participation in the round-table conference scheduled to take place next December, in Brussels.

The Council reaffirms its full support for the Representative of the Secretary-General in Guinea-Bissau and indicates its intention to consider suitable ways of improving the role of the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in Guinea-Bissau in the promotion of peace and security, as well as in the coordination of efforts aiming at social and economic development in the country.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to submit to the United Nations, in his next report on the Support Office and the situation in Guinea-Bissau, suggestions on what contribution the United Nations could make towards an active and coordinated international effort to assist Guinea-Bissau.

Report of Secretary-General (December).

The Secretary-General, in his 15 December report on developments in Guinea-Bissau and UNOGBIS activities [S/2004/969], said that prior to the mutiny of 6 October (see p. 227), the political situation in that country showed signs of progress and promise towards restoring constitutional rule and institutional stability. The executive, legislative and judiciary branches began to function within the parameters of the powers envisaged in the Constitution. The National Electoral Commission was established to organize polls and presidential elections in 2005, which would complete the political transition and mark the full restoration of constitutional normalcy. The military mutiny jeopardized those and other gains and demonstrated the fragility of the continuing transitional process and of the society as a whole. It also increased the danger of polarizing of the society along ethnic lines, especially given the widespread perception that the revolt was inspired by Balanta elements in the armed forces.

The Government's fiscal and governance reforms resulted in improved revenue collection, making it possible for it to meet its commitments to pay current salaries to civil servants and the security forces. However, the Government did not have the resources to meet recurrent expenditures and pay the huge backlog of salary arrears inherited from the previous Government. Moreover, the Emergency Economic Management Fund had been depleted and would cease to be operational at the end of the year. However, the Government anticipated accessing a second tranche of an EU budget support package, contingent upon an agreed macroeconomic framework with IMF, which had scheduled a mission to Guinea-Bissau from 4 to 18 December to assist the authorities with preparing the 2005 budget. The Government also worked with the Bretton Woods institutions to begin finalization of the poverty reduction strategy paper for submission to the round table initially scheduled for December 2004, but postponed after the 6 October mutiny.

The health and education sectors suffered from inadequate infrastructure, financial resources and qualified human resources. With teaching materials financed through the Emergency Economic Management Fund, State schools were able to commence the 2004/05 school year on time in October for the first time in three years. The national polio vaccination campaign covered 97 per cent of children and the United Nations provided substantial support for the campaign against malaria. The first national forum on HIV/AIDS was held in September.

The re-evaluation of the preparatory process for planning the reform of the armed forces and reconciliation among the military factions prior to the military mutiny, interrupted by the events of 6 October, would resume as new military leadership had been appointed. The police force, which also needed reform, faced a shortage of equipment, funds and capacity to enable it to fulfil its public security role. With UNDP support, the national mine action coordination authority supervised the removal by NGOs of 2,599 mines and 34,900 pieces of unexploded ordnance, while the International Organization for Migration provided administrative and financial management support to the demobilization, reinsertion and reintegration programme.

The human rights situation was a cause of concern, and the events of 6 October intensified the climate of uncertainty and insecurity, especially since no official investigation was launched. By November, all 20 prisoners accused of attempted coups d'état and arbitrarily detained since December 2002 were provisionally released.

The Secretary-General observed that the challenges confronting Guinea-Bissau were complex and multisectoral, and complicated as a result of the 6 October mutiny. With a view to building sustainable peace and progress, he proposed that the Security Council extend the UNOGBIS presence and revise its mandate to take into account the diverse tasks at hand and the importance of strengthening the capacity of national stakeholders to confront those challenges. That new mandate would allow the Office, working with the UN country team, to integrate development and peace and security activities into a cohesive peace-building strategy for the immediate, medium and longer terms; help Guinea-Bissau overcome its difficulties, including the organization of presidential elections, and with the country team contribute to institutional capacity-building to enable the legislative, the executive and the judiciary branches to function more effectively; and support efforts to implement military reform. Training and advocacy in the advancement of respect for human rights and the rule of law would be intensified. The Office would also promote the development of national mechanisms of conflict prevention and management.

Concerning international assistance to Guinea-Bissau, the Secretary-General recommended that the Emergency Economic Management Fund be extended beyond the end of 2004 to 30 June 2005 to enable the Government to meet its urgent budgetary priorities. Once the Government and the military authorities had defined the nature and scope of such reform, the international community should provide support, through a special fund, so that the process could proceed expeditiously. UNOGBIS and the country team would work with national authorities to define programmes in support of that process and to mobilize resources. The United Nations would also assist the authorities to implement the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects [YUN 2001, p. 499]. The Government, in cooperation with ECOWAS and others, should address the regional proliferation of small arms and other cross-border issues. In terms of medium- and longer-term priorities, the United Nations and other donors should develop programmes to strengthen national institutions in the political, judiciary, social and economic realms; develop and empower civil society bodies; address the plight of youth; and rebuild social and public infrastructure. ECOWAS, the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries and the United Nations should ensure complementarity and avoid duplication of efforts. At the same time, UNOGBIS and the UN country team would strengthen the judiciary system through capacity-building and resource allocation.

The Secretary-General said it was regrettable that, since the beginning of the transition, qualified optimism was replaced by growing scepticism and a perception that the military posed the greatest obstacle to the consolidation of democracy, peace and economic opportunities. He encouraged the authorities to complete the political transition peacefully, including by holding presidential elections as envisaged in the Political Transition Charter. He urged the international community and all donors to be generous in their assistance, including providing contributions to the Emergency Economic Management Fund and financial and technical support for holding presidential elections in 2005.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 22 December [meeting 5107], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1580 (2004). The draft [S/2004/986] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions 1216(1998) of 21 December 1998 and 1233(1999) of 6 April 1999, and the statement by its President of 2 November 2004,

Expressing its deep concern at recent developments in Guinea-Bissau, particularly the military mutiny of 6 October 2004 that resulted in the assassinations of the Chief of General Staff of the Armed Forces, General Veríssimo Correia Seabra, and the Armed Forces spokesman, Colonel Domingos de Barros, and which has jeopardized gains made since the installation of the new Government after the legislative elections of March 2004,

Stressing the fact that such developments demonstrate the fragility of the ongoing transitional process and of national political institutions, and recognizing the risks they present to the conclusion of the transitional process,

Noting with concern that repeated acts of instability and unrest threaten efforts towards sustainable social and economic development, and may erode the confidence of bilateral partners and the international community,

Underlining the fact that the Government of Guinea-Bissau and national authorities must remain committed to the promotion of the rule of law and fight against impunity,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on developments in Guinea-Bissau and on the activities of the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in that country of 15 December 2004, and his recommendations contained therein,

Reaffirming its full commitment to the promotion of peace and stability in Guinea-Bissau,

(g) To work closely with the Resident Coordinator and the United Nations country team to mobilize international financial assistance to enable the Government to meet its immediate financial and logistical needs and implement its national reconstruction and social and economic development strategy;

(h) Within the framework of a comprehensive peacebuilding strategy, to actively support efforts of the United Nations system and Guinea-Bissau's other partners, towards strengthening State institutions and structures to enable them to uphold the rule of law, respect for human rights and the unimpeded and independent functioning of the executive, legislative and judicial branches of government;

3. Encourages the authorities of Guinea-Bissau to enhance political dialogue and pursue constructive civil-military relations, as a way forward, towards the peaceful completion of the political transition, including the holding of presidential elections as envisaged in the Political Transition Charter;

4. Calls upon the National Assembly of Guinea-Bissau, while addressing the issue of granting an amnesty for all those involved in military interventions since 1980, to take account of the principles of justice and fight against impunity;

5. Strongly urges the Government, together with military authorities and other concerned parties, to agree, as soon as possible, on a national plan for the reform of the security sector, in particular military reform;

tions to the Emergency Economic Management Fund as well as to the new fund mentioned above;

8. Encourages the establishment of a joint coordinating mechanism among the United Nations, the Economic Community of West African States and the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries to ensure synergy and complementarity;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to conduct a review of the Support Office with a view to adjusting its capacities to meet the requirements of its revised mandate;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council closely and regularly informed of developments on the ground and of the implementation of the present resolution, in particular of paragraphs 2 and 5 above, and in that regard requests the Secretary-General to submit a report every three months from the date of adoption of the present resolution;

12. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Cameroon-Nigeria

Cameroon and Nigeria cooperated to resolve border issues, with UN assistance, through the Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission. The Commission was established by the Secretary-General following the ruling of the International Court of Justice (ICJ) of 10 October 2002 on the land and maritime boundary between those two countries [YUN 2002, p. 1265].

Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission

On 17 March [S/2004/298], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of the activities undertaken by Cameroon and Nigeria, through his good offices and with the assistance of the Secretariat, to implement the ICJ ruling. Prior to that ruling, Cameroon's President, Paul Biya, and Nigeria's President, Olusegun Obasanjo, had agreed to respect the Court's ruling, establish an implementation mechanism with UN support and adopt confidence-building measures. Following the ICJ ruling in October 2002, they asked the Secretary-General to establish a Mixed Commission, to be chaired by his Special Representative, Ahmedou Ould-Abdallah, to consider the implications of the ICJ decision, including: the demarcation of the land boundary; recommendations on confidence-building measures, such as projects to promote joint economic ventures and cross-border cooperation; troop withdrawal from boundary areas; demilitarization of the Bakassi peninsula, with the possibility of deploying international personnel to observe the withdrawal; and reactivation of the Lake Chad Basin Commission (Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Niger, Nigeria). The Mixed Commission, which met bimonthly, alternately in Yaoundé, Cameroon, and Abuja, Nigeria, established, at its first meeting (Yaoundé, December 2002), a sub-commission, consisting of legal experts and cartographers from both countries and the United Nations, with responsibility for demarcating the land boundary between the two countries. The subcommission, at its first meeting (Geneva, January 2003), prepared a small-scale map indicating the boundary and a work programme for the demarcation exercise, which was approved by the Mixed Commission in February 2003. The demarcation exercise was expected to last 96 weeks.

The Mixed Commission also established a sub-commission on affected populations. Acting on the decision of the Mixed Commission, the two subcommissions carried out a field visit in February 2004 to the southern part of the land boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria and the Bakassi peninsula. The Mixed Commission also decided that it would carry out field visits to the land boundary area and the Bakassi peninsula itself in March.

The Mixed Commission also established a working group, composed of five experts each from Nigeria and Cameroon, and UN experts, to make a preliminary study and recommendations for delineating the maritime boundary in conformity with the ICJ decision and to produce a map on that basis. To promote confidence-building, the Mixed Commission identified possible projects to promote cross-border cooperation and joint economic ventures, including the reactivation of the Lake Chad Basin Commission.

One of the most important tasks carried out by the Mixed Commission was the withdrawal of and transfer of authority from the civil administration and military and police forces in the Lake Chad area. In December 2003, Nigeria handed over 28 villages to Cameroon, while Cameroon transferred one village to Nigeria. To consolidate the withdrawal and transfer of authority, the Mixed Commission established an observer personnel group for a year, composed of five members each from Nigeria and Cameroon and five UN representatives.

At their third summit (Geneva, 31 January 2004), Presidents Biya and Obasanjo reaffirmed their commitment to implementing the Mixed Commission's agreed work plan and to strengthen confidence-building measures through the exchange of ambassadors, the opening of consulates along the common border and the introduction of joint security patrols. The two leaders also considered concluding a bilateral treaty of friendship and non-aggression. They decided that the Joint Commission would meet annually at a higher level.

The cost of the demarcation exercise and for UN support to the Mixed Commission through 2005 was estimated at $25 million. The Secretary-General intended to seek regular budget support to continue the work of the Commission.

On 15 April [S/2004/299], the Council President informed the Secretary-General that the Council had noted his intention to continue the activities of the UN support team to the Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission with funding from the regular budget and urged the parties of the Mixed Commission to seek further contributions.

On 29 July [S/2004/612], Cameroon informed the Council that Presidents Obasanjo and Biya discussed on 28 and 29 July, among other things, the work of the Mixed Commission and issues relating to peace and security, economic development and regional and international integration. They agreed to open discussions with a view to signing a non-aggression pact.

Financing of Mixed Commission

The Secretary-General, in his report on estimates in respect of special political missions, good offices and other political initiatives authorized by the General Assembly and/or the Security Council [A/C.5/58/20/Add.1], proposed requirements in the amount of $6,902,900 to support the Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission for the period from 1 June to 31 December 2004, to be charged against the unallocated balance in the provision for special political missions for the 2004-2005 biennium.

The Chairman of ACABQ, in an oral report to the Fifth Committee on 26 May [A/C.5/58/SR.49], said that, pending consideration of a new submission, ACABQ recommended that the Secretary-General be granted commitment authority of up to $6,902,900.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 June [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/58/573/Add.2], adopted resolution 58/294 without vote [agenda item 121].

Estimates in respect of special political missions, good offices and other political initiatives authorized by the General Assembly and/or the Security Council

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the estimates in respect of special political missions, good offices and other political initiatives authorized by the General Assembly and/or the Security Council and the oral statement made by the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Emphasizes the importance of the work of the good offices of the Secretary-General in support of the work of Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission;

2. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on estimates in respect of special political missions, good offices and other political initiatives authorized by the General Assembly and/or the Security Council;

3. Notes with concern the late submission of the report of the Secretary-General;

4. Endorses the observations and recommendations as orally presented by the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, by the end of its fifty-eighth session, a comprehensive financial report on the requirements for United Nations support to the Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission, including clearly defined requirements to be provided from the regular budget and elements being financed from other sources, for its consideration at the early part of its fifty-ninth session;

6. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments in the amount of 6 million United States dollars for United Nations support to the Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission until 30 November 2004, on the understanding that any decision on further financing must be taken by 31 October 2004;

7. Urges the Secretary-General to seek further voluntary contributions for United Nations support to the Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission.

In response to that request, the Secretary-General, on 9 September [A/58/886], proposed revised requirements from the regular budget in the amount of $5,419,300 for the seven month period from 1 June to 31 December, and voluntary contributions estimated at $8.3 million.

On 5 October [A/59/411], ACABQ recommended that the Assembly approve the revised requirements for that period and that further voluntary contributions be sought to support the Commission.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 October [meeting 46], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/59/448], adopted resolution 59/12 without vote [agenda item 108].

Estimates in respect of special political missions, good offices and other political initiatives authorized by the General Assembly and/or the Security Council: United Nations support to the Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 58/294 of 18 June 2004, in which it authorized a commitment authority in the amount of 6 million United States dollars for the United Nations support to the Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the estimates in respect of special political missions, good offices and other political initiatives authorized by the General Assembly and/or the Security Council and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Takes note of the revised requirements for the United Nations support to the Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission for the period from 1 June to 31 December 2004, which amount to 5,419,300 dollars;

2. Endorses the observations and recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and approves the charging of 5,419,300 dollars against the unallocated balance of funds appropriated under section 3, Political affairs, of the programme budget for the biennium 2004-2005, for special political missions;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that budget presentations for special political missions, to the extent possible, utilize the format of peacekeeping operations and contain information and justification for proposals for post and non-post requirements, subject to the considerations of timeliness and the need for expeditious financing action.

Equatorial Guinea

The EU Presidency, in a 17 June statement on Equatorial Guinea [S/2004/515], welcomed the forthcoming opening of the country's new Parliament after the parliamentary and municipal elections held on 25 April. Although it considered that the electoral campaign was peaceful, the EU noted that Spanish parliamentary observers had detected irregularities that distorted the electoral process, in violation of the agreements between the Government and the opposition reached in Mbini in August 2003. It believed that the elections failed to constitute a Parliament reflecting the political diversity of the society of the country, given that the opposition was not adequately represented in the elections. It called on the authorities to allow the opposition to participate freely in parliamentary sessions.

The United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa, at its twenty-first ministerial meeting (Malabo, Equatorial Guinea, 21-25 June) [A/59/154-S/2004/576], noted the climate in which the legislative and municipal elections had been held in April and welcomed the desire for liberalization, characterized by the formation of a new Government with the participation of political parties other than the Democratic Party of Equatorial Guinea. The Committee condemned the attempt to overturn the democratically elected institutions by force and welcomed the support given by States in the subregion to the Government of Equatorial Guinea during those events. The Committee encouraged Equatorial Guinea and Cameroon to implement the decisions taken in the framework of the ad hoc joint commission on security questions between the two countries, which met in Malabo in June.

Horn of Africa

In 2004, the countries in the Horn of Africa continued to be torn by civil strife, especially in the Sudan, where a protracted civil war increased in intensity, as fighting flared up in the Darfur area of western Sudan and armed militias attacked civilian settlements. That created one of the worst humanitarian crises ever, coupled with serious violations of human rights. The fighting complicated efforts to reach a comprehensive settlement to end the civil war between the north and south of the country, which had been raging for over 21 years. As the situation in Darfur deteriorated, the African Union (AU), took the lead in trying to bring the parties together both to resolve the Darfur crisis and to end the civil war by sending a mission of observers to the region. The Security Council established a special political mission in the Sudan, with a view to preparing for a UN peace support operation to help implement any final agreement reached by the parties. It also requested the Secretary-General to establish a Commission of Inquiry to investigate reports of the serious violations of international humanitarian law and human rights. Although the security and humanitarian situation remained precarious throughout the year, the Sudanese parties succeeded in concluding a comprehensive peace agreement in December, which was expected to be signed in early 2005.

In Somalia, some progress was made towards national reconciliation, with the signing by Somali leaders of a declaration on agreement of issues related to the transitional federal government. Somaliland, however, continued to remain outside the political process. The Somali National Reconciliation Conference continued to meet, and agreement was reached on the formation of a transitional Federal Parliament and a power-sharing arrangement for a transitional period of five years. Established in September, the new Parliament in October elected Colonel Abdullahi Yusuf Ahmed as President of Somalia. However, the security situation remained volatile, and the UN arms embargo continued to be violated by all parties.

The border dispute between Eritrea and Ethiopia remained contentious, with no progress made in implementing the 2000 Algiers ceasefire and peace agreement between the two countries and the 2002 decision of the Ethiopia and Eritrea Boundary Commission, established under that agreement, on the delimitation of the border. The Secretary-General appointed a Special Envoy to discuss with both countries ways of ending the stalemate so that demarcation of the border could continue. However, Eritrea refused to receive him. In November, Ethiopia put forward a five-point peace proposal for resolving the dispute, which was rejected by Eritrea. By the end of the year, reports were received of a steady increase in the build-up of the armed forces of both countries near the Temporary Security Zone.

Appointment. The Secretary-General, on 22 December [S/2004/1019], informed the Security Council that his Special Adviser, Mohamed Sahnoun, had been following developments in the Horn of Africa region, especially in Somalia and the Sudan, and had been providing advice on what role the United Nations could play to promote negotiated settlements of conflicts in the region. During the first months of 2004, Mr. Sahnoun led the UN observer delegation at the Sudan peace talks in Kenya; he followed the talks on the Darfur region of the Sudan as well as the peace process in Somalia. To allow Mr. Sahnoun to continue his efforts, the Secretary-General extended his appointment until 31 December 2005, which the Council noted [S/2004/1020].

Sudan

In 2004, violence broke out in the Darfur region of western Sudan among the two armed groups, the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army (SPLM/A) and the Justice and Equality Movement (JEM), the Government of Sudan forces and a supposedly Government-backed militia composed of a loose collection of fighters, mainly of Arab background, known as the Janjaweed. The fighting there created one of the worst humanitarian crises ever, with serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, and complicated an already protracted and devastating civil war in the Sudan between government troops based in the north and rebel forces (SPLM/A) based in the south. Attempts to end the civil war, which erupted in 1983, following the breakdown of the 1972 Addis Ababa agreement, were initiated in 1993 by the heads of State of the then Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development, renamed the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD). That process was relaunched in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 217] with the signing of the Machakos (Kenya) Protocol, which resolved two main issues: the right to self-determination for the people of southern Sudan and the status of State and religion. By that document, the parties agreed to establish a democratic system of governance in which power and wealth would be equitably shared and human rights guaranteed, and to set up a six-year interim period of governance, followed by a referendum to confirm the unity of the Sudan or to move towards secession.

The Machakos Protocol was followed by the signing in September 2003, in Naivasha, Kenya, of the Framework Agreement on Security Arrangements during the Interim Period [YUN 2003, p. 257]. Under its terms, the Sudan would have two armies under separate command during the six-year interim period: the government troops in the north and SPLM/A in the south; both would downsize their forces and contribute forces to joint/integrated units; and a ceasefire would be observed by international monitors, once a comprehensive peace agreement was signed.

As the fighting intensified in 2004, several efforts were made by international and regional actors, primarily the AU, to bring the parties to the negotiating table to conclude a comprehensive peace agreement and to settle the Darfur conflict. On 8 April 2004, the Government, SPLM/A and JEM signed a Humanitarian Ceasefire Agreement in N'Djamena, Chad, to allow international access to the population in need in Darfur. The agreement also included the establishment of a ceasefire commission to monitor its observance and provided for AU monitors on the ground in Darfur. Parallel to those efforts, negotiations on a comprehensive peace agreement, led by IGAD, intensified. Having completed the last three of the six protocols provided for under the Machakos Protocol, including one on power-sharing, the parties, on 5 June, signed the Nairobi Declaration confirming the agreement on the six protocols and committing themselves to completing the final stages of the peace process.

Meanwhile, the Secretary-General, in anticipation of the conclusion of a comprehensive peace agreement, began preparations for UN support to the implementation of such an agreement. He proposed that an advance team be established as a special political mission to the Sudan, which the Security Council endorsed in June as the United Nations Advance Mission in the Sudan (UNAMIS). The Council also declared its readiness to consider establishing a UN peace support operation and asked the Secretary-General to make recommendations on such an operation.

While progress was made on the peace process, the security situation deteriorated dramatically and remained serious throughout the year, with reports of extreme violence and violations of human rights and international humanitarian law against civilians in the Darfur region by all parties to the crisis, in particular by the Janjaweed. By mid-2004, over 1 million people were in need of urgent humanitarian assistance and about 200,000 refugees had fled to Chad. Following a visit by the Secretary-General to the Sudan, the United Nations and the Government signed, on 3 July, a joint communiqué, by which the Sudan committed itself to disarming the Janjaweed and other armed outlaw groups, to end impunity, to lift all restrictions on humanitarian relief deliveries, and to resume political talks with opposing parties. For its part, the United Nations agreed to assist the deployment of AU ceasefire monitors and to mediate in the dispute.

The Security Council, on 30 July, called on the Sudan to fulfil its commitments stated in the joint communiqué, and endorsed the deployment of international monitors, including the protection force envisioned by the AU, to the Darfur region under AU leadership. In addition, the Council decided to impose an arms embargo against non-governmental entities and individuals operating in Darfur and extended the special political mission it set up in June for an additional 90 days, until 10 December. The United Nations and the Sudan signed on 5 August a Plan of Action to facilitate implementation of Security Council demands and of the 3 July agreement between the Government and the United Nations, by which the Sudan would take specific actions within 30 days to create the conditions for restoration of peace and security.

Following the failure of the Government to fully comply with the Council's demands and its own commitments, the Council, on 18 September, supported the AU's intention to enhance and augment its monitoring mission in the Darfur region and requested the Secretary-General to establish an international commission of inquiry to investigate reports of violations of international humanitarian law and human rights in Darfur. In the event that the Sudan failed to comply with the terms of the resolution, the Council would consider sanctions against the Government.

Despite the worsening security and humanitarian situation, particularly the growing insecurity and violence in Darfur, repeated ceasefire breaches and the appearance of new rebel groups, progress continued to be made in the peace talks. On 19 November, the Government and SPLM/A signed the "Declaration on the conclusion of IGAD negotiations on peace in the Sudan" during the Security Council's Meeting in Nairobi, Kenya. The Declaration and the six protocols referred to in the Nairobi Declaration of 5 June constituted the core Peace Agreement and marked an important step towards the finaliza-tion of a comprehensive peace agreement, which the parties agreed to complete by the end of the year. The Council welcomed the signing of the Declaration and pledged to assist the people of the Sudan, upon the signing of a comprehensive agreement, to establish a united and prosperous nation. It also mentioned its readiness to establish a UN peace support operation to support implementation of the agreement.

On 31 December, the Government of the Sudan and SPLA initialled the last two agreements, which set the stage for the official signing, scheduled for early 2005, of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, the culmination of negotiations over two and a half years of work since the signing of the Machakos Protocol.

Outbreak of crisis in Darfur

The EU, in statements forwarded to the Security Council on 12 January [S/2004/44] and 26 February [S/2004/177], expressed concern about the situation in Darfur, and called on the Government and SPLM/A to respect the September 2003 ceasefire agreement. It remarked that the scale of the humanitarian crisis was escalating, with more than 700,000 internally displaced persons needing urgent assistance. The EU called on the Government to grant the United Nations and other relief organizations full access to all areas of Darfur, to put an end to the Janjaweed atrocities and to ensure that the perpetrators were brought to justice. It called on rebel groups operating in the Darfur region to commit themselves to providing safe passage for relief agencies. It also urged the parties to the conflict to agree to an immediate ceasefire and hold peace talks.

The United Nations Emergency Relief Coordinator, Jan Egeland, reported that, since the fighting started between rebel groups, militias and the Government months earlier, the United Nations had received reports of systematic raids against civilian populations, including burning and looting of villages, large-scale killings and abductions. Humanitarian agencies had also been targeted, with their staff being abducted and relief trucks looted. He announced on 10 February [AFR/830-IHA/861] that Sudan's President, Omer Hassan Ahmed Al Bashir, had promised to allow aid workers access to the nearly 3 million suffering civilians in Darfur, who were still without essential aid. UN agencies estimated that they had been able to reach only 15 per cent of those in need. Some 110,000 had also fled to Chad in the past three months, in addition to the 700,000 displaced.

N'Djamena Humanitarian Ceasefire Agreement and follow-up

On 31 March, during ceasefire talks on Darfur held in N'Djamena, Chad, the Secretary-General issued a statement [SG/SM/9238-AFR/877] expressing dismay over the casualties and serious human rights violations in Darfur. He welcomed the efforts of President Idriss Derby of Chad, the Government of the Sudan, the parties to the conflict and the international community to achieve a cessation of hostilities and ultimately a long-term solution to the conflict. He said that the fighting had to stop and encouraged the parties to work towards an effective humanitarian ceasefire, which would provide unimpeded access to all those in need.

The Security Council President, in a 2 April press statement [SC/8050-AFR/883], said that Council members welcomed the ongoing negotiations in N'Djamena, with the support of the United Nations, the EU and the United States, and called on the Government of the Sudan and opposition groups to conclude a humanitarian ceasefire and to reach a political settlement to the dispute.

On 8 April [SG/SM/9250-AFR/898], the Government of the Sudan, SPLM/A and JEM signed the N'Djamena Humanitarian Ceasefire Agreement. Welcoming that development, the Secretary-General expressed the hope that it would result in an immediate cessation of hostilities and an end to attacks against civilians, as well as full humanitarian access to all people in need of assistance and protection.

The EU, in a 15 April statement of its Presidency [S/2004/337] welcoming the agreement, called on all parties to scrupulously observe and respect its rules, and on the Sudanese Government to fulfil its commitment to control the Janjaweed forces.

On 25 May [S/2004/425], the Sudan informed the Security Council President that, as of 24 May, it would grant entry visas to all humanitarian workers within 48 hours, suspend travel permit procedures to Darfur, and facilitate the entry and clearance of equipment to be used for humanitarian purposes. The Government had appealed to the AU for the expeditious deployment of ceasefire observers, and to the population to return to their villages, with a reaffirmation of its commitment to provide them security and protection.

The EU, on 26 May [S/2004/445], welcomed the Sudan's decision to lift restrictions on humanitarian agency workers travelling to Darfur. It called on the Government to condemn the actions of the Janjaweed militias in Darfur and to bring them under control. It welcomed the establishment by the Government of a Commission of Inquiry to investigate human rights violations by armed groups in Darfur and expected swift action to be taken on its findings. The EU supported the work of the AU to establish a ceasefire commission and monitoring mechanism for the Darfur region.

Meanwhile, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) sent two missions (5-15 April and 21 April-2 May) to the region in response to reports of alleged human rights violations. In its 7 May report to the Commission on Human Rights [E/CN.4/2005/3] (see p. 803), OHCHR recommended, among other things, the establishment of an international commission of inquiry.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 25 May [meeting 4978], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/18 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses its grave concern over the deteriorating humanitarian and human rights situation in the Darfur region of the Sudan. Noting that thousands have been killed and that hundreds of thousands of people are at risk of dying in the coming months, the Council emphasizes the need for immediate humanitarian access to the vulnerable population.

The Council also expresses its deep concern at the continuing reports of large-scale violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law in Darfur, including indiscriminate attacks on civilians, sexual violence, forced displacement and acts of violence, especially those with an ethnic dimension, and demands that those responsible be held accountable. The Council strongly condemns these acts which jeopardize a peaceful solution of the crisis, stresses that all parties to the N'Djamena humanitarian ceasefire agreement have committed themselves to refraining from any act of violence or any other abuse against civilian populations, in particular women and children, and that the Government of the Sudan has also committed itself to neutralizing the armed Janjaweed militias, and urges all parties to take the necessary steps to put an end to violations of human rights and international humanitarian law. In this regard, the Council takes note of the recommendations of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in his report of 7 May 2004.

The Council reiterates its call upon the parties to ensure the protection of civilians and to facilitate humanitarian access to the affected population. In that regard, the Council emphasizes the need for the Government of the Sudan to facilitate the voluntary and safe return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes, and to provide protection for them, and also calls upon all parties, including opposition groups, to support these objectives. The Council calls upon all parties, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 1502 (2003) of 26 August 2003, to allow full unimpeded access by humanitarian personnel to all people in need of assistance, and to make available, as far as possible, all necessary facilities for their operations, and to promote the safety, security and freedom of movement of humanitarian personnel and their assets.

The Council, while welcoming the ceasefire agreement signed on 8 April 2004 in N'Djamena emphasizes the urgent need for all parties to observe the ceasefire and to take immediate measures to end the violence, and calls upon the Government of the Sudan to respect its commitments to ensure that the Janjaweed militias are neutralized and disarmed. Stressing that a ceasefire commission with international representation is a central component of the 8 April agreement, the Council expresses its full and active support for the efforts of the African Union to establish the ceasefire commission and protection units, and calls upon the opposition groups and the Government of the Sudan to facilitate the immediate deployment of monitors in Darfur and to ensure their free movement throughout Darfur. The Council also calls upon Member States to provide generous support for the efforts of the African Union.

The Council welcomes the announcement by the Government of the Sudan that it will issue visas to all humanitarian workers within 48 hours of application, eliminate the need for travel permits, and facilitate the entrance and clearance of equipment imported for humanitarian purposes. The Council acknowledges the appointment of a fact-finding commission by presidential decree. The Council, however, is seriously concerned about continued logistical impediments prohibiting a rapid response in the face of a stark and mounting crisis and calls upon the Government to fulfil its announced commitment to cooperate fully and expeditiously with humanitarian efforts to provide assistance to the imperiled populations of Darfur, noting with particular concern that the humanitarian challenge will be aggravated by the imminent onset of the rainy season.

The Council calls upon the international community to respond rapidly and effectively to the consolidated appeal for Darfur.

The Council observes with distress the prolonged absence of an accredited Resident Coordinator/Humanitarian Coordinator and affirms the need for the immediate appointment and appropriate accreditation of a permanent Resident Coordinator/Humanitarian Coordinator to ensure daily coordination in order to address impediments to humanitarian access brought to the attention of the United Nations by the international aid community.

The Council encourages the parties to step up their efforts to reach a political settlement to their dispute in the interest of the unity and sovereignty of the Sudan.

The Council requests that the Secretary-General keep it informed of the humanitarian and human rights crisis as it unfolds, and, as necessary, to make recommendations.

Developments in Sudan's peace process

Naivasha protocols

After months of negotiations, the Government of the Sudan and SPLM/A reached agreement on the remaining three protocols on power-sharing; the areas of the Nuba Mountains (Southern Kordofan) and Blue Nile; and Abyei, the Secretary-General reported [S/2004/453]. They completed a series of six agreements, concluded over two years since the signature of the first protocol in Machakos, Kenya, in July 2002, followed by protocols on security arrangements in September 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 257], and on wealth-sharing in January 2004.

In a 26 May statement [SG/SM/9332-AFR/946], the Secretary-General said that he had been following the peace talks on the Sudan, facilitated by the Inter-Governmental Authority on Development (IGAD), and had been in touch with Sudan's President, Hassan Al-Bashir, and the Chairman of SPLM/A, John Garang. He was heartened to learn that the parties had initialled the three protocols, in Naivasha, Kenya, and urged them to reach agreement on the remaining issues, especially the ceasefire arrangements, the implementation modalities and international guarantees for a future comprehensive peace agreement. He also called on the Government and the armed opposition in Darfur to seize the momentum created in Naivasha to reach a political solution in western Sudan.

The EU, on 2 June [S/2004/466], welcomed the signing of the three protocols as a significant step towards lasting peace in southern Sudan, and urged the parties to sustain the momentum towards peace and to begin a discussion on a comprehensive peace agreement. At the same time, it reiterated its concern at the humanitarian crisis unfolding in Darfur and called on the Government and all parties to show a similar commitment to bring peace and stability to that region.

Nairobi Declaration. On 5 June [S/2004/490], the Government and SPLM/A signed in Nairobi, Kenya, a Declaration confirming their agreement on the six peace protocols. By that Declaration, the Government and SPLM/A recommitted themselves to their obligations contained in the six protocols agreed to since the relaunching of the IGAD peace process in Machakos in July 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 217], the Secretary-General said in a later report on the Sudan [S/2004/763]. They also committed themselves to completing the final stages of peace negotiations and appealed to the international community to support them during the implementation period.

UN peace support

Report of Secretary-General (June). On 3 June [S/2004/453], the Secretary-General reported on the situation in the Sudan, in response to Security Council presidential statement S/PRST/2003/16 [YUN 2003, p. 257], which had requested him to initiate preparatory work on the nature of UN support for the implementation of a comprehensive peace agreement between the Government and SPLM/A.

The Secretary-General declared that, by completing a series of framework protocols, the Government of the Sudan and SPLM/A were poised to put an end to the long war that had defied attempts by various external actors, including neighbouring States, donors and other States, and by the parties themselves to bring it to an end. It was up to the parties to conclude negotiations and sign a comprehensive peace agreement. Certain that the international community and the UN operation would face difficult times in assisting and working with the parties through the interim periods of peace implementation, the Secretary-General had established an Interdepartmental Task Force (ITF) on the Sudan to develop a common UN strategy to support implementation of the final agreement and had sent an assessment mission to the Sudan and Kenya from 27 November to 16 December 2003. Since April 2004, a group of UN technical experts had been in the Sudan working with the country team to develop further a common logistics and support strategy for the peace implementation phase. That team would be augmented immediately with additional support staff and subsumed into a UN advance team, which the Secretary-General would propose to the Council for approval. The advance team would ensure cohesive preparations for the Organization's role in post-conflict Sudan and establish contacts and working relationships with the parties on the ground; it would include up to 25 military liaison officers and support elements. The advance team would be subsequently absorbed into a full mission should the Council so decide.

The Secretary-General believed that the Sudan was at a historic juncture that represented the best chance to bring to a close one of Africa's most intractable wars. As the Government and SPLM/A were pledging themselves to peace, however, fighting continued to rage in parts of the country. Noting that the situation in Darfur would make a Sudanese peace agreement much harder to implement, he called on the Government and SPLM/A to use their influence to bring a halt to the fighting, since a meaningful agreement on Darfur was fundamental to the success of a UN role in the Sudan. The Secretary-General urged the parties to that conflict to conclude a political agreement without delay. He recommended that the Council support the creation of an advance team for an initial period of three months.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 11 June [meeting 4988], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1547(2004). The draft [S/2004/473] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Welcoming the signing of the declaration on 5 June 2004 in Nairobi, in which the parties confirmed their agreement to the six protocols signed between the Government of the Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army and reconfirmed their commitment to completing the remaining stages of negotiations,

Commending the work and continued support of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, in particular, the Government of Kenya as Chair of the Subcommittee on the Sudan, in facilitating the peace talks, and recognizing the efforts of the Civilian Protection Monitoring Team, the Joint Military Commission in the Nuba Mountains and the Verification and Monitoring Team in support of the peace process, and expressing the hope that the Intergovernmental Authority will continue to play a vital role during the transitional period,

Reaffirming its support for the Machakos Protocol of 20 July 2002 and subsequent agreements based on that Protocol, Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty, independence and unity of the Sudan,

Recalling the statements by its President of 10 October 2003 and 25 May 2004,

Condemning all acts of violence and violations of human rights and international humanitarian law by all parties, and expressing its utmost concern at the consequences of the prolonged conflict for the civilian population of the Sudan, including women, children, refugees and internally displaced persons,

Urging the two parties involved to conclude speedily a comprehensive peace agreement, and believing that the progress now being made in the Naivasha negotiation process will contribute to improved stability and peace in the Sudan,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 3 June 2004,

1. Welcomes the proposal of the Secretary-General to establish, for an initial period of three months and under the authority of a special representative of the Secretary-General, a United Nations advance team in the Sudan as a special political mission dedicated to preparation for the international monitoring foreseen in the Framework Agreement on Security Arrangements during the Interim Period, signed in Naivasha, Kenya, on 25 September 2003, to facilitate contacts with the parties concerned and to prepare for the introduction of a peace support operation following the signing of a comprehensive peace agreement;

2. Endorses the proposals of the Secretary-General for the staffing of the advance team, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to conclude all necessary agreements with the Government of the Sudan as expeditiously as possible;

3. Declares its readiness to consider establishing a United Nations peace support operation to support the implementation of a comprehensive peace agreement, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council his recommendations for the size, structure and mandate of this operation as soon as possible after the signing of a comprehensive peace agreement;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, pending the signing of a comprehensive peace agreement, to take the necessary preparatory steps, including, in particular, pre-positioning the most critical logistical and personnel requirements to facilitate the rapid deployment of the above-mentioned possible operation, principally to assist the parties in monitoring and verifying compliance with the terms of a comprehensive peace agreement as well as to prepare for the role of the Organization during the transitional period in the Sudan;

5. Underlines the need for an effective public information capacity, including through local and national radio, television and newspaper channels, in order to promote an understanding of the peace process and the role a United Nations peace support operation will play among local communities and the parties;

6. Endorses the conclusions of the Secretary-General with regard to the situation in the Sudan, in particular in Darfur and the Upper Nile, as set out in paragraph 22 of his report, calls upon the parties to use their influence to bring an immediate halt to the fighting in the Darfur region, in the Upper Nile and elsewhere, urges the parties to the ceasefire agreement signed in N'Djamena on 8 April 2004 to conclude a political agreement without delay, welcomes the efforts of the African Union to that end, and calls upon the international community to be prepared for constant engagement, including extensive funding in support of peace in the Sudan;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to keep it informed of developments in the Sudan, particularly on the Naivasha negotiation process, the implementation of the peace process and the execution by the advance team of its mandate, and to submit a report to the Council no later than three months after the adoption of the present resolution;

8. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

The Sudan, in an 11 June letter [S/2004/490], transmitted to the Council a statement, which its Permanent Representative to the United Nations was not allowed to deliver during the Council's consideration on that date of the draft resolution on the Sudan. In a 17 June reply [S/2004/498], the Council President recalled his discussions with the Sudan on the issue of its desire to address the Council and proposed convening a meeting to allow the Sudan to fully express its views on matters of common interest between it and the Council.

Appointment. On 17 June [S/2004/503], the Secretary-General informed the Council that he would appoint Jan Pronk (Netherlands) as his Special Representative for the Sudan and head of the peace support operation, which might be authorized by the Council at the conclusion of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement between the Sudan and SPLM/A. The Council, on 18 June [S/2004/504], took note of his intention.

Security Council action. On 30 July, the Council, in resolution 1556(2004) (see p. 240) extended the special political mission set out in the foregoing resolution for an additional 90 days, to 10 December, and requested the Secretary-General to incorporate into the mission contingency planning for Darfur.

Further developments in the Darfur situation

Sudan's emergency measures. The Sudan informed the Security Council of the measures decreed by President Al-Bashir on 18 June [S/2004/513] to alleviate the situation in Darfur. They included the declaration of a general mobilization of the State apparatuses, with a view to consolidating security, pursuing and disarming outlawed groups, including the Janjaweed, Tora Bora and Peshmerga, and bringing them to justice, and stopping groups from crossing the borders and threatening the stability of neighbouring Chad; establishment by the judiciary in Darfur of special courts to prosecute bandits and criminals; the deployment of police forces to protect municipalities so that citizens could return to their villages; and provision of basic services and humanitarian assistance. The Sudan called on all citizens, including those in Darfur, to attend a conference that would promote national dialogue to bring about national reconciliation.

UN/Sudan 3 July agreement. The Secretary-General visited the Sudan and Chad from 29 June to 3 July, meeting with his senior advisers, Sudanese Cabinet ministers, and United States Secretary of State Colin Powell, in Khartoum; he later visited a number of camps for internally displaced persons in Darfur [SG/T/2412]. On 3 July [S/2004/635], at the conclusion of the visit, the Government of the Sudan and the United Nations issued a joint communiqué in which they expressed concern about the grave situation in the Darfur region, and the number and severity of the conditions of the internally displaced in Darfur and refugees in Chad. They were aware of the need to stop the attacks on the targeted civilian population in Darfur, particularly by the Janjaweed and other outlaw armed groups, and to ensure security in the region consistent with the N'Djamena Humanitarian Ceasefire Agreement (see p. 235).

The United Nations pledged to help alleviate the humanitarian needs of the affected population in Darfur and Sudanese refugees in Chad, to assist in the quick deployment of AU ceasefire monitors and to continue preparations for a possible peacekeeping role when agreements were reached.

The Sudan committed itself to taking a number of measures to halt restrictions on humanitarian work in Darfur, to end impunity for human rights abuses, investigate all cases of violations and to bring those accused to justice without delay. It pledged to deploy a strong police force and ensure that no militias were present in all areas surrounding the camps of displaced persons. It would immediately start disarming the Janjaweed and other armed outlaw groups. Finally, it would resume political talks on Darfur to reach a comprehensive solution acceptable to all parties.

The Government and the United Nations agreed to form a high-level Joint Implementation Mechanism, led by the Foreign Minister of the Sudan and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, to follow and appraise developments and report on the implementation of their agreement.

AU and LAS meetings. The AU Peace and Security Council, in a communiqué issued at its twelfth meeting at ministerial level (Addis Ababa, 4 July) [S/2004/561], noted that, although the crisis in Darfur was grave, the situation could not be defined as genocide but should be addressed with urgency to avoid further escalation. It urged the Sudan to follow through on the commitments made on 3 July (above), and that all parties refrain from any further actions that could constitute violations of all the agreements signed so far. It stressed that the AU should continue to lead efforts to address the crisis in Darfur, supported by the international community. It welcomed the establishment of the Ceasefire Commission (CFC) in Al Fasher on 9 June, and the partial deployment of AU military observers in the Darfur region, and urged CFC to expedite the process, including the deployment of protection elements within the framework of the 28 May Agreement on the Establishment of the CFC and Deployment of Observers. The Council also welcomed the convening of the first meeting (N'Djamena, 2 July) of the Joint Commission provided for in the Humanitarian Ceasefire Agreement, and urged the Sudanese parties to participate in the meeting scheduled for 15 July to discuss political issues, with a view to reaching a comprehensive agreement. It expressed concern over the impact of the Darfur conflict on the stability of Chad and the rest of the region, and encouraged the Sudan and Chad to enhance security along their common border.

The third ordinary session of the AU Assembly of heads of State and Government (Addis Ababa, 6-8 July), in a decision on Darfur, decided to increase the number of AU observers to a minimum of 80 and to deploy the protection force immediately. It agreed that, under AU monitoring, the rebel forces should be cantoned at mutually agreed sites and the militias disarmed by the Sudanese Government. It further agreed that the political dialogue should resume as scheduled on 15 July, with a view to reaching a political agreement that would create conditions for convening an all-party conference as provided for in the N'Djamena Humanitarian Ceasefire Agreement, with the participation of the rebel movements. The Assembly acknowledged the agreement signed between the Sudan and the United Nations, which it described as consistent with the AU peace efforts.

At its thirteenth meeting (Addis Ababa, 27 July) [S/2004/603], the AU Peace and Security Council underlined the need to implement the AU Assembly decision on Darfur (see p. 239), which provided a framework for addressing the crisis. The Council welcomed the meeting of the parties (Addis Ababa, 15 July) but regretted the failure of SPLM/A and JEM leadership to attend. It called on the parties to be represented at the highest level at the next round of political talks aimed at finding a lasting solution to the Darfur conflict. The Council took note of the progress in deploying military observers and the protection force, and requested the CFC chairperson to prepare a comprehensive plan for enhancing the effectiveness of the AU Mission, including the possibility of transforming it into a full-fledged peacekeeping mission with the requisite mandate and size to ensure implementation of the Humanitarian Ceasefire Agreement, with emphasis on the disarmament of the Janjaweed, the protection of the civilian population and the facilitation of delivery of humanitarian aid.

On 8 August [S/2004/674], the Ministerial Council of the League of Arab States, at its extraordinary session, called on the Security Council to allow the Sudanese Government sufficient time to implement the undertakings and commitments contained in the joint communique signed with the United Nations and the 5 August Darfur Plan of Action (see p. 242) issued by its Foreign Minister and the Secretary-General's Special Representative. It rejected any suggestion of coercive military intervention in the region or the imposition of sanction on the Sudan and offered support for the return of emigrants and refugees and full Arab support to the AU in its efforts to resolve the crisis in Darfur.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

Expressing its determination to do everything possible to halt a humanitarian catastrophe, including by taking further action if required,

Determining that the situation in the Sudan constitutes a threat to international peace and security and to stability in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Calls upon the Government of the Sudan to fulfil immediately all of the commitments it made in the joint communiqué of 3 July 2004, including particularly by facilitating international relief for the humanitarian disaster by means of a moratorium on all restrictions that might hinder the provision of humanitarian assistance and access to the affected populations, by advancing independent investigation in cooperation with the United Nations of violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, by the establishment of credible security conditions for the protection of the civilian population and humanitarian actors, and by the resumption of political talks with dissident groups from the Darfur region, specifically the Justice and Equality Movement and the Sudan Liberation Movement and Sudan Liberation Army on Darfur;

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 1556(2004):

In favour: Algeria, Angola, Benin, Brazil, Chile, France, Germany, Philippines, Romania, Russian Federation, Spain, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: None.

Abstaining: China, Pakistan.

China, speaking before the vote, said that the Government of the Sudan bore primary responsibility for resolving the Darfur situation and should be assisted by the international community in that effort. The Council should listen to the AU, and its actions should be conducive to securing the cooperation of the Sudanese Government. The draft resolution included mandatory measures against the Government, which could not be helpful in resolving the situation and might even complicate it.

After the vote, the United States said that responsibility for the disaster lay squarely with the Government of the Sudan. The resolution, in stern and unambiguous terms, put the Government on notice that it had to fulfil its commitments in the 3 July UN/Sudan communiqué (see p. 239). It should know that serious measures (international sanctions) were looming if it refused to do so. The purpose of the resolution was to relieve the suffering in Darfur, not to punish the Sudan. The choice was up to the Government.

Pakistan did not believe that the threat or imposition of sanctions was advisable and trusted that the Council would not take such further measures. Pakistan looked forward to the Secretary-General's report to be issued in 30 days, which it hoped would confirm that the Sudanese Government and the rebel groups were complying with their commitments and obligations.

On the same day [S/2004/639], the EU, expressing support for resolution 1556(2004), supported the call on the Sudan to fulfil all the commitments it made on 3 July and reiterated its determination to continue to play an active role in the situation by sending an assessment team to the region to recommend how best to further support the AU Observer Mission, including the protection force.

Implementation of resolution 1556(2004)

Darfur Plan of Action. The Foreign Minister of the Sudan, Mustafa Osman Ismail, acting on behalf of his Government, and Jan Pronk, Special Representative of the Secretary-General, signed on 5 August the Darfur Plan of Action [S/2004/636]. Drawn up following discussions at the second meeting of the Joint Implementation Mechanism (2 August), the Plan's objective was to create conditions for the restoration of peace, security and development in Darfur. To that end, the Sudan committed itself to indicating its progress in complying with Security Council resolution 1556(2004) (see p. 240) by the original deadline of 30 August, and with its 3 July commitments.

According to the Plan, the Sudan would identify parts of Darfur that could be made secure and safe within 30 days and its police forces would provide secure routes to and between those areas. All offensive military operations by the Government's armed forces in those areas would cease immediately, including any offensive actions against rebel groups. The armed forces would be redeployed so that they were not in contact with the camps and civilians. In accordance with the ceasefire agreement, the Government would ask the rebel groups participating in the Darfur peace talks immediately to cease offensive military operations in the proposed safe areas and to lay down their weapons as part of a disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme. The Government would identify and declare those militias over whom it had influence and instruct them to cease their activities and lay down their weapons. Observance of those commitments would be monitored by the Ceasefire Commission. The Government would make a declaration of commitment to start the Darfur peace talks as soon as possible in a venue proposed by the AU, and it expected the Council and the AU to pressure the rebels to do likewise. It would seek financial and logistic support from the AU, the League of Arab States and other partners. The Government would sign an agreement with the International Organization for Migration to oversee and assist in the voluntary return of internally displaced persons to their homes, and confirmed its policy of no involuntary return. It would hold a conference of local leaders to seek their help in building confidence and contributing to security, administration and in resolving disputes, and start talks with community leaders and others to establish a commission for rehabilitation, recovery, development and reconciliation in Darfur. With the support of the international community, the Government would improve the humanitarian situation in Darfur, including by extending the fast-track procedure for access until July 2005.

Communications. The Sudan, responding on 17 August [S/2004/671] to resolution 1556(2004), said that it was proceeding with the implementation of the resolution's provisions on humanitarian assistance, disarmament, security and protection of human rights, and a political settlement. Specifically, it had taken measures to disarm the militias, but warned of the enormity of the task, saying that the entire process depended on a comprehensive settlement. It had also mobilized all its resources to provide security for the voluntary return of emigrants to their villages and to provide for their humanitarian needs in those villages. It had responded to the AU's call for negotiations with the rebels in Abuja, Nigeria, on 23 August. Commenting on resolution 1556(2004), the Sudan drew attention to: the challenge of the severe shortage of humanitarian assistance supplies; its position that the rebel movements bore responsibility for the deteriorating situation in Darfur and its hope that the Council would exert pressure on them to put a stop to their activities in the emigrant and refugee camps; the need for the Council to affirm unconditionally its respect for the Sudan's sovereignty, unity, territorial integrity and independence; the targeting of the Sudan's police and civilian security agencies and the urgency for the international community to pressure the rebels to respect the ceasefire; and Eritrea's role in undermining stability in the region. The Sudan affirmed its willingness to cooperate with the United Nations and the international community in addressing the humanitarian situation and its desire to achieve a political settlement of the Darfur conflict.

On 31 August [S/2004/701], the Sudan forwarded to the Council a list of measures it had taken to comply with the Darfur Plan of Action and with resolution 1556(2004) in the areas of relief assistance, health services, human rights, security, reining in the militias, the voluntary repatriation of internally displaced persons, political negotiations and participation in them of tribal leaders from Darfur, and the presence of AU monitors in the Sudan.

Report of Secretary-General (August). In response to resolution 1556(2004), the Secretary-General, on 30 August [S/2004/703], reported on the Sudan's progress in fulfilling its terms. He stated that the Joint Implementation Mechanism, which had held meetings on 15 July and 2, 12 and 19 August, sent a joint verification mission to Darfur from 26 to 28 July, which concluded that no forced returns had been observed in those areas it visited, and security in camps for internally displaced persons had improved. However, there was a clear need to accelerate implementation of the Government's commitments in other areas. The Government had not taken any measures to disarm the Janjaweed and other armed outlaw groups. It agreed that the Government should lay out a road map indicating actions to be taken within 30 days, covering certain regions and selected militias over which it had influence, on the understanding that those actions should start the disarmament process. The Government could prove its commitment to the international community by achieving substantial and verifiable progress on the ground within the first 30-day reporting period.

With respect to the Darfur Plan of Action (see p. 242), the Secretary-General reported that, on 15 August, the Government announced the selection of the areas that it would make safe and secure by the end of August, including areas in each of the three States of Darfur, with an estimated 375,000 internally displaced persons, or 30 per cent of the total number (about 1,227,000) in Darfur as at 1 August. On 19 August, it presented to the Joint Implementation Mechanism a list of immediate measures it was taking, including the deployment, from 10 to 20 August, of 2,000 additional police and 100 armed vehicles, and protection for villages within a 20-kilometre radius around the major towns identified. The military would be redeployed to administrative headquarters and garrisons to avoid direct contact with civilians. Internal security of the identified areas would be the responsibility of the police.

As required by the Plan, a conference of local leaders was held (Khartoum, 11-12 August) to review draft legislation on the native administration of the three Darfur States. It also discussed social reconciliation and the role of the traditional administration in the disarmament process. All major tribes and interests of both pastoralists and nomads were represented. The Native Administration Law for the Darfur States was adopted on 19 August by presidential order, with provisions on administrative, security, judicial, executive and other issues.

The most critical commitment still to be implemented related to the armed militias who continued to pose a serious threat to the civilian population. Despite various commitments to disarm them, the Government had stated repeatedly that it had no control over the militias accused of attacking civilians and committing other atrocities in Darfur. However, during discussions in the Joint Implementation Mechanism, the Government did accept the UN position that some militias were under its influence and should be identified and instructed to lay down their weapons, and that they were not limited to those previously incorporated into the Popular Defence Forces, but included outside militias that were later linked with those forces.

While the disarming of members of the Popular Defence Forces had begun in several locations, militia activities were reported in all three States of Darfur, with villages wantonly attacked, looted and destroyed and over 50 people killed. The Government provided no evidence that it had identified any militias outside the Popular Defence Forces or had issued instructions to the leaders of militias under its influence to disarm. A comprehensive demobilization, disarmament and reintegration programme was urgently needed, for which the Government should accept international assistance if it was unable to stop the attacks and protect civilians.

The capacity of humanitarian agencies on the ground continued to increase. The United Nations and the Red Cross and Red Crescent missions were already operating in Darfur, and 10 other organizations were about to start operations. The number of displaced persons increased by about 200,000 to more than 1.2 million, and that of host communities and others requiring relief by more than 60,000. Total UN funding requirements in response to the Darfur crisis was estimated at $531 million.

The United Nations collaborated with the AU to produce a comprehensive plan for an expanded AU mission in Darfur (AUMIS), to include logistical support and budgetary requirements and support to the AU in managing and directing a complicated field operation. A UN assessment team also found a need for a substantial civilian police component to assist with monitoring and capacity-building of the national police.

The Secretary-General concluded that, after 18 months of conflict and 30 days after the adoption of resolution 1556(2004), the Government had been unable to resolve the crisis in Darfur and had not met some of its core commitments. However, the search for a political solution was under way in Abuja, through a UN-supported AU mediation effort. The Secretary-General believed that a substantially increased international presence in Darfur was required as quickly as possible to monitor the implementation of the parties' commitments more effectively. The crisis in Darfur could not be seen in isolation from the search for a comprehensive peace in the Sudan. While efforts were being made to find a solution to the Darfur crisis, simultaneous efforts were required promptly to restart and conclude the IGAD-led peace talks (see p. 234). However, any effort to make the conclusion of the IGAD process conditional on an end to the crisis in Darfur would be counter-productive, with consequences that could further destabilize the country and the region.

Security Council consideration. At the Security Council's consideration of the Secretary-General's report, on 2 September [meeting 5027], the Special Representative affirmed that the United Nations had maintained pressure on the Sudanese Government to show progress in improving security, through the framework of the Joint Implementation Mechanism. The Government had made some progress in that regard in the 30-day initial period but had not met its commitments in two key areas: stopping attacks against civilians by militias and disarming them; and no concrete steps had been taken to bring to justice any of the militia leaders or the perpetrators of the attacks or even to identify them. There was thus distrust among the displaced due to their perception that the Government was behind the terror and trauma they had experienced. The Special Representative, noting that negotiations towards a political solution were under way in Abuja, urged the parties to redouble their efforts and seek assistance from the AU and UN facilitators and mediators. He further urged that the IGAD peace talks be resumed concurrently with those negotiations.

Communication. Australia, Canada and New Zealand, in a joint letter of 10 September [S/2004/739], agreed with the Special Representative that pressure be maintained on the Government of the Sudan to carry out its commitments. They urged the Council to support the AU, including the deployment of a significantly expanded AU mission and to establish clear benchmarks and time lines for actions expected of the Government with regard to disarming the Janjaweed; identifying those groups over which the Government had influence; apprehending and prosecuting those suspected of inciting and carrying out war crimes and crimes against humanity; and continuing to remove barriers to access by humanitarian and human rights monitors. They called on the Secretary-General to establish an impartial commission of experts to investigate allegations of war crimes and crimes against humanity, especially of sexual violence.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 18 September [meeting 5040], the Security Council adopted resolution 1564(2004) by vote (11-0-4). The draft [S/2004/744] was submitted by Germany, Romania, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 1556(2004) of 30 July 2004, the statement by its President of 25 May 2004, its resolution 1547(2004) of 11 June 2004 and resolution 1502 (2003) of 26 August 2003, and taking into account the Plan of Action agreed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Sudan and the Government of the Sudan,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 30 August 2004 and the progress achieved on humanitarian access, and expressing concern that paragraphs 59 to 67 indicate that the Government of the Sudan has not fulfilled the entirety of its commitments under resolution 1556(2004) and taking into account the need to foster and restore the confidence of vulnerable populations and to improve radically the overall security environment in Darfur; and welcoming the recommendations contained in the report, particularly those concerning the desirability of a substantially increased presence of the African Union mission in the Darfur region of the Sudan,

Welcoming also the leadership role and the engagement of the African Union in addressing the situation in Darfur,

Welcoming further the letter dated 6 September 2004 to the President of the Security Council from the Chairman of the African Union, the President of the Federal Republic of Nigeria, Mr. Olusegun Obasanjo, including his appeal for international support for the extension of the African Union mission in Darfur,

Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty, unity, territorial integrity and independence of the Sudan, as consistent with the Machakos Protocol of 20 July 2002 and subsequent agreements based thereon, as agreed to by the Government of the Sudan,

Recalling the joint communiqué of 3 July 2004 issued by the Government of the Sudan and the Secretary-General, and recognizing the efforts undertaken by the Joint Implementation Mechanism and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to advance the aims of the communiqué and the requirements of resolution 1556(2004),

Welcoming the fact that the Government of the Sudan has taken a number of steps to lift administrative obstructions to the delivery of humanitarian relief, which has resulted in access for an increased number of humanitarian personnel in Darfur, as well as international human rights non-governmental institutions, and recognizing that the Government of the Sudan has broadened its cooperation with United Nations humanitarian agencies and their partners,

Urging the Government of the Sudan and the rebel groups to facilitate this humanitarian relief by allowing unfettered access for humanitarian supplies and workers, including across the borders of the Sudan with Chad and Libya by land and by air as may be required,

Expressing grave concern at the lack of progress with regard to security and the protection of civilians, disarmament of the Janjaweed militias and the identification and bringing to justice of the Janjaweed leaders responsible for violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in Darfur,

Recalling that the Government of the Sudan bears the primary responsibility to protect its population within its territory, to respect human rights and to maintain law and order, and that all parties are obliged to respect international humanitarian law,

Stressing that the Sudanese rebel groups, particularly the Justice and Equality Movement and the Sudan Liberation Movement/Army, must also take all necessary steps to respect international humanitarian and human rights law,

Emphasizing that the ultimate resolution of the crisis in Darfur must include the safe and voluntary return of internally displaced persons and refugees to their original homes, and noting in that regard the memorandum of understanding of 21 August 2004 between the Government of the Sudan and the International Organization for Migration,

Expressing its determination to do everything possible to end the suffering of the people of Darfur;

Determining that the situation in the Sudan constitutes a threat to international peace and security and to stability in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Declares its grave concern that the Government of the Sudan has not fully met its obligations noted in resolution 1556(2004) and the joint communiqué of 3 July 2004 with the Secretary-General to improve, as expected by the Security Council, the security of the civilian population of Darfur in the face of continued depredations, and deplores the recent ceasefire violations by all parties, in particular the reports by the Ceasefire Commission of the Government of the Sudan's helicopter assaults and Janjaweed attacks on Yassin, Hashaba and Gallab villages on 26 August 2004;

2. Welcomes and supports the intention of the African Union to enhance and augment its monitoring mission in the Darfur region of the Sudan, and encourages the undertaking of proactive monitoring;

3. Urges Member States to support the African Union in these efforts, including by providing all equipment, logistical, financial, material and other resources necessary to support the rapid expansion of the African Union mission and by supporting the efforts of the African Union aimed at a peaceful conclusion of the crisis and the protection of the welfare of the people of Darfur, welcomes the Government of the Sudan's request to the African Union to increase its monitoring presence in Darfur in its letter dated 9 September 2004 to the Council, and urges the Government of the Sudan to take all steps necessary to follow through with this commitment and to cooperate fully with the African Union to ensure a secure and stable environment;

4. Calls upon the Government of the Sudan and the rebel groups, particularly the Justice and Equality Movement and the Sudan Liberation Movement/Army, to work together under the auspices of the African Union to reach a political solution in the negotiations currently being held in Abuja under the leadership of President Obasanjo, notes the progress made to date, urges the parties to the negotiations to sign and implement the humanitarian agreement immediately and to conclude a protocol on security issues as soon as possible, and underscores and supports the role of the African Union in monitoring the implementation of all such agreements reached;

5. Urges the Government of the Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement to conclude a comprehensive peace accord expeditiously as a critical step towards the development of a peaceful and prosperous Sudan;

6. Affirms that internally displaced persons, refugees and other vulnerable peoples should be allowed to return to their homes voluntarily, in safety and with dignity, and only when adequate assistance and security are in place;

7. Reiterates its call for the Government of the Sudan to end the climate of impunity in Darfur by identifying and bringing to justice all those responsible, including members of popular defence forces and Janjaweed militias, for the widespread human rights

9. Demands that the Government of the Sudan submit to the African Union mission for verification, documentation, particularly the names of Janjaweed militiamen disarmed and names of those arrested for human rights abuses and violations of international humanitarian law, with regard to its performance relative to resolution 1556(2004) and the N'Djamena ceasefire agreement of 8 April 2004;

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 1564(2004):

In favour: Angola, Benin, Brazil, Chile, France, Germany, Philippines, Romania, Spain, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Algeria, China, Pakistan, Russian Federation.

The countries which abstained in the vote had expressed opposition beforehand to the Council's use of the threat of sanctions as a means of achieving its objectives. After the vote, the Sudan said that it had honoured its commitments and that the Council knew better than anyone that the problem had its roots in the country's economic and social backwardness; it wondered whether sanctions would help resolve the problem. The adoption of the resolution, it said, had torpedoed all negotiations and undermined the AU's efforts.

Further communications. On 22 September [S/2004/751], the Sudan expressed its belief that resolution 1564(2004) had encouraged the rebels to adopt a position that led to the deadlock in the Abuja negotiations and to violations of the ceasefire agreement, as demonstrated by their attacks on villages on 16 and 18 September.

The EU, on 23 September [S/2004/803], welcomed resolution 1564(2004), including its stated preparedness to consider measures, such as sanctions, should the Sudan fail to comply with previous Council demands.

The AU Peace and Security Council, in a communiqué on the situation in Darfur issued at its sixteenth meeting (Addis Ababa, 17 September) [S/2004/755], welcomed the convening in Abuja, since 23 August, of the inter-Sudanese peace talks, and urged the parties (the Government of the Sudan, JEM, SPLM/A) to comply with the 8 April N'Djamena Humanitarian Ceasefire Agreement, cooperate with the AU, remain committed to the negotiation process and work towards a political settlement.

The EU External Relations Council, on 13 September [S/2004/766], issued conclusions on Darfur indicating the EU's intention to take appropriate measures, including sanctions, against the Government of the Sudan if no tangible progress was made in meeting the Security Council demands in resolution 1556(2004), and to increase its humanitarian support as well as support to the AU mission in the Sudan.

On 27 September, the Sudan informed the Security Council President that Darfur rebels raided the village of Ghibaish, in Western State, on 22 September, thus extending their operations to areas outside Darfur and showing a lack of interest in a political settlement [S/2004/762]; that rebel elements attacked the camp for internally displaced persons at Kalma, in Southern Darfur State [S/2004/767]; and that rebels continued to refuse to specify their positions as required under the N'Djamena ceasefire agreement [S/2004/769]. It also informed the Council that a conference on the native administrative system and its role in restoring tranquility, security and peace in Darfur (Al Fasher, North Darfur, 18-19 September), attended by community leaders, tribal chieftains, heads of political parties, civil leaders and representatives of Darfur in the National Assembly, issued a final communiqué and an agreement on resolving the Darfur crisis through dialogue among the people of Darfur within the context of one homeland [S/2004/768]. On 28 September [S/2004/772], the Sudan drew attention to four recent ceasefire violations.

UN Advance Mission in Sudan

The United Nations, as requested by the Security Council in resolution 1547(2004), established, in June, a special political mission, the United Nations Advance Mission in the Sudan (UNAMIS), headed by Jan Pronk (Netherlands) Special Representative for the Sudan. He was supported by two Deputy Special Representatives, who were appointed by the Secretary-General, one of whom would function as Resident Coordinator/Humanitarian Coordinator. Also appointed were the mission's Chief Military Adviser and a chief civilian police adviser. The mission was headquartered in Khartoum, with a liaison office in Nairobi. The international staff would include military liaison and political and civil affairs staff, public information officers and experts in logistics and administration. On 5 August, the Government signed an agreement with the United Nations on the status of the mission and its personnel.

UNAMIS financing

The Secretary-General, on 27 October [A/59/534], submitted proposed resource requirements for UNAMIS from 11 September to 10 December 2004, estimated at $21,008,100 net ($21,789,400 gross). That amount included $998,600 remaining unencumbered from the $16,636,600 approved for the initial phase (11 June-10 September) of the mission.

ACABQ, having reviewed the estimates, recommended in its 11 November report [A/59/569] approval of the full amount.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December [meeting 66], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/59/448/Add.1], adopted resolution 59/58 without vote [agenda item 108].

Estimates in respect of special political missions, good offices and other political initiatives authorized by the General Assembly and/or the Security Council: United Nations advance team in the Sudan

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the estimates in respect of special political missions, good offices and other political initiatives authorized by the General Assembly and/or the Security Council and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Decides to approve the budget for the United Nations advance team in the Sudan for the period from 11 September to 10 December 2004 in the amount of 21,789,400 United States dollars gross (21,008,100 dollars net);

3. Notes that part of the requirements would be met from the unspent balance of 998,600 dollars of the amount already provided for the mission;

4. Decides to approve a charge, against the provision for special political missions appropriated under section 3, Political affairs, of the programme budget for the biennium 2004–2005, in the amount of 3,002,600 dollars, corresponding to the unassigned balance in that provision;

5. Also decides to appropriate, under the procedure provided for in paragraph 11 of annex I to General Assembly resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986, the amount of 17,006,900 dollars under section 3, Political affairs, and 781,300 dollars under section 34, Staff assessment, of the programme budget for the biennium 2004–2005, the amount of 781,300 dollars to be offset by a corresponding amount in the income estimates under income section 1, Income from staff assessment, of the programme budget.

Developments in the peace processes and security situation

Report of Secretary-General (September).

The Secretary-General reported on 28 September [S/2004/763] that the IGAD-led peace process was scheduled to resume in early October and UNAMIS would have to be ready to assist and be in a position to deploy an operation in a timely manner following a final breakthrough and the signing of a comprehensive peace agreement. In that regard, several additional tasks were identified for the mission, including helping the AU to deploy and support an expanded mission in Darfur, establishing four field offices in Darfur and Kassala and enhancing the ability of the advance mission's headquarters to support the new tasks and offices in Darfur. The Secretary-General said that the expanded tasks would require an additional six military officers and six police officers.

Meanwhile, the humanitarian challenge in the Sudan remained enormous as the crisis continued in Darfur, and other parts of the country remained beset by ethnic tensions. The number of vulnerable people in the south requiring immediate assistance in food, health, water and sanitation under Operation Lifeline Sudan was around 3 million. While humanitarian access had improved, government restrictions in southern Blue Nile limited the capacity for humanitarian action. Hostilities linked to oilfield development and militia realignment in and around western Upper Nile, hostile actions by the Ugandan Lord's Resistance Army and intra-ethnic conflict in some areas of Equatoria and in the Shilluk Kingdom earlier in the year led to new displacement and suffering, and access restrictions. Internally displaced persons returning to their home areas were also putting a strain on the humanitarian situation.

The Secretary-General observed that the decision of the Government and SPLM/A to resume negotiations on 7 October in the context of the IGAD-led peace process restored optimism that progress was possible, and he was heartened by the parties' recent positive attitude towards concluding the negotiations as soon as possible. That peace process was central to comprehensive peace in the Sudan, as it addressed the fundamental roots of the conflict in southern Sudan. While the process did not offer a comprehensive solution to the country's problems, the breadth of the agreements reached in the Naivasha protocols (see p. 236) offered a basis for answers to the wider issues of insecurity and conflict. In his view, the current crisis in Darfur was emblematic of that problem. The rebel groups in Darfur were only two of an array of peoples and groups that had complained of systematic marginalization over the course of recent Sudanese history. An agreement between the Government and SPLM/A, he said, would be a catalyst to addressing the Darfur crisis and the wider problems of economic and political marginalization.

Security Council consideration. The Security Council, during its consideration of the Secretary-General's report on 5 October [meeting 5050], was told by the Special Representative that, despite the Government's pledges to take action, there was no systematic improvement in people's security in the Sudan and no progress on ending impunity. Ceasefire breaches also continued. Pressure had to be put on the current political leaders to change their policies. Such pressure should be constructive, with no mixed signals or messages and should be combined with adequate monitoring and a fair degree of trust and acknowledgment of good performance. There should be no room for options other than complying with the demands of the international community. The conflicts in the Sudan had to be prevented from turning into general antagonism between people of different religions or different ethnic backgrounds.

Report of Secretary-General (October). The Secretary-General, in response to resolution 1564(2004), reported on 4 October [S/2004/787] on the situation in the Sudan, in particular on the security and humanitarian situations. With regard to the security situation, the Secretary-General said that the Joint Implementation Mechanism, at its 17 September meeting, concluded that progress towards full security implied that achievements would be maintained and improved upon and that there could be no trade off between security in the initial areas and security elsewhere in Darfur. In the coming months, that meant that the Government had to take action to stop attacks on the civilian population by its forces and by others such as the Janjaweed militia. It should request international assistance to fulfil its responsibility in that regard. During the meeting, the Government promised to commit no further breaches of the ceasefire and to accept international assistance, including more AU forces to carry out tasks beyond the ceasefire monitoring. The Government proposed three new areas it would make safe and secure around the camps for internally displaced persons at Kass, Kutum and Zallingi, in Southern, Northern and Western Darfur, respectively. At its 24 September meeting, the Monitoring Committee agreed on a procedure designed to avoid situations that might lead to a breach of the N'Djamena ceasefire agreement. On 26 September, however, the Government informed the United Nations that it could not agree to the procedure owing to failure on the part of SPLM/A and JEM to meet their obligations under the N'Djamena agreement.

The Secretary-General said it was clear that the ceasefire was not holding in many parts of Darfur. Violence was reported throughout September, with clashes at Sayyah, north of Al Fasher, and attacks by Government-aligned militia against SLA at Abu Dalek. Attacks against civilians continued, including attacks by uninformed men and abduction of young women. Other incidents included assault, killings, collection of unlawful taxes by the militias, general banditry and inter-tribal fighting. Ever increasing numbers of the population of Darfur were exposed, without any protection from the Government, to hunger, fear and violence, and the suffering was being prolonged by inaction. The Government had not fulfilled its commitments and obligations on disarming the militia and had not presented the details of a plan to establish a commission to collect weapons, as promised at the 17 September Joint Implementation Mechanism meeting.

Impunity among members of the armed forces remained a concern. The Government had taken only minimal steps towards military or criminal prosecution of those already identified as responsible for ceasefire violations and offences under international humanitarian law.

The humanitarian situation had deteriorated since the objectives of the 90-day UN humanitarian plan for Darfur were set. There were more displaced people than previously thought, with new arrivals to some camps numbering in the tens of thousands. The number of conflict-affected people could rise above 2 million if continuation of the civil war caused further displacements. In general, the Government continued to fulfil its commitments regarding humanitarian access. Assistance was beginning to flow into SPLM/A controlled-areas, although complete freedom of access was not possible.

As to the Darfur peace process, political talks between the Government and the rebel movements began on 23 August at Abuja, under the auspices of Nigerian President Olusegun Obasanjo, with the United Nations supporting the mediation effort. The parties agreed on a text for a protocol on humanitarian access, by which they would take measures to prevent violence against civilians, reaffirm the need to protect the rights of internally displaced persons and refugees, and form an implementation mechanism, namely, the Joint Humanitarian Facilitation and Monitoring Unit. While the parties declined to sign that protocol, the Government, on 17 September, agreed to act as if it had been signed. Negotiations were ongoing on a security protocol, but a wide gap between the parties prevented them from reaching agreement.

The Secretary-General observed that the most important step to be taken in the coming weeks was the deployment of the expanded AU force. That force needed to be sizeable and speedily deployed. It also needed a broad mandate that went beyond overseeing the ceasefire and that should include: ensuring protection of the rights of internally displaced persons and refugees in their areas of origin; providing safety of displaced persons in the camps and safe and voluntary return of refugees and displaced persons to their areas of origin; monitoring the behaviour of the police; and disarming fighters. The second issue to be addressed was the resumption of the political talks between the Government and SPLM/A. The outcome of those talks, intended to bring peace, a new constitution, a federal structure for the State, national differentiation and a broad-based Government, could serve as a model for Darfur.

International Commission of Inquiry. The Secretary-General, as requested by the Security Council in resolution 1564(2004), established the International Commission of Inquiry for Darfur to investigate reports of serious violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law in that region by all parties in the current conflict; qualify crimes and determine whether acts of genocide had occurred or were occurring; and identify the perpetrators of such violations and recommend accountability mechanisms before which they would be brought to account. On 4 October [S/2004/812], he informed the Council of his appointment of a five-member Commission, to be chaired by Antonio Cassese (Italy).

In conducting its inquiry, the Commission would enjoy the full cooperation of the Government of the Sudan, and would be provided with the necessary facilities to enable it to operate, and, in particular, be guaranteed freedom of movement throughout the territory, and freedom of access to all sources of information and documentary material. Appropriate security arrangements for the Commission's personnel and documents would be provided, and protection of victims and witnesses would be guaranteed. The Commission was requested to report to the Secretary-General within 90 days from the start of its activities.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 26 October [meeting 5063], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1569(2004). The draft [S/2004/857] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Acting in accordance with Article 28, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to hold meetings in Nairobi starting on 18 November 2004 and ending on 19 November 2004, and that the agenda for these meetings will be "The reports of the Secretary-General on the Sudan";

2. Decides also to discuss the Sudan with representatives of the African Union and the Intergovernmental Authority on Development at the above-mentioned meetings, and to take the opportunity of the presence of the Security Council in Nairobi to discuss other peace efforts in the region with both the African Union and the Intergovernmental Authority on Development;

3. Decides further, with respect to the meetings referred to in paragraph 1 above, to waive the requirement set out in rule 49 of its provisional rules of procedure that the verbatim record of each meeting of the Council shall be made available on the first working day following the meeting, and decides that the verbatim record shall be issued subsequently in New York.

Report of Secretary-General (November). Reporting on developments in the Sudan since his September report (see p. 248), the Secretary-General, on 2 November [S/2004/881], said that the month of October saw a deterioration in security conditions in Darfur, as reported by observers and humanitarian agencies. Ceasefire violations increased on both sides. SPLM/A and the Government were seeking to claim a bigger area of Darfur. The Government responded to attacks by launching operations using army, police and militia, including the Janjaweed. In an apparent drift towards lawlessness, cases of banditry and abduction dramatically increased, affecting civilian traffic, including pilgrims travelling through the Sudan for the hajj, and hampering delivery of humanitarian aid. Various sources reported the emergence of a new rebel movement in Darfur, known as the National Movement for Reformation and Development (NMRD), which claimed responsibility for attacks against Government troops and also threatened the AU Ceasefire Commission. There were also clashes between JEM and NMRD. In addition, a new anti-Government armed group called Al-Shahamah (nobility) emerged in Western Kordofan, calling for a fair distribution of wealth and power, better education and employment opportunities, a review of the power- and wealth-sharing protocols, and revision of the protocol on the Nuba Mountains and the southern Blue Nile regions signed by the Government and SPLM/A. The spread of fighting between rebel movements and activities in areas outside Darfur increased insecurity.

On 20 October, the AU Peace and Security Council announced it would increase its mission in Darfur to 3,320 persons, including 2,341 military personnel and up to 815 civilian police. It expanded its mandate to include the monitoring and verification of the security provided for returning internally displaced persons, of the Government's efforts to disarm Government-controlled militias, and of the protection of civilians under imminent threat and in the immediate vicinity of AU troops and monitors. On 26 October, the Sudanese Parliament endorsed the deployment of the additional AU forces, and the Government accepted verification by the AU Mission on whether Janjaweed had been recruited into the police. A UN assistance cell in Addis Ababa was integrated into and co-located with elements of the AU office dealing with management of the AU Mission in Darfur.

Peace negotiations. The Secretary-General also reported that the IGAD-led peace process had recently shown signs of progress, as the political process addressing the north-south conflict had resumed. From 7 to 16 October, the First Vice-President of the Sudan, Ali Osman Taha, and SPLM/A Chairman John Garang met in Nairobi to resolve outstanding security issues and to plan for the completion of the peace negotiations. They resolved most of the issues for a permanent ceasefire arrangement, including the deployment of joint integrated units in eastern Sudan and the collaborative approach in handling other armed groups during the transition period, but not for the funding of the armed forces of southern Sudan and the timing of the incorporation and integration of other armed groups into the respective structures of the Sudan armed forces and SPLA.

From 17 to 30 October, the parties held technical-level negotiations on implementation modalities, focusing on the Machakos protocol, the power-sharing and wealth-sharing protocols and the protocol on the conflict areas. They consulted the United Nations on aspects of the ceasefire, envisaging a UN monitoring and verification role during the implementation phase. At the conclusion of the talks, the parties announced that they had been able to resolve certain concerns raised by the United Nations regarding specific elements of its role.

Political talks between the Government and the rebel movements in the Darfur peace process resumed on 21 October in Abuja, during which the Government, SPLM/A and JEM reaffirmed their commitment to the ceasefire and to the need to reach a political solution to the Darfur conflict. While the parties continued to discuss their security concerns in the framework of the Security Committee, they commenced negotiations on political issues on 29 October, having expressed their readiness to negotiate a declaration of principles. The Special Representative urged them to sign the protocol on improving the humanitarian situation (see p. 249) and stressed the need for the establishment of mechanisms to facilitate implementation.

The Secretary-General commented that the ongoing talks in Nairobi were proceeding well and that the AU force was expanding rapidly. In spite of that progress, ceasefire breaches had increased as had violence, affecting civilians indirectly and directly, especially in Darfur, where attacks and killings continued at an unacceptable scale. The increase in the number of internally displaced persons reflected the severity of the protection and security situation in Darfur, which the conflicting parties should take as a clear message to pursue urgently a peace agreement. The Secretary-General was of the view that the north-south round of talks had a good chance of being completed by the year's end, and the international community should ensure that the momentum was maintained. Meanwhile, violence in Darfur was on the rise and new movements were threatening the peace in Kordofan, in the east and in Khartoum. The Secretary-General proposed that the Security Council consider what action it could take to ensure effective implementation of the demands set out in its resolutions on the Sudan at its meetings to be held in Nairobi (see below).

Security Council consideration (4 November).

The Security Council reviewed the Secretary-General's report on 4 November [meeting 5071]. Addressing the meeting, the Special Representative said that progress on the political front was slow, and regression on the ground was alarming, as instability had increased in October. Political agreements might come too late to stop the rising violence. Both sides were trying to widen the area of their control. Fighting was occurring in more places, militias were ganging up, and the Government did not fully control its own forces. Within the rebel movements, there was a leadership crisis. The situation could only be reversed by a three-pronged approach: a third party (the AU) should be deployed to deter violations; all negotiation processes should be speeded up; and political leaders, official and self-elected, should be held accountable for violations of agreements and further human misery.

In a statement released the same day [SC/8283], the Council President said that Council members expressed concern about the Government's forced relocations of internally displaced persons in Otash, Old Sharief and New Sharief. They also condemned ongoing violations of international human rights and humanitarian law, such as attacks on civilians, sexual violence and hostage-taking that were being perpetrated in Darfur by all parties including the Government, rebel groups, and the Janjaweed militias.

Communications. Australia, on 8 November [S/2004/887], said it supported the Special Representative's suggestion that the Council use its forthcoming Nairobi meetings to maintain strong pressure on the Sudanese parties to meet their obligations to protect civilians and work towards a peaceful settlement of the country's conflicts.

The EU, on 11 November [S/2004/912], welcomed the progress in the Abuja peace talks and the signing of the Humanitarian and Security Protocols on 9 November. It confirmed its commitment to contribute to the peace and reconciliation processes in the Sudan, which did not exclude the use of sanctions against all parties to the conflict.

Security Council consideration (18-19 November). The Council met in Nairobi on 18 and 19 November [meetings 5080-5082], in accordance with resolution 1569(2004) (see p. 250). In attendance at the first and third meetings were the Sudan's First Vice-President, Ali Othman Taha, and the Chairman of SPLM/A, John Garang. At the first meeting, the Secretary-General said that, while the Council should place its primary focus on the conclusion of the north-south talks, also demanding its attention was the conflict in Darfur, where the security situation continued to deteriorate, despite the ceasefire agreements signed earlier in N'Djamena and Abuja. It was time to conclude the Naivasha process, he said, and involve all Sudanese stakeholders in a national conference to discuss the future governance of the country.

Vice-President Taha reiterated his Government's firm commitment to concluding negotiations as soon as possible and announced that it had reached an understanding with SPLM/A and the IGAD secretariat, as reflected in the common memorandum of understanding committed to by the parties for the conclusion of the negotiations within the agreed framework contained therein and to be signed in the presence of Council members. The Government's vision of a peaceful political resolution in Darfur was based on the Naivasha agreements (see p. 236) and on the establishment of a foundation for decentralized government within a federal network, which would include an agreement on the sharing of national resources and wealth in a manner that provided every governorate, State and region in the Sudan with a proportional share. The Government had also prepared a three-year medium-term development plan to be implemented after the signing of a peace agreement on Darfur that would address urgent assistance to facilitate the return of displaced persons and refugees, develop agricultural and other income-generating sectors, and focus on providing clean water for industry and people.

Chairman Garang, in stating the SPLM/A position, said that, with the six protocols already in place, it considered negotiations on the comprehensive peace agreement on the Sudan complete. Outstanding were two issues in each of its two annexes: those in the comprehensive ceasefire annex concerned the funding of the armed forces and the time frame for incorporating other armed groups into the Sudan Armed Forces or SPLM/A structures; those in the annex on implementation modalities concerned the system of funds transfer in local currency of the Government's share of southern Sudan's oil revenues and the sharing of information on existing oil contracts. He assured the Council that SPLM/A was willing to work with the other parties in resolving those issues and with the National Congress Party in establishing a new Government of national unity.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 19 November [meeting 5082], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1574 (2004). The draft [S/2004/903] was prepared in consultation among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1547(2004) of 11 June 2004, 1556(2004) of 30 July 2004 and 1564(2004) of 18 September 2004 and the statements by its President concerning the Sudan,

Encouraging the parties to conclude speedily a comprehensive peace agreement, and stressing the need for the international community, once such an agreement has been signed and implementation begins, to provide assistance towards its implementation,

Emphasizing that progress towards resolution of the conflict in Darfur would create conditions conducive for delivery of such assistance,

Condemning all acts of violence and violations of human rights and international humanitarian law by all parties, and emphasizing the need for perpetrators of all such crimes to be brought to justice without delay,

Recalling, in this regard, that all parties, including the Sudanese rebel groups such as the Justice and Equality Movement and the Sudan Liberation Army, must respect human rights and international humanitarian law, and also recalling the primary responsibility of the Government of the Sudan to protect its population within its territory and to maintain law and order, while respecting human rights,

Stressing the importance of further progress towards resolving the crisis in Darfur, welcoming the vital and wide-ranging role being played by the African Union towards that end, and welcoming the decision of the Government of the Sudan in favour of the expansion of the African Union mission,

Report of Secretary-General (December). On 3 December [S/2004/947], the Secretary-General, reporting on developments in the Sudan, stated that, following the signing on 9 November of the Humanitarian and Security Protocols in Abuja (see p. 251), the situation in Darfur was calm for about one week and deteriorated towards the end of November, with increased clashes between Government forces and SPLM/A resulting in many police and civilian deaths. The violence reached a high point on 22 November, when SPLA attacked Tawilla in northern Darfur and took control of all police posts. The Sudanese army launched heavy retaliatory attacks, reportedly using bomber planes, forcing SPLA to withdraw. Fighting continued until 24 November, causing extensive casualties. Both sides proclaimed they were no longer bound by the ceasefire and a state of emergency was declared in Northern Darfur. In addition, on 13 and 22 November, SPLA attacked a police station near Kalma camp for internally displaced persons in Southern Darfur, killing several people. The AU was investigating reports of both incidents. The Special Representative advised the Government to exercise maximum restraint when responding to attacks, refrain from conducting hostile military flights, avoid targeting civilians in any military action and ensure that militias under their influence did likewise.

The Joint Ceasefire Commission was convened in N'Djamena to discuss the violence. Both parties blamed each other for initiating the violence, but reconfirmed their commitment to the ceasefire agreement. The AU criticized the parties for their repeated failure to live up to their commitments; requested the Government to submit plans and time lines to neutralize the armed militias, including the Janjaweed; and demanded that SPLA and JEM submit information on the locations of their forces. The AU also recommended the establishment of an agreed framework to deal with ceasefire violations and the accelerated deployment of AU troops in Darfur.

Despite the renewed violence, the Abuja peace talks on Darfur were proceeding. The parties made substantive progress towards finalizing the declaration of principles and had agreed to reconvene in Abuja for the next round of talks scheduled for 10 December. A draft prepared by the AU mediation team was based on the demands put forward by the parties, including recognition of the ethnic, cultural, religious and social diversity in the Sudan, a commitment to the unity and sovereignty of the Sudan, the need for an equitable distribution of power and national wealth, and the reaffirmation of the principles of equality, citizenship, the rule of law and the protection of human rights.

The IGAD-led north-south peace process on the Sudan continued in Naivasha to work towards a comprehensive peace agreement. Talks resumed on 26 November at the technical level to find an acceptable compromise to the outstanding issues, including funding for the army of the south during the pre-interim and interim periods. A UN team of experts was dispatched to assist the parties.

The Secretary-General remarked that the optimism generated on the political front was overshadowed by regression in the security situation. In Darfur, chaos loomed as order was collapsing. He called on the parties to abide by their commitments by providing the AU with information on the location of their troops and exercising full control over them. The conclusion of a comprehensive peace agreement would have far-reaching implications for the Sudan and raise challenges for UNAMIS. While calling on the international community to sustain interest in the Sudan, the Secretary-General announced that the United Nations was planning for the implementation phase of a comprehensive peace agreement and would make recommendations to the Security Council on the size, structure and mandate of a full UN mission to succeed UNAMIS.

Security Council consideration. The Security Council considered the Secretary-General's report on 7 December [meeting 5094]. Addressing the Council, Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, Kieran Prendergast, remarking on the worsening security situation, drew attention to other incidents of violence in Darfur throughout November, including attacks by the new rebel movement, the National Movement for Reform and Development (NMRD), in the Kulbus area, and cross-border operations by elements of the Chadian army in support of NMRD. The Jebel Moon area in North Darfur was also tense, with the reported presence of three rebel groups, government forces and armed tribesmen. Increased activity by the Janjaweed and other pro-government militias were also reported, all of which threatened to plunge Darfur into chaos. The international community, he said, should send an unequivocal message to all Sudanese parties that violence and hostile military actions were not an acceptable means to achieve political gains.

Press statements (December). In a statement to the press on 21 December [SC/8274-AFR/1083], the Security Council President said Council members, following consultations held that day, expressed concern at the serious degradation of the security and humanitarian situation in Darfur and at the repeated violations of the ceasefire. They condemned the violations and the shooting at an AU helicopter. Reiterating their support for the AU efforts and its mission in Darfur, they called for the expeditious and full deployment of the African force. The Council called on both parties, when they resumed their talks in January 2005 in Abuja to achieve a political agreement without delay. The Council expressed readiness to consider a full range of options to exercise pressure on the parties to ensure full compliance with its resolutions.

Further political progress

The Secretary-General, in a 31 December press statement [SG/SM/9661-AFR/1086], welcomed the initialling that day by the Government of the Sudan and SPLA of the last two agreements of the north-south peace process: the Agreement on the Implementation Modalities of the Protocols and Agreements, and the Agreement on the Permanent Ceasefire and Security Agreements Implementation Modalities, which constituted integral parts of a comprehensive peace agreement and marked the parties' commitment to end more than two decades of civil war. The Secretary-General looked forward to the official signing of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement in January 2005, ushering in a new era of peace in the Sudan, in which the United Nations was prepared to play a significant role.

Eritrea-Sudan

On 4 and 22 January, the Sudan accused Eritrea of inciting, supporting and training groups of outlaws in the Darfur region of the country as part of its attempts to destabilize the Sudan and the ongoing peace process [A/58/669-S/2004/14]. It also said that, according to news reports, an outlaw group in eastern Sudan, the Beja Congress, had forged an alliance with the outlaw groups in the Darfur region, with support from Eritrea [A/58/693-S/2004/66]. Eritrea, on 22 January [S/2004/63], rejected those claims as attempts to isolate Eritrea and to divert Sudanese public attention from the country's domestic problems. On 10 August [S/2004/638], the Sudan again informed the Security Council of what it called Eritrea's continuing hostility towards the Sudan and its involvement in the conflict in Darfur.

Somalia

In 2004, progress was made in the national reconciliation process of Somalia, which was based on the outcome of the 2002 Eldoret (Kenya) Conference, held under the auspices of IGAD, and which led to the signing of the Declaration on Cessation of Hostilities and the Structures and Principles of the Somalia National Reconciliation Process (the Eldoret Declaration) [YUN 2002, p. 202]. That Declaration was signed in December 2002 by five Mogadishu faction leaders and the Transitional National Government (TNG), established by the Arta (Djibouti) Conference in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 215]. It set up a national reconciliation process, aimed at bringing the factions into agreement on a national government. Some progress was made in 2003 in five of the six reconciliation committees of the process, and agreement was reached by participating Somali leaders at a conference in September 2003 on a transitional federal government [YUN 2003, p. 248]. However, the TNG President and some faction leaders rejected the document and opposed the proposed federal system. During the negotiations on reconciliation, Somaliland, in the northwest, remained outside the process.

The first sign of progress in 2004 was the signing by Somali leaders, on 29 January, of a declaration on agreement of issues related to the transitional federal government. That meeting was part of the ongoing IGAD-sponsored Somali National Reconciliation Conference in Kenya, which aimed to establish a viable transitional government. In mid-2004, IGAD held a series of Ministerial Facilitation Committee meetings on the Conference and launched its third and final phase, which led to the establishment of the Transitional Federal Government of Somalia. The Security Council, in July, welcomed the AU's decision to dispatch a reconnaissance mission to prepare for deploying military monitors to Somalia.

The Conference, meeting in Kenya and attended by representatives of the numerous factions and clans of Somalia, with the notable exception of Somaliland, agreed to form the Transitional Federal Parliament, with members selected by the factions at the Conference. That body elected the Speaker of Parliament and the Transitional President, important steps towards the re-establishment of stability. The peace process produced a power-sharing arrangement for a transitional period of five years. The inclusive peace process involved all clans and most major faction leaders. At the same time, fighting inside Somalia continued.

The United Nations Political Office for Somalia (UNPOS), led by the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Winston A. Tubman (Liberia), remained involved in the peace process and humanitarian efforts, and continued to operate from Nairobi.

The Secretary-General, in response to a 2003 Council request, established a Monitoring Group of four experts to investigate violations of the arms embargo against Somalia, and to provide a draft list of the individuals continuing to violate it. The Group reported to the Council in August that weapons and ammunition continued to flow into, through and out of Somalia, in contravention of the embargo; and that to fully investigate violations, it required more time than specified in its mandate. Therefore, the Council called for the re-establishment of the Group, for a period of six months, to continue its functions and to update the draft list.

The economic and social situation in Somalia continued to suffer as a result of the chronic warfare and drought. At times, UN activities had to be curtailed due to insecurity in various parts of the country. The General Assembly, in resolution 59/218 (see p. 913), noted the urgent need for humanitarian and reconstruction assistance and urged the international community to respond accordingly. In related action, the Executive Board of UNDP and the United Nations Population Fund, in decision 2004/35 (see p. 879), endorsed UNDP's approach in promoting security by reducing poverty and encouraging good governance. The Board authorized the UNDP Administrator to approve projects consistent with the strategic approach of promoting peace and security on a case-by-case basis.

National reconciliation process and security situation

Report of Secretary-General (February). The Secretary-General, in a 12 February report on the situation in Somalia [S/2004/115 & Corr.1], submitted in response to the Security Council's request in the President's statement S/PRST/2001/30 [YUN 2001, p. 210], described developments since his previous report in October 2002 [YUN 2003, p. 248].

He reported that, on 29 January, at the Somali Leaders' Consultation Meeting (Nairobi), organized by IGAD under the chairmanship of the President of Uganda, Yoweri Museveni, and the President of Kenya, Mwai Kibaki, participating Somali leaders signed a document entitled "Declaration on the Harmonization of Various Issues Proposed by the Somali Delegates at the Somali Consultative Meetings from 9 to 29 January 2004". The Declaration consisted of proposed amendments to the transitional federal charter adopted on 15 September 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 248]. The leaders decided that the charter would be called the transitional federal charter of the Somali republic, and the government, the transitional federal government, whose term would last for five years. The transitional federal parliament would consist of 275 members, 12 per cent of whom would be women. A national census would be undertaken during the drafting of a new constitution, which would be approved by an internationally supervised national referendum. A controversy subsequently arose, however, over the method for selecting members of parliament.

The security situation at the beginning of 2004 remained serious in many Somali regions and affected humanitarian aid delivery. In the north, Somaliland and Puntland gave assurances of safe access to the contested areas of the Sool and Sanaag regions. Intense inter-clan fighting occurred in the central region, forcing 9,000 people to flee to surrounding towns and preventing adequate intervention. In southern and central Somalia, violence and armed conflict continued to hamper access and humanitarian programming.

The Secretary-General commented that the agreement at the leaders' consultation marked a breakthrough that could lead to further progress at the Somali National Reconciliation Conference, which had been stalled for some time. The next and final phase of the reconciliation process would involve the selection of members of the transitional national parliament, who would elect a president to lead the country during the transitional period. The Secretary-General stressed that progress in the political arena should be accompanied by efforts by the Somali leaders to improve the security situation on the ground so as to make it conducive to the implementation of a political agreement, thereby according credibility to the agreement.

Communications. On 30 January, the AU [S/2004/88] and the EU [S/2004/112] welcomed the signing of the Declaration. The AU Central Organ of the Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution called on the Somali factions and leaders to continue to uphold the spirit of the 2002 Eldoret Declaration and to refrain from action that would jeopardize the Somali reconciliation process at Mbagathi, Kenya, which was approaching conclusion. It called on the authorities of Puntland and Somaliland to desist from resorting to military means to resolve their territorial dispute in the provinces of Sool and Sanaag. The statement released by the EU Presidency reiterated EU support to the IGAD-sponsored national reconciliation process, to which there was no alternative for the restoration of effective government, peace and stability in Somalia.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

On 25 February [meeting 4915], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/3 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council, recalling its previous decisions concerning the situation in Somalia, in particular the statement by its President of 11 November 2003 and welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 12 February 2004, reaffirms its commitment to a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the situation in Somalia and its respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and unity of the country, consistent with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations.

The Council reiterates its firm support for the Somali National Reconciliation Process and the ongoing Somali National Reconciliation Conference in Kenya, launched under the auspices of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development.

The Council commends President Mwai Kibaki of Kenya, President Yoweri Museveni of Uganda, other leaders of the Intergovernmental Authority, and international supporters of the Somali National Reconciliation Conference for their perseverance to help Somalis achieve national reconciliation.

The Council welcomes the signing in Nairobi, on 29 January 2004, of the Declaration on the Harmonization of Various Issues Proposed by the Somali Delegates at the Somali Consultative Meetings, held from 9 to 29 January 2004, as an important step towards lasting peace and reconciliation in Somalia, and urges all signatories to the agreement to fully abide by their commitment to move the peace process forward.

The Council calls upon the Somali parties to build on the progress achieved and swiftly conclude the Somali National Reconciliation Conference with a durable and inclusive solution to the conflict in Somalia by establishing a viable transitional government.

The Council reiterates that the Somali parties should abide by and implement expeditiously the Eldoret Declaration of 27 October 2002 on the cessation of hostilities, and calls upon the Somali parties to continue working towards a comprehensive security arrangement for Somalia.

The Council stresses the urgent need for a comprehensive ceasefire throughout Somalia, and stresses also that the Somali parties themselves bear the responsibility for achieving it. The Council calls upon the Somali parties to implement the ceasefire fully, to ensure security, and to resolve their differences by peaceful means.

The Council condemns those who obstruct the peace process, and stresses that those who persist on the path of confrontation and conflict will be held accountable. The Council will continue to monitor the situation closely.

The Council calls upon all neighbouring States to continue their endeavour to participate fully and constructively for the success of the Somali National Reconciliation Process and the attainment of peace in the region.

The Council welcomes the commitment and preparation by the African Union to deploy a military observer mission to Somalia and calls upon the international community to support the African Union's efforts to improve the security situation in Somalia.

The Council calls upon the international community to continue its efforts to support the Intergovernmental Authority in its facilitation of the Somali National Reconciliation Conference, and calls upon the donor countries to contribute to the Conference, the Trust Fund for Peace-building in Somalia and the United Nations Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Somalia.

The Council expresses serious concern regarding the humanitarian situation in Somalia, and calls upon the leaders of Somalia to facilitate the delivery of much-needed humanitarian assistance and to assure the safety of all international and national aid workers.

The Council reiterates its concern over the continued flow of weapons and ammunition supplies to Somalia, welcomes the establishment of the Monitoring Group pursuant to resolution 1519(2003) of 16 December 2003, and calls upon relevant States and entities to comply scrupulously with the arms embargo and to cooperate with the Monitoring Group.

The Council welcomes the readiness of the Secretary-General to enhance the attention of the United Nations to developments in Somalia within existing resources. The Council reiterates that a comprehensive peace-building programme with special emphasis on disarmament, demobilization, rehabilitation and reintegration will be important to post-conflict Somalia as stipulated in the statement by its President of 28 March 2002.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to consider and to suggest in his next report ways to develop the role of the United Nations in support of the Intergovernmental Authority-facilitated Somali reconciliation process.

The Council reiterates its readiness to assist the Somali parties and support the Intergovernmental Authority in the implementation of the agreements reached in the Somali National Reconciliation Conference.

Report of Secretary-General (June). On 9 June [S/2004/469], the Secretary-General, reporting further on the situation in Somalia, said that the controversy that arose immediately after the signing of the 29 January Declaration on outstanding issues (see p. 257) stalled the national reconciliation process for four months. On 4 February, some members of the Somalia Restoration and Reconciliation Council issued a press statement contesting the Declaration's validity. On 8 February, the Transitional National Assembly endorsed the Declaration. Following approval of the draft transitional charter by the plenary of the Somalia National Reconciliation Conference, the IGAD Facilitation Committee began preparations for phase III of the Conference. A delegation composed of the AU Special Envoy for Somalia, an IGAD official, and officials from Kenya, Sweden and the United Kingdom met with the newly created National Organizing Council for Somalia members in Jowhar on 17 March, to persuade them to return to the Conference. The Organizing Council demanded that no further amendments be made to the charter, that the political leaders to select members of parliament be limited to the 24 signatories of the Eldoret Declaration and President Hassan, and that the latter no longer act as President. Should IGAD fail to meet those demands, the Organizing Council would press to convene phase III of the Conference within Somalia. Other Somalia Restoration and Reconciliation Council leaders met in Nairobi on 25 March and decided to remain engaged in the Conference, while others left for various reasons.

On 22 April, the Kenyan Foreign Minister announced a road map with fixed dates for the completion of the Conference, and requiring all political leaders absent from Nairobi to return and the traditional leaders to arrive at the Conference venue within a stated time frame. The process would culminate in the swearing in of a president for the transitional federal government of Somalia on 1 July. The fifth IGAD Ministerial Facilitation Committee meeting was fixed for 6 May, when the Ministers were expected to launch phase III of the Conference.

The Facilitation Committee met as scheduled in Nairobi, with all IGAD Foreign Ministers in attendance. In a joint communiqué, the Ministers appealed to Somali leaders to return to the Conference by 20 May and for the Conference to conclude successfully by the end of July. They agreed to hold their next meeting in Nairobi on 20 May; the Jowhar group indicated its intention to rejoin the Conference by that date.

Following the sixth IGAD Ministerial Facilitation Committee meeting (Nairobi, 21-22 May), the Ministers stated that they had consulted all Somali clans for the completion of the third and final phase of the Conference. They called for the early arrival of traditional leaders at the Conference site and for the cooperation of Somali political leaders in selecting the members of the transitional federal parliament. They warned that absent leaders would not be allowed to hold the process hostage, and that punitive measures would be taken against those obstructing the completion of the reconciliation process.

The security situation on the ground remained of concern, with an increase in threats and attacks on international and national aid workers. The security situation was particularly serious in Mogadishu, western Somaliland, Kismaayo town, and parts of the western border area with Kenya. In Somaliland, the United Nations was forced to reduce its international staff and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) had curtailed activities there since mid-March. As a result of an April UN/NGO security mission to the area, additional international support was provided to the Special Protection Unit dedicated to protecting aid workers. Strengthened security measures were also being put in place throughout Somalia.

The humanitarian situation was also grave, following four consecutive years of drought in northern Somalia, causing massive livestock deaths and further impoverishing pastoralist families. UN agencies and NGOs responded with short-term interventions, including water trucking, food aid and supplementary feeding, mobile health clinics, veterinary services and cash grants. During the reporting period, UNHCR repatriated 2,918 Somali refugees from camps in Djibouti to Somaliland and implemented reintegration projects in Somalia to generate employment, provide education and assist the special needs of girls.

In his observations, the Secretary-General expressed hope that the two recent IGAD Ministerial Facilitation Committee meetings would help the Somali National Reconciliation Conference to conclude with an accepted outcome. The end-of-July time frame given by IGAD, by which to conclude the Conference, placed enormous pressure on the Somali parties and the region. It was incumbent on them to demonstrate the necessary political will to reach agreement on the remaining contentious issues. While the responsibility for peace in Somalia rested with all Somalis, it was at the same time incumbent on the international community to find a way to engage the country. He urged IGAD, the AU, the League of Arab States (LAS), the EU and the Security Council to consider additional measures in support of peace and national reconciliation in Somalia, and suggested that the Arms Embargo Monitoring Group could provide an impetus in that regard (see p. 263).

Communication. The EU, in a 28 May statement issued by its Presidency [S/2004/446], welcomed the outcome of the sixth IGAD ministerial meeting, which officially launched phase III of the Somali National Reconciliation Conference, and the commitment of IGAD member States to adopt a common approach based on political consensus. It appealed to all parties to continue their engagement with the reaffirmation of the importance of Somali ownership and consensus by all Somali clans on the principles and guidelines for the third and final phase; and agreement on a timetable for the remainder of the Conference and on a list of parliament members by the next IGAD meeting on 21 June.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 14 July [meeting 5003], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/24 on behalf of the members:

The Security Council, recalling its previous decisions concerning the situation in Somalia, in particular the statement by its President of 25 February 2004, and welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 9 June 2004, reaffirms its commitment to a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the situation in Somalia and its respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and unity of the country, consistent with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations.

The Council reiterates its firm support for the Somali National Reconciliation Process and the ongoing Somali National Reconciliation Conference in Kenya, launched under the auspices of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, and commends the Intergovernmental Authority leaders, in particular the Government of Kenya, for their efforts in the search for peace in Somalia. The Council also commends the international observers for their active engagement in the process.

The Council welcomes the outcome of the fifth, sixth, and seventh Intergovernmental Authority on Development Ministerial Facilitation Committee meetings on the Somali National Reconciliation Conference, which demonstrated the coherent regional approach and commitment of States members of the Intergovernmental Authority to national reconciliation in Somalia.

The Council welcomes the launching of phase III of the Somali National Reconciliation Conference, and encourages all parties to continue in their ongoing efforts to move the process forward and agree on a durable and inclusive solution to the conflict in Somalia and the establishment of a transitional federal Government for Somalia.

The Council recognizes that, while the establishment of a transitional federal Government will be an important step towards establishing sustainable peace and stability in Somalia, much effort will lie ahead if this objective is to be achieved. The Council emphasizes the need for the new Government, once formed, to engage with the international community and to use the transition period constructively for the purposes of reconciliation, stability and reconstruction.

The Council reiterates that the Somali parties should abide by and implement expeditiously the Eldoret Declaration of 27 October 2002 on the cessation of hostilities, and calls upon the Somali parties to continue working towards a comprehensive security arrangement for Somalia.

The Council reiterates that the Somali parties themselves bear the main responsibility for achieving a comprehensive ceasefire throughout Somalia. The Council calls upon the Somali parties to implement the ceasefire fully, to ensure security, and to resolve their differences by peaceful means.

The Council condemns those who obstruct the peace process, fully supports, in this regard, the warning of the Intergovernmental Authority ministers, and reiterates that those who persist upon the path of confrontation and conflict will be held accountable. The Council will continue to monitor the situation closely.

The Council welcomes the decision by the African Union to dispatch a reconnaissance mission to prepare the ground for the deployment of military monitors to Somalia, and calls upon Somali leaders to cooperate with this initiative.

The Council calls upon the international community to continue to support the Intergovernmental Authority in its facilitation of the Somali National Reconciliation Conference, and calls upon donor countries and organizations to contribute to the Conference, the Trust Fund for Peace-building in Somalia and the United Nations Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Somalia.

The Council reiterates serious concern regarding the humanitarian situation in Somalia, and calls upon Somali leaders to facilitate the delivery of much-needed humanitarian assistance and to assure the safety of all international and national aid workers.

The Council reiterates its concern over the continued flow of weapons and ammunition supplies to Somalia, commends the work of the Monitoring Group established pursuant to resolution 1519(2003) of 16 December 2003, and urges relevant States and entities to comply scrupulously with the arms embargo and to cooperate with the Monitoring Group.

The Council commends the work of Mr. Winston A. Tubman, the Representative of the Secretary-General, welcomes his visit to the region in support of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development-sponsored Somali peace process, and encourages him to continue his facilitation efforts.

The Council welcomes the Secretary-General's meeting with the Somali parties on 8 July 2004 in Mbagathi, Kenya, and requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed of developments at the Somali National Reconciliation Conference and to make timely recommendations on what additional measures could be taken by the Council in support of the Conference and its outcome.

Establishment of Transitional Federal Parliament

At the end of June, the controversies regarding the method of selecting members of the transitional federal parliament led Somali leaders to absent themselves from the Somali National Reconciliation Conference (Mbagathi), the Secretary-General stated in his 8 October report on Somalia [S/2004/804]. However, concerted efforts by IGAD member States led to their gradual return in July. Each Somali clan (Hawiye, Darod, Digil and Mirifle, Dir and the "Allied" clans) was requested to propose names for members of the Somali National Arbitration Committee and the collective leadership of the Conference (the Presidium), and a list of 61 members of parliament by 5 July, with the exception of the "Allied" clans, which were asked to submit a list of 31 members. On 8 July, the Secretary-General, addressing the Somali delegates at the Conference, reiterated the UN commitment to support the Conference's outcome.

Negotiations on the number of seats to be allotted to each of the sub-clans proved challenging, but the problem was resolved during six IGAD ministerial meetings held in Nairobi over five months and the willingness of Somali leaders to compromise. At the tenth IGAD Ministerial Facilitation Committee meeting (Nairobi, 21-22 August), the Ministers focused on facilitating the selection of Somali members of parliament.

On 22 August, 194 members of the Transitional Federal Parliament of Somalia were sworn into office. Differences within the Harti sub-clan (Darod) over their choice were resolved after the intervention of the Kenyan President, Mwai Kibaki, and international observers. On 29 August, an additional 66 members were sworn in in the presence of the Kenyan Vice-President, who declared the Parliament formally inaugurated. By mid-September, 268 of a total membership of 275 had been sworn in.

The Transitional Federal Parliament held its first meeting in Nairobi on 2 September, at which five of its remaining seven members were sworn in. On 15 September, Sharif Hassan Sheikh Aden was elected Speaker of Parliament. Despite the efforts of international observers, only 23 women members were sworn in, well short of the agreed 33, or 12 per cent of the total membership, as stipulated by the transitional federal charter. To raise the level of inclusiveness at the Conference, and to gain support for its outcome, a dialogue with the Somali business community was held (Djibouti, 21-22 July) with the participation of regional ministers and UN senior staff.

The absence of General Mohamed Hersi "Morgan" from the Conference and reports that he was planning a military attack on Kismaayo caused concern among the civilian population of the region. He had been reported to be gathering his militia with the intention of attacking the Juba Valley Alliance (JVA), which had ousted him from Kismaayo in 1999. The JVA leader, Colonel Barre Hirale, a member of the transitional federal parliament, left the Conference and returned to Kismaayo. On 27 July, the Conference Chairman, Bethuel Kiplagat (Kenya), issued a press release on behalf of the IGAD Facilitation Committee, calling on regional countries to apply sanctions against General "Morgan" by, among other things, denying him entry to IGAD member States. General "Morgan" announced his intention to return to the Conference, on the condition, he said on 14 September, that JVA not attack his militia.

The question of Somaliland remained to be resolved. "President" Dahir Riyale Kahin of the "Republic of Somaliland" issued a press release on 7 July, warning that any attempt to resurrect the former Somali Union would trigger a new cycle of civil war that would engulf the entire Horn of Africa. He expressed satisfaction with international community pronouncements that the current Conference would be followed by the formation of a government for Somalia that would then enter into dialogue with the "government of Somaliland".

The Secretary-General, in his observations, welcomed the planning under way in Nairobi, involving the United Nations Political Office for Somalia (UNPOS), the UN country team, the Somalia Aid Coordination Body, the European Commission, LAS and others, to arrive at a peace-building framework leading to the formulation of a rapid assistance package for the Somali transitional federal government.

He pointed to the likelihood, at the current stage of the Somali peace process, of a call for an expanded UN peace-building role. He proposed that any enhanced UN role in Somalia be incremental and based on discussions with the new government. In the meantime, he also proposed that resources for UNPOS for 2004-2005 be maintained at the current level. He appealed to the Somali leaders to improve security on the ground, and to the international community to support the peace process.

Communications. The AU and the EU issued statements welcoming the establishment of the Transitional Federal Parliament. In a 17 September communiqué [S/2004/755], the AU Peace and Security Council (Addis Ababa) commended the efforts of the IGAD Facilitation Committee. It encouraged the members of Parliament to work for the early election of a president and formation of a transitional federal government. In a 4 August statement of its Presidency [S/2004/640], the EU appealed to all parties to continue their engagement with the aim of establishing an inclusive government committed to an effective ceasefire, to the creation of a stable national environment, to working for humanitarian access across Somalia, to a federal Somalia and to cooperating with the international community.

Election of President

The members of the Transitional Federal Parliament elected on 10 October Colonel Abdullahi Yusuf Ahmed as President of Somalia, after three rounds of voting [S/2005/89]. In the final round, Colonel Yusuf obtained 189 votes and the runner-up, Abdullahi Ahmed Addow, obtained 79 votes. Mr. Addow pledged to cooperate with the President. Prior to the vote, all 26 presidential candidates signed a declaration to support the elected President and to demobilize their militias.

In a 14 October statement issued by its Presidency [S/2004/865], the EU welcomed the election, which it believed would pave the way for the establishment of a transitional federal government, and pledged to support the transition to a federal State.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 26 October [meeting 5064], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/38 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council reaffirms its previous resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the situation in Somalia, in particular resolution 1558(2004) of 17 August 2004 and the statement by its President of 14 July 2004.

The Council reiterates its commitment to a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the situation in Somalia and its respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and unity of Somalia, consistent with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations.

The Council commends the recent progress made at the Somali National Reconciliation Conference in Nairobi, including the establishment of the Transitional Federal Parliament of Somalia and the subsequent election of the Speaker of Parliament and the transitional President, which are important steps towards the re-establishment of peace and stability in Somalia.

The Council, underscoring the importance of consolidating the gains made so far, looks forward to the formation, in the near future, of a Transitional Federal Government inside Somalia, capable of beginning reconciliation and reconstruction in a spirit of consensus and dialogue with all the Somali parties.

The Council, in this regard, encourages the Transitional Federal Parliament and the President to take further steps to select a Prime Minister and an efficient and effective Cabinet, and to develop a preliminary programme of action and timetable for the transitional period. The Council urges the transitional federal institutions to involve women fully in post conflict reconciliation and reconstruction. The Council also notes the ongoing discussion to outline possible coordination mechanisms between the Transitional Federal Government and the international community.

The Council commends member States of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, in particular the Government of Kenya, as well as other countries and organizations for constructively supporting the Somali National Reconciliation Process for the past two years, and encourages them to continue their efforts in support of the cause of peace in Somalia.

The Council welcomes and expresses its support for the commitment of the African Union to assist the transitional process in Somalia, in particular through planning for a peace support mission to Somalia, including options for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, and encourages the international donor community to contribute to these efforts.

The Council further welcomes the efforts of the United Nations Political Office for Somalia, the United Nations country team, the Somalia Aid Coordination Body, the European Union, the Intergovernmental Authority on Development Partners Forum, the League of Arab States and others engaged in developing a peacebuilding framework leading to the formation of a rapid assistance package and calls upon the international community to support this package as well as emergency rehabilitation and economic development programmes as security returns to Somalia.

The Council shares the Secretary-General's assessment that "at this stage of progress in the Somali peace process, there will likely be a call for an expanded peacebuilding role and presence for the United Nations, in order that it may assist the Somali parties in implementing their agreement. At the same time, it is clear that any enhanced role for the Organization in Somalia must be incremental, and should be based on the outcome of discussions with the new government." The Council looks forward to the recommendations of the Secretary-General in this regard.

The Council urges the Somali leaders to create a favourable environment for the future Transitional Federal Government by making determined efforts to bring about improvements in the security situation on the ground and reiterates that those who persist on the path of confrontation and conflict will be held accountable. The Council will continue to monitor the situation closely.

Formation of Transitional Federal Government

As later reported by the Secretary-General [S/2005/89], the Transitional Federal Government of Somalia had been formed by the end of the year, with the completion of: the appointment by the President, on 3 November, of Ali Mohamed Gedi, a member of the Hawiye clan predominant in Mogadishu, as Prime Minister, which was endorsed by Parliament on 23 December; and the appointment by the Prime Minister, early in December, of 73 Ministers, Assistant Ministers and Ministers of State, which some in Parliament criticized as not in line with the "4.5 formula" for clan representation followed during the National Reconciliation Conference.

Earlier, a donors meeting (Stockholm, Sweden, 29 October) discussed options for a coordination structure to oversee and guide assistance to Somalia and requested the United Nations to take the lead role at the political and planning levels. They formed a Coordination and Monitoring Committee co-chaired by the United Nations and the Transitional Federal Government, which held its first meeting on 11 November. A UN inter-agency fact-finding mission visited Ethiopia and Kenya from 13 to 17 December to assess the progress made in the Somali peace process. The mission, which held talks with the President, the Speaker of Parliament, representatives of IGAD countries and donors, among others, stressed the need to provide support for the outcome of the peace process.

On 25 October, President Yusuf urged the AU Peace and Security Council to support his Government through the provision of 15,000 to 20,000 peacekeeping troops in order to restore security in Somalia. He based those figures on the existence of an estimated 55,000 armed militiamen, 500 “technicals” and 2 million small arms in the country. In response, the AU organized a planning seminar (Addis Ababa, 4-5 November) for the stabilization of Somalia through the transitional period.

An IGAD special summit on Somalia (Nairobi, 14 October) recognized the Government of President Yusuf and agreed to hold talks with the AU, the United Nations, LAS, EU and the United States to make a case for a peace enforcement force in Somalia. On 17 November, the IGAD Council of Ministers agreed to establish an IGAD monitoring and follow-up team to continue to support the Somali peace process to succeed its Facilitation Committee.

Meanwhile in Somalia, the Somaliland Cabinet issued a statement on 11 October reiterating the “sovereignty and territorial integrity” of “Somaliland” as non-negotiable and requesting the international community’s help to prevent conflict between Somalia and “Somaliland”. Intermittent fighting continued throughout Somalia, and the prevailing insecurity and violence prevented the United Nations from implementing programmes in large areas of the country. Reports indicated large-scale violations of the arms embargo. Above-normal rainfall in most of Somalia during late 2004 brought a four-year drought to an end, providing relief to the country’s largely pastoral economy. However, the humanitarian emergency continued in drought-affected regions in the north and in other parts.

Security Council consideration. President Ahmed, addressing the Security Council on 19 November [meeting 5083] during its session in Nairobi, said that the Government was working on the two main objectives of consolidating reconciliation talks with the armed groups and realizing a tangible peace-building plan. He requested the Council to phase in a peace-building mission, including the deployment of a stabilization force in Somalia. Noting that the Government would not generate revenue for some time, he drew attention to the urgent need for financial resources for it to function and requested the Council to take measures to provide financial and diplomatic support.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 19 November [meeting 5083], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/43 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council reaffirms all its previous resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the situation in Somalia, in particular the statement by its President of 26 October 2004.

The Council reiterates its commitment to a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the situation in Somalia and its respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and unity of Somalia, consistent with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations.

The Council welcomes the progress made in the Somali National Reconciliation Process, in particular the establishment of the Transitional Federal Parliament, the election of the Speaker of Parliament and the President and the appointment of the Prime Minister, which provides a sound and solid framework to achieve a comprehensive and lasting solution to the Somalia situation. The Council reiterates its expectation of the establishment of a broad-based, all-inclusive and effective government inside Somalia that will continue the reconciliation efforts with all Somali parties.

The Council stresses that it is the responsibility of all Somali parties to work together to consolidate the gains made so far and to achieve further progress. The Council calls upon them to seize this historic opportunity for peace in Somalia by developing a programme of action and timetable for the transitional period, creating a favourable environment for long-term stability and making determined efforts to rebuild the country.

The Council commends member States of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, in particular the Government of Kenya, as well as other countries and organizations for all their constructive efforts to facilitate the Somali National Reconciliation Process.

The Council reaffirms its support for the commitment of the African Union to assist the transitional process in Somalia, in particular the planning for a mission in Somalia, including options for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration.

The Council encourages and urges donor countries and regional and subregional organizations to provide support to the efforts of the future Somali government and institutions to ensure their ability to function inside Somalia, and to assist in the reconstruction of Somalia. The Council encourages a dialogue between the international donor community and the future Transitional Federal Government on the principles and modalities of international coordination under discussion, including at the meeting held in Stockholm on 29 October 2004, and welcomes the United Nations lead facilitating role in that dialogue and in the subsequent coordination arrangements.

The Council reaffirms its full support for the peace process in Somalia and the commitment of the United Nations to assist the regional and sub-regional efforts in this regard.

The Council expresses its determination to continue to monitor the situation closely.

Arms embargo

Monitoring Group. In response to Security Council resolution 1519(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 254], the Secretary-General established a Monitoring Group charged with, among other tasks, investigating violations of the arms embargo covering access to Somalia by land, air and sea. On 22 January [S/2004/73], the Secretary-General informed the Council of his appointment of four experts to the Group.

The Monitoring Group's report was transmitted on 11 August [S/2004/604] by the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 751(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 202] concerning Somalia. The investigations revealed that arms continued to flow into, within and out of Somalia and were circulating inside the country. The pattern of the arms traffic and the resulting violations seemed to have changed, as arms traders and other businessmen were replacing warlords as the main importers of arms. Arms continued to be sold openly in local arms markets, in particular at the Bakaaraha arms markets in Mogadishu, the main source for arms in Somalia. The level of arms shipments to specific warlords from external sources had not changed, particularly arms obtained by special order, such as heavy weapons and ammunition. Arms flow out of Somalia was light but occurred daily, in particular to Kenya. Somali warlords, some of whom were involved in drug trafficking, were all violating the arms embargo.

The transportation of arms by air had decreased, the preferred means of transport being by land and sea. There was evidence that arms smuggled from one neighbouring Gulf State were transported to a port in another neighbouring State and thence to Somalia by road or by sea. The arms were delivered from external sources to the north and south of Somalia to several places along the Somali coastline, often by dhows and in some cases large vessels, and distributed by road. Sources indicated that some Somali warlords were not keen on seeing a government in place because it would undermine their business operations. Money obtained from arms and drug trafficking and other illegal activities was used to buy goods that were then smuggled into neighbouring countries. The Customs and border control of the neighbouring States were ineffective in enforcing the arms embargo due to a lack of capability and corruption.

The Monitoring Group considered premature the preparation of a draft list of those who continued to violate the arms embargo inside and outside Somalia, together with their supports for possible Council action, as requested in resolution 1519(2003). It recommended that the draft list be called a watch list, remain confidential and include individuals to be investigated further to establish whether they continued to violate the arms embargo. Continued monitoring of the arms embargo was necessary to ensure its effectiveness, but the limited duration of the Group's mandate did not offer enough opportunity to investigate fully some of the alleged violations, thus making it difficult to come up with clear-cut and definitive cases of violation. Continuity of the Group was imperative at the current critical stage of the Somali National Reconciliation Conference (see p. 260), to enable it to act as a deterrent to potential violators and to ensure that opposition groups did not destabilize any new transitional government that might emerge from the Conference.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

On 17 August [meeting 5022], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1558(2004). The draft [S/2004/648] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the situation in Somalia, in particular resolution 733(1992) of 23 January 1992, which established an embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Somalia (hereinafter referred to as "the arms embargo"), and resolution 1519(2003) of 16 December 2003,

Reiterating its firm support for the Somali National Reconciliation Process and the ongoing Somali National Reconciliation Conference under the sponsorship of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, and reaffirming the importance of the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and unity of Somalia,

Condemning the continued flow of weapons and ammunition supplies to and through Somalia, in contravention of the arms embargo, and expressing its determination that violators should be held accountable,

Reiterating the importance of enhancing the monitoring of the arms embargo in Somalia through persistent and vigilant investigation into the violations, bearing in mind that the Somali National Reconciliation Process and the implementation of the arms embargo serve as mutually reinforcing processes,

Determining that the situation in Somalia constitutes a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Stresses the obligation of all States to comply fully with the measures imposed by resolution 733(1992);
2. Takes note of the report of the Monitoring Group of 11 August 2004 submitted pursuant to paragraph 6 of resolution 1519(2003), and the observations and recommendations contained therein, and expresses its intention to give them due consideration in order to improve compliance with the measures imposed by resolution 733(1992);
3. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 751(1992) concerning Somalia (hereinafter referred to as "the Committee"), to re-establish, within thirty days of the date of adoption of the present resolution, and for a period of six months, the Monitoring Group as referred to in paragraph 2 of resolution 1519(2003), with the following mandate:

(a) To continue the tasks outlined in paragraphs 2 (a) to (d) of resolution 1519(2003);

(b) To continue refining and updating information on the draft list of those who continue to violate the arms embargo inside and outside Somalia, and their active supporters, for possible future measures by the Council, and to present such information to the Committee as and when the Committee deems appropriate;

(c) To continue making recommendations based on its investigations, on the previous reports of the Panel of Experts appointed pursuant to resolutions 1425 (2002) of 22 July 2002 and 1474(2003) of 8 April 2003, and on the first report of the Monitoring Group;

(d) To work closely with the Committee on specific recommendations for additional measures to improve overall compliance with the arms embargo;

(e) To provide to the Council, through the Committee, a midterm report and a final report covering all the tasks set out above;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary financial arrangements to support the work of the Monitoring Group;

5. Reaffirms the need for implementation of the actions set out in paragraphs 4, 5, 7, 8 and 10 of resolution 1519(2003);

6. Expects the Committee, in accordance with its mandate, to recommend to the Council appropriate measures in response to violations of the arms embargo, by considering and developing, in close consultation with the Monitoring Group, specific proposals to improve compliance with the arms embargo;

7. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

In response to resolution 1558(2004) (above) recommending the re-establishment of the Monitoring Group, the Secretary-General, on 23 August [S/2004/676], appointed four experts as members of the Group.

Security Council Committee. On 29 December, the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 751(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 202] concerning the arms embargo on Somalia submitted a report covering its activities in 2004 [S/2004/1017]. The Committee held 3 formal and 10 informal meetings during the year. It discussed the work of the Monitoring Group and the replies received from 19 Member States to its request for information on violations of the arms embargo. As in the past, the Committee relied on the cooperation of States and organizations in a position to provide such information.

Eritrea-Ethiopia

The United Nations maintained its presence in Eritrea and Ethiopia, as it continued to monitor implementation of the 2000 Algiers ceasefire and peace agreements between the two countries [YUN 2000, p. 180] (known collectively as the Algiers Agreements), which regulated their border dispute that had led to armed conflict in 1998 and intermittent fighting since then. The United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE), established in 2000, continued to monitor the border region inside and near the Temporary Security Zone and to support the work of the Boundary Commission, set up by the Agreements to determine the border. In 2002, the Commission completed the delimitation of the border and began the demarcation process, which was stalled by the end of 2003 when Ethiopia rejected significant parts of the Commission's decision, which it had previously accepted as final and binding. At the beginning of 2004, both sides continued to restrict the freedom of movement of UNMEE in areas inside and adjacent to the Temporary Security Zone and both banned direct flights by UN aircraft between the Ethiopian capital of Addis Ababa and the Eritrean capital of Asmara.

Although no major incidents between the two countries occurred in early 2004, the lack of progress in the political situation, in particular the demarcation of the border, threatened the stability of the subregion. The Secretary-General, seeking to rekindle the political process, appointed a Special Envoy to explore with both Governments ways of overcoming the impasse. Eritrea, however, refused to receive him on the grounds that it would not entertain any new process before the implementation of the Commission's decision.

The Security Council, in September, extended the UNMEE mandate and approved reductions in its size and operations, as proposed by the Secretary-General, and took note of some positive developments in relations between UNMEE and both countries.

Ethiopia, on 25 November, proposed a five-point peace plan for resolving the bilateral dispute through peaceful means, which included working towards normalization of relations and opening dialogue on implementing the Boundary Commission's decision on delimitation. Eritrea was dismissive of the proposal, stating that Ethiopia needed to express unconditional support of the Commission and its decision, withdraw from Eritrean territory and cooperate on demarcation of the border. In December, there was a steady increase of Ethiopian armed forces near the security zone.

Implementation of Algiers Agreements

Security Council consideration. On 7 January, at an informal meeting of the Security Council to consider the Secretary-General's December 2003 report on the situation in Ethiopia and Eritrea [YUN 2003, p. 238], Assistant Secretary-General in the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, Hédi Annabi, briefed the Council on recent developments.

In a press statement issued on that date [SC/7972-AFR/807], the Council President said that the Council members expressed concern about the lack of progress in the demarcation process. They reaffirmed the final and binding nature of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission's decision and underlined the importance of its expeditious implementation within the framework of the Agreements. They also expressed disappointment about Ethiopia's rejection of parts of the decision and its refusal to fully cooperate with the Commission. The Council members, while acknowledging the cooperative attitude of the Eritrean Government, appealed to both parties to initiate demarcation expeditiously. They supported the additional measures being considered by the Secretary-General to move demarcation and the peace process forward and urged both countries to respond positively to his proposals.

The Council members also expressed concern at the recent sharp increase in the restriction of UNMEE's movement by Eritrea and the persisting administrative difficulties imposed by both parties. They urged both to provide full support to UNMEE, facilitate unrestricted movement of its personnel and establish a route for UNMEE flights between the two capitals. Noting recent inflammatory rhetoric by both sides, Council members called on them to engage in a broad political dialogue with a view to improving their relations and defusing tensions.

Appointment. The Secretary-General, on 29 January [S/2004/102], appointed Lloyd Axworthy (Canada) as his Special Envoy for Ethiopia and Eritrea to explore with them ways to overcome the current impasse in the implementation of the Algiers Agreements. He underscored that the offer of good offices did not represent a new initiative or alternative mechanism but would focus on the implementation of the Agreements, the Boundary Commission's decision and relevant Security Council resolutions and decisions. On 9 February [S/2004/103], the Council welcomed the appointment and expressed support for the Secretary-General's mission of good offices.

Communications. On 13 February [S/2004/116], Eritrea forwarded to the Council three letters from its President, Isaias Afwerki, to the Secretary-General concerning the peace process. The communications expressed Eritrea's position on the matter of the Secretary-General's Special Envoy, stating that Eritrea sensed an imposition on it to accept the new mission of the Special Envoy. Eritrea had decided not to entertain any new process, political or otherwise, before the full and expeditious implementation of the 2002 decision of the Boundary Commission [YUN 2002, p. 187] demarcating the border. In the letters, the President reiterated Eritrea's position that the introduction of another process would serve no useful purpose. Eritrea blamed Ethiopia for the stalemate in the implementation process caused by its rejection of the Commission's decision.

Report of Secretary-General (March). In his 5 March [S/2004/180] progress report on Ethiopia and Eritrea, the Secretary-General updated developments and described UNMEE activities since his December 2003 report [YUN 2003, p. 238]. Annexed to the report was the twelfth report of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission, covering the period from 1 December 2003 to 26 February 2004, which had been unable to advance its demarcation activities.

The Secretary-General's Special Envoy visited the region in late February, consulting with the Ethiopian leadership and AU officials in Addis Ababa; he did not visit Asmara because of Eritrea's opposition to his mission.

The general situation in the Temporary Security Zone and the adjacent areas remained relatively stable but fragile during the reporting period. In the absence of progress in the demarcation of the border, UNMEE continued to patrol the Zone, monitor the redeployed positions of the parties' armed forces in the adjacent areas, and observe the activities of the Eritrean militia and police in and around the Zone. UNMEE observed an increase in training activities, in particular by the Ethiopian Armed Forces, which conducted such exercise near the southern boundary of the Zone. Incursions by Ethiopian herdsmen and their livestock into the Zone decreased marginally, and incidents of Ethiopian militia accompanying them had all but ceased. Meanwhile, allegations by both parties of cattle rustling and attacks on UNMEE property and/or personnel increased. On 2 February, Ethiopia severely restricted UNMEE's freedom of movement by closing almost all roads leading into the country for 48 hours. On the Eritrean side, UNMEE movements were also restricted in areas adjacent to, and sometimes within, the Zone. UNMEE staff continued to experience difficulties at the airports in Addis Ababa and Asmara, and direct flights between the two capitals were still not permitted by both countries. The Military Coordination Commission, chaired by UNMEE, met on 2 February and endorsed a framework for the conduct of sector-level military coordination commissions, the first of which was convened on the Mereb River Bridge on 3 March. The Secretary-General appealed to Eritrea to sign the status-of-forces agreement with the United Nations without delay.

UN agencies continued to assist in addressing medium- to long-term food insecurity in an attempt to break the cycle of persistent emergency and need for humanitarian response in both countries. The full caseload of those requiring aid was estimated to be some 7.2 million people. UNMEE completed 88 quick-impact projects in the Temporary Security Zone and adjacent areas. However, the Trust Fund to Support the Peace Process in Ethiopia and Eritrea was almost depleted.

The Secretary-General said that the appointment of his Special Envoy was intended to provide an opportunity for both parties to present their positions and ideas on how to move the process forward. He reiterated his appeal to them, especially to Eritrea, to give his Special Envoy the opportunity to meet and discuss with their leadership how best his mission of good offices could help them overcome the impasse.

The continuing stalemate raised questions about the future of UNMEE, which was not meant to support a status quo indefinitely. Possible benchmarks for its reduction would include an improvement in the security environment, well-functioning sector military coordination commissions and meaningful progress in demarcation. UNMEE's effectiveness would be kept under review and its operations adjusted and streamlined as needed. Meanwhile, the Secretary-General recommended that the Mission's mandate be extended for six months, until 15 September.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 12 March [meeting 4924], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1531(2004). The draft [S/2004/188] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its previous resolutions and the statements by its President pertaining to the situation between Ethiopia and Eritrea, and the requirements contained therein, including in particular resolution 1507(2003) of 12 September 2003,

Reiterating its support for the peace process and its unwavering commitment, including through the role played by the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea, to the full and expeditious implementation of the comprehensive Peace Agreement signed at Algiers by the Governments of Ethiopia and Eritrea (hereinafter referred to as "the parties") on 12 December 2000 and the preceding Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities signed on 18 June 2000 ("the Algiers Agreements"), and the delimitation decision of the Boundary Commission of 13 April 2002, embraced by the parties as final and binding in accordance with the Algiers Agreements,

Noting with concern the continuing impasse in the peace process, due mainly to the lack of progress in the demarcation of the border,

Taking note with concern of the twelfth report on the work of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission, of 27 February 2004, in particular its conclusion that under the present circumstances the Commission is unable to progress with demarcation activities,

Expressing its concern about Ethiopia's rejection of significant parts of the decision of the Boundary Commission and its current lack of cooperation with the Commission,

Expressing disappointment about Eritrea's refusal at present to engage with the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Ethiopia and Eritrea,

Emphasizing that cooperation with the Special Envoy offers both parties a concrete opportunity to move the peace process forward,

Recognizing the increasing demand for United Nations peacekeeping and resources from the international community for peacekeeping and peace-building purposes, and recalling the additional operational costs due to the delays in the demarcation process,

Expressing its support for the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Ethiopia and Eritrea and for the Mission,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 5 March 2004, and fully supporting the observations made therein,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea until 15 September 2004 at the troop and military observer levels authorized by its resolution 1320(2000) of 15 September 2000;

2. Strongly urges the parties once again to cooperate fully and expeditiously with the Mission in the implementation of its mandate and to step up their efforts to ensure the security of all Mission staff, and reiterates in the strongest terms its demand that the parties allow the Mission full freedom of movement and remove with immediate effect and without preconditions any and all restrictions on, and impediments to the work of, the Mission and its staff in the discharge of their mandate;

3. Stresses that the primary responsibility for the implementation of the Algiers Agreements and the decision of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission lies with both parties;

4. Calls upon the parties to cooperate fully and promptly with the Boundary Commission and to create the necessary conditions for demarcation to proceed expeditiously, including through the unequivocal restating of Ethiopia's acceptance of the decision of the Commission, the appointment by Ethiopia of field liaison officers and the payment of its dues to the Commission;

5. Reaffirms the crucial importance of a political dialogue between the two countries for the completion of the peace process and the consolidation of progress achieved so far, and urges both parties to normalize their relations, including through confidence-building measures, and to refrain from any threat or use of force against each other;

6. Reiterates its support for the initiative of the Secretary-General to exercise his good offices by appointing a Special Envoy in order to facilitate the implementation of the Algiers Agreements, the decision of the Boundary Commission and the relevant resolutions and decisions of the Security Council and to encourage the normalization of diplomatic relations between the two countries, and emphasizes that this appointment does not constitute an alternative mechanism;

7. Expresses its full support for the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Ethiopia and Eritrea, Mr. Lloyd Axworthy, stresses that the Special Envoy enjoys the unanimous support of the witnesses to the Algiers Agreements, namely the United Nations, the United States of America, Algeria, the African Union and the European Union, and urges both parties, in particular the Government of Eritrea, to engage constructively and without further delay with the Special Envoy;

8. Urges both parties once again to establish expeditiously a direct high-altitude flight route between Asmara and Addis Ababa to relieve the unnecessary additional cost to the Mission and Member States;

9. Decides to monitor closely the steps taken by the parties in the implementation of their commitments under the Algiers Agreements, including through the Boundary Commission, and to review any implications for the Mission;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to monitor the situation closely and to keep under review the effectiveness of the mission, and to adjust and streamline its operations as needed, taking into account also the mandate of the Mission as outlined in paragraph 2 of resolution 1320(2000);

11. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Council President's press statement. Following informal consultations in the Security Council and a Secretariat briefing on 4 May, the Council President released a press statement [SC/8085-AFR/918] expressing members' concern at the deterioration in Eritrea's cooperation with UNMEE and continuing restrictions on its freedom of movement, especially in areas adjacent to the Temporary Security Zone; the increase in detention of UNMEE local staff; the closure of the main supply route to UNMEE troops in Sector West by Eritrean authorities; and recent public allegations by a senior Eritrean government official that might negatively affect the security of UNMEE staff. Members were disappointed with Ethiopia's continued rejection of significant parts of the Boundary Commission decision, which heightened regional tension and blocked completion of UNMEE's mandate. Eritrea's and Ethiopia's actions raised questions about UNMEE's long-term viability. Members were also concerned about the lack of progress in the implementation of the Boundary Commission's demarcation decision and reiterated their support for the Special Envoy's efforts to engage the two parties in order to overcome the current stalemate in the peace process.

Report of Secretary-General (July). On 7 July [S/2004/543], the Secretary-General, in his progress report on Ethiopia and Eritrea, said that, during the reporting period, relations between the Eritrean authorities and UNMEE had deteriorated, as a result of the government measures noted by the Council in its presidential statement (above). The Eritrean authorities had closed the main road from Asmara to Barentu, UNMEE's main supply route to troops in Sector West. The Special Representative had written to President Isaias Afwerki asking for his personal intervention to reverse the trend, as had the Secretary-General. The Foreign Minister had assured a visiting UN team that Eritrea was prepared to resolve any problems amicably.

Cooperation with Ethiopia remained at a workable level. Training activities by the Ethiopian Armed Forces continued, including the firing of heavy-calibre weapons close to the southern boundary of the Zone. Following discussions with the sector-level of the Military Coordination Commission, the Forces agreed to move live firing exercises at least five kilometres away from the Zone.

Reports of violations of the Zone, mostly cattle rustling, increased. In April, Eritrea reported three violations, which allegedly resulted in exchanges of fire between Eritrean militia and Ethiopians entering the Zone. Eritrean militia arrested two individuals of the Kunama ethnic group. On 25 May, a large explosion occurred in Barentu, in Sector West, killing an unconfirmed number of people and injuring dozens. As UNMEE continued to encounter restrictions of movement in areas adjacent to the Zone within Eritrea, its ability to monitor the redeployed positions of the Eritrean Defence Forces remained constrained.

The Military Coordination Commission met (Nairobi, 15 March and 10 May) to discuss the military situation in the Mission area, focusing on security aspects impacting on UNMEE operations. Sector-level coordination meetings were initiated in Sectors West and Centre, with meetings held in March, April and May.

The Boundary Commission, in its thirteenth report annexed to the Secretary-General's report, reiterated that the stalemate persisted; consequently, it was maintaining its presence in the area, at a reduced level, so that it could resume operations if required. It also noted that Ethiopia had not paid its portion of the Commission's expenses.

An escalation of public rhetoric on both sides was noted, and reports indicated that each continued to upgrade and strengthen its armed forces. The Secretary-General expressed concern about public statements by Eritrean authorities attacking the peacekeeping operation and its staff. He noted the 7 April statement by the Ethiopian Foreign Ministry reiterating that the current demarcation line would disrupt the lives of border communities and lead to future conflict, and describing the demarcation process as flawed. He reminded the parties, in particular Ethiopia, that they themselves had entrusted the Boundary Commission with the entire demarcation process, had drawn up its mandate and had selected its Commissioners. Aware of the questions being raised about the long-term effectiveness of UNMEE, the Secretary-General initiated a review aimed at adjusting and streamlining UNMEE's operations as needed, keeping in mind its mandate and the need to uphold the integrity of the ceasefire arrangements.

Communication. Eritrea, on 14 July [S/2004/571], characterized the Secretary-General's report as replete with factual inaccuracies, biased against Eritrea, and portraying a distorted picture of the reality on the ground. It failed to recognize Ethiopia's violation of international law and glossed over its provocative act of building new settlements in Badme, the seriousness of which the United Nations could not downplay. It was also silent on Ethiopia's responsibility for the current state of affairs.

Eritrea stated that it fully respected UNMEE's unhindered freedom of movement in the Zone. However, it could not accept a unilateral extension of the Zone by another stretch of territory termed "adjacent area", nor did it subscribe to UNMEE's interpretation of the 2000 Algiers Peace Agreements [YUN 2000, p. 180] as implying freedom of random inspection without prior notice and government approval. Eritrea cited examples of what it called UNMEE's intrusive and unwarranted activities outside the Zone and emphasized the need for UNMEE to be neutral.

Appointment. On 6 July [S/2004/548], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of the appointment of Major-General Rajender Singh (India) as UNMEE Force Commander, to replace Major-General Robert Gordon (United Kingdom) whose tour of duty was ending. The Council took note of the information [S/2004/549].

Press statement (July). The Security Council President, in a 15 July press statement [SC/8150-APR/995], said that Council members were satisfied that some restrictions on UNMEE's freedom of movement had decreased, but stressed that several other open questions, such as direct flights between Addis Ababa and Asmara, remained unresolved. They called on both parties to continue to cooperate constructively with the Mission to maintain stability and prevent incidents in the border area. They also welcomed UNMEE's ongoing efforts to streamline its operations.

Members welcomed the recent visit (3-7 July) of the Secretary-General to both capitals and expressed the hope that his meetings with Eritrea's President Isaias Afwerki and Ethiopia's Prime Minister Meles Zenawi would provide new momentum for the involvement of both parties with the Special Envoy.

Report of Secretary-General (September). In his 2 September progress report on Ethiopia and Eritrea [S/2004/708], the Secretary-General said that the general situation in the Temporary Security Zone and adjacent areas remained stable. Improvement in the cooperation of both parties with UNMEE had had a positive effect on the overall security environment. Restrictions imposed by Eritrea on UNMEE patrols inside and near the Zone had decreased. The main supply route to UNMEE troops in Sector West was reopened on 9 August but closed again from 1 September. Detentions by Eritrea of locally recruited UN staff had also decreased. Cooperation between UNMEE and the military authorities on the Ethiopian side remained satisfactory. Except for a few incidents, the Ethiopian Armed Forces had imposed no restrictions on UNMEE patrols in the adjacent areas south of the Zone.

On 18 August, Prime Minister Meles Zenawi informed the Secretary-General of Ethiopia's decision to allow UN aircraft to fly directly between Asmara and Addis Ababa without deviation, and on 31 August, an UNMEE team met with Ethiopian authorities to work out the technical details.

Under the chairmanship of the UNMEE Force Commander, the twenty-fifth meeting of the Military Coordination Commission was held (Nairobi, 5 July). A total of six sector-level meetings had been held to review the military situation.

As requested by the Security Council in resolution 1531(2004) (see p. 267), the Secretary-General conducted a review of UNMEE's effectiveness. He determined that the Mission's military component was a vital factor of stability and cautioned the United Nations to be careful not to leave a security vacuum. At the same time, there was a realization that, after four years, the time had come to adjust its configuration, particularly since some areas of the Zone had been militarily stable since UNMEE's establishment. Any change in the force structure should be gradual, taking into consideration the security dynamics so as not to undermine UNMEE's core monitoring function or the Boundary Commission's prospect of resuming its work. Should the current stalemate in the peace process be broken, leading to the demarcation of the border, the Secretary-General said that he would recommend the temporary strengthening of UNMEE in a number of areas, including humanitarian, human rights and legal affairs. In the current circumstances, however, he recommended adjustments in two phases. Phase I, already in progress, included replacing the military demining contingent, which had left in June, with a modest commercial capacity, resulting in annual savings of $6 million and reducing force headquarters staff by up to 30 per cent. Phase II would entail repatriating the infantry battalion and support elements from Sector East and consolidating the existing three sectors into two. The remaining two infantry battalions would adjust their areas of responsibility to support and secure the military observers remaining in Sector East. The troop drawdown would be offset by an increase in air patrols. At the completion of Phase II, the military structure would comprise a force headquarters, two infantry battalions, two demining units, other support elements and up to 220 military observers. The force reserve would come from the remaining force structure. The number of civilian staff would be reduced commensurately. Further reductions might be justified following completion of Phase II and would depend on the situation on the ground.

The persistent humanitarian needs in Ethiopia and Eritrea remained of concern to UN agencies and implementing partners. Given that situation, the Secretary-General extended the mandate of his Special Envoy for the Humanitarian Crisis in the Horn of Africa, Martti Ahtisaari, for another six months to enable him to work with the two Governments, the donor community, the UN country teams and other stakeholders in identifying longer-term solutions to the humanitarian challenges.

Having met with the leaders of both countries during his visit in early July, the Secretary-General remained concerned about the absence of prospects for breaking the stalemate on the demarcation of the border. Neither side had offered any new ideas on how the peace process could be advanced. It should be clear to both parties that progress would not be made by merely restating and maintaining positions. It was time that the more cooperative spirit they had recently demonstrated towards UNMEE be applied to the broader political process in order to move it forward. While awaiting their further moves, the Secretary-General recommended that the UNMEE mandate be extended for a further six months, until 15 March 2005, and that the Security Council authorize the proposed adjustments indicated.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 14 September [meeting 5032], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1560 (2004). The draft [S/2004/728] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its previous resolutions and statements pertaining to the situation between Ethiopia and Eritrea, and the requirements contained therein, including in particular resolution 1531(2004) of 12 March 2004,

Stressing its unwavering commitment to the peace process, including through the role played by the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea, and to the full and expeditious implementation of the comprehensive Peace Agreement signed on 12 December 2000 at Algiers by the Governments of Ethiopia and Eritrea (hereinafter referred to as "the parties") and the preceding Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities signed on 18 June 2000 ("the Algiers Agreements"), and the delimitation decision of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission of 13 April 2002, embraced by the parties as final and binding in accordance with the Algiers Agreements,

Recalling that lasting peace between Ethiopia and Eritrea, as well as in the region, cannot be achieved without the full demarcation of the border between the parties,

Noting with concern, in this regard, the lack of progress made in the demarcation of the border, as reflected in the fourteenth report on the work of the Boundary Commission, of 20 August 2004, which concludes that under the present circumstances the Commission is unable to progress with demarcation activities,

Expressing its concern about Ethiopia's ongoing rejection of significant parts of the decision of the Boundary Commission and its current lack of cooperation with the Commission,

Expressing disappointment about the continuing refusal of Eritrea to engage with the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Ethiopia and Eritrea, whose good offices represent a concrete opportunity for the parties to move the peace process forward,

Recalling the recent increase in United Nations peacekeeping activities and the need to allocate peacekeeping resources in the most effective manner, and recalling in this regard the additional burden caused by the delays in the demarcation process,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 2 September 2004, and fully supporting the observations made therein,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea until 15 March 2005;

2. Approves the adjustments to the Mission, including its presence and operations, as recommended by the Secretary-General in paragraphs 13 to 18 of his report;

3. Calls upon the parties to cooperate fully and expeditiously with the Mission in the implementation of its mandate, to ensure the security of all staff of the Mission, and to remove immediately and unconditionally all restrictions on and impediments to the work and to the full and free movement of the Mission and its staff;

4. Takes note of positive developments in some areas of relations between the Mission and the parties, in this regard welcomes particularly the recent decision by Ethiopia to allow a direct high-altitude flight route between Asmara and Addis Ababa without any deviation, urges Ethiopia and Eritrea to take immediate steps, in consultation with the Mission, towards implementing the direct flights between the two capitals, and also in this regard calls upon Eritrea to reopen the Asmara to Barentu road;

5. Stresses that Ethiopia and Eritrea have the primary responsibility for the implementation of the Algiers Agreements and the decision of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission, and calls upon the parties to show political leadership to achieve a full normalization of their relationship, including through the adoption of further confidence-building measures;

6. Calls upon the parties to cooperate fully and promptly with the Boundary Commission and to create the necessary conditions for demarcation to proceed expeditiously, including through the payment of Ethiopia's dues to the Commission and the appointment of field liaison officers;

7. Urges Ethiopia to show the political will to reaffirm unequivocally its acceptance of the decision of the Boundary Commission, and to take the necessary steps to enable the Commission to demarcate the border without further delay;

8. Reiterates its full support for the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Ethiopia and Eritrea, Mr. Lloyd Axworthy, in his efforts to facilitate the implementation of the Algiers Agreements, the decision of the Boundary Commission and the normalization of diplomatic relations between the two countries through his good offices, and emphasizes that this appointment does not constitute an alternative mechanism;

9. Calls upon Eritrea to enter into dialogue and cooperation with the Special Envoy;

10. Decides to continue monitoring closely the steps taken by the parties in the implementation of their commitments under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and under the Algiers Agreements, including through the Boundary Commission, and to review any implications for the Mission;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to monitor the situation closely, to review the mission's mandate in the light of progress made in the peace process and changes made to the Mission;

12. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communication. The EU, in a 17 September statement by its Presidency [S/2004/802], welcomed resolution 1560(2004) and supported the Mission's rationalization. It expressed concern about the continuing stalemate and urged the two countries to use the next six months to implement measures that might help to break the current deadlock and allow demarcation to proceed.

Five-point peace proposal. On 25 November [S/2004/943], the House of Peoples' Representatives of Ethiopia, reiterating Ethiopia's firm position that the decision of the Boundary Commission was flawed but realizing that lasting peace between Ethiopia and Eritrea was more important, adopted a five-point proposal on peace between them, submitted by Prime Minister Meles Zenawi. By the proposal, Ethiopia would resolve their dispute only through peaceful means and the root causes of their conflict through dialogue; it would accept in principle the Commission's decision, agree to pay its Commission dues and appoint field liaison officers; and it would immediately start dialogue with a view to implementing the decision in question in a manner consistent with the promotion of sustainable peace. Ethiopia's communication to the Secretary-General included the Prime Minister's statement to the House announcing the proposal.

The EU, on 29 November [S/2004/938], welcomed Ethiopia's announcement of the five-point peace plan and said that its agreement to accept the Boundary Commission's decision was an indication of its commitment. The EU remained ready to play a supportive role in the peace process and emphasized that the normalization of relations would be an essential element for regional peace and security.

Eritrea, responding in a 12 December press release [S/2004/968], said that the way forward lay with Ethiopia's full and unconditional respect of the Algiers Agreements; strict compliance with the Boundary Commission's decision; withdrawal of its forces from Eritrean territories; and cooperation with the Commission to ensure expeditious demarcation of the boundary. Eritrea called on the international community to help secure peace and stability by putting pressure on Ethiopia to ensure demarcation.

On 15 December [S/2004/970], Ethiopia, in an aide-memoire said that it found Eritrea's rejection of its five-point peace proposal puzzling as it addressed all of Eritrea's concerns. Ethiopia said that its acceptance of the Boundary Commission's decision was unequivocal and unconditional, but it had used the wording "accepts in principle" in recognition of the technical requirement for adjustments which required dialogue and the Commission's identification of the "anomalies" and "impracticalities" of its decision, which could only be overcome by dialogue.

The Security Council President, in a 21 December press statement [SC/8276-AFR/1084], said that Council members welcomed the Ethiopian announcement of the five-point peace plan and Eritrea's continued acceptance of the Commission's decision. They were encouraged by the movement towards a peaceful solution of the border dispute and looked forward to the beginning of the border demarcation process. They encouraged both countries to work towards a full normalization of their relations, to reiterate their commitment to solving their differences peacefully and to refrain from any destabilizing action in the border area.

Report of Secretary-General (December). The Secretary-General, in his 16 December progress report on Ethiopia and Eritrea [S/2004/973 & Corr.1 & Add.1], referred to Ethiopia's five-point plan and Eritrea's 10 December letter to the Boundary Commission. He stated that it was incumbent upon Ethiopia to express immediately unconditional respect for the Commission's work, including full acceptance of its 13 April 2002 decision, and that Ethiopia had to withdraw its troops from Eritrean territory and cooperate fully with the expeditious demarcation of the border. He stated further that Ethiopia had not complied with the Commission's order to remove illegal settlements from Eritrean territory.

As for the status of the Temporary Security Zone and adjacent areas, the general situation remained calm and the level of cooperation of the military authorities of both countries with UNMEE was satisfactory. During the reporting period, UNMEE observed incursions by both Ethiopian and Eritrean troops into the Zone. Freedom of movement for UNMEE personnel in Eritrea improved; however, the road from Asmara to Keren via Barentu remained closed to UNMEE, and immigration procedures imposed on its staff at Ethiopia and Eritrea airports remained in place. While Ethiopia had approved direct flights between the two capitals, efforts to secure Eritrea's approval were unsuccessful. The Secretary-General appealed to Eritrea to avoid further delay in finalizing the necessary direct flights arrangements with UNMEE.

At meetings of the Military Coordination Commission, UNMEE put forward proposals for improving communications and the security situation, including the establishment of a communications hotline, the inclusion of local police and civil administrators as observers in future meetings and military and police withdrawal from within 250 metres of both sides of the Zone.

In general, the Secretary-General was encouraged by the parties' continued commitment to the ceasefire, as manifested in the relative military stability in the border area and regular meetings of the Military Coordination Commission, and in their cooperation with UNMEE. However, serious improvement was still required as the protracted stalemate in the peace process continued. Noting Ethiopia's intention to resolve the dispute through peaceful means, he welcomed any step that might contribute to the implementation of the Algiers Agreements and the Boundary Commission's decision, the initiation of dialogue between Eritrea and Ethiopia and the willingness to address the root causes of the conflict and to normalize bilateral relations. He encouraged Ethiopia to formally initiate implementation of its proposal through the Boundary Commission and called on both parties to refrain from any action in the border area that could be viewed as destabilizing.

Annexed to the Secretary-General's report was the fifteenth report [S/2004/973/Corr.1] of the Boundary Commission covering the period 20 August to 14 December, which indicated no further progress in its demarcation activities. Noting Ethiopia's five-point peace proposal, it said that Ethiopia had yet to pay its outstanding dues. An addendum to the Commission's report was issued on 27 December [S/2004/973/Add.1].

UNMEE financing

On 21 January [A/58/633], the Secretary-General submitted the performance report on UNMEE's budget for the period 1 July 2002 to 30 June 2003. Total expenditure for that period amounted to $209,619,100 out of an apportionment of $220,830,200, a variance of $11,211,100, or 5.1 per cent.

ACABQ reviewed the financial performance report on 12 April [A/58/759/Add.8] and recommended that the unencumbered balance of $11,211,100 and other income and adjustments totalling $13,294,000, be credited to Member States in a manner to be determined by the General Assembly. It recommended that the estimated budget requirement as requested be reduced by $3,129,200, to $198,331,600 gross ($193,774,200 net).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 June [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/58/824], adopted resolution 58/302 without vote [agenda item 141].

Financing of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea

9. Requests the Secretary-General to take all action necessary to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

Financial performance report for the period from 1 July 2002 to 30 June 2003

On 21 December [A/59/636], the Secretary-General submitted UNMEE's budget for the period 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2006, amounting to $176,716,200.

The Assembly, on 23 December, decided that the agenda item on UNMEE financing would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session (decision 59/552).

Western Sahara

The United Nations continued its search in 2004 for an end to the dispute over the question of governance of Western Sahara, despite a lack of movement in narrowing the negotiating positions of the two parties to the dispute, Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (POLISARIO). Since the parties' agreement in 1990 to hold a referendum for the people to decide between independence or integration of the Territory with Morocco, progress had been made in establishing voter rolls, but plans to organize elections had met with objections from both sides. In 2003, the Personal Envoy of the Secretary-General proposed a Peace Plan for Self-Determination of the People of Western Sahara, dividing responsibilities of governance between the parties before holding a referendum, but not requiring the approval of both sides for every step of implementation. POLISARIO eventually accepted the plan, but Morocco rejected it and continued to do so in 2004. In the Secretary-General's view, an agreement appeared more distant by the end of 2004 than it had a year earlier, given the lack of consensus on measures to overcome the existing deadlock.

In June, the Secretary-General's Personal Envoy, James A. Baker III, resigned, having concluded that he had done all he could on the issue. The Secretary-General requested his Special Representative for Western Sahara, Alvaro de Soto, to continue to work with the parties and the neighbouring States towards a mutually acceptable political solution.

The United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO), established by Security Council resolution 690(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 794] to implement the UN settlement plan proposed by the Secretary-General, continued to monitor the ceasefire between the two parties and to report on developments, as it had for 13 years. On three occasions in 2004, the Council renewed its mandate, maintaining its authorized strength at 230 military personnel.

There was some progress in the implementation of confidence-building measures. The parties resumed family visits between Western Saharan refugees living in camps in Algeria and their relatives in the Territory, and telephone service was expanded in the camps. In February and June, POLISARIO released a total of 200 Moroccan prisoners of war, leaving another 412 such prisoners still in detention by late 2004, some of them for more than 20 years.

Peace-making efforts

Report of Secretary-General (January). The Secretary-General, in response to Security Council resolution 1513(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 264], reported on 19 January [S/2004/39] on developments in Western Sahara since his previous report [YUN 2003, p. 262]. During that period, his recently appointed Special Representative for Western Sahara, Alvaro de Soto (Peru), held talks with officials from Morocco, POLISARIO, Algeria and Mauritania. The area of responsibility of MINURSO remained calm, with no indication that either side intended to resume hostilities. Under the command of Major General Gyorgy Száraz (Hungary), it continued to monitor the ceasefire, conduct ground and air patrols, and inspect units larger than company size of the Royal Moroccan Army (RMA) and POLISARIO military forces. Both sides carried out routine maintenance and training activities. Some limitations on MINURSO's freedom of movement were imposed by POLISARIO in areas east of the berm. MINURSO continued to cooperate with the parties on the marking and disposal of mines and unexploded ordnance. That situation remained the pattern throughout 2004.

The Secretary-General reported that, since the release of 643 Moroccan prisoners of war in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 258], 613 such prisoners remained held by POLISARIO, most of them for over 20 years. He reiterated his call for the release of all remaining prisoners of war and for both sides to account for those still missing in relation to the conflict. The situation of Western Saharan refugees deteriorated in early 2004, due to shortages of relief aid that resulted in acute and chronic malnutrition of those in the Tindouf area in Algeria. The World Food Programme (WFP) and UNHCR were planning a joint mission to the refugee camps. The UNHCR-operated telephone connection between the refugee camps in Algeria and the Territory was re-established on 12 January, and telephone service between one camp in the Tindouf area and the Territory was to be extended to other locations.

The Secretary-General's Personal Envoy, James A. Baker III (United States), having held discussions with Moroccan officials in December 2003, was of the view that the MINURSO mandate should be extended until 30 April 2004 to allow him time to consult further with Morocco on its final response to the Peace Plan for Self-Determination of the People of Western Sahara, which he proposed to the parties in January 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 259]. The Secretary-General concurred with his view and recommended that the Council extend the mandate for three months.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 30 January [meeting 4905], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1523 (2004). The draft [S/2004/76] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its resolutions on Western Sahara, and reaffirming in particular resolution 1495(2003) of 31 July 2003,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 30 April 2004;
2. Requests that the Secretary-General provide a report on the situation before the end of the present mandate;
3. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (April). As requested by the foregoing resolution, the Secretary-General, in a 23 April report [S/2004/

325 & Add.1], described developments relating to Western Sahara since his January report.

His Personal Envoy held meetings with Moroccan officials on 2 and 15 April to discuss issues pertaining to Morocco's final response to resolution 1495(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 262], calling on the parties to work with the United Nations and with each other towards accepting and implementing its terms. He also met with POLISARIO in March. During a meeting with the Personal Envoy on 15 April, Morocco delivered its final response to the plan, which was annexed to the report, raising issues that it considered unacceptable. It believed that the autonomy-based political solution offered to the people as a transitional step could only be final; it could therefore not agree to a transition period marked by uncertainty as to the final status of the Territory. On the other hand, the autonomy solution, as agreed to by the parties, by definition ruled out the possibility for the independence option to be submitted to the population. It was, therefore, out of the question for Morocco to engage in negotiations with anyone over its sovereignty and territorial integrity. With those aspects ruled out from the plan, Morocco was prepared to negotiate a final settlement through a viable autonomy status for the Sahara region.

During the reporting period, MINURSO conducted ground and air patrols to inspect Moroccan and POLISARIO forces. The limitations on the Mission's freedom of movement in areas of the Territory east of the berm did not significantly affect its ability to monitor the situation in those areas. In February, MINURSO's Force Commander became Officer-in-Charge also of the Mission during the absence of the Special Representative for Western Sahara, who had been asked by the Secretary-General to head his mission of good offices mission in Cyprus.

On 13 February, POLISARIO announced the release of a further 100 Moroccan prisoners of war, who were subsequently repatriated under the auspices of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), reducing the number of remaining prisoners to 514.

WFP and UNHCR undertook a joint assessment mission to the Tindouf refugee camps in January, where, despite improvements in donor support, the food situation remained unstable. The Special Representative and UNHCR promoted confidence-building measures aimed at facilitating person-to-person contacts between refugees in the camps in Algeria and their communities of origin in Western Sahara. The parties and Algeria, as the country of asylum, approved the revised UNHCR plan of action for family visits for refugees in the camps, which had been submitted to them in December 2003 [YUN

2003, p. 264]. The first exchange of family visits between Western Saharan refugees living in the Tindouf camps and their relatives in the town of Laayoune in the Territory began on 5 March, followed by four more exchanges of visits, all involving a total of 240 people from both sides. As at 31 March, over 8,500 people had sought to be included in the exchange programme. MINURSO civilian police escorted flights carrying visitors to and from the Territory and the Tindouf refugee camps.

The Secretary-General stated that opposition to a non-consensual solution to the conflict over Western Sahara was clear. He believed that Morocco's final response to the Peace Plan would require the parties to agree to negotiate a solution based on "autonomy within the framework of Moroccan sovereignty". Sovereignty, he noted, was the fundamental issue dividing the parties. Given their positions, the Council could either terminate MINURSO and return the issue of Western Sahara to the General Assembly, or try again to get them to work towards acceptance and implementation of the Peace Plan, which still constituted the best political solution to the conflict. The Secretary-General therefore hoped that the Council would reaffirm its recent unanimous support for the Plan and call upon the parties to work towards its implementation. To allow them sufficient time to work towards that goal, he recommended that MINURSO's mandate be extended for 10 months, until 28 February 2005.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

On 29 April [meeting 4957], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1541(2004). The draft [S/2004/330] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its resolutions on Western Sahara, and reaffirming, in particular resolution 1495 (2003) of 31 July 2003,

Reaffirming its commitment to assist the parties to achieve a just, lasting and mutually acceptable political solution which will provide for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara in the context of arrangements consistent with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and noting the role and responsibilities of the parties in this respect,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms its support for the Peace Plan for Self-Determination of the People of Western Sahara as an optimum political solution on the basis of agreement between the two parties;

2. Reaffirms its strong support for the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Personal Envoy to achieve a mutually acceptable political solution to the dispute over Western Sahara;

3. Calls upon all the parties and the States of the region to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General and his Personal Envoy;

4. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 31 October 2004;

5. Requests that the Secretary-General provide a report on the situation before the end of the present mandate, and also requests the Secretary-General to include in this report an evaluation of the mission size necessary for the Mission to carry out its mandated tasks, with a view towards its possible reduction;

6. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Resignation of Personal Envoy. On 11 June [S/2004/492], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that his Personal Envoy for Western Sahara, who had served in that capacity for seven years, had offered his resignation, which the Secretary-General had accepted with deep regret. The Secretary-General thanked the Envoy for the considerable effort and time he had devoted to helping the parties, and indicated that his Special Representative for Western Sahara, Mr. de Soto, would continue to work with the parties and neighbouring countries in pursuit of a just and lasting peace that would provide for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara.

Statements of position (August/September). Algeria, POLISARIO and Morocco put forward their positions on Western Sahara in letters to the Security Council dated 17 August [A/58/873-S/2004/657], 30 August [A/59/314-S/2004/704] and 24 September [S/2004/760], respectively.

Algeria regarded the question of Western Sahara as one of decolonization, to be resolved through the exercise by the Saharans of their right to self-determination. Since the conflict involved Western Sahara and Morocco, the occupying Power, any settlement had to be reached only by those two parties. To place the problem in an Algerian-Moroccan context was a delaying tactic because Algeria, which had no direct part in the conflict, could not and would not replace Western Sahara in determining its future.

POLISARIO, in its letter, transmitted by Namibia, reviewed the history of the conflict and peace-making attempts. It agreed with the Secretary-General's conclusion that Morocco had reneged on its commitments under the 1991 UN settlement plan [YUN 1991, p. 793], which it had accepted. Illegally occupying a neighbouring country for 30 years, Morocco had plundered its natural resources, caused wars in the region and frustrated the international community's peace-making efforts. Western Sahara would continue to resist that foreign occupation until the attainment of its right to self-determination and independence.

Morocco annexed to its letter a memorandum of clarification in response to what it called the other parties' diplomatic campaign to delay a definitive, consensual political solution. It asserted that its status with respect to Sahara was not that of a foreign State or of an occupying Power as Algeria had suggested, since "Sahara had been an integral part of the Kingdom of Morocco since time immemorial", notwithstanding a colonial hiatus. Morocco had participated in good faith in the implementation of the UN settlement plan but had been thwarted by POLISARIO's constant efforts to distort the voter identification process for the referendum envisaged in that plan. For both legal and political reasons, it had rejected the Personal Envoy's Peace Plan. Morocco believed that the search for a mutually acceptable political solution remained the best path to a definitive settlement of the regional dispute.

Report of Secretary-General (October). The Secretary-General, in response to resolution 1541 (2004) (see p. 276), submitted a 20 October report [S/2004/827] covering developments in Western Sahara since his April report. He indicated that his Special Representative, having completed his temporary assignment in Cyprus, resumed his responsibilities in respect of Western Sahara in July and, in September, conducted a round of consultations with the King of Morocco, the President of Mauritania, the Foreign Minister of Algeria and POLISARIO leaders on the Peace Plan. He ascertained that Morocco continued to reject elements of the Plan but was prepared to negotiate a mutually acceptable autonomy status, while POLISARIO maintained its support for it. Both POLISARIO and Algeria were opposed to discussing any aspect of the Plan unless Morocco agreed to support it. Mauritania maintained its willingness to support any solution that was mutually agreeable to the parties.

In June, POLISARIO announced the release of a further 100 Moroccan prisoners of war, who were repatriated to Morocco under ICRC auspices, leaving 412 prisoners in detention. UNHCR and the Special Representative urged the parties, during a series of consultations, to implement confidence-building measures. Exchange of visits between Western Saharan refugees in the Tindouf refugee camps in Algeria and their family members in the Territory took place on 31 August, with MINURSO support. The number of persons involved in the six months of the operation of the programme totalled 19,009, including 11,884 from the Tindouf area camps and 7,125 from the Territory. After a review of the first implementation phase of the confidence-building measures with the parties, they expressed their commitment to the continuation of those measures. They also agreed to continue the family visits and maintain the telephone service until the end of 2004 in order to give all concerned sufficient time to further review the draft plan of action for the second phase.

An assessment team from the Department of Peacekeeping Operations visited the area and identified two options regarding the strength of MINURSO's military component. The first option would maintain the current level of 203 military observers working out of nine team sites on both sides of the buffer strip, with two sector headquarters and one force headquarters. The second would involve closing the two sector headquarters; increasing headquarters staff for personnel matters, logistics, operations and planning; and closing one of the team sites, thus reducing MINURSO's total military strength to 193.

The Secretary-General observed that agreement on the Peace Plan appeared more distant than six months earlier, with no agreement on how to overcome the deadlock. However, he would continue to look for opportunities to advance the goal of enabling the people of Western Sahara to exercise their right to self-determination. Expressing concern about the recent escalation in public rhetoric emanating from the parties and the region, he viewed the renewal of the family visits as a welcome sign. He appealed to POLISARIO to release all remaining Moroccan prisoners of war, and to both Morocco and POLISARIO to cooperate with ICRC in accounting for all missing persons. The Secretary-General also noted the appearance in the heavily mined buffer strip of clandestine migrants, groups of whom occasionally remained stranded there without means of sustainment. That was part of a broader phenomenon of trafficking in human beings through the region, including through the MINURSO area of operations, which had no mandate or resources to deal with it.

In general, the effective monitoring of the ceasefire between the two countries by MINURSO over the previous 13 years had been a major stabilizing and confidence-building achievement. Both sides, having held consultations with the MINURSO Force Commander, preferred that the Mission's size not be reduced. The Secretary-General, expressing his preference for maintaining the Mission's military component as currently structured and staffed, recommended that the Security Council extend MINURSO's mandate for six months, until 30 April 2005.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 28 October [meeting 5068], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1570(2004). The draft [S/2004/869] was submitted by France, the Russian Federation, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on Western Sahara, including resolutions 1495(2003) of 31 July 2003 and 1541(2004) of 29 April 2004,

Reaffirming its commitment to assist the parties to achieve a just, lasting and mutually acceptable political solution which will provide for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara in the context of arrangements consistent with the principles and purposes of the Charter of the United Nations, and noting the role and responsibilities of the parties in this respect,

Reiterating its call upon the parties and States of the region to continue to cooperate fully with the United Nations to end the current impasse and to achieve progress towards a political solution,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 20 October 2004,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 30 April 2005;

2. Requests that the Secretary-General provide a report on the situation before the end of the mandate period and an interim report, within three months from adoption of the resolution, on the evolution of the situation and on the Mission's size and concept of operation, with further detail on the options discussed in the report of the Secretary-General of 20 October 2004 on the possible reduction of the Mission staff, including civilian and administrative personnel;

3. Calls upon Member States to consider voluntary contributions to fund confidence-building measures that allow for increased person-to-person contact, in particular the exchange of family visits;

4. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly had before it the Secretary-General's July report [A/59/134] summarizing reports on Western Sahara that had been submitted to the Security Council from 1 July 2003 to 30 June 2004.

On 10 December [meeting 71], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee [A/59/478], adopted resolution 59/131 by recorded vote (50-0-100) [agenda item 20].

Question of Western Sahara

The General Assembly,

Having considered in depth the question of Western Sahara,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of all peoples to self-determination and independence, in accordance with the principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 58/109 of 9 December 2003,

Recalling also all resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council on the question of Western Sahara,

Recalling further Security Council resolutions 658(1990) of 27 June 1990 and 690(1991) of 29 April 1991, by which the Security Council approved the settlement plan for Western Sahara,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 1359(2001) of 29 June 2001 and 1429(2002) of 30 July 2002, as well as resolution 1495(2003) of 31 July 2003, in which the Council expressed its support of the peace plan for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara as an optimum political solution on the basis of agreement between the two parties, and resolution 1541(2004) of 29 April 2004,

Taking note of the responses of the parties and neighbouring States to the Personal Envoy of the Secretary-General, concerning the peace plan, contained in the report of the Secretary-General of 23 May 2003,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the United Nations towards the people of Western Sahara,

Noting with satisfaction the entry into force of the ceasefire in accordance with the proposal made by the Secretary-General, and stressing the importance it attaches to the maintenance of the ceasefire as an integral part of the settlement plan,

Underlining, in this regard, the validity of the settlement plan, while noting the fundamental differences between the parties in its implementation,

Stressing that the lack of progress in the settlement of the dispute on Western Sahara continues to cause suffering to the people of Western Sahara, remains a source of potential instability in the region and obstructs the economic development of the Maghreb region and that, in view of this, the search for a political solution is critically needed,

Welcoming the efforts of the Secretary-General in search of a mutually acceptable political solution, which will provide for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara,

Having examined the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Having also examined the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General; obligations under international humanitarian law to release without further delay all those held since the start of the conflict;

8. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to consider the situation in Western Sahara and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session;

MINURSO

In 2004, the military component of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO), which was under the command of Major General György Száraz (Hungary), continued to monitor the ceasefire between the Royal Moroccan Army and the POLISARIO forces that had been in effect since 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 796]. Its strength throughout the year remained at approximately 230 troops, its authorized size.

MINURSO financing

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-eighth session, had before it the performance report on the MINURSO budget for 1 July 2002 to 30 June 2003 [A/58/642 & Corr.1], showing a total expenditure of $40,976,400 for the reporting period, out of an apportionment of $45,200,300; and the MINURSO budget for 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005 [A/58/657], amounting to $44,134,700, inclusive of budgeted voluntary contributions in kind totalling $2,144,700.

ACABQ, having reviewed both reports, recommended, on 12 April [A/58/759/Add.2], that the unencumbered balance of $3,120,500 for the period

1 July 2002 to 30 June 2003 and other income and adjustments in the amount of $2,833,000, be credited to Member States in a manner to be determined by the Assembly. It also recommended that the estimated requirements in the proposed budget for 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005 of $41,990,000 be reduced by $130,000, to $41,860,000, should the Security Council decide to continue the mandate of the Mission beyond 30 April 2004.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 June [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/58/830], adopted resolution 58/309 without vote [agenda item 147].

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

Implementation of NPT Safeguards Agreement

The Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), in its resolution 2004/18 of 10 March [GOV/2004/18] (see p. 549), welcomed the 19 December 2003 decision of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya [YUN 2003, p. 269] to abandon its programmes for developing weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery, and its request to IAEA to ensure verification that all its nuclear activities would be under safeguards and exclusively for peaceful purposes [YUN 2003, p. 550]. IAEA appreciated Libya's active cooperation and openness since that date to facilitate the Agency's verification work and the elimination of those programmes.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 April [meeting 4949], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/10 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council takes note of resolution 2004/18 of 10 March 2004 of the Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency regarding the implementation of the safeguards agreement of the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, a State party to the Treaty on the Non-proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, by which the Board requested the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency to report a case of non-compliance to the Security Council for information purposes only, while commending the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya for the actions it has taken to date and those it has proposed to take to remedy it.

The Council welcomes the decision by the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to abandon its programmes for developing weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery and the positive steps taken to fulfil its commitments and obligations, including its active cooperation with the International Atomic Energy Agency and the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons.

The Council takes note that in its resolution 2004/18 the Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency recognized the decision of the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya as a step towards the realization of the goal of an Africa and a Middle East free of weapons of mass destruction and at peace.

The Council reaffirms the need to seek to resolve proliferation problems by peaceful means through political and diplomatic channels.

The Council welcomes existing and future efforts to assist the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya in this task, and expresses the hope that the steps taken by the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya would facilitate and improve international cooperation with and enhance the security of that country.

The Council encourages the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to ensure the verified elimination of all of its weapons of mass destruction programmes. It welcomes the roles played in that regard by the International Atomic Energy Agency and the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons in facilitating the fulfilment of the commitments of the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, demonstrating the importance and usefulness of existing international treaty regimes.

Southern Africa

Angola

The General Assembly, in resolution 59/216 of 22 December, welcomed the successful implementation of the 2002 Memorandum of Understanding additional to the Lusaka Protocol [YUN 2002, p. 221], which ended hostilities in Angola and created unprecedented conditions for the re-establishment and consolidation of peace in Angola. The Assembly requested Angola and the United Nations, and invited international financial institutions, to prepare and organize an international donors conference for long-term development and reconstruction of the country, including special economic assistance (see p. 927).

Following completion of the mandates and subsequent closure of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM) (in 1997) and the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola (MONUA) (in 1999), the Assembly decided on 13 September 2004 to defer consideration of the agenda item on the financing of those two missions and to include it in the draft agenda of its fifty-ninth (2004) session (decision 58/577). On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session (decision 59/552).

Mozambique

The General Assembly, by resolution 59/214 of 22 December, commended Mozambique for its efforts in the maintenance of peace, stability, economic growth and development and for the enhancement of democracy and the consolidation of national reconciliation in the country. It requested the Secretary-General to make arrangements to continue to mobilize and coordinate humanitarian and reconstruction assistance to support Mozambique (see p. 930).

Zimbabwe

In statements released on 15 April and 28 May [S/2004/336, S/2004/447] and forwarded to the Security Council, the EU Presidency condemned the violence, intimidation and irregularities before and during parliamentary by-elections in Zimbabwe. In a further statement on 23 June [S/2004/516], the EU condemned the Government's closure of a newspaper prior to elections.

Comoros

The AU Central Organ of the Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution, in a communiqué issued on 30 January and transmitted to the Security Council [S/2004/88], welcomed the signing of the Moroni agreement on 20 December 2003 on the Transitional Arrangements in the Comoros and the outcome of the first meeting of the Follow-up Committee on the agreement (5 - 7 January 2004), as well as the progress made since then in the search for a lasting solution to the Comorian crisis.

The Central Organ authorized the deployment of an AU Observer Mission (MIOC) for a period of four months, as recommended in the report of the Chairperson of the Commission on the Situation in the Comoros. It welcomed the positive outcome of the meeting convened in Paris on 21 January to establish the trust fund to support the ongoing transition in the Comoros.

Cooperation between the AU and the UN system

In 2004, the Security Council, at its 19 November meeting [meeting 5084] in Nairobi, considered its institutional relationship with the AU. The representative of the AU Chairman, in his address to the Council, drew attention to the various areas of cooperation between the United Nations and the AU, particularly in the establishment of the AU Peace and Security Council, the Military Staff Committee, the African Standby Force and the early warning system in Africa (see p. 114). He hoped that the cooperation for capacity-building in Africa would be further enhanced in all those areas. He also praised support for the AU Commission and the New Partnership for Africa's Development.

The EU, in a 25 May statement [S/2004/444], welcomed the launching of the AU Peace and Security Council.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 November [meeting 5084], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/44 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council reiterates its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, and recalls that cooperation with regional and subregional organizations in matters relating to the maintenance of peace and security is an important pillar of the system of collective security established by the Charter of the United Nations, as provided for in Chapter VIII thereof.

The Council reaffirms the statement by its President of 20 July 2004, which underscores the importance of a stronger relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations consistent with the principles set forth in Articles 52 and 53 of the Charter.

The Council, at its meeting on 19 November 2004 in Nairobi, addressed the institutional relationship between the United Nations and the African Union, including their collective efforts to resolve African conflicts and to promote sustainable peace, development and stability.

The Council, referring to the Constitutive Act of the African Union, welcomes the establishment of the Peace and Security Council of the African Union, and expresses its support for early ratification of the Peace and Security Protocol by all African States and the establishment of an African standby force and an early warning system in Africa. The completion of these efforts will allow for better coordination of regional mechanisms to foster peace and security, sustainable development and the eradication of poverty in Africa, as set forth in the New Partnership for Africa's Development.

The Council recognizes the importance of strengthening cooperation with the African Union in order to help build its capacity to deal with collective security challenges, including through the establishment of rapid and appropriate responses to emerging crisis situations and the development of effective strategies for conflict prevention, peacekeeping and peacebuilding.

The Council welcomes, in this regard, the provision by the United Nations and donors of technical, logistical and military planning support to the African Union in the establishment of African Union peace and security mechanisms and operations.

The Council particularly welcomes the leading role of the African Union in efforts to settle crises on the African continent, and expresses its full support for the peace initiatives conducted by the African Union, and through subregional organizations such as the Economic Community of West African States, the Southern African Development Community, the Central African Economic and Monetary Community, the Intergovernmental Authority on Development and other regional agreements committed to the peaceful settlement of disputes in Africa. The Council underlines the importance of being kept fully informed, consistent with Article 54 of the Charter.

The Council also welcomes the strengthening of practical cooperation between the United Nations and the African Union, as demonstrated in the case of the African Mission in the Sudan and the African Mission in Burundi, to support and enhance the management and operational capacities of the African Union in the field of peacekeeping and peacebuilding.

The Council calls upon the international community to support the efforts of the African Union to strengthen its capacities for peacekeeping, conflict resolution and post-conflict reconstruction, through the provision of information, training, expertise and resources, and to support the activities of the United Nations and its agencies in this regard.

The Council further invites the Secretary-General to explore, in close consultation with the Chairperson of the African Union Commission, new means of cooperation between the United Nations and the African Union, especially taking into consideration the expanded mandate and the new organs of the African Union.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in his 1 September consolidated report on cooperation between the United Nations and regional and other organizations [A/59/303], said that consultations continued to be held on a regular basis and at all levels between the United Nations and the AU. He described specific areas of cooperation between them and efforts to strengthen that cooperation.

Chapter III

Americas

In 2004, the United Nations continued to advance the cause of lasting peace, human rights, sustainable development and the rule of law in the Americas.

In Guatemala, peaceful elections in December 2003 and the orderly handover of power in January 2004 brought a sense of relief and renewed optimism. The United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala (MINUGUA) continued to fulfil its mandate of verifying compliance with the peace accords signed in 1996 between the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca. MINUGUA, in anticipation of the termination of its mandate at the end of the year, continued its two-year phase-down of operations and carried out a transition strategy designed to build national capacity to promote the goals of the peace accords. The formal public closure of the Mission took place in November.

Despite efforts in January by the Caribbean Community (CARICOM) to end the polarization and build consensus in Haiti, the political and security crisis in that country escalated into violence in February. President Jean-Bertrand Aristide resigned and the constitutional President, Boniface Alexandre, requested UN assistance to restore peace and stability, thereby authorizing international troops to enter Haiti. The Multinational Interim Force (MIF) was immediately deployed and an interim government was selected. May floods and Hurricane Jeanne exacerbated the situation and appeals to donors were made. In view of the unstable and complex security situation, the Security Council established the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH), which assumed the operations from MIF in June. In December, in response to a number of kidnappings in the capital and warnings of possible increased violence, MINUSTAH conducted an intensive patrolling operation, which resulted in a peaceful and secure environment through the end of the year.

In other developments in the region, the Andean Zone of Peace was established at the fifteenth meeting of the Andean Presidential Council in Ecuador. Cuba denounced new restrictions placed by the United States on visits to Cuba by relatives, family remittances to Cubans and tourist travel. The General Assembly again called on States to refrain from promulgating laws and measures such as the ongoing embargo against Cuba by the United States. It also adopted resolutions on strengthening United Nations cooperation with the Organization of American States and CARICOM.

The General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to submit a report on the situation in Central America in 2005 and decided to consider the item every two years.

On 23 December, by decision 59/552, the General Assembly decided to consider the item "The situation in Central America: progress in fashioning a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development" at its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session.

Central America

Guatemala

Following the successful conclusion of elections in Guatemala in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 282] for the third time since the signing of the Guatemala peace agreements in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 168], the orderly handover of power in January brought a sense of relief and renewed optimism to the population. The country continued to make significant progress in consolidating the peace and laid a firmer foundation on which to construct a better future. Notable progress was made in the areas of human rights, demilitarization and the strengthening of civilian authority, and in decentralization, which allowed the increased participation of citizens in decision-making. However, in the socio-economic sphere, especially agrarian reform, progress remained limited, due mainly to inadequate financing.

The United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala (MINUGUA) (see below) continued to verify the 1996 Agreement on a Firm and Lasting Peace [YUN 1996, p. 168], signed by the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca (URNG), and to monitor compliance with the 2000-2004 verification timetable [YUN 2000, p. 239]. In anticipation of its departure at the end of 2004, MINUGUA continued its two-year phase-down of operations and carried out a transition strategy designed to build national capacity to promote the goals of the peace accords. The formal public closure of the Mission took place on 15 November. MINUGUA received Guatemala's highest civilian honours, the Order of the Quetzal, in recognition of its work.

MINUGUA

The mandate of MINUGUA, which had been extended to 31 December 2004 by General Assembly resolution 58/238 [YUN 2003, p. 283], focused in 2004 on verification of two areas—human rights, and demilitarization and the strengthening of civilian power—as outlined in the 1996 Agreement on a Firm and Lasting Peace [YUN 1996, p. 168].

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Assembly resolution 58/238, the Secretary-General submitted on 30 August [A/59/307] the ninth and final report on the implementation of the Guatemalan peace agreements, which summarized political developments during the previous year, and the status of the implementation of the peace accords. The Secretary-General said that the political environment had improved considerably since his last report [YUN 2003, p. 280] and that the electoral defeat of General Efraín Ríos Montt [ibid., p. 279], under whose 1982-1983 rule the army committed some of the worst atrocities of the conflict, was a sign that Guatemalans were rejecting the past and looking towards the future.

Regarding the implementation of the peace accords (1996-2004), the Secretary-General said that it had been plagued by obstacles and setbacks, and the resistance of powerful groups that felt threatened by change. On 25 February, President Oscar Berger pledged to reinvigorate implementation of the peace accords with the support of a new National Peace Accords Commission.

In the area of human rights, the Secretary-General said that the overall assessment of progress was positive. Advances included: the creation of a new civilian police force, an independent Public Prosecutor's Office and a Public Defender's Institute; the enactment of a judicial career law which had improved the selection, training and evaluation of judges; improvements in technology and expansions in the physical infrastructure of the courts, as well as better access for indigenous people through the hiring of bilingual staff and interpreters; and the creation of five Justice Administration Centres in the country's predominantly indigenous areas. The main challenge was to consolidate the rule of law amid a surge in crime and manifold evidence that key institutional reform processes launched under the accords had lost momentum or had regressed. The National Human Rights Movement reported 18 incidents of harassment during the first half of 2004, mainly threats to human rights organizations or others involved in judicial processes. A 2003 initiative, reached in agreement with the United Nations and the former Government to create the Commission for the Investigation of Illegal Groups and Clandestine Security Organizations (CICIACS) to investigate clandestine groups, was withdrawn from Congress in May amid constitutional objections. Although several articles of the agreement were declared unconstitutional by the Constitutional Court, the new Government said it remained committed to creating CICIACS and would propose modifications to the United Nations after consultations with human rights groups and other interested actors. Public security remained a major concern to Guatemalans, who were suffering under a surge of violent crime common to post-conflict societies. Guatemala's location in the drug trafficking corridor made it vulnerable to organized crime groups, and the deplorable condition of the National Civilian Police had allowed crime to proliferate, resulting in increasing and serious abuse by its members, including kidnapping, social cleansing and torture. The naming of a well-regarded human rights activist, Frank Larue, to head the Presidential Commission on Human Rights had instilled new dynamism in that institution. Reparations to human rights abuse victims would be a test of Guatemala's commitment to human rights. The Government provided initial funding for a National Reparations Programme for the victims of human rights violations, and named Rosalina Tuyuc, a respected indigenous leader and victims' representative, to head the commission overseeing the programme. However, the programme still needed to be placed on firmer legal and financial footing. The Office of the Human Rights Ombudsman also needed to be strengthened, and international observation of and assistance for the human rights situation in Guatemala continued. The proposed office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights would make an important contribution in that regard.

In the area of identity and rights of indigenous peoples, reforms had taken place at the legal and institutional levels through the creation of special programmes and agencies, as envisaged in the peace accords. Debate was also taking place on the topics of racism and discrimination. However, the everyday reality for most indigenous people had changed little. Except for access to communications media from which it had been traditionally excluded, the indigenous population remained outside the mainstream of national life and the worst social indicators continued to be registered in predominantly indigenous areas.

The report noted that great changes in the area of demilitarization and the strengthening of civilian authority had occurred during the past year. The army was trimmed from 27,000 to 15,500 troops and officers, a new military budget ceiling was set at 0.33 per cent of gross domestic product, and the Presidential General Staff was eliminated and a professional civilian presidential security force created in its place. Although a new human rights-based military doctrine was presented publicly in July, more still needed to be done to institutionalize civilian control over the armed forces and intelligence structures.

Little actual change was noted in the inter-related areas of socio-economic aspects, the agrarian situation and gender issues. The Secretary-General remarked that only limited results had been achieved in agrarian reform. Despite increases in social spending and the creation of new institutions to address land issues, public services remained inadequate, rural development opportunities scarce and land conflicts persistent. The percentage of the population living in poverty remained at 57 per cent, while the number of those living in extreme poverty had increased. One of the main limitations to improving the situation was the chronic lack of government funds to finance the expansion of State services benefiting the poor, resulting from its failure to increase the tax base. Efforts to improve access to land and resolve land conflicts had also been insufficient. The government agency responsible for providing credit for land purchases remained severely underfunded, as was the one created for mediating land disputes, which also lacked the institutional stability to play that role in a sustained manner. Improvements in Guatemala's health system were modest and the country continued to exhibit some of the worst primary health indicators in Latin America. However, one positive step was the creation of the integrated health-care system for the rural areas. Although significant progress had been made in the area of education reform, much more needed to be done. Increases in education spending were hampered by the inadequacy of the education budget. The Government succeeded in lowering illiteracy rates to 30 per cent and started bilingual education, but that was available to less than 10 per cent of indigenous children. The most important advance in the area of decentralization was the increase in citizen participation in local decision-making. In many parts of the country, civil society groups were beginning to play a more active role in influencing municipal and departmental policy-making, and the new Administration named several governors proposed by the Departmental Development Councils. Significant efforts were made to reform laws, create institutions and formulate public policies favouring women and gender equality; however, domestic violence, unequal access to education and jobs, and low levels of political participation among women persisted. Funding shortages limited the reach and impact of newly created institutions for dealing with women's issues.

The process of demobilizing and reintegrating the URNG combatants into civilian life was successful. However, the process fell short in providing viable economic opportunities for ex-combatants, due to insufficient government assistance in providing land, housing, credit and other basic services. A similar situation confronted returning former refugees and internally displaced persons.

The Secretary-General observed that Guatemala could not rest on its achievements, as the deeper structural reforms envisaged by the peace accords lagged far behind the political advances. Crime and insecurity were the greatest dangers to Guatemala's democracy and economic future, and halting the deterioration of the National Civilian Police had become a matter of national urgency. Other areas needing attention included unpaid debt to victims; the investigation and punishment of those responsible for acts of genocide and other crimes against humanity; tax reform; a functional State with sufficient resources to make major public investments in health, education, security and justice; and policies to help lift more than half its citizens out of poverty. The Secretary-General stated that the peace process had matured and the democratic framework in Guatemala had been consolidated to the point where it should be possible to address unresolved issues peacefully through national mechanisms and more standard forms of international co-operation. It was essential that UN agencies, funds and programmes remain guided by the accords, directing funding to priority areas. He emphasized the importance of continued support by the donor community, and of further engagement in projects supporting the peace accords and political dialogue with the Government on implementation of the accords.

Haiti

Political and security situation

During 2004, the political and security crisis in Haiti escalated into violence. The situation originated in 2000, when Haitian President Jean-Bertrand Aristide and his Fanmi Lavalas party claimed victory in presidential and parliamentary elections, in which voter turnout hardly rose above 10 per cent of the electorate. The opposition and members of the international community contested the results, accusing the Government of manipulating them. Subsequent dialogue between the Government and the opposition on resolving the situation broke down. The opposition was increasingly repressed by politicized sectors of the Haitian National Police and by irregular armed groups supportive of the Government. By late 2003, a newly united opposition movement, comprising political parties, civil society actors and the private sector, was calling for President Aristide's resignation.

In January 2004, the Caribbean Community (CARICOM), in an initiative to resolve the crisis, sent a fact-finding mission to Haiti to meet with President Aristide and the opposition, and presented proposals for moving the process forward at a meeting with the major political stakeholders (Nassau, Bahamas, 20-21 January) and including observers from the United States, Canada and the Organization of American States (OAS). In a subsequent meeting hosted by the Jamaican Prime Minister, P. J. Patterson, in his capacity as CARICOM Chairman (Kingston, Jamaica, 31 January), and attended by international partners, including the European Union (EU), the CARICOM Prior Action Plan on Haiti was submitted. The Plan involved measures to improve the security climate and to build confidence, and included compliance with previous OAS resolutions, negotiation of rules for demonstrations, the release of detainees, disarmament of strong-arm groups, the strengthening of the police force and the enjoyment of fundamental freedoms. The Plan envisaged the establishment of an electoral commission, the formation of a council of eminent persons and the appointment of a neutral and independent prime minister. It also called for the formation of a new Government through a process of consultations. A plan of action to facilitate implementation of the CARICOM Prior Action Plan was drawn up at a subsequent meeting in Washington, D.C. That plan was accepted by President Aristide but rejected by the opposition.

In early February, armed conflict broke out in the northern city of Gonaïves and in the following days fighting spread to other cities. Insurgents took control of the northern part of the country. Despite diplomatic efforts, the armed opposition threatened to march on the capital, Port-au-Prince. The already weakened and outnumbered Haitian National Police were forced to abandon their posts or protectively barricade themselves against mounting attacks of the rebel groups. Some 70 persons were killed in February.

Security Council press statement. The Security Council President, on 18 February [S/2004/224], issued a press statement in which Council members expressed deep concern over the increasing violence and political crisis in Haiti, the deterioration of the humanitarian situation, and the massive violations of human rights. They called on President Aristide's Government and the opposition to restore dialogue to overcome their differences peacefully and democratically. The Council expressed support for the CARICOM and OAS initiative to bring the crisis to an end, and deplored the decision of the opposition to reject the CARICOM-OAS Action Plan (see above). It called on both parties to accept and implement its provisions and pertinent OAS resolutions. The Council called on the international community to respond to the serious humanitarian situation in Haiti.

Communications (23-26 February). On 23 February [S/2004/143], Jamaica, on behalf of the CARICOM members, requested a meeting of the Security Council in the light of the steadily deteriorating situation in Haiti.

France, in a letter of 25 February [S/2004/145], urged the international community to take action to preserve Haiti from disorder and violence. Stressing the need to establish a transitional Government of national unity in Haiti, France expressed its willingness to play a role in the international mobilization effort and proposed an initiative, which broadened the CARICOM Prior Action Plan (see above) to include the establishment of a civilian peacekeeping force, international assistance in preparing for elections, the delivery of humanitarian aid, the dispatch of human rights observers and a long-term commitment to providing aid for Haiti's economic and social reconstruction.

On 26 February [S/2004/148], OAS called on the Security Council to address the crisis in Haiti, and requested that the Secretaries-General of OAS and the United Nations remain in close contact to ensure coordination and complementarity in the roles of the two organizations.

Appointment of Special Adviser. On 26 February [A/58/722-E/2004/13, S/2004/161], the Secretary-General appointed John Reginald Dumas (Trinidad and Tobago) as his Special Adviser on Haiti. Mr. Dumas would examine ways in which the Organization could enhance its contributions to alleviating the political, economic and social crises in the country. On 27 February [S/2004/162], the Security Council noted the Secretary-General's decision.

Security Council consideration. The Security Council met on 26 February [meeting 4917] to discuss the question concerning Haiti, as requested by Jamaica (see p. 289). Speaking before the Council, the Jamaican representative said that the past 20 months had been challenging and without much progress towards ending polarization or building a political consensus in Haiti. He cited recent CARICOM efforts initiated in January, which included fact-finding missions to Haiti, meetings with President Jean-Bertrand Aristide and with the opposition, in addition to a CARICOM initiative presented in January in the Bahamas (ibid.).

Drawing attention to the political upheaval that had escalated in the past weeks, Jamaica concluded that the situation within Haiti could no longer be viewed as an internal matter and posed a serious threat to regional peace and security, given the outflow of refugees, which threatened to overwhelm the resources of neighbouring States. Incursions by rebel forces from the north had resulted in reprisal killings, the destruction of property and general lawlessness, creating a state of anarchy in much of the country. Immediate action was needed to safeguard democracy and to avert bloodshed and a humanitarian disaster.

Jamaica also stated that President Aristide had requested international community assistance, specifically, from CARICOM to strengthen the Haitian National Police. While CARICOM continued to seek a political solution to the Haitian crisis, its member States sought direct and immediate UN intervention, as the situation was one of utmost urgency and the need for decisive action was paramount. The immediate need was for the Security Council to authorize the deployment of a multinational force, in addition to addressing the growing humanitarian crisis and extending assistance to Haiti's long-term economic and social reconstruction. It was also imperative that affected States be assisted to offset the costs for relief and humanitarian assistance to the refugees.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (26 February).

On 26 February [meeting 4917], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement [S/PRST/2004/4] on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses deep concern in regard to the deterioration of the political, security and humanitarian environment in Haiti. It deplores the loss of life that has already occurred and fears that the failure, thus far, to reach a political settlement may result in further bloodshed. Continued violence and the breakdown of law and order in Haiti could have destabilizing effects in the region.

The Council commends the Organization of American States and the Caribbean Community for their lead role in promoting a peaceful solution and for trying to re-establish confidence among the parties, in particular through their Plan of Action.

The Council supports the Caribbean Community and the Organization of American States as they continue to work towards a peaceful and constitutional solution to the current impasse. The principles outlined in the Caribbean Community/Organization of American States Plan of Action represent an important basis for a solution to the crisis. The Council calls upon the parties to act responsibly by choosing negotiation instead of confrontation. An accelerated timetable now seems necessary.

The Council is deeply concerned with the prospect of further violence in Haiti and acknowledges the call for international involvement in Haiti. The Council will consider urgently options for international engagement, including that of an international force in support of a political settlement in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

The Council calls upon all sides in Haiti's conflict to facilitate the distribution of food and medicine and ensure the protection of civilians. It calls upon all sides to respect international humanitarian personnel and facilities and to ensure that humanitarian assistance reaches those who need it.

The Council calls upon the Government and all other parties to respect human rights and to cease the use of violence to advance political goals. Those responsible for human rights violations will be held accountable.

The Council supports the Secretary-General's decision to name a Special Advisor for Haiti.

The Council will continue to monitor closely the situation in Haiti and remains seized of the matter.

Deployment of Multinational Interim Force

Early on 29 February, Mr. Aristide left the country. His letter of resignation was read out by the Prime Minister, Yvon Neptune. In accordance with the constitutional rules of succession, Boniface Alexandre, the President of the Supreme Court, was sworn in as interim President.

Security Council consideration (29 February). On 29 February [meeting 4919], the Security Council met to discuss the situation in Haiti. The Council had before it an appeal [S/2004/163] by Mr. Alexandre for support to the Haitian constitutional process and authorizing international security forces to enter Haiti to help bring a climate of security and stability to support the political process and facilitate the provision of humanitarian assistance.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (29 February)

On 29 February [meeting 4919], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1529 (2004). The draft [S/2004/164] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions as well as the statements by its President concerning Haiti, in particular the statement of 26 February 2004 (S/PRST/2004/4),

Deeply concerned by the deterioration of the political, security and humanitarian situation in Haiti and deploring the loss of life that has already occurred,

Expressing its utmost concern at the continuing violence in Haiti, as well as the potential for a rapid deterioration of the humanitarian situation in that country, and its destabilizing effect on the region,

Stressing the need to create a secure environment in Haiti and the region that enables respect for human rights, including the well-being of civilians, and supports the mission of humanitarian workers, tion of a peaceful and constitutional political process and the maintenance of a secure and stable environment, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Organization of American States, to submit to the Council recommendations, preferably by thirty days from the adoption of the present resolution, for the size, structure and mandate of such a force, including the role of international police and means of coordination with the Special Mission of the Organization of American States, and for subsequent deployment of the United Nations force not later than three months from the adoption of the present resolution;

4. Welcomes the appointment by the Secretary-General on 26 February of a Special Adviser for Haiti, and requests the Secretary-General to elaborate a programme of action for the United Nations to assist the constitutional political process and support humanitarian and economic assistance and promote the protection of human rights and the development of the rule of law;

5. Calls upon Member States to contribute personnel, equipment and other necessary financial and logistic resources on an urgent basis to the Multinational Interim Force, invites contributing Member States to inform the leadership of the Force and the Secretary-General of their intent to participate in the mission, and stresses the importance of voluntary contributions to help defray the expenses of the Force that participating Member States will bear;

6. Authorizes the Member States participating in the Multinational Interim Force to take all necessary measures to fulfil its mandate;

7. Demands that all parties to the conflict in Haiti cease using violent means, reiterates that all parties must respect international law, including with respect to human rights, and that there will be individual accountability and no impunity for violators, and also demands that parties respect the constitutional succession and the political process under way to resolve the current crisis and enable legitimate Haitian security forces and other public institutions to perform their duties and provide access to humanitarian agencies to carry out their work;

8. Further calls upon all parties in Haiti and on Member States to cooperate fully with the Multinational Interim Force in the execution of its mandate and to respect the security and freedom of movement of the Force, as well as to facilitate the safe and unimpeded access of international humanitarian personnel and aid to populations in need in Haiti;

9. Requests the leadership of the Multinational Interim Force to report periodically to the Council, through the Secretary-General, on the implementation of its mandate;

10. Calls upon the international community, in particular the United Nations, the Organization of American States and the Caribbean Community, to work with the people of Haiti in a long-term effort to promote the rebuilding of democratic institutions and to assist in the development of a strategy to promote social and economic development and to combat poverty;

11. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Report of Multinational Force. On 23 March [S/2004/239], the United States submitted to the Secretary-General, in accordance with resolution 1529(2004), an interim report of the Multinational Interim Force in Haiti (MIF), whose strength stood at 3,400 troops as at that date. The Force began operations on 29 February, and within days armed gangs had begun to withdraw from Port-au-Prince, looting was significantly reduced, and by 11 March the main airports and seaports had been secured. The Force undertook stabilization efforts in northern Haiti, deploying troops to the rebel stronghold cities of Gonaïves and Cap-Haïtien, and established roving patrols to provide a visible presence. Similar patrols were also established in Port-au-Prince and in central and southern Haiti. However, the number of troops available was still insufficient to guard the large number of static sites. MIF assisted the local police in “practical disarmament”, detaining illegally armed persons and confiscating arms, and worked with humanitarian personnel to improve the coordination of assistance. That allowed staff of international and regional organizations to return to work and assistance projects to resume. The Force also began to work with the Haitian National Police and Coast Guard in support of patrols to maintain law and order. The police requested MIF assistance in vetting existing police units to remove human rights abusers, finding new officers and procuring vehicles and fuel. MIF would work closely with the United Nations and OAS to establish the conditions for the deployment of a follow-on UN force and to facilitate international efforts to assist the Haitian National Police. With the MIF mandate concluding on 1 June, planning had begun for the transition to a UN stabilization force. The MIF troop contributors recommended that a UN transition team be deployed to Haiti by mid-April.

Security Council consideration. On 23 March [S/2004/328], the Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs, in a briefing to the Council on the situation in Haiti, stated that MIF, having deployed in the capital and other areas of the country, had made considerable progress in stabilizing a situation characterized by a collapse of public structures, looting and widespread violence. Calm had been restored in Port-au-Prince but there was still an urgent need for increased security in other localities. The Secretariat was continuing close consultations with MIF with the aim of facilitating the transition to a UN operation. A secure corridor from Port-au-Prince to Cap-Haïtien had been opened allowing for the resumption of activities by UN agencies. A multi-disciplinary assessment mission under the auspices of the Secretary-General’s Special Adviser was being conducted and would soon report to the Council.

The members of the Council took note of the presentation given by the United States delegation in the name of the countries participating in MIF. They welcomed CARICOM’s agreement to participate in a forthcoming UN stabilization force and stressed that the international community should be mobilized in order to create the necessary conditions to restore a secure political, social, economic and humanitarian environment in Haiti in the long term.

Departure of Haitian President

On 4 March [S/2004/195], the President of the Central African Republic informed the Secretary-General that his country had agreed to receive and welcome the former President of Haiti, Jean-Bertrand Aristide, as a humanitarian act.

On 11 March [A/58/731-S/2004/191], Jamaica transmitted the text of a statement issued by CARICOM heads of Government at their emergency meeting (Kingston, Jamaica, 2-3 March), which expressed the view that the circumstances under which Mr. Aristide demitted office set a dangerous precedent for democratically elected Governments everywhere and that no action should be taken to legitimize the rebel forces nor should they be included in any interim government. They called for an investigation, under UN auspices, to clarify the circumstances leading to his relinquishing the Presidency.

The Security Council held consultations on 30 March with the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General [S/2004/328], who had visited Haiti and countries of the area and had attended the CARICOM summit in Saint Kitts and Nevis. Council members focused on the disarmament of armed groups, the need for national reconciliation and the timely organization of elections. They agreed that stabilization of the country and creating the necessary conditions for security were the most urgent needs.

Further political developments

The Secretary-General, in his April report on Haiti [S/2004/300], said that on 4 March, a Tripartite Council was named, consisting of one representative each from the Fanmi Lavalas party, the Plateforme démocratique and the international community. The following day, that group selected seven eminent persons to form the Conseil des sages, which would in turn select a Prime Minister. The Council included representatives of key sectors of Haitian society, including human rights groups, churches, academia, the private sector and political groups. On 9 March, the Conseil des sages selected Gérard Latortue as Prime Minister, who, in consultation with it, formed a 13-member Transitional Government. Some supporters of the Fanmi Lavalas party and others contested the Transitional Government's legitimacy. To build political consensus for the work of the Transitional Government, a political pact, called the Consensus on the Political Transition Pact, was signed on 4 April by the Prime Minister, members of the Conseil des sages, representatives of political groups, except the Fanmi Lavalas party which denounced it, and civil society organizations. The understanding reached provided for the holding of municipal, parliamentary and presidential elections in 2005. Members of the Transitional Government, the electoral council and the Conseil des sages agreed not to contest those elections. Until the next parliament was in place, the Conseil des sages would advise the Transitional Government on important matters such as the budget, agreements and decrees, and draw attention to questions requiring high-level intervention. The Pact also provided for procedures to address vacancies in the executive branch; measures to be undertaken during the transition period in the areas of security, development, the fight against impunity and corruption, decentralization, elections, judicial reform, a national conference and a new social contract; institutional strengthening of political parties and civil society organizations; reintegration of former armed elements; and professionalization of the Haitian National Police. It was agreed to establish commissions to address human rights abuses, financial wrongdoing and matters related to the former military, and to discuss with the United Nations the status of MIF and the follow-on peacekeeping operation.

The Secretary-General said that a major test for the Transitional Government was extending State authority outside Port-au-Prince, as many communities were without legitimate local governments and were controlled by irregular armed groups. Self-appointed or insurgent-designated mayors and leaders had replaced some local bodies. The intended nomination by the Transitional Government of provisional municipal committees would require consensus at the local level.

The Secretary-General reported that he had dispatched on 11 March a multidisciplinary assessment mission to Haiti, comprising representatives of several Secretariat departments, to gather information on the ground, specifically on the political and security situation (see p. 292), the police, judicial and corrections institutions, human rights, the humanitarian situation, development issues, gender issues, the situation of the media, and the activities of regional and sub-regional organizations.

According to the Secretary-General, the security situation remained uncertain and would be influenced by the political process; the pace and efficacy of the restoration of government authority and State institutions, particularly the Haitian National Police, throughout the country; the durability of the measures undertaken by MIF, particularly with regard to disarmament; and the willingness of armed groups to cooperate with disarmament and reintegration plans. To date, weapons handovers had been largely symbolic and pledges by rebels to lay down arms upon the establishment of the Transitional Government had not been followed through. In the circumstances, an international presence would be needed to provide a security umbrella and, in conjunction with the police, to confiscate illicit arms and seize caches. A comprehensive programme for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of armed groups would be required. The international community would support the national capacity to develop, coordinate and implement such a strategy. Support could be provided for the development of national legal, law enforcement and administrative capacities for weapons control, collection, management, stockpiling, destruction and disposal and to combat illicit trafficking.

During the period of unrest, the police almost completely collapsed and were reduced to a strength of no more than 2,500. Stations were vandalized, burnt and seriously damaged, while equipment, records and archives were looted or destroyed. Law enforcement officers had begun to return to work and efforts were being made to bring back more officers and recruit new ones. A successful restoration of the rule of law and public security in Haiti would require a comprehensive approach to assist the police with sustainable reform and institutional strengthening, with parallel improvements in other areas of the criminal justice system. The administration of justice was greatly affected by the crisis, and considerable improvements were needed to ensure lasting peace and security.

To ensure an effective and timely response to the emergency humanitarian situation and rehabilitation needs, a quick and generous response from donors was essential. The United Nations issued a flash appeal for Haiti in 2004, requesting $35 million for six months (see p. 938). With regard to medium- and longer-term assistance needs, a Haiti Contact Group meeting (Washington, D.C., 23 March) agreed to prepare an interim framework, focusing on the current economic, social and institutional needs of Haiti.

The Secretary-General said that, on the basis of the findings of the multidisciplinary team, he was recommending the establishment of a multi-dimensional stabilization operation in Haiti, to be known as the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH), for an initial period of 24 months, to help the country address a range of complex issues in a sustainable manner, achieve peace and stability, build and strengthen functioning democratic institutions, support the re-establishment of the rule of law and promote social and economic development and good governance. It would be composed of a strong civilian component, including 1,622 UN civilian police, backed up by a robust UN military force of up to 6,700 troops. It would also include a humanitarian affairs and development pillar and a civilian affairs pillar, under the overall leadership of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

On 30 April [meeting 4961], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1542(2004). The draft [S/2004/334] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 1529(2004) of 29 February 2004,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 16 April 2004, and supporting its recommendations,

Affirming its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and unity of Haiti,

Deploring all violations of human rights, particularly against the civilian population, and urging the Transitional Government of Haiti ("Transitional Government") to take all necessary measures to put an end to impunity and to ensure that the continued promotion and protection of human rights and the establishment of a State based on the rule of law and an independent judiciary are among its highest priorities,

Reaffirming its resolution 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000 on women and peace and security and its resolutions 1379(2001) of 20 November 2001, 1460(2003) of 30 January 2003 and 1539(2004) of 22 April 2004 on children in armed conflict, as well as its resolutions 1265(1999) of 17 September 1999 and 1296(2000) of 19 April 2000 on the protection of civilians in armed conflict,

Commending the rapid and professional deployment of the Multinational Interim Force in Haiti and the stabilization efforts it has undertaken,

Taking note of the political agreement reached by some key parties on 4 April 2004, and urging all parties to work without delay towards a broad political consensus on the nature and duration of the political transition,

Reiterating its call upon the international community to continue to assist and support the economic, social and institutional development of Haiti over the long term, and welcoming the intention of the Organization of American States, the Caribbean Community, and of the international donor community, as well as international financial institutions, to participate in those efforts,

Noting the existence of challenges to the political, social and economic stability of Haiti, and determining that the situation in Haiti continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

1. Decides to establish the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti, the stabilization force called for in resolution 1529(2004), for an initial period of six months, with the intention to renew it for further periods, and requests that authority be transferred from the Multinational Interim Force in Haiti to the Mission on 1 June 2004;

2. Authorizes remaining elements of the Multinational Interim Force to continue carrying out its mandate under resolution 1529(2004) within the means available for a transition period not exceeding thirty days from 1 June 2004, as required and requested by the Mission;

MIF-MINUSTAH transition

In May [S/2004/386], the Secretary-General transmitted the 60-day report on MIF activities, which provided an update on the status of the tasks assigned to the Force. It indicated that the constitutional political process had remained consistent, and MIF had provided security to the Presidential Palace and the Primature so they could continue to function. All appropriate humanitarian assistance requests for support through the Civil Military Operations Centre had been fulfilled, and MIF collaborated with humanitarian organizations to distribute assistance in targeted areas. The report also cited the development of long-term training plans for the Haitian Coast Guard; the establishment of a rewards programme for seizure of weapon caches; continued work towards facilitating the transfer of authority to MINUSTAH; and the progress made since the March report in returning portions of the country to an acceptable level of stability.

In a 16 June report [S/2004/497], the Secretary-General stated that an ongoing MIF assessment revealed stable and relatively secure conditions in the southern claw region, which allowed forces to withdraw and focus on Hinche and the Port-au-Prince area. The political process had significantly improved since the establishment of the Transitional Government. MIF and MINUSTAH held a joint planning conference (3-7 May), which resulted in a draft transition document. The report also covered MIF activities to facilitate humanitarian assistance, including relief to the heavily flooded towns of Fond Verrettes and Mapou; to assist the Haitian National Police and the Haitian Coast Guard to support public safety and human rights; to establish conditions so that international and regional organizations could assist the Haitian people; and to coordinate with OAS and the United Nations Special Adviser to prevent further deterioration of the humanitarian situation.

The Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, on 16 June [S/2004/622], briefed the Security Council on the situation in Haiti. Outlining the efforts to establish MINUSTAH and envisaging the transfer of authority from MIF to MINUSTAH on or before 1 July, he stressed the need for continued support from donor countries, troop-contributing countries and the Council for MINUSTAH to succeed. MINUSTAH assumed operational responsibilities on 25 June.

Appointments. On 27 May [S/2004/439], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint Lieutenant General Augusto Heleno Ribeiro Pereira (Brazil) to the post of Force Commander of MINUSTAH, which formally assumed authority from MIF on 1 June. On 12 July [S/2004/565], he indicated his intention to appoint Juan Gabriel Valdés (Chile) as his Special Representative and Head of MINUSTAH. The Council took note of those intentions [S/2004/440, S/2004/566].

MINUSTAH activities

Report of Secretary-General (August). In an August report [S/2004/698], the Secretary-General described progress in the implementation of the MINUSTAH mandate, including the deployment of military troops and civilian police, whose strength was 2,755 and 240, respectively, at the time of the report. Troops were deployed to every area in Haiti except in the north where patrols were conducted in Cap-Haitien and Fort-Liberté. More troops would be required to deal with the challenges in the more remote municipalities and along the border with the Dominican Republic. Civilian police officers were deployed outside the capital from 26 July. Regional operational centres were set up in every region. To support the Haitian National Police in re-establishing their presence and enhance confidence, civilian police advisers would be deployed at every decision-making level of the national police force.

The Transitional Government, having taken office on 17 March, had begun to restore governance and prepare the ground for transition to an elected Government, in accordance with the time line agreed in the Consensus on the Political Transition Pact (see below). In May, with the support of bilateral and multilateral agencies and the United Nations, it prepared the interim cooperation framework, setting out priorities and targets to respond to the country's urgent and medium-term development needs, assessed at $1,370 million, of which $446 million had already been committed by donors. At the International Donors Conference on Haiti (Washington, D.C., 19-20 July), the international community pledged another $1,085 million.

The signatories of the Consensus on the Political Transition Pact agreed on 23 July to the formation of a Follow-up Committee, comprising representatives of the Transitional Government, the Conseil des sages, political parties and civil society groups, to institutionalize the process of overseeing its implementation. However, Fanmi Lavalas remained outside the main political transition process. Tensions continued to characterize the relationship between the Transitional Government and Fanmi Lavalas, which alleged that its members were subject to political persecution and pointed to the 27 June arrest of former Prime Minister Yvon Neptune as evidence. Mr. Neptune had been detained for his alleged involvement in the February massacre in Saint-Marc, but no charges had so far been brought against him. The Government had also placed a number of Fanmi Lavalas supporters on a list of those barred from leaving the country. The Secretary-General's Special Adviser tried to broker an agreement between the Transitional Government and Fanmi Lavalas on the latter's entry into the political process. The Fanmi Lavalas party itself had shown signs of increasing internal divisions, with moderates considering joining the political transition process. A group of former Fanmi Lavalas members formed a new political party on 31 July—the Mouvement démocratique et réformateur haïtien, which indicated its intention to compete in the next elections and take part in the political process. In addition, more than 70 new political parties and groups had emerged, making the Haitian political landscape very fragmented.

The Provisional Electoral Council, which was mired in internal disputes, had not drawn up time frames for the elections or taken a decision regarding the sequence and number of votes. On 15 April, the Transitional Government requested UN electoral assistance. A UN mission was sent to Haiti (8-17 June) to assess its electoral needs and determine the modalities for assistance. The assessment mission recommended action to amend the electoral law and related regulations, training and direct assistance to the Provisional Electoral Council, the establishment of a voters list and the development of a civic education campaign. It also recommended that joint municipal and parliamentary elections be held towards the middle of 2005 and presidential polls towards the end of 2005. MINUSTAH would supervise the electoral process and coordinate and monitor international technical assistance.

During the reporting period, the Transitional Government made moderate strides in extending State authority outside Port-au-Prince. By August, it had appointed 103 of the 139 municipal commissions. However, a number of municipalities remained without a mayor and, in those where a local government was in place, infrastructure and basic facilities were lacking. MINUSTAH established contact with the various levels of State administration to identify local needs and develop a municipal database. It assessed needs in public administration, local management skills and good governance and was working with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), OAS and the EU on decentralization and the establishment and strengthening of local authority.

While the security situation improved, armed groups continued to control parts of the country, particularly in the north and the east along the border with the Dominican Republic. Isolated instances of violence and gunfire, home invasions, acts of retaliation, kidnappings, gang activity and confrontation between the National Police and former soldiers of the disbanded Haitian armed forces were reported. On 8 July the Transitional Government's Superior Council on the National Police stated that the activities of armed groups presenting themselves as security forces were illegal and action would be taken against them, with MINUSTAH help, if they were still operating after 15 September.

With regard to disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, a mixed inter-ministerial commission, essential for developing a national programme, had not yet been established. The Transitional Government, however, did establish the commission, led by the Minister of the Interior, to examine the situation of the former armed forces, and on 13 August announced the formation of an inter-ministerial commission to study issues related to back pay and retirement funds and to formulate recommendations on the reorganization of the military. A worrisome development was the refusal of the former military to disarm until their demands were met. Meanwhile, the National Police had increased from 2,500 to 3,567 officers, which was still insufficient to provide adequate security.

Insecurity and problems in the functioning of law enforcement structures contributed to the continuing precariousness of the human rights situation. The trial of Louis Jodel Chamblain, accused of participating in the assassination of Antroine Izmerly, a businessman and adviser to former President Aristide, in September 1993, opened on 16 August. Mr. Chamblain and his co-defendant were acquitted but remained in prison pending further trials. The international community denounced the trial as not meeting minimum legal standards and expressed concern at the haste with which the Transitional Government had arrested members of Fanmi Lavalas suspected of political violence and corruption, while failing to act against perpetrators of serious human rights violations.

The humanitarian situation remained complex, compounded by chronic poverty and environmental degradation. MINUSTAH initiated preparations to support the response to complex emergencies. UN inter-agency assessment missions were deployed to follow up on the floods in southern Haiti and to identify possible vulnerable areas.

The Secretary-General said that the restoration of the rule of law would be crucial to restoring confidence in the institutions of the State. The Government of Haiti had to do more to establish a well-functioning and impartial justice system. The Secretary-General remained concerned by reports of double standards in the administration of justice. He urged the Government to strengthen the country's legitimate democratic institutions, while overhauling or abolishing those that did not meet democratic standards, and to establish, as a priority, a national commission on disarmament, demobilization and reintegration. The Secretary-General called on all concerned to lay down their arms and to refrain from violence so as to allow the political process, including the electoral process, to unfold free from pressure.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 10 September [meeting 5030], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/32 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council extends its appreciation to participating countries of the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti, and hopes that those countries that have pledged to contribute troops and civilian police will do their utmost to expedite the early deployment of their personnel.

The Council notes that, while the overall situation in Haiti has improved since last February, challenges by illegal armed groups to the authority of the Transitional Government are undermining stability and security in some parts of the country.

The Council condemns attempts by some illegal armed groups to perform unauthorized law enforcement functions in some Haitian cities. The Council underscores the need for the Transitional Government to extend its control and authority throughout the country. It stresses the need for the Mission actively to assist the Transitional Government's security institutions in addressing the activities of all illegal armed groups, in accordance with the mandate provided in resolution 1542(2004).

The Council stresses the urgency of disbanding and disarming all illegal armed groups. It calls upon the Transitional Government to complete without delay the establishment of the required structures and the adoption of the required legal framework for the implementation of a national disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme. It notes that the Mission will assist the Transitional Government in these efforts.

The Council underlines the fact that stability and security remain key to the political and economic reconstruction efforts of the Transitional Government and the international community. It stresses the importance of building the capacity of an effective and professional national police in Haiti. It reiterates the importance of effective coordination and cooperation between the Mission and the Haitian National Police. It also underlines the urgency of improving the situation of human rights in the country, including women's rights.

The Council underlines the fact that only a comprehensive and inclusive dialogue in Haiti can lay down the foundations of a peaceful and democratic political environment. It calls upon all Haitian political actors to participate in the national dialogue, as well as in the transition and in the electoral process to occur in 2005.

The Council welcomes the fact that the Provisional Electoral Council has marked the start of the electoral process in Haiti by holding a broad dialogue on the preparation of elections. The Council encourages the United Nations and the Organization of American States to finalize a memorandum of understanding outlining the election responsibilities of each organization as soon as possible.

The Council reiterates that an end to impunity is key to national reconciliation in Haiti. The Council stresses that justice should apply equally to all citizens in that country and be carried out by an independent judicial system with the support of a reformed correctional system. The Council expresses its strong concern at reports of double standards in the administration of justice. The Council welcomes the intention expressed by the Transitional Government to cease travel restrictions without judicial justification in place against former civil servants and politicians. It urges the Transitional Government to end such restrictions without delay.

The Council welcomes the results of the donors conference held in Washington, D.C., on 19 and 20 July 2004, and urges a timely disbursement of the funds pledged. The Council looks forward to the follow-up implementation meeting to be held in Port-au-Prince from 22 and 23 September 2004, taking into account the priorities identified by the Haitian Government's Interim Cooperation Framework.

The Council reiterates its support for the establishment of a core group to maintain the mobilization of the international community, to increase the consultation among major stakeholders to enhance the coordination and effectiveness of the assistance for Haiti, and to contribute to the definition of a long-term development strategy aimed at the promotion of lasting peace and stability in that country.

The Council welcomes the appointment of Mr. Juan Gabriel Valdés as Special Representative of the Secretary-General and Head of the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti, and commits its full support to his work.

Report of Secretary-General (November).

The Secretary-General, in his November report on MINUSTAH [S/2004/908], stated that the Mission had deployed throughout Haiti and had a permanent presence in all important areas, except in Jérémie and Port-de-Paix. The security situation had deteriorated, particularly in Port-au-Prince, and the political climate remained tense. Armed groups remained the main threat, some of which increasingly defied and confronted the Transitional Government. In late August and early September, former military officers occupied police stations in Petit-Goâve, Thomazeau and Terre-Rouge, and, in November, took possession of an unoccupied station near Saint-Marc. The National Police, with MINUSTAH assistance, expelled them from the Thomazeau police station and prevented them from occupying other public buildings. On 29 September, MINUSTAH forces denied them entry to Gonaïves.

On 30 September, violence broke out during demonstrations organized by supporters of former President Aristide to commemorate the thirtieth anniversary of the 1991 military coup [YUN 1991, p. 151]. On 4 October, the Secretary-General's Special Representative expressed regret that a peaceful demonstration had served as an excuse for a series of brutal and violent actions and appealed to all Haitians not to be drawn into a vicious cycle of revenge and violence and to embark on the path of dialogue, reconciliation and peace. During the demonstrations, more than 60 people were killed, including 13 National Police officers, three of whom were beheaded. The unrest disrupted the daily life of city residents and brought port activities in Port-au-Prince to a standstill, preventing the unloading of humanitarian assistance. To counter the spread of violence, the Joint MINUSTAH/Haitian National Police Operations Centre was established on 4 October in Port-au-Prince as a means of enhancing coordination between the Mission and the National Police. Regular joint patrols contributed to the normalization of public markets and the reopening of schools. In addition, MINUSTAH forces and civilian police patrolled outside the capital to provide a visible security presence and protect key installations, and established checkpoints which monitored movement and searched for illegal weapons.

The Transitional Government blamed former President Aristide and his armed supporters for instigating the violence. Several political leaders and civil society representatives urged the Transitional Government to take stronger action against them, including declaring Fanmi Lavalas a "terrorist" organization and outlawing it, and issuing an international warrant for Mr. Aristide's arrest. The Prime Minister called on the non-violent Fanmi Lavalas elements to condemn the violence and join the transition process. Meanwhile, Fanmi Lavalas supporters continued to denounce the political persecution and repression of their movement.

On 26 October, in the Fort-National district of Port-au-Prince, at least seven young people were executed. At the urging of the Special Representative, the Transitional Government ordered an investigation into the reported deaths. Two days later, four other youths were killed in similar circumstances in Carrefour-Péan.

The Transitional Government took steps to address the grievances of the former military by creating three commissions. On the recommendation of one of the commissions, the Transitional Government, on 6 October, set up a Demobilized Soldiers Management Bureau to reintegrate the demobilized soldiers into the country's economic and social life. To enhance their public image, the former military offered assistance in restoring public order and some were cooperating with the National Police. However, the police spokesperson stated that only demobilized soldiers who had been integrated into its structures would be recognized.

On 21 October, Prime Minister Latortue reshuffled his cabinet, the first since the Transitional Government took office on 17 March, and appointed a former military officer as Secretary of State in charge of public security, reporting to the Minister of Justice. The Special Representative met with political leaders and civil society representatives to discuss a national dialogue, its objectives and format. The Transitional Government reiterated its commitment to organize free, fair and credible elections in 2005, and allocated funds to the Provisional Electoral Council to launch its preparatory activities. The Council, on 5 October, decided to set local elections for 6 November 2005, the first round of national (presidential and legislative) for 27 November 2005, and the second round of voting for 18 December 2005. Fifty per cent of the vote would be needed to be elected president, senator or member of parliament. A memorandum of understanding between the United Nations and OAS concerning electoral assistance to Haiti was signed on 2 and 3 November.

On 9 September, the Special Representative formally established the Core Group on Haiti, comprising representatives of the diplomatic corps, international financial institutions and regional and subregional organizations.

In view of the changing situation in Haiti, the Secretary-General proposed a number of modifications to MINUSTAH's structure to increase its capacity to implement its mandate. They included: adding a police unit of 125 officers to be stationed in Port-au-Prince to provide operational support to the National Police and to strengthen security arrangements in the capital; continuation of quick-impact humanitarian projects beyond the first year of the Mission; augmenting MINUSTAH's capacity to implement disarmament, demobilization and reintegration projects; strengthening its capacity to monitor community-based projects and to support the Transitional Government in developing legal and institutional frameworks for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration; the addition of an engineering company; and the strengthening of the humanitarian and development coordination pillar. The Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend the MINUSTAH mandate for a further 18 months, until 31 May 2006.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 29 November [meeting 5090], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1576 (2004). The draft [S/2004/923] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 1542(2004) of 30 April 2004, and recalling resolution 1529(2004) of 29 February 2004 and relevant statements by its President on the situation in Haiti,

Commending the work of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in support of the efforts of the Transitional Government of Haiti and all political actors in Haiti towards a comprehensive and inclusive national dialogue and reconciliation process, including the holding of fair and free elections in 2005 and the subsequent transfer of power to elected authorities,

Underlining the fact that political reconciliation and economic reconstruction efforts remain key to the stability and security of Haiti, and in that regard stressing that all Member States, especially those in the region, should continue to support the Transitional Government in those efforts,

Urging the Transitional Government to continue to make progress in the implementation of the Interim Cooperation Framework, including by developing concrete projects for economic development, in close cooperation with, and with the full assistance of, the international community, in particular the United Nations and international financial institutions,

Welcoming the establishment of the Core Group on Haiti and the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti of the Economic and Social Council, Condemning all acts of violence and the attempts by some armed groups to perform unauthorized law enforcement functions in the country,

Stressing, in that context, the urgency of conducting disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes, and urging the Transitional Government to establish, without delay, the national commission on disarmament, demobilization and reintegration,

Condemning all violations of human rights and urging the Transitional Government to take all necessary measures to put an end to impunity,

Concerned by any arbitrary detention of people solely for their political affiliation, and calling upon the Transitional Government to release those against whom no charges have been brought,

Calling upon the international community to continue to address, in full support of the Transitional

Government, the humanitarian needs caused by natural disasters in various parts of the country,

Welcoming the contribution made by Member States to the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti, and urging troop- and police-contributing countries to abide by the deployment schedules agreed, and noting in particular the need for more French-speaking police officers,

Noting the continuing existence of challenges to the political, social and economic stability of Haiti, and determining that the situation in Haiti continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, as described in paragraph 7, section I, of resolution 1542(2004),

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti as contained in resolution 1542(2004), until 1 June 2005, with the intention to renew for further periods;

2. Encourages the Transitional Government to continue to explore actively all possible ways to include in the democratic and electoral process those who currently remain outside the transition process but have rejected violence;

3. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 18 November 2004 on the Mission, and endorses the Secretary-General's recommendations as outlined in paragraphs 52 to 57 thereof;

4. Urges relevant international financial institutions and donor countries to disburse promptly the funds pledged at the International Donors Conference on Haiti, held in Washington, D.C., on 19 and 20 July 2004;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide a report to the Council at least every three months on the implementation by the Mission of its mandate;

6. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Further developments. In a later report [S/2005/124], the Secretary-General indicated that on 14 December MINUSTAH troops and civilian police officers, jointly with the National Police, launched an operation to restore law and order in the shantytown of Cité Soleil in Port-au-Prince. Forces met with little resistance and no casualties were reported. On 15 December, a group of former soldiers illegally occupied the abandoned private residence of former President Aristide in the Port-au-Prince suburb of Tabarre. At the request of the Transitional Government, MINUSTAH and the Haitian National Police surrounded the residence. When a delegation from the Government and another one composed of political parties and civil society leaders failed to reach a negotiated solution, MINUSTAH troops took over the residence and disarmed 43 individuals there. In retaliation, former soldiers attacked police officers and police stations. MINUSTAH responded promptly and retook control of the police stations seized in Grand-Goâve, Mirebalais and Petit-Goâve.

As the holiday season approached, there were warnings of a possible increase in violence by armed gangs associated with Mr. Aristide, and a number of kidnappings took place in the capital. MINUSTAH conducted its largest patrolling operation in Port-au-Prince to date, which resulted in a peaceful and secure environment during the holidays. A total of 41 suspects were arrested and six weapons seized, in addition to ammunition being confiscated. It also prevented a widely announced march by former soldiers through Port-au-Prince.

On 20 December, the Transitional Government announced the launching of a compensation programme for members of the former military demobilized in 1995 and made some $2.8 million available for that purpose. Payment of the first of three instalments began on 28 December and was expected to be completed in March 2005. MINUSTAH's improved military and police operations in some of the most volatile areas contributed to an improved environment conducive to implementing disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes. Preliminary discussions on those programmes began with gang members and community leaders.

Most political actors appeared to favour a national dialogue and the holding of elections. On 6 December, the Prime Minister invited the leader of the Congrès national des mouvements démocratiques to contact various political, social and religious sectors and interested personalities to formally advance the process of national dialogue. An ad hoc group (Groupe de réflexion et de promotion du dialogue national) was formed, which reported to the Prime Minister on 31 December. The Prime Minister also established the Committee on Assistance for Victims of Violence to provide assistance to those who had been wounded, lost relatives or been displaced because of their political beliefs. The commission, created on 6 October to investigate the financial management of the Lavalas Government between February 2001 and February 2004, continued its activities. Relations between Fanmi Lavalas and the Transitional Government remained tense, despite the release of several party leaders, while differences within Fanmi Lavalas resulted in growing ambiguity regarding its legitimate leaders. On 16 December, Fanmi Lavalas created a 19-member commission, which, according to a press release, would be allowed to engage in political discussions on behalf of the party.

Programme of support for Haiti

Report of Secretary-General. On 16 June, the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/2004/80] on the development of a long-term programme of support for Haiti, which elaborated on the national and economic situation, provided an overview of UN system activities in the country, and re-evaluated the existing long-term programme of support. The report indicated that Haiti remained the poorest nation in the western hemisphere and that the country's critical economic condition was negatively affected by its political situation. On 22 April, major development partners met to elaborate a plan of action. UNDP and the World Bank decided to lead the process for the preparation of the Interim Co-operation Framework for donors, and a round table was scheduled for July.

The report also covered humanitarian assistance and other UN activities, including: ensuring the availability of food; restoring the public health sector; combating HIV/AIDS; ensuring public security and the rule of law; tracking the Millennium Development Goals [YUN 2000, p. 51]; and monitoring human rights violations.

Economic and Social Council action. On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2004/52 on the long-term programme of support for Haiti (see p. 938); on 11 November, it adopted decision 2004/322 on the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti (see p. 939); and, on 22 July, it adopted resolution 2004/46 on support for MINUSTAH (see p. 1025).

Financing of MINUSTAH

On 3 May [A/58/236], the Secretary-General requested the inclusion in the agenda of the resumed fifty-eighth session of the General Assembly the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti".

Pending submission to the Assembly during its fifty-ninth session of a full budget for MINUSTAH for 1 May 2004 to 30 June 2005, including results-based frameworks, the Secretary-General submitted on 17 May [A/58/800] an interim budget for the Mission for 1 May to 30 June 2004 and from 1 July to 31 December 2004, which reflected preliminary financial requirements for MINUSTAH amounting to $49,259,800 and $215,552,000, respectively.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in its May report [A/58/809], noted that it had already concurred on commitment authority of up to $49,259,800 for MINUSTAH for 1 May to 30 June, and recommended that the Assembly approve a total assessment of $221,740,300.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

On 18 June [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/58/832], adopted resolution 58/311 without vote [agenda item 168].

Other questions

Andean Zone of Peace

By a 12 October letter [A/59/235], Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Venezuela—the member countries of the Andean Community—transmitted to the Secretary-General the Declaration of San Francisco de Quito on the Establishment and Development of the Andean Zone of Peace, adopted on 12 July by the Presidents of those countries at the fifteenth meeting of the Andean Presidential Council held in Quito, Ecuador.

The General Assembly, in resolution 59/54 (see p. 592) of 2 December, welcomed the Declaration.

Colombia

In a letter dated 2 July [S/2004/569], the Netherlands, on behalf of the EU, transmitted a statement on the occasion of the formal start of talks between the Government of Colombia and the Autodefensas Unidas de Colombia (AUC) paramilitary groups. The EU confirmed its readiness to assist in reaching a peaceful and durable solution to the conflict, within the framework of a credible and comprehensive peace strategy, and in that regard, underlined the importance of the good offices of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and of regular constructive dialogue between the Government and civil society.

Cuba–United States

In a letter dated 10 May [A/58/789], Cuba denounced the 6 May announcement by the United States Government of new measures against Cuba. The measures, described by Cuba as part of the United States "aggressive and hostile" policy against Cuba, dealt with restricting visitation to Cuba by relatives and United States citizens, limiting family remittances from Cubans residing in the United States, and discouraging tourist travel to Cuba.

On 1 July [A/58/851], Cuba, in a declaration by its National Assembly, objected to the implementation on 30 June of the new measures, which included the cancellation of almost all United States citizens' visitation licences, as well as to threats by the United States of applying more aggressively sections of its Helms-Burton Act [YUN

1996, p. 194] that would penalize businessmen from third countries dealing with Cuba.

On 8 September [A/59/348], Cuba submitted a report on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 58/7 [YUN 2003, p. 286], which described, in addition to the new measures, the extraterritorial nature of the United States embargo policy, the embargo's impact on the Cuban national health system and economy, and damage to exchanges between the Cuban and American peoples.

Reports of Secretary-General. On 27 August [A/59/302, Part I] and on 5 October [A/59/302, Part II], the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 58/7, forwarded replies by Governments on their actions to implement that resolution. That text had called on States to refrain from unilateral application of economic and trade measures against other States, and urged them to repeal or invalidate such measures. The two reports included, in addition to the replies from 86 States, statements from the EU, eight UN bodies and ten specialized agencies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 October [meeting 44], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/11 [draft: A/59/L.2] by recorded vote (179-4-1) [agenda item 28].

Necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States of America against Cuba

The General Assembly,

Determined to encourage strict compliance with the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming, among other principles, the sovereign equality of States, non-intervention and non-interference in their internal affairs and freedom of international trade and navigation, which are also enshrined in many international legal instruments,

Recalling the statements of the Heads of State or Government at the Ibero-American Summits concerning the need to eliminate the unilateral application of economic and trade measures by one State against another that affect the free flow of international trade,

Concerned at the continued promulgation and application by Member States of laws and regulations, such as that promulgated on 12 March 1996 known as the "Helms-Burton Act", the extraterritorial effects of which affect the sovereignty of other States, the legitimate interests of entities or persons under their jurisdiction and the freedom of trade and navigation,

Taking note of declarations and resolutions of different intergovernmental forums, bodies and Governments that express the rejection by the international community and public opinion of the promulgation and application of regulations of the kind referred to above,

Recalling its resolutions 47/19 of 24 November 1992, 48/16 of 3 November 1993, 49/9 of 26 October 1994, 50/10 of 2 November 1995, 51/17 of 12 November

1996, 52/10 of 5 November 1997, 53/4 of 14 October 1998, 54/21 of 9 November 1999, 55/20 of 9 November 2000, 56/9 of 27 November 2001, 57/11 of 12 November 2002 and 58/7 of 4 November 2003,

Concerned that, since the adoption of its resolutions 47/19, 48/16, 49/9, 50/10, 51/17, 52/10, 53/4, 54/21, 55/20, 56/9, 57/11 and 58/7, further measures of that nature aimed at strengthening and extending the economic, commercial and financial embargo against Cuba continue to be promulgated and applied, and concerned also at the adverse effects of such measures on the Cuban people and on Cuban nationals living in other countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 58/7;

2. Reiterates its call upon all States to refrain from promulgating and applying laws and measures of the kind referred to in the preamble to the present resolution in conformity with their obligations under the Charter of the United Nations and international law, which, inter alia, reaffirm the freedom of trade and navigation;

3. Once again urges States that have and continue to apply such laws and measures to take the necessary steps to repeal or invalidate them as soon as possible in accordance with their legal regime;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the appropriate organs and agencies of the United Nations system, to prepare a report on the implementation of the present resolution in the light of the purposes and principles of the Charter and international law and to submit it to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixtieth session the item entitled "Necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States of America against Cuba".

Cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations

Caribbean Community

In response to General Assembly resolution 57/41 [YUN 2002, p. 254] on cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community (CARICOM), the Secretary-General summarized, in his September consolidated report on cooperation between the United Nations and regional and other organizations [A/59/303], UN-CARICOM collaborative activities, including high-level consultations in early 2004 on the unfolding political crisis in Haiti (see p. 288) and subsequent cooperation with MINUSTAH.

The third general meeting between the United Nations and CARICOM was held in New York in April. The meeting, which reviewed follow-up action to the second meeting, considered that substantial progress had been achieved in cooperation between the two organizations, especially in the areas of conflict prevention, governance and security. The meeting also discussed institutional arrangements for cooperation and training and the need for improved coordination of activities. It stressed the need to convene regular review meetings to deal with constraints in the relationship between the two organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/138 [draft: A/59/L.25 & Add.1, as orally revised] without vote [agenda item 56 (e)].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/8 of 16 October 1991, 49/141 of 20 December 1994, 51/16 of 11 November 1996, 53/17 of 29 October 1998, 55/17 of 7 November 2000 and 57/41 of 21 November 2002,

Bearing in mind the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations on the existence of regional arrangements or agencies for dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action and other activities consistent with the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind also the assistance given by the United Nations towards the maintenance of peace and security in the Caribbean region,

Recalling the signing, on 27 May 1997, by the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Caribbean Community of a cooperation agreement between the secretariats of the two organizations,

Bearing in mind also that in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted by resolution 55/2 of 8 September 2000, Heads of State and Government resolved to address the special needs of small island developing States by implementing the Barbados Programme of Action and the outcome of the twenty-second special session of the General Assembly rapidly and in full,

Noting that the World Summit for Sustainable Development, held in Johannesburg, South Africa, from 26 August to 4 September 2002, considered the specific issues and problems facing small island developing States, and noting that a special meeting to review the implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action will be convened in Mauritius in January 2005,

Noting also that the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS adopted by the General Assembly in resolution S-26/2 of 27 June 2001 recognized the Caribbean region as having the second-highest rate of infection after sub-Saharan Africa and that the region therefore needs special attention and assistance from the international community,

Noting further that the Caribbean region has been hard hit, and in some cases devastated, by hurricanes in 2004, and concerned that their frequency, intensity and destructive power pose a challenge to the development endeavours of the region,

Affirming the need to strengthen the cooperation that already exists between entities of the United Nations system and the Caribbean Community in the areas of economic and social development, as well as the areas of political and humanitarian affairs,

Convinced of the need for the coordinated utilization of available resources to promote the common objectives of the two organizations,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and regional and other organizations,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, in particular section IV on the Caribbean Community, as well as efforts to strengthen cooperation;

2. Calls upon the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in association with the Secretary-General of the Caribbean Community, as well as the relevant regional organizations, to continue to assist in furthering the development and maintenance of peace and security within the Caribbean region;

5. Invites the organizations of the United Nations system as well as Member States to increase financial and other assistance to the countries of the Caribbean Community to help to implement the priorities of the Caribbean Regional Strategic Plan of Action, which sets out realistic targets for reducing the rate of new infections, raising the quality and coverage of care, treatment and support and building institutional capacity, and to cope with the problems and the burden caused by the HIV/AIDS pandemic;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to consider utilizing a strategic programming framework modality to strengthen the coordination and cooperation between the two secretariats as well as between the United Nations field offices and the Caribbean Community;

7. Calls upon the United Nations, the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to assist the countries of the Caribbean, in particular those in greatest need, such as Grenada and Haiti, in their rebuilding efforts after the hurricane damage of 2004;

8. Welcomes the initiatives of Member States in assisting in the cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community, and encourages their continuing efforts;

9. Recommends that the fourth general meeting between representatives of the Caribbean Community and its associated institutions and of the United Nations system be held in the Caribbean in early 2006 in order to review and appraise progress in the implementation of the agreed areas and issues and to hold consultations on such additional measures and procedures as may be required to facilitate and strengthen cooperation between the two organizations;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

Chapter IV

Asia and the Pacific

In 2004, the security challenges in Asia and the Pacific, especially in Afghanistan and Iraq, continued to test the resolve of the international community in its efforts to restore peace and stability to that region, return it to democratic governance, and promote and strengthen its economic and social development.

In Afghanistan, where institutions of security and justice and the provision of basic services were still weak and dependent on the international community, significant progress was made towards the implementation of the benchmarks contained in the Bonn Agreement [YUN 2001, p. 263] governing Afghanistan's transition to peace and democracy. With United Nations support, provided through the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA), headed by the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Lakhdar Brahimi, the Constitutional Loya Jirga (grand council) finalized and adopted in January a constitution for Afghanistan, paving the way for the re-establishment of the rule of law and the holding of democratic elections. Those elections, which were held without any major security incidents, allowed President Hamid Karzai and a new cabinet to take office in December and to begin planning for parliamentary and provincial elections in 2005.

The international community's commitment to a stable and peaceful Afghanistan was reaffirmed at a conference held in Berlin, Germany, on 31 March. Delegates, among other things, pledged $8.2 billion towards an Afghan-led reconstruction programme and adopted the Berlin Declaration, which expressed the determination of the Afghan Government and the international community to continue the tasks of rebuilding and reforming the political, social and economic structures of Afghanistan. The conference also adopted the Berlin Declaration on Counter-Narcotics, which called for regional cooperation in the fight against the cultivation and trafficking of illicit drugs.

In March, the Security Council extended the UNAMA mandate to provide support for the implementation of the Bonn Agreement for an additional period of one year.

The International Security Assistance Force (ISAF), a multinational force established by Security Council resolution 1386(2001) [YUN 2001, p. 267], continued to assist the Afghan Government in the maintenance of security in Kabul and its surrounding areas. It expanded its support role through the deployment of provincial reconstruction teams in other parts of the country. The North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) continued to carry out its role as lead command for ISAF throughout 2004.

In January, the Council further refined the sanctions measures against Osama bin Laden, Al-Qaida, the Taliban and their associates. It also strengthened the mandate of the Al-Qaida and Taliban Sanctions Committee and established, for a period of 18 months, an Analytical Support and Sanctions Monitoring Team to report on the implementation of the measures by States and to recommend further action for consideration by the Council. In addition, it improved the Committee's consolidated list, which remained a critical tool for implementing all sanctions measures.

The Economic and Social Council, in July, adopted resolution 2004/37, on providing support to the Government of Afghanistan in its efforts to eliminate illicit opium and foster stability and security in the region (see p. 1244). By resolution 59/161, the General Assembly, in December, also called on the international community to support the Afghan Government in its efforts to eliminate opium production (see p. 1244). The Economic and Social Council, in July, adopted resolution 2004/10 on the situation of women and girls in Afghanistan (see p. 1163).

In Iraq, the challenges to peace and security were a major priority for the international community and the United Nations. Despite the enormous security constraints, the United Nations continued to promote an inclusive, participatory and transparent political transition process, provide reconstruction, development and humanitarian assistance, and promote the protection of human rights, national reconciliation and judicial and legal reform.

On 28 June, the Coalition Provisional Authority (CPA), established in 2003 by the occupying forces to provide for the interim administration of Iraq, handed over authority over the entire territory to the Interim Iraqi Government, which was officially established on that same day. Consequently, the Governing Council of Iraq ceased to exist.

The Secretary-General's Special Adviser, Lakhdar Brahimi (Algeria), at the request of the Governing Council of Iraq and CPA, undertook three missions to Iraq between February and June 2004. During those visits, which also included a team from the UN Electoral Assistance Division, he helped the Iraqis to negotiate an appropriate modality and schedule for the holding of elections and facilitated a consultative process, which resulted in an agreement on the structure and composition of a sovereign and independent Interim Government. UN electoral experts assisted in the establishment of an independent Iraqi electoral commission and contributed technical expertise for the preparation of general elections, scheduled to take place in January 2005.

In March, the Iraqi Governing Council approved the Transitional Administrative Law, which served as the legal basis for the Interim Government until the ratification of a permanent constitution.

On 8 June, the Security Council adopted resolution 1546(2004), by which it endorsed the proposed timetable for Iraq's political transition, including the formation of a sovereign Interim Government of Iraq by 30 June 2004 and the convening of a national conference. It endorsed the holding no later than 31 January 2005 of direct democratic elections for a Transitional National Assembly, which would have responsibility, among other things, for forming a Transitional Government and for drafting a permanent constitution leading to a constitutionally elected Government by 31 December 2005. The resolution gave the United Nations a strong and clearly defined mandate and took note of the intention to create a distinct entity under unified command of the multinational force to provide security for the UN presence in Iraq. Moreover, the resolution reaffirmed the authorization for the multinational force under unified command established under resolution 1511(2003), and decided that the force should have the authority to take all necessary measures to contribute to the maintenance of security and stability in Iraq.

In August, the United Nations helped to convene a national conference at which an Interim National Council was elected.

Meanwhile, the security environment continued to deteriorate throughout 2004, with attacks, including acts of terror, against Iraqi civilians, State representatives and members of the multinational force. In November, the Interim Iraqi Government declared a 60-day state of emergency throughout the country, with the exception of the three northern governorates. Due to a lack of security, the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq (UNAMI), established in 2003, carried out its activities from outside the country, specifically in Cyprus, Jordan and Kuwait. International and regional efforts were made to foster greater stability in Iraq, including a ministerial meeting in Sharm El Sheik in late November, which the Secretary-General attended.

The United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission (UNMOVIC) and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) assessed material that was in the public domain on the issues pertaining to Iraq's alleged weapons of mass destruction. They also investigated the discovery of items relevant to their mandates that had been exported from Iraq as scrap metal.

In April, the Secretary-General appointed a high-level Independent Inquiry Committee, chaired by Paul A. Volcker (United States), to investigate allegations of impropriety in the administration and management of the oil-for-food programme. The Committee submitted a status report and a briefing paper.

Progress was made in the identification and return of remains of missing Kuwaiti and third-country nationals from Iraq, and on the return of all Kuwaiti property seized by Iraq during the 1990 invasion and occupation of Kuwait.

In 2004, Timor-Leste continued to establish and strengthen its national institutions with assistance from the United Nations Mission of Support in East Timor (UNMISET) and UN agencies. As the security situation remained stable throughout the year, and to help Timor-Leste achieve full self-sufficiency, the Security Council, in May, extended the UNMISET mandate for a period of six months beyond 20 May 2004, but reduced the size of the operation and revised its tasks to take account of the changed circumstances on the ground. In November, the Council extended the Mission's mandate for a final period until 20 May 2005. The Government of Timor-Leste assumed full responsibility for maintaining security and stability within the country, although UNMISET remained ready to assist in exceptional circumstances. UNMISET continued to provide capacity-building assistance to public administration, law enforcement and the judiciary. In October, a UN technical assessment mission made recommendations pertaining to UNMISET's tasks and composition.

In other developments, local elections, the first ever to be conducted by Timorese authorities, were held in December. Relations between Timor-Leste and Indonesia continued to improve, although the two countries did not reach final agreement on the demarcation of their land border. Marine boundary negotiations between Timor-Leste and Australia continued, though no final agreement was reached on the exploitation of petroleum and natural gas resources in the area.

After a prolonged stalemate, the political and institutional processes in Cambodia resumed in 2004. In November, Cambodia ratified the Agreement between the United Nations and the Cambodian Government concerning the prosecution of crimes committed during the period of Democratic Kampuchea. The Agreement would enter into force once the United Nations was satisfied that sufficient funding was in place to support the operations and staffing of the Extraordinary Chambers for a sustained period of time.

In 2004, the peace process in Bougainville, Papua New Guinea, moved forward slowly but steadily. The United Nations Observer Mission in Bougainville (UNOMB) oversaw the destruction by the Bougainville parties of over 90 per cent of weapons. The Bougainville parties together with the Government of Papua New Guinea finalized a constitution. Its adoption would pave the way for the election, scheduled for early 2005, of an autonomous Bougainville Government. UNOMB's mandate was extended for a final period until 30 June 2005.

Among other concerns in the region that were brought to the attention of the United Nations were relations between India and Pakistan; developments in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea; the situation in Myanmar; the issue of the Greater Tunb, Lesser Tunb and Abu Musa islands in the Arabian Gulf; and cooperation with the Pacific Islands Forum. The activities of the United Nations Tajikistan Office of Peace-building were extended for another year, until 1 June 2005, in order to continue to support Tajikistan in its post-conflict peace-building efforts.

Afghanistan

Implementation of Bonn Agreement

In 2004, the United Nations continued to assist the Afghan Transitional Administration (TA) in implementing the 2001 Agreement on Provisional Arrangements in Afghanistan Pending the Re-establishment of Permanent Government Institutions (the Bonn Agreement) [YUN 2001, p. 263], with support provided by the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA), led by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and Head of Mission, and by the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF), led by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO).

The Secretary-General submitted three progress reports to the General Assembly and the Security Council on the implementation of the Bonn Agreement and on the activities of UNAMA [A/58/742-S/2004/230, A/58/868-S/2004/634, A/59/581-S/2004/925]. ISAF activities were reported to the Council by the NATO Secretary-General through the UN Secretary-General [S/2004/222, S/2004/537, S/2004/785]. The Council extended UNAMA's mandate until 26 March 2005 (resolution 1536 (2004)) (see p. 313) and ISAF's authorization until 13 October 2005 (resolution 1563 (2004)) (see p. 331).

On 10 February, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's intention to appoint Jean Arnault (France) as his Special Representative for Afghanistan to replace Lakhdar Brahimi (Algeria), who relinquished his post on 6 January [S/2004/104, S/2004/105].

Finalization of Afghan Constitution

Under the terms of the Bonn Agreement, the Constitutional Loya Jirga, which commenced its consideration in December 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 308] of the draft constitution for Afghanistan, successfully concluded its deliberations on 4 January 2004, with almost unanimous agreement among the 502 delegates on the final draft. The various groups reached compromise on many of the issues before them, including the powers of the President, the nationality of ministers, the creation of a commission to oversee the implementation of the Constitution, the timing of the elections and the national anthem and language. The final text agreed provided for a presidential system, but with great emphasis on parliamentary control of the executive. The Constitution vested most powers in the central Government and did not devolve much authority to the provinces. It also called for an independent judiciary and a legal framework consistent with the "beliefs and prescriptions" of Islam. It explicitly included all minority groups in the definition of the nation and recognized Dari and Pashto as official languages, and other languages as official in the areas where they were spoken by the majority. It also provided equal rights to men and women and guaranteed women at least 25 per cent of the representatives in the lower house of parliament.

Statement of Security Council President. The Security Council President, in a 6 January press statement [SC/7971-AFG/241], said that Council members welcomed the new Constitution agreed by the Loya Jirga on 4 January as a significant step towards a peaceful, prosperous and democratic Afghanistan that respected the rights of all citizens, men and women. Council members paid tribute to the delegates of the Constitutional Loya Jirga for their work in completing that long and complex process. They also recognized the important role played by the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Mr. Brahimi.

EU declaration. The European Union (EU), in a 6 January declaration [S/2004/42] of its Presidency (Ireland), welcomed the approval by the Loya Jirga of a Constitution for Afghanistan and reconfirmed its full commitment to the Afghan peace process.

Security Council consideration (January). At the Security Council's 15 January meeting [meeting 4893] to discuss the situation in Afghanistan, the Secretary-General told the Council that, since his December 2003 report on the situation there [YUN 2003, p. 307], the adoption of the new Constitution was an important and very encouraging development in the implementation of the Bonn peace process. The Constitution, which had entered into force, provided a permanent foundation for re-establishing the rule of law in Afghanistan. It defined a political order through a strong presidential system of government with a bicameral legislature, established a judicial system in compliance with Islam, and included provisions for ensuring full respect for fundamental human rights, including equal rights for women. However, the Constitution by itself could not guarantee peace and stability. Afghans, with the international community's support, had to tackle the troubling security situation, ensure an inclusive and broadly representative Government, and accelerate the pace of reconstruction.

The Secretary-General's Special Representative said that the near unanimous acclamation of the new Constitution was a further step in the Bonn transitional plan. The Constitutional Loya Jirga was to a large degree representative of Afghanistan taken as a whole and included delegates from every province and from a wide sector of society, including women. Much of the Constitutional Loya Jirga provided public debate not seen in the country for many years. The Jirga reached early consensus on some 120 of the 160 articles of the draft constitution, but it saw difficult debate and hard bargaining on a number of issues, such as the form of Government and the role of the courts. Though there were also some signs of polarization along ethnic lines, in the end, delegates reached a compromise and made concessions in order to arrive at a text that all could accept. The fundamental law they had written should, if implemented, provide a solid foundation upon which to continue the task of addressing the real needs facing Afghans daily. The first task in implementing the Constitution was to make it a living reality as expectations had been raised that the Government and its international partners would deliver on their promise of peace and stability.

The adoption of the Constitution was a great accomplishment, but the ultimate test of each element of the Bonn process would be whether or not Afghanistan would move towards "the irreversibility of peace". From that perspective, the new constitutional order would have meaning for the average Afghan only if security improved and the rule of law was strengthened. Thus the major challenges in implementing the Constitution remained the challenges of the peace process as a whole: the disarmament of factional forces, the protection of the basic rights of every Afghan citizen, the demand for increased reconstruction, the reform of national institutions, and reform also across the Government to ensure better representation. Further gains could be made if the effort to reform the national security institutions, the Ministry of Defence, the Ministry of the Interior and the intelligence services were to pick up pace. The disarmament, demobilization and reintegration (DDR) programme had also not progressed far enough. In addition, the threat factional forces posed to the peace process had been increasingly compounded by the terrorist tactics of extremists. The pattern continued of challenging the central Government's authority and disrupting the peace process by attacking targets of opportunity, be they the Government, non-governmental organizations (NGOs), the United Nations or ordinary citizens. Those attacks coincided with signals that extremist elements were rallying support against the peace process and had the effect of blocking reconstruction and limiting the presence of the Government in the affected areas. While the United States and Pakistan were interdicting extremist elements at the border, some press reports claimed that Taliban leaders were moving more or less freely in and between cities in Pakistan. Afghan and Pakistani authorities were discussing those issues of concern in a constructive manner. At the same time, the Government, along with UNAMA, UN agencies and international security forces, was working out integrated packages to improve district-level governance, strengthen the formal and traditional justice system, increase the presence of police and reach out with focused reconstruction assistance to communities.

Mr. Brahimi said that it was too early to draw lessons from the first two years of the Bonn process, but he believed that one clear lesson related to the difficulty of carrying out post-conflict transitional processes without equivalent and dedicated security assistance. Until Afghan security institutions were further strengthened, there would be a need in other parts of the country for the sort of assistance that ISAF had given in Kabul. The launch of the German provincial reconstruction team (PRT) in Kunduz was the first sign of ISAF's expansion, as called for by Security Council resolution 1510(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 310]. The United States had also indicated its intention to create a broader PRT presence in the south.

Mr. Brahimi expressed concern over the extent to which the Afghan economy was becoming dependent on the drug trade. The Government had shown a commitment to tackling the problem, but its efforts had concentrated on building government institutions and on drafting legislation. While those activities were essential in the long-term fight against drugs, they had not had an immediate effect on the amount of opium cultivated or trafficked. The problem would not be solved over the long term without development and achievements being made in other sectors, including in providing alternative livelihoods, building up the judicial and penal systems and reducing demand for opium derivatives both domestically and abroad.

Mr. Brahimi said that the success of the Constitutional Loya Jirga and of the political debate that had begun offered hope, but it was a success that had to be quickly capitalized on, lest it did no more than raise false expectations.

Report of Secretary-General (March). In his 19 March report on the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security [A/58/742-S/2004/230], submitted in response to Security Council resolution 1471(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 295] and General Assembly resolutions 58/27 A [ibid., p. 304] and 58/27 B [ibid., p. 934], the Secretary-General summarized the key developments in Afghanistan since his 30 December 2003 report [ibid., p. 307]. He said that the positive outcome of the Constitutional Loya Jirga had affected the political dynamics of the nation. The unity and purpose demonstrated by delegates from the southern provinces contrasted with the fragmentation observed in the past, and suggested renewed interest and optimism about national politics within that important constituency. The Security Council had been repeatedly informed of the concern that a continued sense of alienation in southern Afghanistan was a factor of instability. The perception that the new Constitution offered a credible framework for power-sharing was therefore welcomed.

Security Council consideration (March). On 24 March [meeting 4931], the Security Council discussed the situation in Afghanistan. Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations Hédi Annabi said that after 26 months of steady progress in the implementation of the Bonn Agreement's political agenda, the process had reached one of its last major benchmarks: the holding of free and fair elections. The Constitution required elections for the presidency and for the upper and lower houses of the national assembly. At the implementation level, notwithstanding the many complexities associated with the carrying out of multi-level and simultaneous elections in Afghanistan, around 40,000 Afghans would be trained to manage 4,700 polling sites on election day. The United Nations would verify the work of the registration and polling teams, which would be composed entirely of Afghans. The Electoral Secretariat would implement the instructions of the Joint Electoral Management Body (JEMB), composed of six Afghan electoral commissioners and five international electoral experts. JEMB would take the lead role in deciding when elections would take place and it would also be responsible for the preparation, conduct and oversight of those elections. In the meantime, the first phase of the registration process had progressed more or less on target, with the registration of 1.56 million voters; of those, around 28 per cent were women. Preparations were being made to launch the second phase of the registration process, when registration teams would deploy to provincial capitals. That phase was scheduled to begin on 1 May and to continue at some 4,200 sites for approximately one month. Success in completing the registration and in holding the elections would depend on support from Afghan and international security forces. President Karzai had requested NATO to provide additional security during the election period. UNAMA was holding discussions with NATO on those security issues. The financial requirements for registration were almost fully pledged. Delays, however, in actually disbursing funds to the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) trust fund continued to hinder and delay procurement, staffing and planning activities.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 26 March [meeting 4937], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1536(2004). The draft [S/2004/249] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions on Afghanistan, in particular resolution 1471(2003) of 28 March 2003 extending the mandate of the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan through 27 March 2004,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan,

Welcoming the Constitution adopted by the Loya Jirga on 4 January 2004 which reflects the determination of the Afghan people to ensure the transition of their country towards a stable and democratic State,

Recognizing that the United Nations must continue to play its central and impartial role in the international efforts to assist the Afghan people in consolidating peace in Afghanistan and rebuilding their country,

Reaffirming the Transitional Administration as the sole legitimate government of Afghanistan pending the democratic presidential and parliamentary elections envisioned in the Agreement on Provisional Arrangements in Afghanistan Pending the Re-establishment of Permanent Government Institutions, signed in Bonn, Germany, on 5 December 2001 (the Bonn Agreement) and in the Afghan Constitution,

Reiterating its strong support for the full implementation of the Bonn Agreement, and supporting also the objectives of the international conference scheduled to take place in Berlin on 31 March and 1 April 2004 to allow the Afghan authorities and the international community to reaffirm their long-term commitment to take the transitional process in Afghanistan forward, including by demonstrating support for the Afghan political process and its national security, as well as by confirming and generating international financial and other donations,

Recalling the importance of the coming elections to establish democratic Afghan authorities as a further step towards implementation of the Bonn Agreement, and welcoming in that regard the creation of a Joint Electoral Management Body and the initial progress made in voter registration,

Recalling and emphasizing the importance of the Declaration on Good-neighbourly Relations, signed in Kabul on 22 December 2002, and encouraging all States concerned to continue to follow up on the Kabul Declaration and the Declaration on Encouraging Closer Trade, Transit and Investment Cooperation signed in Dubai, United Arab Emirates, on 22 September 2003,

Stressing also the importance of extending central government authority to all parts of Afghanistan, of comprehensive nationwide disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of all armed factions, and of security sector reform, including reconstitution of the new Afghan National Army and Afghan National Police,

Welcoming the visit of the Security Council mission to Afghanistan from 31 October to 7 November 2003, and taking note of its report and recommendations,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan for an additional period of twelve months from the date of adoption of the present resolution;

9. Welcomes the appointment of Mr. Jean Arnault as the new Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan, reaffirms its continued strong support for the Special Representative and the concept of a fully integrated mission, and endorses his full authority, in accordance with all relevant resolutions, over all United Nations activities in Afghanistan;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council in a timely manner on developments in Afghanistan, including, after elections, on the future role of the Mission;

Berlin Conference on Afghanistan

The International Conference on “Afghanistan and the International Community—A Partnership for the Future” (Berlin, Germany, 31 March–1 April), sponsored by the Governments of Afghanistan, Germany and Japan together with the United Nations, brought together high-level representatives from 65 countries to evaluate the progress made in the Bonn process and to determine the path forward.

The Conference adopted the Berlin Declaration, in which it noted the substantial progress achieved under the Bonn Agreement in fostering peace, stability, national unity, democratization and economic development in Afghanistan, and welcomed in particular the announcement to hold direct presidential and parliamentary elections in September. It agreed that ISAF, currently under NATO command, and Operation Enduring Freedom would continue until the new Afghan security and armed forces were sufficiently constituted and operational. The Conference agreed that the international community would assist further in stabilizing the security situation throughout the country; that it was necessary to implement the first phase of the DDR programme to be completed by June and to intensify it ahead of the 2004 elections; to continue the formation of the Afghan national army; and to fully establish the rule of law and a functioning judicial system. It also agreed to do everything, including the development of economic alternatives, to reduce and eliminate the threat posed to the rule of law and development by opium poppy cultivation, drug production and trafficking.

The Conference endorsed the Work Plan entitled “The Way Ahead” put forward by the Government of Afghanistan, annexed it to the Declaration, and welcomed the multiyear commitments made at the Conference for reconstruction and development totalling $8.2 billion for fiscal years March 2004 to March 2007, including a pledge of $4.4 billion for March 2004 to March 2005 to implement the investment programme outlined in the document submitted to the Conference entitled “Securing Afghanistan’s Future”. The Work Plan outlined measures for holding free and fair elections, institution-building and development.

The Conference also welcomed NATO’s commitment to expand ISAF by establishing additional PRTs and the further steps made by Afghanistan and its neighbours to foster regional cooperation.

Also annexed to the Declaration were the Berlin Declaration on Counter-Narcotics within the framework of the Kabul Declaration on Good-neighbourly Relations [YUN 2002, p. 274], and a progress report on the implementation of the Bonn Agreement.

Security Council consideration (April). The Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Jean-Marie Guéhenno, in his briefing to the Security Council on 6 April [meeting 4941], said that the Conference reasserted the unity of purpose and long-term commitment that had been a hallmark of the international community’s engagement in Afghanistan and demonstrated the international community’s resolve to assist the Afghan Government. The $4.4 billion committed for fiscal year 2004 was over 100 per cent of the amount that had been sought, and the $8.2 billion committed for three years represented 69 per cent of the funds requested for that period by Afghanistan. In the margins of the intergovernmental Conference, two other meetings were held: a meeting of Afghan civil society members and a donor meeting, at which $68 million was pledged, against needs of some $135 million, for the presidential and parliamentary elections and for the Afghan refugee communities in Pakistan and Iran. The Conference highlighted, among other things, the challenges on the reconstruction and development front, as well as the rising tide of the drug economy.

The holding of national elections posed the greatest short-term challenge in the next stage of the Bonn process. In the Work Plan annexed to the Berlin Declaration, the Afghan Government agreed to help ensure freedom of expression and political organization, a level playing field for political parties and their candidates, a neutral civil service and military, freedom of the press and equal access to it. At the request of the Government, the United Nations was prepared, jointly with the Afghan Human Rights Commission, to monitor the implementation of political rights across the country to achieve those benchmarks. Without substantial improvement in the security situation, the elections would be threatened. The Work Plan provided for the intensification of DDR efforts to encompass 40 per cent of the militia and the cantonment of all heavy weapons by June 2004. Success in DDR programmes would depend to a great degree on the leadership of the Afghan Government.

The Under-Secretary-General underscored the need for adequate international security assistance to support the Afghan Government in the electoral process and to protect it from factional threats and attempts to terminate it. The United Nations joined President Karzai's appeal to NATO and the coalition to increase deployment of international forces to help the Afghan Government fulfil its commitment to hold free and fair elections.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

On 6 April [meeting 4941], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/9 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the results of the Berlin Conference on Afghanistan, held on 31 March and 1 April 2004, co-chaired by the United Nations, Afghanistan, Germany and Japan. The Council thanks Afghanistan and Germany for jointly hosting this event, an important milestone on the way to a secure, stable, free, prosperous and democratic Afghanistan.

The Council expresses its full support for the commitment of Afghanistan and the international community to successfully complete the implementation of the Agreement on Provisional Arrangements in Afghanistan Pending the Re-establishment of Permanent Government Institutions, signed in Bonn, Germany, on 5 December 2001 (the Bonn Agreement) and to continue the transition process in Afghanistan through a lasting partnership, thus reflecting a model for a common endeavour of the international community in its fight against terrorism.

The Council endorses the Berlin Declaration and stresses the relevance of the Work Plan of the Afghan Government, the Progress Report on the Implementation of the Bonn Agreement, and the Berlin Declaration on Counter-Narcotics, annexed to the Berlin Declaration, and welcomes the significant financial multiyear commitments made by the international donor community.

The Council in particular expresses full support for the commitment by the Government of Afghanistan to pursue the necessary reform steps and actions as outlined in the Work Plan.

The Council welcomes the announcement of President Karzai to hold direct presidential and parliamentary elections by September of this year. The Council stresses the importance of a secure environment for free, fair and credible democratic elections, and stresses that to this end further efforts of the Government of Afghanistan and of the international community are needed.

The Council welcomes in this regard the decision taken by the President of Afghanistan to implement vigorously the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, in particular to intensify it ahead of the 2004 elections, and to continue the formation of the Afghan National Army and the Afghan National Police.

The Council also acknowledges the commitment by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to expand the mission of the International Security Assistance Force by establishing five additional Provincial Reconstruction Teams by summer 2004 and further Provisional Reconstruction Teams thereafter, as well as the readiness of the Force and Operation Enduring Freedom to assist in securing the conduct of elections.

The Council welcomes the commitments totalling $8.2 billion for the fiscal years March 2004–March 2007 made by participants at the Berlin Conference for the reconstruction and development of Afghanistan and stresses the importance, with increasing absorption capacity, for a growing share of this assistance to be channelled through the Afghan budget as direct budget support or as contributions to the Afghanistan Reconstruction Trust Fund and to the Law and Order Trust Fund.

The Council stresses that opium poppy cultivation, drug production and trafficking pose a serious threat to the rule of law and development in Afghanistan as well as to international security, and that therefore Afghanistan and the international community shall endeavour to reduce and eventually eliminate this threat, including through the development of economic alternatives. The Council reiterates the importance of increased cooperation among neighbouring States and countries along trafficking routes to strengthen anti-narcotic controls.

The Council takes note of the appeal of President Karzai at the Berlin Conference for additional international support needed in countering narcotics. The Council refers in this context to the necessary implementation of the Afghan National Drug Control Strategy and the Counter-Narcotics Action Plans in the areas of law enforcement, judicial reform, alternative livelihoods, demand reduction and public awareness. The Council calls upon Member States to support the implementation of these Action Plans. Afghanistan needs both human and financial resources to tackle this problem.

The Council welcomes, in particular, the Berlin Declaration on Counter-Narcotics within the framework of the Declaration on Good-neighbourly Relations, signed in Kabul on 22 December 2002 by Afghanistan and its neighbours, as well as the planned Conference on Regional Police Cooperation to be held in Doha on 18 and 19 May 2004.

The Council invites the Secretary-General to include in his future reports to the Council and the General Assembly on the situation in Afghanistan, in addition to the information on implementation of the Bonn Agreement, chapters on progress achieved in the implementation of the Berlin Declaration, the Work Plan of the Afghan Government and in the promotion of regional and international cooperation with Afghanistan.

The Council reaffirms its full support for the actions taken by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan and reiterates the central and impartial role of the United Nations in the international efforts to assist the Afghan people in consolidating peace in Afghanistan and rebuilding their country.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

As a follow-up to the Berlin Conference, the Afghanistan Development Forum met at ministerial level (Kabul, 20-22 April) to discuss how the pledges made in Berlin could be translated into specific programmes. The meeting emphasized such cross-cutting themes as gender, human rights and the environment. Investment in security and the rule of law as prerequisites for all other activities were also emphasized.

Communication. By a 1 July letter to the Secretary-General [A/59/124-S/2004/532], Uzbekistan transmitted the text of the Tashkent Declaration by the heads of State of the members of the Shanghai Cooperation Organization (China, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Russian Federation, Tajikistan, Uzbekistan), adopted at a summit meeting (Tashkent, Uzbekistan, 17 June). The members welcomed the formation of a widely representative Government in Afghanistan. They also said that they would strive to promote international cooperation in the fight against terrorism, extremism and drug trafficking in order to establish security, peace and tranquillity, as well as to create the essential conditions for the peaceful renewal of Afghanistan.

Security situation

The Secretary-General, in his March report on the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security [A/58/742-S/2004/230], said that security in Afghanistan showed no signs of significant improvement. Civilians continued to be killed in inter-factional fighting and attacks by extremist elements on national and international aid agencies and on government officials continued to occur, predominantly in the southern provinces, constraining implementation of activities such as reconstruction, the census and voter registration in rural areas. Attacks against ISAF on 27 and 28 January suggested that the risk of suicide attacks against well-protected, international military targets remained high. At the same time, factional feuds, rivalries and drug-related incidents continued to affect the lives of the population. However, the weak or corrupt provincial and district administrations, the continued rule of local commanders and the absence of effective national law enforcement were more common sources of insecurity for the population than terrorist violence. Those factors contributed to a deterioration of security in the north-east, traditionally one of the safest regions of the country, where rival commanders had been fighting over land, possibly driven by attempts to expand drug production. Aware that the UN presence contributed to stability, security measures were being taken to enable the United Nations to operate safely in as many areas as possible. As a result of the implementation of additional security measures and guarantees from the national authorities of Afghanistan and Pakistan, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), on 29 February, resumed the repatriation of Afghan refugees living in Pakistan, which had been suspended after the assassination of a UNHCR staff member in November 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 307]. As part of a longer-term approach to security, a security, stabilization and reconstruction programme combined the deployment of better trained and equipped police forces, reconstruction projects and improvements in the provincial and district administration. A pilot project was launched in Kandahar under the leadership of the provincial governor and with the support of UNAMA and the coalition-led provincial reconstruction team. The national programme was officially launched on 21 January.

By mid-year, the security situation in Afghanistan had become volatile, having seriously deteriorated in certain parts of the country, said the Secretary-General in his August report [A/58/868-S/2004/634]. Attacks on national and international forces and on electoral, government and humanitarian workers and their premises in southern Afghanistan had intensified. Several of the most serious acts of violence took place in the north and west of the country, areas that had so far been considered low-risk. Acts of violence were increasingly being directed at the staff and offices of the electoral secretariat and UN workers. Four Afghan female registration staff were killed in the east in two separate bomb attacks on 26 June and 8 July. In the south, a team leader of the Joint Electoral Management Body (JEMB) in Uruzgan province and a village chief were ambushed and shot dead on 24 July. A protracted attack on an electoral convoy, in clearly marked UN vehicles with a police convoy, took place in broad daylight in the south-east on 6 June and rocket-propelled grenades were fired at a UN Mine Action Centre for Afghanistan demining convoy in the central and south-eastern regions on 12 June and on a UNHCR compound in the southern province of Kandahar on 18 June.

The view of the north as the safest area of the country was seriously undermined by a succession of violent acts. A brutal attack left 10 Chinese construction workers dead in the city of Jilawugir (Baghlan province) on 10 June; five days later, an attack with improvised explosive devices in the town of Kondoz killed four Afghans. On 2 June, gunmen in the west ambushed a Médecins sans frontières vehicle in Badghis province, and shot and killed five of its staff, including three international staff, causing the organization to withdraw completely from the country.

In addition to those attacks, the north and west of the country experienced an unprecedented level of factional fighting. Fighting between the forces loyal to Governor Ismail Khan and General Zahir in the town of Herat on 21 March resulted in some 50 to 100 people killed, including the central Government's Minister of Aviation and a son of the Governor, and forced General Zahir and his forces to take refuge in the neighbouring province of Badghis. In a negotiated agreement between the central Government and Governor Khan, troops were deployed to Herat to help restore order. Herat's intelligence chief was implicated in the incident and dismissed; however, his successor, appointed by the central Government, was denied access to his office by the Governor. On 4 July, commanders loyal to the Governor ransacked the intelligence chief's temporary office and attacked his staff, critically injuring two. In Faryab province, factional tensions culminated on 8 April when the Governor and senior officials of his administration were forced out of office by a violent crowd. The central Government deployed Afghan national army troops to the area to restore order. Nevertheless, factional elements had thwarted the efforts by the central Government to install a new governor. Similarly, in Samangan and Sar-i-Pul, factional elements continued to prevent the governors-designate from taking up their posts.

In the months prior to election day and the deployment of additional security forces, which took place in the final weeks before the elections (see below), there was a build-up of serious security incidents, some of which were directed against the electoral effort, but others were directed more generally against peace and reconstruction activities. On 12 September, following the decision by President Karzai to replace the Governor of Herat, Ismail Khan, several hundred protesters attacked and burned the UNAMA office in Herat and looted the offices of other UN agencies, NGOs and the Afghan Independent Human Rights Commission. The fact that those attacks occurred in areas previously thought not to be at high risk was of serious concern. Similarly, security in the south and south-east deteriorated to the point where large areas were effectively out of bounds to the assistance community, and government officials were frequent targets of attacks. There were real concerns over the impact that that obvious deterioration of the security situation might have on the credibility of the elections. Significant extraordinary measures were therefore taken to safeguard the election.

The generally calm security environment on election day was due in part to the additional ISAF and coalition troops deployed before the election. Security was also greatly enhanced by progress made in the training and deployment of the Afghan army and police forces, which performed extremely well on election day, whether in protecting polling stations, deterring threats or escorting election materials.

In the aftermath of the election, and with a reduction in the coalition and ISAF forces, three broad security threats continued to effect the Bonn process: extremist or terrorist attacks, factional violence among militia forces and violence and other threats to security personnel by criminal elements, in particular those involved in the trafficking of drugs. That reality was tragically borne out by a suicide bombing in the centre of Kabul on 23 October, in which two people lost their lives. A few days later, on 28 October, three international electoral staff were abducted in the Kart-e-Parwan district of Kabul in broad daylight. As a result, additional security measures were taken to enhance the safety of staff, the most stringent measures since 2001. The abducted staff were subsequently released on 22 November.

Elections

Security Council consideration (March). On 24 March [meeting 4931], during the Security Council's consideration of the situation in Afghanistan, the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Mr. Annabi, reported that after 26 months of steady progress in the implementation of the Bonn Agreement's political agenda, the process had reached one of its last major benchmarks: the holding of free and fair elections for the presidency and for the upper and lower houses of the national assembly. At the implementation level, some 40,000 Afghans would be trained to manage 4,700 polling sites on election day. The United Nations would verify the work of the registration and polling teams, which would be composed entirely of Afghans.

The Electoral Secretariat would implement the instructions of JEMB, composed of six Afghan electoral commissioners and five international electoral experts. JEMB would take the lead role in deciding when elections would take place and would also be responsible for their preparation, conduct and oversight. In the meantime, the first phase of the registration process had progressed, with the registration of 1.56 million voters. The second phase, which would involve deploying registration teams to provincial capitals, was scheduled to begin on 1 May at some 4,200 sites. Success in completing the registration and in holding the elections would depend on support from Afghan and international security forces. President Karzai had requested NATO to provide additional security during the election period and UNAMA was holding discussions with NATO on those security issues. The financial requirements for registration were almost fully pledged. Delays, however, in actual disbursing funds to the UNDP trust fund continued to hinder and delay procurement, staffing and planning activities.

Report of Secretary-General. In March, following broad consultations, the Afghan Government announced its intention to hold presidential and lower-house parliamentary elections simultaneously in September 2004, and for the upper house in the spring of 2005, said the Secretary-General [A/58/868-S/2004/634]. The Electoral Law was passed by the Cabinet on 27 May 2004, codifying the electoral rules for the transitional period and providing for a system of single non-transferable votes with multiple-seat constituencies, and ensuring, in accordance with the Constitution, that 68 of the total 249 seats in the lower house would be held by women. On 5 June, the Decree on Provincial Boundaries, delineating administrative divisions for electoral purposes, was signed, creating two new provinces (Panjshir and Daikundi). On 10 July, the Cabinet decided to base the apportionment of seats in the legislature on the provincial population figures of the 1979 census, and requested the United Nations to provide technical assistance to update those figures and to supervise the publication of the final outcome. While the Constitution provided that every effort be made to hold the presidential and parliamentary elections together, JEMB was compelled to take into account a number of legal and technical factors that affected the credibility of the elections and the parliamentary elections in particular. On 9 July, JEMB announced that the elections would be separated: the presidential election would be held on 9 October 2004 and elections for both the lower and upper houses of parliament would be held in April 2005.

Nominations for presidential candidates closed on 26 July, with 23 candidates having submitted applications to contest the ballot and 30 political parties having been formally registered out of the 62 that applied.

As requested by the Government of Afghanistan on 20 June, the Afghan Independent Human Rights Commission and UNAMA began an open-ended process to evaluate the exercise of political rights throughout Afghanistan, with particular focus on the freedoms of expression, assembly, association and movement. The first report on the findings of the verification campaign presented on 16 July contained recommendations to address the problems identified during the investigation.

Security Council consideration (May). On 27 May [meeting 4979], the Security Council discussed the situation in Afghanistan and was briefed on the latest developments by the newly appointed Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan and Head of UNAMA, Jean Arnault, who reported that the security situation continued to evolve negatively. An increase in the number of incidents and in the number of resulting casualties was consistent with the spring surge in extremists' attacks. According to coalition forces, various extremist groups were involved, including the Taliban operating in the south, foreign fighters in the south-east and Hezb-i-Islami/Hekmatyar in the east. Drug-related violence was also an important factor of insecurity. In addition, militias involved in combating the Taliban were believed to be responsible for a high percentage of incidents in the areas where they operated. In the north and north-east, tensions between two ethnic factions remained high. However, the deployment in that region and in the city of Herat of the new Afghan army had had a stabilizing impact and had prevented further escalation. Though the voter registration process had been affected by the overall increase in incidents, it was unclear whether attacks against registration teams had been directed against the electoral operation per se or whether they were intended against government targets. The level of violent opposition to the electoral process was therefore still difficult to gauge, but precautions were being taken as registration was pushing into the rural areas. Since the beginning of May, close to a million people had been registered, which brought the total number of registered voters to 2.7 million. Although the registration process was well under way, a number of concerns remained, foremost the problem of security and the possibility that insecurity could lead to under-registration in some provinces. Another challenge related to the determination of population figures themselves. Under the new Electoral Law, the figures that would be used to define the number of representatives per province would be based on a survey done by the Afghan Central Statistical Office. However, due to insecurity, it was likely that a number of provinces would not be surveyed, or only partially. A third challenge was funding. The voter registration process itself was almost fully funded, with a shortfall of just $2.6 million, but the election itself was only partially funded. The registration of political parties had been slow and difficult, due in part to the fact that the Political Party Law sought to limit the right to operate legally to those groups that were not related to military organizations. In order to hold free and fair elections, a new Media Law, among other things, had been passed and electoral authorities were in the process of establishing a media monitoring commission. Security in general, and that of the electoral process in particular, was ultimately an Afghan responsibility, but it was a responsibility that Afghans could not shoulder without international assistance. A widespread, robust international military presence in support of domestic security forces remained critical.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 15 July [meeting 5004], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/25 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council, taking note of the decision announced by the Joint Electoral Management Body established by the Afghan authorities, welcomes and supports the holding of the presidential election in Afghanistan on 9 October 2004. This election is a key requirement under the Agreement on Provisional Arrangements in Afghanistan Pending the Re-establishment of Permanent Government Institutions, signed in Bonn, Germany, on 5 December 2001 (the Bonn Agreement) and represents a new milestone in the process of constructing a democratic, stable and prosperous Afghanistan.

The Council further takes note of the decision of the Body to hold parliamentary elections in April 2005. The Council understands that technical and logistical reasons made it impossible, as reported by the Secretariat, to hold simultaneous presidential and parliamentary elections by September of this year. The Council stresses the importance of using the remaining months to ensure that the necessary preparations are completed and the conditions met for free and fair elections according to the timetables of the Body.

The Council calls upon the Afghan Government and the international community to maintain and intensify, ahead of the presidential and parliamentary elections, their efforts to strengthen the national army and national police, to accelerate the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process, and to support the Afghan Government in its strategy to eliminate opium production. The Council stresses the importance of accelerated progress on disarmament, demobilization and reintegration in order to create a safer environment for the election process, including security for electoral staff and Afghan voters, to help ensure a free and credible outcome to the electoral process, and otherwise to help create a secure environment in which the rule of law is respected. The Council reiterates its call upon all eligible Afghans to fully participate in the registration and electoral processes for the presidential and parliamentary elections.

The Council encourages Afghan authorities to enable an electoral process to provide for voter participation that is representative of the national demographics including women and refugees, and in this regard calls for the determination of practical modalities for the registration and participation of the Afghan refugees in Iran and Pakistan in the ongoing Afghan electoral process.

The Council acknowledges the commitment by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Operation Enduring Freedom and Member States to assist in establishing a secure environment for the conduct of elections, and calls upon the international community to further increase its security assistance to Afghanistan. The Council also acknowledges the intention of the European Union and bilateral donors to contribute to the conduct of free and fair elections and notes ongoing discussions within the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe on a possible contribution in that context.

The Council stresses the importance of providing the necessary funding for the timely implementation of the timetables of the Joint Electoral Management Body. It acknowledges the contribution of the international donor community in support of the elections, calls upon donors to implement their pledges, and encourages the international community to consider further commitments to make the costs for elections as inclusive as possible.

The Council reaffirms its full support for the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan and reiterates the central and impartial role of the United Nations in the international efforts to assist the Afghan people in consolidating peace in Afghanistan and rebuilding their country.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Security Council consideration (August). At the Security Council's 25 August meeting [meeting 5025] to discuss the situation in Afghanistan, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General said that preparations for the presidential elections were under way. JEMB was finalizing regulations applicable to the electoral campaign, scheduled to start on 7 September, which included campaign financing, electoral activities and public order, access to the media and the misuse of government resources for political purposes. The overall security plan for the pre-polling phase, for election day and for post-election processes had also been finalized, with polling-site security being the responsibility primarily of the Ministry of the Interior, which by polling day would have 20,000 police, while the security areas around the polling sites would be protected by military personnel from the Afghan national army, ISAF and the coalition. Factional rivalries had not been able to derail the electoral process or undermine popular participation in registration in the country's east and south-east. However, their impact on the south had been more tangible, depriving part of the population there of the possibility of participating in the election. There were clear indications that the Taliban and similar groups were preparing to escalate their attacks against the last stage of the election. Action was therefore necessary against those who were planning to carry out those attacks. A welcome development, in that regard, was the assurance by Pakistan's President Pervez Musharraf, during an August meeting with President Karzai, that he would not allow Pakistan's territory to be used for actions against Afghanistan's interests. At the same time, preparations for registration and voting of Afghan refugees in neighbouring Iran and Pakistan had made substantial progress. Following the signing of memorandums of understanding between both Governments, and between Afghanistan and UNAMA, the implementing partner, the International Organization for Migration, had begun to operate in both countries.

Security Council consideration (September).

On 28 September [meeting 5045], the Security Council discussed the situation in Afghanistan. The Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Mr. Guéhenno, said that the logistical preparations were on track for the 9 October polling date. Despite episodes of violence in Herat, which delayed the pre-election operations in western Afghanistan, the tensions in that part of the country had subsided, enabling the electoral preparations to resume despite the damage caused to the offices of UNAMA and JEMB during incidents on 12 September. Eighteen presidential and 36 vice-presidential candidates, including three women, had been campaigning in the presidential election since the official start of the campaign on 7 September. The Afghan Independent Human Rights Commission and UNAMA continued to monitor and report on the exercise of political rights throughout the country. JEMB had also accredited 11 national and international monitoring organizations, and 14 more were expected to be accredited before the elections. Despite a slow start, registration and voting preparations for Afghan refugees in Pakistan and Iran were under way. Efforts were being made to define with tribal and community leaders their role in local security arrangements on election day, particularly in the east, south-east and south, in view of the fact that security forces were thinly spread out throughout the country. The DDR process had gained some momentum due to the renewed commitment by the Ministry of Defence to implement the programme and efforts by the Ministry of Justice to apply the law establishing that political parties could be registered only if they severed links with militia forces.

Presidential elections

The Secretary-General reported in November [A/59/581-S/2004/925] that 10.5 million Afghans had registered to vote, 41 per cent of whom were women, for the presidential election, which was held on schedule on 9 October. Eighteen candidates, including one woman, contested the elections. Some 8,128,940 ballots were cast, representing 70 per cent of the registered voters. Polling also took place in Pakistan and Iran, where over 580,000 and 240,000 Afghan refugees, respectively, voted. The elections were followed by some 5,321 domestic and 121 international observers and monitors, 22,000 party agents and 52,000 agents of candidates, as well as national and international media. President Karzai was declared the winner with 55.4 per cent of the vote. He was followed by Yonus Qanooni, with 16.3 per cent, Haji Mohammad Mohaqeq, with 11.6 per cent, and Abdul Rashid Dostum, with 10 per cent, and the remaining 14 candidates, 6 per cent collectively. The candidates agreed to accept the election results.

Despite fears that the process might be attacked by anti-Government elements, no major security incidents occurred. A number of opposition candidates, however, raised allegations regarding the fairness of the process, including problems with the use of indelible ink to mark voters' thumbs and assertions of undue influence on voters by polling staff and candidates' representatives. Those opposition candidates issued an appeal midway through the polling for voters to boycott the ballot, which was largely ignored by voters. In the days after the ballot, most of the candidates who had called for a boycott continued to allege serious irregularities and called for the reopening of some polling centres and for their complaints to be investigated by an independent panel. JEMB requested UNAMA to nominate an independent panel of international electoral experts to investigate their complaints. The panel's report, made public on 2 November, found that the irregularities observed did not have a material impact on the overall outcome of the election.

Security Council consideration (October). On 12 October [meeting 5055], the Security Council discussed the situation in Afghanistan. The Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Mr. Annabi, said that the impressive participation, the enthusiasm and pride of women and men voting for the first time and the peaceful and orderly environment in which the electoral operation unfolded promised well for Afghanistan's journey towards democracy. The fact that the elections were not marred by violence was a tribute not only to the Afghan voters but also to the national army and police, who provided a safe environment with the assistance of the international security forces. The elections, of course, were not perfect, due to trouble experienced with the application of indelible ink, allegations of intimidation and other irregularities. Security conditions on election day exceeded expectations, though some incidents were reported. The presidential elections had helped to add momentum to disarmament efforts, for, by election day, more than 22,500 personnel had been disarmed and 2,780 serviceable heavy weapons had been disabled or cantoned. That corresponded to 33 per cent of estimated actual personnel targets and to 68 per cent of the heavy weapons target.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 12 October [meeting 5056], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/35 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the presidential election that took place on 9 October 2004 in Afghanistan, stresses its historic importance as a milestone in the political process, and congratulates the millions of Afghan voters, many of them women and refugees, who showed their commitment to democracy by participating in the first popular election of their Head of State. The Council welcomes further the broad political representation, as manifested by the 18 presidential candidates. The Council commends the Afghan National Police and the Afghan National Army for their role, with the assistance of the international security forces, in bolstering security during the election period.

The Council appreciates the effort of the Joint Electoral Management Body and the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan for their excellent achievement in the preparations for the presidential election. The Council appreciates the electoral management body's efforts to address any candidate's concerns and to further enhance the transparency of the electoral process, and looks forward to a final statement.

The Council urges the Government of Afghanistan, with the help of the international community, to continue to confront the challenges that remain in Afghanistan, including security, timely preparation of the parliamentary elections in April 2005, the reconstruction of institutions, the fight against narcotics, and the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of Afghan militias.

The Council calls upon the Afghan authorities to plan and carry out without delay inclusive parliamentary elections, and calls upon the international community to support them in completing the electoral process set out in the Bonn Agreement.

The Council pledges its continued support for the Government and people of a sovereign Afghanistan as they rebuild their country, strengthen the foundations of constitutional democracy, and assume their rightful place in the community of nations, and calls upon the international community, with the United Nations in a central role, to support them in these efforts.

On 3 November, after the certification of the official electoral results by JEMB, Hamid Karzai was declared Afghanistan's first elected President.

Communications. On 1 October [A/59/425-S/2004/808], Turkey transmitted to the Secretary-General the final communiqué of the annual coordination meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States members of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (New York, 28 September), expressing their hope that the holding of the presidential elections on 9 October and parliamentary elections in April 2005 would pave the way towards the restoration of full democracy in Afghanistan. They also called on States to consider making donations to the Afghan People Assistance Fund.

Post-electoral phase

Security Council consideration (November).

On 9 November [meeting 5073], the Security Council was briefed by the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Mr. Guéhenno, who said that attention had shifted to the post-election political phase, including the task of forming the next Government and the challenges of parliamentary and local elections. President Karzai had already identified security as the most important issue, especially the further disarmament of private military forces. Security, in fact, remained a significant concern. A suicide bombing carried out in Kabul on 23 October, in which two people lost their lives, signalled the end of the period of relative calm that prevailed during the presidential election. Parliamentary elections would be much more complicated and fraught with security concerns. There were five essential issues, in particular, that had to be resolved in order to hold parliamentary elections within the time frame prescribed by the electoral law: districts' boundaries—and in some cases provinces—had to be officially delimited; population figures had to be agreed upon for the assignment of parliamentary seats; the voters' list had to be analysed, refined and in some cases updated, in order to prepare specific voter lists for each polling station; a complaints mechanism and electoral offence prosecution system had to be developed at the local level; and the qualifications of potential candidates had to be vetted prior to their registration.

The parliamentary elections would inevitably be affected by local tensions and would be more susceptible to fraud and intimidation than were the presidential elections. For those reasons, the influence of local commanders, the widespread web of narcotics and arms and the absence of an efficient local civil administration constituted serious obstacles to holding legitimate elections in April 2005. The issue of irregular militias was also an emerging problem that needed to be tackled in advance of the next round of elections. The production and trafficking of illicit drugs also contributed to local insecurity and risked becoming a major impediment to holding credible parliamentary and local elections. The expansion of the formal security apparatus would be key to the success of those elections. In particular, the deployment of Afghan professional police was absolutely necessary for safe district elections. However, while domestic security forces would necessarily be called on to play a major role, international forces remained indispensable both in the direct provision of security and in backing up national efforts.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In his November report [A/59/581-S/2004/952] describing key political and humanitarian developments in Afghanistan, the Secretary-General observed that the major reason for the success of the electoral process was the desire of the Afghan people to ensure that it would succeed. That was a decisive indication that the Bonn process and the institutions that were being formed within it, had the backing of a large majority of the Afghan people. The successful presidential election redeemed the difficult decision by JEMB to separate presidential and parliamentary elections. The complexities avoided by postponing parliamentary elections allowed all actors to focus on carrying out the presidential elections as well as possible. Fulfilling the spirit of the Bonn Agreement required more than fulfilling the letter of its defined political process. In particular, much more needed to be achieved towards the fundamental goal of building the capacity of government at all levels and extending its authority to all parts of the country. That extension of authority was required in order to ensure the rule of law, the functioning of the legal economy, the practice of human and political rights and positive relations with neighbouring countries. The gradual handing over of functions to the Afghan Government was a positive indicator of progress made since 2001. The overall policy direction, and the planning of reconstruction, had been successfully taken over by the Afghan Government. The year ahead would present many challenges to the political and economic recovery of the country. For the first time, however, Afghanistan would face those challenges with a directly elected President endowed with a strong popular mandate. The United Nations remained committed to assisting the new Government as it continued to fulfil the letter and the spirit of the Bonn Agreement.

In a later report [A/59/744-S/2005/183], the Secretary-General said that, on 7 December, President Karzai was inaugurated, and the formation of the new 27-member Cabinet was announced on 23 December. The overall security situation remained relatively calm during the last months of 2004, due mainly to the severe winter season. However, coalition forces, the Afghan national army and government institutions continued to be targeted by extremist elements employing anti-tank mines, small unit ambushes and rocket attacks. A new law on money-laundering was adopted in late 2004.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly adopted resolution 59/112 A [draft: A/59/L.44 & Add.1] without vote [agenda items 27 and 39 (d)].

The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 58/27 A of 5 December 2003 and all its previous relevant resolutions,

Recalling also all relevant Security Council resolutions and statements by the President of the Council on the situation in Afghanistan, in particular the most recent resolutions 1536(2004) of 26 March 2004 and 1563(2004) of 17 September 2004, as well as statements by the President of the Council on 6 April and 15 July 2004 and 12 October 2004,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan, and respecting its multicultural, multi-ethnic and historical heritage,

Applauding the adoption of a pluralistic and democratic constitution on 4 January 2004, the first direct election of a Head of State in the history of Afghanistan, on 9 October 2004, and the substantive progress achieved in the empowerment of women in Afghan politics as historic milestones in the political process, which will help to consolidate durable peace and national stability in Afghanistan,

Emphasizing the desirability of a new government being representative of the ethnic, cultural and geographical diversity of the country,

Recognizing the urgent need to tackle the remaining challenges in Afghanistan, including the lack of security in certain areas, terrorist threats, the comprehensive nationwide disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of Afghan militias, the timely preparation of the parliamentary and local elections scheduled for the spring of 2005, the reconstruction of institutions, the promotion and protection of human rights and the fight against narcotics,

Reaffirming in this context its continued support for the implementation of the provisions of the Bonn Agreement of 5 December 2001, and of the Berlin Declaration, including the annexes thereto, of 1 April 2004, and pledging its continued support thereafter for the Government and people of Afghanistan as they rebuild their country, strengthen the foundations of a constitutional democracy and assume their rightful place in the community of nations,

Expressing its appreciation and strong support for the ongoing efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative for Afghanistan, and stressing the central and impartial role that the United Nations continues to play to promote peace and stability in Afghanistan,

Recognizing the need for a continued strong international commitment to humanitarian assistance and for programmes, under the ownership of the Government of Afghanistan, of rehabilitation and reconstruction, and noting that visible progress in this regard can further enhance the authority of the Government and greatly contribute to the peace process,

Expressing in this context its deep concern over attacks against Afghan civilians, United Nations staff, national and international humanitarian personnel and the International Security Assistance Force,

Noting that, despite improvements in building the security sector, terrorist attacks caused by Al-Qaida operatives, the Taliban and other extremist groups and the lack of security caused by factional violence and criminal activity, including the illicit production of and trafficking in drugs, still remain a serious challenge, threatening the democratic process as well as reconstruction and economic development,

Noting also that the responsibility for providing security and law and order throughout the country resides with the Government of Afghanistan, welcoming its continuing cooperation with the Assistance Force and the Operation Enduring Freedom coalition, and stressing the importance of extending central government authority to all parts of Afghanistan,

Commending the Afghan national army and police, the Assistance Force and the Operation Enduring Freedom coalition for their contributions in improving security conditions, including for the electoral process, in Afghanistan,

Commending also, among others, the countries neighbouring Afghanistan for the commitment they have shown to the Afghan presidential election, including their cooperation and support for the successful staging of out-of-country voting in the Islamic Republic of Iran and in Pakistan,

Welcoming the determination of the Afghan authorities to plan and carry out without delay parliamentary and local elections, scheduled for the spring of 2005,

Deeply concerned about the continued increase in the cultivation, production of and trafficking in narcotic drugs in Afghanistan, which is undermining stability and security as well as the political and economic reconstruction of Afghanistan and which has dangerous repercussions in the region and far beyond, and commending in this context the reaffirmed commitment of the Government of Afghanistan to rid the country of this pernicious production and trade, including by decisive law enforcement measures,

Recognizing that the social and economic development of Afghanistan, specifically the development of gainful and sustainable livelihoods in the formal productive sector, is an important condition for the successful implementation of the comprehensive Afghan national drug control strategy and depends to a large extent on enhanced international cooperation with the Government of Afghanistan,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General and the recommendations contained therein;

21. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixtieth session the item entitled "The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security".

On the same day, the Assembly adopted resolution 59/112 B on emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan (see p. 917).

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-ninth (2005) session (decision 59/552).

Sectoral issues

Judicial system and the rule of law

The Afghan justice system suffered from weak management and communications among justice institutions, the absence of implementing legislation for organizing the system, and a lack of the required number of skilled staff and the need to build the capacities of existing staff. The process of reforming the justice sector, led by Italy, was based on two complementary efforts: strengthening political will and providing financial and technical assistance. The new Constitution had also introduced several changes to the judicial system, with the Supreme Court as the highest judicial organ in Afghanistan and its structure and administration well defined.

The decree on the reformed code of criminal procedure was issued in mid-February, providing a versatile system under which jurisdiction could be shifted to provincial courts from districts courts. On 21 February, a two-week training-of-trainers seminar was initiated with senior judicial and law enforcement personnel on the new criminal procedural code. A year-long training programme organized by the Judicial Reform Commission for young professionals was concluded and the International Development Law Organization continued to run courses for judges, prosecutors, defence lawyers and policemen. Other initiatives included the establishment of a department for the administration of juvenile justice within the Ministry of Justice and the start of a legal aid project. In the area of law reform, a juvenile code and by-laws for the new code of criminal procedure were being developed.

The physical facilities of the permanent justice institutions, including the Supreme Court, the Attorney General's office and the Ministry of Justice, were undergoing rehabilitation with UNDP support. Construction of provincial courts was under way in nine capitals, while the prioritization of district courts would be determined by the Provincial Stabilization Strategy.

Complementary to the justice reform effort was the rehabilitation of the correctional system, supported by the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC). Reform of the correctional system focused on Kabul, where UNODC completed the first round of rehabilitation and reconstruction of the male detention centre in February. Work was progressing on the main prison at Pol-e-Charki and the Kabul female detention centre. The Transitional Administration (TA) had devised a long-term redevelopment plan for reforming the national prison system. However, because of competing fiscal priorities facing the Government and the low level of donor support for the rehabilitation for the correctional system, very limited progress was made in that area. Progress was also hampered by a lack of coordination between the main justice institutions, the inroads by the drug mafia, the slow expansion of effective national security institutions, and interference by civil and military authorities in the administration of justice. A key reform was the transfer of prison administration from the Ministry of the Interior to the Ministry of Justice, which was reviewing a draft penitentiary law finalized by UNODC.

A total of 4,339 police officers, including border police, had been trained through the German Police Programme and United States training programmes. Police instruction was being conducted by Afghans, following the completion of the training-of-trainers programme. However, an insufficient number of trained and well-equipped police in the provinces was one of the major obstacles to the expansion of government authority. To redress the shortfall, seven regional police training centres were being established by the United States and were expected to be operational by the end of March. Support for the payment of police salaries was ongoing through the UNDP-managed Law and Order Trust Fund for Afghanistan. Some 19,500 police had by August received training. The target strength of the force provided for a core of the 47,500 national police, 12,500 border police and 2,500 highway police to be reached by the end of 2005.

International support for Afghanistan's police was reaffirmed and increased through the holding of a conference on police reconstruction in Afghanistan (Doha, Qatar, 18-19 May). The conference confirmed that $350 million in international resources would be earmarked for police programmes over the next few years. An immediate need was the provision of some $148.6 million in donor funding for the Law and Order Trust Fund for Afghanistan to cover salaries, equipment, institutional development and rehabilitation of police stations until 31 March 2005.

Security sector reform

Efforts were being made to accelerate the process of strengthening the newly created Afghan security institutions, which, together with their international counterparts, were developing mechanisms to ensure a holistic approach to security sector reform, in particular DDR; reforming and strengthening the justice sector (see p. 325); and combating illicit narcotics (see p. 327). Although further progress was made in the reforms of principal ministries, it was not enough after two years. The first two phases of the reform of the Ministry of Defence had been completed and the next phase commenced with the identification of candidates for the 700 third-tier positions. However, the prevalence of parallel military structures continued to impede the establishment of the national security forces.

Under the lead of the United States, assisted by France, the Afghan national army had been formed, with a strength of some 15,000 trained personnel in 18 battalions deployed around the country on security and "show of force" tasks. At full strength, it would consist of approximately 70,000 soldiers organized in five corps: the central corps in Kabul and four regional corps in Kandahar, Paktia, Herat and Balkh. The three brigades in the central corps were by November at full strength, with 15 battalions altogether. Plans were under way to develop the more technical elements of the corps, especially artillery, air defence and engineering. The process of establishing the regional corps, expected to take 5 to 7 years, had begun with the appointment on 1 September of four regional corps commanders and some key staff. The officer corps was being trained at the Command and General Staff College, which was formally inaugurated on 14 February. Measures had been implemented to address problems of recruitment and attrition. Attrition had been reduced from 15 per cent in November 2003 to 3 per cent per month, owing in part to improved living conditions, a campaign to attract back deserters and the increasing diversity of the armed forces.

The main accomplishment of the Afghan national army during the year was the provision of security for the presidential elections (see p. 321), which was an integral part of the nationwide security plan. It also provided security, in isolated cases, for the mobile disarmament units conducting the DDR programme, and was instrumental in separating the forces of Ismail Khan and his opponents in western Afghanistan during the conflict in August.

Disarmament, demobilization and reintegration

The voluntary DDR programme, under the leadership of UNDP and Japan, which began in October 2003, had two major components: the demobilization of soldiers from existing military units and the cantonment of heavy weapons. The programme showed some success but fell short of expectations. A review of pilot projects in Konduz, Gardez, Mazar-e-Sharif and Kabul revealed shortcomings typical of such operations. A worrying pattern was the widespread extortion of demobilized soldiers by local commanders, which led the Afghan New Beginnings Programme to stop severance payments to soldiers as part of the overall reintegration package. The pilot projects also showed the need for more high-level political engagement to pave the way for more significant DDR. As at 6 March, only 5,373 ex-soldiers or officers had been demobilized. The commitment made at the Berlin Conference (see p. 315) was to achieve the DDR of no less than 40 per cent of the stated troop strength of 100,000 Afghan militia forces, as well as the cantonment of all heavy weapons under credible supervision by June, ahead of the 2004 elections. As at 31 July, the number of men who had turned in their weapons and entered the programme stood at some 12,245 or some 12 per cent of the militia forces' troop strength. Of the total number, some 10,380 had started their reintegration. To accelerate demobilization and disarmament, in July the President issued a decree identifying additional units to be demobilized prior to the elections and instructing the Ministries of Defence and of Finance to begin to apply financial sanctions in cases of non-compliance. By the end of September, an additional 5,480 soldiers had entered the programme. Over 20,000 soldiers had begun the process of reintegration.

The issue of irregular militias also needed to be addressed, since they were not in the programme but were increasingly responsible for insecurity in many parts of the country.

A survey of the cantonment process at the end of July showed that a total of 6,099 heavy weapons were recorded, with 1,657 deemed to be operational, 3,071 classified as reparable and 1,371 classified as unusable. Cantonment had started in Gardez, Kabul, Shiberghan and Mazar-e-Sharif. The problem of guarding the cantonment sites was yet to be resolved and that of the existence of large amounts of ammunition in many parts of the country was still to be addressed.

Counter-narcotics activities

The UNODC Opium Survey 2004 indicated that opium cultivation increased by two thirds in 2004, reaching an unprecedented 131,000 hectares in all provinces. Afghanistan remained the world's largest opium producer, accounting for 75 per cent of global production. In 2003, the value of the crop in Afghanistan was about $2 billion to $3 billion, or 68 per cent of the country's gross domestic product. Economic dependency on poppy cultivation, limited law enforcement resources, corruption and the lack of an effective institutional framework for drug control added to the complexity of the situation. Narcotics were becoming an increasing threat to national security, social stability and governmental effectiveness. The burgeoning illicit drug trade was threatening reconstruction efforts and state-building in the country as well as long-term peace and stability in the region. It was undermining legitimate economic activities and the establishment of the rule of law, and was responsible for supporting factional agendas and anti-government elements, impeding DDR and promoting the development of private militias.

Against that background, efforts to combat illegal drugs continued. The narcotic drugs law, drafted by the Ministry of Justice and UNODC, came into force on 25 January, providing a robust legal framework for prosecuting drug-related offences. The Government, with support from coalition forces, had initiated a strategy to combat narcotics more robustly and conducted several interdiction operations. In addition, a Central Eradication Planning Cell was being established, with international support, to identify target districts for poppy eradication and to assess the effectiveness of the eradication campaign.

The international counter-narcotics conference on Afghanistan (Kabul, 8-9 February) facilitated discussion between key players in the provinces, the central Government and the international community. The conference identified among its priorities the mainstreaming of drug control into all development sectors, improvement of coordination across all principal ministries and donors, extending the counter-narcotics police to priority regions and providing effective drug-awareness programmes and specialized skill-based training in drug abuse prevention.

In April, the Central Eradication Planning Cell launched an opium poppy eradication campaign in 16 opium-producing provinces. In addition, the Central Poppy Eradication Force, consisting of police officers from the Ministry of the Interior, began eradication activities in May, covering over 600 hectares of opium poppy in Wardak province. The Special Narcotics Force of the Ministry of the Interior, created in January to conduct interdiction operations, had been active also in the destruction of laboratories. Steps were also taken to improve coordination, with the setting up in May of a Counter-Narcotics Steering Group.

The Counter-Narcotics Directorate, previously under the National Security Adviser's office, was elevated to a full ministry. President Karzai convened a National Counter-Narcotics Jirga (9-10 December), with the participation of governors, security officials, elders, tribal and religious leaders and dignitaries from all Afghan provinces. Participants pledged to use their political, religious and social influence to combat cultivation, production and smuggling of illegal narcotics.

Communication (October). On 27 October [A/59/541-S/2004/873], Kazakhstan transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of the declaration of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States members of the Conference on Interaction and Confidence-Building Measures in Asia, adopted at their ministerial meeting (Almaty, Kazakhstan, 22 October). The Ministers, among other things, called for a comprehensive strategy of international actions to counter the drug threat originating from Afghanistan.

Recovery, rehabilitation and reconstruction

While the Afghan Government had a coherent vision of its post-war reconstruction, its capacity remained weak in terms of public administration, institutions and ability to extend its development plans to provincial governments and to deliver essential public services. Many provincial governments remained semi-autonomous in relation to the central Government, particularly with regard to the remittance of tax revenue and the implementation of national laws at the provincial level. The uncertain security situation and the unchecked development of a parallel and illicit narco-economy exacerbated that weakness and seriously challenged further development.

However, the Government had made significant progress in meeting a number of the commitments contained in the Work Plan endorsed at the Berlin Conference (see p. 315). Benchmarks had been met in the areas of public administration, fiscal management and some aspects of private sector and economic and social development, but progress was slower in the rule of law, land management, disarmament and especially counter-narcotics. President Karzai, at a second meeting of the Afghanistan Development Forum (Kabul, 20-22 April), announced a series of new national priority programmes and made a commitment to overhaul the ministerial structure. The discussions facilitated the finalization of the development budget, approved by the Cabinet on 30 June, with total development expenditures targeted at $4.5 billion, of which $3.7 billion in funding had been identified.

The Priority Reform and Restructuring Decree continued to be the primary vehicle for reforming and modernizing the most critical functions of government. A critical measure of the Decree, which was helping effect reform of the bureaucracy, allowed ministries and other government entities to place key staff on an elevated pay scale for a fixed term. The next step called for extension of the process to provincial governments. The Government had also introduced an integrated framework for short-term capacity-building, which would allow key civil servants to be paid salaries comparable with rates paid to Afghan nationals employed by NGOs, enabling it to compete effectively for the best recruits. The Government also developed a mechanism for recruiting exceptionally qualified Afghans as long-term advisers and, through the Afghanistan Reconstruction Trust Fund, was able to hire international technical assistants for short-term technical, design and feasibility studies.

The Government began to put in place a legal framework to ensure that civil servants were accountable for the execution of their duties. The proposed public finance and expenditure management law imposed specific penalties on any civil servant who used his or her position for material gain or who otherwise abused it. The proposed procurement law was expected to include similar provisions. The draft civil service law would include a code of conduct specifying conflict-of-interest rules and other provisions to increase accountability and transparency. The Government appointed a new Anti-Corruption Commissioner. Reforms to the Auditor-General's office and Attorney-General's office, however, needed greater support if those offices were to be effective.

The National Solidarity Programme, one of several national priority programmes, continued to make progress. Over 4,300 community development councils were elected by secret ballot and $12 million in block grants disbursed to them. A number of the implementing NGOs were experiencing severe security constraints, which had slowed down the implementation of Programme projects.

A high-level conference on regional economic cooperation (Bishkek, Kyrgyzstan, 10-12 May), supported by UNDP, discussed public and private sector assistance initiatives and how the region could contribute to Afghanistan's economic growth, focusing in particular on efforts to reduce trade barriers, improve transport infrastructure and streamline border bottlenecks. The declaration adopted by the conference stressed the importance of regional cooperation for Afghanistan's recovery and the stability of the region. The declaration also urged donor support, especially for private sector development, through the establishment of an export and investment guarantee fund. The Government of Afghanistan hosted the Second Economic Cooperation Organization Regional Trade and Investment Conference in Kabul from 18 to 20 April, with 1,000 participants, including high-level officials and delegates. The Conference noted Afghanistan's potential for sustainable investment and trade.

The underlying strategy of UN relief, recovery and reconstruction efforts since the signing of the Bonn Agreement (see p. 311) was to move from the direct implementation of projects to supporting the Government's own development plans. Between May and October, the UN country team, with the Government, NGOs, donor communities and international institutions, conducted Afghanistan's first common country assessment of the country's development challenges in the areas of institutional development and governance, peace, security and justice, economic development and growth, and social well-being.

Communications. The heads of State of the members of the Central Asian Cooperation Organization (Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Uzbekistan) (Astana, Kazakhstan, 28 May) [A/58/838-S/2004/432], noted that the consolidation of peace in Afghanistan and the establishment of good-neighbourly relations with that country were in keeping with the fundamental interests of the Central Asian countries. Joint efforts to restore Afghanistan's economy and infrastructure would contribute to ensuring regional security and stability. The members also reaffirmed their desire to involve Afghanistan in the region's integration process.

On 25 June [A/58/849-S/2004/520], in identical letters to the Secretary-General and the Council President, Turkey transmitted the text of the Istanbul Declaration adopted by the Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers at its thirty-first session (see below), reaffirming, among other things, the Conference's support for Afghanistan's rebuilding process.

Bishkek Conference

The Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, at its thirty-first session (Istanbul, Turkey, 14-16 June) [A/58/856-S/2004/582 & Corr.1], adopted a resolution on the situation in Afghanistan, in which Ministers, among other things, commended the constructive efforts of the United Nations and welcomed the convening of an international conference in Bishkek in May (see above) to discuss regional economic cooperation.

The high-level international conference "Afghanistan and Regional Economic Cooperation: Central Asia, Iran and Pakistan", organized by UNDP (Bishkek, 10-12 May) [A/59/163-S/2004/585], adopted the Bishkek Declaration, by which participants recognized the leading role of the United Nations and the Government of Afghanistan in organizing international assistance to the Afghan people and in the reconstruction of the country. They confirmed their readiness to participate in programmes for the reconstruction of Afghanistan, to provide humanitarian, technical and advisory services and to facilitate private sector initiatives. They urged donors, international financial institutions and humanitarian organizations to increase their participation in the comprehensive revival of the Afghan State.

Social aspects

The human rights situation in Afghanistan was a continuing source of serious concern. In the north, north-east and west, commanders acted with impunity and were seen by many as responsible for a wide range of repressive activities. The role of local authorities in carrying out violations was particularly worrisome. The reappointment of confirmed human rights violators to government posts compounded the problem. In April, the Secretary-General appointed an independent expert on human rights in Afghanistan to develop a programme of advisory services to ensure full respect for and protection of human rights and to help prevent human rights violations.

There were continuing reports of trafficking, kidnapping and smuggling of children, and their subsequent deportation from countries of destination. With support from the United Nations Children's Fund, the Government had begun to address the problem and to formulate a national plan of action on combating child trafficking.

In certain areas of the country, strong social and cultural norms continued to limit women's public role, and conservative ideologues denied them their rights. Health and educational services were unevenly and insufficiently available. Institutional mechanisms to address those issues, including the Ministry of Women's Affairs, were weak.

However, some progress was made to strengthen the position of women in the country, including through the newly adopted Constitution (see p. 311), which had a number of provisions securing the political participation of women. At the Berlin Conference (see p. 315), the Government stated its commitment to increase the number of women in the civil service.

As at 20 May, UNHCR had facilitated the return of 156,426 individual refugees to Afghanistan in 2004. Of those, 116,400 came from Pakistan and 39,897 from Iran. Since the operation began in March 2002, a total of 2,432,127 individuals had been repatriated. The Government estimated that at least 2.5 million to 3 million Afghans were still outside the country, in addition to approximately 200,000 internally displaced persons based in the south and west of the country.

UNAMA

The United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan was established by Security Council resolution 1401(2002) [YUN 2002, p. 264] to promote, among other tasks, national reconciliation and the responsibilities entrusted to the United Nations under the Bonn Agreement. It comprised the Office of the Special Representative, which included four special advisers in the cross-cutting fields of human rights, demobilization, gender and the rule of law, as well as three sub-components: two substantive pillars, one political (Pillar I) and one relief, recovery and reconstruction (Pillar II), and an administrative component. UNAMA was headquartered in Kabul, with regional offices in Bamiyan, Gardez, Herat, Jalalabad, Kandahar, Kunduz and Mazar-e-Sharif and three sub-offices in Faizabad, Maimana and Panjao. UNAMA was headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General. In February, the Secretary-General appointed Jean Arnault (France) as Special Representative and Head of UNAMA to replace Lakhdar Brahimi (Algeria) (see p. 311). By resolution 1536(2004) (see p. 313), the Security Council extended UNAMA's mandate until 26 March 2005.

International Security Assistance Force

During the year, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council, in accordance with resolutions 1386(2001) [YUN 2001, p. 267] and 1510(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 310], reports on the activities of ISAF, covering the periods November 2003 to February 2004 [S/2004/222], February to May [S/2004/537] and May to August [S/2004/785]. Activities from August to the end of the year were covered in a later report [S/2005/131].

As at 31 December 2004, the Force, a multinational force operating under NATO leadership, comprised 9,000 personnel from 26 NATO nations and 10 non-NATO countries.

ISAF continued to implement its activities mandated by Council resolution 1386(2001) to assist the Afghan Government in the maintenance of security in Kabul and its surrounding areas and by resolution 1510(2003) to provide support for and to strengthen the ability of the Government to provide a more secure environment throughout the country. It executed its framework security tasks in association with the Afghan national army and the Kabul police. As a result of suicide attacks on 27 and 28 January, two ISAF soldiers were killed and six others severely wounded. ISAF provided security for the Constitutional Loya Jirga, which concluded on 4 January (see p. 311), and supported the voter registration process in Kabul. The ISAF-assisted DDR pilot project was completed on 29 January and discussions were ongoing with the Afghan Ministry of Defence to assess how best to maintain the momentum created so that a smooth transition could be achieved to a more substantial DDR. It initiated a heavy weapons cantonment programme in Kabul and its environs on 15 January. It also remained active in security sector reform, continued to support the training of the Afghan national army and the national police and assisted in the counter-narcotics programme. On 1 June, ISAF assumed responsibility for the operation of the military part of Kabul's international airport, and in July expanded its mandate to nine provinces, known as area north, outside Kabul and its environs. On 23 July, the NATO Council decided to deploy two battalions to augment ISAF forces during the presidential elections (see p. 321). During the election period, ISAF participated in the Afghan electoral management structure and provided limited support to international observers and to the Joint Electoral Management Body, including the handling of incoming election material and providing flights between Kabul and Pakistan and Iran to move the ballot papers of Afghans in refugee camps. From August, ISAF took over new provincial reconstruction teams at Pol-e-Khumri and Feyzabad. It was increasing its training and development activities in support of the Afghan national army and would organize, with UNAMA, legal training sessions for Afghan administrative and judicial personnel. ISAF civil-military cooperation was shifting its focus from quick-reaction projects and short-term assessments to a more long-term vision aimed at meeting requirements of the Afghan national priority programme and harmonizing its activities with those of the international community.

Extension of ISAF mandate

On 17 September [meeting 5038], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1563 (2004). The draft [S/2004/742] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions on Afghanistan, in particular resolutions 1386(2001) of 20 December 2001, 1413(2002) of 23 May 2002, 1444(2002) of 27 November 2002 and 1510(2003) of 13 October 2003,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan,

Reaffirming its resolutions 1368(2001) of 12 September 2001 and 1373(2001) of 28 September 2001, and reiterating its support for international efforts to root out terrorism in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing that the responsibility for providing security and law and order throughout the country resides with the Afghans themselves, and welcoming the continuing cooperation of the Afghan Transitional Administration with the International Security Assistance Force,

Reaffirming the importance of the Bonn Agreement of 5 December 2001 and the Berlin Declaration of 1 April 2004, and recalling in particular annex I to the Bonn Agreement which, inter alia, provides for the progressive expansion of the Force to other urban centres and other areas beyond Kabul,

Stressing the importance of extending central government authority to all parts of Afghanistan, of conducting free and fair elections, of comprehensive disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of all armed factions, of justice sector reform, of security sector reform, including reconstitution of the Afghan National Army and Police, and of combating narcotics trade and production, and recognizing certain progress that has been made in these and other areas with the help of the international community,

Recognizing the constraints upon the full implementation of the Bonn Agreement resulting from concerns about the security situation in parts of Afghanistan, in particular in the light of the upcoming elections,

Welcoming, in this context, the commitment by lead nations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to establish further Provincial Reconstruction Teams, as well as the readiness of the Force and the Operation Enduring Freedom Coalition to assist in securing the conduct of national elections,

Expressing its appreciation to Eurocorps for taking over the lead from Canada in commanding the Force, and to Canada for its leadership of the Force during the past year, and recognizing with gratitude the contributions of many nations to the Force,

Determining that the situation in Afghanistan still constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

Determined to ensure the full implementation of the mandate of the Force, in consultation with the Afghan Transitional Administration and its successors,

Acting for these reasons under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Decides to extend the authorization of the International Security Assistance Force, as defined in resolutions 1386(2001) and 1510(2003), for a period of twelve months beyond 13 October 2004;

2. Authorizes the Member States participating in the Force to take all necessary measures to fulfil its mandate;

3. Recognizes the need to strengthen the Force, and in this regard calls upon Member States to contribute personnel, equipment and other resources to the Force, and to make contributions to the Trust Fund established pursuant to resolution 1386(2001);

4. Calls upon the Force to continue to work in close consultation with the Afghan Transitional Administration and its successors and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, as well as with the Operation Enduring Freedom Coalition in the implementation of the mandate of the Force;

5. Requests the leadership of the Force to provide quarterly reports on the implementation of its mandate to the Security Council through the Secretary-General;

6. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Sanctions

In 2004, the Security Council adopted new measures against Osama bin Laden, Al-Qaida, the Taliban, their associates and associated entities. By resolution 1526(2004) (see p. 332), the Council further refined the financial measures, travel ban and arms embargo imposed on those persons identified in the consolidated list created pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 265] and also sought to improve the list. In addition to further strengthening the mandate of the Sanctions Committee, the Council established an Analytical Support and Sanctions Monitoring Team (the Monitoring Team) to report on the implementation of the measures by States and to recommend further action for consideration by the Council.

Communication (January). On 9 January [S/2004/10], Switzerland transmitted to the Council President its comments on the December 2003 report of the Monitoring Group on Afghanistan [YUN 2003, p. 314], whose mandate expired on 17 January 2004.

Security Council consideration. At the Council's 12 January meeting [meeting 4892] to consider the threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts, the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) (the Al-Qaida and Taliban Sanctions Committee) provided an oral assessment, pursuant to Council resolution 1455 (2003) [YUN 2003, p. 311], of the implementation by Member States of the measures included in the consolidated list maintained by the Committee, which constituted the fourth 90-day report on the work of the Committee and its Monitoring Group. He also reported on missions conducted in October and December 2003 to 10 countries in the Arabian Gulf, West Asia and South-East Asia.

In reviewing the reports submitted by States, the Chairman said that, although many States had taken positive steps, including the adoption of special legislation, to curb the financing of Al-Qaida's activities, a number of areas needed improvement, such as the freezing of assets other than bank accounts, cash flows to finance terrorist activities, full implementation of the travel ban, and the arms embargo, the most difficult to implement because of national security concerns. He suggested that to improve the implementation of the travel ban the list should be improved and the technical capacity of States increased. As to the arms embargo, he suggested that it needed to be defined in a more specific and targeted way, including the mention of specific goods and materials, and to strengthen co-operation at the regional and international levels to avoid the diversion of weapons and dangerous material to Al-Qaida.

The Chairman reported that to date a total of 93 reports had been submitted under resolution 1455(2003), with 98 States or 51 per cent not having submitted a report. That seriously hampered the Committee in accomplishing its task. The Committee, in analysing the possible reasons why States had not submitted reports, identified a possible lack of political will, reporting fatigue, a lack of resources and technical capacity, and co-ordination difficulties at the national level. In addition, some States might have considered the submission guidelines to be too detailed, and in some cases inapplicable to their situation.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 30 January [meeting 4908], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1526(2004). The draft [S/2004/79] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1267(1999) of 15 October 1999, 1333(2000) of 19 December 2000, 1363(2001) of 30 July 2001, 1373(2001) of 28 September 2001, 1390 (2002) of 16 January 2002, 1452(2002) of 20 December 2002 and 1455(2003) of 17 January 2003,

Underlining the obligation placed upon all Member States to implement, in full, resolution 1373(2001), including with regard to any member of the Taliban and Al-Qaida, and any individuals, groups, undertakings and entities associated with the Taliban and Al-Qaida, who have participated in the financing, planning, facilitating and preparation or perpetration of terrorist acts or in supporting terrorist acts, as well as to facilitate the implementation of counter-terrorism obligations in accordance with relevant Security Council resolutions,

Reaffirming the need to combat by all means, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and international law, threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts,

Noting that, in giving effect to the measures in paragraph 4 (b) of resolution 1267(1999), paragraph 8 (c) of resolution 1333(2000) and paragraphs 1 and 2 of resolution 1390(2002), full account is to be taken of the provisions of paragraphs 1 and 2 of resolution 1452 (2002),

Reiterating its condemnation of the Al-Qaida network and other associated terrorist groups for ongoing and multiple criminal terrorist acts, aimed at causing the deaths of innocent civilians and other victims and the destruction of property, and greatly undermining stability,

Reiterating its unequivocal condemnation of all forms of terrorism and terrorist acts,

Stressing to all States, international bodies and regional organizations the importance of ensuring that resources are committed, including through international partnership, to meet the ongoing threat that Al-Qaida and members of the Taliban, and any individuals, groups, undertakings and entities associated with them, represent to international peace and security,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Decides to improve, as set out below, the implementation of the measures imposed by paragraph 4 (b) of resolution 1267(1999), paragraph 8 (c) of resolution 1333(2000) and paragraphs 1 and 2 of resolution 1390 (2002) with respect to Osama bin Laden, members of Al-Qaida and the Taliban and other individuals, groups, undertakings and entities associated with them, as referred to in the list created pursuant to resolutions 1267(1999) and 1333(2000) ("the Committee list"), namely:

(a) To freeze without delay the funds and other financial assets or economic resources of those individuals, groups, undertakings and entities, including funds derived from property owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by them or by persons acting on their behalf or at their direction, and ensure that neither these nor any other funds, financial assets or economic resources are made available, directly or indirectly, for the benefit of such persons by their nationals or by any persons within their territory;

(b) To prevent the entry into or the transit through their territories of those individuals, provided that nothing in the present paragraph shall oblige any State to deny entry into or require the departure from its territories of its own nationals and that the present paragraph shall not apply where entry or transit is necessary for the fulfilment of a judicial process, or the Committee determines on a case-by-case basis only that entry or transit is justified;

(c) To prevent the direct or indirect supply, sale or transfer to those individuals, groups, undertakings and entities from their territories or by their nationals outside their territories, or using their flag vessels or aircraft, of arms and related materiel of all types, including weapons and ammunition, military vehicles and equipment, paramilitary equipment and spare parts for the aforementioned, and technical advice, assistance, or training related to military activities; and recalls that all States shall implement the measures with respect to listed individuals and entities;

2. Decides also to strengthen the mandate of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) ("the Committee") to include, in addition to the oversight of the implementation by States of the measures referred to in paragraph 1 above, a central role in assessing information for review by the Council regarding effective implementation of the measures, as well as in recommending improvements to the measures;

3. Decides further that the measures referred to in paragraph 1 above shall be further improved in eighteen months, or sooner if necessary;

4. Calls upon States to move vigorously and decisively to cut the flows of funds and other financial assets and economic resources to individuals and entities associated with Al-Qaida, Osama bin Laden and/or the Taliban, taking into account, as appropriate, international codes and standards for combating the financing of terrorism, including those designed to prevent the abuse of non-profit organizations and informal/alternative remittance systems;

5. Urges all States and encourages regional organizations, as appropriate, to establish internal reporting requirements and procedures on the trans-border movement of currency based on applicable thresholds;

6. Decides, in order to assist the Committee in the fulfilment of its mandate, to establish for a period of eighteen months a New York-based Analytical Support and Sanctions Monitoring Team ("the Monitoring Team") under the direction of the Committee, with the responsibilities enumerated in the annex to the present resolution;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, upon adoption of the present resolution and acting in close consultation with the Committee, to appoint, consistent with United Nations rules and procedures, no more than eight members, including a coordinator, of the Monitoring Team, who demonstrate expertise in one or more of the following areas related to activities of Al-Qaida and/or the Taliban, including counter-terrorism and related legislation; financing of terrorism and international financial transactions, including technical banking expertise; alternative remittance systems, charities and use of couriers; border enforcement, including port security; arms embargoes and export controls; and drug trafficking;

8. Requests the Monitoring Team to submit, in writing, three comprehensive, independent reports to the Committee, the first by 31 July 2004, the second by 15 December 2004 and the third by 30 June 2005, on implementation by States of the measures referred to in paragraph 1 above, including concrete recommendations for improved implementation of the measures and possible new measures;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to provide cost-effective support, as needed by the Committee, in the light of the increased workload entailed by the present resolution;

10. Requests the Committee to consider, where and when appropriate, visits to selected countries by the Chairman and/or Committee members to enhance the full and effective implementation of the measures referred to in paragraph 1 above, with a view to encouraging States to comply fully with the present resolution and resolutions 1267(1999), 1333(2000), 1390(2002) and 1455(2003);

11. Also requests the Committee to follow up via oral and/or written communications with States regarding effective implementation of the sanctions measures and to provide States with an opportunity, at the request of the Committee, to send representatives to meet with the Committee for more in-depth discussion of relevant issues;

12. Further requests the Committee, through its Chairman, to report orally to the Council in detail at least every one hundred and twenty days on the overall work of the Committee and the Monitoring Team, including a summary of progress by States in submitting the reports referred to in paragraph 6 of resolution 1455(2003) and any follow-up communications with States regarding additional requests for information and assistance;

13. Requests the Committee, based on its ongoing oversight of implementation by States of the measures referred to in paragraph 1 above, to prepare and to circulate to the Council within seventeen months of the adoption of the present resolution a written analytical assessment on implementation of the measures, including States' successes and challenges in implementing them, with a view to recommending further measures for consideration by the Council;

14. Requests all States, and encourages regional organizations, relevant United Nations bodies and, as appropriate, other organizations and interested parties to cooperate fully with the Committee and the Monitoring Team, including by supplying such information as may be sought by the Committee pursuant to the present resolution and resolutions 1267(1999), 1333(2000), 1390(2002), 1452(2002) and 1455(2003), to the extent possible;

15. Reiterates the need for close coordination and concrete exchange of information between the Committee and the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1373(2001) ("the Counter-Terrorism Committee");

16. Reiterates to all States the importance of proposing to the Committee the names of members of Al-Qaida and the Taliban or individuals associated with Osama bin Laden and other individuals, groups, undertakings and entities associated with them for inclusion in the Committee list, unless to do so would compromise investigations or enforcement actions;

17. Calls upon all States, when submitting new names to the Committee list, to include identifying information and background information, to the greatest extent possible, that demonstrates the association of the individuals and/or entities with Osama bin Laden or with members of Al-Qaida and/or the Taliban, in line with the guidelines of the Committee;

18. Strongly encourages all States to inform, to the extent possible, individuals and entities included in the Committee list of the measures imposed on them, and of the guidelines of the Committee and resolution 1452(2002);

19. Requests the Secretariat to communicate to Member States the Committee list at least every three months to facilitate implementation by States of the measures on entry and travel imposed by paragraph 2 (b) of resolution 1390(2002), and further requests that the Committee list, whenever amended, be automatically conveyed by the Secretariat to all States and regional and subregional organizations for the inclusion, to the extent possible, of listed names in their respective electronic databases and relevant border enforcement and entry/exit tracking systems;

20. Reiterates the urgency for all States to comply with their existing obligations to implement the measures referred to in paragraph 1 above and to ensure that their domestic legislative enactments or administrative measures, as appropriate, permit the immediate implementation of those measures with respect to their nationals and other individuals or entities located or operating in their territory, and with respect to funds, other financial assets and economic resources over which they have jurisdiction, and to inform the Committee of the adoption of such measures, and invites States to report the results of all related investigations and enforcement actions to the Committee, unless to do so would compromise the investigations or enforcement actions;

21. Requests that the Committee seek from States, as appropriate, status reports on the implementation of the measures referred to in paragraph 1 above concerning listed individuals and entities, specifically with respect to the aggregate amounts of the frozen assets of the listed individuals and entities;

22. Requests all States that have not yet done so to submit to the Committee by 31 March 2004 the updated reports called for in paragraph 6 of resolution 1455(2003), following as closely as possible the guidance document previously provided by the Committee, and further requests all States that have not submitted those reports to explain in writing to the Committee by 31 March 2004 their reasons for non-reporting;

23. Requests the Committee to circulate to the Council a list of those States that have not submitted by 31 March 2004 reports pursuant to paragraph 6 of resolution 1455(2003), including an analytical summary of the reasons put forward by States for non-reporting;

24. Urges all States and encourages relevant international, regional and subregional organizations to become more directly involved in capacity-building efforts and to offer technical assistance in areas identified by the Committee, in consultation with the Counter-Terrorism Committee;

25. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Annex

to resolution 1267(1999) and shall have the following responsibilities:

- To collate, assess, monitor and report on and make recommendations regarding implementation of the measures; to pursue case studies, as appropriate; and to explore in depth any other relevant issues as directed by the Committee;
- To submit a comprehensive programme of work to the Committee for its approval and review, as necessary, in which the Monitoring Team should detail the activities envisaged in order to fulfil its responsibilities, including proposed travel;
- To analyse reports submitted pursuant to paragraph 6 of resolution 1455(2003) and any subsequent written responses provided by States to the Committee;
- To work closely and share information with Counter-Terrorism Committee experts to identify areas of convergence and to help facilitate concrete coordination between the two Committees;
- To consult with States in advance of travel to selected States, based on its programme of work approved by the Committee;
- To consult with States, including through engaging in regular dialogue with representatives in New York and in capitals, taking into account comments from States, especially regarding any issues that might be contained in the reports of the Monitoring Team referred to in paragraph 8 of resolution 1526(2004);
- To report to the Committee, on a regular basis or when the Committee so requests, through oral and/or written briefings on the work of the Monitoring Team, including on its visits to States and its activities;
- To assist the Committee in preparing its oral and written assessments to the Council, in particular the analytical summaries referred to in paragraphs 12 and 13 of resolution 1526(2004);
- Any other responsibility identified by the Committee.

Sanctions Committee activities

The Al-Qaida and Taliban Sanctions Committee submitted a report [S/2004/1039] covering its activities from 1 January to 31 December 2004. During that period, the Committee held three formal meetings and 36 informal consultations at the expert level.

The Security Council, in resolution 1526(2004) (see above), created a new, more demanding conceptual and substantive framework for the Committee's future activities on an 18-month basis, by clearly defining the mandatory sanctions measures, including the freezing of financial assets, the travel ban and the arms embargo, to be applied by States, individuals and entities referred to in the Committee's consolidated list. It also strengthened the Committee's central role in monitoring and assessing information for the Council's review regarding the effectiveness of the measures and in recommending improvements, by establishing, for a period of 18 months, an Analytical Support and Sanctions Monitoring Team under the Committee's direction. The Council also emphasized the need for dialogue between the Committee and Member States.

Those measures, in addition to enhanced co-operation with the Council's Counter-Terrorism Committee, and increased contact with relevant specialized international bodies, such as Interpol, allowed the Committee in 2004 to move to a qualitatively higher level in implementing its mandate, in particular in monitoring the implementation of the sanctions measures by States.

To cover the new conditions introduced by the Council in resolutions 1455(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 311] and 1526(2004), the Committee revised the guidelines adopted in 2002 for the conduct of its work. It continued to update its consolidated list of individuals and entities associated with Al-Qaida and the Taliban, adding 29 individuals and 15 entities, and approved extensive technical corrections to the list on the basis of information provided by Member States. The Committee established a list of focal points similar to the one used by the Counter-Terrorism Committee (see p. 76), with more than 300 contact points. The contact list became operational at the end of 2004. The Committee continued to consider notifications and/or requests for exceptions to the sanctions measures, which increased compared to 2003, although the sums notified were quite low. It also considered the recommendations submitted by the Monitoring Team in its first and second reports (see p. 336) with the aim of agreeing on follow-up action.

Report of Sanctions Committee (April). Pursuant to resolution 1526(2004), the Sanctions Committee Chairman transmitted to the Council President, on 27 April, a list [S/2004/349] of those States that had not submitted by 31 March 2004 reports pursuant to paragraph 6 of resolution 1455(2003), as well as an analytical summary of the reasons put forward by States for non-reporting.

By 31 March, the Committee had received 123 reports from Member States pursuant to resolution 1455(2003) and 15 letters from States pursuant to resolution 1526(2004) explaining their reasons for non-reporting. The number of States which had neither reported nor explained their reasons for non-reporting totalled 53. Most of the written explanations from non-reporting States cited a lack of resources, rendering it difficult to submit the reports in a timely manner. The Committee believed that a proper analysis of the reasons for non-reporting could not be conducted on the basis of only 15 responses. The Monitoring Team was requested to contact a number of representatives of non-reporting States to assist them in providing the information needed. The Committee Chairman was also requested to report to the Council in May, at which time he would give a reassessment of the reasons given by States for non-reporting.

Security Council consideration (May). On 25 May [meeting 4976], the Security Council discussed threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts. The Chairman of the Al-Qaida and Taliban Sanctions Committee, Heraldo Muñoz, presented his first oral assessment of the overall work of the Committee and the Monitoring Team, summarized States' progress in implementing the sanctions measures and addressed communications with States regarding additional requests for information and assistance.

Mr. Muñoz said that the Committee, at the initiative of some members, had started discussing definitions of terms used in resolution 1526(2004) and other relevant resolutions, particularly the definition of the freezing of funds or other financial assets or economic resources, with the purpose of providing more clarity and precision to the Committee's monitoring functions and to Member States in their implementation efforts. The Monitoring Team began its work in April and had since submitted to the Committee an initial work plan and was preparing its first report and an analysis of all reports submitted under resolution 1455(2003). The Team was designing a new database that would include information on the implementation of Al-Qaida and Taliban-related sanctions. It was also working to maximize the impact of the consolidated list by correcting entries, seeking improvements to the identifiers, encouraging States to contribute names, analysing why States were reluctant to submit names and looking at specific incidents of cross-border funding of Al-Qaida-associated terrorists.

The Team carried out a preliminary assessment of the sanctions implementation, based on 43 reports submitted by Member States. According to the reports, many States did not incorporate the sanctions measures in their domestic legislation or administrative rules, considering their existing laws sufficient to deal with all forms of terrorism. However, that did not always appear to be supported by the facts, especially with regard to the freezing of financial assets and economic resources. Some States argued that special laws to implement the measures were not needed and only a few stated their intention to amend their laws. For the purpose of assets freezing, the consolidated list continued to have a limited distribution in most States, usually being made available only to banks. Most States reported new regulations governing charities, including requirements for licensing or registration, proper record-keeping of all transactions and audited accounts. In some States, charities were subjected to inspection to ensure compliance with their charters, while in others they were examined for tax liability. The majority of States did not provide any information on efforts to regulate alternative remittance systems. As to the travel ban, most States had integrated the consolidated list into their border-control systems, but only a few were able to do so electronically or in a way that allowed immediate research and regular and timely updates. Concerning the arms embargo, although most States appeared to have adequate regulations to deal with the illegal acquisition or retention of conventional and unconventional arms, many reported not having taken any specific measures to implement the arms embargo or to enact legislation aimed specifically at Al-Qaida and the Taliban.

The Committee Chairman led a mission to Algeria, Senegal, Spain and Tunisia (1-8 May) in order to engage in a dialogue, to learn from the experiences of the countries visited and to understand their preoccupations and concerns. An issue discussed in all countries was the need for cooperation and information-sharing among States. He also discussed new ways in which terrorist organizations raised funds, including the use of legitimate or illegitimate commercial means such as owning import-export companies. Other issues discussed included the tracing of money, control over non-governmental and other civil organizations, the freezing of assets, reporting on the transborder movement of currency, the arms embargo and the consolidated list. Among its recommendations, the mission suggested increased cooperation among Member States and information-sharing, and addressing questions such as poverty reduction, employment and education in the fight against terrorism. There continued to be a need for assistance in a number of countries. Awareness had to be raised on the impact of terrorist financing through kidnappings and commercial enterprises used for raising or transmitting funds.

With regard to the reasons for the non-submission of reports, the Committee Chairman said that the Monitoring Team had contacted a number of non-reporting States to seek further clarification. The Team found that many States lacked a clear understanding of the differences between the scope of the Committee's work and that of the Counter-Terrorism Committee, considering the reports they had submitted to the latter sufficient for satisfying their reporting obligations to the Committee. The Team also found a lack of supervision and coordination mechanisms at the national level, delays in governmental processes and a lack of information exchange between ministries and departments.

Monitoring Team

The Analytical Support and Sanctions Monitoring Team (the Monitoring Team), established by Security Council resolution 1526(2004) (see p. 332), had the mandate of collating, assessing, monitoring, reporting on and making recommendations regarding the implementation of measures imposed in that resolution.

On 15 March [S/2004/207], the Secretary-General informed the Council President of the appointment of eight members of the Monitoring Team. Richard Barrett (United Kingdom) was appointed Coordinator. On 31 March [S/2004/264] and 24 September [S/2004/759], the Secretary-General informed the Council President of the appointment of two new experts of the Monitoring Team to replace two original experts who were unable to assume their functions.

Report of Monitoring Team (August). Pursuant to Council resolution 1526(2004), the Sanctions Committee Chairman, on 23 August [S/2004/679], transmitted to the Council President the first report of the Monitoring Team. The report noted that Al-Qaida had evolved into a global network of groups without any organizational structure but held together by a set of overlapping goals, whose leaders had tried to distort the basic Muslim duty of Jihad to justify terrorist campaigns. Perceived injustices and images of violent confrontation had ensured a steady flow of new supporters. The sanctions, aimed at curbing the Taliban and Al-Qaida terrorism, had achieved less than was hoped for, partly because they addressed a set of circumstances that no longer applied, and partly because effective sanctions were hard to design, let alone impose, against the new form of Al-Qaida-associated terrorism. While the sanctions against the financing of terrorism had had some effect, and some millions of dollars of assets had been frozen, there was a need to update them, based on the new methods used by Al-Qaida to raise and transfer money. There was a similar need to improve the consolidated list, the travel ban and the arms embargo to reflect Al-Qaida's new methodology.

As at July, 130 Member States had submitted reports on the implementation of resolution 1455(2003). While many reported action taken against Al-Qaida, few offered specific details or referred directly to those named on the consolidated list. Only 19 States had recorded the presence of any individual or entity associated with Al-Qaida inside their borders, although the true number was most certainly higher. Thirty-four States reported freezing assets, though in some cases it had been difficult to discern what that really entailed, what those assets were, their value or ownership. No State had reported stopping anyone on the consolidated list from travelling, or taking action against them in respect of the arms embargo.

The most important reason for the limited impact of the sanctions was that the Council had reacted to events, while Al-Qaida had shown great flexibility and adaptability in staying ahead of them. Moreover, the structure of Al-Qaida had evolved into a loose network of affiliated underground groups with certain common goals, and it would always be difficult to design and enforce sanctions against diverse groups of individuals who were not in one location, could adopt different identities and who needed no special equipment to launch their attacks.

The impact and the credibility of the Council's work against Al-Qaida and the Taliban depended on the content and utility of the consolidated list. Twenty-one States had submitted names for inclusion on the list, which comprised 143 individuals and one entity associated with the Taliban, and 174 individuals and 111 entities associated with Al-Qaida. The number of contributors to the list suggested that many States were reluctant to provide names. The list could only be truly useful if it achieved international acceptance as a register of the key components of the Al-Qaida network. In the absence of an agreed definition of terrorism, the list provided the only consensus on what Al-Qaida comprised. Apart from its relevance, a further key factor governing the utility of the list was its accuracy. Technical and practical problems with the list included the lack of basic identifiers for many entries, such as date of birth, nationality and passport information, making enforcement action virtually impossible, and inconsistencies and inaccuracies in the spelling and transliteration of names. Though the Sanctions Committee had issued a reformatted version of the list in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 312], the Monitoring Team called for further technical correction to about one third of all entries and recommended that, where names were too vague to allow effective application, they should be removed from the list until sufficient detail was available. The Team had also requested the 80 Member States that had either submitted names or had some connection to individuals on the list to examine the entries for accuracy and completeness. A further issue that needed resolution was the procedure for removing a name from the list. The Team, among other things, recommended that there should be an agreed process for notifying the Sanctions Committee when someone on the list was detained, and for sharing internationally any useful information.

As a result of national and international action, Al-Qaida's funding had decreased significantly, but so too had its need for money. Nevertheless, Al-Qaida still needed to raise and move money; a legal basis for freezing assets related to Al-Qaida, the Taliban and associated groups still existed in all but three Member States. The Team was concerned that many States had merely amended anti-money-laundering legislation to cover terrorist crime as well. As terrorist-related financial transactions generally took place before the crime occurred, States would encounter problems when applying to terrorist financiers measures designed to deal with the proceeds of crime. Successes in countering terrorist financing would also encourage Al-Qaida and its associates to seek alternative means to raise and move their assets in ways that were less open to scrutiny, and adaptable to local circumstances, such as using the trade in counterfeit currency in Somalia, exploiting the potential for credit card fraud in Western Europe and the Asia/Pacific region, and benefiting from the drug trade in Afghanistan and North Africa. There were some 32 international and regional organizations working to establish standards and policies to combat terrorist financing. The most comprehensive regulatory regimes were those in greatest compliance with standards set by the Financial Action Task Force's (FATF's) 40 recommendations on anti-money-laundering and eight special recommendations on counter-terrorist financing [YUN 2001, p. 68]. However, FATF did not attract universal support and could not by itself achieve a properly supervised global regime for the financial sector. Over 90 States had set up financial intelligence units, which analysed suspicious transaction reports submitted by banks and other entities as part of national efforts against money-laundering and counter-terrorist financing. The Team recommended that Member States circulate the consolidated list beyond their banks to non-bank financial institutions and to any non-financial entities where assets might be held.

There was potential also for the abuse of alternative remittance systems, such as hawala, by Al-Qaida-associated terrorists, but few States had reported action to regulate them. As to the Council's urging in resolution 1526(2004) that all States establish internal reporting requirements and procedures on the transborder movement of currency, initial research by the Team showed that although States had regulations governing the transborder movement of currency by individuals, there was no universal standard on the amounts to be declared. The movement of relatively large amounts of cash was not remarkable and attracted little scrutiny. Al-Qaida's exploitation of charities and other non-profit organizations as a way to raise and move money had led some States to introduce licensing and better regulation of those bodies.

Most Member States believed that they had achieved effective implementation of the Al-Qaida/Taliban arms embargo by incorporating its measures into existing legislation. However, most Al-Qaida-related terrorist attacks had involved arms and explosives not covered by those measures. The difficulty of ensuring an effective arms embargo on Al-Qaida was self-evident. However, Member States could restrict the scale of Al-Qaida-associated terrorism by impeding their access to larger weapons systems, and restricting their ability to construct non-conventional bombs designed to cause mass casualties. There was evidence that Al-Qaida remained interested in acquiring the means to construct bombs that could disperse a chemical, biological or radiological pollutant. Al-Qaida-related groups had tried at least twice to buy the basic ingredients for a so-called dirty bomb and a good deal of the necessary technical knowledge was available on the Internet.

In view of the Taliban's and Al-Qaida's proven ability to adapt and to evade the measures imposed by the Council, and considering the porous nature of most borders, it was not surprising that the implementation of the travel ban appeared to have little or no effect on their activities. The ability of the terrorists to acquire identity documents and to avoid border controls exceeded the capability of many Member States to impose effective restrictions. The Team noted the need for better distribution internationally of information on stolen or lost travel documents, and for the introduction of border control systems linked to databases that made use of forged documents more difficult. Ultimately, there should be an extensive international database of forensic information on Al-Qaida-associated terrorists to include DNA and fingerprints to help States uncover the real identity of suspects stopped at borders.

The Monitoring Team, among other things, provided an analysis of why 65 Member States had failed to report by the extended deadline of 31 March 2004, as requested under Council resolutions 1455(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 311] and 1390(2002) [YUN 2002, p. 281]. The Team observed that the lack of a report from a State did not necessarily denote any lack of will to produce one or a lack of commitment to international efforts against Al-Qaida and the Taliban, but some Member States just lacked the capacity to produce a report. There was a particular need for some States to bring their national agencies responsible for counter-terrorism into the reporting process. As at 31 July, of those States listed as non-reporting in May 2004, four had subsequently submitted reports and a further eight had undertaken to do so as soon as possible.

The Monitoring Team aimed to consult a wide range of national authorities directly engaged in the fight against terrorism in order to develop ideas as to what further measures the Council might consider. The Team had already visited a number of Member States, including Afghanistan and Pakistan.

Security Council consideration (September).

At the Security Council's 13 September meeting [meeting 5031] to discuss threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts, the Chairman of the Sanctions Committee, Mr. Muñoz, briefed the Council on the Monitoring Team's first report (see above). The Committee had discussed an informal document presented by its Chairman on non-mandatory measures contained in resolution 1526(2004). Such measures were recognized as important for the implementation of the sanctions regime, as they provided ideas as to how States might further enhance their counter-terrorism efforts. The Committee, among other things, revised the guidelines for the conduct of its work, added names of new individuals and entities to the consolidated list, and established an active working relationship with the Counter-Terrorism Committee.

The Monitoring Team provided the Committee with support in promoting the effective implementation of relevant resolutions, assessed the impact of the measures detailed in those resolutions and made recommendations as to how those measures might be made more effective. The Committee stressed that there were no quick fixes, short-cuts or easy remedies to the threat posed by international terrorism. Rather, the task required systematic, persistent and exacting work, accompanied by constant analysis of what had been carried out.

Report of Sanctions Committee (December).

Pursuant to Council resolution 1455(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 311], the Sanctions Committee Chairman, on 16 December [S/2004/1037], transmitted to the Council President a written assessment of the actions taken by States to implement the measures in paragraph 1 of that resolution (the travel ban, arms embargo and assets freeze targeting individuals and entities belonging to or associated with the Taliban and Al-Qaida). On 15 October, the Monitoring Team, at the Committee's request, provided an analysis of all the States' reports received pursuant to resolution 1455(2003), which was annexed to the written assessment. The analysis pointed out that there were different levels of implementation of measures by States. Some States had technical, financial and human resources potential and had demonstrated their willingness and readiness to prevent and neutralize possible terrorist activities, but remained vulnerable to Al-Qaida's increasingly sophisticated operational activities. Other States had sufficient potential to take all necessary measures to prevent terrorist acts, but had not demonstrated in their reports that they had done so. Some States had provided implementation reports in which they admitted difficulties caused, among other things, by limitations in their implementation capacities. In addition, almost one third of all States had not submitted a report. The Committee presumed that most non-reporting States lacked the capacity to do so, but was unaware of what kind of assistance they required. Those States were urged to submit their reports no later than 31 December 2004.

Most reporting States made appropriate use of the Committee's list and were also advancing in their capacity to implement the assets freeze. However, steps such as regulating the activities of non-banking financial entities, cash couriers and charities had yet to be implemented in a number of countries. The implementation of the travel ban continued to be a concern for the Committee, since, in the five years it had been in place, not a single individual was reported to have been stopped at a border as a consequence of being on the Committee's list. Some States had problems disseminating list updates to all relevant border checkpoints and consular offices. As with the travel ban, no cases of enforcement of the arms embargo had been reported to the Committee. Furthermore, little information on legislation and enforcement measures had been provided by Member States.

The reports submitted by Member States had provided the Committee with valuable information on the level of implementation of sanctions measures, issues of concern, questions relating to the use of the list and, to some extent, needs for assistance. Together with other means of communication, those reports allowed the Committee to improve the sanctions measures on a regular basis and to focus its work on pertinent issues.

Security Council consideration (December). On 17 December [meeting 5104], during the Security Council's discussion of threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts, the Chairman of the Sanctions Committee presented his third oral assessment on the Committee's activities covering the period since his last report. The Committee had reviewed the Monitoring Team's first report (see p. 336) and its recommendations. It also received two specialized briefings: one on how Al-Qaida operations had evolved over the past few years, and the other on the workings of Interpol and ways to enhance cooperation between Interpol and the Committee.

The Committee also sought to engage Member States in a more active dialogue. Towards that end, the Committee Chairman continued to conduct trips to a number of countries where he discussed the implementation of the sanctions. Some States raised concerns about the quality of the consolidated list, while others expressed frustration with what they saw as Western double standards in the fight against terrorism, pointing to the protection of perceived terrorists under the guise of refugee law and sometimes even support for organizations that those countries considered to be terrorist groups. Many States underlined the need for regional and subregional cooperation aimed at enhancing capacities in the fight against terrorism. The Committee's priorities remained its list and the identification of possible improvements to the sanctions measures. The Committee had shifted its focus from comprehensive reporting of State implementation to active dialogue with Member States.

Iraq

Situation in Iraq

In 2004, the United Nations, through the Secretary-General's Special Adviser for Iraq, Lakhdar Brahimi, and the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq (UNAMI), continued to assist Iraq to achieve a successful transition to democratic governance, the establishment of democratic institutions, and reconstruction and reconciliation in the context of Security Council resolution 1483(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 338].

On 19 January, the Secretary-General convened a meeting in New York with the Governing Council of Iraq and the Coalition Provisional Authority (CPA). On the same day, the Security Council held a private meeting [meeting 4897], during which it had a constructive exchange of views with the Chairman of the Iraqi Governing Council, Adnan Pachachi.

The Security Council President, in his assessment of the Council's work for the month of January [S/2004/524], said that the Iraqi Governing Council Chairman reported on progress achieved in the country and the remaining problems, and requested the Secretary-General to send a mission to Iraq to determine the feasibility of holding direct elections at an early date. The Secretary-General subsequently decided to dispatch a fact-finding mission to Iraq, led by his Special Adviser.

Communications (January/February). By a 26 January letter to the Council President [S/2004/84], the League of Arab States transmitted a summary of the proposals and projects presented by the Arab organizations and funds, as well as the conclusions of the second meeting of the Arab Specialized Organizations and Financial Institutions on Assisting Iraq (Amman, Jordan, 6 January). Representatives of Arab States, organizations, funds and financial institutions participated in the meeting, along with representatives of the United Nations, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the Saudi Fund for Development and the Union of Arab Investors. The meeting produced recommendations affirming the importance of effective participation in the international efforts to assist Iraq and of the establishment of a mechanism for cooperation comprising the Iraqi, Arab and international actors involved in the reconstruction of Iraq.

On 18 February [S/2004/121], Kuwait transmitted to the Secretary-General and the Council President the final communiqué of the Fifth Conference of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of States Neighbouring Iraq (Bahrain, Egypt, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Turkey) (Kuwait City, 14-15 February). The Ministers re-emphasized the principle of non-interference in Iraq's internal affairs and stressed the right of the Iraqi people to freely determine their future. They reaffirmed the importance of enhancing the role of the United Nations so that it could assume its central responsibilities throughout the transitional process in Iraq. They welcomed the Secretary-General's establishment of an advisory group consisting of representatives of States neighbouring Iraq as well as Security Council members. They also welcomed all relevant Council resolutions, especially 1511 (2003) [YUN 2003, p. 348], which called for a timetable for the transfer of power to the Iraqi people and also on the United Nations to facilitate the transfer of power by 30 June 2004 as agreed by the Transitional Governing Council of Iraq and CPA. The Ministers condemned terrorist acts against civilians, Iraqi policemen and security forces, humanitarian and religious institutions, and international organizations and diplomatic missions operating in Iraq. The Ministers condemned the killing of Kuwaiti and Iranian prisoners of war and third-country nationals by the previous regime. They also commended the decision of the Iraqi people to bring the leaders of the previous regime, particularly the former President of Iraq, to justice and to try them for their crimes against humanity. Finally, they welcomed the Secretary-General's decision to dispatch an assessment team to Iraq (see below).

Fact-finding mission (February)

The fact-finding mission visited Iraq from 6 to 13 February. Its terms of reference called for an assessment of the feasibility of holding direct elections before 30 June, a determination of the time frame and conditions required for conducting credible elections consistent with UN principles and practices, and whether there were other options for representing the will of the Iraqi people within the time frame of the 15 November 2003 agreement [YUN 2003, p. 350], acceptable to all parties and guaranteeing a transparent and inclusive mechanism.

The report, transmitted by the Secretary-General [S/2004/140], stated that the fact-finding mission held wide-ranging discussions, met with a cross-section of Iraqis, including political, religious and tribal leaders. On the basis of those discussions, the mission was able to develop an understanding of the political environment and recent political developments related to the ongoing debate on the governance transition and to form an opinion on specific issues. There was near unanimous agreement that the United Nations should act as a facilitator of the process, providing technical assistance and helping form a consensus on the various issues.

The mission took place against the background of the political developments arising from the 15 November 2003 agreement on the political process to accelerate the transfer of sovereignty from CPA to an Iraqi administration by the end of June 2004. That agreement set out the conditions for the dissolution of CPA, with a new transitional assembly and provisional government assuming power. However, key Iraqi figures, including the Governing Council itself and a number of political and religious groups, opposed the caucus-style process suggested for choosing the transitional assembly. Many, including Ayatollah Sistani, demanded direct general elections and claimed that it was possible to organize a reasonably credible election before 30 June. There was therefore a deadlock over the issue of direct elections versus the caucus-style process prescribed in the 15 November agreement. At the end of long discussions with the mission at both the political and technical levels, a consensus emerged that it would be extremely difficult and even hazardous to try to organize general elections before 30 June and that the caucus system was not a viable option. However, as indicated in the technical report appended to the main report, elections would need a minimum preparation time of about eight months after the legal framework had been completed. If the required political consensus was reached fairly rapidly, it would be possible to hold elections by the end of 2004. Several other options were explored, including extending the existing Governing Council. Many Iraqis stressed that new initiatives were urgently needed to rebuild trust, promote inclusion and explore new options. Others affirmed that the way out of the impasse was for the United Nations to assist the Iraqis in building consensus on a political framework that would produce a road map for the governance transition and assist in the establishment of a transitional government to bring that to fruition.

The mission concluded that Iraq faced the difficult task of finding institutions capable of channelling political contestation into legitimate directions. Iraqis were eager to move to a new chapter in their history by finding political solutions to their problems through consensus-building. The challenges of working out a legitimate political process leading to a democratically elected government were enormous, as were establishing security throughout the country, building trust with the Iraqi people, drafting a constitution and building consensus among different Iraqi factions. Iraqis believed that the sooner an Iraqi government was in place the better, and that there should be no delay in the restoration of Iraqi sovereignty. There appeared to be an emerging consensus that a provisional government would need to be formed by 30 June through some mechanism other than direct elections.

The mission, in its recommendations, said that a consensus existed in Iraq that elections were a necessary step in the process of building democratic governance and reconstruction, but credible elections could not take place by 30 June. Preparations would need at least eight months after a legal institutional framework had been established. Agreement on the electoral legal framework should be reached as soon as possible so that preparations for establishing the various operational modalities could begin. The mission was told that a political agreement on the legal framework could be reached by May, paving the way for elections by the end of 2004 or shortly thereafter. The United Nations recommended that an autonomous and independent Iraqi Electoral Commission should be established, with financial and human resources being made available so that it could begin planning and preparing the process in a timely manner. Many Iraqis agreed that a single elected assembly should be chosen through elections held by the end of 2004 or shortly thereafter, with the dual functions of drafting a constitution and acting as the principal law-making body or legislature. There was also consensus that the 30 June deadline for the transfer of sovereignty to a provisional government should be maintained. The United Nations would be willing to assist in building consensus among Iraqis on the specific powers, structure and composition of such a provisional governance body and the process through which it could be established, and provide advisory services and technical assistance towards the establishment of an electoral legal framework. Security remained of paramount importance, both for the success of those processes and for UN participation. Discussions were already under way with the Governing Council and CPA; those discussions needed to be intensified to complete arrangements for expanding UN activities in Iraq.

The Secretary-General, in his transmittal letter, said that the fact-finding mission facilitated the emergence among Iraqis of a wide measure of agreement on the need for direct national elections, to be prepared and held under optimal technical, security and political conditions. There remained, however, a number of outstanding questions, including the choice of a transitional mechanism that would enjoy the broadest support among Iraqi constituencies and how to implement such a mechanism.

Further political developments

Security Council consideration (February).

On 24 February [meeting 4914], the Security Council discussed the situation between Iraq and Kuwait.

The United States representative, in updating the Council on developments in Iraq, said that the Transitional Administrative Law to govern Iraq during its transition to full democracy, with the establishment of a duly elected government under a permanent constitution, was nearing completion. Iraqis were working with each other and the international community to map their own political future and the number of Iraqis contributing to the security effort had virtually doubled. Saddam Hussein was in custody and would undergo due process for crimes committed against the Iraqi people and humanity. However, difficult and significant challenges remained. Former regime loyalists, foreign fighters and international terrorists continued to attack police stations, religious gatherings and schools, and had also directed their efforts against CPA partners, NGOs and the United Nations itself. The campaign of terror also targeted critical infrastructure throughout Iraq. Many nations had stepped forward to assist in the rebirth of Iraq. As President George W. Bush had stressed, the United Nations had a vital role to play in Iraq both before and after 1 July. The Iraqi people, the United Nations and CPA supported the transfer of sovereignty by 30 June and direct national elections as soon as practical thereafter.

Since Saddam Hussein's arrest in December 2003, the number of attacks against multinational force troops had decreased, although attacks on both Iraqi security forces and civilians had increased. In spite of that, the determination of the Iraqi people to assume primary responsibility for their own security remained undeterred. The Iraqi Civil Defence Corps had more than doubled in size, to approximately 25,000 personnel, since December 2003. The Corps performed a range of duties, including fixed site security, convoy route security, patrols, cordons and checkpoints establishment. The number of Iraqi armed forces personnel had also more than doubled to approximately 3,500 personnel, 2,000 of whom had been trained while the remaining 1,500 were in training. The Iraqi police force totalled about 75,000 personnel, and the border police and immigration and customs inspectors had grown to approximately 23,000. Troops deployed from 35 countries participating in the multinational force were also supporting the Iraqi people. New and renewed contributions represented the international community's commitment to improving Iraq's future.

On the issue of governance, the United States representative said that the broad framework of the political process would be underpinned by the work under way within the Iraqi Governing Council to draft a Transitional Administrative Law, the basis for the Iraqi transitional government until a permanent constitution was ratified. The United States also welcomed the UN fact-finding mission's report (see above). The mechanism for governing Iraq between the transfer of sovereignty and the national elections remained to be worked out. The Iraqi people, the Governing Council, CPA and the United Nations would work to reach agreement on a transition mechanism that would have the broad-based support of the Iraqi people. With the oil-for-food programme terminated, the World Food Programme was assisting CPA and the Iraqi Ministry of Trade with procurement and logistics assistance necessary to keep the public distribution system supplied with food-basket goods. Shipments of food and other humanitarian supplies were managed by the newly established Coordination Centre, jointly staffed by Iraqi and Coalition officials. The Centre's role was to ensure the steady, secure and managed flow of remaining oil-for-food goods and newly procured goods. The Ministry of Trade would take complete control of procurement on 1 April and would assume full responsibility for all aspects of the programme on 1 July.

On the disarmament of Iraq, the Iraq Survey Group continued its search for weapons of mass destruction (WMDs), prohibited missile-delivery systems and related infrastructure. The Survey Group had discovered clear evidence that Saddam Hussein's regime hid WMD programme activities from the United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission (UNMOVIC), and concluded that Iraq was in violation of previous Security Council resolutions. To meet the tasks ahead, the Survey Group maintained a sizeable number of specialists dedicated to interviewing individuals connected with Iraq's WMD programmes; obtaining and analysing documents, computer hard drives and other materials; and assessing and exploiting potential WMD-related sites. Some Iraqis were cooperating in that effort, though fear of reprisal was inhibiting cooperation by others. Some officials with close ties to the previous regime seemed determined to avoid cooperating in any way. In addition, document analysis had been obstructed by the destruction of documents and computers in the immediate post-conflict period.

The United Kingdom representative reported that progress was continuing on the provision of basic services, economic and reconstruction issues and human rights and justice. The focus was on rehabilitation of water and sanitation networks, including Baghdad's sewage plants. Power generation had improved to a February average of 4,260 megawatts, and long-term repairs and scheduled maintenance were being undertaken throughout the country to build a sustainable power grid. Key bridges were also being rebuilt. Progress was also being made in health and education. A key focus was the establishment of a sound economic framework and a transparent public expenditure system. The Central Bank law had been enacted, granting it full independence. The balance of the Development Fund for Iraq totalled $8.8 billion as at 12 February. To date, total disbursements from the Fund amounted to $3.2 billion. On 7 February, the International Advisory and Monitoring Board and CPA agreed on the statement of work for the independent public accountant to audit the sale and export of Iraqi oil.

Efforts were also made to create new jobs, as unemployment levels remained very high. The national employment programme and the additional employment programme in the northern governorates had so far created close to 110,000 jobs out of a target of 155,000 new public work jobs.

In coordination with CPA, the Iraqi Ministry of Justice had developed strategies and activities to ensure the establishment or reconstruction of basic Iraqi criminal justice facilities.

France said that the deadline of 30 June should not simply mark, in legal terms, the end of the occupation regime. It had to lead to a genuine restoration of Iraqi sovereignty and therefore to a genuine handover of authority and resources to the Iraqis. The United Nations would most likely be called on to be involved with the Iraqis, who wanted to see a robust involvement by the Organization in all areas. The United Nations would require a clear and specific mandate that would guarantee its independence and take into account its new circumstances. A new Council resolution would be necessary to support the restoration of Iraqi sovereignty and to support or define new arrangements.

Communication of Secretary-General (March).

On 18 March [S/2004/225], the Secretary-General reported to the Council President that he had received letters from the Interim President of the Iraqi Governing Council, Mohammed Bahr Al-Uloom, and from the CPA Administrator, L. Paul Bremer, informing him that, on 8 March, the Governing Council had adopted the Transitional Administrative Law, an important step towards the establishment of an independent, democratic State. The Governing Council invited the United Nations to Iraq to assist with both the formation of the Interim Government, to which sovereignty would be transferred on 30 June, and in the preparations for national direct elections, scheduled to be held before the end of January 2005. CPA supported that request and assured the Secretary-General of its cooperation in providing the security required for the United Nations to carry out those missions.

In view of the Governing Council's request, the Secretary-General asked his Special Adviser, Mr. Brahimi, and his team and an electoral assistance team to return to Iraq as soon as possible.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 24 March [meeting 4930], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/6 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the Secretary-General's letter dated 18 March 2004 and the exchange of letters with Dr. Mohammed Bahr Al-Uloom, President of the Governing Council of Iraq for the month of March 2004, and Mr. L. Paul Bremer III, Administrator of the Coalition Provisional Authority.

The Council also welcomes and strongly supports the decision of the Secretary-General to dispatch to Iraq his Special Adviser Mr. Lakhdar Brahimi and his team, as well as an electoral assistance team, as soon as possible, in order to lend assistance and advice to the Iraqi people in the formation of an interim Iraqi government to which sovereignty will be transferred on 30 June 2004, as well as in the preparations for direct elections to be held before the end of January 2005.

The Council calls upon all parties in Iraq to cooperate fully with these United Nations teams and welcomes the security and other support provided to them by the Governing Council and the Coalition Provisional Authority.

Security Council consideration (16 April).

The Security Council discussed the situation between Iraq and Kuwait on 16 April [meeting 4944], during which it was briefed by the United States representative on the situation in Iraq. He said that threat elements continued to challenge all those who were working for a better Iraq. The violence, which included ambush and mutilation as well as riots and attacks, was perpetrated by three groups: insurgents including former regime loyalists, terrorists who had infiltrated Iraq and militias affiliated with radical elements. The multinational force, which comprised 24,000 personnel from over 30 countries, had conducted the full spectrum of military operations, which ranged from the provision of humanitarian assistance, civil affairs and relief and reconstruction activities to the detention of those who were threats to security. It searched for weapons that threatened Iraq's stability, gathered intelligence and carried out offensive combat operations. The force also performed or assisted in many humanitarian and reconstruction activities and in the area of local governance.

One of the key long-term objectives of the multinational force and a major challenge was to recruit, train and equip Iraqi security forces in preparation for their assumption of the responsibility for maintaining security and enforcing the rule of law. The force had made significant progress in "standing up" Iraqi security forces. Despite the increase in attacks targeting Iraqi forces, Iraqis continued to join and the multinational force was working to build professional entities to provide a stabilizing influence. As at the beginning of April, some 200,000 members of Iraq's security forces were either on duty or in training.

The United States was committed to working with the international community to ensure that the security needs of the United Nations were met, both before and after 30 June. It continued to work with a UN team of security experts in Iraq to establish a strong relationship with the multinational force to facilitate the return of international UN personnel. With UN support, the United States had begun to solicit force contributions for the protection of a broad-based UN mission, whose role would be further defined by Council action. Operating as part of the multinational force, such forces would be dedicated solely to providing security for UN personnel and facilities.

The end of the occupation and the assumption of governing authority by the Iraqi Interim Government on 30 June would mark the beginning of a new era for the Iraqi people. Mr. Brahimi had consulted with a wide range of Iraqis during April and had made preliminary recommendations for the transition process, which the United States looked forward to hearing about in greater detail (see below). CPA's commitment to Iraq would continue well beyond 30 June, nonetheless. The transfer of sovereignty would not bring total calm to Iraq, and the multinational force would be needed to continue to support Iraq's security forces until they could assume sole responsibility for the security and stability of their country.

UN team visit to Iraq (April)

On 27 April [meeting 4952], the Council was briefed by the Secretary-General's Special Adviser, Mr. Brahimi, who led a team of political advisers in Iraq from 4 to 15 April to assist and advise the Iraqi people in the formation of an Interim Government to which sovereignty would be transferred on 30 June. Concurrently with his visit, a UN electoral mission also visited Iraq to support and advise on the preparations for direct elections to be held before the end of January 2005. Mr. Brahimi said that the security situation remained extremely worrying with an atmosphere of great tension and anxiety in the face of the siege of Fallujah by coalition forces, the Mahdi army's uprising in the south and the general increase in violence throughout the country. Hopes for a peaceful resolution to the stand-off in Fallujah had not yet materialized. On 22 April, staff of UNAMI, based in Amman, received a delegation from Fallujah, which claimed that several hundred of Fallujah's inhabitants had died and that well over 1,000 had been wounded. The United Nations was not in a position to verify those figures or the cause of death and injury, but there was little doubt that many lives had been lost and much suffering endured by civilians. The same was true of the precarious and complicated situation in Najaf and Karbala, two of the holiest cities for Shi'a in Iraq. Despite the prevailing insecurity situation, which affected its visit, the UN team was able to meet with a large cross-section of Iraqis. A key question was whether a credible political process was even viable under such circumstances. According to Mr. Brahimi, there was, in fact, no alternative but to find a way of making the process viable and credible. There was a dialectical link between security on the one hand, and the end of occupation, the restoration of sovereignty and independence and the advent of a legitimate Iraqi Government and political regime on the other. Security was essential for the process to be completed, and the sooner a credible Iraqi Government was in place the better. Virtually every Iraqi with whom the UN team met urged that there be no delay in bringing an end to the occupation, even though they understood that a democratically elected Government would not be in place by 30 June. The majority of Iraqis also favoured the handover of power by CPA on 30 June to a new caretaker Government composed of technically qualified persons, led by a qualified prime minister. The UN team suggested that a president should serve as head of State, with two vice-presidents. The caretaker Government would tend to the day-to-day administration of the country until such time as a democratically elected Government could be put in place. In doing so, the members of the caretaker Government had to be careful not to use their positions to give advantage to any political party or group. To prevent even the perception that they might do so, it would be best if they did not stand for election. It should refrain from entering into long-term commitments that could and should await decision by an elected Government, and consult with representatives of all parts of Iraqi society. To that end, the UN team suggested the establishment of a consultative assembly or council. Ideally, the Iraqis themselves should select the caretaker Government and the United Nations could help in that process. The UN team believed that it would be possible to identify by the end of May a group of people respected by and acceptable to Iraqis across the country to form the caretaker Government. Many Iraqis had suggested that the United Nations convene a national conference to engage in a genuine national dialogue on the country's challenges. The UN team, while agreeing that such a conference would be worthwhile, was of the view that it should be convened by an Iraqi preparatory committee, which should identify the modalities for the conference.

The conference, which could be convened in July at the earliest, should bring together between 1,000 and 1,500 people representing a wide sample of Iraqi society from every province in the country, all political parties, tribal chiefs and leaders, trade and professional unions, universities, women's groups, youth organizations, writers, artists and religious leaders, among others. It would discuss ways to address the security situation and ideas on how to organize timely and successful elections, and review the contentious aspects of the Transitional Administrative Law (see p. 341). It would also appoint a consultative council to advise the Government. Mr. Brahimi said that the convening of the national conference might ultimately constitute an important step towards, among other things, national reconciliation. It would have to deal with issues such as the manner in which the new army was formed, how the issue of "de-Baathification" was handled and how concerns about due process for current detainees were addressed. In that regard, Mr. Brahimi drew attention to the announcement by the CPA Administrator that, as of 10 May, it would regularly post lists of detainees at police stations and courthouses throughout the country. Grievances about the way in which the "de-Baathification" policy was being implemented, especially with respect to teachers and university professors, among others, would be addressed. CPA was also considering the dissolution of existing militias, including the Mahdi army and other armies. Mr. Brahimi said that the UN team would resume its consultations in Iraq as soon as possible in order to build broad consensus and move forward towards the establishment of an Interim Government by 30 June.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 April [meeting 4953], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2004/11 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes with appreciation the comprehensive briefing provided by the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Iraq, Mr. Lakhdar Brahimi.

Recalling the statement by its President of 24 March 2004 (S/PRST/2004/6), the Council considers the efforts of the Special Adviser and his team as well as those of the United Nations electoral assistance team to be of particular importance and urgency.

The Council strongly supports the efforts and the dedication of the Special Adviser and welcomes the provisional ideas that he has submitted as a basis for the formation of an interim Iraqi government to which sovereignty will be transferred on 30 June 2004.

The Council encourages the Secretary-General and his Special Adviser to continue diligently with the efforts that they are employing and welcomes the intention of the Special Adviser to return to Iraq shortly, and looks forward to a further briefing upon his return.

The Council calls upon all Iraqi parties to cooperate fully with the Special Adviser, and also calls upon Iraq's neighbours and the international community at large to lend all possible support to these efforts.

Communication. On 30 April [A/58/783-S/2004/354], Malaysia transmitted to the Presidents of the Security Council and the General Assembly a declaration on Iraq, adopted at the tenth session of the Islamic Summit Conference (Putrajaya, Malaysia, 22 April). The declaration, among other things, condemned the acts of terrorism carried out in Iraqi places of worship, and urged the Council to adopt a resolution, which would effectively help to restore the sovereignty and full independence of Iraq and empower the United Nations with the necessary mandate and authority to ensure the achievement of that goal.

Final report on implementation of resolution 1483(2003)

Security Council consideration (19 May). On 19 May [meeting 4971], the representatives of the United States and the United Kingdom briefed the Council on their last quarterly report on the implementation of resolution 1483(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 338]. The United States said that on 30 June, CPA and the framework of occupation recognized and established under that resolution would come to an end. The Iraqi Governing Council would cease to exist by that date, and an Interim Government of Iraq would assume the responsibility and authority for governing a sovereign Iraq. Among other tasks, it would prepare for elections for a Transitional National Assembly, to be held no later than 31 January 2005. The security situation since the 16 April report (see p. 343) had been particularly difficult. The multinational force was on the offensive against former regime elements and foreign terrorists in Fallujah and Ramadi. It responded to the string of kidnappings and was working to stop the lawlessness instigated by Muqtada Al-Sadr's Mahdi militia in Baghdad and southern Iraq.

More than 210,000 Iraqi citizens were serving in various components of the Iraqi security forces. The response of the various forces was uneven, and the United States was focusing on improving the quality and leadership of those forces. A Ministry of Defence and a Ministry of the Interior had been established as well as a Ministerial Committee on National Security. Coordination and consultative arrangements would be established between the multinational force and the Interim Government of Iraq. International security forces would be expanded to support the return of UN international personnel to Iraq, and a unit was being established within the multinational force under unified command to provide security for UN personnel and facilities in Iraq. The Transitional Administrative Law, adopted in February by the Governing Council, confirmed Iraq as a single State with federal structures, and affirmed civilian control of Iraq's security services and the independence of the judiciary. The Law also codified that elections for the Transitional National Assembly had to be held before the end of January 2005 and the drafting of a permanent constitution by 15 August 2005, with the transition to a constitutionally elected Government by 31 December 2005. A key milestone in Iraq's political transition would be the establishment of a Government chosen by democratic elections. The UN electoral assistance team was working with the Iraqi people in developing an independent election commission, an agreement on electoral modalities and a political parties law. The preparations for the establishment of an independent election commission were advancing. A nationwide nomination process was under way to select the seven commissioners.

Iraq continued to receive goods purchased under the oil-for-food programme, and the coordination centre established by CPA oversaw the shipment of food and other humanitarian supplies remaining in the oil-for-food pipeline. Capacity-building and technical support programmes had been initiated in relevant Iraqi ministries to improve Iraqi capabilities to procure essential items and monitor incoming oil-for-food shipments. That would help ensure that the Iraqis would be able to manage remaining oil-for-food contracts and projects when the coordination centre and the Office of Project Coordination were phased out. The Iraqi Board of Supreme Audit had collected, centralized and safeguarded oil-for-food documents in preparation for its own investigation of the programme and had signalled its readiness to assist the UN and other investigations into alleged abuses. The United States representative referred to the abuse of Iraqi detainees at Abu Ghraib prison, which, he said, stained the honour and reputation of the United States. To date, seven military personnel had been charged with criminal offences and two officers relieved of their command. A number of investigations were proceeding. Immediate steps had been taken to reinforce existing military policies to ensure that United States forces understood, were fully trained in and adhered to the Geneva Conventions.

Communication (2 June). On 2 June [A/58/818-S/2004/449], Jordan transmitted to the Presidents of the Council and the Assembly the statement made by the speakers of the parliaments of the neighbouring countries of Iraq at the meeting convened by the Inter-Parliamentary Union (Amman, 12-13 May). Calling for, among other things, a broader and more central role for the United Nations in Iraq based on a clearly defined, realistic and achievable mandate from the Council, they welcomed the resumption of UN activities in Iraq and concurred with the recommendations submitted by the Secretary-General's Special Adviser.

Establishment of Interim Government and transfer of sovereignty

Security Council consideration (3 June). On 3 June [meeting 4982], the Council discussed the situation between Iraq and Kuwait. It was briefed by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq who said that on 1 June the Iraqi people took the first step towards regaining their full sovereignty and independence. The Secretary-General's Special Adviser supervised the introduction of a new Interim Iraqi Government to assume authority on 30 June. It comprised 32 ministers, 6 of whom were women. The formation of the Interim Government, the result of an extensive consultation process promoted by Mr. Brahimi, was based on merit and qualifications with an element of political and social balancing. Iraq urged the international community to endorse the establishment of the sovereign Interim Government through the adoption of a new Council resolution, which should underline the transfer of full sovereignty to the Iraqi people on 30 June. That meant investing full authority in the Interim Government to run Iraq's affairs, including authority over security matters, full control of Iraq's resources and assets and a leading role in mechanisms agreed by the Council to monitor disbursement of its resources. The Transitional Administrative Law would remain the only legal framework until the end of 2005. To make the democratic process more inclusive, there were plans to hold a national conference by July 2004 to allow all those parties and individuals who wished to be represented to have a say. A preparatory committee for the conference had already been identified. An electoral commission had also been established to supervise elections, with the support and help of the United Nations. Part of the mandate of the caretaker Government was to work closely with the United Nations to prepare for general elections in 2005. The Foreign Minister stressed that Iraq had not yet reached a stage to maintain its own security. Political development in Iraq was progressive and inclusive and the country remained committed to the clear steps it had to take towards elections in 2005. Any premature departure of international troops would lead to chaos and the real possibility of a civil war. Iraqi forces would be under Iraqi command, operating in liaison and partnership with the multinational force.

Security Council consideration (7 June). At its 7 June meeting [meeting 4984] to consider the situation between Iraq and Kuwait, the Secretary-General told the Security Council that his Special Adviser, Mr. Brahimi, would give a briefing on the process leading to the announcement of the Iraqi Interim Government on 1 June. In his own introductory comments, the Secretary-General said that since the outbreak of the Iraq crisis, the UN role had been difficult, often dangerous, hedged about with constraints and controversy. To understand the role played by Mr. Brahimi and his team and by the United Nations Electoral Assistance Division, headed by Carina Perelli, it was important to set their efforts in a wider and longer perspective. It was no secret that the events leading up to the war in Iraq, and developments since then, had been among the most divisive that the Council had had to deal with since the end of the cold war. Against that background of strongly held views on both sides of the argument, it was inevitable that agreement on the role to be played by the United Nations in the aftermath of the war, especially in the political process, would also be elusive. Although Member States were able to agree that the United Nations should play a vital or central role, that role was never specifically defined. Moreover, the deadly attack on UN headquarters in Baghdad in August 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 346] greatly reduced the UN capacity to act inside Iraq, for it brought to a virtual halt the on-the-ground involvement of the United Nations in the political process in Iraq. It remained clear since then that any UN role in Iraq, political or otherwise, would face serious security constraints.

The Secretary-General said that there had to be some symmetry between the risks the United Nations was asked to accept and the role it was being called to play. The temporary relocation of UN international staff from the country did not mean that the Organization had disengaged from Iraq's political process. On the contrary, contacts were intensified with Governments around the world from UN Headquarters, and Iraq remained a constant agenda item in virtually all of the Secretary-General's meetings with heads of State or Government and Foreign Ministers. His primary message was the need for the occupation to be brought to an end as soon as possible and for the Iraqis to regain control of their sovereignty, political destiny and natural resources. While most Iraqis welcomed that a date had been set for the formation of a sovereign Iraqi Government, prominent figures representing key constituencies threatened to reject the outcome of the caucus-style method prescribed in the 15 November 2003 agreement [YUN 2003, p. 354] for selecting that Government. There was a real risk that the political process might collapse. Against that background, the President of the Iraqi Governing Council wrote to the Secretary-General at the end of 2003 [ibid., p. 355], requesting help in answering two specific questions: whether elections were feasible by 30 June 2004, and, if not, by what alternative means an Interim Government could be formed, to which sovereignty would be restored. The Secretary-General responded positively to that request, having been given strong assurance that there was a clear role for the United Nations, and everything possible would be done to provide security for its personnel. The Secretary-General's position was that whatever role the United Nations undertook should be proportionate to the risks that UN staff had to assume. It was within that context that he asked Mr. Brahimi to play a role in the political transition process. On the basis of the report presented to the Council on his fact-finding visit to Iraq (see p. 344), the process began leading to the formation of the Interim Government and the preparation of elections to be held by January 2005. That process was completed on time and in full. The UN role was to facilitate national dialogue and consensus-building among Iraqis, leading to the formation of an Interim Government, including its structure and composition. Mr. Brahimi had also helped forge consensus on a chairman for the committee that would prepare the national conference in early July 2004. The UN electoral experts helped the Iraqis lay the groundwork for elections. The establishment of the Independent Electoral Commission of Iraq was complete. Seven Iraqi commissioners and a National Electoral Director were selected by the United Nations. Agreement was reached on the legislative framework for the elections, including the electoral system, political parties and representation, and criteria for voter registration. The Council was discussing a draft resolution that addressed, among other things, the future role of the United Nations in Iraq. The Secretary-General looked forward to a clear definition of that role and to the creation of the conditions, including the provision of security for UN staff and resources, which would allow the United Nations to implement its mandate satisfactorily.

The Secretary-General's Special Adviser briefed the Council on the consultation process that led to the formation of the Interim Government, and, in particular, the selection of Ayad Allawi as interim Prime Minister. He said that the Council of Ministers reflected to a large extent the regional, ethnic and religious diversity of Iraq and was composed largely of technocrats.

Communication of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General transmitted to the Council President a copy of that briefing [S/2004/461], which constituted Mr. Brahimi's report on his third and latest mission to Iraq from 1 May to 2 June.

The Secretary-General fully endorsed Mr. Brahimi's observations. He emphasized that the United Nations had consistently held that there was no substitute for the legitimacy derived from free and fair elections. The elections scheduled to take place by early 2005 were therefore the most important milestone in Iraq's transitional political process. The formation of the Interim Government marked a first step in that process, and deserved to be given a fair chance and full support. Iraq's challenges, however, would take years, not months, to overcome. A major task for the Interim Government was dealing with the grave insecurity that affected Iraq. The United Nations stood ready to contribute to the restoration of peace and stability in a democratic Iraq.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

25. Decides that the provisions in paragraph 24 above for the deposit of proceeds into the Development Fund for Iraq and for the role of the International Advisory and Monitoring Board shall be reviewed at the request of the Transitional Government of Iraq or twelve months from the date of adoption of the present resolution, and shall expire upon the completion of the political process set out in paragraph 4 above;

26. Decides also that, in connection with the dissolution of the Coalition Provisional Authority, the Interim Government of Iraq and its successors shall assume the rights, responsibilities and obligations relating to the oil-for-food programme that were transferred to the Authority, including all operational responsibility for the programme and any obligations undertaken by the Authority in connection with such responsibility, and responsibility for ensuring independently authenticated confirmation that goods have been delivered, and further decides that, following a transition period of one hundred and twenty days from the date of adoption of the present resolution, the Interim Government of Iraq and its successors shall assume responsibility for certifying delivery of goods under previously prioritized contracts, and that such certification shall be deemed to constitute the independent authentication required for the release of funds associated with such contracts, consulting as appropriate to ensure the smooth implementation of these arrangements;

27. Decides further that the provisions of paragraph 22 of resolution 1483(2003) shall continue to apply, except that the privileges and immunities provided in that paragraph shall not apply with respect to any final judgement arising out of a contractual obligation entered into by Iraq after 30 June 2004;

28. Welcomes the commitments of many creditors, including those of the Paris Club, to identify ways to reduce substantially Iraq's sovereign debt, calls upon Member States, as well as international and regional organizations, to support the Iraq reconstruction effort, urges the international financial institutions and bilateral donors to take the immediate steps necessary to provide their full range of loans and other financial assistance and arrangements to Iraq, recognizes that the Interim Government of Iraq will have the authority to conclude and implement such agreements and other arrangements as may be necessary in this regard, and requests creditors, institutions and donors to work as a priority on these matters with the Interim Government of Iraq and its successors;

29. Recalls the continuing obligations of Member States to freeze and transfer certain funds, assets and economic resources to the Development Fund for Iraq in accordance with paragraphs 19 and 23 of resolution 1483(2003) and with resolution 1518(2003) of 24 November 2003;

30. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council within three months from the date of adoption of the present resolution on the operations in Iraq of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq, and on a quarterly basis thereafter on the progress made towards national elections and the fulfilment of all the responsibilities of the Mission;

31. Requests that the United States of America, on behalf of the multinational force, report to the Council within three months of the date of the present resolution on the efforts and progress of the force, and on a quarterly basis thereafter;

32. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Text of letters from the Prime Minister of the Interim Government of Iraq, Dr. Ayad Allawi, and the Secretary of State of the United States of America, Mr. Colin L. Powell, addressed to the President of the Security Council

Letter dated 5 June 2004 from the Prime Minister of the Interim Government of Iraq, Dr. Ayad Allawi

On my appointment as Prime Minister of the Interim Government of Iraq, I am writing to express the commitment of the people of Iraq to complete the political transition process to establish a free and democratic Iraq and to be a partner in preventing and combating terrorism. As we enter a critical new stage, regain full sovereignty and move towards elections, we will need the assistance of the international community.

The Interim Government of Iraq will make every effort to ensure that these elections are fully democratic, free and fair. Security and stability continue to be essential to our political transition. There continue, however, to be forces in Iraq, including foreign elements, that are opposed to our transition to peace, democracy and security. The Government is determined to overcome these forces and to develop security forces capable of providing adequate security for the Iraqi people. Until we are able to provide security for ourselves, including the defence of Iraq's land, sea and air space, we ask for the support of the Security Council and the international community in this endeavour. We seek a new resolution on the Multinational Force mandate to contribute to maintaining security in Iraq, including through the tasks and arrangements set out in the letter from Secretary of State Colin Powell to the President of the Security Council. The Government requests that the Security Council review the mandate of the MNF at the request of the Transitional Government of Iraq, or twelve months from the date on which such a resolution is adopted.

In order to discharge the Iraqi Government's responsibility for security, I intend to establish appropriate security structures that will allow my Government and Iraqi security forces to progressively take on that responsibility. One such structure is the Ministerial Committee for National Security, consisting of myself as the Chair, the Deputy Prime Minister and the Ministers for Defence, the Interior, Foreign Affairs, Justice and Finance. The National Security Advisor and Director of the Iraqi National Intelligence Service will serve as permanent advisory members of the Committee. This forum will set the broad framework for Iraqi security policy. I intend to invite, as appropriate, the MNF commander, his deputy or the MNF commander's designated representative, and other appropriate individuals, to attend and participate as well, and will stand ready to discuss mechanisms of coordination and cooperation with the MNF. Iraqi armed forces will be responsible to the Chief of Staff and Minister for Defence. Other security forces (the Iraqi police, border guards and the Facilities Protection Service) will be responsible to the Minister of the Interior or other government ministers.

In addition, the relevant ministers and I will develop further mechanisms for coordination with the MNF. I intend to create with the MNF coordination bodies at the national, regional and local levels that will include Iraqi security forces' commanders and civilian leadership, to ensure that Iraqi security forces will coordinate with the MNF on all security policy and operations issues in order to achieve unity of command of military operations in which Iraqi forces are engaged with the MNF. In addition, the MNF and Iraqi government leaders will keep each other informed of their activities, consult regularly to ensure effective allocation and use of personnel, resources and facilities, will share intelligence and will refer issues up the respective chains of command where necessary. Iraqi security forces will take on progressively greater responsibility as Iraqi capabilities improve.

The structures I have described in this letter will serve as the forums for the MNF and the Iraqi government to reach agreement on the full range of fundamental security and policy issues, including policy on sensitive offensive operations, and will ensure full partnership between Iraqi forces and the MNF, through close coordination and consultation. Since these are sensitive issues for a number of sovereign governments, including Iraq and the United States of America, they need to be resolved within the framework of a mutual understanding on our strategic partnership. We will be working closely with the MNF leadership in the coming weeks to ensure that we have such an agreed strategic framework.

We are ready to take sovereign responsibility for governing Iraq by 30 June. We are well aware of the difficulties facing us, and of our responsibilities to the Iraqi people. The stakes are great, and we need the support of the international community to succeed. We ask the Security Council to help us by acting now to adopt a Security Council resolution giving us the necessary support.

I understand that the co-sponsors intend to annex this letter to the resolution on Iraq under consideration. In the meantime, I request that you provide copies of this letter to members of the Council as quickly as possible.

Letter dated 5 June 2004 from the Secretary of State of the United States of America, Mr. Colin L. Powell

Recognizing the request of the government of Iraq for the continued presence of the Multinational Force in Iraq, and following consultations with Prime Minister Ayad Allawi of the Iraqi Interim Government, I am writing to confirm that the MNF under unified command is prepared to continue to contribute to the maintenance of security in Iraq, including by preventing and deterring terrorism and protecting the territory of Iraq. The goal of the MNF will be to help the Iraqi people to complete the political transition and will permit the United Nations and the international community to work to facilitate Iraq's reconstruction.

The ability of the Iraqi people to achieve their goals will be heavily influenced by the security situation in Iraq. As recent events have demonstrated, continuing attacks by insurgents, including former regime elements, foreign fighters and illegal militias challenge all those who are working for a better Iraq.

The development of an effective and cooperative security partnership between the MNF and the sovereign Government of Iraq is critical to the stability of Iraq. The commander of the MNF will work in partnership with the sovereign Government of Iraq in helping to provide security while recognizing and respecting its sovereignty. To that end, the MNF stands ready to participate in discussions of the Ministerial Committee for National Security on the broad framework of security policy, as referred to in the letter dated 5 June 2004 from Prime Minister Allawi of the Interim Government of Iraq. On the implementation of this policy, recognizing that Iraqi security forces are responsible to the appropriate Iraqi ministers, the MNF will coordinate with Iraqi security forces at all levels—national, regional and local—in order to achieve unity of command of military operations in which Iraqi forces are engaged with the MNF. In addition, the MNF and the Iraqi government leaders will keep each other informed of their activities, consult regularly to ensure effective allocation and use of personnel, resources and facilities, will share intelligence and will refer issues up the respective chains of command where necessary. We will work in the forums described by Prime Minister Allawi in his letter dated 5 June 2004 to reach agreement on the full range of fundamental security and policy issues, including policy on sensitive offensive operations, and will ensure full partnership between MNF and Iraqi forces, through close coordination and consultation.

Under the agreed arrangement, the MNF stands ready to continue to undertake a broad range of tasks to contribute to the maintenance of security and to ensure force protection. These include activities necessary to counter ongoing security threats posed by forces seeking to influence Iraq's political future through violence. This will include combat operations against members of these groups, internment where this is necessary for imperative reasons of security, and the continued search for and securing of weapons that threaten Iraq's security. A further objective will be to train and equip Iraqi security forces that will increasingly take responsibility for maintaining Iraq's security. The MNF also stands ready as needed to participate in the provision of humanitarian assistance, civil affairs support, and relief and reconstruction assistance requested by the Iraqi Interim Government and in line with previous Security Council resolutions.

In addition, the MNF is prepared to establish or support a force within the MNF to provide for the security of personnel and facilities of the United Nations. We have consulted closely with United Nations officials regarding the United Nations' security requirements and believe that a brigade-size force will be needed to support the United Nations' security effort. This force will be under the command and control of the MNF commander, and its missions will include static and perimeter security at United Nations facilities and convoy escort duties for the United Nations mission's travel requirements.

In order to continue to contribute to security, the MNF must continue to function under a framework that affords the force and its personnel the status that they need to accomplish their mission, and in which the contributing States have responsibility for exercising jurisdiction over their personnel and which will ensure arrangements for, and use of assets by, the MNF. The existing framework governing these matters is sufficient for these purposes. In addition, the forces that make up the MNF are and will remain committed at all times to act consistently with their obligations under the law of armed conflict, including the Geneva Conventions.

The MNF is prepared to continue to pursue its current efforts to assist in providing a secure environment in which the broader international community is able to fulfil its important role in facilitating Iraq's reconstruction. In meeting these responsibilities in the period ahead, we will act in full recognition of and respect for Iraqi sovereignty. We look to other Member States and international and regional organizations to assist the people of Iraq and the sovereign Iraqi government in overcoming the challenges that lie ahead to build a democratic, secure and prosperous country.

The co-sponsors intend to annex this letter to the resolution on Iraq under consideration. In the meantime, I request that you provide copies of this letter to members of the Council as quickly as possible.

Speaking after the vote, the United States said that the resolution defined the key political tasks in which the United Nations would play a leading and vital role to support Iraqi efforts. The an-nexed letters to the resolution described the security partnership that was being put into place between Iraq and the multinational force.

The United Kingdom said that the resolution made an important contribution to Iraq's development. Besides endorsing the formation of an Interim Government, it set a clear path for the future political process, which would end with elections on the basis of a constitution approved by the Iraqi people. It gave the United Nations a leading role, as circumstances permitted, to assist Iraq in that process. In addition, as requested by the Iraqi Government, the resolution authorized the continued presence of the multinational force. The United Kingdom stood ready to participate fully in those arrangements.

Communications. On 25 June [S/2004/519], Turkey transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of the Chairman's statement on the results of the meeting of the Regional Initiative on Iraq (Istanbul, Turkey, 15 June), with the participation of Egypt, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, the Syrian Arab Republic and Turkey. The Chairman welcomed the adoption of Council resolution 1546(2004) and expressed the hope that the United Nations would be able to perform its functions in Iraq with the full cooperation of all.

On the same day [A/58/849-S/2004/520], Turkey transmitted to the Secretary-General and the Council President the text of the Istanbul Declaration, adopted by the Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers at its thirty-first session (Istanbul, 14-16 June), supporting the steps taken towards ending the occupation in Iraq and the process by which the Iraqis would assume their sovereignty. They welcomed in that respect the adoption of resolution 1546(2004).

The Sixth Conference of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of States Neighbouring Iraq (Cairo, Egypt, 21 July), in its final statement transmitted to the Council President [S/2004/590], welcomed the transfer of authority to the sovereign Interim Government of Iraq and the adoption of resolution 1546(2004).

The Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States members of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, in the final communiqué of their annual coordination meeting (New York, 28 September), noted with satisfaction the role assigned to the United Nations under resolution 1546(2004) and welcomed the transfer of authority to the Interim Government on 28 June and the convening of the Iraqi national conference [A/59/425-S/2004/808].

International Advisory and Monitoring Board

The International Advisory and Monitoring Board for Iraq (IAMB), established by Security Council resolution 1483(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 338] to ensure that the Development Fund for Iraq was used in a transparent manner for the purposes set out in paragraph 14 of that resolution and that the Iraqi export sales of petroleum products and natural gas were consistent with international market best practices, commenced overseeing the audit of the Fund.

In a 30 June letter [S/2004/542] submitted by the Secretary-General to the Council President on 6 July, the Secretary-General's representative on and Chairman of IAMB reported that, on 24 March, the Board approved the appointment of the auditing firm of KPMG to conduct the audit of the Fund. It also completed the review of the statement of work of the auditors and submitted it to the CPA Administrator. The Board identified a number of issues of concern which it conveyed to CPA and the public, such as controls over the extraction of oil, bartering and sole-sourced contracts.

The Board appointed two observers from the Iraqi Governing Council and one from CPA and requested the CPA Administrator to designate an official to act as counterpart to the Board after 30 June. As a result of resolution 1546(2004) (see p. 348), the Board was revising its terms of reference. It established a website to ensure the widest availability of documentation and information related to its operations.

On 28 June, responsibility for decisions regarding the use of the Fund was handed over from CPA to the Iraqi Interim Government.

UN Assistance Mission for Iraq

The United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq (UNAMI), established by Security Council resolution 1500(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 346] to support the Secretary-General in the fulfilment of his mandate under resolution 1483(2003) [ibid., p. 338], operated from temporary headquarters located in Larnaca, Cyprus, until 22 June, and in Amman and Kuwait. It was also in the process of establishing bases of operation in Baghdad, Basrah and Erbil. UNAMI's mission was expanded by Council resolution 1546(2004) (see p. 348) to include assisting in the convening of a national conference to select a Consultative Council, advising on the holding of elections, promoting national dialogue and consensus-building on the drafting of a new constitution, advising on the development of effective civil and social services and contributing to the coordination and delivery of reconstruction, development and humanitarian assistance.

On 12 July [S/2004/563], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that he intended to appoint Ashraf Jehangir Qazi (Pakistan) as his Special Representative for Iraq and Head of UNAMI to replace Ross Mountain. The Security Council, on 13 July [S/2004/546], noted the Secretary-General's intention.

During the year, the Secretary-General submitted three reports [S/2004/625, S/2004/710 & Corr.1, S/2004/959] on UNAMI's activities.

Report of Secretary-General (August). In response to resolution 1483(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 338] and resolution 1511(2003) [ibid., p. 348], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [S/2004/625] on UNAMI activities and key developments in Iraq since his December 2003 report [ibid., p. 352].

Staff security remained the overriding constraint for all UN activities in Iraq. The acting UN Security Coordinator assessed the risks to UN personnel in Iraq as being in the high to critical category, and for the foreseeable future the United Nations would remain a high-value, high-impact target for attacks. UNAMI and UN agencies and programmes would therefore continue to limit their activities inside Iraq to the essential. In the absence of a significant improvement in the overall security situation, the United Nations had to continue to incorporate into all plans and activities the special measures outlined in the Secretary-General's December 2003 report. All UN staff were therefore required to undergo security awareness and information training as a precondition for deployment in Iraq, and any long-term deployment would require the prior development of UN living and working facilities to the minimum operating security standards requirements. It would also require security arrangements by the multinational force and the United Nations in line with their respective responsibilities. Accordingly, the Secretary-General welcomed the provision in resolution 1546(2004) for protection by a distinct entity under unified command of the multinational force. Planning was under way with a view to concluding a formal agreement on protection, exchange of information, emergency medical evacuation and other assistance. As the United Nations lacked the resources for its own security responsibilities in Iraq, it would have to rely on the Interim Government and the multinational force to provide security on the initial re-entry of UN international staff. The assistance of Member States was being sought for the establishment by UNAMI of security units. Outside UN premises, the multinational force would initially serve as the guarantor of the overall security.

In July 2004, UNAMI supported the electoral process by providing logistics, communications, information technology and voter education supplies. UNAMI fostered a sustained effort by UN agencies and programmes to support Iraqi ministries and civil society in the delivery of services to the Iraqi people. It also helped in coordinating assistance with donors and NGOs.

In February 2004, the country team, composed of all UN agencies, offices, funds and programmes with activities in Iraq, developed a strategic planning framework for all UN activities in Iraq. Under the framework, there were 11 clusters (education and culture; health; water and sanitation; infrastructure and housing; agriculture, water resources and environment; food security; mine action; internally displaced persons and refugees; governance and civil society; poverty reduction and human development; and support to the electoral process) informed by five cross-cutting themes—security, human rights, gender, environment and employment generation. UNAMI and the UN country team undertook a wide range of capacity-building, reconstruction, development and humanitarian assistance planning activities. UNAMI established an inter-agency, multisectoral Emergency Response Working Group in April to deal with humanitarian monitoring and early warning, contingency planning, coordination, information management and advocacy and was developing a contingency plan for Iraq. It also worked with the United Nations Development Group agencies and the World Bank to establish the mechanisms for the International Reconstruction Fund Facility for Iraq to accept funds and identify, appraise, approve, implement and monitor projects in the difficult security conditions.

Notwithstanding the constraints imposed by the temporary relocation of UN international staff from Iraq, the United Nations remained engaged in Iraq's political transition process. The United Nations intensified high-level contacts with Iraqis and Governments around the world to discuss the situation and the prospects for an orderly political transition, culminating in credible elections.

On 8 June, the Iraqi Prime Minister-designate requested the United Nations to assist in the preparations for the convening of a national conference which would represent all the colours of the Iraqi political spectrum. The Secretary-General therefore dispatched a small team led by Jamal Benomar to Iraq to assist the Preparatory Committee for the National Conference.

The UN electoral assistance team helped the Iraqis to lay the groundwork for holding elections. Under a plan designed and supervised by the UN Electoral Assistance Division, a national nomination and selection process was conducted to identify candidates for posts as Electoral Commissioners and the Chief Electoral Officer, both of which were appointed by the CPA Administrator on 31 May. From 20 June to 9 July, the Division, with the assistance of Mexico, undertook an intensive training programme with the Iraqi Electoral Commissioners and Chief Electoral Officer. On 30 June, the Chairman of the Electoral Commission requested the United Nations to assist in establishing the Commission as an institution and in the planning, preparation and organization of the electoral process.

The Secretary-General observed that resolution 1546(2004) gave the United Nations a strong and clearly defined mandate. At the same time, the situation in Iraq remained a major challenge both for the Iraqi people and for the international community as a whole. The United Nations would concentrate its efforts on the task set forth in its mandate pursuant to resolution 1546(2004), as requested by the Iraqi Government, and with full consideration given to the deadlines set out in the time frame of Iraq's transitional process. The primary task of the Special Representative would be to assist the Iraqis in implementing the proposed transitional timetable leading to the establishment of a constitutionally elected Government by 31 December 2005. Security would remain the primary obstacle and constraint. A qualitative improvement in the overall security environment was an essential prerequisite for the success of UN efforts in Iraq. The security and safety of all UN staff would therefore remain the overarching guiding principle for all UN activities. Until overall security conditions in Iraq improved significantly, UNAMI would have to continue to operate primarily from the region. UNAMI was promoting operational and sustained contacts with Iraqi ministries to assist in enhancing national capacity and was preparing for the resumption of in-country activities when circumstances would permit. In the light of the essential role that it was playing in supporting the transition process in Iraq, the Secretary-General recommended that UNAMI's mandate be extended for a further period of 12 months.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

On 12 August [meeting 5020], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1557(2004). The draft [S/2004/637] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions on Iraq, in particular resolutions 1500(2003) of 14 August 2003 and 1546(2004) of 8 June 2004,

Reaffirming the independence, sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of Iraq,

Recalling the establishment of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq on 14 August 2003, and reaffirming that the United Nations should play a leading role in assisting the Iraqi people and government in the formation of institutions for representative government,

Welcoming the appointment by the Secretary-General of his new Special Representative for Iraq,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 5 August 2004,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq for a period of twelve months from the date of the present resolution;

2. Expresses its intention to review the mandate of the Mission in twelve months or sooner if requested by the Government of Iraq;

3. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (September). In response to resolution 1546(2004), the Secretary-General submitted a 3 September report [S/2004/710 & Corr.1] on UNAMI's operations and on the progress made towards national elections since his August report (see p. 354). Since its formation on 28 June 2004, the Interim Government of Iraq had taken steps to rebuild Iraq, such as fostering development and economic recovery by improving education and training, creating employment opportunities and promoting business and trade. However, the security situation remained volatile and generally unreceptive to significant economic and political initiatives. Governance structures in the provinces and administrative links with Baghdad had yet to be fully established. Economic opportunities were limited across the country and threats to oil facilities further indicated the challenges within which the Interim Government was trying to establish its authority. Military combat, violence, assassinations and abductions continued to be reported across the country, exacting a huge toll on human life. Armed militias connected to key political parties and figures remained active. Insurgents continued to challenge the presence of the multinational force and the new security forces of the Interim Government. Members of the Iraqi security forces appeared to have competing loyalties to various entities, including family, tribe and party, as well as the Iraqi State. Political violence was directed against senior and middle-ranking government officials, as well as senior officials of various political parties. Such tactics were aimed at demoralizing Iraqi public servants and deterring potential candidates from competing for public office, thereby reducing the pool of talent in government and politics. The pervasive sense of insecurity felt by Iraqis as a result of extortion, kidnappings and other criminal activities eroded public confidence in the capacity of political leaders to improve the security situation. The humanitarian situation was characterized by a marked disregard for international humanitarian and human rights law. Attacks on Iraqi civilians, residential areas and the nascent police forces were widespread. Places of sanctity were targeted or used by combatants.

While fighting was ongoing in several localities in Iraq, the crisis in the city of Najaf was particularly serious. Fighting escalated between an armed militia loyal to Moqtada al-Sadr, Iraqi security forces and the multinational force and was concentrated close to the Imam Ali Shrine. On 27 August, a mediation initiative, led by Grand Ayatollah Ali al-Sistani, resulted in a five-point agreement with the militia, which led to the cessation of hostilities and the transfer of control of the shrine to the senior cleric. The plan, among other things, stated that the cities of Najaf and Kufa had to be disarmed and that all armed elements had to withdraw. It also called on all parties and movements to join in a process leading to general elections and full sovereignty. The Secretary-General, in his statements of 7 and 13 August, encouraged the promotion of the rule of law and a peaceful and reconciliatory approach to bring the fighting in Najaf to an end.

The national conference, scheduled to take place in July 2004, was held from 15 to 18 August in Baghdad, after the Iraqi Preparatory Committee for the Conference, on the advice of the UN team, decided to postpone it for two weeks in order to expand participation. The conference was attended by more than 1,100 delegates from all Iraqi governorates, representing a wide spectrum of Iraqi society. The conference decided to establish an Interim National Council, one of whose key functions would be to monitor the work of the Interim Government. The national conference was held against the backdrop of ongoing fighting in Najaf, which prevented the participation of a number of political actors, who argued that there could not be a genuine dialogue under the circumstances. There was also a perception among several participants that the conference was organized by one of the major political parties and was dominated by established political parties. Despite those shortcomings, the conference completed its task and provided the first opportunity for the Interim Government to demonstrate its commitment to a transparent and inclusive political process leading to national elections in 2005.

The security assessment and related measures for UN staff protection in Iraq remained unchanged during the period under review. The small UN staff presence in the international zone was operating at the outer limit of acceptable and prudent risk. The ceiling for the deployment of UN international substantive, support and security staff in Iraq stood at 35. Efforts by the multinational force to establish a distinct entity with a dedicated mission to provide security for the UN presence in Iraq continued. The United Nations, at the request of the multinational force, had encouraged Member States to provide troops or make financial contributions to such an entity, which should consist of military units of about three battalions. Eighteen Member States responded positively. There was also a need for integrated security arrangements for UNAMI (for details, see below). Discussions were held with six Member States with regard to the provision of paramilitary, civilian police and military guard units. However, a specific Security Council mandate to obtain and deploy the guard units was required. In addition, indications from Member States approached thus far were that, without a clear and unambiguous legal basis, many if not all of the potential contributors would possibly decline to contribute units.

The greatest challenge facing the electoral process in Iraq was the insecure environment in which the preparatory work was being done. While the United Nations continued to assist in the electoral process, as circumstances permitted, the responsibility for organizing and conducting the election rested with the Iraqi authorities. UN electoral assistance was concentrated on consolidating the Electoral Commission, in particular its presence throughout the country and the induction and training of staff, and assisting in the preparation, organization and planning of electoral activities in order to meet the 31 January 2005 deadline. UNAMI's electoral component, in cooperation with the Electoral Assistance Division of the Department of Political Affairs, was coordinating the provision of international financial and technical assistance to the Commission.

The Secretary-General's Special Representative and Head of UNAMI, Mr. Qazi, arrived in Baghdad on 13 August with a seven-member core team. His initial engagements included the national conference and contacts aimed at a peaceful settlement of the conflict in Najaf.

The Secretary-General observed that the convening of the national conference, though not as broad-based and as inclusive as most Iraqis would have wanted, made advances on several critical aspects. At the same time, however, the overall security environment had not seen any significant improvement. A crucial challenge for the Interim Government would be to create the necessary conditions to allow Iraq to become a society based on the rule of law. That implied a coordinated effort in the transformation of law and order institutions, encompassing police, judicial and penal reform. All parties had to support the Government's decision to disband militias, whose members had to be reintegrated into civil society. The problem of insecurity could be addressed only through a political process and a shared willingness to engage in sustained and transparent dialogue in a spirit of mutual understanding and compromise.

A conducive security environment was clearly and intimately linked to the performance of UN operations in Iraq. Circumstances did not permit the United Nations to implement its mandate to the fullest extent. Unless and until there was significant improvement in the overall security situation, UNAMI would have to continue working both inside and outside Iraq, as circumstance permitted, with a restricted presence on the ground in Iraq. It was important that the entity of the multinational force mandated to provide security for the UN presence be identified or deployed prior to the deployment of UNAMI guard units. The Secretary-General expected the full support of Member States, particularly in the Security Council, to contribute to that common endeavour.

Security Council consideration (14 September). On 14 September [meeting 5033], the Council was briefed by the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Iraq, Mr. Qazi, and by the United States representative on behalf of the multinational force.

Mr. Qazi reviewed the Secretary-General's first report pursuant to resolution 1546(2004) (see above). He said that the security environment was far from conducive to the deployment of UNAMI's international staff to Iraq, except in minimal numbers. It also confined UNAMI's movements to the international zone, which limited UNAMI's ability to interact with a sufficiently wide range of the Iraqi political spectrum.

The United States said that the security situation was fragile, attacks were persistent and lives continued to be lost. The multinational force had employed new counter-insurgency tactics and continued to train and deploy Iraqi security forces. The key to defeating the insurgents and terrorists was to continue training and deploying Iraqi forces at an accelerated pace. As at 10 September, the Iraqi Ministry of Defence had over 231,000 Iraqi security forces either on duty or in training. The Iraqi police numbered over 86,000, with a goal of hiring 135,000; the Department of Border Enforcement had hired over 14,000 border police, with a goal of hiring 32,000. The multinational force also worked to restore essential services to the Iraqi people, such as repairing bridges, ports, roads and railroads. It constructed hospitals, schools, post offices and other public buildings, while medical units had developed children's vaccination programmes. The United States and the multinational force remained committed to working with the international community to ensure that the security needs of the United Nations were met, but that effort merited international support if it were to be successful.

A longer, written version of the United States report was provided to the Council on that same day [S/2004/730].

Security arrangements for UNAMI

In a 21 September letter to the Security Council President [S/2004/764], the Secretary-General set out UNAMI's security arrangements, subject to the Council's approval. To expand its staffing and activities in Iraq, UNAMI, in addition to the protection provided by the multinational force, would have to establish an integrated UN security structure to carry out access control and patrols within UNAMI facilities; provide personal security details for personnel both within UN premises and on the move; and conduct training and coordinate security arrangements between UNAMI and other UN organizations, and with the multinational force. UNAMI's integrated security structure would consist of international security staff, protection coordination officers, personal security details and guard units. Their deployment would be subject to ongoing assessments of the overall security situation in Iraq and the related deployment of substantive staff, as well as on the completion of logistical arrangements, including secure office and living accommodation. The guard units would form part of that integrated security structure. Three formed units would be needed, each consisting of up to 160 armed civilian police, paramilitary or military personnel, to be provided as contingents from Member States. The guard units would form part of UNAMI, with the specific responsibility of controlling access to and conducting patrols within UNAMI premises.

In a 1 October letter [S/2004/765], the Council President welcomed the Secretary-General's proposed security arrangements for UNAMI and urged Member States to respond positively with contributions. On the same day [S/PV.5047], the Council endorsed its President's reply.

Establishment of UN trust fund

On 26 November [S/2004/927], the Netherlands drew the attention of the Security Council President to an exchange of letters between the Netherlands and the Secretary-General concerning the European Union's offer to contribute $12 million for financing the middle ring of the proposed UN protection force in Iraq, its request for information regarding the administrative details for the transfer of those funds, including the establishment of a UN trust fund for that purpose, and the Secretary-General's indication of his willingness to establish such a fund provided he received a mandate from the Council.

The Council President, in his 30 November reply [S/2004/929], said that the Council endorsed the creation of a trust fund to accept and administer contributions from Member States and requested the Secretary-General to establish the fund no later than 3 December.

On the same day [S/PV.5092], the Council endorsed the President's reply to the Secretary-General.

Sharm El Sheik meeting

The International Ministerial Meeting of the Countries Neighbouring Iraq (Egypt, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey), the Group of Eight (Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States) and China (Sharm El Sheik, 23 November) was convened by Egypt with the objective of supporting the Iraqi people, the political process set out in Security Council resolution 1546(2004) (see p. 348) and the efforts of the Interim Government in that process. In his address to the meeting, the Secretary-General emphasized the need to promote convergence both inside Iraq and in the international community.

In a final communiqué transmitted by Egypt to the Council President on 26 November [S/2004/928], the ministers affirmed the right of the Iraqi people to a secure and stable life and to determine freely their future through democratic means and to exercise full control over their natural and financial resources. They underlined the importance of the United Nations continuing to play a leading role in that effort, and called on the international community to provide the assistance necessary for protecting the United Nations in Iraq. They encouraged the Interim Government to convene, before the general elections of 2005, representatives of the Iraqi political spectrum and civil society in order to share with them the results of the Sharm El Sheik meeting, so as to advance nation-building and national reconciliation with a view to encouraging broader participation in the general elections. The ministers called on all parties concerned to prevent the transit of terrorists to and from Iraq and financing that supported terrorists. They reiterated that the mandate of the multinational force in Iraq was not open-ended, for it would expire in accordance with resolution 1546(2004) on completion of the political process. They also reiterated the importance of humanitarian assistance and support for the reconstruction of Iraq, and called on Iraq's creditors to reduce substantially Iraq's sovereign debt. The ministers reaffirmed the importance of bringing to justice members of the previous Iraqi regime who had committed war crimes against Iran and Kuwait and crimes against humanity affecting the Iraqi people. Participants were directed to review regularly progress in implementing the conclusions reached at the meeting and to report to ministers on the outcome of their follow-up meetings, the first of which was to be held in February 2005.

Further reports of Secretary-General pursuant to resolution 1546(2004)

Pursuant to resolution 1546(2004), the Secretary-General submitted an 8 December report [S/2004/959] on UNAMI activities in Iraq since his September report (see p. 355). The security situation remained a major challenge. Although certain parts of the country, especially in the south, remained relatively calm, violence continued to adversely affect the centre of Iraq, particularly in and around Baghdad and other key cities, such as Fallujah, Samarra, Ramadi and Mosul. Iraq's security and law enforcement institutions remained fragile. Attacks, including acts of terror against State institutions and government officials, multinational force members, Iraqi security forces and civilians, continued unabated. Abductions and hostage-taking were also reported almost on a daily basis. On 7 November, the Interim Government declared a 60-day state of emergency in all parts of Iraq, except in the three northern governorates. Specific measures were announced for Fallujah and Ramadi, including the imposition of a 24-hour curfew in Fallujah, disbandment of the local police, and the closure of borders with the Syrian Arab Republic and Jordan. On 3 November, the Interim Government authorized Iraqi security forces and the multinational force to regain control of Fallujah through military action. While the Interim Government appeared to have regained control over most of the city, some insurgent groups might have relocated to other localities outside of the city. South of Baghdad also witnessed armed encounters between sectarian groups. In Sadr City, Iraqi security forces and the multinational force were engaged in military combat. An arrangement was reached whereby insurgents were to lay down their arms in a government weapons buy-out programme in exchange for a commitment by the authorities to rehabilitate long-neglected neighbourhoods. A partial amnesty was also announced and, eventually, order was restored in Sadr City. Violence also increased in Kirkuk and Mosul.

The priorities in the transitional process were the preparations for direct and democratic elections. Technical preparations for the elections remained on schedule. On 21 November, the Independent Electoral Commission of Iraq announced that the elections had been scheduled for 30 January 2005. While a number of parties and other entities announced their support for the elections, others indicated that they might boycott them.

In view of the very high and in some cases intensifying levels of violence in certain parts of Iraq, staff security remained the overriding constraint for all UN activities throughout the country. The deployment of UN staff in Iraq, which has been undertaken primarily in support of the electoral process, was confined to the international zone in Baghdad, and movement outside that zone remained extremely hazardous. The multinational force was providing security for UN personnel and controlling access to and protecting the outer perimeter of UN facilities. An agreement was being negotiated with the United States concerning protection by the multinational force of the UN presence in Iraq. The United Nations and the United States exchanged letters recording their mutual understanding of the security framework applicable in respect of UNAMI. The United Nations continued to support efforts by the multinational force to encourage Member States to provide troops or to make financial contributions for the creation of a UN protection force in Iraq (see p. 356). An initial group of protection coordination officers were recruited and deployed to Iraq as part of an integrated UN security structure. They were undergoing final equipping, training and technical certification for duty in Iraq. A UN guard unit of 135 military personnel had been provided by a Member State. That unit would control access to and conduct patrols within UNAMI facilities. The United Nations would continue to rely on the multinational force and Member States for air transport to and from Baghdad, and within Iraq, until it had the capability to resume its own flight operations.

The Special Representative and his political team continued to forge contacts with the Interim Government, political and religious leaders, public figures and representatives of civil society. The Special Representative and UNAMI closely followed developments in and around Fallujah and met with key officials of the Interim Government and representatives of the diplomatic community and of the multinational force to obtain a comprehensive understanding of the situation. The Special Representative engaged as wide a section of the Iraqi political spectrum as possible on how to advance the political process and to establish a conducive environment for the planned elections.

The Independent Electoral Commission had established itself as a credible institution and was carrying out its tasks in an effective manner. UNAMI guidance during the formative phase of institution-building was critical, as was the international expertise provided through Member States and other electoral organizations. An electoral cluster was established under the United Nations Development Group Iraq Trust Fund within the International Reconstruction Fund Facility for Iraq. The cluster encompassed all support activities to the Independent Electoral Commission for the preparation, administration and organization of the elections of January 2005. It also provided indirect electoral activities such as enhancement of women's participation, national observation, media development, political entity development and support to vulnerable groups. To date the cluster had received voluntary contributions of $110 million. Concurrently with the growth of the electoral administration, international technical assistance coordinated by UNAMI was consolidated. Training of election staff was a high priority for UNAMI, which also assisted in the development of the electoral regulations. Voter registration started on 1 November and was to continue until 15 December. The period of certification of political entities and coalitions and the nomination of candidates also began on 1 November. As at 29 November, 240 entity certification applications had been received, 228 of which received certification. Increasing emphasis was being placed on the public information programme to ensure that the public was informed about the electoral process. With the exception of Al Anbar province, all election materials needed for that stage of the election process had reached their destination.

Humanitarian, reconstruction and development activities remained constrained by the security situation and the resulting limitation on the number of staff deployed inside Iraq. Kidnappings and murders of national and international aid personnel prompted more international agencies to cease operation in November. Despite the fragile security environment, the United Nations was able to focus on a broad range of capacity-building activities and to continue reconstruction and rehabilitation efforts throughout Iraq, in partnership with other organizations. The donor committee of the International Reconstruction Fund Facility for Iraq held its third meeting (Tokyo, Japan, 13-14 October), at which donors were updated on World Bank and United Nations Development Group Trust Fund activities. Over $600 million had been pledged so far, of which $447 million had been received. At the meeting, the Interim Government presented the national development strategy for Iraq, which was formulated with UN assistance.

The UNAMI Public Information Unit worked on creating a better public understanding of the UN mandate in support of the transitional political process in Iraq and highlighted UN efforts aimed at support for reconstruction and humanitarian activities. It also addressed misconceptions about the United Nations through a coherent media policy.

The Secretary-General observed that credible and inclusive elections were the keystone for achieving legitimacy and stability in Iraq, and, as such, they would be the foundation for the next chapter in Iraq's history. If elections were to have an optimal impact, there was a need for sustained political efforts aimed at making the transition as inclusive, participatory and transparent as possible. Iraqis had to be reassured that the transition process was on track, enabling them to see light at the end of the tunnel. That required simultaneous progress in three mutually reinforcing areas: the security, political and economic areas, which should be addressed at the same time with equal attention. For its part, the United Nations, despite its limited presence, was determined to do its utmost to implement the mandate entrusted to it under resolution 1546(2004).

In a later report [S/2005/141 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General said that the month of December 2004 was critical for making final preparations for the January 2005 elections. On 15 December, the Fijian guard unit assumed from the multinational force the responsibility for inner ring protection of UN facilities within the Baghdad international zone. On 29 December, a bilateral agreement was concluded with the United States to obtain catering services, facility construction and renovation, vehicle maintenance, fuel supply, medical and military defence materials, training areas and welfare and recreation facilities for UN staff in Baghdad.

Security Council consideration (December). On 13 December [meeting 5099], the Council was briefed on the situation in Iraq by the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Iraq and by the United States representative.

The Special Representative said that the forthcoming elections represented a test of the new political order and of the transition process and, while there was a widespread desire among Iraqis to participate in them, some important segments of the population still felt alienated or excluded from the political transition. The desire to find political solutions to Iraq's political problems was by and large shared by all Iraqis, with the exception of a few irreconcilable extremists. The United Nations had actively continued to engage in dialogue those Iraqis outside the political mainstream to understand their needs and aspirations and encourage them to enter the political process. Equally, the Interim Government had made efforts to reach out to alienated elements and was continuing to do so.

The Special Representative said that he was optimistic that the Interim Government and the people of Iraq were willing and able to successfully negotiate the transition to a united democratic and prosperous Iraq. In support of that effort, the Paris Club (an informal group of official creditors) had decided to significantly reduce the country's external debt burden, and hoped that other creditors nations would do likewise.

The United States representative, updating the Council on the situation in Iraq on behalf of the multinational force, summarized a report provided to the Council on that same day [S/2004/967] and said that the security situation in Iraq remained difficult. The multinational force continued to work alongside their Iraqi counterparts to combat terrorism, destroy weapons that threatened Iraq's stability, gather intelligence and wage combat operations against insurgents and terrorists. It was helping to build that capability through the recruiting, training, equipping and mentoring of the Iraqi security forces. Those forces had almost tripled since the last reporting period and currently numbered some 116,240 people. While those trends were positive, much work remained before Iraq's forces could take full responsibility for the country's security. In the absence of a distinct entity to provide security for UN personnel in Iraq, United States troops had undertaken that task. He urged the United Nations to put additional personnel on the ground, as UN support was essential to the future of Iraq, and especially to the success of the elections.

UN Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission and IAEA activities

UNMOVIC

By an 8 January letter [S/2004/28], the Secretary-General proposed to the Security Council that Anatoliy Scherba (Ukraine) be appointed to the UNMOVIC College of Commissioners, replacing Kostyantyn Gryshchenko (Ukraine). On 13 January [S/2004/29], the Council agreed with the Secretary-General's proposal.

Reports of UNMOVIC (February, May, August, November). As called for in Security Council resolution 1284(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 230], UNMOVIC submitted to the Council, through the Secretary-General, four quarterly reports on its activities. Throughout the year, the Executive Chairman continued his practice of providing monthly briefings to the Council President and kept the Secretary-General informed about UNMOVIC's activities. UNMOVIC staff training courses were held throughout the year.

The February report [S/2004/160] said that, during the period from 1 December 2003 to 29 February 2004, no official information was available to UNMOVIC on either the work or the results of the investigations of the United States-led Iraq Survey Group in Iraq, nor had the Survey Group requested any information from UNMOVIC. However, note had been made of the testimony of David Kay, the former head of the Survey Group, before the Armed Services Committee of the United States Senate on 28 January, in which he said, among other things, that it was unlikely that there were large stockpiles of chemical and biological weapons in Iraq. UNMOVIC continued to assess material in the public domain on issues pertaining to Iraq's weapons of mass destruction (WMDs) and to compare it with what was known by UNMOVIC about Iraq's various weapons programmes. A summary of known UNMOVIC findings with respect to Iraq's chemical and biological munitions and a report on UNMOVIC's network of laboratories were appended to the report.

UNMOVIC continued the work on draft modifications to the monitoring and verification plan for Iraq and its annexes, approved by the Council in resolution 715(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 194], including the legal framework, operating procedures and practical arrangements regarding monitoring and verification. The work also aimed to take account of the changed circumstances on the ground in Iraq following the 2003 war. Another major effort was the compilation of a compendium on the nature and extent of Iraq's past proscribed weapons and programmes. The compendium looked at the origins of the programmes, including the political and security environment that led to their establishment. The College of Commissioners recognized that, while an early discussion of the future role of UNMOVIC by the Council would be desirable, the time frame for such a discussion was a matter for the Council.

In the May report [S/2004/435] covering the period from 1 March to 31 May, UNMOVIC indicated that its experts investigated, with the IAEA Iraq Nuclear Verification Office, the discovery of items from Iraq at a scrap yard in the Netherlands. The team of experts confirmed that a missile engine salvaged from the scrap metal process was one from an SA-2 missile that had been tagged by UN inspectors in the past and had not been declared as having been fired. Despite the cooperation of the Government of the Netherlands and the scrapyard company concerned, it was not possible to determine how many other engines and other material previously subject to monitoring in Iraq might have passed through that scrapyard or others. UNMOVIC was aware from comparative analysis of satellite imagery that a number of sites previously known to have contained equipment and materials subject to monitoring had been either cleaned out or destroyed. It was not known whether such equipment and materials were still at the sites during the time of coalition action in March and April 2003. However, it was possible that some of the materials might have been removed from Iraq by looters of those sites and sold as scrap. In the meantime, UNMOVIC continued to compile its compendium of proscribed weapons and programmes, focusing on the period from 1999 to 2002 when inspectors were absent from the country, and during which time Iraq utilized a sophisticated procurement network for the acquisition of foreign materials, equipment and technology. According to UNMOVIC, from 1999 to 2002 Iraq produced a variety of dual-use biological and chemical items and materials, but there was no evidence that they were used for proscribed chemical or biological weapon purposes. Although some of the goods might have been acquired by Iraq outside the framework of the Security Council mechanisms, most of them were later declared by Iraq to UNMOVIC in its semi-annual monitoring declarations. However, in several instances Iraq provided misleading declarations regarding the suppliers, sources of the items and materials and procurement channels. The College of Commissioners, noting that UNMOVIC's mandate to verify the disarmament of Iraq and to conduct monitoring and verification was still in place, underlined that UNMOVIC's priority was to maintain its readiness to resume operations in Iraq until the Council revisited the mandate, as set out in resolution 1483(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 338].

In the August report [S/2004/693], covering the period from 1 June to 31 August, UNMOVIC said that it continued to investigate the discovery of items exported from Iraq as scrap metal. At the beginning of June, Commission experts visited a number of trading companies in Jordan dealing in the export of scrap metal from Iraq to Jordan. A number of items relevant to the UNMOVIC mandate were observed at the scrap yards, including 20 SA-2 missile engines. The scrap company managers estimated that a total of 130,000 tons of Iraqi scrap metal had passed through Jordan's largest free trade zone, though that amount was only a small part of all scrap materials exported from Iraq to the other neighbouring countries and further to Europe, North Africa and Asia. Other high-quality industrial production equipment from facilities all over Iraq had been purchased by unnamed contractors at low cost, dismantled and moved out of the country. According to some of the merchants, the authorities in Iraq had overall control of the scrap export business. A team of UNMOVIC and IAEA experts also visited a scrap yard in Turkey in July, though no items of relevance were found there. With the agreement of the relevant Member States, UNMOVIC intended to observe the destruction of the SA-2 missile engines located in Jordan and the Netherlands together with other tagged and dual-use equipment that had been under monitoring in Iraq. Using commercially available satellite imagery, UNMOVIC continued to assess the status of sites subjected to monitoring that were damaged during the war and in some cases completely razed. The systematic removal of items subject to monitoring affected UNMOVIC's ability to maintain an accurate and up-to-date assessment of Iraq's capabilities.

Another issue under evaluation was the examination of information available on past storage, handling and deployment of chemical and biological munitions by Iraq, a summary of which was appended to the report. In the publicly released testimony of the head of the United States-led Iraq Survey Group in March, mention was made of the uncovering of a very robust Iraqi programme for delivery systems that had not been reported to the United Nations. While not much specific detail was provided in the statement by the Survey Group, UNMOVIC considered it important to set out what it knew about those programmes and their relationship to the delivery of chemical and/or biological warfare agents. A short summary of UNMOVIC's findings on those issues was also appended to the report.

The November report [S/2004/924], covering the period from 1 September to 30 November, indicated that the comprehensive report of Charles Duelfer, the Special Adviser to the United States Director of Central Intelligence for Iraq's Weapons of Mass Destruction, was made public on 6 October. Mr. Duelfer and a team from the Iraq Survey Group visited UNMOVIC on 8 October to present their findings, the scope of their work and the methodology used, while acknowledging that extensive documentation still had to be analysed. UNMOVIC was studying the report and was comparing its own knowledge and findings with those of the Survey Group. Initial comments on specific findings of the report were appended to the report.

During the period under review, UNMOVIC's experts continued to use commercial satellite imagery to assess the status of sites subject to monitoring, particularly the Muthanna State Establishment and Al Qaa Qaa State Establishment, given their involvement in Iraq's past weapons programmes, their size and inventory of WMD-related material. The Muthanna State Establishment was Iraq's prime chemical weapon research, production and storage facility. As of May 2004, no changes at the area of the two sealed bunkers were observed; however, analysis of imagery revealed that some other structures had been demolished and removed, together with other equipment which, although rendered harmless, was not fully destroyed in the 1990s. The report of the Iraq Survey Group stated that all sealed structures at the site had been breached and some equipment and materials removed. Stockpiles of chemical munitions were still stored in the bunkers, which tested positive for chemical weapon agents. In addition, the extent of looting made it impossible to determine whether the Iraqi Government removed equipment after 1998, or after March 2003. However, UNMOVIC responded that, in December 2002, it had inspected the bunker area of the facility and found all sealed structures intact and guarded by Iraqi security. If that structure had actually been breached, as stated by the Iraq Survey Group in its report, there could no longer be any certainty about whether all its contents were intact.

The other site, the Al Qaa Qaa State Establishment, was one of the major weapons-related industrial complexes in Iraq. As of November 2004, the fate of about 800 pieces of declared chemical equipment known to have been at the site was uncertain. Analysis of satellite imagery of November 2003 revealed that all buildings at the chemical raw materials stores at the site had been destroyed, while others appeared to have war damage. With the Jordanian Government's support, a number of SA-2 engines and other missiles and chemical-related dual-use items were destroyed in Jordan in August and October, in the presence of an UNMOVIC inspector. Late in November, Dutch authorities destroyed, also in the presence of an UNMOVIC inspector, the 22 SA-2 missile engines found in a Rotterdam scrap yard.

Also in November, UNMOVIC convened a panel of external technical experts to assist in a technical review of the provisions concerning biological matters and the associated annex (annex III) of the monitoring and verification plan approved by Council resolution 715(1991). The panel made specific recommendations on items covered by the plan, in the light of UN monitoring and verification experience and bio-technical advances. Similar review processes would be conducted for the chemical and missile provisions and related annexes. Once the whole process was completed, the revised annexes would be submitted to the Council for information. UNMOVIC retained a core staff of nine local nationals in Baghdad who maintained the existing offices, laboratories and other equipment. The Cyprus Field Office continued to store and maintain UNMOVIC inspection and monitoring equipment recovered from Iraq.

IAEA

IAEA reports (April and October). In accordance with Security Council resolution 1051 (1996) [YUN 1996, p. 218], IAEA submitted to the Council, through the Secretary-General, two consolidated six-monthly reports, on 11 April [S/2004/285] and 1 October [S/2004/786], on the Agency's verification activities in Iraq.

In April, IAEA said that, since 17 March 2003, it had not been in a position to implement its mandate in Iraq under Council resolution 687 (1991) [YUN 1991, p. 172] and related resolutions. It was IAEA's understanding that its obligations pursuant to those resolutions remained valid unless and until the Council decided otherwise. During the period under review, IAEA continued to consolidate and further analyse information collected and activities implemented since 1991, so as to identify lessons learned and decide whether and to what extent its plan for resuming verification activities needed to be adapted in the light of those lessons and the changing situation in Iraq. The information obtained was derived principally from open sources and commercial satellite imagery of locations of interest to IAEA for potential future verification in Iraq. IAEA was concerned about the implications of the results of its review of satellite imagery, especially with respect to sites known to have contained items subject to monitoring under the monitoring and verification plan. The imagery showed that there had been extensive removal of equipment and, in some instances, of entire buildings. In addition, large quantities of scrap, some of it contaminated, had been transferred out of Iraq, from IAEA-monitored sites. It was not clear whether the removal of those items was the result of looting in the aftermath of the 2003 war in Iraq, or part of systematic efforts to rehabilitate some of the locations. In any event, those activities might have a significant impact on IAEA's continuity of knowledge of Iraq's remaining nuclear-related capabilities, and raised concern with regard to the proliferation risk associated with dual-use material and equipment disappearing to unknown destinations. IAEA remained ready, subject to Council guidance, to resume its mandated verification activities in Iraq. In the meantime, Member States were expected to provide any information relevant to prohibited programmes in Iraq or aspects of the IAEA mandate, with a view to enabling IAEA to fulfil its responsibilities.

In October, IAEA reported that, on 6 July, it was informed by the United States of the removal and transfer to the United States, with the consent of the Interim Iraqi Government, of nuclear material (see below). Pursuant to Iraq's safeguards agreement with IAEA, on 3 and 4 August, IAEA carried out its annual physical inventory verification of the remaining 550 tons of nuclear material in Iraq located at the location C nuclear material storage facility and verified the presence of the nuclear material subject to safeguards. Following the transfer of responsibility and authority for governing Iraq to the Interim Government on 30 June 2004, the Iraqi Minister of Science and Technology visited IAEA in July and discussed, among other issues, matters related to the implementation of relevant Council resolutions. In September, Iraq requested IAEA assistance with the sale of the remaining nuclear material at Tuwaitha (with the exception of a small quantity to be retained for research purposes), the dismantling and decontamination of former nuclear facilities, and the resumption of assistance under a number of technical cooperation projects approved by the Sanctions Committee for Iraq, but which were put on hold following the suspension of inspections in December 1998. IAEA was assessing the possibility of providing such assistance.

IAEA communications. On 6 July [S/2004/538], IAEA notified the Security Council President, through the Secretary-General, that it had been advised by the United States, due to security concerns, of the transfer on 23 June to the United States of 1.8 tons of uranium enriched to 2.6 per cent in uranium-235, 3 kilograms of uranium of various low enrichments and some 1,000 highly radioactive sources, most of which had been stored at location C. The nuclear material that remained at location C was mostly natural uranium, some depleted uranium and some low enriched uranium waste.

On 25 October [S/2004/831], IAEA informed the Council, through the Secretary-General, that it had been advised on 10 October by the General Director of the Planning and Following Up Directorate of the Iraqi Ministry of Science and Technology of the loss, after 9 April 2003, through theft and looting, of high explosives subject to IAEA monitoring. On 15 October, IAEA informed the multinational force about the matter.

Iraq-Kuwait

Oil-for-food programme: High-level Independent Inquiry Committee

The oil-for-food programme, established by Security Council resolution 986(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475] authorizing the sale of Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products as a temporary measure to finance humanitarian assistance, thereby alleviating the adverse consequences of the sanctions regime imposed by the Council, was phased out on 21 November 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 362].

On 19 March 2004, the Secretary-General informed the Council President of his intention to establish an independent, high-level inquiry concerning matters arising from public news reports and commentaries that had called into question the administration and management of the programme, including allegations of fraud and corruption. On 26 March, he communicated to the Council President the terms of reference of the independent inquiry, which were to determine: whether UN procedures for the processing and approving of contracts under the programme, the monitoring of the sale and delivery of petroleum and petroleum products and the purchase of and delivery of humanitarian goods had been violated; whether any UN officials, personnel, agents or contractors had engaged in any illicit or corrupt activities in the carrying out of their respective roles in relation to the programme; and whether the accounts of the programme were in order and were maintained in accordance with UN Financial Regulations and Rules.

The Secretary-General requested the UN Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) to terminate the inquiry it had commenced into those allegations and to hand over the documents and other materials it had collected in connection with its investigation.

The independent inquiry was expected to submit to the Secretary-General within three months a report on the status of its work. The inquiry's final report would be made available to the public. The Secretary-General undertook, based on the findings of the report, to take appropriate action within his authority in regard to individuals or entities found in violation of UN rules of procedure, or having engaged in abusive, illicit or corrupt activities.

On 21 April, the Secretary-General announced the formation of the Independent Inquiry Committee (IIC) to look into the oil-for-food programme, headed by Paul A. Volcker, former Chairman of the Board of Governors of the United States Federal Reserve System, and comprising Justice Richard Goldstone (South Africa) and Mark Pieth (Switzerland). He also indicated that the panel would have the authority to access all relevant UN records and information and interview relevant UN officials and personnel. He would employ his authority so that the United Nations privileges and immunities would not impede efforts to hold accountable those who had engaged in unacceptable conduct.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 April [meeting 4946], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1538(2004). The draft [S/2004/311] was submitted by France, Germany, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Expressing the desire to see a full and fair investigation of efforts by the former Government of Iraq, including through bribery, kickbacks, surcharges on oil sales and illicit payments in regard to purchases of humanitarian goods, to evade the provisions of resolution 661(1990) of 6 August 1990 and subsequent relevant resolutions,

Concerned by public news reports and commentaries that have called into question the administration and management of the oil-for-food programme (hereinafter "the Programme") established pursuant to resolution 986(1995) of 14 April 1995 and subsequent relevant resolutions, including allegations of fraud and corruption,

Affirming that any illicit activity by United Nations officials, personnel and agents, as well as contractors, including entities that have entered into contracts under the Programme, is unacceptable,

Emphasizing the importance of full cooperation with the independent high-level inquiry by all United Nations officials and personnel, the Coalition Provisional Authority, Iraq and all other Member States,

Affirming the letter of its President of 31 March 2004 welcoming the decision of the Secretary-General to create an independent high-level inquiry to investigate the administration and management of the Programme, and taking note of the details relating to its organization and terms of reference,

1. Welcomes the appointment of the independent high-level inquiry;
2. Calls upon the Coalition Provisional Authority, Iraq and all other Member States, including their national regulatory authorities, to cooperate fully by all appropriate means with the inquiry;
3. Looks forward to receiving the final report of the inquiry;
4. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

IIC status report and first briefing paper

On 9 August, the Independent Inquiry Committee submitted a status report describing the initiation and progress of its investigation (www.iic-offp.org).

The inquiry was to be conducted from three office locations—New York, Paris and Baghdad, by line staff organized into a number of investigation teams, each of which included legal, investigative, accounting and technology professionals, with a common background in the fraud and corruption investigations involving multiple jurisdictions. IIC conducted investigative missions in Iraq, Europe and the Middle East. Those Member States that had been approached by IIC had offered to cooperate with the inquiry. IIC had identified and started interviewing individuals with responsibility for establishing and operating the various aspects of the programme on behalf of the UN and its related agencies, and contractors involved with the programme. The Committee initiated methodical identification, securing and screening of all UN programme documents and financial records. It also met with representatives from a number of national governmental investigative authorities concerned about conduct that might have occurred within their countries. IIC would cooperate with those additional inquiries to the extent consistent with maintaining the integrity of its own investigation.

In a 21 October briefing paper, reviewing the status of the investigation into the oil-for-food programme, IIC reported that it had made substantial progress towards the goal of assessing the allegations of maladministration and corruption. The Committee and its staff had conducted scores of witness interviews in Europe, the United States, Iraq and elsewhere in the Middle East. They were also reviewing UN records and had obtained additional information in Iraq. The briefing paper also detailed facts about oil sales and the purchase of humanitarian goods and oil spare parts, as well as programme revenue and expenditures.

POWs, Kuwaiti property and missing persons

Reports of Secretary-General (April, August, December). Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1284(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 230], the Secretary-General submitted reports in April [S/2004/301], August [S/2004/645] and December [S/2004/961] on compliance by Iraq with its obligations regarding the repatriation or return of all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals or their remains, and on the return of all Kuwaiti property, including archives, seized by Iraq during its occupation of Kuwait, which began in August 1990 [YUN 1990, p. 189]. The High-level Coordinator for compliance by Iraq with its obligations regarding the return of Kuwaiti nationals and property, Yuri M. Vorontsov (Russian Federation), regularly briefed the Security Council throughout the year.

In April, the Secretary-General observed that progress had been made in closing the files of the Kuwaiti prisoners of war and third-country nationals since his December 2003 report [YUN 2003, p. 357]. That was evidence of a steady movement forward and a result of cooperation among the members of the Tripartite Commission (France, Iraq, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, United Kingdom, United States), established in 1991 under the auspices of the International Committee of the Red Cross. From the end of 1998 to the end of 2002, Iraq did not participate in the Commission's work. In December 2002, for the first time in four years, Iraq participated on the sidelines of the Commission's meeting. The Secretary-General reiterated his strong condemnation of the execution of Kuwaiti and third-country nationals by the previous Iraqi regime, as detailed in his December 2003 report, and stressed that the perpetrators of those crimes should be brought to justice. The extension by the Council on 18 December 2003 [ibid.] of the Coordinator's mandate should contribute to bringing to a closure the remaining humanitarian issues of concern to the people of Kuwait. Mr. Vorontsov would visit Baghdad to establish contacts with the new Iraqi authorities and would continue to confer with CPA representatives in order to fulfil his mandate.

In August, the Secretary-General said that the number of resolved cases of persons still unaccounted for had increased. Given that some 340 mortal remains had already been brought to Kuwait, their positive identification would mean that in the near future about one half of the Kuwaiti and third-country prisoners would have found their final resting place. As at 12 August, not a single person from the initial list of 605 Kuwaiti and third-country nationals had been found alive. The Secretary-General welcomed the establishment of contact between the High-level Coordinator and the Iraqi Interim Government, and took note of the new Iraqi authorities' determination to assist Mr. Vorontsov in resolving remaining humanitarian issues.

In December, the Secretary-General said that the remains of Kuwaiti and third-country nationals continued to be repatriated to Kuwait and identified. Progress in the discovery and identification of mortal remains was evidence of the enhanced cooperation between the Tripartite Commission and its Technical Subcommittee, established in 1994 to expedite the search for all persons for whom inquiry files had been opened. In November, the Interim Government returned to Kuwait property seized by the previous Iraqi regime. That important step should trigger further efforts on the part of the new Iraqi authorities in finding other stolen items, foremost among them the Kuwaiti national archives.

UN Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

The United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM), established by Security Council resolution 687(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 172], discharged its functions until 6 October 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 358] in accordance with its terms of reference, as expanded by resolution 806(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 406].

Financing

On 18 June [meeting 91], the General Assembly considered the Secretary-General's performance reports on UNIKOM's budget for the period from 1 July 2002 to 30 June 2003 [A/58/630], and the overview of the financing of UN peacekeeping operations: budget performance for the period from 1 July 2002 to 30 June 2003 and budget for the period from 1 July 2004 to 30 June 2005 [A/58/705], together with the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) on the financial performance report of UNIKOM for the period from 1 July 2002 to 30 June 2003 [A/58/759 & Add.12].

On the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/58/585/Add.1], the Assembly adopted resolution 58/304 without vote [agenda item 143 (a)].

Financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

UN Compensation Commission and Fund

The United Nations Compensation Commission (UNCC), established in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 195] for the resolution and payment of claims against Iraq for losses and damage resulting from its 1990 invasion and occupation of Kuwait [YUN 1990, p. 189], continued in 2004 to expedite the prompt settlement of claims through the United Nations Compensation Fund, which was established at the same time as the Commission.

Governing Council. The Commission's Governing Council held four sessions in Geneva during the year—the fifty-first (9-11 March) [S/2004/213], the fifty-second (29 June-2 July) [S/2004/547], the fifty-third (21-23 September) [S/2004/773] and the fifty-fourth (7-9 December) [S/2004/977]—at which it considered the reports and recommendations of the Panels of Commissioners appointed to review specific instalments of various categories of claims. The Governing Council also acted on the Executive Secretary's report submitted at each session, which, in addition to providing a summary of the previous period's activities, covered the processing, withdrawal and payment of claims.

Other matters considered by the Council during the year included the processing and payment of claims, requests for late filing of claims, contributions to the Compensation Fund and arrangements for ensuring that payments were made into the Fund.
