Annex

Letter dated 22 January 2007 from the Secretary-General and High Representative for the Common Foreign and Security Policy of the European Union to the Secretary-General of the United Nations

In accordance with the provisions of Security Council resolution 1671 (2006), I attach a report on the European Union operation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo following its successful conclusion. The report covers the period from 27 April 2006 to the end of the operation on 30 November 2006 and the subsequent redeployment of the force. I would be grateful if you would transmit this report to the President of the Security Council.

(Signed) Javier Solana

Enclosure

Report of the Secretary-General and High Representative for the Common Foreign and Security Policy of the European Union on the European Union operation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo

I. Introduction

1. In resolution 1671 (2006) the Security Council requested the European Union to report to it on the implementation of the mandate of the EU operation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. This report covers the period from the adoption of Council Joint Action 2006/319/CFSP on 27 April to the successful conclusion of the operation on 30 November 2006 and subsequent redeployment of the force.

II. Background

2. On 27 December 2005 the United Nations requested the European Union to support its mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) by providing a visible and credible force, that could enhance MONUC quick reaction capabilities in the Democratic Republic of the Congo during and immediately after the electoral process. On 23 March the Council of the European Union agreed to provide assistance to MONUC in addressing situations that might threaten the electoral process and that were beyond the mission's capabilities.

3. In a letter dated 28 March, the European Union conveyed to the Secretary-General its agreement to provide support to MONUC. Following the adoption of resolution 1671 (2006), the Council of the European Union adopted Joint Action 2006/319/CFSP on 27 April for the conduct of an EU military operation. The objective of the military operation was to contribute to stability during the electoral process by making available a visible advance element and an over-the-horizon on-call force to provide reassurance and deterrence, indirectly through support to the Forces armées de la République démocratique du Congo and the Congolese police; and directly through a decision to employ force in support of MONUC if requested by the United Nations.

III. Political context

4. During the period of deployment of the EU military operation and the reinforcement of the EU Kinshasa Police Mission, the first democratic and transparent Congolese elections in more than 40 years were successfully concluded. Key events remained within the electoral calendar, and the first round of elections took place on 30 July in a relatively calm security environment.

5. Following the announcement of the results of the first round of presidential elections, there was a rise in tension and a number of violent incidents in Kinshasa from 20 to 22 August. A strong and immediate international reaction by, inter alia, the United Nations, the European Union and South Africa prevented further escalation, in tandem with a rapid and robust response by MONUC and the European force (EUFOR).

6. Subsequently all parties agreed on measures to calm the situation in Kinshasa, in which MONUC, EUFOR and the EU Police Mission were actively engaged. The final round of elections was held as foreseen on 29 October and provisional results were made public on 16 November. On 27 November the Supreme Court confirmed the results of the elections, leading to the inauguration of President Kabila on 6 December.

7. Throughout this process, at the political level a significant contributory factor to the ability of EUFOR to support the election process has been the excellent support received from the Congolese authorities, Gabon, and the Republic of the Congo. Sustained political engagement by the United Nations and the European Union (including by the EU Special Representative) has played a key role in facilitating these relationships, contributing thereby to a coherent politico-military response to security threats.

IV. European Union operation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo

8. The EU military operation in support of MONUC has focused on the provision of a credible presence in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, providing reassurance to the population of the country by the deterrence of potential “spoilers” to the election process. This presence, based as a minimum on the force headquarters and a force capable of immediate reaction in Kinshasa, could be readily reinforced by force elements from over the horizon in Gabon as necessary.

9. During the preparation phase, close coordination and cooperation with the United Nations was essential in defining the area of operation, and potential interventions and tasks, together with establishing the requirement for an over-the-horizon force in Gabon. Subsequent early insertion of enabling capabilities into Gabon by operation headquarters, combined with coordination of multiple air and sea movements by the EU Movement Control Cell, ensured a smooth deployment. This in turn allowed full operational capability to be achieved prior to the start of the election process as prescribed in the planning process.

10. During the mission execution phase, the deterrent effect of EUFOR presence in the Democratic Republic of the Congo was a significant factor in limiting the number of incidents. Reinforcement by additional force elements from the over-the-horizon component in Gabon was undertaken on a number of occasions when the security situation on the ground merited an increase in deterrent effect. In addition, a number of deployment operations to the geographically agreed points of application in the Democratic Republic of the Congo were undertaken, both to act as rehearsals for potential situation-driven deployments and also to increase the geographic spread of the force’s deterrent effect.

11. The incident with the greatest destabilizing potential occurred on 21 August 2006 with an attack on the residence of the Vice-President, Jean-Pierre Bemba. EUFOR intervention, in close cooperation with MONUC, was deemed to have been decisive in containing the potential spread of violence at a particularly sensitive moment in the election process. This in turn proved to have wider effect for EUFOR which, by its intervention, confirmed its position of neutrality in the eyes of the Congolese population at large and thus reinforced its credibility.

12. The military operation terminated and the redeployment phase commenced as foreseen on 30 November with the expiry of the United Nations mandate. The security situation through the period of redeployment has remained calm, the majority of force elements returning to their respective bases by the end of 2006.

13. Throughout the redeployment and all preceding phases, the degree of cooperation with a wide variety of non-EU actors has been high and this has been particularly noticeable with regard to relations with MONUC in theatre. The establishment of liaison links between the two forces allowed for the development of strong mutual understanding which was essential in maintaining a seamless presence, adapted to the security situation on the ground, and contributing to a successful operation. A further element contributing to success has been transparency and information-sharing with African partners; the African Union, the Southern African Development Community and the ECCAS were invited to deploy liaison officers to facilitate this process.

V. Police Mission and security sector reform mission activity

14. Since 30 June 2006, and within the same time frame set for the EU military operation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the EU Police Mission in Kinshasa has been reinforced with a 28-strong police coordination element in support of the Kinshasa crowd-control units. This was to ensure an enhanced and coordinated response of the Congolese police in Kinshasa in case of disturbances during the electoral process. The EU police coordination support element has operated in close cooperation with the EU military operation and MONUC, notably sharing security-related information on a daily basis. It has also significantly contributed to supporting the security arrangements in the capital, particularly during a period of heightened tension in August.

15. In December, the Council of the European Union agreed to an extension of the coordination support element of the EU Police Mission until June 2007. This will enable the Mission to continue to provide support to the Congolese police in the capital until the completion of the transition process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

16. During the deployment of the military operation, the EU Mission of Assistance for Security Sector Reform has continued to provide advice and technical assistance to the Congolese authorities on security sector reform, and there has been further integration of combatants from former armed factions. In the coming months, a new focus will be placed by that Mission on the reconstruction of the Congolese army. Close cooperation with MONUC will remain essential to maximize the effects of reform on the ground. More broadly the European Union is prepared to facilitate overall coordination of security sector reform efforts undertaken by the international community in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

VI. Conclusion

17. In responding to the United Nations request under resolution 1671 (2006), EUFOR has made a significant contribution to the successful outcome of the election process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and wider stability within the region, working closely with MONUC and the Congolese authorities. The combination of the European Union political role (including through the EU Special Representative) in conjunction with its military, police and security sector reform instruments has been orchestrated coherently and to great effect. This operation has further demonstrated the strength of the European Union as a crisis management actor, the level of EU engagement in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and the effectiveness of such interventions in conjunction with the United Nations and in support of international partners under the European security and defence policy.

18. The European Union will continue to monitor the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and remains committed to supporting the transition process, including through the EU Mission for Security Sector Reform and the EU Police Mission in Kinshasa.
