"The system agenda for progress should thus focus on: ... promoting a system-wide learning culture rooted in shared values and common objectives for all staff of the UN system. The culture building effort must focus on staff as they enter the international civil service, joining not only one organization but also an integrated system of organizations. It should focus on staff as they assume management responsibilities and hence a greater role in steering the UN organizations towards One United Nations. And it should engage senior management, charged with providing leadership, momentum and policy guidance for these efforts".

From the Chief Executives Board for Coordination publication One United Nations: catalyst for progress and change.

I. Introduction

1. The present report is the third report of the United Nations System Staff College since 1 January 2002, when the College became a distinct institution within the United Nations system. The two previous reports were submitted to the General Assembly in accordance with Assembly resolution 55/207 and 55/278. The present report is submitted to the Economic and Social Council rather than to the Assembly in accordance with Assembly resolution 60/214 (para. 8).

2. The present report covers the two years that have elapsed since the previous report, namely the period from 1 July 2005 to 30 June 2007.

II. Historical background

3. The establishment of a staff college to serve the United Nations system was a direct response to the need to strengthen the coherence and effectiveness of the international civil service. The college began operations as a project entrusted to the International Training Centre (ITC) of the International Labour Organization (ILO) in 1996.

4. Towards the end of the project (August 2000), an independent evaluation was carried out. The evaluation recommended the establishment of a fully fledged United Nations staff college and drafted the elements of a statute for it. In December 2000, the General Assembly authorized the establishment of the United Nations System Staff College and extended the staff college project by one year in order to allow for a smooth transition to its new status.

5. In July 2001, the General Assembly, in its resolution 55/278, formally approved the statute of the new United Nations System Staff College. The Board of Governors of the College held its first session in Geneva in November 2001 and the College began operations as a distinct institution within the United Nations system on 1 January 2002.

III. Governance

6.   In July 2005, the Board of Governors of the College reiterated that it was critical for the College to be truly integrated into the United Nations system, with a clear sense of its niche, firmly oriented towards supporting United Nations reform and change.

7.   At its December 2005 meeting, the Board launched a process of consultations to develop a core curriculum for the College which was subsequently endorsed by the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination at its meetings of the High Level Committee on Management and the High Level Committee on Programmes in February 2006.

8.   Following the arrival in May 2006 of the new Director of the College, a forward-looking business plan for the College for the period 2006-2009 was drafted. The plan was presented to and endorsed by the Expert Technical Review Panel in July 2006 and by the Board of Governors of the College in September 2006.

9.   In September 2006, the same business plan was presented to a combined session of the High Level Committee on Management and the High Level Committee on Programmes for endorsement. During that session, the Director of the College reiterated the College's determination to focus on its core mandate. Both committees endorsed the business plan and called on the organizations of the United Nations system to further strengthen their involvement in the College's work.

10.   The College budget for 2007 was the first budget of the College presented as a results-based budget. It was approved by the Board of Governors of the College in December 2006. The College is currently coming to the end of its first year of activity since the adoption of the business plan.

IV. College objectives

11.   The main objectives of the College are set out in article II of its statute:[1]

1.   The Staff College shall serve as a distinct, system-wide, knowledge-management and learning institution, with a view to fostering a cohesive management culture across the United Nations system. It shall provide strategic leadership and management development for international civil servants with a view to strengthening collaboration within the system in areas of common organizational responsibility; increasing operational effectiveness; enhancing cooperation with States Members and observers of the United Nations, the specialized agencies, regional organizations, non-governmental organizations and civil society; and developing a more cohesive, system-wide, management culture.

2.   The Staff College shall carry out its activities on the basis of the needs expressed by the agencies of the United Nations system and in close cooperation with training and learning institutes and similar bodies within the United Nations system. It may also collaborate with relevant entities outside the system.

[1] General Assembly resolution 55/278, annex.

12.   In pursuit of its objectives, and in accordance with its new business plan, the College has decided to engage in programmes that are:

   (a)   Strategic in their nature;

   (b)   Achievable in a short period of time;

   (c)   Attractive to donors;

   (d)   Able to expand and contract, according to client needs;

   (e)   Unique, adding value to other training offered within the United Nations system.

V.   Programmes reorganization

13.   Since 2002, the College has made its mark in relation to some key programmes: United Nations training, learning and networking; resident coordinator and United Nations Country Team learning; and early warning and preventive measures.

14.   These activities have contributed proof that the College can:

   (a)   Establish strategic alliances;

   (b)   Bridge gaps;

   (c)   Build new competencies;

   (d)   Make a difference in terms of operational responses;

   (e)   Sustain a common United Nations culture;

   (f)   Support a system-wide training-learning agenda.

15.   Through its business plan, the College has currently sharpened further the focus of its curriculum around some of the critical challenges facing the United Nations system: leadership and management; peace and security; development cooperation and learning.

16.   The business plan horizon is both short- and medium-term. In 2006 and 2007 the College has concentrated on the short-term goal of laying a solid foundation for the future, by reorganizing the programme department and consolidating its staffing. The biennium 2008-2009 will feature the implementation of new services and training programmes, such as the Senior Management Network leadership development programme; secure and safe approaches in field environments; and enhanced support to the United Nations learning community.

VI.   College activities

A.   Development cooperation

Resident coordinator system learning support

17.   The resident coordinator learning support provided by the United Nations System Staff College contributes to the United Nations reform process by helping

United Nations Country Teams and their partners to design and implement coherent and efficient programmes to achieve the Millennium Development Goals, pursuant to Assembly resolution 60/214.

18.   Resident coordinator system learning support provides learning and training events targeted at United Nations staff involved in planning and implementing strategic responses to national development challenges.

19.   The resident coordinator system works in close partnership with the United Nations Development Group Office through a jointly developed plan of support to United Nations Country Teams.

20.   In the period covered by the present report, the resident coordinator system programme conducted 75 events, involving 3,951 participants, including United Nations staff and Government partners, as well as representatives of the donor community and civil society organizations. These activities contributed to three main sets of results:

   (a)   Enhanced quality of United Nations country-level common programming processes, through:

   (i)   Regional orientation workshops on the United Nations country level common programming process;

   (ii)   Country orientation workshops on the United Nations country level common programming process;

   (iii)   Country level strategic planning retreats with Government partners in the context of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF);

   (iv)   Annual retreats of United Nations Country Teams;

   (b)   A stronger resident coordinator system, through:

   (i)   Induction workshops for newly appointed resident coordinators;

   (ii)   Skills training workshops for newly appointed resident coordinators and new agency representatives (inclusive of certain agency briefings);

   (iii)   Training workshops for new coordination officers in the field;

   (iv)   Team-building support using the Belbin Team Roles instrument;

   (v)   Design and testing of a new team effectiveness survey specifically tailored to the United Nations environment;

   (c)   Improved learning and training capacity within the United Nations system and of key partners, through:

   (i)   Training of trainers for United Nations staff involved in supporting the United Nations country-level common programming process (Common Country Assessment (CCA)/UNDAF);

   (ii)   Global training on results-based management;

   (iii)   Support to the Action 2 inter-agency task force in the finalization of the United Nations common learning package on the human rights-based approach to programming;

(iv) Design of a regional skills training concept focusing on the human rights-based approach and results-based management, partnering skills for strategic engagement, and strategic thinking for negotiation and consensus-building;

(v) DevInfo advanced training.

Partnerships, private sector and civil society

21.   In 2007, Partners in Action and other partnership-related activities were fully integrated into the development cooperation programme.

22.   The aim of these activities is to strengthen the capacities of United Nations staff and United Nations organizations to work more effectively with partner organisations in the private sector and in civil society, thus complementing the ongoing partnerships of the United Nations with Governments.

23.   Details of key activities in 2005-2007 are given in table 2 below.

B. Peace and security

24.   The peace and security programme consists of three components: (a) secure and safe approaches in field environments; (b) conflict prevention: analysis for action (former early warning and preventive measures project); and (c) actors for change.

Secure and safe approaches in field environments

25.   In view of the need for a major improvement in staff training on safety and security, the United Nations Department for Safety and Security and the College have been working together since 2006 in the design, preparation and delivery of a full-fledged security training programme to be implemented at the country level. The training includes:

(a) Developing a safety and security learning curriculum for a four-day training equally divided into theory and field practice, addressing core modules, such as communications, personal security, mines, travel, United Nations security management system, cultural awareness, incidents management, stress management, clearance procedures, hostage survival and basic first aid;

(b) A training of trainers programme for security officers, in order to create a pool of United Nations trainers who will be used for conducting training workshops in the field.

26. As a result of the global training programme in secure and safe approaches in field environments, individual countries will be able to implement specific safety and security training programmes for all United Nations civilian personnel, allowing them to:

(a) Undertake work in the assigned security area more confidently and effectively;

(b) Better understand varying levels of threat and security trends in their respective areas of operation and be able to respond quickly to crisis situations;

(c) Be able to operate communications equipment effectively;

(d) Be able to understand and comply with United Nations security procedures;

(e) Owing to enhanced safety and security education, suffer fewer injuries, casualties and fatalities.

27. Between January and March 2007, two preparatory activities were held in Turin.

Conflict prevention: analysis for action (former early warning and preventive measures project)

28. Since 1998 the College in partnership with the United Nations Department of Political Affairs has been involved in a joint training project entitled "Early warning and preventive measures: building United Nations capacity". Since its inception, the project has undertaken more than 58 training activities and trained over 1,800 participants in conflict analysis for conflict prevention.

29. In February 2007 a strategic review was conducted of the project in order to take stock and align it with recent developments within and outside the United Nations system related to capacity-building for conflict prevention.

30. The primary aim of the project entitled "Conflict prevention: analysis for action" is to build institutional capacity in the area of early warning and preventive measures and, as a corollary, to promote greater mutual exchange and coordination within and between departments and offices dealing with early warning and preventive measures.

31. In the period under review, the project implemented 11 activities, involving a total of 250 participants. Details of these activities are given in table 4 below.

Actors for change: strengthening national human rights institutions

32. Since 2005 the College in cooperation with the National Institutions Unit of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights has launched a regional training project for national human rights institutions in different regions of the world.

33. The project aims to strengthen the capacity of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights, in particular to engage in the prevention of violent conflict through individual and collective reinforcement by means of strengthening their regional networks. Each training course targets the national institutions from one region of the world (e.g. Latin America, francophone Africa, Asia and the Pacific).

34. In the period under review, the project delivered six courses involving a total of 120 participants. Details of these activities are given in table 5 below.

C. Leadership and management

35. As from the second half of 2006, the College has enhanced its focus on management and leadership development by establishing a unit dedicated to this area.

36. There are two main areas of focus: first, support for the management programmes of United Nations system agencies, by providing guidance and materials for their own efforts to enhance management and leadership competencies; second, a major new initiative for the senior-most leaders across the United Nations system agencies, which is described below.

Senior Management Network leadership development programme

37. The Senior Management Network initiative addresses an important gap in United Nations system needs. The objectives are:

(a) To strengthen managerial and leadership capacity as an integral step in improving organizational performance;

(b) To build a common corporate culture in order to heighten the esprit de corps;

(c) To facilitate the devolution of responsibility and accountability in relation to core managerial functions;

(d) To enhance inter-agency cohesion and coordination and to promote increased mobility and learning across the system;

(e) To signal a commitment to the professionalism of the management function.

38. The overall infrastructure of the Senior Management Network consists of four interrelated components:

(a) A common competency framework;

(b) A system-wide leadership development programme;

(c) Managerial support tools and resources, made available through electronic means;

(d) A global management forum.

39. The College was requested to develop the leadership development programme for the Senior Management Network.

40. The programme will be targeted at senior staff in the system, usually at the D-1 level and above, who have an impact on the organizational direction of the agencies. The design of the programme commenced in the third quarter of 2006 and the first cohort of participants will begin their training at the end of 2007.

41. The Senior Management Network leadership programme is aimed at strengthening the knowledge and skills of senior managers in the following nine content areas: (a) change leadership; (b) cross-cultural leadership; (c) strategic thinking and strategy enactment; (d) conflict management; (e) influencing and negotiating; (f) judgement and decision-making in a complex and ambiguous environment; (g) results-oriented leadership; (h) leading to collaborate; and (i) interpersonal leadership. The programme flow includes:

(a) A launching conference focusing on engagement, as well as introducing the basic concepts of culture, change and leadership, and teaching the skills of dialogue and inquiry, while allowing for networking between participants;

(b) Three four-day events:

(i) In Japan, focusing on interpersonal leadership, leading to collaborate, influencing and negotiating;

(ii) In South Africa, focusing on change leadership, strategic thinking and strategy thinking, and conflict management;

(iii) In Costa Rica, focusing on judgement and decision-making, and results-oriented leadership;

(c) Large-scale debriefing conference, focusing on the review of the study trips, conclusions on United Nations leadership and further networking.

D. United Nations system learning and training services

42. The United Nations System Staff College also works with all United Nations organizations to implement learning that can further the effective professional development of staff. This involves developing the organizational learning culture, as well as facilitating the development of competency-based approaches to learning, training and staff development with improved knowledge-sharing practices.

United Nations Learning Community

43. The United Nations Learning Community is a network of more than 300 staff working in the United Nations system and United Nations-affiliated international organizations who are primarily employed in the training and staff development units of the organizations and can support each other through a variety of knowledge-sharing activities.

44. The database of the Learning Community is housed on the College website, and includes a range of features to help members stay in touch, including member profiles and a resource bank. The sharing space keeps members from around the globe abreast of what is happening in other organizations as well as in regional communities, such as the Geneva Learning Network.

Geneva Learning Network

45. The Geneva Learning Network is a network of approximately 75 learning managers, mainly Geneva-based but also including training professionals from Bern, Strasbourg, The Hague and Turin, representing over 30 international organizations.

46. In 2007, and for the first time, the College has been co-chairing the Geneva Learning Network meetings along with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR).

United Nations learning and training consultants database

47. The College established in March 2006 an online database of learning and training consultants' curricula vitae, along with information on their previous assignments for the United Nations system. This information, with a search facility using a range of criteria (e.g. area of expertise, location, language abilities), is available to organizations in the United Nations system.

Learning Managers Forum

48. The aim of the Learning Managers Forum is to foster in United Nations learning managers a common vision on human resources and staff development issues. In the period under review, the College coordinated two (2) forums at the College campus in Turin, Italy.

VII. Management and administration

53.   During the reporting period, the United Nations System Staff College has successfully implemented measures detailed in the previous report to strengthen its own internal management systems and procedures and to foster an environment that is more inducive to learning. Implementation of these measures has contributed to improving the efficiency and effectiveness of the College as a results-based organization operating in a public sector environment.

54.   In March 2007, through the pro bono contribution of a local Turin-based company, the College website was entirely redesigned. The table below illustrates the growing number of visitors to the College website since 2003.

VIII. Human and financial resources

55. Total College staff at the end of the reporting period stood at 35.2 full-time equivalents. The corresponding figure at the beginning of the period was 36.2. Several staff at the College were provided on loan or secondment from other United Nations organizations, and the College is grateful for such support.

56. During the reporting period, six United Nations staff members (Professional and support staff) left the College and nine new staff joined the College.

57. Over the reporting period, the overall gender balance (percentage of female staff) in the College increased from 41.9 per cent to 48.9 per cent.

58. Financial resources available to the College in 2005, 2006, and the first two months of 2007 are shown in the summary of total income and expenditure given in table 11 below.

59.   On the income side, the College receives funding from four main sources. First, there is an annual core contribution from the member organizations of the Chief Executives Board. The contribution is based on a cost-sharing formula fixed by the Chief Executives Board. During the reporting period, the formula yielded a total of $0.5 million per annum.

60.   Second, the host country, Italy, makes a generous, untied contribution to the activities of the College amounting to Euro 1,500,000 (about $1,945,000) in 2005 and Euro 2,000,000 (about $2,489,000) in 2006. The City of Turin also provides free office facilities for the College in Turin.

61.   Third, the College earns voluntary contributions from organizations in the United Nations system in the form of fees and costs related to the supply of service. These contributions are tied to specific projects/activities and vary from year to year.

62.   Lastly, the College receives voluntary contributions from Member States and foundations. A list of contributors in the period 2005-2007 is given in table 12 below.

IX. Future developments

64.   In the period under review, the Board of Governors, supported by the Expert Technical Review Panel, has shown leadership by approving a new curriculum and business plan.

65.   The new College Director has, accordingly, reorganized the programme activities of the College by refocusing on the College's core objectives and providing a realigned perspective for the short term (2006-2007) and a new vision for the medium term (2008-2009).

66.   Such vision is to be, and is to be recognized as being, a high-quality centre of excellence of learning and training services dedicated to the support of the United Nations system in achieving its central objectives and building its capacities in a selected number of major strategic areas.

67.   After the realignment phase (2006-2007), it is the ambition of the College to become an illustration of the reform process itself. That is to say, the College vision will be realized when:

        (a)   The College is recognized as a visible and reliable asset to the United Nations family of programmes, funds and agencies, concentrating on United Nations system reform and other system-wide priorities;

(b)   The College's four programmes are attractive to a larger number of donors, so as to consolidate a viable funding base;

(c)   The College's four programmes are strategic and are perceived as adding-value to other staff training offered within the United Nations system;

(d)   The College's work shows cutting-edge best practices and is a model in terms of cost-efficiency and effectiveness of operations;

(e)   The College has been able to build strategic alliances inside and outside of the United Nations and can leverage these alliances for the benefit of the United Nations system as a whole.

68.   In summary, the College vision is one of an institution that combines strategic considerations related to United Nations system reform with concrete learning and training actions relevant to all United Nations system staff.

X. Concluding remarks

69.   The progress made by the College during the reporting period has been significant. Credit for much of what has been achieved is due to the dedicated work of its staff and the active contribution of the College governance.

70.   In 2005, the College delivered 74 training activities with 2,867 participants; in 2006 the College increased the number of activities to 79, with 3,425 participants.

71.   The College is grateful to the organization members of the Chief Executives Board for their core contribution to the College each year.

72.   The College would also like to acknowledge the generous contribution provided by the host country, Italy, including not only core support but also voluntary contributions to support relevant development initiatives. The active support of the Italian Government continues to play a critical role for the College.

73.   Similarly, the College is very appreciative of voluntary contributions received from Member States and others. These contributions help to broaden and improve the quality of services that the College can offer.

74.   The next report on the United Nations System Staff College will be presented to the Economic and Social Council in 2009. That report will cover the period 1 July 2007 to 30 June 2009.
