He called for more integrated action and indicated that criminal justice should figure more prominently in United Nations peacebuilding and peacekeeping.

The Executive Director focused his presentation on organized crime, which he described as a threat to security. He considered that vulnerability to organized crime could be reduced more effectively through development and security. He pointed out the importance of justice and called for a better implementation of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime. He encouraged a more cooperative attitude regarding information sharing, at a time when criminal networks benefited from new technologies. The Executive Director recalled that corruption and money-laundering enabled crime to prosper. Finally, he called for a system-wide response in order to address the cross-cutting nature of organized crime.

In their statements, member States commented on the Executive Director’s briefing and the security implications of transnational threats such as drug trafficking and organized crime.

Finally, the President of the Security Council made a statement in which the Council noted with concern the serious threats posed in some cases by drug trafficking and transnational organized crime to international security in different regions of the world and invited the Secretary-General to consider those threats as a factor in conflict prevention strategies, conflict analysis, integrated missions’ assessment and planning (see S/PRST/2010/4).
