Statement issued by the Arab Economic, Development and Social Summit on countering terrorism directed against certain population groups in some Arab States and the rejection of foreign intervention in the internal affairs of Arab States

Sharm el-Sheikh, 19 January 2011

The Arab leaders who have gathered at the Arab Economic, Development and Social Summit, having considered the general Arab situation and the various developments in and internal and external challenges that are being faced by Arab societies, strongly condemn the terrorist acts that have recently been perpetrated on sectarian, ideological or racist pretexts in several parts of the world, including the Arab region. The fact that such acts should be committed in our region conflicts with our heritage. This region was the cradle of civilization and the birthplace of all the divinely-revealed religions, and for many centuries led the way in establishing a culture of mutual coexistence between the followers of those religions.

The leaders absolutely deplore the events that took place in the Church of Our Lady of Salvation in Baghdad and the Two Saints Church in Alexandria, Egypt, and stress that the terrorist targeting of this group of citizens is intended to spread civil strife, provocation and discrimination amongst the various components of our Arab peoples, with a view to weakening and unravelling the fabric of society and undermining the stability of the Arab nation. The adherents of the divinely-revealed religions have long lived together in this nation, in a climate of peace and harmony, and have together steadfastly confronted crises and challenges and maintained close ties and mutual trust, united by their religious beliefs and values, which demonstrate that they have essentially the same humanitarian principles. The leaders also affirm their solidarity with Yemen in the face of the terrorist acts to which it is being subjected, that are directed against its security and stability.

The leaders' understanding of the dimensions and aims of those attempts to sow panic have strengthened their resolve to make every effort and take every initiative to establish a spirit of religious tolerance and dialogue between the various sects, religions and cultures. Such initiatives have included the call from the Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques, King Abdullah Bin Abdulaziz, for interfaith dialogue, and the "A Common Word" initiative introduced by His Majesty King Abdullah Bin Al Hussein of Jordan, both of which were warmly received throughout the world.

While the leaders reiterate their condemnation of all types of terrorism, on whatever pretext, and renew their commitment to confront hotbeds of terrorism anywhere in the Arab world and criminalize the payment of ransoms to terrorists or terrorist groups or organizations, they also completely reject all attempts by certain foreign States and parties and, in particular, certain Western circles, to intervene in the internal affairs of Arab States on pretexts that include the protection of minorities, which demonstrate their ignorance of the nature, causes and goals of terrorism, from which no country in the world is exempt.

The leaders are well aware of the dimensions and aims of those terrorist movements and do not accept that events can be used to justify the vilification of Islam and Muslims, or to stir up strife between Muslims and Christians, who are all closely woven together in a fabric that has taken shape over many centuries of coexistence in the Arab region.

The leaders therefore affirm that it is the Arab States that have responsibility for protecting their own citizens, and that they are capable of doing so. They reiterate their demand that the international community should renew its commitment to combat terrorism and the forces of all types of extremism; and warn of the perils of fomenting dissension on the grounds of religion or race between the citizens of any State. They urge the States of the world to join them in responding to the Egyptian call for an international conference on counter-terrorism. Nowhere in the world does terrorism differentiate between the innocent on grounds of colour, gender or religion.

The leaders are determined to take action to confront the discords that threaten the region and to provide the proper climate for the peaceful coexistence of their peoples in an atmosphere of freedom, equality, and commitment to rights and responsibilities and proper behavioural and moral precepts. They will operate on the basis of the principle of equal citizenship, with no differentiation between citizens on the grounds of race or religion. They affirm that religious and cultural diversity is one of the riches of Arab society and one element of its strength and advancement.

Summit statement No. 2, regular session 2, third meeting, 19 January 2011.

The Sharm el-Sheikh Declaration

We, the Heads of Arab States and Governments who, on 19 January 2011, are gathered together in the Egyptian city of Sharm el-Sheikh at the second session of the Arab Economic, Development and Social Summit, hereby renew our complete commitment to the development strategies that were approved at the Kuwait Summit on 19 and 20 January 2009, and affirm that we will advance the human, economic, social and technological development of our Arab societies and will activate and develop our joint Arab action mechanisms, under the aegis of the League of Arab States, with a view to ensuring a better future for our peoples and for future generations.

With regard to the priorities that have been established for the joint Arab action to be taken in the social and economic areas, an evaluation was conducted of the progress that has been made in integrating the Arab economies, with particular reference to the field of regional infrastructure, where the foremost projects concern road and electricity linkages. All those ambitious projects have made commendable progress, which must be maintained until the laudable goals are achieved. The prospects for maritime links between our countries were explored. Such links would significantly strengthen inter-Arab trade. Consideration was given to the advancement of information connections by linking Arab Internet networks; development in various fields in a number of Arab countries; the Great Arab Free Trade Area; movement towards the establishment of the Arab customs union; and the decisions that have been taken with a view to increasing inter-Arab investment and enabling the private sector and civil society to make an effective contribution to the overall development process.

Food security is one of the foremost priorities of the Arab States, and a new approach must be adopted to dealing with it if we are to achieve such security for our Arab societies. Arab water security will be another priority action area for years to come, particularly in view of the challenges posed by climate change, which has an impact on and reduce water resources. We will therefore implement the Arab water security strategy throughout the Arab region.

Given that the Arab region is facing ever-increasing risks as a result of the degradation of environmental systems and the natural disasters that are occurring regularly because of increasing geological and climate changes, which have a direct impact on lives, infrastructure, means of livelihood and sustainable development, we affirm implementation of the Arab strategy to reduce disaster risk 2020 and commitment to the Arab declaration and statement on climate change and the related resolutions, and promise to devise an Arab plan for dealing with climate change.

In view of our concern for the well-being and future of Arab citizens, consultations took place on ways of overcoming obstacles to achieving the Millennium Development Goals; the importance of building and activating human capacities; improving education and scientific and technical research; encouragement and support for innovation; the empowerment of women to play an effective and fundamental role in Arab societies; poverty reduction; unemployment; and the provision of higher standards of health care, all of which are fundamental components in the development of our societies in forthcoming decades.

In affirmation of our commitment to provide the Arab peoples with opportunities that will equip them to contribute effectively to society and provide them with prospects for employment, and further to the initiative that was launched by the Emir of Kuwait regarding the establishment of a fund to finance small and medium-sized private sector industries, with capital of $2 billion, which we are convinced will increase the value of Arab economies and the contribution they can make to lowering levels of poverty and unemployment and providing employment opportunities, particularly for the youth who represent 25 per cent of the total population of our societies, we welcome the launching of and will contribute to the fund. The Arab Economic and Social Development Fund will be responsible for managing that account.

Well aware of the capacities of our region in the fields of energy, foremost among which are oil and natural gas, and the global importance of our geographic location as an international supply crossroad, our countries are continuing to develop the optimum means of exploiting those capacities and are investing in them in a manner that reflects the effective contribution that is made by the Arab region to ensuring global energy security, which may alleviate the current crisis in the global economy.

Notwithstanding the huge capacities possessed by some Arab countries in respect of energy, we have agreed on the need to exploit some of the other possibilities and energies to which our countries have access, including new and renewable energy, wind power, the peaceful use of nuclear power and solar power, all of which make it possible to acquire modern technology and create employment opportunities while conserving and developing the environment. The region needs such clean sources of energy and new fresh water resources, in addition to the new employment opportunities that are offered by those technologies.

With regard to the establishment of the Arab customs union, we considered the efforts to finalize the harmonized Arab customs law and the work that is currently being done to complete by the end of 2012 the harmonized Arab customs tariff schedule. Once that has been approved, the Arab customs union will be declared in 2015. The final step will be the inauguration in 2020 of the joint Arab market.

Against the background of developments in respect of global economic cooperation, we welcome the World Bank Arab world initiative, which will strengthen the cooperation and coordination of Arab countries with the World Bank, as well as reinforcing cooperation between Arab financial and development institutions and the relevant Arab organizations in respect of this initiative.

The Arab world is undeniably an integral part of the global system, and global developments impact on it both positively and negatively. No society can take a firm step on the road to development without an excellent understanding of what is going on in the world around it. The global financial crisis has undoubtedly made profound changes in the world economic map and has made it inevitable that we must coordinate our economic and monetary policies and contribute to international efforts aimed at ensuring global financial stability, thereby avoiding, to the extent possible, any negative impact on our economies. We also underline our dismissal of the obstacles that are imposed unilaterally on certain Arab States: such obstacles have a negative impact on development efforts in those countries.

We affirm our determination to continue our efforts to implement the Millennium Development Goals and overcome obstacles to their realization in our region by 2015.

Agreement was reached on the need to develop joint Arab action and take it to a new stage: that of building new partnerships with regional and international blocs and a variety of countries, including China, India, Japan, Turkey, the Russian Federation, the African States, the countries of South America and the Pacific islands, with a view to interacting with the effects of globalization and strengthening and developing action that is taken with various States, through gatherings, programmes and cooperation policies with those countries and groupings. We affirm our commitment to activating the economic and social aspects of the Arab-African Partnership Strategy and its programme of action, and our commitment to continue to pursue cooperation with the countries of South America by holding the third Arab-South America Summit in Peru in February 2011.
