"He suggested that it would be well, when examining item 7 (b) of the agenda, to consider the possibility of a study in 1950 of the facilities for developing agricultural education and extension services in the Non-Self-Governing Territories.

"For several years United States agricultural agencies had been concerned with the development of education in agriculture and the training of farmers through extension services in Alaska, Hawaii and Puerto Rico. Through such programmes, the populations concerned were able to benefit from the results of scientific research and their economic development was furthered."
